MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Mr. FOSTER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message as follows:-

S ANLEY OF PRESTON.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the Service of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1830; and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 26th March, 1890.

WAYS AND MEANS-THE BUDGET.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, in rising to-day to present my second annual statement to the House respecting the financial operations of the completed year 1888-89, of the current year and my estimates for the year succeeding, I think I may congratulate the House and the country upon the satisfactory nature of one and all of these three. I think I may also congratulate the House and the country upon the results of the past twelve months. They have not disappointed the hopes which were expressed concerning them when I made my annual statement a little more than a year ago. The general state of the business of the country has been reasonably good, and although a deficiency of harvest in some portions, and the unseasonable state of the weather, and the somewhat low prices which ranged for some of the stample articles, have had their depressing effects, on the whole the year has been, as I have stated, a fairly average one. The general trade of the country has kept up, and in fact somewhat exceeded that of the preceding year, and, as a consequence, the returns which were anticipated have been fully, or very nearly fully realised. The railway building during the past year has been vigorous, as will be shown later when I come to speak of the sums which have been taken from the public treasury in the way of payment on construction of railways which have been subsidised, and the volume of traffic which has been moved in our country has been larger than in any preceding year of its history. Ocean freights have continued high, and the vessel owners of the maritime portions of the Dominion have reaped a rich and well-merited reward from the vessels which they have owned, while upon the great lakes and rivers of Canada the tonnage has been well employed and the season has been fairly remunerative. I find that the immigration of this year has been superior in numbers and superior in class to that of many preceding years, and there are indications that that is now taking place, which is to be, I believe, the strongest factor in drawing people into this country; namely, the formation of a nucleus of people in our country, especially in the North-West, who having passed the earliest and severest stages of settlement, and having come into prosperous and settled conditions, are writing home to their friends and spreading information, which is the strongest and best means of drawing immigrants from those far-off countries to our own shores. Not only have those interests of which I have spoken been prosperous, but, I think I may say, from a general review, that the lumber interests have had, on the whole, a satisfactory year. The farmers and the fishermen have probably had not more, if not something less, than an average year; but, taken on the whole, their condition is one of reasonable prosperity, and without the want and hardship which are found in many countries outside of Canada. While the internal trade and the condition of the country has been thus fairly satisfactory, there has been something done as well towards the realisation of the hopes which have been entertained for a number of years, and which were placed in a permanent way of being fulfilled last year, by means of the generosity of this House, which granted a sum of money towards the establishment of swift communications between Canada and other important sections of the world. Since last year a contract for building the Canadian Pacific vessels which are to ply between Vancouver and Victoria and China and Japan has been let, and within a year we shall see some of the best equipped and swiftest vessels making their regular voyages between our country and those far regions of the East, between which there will spring up, I believe, a very large and a very profitable trade. The Atlantic fast service has not materlised, but the failure has not been due to any fault of the Government. A contract was entered into which it was supposed would have had the result of placing a satisfactory line of steamships on the ocean between our ports and those of Great Britain and France, but various causes which are well known to hon members—the great rise in prices of ship-building, stimulated as they were by the rise in freights and by the operations of the British Government as well-rendered the fulfilment of that contract impossible, and also made it impracticable, for a little time at least, to go into the market and supplement the effort which had failed to bring about the result we supposed it would. The West India trade, for which a sum of money was granted last year, has been inaugurated, and we have now three direct lines, with monthly sailings, between the ports of the Maritime Provinces and different ports of the West Indies and South America. The two which ply between Halifax, Jamaica and Cuba, respectively, are routes which have been heretofore tried: the one which plies between the ports of St. John and Demerara, in connection with the West India Islands, is a new venture, and I am happy to be able to state to the House that, notwithstanding the newness of the enterprise, the numerous ports which have to be called at, and the expensive nature of these as ports of call, the pioneer sailings have been eminently successful, and the interest which has been awakened in the West India Islands, and more especially in our own country, leads us to believe that these lines will develope a large and growing trade between our country and that section of the southern country to which we must look largely as an outlet for our products in the future. Taken all in all, we have passed a Mr. Foster.

year in Canada in which want has been practically unknown, in which labor has been well employed, and has found good remuneration, in which peace and order have abounded in all our borders, and out of which the 5,000,000 people, who have enjoyed the blessings of prosperity and peace in their homes look for the advent of other years, the successors of the past, equally prosperous and equally happy. Coming now more particularly to the first part of my duty, which is to lay before the House a statement of the proceedings of the year 1888-89, I may say that the estimates of revenue compare with the receipts as follows:—

REVENUE, 1888-89.

1	Estimate.	Actual Receipts.	Dif	ference.
Customs$2	23,533,971 = 3	$23,726,783	+ $	192,812

Miscellaneous	7,999,180=	8,169,349	+	170,169

Totals. \$38,601,294 = \$38,782,870 + \$181,576This is satisfactory, not only as regards the closeness of the estimate to the amount which was realised, but also as regards the sum total which was realised as the revenue of the past year. Comparing 1888-89 with 1887-88, the results are most satisfactory. The Customs show an increase over the preceding year of \$1,620,857, or $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; Excise, an increase of \$815,252, or 13g per cent.; and Miscellaneous shows an increase of \$438,299, or 5% per cent.—and the total increase was \$2.874. 408, or an increase of 8 per cent. over the revenue If we take the revenues realised in 1887–88. derived in 1880-81 and compare them with those of last year, we will find that the increase in Customs and Excise has been 28 per cent., and the increase in Miscellaneous 43½ per cent., and when we consider that this last is made up of investments and earnings, it is satisfactory to find that the larger increase is in that particular line of our revenues. The figures are as follows :--

	Cutsoms and Exercise.	Miscellaneou	s. Total.
1880-81	$23,942,138	$5,693,158	$29,635,297

When we come to Excise, we find there has been an increase all round, as will be seen by the following table:—

It is satisfactory to know that this increase of spirits is not supposed to represent a corresponding increase in their use as a beverage. It is explained by the Inland Revenue Department as being largely due to the duty paid alcohol taking the place of methylated spirits in the preparation of tinctures and liniments and the like. For the information of hon, gentlemen, so that they may not have to refer to the report, I have a statement showing the use per head of spirits, wine, beer and tobacco, comparing 1867 with 1888–89:

Sir B	CHARD	CART	WRIG	HT	On what

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On what population is the percentage based?

Mr. FOSTER. On the percentage used by the Customs Department in the calculations of its averages. Turning now to the question of expenditure, it was intimated last year that it would reach $36,600,000; the actual expenditure has been $36,917,834, an increase of $317,834. To show how this increase came about, I may state that the amount expended for interest on the public debt shows an increase over 1888 of $325,618; superannuation, an increase of over $6,000; militia, an increase of over $50,000; mail subsidies and steamship subventions, a slight increase; ocean and river service, an increase of $106,636; lighthouse and coast service, an increase of $22,521; expenditure upon Indians, an increase of $112,000; miscellaneous, an increase of $128,000. There were also considerable items of decrease, but taking the two together, they show a difference of expenditure over that of the estimate, of $317,834. The amount that was estimated for revenue, as I said before, was $38,601,294; the amount which was actually received was $38,782,870. I estimated last year that we would have a probable surplus of $1,900,000, the actual surplus is $1,865,-035, a surplus which was very close indeed to that which was estimated, and which was very satisfactory, as showing an increase over the preceding year. Taking the surplus of the past year and adding to it the sinking fund, which is so much offset against the public debt, the two sums amount to $3,601,679. Taking the minus surplus of 1887-88 and the sinking fund of that year, they amount to $1,129,046; so that the operation of the past year as compared with that of the preceding year, counting surplus and sinking fund together, shows a favorable difference of $2,472,633. The following table shows the capital expenditure, estimated and actual :-

In railways and canals, the excess is owing to the fact that these works were under contract and they were pushed with great vigor, and consequently earlier and larger payments had to be made

In public works the than were anticipated. increase was caused by an expenditure of \$243,334 in improvement of the St. Lawrence. redemption of debt the increase in the expenditure over the estimate is owing to the fact that we have redeemed \$300,000 of 6 per cent. currency of Canada, British Columbia Bonds, \$33,000, and some A and B stock, making a larger expenditure for redemption of debt than was anticipated, but which is, of course, so much of our debt moved out of the way. In regard to railway subsidies, it is a difficult matter to estimate with any degree of certainty what will be the expenditure, as it is not known with what vigor the work will be pushed, or how many of these companies may make contracts and go on with their work. ducting redemption of debt, there was a capital expenditure last year of \$5,267,035, against a capital expenditure, exclusive of redemption of debt, of the preceding year, of \$5,464,521. The net debt on the 1st July, 1888, was \$234,531,358, showing an addition in that year of \$7,216,583. The net debt on the 1st July, 1889, was \$237,530,-041, showing a net addition of \$2,998,683. Taking the operations of 1888-89 over 1887-88, and comparing them with the operations of 1887-88 over 1886-87, I find that there was a gain in revenue of \$2,874,408, or 8 per cent. in 1888-89, as compared with a gain of \$153,970, or less than onehalf per cent. in 1887-88. There was an increased expenditure of \$199,339 on consolidated revenue, or one-half per cent. in the former, as compared with an increase of \$1,060,815, or 3 per cent. in the latter year. The surplus of 1888-89 shows an amount of \$1,865,035 as compared with a deficit of \$810,031 in 1887-88. The capital expenditure is a little less, while the debt increase was less than \$3,000,000 as against the previous year's increase of \$7,217,000. The following statement will show this :-- as compared with \$153,970, or nearly $\frac{1}{2}$ p.c. Increased Expenditure, \$199,339.

or ½ p. c. as compared with $1,060,815, or 3 p.c. Surplus of $1,865,035 as compared with (deficit) $810,031. Surplus and Sinking Fund, $3,601,679

as compared with $1,129,046 Capital Expenditure $5,267,035 as compared with $5,464,521 Debt Increase, $2,998,683 as compared with $7,216,583

Passing to the year 1889-90, it will be found that about a year ago I estimated that the Customs would yield $23,900,000, the Excise $7,125,000, and the Miscellaneous $8,150,000, or a total of $39,175,000. The receipts up to the 20th March of this year have been: from Customs, $17,-

259,352; from Excise, $5,179,220, and from miscellaneous, $5,440,932, or a total of $27,879,504. If we were to proceed upon the supposition that we would get from the 20th March to the 30th June of this year the same revenue in proportion that we received during the same period last year, it would add to these amounts: from Customs, $6,913,819; from Excise, $1,914,737, and from miscellaneous, $3,080,238, or a total of $11,908,794, which would give a total revenue of $39,788,298. But I cannot proceed altogether upon that assumption. I find that the revenue has somewhat diminished since the 1st January, in comparison with the same months of the preceding year, and a proportionate allowance for the continuance of this diminution during the remainder of the year will amount to $113,000. In the latter part of 1888-89 there was credited to the Consolidated Revenue Fund an amount of accrued interest of about $100,000, as was also an amount of $375,000 from Open Railway Accounts. These sums will not to that extent come into the revenue for the latter part of the current year, and making these deductions, I estimate for the current year: from Customs, $24,000,000; from Excise, $7,000,-Miscellaneous, $8,200,000, and from making the total revenue which I think we will get $39,200,000, against my estimate about a year ago of $39,175,000. The expenditure to 20th March of this year has been $22,353,-399. The expenditure last year from the 20th March to the 30th June, if applied to the remainder of the current year, would lead us to expect added expenditure of $13,771,778, if we proceed upon the same scale of expenditure for the remainder of the current year, showing, on that basis, a total expenditure of $36,125,177. I have, however, just placed on the table the Supplementary Estimates for the year 1889-90. They are a little larger than I had expected, and, therefore, in order to be on the safe side, I think the expenditure for the present year should not be estimated at less than $36,500,000, which was the sum at which I estimated it a year ago. Suppose this holds good, the expenditure will be $36,500,000, and the revenue on Consolidated Fund Account $39,200,000, giving us a surplus for the current year of $2,700,000 as against the surplus actually received last year of $1,865,035. I am sure this statement is one which will be particularly pleasing to the House and the country, as showing the buoyancy of our resources, and the fact that we have a surplus of this magnitude without imposing any increased rate of duty, and in fulfilment of my forecast of about a year ago. In regard to the capital expenditure, including subsidies to railways, the position is as follows:-

The total is somewhat in excess of the amount which was estimated last year, but the excess is largely due to the greater expenditure on subsidised railways. Taking off the redemption of debt from the capital expenditure for the current year there will remain $5,626,145, and deducting from that the surplus of $2,700,000 and the sinking fund which is offset against the debt of $1,790,000, a total of $4,490,000 to be taken from the sum before mentioned, we shall have at the end of the year an addition to our debt of $1,136,145, which is about one-third of the addition made to the net debt in the preceding year. Taken in all, the operations of the year 1889–90 as compared with those of 1888–89 show as follow:—

1889-90. 1888-89 Difference. Revenue$39,200,000 = $38,782,870 + $417.130 Con. Fund Exp. 36,500,000 = 36,917,834 -417,834 Surplus...... 2,700,000 = 1,865,035 +834,965 Capital Exp... 5,626,145 =5,267,035 +359,110 Increase of debt 1,136,145 =2,998,683 - 1,862,538Net Debt. . . . 238,666,186 237,530,041

When we come to the year 1890-91, of course all certainty fails, and I can simply make, as I had to make last year, a probable estimate of what we may receive. Looking over the state of the revenue for the past year, the condition of the trade of the country, its resources, and the condition of the country itself, I think I may be warranted in saying that for the year 1890-91 we shall receive:

 Customs Revenue

 Excise

 Miscellaneous Works—Revenue

Total..... $39,200,000

or about the same as for the current year. The Estimates already brought down to the House amount to $36,035,445, and if we consider the probable increase at $664,555, we shall have a probable expenditure of $36,700,000; deducting this from the estimated revenue, we shall have for 1890-91, if this forecast is realised, a surplus of about $2,500,000 as far as consolidated revenue is concerned. So far, Mr. Speaker, the review and retrospect of these years have been, I think, gratifying and satisfactory to the House. After twenty-one years of our existence as a Dominion, to find the three years, 1889, 1890 and 1891. showing the financial results which they have shown, and which I have had the honor of detailing to the House, is, I think, a cause for congratulation. After this period of struggle to come into existence as a Dominion, after all the difficulties and all the disadvantages incident to the early period of growth, I say it is a matter for congratulation that the three years supervening upon these show such excellent and gratifying results, so far as the finances of the country are concerned. This leads us irresistibly to look back in swift review over the history of the Dominion from its inception. Evoked as it was by the summons of the master statesmen of that period, from what I might call almost a chaos of scattered Provinces, and from large, unexplored, and unorganised territories, the Dominion has swiftly advanced upon the view of the world. It has steadily assumed the proportions of continually enlarging and substantial greatness, and to-day it stands selfcontained and confident, wielding a practically absolute sway over the northern and greater half of the English-speaking portion of this continent. It has overcome the difficulties which were incident to its first organisation, and we all know how great those difficulties were. It has surmounted the disadvantages of wide separation, and we know that these were formidable. It has conquered the almost illimitable distances which the people who lived a score of years ago, and scanned the future of this country, thought almost insurmountable. It has conquered these difficulties; it has solved this problem of immeasurable distance, and has succeeded in moulding the ambitions of its widely different creeds, and races, and interests, into a growing and dominant sentiment of national unity, and a confidence in national progress and national development. has built magnificent channels of inter-communication; it has dotted its broad waters with busy ships, and its broader lands with wide and varying industries, and has laid broad and deep the foundations of a development, the wonderful progress of whose past is only to be excelled by the still more wonderful promise of its future. It has done this by pouring out its treasure—treasure which was hard earned by land and by sea—and pouring it out like water. It has done this by an expenditure out of Consolidated Revenue, beginning with $13,500,000 in 1867, and reaching in this year nearly $37,000,000, and, in the total of these years, the munificent sum of $558,000,000, or an average of twenty-five and one-third millions a year; and it has besides pledged its resources to the extent of $237,000,000, all to equip itself for a noble race and leave to its children a goodly heritage. I am here to-day to maintain that every dollar of this expenditure, and that all of these obligations which the Dominion has taken upon itself, have been wisely assumed, and in pursuance of a policy which has been for the best interests of the country, as far as its present and future is concerned. To-day, Sir, after twenty-one years of existence, we are face to face with an abundant and buoyant revenue, which ranges from thirty-five and three-quarter millions in 1887, to $39,200,000 as estimated for 1890-91. We are here with an average expenditure out of the Consolidated Fund, for the ordinary services of the country, of about $36,500,000 for these five years which I have named, and we are here with a capital expenditure averaging somewhere about $5,500,000. But, Sir, as I said last year, so I will take occasion to utter this year, a word of caution, and if it be allowable in one so young, a word of counsel as well. I stated last year that looking at the condition of the country, and looking at the munificent contributions which had been given by this country for her public works, and at the splendid equipment which Canada had by means of these contributions gained for herself, it seemed to me that we ought not, after the close of the year 1889, to increase the public debt, that we ought not to increase the public expenditure for ordinary purposes, and, that it was possible by a prudent course, without stinting the public service in any way, to carry on this service in a generous manner, to meet the capital obligations which we had already assumed, and to go to the year 1892 without adding to our net debt. that it seemed to me that we might well take into consideration whether or not we could not gradually decrease the amount of the debt which we had assumed and placed upon ourselves. Now. Sir, I am here to-day, one year after the time of making that statement, to affirm that I believe the same may be said to-day with equal emphasis and with equal truth: $36,500,000 of ordinary expenditure, from our Consolidated Revenue Fund gives us, what? In the first place, it is sufficient to carry our national debt, that is to pay the interest on the debt; it provides for our legislation and civil government; it administers our justice; it polices the North-West; it provides a million and a third for the militia system of the country; it gives over $300,000 for steamship subsidies and subventions; it sustains an expenditure of $900,000 on lighthouse, ocean, river and coast service; it gives $4,000,000 for distribution among the different Provinces of this Dominion; inspects our gas, our staple foods, our weights and measures; it provides motive power to the extent of $3,000,000 for our post office and $4,000,000 for our railways and canals; and over and above these and other ordinary services, it gives into the hands of the Minister of Public Works more than $2,000,-000 with which each year to build new and necessary public works in this country. Such a contribution as that seems to me to be a generous and princely contribution for a people of 5,000,000 to carry on the ordinary services of the country. The capital obligations, for the building of railways and canals and other public works of necessity and utility, may be met by the surplus which I have outlined, and which we may look for in these three years, to the amount of about $2,500,000 per year, which, with the sinking fund, would give us about $4,500,000 per year to meet the capital obligations we have assumed, and the expenditures we may think it necessary to make on capital account. We must recollect what we have done in this country in the way of building public works and opening channels of communication. I find that we have spent out of capital: for the Intercolonial system, $35,776,129; for the Pacific Railway system, $61,899,600; for the Short Line Railway, $209,356, besides the subsidy which is to run now for some nineteen years, which, at present value, is $2,679,529; for Intercolonial extensions and other Government railway extensions, $4,389,760; for the improvement of the St. Lawrence channel, for the Canal system, so far, $2,968,838; $32,841,932; for Canal works now under contract, $5,158,749; and for the two large and commodious docks which face our eastern and our western waters, $1,857,499; making the total equipment of this country out of capital expenditure for these great means of tercommunication and commerce, $147,781,392. This is the amount we have paid out of capital for the equipment of the country in its race for commerce, foreign and domestic-for channels of com munication which were absolutely necessary to open up this vast extent of country, and which the country has willingly and cheerfully paid for, for the sake of present advantage and future advantage in the great race this country has to run in its competition for commerce and trade with the other countries of the world. For what Canada has assumed in this respect, I believe she has had full warrant; her circumstances, her hopes and her future demanded it. To carry her present burdens I believe she is amply sufficient; but for any further increase I believe good reasons are demanded, and good reasons must be given. We have a princely equipment, a royal endowment in these it looks after the collection of our revenue; it great works I have mentioned; and if private enterprise continues to take hold and work in unison with them, as it is doing every day more and more, the future of this country, on account of that equipment and the facilities given thereby, is assured; and for the sake of that future, the country will cheerfully bear the burdens imposed upon it by the building of these great lines of communication. Now, Sir, I come to the second part of my duty this afternoon, and I must beg the indulgence of this rather worn and tired House. After the long fight of the night, I will try not to trespass on its patience any longer than is really necessary to set forth, in a very brief way, what I propose to lay before the House in the shape of changes and emendations in I suppose it will be taken for granted the tariff. that in bringing down certain resolutions to-day I am not going to propose anything that will interfere very materially with the system of reasonable protection which was assured to this country in 1878 and 1879, and which has been Hon, gentlemen who passed retained since. through the long and able discussions of 1878 and the succeeding years will know that if ever a matter was well argued and thorouguly discussed, the changes involved in the tariff of 1879 and the principles which underlay it were well discussed, were ably argued, and were settled as thoroughly as any question could be settled, by intelligent discussion and consideration of everything involved. Sir, it was stated in 1878, and in 1879-and I think my hon, friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was one who indulged in some, as they have proved, fanciful imaginings at that time—that the system of protection which was then devised would be short lived, and would die chiefly because the system of protection in the great country bordering on ours to the south was doomed, where free trade principles were even then coming quickly into the ascendant, and that in a little time the protective system of that country would be a thing of the past, and with it would pass away any system of protection which we were building up in Canada. That prediction has not been fuinled, and every succeeding year in the legislative history of the United States goes to prove that the principle of protection has received no set-back in that country; but to-day, after an election run, not between free trade and protection but upon the question of a higher or lower degree of protection, the Republican party, which went to the country on the ground of an increased protection, came back from the polls strengthened, and to-day holds its majority in both Houses of Congress; and if what we see reported in the papers is a foreshadowing of what may be expected to happen, we may find that legislation which is imminent there will not disturb the protection ' which has been given to the great manufacturing industries of that country, but may proceed a little further in some directions than even the legislation which has been in existence there for the las tten years. As nothing has taken place in the history and condition of the United States to make us believe their protective policy will be abandoned, so nothing has occurred in the wider history of European countries to show that the principles of protection have taken light root and are not held as strongly as they were, even more strongly than they have been for a number of years past. Nor have any circumstances arisen in the Dominion of Canada which make it necessary, or reasonable, or prudent, that, once having set our hand to the plough, and determined under existing circumstances to fairly and reasonably protect our growing industries, we should now look back and disturb, in any material way, the reasonable system of protection which this country has declared for, under which it has prospered and under which it is expected to prosper for many a year to come. I know I will be said to be tinkering with the tariff, and thereby offending against some special eternal principles which underlie tariffs when I introduce my resolutions for some changes in this tariff. But it seems to me that tariffs are, in the main, a device for the raising of revenue and the protecting of the interests of the country, and that they are not like confessions of faith, which, when once settled, must endure for centuries; but, being such a device, they will change according to the circumstances of the country and according to the needs of the peculiar time in which they are operative. And just as conditions change, the conditions in the country and out of the country, so it becomes necessary that alterations from time to time shall be made in the tariff to keep up its original idea of reasonably fair protection to industries which it is proper and right to protect in the country. If values change, then the relative protection that was given by specific or by ad valorem duties certainly change with them. If new products come into existence they must have a category in which to be placed, and in order to prevent constant disputes in practically carrying out the Customs laws, provision has to be made for them in sections of the tariff laws. The same is true when new industries open up-and new industries are continually opening up; and it is the pride and the gratification of the party on this side of the House that within the last ten years and under the influences of the tariff which has been the law in this country new industries have sprung up as by magic in this Dominion; and if we look to-day at the quality, at the variety, at the quantity of manufactured articles, as compared with ten years ago, it is astonishing to see the progress which has been made in the various industries throughout this country. So that not only is it not my intention to interfere, in these resolutions, with the principle and the policy which has been adopted by this Government and by this party, but it is not my intention to be frightened by the cry that we are continually tinkering with the tariff and so be prevented from introducing changes which are necessary. At the same time, I hold it to be true, that it is neither wise nor prudent to be making too frequent changes in the tariff, because the general trade industries of the country demand that no changes be made without sufficient reasons being adduced to prove a revision of the tariff to be necessary. Last year repeated applications were made, and many pressing demands were brought forward, demands which, in some cases, seemed to the Minister of Customs and myself just in the premises, but we felt that the tariff, having been re-arranged in 1887, should be left to its own working for another year. This year we propose various changes; not all the changes which have been pressed upon us, for there have been many requests made which, I must say, after very careful consideration, the Minister of Customs and myself have not deemed it wise to recommend to the Government, and which the Government have not deemed it wise to adopt as alterations in the tariff law. But this I can say for my colleague and myself, that every proposition which has been put before us has been carefully scrutinised, has been closely considered, and that we have come to a decision on those questions with a desire to do justice in the premises, to the interests themselves as well as to the interests which would be affected by them, and which are so intimately connected with them in the country. What I propose, then, broadly in my resolutions, is this: to introduce an interpretation clause, by means of which certain often used terms will be defined, and which will, therefore, make it unnecessary to have continual repetitions through the different clauses of the tariff; to strike out all the headings which are found now, and which are so misleading, in the Customs law and in the tariff as it is arranged and distributed. For instance, we have a heading "tubing," and following a little down below "tubing" we come to "jellies and jams," and it is difficult to know what in the world jellies and jams have to do with the heading "tubing" which stands but a little way before it. The heading "pianofortes" later on is followed by "pickles," but what these have to do with one another it is impossible for the average untrained mind to tell. The skilled and ingenious mind of my hon. colleague the Minister of Customs may at the present time know. It is proposed, also, to cancel all Orders in Council which have been passed under the authority of the Customs Act, and the substance of which is to be embodied in the tariff changes; and then to repeal all the items in the tariff in which any change is made, so that the item will be enacted anew; and, lastly, to enact the new items in the Act. The purpose of the resolutions broadly is this: to render more plain to the business public some of the items at present existing in the tariff which, though carrying their meaning clearly to the Department and its officers, are yet somewhat indefinite to the outside and business public, and to enlarge and remodel these, and to add cognate articles which the Customs have placed under these different headings, but about which disputes might constantly arise between the trade and Custums Department as to whether they should be included in that class or not; in the second place, to reduce in some instances existing duties which changed conditions have rendered in our opinion higher than they should be, or upon articles which, failing to be manufactured in this country, should bear a revenue tariff, and a revenue tariff only; in the third place, to put on the free list articles which either here. It is used throughout the country in every Mr. FOSTER.

serve as raw materials for manufacturers, or which would, by their admission, help to develop the resources of the country; and, in the fourth place, to re-adjust certain duties, which for various reasons are not now considered as effective as they should be. I do not propose to weary the House by reading all the different items which are embodied in the resolutions. I propose to name a few of the more important, and then submit the resolutions for the action of the House. One item which in changed is that of acetic acid and vinegar. Vinegar bears a duty at present of 15 cents per gallon, and acetice acid a duty of 25 cents per gallon and 20 per cent. The difficulty that has arisen is that acctic acid has been imported far above the degree of proof, coming in at 90, and as high as 95 degrees, and it was possible to evade the plain intent of the item, which was to exact a duty upon the acetic acid as commonly known to commerce. This interfered with the manufacture of vinegar, and led to frauds upon the revenue, and it was in every way unequal in its working. It is proposed to put upon acetic acid and vinegar a duty of 15 cents per gallon on a strength of 6 degrees, and on every degree of strength above that to add 1 cent additional duty. That will keep vinegar at practically the same duty which is upon it to-day, and will correct the abuses I have explained. However, as acetic acid is largely used in various manufactures, and in the making of acetates and various other substances, it is proposed to continue the privilege enjoyed by these manufacturers of getting their acetic acid at the same rate of duty as before, and without any limitations upon its degree of strength. The article of fancy boxes and cases and all the cognate fancy manufactures have been raised from 30 to 35 per cent. This is an industry which is growing in this country, and which has proved to be excellent and varied in its kind. Large duties are paid upon the different articles that enter into the manufacture of these boxes, and altogether it is felt that an increase of 5 per cent. is due to that industry, in view of the strong competition it has to meet from German manufacturers, labor being so cheap in Germany, and these articles being put together there at such low rates. A change is made in paints. One finds the item of paints scattered here and there all through the tariff, and, it seems, without much system. proposed to classify all paints under five different classes. On some of these the duty is increased, and the increase takes place upon those made from materials and substances which are found in large quantities in our own country. The next item is that of glass, and a redistribution has been made of the duties. At present in the tariff, common and colorless window glass, plain, colored, stained or tinted glass, ornamental, figured, enamelled, colored glass, painted and vitrified glass, and stained glass windows, all stand at one rate, 30 per cent. This has the effect of placing the highly finished and perfect article at exactly the same rate of duty as the parts of which it is made; and with reference to common and colorless window glass, the duty of 30 per cent. is as high as the duty upon the stained window glass or the other higher grades of glass. Now, common and colorless window glass has not been made in this country, and under present conditions we do not think it can be successfully made home, and I find, in looking at last year's returns, that there were 14 million odd square feet of that kind of glass imported into this country and it paid a duty of $87,893. It is proposed to reduce the duty on common or colorless window glass from 30 to 20 per cent., which will involve a loss to the revenue of about $30,000 on the basis of last year's figures; and, so far as that is concerned, I suppose that hon. gentlemen opposite and myself will look through the same glass and see the same conclusion. The ornamental, figured and colored window glass, the painted and vitrified glass, which now bears 30 per cent., is made to bear 25 per cent; and the stained glass windows, the finished product, bears its present duty of 30 per cent. Silver plate glass remains at 30 per cent., as at present; bevelled glass bears 35 per cent. The others remain as they are in the present tariff, except that when they are bevelled they pay an additional duty of one cent per square foot. Gloves and mitts, which now bear a duty of 30 per cent., are raised to 35 per cent. We imported last year $346,059 of gloves and mitts. We have raised the duty on one or two of the constituent articles on account of industries having developed in this country which make them here; and altogether it was thought better to raise these 5 per cent., and to give to that industry, which is largely prosecuted here, the Canadian market, so far as reasonable protection could do it. Wall paper and hangings of various kinds have been reduced. The present duty was placed upon them on the basis of from 30 to 35 per cent. protection, but the prices from that time to this have fallen very considerably, and what was a protection at that rate in 1887, comes to be a largely increased protection under the present Representations have been made, and very forcibly made, by the dealers throughout the country, and counter representations have been made by the manufacturers, and the cut in the duty is not so great as it would have been if it were not for the peculiar state of that industry now in the United States, and the peculiar difficulties which, owing to the total disorganisation of that business in the United States, and the consequent slaughtering of prices, our manufacturers would have to contend with while that state of things exists. However, it is determined to reduce the rate of duties somewhat as follows: Brown blank and white papers had respectively a duty of 2 and 3 cents under the old tariff. The two have been grouped together, as the prices are now very nearly the same, and a duty of 2 cents has been placed upon them. Print bronzes and colored bronzes had a duty upon them of 7 and 9 cents per roll respectively. The prices of these two differ very little, they have been put together, and the duty of 6 cents imposed instead of 7 and 9 cents. Embossed bronzes bear a duty of 11 cents; that has been reduced to 8 cents. Colored borders, narrow and wide, had a duty of 8 and 10 cents respectively; these are grouped together on account of the little difference in price, and a uniform duty of 6 cents is placed upon them. Bronze borders, narrow and wide, had a duty of 15 and 18 cents respectively; they are grouped together for the same reason as the others were grouped, and a uniform duty of 14 cents per roll is imposed. Embossed borders, which now bear 20 cents a roll, have been placed at 15 cents. All other wall paper hangings are 35 per cent. ad valorem. Dry plates have borne a duty of 15 cents heretofore, and have been a subject of much contention between the dry plate manufacturers and the photographers, and representations and counter representations have been made for many years with reference to this duty. After a careful consideration of the whole matter, I have decided to reduce the duty from 15 cents to 9 cents, which will give a good round protection, but at the same time will diminish the inordinate rate of duty which they at present bear. It is believed that the dry plate makers will not find it difficult to hold the market with the rate of duty which it is proposed to give them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do these specific duties represent on an ad valorem standard?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it will give between 35 and 40 per cent. at present prices. A change has been made in stereotypes and stereotyped plates. The old duty was framed on the weight, it was so much per pound, but a radical change has taken place in the method of manufacturing them. They are now put up very lightly, and the weight has been reduced until a duty founded upon the weight becomes no longer anything like an equivalent of the duty which was placed upon them at the time when they possessed this heavy weight. It has been thought best to change the duty from a weight to a square inch basis. It is pretty difficult to say what is the equivalent, the difference in weights is so great. However, the duty has not been placed very high, but the change has been thought to be a wise one, for two reasons: First, in order to give the adequate protection which it was proposed to give when the tariff was arranged; and, secondly, to encourage the labor of setting type and making these plates in our own country, and so adding to the employ-On umbrellas the duty is ment in that line. changed from 30 per cent. to 35. There are indications that the manufacture of umbrellas will be undertaken in this country and pushed far more vigorously than it has been. Last year we imported $303,777 worth of umbrellas. silk of which they are made bears a duty of 30 per cent., and the other cloths in proportion. The margin of protection which the manufacturer had was so small that it was insufficient to give this industry a start and maintain it properly, and, therefore, it is proposed to increase the duty to 35 per cent. In regard to wire of copper and brass, which has heretofore been free, manufacturers are now making, and are prepared to make to a sufficient extent to fill the Canadian demand, and it was thought wise to put, not a heavy, but a moderate protection upon that article of 15 per cent. Covered wire is to be 35 per cent. instead of 25 per cent. as at present. All other kind of wire is at 25 per cent. The woollen industry of the country has, for the past few years, not been particularly prosperous. Several reasons have been assigned for this, which can better be gone into when the item is before the Committee. Under all the circumstances, considering the decrease in weight and the strong competition manufacturers have to meet, and the large expense they are at for machinery, it has been decided to give woollens an increased duty, raising the present duty of 7½ cents a pound and 20 cents ad valorem to 10 cents a pound and 20 per cent. ad valorem. A re-arrangement has been made of the duties on spirits and alcohol, and the principle which has been adopted is that the duty shall be arranged upon the proof strength, and that spirituous liquors which are imported with additions of strength above proof shall pay in proportion to the strength they have. The duties at the proof rate remain at about the same rates as at present. The only change of any moment is in the principle which has been adopted, that the duty shall be paid on the proof strength, and that strongly fortified spirits which are brought into the country shall not have the advantage of the payment of a less rate of duty over the spirits which are at or about proof. The explanations with reference to this I shall not trouble the House with now, but I shall be prepared to make them when we are in committee.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman adopted the English system?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the system we have adopted is more nearly like the American than the English system. We have had deputations and representations from both sides of those engaged in the hat business. Strong pressure has been brought to bear in order to have the duty on the different kinds of hats and caps raised, both on the wool, the fur, the felt and the straw hats, and counter representations have been made from almost all the importers and dealers in foreign goods. After looking over the whole matter carefully, we have decided to recommend a change. There were a number of articles which went into the manufacture of hats, such as sweats and linings, and that kind of thing, which were allowed in free, and which it was found had taken a larger range than was intended, and were used for the manufacture of other articles, thus escaping the duty. For instance, silks supposed to be for the purpose of linings alone, were used to make neckties, and so these articles went into a larger consumption than it was intended to allow. It has been decided to recommend that these articles shall be taken from the free list, that these sweats and linings shall pay their legitimate duty, and especially because they are now, in great part, being made in this country. It is proposed as a compensation for that to increase the duty on straw hats and woollen hats by 5 per cent. Ladies' hats remain at the same rate of duty as at present, and fur-felt hats have $1.50 per dozen additional, with a reduction of the ad valorem duty from 25 to 20 per cent. As hon. gentlemen are aware, for a year or two there has been considerable discussion with reference to the flour duties. The millers are in this position: that they have a protection of 50 cents per barrel on their flour, while wheat comes into this country at 15 cents per bushel. At the rate of 42 bushels of wheat to a barrel of flour, the duty paid on sufficient wheat to make a barrel of flour would be in the neighborhood of 71 or 72 cents. It has been felt that this disparity of duty between flour and wheat should be remedied, and it has been decided to give an advance of 25 cents per barrel upon flour, and thus equalise it with the wheat duty. For a country which produces a surplus of wheat, and has capacity to mill all the flour which is necessary for the consumption of this country, and to supply outside markets as well, it is not reasonable to believe that this will do more than keep the Mr. FOSTER.

market for Canadians. It is not reasonable to suppose that it will materially raise the price of flour. The milling capacity is so large, and the competition is so keen, that the flour will go into the hands of the consumers at about the same price as it does now under like conditions. It is proposed to introduce added protection to another series of the great farming products of the country. It is felt that in a country like ours, with its large grazing areas, equal to any in the world, with its rapidly increasing dairy and cheese industries, with its unrivalled facilities for the production of meats of various kinds, the time has come when these great industries should be protected by an adequate duty from the competition which they are at present receiving largely from the country to the south of us. For instance, in the article of beef, we find that last year there was introduced from the United States 3,795,105 pounds of beef, at a value of \$160,624. We find that bacon and hams were introduced to the value of \$335,159, the large amount of 3,653,758 pounds; 174,944 pounds of mutton were imported, at a cost of \$13,555; 15,205,972 pounds of pork were imported at a value of \$992,423; prepared meats to the amount of 983,834 pounds, value \$90,305; and of tried lard there were imported 8,290,000 pounds, value \$636,078. To-day, beef is sent to the markets of Halifax and St. John, and all large and small towns west of that, and is sold to the dealers in meat, at just sufficient cut to enable them to dictate lower prices to the raisers and producers of cattle in our own country. It does not follow at all that the consumer gets his meat one single tenth part of a cent less, but the introduction of this imported meat makes it possible for the jobber and dealer to bring down the price to the native producers; and so the producer is met in this country with a competition which makes it difficult for him to pursue his industry with profit to himself. Now, there is no reason in the wide world, to my mind, why Canada should not only raise all the meat necessary for the consumption of her own people, but should become one of the largest exporters of these different kinds of meat to foreign countries. It is with a view of fostering these meat-producing industries with a fairly protective duty, that \mathbf{the} Government come to the conclusion to protect the farmers by raising the rates on these meats in this way: Mess pork, or heavy pork, which now bears a duty of one cent per pound, shall bear a duty in the future of one and a half cents; all salted and fresh meats, which now bear a duty of 1 and 2 cents per pound, shall bear a duty of 3 cents per pound. Prepared meats which now bear a duty of 2 cents, shall be raised to 3 cents. Tried lard, which now bears a duty of 2 cents, shall be raised to 3 cents; and untried lard, which now bears a duty of $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents, shall be raised to 2 cents. Live cattle, hogs and sheep shall have the duty raised upon them pro-portionately from 20 to 30 per cent. This, in brief, is the schedule which is proposed in the resolutions which will be submitted to the House. Now, it is proposed as well to make some changes with regard to the corn duties. The people of the Maritime Provinces especially, use a large quantity of corn meal. It is used by the fisher folk, and by people of the rural parts of the Provinces, and is more largely consumed by the people of Nova Scotia, and less largely by the people of New Brunswick and the other Provinces. It is proposed to couple with the duties which have been already mentioned, this provision: that in the case of corn kilndried, or to be kiln-dried, and ground into meal for human food, a rebate be given to those who mill it, of 90 per cent. on the original duty paid, and that Customs regulations shall be prepared and put into force for the carrying out of this resolution. It is also proposed that molasses, which to-day bears a duty of 15 per cent. when imported direct from the place of production, and which is practically confined to the tests between 40 and 55—it is proposed that the duty on molasses shall be lowered about one-half, and that a duty of $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per gallon, when imported direct from the place of production, shall be charged upon it. It is also proposed that the test for molasses shall be lowered, and that it shall run between 30 and 35. The duty collected upon molasses last year, was in the neighborhood of \$123,000, and by lowering the duty by about one-half, it will be seen that we propose to meet a loss of revenue in this, of some \$60,000. Molasses is an article which is used very widely in the Maritime Provinces. In the Province of New Brunswick from which I come, molasses of good good good and the right starts. a good grade, not the vile stuff called "black-strap," is used in all our rural districts, and the same is the case with reference to Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. It is, therefore, proposed to couple the rebate on corn, when milled for human food, and the reduction of one-half of the duty of molasses, with an increased duty of 25 cents upon flour. I now come to another item about which there has been considerable discussion in the House and out of it. It is that which relates to plants, fruits, shrubs and the like, and with which this House dealt in 1888. By an Order in Council of 14th April, 1888, certain fruits and plants and shrubs were placed upon the free list. This arose from the fact that in the Tariff Act of 1879, there was a clause which left it permissive with the Government, on a certain list of articles, to either reduce the duty upon them or to remove the duty altogether when such articles were either free, or of less duty in the United States than was charged here. The matter was brought to the attention of the Government in 1888 under the peculiar circumstances which at that time prevailed. It was contended by gentlemen of the Opposition that it was not treating the United States fairly, when they had any one of these articles at a lower duty, if we did not place that article on the same tariff footing as it was in the United States. It was contended on this side of the House that this clause of the Act was simply permissive and not mandatory on the Government, and that it rested with the Government of Canada to say whether this should be done in individual instances or not, and that what was contemplated in that article in the tariff law was that when those products as a whole, or as many of them as Canada should consider it to be in her interest to reciprocate in, were placed on the free list or had a lower rate of duty imposed upon them, the Government would reduce its duties upon them to the same level. However, under the circumstances that prevailed at that time, it was decided to put .hese articles on the free list, and a very considera very considerable damage was done to a large and important interest in this country. For it must be borne in mind, that the removal of the duty from those articles did not place our people in a position of fair and equal competition with the people to the south of us, and there are various considerations which will easily suggest themselves to the minds of hon. gentlemen conversant with this subject when I make that statement. For instance, there was State legislation in most of the bordering States, making it practically impossible for men who raised nursery stock on this side of the line, to undertake any profitable conduct of their business on that side, owing to the way they would be hampered as aliens engaging in trade in that country. With reference to fruits, the United States has a wide range of climate. Its fruits commence to ripen from late in the winter or early in the spring, and it has a gradation of climate enabling it to produce a certain class of fruits through a range of three or four or even five months. The season with us is short, and the competition for this reason was felt to be unfair to the large fruit-growing and nursery industries in this country. It is, therefore, proposed to put these articles back in the same place they occupied in the tariff previous to 1888, with the exception that on blackberries, gooseberries, raspberries and strawberries, the rate of duty shall be 3 cents instead of 4 cents. Then we have placed on the free list: bananas, plantains, pineapples, pomegranates, guavas, mangoes, shaddocks, wild blueberries and wild strawberries, which were formerly on the dutiable list. Beet, carrot, turnip and mangold seeds, for the use of farmers of this country, are also placed on the free list. The House will recollect the discussion which took place here a short time ago on mining machinery, when I urged that the House should defer the discussion until the Government had brought down its tariff measure. All over our country the indications of interest in the development of our mining resources are plain and unmistakable; our resources are being, every year, more and more explored; we are coming ourselves to have a better and more adequate knowledge of the immense wealth we have in this line; and this information is filtering out into other countries, and is producing an interest in the minds of capitalists in other countries, which is continually growing, and which we believe will be productive of large investments in this country. On the whole, it appears to me that we are on the eve of large developments of the mining industries of this country, and in the future we may look for large accretions of interest and increasing employment of labor in the development of the vast mineral and metallic stocks which we have scattered throughout this country from Cape There has thus Breton to British Columbia. arisen a demand for free mining machinery. It is stated that the best and most improved machinery must be used by experimenters who put their money into enterprises the outcome of which they cannot certainly see. It is felt by them that the very best possible machinery should be got. felt by some that for a period at least there should be no restriction whatever on the buying of it, and by others, that there should be no other restriction than that imposed by the consideration whether or not the machinery is made in able amount of duty was lost in consequence, and this country. Looking over the whole question, the Government have come to the conclusion that it will not be wise or prudent to resist this demand at the present time, in the interest of the development of that large part of the country's resources, and it is proposed to allow mining machinery of a class and kind which is not made in Canada at the time of the importation, to be imported into this country free for the period of three years and no longer. That will have a double effect. It will give to those persons who are investing their money in the development of our mining interests the freest market for the purchase of the best possible machinery they can get—a market, the freedom of which is only limited by the fact that the machinery they may require is made in Canada; and no person, I apprehend, is so unpatriotic as to wish a provision to be inserted which would allow him to buy machinery outside of Canada when it could be made in Canada by industries which have been fostered and brought into their present state, by the operation of the tariff which we have enacted and maintained. will have this other effect. By the free introduction of mining machinery such as is not made in Canada, and by the impetus which will be given to mining after the period of experimenting is over, and after the richness and paying qualities of these resources are demonstrated, there will be a continued and progressive development of that industry; and after the period of three years that development will naturally add to the demand for the production of this machinery in Canada, which will, consequently, promote and encourage its manufacture after that period. There has been another subject brought to the attention of the Government, that is, the building of iron ships in this country. It may be an open question whether or not the wooden ship has seen its day. I do not believe myself that the wooden ship, so far as the smaller kinds of coasting vessels are concerned, has at all seen its best days. I do not think any person who sits at these boards will see the time when the good, trim, staunch coasting vessels of our Maritime Provinces will be superseded by iron or steel or any other material. But the whole trend of development to-day goes upon the line of building steel and iron vessels for quick transit and for large carrying capacity between foreign and distant countries. We have this anomaly in this country, that an iron or steel vessel can be built in Great Britain on the Clyde, and can be brought into this country and put on our lake, river or sea routes free of duty entirely, if she is registered in England, while people interested in the building of similar vessels in Canada who import the steel and iron machinery and parts which are necessary for building them here, and which cannot be made in this country, are met by heavy duties; and so the industry is handicapped. It has, therefore, been determined, for the encouragement of this industry which has already planted itself in our country and which is promising to develop with very great vigor, to assist it in the following way: by allowing all steel and iron parts, which are used in the manufacture of iron or steel vessels, to come in free, so long as they are not made in Canada; and that designation at the present time will take in a very large proportion of the heavy iron and steel work which enters into the construction of these vessels. The Minister of Customs has asked me not to Mr. Foster. if she is registered in England, while people inter-forget another point, and for the benefit of hon. gentlemen who have been urging the matter for some time, I will mention it. It is this: that among the other numerous articles which have been placed on the free list in these resolutions is that of corn of the kinds used for seed to be grown for ensilage purposes, and thereby we remove one of the great standing grievances, from the standpoint of hon gentlemen opposite of which the farmers have to complain. With this brief and incomplete introduction I beg leave now to move that this House resolves itself into a Committee of Ways and Means on the following resolutions :-

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Act 49 Victoria, chapter 33—Revised Statutes—intituled: "An Act respecting the Duties of Customs," as follows:—

5. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the foregoing resolutions and the alterations thereby made in the duties of Customs on the articles therein mentioned shall take effect on and after the twenty-eighth day of March instant.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BOWELL. It is usual upon the presentation of resolutions having reference to the tariff, that the motion should be made that the House resolve itself into a Committee at once, pass the resolutions pro forma and report, and upon the reception of the report the debate will be continued.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course that has been the practice. and no objection will be taken to it on this side. The hon. gentleman knows, however, that we do not in the least waive our right to the fullest possible discussion in the most conversational manner, of the various items when the discussion takes place in Committee.

Resolutions considered in Committee and re-

Mr. BOWELL moved the second reading of the resolutions.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I listened to the speech of the hon. the Minister of Finance delivered this afternoon with a feeling of profound regret. To me, and I think to most men, no matter what their political proclivities may be, who have paid any serious attention to the state of affairs in Canada, our position at this moment must appear, in many respects, to be both critical and delicate. We are to-day in a situation in which a false step may entail very serious consequences upon us; and I could not but feel that it was extraordinary, almost unprecedented, to find that a gentleman occupying the position of Finance Minister, having, presumably, access to more sources of information than are at the command of any ordinary member of Parliament, should feel justified, under those circumstances, in adopting a tone which I might almost say was one of levity, in view of certain matters to which I propose to call your attention. Sir, the Minister of Finance could see no cloud on the horizon. Whether he looked east or west, north or south, he, at any rate. was happy in his fool's paradise. He any rate, was happy in his fool's paradise. He told us that the last year had been a fairly satisfactory one. I tell him, and I tell this House, that not for thirty-five years has there been in the annals of Canada, and notably not a year in the annals of the great Province of Ontario, in which, in many portions of the country, there has been such extreme distress and such well-founded apprehensions for the future. The hon. gentleman told us that our farmers and fishermen were in a condition of fair prosperity, that want was practically unknown, and that labor found full and fair remuneration throughout this Dominion. Sir, unless I knew that the hon. gentleman was speaking in ignorance of the condition of a great number of the people of Canada, I would say that these were words of cruel mockery. The hon, gentleman alleges that he has a large surplus; he tells us that he expects a still larger one. As I have said, he must know, and if he did not know, surely there are men who support him who could have informed him, that whether or not it be true that certain classes in this community have enjoyed a fair amount of prosperity, there is throughout Canada to-day a great amount of distress. Nevertheless, the hon. Minister had no word of substantial relief The hon. gentleman did, for these parties. indeed, make a few delusive and illusive promises of the assistance that he would grant to some of these people; but I repeat that of substantial relief, or of any real and genuine appreciation of the position, the hon. gentleman's speech from start to finish was entirely devoid. On the contrary, when these men, speaking through their accredited representatives, ask the hon. gentleman for bread, he gives them a stone; when they ask to be relieved from the taxes which are injuring them and destroying the very foundation of their prosperity, the hon. gentleman, with a large surplus, and in the expectation of a still larger surplus, for sole panacea, proposes to add still further to the burthens of the people. I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not in his place, but I am afraid that after listening to his speech, I must say to him, as I have said to some of his predecessors, that he has sunk the high and responsible position of the Minister of Finance, the sworn guardian of all classes of the people, to the position of speaking trumpet for a number of combines. The hon. gentleman is not only deaf to the murmurs of distress at home, which ought to have reached his ears, but he is likewise deaf to certain threatening aspects abroad, which no statesman should venture to disregard for a moment. He is satisfied, and he asks us to be satisfied, if the huge taxation which he and his comrades have imposed, is successful in filling their coffers. Sir, he never pauses, nor have they paused, nor have their masters and paymasters ever paused, to consider at what a cost to the whole community these results have been obtained. As was said of another person in somewhat similar circumstances

Half ignorant he turns an easy wheel Which sets sharp racks at work to pinch and peel." Now, I have long seen and known, for my part, that the propositions which were made to us from the other side of the House, when we were asked again and again to impose additional taxes on the people for the purpose of promoting this or that infant industry, were, to all intents and purposes, attempts to obtain money from us under false pretences. They may, in a number of cases, have fostered new industries, they may occasionally have produced a temporary splutter; some weak industry may have been nursed into existence for a few months and years, and afterwards disappeared. But, although the industry disappeared, although the promised benefit to Canada disappeared, although it vanished into the thinnest of thin air, the tax remained, and no doubt helped to swell the surplus of which the hon. gentleman boasts to-day. Now, Sir, to me, and I think to most gentlemen in this House who have studied and reflected on the present position of Canada, there are two questions which tower above all others. Those questions are closely related, no doubt, to each other; nevertheless, they are distinct, and require distinct treatment. of those is the present condition of Canada as regards the United States, and the other is the condition of the agricultural population of this Dominion. Now, no Canadian statesman ought, in delivering a discourse on the financial condition of the country, to ignore the unsatisfactory conditions which exist with respect to these two great questions; and yet I put it to the intelligence of this House, whether, during his entire speech, the hon. Minister of Finance appears to have had even the slightest appreciation of the real position of these two great questions. I will pause here for a moment or two, to review one or two of the statements which were made by that hon. gentleman. I agree with him that he deserves, in this respect, at any rate, a reasonable amount of credit, in that, I think, he fairly estimated both the revenue and the expenditure of the past year, and I daresay he has made a reasonably fair approximate estimate of the probable income and the probable expendi- party, had a popular majority of over 100,000 Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

ture for the present and succeeding years. But, as I have said, I dissent entirely from the hon. gentleman, I take issue with him in the strongest possible terms, when he states that, on the whole, the last year has been a satisfactory one, and much more, when he stated that our farmers and fishermen were in a condition of fair prosperity, that want was practically unknown, that labor had found full and fair remuneration in Canada, and that all we need, for sooth, to make us a united and happy people, was swift communication with the West Indies and other countries to the south of them—and, I suppose, liberal subsidies for the benefit of my hon. friend from St. John, and some other friends of the hon. gentlemen who also reside in St. John. I notice that the hon. gentleman declares that it is communication with countries to the south that we must look to. But his vision swept over 5,000 miles of territory in order to see countries south of the equator, to whom he holds we must look for profitable trade and intercourse. He cannot see, though we can, that there is a country to the south, in communication with which, in free trade and free relations with which, an infinitely more valuable, an infinitely more important trade, a trade of infinitely greater consequence to all classes in this community, can be had if there were only a little wise statesmanship and a little common sense displayed in the conduct of the Government of this country. The hon. gentleman went on to tell us that we had laid broad and wide the foundations of a development, the like of which—if I understand him aright—the world has never seen. Well, I hope he may be correct. The hon. gentleman went on to say that, in laying broad and wide the foundations of this development, we had poured out treasure like water, a statement no one on this side of the House will contradict, though we may dissent extremely from his other statement that every dollar of that treasure had been wisely spent, that we had a princely equipment and a royal endowment. When we turn to one of these princely equipments and royal endowments-which its other name is the Intercolonial Railway—we find that it cost us fifty-one millions of dollars, and, according to the last statement which has been placed in my hands, in the first eight months of this year, besides not paying one cent of interest on this fifty-one millions, it shows a deficit of actual working expenses over receipts of $416,000. That is the royal endowment, and that is the proof of the wise expenditure of every dollar which the hon. gentleman assures us has taken place. Then the hon. gentleman proceeded to reproach my friend beside me because my hon. friend had ventured to say that the intelligence and good sense of the people of the United States would, he thought, ere long free them from their protectionist trammels; and, with a singular ignorance—although perhaps, looking to the previous part of his speech-it was not an unnatural ignorance— of what transpired in the United States at the late presidential election, the hon. gentleman went on to declare that the people of the United States were practically unanimous in their adherence to their tariff policy, when it must be known to him that, in the last great contest between the protectionist and free trade parties in that country, President Cleveland, the champion of the free strong. The United States, the hon. gentleman tells us, are practically a unit in favor of their tariff policy. Does the hon, gentleman know what majority the Republican party have in Congress had to day? because if he does not, I think I can tell him. The total majority of that party in a House of 339 members, I think, was eight. That is the decisive majority to which he refers. That is the evidence and the proof that the people of the United States are a unit in favor of protection. I do not intend at the present moment to spend any great length of time in discussing the various points to which the hon. gentleman has called our attention in the matter of the tariff, other than this. I notice that the hon, gentleman dwelt on the new industries which had sprung up by magic, but he forgot to enumerate them. Now, I know something of the industries which sprung up by magic, and I know more, I am sorry to say, of the industries which, having been fostered into existence by unwise protection, resulted in total loss of capital to those who had invested in them and in very great loss to the localities which had been induced to subscribe in order to aid them. Perhaps the hon. gentleman had reference to an industry nearer at home. I remember one industry in which he might at one time have been induced to take an interest, and that was the industry of timber limits, though I think a check has been given to that particular branch of development. As I said, I will defer, for the moment at any rate, my remarks on the various items in which the hon. gentleman proposes to increase our taxation. think it is more in the public interest that we should apply ourselves at present to consider what are the immediate needs of the time, and I propose to review, in a few words, our position in regard to the people of the United States. I say—and if my words do not find an echo on the other side of the House, they will find an echo far and wide through the Dominion of Canada—that, to-day, our position in regard to our great neighbor is eminently unsatisfactory, and why is it so? I will tell the hon. gentleman why. We are standing at the cross-roads. Two policies are now face to face before the people of this country. You may see, if you choose, the reflection of the policy of the Government in the McKinley resolutions, and you may see the reflection of the policy of the Opposition in this House in the resolutions which were introduced by Mr. Hitt, the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. Here is our position: It is perfectly clear that, whatever else this Government may or may not have done, they have succeeded in bringing Canada into this position, that Canada will shortly be compelled to choose between our policy and theirs, tween free intercourse and non-intercourse, and I know well what particular decision the people of Canada, if they were allowed a fair and honest choice, would choose to make in that matter. But I have something to say as to the policy the Government have inaugurated towards the United States. It is now five years and more, since the members of the Opposition in this House called the attention of the Government to the fact that, as our treaty with the United States with respect to the fisheries was about to expire, it was eminently desirable that the Government of Canada, should exert themselves to bring about proper and friendly relations with the people of the United of the House, speak at least for one-half the States. What has been the course of these hon. gentlemen from that day to this? It can be characterised as nothing but a succession of imbecile blunders. First of all, those hon gentlemen were only too ready to make concessions to the United States, without the slightest idea of what the results of those concessions would be. Then suddenly turning round on their previous action, after having, as I say, gone perhaps further in the way of concession than was either necessary or desirable, we saw them resorting to a policy of bluster and annoyance in which they-I will not say falsely, but certainly mistakenly—supposed they would have the support of the English Government. But, when it was seen by the mother country that these foolish men were playing with fire, that they were incurring dangers altogether too great to be incurred either by ourselves or by the empire, we saw a complete and total reversal of their previous policy, and we saw an English statesman sent out from England practically for the purpose of ordering these gentlemen—for it amounted to that—to withdraw their pretensions and make peace as best they could, no matter at what humiliation or at what risk to our interests. with the people of the United States. Then, Sir, we had a little while ago a declaration on the part of these gentlemen that they refused to be bound by the offer they themselves had made to the people of the United States. As I said, that offer they were compelled to implement probably by the action of Sir Charles Tupper, the then Minister of Finance, within two or three days. But, I suppose, by way of provoking and challenging the people of the United States, scarcely had our backs been turned when we saw these men commit the further folly—the insane folly for such it was— of deliberately risking a great injury to a most important trade, by attaching an export duty to lumber, which they ought to have known would simply serve as a lever to parties in the United States who desire to injure our trade in that important commodity. Then, we had twice the rejection of the resolution, which I had the honor to propose in this House; not binding the Government to any particular form of trade with the United States, but simply asking that they would invite negotiations for the purpose of seeing whether we could not obtain better trade relations with our American neighbors. I suppose, by way of giving emphasis to that, they added to this double rejection a further refusal to take any steps whatever to maintain an agent at Washington, who could keep them advised of what they extremely need to be advised—the real temper and feeling of the American politicians and people. I say, that in dealing with the United States these hon. gentlemen opposite, from first to last, have displayed an utter want of statemanship and capacity for Government. These hon. gentlemen may be, as one of their supporters last night described them, persons who are extremely well fitted to gerrymandering fifty four constituencies, under pretence of providing constituencies for four new members; they may be able enough to pass Franchise Bills; they may be able to debauch members, and constituencies, and Provinces too, for that matter; but when a real emergency occurs, we find these men helpless, or compelled to adopt the policy furnished them from this side of the people of Canada, even supposing that the hon. gentlemen opposite do speak, which I doubt for the other half; we know, and we have proof, that in advocating the course we have advocated, we reflect correctly the views of the Local Legislatures of the people who are in many important respects, closer to them, or at least quite as well acquainted with their real wants and wishes, as we can be. I have no doubt that if the hon, gentlemen were to submit to-morrow a plebiscitum to the people of this Dominion, demanding of them plainly whether they did or did not desire to cultivate close trade relations with the United States, by every honor-able means and methods—I have no doubt whatever that such plebiscitum would obtain a perfectly overwhelming vote throughout this Dominion. I have no doubt either for my part, that if it were possible for us to obtain a fair and honest expression of the people at the polls, free from those debasing and perverting influences to which I have alluded; free from the effects of Gerrymander Acts, and Franchise Bills, and a subsidised press, and all the side issues which disturb a political election-I have no doubt, whatever, that the result would be precisely the same. I say, it is an ostrich-like policy on the part of these hon. gentlemen to affect—as the Minister of Finance appears to affect in his speech this afternoon-indifference to the policy which may be pursued by the country to the south of us. The United States are our closest neighbors, bordering on us for more than three thousand miles, they are our chiefest and most profitable customers, they are the home of a very large number of our people, and more than that, their prosperity, as hon. gentlemen well know, most largely affects our prosperity. A great crisis and a great depression in the United States would mean great injury and great loss to an enormous number of our people. Now, Sir, that being so, and there being no possiblity of disputing these facts, why cannot the hon. gentlemen recognise that? Why must they neglect the ordinary precautions, which would recommend themselves to men of common sense? Why, must they deliberately invite and challenge grave injury to this country, as has been done to-night, by the proposition submitted by the hon. gentleman? I tell the hon, the Minister of Finance and I tell his colleagues, that if the Bill now known as the McKinley Bill passes through the United States Congress in its present shape, these portions of the Bill, which are likely to affect our people injuriously, will have been passed, humanly speaking, more in consequence of the ill-advised acts of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, than from any other cause whatever. I say that the hon gentleman has acted most imprudently and that he has done all that he can possibly do to inflict a grave injury on the people whom it is his bounden duty to protect and to provide for. Now, Sir, in listen-ing to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Finance, I missed two or three things which we were in the habit of hearing commented on in former occasions. I can well remember when hon. gentlemen, occupying the position of Finance Minister, were wont to tell us that nothing did so much injury to this country as the great preponderance of imports over exports. The hon gentleman is well aware that we imported some $20,000,000 worth more than we exported during the last year, but on the present Sir Richard Cartwright.

worthy of notice. The hon, gentleman likewise, and the hon, gentleman's colleagues, a little while ago, lost no opportunity of explaining to the House, and explaining to the people of Canada, that it was an unanswerable proof of the general prosperity of the people of the country that our savings banks deposits kept increasing by millions and millions every year. It was no doubt quite an accidental oversight on the part of the hon. gentleman that he did not mention to-day, that whereas the savings banks' deposits amounted to $42,999,692 on the 1st of October last, on the 1st March last they had been reduced to $41,305,493, being a loss of $1,700,000 of savings banks' deposits in the course of five months. That is a fact which has no doubt entirely escaped the hon, gentleman's Perhaps the hon. gentleman, or some of his friends, will tell us that was because of the reduced rate of interest from 4 to 3½ per cent. Now, Sir, I call the attention of the House, as I have done on two or three occasions before, to the fact that the hon. gentleman's proof of "marked prosperity," simply indicated that they were paying some 30 or 40 per cent. more than the money was actually worth, and, therefore, they got the additional deposits of which they boasted. But when they come down to the fair market rate, not to 3 per cent. but 3½ per cent., in five months their deposits were reduced by nearly $2,000,000. The hon. gentleman cannot see, I suppose, that is any evidence either of the falsity of the system on which he worked, or-if his previous statements were correct—any evidence of the pressure which, according to him and his friends, is now inflicted on the country. When the hon, gentleman and his friends were calling the attention of the people of Canada to the increase of the savings banks' deposits as a proof of our great prosperity, I took the opportunity on many occasions of pointing out to them that that was an entire delusion. I pointed out that Canada was a borrowing country and not a lending country, and that it was perfectly absurd for them to suppose that if they borrowed from the people of Canada, they could produce any other result than to oblige the people of Canada to borrow from somebody else. I have in my hand a very curious proof of the exact accuracy of my prediction. I have here the returns of the moneys borrowed by loan companies abroad in the last few years, and I find that whereas on the 1st of July, 1879, we borrowed through our savings banks $9,207,000, and on the 1st of January, 1890, $41,800,000, being an increase of about $32,000,000, at the same time the Canadian public were borrowing, in England chiefly, in precisely the same ratio. In 1879 they had borrowed $6,602,000, and on the 1st of January, 1888, within a period two years shorter than the term for the savings banks' deposits, they had borrowed $36,502,000. So that the whole result of the policy of these hon. gentlemen was that they borrowed from the people of Canada, and compelled the people of Canada to borrow abroad at higher rates; and that statement does not take into account the numerous other loans, municipal and private,which have constantly been made. Sir, the hon. gentleman had not one word to say at the same time of the growth of our trade with the United States. According to our Trade and Navigation occasion he does not consider that fact as even Returns, our trade with the United States appears to have grown more than our trade with any other country. In the last year our trade with the United States appears to have increased from $91,000,000 to $94,000,000, while our trade with Great Britain barely increased from $79,000,000 to $80,000,000, which is proof enough, if proof were needed, of the enormous importance to the people of this country of cultivating close and friendly relations with a nation which in the face of the disadvantage of two hostile tariffs takes from us very nearly one-half of our total exports and imports. The hon, gentleman estimated his surplus at $1,867,000. That is a substantial surplus, but I observe that in obtaining it he charged to capital account $163,000 for expenses of North-West lands, while he appropriated the entire receipts from North-West lands to income, and also that he charged to capital account about $370,000 for rolling stock on the Intercolonial Railway; so that in my judgment at least $530,000 ought to be deducted from the hon. gentleman's surplus, leaving a substantial surplus it is true, but one very considerably less than that which he claims. And, Sir, while I am on this subject I may call the attention of the hon. First Minister, who is the party most chiefly responsible in the first instance, to the fact that although we have now come within five or six months of the time when we were to receive $68,000,000 profit from the sale of the North-West lands, our expenses for North-West lands, up to the 30th of June last, amounted to $5,909,462, and the total receipts credited to us to that date amounted to $4,205,526; so that to-day we have five or six months left to us to overcome a deficit of $1,633,936 and to realise the much desired profit promised by the hon. First Minister of $68,000,000 odd, payable on the 1st of January, 1891, both days inclusive. Well, Sir, all I will say is this, that looking at the promises held out to us when this same National Policy was introduced, and looking also at the performances, the results with respect to the National Policy correspond very accurately, so far as the majority of the people of Canada are concerned, to the results of the hon. gentleman's North-West land policy. But, Mr. Speaker, there a question of still greater magnitude which I desire to discuss to-night. We have now had something like eleven years of the operation of this same protective nostrum, and the time has come for us to see to what position it has brought us; and more particularly has the time come for us to see to what position it has brought the greatest class in this community. I need not say, for I have the authority of hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly the hon. First Minister, for declaring that the prosperity of Canada mainly depends on the prosperity of the agricultural class—that our wealth comes chiefly from that class, and next to them from our miners, our fishermen, our sailors and our lumbermen; the rest are practically to a very great extent dependents or waiters or servants on those classes. Of these productive classes, as every one knows, our agriculturists are by far the chief. If they prosper, the rest will prosper, and prosper permanently; if they do not prosper, I need not tell the House that the prosperity of all the rest will depend on a very unstable equilibrium. Now, it may interest the House to know what, in the opinion of the hon. First Minister, was the condition of the farmers of Canada a few years ago. our duty to ascertain what are the best tests of the

I find that in 1876, when the subject of the National Policy was first introduced to the notice of the people, that hon. gentleman, speaking of the condition of the agricultural class, made use of the following rather remarkable words:

"It is not every man who can be or likes to be a farmer, and the man who is unwillingly made one will be a failure. There is no life in the world, in my estimation, more happy and enviable than the farmer's under the circumstances in which he is placed in Canada. It is a pleasant, independent life, bringing domestic happiness and all that the expression implies, but still all men are not to be farmers."

A little later on he went on to say:

"I shall not assert on their part that they come here in forma pauperis, or that they are suffering from distress or pecuniary difficulty. I am not going to say anything of the kind; no man could truthfully say that the farmers cannot live in comfort or happiness under the present tariff."

That is the tariff to which my name is attached. Well, if the hon. gentleman had never stated an exact fact in his life before, he stated it then. Sir, it was all true. The condition of the farmers of Canada was fairly good in 1876, and more than fairly good, take the whole country throughout. The land values of the farms was certainly rising. On the whole, barring accident from unprosperous seasons, their indebtedness was diminishing; the taxation of the country was stationary, the farming population—and to this I call the attention of the House—was increasing with reasonable rapidity, and, as the statistics of the United States clearly show, emigration from this country, and emigration on the part of the farmers was lessening. Moreover, there was reasonable probability then of retaining our surplus population in our own country. It is true at that time there was a serious commercial difficulty, not merely in Canada but in the United States, in England and in almost the entire civilised world. And it was equally true, and the right hon gentleman knew it well, that so far as Canada was concerned our commercial difficulties arose, to a very considerable extent, if not altogether, from the state of things in the United States, which were then going through a period of unexampled depression, and that our commercial difficulties were far less than those existing in the United States, and that they were certain to disappear the first moment that a revival of prosperity took place there. Waiving revival of prosperity took place there. this, however, we have had, on the authority of the First Minister, his own admission of the condition of the farmers of Canada, and notably of the farmers of Ontario, at the time when the late Government was in power. It becomes our duty to examine the condition of the farmers of Canada to-day. Anywhere and everywhere that is a most important task; here it is supremely so. At all events so far as our inland Provinces go agri-culture is, agriculture must be for many a day our great staple. Sir, I do not at all mean to say that we may not have a reasonable number of manufacturing industries in this country, but I do say that, taking Canada as a whole, circumstances do not seem to fit us to become a great manufacturing country, and most assuredly, if I am to judge of the progress which the exports of manufactures have made in the last eleven years, the policy of hon. gentlemen has been singularly unfortunate in promoting the exports of manufactures at all events from this country. It becomes condition of the farmers in any given country. me it appears that our first duty is to ascertain how rapidly the rural population in the Dominion of Canada is increasing, how much the value of farm land in Canada is increasing, how far the indebtedness of the farmers has increased, how high they are taxed; and, in the last place, how fast the settlement of unoccupied lands is advancing. Here I must perforce take the Province of Ontario as the best illustration I can get of the actual condition of the farming population. Not only is it the largest and richest Province, but here we have got, on the whole, tolerably clear and satisfactory evidence of what is going forward, more so at all events than we are as yet able to obtain in any other Province. I want to call the attention of the House to the growth of the rural population of the Province of Ontario within two periods; one covering the Administration of Mr. Mackenzie, and the other covering the Administration of the hon. gentleman who succeeded him. Sir, it is noteworthy, and it would be well for those who represent agricultural constituencies to call the attention of their voters to it. I find that in the years from 1872 to 1879 the rural population of Ontario increased 84,603 souls. I find that from 1879 to 1888 the rural population of Ontario increased a little less than 11,000 souls; in the seven years under the Administration of Mr. Mackenzie chiefly, the rural population of Ontariowhich I submit is a very good test of the prosperity of the farmers—increased eight times more than it did in a period of nine years under the Administration of the hon. gentleman opposite. And, Sir, it is well to remember that that increase under the Mackenzie régime took place against that all but absolutely stationary condition under his successor, in spite of the fact that a large amount of new territory was thrown open in Ontario, that many thousands of miles of railway were constructed in the period from 1879 to 1888, whereby a great impetus ought to have been given to the growth of the rural population. Even at the risk of somewhat wearying my hon. friends, I must call their attention to a statement which has been furnished to me, showing how the rural population in fifty constituencies in Ontario has retrograded during the last nine years. The figures are as follows:-

the Province of Ontario, in fifty the rural population had actually retrograded. Many of the remainder were absolutly stationary, hardly one, with the exception of those which were perfectly new territories, had maintained its natural increase. Will hon, gentlemen opposite dare to assert, in the face of these figures, that the whole Province of Ontario is already filled up, that there is no room there for agriculturists or settlers, and that the state of things which exists there is a natural and wholesome condition of affairs? I turn to the Hand Book of this Dominion, which was laid on the Table last night, and I see there that the total area of Ontario is 181,000 square miles, or 115,000,000 acres. Now, I suppose, if I or anybody on this side had dared to insinuate that this was not all good land, we would have been accused of being woefully unpatriotic. Nevertheless, I cannot say that I consider the whole of these 115,000,000 acres perfectly good land, but I do believe that a very large portion of it is quite capable of profitable agriculture; and I ask: What can be thought about such a state of things as this? We have but a little more than 200,000 families engaged in agriculture in the Province of Ontario, with its area of 181,000 square miles, or one square mile to each family; and we have an enormous extent, fully equal to that now occupied, of good land waiting cultivation; and yet in nine years the total rural population of the great Province of Ontario has increased less than 11,000 souls. Why, if I look at the less than 11,000 souls. municipal returns, I find that the total occupied land in Ontario, in the year 1887, was given at 21,799,000 acres, of which 11,108,000 acres were returned as cleared. So that of 115,000,000 acres, which is the nominal area of Ontario, 11,108,000 appear to be cleared; and yet the population of that Province, during nine long years of the Administration of the right hon. gentleman, has remained positively stationary. It has gained but 1 per cent. in that period, the natural increase of population being something like 24 per cent. per year. In the meantime, if the hon. the Minister of Agriculture's statistics are to be relied upon, we have imported into Canada many hundreds of thousands of immigrants, the greater portion of whom must clearly, if they have stayed here at all, have settled in the Province of Ontario. Now, not merely is it clear from this evidence that the rural population of that great Province is perfectly stationary, but I say that, with such an area as I have described unoccupied, a stationary state is a retrogressive state; and I ask, is it our misfortune or our fault that such a state of things has been created that we cannot keep the natives of our own country here, but they must leave our shores by the hundred thousands, and that, when we bring out at great expense hundred of thousands of emigrants, we cannot keep them either? I turn to the second part of my investigation. It is clear, as I have shown, that there is no increase of the rural population-but what of the other proofs of prosperity, and, more particularly, what of the amount of indebtedness existing among the farmers of It is quite true—I am not disposed to Ontario? dispute the proposition—that in newly settled countries an increase of indebtedness is not always a proof that the country has retrograded; but, in old settled countries, I say there is no fitable and that the farmers are hampered in their circumstances, than to find, instead of paying off their indebtedness, they are largely increasing it. I have always believed that it was the duty, both of this Government and of the Local Government, to have investigated this matter, to have ascertained and put on record the increase or diminution of mortgage indebtedness, especially on farms, from year to year; and I regret much that neither one nor the other of these Governments has seen fit to do so. As the Governments would not act, and as I had cause to know that this indebtedness was increasing enormously, I took such means as were fairly open to me to ascertain what was the extent of the mortgage indebtedness of the Ontario farmers, and I am going to submit to this House a brief statement, based on actual investigation, which may, perhaps, open the eyes of some people here and more people in the country to the condition at which the farmers of Ontario have arrived. I caused eleven ridings to be selected in various parts of the country, such as, in my honest judgment, afforded the fairest samples of its condition. Among those, I selected certain townships and certain concessions; and I have here from the reports of the registry offices of those counties a rather remarkable statement, to which I call the particular attention of my hon. friends from Ontario, showing the extent of the mortgage indebtedness among the farmers of this Province. In the first group I found that in one single concession, covering 10,200 acres, the mortgage indebtedness was returned at $139,983; in a second constituency in a concession of 5,600 acres the mortgage indebtedness was returned at $146,-271. In another group in a concession containing 6,400 acres, the mortgage indebtedness was $93,906, and in another concession in the same group of 4,600 acres, the mortgage indebtedness was $57,288; in the fifth case, in a concession of 4,220 acres, there was a mortgage indebtedness of $55,850; and in the sixth case in a concession of 6,800 acres, there was a debt of $84,300. In the fourth group in a concession of 5,600 acres, there was an indebtedness of $59,062, and in the second case, in a concession of 4,600 acres, there was an indebtedness of $79,900; in the fifth group, in a concession of 5,600 acres, the indebtedness amounted to $92,441; and on one of 7,200 acres, it amounted to $150,361. In no case were any village properties included, in no case were any farms of less than 50 acres put down. Now, I would like to call the attention of the country to what that means. If these assessments fairly represent the indebtedness of the respective counties in which they are made, and if those counties are, as I have every reason to believe, a fair sample of the condition of the various rural constituencies throughout Ontario, then you are con-fronted with this alarming state of facts, that in the greater number, probably, of the older settled townships of the Province of Ontario, the average indebtedness of a township, according to its size, will range from $500,000 up to one million dollars; that the average indebtedness of each constituency, according to its size, will range to two or three millions; and that the total mortgage indebtedness of the Province of Ontario is probably well over 200 million, if it does not attain to 300 million dollars.

Mr. SPROULE. How much of these mortgages are paid off?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. None of these mortgages were paid off in the cases to which The registrars took great care to say that I refer. they returned none that were paid off. On the contrary I fear that if a critical analysis had been made, it would be found that there was a large amount of interest in arrear on those mortgages, and the true indebtedness was considerably in excess of what I had stated. Now, if these samples, which were taken fairly and without prejudice, at all represent or are a fair average of the general condition of the Province of Ontario, then, in the largest and richest of our agricultural Provinces to-day, one-half of all the farms there would be mortgaged within two thirds of their actual selling value. At this present moment the total assessed value of the entire Province of Ontario is something like 429 million dollars, and though that sum is considerably below the actual value, it needs no great degree of calculation to see what a proportion such a mortgage indebtedness as I have alluded to would involve. That means that a very large proportion of the once prosperous farmers of the Province of Ontario have sunk below the level of tenants at will, that they are in a worse position to-day in Canada than if they held their property at a landlord's caprice, because I hold that a man who is mortgaged to such an extent is in a more helpless position, and less likely to extricate himself, than even a tenant at will could be. If the Government of Canada, or any of their supporters, dispute this assertion—and I am merely giving it as the results at which I have arrived after considerable care and after taking all precautions which could be taken-it is easy for the Government, by devoting a few thousands to the task, to obtain from the registrars of the Province of Ontario a perfect answer, either in confirmation or refutation of the statement which I now make in my place in Parliament. I may tell the hon. gentleman from Grey (Mr. Sproule) who interrupted me just now, that in the cases where I myself examined the records of registry offices, there was no one fact which was more painful, no fact which was more apparent than this, that within the last few years mortgages had increased in an almost preternatural rapidity, both in number and in Now, Sir, simultaneously with this, amount. there has ensued in Ontario an enormous depreciation in the value of farm land. Here I am prepared to admit that there is room for considerable difference of opinion, but as to the main fact that there has been a great depreciation, there is no possibility of doubt. I will be prepared to hear very different opinions advanced. All I can say is this: I have had occasion, in the discharge of my political duties, to visit nearly every county in Ontario repeatedly for some years, and wherever I have gone I made it a point, knowing that it was a question on the answer to which a great deal depended, to make careful enquiry as to the extent of the depreciation that had occurred. I took precautions wherever I could, not to get mere guesses, but to obtain the records of actual sales made in the different localities. I know well that the estimates which have been put forward, particularly by Mr. Blue, may differ in one or two respects, may differ perhaps to a considerable extent, from the results at which I have arrived; but in making these estimates I wish the House to understand that I am speaking of the actual selling value; whereas the estimates brought forward by that gentleman, no doubt perfectly correct, so far as his information went, were based on the estimates furnished him by parties who owned lands, and who were not unnaturally interested in keeping up the price as high as they reasonably could, or who, at any rate, were naturally most reluctant to admit that the value of their lands had materially fallen. Some time ago I had occasion to consult a gentleman of very large experience as to the extent of this depreciation. I do not know a better authority in Ontario, and this is what that gentleman wrote to me with reference to the mode in which the value of farm properties is arrived at:

"No doubt you will have the report of the Ontario Bureau of Industries thrown in your face, in contradic-tion of the statement as to depreciation in value of farm land, and while I am free to admit that they are computed and, and while I am free to admit that they are computed honestly, probably from the best data obtainable, still as to the value of the farm lands, they are terribly misleading. The number of acres sown in wheat, oats, barley &c., price of cleared and wild per acre, &c., are probably returned complete, and from the average of this return the tables are computed. A farmer can sell exactly how many horses, cattle and sheep he has, also how many acres he has in wheat, oats or barley, but if he gives the price of his land, he invariably puts it down at the highest price he has ever been offered, or bases his figures on some price generally that has been paid in his neighborhood, adding for improvements he has made in the meantime at cost, hence the misleading character of that portion of the statistics. I have generally the best, most independent and enterprising farmers who made returns, and while they gave the other statistics correctly, they invariably placed their land at a great deal more than it is worth, and we find the same thing occurs in applications of the statistics. is worth, and we find the same thing occurs in applica-

Now, I am very sorry to say that in a great number of cases it is patent to all who have had experience, that were you to place any considerable number of farms in the market at the present time, it would be quite impossible to obtain purchasers for them at almost any price. Sir, cases, and many cases, have been named to me, and details given, where expensive farm buildings had been erected and improvements made, when it was impossible to obtain for the whole farm more than the cost of the farm buildings and the fen-Now, this need not surprise anybody who will fairly consider the situation, because it is perfectly well known to every practical agricul-turist, that within the last few years there has been an enormous reduction in the price of all farm produce of every kind and description what-The actual margin of profit has almost entirely disappeared. It stands to reason, therefore, that the value of land must fall, and the onus would rather be on those who maintain that, under such circumstances, land could preserve the value it had a few years ago. But here again, I say to hon. gentlemen opposite, if you dispute my statements, if you deny the conclusions I have arrived at, it rests with yourselves to have this matter properly tested and examined into. Go to those impartial parties who are likely to know what the result has been. Consult your registrars, consult your sheriffs, consult your county judges, consult your assessors, and I believe that, without exception, they will bear me out in saying that there has been an enormous depreciation in the value of farm lands in the Province of Ontario at any rate, and that I am well within the mark when I say that, within the last nine or ten years, the average reduction in value of farms in Ontario is not less-I am sorry to say, is probably more on the average —than $10 an acre. If you choose to multiply the amount of farm lands in Ontario by $10 an acre you will arrive at something like an approximate estimate of the total depreciation in the value of farm property in that Province. For other Provinces I will not pretend to speak. gentlemen are here present who are better qualified than I am to say how things have turned out in their part of the country. And, lest I should be accused by any of those hon. gentlemen of venturing to speak without authority for the farmers of Ontario, I would like to call your attention and that of the House to certain resolutions which were recently adopted at a meeting of the Ontario Central Farmers' Institute, where delegates from fifty constituencies, I am told, were present. These gentlemen, with four dissentient votes out of about 120, passed the following resolutions, which, probably, the Finance Minister has never heard of, because, if he had, he would not have ventured on the assertions he has made to-day:

"The Central Farmers' Institute of Ontario do memorialise the Dominion Government that:—
"Whereas, we consider the present high tariff is very injurious to the agricultural interests, making what we buy proportionately dearer than the products we sell;

and,
"Whereas, the present high tariff has given rise to the combine system, by which competition is to a great extent prevented; and,
"Whereas, the agricultural interest is suffering under serious depression and unable to bear the strain occasioned by the tariff and the combine system aforesaid, and, as the agricultural interests represent the large majority of ed by the tariff and the combine system aforesaid, and, as the agricultural interests represent the large majority of the population; that.

"Therefore, this, the Central Institute, do respectfully ask the Government to reduce the tariff on articles of prime necessity to the farmer, such as iron, steel, coal, cottons, woollens, rubbers, sugars, corn and salt, to such an extent as to relieve the agriculturist of the unequal burden under which he is now laboring."

And to-night we had the response of the First Minister and his colleague to their address, to their reasonable and modest request that a portion of the great surplus, at the disposal of the Government, should be used for the relief of the farmers of Canada, by the declaration that there should be greater duties on iron, and there should be greater duties on paints, which are largely used by agriculturists, that there should be greater duties on woollens, and that these duties should be so arranged, by virtue of the imposition of large specific duties, that they should press with special severity on the poorest class of the community, who necessarily consume the class of goods on which a specific duty works the greatest injustice.

Mr. SPROULE. Such as paints for rail fences. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If my hon. friend would speak louder I would attend to him, but I cannot always hear what he says. I do not desire to pass him by. It has been argued on the floor of this House, and it has been argued by the press, subsidised and other, in favor of hon. gentlemen, that precisely the same state of things exists in the United States. It is true. Precisely the same state of things does exist in the United States, only rather worse than here, because they have had a protective system rather longer.

Mr. BOWELL. That is what you want to join. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; I do not want to join them.

Mr. BOWELL. Commercially, I mean.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I say that commercially such a proposition as I have advocated here means in the largest sense free trade for Canada, and, therefore, I have advocated it. do not desire it to be supposed for a moment that I regard the mischievous and mistaken policy of the Government as the sole cause of the disastrous consequences which I deplore. There are several Some of these causes are beyond our control and beyond the control of the Government, and my charge against hon. gentlemen is rather that they falsely pretended that they were able to avert these disasters than that they caused them. But some of these were of their own making. One very important factor, at all events, they are directly responsible for, and that is the outrageous taxation which they have levied upon the people of Canada, and which falls worst and heaviest upon the agriculturists of Canada. Not only is that taxation enormous, but there is this further feature that the real taxation is vastly in excess of the nominal taxation. There is another thing which you are bound to consider, and that is the cumulative effects of this taxation extending over a number of years. What was our nominal taxation during the last decade which ended on the 30th June, 1889? In that decade, commencing with 1879 and ending with 1889, the nominal taxes paid by the people of Canada aggregated, all told, $262,-812,578. That was the nominal taxation paid into the Treasury. The real taxation, in my opinion, was at least half as much greater. The Minister declared before recess that he thought we could get along with thirty-six millions and a half of annual expenses on Consolidated Fund. Surely we ought to get along with that amount with a population of five millions or less, when we remember that the United States, in the most truly prosperous period of their history, when they had a population of twenty millions of souls, expended for all federal purposes put together a little less than twenty-three million dollars. In 1845, if the hon. gentleman chooses to look, he will see that the United States, with twenty millions of people, expended a little less than twenty-three millions of dollars for the same services which he thinks he can manage to get along with for thirty-six and a half millions, or, deducting the four million dollars paid to the Provinces, let us say thirty-two and a half millions. It only costs this frugal and economical government of Canada 50 per cent. more to administer the government of five millions of people than it cost the United States to administer the federal government of twenty millions of people. I have said that I cannot estimate, for it would be almost impossible to estimate, the full extent of the real taxation. I believe it cannot be much less than 50 per cent. more than the nominal taxation, and it may be a great deal more. However, take the nominal taxation by itself and what does it mean? We are taxed $30,000,000 a year. The average wages throughout the Dominion of Canada, not merely of the agricultural laborer but of the ordinary artisan, rarely exceed on an average $300 per man in each family per year, so that at the present moment we are administering our affairs so economically that we require to raise $30,000,000;

doing one stroke of work. Sir, if we were to make a further calculation we would find that at least thirty days' wages, on an average, of every workingman in Canada were acquired to defray the expenses of our Federal Government. If we look at the proportion of taxes which Ontario pays and if we were to assume, as I think we might fairly assume from various indications, that it pays about three-fifths of all the taxes of the Dominion, we would find that ten years of the taxes of Ontario would represent two-fifths of the value of every farm in Ontario from one end to the other. Now, Sir, the result is, as every hon, gentlemen who has studied this question knows, and as I think the First Minister himself admited time and again, the burthen falls on the land. It may be shifted from hand to hand for a time. but in the last result the burthen falls on the land and if my calculation be correct, if the mortgage indebtedness of Ontario reaches between two and three hundred millions on the farms of Ontario, it is something more than a coincidence that ten years of the real taxation would about equal the amount of that mortgage indebtedness. But the point to which I specially call the attention of the House, and of the country too is this: these hon. gentlemen opposite contend and with some show of reason, that a good deal of the depression of the value in land and a good deal of the distress of the Dominion, and notably of Ontario, is due to world-wide causes which they cannot control. Sir, in part that may be true; but what shall we say to the statesmen who, knowing that a combination of causes exist which have depressed the agriculturist and reduced the value of his property, selected that time to increase the oppressive burthens upon him? If ever there was a time when the agriculturist should have been favored, and when his burthens should have been lessened, it was during these last ten years—the precise period these gentle-men chose to load them down with burthens. Now, Mr. Speaker, there are certain facts which are beyond all possibility of dispute. In the first place, no human being who has taken the trouble to examine statistics, or who has travelled in the rural parts of Ontario extensively, can, I think, deny the fact that throughout the greater number of constituencies in Ontario the rural population is almost absolutely at a standstill, that if it is not absolutely retrograde it is stationary, and that in spite of many influences which ought to have added largely to our available area of territory and to our popu-Nor can any man with a map of Ontario before him, and in view of the facts I have stated, deny the other fact to which I call attention, namely, that in Ontario to-day there are vast quantities of agricultural land wholly unoccupied, and, therefore, there is no pretence for saying that the rural population is stationary, because there is no more land left for them to occupy. Nor, Sir, can any one who knows the condition of our farmers dispute my third proposition, that the mortgage debt in the Province of Ontario, and particularly on the farming population, has reached most alarming proportions. Of the grave depres-sion in land I speak with positive knowledge in many localities. I speak after having taken every means available to ascertain the actual facts, and if the Government dispute my asser--enough to maintain 100,000 families or 500,000 tions on either of these points, it is possible individuals in reasonable comfort without their for them, by devoting a small sum to the purpose of obtaining information as to the mortgage indebtedness from the various registry offices, and of obtaining perfect confirmation or refutation of what I say. They can also obtain information as to the depression of lands from the proper source. As to the excess of taxation, it is unnecessary to speak further, but there can be no doubt that so far as we have gone, nothing has been more apparent than the total failure of our efforts, by our so-called National Policy, to keep the natives of Ontario at home, or to induce any considerable number of the immigrants whom we import at great cost to this country, to remain with us. To what does all this point? I say that it all points to the permanent impoverishment, and to the permanent degradation of the chief class in the Province of Ontario. It points to the failure of the experiment in all material particulars of which the hon. gentleman spoke so boastfully this afternoon. It also points to a grave and important displacement of wealth. I do not believe that these gentlemen have by their policy added one penny piece to the collective wealth of this country; but I do believe and I know, that they have to an enormous extent contributed to the displacement of wealth throughout this country, and that from first to last their policy has been to create 500 millionaires and to impoverish 500,000 farmers. That may be wise on their part, for we know, too, that it pays the Government to create millionaires on whom they can draw for another ten thousand, or it may be a hundred thousand or two, when their coffers are empty. And very few, indeed, of the manufacturers that the First Minister comes in contact with get loose without subscribing more or less freely to his election fund, as he well knows. The truth is, that the hon. gentleman has done his best to create what I take to be the bases: form of all oligarchies-to create a plutocracy to which the people are to be enslaved. The hon, gentleman may have been successful in promoting the growth of two or three cities in which a disproportionate amount of the wealth and of population of the Dominion is sunk, but so far as the people at large are concerned, the facts I have submitted leave no doubt in the minds of intelligent and honest men, that they have been tricked and plundered and betrayed. It remains to be seen whether, having been tricked, and plundered, and betrayed, they have been so far enslaved that they are not able to strike for their liberties when the time comes. Sir, the hon. Minister of Finance was good enough to tell us that he could see no reason for doubting that Canada was in as prosperous a condition as any country could be; while, had he looked abroad, he would have learned that I spoke the literal truth when I said that in the greatest and richest Province of Canada at any rate, if not in the others, one-half of our farmers were sinking rapidly below the condition of tenants at will, and when he knows that one-fourth if not one-third of the whole adult male population of Canada have had to seek homes in the United States, and in larger proportions by far since the hon, gentlemen returned to power than at any time before. When he knows that not only in Ontario have we been unable to clear more than 11,000,000 out of 115,000,000 acres of land, but that in Manitoba, after spending treasure like water, as he truly said, for twenty years, the rural population barely amounts to something like one family to three square miles or 2,000 acres of land as the result of the Government's policy of colonisation and civilisation in that country where we have spent so much. I say it is a good time to examine these observations of mine, Within one year we are about to have a census taken and I suppose we shall have the general elections within two years. Now, it is easy to verify the facts which I present as to the population; provided the census is properly taken, and provided there are no de jure frauds to vitiate the returns. I have no doubt what the results will be found to be as to the mortgage indebtedness and the depreciation of land. If there be any honest desire to get at the facts, an insignificant expenditure compared with the sums daily and hourly lavished by this Government for perfectly useless purposes, would obtain facts of the greatest possible value in estimating the real condition of the people of Canada. As to the other points, they admit of no dispute. I have quoted already the resolutions passed by the Central Farmers' Institute of Ontario; I have quoted the remarkable evidence given by the hon. First Minister himself as to the prosperous condition of the Ontario farmers during the incumbency in office of my hon. friend Mr. Mackenzie. I might go on to multiply these quotations, and show from extracts from papers supporting the hon. gentleman, that I have in no way exaggerated the statements I have made; but I will have some mercy on the House, considering the lateness of the hour at which it separated this morning. But, inasmuch as the matter was alluded to before by an hon, member of this House, I will just call attention to a statement which was brought to my notice a little while ago, made by a paper which I understand is very friendly to hon. gentlemen opposite, and which rejoices in the title of the Richmond Guardian. Speaking of a certain statement made by an hon. member in this House, it proceeds as follows :-

These are not my statements; these are the statements of one of the neighbors of my hon. friend from Stanstead (Mr. Colby), and I dare say that he could produce some valuable corroborative evidence. Meantime, in order that the country may have an opportunity of judging between us, I desire, before these resolutions are finally read, to submit my views and the views of my hon. friends in this House as to the real position in which the people of Canada stand to-day; and with that purpose I move in amendment:

"That the total taxation collected in the same

an immense additional amount extracted from the people for the aforesaid purposes.

"That the said taxation is enormous and oppressive in its incidence, and that it is so imposed as to diminish the value of lands used for agricultural purposes and to increase the indebtedness of the agricultural class in

"That in fact the values of farm lands have greatly diminished and the amount of mortgages thereon have been much increased throughout a very large portion of this Dominion since 1879.

"That the additional taxation which it is now sought to the new large and the large seather than the property of the people of the property of the people of the peopl

"That the additional taxation which it is now sought to impose will still further increase the burthens of the people and is likely still further to aggravate the distress unhappily existing among a large portion of the farming population of this Dominion, and that under such circumstances it is the bounden duty of this House, instead of adding to the existing oppressive taxation, to apply itself to the reduction of the burdens now impeding the progress and prosperity of the principal producing classes of the Dominion, and for this purpose to abolish or reduce the taxes now imposed on articles of prime necessity to farmers, miners, fishermen and other producers."

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). Rumor has it that the hon. member for South Oxford was in Washington at the time the McKinley Tariff was proposed, and I should like to give the hon. gentleman an opportunity to state to the House whether or not that rumor is true?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. nothing whatever about the McKinley Tariff. I never was consulted about it, or had a word to say about it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not the question.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have answered the question. I know nothing whatever about it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Who was there? Mr. COLBY. The House is fatigued, and I am fatigued, and if the task, which I now propose to undertake, was a very heavy one I should certainly not undertake it at this hour. I have listened with a good deal of attention to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. That hon, gentleman is always listened to with attention, whether he makes a Budget speech or whether he criticises a Budget speech. His long experience, his experience as Minister of Finance, his special course of study, qualify him perhaps better than almost any member of this House to discuss these fiscal questions with great ability, with great ingenuity and with very considerable effect. I have listened to him many times, but I have never listened to him—the hon. gentleman must excuse me for saying it—when he seemed to have accomplished so little as he has done in his criticism to-The Finance Minister proposed changes in the tariff. For some reason or other the hon. gentleman in the course of his speech made hardly a reference to those tariff changes. That hon, gentleman approved of the Finance Minister's calculations of revenue and expenditure and his estimates for the coming year, and the criticism he addressed to the very able, direct and unadorned speech of the Minister of Finance, was not, by any means, a. searching one. The whole effort which the hon. gentleman seems to have made was to impress the House with the idea that the farmers in the Province of Ontario are in great distress. The hon. gentleman entered into that feature of his statement with very great care, and I might almost say with apparent satisfaction; but I do not understand the hon. gentleman to propose any particular remedy for that distress. I am not uncandid enough to say to this House that I believe the condition of agriculture anywhere on this continent of America is in a prosperous condition to-day. I do not think that agriculture in the civilised world is in a prosperous condition to-day. There are causes beyond the control of any Government, beyond the control of any fiscal policy, which go a long way to determine the prosperity or the failure of the agricultural class in any and in all countries. Happily for humanity we have been for many years. at peace; peace has prevailed in the world for a considerable number of years. We have been free from the destruction and devastation of war. Therehas been no extraordinary waste or consumption of agricultural products or of the energies which are devoted to the creation of agricultural products. There have been for a series of years fairly good harvests, and in many sections of the world most abundant harvests. I think, so far as the productions of the soil are concerned, we have hardly a record of a more uniform abundance than has prevailed over the civilised world for a few years past. New agricultural fields are being developed in various parts of the world, the products of which come into competition with those of the oldersections. These causes, apart from any fiscal policy whatever, have occasioned a depression among the agricultural class the world over. But-I venture to say that the hon. gentleman may examine the condition of the agricultural class in any State of the United States, in any part of the Continent of America, or in any other country with which we are familiar, and he cannot find a record of so much prosperity and so little suffering as there is in the Province of Ontario to-day. The there is in the Province of Ontario to-day. hon, gentleman blames the Government for not obtaining statistics, and yet when Governments doobtain statistics he, with his superior knowledge, attempts to explain them away. He is not content with the information obtained by Mr. Blue, statistician of the Province in which he lives, and appointed by the Government towards which he is well affected; he is not content with the representations made by Mr. Blue with respect to the agricultural condition of the country, but he goes back on Mr. Blue entirely; he makes private and individual and personal enquiries of his own, and gives this House the result of his own private information, gathered in certain selected counties, and on a basis which is peculiar to himself, and intended, if possible, to illustrate his views. I shall expect that intelligent members. from Ontario will point out the fallacy, the absolute impossibility of the correctness of the figures with respect to mortgages which the hon. gentleman has made on his own private investigation. The hon. gentleman's statement shows that fully one-half of the Province of Ontario is mortgaged for more than it is worth, a condition of affairs.

which certainly does not exist; and when the statement goes forth that the hon gentleman has presented this as the condition of affairs, it will go very far among intelligent men to weaken his high authority among them. Speaking of the Province of Ontario, I do not know of any better test of the condition of farmers than the test of farm values, and I will quote from Mr. Blue, the statistician, the high authority in that Province. I differ entirely from what the hon. gentleman said just now with respect to the returns of farm values. The hon, gentleman stated that farmers are apt to return their farms and crops as being more valuable than was actually the fact. That has not been my experience, and I do not think it has been the experience of the census takers. If enquiries are made with respect to the values of the farms and crops, it always occurs to the mind of the farmer that this means taxation, and that it will not do for him to overstate the value. However that may be, Mr. Blue's figures are based on a series of years, and of tests taken in precisely the same way; consequently, if they are exaggerated in one case they are exaggerated in another. I challenge the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), I challenge any hon. member in this House, and I challenge the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who is not in his seat just now, but who professes to have more familiarity, and probably has more familiarity, with the condition of affairs of certain States in the United States than any other hon. member, to bring me a parallel in any State in the United States, the most favorable of all the States, where farm values have retained their steadiness as they have in Ontario. Mr. Blue takes a period of seven years, from 1882 to 1888, inclusive, and he shows that while the average value for those years was $637,732,000, the value for the last year, 1888, was $640,000,000, proving that there has been, from year to year during those seven years, a steady increase in farm values, and that the last year of which he gives evidence it gives a higher value than the previous years, or than the average of the seven years. And the same thing is true with regard to farm buildings. The average of the seven years is $172,000,000, and the estimate for last year, 1888, is $188,000,000. The same is true of farm implements, the average of the seven years being $46,000,000, whereas the value last year was $49,000,000. The same is true of live stock, the average value of the seven years being $99,-000,000, and the estimated value of last year being $102,000,000. The same statement holds good with regard to the total value of farm property, the average for the seven years being $956,882,048, and last year's value being $981,368,094. Now, I throw down this gauntlet decidedly and clearly. Let any gentleman in this House or country-for I provoke a challenge, not only on the floor of this House to be taken up by members of this House, but by any body who may hear or read my remarks-point to me a single State of the Union which can show such a uniform, steady and gradual increase of farm values during the last seven or eight years as is shown by this much maligned Province of Ontario. I have in my hand a comparative statement of the values of certain farm products in Ontario and the United States which I made myself, and for the correctness of which

I can vouch. It is taken from Mr. Blue's figures on the one side and from the official statistics of the United States on the other side, showing the average values of cereals per acre in the respective countries during the past seven years. I find that in the United States the average value per acre of wheat was $9.44, while in the Province of Ontario, this poor, distressed Province—what were his words? "murmurs of distress;" "extreme distress in Ontario;" "a great amount of distress"—in this exceedingly distressed Province —I am quoting the hon. gentleman's words—the value per acre was $15.78 as against $9.44 in the United States. I find that in the article of corn, in the United States, the value per acre was $9.32 while in Ontario, according to Mr. Blue-I do not know what private sources of information my hon. friend may have-but according to the provincial statistician the value was $18.90 per acre as against $9.32 in the United States. In the article of barley, the value in the United States was $12.67 per acre as against $14.98 per acre in Ontario. In oats, the value in the United States is $8.08 as compared with $12.88 in Ontario. In rye the value is $7.15 in the United States, as against $9.97 in Ontario. In buckwheat the value is $7.95 in the United States, as against $8.77 in poor distressed Ontario. These figures are taken from the "Statistical Abstract of the United States, 1888," and from the "Annual Report of the Bureau of Industries for the Province of Ontario, 1888." I find in a recent article in the Canadian Journal of Commerce a similar comparison with some of the very best agricultural States. I came upon this article after I had made my own calculations. follows :--

"The average value of farm products in Ontario has been compared with those of the chief agricultural States of the Union by an Ottawa official statistician, greatly to the advantage of Ontario. The returns for the six years, 1882-87, published by the Department of Agriculture at Washington, are compared with those issued by the Bureau of Industries at Toronto, and the question to be solved was, what have ten acres in each of the eight chief crops of wheat, barley, oats, corn, rye, buckwheat, potatoes and hay, yielded in money value? The answer is, in Ontario, $8,640; in New York, $7,474; in Ohio, $6,457; and so on till we get to Iowa, with a return of $4,958. The average production of wheat in Ontario was two bushels an acre more than in Michigan, three bushels more than In New York and Kansas, five bushels more than in Missouri. The Ontario farmer with eighty acres in the above crops, would, at the end of the six years, have received more than the farmer in New York by $1,166; in Ohio by $2,183; in Michigan by $2,200; in Illinois by $2,798: in Indiana by $2,261; in Kansas by $3,215; in Missouri by $3,341, and in Iowa by $3,682. These figures do not include 1888-89, when Ontario did not make such a good showing, owing to drought and other causes. The returns we have given, however, are most gratifying and should tend to inspire confidence in the farming community."

Now, I refer the hon. member for South Oxford to that comparison, drawn between this poor, wretched, distressed, murmuring Province of Ontario, and the cream, the pick of the States of the Union, according to the evidence given to us—not by politicians, not by men speaking on the stump, not by men talking in Congress, not by men writing in free trade or protectionist newspapers—but by the officers of the respective Governments, under the responsibility of their officers, and, unless we know differently we must accept them, and that is the condition of poor, distressed, murmuring, wretched Ontario.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And yet they do leave by tens and hundreds of thousands for the United States.

Mr. COLBY. Yes, some do go to the United I did not intend to touch upon that point, but now I will—a little later on. hon, gentleman was speaking of the sad case of the farmer in Ontario. Now, Sir, I am going to speak to you for a few moments of the condition of farmers in the United States, and I do not do so with any degree of satisfaction, but with a very great deal of regret. I am sorry that their condition is such, but it is an incontrovertible fact that all the older States-the northern and eastern of the United States—are in a condition as much worse than the hon. member pictures Ontario to be, and he pictures it worse than it really is, as one can fairly imagine. I would take, for instance, that good old State of Vermont. Some people may say: Oh, well, Vermont is not a good agricultural State; but I say, with a full knowledge of the State of Vermont—for I know it from one end to the other—that it compares favorably with the farming districts of the Dominion throughout, and I think I might almost say with some favored districts of Ontario. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) need not shake his head. I know it, almost every inch of it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) You do not know every inch of Ontario.

Mr. COLBY. I do not know every inch of Ontario, but the person who tells you that the beautiful valley of the Champlain is not one of the finest valleys in all the north—my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Wright) knows it, because I think he is familiar with that locality—tells you what is not correct. When a person tells you, Sir, that the valley of the Connecticut River, which is one of the most beautiful on the continent, comparing almost with that of the Shenandoah, one of the richest alluvial valleys, is not a fine agricultural section, he tells you what he knows nothing about. If he tells you of those beautiful pastures, those hill-side pastures in Vermont, which are unsurpassed in any part of this continent for dairy purposes, for pure water, for sweet and luxuriant feed, if he says we have better pastures in Canada than those for dairy purposes, I tell him he does not know Vermont as well as I do. what is the condition of agriculture in that State? I will give the hon, gentleman an object lesson. No later than the 1st of January, 1890, the commissioner of agricultural and manufacturing interests in the State of Vermont, under instructions from the State, published this circular, and this map, and this invitation:

map, and this invitation:

"Showing the location of towns in which are unoccupied farms and lands occupied, which can be bought at about the same price as those occupied. Good farms with fair buildings and maple sugar orchards, can be purchased at from $3 to $5 per acre, others with better buildings and near railway or village, can be bought for from $5 to $10 per acre. None of these lands are far from a ready market, and all are adapted to dairy purposes. Payments made easy. Farm labor is in great demand atgood wages. In many sections those desiring can procure work through the winter on wood and lumber jobs."

Now. where are those lands? In what part of the

Now, where are those lands? In what part of the State? I ask hon. members opposite to look at the proportion of that map which is marked red, and there you see the proportion, in the Connecticut Valley, in some of the best counties and towns in Vermont, of lands that are to be sold from $3 and $5 an acre, and many of them unoccupied. That is the record put out by the Commissioner of that State, and it includes sixty townships in ten out of the fifteen counties which constitute the State.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is the advantage of protection to agriculturists.

Mr. COLBY. Very well, the advantage of that system you wish to unite with. My hon, friend wishes to pool the farmers of Ontario with the farmers of the United States. I tell him that the farmers of Ontario are better off to-day. They do not want to go into partnership with the farmers of Vermont; they do not want to come under any of those conditions which have brought Vermont to the situation in which she finds herself to-day. It is very easy for the hon. gentleman to sneer, to sit there and show a great glee, as if he had superior knowledge to that of every other person, to look pompously down upon the opinions of other people, but I tell the hon. gentleman that if the farmers in Ontario and in the Dominion of Canada are in a better condition than the farmers in Vermont and in New York-and statistics show that they areit is because we have protected our farmers; I declare that boldly, it is because we have given protection to our farmers in our markets, so that the products of the farmer may be sold at fair prices in the local market. Hon. gentlemen opposite have the most singular faculty of misapprehending facts. It is only after an election, when they have been shown the true feeling of the country that they have any realisation of them, and that awakening only lasts for six or twelve months; but the old fatuity comes back, the old self-conceit comes back again, they know more than anybody else, and they go again to their destruction, as they are going now. Sir, pork in my county, pork in the County of Missisquoi, in the County of Brome, and throughout the Eastern Townships, has been reduced in price more than a cent a pound, by pork coming in from St. Albans, and other places in the State of Vermont, paying one cent a pound duty and reducing the value of pork in our market. That being the case, if we are not inundated and overwhelmed by the products of the United States coming into competition with the products of our farmers, we owe it largely to the protective tariff, and to it is due, in a very large degree, the superior condition of the farmers in Canada to that of the farmers of the United States. Even now, does the hon, gentleman suppose that we for one moment could compete on even terms in the markets that are common to Canada and the United States, if we were one country? Can we produce corn as cheaply as they can? Can we produce the equivalent of corn as cheaply as they can? I say we cannot. Our barley is the nearest equivalent to their corn for feeding purposes. The unrestricted admission of their corn would lower the price of our barley. That would be the effect also upon all the coarse grains which the farmers do produce, and will produce, notwithstanding the high scientific farming that is coming by and bye. The average price of corn in Chicago for seven or eight years past, has been 40 cents per bushel, while that of Canadian barley for the same period has been about 57 cents per bushel. The effect of an intimate relation with the United States, of being upon even terms with them, would be to bring down the prices of our own coarse grains to the corn standard, and not only the coarse grains, but also the products of animals that are fed upon coarse grains. Our prices would be brought down to the corn standard of the United States as against the barley standard of Canada, if we were brought down to a level with the United States. Their prices would control our prices. They are the greatest agricultural countries.

of Canada, if we were brought down to a level with the United States. Their prices would control our prices. They are the greatest agricultural country in the world to-day, there is hardly any limit to their production, and their prices would determine our prices, and we could not help ourselves. Our prices are better than their prices and will continue to be better, provided we continue to persist in those methods which we have adopted in recent years in order to keep those prices up.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the hon, gentleman is opposed to free trade in natural products?

Mr. COLBY. Most decidedly, from the farmers' standpoint. I know whereof I speak. The hon. gentleman has devoted many years to the study of philosophy; I have devoted many years to the study of agriculture, and when I first came to this House I was one of the largest agriculturists in my county. For many years I had studied agricultural problems from a farmer's standpoint, and I am sure the farmers of this country will endorse me when I say that free trade between Canada and the United States in all agricultural products, would be the worst possible thing that could happen to the farmers of Canada at the present time. ready to meet the hon. gentleman on any platform in Canada to discuss that question with him before the farmers. Now, what I said of Vermont is true of the State of New Hampshire. The Commissioner of the State of New Hampshire has put forth a similar address, inviting the people of the world to come in and buy farms which are for sale in the majority of the townships of New Hampshire. The farmers are no better off there than they are in Vermont. My hon. friend delighted his side of the House just now by quoting from a Township's paper, the Richmond Guardian. Now, I will quote from another paper. I am sorry the hon, member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) is not here. I will quote from a paper in that hon, gentleman's county, the Huntingdon Gleaner. Nobody doubts the thorough Liberalism of that paper, and here is what it says:

"We look across the lines, only a few miles distant from where we write, and we see farmers, skilful, industrious and shrewd men, with free access to that market of sixty millions we hear so much about, and what do we find? That they are not so prosperous as their brothers on the Canadian side; that their land, when of equal quality, sells for less, their taxes are higher and their profits smaller. When Mr. Wiman goes to Malone or Champlain and satisfactorily explains why the farmers of Essex and Franklin counties, with the market of sixty millions open to them, are worse off than those of Chateauguay and Huntingdon, to whom the market is all but shut, we will place some faith in what he says."

That is from the Huntingdon Gleaner, a very deserving newspaper, and that is penned by a very intelligent writer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He is an equal righter, is he not?

Mr. COLBY. I think that is an authority that the hon. gentleman will not dispute. Then the New York Post, which I believe is recognised as a paper of authority and standing, says:

"Six years ago, a farm of 150 acres sold for $12,000; it of that State. As to the exodus which is so much gagee who held a $6,000 mortgage upon it, and has since talked about, there was never a greater humbug Mr. Colby.

been in the market at that price with no takers. In other words, this shows a shrinkage of one-half in price in six years, and is a fair showing of the decrease of the values of land with us. Prices of farm produce are quoted by the Department of Agriculture as lower than ever before known."

Then we have an official report made to the New York State Legislature in 1887 (Vol. II, No. 24, page 16), and what does it say?

"It is an indisputable fact that the farming lands of this state during fifteen years have depreciated at least 20 per cent. and many agricultural localities are decreasing in population."

A despatch to the New York Tribune of the 8th February says of the farmers in New Jersey:

I am not going to continue these quotations at any length. The New York Times states that the farms in that State are mortgaged for over $700,-000,000, and further shows that the greater portion of the money obtained on mortgages has not been expended in farm improvements, but to enable the farmers to live. I will not go into the question of farm mortgages at any considerable length, but, in the most prosperous of the States, their amount is enormous. These statements are not made up from localities selected by any hon, gentleman for his own private information without taking any account of the discharges, but we find that, in the three prosperous agricultural States of Illinois, Michigan and Indiana, the mortgage debt amounted to the following sums:-Illinois, $381,322,339; Michigan, $129,229,553, and Indiana, $106,855,884. These are reliable facts. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the rural population of Ontario, which he says is almost stationary. I am not surprised at that. I would be surprised if it had largely increased during these years to which he refers. What has happened since this Government came into power? New occupations have been found for men since that time. All through this Canada of ours there are manufactories which give employment to large numbers of men, railway construction has gone on enormously, and hundreds and thousands of our population are engaged on the railways, in the coasting trade and in moving the internal commerce of this country which had no existence before. Then the great North-West has been developed, and we know how many have gone there. One of the former members of this House is now Premier of Manitoba, and many young and older men, and many large families have been deported from Ontario to the North-West. Then look at the progress of our great cities. Look at Toronto, Hamilton, London, Montreal, and see how the urban populations have increased, and see the increase of population in the manufacturing towns. Of course that has absorbed some of the agricultural population, but we have not retrograded, and I was glad to hear the hon. gentleman admit that, notwithstanding all this, Ontario has not diminished in population. This is not the case with any of the Eastern States. Maine, New Hampshire, New York, and Michigan have decreased in population. So has Iowa, and even in Illinois a recent report of the commissioner stated that migration westward is going on from the best parts attempted to be palmed off on any intelligent body of men than this great exodus which has been exploded in this House from time to time. No evidence is ever given of it. Mr. Switzner, the United States statistician, says it is impossible to get any reliable data as to the movements of population until the census comes around. All these talks and wild imaginings that gentlemen indulge in as to the exodus I hope and believe are largely the figments of their somewhat excited imaginations. At all events, if there be an exodus from this part of the country, it is not comparable with the exodus from the Eastern States, and there are causes which govern that, and men are investigating them now. Among the causes of this movement of population, there are the great increase in education among the masses of the people, the diffusion of literature, the diffusion of the newspaper, the magazine and the illustrated paper, pointing out the beauties and attractions of this and that locality. I am sorry to say that young men on this continent, not only in Canada but in the United States, are getting reluctant to follow the avocation of their farming fathers. They show a preference for the professions or for trade, or for the mechanical arts and industries, instead of grubbing in the old-fashioned way on the farm. The general movement is westward, and they may go to the North-West of Canada or elsewhere. In the United States large sections are being depopulated. Among the other obvious causes, there are the new methods of agriculture to which people have to conform. Nowadays, the large farming is done on the broad prairie farm, with the mower and the self-binding harvester and all the modern implements, and the consequence is that from the older Provinces, where farms of that magnitude cannot be obtained, and these implements cannot be worked so advantageously, they move westward. Some will go to the States, and some will go to our North-West. Our Manitoba population will sway off to Dakota. There they are frozen out and starved, and then they come back to Manitoba. The land speculator is ubiquitous. You find him everywhere representing how fortunes can be realised somewhere yonder, and the young man goes to the unknown place, whether it be in the United States or in Canada. He is young, sharp, smart, conscious of his ability, and too often he finds that he has been chasing an ignis fatuus, but it is the character of youth to be sanguine and adventurous. This would be the same under free trade or protection, with unrestricted reciprocity or with no reciprocity. You cannot put up barriers to prevent young men from moving about, and endeavoring to improve their station in life. There is nothing at all in this cry about the enormous exodus which has taken place as being the result of our tariff policy. On the contrary, our tariff policy has retained so much of our population as is employed in the manufactures and associate industries which it has created. They are exercised about this matter in the Eastern States as much as we are. Why, the other day, I read in a Vermont paper that the Hon. Mr. Camp, I think, when discussing this very question before some agricultural society in that State, seriously advanced the idea that young men were getting to be dudes, and that their fathers and their mothers told them they did not wish them to work as hard as they had to work in their young days. He thought the way to thresh that crop of dudes is to thresh it before it gets ripe; and he thought threshing between the agesof 15 and 20 years would do these young men good. That is one of the methods they are considering in the good old Puritan State of Vermont—to spank the young fellows and put them to bed, and not allow them to be drawn off by these western adventures. I did hope that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) would touch on some broader grounds in his speech, and I had prepared some answers to matters to which I thought he would refer, but he was in his congenial sphere of speaking of the distress of the farmers of Ontario, and I have merely given him something for his consolation, so that he may see that his poor distressed friends, as he thinks they are, are no worse situated than people elsewhere.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant) moved the adjournment of the debate.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 28th March, 1890.

COLUMBIA AND KOOTENAY RAILWAY AND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. MARA moved that the 49th and 51st Rules of the House be suspended, so far as they relate to the petition of the Columbia and Kootenay Railway and Navigation Company, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders, as contained in their 17th report.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MARA moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 128) respecting the Columbia and Kootenay Railway and Navigation Company.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ROYAL ASSENT TO BILLS.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to call the attention of the Ministers and the House to a question of parliamentary privilege which arises on the proceedings that took place here and in the other House on Wednesday, and I call attention to it at the earliest moment after the Votes and Proceedings have been placed before us. By referring to those Votes and Proceedings, it will be seen that you, Sir, reported to us a Message which you received from the secretary of His Excellency the Governor General, bearing date 24th March, informing us that:

"The Honorable Sir William Ritchie, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber on Wednesday, the 26th inst., at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of giving assent to the Bills which have passed the Senate and the House of Commons during the present Session."

And at a subsequent period, after the members of this House had attended the Senate, you reported to us that His Honor the Deputy Governor had been pleased to give assent, in Her Majesty's name, to certain Bills, numbering thirty-two or thirty-three. At the moment I thought that these did not comprise all the Bills passed during the present Session up to that time, and upon further enquiry I find there are several important Bills omitted—about seventeen altogether on which no action whatever was taken. The constitutional rule of old standing is that to all Bills which have passed through all the stages, and are, as far as the two Houses are concerned, ready to become law, the Royal Assent is due and should be given on the first occasion on which it is given to any Bills. A prominent and marked instance of a violation of this rule was one which occurred in the time of the first Charles, in the Session prior to the Oxford Parliament, when it formed the subject of a conference by a joint committee of both Houses. This conference agreed on the general principle, which is well understood, that the Royal Assent is due to all Bills which have passed both Houses; and the modern practice in England is, owing to the length of the Sessions, to have numerous commissions during a long Session for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to Bills, from time to time, as they are ripe for assent. These English commissions are limited. The Commissioners are given power to assent to only certain named Bills, and, consequently, they can assent to no others. Therefore, to avoid the inconvenience and breach of the constitutional rule which might arise should a fresh Bill become ripe for assent in the few days between the appointment of the commission and the Royal Assent, it is the custom of both Houses not to press forward any such measures to the final stage in that interval. They are kept incomplete, in order that there may be no other Bill ready for assent on the day when the Royal Assent is given to the Bills named. It seems to me there has been, for some cause which I do not understand, and will not attempt to characterise, a violation of the ancient and wholesome constitutional rule on this occasion; for which violation, of course, the Ministers who are responsible to the Crown, and to the people, must answer to us. I now merely bring this question before the House without further action; and it seems to me it is important for us to consider whether we should not assert by resolution the constitutional rule, so that this infringement may not be drawn into a precedent.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is the first intimation I have had of this matter. Of course, not knowing it before, I am not in a position to give a definite answer to the hon. gentleman, but I will mention it to the hon. First Minister when he comes.

SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURTS ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 129) to amend chapter 16 of 50 and 51 Victoria, intituled: "An Act to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act," and to make better provision for the trials of claims against the Crown. He said: This is merely intended to remove doubts which have been expressed by some members of the Supreme Court as to the jurisdic-Mr. BLAKE.

tion of that court in regard to claims which are referred by Departments of the Government to the Exchequer Court, instead of being commenced by actions against the Crown.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. call the attention of the Government, and especially the attention of the Minister of Finance, to the fact that virtually all meetings of the Public Accounts Committee appear to have been suspended. It is rather better than three weeks since that Committee has met. I called the attention of the Government to this some time ago, when the Finance Minister was not in his place, but the Prime Minister promised to mention the matter to him, as he is supposed to have the principal direction of that Committee. It seems to me unreasonable that a Committee of this kind, which had certain matters before it for investigation, should not have been called together for three weeks, and I hope the Minister of Finance will see that the Committee is called together at an early day.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the delay arises from the great press of business which has come on us all, and particularly on myself, but I will see that that Committee is called to meet on the first available day, by which I mean that I will see how the other committees are arranged to meet next week.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I may say to the hon, gentleman that it will probably be imperative to have two or three committees sitting at the same time. Otherwise I do not see how the hon, gentleman can get a meeting of the Finance Committee. Progress cannot be made if one committee is everlastingly jostling another.

Mr. BLAKE. Besides, the large committees are not having long sessions now. If they meet, it is only for a short time.

EASTER ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LAURIER. I would like the Government to state what they intend to do in regard to the Easter recess. I hope they will let us know before to-day's sitting is over.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster for second reading of resolutions reported from Committee of Ways and Means, and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In rising to continue the debate which has arisen upon the financial statement made by the hon. gentleman who is charged with the administration of our financial affairs, it would, perhaps, be courteous on my part first of all to reply to the arguments and statements which have been made by the hon. gentleman who immediately preceded me in this discussion (Mr. Colby), before entering into a discussion of some of the phases of this question to which I desire to call the attention of the House. I am sorry that that gentleman is not in his place at present. If he were, I would be glad to do in public what I have already done in private, that is, to congratulate him on his elevation to a seat in the Ministry. I have to recognise that he has already taken a position of prominence in the councils of the party, that he has been entrusted with making the supporting speech for the Finance Minister, and his statements are, therefore, worthy of consideration, and I notice them, though I must notice them but briefly, before touching on other subjects. If I remember aright, there were but two divisions of his speech. The first referred to the prosperity of the country and combatted certain statements which had been made by the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) on that subject. The second division was the declaration of his own opinions-which I take to be the opinions of the Ministry—as to reciprocal trade relations with the United States. With the latter I will deal later on, but, as to the earlier portion of his speech, where he attacked the hon, member for South Oxford in reference to statements he made, I have to express regret that, owing to the fatigue which I, in common with other members of the House, had suffered, having been under arms, as I may say, for twenty-two hours, and not having spent the other two hours in sleep, I found myself dropping into a doze while the hon, gentleman spoke. It was much against my will that I was unable to listen to the hon, gentleman, for he never had, while making either a financial statement for a Government, or making the leading speech in reply thereto, a more attentive listener than myself. But although I was under this disadvantage in not having heard the whole of his speech, and not having had an opportunity to read it, as our Official Debates are not yet out, I have had occasion to ascertain from those who did hear it, the line of argument that he took. I find that he gave the House statistics relative to the depreciation that he alleged existed in the Dominion of Canada, more particularly confining his remarks to the Province of Ontario, and the statistics that he gave, as I understood, were compiled from official sources, facts that they had taken in several counties that might be regarded as a sample of the whole. These figures were challenged by the hon. the President of the Privy Council, who quoted statistics compiled by the Ontario Government in refutation of the statements that had been made. Well, Sir, with reference to the statistics made use of by the President of the Council, there is this to be said: that those statistics are in a large measure voluntarily given, furnished by parties that are asked for them. I do not wish to attack their reliability, but there is no compensation paid for them, as I understand; it is probable that the more intelligent members of the community who are asked for information in reference to this matter, and when they are giving the value of their farms, they will place upon them a value such as they consider them to be worth, not what they would sell for on actual sale, provided the sale was forced upon them, or they found it desirable to put them into the market. I think the President of the Council, in using these statements, was, no doubt, through error, led to use them in such a manner as, I think, would not fully bear out the idea he sought to convey. I have not examined them particularly myself lately, but I remember that a statement was presented to this House, taken from the same statistics, that I have not seen controverted, that within the period between 1883 and 1887 there was a large depreciation of some thirteen million dollars, as shown by these statistics. The President of the Council, also, on reading them, overlooked this fact—he can correct me if I am wrong in the comparison he was making, when he took the total of one year with the total of another year, entirely ignoring, however, the fact that there were hundreds of thousands of acres added to the cleared lands during those years, which he overlooked. I think I am correct in that. Well, the hon gentleman will readily see that, taking the total value of one year and the total value of a subsequent year, in the intervening period, there has been many hundreds of thousands of wild land reclaimed which had become profitable, and if they were taken on the basis of $40 an acre, that would bring up the amount very largely, and would not bear the hon. gentleman out in his contention. But I need not say more on that point—that can be discussed at length, by those who follow. I proceed now, to notice the argument of the Minister with reference to the statement, that depreciation did exist in the agricultural portions of this country. He was forced to admit that, but his argument was this: There is a more severe depression exist-ing in the States of the neighboring Union. Take the State of Vermont, he said: cleared land there is selling for, from $3.50 to $5.50 an acre, for land offered and finding no purchaser. He gave us to understand that this was in the fruitful valley of the Connecticut River, and other fruitful valleys of that State, and I was hardly able to understand how it was possible that in the fruitful valleys in the State of Vermont, a hundred acres of land, with the buildings and all, could be sold for $350. Why, I do not know what kind of houses or buildings could be upon 100 acres of land that would not themselves be worth more than that, and if that be so, the land was worth nothing at all. Then he told us that while it might be true, as the hon. member for South Oxford had said, that there were heavy mortgages on the encumbered farms of this Dominion, he held it was exaggerated; but it was nothing in comparison, he said, with the mortgages on the farms in those States to which he made allusion. Well, Sir, it is not my purpose to contradict the figures of the hon. gentleman-I assume they are correct; I assume the land there is depreciated to the terrible extent he has represented; I assume he is correct when he says those farms are burdened with mortgages greater than the people can bear; but I ask the hon gentleman what has brought about that state of things, not only in Canada, but in the United States? There is no use saying that these things exist in the United States; there is no use at all in saying that he believes they exist here; the great question we want to solve, as far as our own country is concerned, is, what has brought about a state of things like that? The hon. gentleman will admit there must have been some great prevailing cause, and he stated that one of the causes was that there had been a long period of peace, but he did not propose that, therefore, we should inaugurate a war in order to raise the prices. He told us that during a large number of years there had been a great production, but he did not propose, therefore, that we should cease to till the land. But these explanations will not explain the problem that is before us, taking it upon his own basis. Why, if the prices of land in the United States have fallen lower than the prices of land in Canada, proportionately, there has been a large number of farms in Ontario mortgaged; why are they mortgaged to double that amount in the States that he has mentioned? Sir, we cannot find a solution either in a long peace or an over-abundance of crops; we must find the cause somewhere else. Has there been a cause at work that the hon. gentleman has overlooked? Sir, I think there has been; and we want to ascertain that cause, and having ascertained it, we want to apply the remedy. It may be true that the farmers of the United States and the farmers of Canada have had less prices than they had in days gone by; it may be they have had less abundant crops than they had in days gone by; and that would account in part for the depression that is put upon them. But there has been another cause at work that has been making them poor, that has reduced their income; there have been laws enacted by the Governments of the two countries, and officers have been appointed by the Governments of the two countries, to take out of the pockets of these farmers, who have a less revenue from year to year, larger sums from their reduced incomes. That is the point. The hon, gentleman has only succeeded in proving that while an excessive rate of taxation in Canada is bearing upon agriculturists in common with all the other citizens of the Dominion, and impoverishing them, the same system is in force for nearly double the length of time in the neighboring Union, and has worked there its inevitableresults, making them, according to the hon, gentleman's own statements, twice, even thrice, poorer than the Canadian farmer is at present. But should not that be a warning to the hon. gentleman? If twenty-five years of protection has brought the Vermont, the New Hampshire and the New York farmer to that condition, while ten years of it in Canada has brought the Canadian farmer to the position he is in, does the hon. gentleman wish to perpetuate for another fifteen years this system, in order that the Canadian farmer may be reduced to the same low level of the Vermont farmer to-day? Sir, I think I have answered the whole statement presented by the hon gentleman so far as that division of the subject was concerned. Now, I desire to point out the cause of this, and endeavor to prove it. It is a common saying, that you cannot eat your cake and have it; and it is equally true, that you cannot take money out of the pockets of the people by way of taxation and leave it in their pockets at the same time. I, therefore, propose to show what the system of taxation inaugurated by this Government, and carried on by it, is, and that every change in the tariff is simply another turn of the screw to wrench more taxes out of the people, who are already overburdened with the taxes laid upon them. I propose to show by some figures I have prepared what the rate of taxation is. were interested in listening to the Finance Minister, who, following the usual course, presented elaborate statements comparing the estimated receipts and expenditure with the actual receipts and expenditure for the past year; also presenting his estimated expenditure and receipts, and comparing them with the estimated receipts and ex-Mr. Paterson (Brant).

penditure for the current year, and, finally, giving his estimates for expenditure and receipts for the year 1890-91. The hon gentleman succeeded in establishing that his estimates were nearly realised, and it was a very pleasant task, and in engaging in it he was only following the course of his predecessors. But I think that in this year, more markedly than in other years, there must have come to his notice the depression existing in the country, not only in agriculture, but in commercial affairs, and he should have presented some other tables that would have exhibited the current rate of taxation compared with what it was formerly, in order to ascertain whether this rate of taxation upon the people had anything to do with the state of depression at present existing. Let us look at this matter, and institute a few comparisons. We find, in 1889 the receipts from taxation reached $30,613,522. I say, the receipts from taxation: that means money actually taken out of the pockets of the people, omitting miscellaneous revenue derived from our public works. In 1879, the last year of the Mackenzie Administration, the taxation amounted to $18,476,613; or, in other words, the Government during the past year took by way of taxation from the pockets of the people, $12,136,909 more than was taken from them in 1879. But it will be replied to me, and replied with force, if I did not make allowance for that point: In 1879 there was a deficit of $1,936,999, and you ought certainly to add that deficit to the revenue raised that year, because the Government should raise an amount of income equal to expenditure. I say that is true, and, therefore, I add the deficit of 1879 to the amount of taxation, and the two sums come together amount to $20,414,612. But it might be replied to me again by hon, gentlemen opposite: You must admit there was a larger population in 1889 than in 1879, and you must admit that if the increase in taxation is not greater than the proportionate increase of population, the people are not in a greater ratio burdened now than in 1879. That would be a fair and legitimate argument, and I recognise its force; and, therefore, to the taxation of 1879 I have added the deficit of that year, and I now add 20 per cent. for increase of population from 1879 to 1889, and hon. gentlemen will admit that is a fair proportion. That would give an amount of extra taxation of $4,082,-But taking the whole items together there would have been, on a basis of taxation that would have met all the expenditure, adding the deficit and adding the percentage for increase of population, a taxation of $24,497,534. Subtract that amount from the amount which the present Finance Minister actually took out of the pockets of the people, and you have $6,115,988 of extra taxation ground out of the people this year more than would be required, looking to our increased population and allowing for the deficit in 1879. And thus, I think, hon. members will have plainly before their eyes one great cause of the depression and the impoverished condition of the people, namely: that in a year, last year, the Government took more than six millions of dollars out of the pockets of the people than was necessary on the basis of the expenditure in 1879, providing for the contingency of increased population that has taken place since. This amount is 25 per cent. over what it should have been, after allowing the percentage for increased population. Hon. gentlemen will understand that if we are going to take money from the people at the rate of 25 per cent. more per year than is necessary to conduct the affairs of the country in a prudent and economical and yet an energetic manner, there can be but one result, the impoverishment of the country. Let me strengthen this argument by a comparison of the total expenditures under the two Governments. In 1889, hon. gentlemen opposite expended $36,917,834. In 1879, the total expenditure was $24,455,381, an increase, comparing those two years, of $12,462,453, or 50 per cent. increase in the total expenditure of the country under the régime of hon. gentlemen opposite. But it may be replied to me again: Why do you not give fair figures to the House, why give the figures for 1889 and compare them with the figures for 1879, and make no allowance for the increase of population? Do you know that, as the population increases, it is natural to expect that the expenditure must increase? I recognise the fact. I have allowed for that, and, therefore, to the expenditure of 1879 I add 20 per cent. to cover increased expenditure owing to increased population, which will amount to $4,891,076. These two items together aggregate $29,346,457, while how gentlemen opposite have actually expended $36,917,834, or $7,571,377 more in a year. The question was asked, during the debate on the reciprocal trade, as to where we would obtain seven million dollars; but here are seven million dollars of expenditure over and above that which would have been necessary, on the basis of the expenditure of the last year of the Mackenzie Administration, adding 20 per cent. in order to keep pace with the requirements of the increased population. I think there is the secret as to why our people are becoming poor. I have thus shown that more than six million dollars has been taken out of the pockets of the country more than should have been taken by way of taxation. If the hon. gentleman opposite had said: "Although we have taken this, we shall thereby reduce the public debt of the Dominion, which will become less year by year, and, therefore, eventually your burdens will be less," there would be some defence for it. But how stands the account with reference to our public debt? Has it been reduced during these ten years, under these gentlemen? Is the taxation which has been wrung out of the people of the country, applied to the liquidation of our debt owed in the markets of the world? No; we have a statement of how our public debt stands. In 1889, our net debt was $237,530,041, and in 1879 our net debt was $142,990,187. other words, in ten years the Government of this country have increased the national debt $94,539,-854. Šo you have taken your six million dollars extra taxation, year after year, out of the pockets of the people of this country, but you did not apply it to the reduction of our public debt; for your public debt has been heaped up at the rate of ten millions a year, while you have been taking this very money. I have endeavored to present the case fairly, as far as I am concerned. I have added in the deficit of 1879; I have made provision for the increased population, and in bringing both up to a fair basis, I find that the result is that $6,000,000 of extra taxation, over what ought to be required, has been taken from the pockets of the people of this country every year. Let us prove this by another table. Let us take two periods of ten years each, nearly the entire period since Confederation. The last ten years is the time the hon. gentlemen opposite have been in office with their National Policy in force. I propose to bring before the attention of the House the total imports for consumption in the Dominion of Canada, and the duty collected thereon for two periods. The first period is the ten years from 1879 to 1889, the period of the National Policy under these gentlemen, and the other is the period between 1869 and 1879. The total imports for consumption in the ten years from 1879 to 1889, was $1,027,923,231, and on that there was a duty collected-which, hon. gentlemen will readily recognise as taxation, and as money taken out of the pockets of the people of the country—amounting to $204,731,298. In the ten years, from 1869 to 1879, under a revenue tariff, there were imported of goods for home consumption, valued at $103,006,507, on which there was a duty collected of $128,269,884. In other words, in the last ten years, under the National Policy, there was taken from the people by way of Customs and Excise duties, $76,461,414 more than there was for the ten years that preceded. Hon. gentlemen may say to me: But you have larger imports between 1879 and 1889 than you have between 1869 and 1879; and they will say so correctly, and I would not be dealing fairly with the House if I did not tell that the imports during the earlier ten years were less, to the amount of $24,916,724. But I will deduct that amount from the extra amount of duty collected, and it will then leave over $52,500,000 extra, that have been taken by way of revenue during ten years the Government has been in power. So that, taking it on the basis of goods imported, and comparing them for the one ten years with the other ten years, the Government has taken by way of Customs duties from the people of this country, between fifty and sixty million dollars more than was taken from them during the period of the revenue tariff. Let these hon. gentlemen ask themselves what fifty or sixty million dollars mean in ten years, to a population of between four and five millions. Why, Sir, they must see that it is a drain upon the country, which the country must feel, and which the country is giving symptoms of feeling at the present time. The hon. gentlemen should recognise these facts, and if they recognise them as I do, it seems to me that instead of the introduction of tariff changes, designed to heap still greater burdens on the people, there would have been tariff changes introduced which would tend to lessen their burdens; and that an era of economy and expenditure ought to be entered upon, so that the people, with less revenue coming in as a result of the sale of their crops, might have more money left in their pockets by the Government and its officials, who have taken the money from them. Some hon, gentlemen will not be disposed to agree with me, perhaps, that taxation is such a bad thing and that it impoverishes the country. To hear hon, gentlemen opposite applaud the Minister of Finance, one would think that taxation is a good thing for the country. I have noticed every time the Minister of Finance introduces his tariff changes, that when there is an increased duty proposed a glow of pleasure seems to pass over the faces of hon. gentlemen opposite, and they rejoice and clap their hands as if a great thing was being accomplished. They rejoice that there is more taxation proposed by the Finance Minister to be placed on every man who buys an article for use in his business, or for himself or his There was That is what they rejoice at. a time when the hon. First Minister, looking forward to the state of things that exists at the present time, but thinking he had found the means of averting it, declared, that if such a state of things existed as is existing at the present time in the country, it would be intolerable. I propose to read to hon, gentlemen opposite the words of their When the Govchief in reference to that matter. ernment were contemplating the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, contemplating the great amount of expenditure it would involve, Sir John A. Macdonald is reported, at page 1053 of Hansard, to have spoken thus, in the year 1880:

"I believe that land can be made productive under the terms of this resolution to complete the whole of that road, to open that immense country and give us a magnificent railway from sea to sea, without adding to the burdens of the people, or without causing any necessity for an increase of taxation."

I ask hon, gentlemen to remember this fact: that at that date Sir John A. Macdonald, the leader of the Government, recognised that the burdens of the people consisted in the increase of taxation. He viewed it at that time as a burden on the people, and he continues to say here:

"We can do it all by the sale of the lands which we hold as a sacred trust for the purpose of defraying the whole expense of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway."

Again, he says, on page 1057:

"As the road progresses, the annual sales of land will more than be sufficient to meet all the possible cost of the railway. In addition to all that, we must remember we shall be pouring into that country an enormous population, which, on a prairie soil, will rapidly become—not with the painful toil of the people of Ontario and Quebec, who have had to clear the forest—consumers of dutiable goods, and contributors to the revenue. We shall be receiving a large revenue from that country altogether independent of the product of the lands. Where, then, is there any danger of this country being over-ridden by taxation or being oppressed? There is none."

That was the hon. gentleman's statement in 1880, when the Government were carrying on the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway as a Government work, and he was telling the people pose to increase their burdens in order to accomplish it. But, Sir. two years record But, Sir, two years passed, and the policy of the Government was changed. They had made that famous bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to construct the road. had lifted, as they said themselves, that enormous burden from the shoulders of the people of Canada, and transferred it to a syndicate; and under that changed condition of affairs we had an expression of the views of the hon. First Minister on this question, whether or not taxation or increase of taxation is a burden on the people of this country. Pleasing, as one might be disposed to think hon. gentlemen opposite considered increased taxation, as they felt every turn of the screw, in 1882, after the Government had made the agreement with the syndicate, the hon. First Minister, in replying to the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who had made a motion with reference to the manner in which the Government were disposing of our public lands, said:

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

"Then, Sir, the hon. gentleman says, that we had better settling lands, and not selling them. The hon. gentleman has forgotten that it was the policy of the late Government, as it is of the present, to appropriate a certain portion of these lands for the purpose of paying the expenses of building the Pacific Railway. The hon gentleman knows that this task was so herculean, and that the burden was so great for a population of 4,000,000 of people, that, while it had become a political necessity to carry out our good faith and open up and make useful our North-West, which we had bought for this end, if to build the Pacific Railway, at the same time it was part of the policy of the late Government—and as the records will show it—as it is the policy of the present Government to make that country pay for its own railway, why, in the name of Heaven—and I speak with all due deference—should the people of Ontario and Quebec, of Nova Scotia, of New Brunswick and of Prince Edward Island, be heavily taxed in order to open up that western country to new settlers from all parts of the world. Why should they be ground down under that iron heel of the aristocracy, and that relentless grasp of the tax collector? Why should they be crushed out, when there was a fair country as large as the whole of Europe that did not refuse the sacrifices which the original settlers from old France in the Province of Quebec, endured? Why, Sir, instead of being obliged to plunge into the forest, instead of being obliged to plunge into the forest, instead of being obliged to plunge into the forest, instead of being obliged to plunge into the forest, instead of being compelled with unskilled arms and old English broadaxes to hew their way through the woods before they could raise a potato or a cabbage, the immigrant can go now into the North-West, and if he has his agricultural implements, before the night, after the morning of his arrival has fallen, he can run many along furrow. Then, why, Mr. Speaker, should our people be taxed under these circ parts of Canada. It was understood, and it was the policy of the present Government, and of the present, as it was of the late Parliament, that that country should eventually pay for its own railway, and there was an appropriation, which still stands on the Statute-book, of 100,000,000 acres of land, which were to be sold, for the purpose of building this railway: and of these 100,000,000 acres, 25,000,000 acres were to be handed over the railway company, and 75,000,000 acres are to be sold—they are not to be used for homestead purposes,—for the purpose of relieving the people of the older Provinces, who, on the faith of this assurance and promise—and on this promise only—accepted the burden, and have at the polls recorded their sanction of this policy, which was settled some years ago, of building the Canadian Pacific Railway, of carrying out the pledge made to the people of British Columbia, and of opening the intermediate North-West, which was but for a price taken out of our own pockets—they endorsed this policy on the understanding, that eventually that country would pay the whole of the expense. Sir, I am glad to say, that for the persistence of speculators—as the non, gentleman calls them—but of capitalists and gentlemen, desirous of investing in the North-West, as I would describe them—it is safe, it is certainly beyond the possibility of doubt, to say, that every farthing and every cent, and every dollar, that has been or will be expended in building the Pacific Railway, not one shilling of this burden will fall on our shoulders, or on the shoulders from the whole amount of that debt."

The hon, gentleman recognised at that time that if of the present Government, and of the present, as

The hon. gentleman recognised at that time that if this country was to face the task of constructing that road by taxation, we should be ground down under the heels of an aristocracy, as he phrased it. our life ground out of us by the tax collector; but he said he had a plan by which, if it worked, this country would be relieved of that burden. I propose to show how the hon. gentleman's plan worked, and I will then ask hon. gentlemen op-posite whether or not we have paid for this work out of the taxation which presses upon every vital part of this Dominion. What was the hon. First Minister's proposition? The scheme he brought. before Parliament was this: From the sale of those public lands, by the year 1890, he assured us, we should have, of cash in hand, $38,593,000. and during the next ten years, coming in yearly instalments, we should have a sum amounting in the aggregate to $32,712,000; or in all, at the end of ten years, he said we should have, in cash, or in the best securities in the world, a total of $71,305,000. From that we should have to deduct $2,400,000 for the cost of surveys and the' cost of administering the lands, which would leave us, after paying expenses, $69,000,000 either of money in hand, or the best security in the world—the land itself. This sum is to be in our hands during the current year, 1890, and if we find it there, we must admit that the people have not been ground down under the burden of taxation which the hon, gentleman saw would be imposed upon them if they had to pay for the railway by taxation. Now, Sir, let us see how much we have realised. I have the Public Accounts only up to 1889, and the hon, gentleman has until the 30th June of this year to get in the balance of the money. Let us see how much he will have to raise between now and the 30th June next in order to have his $69,000,000. If you turn to page 16 of the Public Accounts, you will find the following statement of the account on the 30th June last :-

TERRITORIAL ACCOUNTS.

North-West Territory Organisation......$1,460,000 00

So that by the 30th June, 1889, instead of having any portion of these $69,000,000 in the treasury, We have expended more than we have a deficit. we received by $1,633,936. That is the position as revealed by the Public Accounts. But the hon. gentleman may reply: Well, you have added the purchase of the North-West Territories themselves; you have added the cost of organisation; you have gone back to the inception of the enterprise; whereas when I made my statement, I made it in 1882, and my calculation was based on a prediction Well, I will of the results which followed 1882. take him on that ground and see how the Dominion Lands account stands from 1882 to 1889. I find that the total receipts from the sale of Dominion Lands for the year 1882, when that speech was made, to the 30th June, 1889, were $4,922,208; and there has been expended during that time on capital account, $2,664,911, and out of the Consolidated Fund, $1,307,267; or, adding the two together, there has been expended $3,972,178. Deduct that from the total receipts, and you have a balance to the credit of $950,030. That is what we have. As I said before, the First Minister has to the 30th June of this year to make up the difference between $950,030 and $69,000,000; and we are warranted in saying that if he is able to make up even $1,000,000, by the time at which he said we would have $69,000,000, that will be the most we can hope for. There you have, Sir, a miscalculation in the receipts of $68,000,000; which has had to be met by taxation; and that in face of the statement of the First Minister that if such an amount of taxation had to be taken from the people, it would lay upon them burdens greater than they would be able to bear. But, Sir, you will remember, as I read to you from his speech, he had a double string to his bow. He said: Even if we do not sell that quantity of land, we will pour immigrants into that country, who will become sues upon us, that the returns given demon-settlers there and consumers of dutiable goods, in such a volume that the proportion they will contribute to the revenue will more than offset any additional taxation necessary. Let us look at the result of that forecast and see how far it has been accomplished. The hon, gentleman then calculated that in 1882, 35,000 settlers would come into Manitoba and the North-West; in 1883, 40,000; in 1884, 45,000; in 1885, 50,000; in 1886, 55,000; in 1887, 60,000; in 1888, 65,000; in 1889, 70,000; or a total estimated influx of settlers into Manitoba and the North-West during those years, of Let us see what the actual number is of settlers who have gone into that country. I will give you the figures from the official leaflet issued by the Department of Agriculture in January, 1890. I find that the estimated population of Manitoba now is 120,000, and of the North-West, 80,000. Therefore, the Department of Agriculture estimates that there are at present in Manitoba and the North-West 200,000. There was in that country, when the census was taken, in 1881, before these new settlers were to come in at all, 122,400 people; and the natural increase of 2 per cent. per annum during the nine years to date, would, this year, amount to 22,032. So that you will find, taking the census of 1881 and the natural increase, there ought to be, without any immigration, 144,032 souls in that country. Deduct that from the number estimated to be actually there now, and we find the immigration during this nine years during which we were told that 420,000 souls were to flow into that country, amounted merely to 55,568. The estimate made by the First Minister was that, on an average of eight years, 52,500 souls would go in per annum to that country, whereas the actual net result is that merely 6,946 went into that country annually. The First Minister estimated that the influx in 1889 would be 70,000, whereas the actual immigration, as given by the Minister of Agriculture the night before last, amounts to but 14,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And nearly all Canadians at that.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). And nearly all Canadians at that. I have given these figures be-And nearly all cause I supposed, in giving them, I would be quoting an authority recognised on the other side of the House. I have shown that the Ministry themselves felt that if an increase of taxation was required to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway, that would be an intolerable burden. I have. pointed to the fact that the whole burden of the construction of that road is on the peeple of Canada to-day as a national debt, which must be paid for by extra taxes, and the interest on which has been wrung from the people in the shape of extra taxation. I have shown that in one case $6,000,-000 more than the actual requirements of the country was taken, and that did not go to reduce the public debt, which went up by leaps and bounds at the rate of $10,000,000 a year. With reference to our whole immigration policy, I charge this upon the Government, that they are not statesmen. I charge that the calculations of the leading statesmen of that party have been utterly falsified. I have proved that these men do not grasp the circumstances of the country, that they are not able to comprehend the isstrate the falsity of their predictions, and prove to every one their utter inability to grasp the condition of the country and to manage its affairs. This is true in every Department. they introduced their National Policy, did the Minister of Finance, then Sir Leonard Tilley, lay down as a cardinal principle? He laid down, with all the solemnity that characterised his utterances, as one of the great causes of depression in this country, the fact that the people were importing too many goods. And the way to remedy that evil, he said, was to add on taxes which would shut out those imports, which would keep the people from buying, and turn the balance of trade in our favor. Then he declared we would be rich, and prosperous. Hon. gentlemen opposite endorsed that proposition with a cheer, and that was laid down as the prominent plank in their platform. But turn to our Trade and Navigation Returns of to-day, and what do we find? We find that not only have we ground many millions of dollars by way of taxation out of the people, but that the balance of trade is still against us by $25,000,000 a year, being an amount against us greater than it ever was And this, despite the fact that Sir Leonard Tilley laid it down as a distinct proposition, and the cardinal principle of his policy, which was endorsed by the party and never since receded from, that if we imported more than we exported we were on the road to ruin. He said if a man spends more than his income, poverty will stare him in the face; and that so it was with a nation. If the balance of trade is against us, we are on the road to ruin. Therefore, according to his own declaration, according to the creed of hon. gentlemen opposite, this country has been going down the road to ruin ever since. They talked about their immigration policy. They told us that people would pour into the North-West, once we built the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they got our people to agree to hasten its construction, and to bear the burden that would entail, with the expectation that they would be recouped by the millions which would flow into this country by means of the Canadian Pacific Railway. did the Minister of Public Works, Sir Hector Langevin, say in 1881? He said:

"We want to people also the North-West; we cannot people the North-West otherwise. With all our exertions and with all the powerful machinery the Government can and with all the powerful machinery the Government can have at its disposal to bring emigrants to this country, we cannot bring more than 15,000 or 20,000 a year, but with this powerful syndicate having all their interests for the future in bringing emigrants to this country to coperate with the Government, we shall certainly secure an immigration which will, at least, be equal to the immigration which we have seen flowing for years into the United States of America."

Sir, they were united on this. The First Minister, the Minister of Public Works, the combined genius of the Cabinet, agreed that the result would be to introduce a great population into that country, and to divert the stream of immigration which was flowing to another country. What has been the It has been, as they now claim, that they have added 50,000 souls to that population. I ask if there has been any exhibit made by any Government showing more incompetency to grasp the conditions of the country, than this which is before us to-day? I do not wish to allude to another matter which has been brought to us, or I might have endeavored to exercise foresight, make the forecast of statesmen, they have utterly failed, and it is not using too strong language, in face of the facts, to speak of this country as being in a condition of drift, and carrying the Ministers with the drift, because they seem to imagine that the only thing to do is to increase the burdens of the people by adding to We know on both sides of the the taxation. House, that while public works which are the property of this Dominion are going to ruin because grants are not made to repair our own property, at the same time half a million of dollars is used for a machinery to prepare a voters' list which is a fraud, a delusion and a snare, and that amount would be sufficient to repair works in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, which are going to ruin and decay. I must pass on now—because I do not desire to occupy the attention of the House too long-to another subject, one which should be a very important one if we are to judge of the policy of the Government, as we are bound to do, by the statements of the Finance Minister and the President of the Council. I come now to deal with the statement which was made in the latter part of the speech of the hon. the President of the Council. This would have been a revelation to us if we had not been prepared for it by the announcement of the Minister of Finance, that he intended to abrogate the friendly clause which was placed on our Statute-book by which we signified our willingness to enter into reciprocal relations with the United States when they manifested a similar desire. In this there appears to be a change in the policy of the Government. The President of the Council stated that he was utterly opposed to reciprocity, even in natural products, and that it was the worst thing that could befall our farmers. Taking that in connection with the action of the Finance Minister in increasing the duty on natural products, and proposing to abrogate the standing offer which has been on our Statute-book for years, it simply declares to the people of the United States that the policy of this Government is one of estrangement from them. The policy which is approved of on this side of the House is not one of estrangement from our neighbors, but one of reciprocity in regard to those interests in which we are bound up with them. Gentlemen opposite have always hitherto taken the ground that reciprocity, at all events in natural products, would be in the interests of this country. They have always professed to be anxious for reciprocity on the lines of the old Reciprocity Treaty. What was the amendment moved by Sir John A. Macdonald in 1878, on which he went to the country? Was it a policy of estrangement? No; this was the effect of the resolution which he moved, that, having failed to secure reciprocity of trade, we should endeavor to obtain a reciprocity And why? It was in order that we of tariffs. might in that way bring about a reciprocity of trade. That was the argument which was used. What was stated by the present High Commissioner when he went to the people of the Maritime Provinces, who came into this Confederation on the understanding that they would not have any increased burdens to bear? It was that the policy of the Government involved only a readjustment of the tariff for the purpose of securing free trade. The President of the Council was in the House at show that in every Department in which they that time, and I am bound to say that he made the best and ablest speech that was made in defence of that resolution in this House. That is universally conceded. What were his views in reference to that resolution, which read as follows:—

"That the Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that this House is of the opinion that the welfare of Canada requires the adoption of a National Policy which, by a judicious readjustment of the tariff, will benefit and foster the agricultural, the mining, the manufacturing and other interests of the Dominion. That such a policy will retain in Canada thousands of our fellow-countrymen, now obliged to expatriate themselves in search of the employment denied them at home; will restore prosperity to our struggling industries, now so sadly depressed; will prevent Canada from being made a sacrifice market; will encourage and develop an active interprovincial trade, and moving (as it ought to do) in the direction of a reciprocity of tariffs with our neighbors, so far as the varied interests of Canada may demand, will greatly tend to procure for this country eventually a reciprocity of trade."

The hon, the President of the Council then said:

"If every other member of this House should go back on the proposition contained in this amendment of the right hon, member for Kingston, I certainly could not do so without very glaring inconsistency."

Then he went on to point out that he had declared to the Government——

Mr. COLBY. Was that before or since the Flood? The hon. gentleman is reading ancient history.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This was at the inception of the National Policy, just when it was being hatched, when the hon gentleman was its strongest defender. The hon gentleman need not ask how long ago it was, because he declared in his speech that he held to the National Policy now just as he did when it was introduced into this Here is a strange inconsistency: that he held to it then, as declared by himself, because he believed that by the result of those duties we should secure reciprocal trade relations with the United States; and now he says he still clings to the National Policy because reciprocity with the United States, even in natural products, would ruin our farmers. Yet he says he is in favor of the National Policy all the same—bound to maintain the National Policy which, in 1878, was used as a means to accomplish what he termed would be a blessing, that is, reciprocal trade relations. holds to the National Policy, he says, as firmly as ever, that which was in the beginning designed, as he declared, to bring about that which he says now would be productive of disaster and of ruin to the agriculturists of this country. Sir, what did the Finance Minister of two years ago say in this House with reference to reciprocal trade relations with the United States? What was the language of Sir Charles Tupper when he introduced his financial statement, in 1887? As late as 1887, the Finance Minister of this Dominion, speaking the views of the Government opposite, used these words:

"I think the interests of that great country (the United States) and the interests of Canada alike are bound up in close commercial relations, and in extended reciprocal relations. I have no hesitation in saying so. It would be, in my judgment, a great calamity and a misfortune if anything were to prevent reciprocal trade arrangements with the United States, which would be as they were when they existed before, alike beneficial to both countries."

That is the utterance of Sir Charles Tupper, Minister of Finance in 1887. Now, we have a change of base on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, and instead of viewing reciprocal trade relations with stating that he believes it would be the worst the United States as a blessing to both countries, it is officially declared by a member of the Cabinet that it would be a curse and a hindrance to the agriculturists of this country-he did not add, to the other interests; but as it has always been maintained they will be benefited thereby, perhaps as much as any other class in the community, we may fairly infer that he believes it would be an injury to every one. That gentleman made a speech a little later on—it was made since the Flood—and perhaps he had as good an idea of the way in which trade relations between the two countries stood, and what the effect would be, as the President of the Council, or even the present Finance Minister. I want to quote now from what the present High Commissioner, Sir Charles Tupper, said in February, 1888, when he was speaking upon the question of trade relations and the circumstances in which the two countries stood, after he had been at Washington, and after he had realised the position of affairs:

"I have told you that we stood face to face with an enactment which had been on the Statute-book by an unanimous vote of Congress, ratified by the President, providing for non-intercourse between the United States and Canada. I need not tell you that the Bill meant commercial war; that it meant not only the ordinary suspension of friendly feelings and intercourse between two countries, but that it involved much more than that. If that Bill had been brought into operation by the proclamation of the President of the United States, I have no hesitation in saying that we stood in the relation to that great country of commercial war, and the line is very narrow which separates a commercial war between two countries from an actual war. No man who knows anything of the intimate commercial relations which exist between Canada and the United States should contemplate such an Act going into operation without feeling that it would tear up from the foundation those intimate social and commercial relations which exist between these two countries, which, in friendly commercial rivalry, are making rapid progress which has attracted the attention of the civilised world."

That is the expression of Sir Charles Tupper, who, after being in Washington, after understanding the position in which both countries stood, believed that in the interests of the people of this country there should be peaceable relations, friendly relations and reciprocal trade arrangements made between the people of the two countries. Now, we have, on the other hand, a Minister of the Crown declaring that to have reciprocity in natural products means ruin to the farmers of Canada; we have a Finance Minister repealing a friendly clause in our statutes and re-imposing duties that may have the effect of being viewed by a certain portion of the people of the United States, as casting down the gauntlet, and as saying: We will enter upon a commercial strife with you, and, instead of having you for friends, we will enter into a commercial struggle which can only have the result of hindering the progress of both countries and proving damaging to both. Why, Sir, I have proving damaging to both. stated that this country is drifting, and I have shown, I think, from the views that have been enunciated by those gentlemen, from their record on this question, that they are unable to grasp the condition of the country; they are vacil-lating, changing from what is desirable one day to what is undesirable another, drifting in a current, not knowing whither they are going, and following a current which, as I consider, is

thing that could happen to the farmers of this country, to have reciprocal trade relations with the United States in natural products. I would ask: What can you think of a Minister that has deliberately entered upon that course, in view of the records of our trade and commerce with the nations of the world? Where is the man who is possessed of ordinary business sense, who desires his best customer to be cut off his list? Where is the man with the least degree of common sense in commercial life who desires to have his customer estranged from him and his trade cut off? Yet the hon. gentleman declares that to have free intercourse with the United States in trade would be injurious, the worst thing that could happen to our farmers and to others. Out of $4,417,170 that we exported as the produce of the mine, the hon. gentleman asks that the country which takes $3,753,351 worth of it, should be cut off, and that we should not send any there at all. Of the total of our fishery products of $7,000,000, in round numbers, nearly three millions go to the United States, and the hon. gentleman proposes that we shall cut them off as our customers, that we will have no trade with them. What do you think of a Minister of Finance and a Government that have entered on a policy like that? What think you of a Government that have declared their belief that as regards the products of the forests, which amount to $23,000,000, in round numbers, of which the United States take $11,000,-000, charging a duty of $2 per thousand, these products should not enter that market free, and it would be the worst thing that could happen if the market were free? What think you of a Government that as regards animals and their products, of which we export to the value of $23,894,000, of which the United States take the value of $7,000,-000, imposing a heavy duty upon them, declare that it would be injurious if these animals and products were admitted free into the adjoining Republic? What do you think of a Government announcing a policy and declaring it on the floor of Parliament, that as regards agricultural products, of which we export to the value $13,000,000, of which $9,000,000 worth go to the United States, that the removal of these duties would be injurious to Canada and fatal to our farmers? I cannot comprehend such a declaration.

Mr. COLBY. I desire to say that I was discussing the question of the condition of the farmers of Ontario, as compared with the condition of the farmers of the United States, and whatever remarks I made had reference simply to agricultural products.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Natural products was the statement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Probably there will be another policy on Tuesday.

Mr. BOWELL. We shall have to go to Washington first.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I said the hon. gentleman did not state that he included the other industries.

Mr. COLBY. Precisely.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But I said, I presume, as it has always been conceded, that the farmers would especially, as a class, benefit by this policy, that all other classes would share in it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Mr. COLBY. I have no objection to the hongentleman drawing any inference he pleases.

2612

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is what I said. But I want to read the words of the hon. gentleman, as I wrote them down: "He was opposed to reciprocity in natural products; it would be the worst thing that could happen for our farmers."

Mr. COLBY. Farm products. The hon. gentleman took it down correctly.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman will admit that animals and their products, and agricultural products come in there, at all events.

Mr. COLBY. Quite so.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). And, therefore, the declaration that as regards animals and their products, of which we export to the value of $23,000,-000, of which $7,000,000 in value go to the United States, it would be the worst thing that could happen to this country, if the American duties were removed, is one I do not understand. So it is with regard to our whole trade. Out of a total export of products to the value of $77,000,000, the United States take $36,000,000 worth, and is in fact our largest customer, taking one-half of our total exports. I fail to understand the contention of hon, gentlemen opposite, and the people of this country will fail to understand it, that it is a wise thing to endeavor to promote estrangement between our best customer and ourselves, that it is best to enter on a course of legislation calculated to give aid and encouragement to men who view public questions and endeavor to frame public policy in the way in which the McKinley school are doing at Washington, rather than along the lines laid down by those members of the great community to the south, who are actuated by a broader and nobler spirit, who have introduced a resolution in the interests of peace and progress, as between these two great nations lying side by side, and who desire that each Government shall appoint commissioners with a view to devise some means by which we may cast down the barriers and open the gates and let the great flood of commerce circulate between the two peoples as freely as the blood circulates in the human veins. I am in accord with that school. Sir, they are meeting us with a generous offer.

An hon. MEMBER. Louder.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman must pardon me; but I felt it was a sentiment it was not discreditable to approve, for it was a sentiment favoring trade with those who speak our own language, who are our next-door neighbours, with whose welfare and well-being our interests are bound up, and with whom more than one-half of our trade is conducted. I must apologise, if to speak too loudly is an offence, and my plea is that the sentiment is one worthy of our approval. It was not urged at length by the Minister of Finance, but it has been stated in this House, that to allow free corn would be a very great injury toour farmers. That statement was made, totally ignoring the fact that the Central Farmers' Institute, which recently met in Toronto, comprising representatives of the agricultural class of the country, passed a resolution in which they declared that free corn would be in the interests of Canada. But what say hon. gentlemen opposite? They say: If you permit free corn—and it would come in under reciprocity trade with the United Statesthen the corn standard of 40 cents a bushel would be the standard of value for all your coarse grains, while now the standard of values is the barley standard of 57 cents a bushel. not pretend to know as much about farming as I do about commercial matters, as I have been trained to commercial pursuits; but I have heard intelligent farmers speak in this House, and I have heard them discuss this question outside of this House and I have brought what little commercial knowledge I possess to bear upon this subject, and the sentiment to which they gave expression, and which I endorsed, was this: that, as a business enterprise, it would be good policy on their part to grow barley (we will take the figures given by the President of Council in this argument) and sell it at 57 cents for 48 pounds to the bushel, and then turn round, and, with the money received from that barley, spend 40 cents for 56 pounds to the bushel of feed, better fitted for our cattle than that which we sold at 48 pounds to the bushel, and place the balance of 17 cents per bushel in our pocket. The farmers thought this was a good business transaction, and I was surprised to hear a Minister of the Cabinet declare that it would be inadvisable to adopt that policy, which the intelligent farmers have been pressing on the attention of the country. Now, Sir, it has been said that the United States grow more of natural products than they require, and that, therefore, that is not a market for us. I have not time to go into that discussion, nor will I delay the House by referring to it at length, but that, on the face of it, is very easily to be seen and very easily to be explained. What is the result? Why, Sir, you take the States that lie contiguous to Ontario, to Quebec, to Nova Scotia, to New Brunswick, to Prince Edward Island—take these States, comprising the New England States and the great States of New York and New Jersey, and you will find that at the last census they had over 10,000,000 people in them. Why, Sir, these States do not grow enough wheat to bread themselves. They only grow ten million bushels of wheat, when it would, I suppose, take fifty million bushels to feed them. There is a market right at your very door for forty million bushels of wheat. You could send it to them better than their wheatproducing fields, in far away Kansas and Nebraska, if there were free commercial intercourse between If we had that free intercourse, Canada would be the market from which these States would draw the supply of wheat, for the ten million barrels of flour they need per annum. Take the New England States, in which, on the testimony of the Ministry, the farms are forsaken, and where they are not growing what is needed for consumption;—there you have immense cities like Boston, Lowell; Boston, I suppose, with a population of over half a million. What are these immense cities requiring? They require all the commodities which we produce in this country. Potatoes are not grown in the New England States, or in New York, to any quantity like what they need for consumption; while little Prince Edward Island and the Annapolis valley grow them in abundance, and their market for potatoes is in the United States, notwithstanding the duty of 15 cents a bushel imposed upon them. In view of all these facts hon. gentlemen opposite say, that a of the Government, in a wise, and prudent, and, at proposition to knock off that 15 cents a bushel, which would go into the pockets of our farmers in Prince Edward Island and the Maritime Provinces, would be ruin and disaster to the country. any one ever hear before an argument like that advanced to intelligent men? If the hon, gentleman adheres to the National Policy, let me ask him to remember that one of the great principles laid down for the National Policy was, that it was essential to the prosperity of the farmers, and to the wellbeing of the country, that we should have a home market. A home market is a grand thing. I live myself in a busy manufacturing city, which affords an excellent market; Toronto has grown in wealth and population and mouths have to be fed. No one will deny that it is a desirable thing to have a home market, but we are getting it by slow progress. Adopt reciprocal trade relations with the United States, and see what an immense home market you will have for the farmer. Within one day's ride, you have gathered together in cities, -not to be built, but already peopled with a population greater than the entire population of the Dominion of Canada. You have these States for a home market, which are already inhabited with immense populations They need every product the Canadian farmer has to sell. There is your home market. Hon. gentlemen opposite claim that the home market is the best thing the farmer can have; but when a proposition is made looking towards the securing of a home market for the supply of five million people, congregated within cities already built and developed, in many cases a day's ride, and in some cases within two hours' ride from the homes of the farmers of the country; we are told that it would be a ruinous thing to our farmers to give them this market, and that the Government continue in a course of policy that will tend to keep these markets more closely shut and barred against us than they have been heretofore. I will not detain the House longer. I have spoken longer than I should have done, but I think it was necessary, perhaps, or it might be useful to point out these facts, which I have endeavored to obtain. I can only add, in conclusion, that the depression which exists in this country, as well as the depression which exists in the neighboring States of the Union—which has been referred to by the hon. President of the Council to console us has been brought about in part by an excessive rate of taxation, and by the taking of money out of the pockets of the people of this country, and taking it out to a greater extent, year after year, although, year after year, the products of the farmers have been lowered and their revenue less; taking it out until—as the hon. gentleman pointed out—in the States of New England the farmers have left their farms and become impoverished; and until, as was pointed out by the member for South Oxford, and admitted by hon. gentlemen opposite, it is pressing to such an extent on our farmers, that the proper policy for the Government to-day is, as is proposed in the resolution of the hon. member for South Oxford, to devise ways and means whereby this excessive load of taxation may be lowered, so that the people of this country may be allowed to retain the hard-earned money they have honestly and fairly won for themselves; without the Government taking more out of their pockets than is absolutely necessary for the conduct of the affairs the same time, energetic manner. Sir, I wish to stand here to take my position on this. If parties in this country are to be divided on the line; whether it is to be a desire for reciprocity, or a desire for estrangement between the two countries; as I judge, from the resolution introduced by the hon, the Minister of Finance, and as enunciated by the hon. the President of the Privy Council, is to be the dividing line of policy; I desire to express my sympathy in favor of those who wish to have unrestricted reciprocal relations—friendly feelings and commercial intercourse between these nations, and my opposition to those who wish for commercial warfare, which, as was pointed out by the late Finance Minister, is only removed one degree from a state of actual war. I would rejoice if this House had been unanimous in the reception of the sentiments of men of that noble line of thought in the United States who, I am glad to believe, are daily increasing, and which sentiments find expression in the resolution offered by Congressman Hitt. I wish that we should be permitted to go on in commercial friendliness with one another, that the barriers should be lowered, that there should be free intercourse, and that we might reap the benefits which will come to us, as they will reap the benefits that may come to them. Sir Charles Tupper has often pointed out here the necessity to the National Policy of an interprovincial trade, and I have always given him credit for his desire to promote such a trade. An interprovincial trade is a grand thing, if you can have an interprovincial trade without forcing the public to pay for it, as we are forced to do, situated as we are geographically in this country. Internal commerce carried on by a nation is a great factor in the prosperity of a people. Remove the commercial barriers which exist between you and the United States, and you will have in an eminent degree, not only the progress and prosperity which flow from a provincial and an interprovincial trade, but the progress and prosperity that would result to you from an uninterrupted flow of commerce and trade throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion, and as well as throughout the length and breadth of the great Union to the south of us. Hon. gentlemen opposite fear to take this step, because they say: We will be outdistanced in the race. Sir, they belie the character of the Canadian people. Who are the men who are in foremost places in the United States to-day, and who hold prominent positions in every department of life there, professional, commercial or agricultural? Shining among the brightest names that shine in the United States, are the names of Canadians, born and bred in this country, and holding their own among the very best people of that country. Go into their factories and workshops, in the United States, and you will find, in many cases, that their foremen and machinists are Canadians. Look at the heads of their great railway systems and you will find among them Canadians born, Canadians bred, and Canadians trained in this country. Go into their monetary institutions, as I did in Chicago, and you will find that their bank managers, and the members of their financial boards, are, in many cases, Canadians. Go to their fishing fleets and there you will find, as my friends from the Maritime Provinces tell me, that the Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

from the hardy mariners of our Maritime Provinces. And you tell me that these men, who are holding their own in the United States itself, which was to them when they went there virtually a foreign country, except in language, and under a different Government -- and not only holding their own, but, with these things against them, working their way up to the highest positions—that these men cannot hold their own in their own country, not with any undue advantage given to the United States, but with a free, open competition. Where muscle is placed against muscle and brain against brain in equal contest, I say I have no fear of the Canadian muscle and the Canadian brain.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Mr. Speaker, I confess to you that I consider myself especially unfortunate in having been selected to follow an hon. gentleman of the great eloquence, energy and logic of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat. But, Sir, whilst I cannot pretend to emulate that hon. gentleman's logic, neither shall I attempt, as in a great measure that hon. gentleman has done, to quote the speeches of other hon. gentlemen delivered on former occasions in this Parliament and out of it; but I shall endeavor to present, as concisely and in as few words as I can, the views I hold in regard to the trade relations of this country; and the views I express shall be my own, and must not be taken as binding any other person in this House or out of it. It has been my good fortune, Sir, to have had the opportunity of listening to the speeches of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) during the last sixteen or seventeen years. In the first four or five years that I had the honor of a seat in this House, that hon. gentleman occupied the position of Finance Minister of this country, and it was his duty then to present the financial statements of the Government of which he was a leading member. Since that time, with the exception of one occasion only, on which my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Paterson), discharged the duty which would, no doubt, have devolved on the hon. member for South Oxford, but for circumstances over which he had no control-

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. An Act of Parliament, to wit.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Since 1879 it has been the duty of that hon, gentleman to criticise the financial statements made from this side of the House. The hon, gentleman says he was kept out of Parliament for one Session by an Act of Parliament. Let him rather, Sir, attribute the fact to the true reason, namely, that the people did not agree with the nostrums he was proposing to

Some hon. MEMBERS. The gerrymander.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Sir, I have listened to the hon. gentleman in this House during those years with a good deal of pleasure; but during all those years the hon gentleman has been singularly unfortunate. Although I admit that his utterances have been eloquent and his financial genius great, and although he has a capacity of making the worse appear the better cause, yet that hon gentleman's position, from the time I first listened to his utterances on the floor of this captains of their ships, and that almost all the first listened to his utterances on the floor of this men who are successful fishermen, are men drawn Parliament, has been exceedingly unfortunate. On the first occasion that I listened to a Budget speech delivered by the hon. gentleman, he came down to Parliament with a proposition for a general increase of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in the taxation of the people of this country, attributing the necessity for such increase in the tariff to the legacy that had been left to him by his predecessors when they went out of office in 1873. I had not the opportunity of hearing the hon. gentleman's financial statement in 1875; but in 1876, 1877, and 1878 that hon. gentleman was wrestling, year after year, with constantly recurring and constantly increasing deficits, without having the boldness-I will not say he had not the genius, because I think he had-to apply the proper remedy to bring about an equalisation between the receipts and expenditures of this country. At that time I sat on the Opposition side of the House. I followed then, as I follow now, the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government to-day. The party of which I was a member, which was then in a min-ority in this House—although I believe not in a minority in the country, as circumstances showed very soon thereafter—suggested to the hon, gentleman a means by which he could overcome the difficulties that presented themselves to him during those years; but the hon. gentleman, with that great knowledge of public affairs and finance which characterises him, refused to accept the suggestions which were made, and honestly made, by the party then in Opposition, and went to the country on the principle which he and his party laid down, of a revenue tariff and a revenue tariff only. Sir, I need not remind you and the House of the result of the course which these hon, gentlemen pursued during the years they were in office; I need not remind you of the overwhelming defeat they met with when they submitted themselves to the arbitrament of the people of this country. I have heard my hon. friend from South Oxford, year after year, from 1879 down to the present Session, ascribing the defeat of his party, and their continuance in Opposition, election after election, to every possible reason but the true one, that is, that they do not possess the confidence of the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman, the other night, in the course of the speech he delivered in reply to the Budget speech of my hon. friend the Finance Minister, said that the Government could gerrymander the constituencies, that they could pass an infamous Franchise Act, that they could debauch the constituencies and the Provinces, but that they had not the capacity to grapple with the financial questions which presented themselves for the consideration of the Government of this country. also made the statement that the course which has been pursued by the present Government since they came into office has produced irritation in the United States. Sir, if the course of maintaining the dignity of Canada by the Government charged with conducting the affairs of the country produces irritation on the minds of the people of the United States, then I say, let that irritation be produced. It is the duty of this Government to conserve the interests of the people, whose interests they are charged to guard. I say it is no part of their duty to make any concessions to the United States that will be detrimental to the interests of the people of Canada. My hon, friend also stated the other night that he believed he reflected the opinions and the views of half the people of this Dominion, and, also, that he reflected the views and the opinions of the Local Legislatures throughout the whole Dominion. As regards the latter part of his statement, I have nothing whatever to say against it; but let me point out to my hon. friend that the logic of facts during the last ten or eleven years has had the effect of destroying the theories of the hon, gentleman, as they would the baseless fabric of a vision. If the hon, gentleman has the capacity, as I am sure he has, of understanding the logic of facts, he must by this time be convinced that the policy, or rather the no policy, the shifting policy, the attempt at finding out a policy for the party of which he is one of the leaders, will never secure the approval of the people. I heard my hon. friend lay down the proposition here the other night, that he and his party had subscribed to the resolution which had been submitted by Mr. Hitt in the American Congress. I would like to point out that there seems to be a process of retrocession upon the part, not only of those hon. gentlemen, but of their ally in the American House of Representatives. If you read the resolution submitted by Mr. Hitt last year in the House of Representatives, you will find that it reads as follows :-

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever it shall be duly certified to the President of the United States that the Government of the Dominion of Canada has declared a desire to establish commercial union with the United States, having a uniform mercial finds with the United States, having a uniform revenue system, like internal taxes to be collected, and like import duties to be imposed on articles brought into either country from other nations, with no duties upon trade between the United States and Canada, he shall appoint three commissioners to meet those who may likewise be designated to represent the Government of Canada, to prepare a place for the assimilation of the import duties internal revenue taxes of the two countries port duties, internal revenue taxes of the two countries, and an equitable division of receipts in a commercial union. And said Congress shall report to the President, who shall lay the report before Congress."

Now, last year the hon member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) submitted this proposition to Parliament:

"That, in the present condition of affairs, and in view of the recent action of the House of Representatives of the United States, it is expedient that steps should be taken to ascertain on what terms and conditions arrangements can be effected with the United States for the purpose of securing full and unrestricted reciprocity."

That resolution did not meet with the approval of the majority of the members of this House, and I think my hon. friend must have come to the conclusion, judging by the results of the elections held since, that it does not meet with the approval of the people of Canada. Mr. Hitt has modified to some extent, during the present Session in the United States Congress, his resolution, and the resolution now before the Committee on Ways and Means in that House, reads as follows:

"Resolved, That whenever it shall be duly certified to the President of the United States that the Government of the Dominion of Canada has declared a desire to enter into such commercial arrangements with the United States as will result in the complete removal of all duties upon trade between Canada and the United States, he shall appoint three commissioners to meet those who may be designated to represent the Government of Canada to consider the best method of extending the trade relations between Canada and the United States, and to ascertain on what terms greater freedom of intercourse between the two countries can best be secured, and said commissioners shall report to the President, who shall lay the report before Congress."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). My hon. friends upon the other side say "hear, hear;" and one would suppose from the approval with which receive that resolution, that it was in such a position that we would be certain, if we adopted a similar policy in this Parliament, to obtain reciprocal trade relations with the people of the United States. Well, last year I read to the House the opinions of Senator Sherman and Secretary Blaine as to the only means upon which the people of Canada could secure reciprocal trade relations with the people of the United States. These gentlemen said it was their firm conviction that unless we were prepared to cast in our lot with the people of the United States, unless we were prepared to enter into a political union with them, we could not hope to secure from them any measure of reciprocal trade. In addition to that I will read, with the permission of the House, an editorial paragraph which appeared in the New York Sun of Sunday last:

"That there may be no needless misunderstanding, we beg our Canadian friends to understand that they can have free trade with the United States—the only important system of real free trade in the world—on the same terms as the United States themselves enjoy it, namely, on the terms of political union."

Are my hon. friends opposite prepared to say "hear, hear," to that?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Then the writer goes on to say:

"All other propositions, such as that of Mr. Hitt in the House of Representatives the other day, can lead to nothing but vanity and vexation of spirit."

If my hon, friends opposite are prepared to accept that dictum, if they are prepared to accept vanity and vexation of spirit as the outcome of their efforts to obtain reciprocal trade relations with the people of the United States, I, for one, am not prepared to make any overtures with such a result in view. My hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has always, ever since the present party came into power, and ever since he became convinced it was impossible to oust them from the Treasury benches, ever since he became convinced, as he must be, that the people of Canada are with the Conservative party and against the theories of my hon. friend, has been accustomed, on the floor of this House, to utter pessimistic wails when criticising the Budget speeches of Finance Ministers. In pursuance of that policy, he told us last night some very extraordinary things. In the first place, he spoke of the reduction of deposits in the Government savings banks as evidence that the country was retrograding; but I am sure my hon. friend, with his great knowledge of banking affairs and of the financial affairs of this country, must have known that the reduction of interest on the deposits in Government savings banks in November last had the effect of displacing a large portion of the moneys which had been previously deposited in the Government savings banks, and transferring them to the chartered banks. My hon. friend said last night that he had always contended that the Government had been paying too much for their money and that this result, the withdrawing of money from the savings banks, bore out to some extent that contention. Let me say that I do not agree in that view, nor do I approve of the action | House and the country that we were retrograding, Mr. WHITE (Renfrew).

of the Government in reducing the rate of interest upon those deposits. I have always held, and I hold still, that it would pay the Government of Canada better to pay to their own people, through the medium of these savings banks, the 41 per cent. which these deposits cost, including their administration, than to pay 4 per cent. to people outside of this country. I have always held that view and endeavored to impress it upon the Finance Minister, but I am sorry to say, I was not successful. The hon member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) knows full well that very shortly after the Government had reduced the rate of interest in November last, the chartered banks raised their rate of interest, and, in point of fact many of them now pay 4 per cent. to their depositors, while the Government pay only $3\frac{1}{2}$. I hold, therefore, that the reduction of deposits in the Government savings banks is no indication of poverty on the part of the people. My hon, friend went a little further and stated that although the deposits in the savings banks had increased from \$9,279,000 in July, 1879, to \$41,800,000 in July, 1889, there had been a large amount of money borrowed abroad, amounting, I think he said, to \$36,000,000, against some \$6,000,000 which were borrowed in the year 1879. And my hon friend made the statement on his authority as a financial critic, that the difference between what we had borrowed abroad, and what we had in our savings banks at home, would account for the increased deposits. Surely, he must have concealed facts which were in his possession, for he must have known that the deposits in the chartered banks in 1874, when he came into office, amounted to \$78,709,368; while in 1879, when he left office, those deposits were \$71,368,502, or a decrease during the time my hon. friend occupied the position of Finance Minister, of over \$7,000,000. I am sure he must have been aware that the deposits in the chartered banks had increased, from 1879 to 1889, to no less than \$123,655,414, an increase of \$52,000,000 in the chartered banks, in addition to the increase of \$32,000,000 in the deposits in the savings banks. I, therefore, think my hon. friend was not ingenuous in his statement that, while we had increased the deposits in the savings banks by \$32,000,000, we had increased our indebtedness by \$30,000,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You increased it by a great deal more. That is only one item.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Then my hon, friend ought to have taken the House into his confidence entirely, and to have stated the whole of the facts as he understood them, and not to have concealed a part. The return I have shows that the savings banks deposits on the 30th June, 1889, amounted to $53,715,838, which was a considerable sum in excess of the amount stated by my hon. friend last night.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know my hon. friend does not intend to be unfair; but I was speaking only of the Government savings banks, and not of the other savings banks, and I think he will find that my statement is correct.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I believe my hon. friend's statement is correct as to that, but, when he was endeavoring to create an impression on the

he should have stated the whole facts. We find that the deposits in chartered banks, in savings banks and in loan and building societies, on the 30th June last, amounted to $194,678,285. Assuming our population to be five millions, that would give an average of $38.93 for every man, woman and child in the Dominion, and yet we are told that this country is going to ruin, and that the Dominion is reaching a point almost of destitution. My hon. friend devoted a considerable portion of his speech to that large portion of our population which, to a great extent, controls the elections throughout the Dominion, and whose good graces, no doubt, my hon. friends on the other side would be exceedingly glad to secure. My hon. friend stated the condition of the farmers in Ontario was deplorable, that the growth of the rural population from 1872 to 1879 had been 84,000, while from 1879 to 1888 it had only been 11,000. My hon. friend, the President of the Council dealt pretty fully with that phase of the question last night. He pointed out to the House what, I think, everybody must recognise, that the opening up of these large areas of land in the North-West had the effect of withdrawing our surplus population from the rural districts of Ontario and Quebec, and, further, that the growth of manufactures undershall I call it ?-the fostering influences of the present Administration, had been so great as to draw a considerable number away from rural pursuits. My hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) looks on this matter from the pedestal on which he stands, high above the common herd, of whom I am one, and I am afraid my hon. friend does not take sufficient pains to inform himself, as he ought, as to the circumstances of the rural population of this country, and as to the causes which induce them to move from one part of the country to the other. If he had been brought up, as I was, in a wild part of the country, and had seen the labor which the people have had to undergo in preparing their lands for cultivation, he would understand why the sons of these men would naturally be attracted to the fertile prairies of the North-West, where they are able to put in their plough at once, and to obtain crops a year or two afterwards. Assuming my hon, friend's figures to be correct—and I think, as I shall be able to show in regard to some other of his statements as to the condition of the Province of Ontario, they are to be taken with some measure of doubt-I say there is no reason in them for the assertion of the non-growth of the rural population in the Province of Ontario, to which the hon. gentleman referred. Let me say, also, that my hon. friend was not ingenuous in the statement he made, that large areas of land had been opened up in Ontario since 1879, and that railways had been built through a large portion of that Province. It is true that the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been of the greatest possible benefit to the Province of Ontario, but it has not been of such great benefit to the agricultural development as it has been to the mineral and timber resources of that Province. My hon friend knows full well that, in that large extent of territory from Lake Nipissing to Rat Portage, there is a very small percentage of cultivable lands, and having our North-West prairies to go to, the young men of the Province of Ontario would prefer them to settle upon. Therefore, I say that my hon. friend was not ingenuous in making that statement to the House, any more than he was in making the other statements to which I have referred. He also referred to the fact that the statistics of Mr. Blue, which in former Sessions of this Parliament were quoted by hon. gentlemen opposite as being perfectly authentic were now unreliable—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew)—to some extent misleading, was the expression the hon gentleman used, the hon. gentleman had taken the pains, with the view, I have no doubt, of elucidating the theories evolved in his own brain, to make enquiries as to the mortgaged indebtedness of the people of the Province of Ontario, and he had come to the conclusion which he announced to this House last night, that, in the Province of Ontario alone, there were no less than 300 million dollars mortgages upon farm lands. Now, Sir, my hon. friend is a financial genius, I am aware of that, and I feel a good deal of diffidence in criticising any statement he may make; but if the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to examine those statistics furnished by Mr. Blue, upon which hon. gentlemen opposite have heretofore placed so much reliancealthough I, myself, confess that I do not put the same faith in them that some of my hon. friends opposite do-but if he would examine Mr. Blue's returns he would find that in 1888 that gentleman reported that there were 20,823,426 acres of lands occupied by residents: that there were 1,234,853 acres occupied by non-residents, making in all 22,058,279 acres of occupied lands, of which the number of acres cleared was 11,314,725. Now, if my hon. friend had taken the pains to analyse the statement he made here last night, he would have found that, according to his own statement, there is a mortgage of $13.60 upon every acre of occupied land in the Province of Ontario; and if he were to take only the cleared lands in that Province, he would find the mortgage indebtedness, according to his computation, amounts to $26.87 on every acre of cleared land in the Province of Ontario. Now, I am a native of the Province of Ontario and I deprecate any such statement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So am I, and I know whereof I am speaking.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I should be very sorry to think that the hon. gentleman himself believes what he states

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Make the investigation, if you dare.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I have some further evidence of a disinterested character which may convince the House, if it does not convince the hon. gentleman, that his statements are not entirely in accord with the facts. I hold in my hand a report made by United States Consuls respecting mortgages in foreign countries, and I find, in regard to the Province of Ontario, that Mr. Consul Bridges, of Brockville—perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you may know something about him—reports as follows:—

"The value of property in my district has not experienced much change in late years, but is on the increase, if anything, owing principally to the increase of population"—

That does not accord with the views of my hon

-"and the healthy, industrious condition of this section of the country. People, as an average, are careful in incurring the responsibility of indebtedness, and there is plenty of money to be had on the market from 6 to 7 per cent. I do not think that recorded indebtedness is on the increase, if you take into consideration the continued change of ownership and the increase of population.

Mr. John M. Strong, American Consul at Belleville, reports as follows:

"During the last three years recorded indebtedness has increased, owing to shortness of crops, Prior to that time it had diminished in proportion to value. This year, prospects being good, recorded indebtedness is again diminished, except in the case of small chattel mortgages." mortgages,

Mr. Hiram Davis, Commercial Agent at Collingwood, says:

"Recorded indebtedness is generally decreasing." Mr. Roberts, Consul at Hamilton, says:

"The probable ratio which mortgages and judgments bear to total valuation of taxable and assessed property, is about 25 per cent."

Mr. Twitchell, Consul at Kingston, says:

"Recorded indebtedness, in proportion to estimated values, is increasing.

I give my hon, friend the benefit of that; William C. Hall, Consul at Prescott, reports:

"Recorded indebtedness is diminishing."

Mr. Farrar, Consul at Port Sarnia, says:

"The best opinion here is that recorded indebtedness has diminished during the past two years."

I give my hon, friend that testimony in addition to the others.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In opposition to the testimony of the registrars in the country.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). My hon. friend, I am afraid, has confined his investigations to the particular part of the country where he thought that the circumstances would support the theory he had in his own mind.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, Sir; I took good care not to.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Let us compare the condition of other countries with Canada. dent of the Council last night referred to the condition of the State of Vermont, and, perhaps, I may be permitted to say a word or two in reference to the condition of other States of the Union; and I do this because, from the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite, this country would be led to believe that upon the other side of the line the people of Canada would find an Eldorado:

"Mr. N. J. Bachelder, the Commissioner of Agriculture and Immigration of New Hampshire, has sent out (under date October 14) a preliminary list of abandoned farms in that State, which shows a condition of things closely resembling that of Vermont. The list embraces 115 farms. 'These,' says the circular, 'are unoccupied farms, and have been reported by the Selectmen of the various towns to have fairly comfortable buildings. They comprise but a small part of the abandoned farms of the State.' He adds—and this is an important matter—that 'in most instances these farms have not been abandoned because the soil has become exhausted, or from a lack of natural fertility.'"

Then I find that another writer makes the following remarks :-

"To one conversant with the facts, it is evident that the reports of these lately appointed commissioners do not begin to show the actual extent of the decline. Their reports are supposed to show only the number of vacant Mr. White (Renfrew).

farms having on them buildings in a fair condition—impossible after more than five years of neglect. Instead of the 887 deserted farms reported by Commissioner Bachelder of New Hampshire in 160 towns, three times that number would probably be a low estimate."

But our hon. friends opposite say that this condition of things is produced because the United States have followed the same "foolish system, according to my hon. friend from South Oxford, that has prevailed here since the present Government obtained power. One would imagine that there was no agricultural distress existing in any part of the world except in those highly protected countries to which my hon. friend has referred. Well, I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite will admitthat the condition of things which has, according to the hon, member for South Oxford and the hon. member for South Brant, produced such dire results to the agricultural population in Canada and the United States, does not exist in the United Kingdom-at all events, so far as protection is concerned. I will read for the benefit of hon. gentlemen opposite, if the House will permit me, some paragraphs from a report made by a Royal Commission appointed to enquire into the depression of trade and industry in the United Kingdon in 1885. The commissioners make this statement:

"We should here state that in selecting the last twenty years for the period of comparison, we were influenced mainly by a desire, on the one hand, to avoid carrying back our investigation into periods in which the conditions of the trade and industry of the country differed too widely from those which now affect it to make any comparison between them useful; and, on the other hand, to include the years immediately preceding the events of 1870-71, which resulted in so serious a disturbance to the commerce of the world."

Then they go on to say:

"The industries which we selected were-the iron and coal trades, the textile industries, agriculture and ship-coal trades, the textile industries, agricultude ping.

"We received from Sir James Caird and other witnesses ample corroboration of the serious effect which the great depression in the agricultural industry has produced upon the home trade of the country. There is but little divergence of opinion as to the cause of that depression. The extreme lowering of prices, brought about by the extension of American farming, appears to be the main factor of the present agricultural position, one witness, Mr. Druce, expressing the opinion that the cultivation of much of the inferior land in the country could not be remunerative, 'even if it could be had for nothing.'"

That is in a free trade country. The commissioners also make this statement:

"We see no indications that, taking the industries of the country as a whole, and having regard to the figures of a series of years, there is any diminution in the aggregate of commodities produced by British capital and British labor.

"In staing this general conclusion however there is British labor.

"In stating this general conclusion, however, there is one important branch of industry which must be excepted. We refer, of course, to agriculture. There can be little doubt that the quantity of agricultural produce raised in the country during the last two years has materially decreased, and that even the fairly good seasons of the last three years have scarcely compensated for the diminished production of the eight years which preceded them, while the steady fall in prices has, of course, affected the agriculturists even more seriously than the diminished yield of the soil."

I think hon. gentlemen opposite will find this is one strong reason why the agricultural population in Canada and the United States are not as prosperous as under other circumstances they might be. I could also quote to hon. gentlemen the statistics respecting the diminution in the products in the United Kingdom, but I presume the House knows what these are as well as I do. But I will say this: if you examine the records I hold in my hands you will find that one of the reasons for the agricultural depression in this country, as well as in the United Kingdom, results from the extraordinary diminution in prices, which I will quote to the House. In 1877 the price of wheat per quarter in the United Kingdom was 56s. 9d.; in 1888, 31s. 10d. Barley, 1877, 39s. 8d.; 1888, 27s. 10d. Oats, 1877, 25s. 11d.; 1888, 16s. 9d. Beef, 1877, 5s. $9\frac{1}{4}$ d. per stone of 8 lbs.; 1888, 4s. $6\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sheep, per stone of 8 lbs., 1877, 6s. 9d.; 1888, 5s. 71d. So that I think the House will observe that. apart altogether from the maladministration of the present Government, the prices to which I have referred as prevailing in the United Kingdom have had much to do with agricultural depression, both in that country and in Canada. Let me draw the attention of hon, members to this important fact in regard to the depression in agriculture, such large areas have been brought under cultivation in India and other countries, and the facilities for transportation from the inland regions in those countries have so greatly increased, we must expect continued and increased competition in the markets of Europe. How are we going to meet that competition? We must meet it by more scientific farming, by producing cereals at a lower rate then we are producing them now. What did hon. gentlemen opposite do when in office? Did they attempt to improve the condition of the farmers; did they attempt in any way to teach them scientific methods? No. It was reserved to my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, at the instigation of the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Gigault), to adopt a system by which more scientific methods of farming can be taught to the people of this country. And, therefore, I say that the farmers owe to this Government, a debt of gratitude which it will take a very long time to repay, but which I think they will in part repay when the opportunity presents itself of casting their votes either for or against the party now in power.

After Recess.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). When the House rose at six o'clock for recess, I was endeavoring to point out that the only real interest that had been taken in the farmers of this country, since I have had a seat in Parliament, has been taken by the present Minister of Agriculture. That hon. gentleman has, with the assistance of this House, established experimental farms throughout this Dominion, with a view, as I understand it, of affording information to the farmers as to the best kinds of grain to be selected for growth in Canada, and as to the best methods of developing agriculture. I may add to that, Sir, the fact that it was my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, who incepted the model farm in the Province of Ontario; and so I say, that to the Conservative party belongs the credit of having endeavored to promote the interests of the farming community of Canada. There was one point which escaped me when I was speaking with reference to the allegations of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) respecting mortgages upon farms in the Province of Ontario. I endeavored to point out, and I think pretty successfully, that it was almost impossible that the hon. gentleman's calculations could be correct. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman still persisted in the statement that he had made an investigation himself that led him to the conclusions which he gave to the House last night. I am afraid that the hon. gentleman did not take one or two facts into consideration, which might materially affect the discoveries that he made by his examination of the registry offices of the Province of Ontario. In the first place, those gentlemen who are familiar with the mode of dealing with mortgages by land companies, especially in the Province of Ontario, will bear me out in the statement which I am now about to make: In some instances, when mortgages become due, a lower rate of interest can be obtained than that which the mortgagor has been paying, and the mortgage is transferred or perhaps it is increased or dealt with in some way by re-mortgaging the premises, either to the company that has already effected the loan, or to some other company. In many of these instances I have known, of my own knowledge, that these prior mortgages have remained undischarged for a considerable number of years, and that, in point of fact, where there was, perhaps, only $1,000 against a property, it might appear from the records in the registry office that there were two or three thousand dollars against it. I would also like to draw the attention of the House to this further fact, that in the Province of Ontario a great proportion of the loans that are made upon agricultural land to farmers, are payable in annual instalments. No record is made of the payments of principal upon these mortgages until they are finally discharged; and it is probable that my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright), in his investigations, overlooked the fact that a large proportion of these mortgages that appear against the agriculturists in the particular parts of Ontario to which he devoted his attention, were paid, and that, instead of there being the large amounts which he discovered in the registry offices against these lands, the proportion may have been probably not more than one-fourth of that which the books of the registrars show. hon. friend, in the course of his speech, in addition to the statement which he made, that the agricultural population of the Province of Ontario was stationary, or practically stationary, said also that there was only one family in the Province of Manitoba to three square miles of land. My hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Paterson), pursuing that subject a little further, drew the attention of the House to certain predictions which had been made by the right hon, the leader of the Government, and by the then Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper, respecting the probabilities of the development of agriculture in Manitoba and the North-West. Now, Sir, I frankly admit that the forecast of these gentlemen, the hopes which they entertained at the time these statements were made upon the floor of Parliament, have not been realised; but I would like to ask hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to consider whether the statements that have been made by leading Liberal politicians, both in this House and outside of it, have not had some effect in deterring people from going into the North-West and Manitoba. They must take some portion of the blame for the failure of these predictions that were based upon data given to the Ministers, and they must see that the failure does not lie entirely at the door of the Government. My hon. friend the member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) devoted himself with a good deal of assiduity to prove that the present depression, which he and his friends allege has overtaken the agricultural population of the Dominion of Canada, is due to the fact that extraordinary imposts have been laid upon these people since the present Administration have come into office. That hon, gentleman endeavored to show that if the expenditure had been kept down to the point at which it stood when the hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House vacated their seats, by the mandate of the people of Canada; the depression which now exists would not have existed to the extent it does. We have heard these stories year after year in Parliament; we have been told year after yearand it was repeated here by the hon. member for South Oxford last night—that the policy of the present Government was "to create five hundred millionaires and to impoverish 500,000 farmers." Whilst, as I have said, these statements have been made year after year on the floor of Parliament, we have had two general elections since they were first made, and upon both these occasions, the policy of the present Administration has been triumphantly vindicated by the verdict of the people. Not only that, Sir, but we have had since the last general election a number of bye-elections throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion, and I venture to state, that in no period in the history of Canada, has the policy of the Administration of the country been more fully, more effectually, and more decidedly endorsed, than it has at these bye-elections. So, Sir, I say, that whilst these gentlemen make certain statements in reference to the expenditure under the present Administration, and whilst they endeavor to create upon the minds of the farmers the impression that it is because of the policy, and because of the extraordinary expenditure of the present Administration, that the country is in the state of depression in which they declare it to be, yet they are stating something which neither the House nor the country will believe. I do not deny for a moment that the expenditure has largely increased since the present Administration came into office, but, Sir, it is only natural that there should be an increase of expenditure as the resources of the country develop and as the demands made on the Government expand from year to year. What has been the course pursued by the present Administration istration, as compared with their predecessors in office? When the Administration of the hon-member for East York came into office, they found, as they declared, a legacy left to them by their predecessors, involving extraordinary expenditures; there were certain public works requiring to be constructed for the development of the country; and yet when the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite left office, and were relegated to what the people of the country deemed to be their proper places, those hon, gentlemen had accomplished practically nothing in the development of this great Dominion. What has been the result of the administration of affairs by the present Government? We have now, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a great highway of commerce; we have enlarged and deepened our canals; we have extended to local railway enterprises throughout the lain an interchange of those products on terms length and breadth of this country a measure of that are fair and reasonable to the people of Can-Mr. WHITE (Renfrew).

aid which has developed the commerce of the country to a phenomenal extent; and whilst those achievements have undoubtedly increased the expenditure, they have not increased it in a manner to be oppressive to the people of this country. It may not be out of place for me, Sir, before leaving this branch of the subject, to point out the contrasts shown by the Public Accounts in the administration of the affairs of this country, between the present Government and their predecessors. I stated at the beginning of my remarks, that whilst I had the greatest admiration possible for the ability of my hon. friend from South Oxford, that hon. gentleman, in all the speeches he had delivered in Parliament on financial subjects since I had the honor of a seat in this House, he had been singularly unfortunate; and let me say that those hon, gentlemen who have held the position of Finance Minister since 1879 down to the present time have been correspondingly fortunate. The hon. member for South Oxford, when Finance Minister, was obliged, as I have already stated, to wrestle with constantly increasing deficits; and if we are to credit, as is customary, the administration of my right hon. friend with the results of 1874, the year in which they left office, and the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite with the results of 1879, the year in which they left office, we shall find this extraordinary condition of things-that from 1874 to 1878, during the administration of the hon. member for South Oxford, there were net deficits amounting to $5,551,114, whilst the net result of the administration of affairs under the leadership of the right hon. First Minister from 1879 to the present time, is an aggregate surplus of $13,382,095. While I do not pretend to say that these results are due to the extraordinary ability of the Ministers who have administered the Department of Finance under the present Government, nor to the lack of ability of my hon. friend opposite, yet I say they show that while that hon. gentleman has been singularly unfortunate, hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have been singularly fortunate; and may we not reasonably deduce from this circumstance the conclusion that the result shown by the Public Accounts, has been due to the adoption of the policy which hon. gentlemen on this side of the House promulgated in 1877 and put into effect when they came into office? Sir, my hon friend from South Brant (Mr. Paterson) took very strong exception to certain statements made by the hon. President of the Council in reference to a change of opinion which the hon member for South Brant alleged to have taken place in the mind of the hon. President of the Council between 1878 and the present time. Well, let me say to hon. gentlemen opposite that we are not Bourbons; we are ready to learn. changed circumstances of the country may properly bring about changed opinions; and while, speaking for myself, I am in favor of an interchange of natural products between Canada and the United States-

But if my hon, friend the President of the ada. Council has changed his opinion on that subject, there are, perhaps, some good reasons why his opinion should have changed. Sir, let us look at the condition of things in the United States. The avowed object of the hon. gentlemen opposite, in advocating the policy of reciprocity with the United States, is to benefit the farmers. Let us see how the farmers would be benefited by such an interchange of products as these hon. gentlemen propose. If agricultural depression exists in the Dominion of Canada, it not only exists here, but in the United Kingdom, and that also to so great an extent in the neighboring Republic that the House of Representatives have deemed it necessary to introduce a Bill for the appointment of a Commission to enquire into the causes of that agricultural depression. I hold in my hand a Bill which was introduced in the House of Representatives on the 21st of January, 1890, "to create an Agricultural Commission to investigate causes of present depressed condition of agricultural inte-This Bill enacts as follows:--

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a Commission is hereby created to be called the Agricultural Commission.

"That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and is herebyauthorised and directed to appoint nine commissioners, who shall be residents of the United States, and not more than five of whom shall belong to any one political party, and of whom the first named shall be president

"That it shall be the duty of said Commission to take into consideration and thoroughly investigate all the various causes which in their judgment may relate to the present depressed condition of the agricultural interests of this country; and for the purpose of fully examining the matters which may come before it, said Commission, in the prosecution of its enquiries, is empowered to visit such different portions and sections of the country as it may deem advisable.

""That the Commission shall make to Congress final reports of the results of its investigations, and the testimony taken in the course of same, not later than ninety days after its appointment; and it shall cause the testimony taken to be printed monthly and distributed to the members of Congress by the Public Printer, and shall also cause to be printed for the use of Congress three thousand copies of its final reports, together with the testimony—one thousand for the Senate and two thousand for the House."

So that, whilst it is alleged that we have depression in this country, it has not here reached the point which it appears to have reached on the other side of the line. In addition to that, I should like to point out for the information of the farmers, whose interests these hon, gentlemen pretend to have at heart, the condition of prices in the United States. I hold in my hand an independent paper, the Canadian Journal of Commerce, in which I find the following statement of the condition of the American markets:

"In wheat, the situation may be summed up as follows: The crop of 1889 was 17'96 per cent. larger than in 1888, with the reserves on 1st July, 50 per cent. less. The supply on 1st March was 39'3 per cent. larger. Prices are 26 per cent. lower, neutralising the increase in the crop. The United States Department of Agriculture makes the following estimate of the supply of wheat and corn in farmers' hands, the percentage of the crops represented, and the prices in the Chicago market."

Now I would like to draw the attention of the House to these figures, and I will state them as briefly as possible:

Years, March 1	Per cent.	Price	Years. March 1	Per cent.	Price
1883 143 1884 119 1885 169 1886 107 1887 123 1888 132 1889 112 1890 156	28·5 28·4 33·1 30·1 27·0 29·0 27·0 31·9	$1.09 921 751 801 75 78i 1.041 773	1883. 585 1884. 512 1885. 670 1886. 773 1887. 603 1888. 508 1889. 787 1890. 970	36·3 33·0 37·6 40·0 36·0 34·9 39·6 45·9	58c 531 383 378 36 491 341 288

So that, although I do not entirely concur in the views of the President of the Council as to the disadvantages of reciprocal trade relations in natural products between this country and the United States, yet I say that hon. gentleman had some cause for the change of opinion which has been effected in his mind since 1888, in view of the circumstances now existing in the United States. I was not a little astonished to find that my hon. friends opposite, who, I supposed, had given their adhesion firmly to the scheme of unrestricted reciprocity, who had submitted and ably advocated a resolution in that direction last year, should have receded so completely from their position as they have upon the present occasion. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) said last night, in point of fact, that the Liberal party pinned their faith to the Hitt resolution, and I find that the leading organ of the Liberal party in the Province of Ontario also advocates that resolution as the basis upon which the Liberal party proposes to appeal to the country when the time comes to make that appeal. In addition to that, I find that the Young Liberals in Toronto have passed the following resolution :-

"That this Club herewith puts on record its belief that the message of good-will contained in the recent resolution of Congress of the United States, favoring the appointment of commissioners to negotiate a Reciprocity Treaty at such time as the Government of the Dominion of Canada shall express a wish to secure closer trade relations with the United States, will result in the best good to the people of both countries; and we pledge ourselves, as free traders, to take all possible means to hasten the passage of reciprocity resolutions in the Parliament of Canada, as being in the direction of freedom of trade with all the world."

These three things indicate that the Liberal party still adhere, to some extent, at all events—although they have not put upon record this Session a declaration in favor of unrestricted reciprocity—to the views they held last Session. Sir, it is a singular circumstance that these hon, gentlemen on the other side, during the time which elapses between one election and another, advocate, both in Parliament and out of it, the views they really hold, but when the time comes for an election, these hon, gentlemen, as did my hon, friend the member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), in his Malvern speech, modify their views so as to suit what they believe to be the opinions of the electors for the time being.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). My hon. friend says "no," but I am sure that the evidence is rather against his disclaimer.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I shall not be at all surprised to find that these hon. gentlemenalthough, I presume, they hold the opinions they have been advocating upon the floor of Parliament-receding, when the time comes for another election, from the position they have taken, because they know and feel that the country is not with them. We were told to-day, by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), that this resolution of Mr. Hitt is a friendly resolution, that it was submitted to the Congress of the United States with the best intentions, and that it was our bounden duty to accept the friendly overtures made by Congress to the Government and Parliament of Canada. Yet, I find that in the very same Session of Congress, a Bill has been introduced and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, which will impose extraordinary taxes upon those particular classes of agricultural products we send to the United States. It will be said, no doubt, by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), that that is a reason why we should make overtures to the United States for the free interchange of products; but if our hon. friends opposite hold that it is improper on the part of this Government to maintain the dignity of Canada and their own rights, because in maintaining the rights of our people they are creating irritation in the minds of the people of the United States, how much more unjust is it for the people of the United States, by a Bill of that kind, intended to affect the interests of Canadian farmers, to endeavor to intimidate our people into adopting the policy they may desire us to adopt. For my part I hold that there is no condition of things existing in Canada which demands at the hands of this Parliament the making of overtures to the people of the United States, further than those we have already made, until the people of the United States give some stronger evidence that they are prepared to meet those overtures in a friendly and equitable spirit. My hon, friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has submitted to you, Sir, a resolution. In that resolution, although he attacks the changes which have been made in the tariff in a general way, yet he does not specify what particular phase of that tariff or what particular clause of that tariff is, in his view, detri-mental to the interests of the country. The resolution which the hon. gentleman has submitted reads as follows:

"That the additional taxation which it is now sought to impose will still further increase the burthens of the people and is likely still further to aggravate the distress unhappily existing among a large portion of the farming population of this Dominion, and that under such circumstances it is the bounden duty of this House, instead of adding to the existing oppressive taxation, to apply itself to the reduction of the burdens now impeding the progress and prosperity of the principal producing classes of the Dominion, and for this purpose to abolish or reduce the taxes now imposed on articles of prime necessity to farmers, miners, fishermen and other producers."

I would like the hon. gentleman to specify what particular clauses in the tariff submitted by the Finance Minister he takes exception to as imposing additional burdens on the farmers. Surely he does not pretend that the addition of 25 cents on the article of flour is an additional imposition on the farmers; surely he does not pretend that the addition of 2 cents upon fresh meat is an imposition on the farmers; surely he does not premotion on the farmers; surely he does not premotion. White (Renfrew).

tend that the other additional impost upon agricultural products coming into Canada are an addition to the burdens of the farmers? We are told by these hon, gentlemen that it is a very desirable thing that we should have free trade relations with the people of the United States; but, has it never occurred to them that, under the policy which has prevailed in this country since 1879, if we have not been able to create a larger trade with our neighbors to the south, we have, at all events, been enabled to retain within our own borders, a very large portion of the trade that otherwise would have gone to the people of the United States? We have been able to create an interprovincial trade between the Provinces which compose this great Dominion, and, if we have not been able to get our neighbors to the south to agree to an equitable proposition for the interchange of commodities which would alike be fair to Canada and to the United States, we have been able to build up—if the information which I have is correct—an interprovincial trade which has been of great benefit to the several Provinces of the Dominion. I hold in my hand a leaflet compiled by Mr. Johnson, the statistician of the Dominion, in regard to interprovencial trade, and here is what he says as to the efforts we have made to establish that trade:

made to establish that trade:

"In the first place, we may attempt to obtain a general view. Before Confederation, as all the Provinces stood to each other in the relation of outside countries, the returns of imports and exports from and to each other were noted in the Customs statistics. An analysis of these returns shows that in 1866 the Maritime Provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island imported goods to the value of $40 per head of their population. Allowing for the increase of wealth in those Provinces since 1866, and placing the value of their importations at $41 per head, we have an import which would be now equal to $40,000,000 if those communities had continued in their pre-confederation status. (Per parenthesis, I may remark that in England the value of imports is placed at $50 per head, in Belgium at $62 and in Australia at $100). As, however, the actual imports of the Maritime Provinces now are only $13,250,000, there remains the sum of $27,000,000 to represent: first, the extent to which they provide for their own wants through the growth of their manufacturing industries; and, second, the amount they procure from the St. Lawrence River Provinces in the way of interprovincial trade, One detail will have to suffice in respect to this eastbound interprovincial trade. If we take the annual consumption of flour, meal and coarse grains in the three Maritime Provinces at two barrels per head of the population—and this is not too high an average, because the fishermen consume more flour than any other class—we have an annual consumption of two million barrels. The imports of these articles average 65,000 barrels a year, leaving 1,935,000 barrels to be supplied by the millers of Ontario."

And an hon. gentleman told me to-day that a manufacture with which he was connected, the manufacture of carriages, carried on in one of the small towns in Ontario, has been enabled to build up a trade in the sale of these carriages with people in the eastern Provinces, which has reached the large amount of $120,000 a year. I say, therefore, that the benefits which have arisen under the policy which has been adopted by the Conservative party have resulted in establishing an interprovincial trade between these Provinces which, but for the adoption of such a policy, would have gone to foreign countries. I do not say that I am entirely in accord with all the details of the tariff which has been submitted to the House. As a humble follower of the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government, I suppose I shall have to accept these details, but I tell my hon, friend the Minister of Finance, and my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, that I believe they have made a mistake in adopting a policy of granting a rebate on corn brought into Canada for the purpose of milling for human food. I have stated that before in my place during the present Session; and I think the Government have also made a mistake in allowing the introduction of corn and other grains for the purpose of ensilage. While, however, I believe that, in those cases, they have done something which will not be beneficial to our farmers, still, taking the tariff as a whole, I cannot pretend to say that the interests of the farmers have not been fairly looked after.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They have been salted.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The farmers salted? I think not. I think their interests have been more looked after than the interests of some other industries in this country.

Mr. BLAKE. Are you not going to make a noise about that little bit of pork?

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Let me tell my hon. friend that I am not a Jew, and, therefore, as the increased duty on pork will benefit the farmers in my constituency and throughout the country, I am content to accept the proposition. I have very little more to say upon the subject now under discussion. A sentiment was given expression to by my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Paterson) in the course of his speech to-day which has my entire concurrence. He said it had been alleged by those who opposed reciprocity in manufactures with the United States that the people of Canada would be distanced in the race, and he expressed it as his opinion that no such danger existed, but that Canadians were capable of holding their own with any people upon the face of the earth. Being a Canadian myself, it may be somewhat egotistical on my part to say that I entirely concur with the view expressed by the hon. gentleman in regard to that matter, but, while I believe that we Canadians are capable of holding our own with any people on the face of the earth, I entirely dissent from the conclusion at which the hon. gentleman arrived. Those conclusions, as I understood them, were that we would not be able to give effect to our energy, our perseverance and our talents, unless we had unrestricted trade with the people of the United States. From that proposition I entirely dissent. I believe we have, in this Canada of ours, all the elements of a great nation. I believe that we have all the natural resources which are required to build up a great nation, and, if we have the people here in Canada, as I believe we have, to develop our resources and to bring about the results which I believe we are capable of bringing about, then, I think, we should work out our own destiny without reference to the people to the south of us. I do not wish to say a word They against the people of the United States. speak the same language as ourselves, they are a people having, to a great extent, the same aspirations as we have, they are a people descended from the same stock as we are, and I glory in their greatness. But, while I glory in their greatness because they are an English-speaking people, 14 say that we, on this northern part of the North American continent, are capable of working out our own destiny, and, I believe, the people of Canada will show that they are willing to do that the Government that now occupy the Treasury

Mr. CHARLTON. I can compliment the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) very cordially upon the able presentation of the case from his own standpoint, that he has made to-night. I can say, with equal truth, that I am unable to agree with the hon. gentleman in a single conclusion he has drawn. He had a good deal to say with regard to my hon. friend beside me (Sir Richard Cartwright), as to his management of public affairs while he was Finance Minister of Canada, and as to the positions advanced by that hon, gentleman in his speech last evening, and I shall crave the indulgence of the House for a few moments in reviewing briefly some of the points made in this connection by the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White). He asks, almost at the outset of his speech, how it was that upon one occasion the member for South Oxford did not occupy a seat in this House, and he left the House to infer that the riding the hon. gentleman had represented had lost confidence in him, and had failed to return him: but the truth was that the Government had blotted out that riding by the infamous Gerrymander Act of 1882, and consequently a temporary derangement of affairs resulted in my hon. friend being out of the House, I think, for one Session. The hon. number for North Renfrew goes on to say that in the first financial statement that he heard from the member for South Oxford, my hon. friend advanced the Customs duties of this country from 15 to 17½ per cent. Well, that was a very moderate advance. It was my opinion at the time that it should have been $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. more; but the slight advance made by my hon. friend indicated the conservative character of his administration of the finances. He chose to refrain from imposing burdens upon the country; and in connection with the strict economy in the management of public affairs which that hon. gentleman practised, I think it is greatly to his credit that so slight an advance was made. The Public Accounts of this country show that during the five years of the administration of the finances of this country by the Mackenzie Government the increase of expenditure was very small; for 1873-74 the expenditure upon Consolidated Fund was \$23,316,000, and the expenditure in 1877-78, after five years of the administration of affairs by my hon. friend, was \$23,503,000, an increase of about \$184,000 only in the expenditure of this country, chargeable to Consolidated Fund, in five years, under the prudent, conservative and economical management of the hon, member for South Oxford—a management the character of which stands out in striking contrast with the management of the Finance Ministers who have succeeded him in this country.

Then the hon. gentleman states that the fact that my hon. friend and those associated with him on this side of the House, are still in Opposition, is proof positive that the country has no confidence in them, that the people refuse to repose confidence in the policy and in the character of those hon. gentlemen. Sir, when we take a survey of the political field of this country, when we take into account the influences used by when we consider the Gerrymander Act of 1882, the Franchise Act of 1885, the timber limit scandals, the pasture lease scandals, the appropriations amounting to millions of dollars made by that Government from time to time to influence the elections in various ridings of this country, the purchase of ridings en bloc, the purchase of Provinces, the refusal of that Government a few days ago to allow the passage of a law that would curtail its own powers for evil, so unscrupulously used—I say, when we look at all these things it is folly to talk of hon. members on this side of the House failing to secure the approval of the people. They are bought out; bought out by the money resources and the corrupting resources employed in every possible way by the Government of the day for the purpose of influencing the elections in this country.

Then, Sir, the hon member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) refers to the intimation made by my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) that the policy of this country was only calculated to produce irritation in the United States, and that consequently the policy was one to be regretted; and he tells us that if to maintain our dignity is to produce irritation, then let the irritation be produced and we will stand upon our dignity. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of great importance that Canada should set a good example to the world, its progress $_{
m that}$ and course in this matter should be dignified; but I think I will show a little later on, that I have good reason for the belief that Canada, in its intercourse with the United States, in the character of its policy towards the United States, has been more than dignified, that it has been captious, that it has been more than captious, that it has been insolent in some respects, that it has given good reasons for being considered so, and that a just cause has been given for the feeling of irritation towards Canada that exists; and I think I will be able to present, later on, the facts upon which this opinion is based.

The hon. member tells us that the party to which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) belongs has no policy, and that it is useless to talk about a party asking for the confidence of the country when it has no policy to present to the public, that it just sits here and indulges in a course of factious opposition, attempting to pull down everything that is offered, without having anything itself to offer in return. Now, I have always imagined that the Liberal party of this country had a policy—in fact, the hon gentleman has attempted to criticise the policy that the Liberal party advanced to-night. One of the points in the policy of the Liberal party is that it advocates reciprocity with the United States, it desires to extend our trade relations with that country. That is one point relations with that country. in its policy. Another point in its policy is the assertion that this country is unduly taxed, that the burdens resting upon the shoulders of the people are too great, and that these burdens should be reduced. Another point in the policy of this party is that the expenditure is too great, that the Government in expending money is reckless, that it betrays the trust imposed in it by the people, and squanders their money; that there should be economy introduced in the expenditure of this Liberal party. Another point is the assertion that the debt is too great, that the accumulation of debt should cease, and that a policy should be adopted that will reduce that debt, rather than increase it. That is another plank in the platform of the Liberal Party. Then, with regard to the management of the public domain of this country, the Liberal party asserts that the management has been reckless; that it has not been judicious; that it has not been in the public interest; that it has been conceived in the interest of the friends of the party and of the Government; that it has been used to increase the Government influence and to give the Government power, and that in all these things the policy of the party now in power is wrong; and per contra, that the policy advocated by the Liberal party being in direct opposition to the policy the Government has pursued is right. I might indicate many other points upon which the Liberal party stand before the people with a clearly defined policy, a policy exactly the opposite of that pursued by the hon, gentlemen in power.

Then, the member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) proceeds to refer to the resolutions introduced in the House of Representatives last year by Congressman Hitt, and the resolutions this year reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which Mr. Congressman Hitt is chairman; and the hon. gentleman informs us that there is something very suspicious about that matter, that last year the resolution reported to Congress and passed by the House of Representatives was one favoring commercial union, offering to negotiate with Canada on the basis of commercial union; while this year, singularly enough and suspiciously enough, the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations to Congress is not definitely in favor of commercial union, but is a proposition that Commissioners should be appointed on behalf of the United States, when Canada indicates a desire to treat, for the purpose of considering the best methods to secure wider trade relations between the two countries, without any definition as to exactly in what way the details are to be settleda resolution covering almost identically the ground occupied by my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) when he moved his resolution last year. This simply shows, in my estimation, that Congressman Hitt, one of the most advanced thinkers in the United States, one of the most liberalminded statesmen in the Republic, has somewhat modified the view he entertained last year, and he now believes that unrestricted reciprocity between these two countries can be secured on some other basis than commercial union, that it can be secured on the basis which my hon. friend from South Oxford proposed last year. In fact, it places us in a better position in this matter than before; it gives us a more liberal offer as to the basis on which negotiations shall be entered upon; it offers to us, if the resolution passes Congress, a basis for seeking to make an arrangement, which is one we may, with every confidence, enter upon and carry to a successful issue. But, the hongentleman tells us, that is all bosh; that this hope held out by the motion, introduced by Congress-man Hitt, is perfectly delusive. He says, that Senator Sherman, last year expressed the opinion, that we could not have free trade relations between these two countries, except on the basis of politimoney; that is one plank in the policy of the cal union. Then, the hon. gentleman takes up the Mr. Charlton.

New York Evening Sun, a one cent evening daily, and he reads an editorial from that newspaper, in which the writer ventures the assertion, that if we want free trade, we must take it on the basis of annexation. Does that settle the question? Does the opinion of Senator Sherman, respectable and eminent as he is, settle the question? If the United States invite this country to treat with it, to appoint Commissioners for the purpose of negotiating as to freer trade relations upon the basis that Congressman Hitt's resolution indicates, shall we, because some New York newspaper or some individual member of the United States Senate, refuse to accept the proposition, made through Congress, inviting us to enter into negotiations with a view to ascertaining what results can be reached, refuse to accept the invitation to secure an acceptable treaty? To refuse to enter into negotiations is to show we do not want reciprocal relations on any terms whatever.

Then the hon, gentleman has told us about the pessimistic wails of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). Well, I might speak of the optimistic cock-a-doodle-doo expressions of the hon, gentleman himself, and one would be as appropriate as the other. It may be pessimistic to point out clearly the dangers that threaten this country, to show that we are on the way to ruin, to warn the people of the result of the course we are pursuing. But I do not think so. I think it is patriotic in a public man, and he who has the courage to stand up and speak the truth and warn the people as to the natural outcome of the policy pursued by the Government is one who deserves thanks rather than condemnation.

Then the hon, gentleman goes on to talk about the small increase in our rural population. He does not admit directly that there is a decrease, but he admits, inferentially, that there is a very small increase, because he proceeds to account for it, and he says the drainage of the population to the North-West accounts for it. There is not a sufficient aggregation of people in the North-West to account for the drain from the older Provinces. The people go to the United States—they go in streams and in thousands.

An hon. MEMBER. Why?

Mr. CHARLTON. Because there are better opportunities and openings there. I find Canadians wherever I go, and I find them satisfied with the condition of affairs there. I am bound to say that I never have found a Canadian in the United States who expressed any desire or intention to come back to Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is a bald statement of fact, and simply that. It is a fact that the increase of our rural population is at a standstill, and this is not accounted for by the drain of our population to the North-West, for, where one man goes to the North-West from Ontario, four or five cross the line into the United States.

The hon. member from North Renfrew (Mr. White) next comes to the statement made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) with respect to the mortgage indebtedness of Ontario, and he disputes the statement made. It is an easy matter to do so. Accurate information as to the matter is not probably available. What the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) did was to name eleven ridings in the Province, and his statement was that a certain condition of affairs with respect to mortgage indebtedness prevailed in these ridings, and he said, if a like condition of things prevailed in the rest of the Dominion, then there was a mortgaged indebtedness in Canada of from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000; and, to satisfy the country that his calculations were correct, he asked that there should be a vote of money for the purpose of appointing a commission to examine into this matter, and decide whether these calculations with regard to the mortgage indebtedness were well founded or not. And if the Government have any doubt as to the conclusion, let them give us a small vote, and appoint a commission, and investigate the matter, and demonstrate whether the calculations of the hon, member for South Oxford are well founded or not. But whether we have a mortgage indebtedness of between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000, made upon mortgage loans less or more, I can assure the hon. gentleman, and the members of this House, that there is a certain mortgage indebtedness, the amount of which we can arrive at almost exactly. There is a mortgage indebtedness on the improved lands in this Dominion, amounting to over $10 an acre, due to the public debt of Canada. mortgage indebtedness we have at all events.

An hon. MEMBER. Are there no assets?

Mr. CHARLTON. We have $237,000,000 of net debt, and we have 22,000,000 or 23,000,000 acres of improved lands, and it is, therefore, easy to figure up how much is the mortgage indebtedness on the improved lands of the Dominion.

Then the hon gentleman (Mr. White) proceeds to give us some statistics, or not statistics exactly, but speculations, as to the depression existing in the United States. If all he asserts with respect to the United States were true, it simply points to the fact that protection, which has been the policy of that country since 1861, has not worked satisfactorily, and if protection in the United States has produced, or any other cause has produced, the depression in that country, which the hon gentleman asserts exists there, it behooves us to see whether the policy we are pursuing is not one of a similar character and likely to produce similar results.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. White) refers to England under a free trade policy. Well, in England a great many causes have operated to produce agricul-tural depression. In the first place, the natural customers of England for the products of her looms and workshops are the countries that have adopted a policy which is calculated to keep her goods out of their markets. The result has been, to that extent, to reduce the purchasing power of England. These countries have a surplus of food to sell to Britain. The price of natural products in those countries is governed by the prices in England, and the protective policy which impoverishes their natural customer for food products, and reduces her purchasing power has its effect upon the reduced prices paid in America for farm products. Added to this there has been a great reduction in freights, both railway and ocean, and the opening up of new sources of supply, as in the case of India, all of which has tended to depress the agricultural interests in England. The most marked influences upon prices of farm produce in England and America have been exercised by the construction of railway lines to reach the wheat fields of India, which bring our farmers into competition with the Coolie labor of that country. All these causes combined have reduced the agricultural prices in England, but that is a question quite foreign to the matter under discussion in this House at the present time.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. White) wants to know if we did not consider ourselves largely to blame for the slow settlement of the North-West. I hardly know what the hon. gentleman means. Perhaps, he means to insinuate that we have taken a course that is calculated to deter people from going to the North-West, and that we have sought to diminish the movement of population into that country. I do not think, Sir, that the North-West has better friends in this country than the Liberal members of this House, or friends who are more desirous of seeing the country prosperous. Of course, we have criticised freely various parts of the policy of the Government with reference to the North-West. We have criticised its land policy; we have criticised that colonisation policy which gave to speculators land at $1 an acre, for which the settlers were charged $2 an acre. We have criticised the pasture lease grazing policy, which puts in the hands of cattle kings vast tracts of land, on which a settler is not allowed to settle, unless the cattle king gives his consent, and by which the settler is shut out from some of the best agricultural regions of the North-West. We have criticised the policy of the Government in regard to timber limits; we have criticised its mineral lands leases; and we have criticised its railway policy, by which vast sums of money are expended uselessly in that country. All these things it was our duty to do, and if these criticisms in any way had an unfavorable effect upon the settlement of the North-West, why, we cannot help it, and it is really the fault of the Government that they gave ground for criticism by their improper conduct, and not our fault that we criticised what we found to be objectionable in their policy.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. White) then proceeds to a criticism of Mr. Mackenzie's Administrationreally he has covered a wide range in his speech to-night—and he says that Mr. Mackenzie and his colleagues accomplished practically nothing for the country. Did they not? They completed the Intercolonial Railway, they proposed to give to the North-West an outlet by constructing a road from Lake Superior to the Red River in Manitoba, and from the Red River to Pembina, to connect with the American lines; and further, as soon as the wants of the country required it, to continue the Canadian Pacific Railway west. They deepened the canals, they did various things that were beneficial to this country, and the best thing they did was to set an example of honesty and economy in the administration of the affairs of the country. Then, Sir, the hon. gentleman says that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) wrestled constantly with deficits during his administration of the financial affairs of this country. Let us look at that deficit question a little. the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) had examined the Public Accounts, I do not believe he would have said anything about deficits, and I rather think he would be disposed to let this matter rest. I have here a list of the deficits since Confederation, and during the five years my hon.

Mr. CHARLTON.

friend, Sir Richard Cartwright, held office, the deficits were:

1877-78	1,128,000

or a total deficit for the three years of $4,488,000. Now, are these the last deficits in our financial history, and did the deficits cease when the hon. gentleman left office? Let us see. The deficit was in:

1879-80	 1,543,000
1884-85	 2,240,000
1885-86	 5,834,000
1886-87	 810,000

or a total deficit of $11,365,000, as compared with a total deficit of $4,488,000 during the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright's) incumbency of the office of Minister of Finance.

Mr. FOSTER. We will soon pull the deficit down.

Mr. CHARLTON. Oh, yes, you will pull things down.

Fault has been found with my hon. friend beside me (Sir Richard Cartwright) because he refused to raise the duties. Now, the deficits under his administration were due, not to extravagance, and not to mismanagement, but to causes entirely beyond his control. They were due to the world-wide depression which diminished the revenues of Canada, of the United States, of England, and of every country in the world, and my hon. friend knowing that this condition of things was temporary; knowing that when this depression passed away, the duties that were then being levied were ample to afford him all the revenue that an economic administration of the affairs of this country required, refused upon the pretext of scant revenues, resulting from this abnormal condition of things, to increase the bur-dens placed on the people. The revenue of the United States during this period of depression, and the increase of the revenue immediately after this period of depression, clearly show that my hon. friend's expectations would have been realised had he remained in office. The Customs revenue of the United States was:

1878 1879	130,170,000 137,250,000

Then the depression passed away and in 1880 there was a leap from $137,000,000, the revenue of the previous year, to $186,500,000; and in 1881, the Customs revenue of the United States was $198,-000,000 against $137,000,000 two years before, and that without the change of a single item on the tariff list. That shows that there was a rapid advance in the collections from Customs in that country as soon as the depression passed away, and it warrants the impression that had the tariff remained as it was in this country, and had my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) remained in the position of Minister of Finance, the increase in the revenue of Canada, when the depression passed away, would have been ample for all purposes and would have left him a surplus instead of a deficit.

My hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. White) says that he is in favor of reciprocity on fair terms. What are fair terms, and what does he esteem to be fair terms? In my opinion the proposal made by my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) for unrestricted reciprocity, is a proposal for reciprocity upon fair terms, and anything coming short of that falls short of being such a proposal. If we ask the United States people to grant us a treaty of reciprocity that will enable us to sell to them exactly what we want to sell, and not enable them to sell to us anything they wish to sell, that is not reciprocity on fair terms. That is a treaty by which we secure a decided advantage at their expense. A true reciprocity treaty must permit us to sell to them the products of our labor, and permit them to sell to us the products of their labor; what they naturally want to sell. Anything short of this, falls short of being a true reciprocity treaty. But the hon, gentleman says in effect it is not a matter of much moment after all; it is a very trifling matter whether we get reciprocity or not; it is hardly worth looking after; it might be advantageous, if we could get it exactly as we wanted it-if we could dictate our own terms; but, if we have to go into negotiations with our neighbors, and give them some advantage as well as secure some advantage ourselves, then it is not a matter of much consequence; he does not know as we care about it at all. But, the hon. gentleman infers that the Liberals are still in favor of reciprocity, and I am sure his inference is right. I can assure the hon gentleman that that is one of the principles on which the Liberal party stand, and on which they will appeal to this country; and with that principle they have victory written on their banners if ever they can reach the people of this country and place that issue squarely before them.

Mr. SPROULE. You did not work it very well in Haldimand the other day.

Mr. CHARLTON. When the Government have to distribute their boodle among 215 ridings, and cannot concentrate it in one, we shall not probably have the result we had in Haldimand.

Now, the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) tells us that the farmers are not burdened by protection—that the Government have considered his case and are about to give him protection. Well, Sir, if we are going to have protection, I think it is about time the farmer had his share; if there is anything that can be done for the farmer, in Heaven's name let it be done. When he is bleeding at every pore for the benefit of a lot of monopolies it is but fair that somebody should bleed for his benefit; it is a case of blood-letting all round. But I do not know as you can give the farmer much advantage by bleeding others. There may be something in the duty on meat for him-he may get one or two cents back in return for the dollars he is losing, but the whole thing taken together is a bad policy. I do not know that I need weary the House by referring, at greater length, to the remarks made by my hon, friend from North Renfrew.

The hon. Finance Minister the other night made a few statements, and took a few positions to which I wish to refer briefly. He told us that the increase of the public debt of this country was a wise arrangement, that we had got value for it, that it had been beneficial to us in every respect. He told us that the increase of the Expenditure was also an act of wisdom. Well, I have great respect for the judgment of the hon. Minister of Finance, and I have great man tells us he expects a large surplus in the next respect for him personally—greater respect, perhaps, for him personally than I have for his judgment in these matters. I doubt very much whether I can agree with him in the position he takes with regard to the benefit this country is likely to derive from the vast increase which has taken place in its public burdens. For instance, in 1867 the net public debt-I deal with that entirely, not referring to the gross debt—amounted to $75,728,000; last June that debt had been increased to $237,530,000, an increase of $161,802,000. Now, how has this increase been applied? Have we got value to show for it? I suppose my hon. friend would say we have, but I shall be obliged to express grave doubts on that point. We have $51,000,000 sunk in the Intercolonial, and if we had a true statement of the management of that road, I believe we should find that it is costing us not only the loss of the interest on that amount, but about $1,000,000 more every year; so that certainly that is not a profitable investment directly, and I do not think it is a profitable investment indirectly. Then, we have about $70,000,000 in the Canadian Pacific Railway, including the $10,000,000 worth of lands taken from the company when we settled with it the $20,000,000 loan. I have the greatest respect for the promoters of that road. They were men of great enterprise and energy, and the construction of the road was a marvel in railway construction—a wonderful display of energy; but the action of the Government I do not think was politic or advisable under the circumstances. I do not think we required to push through that great work with such haste as we did. I believe that if the policy outlined by the Mackenzie Government-building the line first from Lake Superior to the Red River, with a branch to connect with the American roads for a winter outlet, and carrying the construction westward to the base of the Rocky Mountains, as the country settled-had been continued, by the time the line reached the Rocky Mountains, we should not have expended more than $30,000,000 or $35,000,000, and we should have had a paying road, which, given as a bonus, would have been more than sufficient to secure the construction of the remainder. By that policy, I believe, we could have saved from $35,000,000 to $40,000,000 and a land grant of 25,000,000 acres; we should have got the line as soon as the country required it; a better line, and by a better route; and we should have had a large population along the line when it was opened to furnish it with business. I believe the policy of this Government with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway was a gigantic folly. I do not look at the question from the standpoint of the company, but I look at it from the standpoint of the Government and the country. Therefore, I do not think this great increase of the public debt was in the interest of the taxpayer of this country, or in any sense warrant-

Then, the hon. gentleman tells us—and in this I agree with him—that we ought not increase the debt after 1892. I more than agree with him. I say we ought not to increase the debt after 1890.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I said.

three years. In that he may possibly be reckoning without his host. If the tariff policy of the Committee of Ways and Means at Washington, as embodied in the McKinley Bill, becomes the law of the United States, the hon. gentleman may find that his surplus will dwindle away and disappear, and that deficits will take its place. He may find a condition of things among the laborers and farmers of this country, brought about in consequence of that American Tariff Bill, that will dry up the sources of revenue, and be more disastrous and lamentable than any condition we have experienced in the recollection of any hon. member Therefore, I fear that the hon. of this House. gentleman's anticipations with regard to a surplus in the next three years are not likely to be fully

Then the hon. gentleman alludes to a prediction which he says I made in 1879, of a reversal of the protective system in the United States, and a breakdown of the same system in this country. Well, perhaps, I have only put the realisation of that prediction at too early a date, It is my belief that the next presidential election in the United States will see the triumph of the Democratic purty, which in the last presidential election had a large majority in the popular vote. The Republican party to-day only holds the House of Representatives by a very narrow majority, and they hold the Senate also by a small majority. So that a slight reversal would give the majority in Congress to the Democratic party again, and there is evidence of a very rapid progress of free trade ideas in the United States. evidence that the farming population of that country are becoming aroused to the true condition of things, and that the operatives in manufacturing centres are becoming free traders. This was indicated by the gains made by the Democratic party in the last election in the State of Connecticut and in other manufacturing centres. We shall see within a few years a breakdown of the protective system in the United States. A highly We shall see respectable element among the Republican members of the House of Representatives favor tariff reform and a sweeping reduction of duties at this moment.

The hon, gentleman lauded the National Policy as having been the means of calling into existence new industries—of having in fact been the means of creating the manufacturing industries of Canada. We often hear this assertion made, and I wish upon this occasion emphatically to deny it. I believe that if the tariff of my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie), of 17%, had not been repealed in 1879, but had been continued until the year 1890, we would to-day see a healthier state of manufacturing industries in this country, a healthier development of those industries, and a development ample for the wants of the country. I am warranted in this assertion by the extent of their development in Canada, first, under the tariff of 15 per cent, and later under the tariff of 17½ per cent. It is not contended, for it cannot be, that manufacturers commenced in this country from the operation of protection and were not in exist-ence before. Why, Sir, in 1871, we had we had $77,964,000 of capital invested and 187,942 men employed in manufactures in this country, and the products of these industries in 1871 reached to the United States, which is said to be ed the value of $221,619,000. And all this perfectly good, and which amounts, principal and Mr. CHARLTON.

business was called into existence under a tariff of 15 per cent.—a strictly revenue tariff and a very low revenue tariff. In 1881, we had a capital invested in manufacturing industries in this country of $165,302,000, and 254,935 hands engaged in them, and their products amounted to $309,676,-000; and very little, if any, of this development can be claimed as due to protection, because the protective tariff was not passed until 1879, and there was no time for it to produce any perceptible effect so soon as April, 1881. I assert, therefore, that in Canada, under a revenue tariff, and a very low revenue tariff, we had, in 1871, manufactured in this country, $221,000,000 worth of products, and, in 1881, $309,000,000 worth, showing a rapid development between 1871 and 1881 under a purely revenue tariff policy. It is an insult to the intelligence of men understanding this question for any one to stand up here or anywhere else and assert that the present policy of the Government has been the cause of the existence in Canada of the manufacturing industries we have.

Then we come to the question of the burdens imposed by this debt. Our net debt of $237,530,000 imposes a per capita charge of $47.50, taking the basis of 5,000,000 population, which I believe is more than we have. The gross interest last year was $10,148,931, but we received interest to offset this on investments of $1,305,392, leaving a net interest on our public debt last year of $8,843,-539, or $1.76 per head. Now, there have been some allusions made to the United States. The President of the Council enforced his arguments by such allusions and so to some extent did the Minister of Finance. The hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) followed their course, and I shall, imitating the example set by these hon, gentlemen, draw a contrast, as regards the amount of debt and per capita expenditure between this country and the United States. The debt of the United States on the 30th June last was $1,050,034,000, or a per capita charge, taking the basis of 60,000,000 inhabitants—which I believe is less than the actual population—of $16.67, against a per capita charge in Canada Our debt obligation is threefold of $47.50. greater per head than that of the United States, and the interest on the public debt in the United States amounted to $41,001,484 last year, or a per capita charge of 65 cents against a per capita charge in Canada of $1.76. These are suggestive facts. They are facts it is well for us to pause and consider. If we owe three times as much as the United States per head, if we are paying three times as much interest per head, that is not a satisfactory condition of things. The burdens of the country are too great, because we necessarily come into direct competition with the United States, and to have a fair chance in the race we do not want to be encumbered to a greater extent than they are. The nation that has the lightest debt and the lightest burden is the nation that has the best chance to succeed in the race of progress. If we were to treat the United States debt on the same basis as we do our own; if we were to deduct from the amount of their debt the assets of the country in the form of securities held, we would take from that debt the Pacific railway debt interest, to more than $120,000,000. If we did this, it would leave the debt of the United States last June at $930,000,000, or $14.76 per capita, against $47.50 in Canada.

I come next to the question of Customs taxation, and a comparison of the relative burdens under this head in the two countries. Our Customs taxation last year was $23,726,783, or a per capita charge of $4.74, on the basis of 5,000,000 inhabitants. I shall not make a comparison between the Excise taxes in the United States and in Canada, because it would take more time than is necessary, and because the Excise tax is a voluntary tax. The Customs duties are an involuntary tax, the people are obliged to pay it, but no man is obliged to contribute one cent to the Excise duties. It is a purely voluntary tax. The Customs tax then of Canada amounted to $4.74 per head last year. In the United States, the Customs revenue was $223,832,741, or a per capita charge of $3.55, so that we paid in Customs last year $1.19 more per head than the people of the United States, or a difference in their favor in the matter of Customs taxation of 33 per cent.

In the matter of expenditure, our expenditure last year, chargeable to the Consolidated Fund, was $36,917,834, or $7.30 per head. In the United States, the ordinary expenditure last year was $281,996,615, or $4.47 per head, making a difference of $2.83 per head in favor of the United States, or our expenditure was 62 per cent. greater than that of the United States-comparing the ordinary expenditure of the United States with the expenditure chargeable to Consolidated Fund in Canada. But if we take the Consolidated Fund and the expenses chargeable to Capital Account last year, amounting to $45,700,960, we have a total expenditure per head in Canada of $9.14; and if we take the expenditure in the United States corresponding to the Constitution of Capital Account States, corresponding to our Consolidated Fund and Capital Account, we find an expenditure of $387,050,000, or $6.14 per head, showing that the total expenditure in the United States last year was $3 per head less, or 48 per cent. less than the total expenditure in Canada. Then we have the fact that, in this total expenditure in the United States of $387,050,000, which I place against our Consolidated Fund expenditure of Canada, the former amounting to $6.14 per head and the latter to $9.14 per head, there is no less than $105,033,443 of a surplus which went to the reduction of the debt of that country and to rest, while we had no reduction of the debt, but on the contrary an increase of $2,998,090.

It may be claimed, and truthfully claimed, that this is scarcely a fair comparison, that we have in our Consolidated Revenue Fund expenditure an item for which the United States has no corresponding expenditure, and that is the subsidies which are paid to the Provinces, which would correspond with the expenditures of the State Governments in that country to which the United States Government does not contribute a dollar. I recognise the force of that contention, and I will make a comparison deducting that amount. Taking the Consolidated Fund expenditure at $36,917,834, and deducting from that the provincial subsidies of $4,051,427, we have a net expenditure of $32,869,407, or an expenditure per head of $6.57 against the ordinary expenditure in the United States of $4.47 per head, and still we have an excess of $2.10 per head in Canada as compared with the United States after leaving out of account the subsidies, or 47 per cent. more than the ordinary expenditure in the United States.

A comparison which is still more interesting and suggestive is that of corresponding items. Taking the United States ordinary expenditure to be $281,996,615, we may deduct from that the pension list, $87,624,779, the military list $44,435,270, the navy list, $21,378,819, and we have a total of $153,438,858 to deduct from the total ordinary expenditure, leaving an expenditure for all other purposes except reduction of debt, of $128,557,758, or an expenditure per head of $2.04. Treat our own expenditure in the same way. From the total of $36,917,834 expenditure on account of Consolidated Fund, deduct subsidies to Provinces $4,051,427, militia $1,323,551, mounted police $829,701, and pensions $116,029, making a total of $6,320,708, it leaves a balance of expenditure amounting to $30,597,126, or an expenditure per head of $6.11 against an expenditure in the United States for substantially the same purposes of $2.04, or an excess of expenditure per head in Canada of $4.07, or 200 per cent. more in Canada than in the United States when these items are left out. These are comparisons which are not only unfavorable but are alarming. They show our recklessness. This is a young country. When we expend in every Department and in every way more than an older and richer country, when we add three times as much per head to our debt, and expend three times as much, after eliminating these charges, it must suggest serious reflections to those who take a look at the future.

Let us for a moment look at the expenditure of this country now, and at the expenditure of the United States at various times in its history. The expenditure in the United States in 1810, when it had a population of 7,239,000, was $10,280,000. In 1820, when the population was 9,633,000, the expenditure was $18,285,000. In 1830, when the population was 12,866,000, the expenditure was $15,142,000. In 1840, when the population was 17,069,000, the expenditure was $24,314,000. In 1846, with a population 20,000,000, the expenditure was $27,261,000, or $10,000,000 less than our expenditure with the population we now have, theirs being four times as great, while their expenditure was only two-thirds of what ours The first time when the expenditure is now. of the United States reached the present expenditure of Canada was in 1847. In 1860, with a population of 31,443,000, their expenditure was $63,200,000. After that date we have not a fair comparison, because the war commenced and great drains were made on the treasury of the United States, but up to 1861, the comparison between the expenditure of the United States and that of Canada is startling. It is startling to see that a country with twenty million people should expend only two-thirds of the amount expended by a country with five million people.

The most interesting point of my case to-night is that which I am about to refer to, and that is the measure of the burdens of taxation. An ordinary person would say we pay $23,756,783 in Customs duties a year, and that is the measure of our burden. It is not so. That is only a part of the cost of the goods. The wholesale merchant assesses upon that his profit of say 20 per cent. The retail merchant buys the goods and assesses his profit of 25 per cent. on the duty, and 25 per cent. on the profit of 20 per cent. made by the wholesale merchant which forms an item in the cost to the retail dealer. When the goods reach the consumer, they cost him $1.50 for every dollar which the Government receives. But, not to be accused of exaggeration, I will say that the cost to the consumer is only 40 per cent. extra instead of 50 per cent.; and in that case, the consumer pays $33,197,496 for the goods from which the Government has only received duties amounting to $22,726,783. But is that all? No; there is still a more serious charge. Every dollar's worth of goods manufactured in this country costs, within a fraction, as much more than the goods could be imported for as the amount of the duty. That is what is called incidental taxation. Mr. Springer, a Congressman in the United States, who is a recognised financial authority, made a careful calculation as to the amount of incidental taxation paid by the people in that country. result of that was that he estimated that the people of the United States paid $539,000,000 more in the year the calculation was made than they would have paid for the goods if they could import them free of duty, while the amount of the Customs receipts that year were $200,000,000; in other words they were paying two and a half times the amount of the Customs taxes in the form of incidental taxation due to the higher prices of domestic goods than the same article could be imported for if free of duty. I will assume that we are not doing as badly as that-though I fear we are-but that the incidental taxation, the enhanced cost that we have to pay over that which would have to be paid if those goods were imported free is only one and a half times the amount of the Customs duties, and that gives us an incidental tax of $35,589,000, and it makes the measure of the burden of taxation on the people in consequence of the tariff which imposes a scale of duties realising $23,726,783, and including the 40 per cent. wholesale and retail dealers profits on the duty cost of goods of which I have already spoken, a total of $68,786,496, and it is probably more, or $3 that the people lose for every dollar that the Government gets. Can you conceive of a more wasteful system, or a more absurd system? Is it any wonder that the people of this country are poor, that business is depressed, when the Government adopt a policy that takes $3 out of the pockets of the consumer directly and indirectly, that it may get one dollar into its coffers? Our total exports last year were $89,189,000. It took three-quarters of this total volume of exports to pay the losses, direct or indirect, sustained by this country through this absurd policy.

Now, we come down to the question of the increase of the debt, and I wish to compare the percentage of the increase in that debt with the percentage of the increase in the population of this country, just to allow the hon, gentlemen who have charge of this matter to realise where they are going to, and how fast they are going there. We had a net debt, as I said, in 1867, of $75,728,000; last year it amounted to $237,530,000, or an increase of $161,802,000. The debt was 314 per cent. greater on the 30th June last year than it was 22 years ago. In 1867 the population was 3,371,000; supposing it was 5,000,000 last year, the increase was only 1,628,000, so that the population increased by 48 per cent. while the debt increased by 213 per cent., the increase of debt was almost five times greater than the increase of population. Is not that a nice showing for the Finance Minister to make, that the Government is increasing the debt five times faster than the country's power to pay has increased? Why, any business man whose agent would manage his affairs in that way, would turn him out, he would get rid of him as quickly as he could, and he would not stand upon the order of doing it.

The expenditure chargeable to Consolidated Fund in 1868 was $13,486,000, in 1889 it was $36,917,000, an increase in 22 years of $23,431,000; it was 274 per cent. greater in 1889 than it was in 1867. The încrease was 171 per cent., against an increase in the population of 48 per cent.,—a nice showing! What do you think of a body of men who would manage the affairs of the country in such a way as to increase the debt nearly five times faster than population increases; and increase the expenditure over four times faster than the population? I should think the Minister of Finance would take credit to himself and say that the management of affairs had been satisfactory, that the increase of the debt was quite commendable, that the increase of the expenditure was just the thing, I should imagine that he would say so.

We will next take the Customs account. Here we have another beautiful illustration of the thrifty management which the Minister of Finance congratulates himself upon. In any other country in the world such a Government as we have would have been turned out by an overwhelming majority years and years ago; they do not deserve public confidence. Any man who would manage business in such a way would be called idiotic, he would be sure to go to ruin. In 1867, the taxation, from customs, was $8,578,000; in 1888 it was $23,826,000, an increase in 21 years of $17,148,000, it was 276 per cent. greater in 1889 than it was in 1868, an increase of 176 per cent. in those 21 years against an increase in population of 48 per The increase in taxation was four times faster than the increase of population. Brilliant management! No wonder, I repeat again, that the Finance Minister congratulates himself and the country on this brilliant achievement. should imagine that his judgment was scarcely as reliable as it ought to be, and I think I am warranted in saying that I have a higher regard for him personally than I have for his financial judgment

Mr. FOSTER. That will grow.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the hon. gentleman means the expenditure no doubt it will grow; it has been growing; it has a thrifty growth. We are growing right on towards ruin, there is no question about that. No man can gainsay these deductions, they are unmistakable. There is an undue increase in the debt, an undue increase in the expenditure, and an undue increase in the taxes. Any Government or any party that would justify this recklessness is unworthy the confidence of the people of this country. What is the effect of all this when we enter upon the race of competition with the United States in seeking to obtain immigrants, when we are placing before intending immigrants what we have to offer to induce them to come here? Is it likely to secure their settling in this country when we tell them that our debt is three times greater per head than that of the United States? Is it likely to secure their confidence when we tell them that we are increasing the debt five times faster than we are increasing our population? Is it likely to secure their confidence when they know that we are increasing the expenditure four times faster than we are increasing our population? Is it likely to draw them to us when we tell them that we are increasing the taxes four times faster than the population? Why, we have not the inducements to draw them here, we cannot get them to come here. Not only do we fail to get immigrants to come here, but our own people are forsaking us, and the result is that we have fear for the future, and the consequence is a great exodus of people fleeing from the wrath to come, realising that the country is going to ruin, and they are bound to get out of it. Now, Mr. Speaker, what does the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Hesson) sav?

Mr. HESSON. The people will let you know what they think about it.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Government has taken care of my hon. friend; I do not think the agricultural depression affects his sons very much who have suggested and provided in the North West.

have snug government positions in the North-West. Now, I am coming to the consideration of the agricultural depression. We have reported from the Ways and Means Committee of the United States House of Representatives a tariff law, and its provisions are a little startling. We had hopes that the rumors that reached us were not well founded, but the result, if the Bill reported becomes law, is worse than our fears. Let us scan some of the provisions of the Bill, and I will first refer to the article of eggs. This article has been free of duty for a good many years, and an enormous trade has grown up, amounting to $2,135,000 last year. This tariff proposes to impose a duty of 5 cents a dozen on eggs, which will nearly wipe out the trade. The Minister of Customs says "Humph." If he was engaged in the hen business, I think he would have good reason to say "humph." We have a duty of $30 a head on horses—not 20 per cent., but $30 per head—a specific duty that my hon. friend is so fond of. That will be a dead shot. Then we have a specific duty of $10 per head on cattle; that is a dead shot too. There is a specific duty of 30 cents a bushel on barley. It is only worth 45 to 50 cents in Canada now, and 20 cents more duty will bring it down to 25 or 30 cents a bushel. There is 25 cents a bushel on potatoes, a duty of $4 a ton on hay. Your own Province, Mr. Speaker, is interested in that trade. The duty at present is $2, and $4 will be disastrous. There is a duty of 6 cents per pound on butter, and I cent a pound on fish, and so on through the list.

Now, I said a while ago that I was going to allude to the provocations that this country had given to the provocations that this country had given to the United States, inviting this very policy that has been adopted partly by way of retaliation, and partly for the purpose of throwing a tub to the agricultural whale of the United States, in order to pacify it. We have first as a provocation the fisheries question. I have no doubt the old treaty of 1818, that denies to a fishing vessel of the United States any of the to a fishing vessel of the United States any of the united States any of the usual courtesies which are extended to other mercantile vessels, that does not permit such fishing vessels to come into port for food of anything but wood and water, that does not permit it to supply itself with any tackling or to replace anything lost in case of distress, and the enforcement of these regulations have produced bad feelings. There is a party in the United States that takes this ground with regard to our fisheries. They say these fisheries were acquired by the joint action of Great Britain and the thirteen colonies, that the thirteen colonies had a proprietary right in those fisheries, and that contention, it is well to remember, was recognised by Great Britain up to 1818; and, further, they say that the provisions of that treaty are antiquated, and the more that common sense and courtesy and good neighborhood prevail with respect to commercial relations, the more antiquated and exasperating becomes an enforcement of those provisions. This state of things has provoked irritation and friction in the United States. That country grants to us the bonding privilege. Our railroads, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway, carry products through the United States without interference, bonded in their cars to New York or Boston or Portland, or any of the other seaports which their lines or connections reach, while we have denied to the United States the privilege of sending fish in bond through Canada. This is another ground of serious friction and trouble. Then we have created the grievance of differential canal tolls, in violation of treaty stipulations, by giving a drawback of 18 cents aton on the 20 cents a ton collected on the Welland Canal to all vessels bound for Canadian ports. Then we have refused to meet the overtures of the American people with respect to reciprocity. A resolution was passed in the House of Representatives, last year, offering us the olive branch. We might at least have exercised equal courtesy, and have passed a resolution providing that the Governor in Council might appoint commissioners to meet commissioners appointed by the United States in accordance with the offer of the House of Representatives, to enter into negotiations with respect to this sub-We would not have needed to consent to anything we did not wish. But this Government did not entertain the proposition. It was bound to maintain its dignity, and it would not deign to meet overtures from 65,000,000 of people and treat them with the same degree of courtesy with which they treated us. No, we would not have We had too many men like the Prereciprocity. sident of the Council, who thought it would be disastrous to have reciprocity, and did not want it even in natural products, and so we refused to meet those overtures; and, accordingly, the United States feel that they have received, in a certain sense, an insult from the Government of Canada. Then we had the export duty on logs, a miserable little exaction, which is worthy of a Barbary state or a South American Republic, but not worthy of an enlightened Anglo-Saxon state, a miserable little half-penny affair which produces irritation. Last winter a very large and influential delegation representing the entire lumber trade waited on the Government, a delegation kept altogether apart from politics, which demonstrated to the Government that the removal of this duty was necessary in the interests of the country. This delegation pointed out in the removal of the lumber duties by the United States; but the Government refused to surrender this income of $30,000 or $40,000, and this gives the lumber interests of the United States a lever to use against the lumber interests of this country. What is the state of the log trade? We imported from the United States from 1885 to 1889 logs to the value of $6,750,000, $4,675,000 of which went down St. John river from the State of Maine, and we exported to the United States logs to the value of $1,958,000. We, therefore, imported more than three times as many as we There was no export duty on the logs of the value of $6,750,000 coming from the United States into this country, but we must impose an export duty on our paltry exportation, to create irritation and show our utter incapacity to deal with questions of international comity. The result is, that we see the lumber duties have only been reduced 50 cents per M., and before the various deputations are through, probably the duty will be back to $2, with some provision as to the export duty that will prove disastrous to this country. In all these respects we have adopted a policy calculated to produce irritation, and we have produced irritation, and the result will be that this country will suffer disaster.

The National Policy, we were assured, when it was adopted in 1878, would result to the advantage of the agricultural interests of the country; and I wish to make a comparison between the prices of the leading agricultural products on 1st October 1878, about the time the Mackenzie Government surrendered office, and 1st October last year. The figures are as follows:

FARMERS' PRICES.

I think the farmers were deceived in regard to this policy benefiting them. We see the result in this great decline of prices, or at least we see that prices have fallen greatly despite the National Policy.

It is said that a farmer down in Western Ontario died lately, and some spirit medium professed to say what happened after his death. He had gone to market and sold his little crop of wheat for 81 cents a bushel. He had gone to his storekeeper, and finding he had only sufficient money to pay one-half his bill, he gave his note at six months for the balance. He had saved a little money for the absolute necessaries of life, and he made a few small purchases. He bought a dollar's worth of sugar, and he found that between the government and the refiner they took 50 cents of the dollar he expended. Then he wanted a felt hat for his little boy, and on it there was a duty of 25 per cent. which, with the profits of the wholesale and retailer on the duty, brought its cost to 37 per cent. more than it should be. He bought a few nails to fasten a few boards on his barn, and on them there was a duty of a cent a pound and the profit of the merchant on the duty was half a cent, making the amount one and half a cents more than they could have been purchased under free trade. He bought a razor, and that was taxed 25 cents. Then he looked at some glass goblets for his wife, but as the duty was 30 per cent. they were beyond his resources. Then as to binding twine he found when he came to settle his bill for that article that it cost 25 per cent. more We have heard something to-night about depresthan should have been charged, in consequence of sion in the United Sates, and the hon. the President Mr. CHARLTON.

the duty, and he tried in vain to figure out how the Government had benefited the farmer in that matter. He wanted a cloak for his little girl who was attending Sunday school, but he found a duty on it of $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound and 20 per cent. ad valorem, and the cloak was beyond his wealth. Next he bought some yarn for his poor old mother-in-law to knit two pairs of stockings for herself, and on that there was a duty of $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound and 20 per cent. He looked at some kid gloves as his daughter was about to be married, but he could not reach them as the duty was too high; then he bought a sheet of paper to write his will on, and he paid a tax of 35 per cent. on that. He went home, and when he came to think over matters, he got gloomy, and he made up his mind that this world, with its combines, rings and monopolies, preying upon the producer, was no world for the farmer to live in, so he took that 25 per cent. razor, and he went out to the barn and committed suicide. We have the rest of the transaction only through the spirit medium, and I do not know whether it is true or not, but it is represented that the farmer went to Hades, and his Satanic Majesty met him and took him kindly and cordially in. He put him into a chamber where there were a great many Conservative politicians and Conservative editors, who had died in their sins, but the farmer did not feel at home there. Then he moved him to a place where there were a couple of deacons and a number of election agents, who had met together in a Conservative caucus to devise means for carrying the County of Haldimand and had not been allowed to live out half their days, but he did not like that association, and he went next into a place where there were a number of doctors and lawyers, but there he did not feel at home either. Then the Devil came around and asked him what he wanted, and said to him: "What are you?" and the other replied: "I am a farmer." "Where are you from," said the Prince of Hades? "I am from Canada," he replied, and "Who did you vote for?" enquired his Satanic Majesty.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Charlton.

Mr. CHARLTON. No; he would not have been punished if he did that. "I voted for Sir John A. Macdonald and the National Policy," was what he said; and the Devil said: "Why did you do that?" "Well," said the farmer, "I did that under the impression that it was going to raise the price of produce." "Oh," said the Devil," then come along, I have a place for you;" and he took him to another large room, a thousand feet long, three hundred feet wide, and a hundred feet high, with lines stretched across it and a great number of people hung up, and the farmer said: "What does this mean?" "Well," said the Devil, "these are Canadian farmers who voted for Sir John A. Macdonald and the National Policy, under the impression that it would raise the price of grain, and as they are too green to burn I have hung them up to dry." Now, Mr. Speaker, the class of farmers who will be too green to burn after the next general election is, I believe, growing small. They are beginning to realise that all these promises were fallacious, and they are not going to take the assertions made by the friends of the National Policy as law and gospel hereafter.

of the Council told us last night, that the trouble with the world was we had not had any war lately; that we had, in fact, lived under the calamitous condition of a long period of peace, and that if we could only have a little blood-letting, the Conservative party would be, perhaps, in a better condition, and the country as well. He told us there is a plethora of production, that everything is out of joint, and that there is as much depression in the United States as there is in this country; in fact he said that there is more depression in the United States than here, and that it would not be safe to have intimate relations with that country, as we might be troubled with depression as they are, and suffer from the evils under which they labor. Well, Sir, if there is anything the matter with business in the United States, if land in Vermont, right in the centre of the protected region is only worth $5 an acre, as the hon. gentleman asserts, he neglected to say it was barren mountain pasture land, and if the further you go from the manufacturing centres, the better the price you get for land, I do not think it works very well as an argument in favor of protection. If depression exists in that great country, as he represents, it does not reflect very great credit on the policy that he recommends as a panacea for all the evils of this country. fact is, that there does, to some extent, exist depression in the United States, but depression exists to a greater extent in Canada, and that fact is sufficiently shown by the movement in the exports of this country to the United States, and to other markets. Naturally, we sell to the United States that which we can find a better market for there than elsewhere, and although matters may be depressed there, yet there are a great number of the productions of the soil and of the forests of this country that find their best market in the United The duty imposed upon these various articles reduces their price to the purchasers here, to about the extent of the duty, for the reason that the production in the United States is so much greater than the imports from this country, that a small quantity, comparatively, going in, has little effect on the prices of the great mass there. If this was the exclusive source of supply, of course the consumer would pay the duty, but as we export but little compared to the great mass of the productions of that country, the duty is deducted from the price we receive. Now, Sir, we find our best markets in the United States for a number of important productions, and during last year the following statement will show the value of a list of articles which we exported to the United States, as compared with the value of the same articles which we exported to Great Britain :-

Ţ	Exported to Inited States.	Exported to Gt. Britain.
Eggs Horses		$ 18 26,975
Poultry	918,334 110,793	303,009 1,127
Hides, &c Wool. Barley	216 918	7,070 470 3,838
Hay	405,534 822,381	84,610
Malt Potatoes Planks & boards.	192,576	245 158,443
Total	$21 141 025	$585,885

'This would show that the movement in these Atlantic coast from Florida to Greenland are in articles is nearly forty times greater to the United Nova Scotia. The consumption of bituminous coal

States than to England, for the simple reason that for all of these articles we find our best markets in that country, and if the duties were removed from these articles our market would be so much the better there. We have, therefore, a very great advantage to derive from the removal of the duties. In addition to these articles I have specified, we have exported last year fish, various kinds of lumber and other commodities amounting to sufficient to make our exports to the United States last year, $43,500,000. Upon this vast volume of exports, our direct interests lead us to desire that the duties may be removed, for if the duties were removed, that market would be better, the prices would be higher, and the prosperity of the country would be greater. Our trade with the United States is greater than with any other country: greater than with England, although we enter the English markets without any Custom house restrictions, while in the United States market these vexatious restrictions are calculated to reduce trade. Last year our trade with the United States, Great Britain and all the world was as follows :-

United States	$ 94,059,844
Great Britain	80,422,515
All world	198,862,614
Exports
All countries
United States
Great Britain	38,105,126
Imports for consumption—
All countries	109,673,447
United States	50,537,440
Great Britain	42,317,389

These figures prove conclusively that we must trade with the United States, that we will trade with the United States, that even tariff walls cannot prevent us from seeking our natural customers; that, in spite of all the restrictions placed on our trade, we export more to the United States and import more from the United States than any other country in the world, even Great Britain herself.

Now, to show what would be the effect of reciprocity on our trade, let me for one moment refer to the result of the reciprocal trade relations which obtained from 1854 to 1866. Our exports to the United States in the first year after reciprocity amounted to $10,473,000, while in the last year of reciprocity they amounted to $39,950,000, an increase of 280 per cent. In eleven years; and now, twenty-three years after, our exports to the United States have only risen to $45,500,000, an increase of only about $3,500,000 in the 23 years, against an increase of nearly $30,000,000 in 11 years under reciprocity. These figures tell their own story; there can be no doubt what the result of reciprocity of trade between these two countries would be.

I will not detain the House by showing the advantages which would result to the various lines of trade from reciprocity; I will just refer to one branch of the subject. My connection with the Mining Commission of Ontario brought forcibly under my consideration the great advantages which would result, not only to Ontario, but to all sections of the Dominion having mining resources, from free trade with the United States. For instance, the only coal fields on the Atlantic coast from Florida to Greenland are in Nova Scotia. The consumption of bituminous coal in the New England States and in the Atlantic seaboard cities of the United States amounts to from 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 tons a year; and with free trade Nova Scotia could, in all these markets, compete with the bituminous coal brought from the interior of Pennsylvania, and the paltry export trade of about 63,000 tons which was the amount exported by Nova Scotia last year, could be increased indefinitely. Would that not confer great advantages on Nova Scotia? Then the iron foundries of the New England cities and other seaboard cities in the United States would supply themselves from the unlimited iron ore beds in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Those Provinces would receive enormous advantages from the removal of the duties on iron ore and coal. Then, along the shores of Lake Huron and Lake Superior, in the Province of Ontario, we have the finest structural material in the world. Marble, granite and freestone quarries are situated along the lake shores, where vessels of any draft that can pass through our canals could load. The United States last year used $25,000,-000 worth of structural material, and the great cities on the lakes used a large amount of this structural material. From these quarries Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Cleveland and Buffalo could be reached with the utmost ease. The stone could also be sent down the Erie Canal to New York, Brooklyn and Philadelphia, with only one transfer from lake vessels to canal boats. A trade of millions of dollars a year in building stone would spring up in place of the paltry trade of $43,338 last year, only $10,812 of which was from Ontario. Then, if the duty, amounting to $5 a ton on the copper contained in copper ore were removed, I do not say that smelting works would be erected in Canada, but we should ship thousands of tons of copper ore every year to the smelting works of the United State. A similar trade would spring up in iron ore. The trade of the Lake Superior region in iron ore amounted last year to 7,000,000 tons—long tons, as they are called, of 2,240 lbs., and we have only shipped 60,259 tons from the whole Dominion, 24,329 tons only of which was from Ontario. We have as good iron ore on our side of the great lakes as the United States have on theirs, and there is no reason why we should not participate largely in this immense trade; it is only protection that shuts us out. Western Ontario, projecting like a wedge into the United States, brings the cities of New York, Buffalo, Albany, and many other great centres of population in the Northern States to our doors. We possess unlimited advantages for supplying them with everything we produce, and we are only prevented from enjoying these advantages by the tariff wall which exists between the two countries. Yet the hon, member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) considers it of very little consequence for us to adopt the policy which ran up our trade with the United States from $10,000,000 to $40,000,000 in the eleven years from 1854 to 1866. It is perfect folly that these hon. gentlemen talk. we are, with an increase of 18 per cent. in our population in the last decade against an increase of 30 per cent. in the population of the United States, although we received 60 per cent. more immigration proportionately than they received. We have lost of the population of this country over 3,000,000 souls directly and indirectly Mr. CHARLTON.

in consequence of being debarred from our natural market by hostile tariffs; and the Government are provoking an aggravation of the evil themselves by moving in the very direction that will call down on their heads the disaster threatened by the proposed tariff legislation at Washington. I tell you, Sir, these are matters for grave consideration. The faults and follies of this Government, their mistaken policy, their recklessness in management, their refusal to seek that which is best for this country, and which this country must have, will result in their defeat, I believe, and I hope, when they next go to the country.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). Mr. Speaker, I must compliment the hon. member for North Norfolk on the admirable, eloquent, and I may say magnificent speech he has just made. I have thought to-night, as I have thought for years, that it is a great pity that that hon gentleman should not confine his splendid talents to the interests of the country in which he lives. If those talents were devoted to these interests, I have no doubt that they would be productive of very great good to the country; but I am sorry to see them on all occasions devoted to an investigation and laudation of the country lying to the south of us. I do not know that I should have spoken on this occasion, had it not been that the community of which I am a member, the farming community, has been slandered by hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House. It has been depicted as being in a state of distress and want, and even semi-starvation. I would like to ask what farmer in this country could go to any monetary institution and get credit upon the certificate of his character and the condition of his affairs given by the hon. member for South Oxford. I will just follow on hastily through some of the remarks made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and intend to give the House something they have not heard in all probability in this debate before. That hon, gentleman says that Canada has been captious and impudent towards the people of the United States. If the evidence we have had during the last few months bears that out, if the events which have occurred lately bear that out, I do not know what impudence is. Have we not had the newspaper men of this country going to Washington to lay plans and plots for the purpose of betraying this country, and time will show that men in high places, in political circles here, have devoted their labors within the past few weeks to that object. If that is dignified conduct, I do not know what is. In my opinion that portion of the conduct of the public men of this country is impudent, and to that extent I agree with the hon. member for North Norfolk. The hon. gentleman says he has always imagined that the Liberal party has a policy. I quite agree that he has imagined so, but that policy has always existed in the imagination of these hon. gentlemen, for they have never yet given any tangible evidence of it to the country. The only plank in their platform is reduced taxation, and yet they are spending the whole of their talents in endeavoring to bring us under a system of direct and indirect taxation with the neighboring Republic, which, by their own showing, is from 40 per cent. to 50 per cent. more than it is here. He said that no Canadian he had ever met wanted to return from the United States to Canada. I would like him to visit Dakota and give us some of the information he would get from that state. A gentleman in my town, Mr. Bamfield, and some others, visited Dakota last fall on a shooting expedition, and they said they met dozens of farmers there who would gladly return to Canada if they could find the means. But the difficulty with Canadians who have visited the far west of the United States is that they are in such a state of destitution and poverty that they are unable to get back to the land which gave them birth, and plenty while they were here. He says that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has very generously offered the Government to support a vote of some thousands of dollars in order to prove the accusation he brought against the farmers of this country, that the farms were mortgaged to the extent of from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000. What a generous offer! Why, if he were a true, loyal and patriotic Canadian he would not utter words from his seat that he did not know to be true; he would not come here to slander the farmers of this country and place them in such a position that they would be unable to go to any monetary insti-tution and get credit. He said the farms were mortgaged to the extent of $300,000,000 and that he got this information from the registry offices. Now, there is not an hon. gentleman in this House who knows better than the hon. member for South Oxford that that statement must necessarily be false, because if you go to any registry office and investigate, you will find mortgages registered there running five, six, seven and eight years, and that the condition of nearly every mortgage is that so much must be paid off in one, two, or more years, and there is no evidence in the registry offices that these payments have been made, for they are simply endorsed on the backs of the mortgages and are known only to the mortgagor and the mortgagee. It will be remembered that much of the money loaned in this country years ago was lent by monetary institutions in Toronto and elsewhere, upon the condition that a certain amount of the principal, together with the interest, should be paid off every year. These mortgages have continued for years. I have known them to be drawn fifteen years ago, to run twenty years, and I know that fifteen payments have been made on them and only five remain to be made. Yet the hon. gentleman comes here and quotes a partially paid mortgage as a mortgage existing and fully due. It requires no knowledge, beyond that which a school boy of fifteen years ought to possess, to understand this, and the hon gentleman must have known that he was giving information which was totally and absolutely unreliable. That is a sample of the way in which hon. gentlemen opposite fling into our teeth a lot of figures, and say, if they are not correct, disprove them. But that is no way to argue. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has argued in the same way as he has to-night, session after session. Ever since I have had the honor of a seat here, these arguments have been made and these figures quoted and disproved, and if they were disproved to-night he would still quote them again to-morrow night. The hon. gentleman says there is a charge of $10 per acre mortgage upon the improved lands by reason of our public debt. What a statement that is to make to this House and the country, and the world at large. It will do no harm in this country, because no man here believes it; it will do injury where the hon. gentleman's figures are not known so well as they are here. He said we started at Confederation at $65,000,000,. and had now reached $236,000,000 of public debt. He had not the candor to state to this House that a large share of that increase is composed of the debts of the Provinces which were assumed by the Dominion, and in that case the debt of this country, on the whole, so far as the people are concerned, was not increased; but the condition of things was bettered and the debt actually decreased, for this reason, that the Provinces were paying a larger rate of interest while the Dominion is paying a smaller rate on these debts. If the hon, gentleman were candid, fair and sincere, if he were talking from a Canadian standpoint, he would not have made use of these figures nor uttered these sentiments. The hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Charlton) says, that our public debt has been increased from $65,000,000 at Confederation to $236,000,000 now by extravagance. Does the hon. gentleman not know that we have a valuable asset for every dollar of our public debt? Does he not know that the building of the Intercolonial Railway was a condition of Confederation, without which we could not have had Confederation, that this accounts for about $40,000,000 of our public debt? Does he not know that the Dominion Government has assumed $30,743,392 of the debts of the Provinces since Confederation? Does he not know that we have largely subsidized railways in the various Provinces to open up unoccupied lands to give our people ready access to the markets of the world? Does he not know that the Dominion has spent in opening up our water-ways, canals, $33,841,932 since Confederation? Does he not know that the Dominion has spent on the Canadian Pacific Railway to open up our North-West to settlement and gain access to the great and wealthy Province of British Columbia since Confederation $61,899,600? Does he not know that we spent on Dominion lands and other public works about $5,000,000? Does he not know that we have spent on our North-West Territories in surveys, etc., $3,912,000, and including other small items, a gross sum of $178,102,413, since Confederation? Mr. Speaker, if he does know all tais, then, in the face of the statements he has made to-night, his position in this House and before this country is not an enviable one. It is the position of wilfully misstating and misquoting the public records of the country for the purpose of gaining a political advantage. If he does not know, he is grossly negligent of his duties as a public man and as a member of this House. He talked about the agricultural depression in England. Let me tell him that the agricultural depression in England away back in 1812 At that time it was imposwas very great. sible in England almost to raise a bushel of wheat. The land had become well nigh exhausted, it had become exhausted of all the essentials for the raising of wheat, when Sir Humphrey Davies, the great scientist, coped with that difficulty, and in a very few years, by instructions to the farmers, showed them how they could increase the fertility of their land from a state in which it could raise no grain to a state in which it could, and that a severe agricultural depression exists in free trade England, at the present time. To-day the agricultural depression in Canada is due to the diminished prices in Liverpool very largely. When the hon. gentleman quoted to night the prices in Canada during the Mackenzie régime and the prices now, he forgot to tell you, Sir, that the market which controls the price of agricultural products here and in other countries is lower by one-half than it was during that period, and this necessarily depresses prices in Canada, and has nothing at all to do with the Government's policy. He went on to state what the Mackenzie Administration did. They completed the Intercolonial Railway; they also commenced that amphibious scheme of transit to the North-West. I think if there is one subject more than another hon gentlemen opposite should not refer to, it is that unfortunate Fort Frances lock business. They spent hundreds of thousands of dollars of the people's money, and all they have is a big tomb in which ultimately you might place all the gentlemen who had connection with it. That Fort Frances locks, and the whole of that scheme, was one grand scheme of wrongs and misdoings on the part of that Government. The deficits from 1874 to 1878 are said to be specially due to the depression which existed in Canada. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) said the other night that there never had been as great depression during the past 35 years as there is now. The depression in this country now is attended by a surplus, but the depression during the time of the Mackenzie administration was attended by a deficit, and yet the hon, gentleman said that the depression now is greater than it was then. The hon, gentleman has apparently changed his mind in regard to reciprocity. Last Session he was not in favor of reciprocity, but now he is. In his speech last Session, reported in Hansard, he was very particular in setting forth that reciprocity was not the great boon it was cracked up to be, and that the Mackenzie Government had practised a system of retaliation against the people of the United States. I will read you a little of his speech on that occasion:

"It happens that this matter of wrecking has been in the past in favor of Canada. This advantage was thrust upon us by the action of the American Government in 1874, by a regulation which was issued by their Treasury Department, that Canadian vessels were prohibited from taking hold of wrecks upon the American coast; and the enforcement of that regulation has been of the most stringent character. The Mackensie Government followed that up by adopting the same regulation as to American tugs taking hold of wrecks on our coasts. A report by Under Secretary Fox, in 1874, shows that the condition of things which has since existed, existed by reason of the American Government, and that Government cannot accuse the Canadian Government of acting in any spirit of unfriendliness or in any spirit but that of the broadest and most liberal character. The Canadian Government were not responsible for that order. They were driven into the position by the action of the American Government itself. That being the case, I hold that, when the American Government approaches us with a proposal to ment itself. That being the case, I hold that, when the American Government approaches us with a proposal to reinstate them in the position they occupied before they issued the order, we are warranted in considering whether, under the circumstances, we shall surrender the advantage without some suid or one. tage we possess without some quid pro quo, without some consideration beyond what they propose, which is really no consideration at all. There has been a large amount of investment of capital in wrecking companies in this

Further on he says:

"There is another wreeking company at Windsor, and there is another about to be formed at Windsor: and these have been induced to make their investments under the regulations of the Canadian Government. It is these regulations which have called these firms into existence, and have led to the investment of this money, and to Mr. FERGUSON (Welland).

sacrifice those interests without good reason is something the Government should hesitate to do. I think it is only reasonable that some slight concession should be offered to the American Government, and I propose it in the belief that it will be accepted. I do not offer these amendments on the ground of factious opposition to this Bill or in order to prevent its passage."

Again, further he says :

"It is said, why not pass the Bill, and then ask the Americans to make this arrangement with you about reciprocity in towing? Why not give away every consideration that you possess, for the purpose of securing a concession, and, after giving away all the considerations, then go and ask for compensation? That is not a business way of doing business. I do not know that I need to engage further in this discussion. I say distinctly and positively that the object of this amendment that I am about to move is not to kill this Bill. I am prepared to accept reciprocity in the matter with a slight modification that will give reciprocity to wing to tugs, not reciproaccept reciprocity in the matter with a slight modification that will give reciprocity in towing to tugs, not reciprocity in the transportation of grain vessels, but simply a mutual reciprocity in towing vessels and rafts by the tugs of either country. This proposition would be mutually advantageous, it would be reasonable, and I am morally certain that it would be accepted."

So the hon, gentleman was not in favor of unrestricted reciprocity, so far as that question was concerned. Now, while he says that the money invested in wrecking in this country was so invested under Government regulations and that, therefore, the people who invested it should be protected, and their investments should not be sacrificed, he turns round and says that the hundreds of millions of dollars which have been invested in the manufacturing industries of this country may be sacrificed at any time without any consideration on the part of the Government or the Parliament of this country. The hon, gentleman also says that the farming population of the United States is in favor of free trade. The subject of free trade has not been discussed in the United States at all except by a few individuals. During the last presidential election there I heard Mr. Mills, the author of the Mills' Bill, in Buffalo, and he was very careful to state that they must not imagine that the party he represented were going in the direction of free trade; all they wanted was a modification of the tariff. He took as an example the article of woollen goods, and said that the allround duty was 46 per cent., that what they wanted to do was to reduce it to 36 per cent., and he would not go lower than that, because it was necessary that the manufacturers should have that amount of duty imposed in order to protect them against foreign competition. It was not a question of free trade, but it was simply a question of modifying what I think myself is a very high protective tariff. That question of modification of the tariff was the only question in regard to this matter at the last election in the United States. Strange to say, the Democratic party having adopted the scheme of modifying the tariff, the farming States supported the Republican party. If you take Dakota and the other States which have been since admitted into the Union, I think you will find they are all Republican, and they are specially agricultural States. The policy of the Republican party is high protection, and they are supported by the farmers, as the protective party of this country have been and will be supported by the farmers. I will not go into the subject of the per capita tax which I dealt with two years ago. The hon, gentleman did not enter into the question of the debts or taxation of the different States on the other side. I need not go into that matter again, but I may refer to speeches made in this House for many years past on that subject for a full and complete answer. He was not fair in comparing the debt of Canada with the debt of the United States, and the expense of Canada with that of the United States, because we all know that the methods of the two Governments are altogether The Dominion Government grant subsidies to railways, and build the canals of the country, and these things are done on the other side by the State Governments. We also pay large subsidies (four millions per year) to the Provinces, which has no corresponding payment by the Government at Washington. Nearly $40,000,000 have been expended on the Welland Canal by Canada, while the Erie Canal on the other side was built by the money of the State of New York, and the United States Government has never granted a dollar for that purpose.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Do not our Provinces spend money on railways as well?

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). It would be quite fair for you to compare the provincial expenditure with the expenditure of the different States, but it is not fair to compare the expenditure of this Government with that of the United States. last portion of the hon. gentleman's speech to which I will refer is the little excursion by which he took us into that unmentionable place, the lower regions, and I can only congratulate the House on having an hon. member here, an ambassador, who is able to give us exact information as to what is going on there. Now, I will draw the attention of the House to one or two tables of figures which I have here for the purpose of showing that if the farmers of Canada are in a bad condition, which I deny, the farmers to the south of us are in an infinitely worse condition. The hon member for South Oxford talked about the two or three hundred million dollars of mortgages upon farms in the Province of Ontario. I have here some carefully prepared labor statistics for the State of Illinois, issued in 1888, not statistics got up by registrars or any-body else for a special purpose. I will be able to show you the condition of the farmers who live in the State of Illinois, in the very midst of which is that great market, Chicago, that the hon. member for South Oxford in his speech last Session said we should have for our farmers. I find that the number of mortgages in 1887 was 235,537; principal, $381,322,000; unpaid interest, $12,702,000, making a total of $394,000,000. Then we have to add to this the chattel mortgages, and if there is one thing more than another which shows the poverty of the people of any country, it is the number of chattel mortgages. When a man gives a chattel mortgage on his household furniture, his cooking stove, his horse, with which he has to earn his daily bread for his family, it shows destitution in its most marked aspect. In 1887 the chattel mortgages were 74,740, covering a sum of $20,730,000; interest unpaid, $1,623,000, making a total of $22,354,187. The total liabilities of the State of Illinois were no less in 1887 than $416,378,063, or a sum almost double the total debt of the Dominion Now, we will take the mortgaged indebtedness at three different periods, to show how it has increased. In 1870 it was $304,433,760; in 1880, during the time when the hon, gentleman stated that universal agricultural depression exist- England the price of land to-day is not twenty-ed throughout the world, the mortgaged indebtedness had decreased to $196,650,000; but from 1880 to 1887 it had increased to $402,033,118, over 200 millions in the short space of seven years, and interest is not calculated on that sum. take the chattel mortgages at those three different In 1870 the chattel mortgages amounted to $13,762,541; in 1880, $11,808,167; in 1887, $20,730,000, with interest added to over $22,000,000. or almost twice as much. Now, you will find that from 1870 to 1880 the chattel mortgage indebtedness in the State of Illinois decreased, while between 1880 and 1887 it almost doubled. In 1870 there were 145,468 land mortgages, and 30,455 on chattels, representing a sum of $304,433,000. In 1880, there were 137,666 land mortgages and 43,124 chattel mortgages, representing $196,656,-000. In 1887 land mortgages jumped to the enormous number of 2,335,527, and the chattels to 74,740, representing a total sum, not including interest unpaid, of $402,053,000. This is the state of affairs existing where they have that great market which the hon. gentleman wants to procure for our Canadian farmers. Now, I will give you some startling facts in regard to these mortgages. There can be no error in regard to these statistics, as there might be an error in the statistics presented by the hon. member for South Oxford. In one year, 1887, there were executed and placed upon the mortgage records of 102 counties mortgages to the number of 125,923, given to secure a gross sum of $117,152,857, all in one year. This is a marvellous showing of poverty and destitution of the farmers, a country to secure the market of which our farmers are invited to sacrifice everything they possess. You will find these figures in the Report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of They are carefully Illinois, published in 1887. made up by a statistician who is known to be one of the most eminent on the continent of America. Now, let us see the condition of the farmer in the State of Dakota. I have here two or three extracts, if the House will allow me to read them. First, there is a letter from a missionary in the State of Dakota, Father Claude, who, writing back to his friends, says:

"Well, my dear friends, I am back to Dakota. I did not fare well since I came here and have no hope of a change in the situation for months to come. The water is very bad and unfit for man or beast to drink. I was taken with typhoid fever a few days after my arrival and on All Saints' Day I thought my days were numbered. But with God's help I rallied and am now happily out of danger and gaining strength daily. The country around here is poverty-stricken and the inhabitants also. The little frame church is mortgaged for $400, and other debts to the amount of $200 present a financial aspect that is discouraging, when you consider the resources of the locality.

discouraging, when you consider the resources of the locality.

"My mission includes all of Sanborn and Zerubel Counties, part of Lake County, and as there is no priest in Buffalo County, I have to go there, too. The worst of all is that the people are poverty-stricken on account of the total failure of the crops. Many farmers have now to depend on charity to keep them from starvation."

This is an extract from the letter of a reverend gentleman in Dakota, and this is the grand country to which we are pointed for relief from what they call the abject distress which has existed in this country for some years.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is it a free trade country? Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). I might tell the hon, gentleman that in the free trade country of five per cent. what it was fifteen or twenty years ago. The price of farm land all over the world has decreased from causes very well known to those who seek to ascertain the true causes, but for causes unknown to those who want to bend the public mind in the direction that best suits their political purposes. I desire now to read an extract from the "Internal Commerce of the United States," published in 1887, respecting the condition of things on the Mississippi River. The extract will be found at page 1567 of the report of the Commission, and is as follows:—

"It has been no unusual thing to hear of farmers in the west burning or otherwise destroying their grain because it was unprofitable to ship it abroad." This is due to what?

Mr. LANDERKIN. To protection.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). It is due to the enormous freight rates charged by railway corporations, in which all kinds of trickery are resorted to in their management. I was in California last summer, and I visited the ranche of one of the directors of the Union Pacific Railway. I found while I was there that a commission had been appointed by the Washington Government to enquire into the Central Pacific affairs, to ascertain whether the company was in a position to repay a few millions to the Government which had been loaned to the corporation. I afterwards saw the report of the commission, and it appeared that the company declared they were not in a position to repay any sum, while at the same time four of the directors boasted of being worth one hundred millions each. That is the way the railways are managed in the west, and that is the reason why the farmers have to burn their corn. as to the question of the decline in the farm population. I desire to refer to this subject, and to show that it is not peculiar to Canada; the object of hon. members on this side of the House is to prevent the farmers being slandered, not by all the hon. members opposite, but by some of those hon. gentlemen. I want to demonstrate that in the United States the farm population is decreasing, and that this is true of the whole world. find the following figures as regards the United States:

"In 1790 one-thirtieth of the population of the United States lived in cities of 8,000 inhabitants and over; 1800, one twenty-fifth in cities of 8,000 and over; 1810 and 1820, one-twentieth in cities of 8,000 and over; 1830, one-sixteenth in cities of 8,000 and over; 1840, one-twelfth in cities of 8,000 and over; 1850, one-eighth in cities of 8,000 and over; 1860, one-eighth in cities of 8,000 and over; 1870, one-eighth in cities of 8,000 and over; 1870, one-eighth in cities of 8,000 and over; 1880, twenty-two and a-half percent., ornearly one-quarter, in cities of 8,000 and over."

I take this information from what I consider good authority, a work compiled by Rev. Josiah Strong, D.D., general secretary of the Evangelical Alliance of the State of New York. My hon. friend to my righ: will accept this authority, and I believe the statement is a correct one. My hon. friend, when the Budget was brought down and the tariff resolutions were submitted, did not altogether like the increased duty on flour, but after hearing the speech of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), he said: I willingly grant it; I will endorse the resolution; you poor, unfortunate, poverty-stricken people in Ontario deserve something at our hands, and we are willing to give it. I only wish the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Mr. FEEGUSON (Welland).

Cartwright) would give us a better character. From 1830 to 1880 the population of the United States increased a little less than fourfold. The urban or city population increased thirteenfold. During the half century preceding 1880 the population in the cities increased more than four times as rapidly as that of the villages and country. This is due, I suppose, to the civilisation of the nineteenth century. I desire now to compare the prices of lands in my county and in Eric County, in the State of New York, immediately opposite. I may tell this House that farms in my county—Welland—are of more value and will realise more money than the farms in Erie County, New York, in which county the city of Buffalo is situated, when you get outside of the farm property which has a prospective city value. I have taken the trouble to investigate this matter; I know something of the value of the land in my county, and land in my county is not mortgaged to any extent whatever, while the land in Eric County, New York, is very heavily mortgaged. I will submit to the House some figures furnished to me by a real He writes : estate agent in Buffalo.

"I offer a farm of 200 acres in the township of Collins, about 170 acres cleared, with fair farm buildings on it, for $7,500. This is about thirty miles from Buffalo and six from the town of Springville, which is in Eric County. This is a good dairy farm."

Mr. CHARLTON. May I ask the hon. gentleman if this is a mountain farm? I have been in the neighborhood, and I may say that Springville is at the foot hills of the Alleghanies, and it is a pretty poor section.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). I will give the hongentleman some other farms. I can mention splendid farms that I have been over and inspected.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Will you settle there?

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). If I held the opinion the hon. gentleman holds of this country I would go there quickly, and not remain and expend my force and intelligence in trying to deprave the public mind against Canada, and turn it against the country of my birth and the country that I ought to love.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon, gentleman says I have depraved this country. I should like him to point to one line in which I have done so. If he can point to one line I will take it back. Never in one speech have I done it, and the hon, gentleman who says so is not responsible for what he says.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). If the word deprave is offensive, I will let the hon. gentleman apply his own term, for my meaning is that he is distorting the public mind.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Apply it to your political condition and it is quite apparent.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). This letter also states that he offers a dairy farm in the township of Wales, Erie County, about 20 miles from Buffalo, of 300 acres, with a good residence, 3 tenement houses, fine barns and good orchard, well watered with running stream and wells, and good fences, for about $12,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. In what township is that, please?

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). The township of Wales.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is a lot of very miser-When the hon. gentleman comable land there. pares that with Welland County he is comparing stone with gold.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). I am glad to find that the hon. gentleman thinks that there is something bad in the United States and something good It is the first time, since I have had the honor of having a seat in this House, that the hon gentleman was ever willing to admit that there was anything wrong in the United States, for he has always accused the whole wrong of this continent on the people of Canada. This farm which I have referred to, and which is to be sold for $40 an acre, is about four miles from the town of Aurora, which has a population of about 2,000, and is a beautiful town, situated in a beautiful country, as I happen to know myself, and in a country where the great stock farms the State of New York are situated. I have visited some of these farms myself, not with a view of living there, but I know it to be a fact that farms in Erie County, in the State of New York, can be bought at a less price per acre than they can be purchased in the County of Welland. It has been stated by hon. gentlemen opposite that the manufacturers are of no use to this country, but I maintain that it is just as important for farmers to have a market, as it for them to raise grain. Unless there is some market home market, in which to enable farmers to sell their produce, there is very little use in farmers raising it. The principle is well recognised all the world over, that the nearer you can bring consumer and producer together, the better it is for both. It is a well known fact that if produce has to be exported, or imported from long distances in order to feed the people of the country, there is a great loss to both, and the closer you bring consumer and producer together the more profitable for both. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the House longer. I can only say that I am glad to have an opportunity to enter my protest against the insinuations made by hon. gentlemen opposite, that the farmers of this country are mortgaged beyond all chance of redemption. I do not want this statement to go to the world unchallenged. I do not believe that it is fair or just to the country for any hon. gentleman, on his responsibility as a member of this House, to advertise to the world that the farmers of this country are so mortgaged that unless they get reciprocity with the United States it is impossible for them ever to recuperate. Whoever heard before of people trying to make a bargain—as hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be trying to make a bargain with the United States—decrying what they have to sell. It is a deplorable and an unfortunate thing that we should have such speeches made on the floor of this House, as have been made by members of the Opposition during this debate. Canada is bound to grow, Canada is bound to be a great country; the people of Canada are as highly educated and as wealthy per capita as in any other country under the sun. Travel where you will, from Halifax to Vancouver, you find a well dressed and well educated people, possessing fine schools, fine residences, fine roads, fine carriages, fine everything, and in no country can you find a greater or better people than in this Dominion. We have spent the last twenty-three umbia, but passing over and through the mountain years in joining together the dissevered Provinces of this great Dominion, in harmonising the different religions, the different races, and the different people of which this country is composed. I say, Sir, we have accomplished that successfully, we have accomplished it brilliantly, and we have today a country that we may be proud of, as we ought to be proud of, and that we will be proud of, if we are only true to Canada. But, Sir, if we are untrue to Canada, she must cease to be great, and she must cease to continue to prosper as she is now prospering. It was stated to-night, that it would be better if the Canadian Pacific Railway had been built in sections, and I am sorry to hear the hon. gentleman say that, because I am sure he does not believe it. There is not a man who has travelled across that railway, whether he is Canadian, American, English, German or Scotch, who does not say it is a credit to the country, and that it passes through the finest territory of any transcontinental railway on this continent. I had the satisfaction of travelling over that great national railway last summer, and everywhere I found a fertile and a productive soil, and evidences of prosperity. I returned by the Central Pacific Railway, and in Northern California, Nevada, Utah and Colorada, I rode for days and days through alkaline sand and dust, without a sign of vegetation putting its head above the ground. In the great Humbolt Valley, in Nevada, I travelled from early morning until the following morning, and so long as daylight served me I did not see a living thing, either vegetable or animal, except in the immediate neighborhood of railway stations. Travelling through Colorado, I found that unless they could bring water from the mountains and pour it upon the land it would produce nothing at all. It is the same in Nevada. There must be artificial irrigation there, and without it they can raise nothing. But, in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, without any artificial irrigation at all, I travelled through the most magnificent wheat-fields in the world. We have a country in this Dominion that is incomparably better in point of agricultural possibilities than any portion of the Northern States which I have yet seen. Any one who takes the trouble to look at the physical geography of this country will find that it must be a richer and a better country than that to the south. The physical geography shows that the fertile alluvial soil has been pouring into that valley since time began. Altitude has as much and more to do with climate than latitude, and the diminished altitude of Manitoba makes it a warmer and a better country than that to the south. They have not the deep snow falls or the great storms and cyclones that prevail farther south; they live peacably, calmly up there, and they possess a soil which is not surpassed anywhere in the world. Now, it has been asked why we have a better climate in British Columbia than they have in California? I believe I can state the reason, which is true both scientifically and by observation. The Japan current, carrying heat and moisture, strikes British Columbia at Vancouver, and the atmosphere overlying this current being laden with heat and vapor rushes into the mountains, where the vapor is condensed and falls in the form of rain and the latent heat which held it in the form of vapor set free, warming not only British Colpasses, bathes and warms the whole district east of the mountains for hundreds of miles. The warm Japan current meets the cold Arctic current flowing southward along the coast off British Columbia. The Japan current being warmer and lighter passes over the cold current from the north and prevents it from chilling the climate of British Columbia. The cold current emerges from beneath the Japan current at the mouth of the Columbia River and flows southward along the coast of California as far south as San Francisco, chilling the atmosphere and giving rise to the cold winds for which Northern California is so noted. So that, examine this question as you will, we have in Canada one of the finest countries under the sun, and our future greatness and the prosperity of our people are assured if the sons and daughters, and the men and women of Canada are only true to their country.

Mr. McMULLEN. I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. CHARLTON. Allow me to suggest that, as the reporters have had a very hard time during the last two days, out of mercy to them we ought to stop now.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. LAURIER. I hope hon gentlemen opposite will agree to the adjournment. We cannot get through the debate this evening, as there are several hon members who yet want to speak. The House has had very heavy sessions during the last three days, and hon gentlemen will accomplish nothing by forcing the debate at this time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is only halfpast eleven, and the hon. gentleman himself the other day suggested two o'clock in the morning as a proper hour at which to adjourn. Evidently this debate will not finish this evening, but if we want to end the Session before the close of May we must do more work than we are doing.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman knows that when the House is in Committee of Supply it sits longer than usual, and then 2 o'clock is not an unreasonable hour; but it is not an ordinary hour for adjourning on such a day as this. We have shown ourselves disposed to meet the views of the hon. gentleman, and I think he should try to meet our views to some extent; and as my hon. friend is not prepared to speak this evening, I hope the hon. gentleman will agree to adjourn.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is no doubt that we have sat late yesterday and the night before, but we expected to sit much later than this this evening. If hon, gentlemen are so tired that they do not think we should continue now, it should be understood that on future evenings we must sit later than this.

Mr. LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the ajournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 31st March, 1890.

CLAIMS OF PRINCE ALBERT SETTLERS.

Mr. MACDOWALL asked, Whether the claims against the Government of Hillyard Mitchell, of Batoche; Louis Goulet, of Battleford; Widow Laviolette and Charles Thomas, of Batoche; William Lyttle and John McNevins, of Prince Albert, have been considered? If so, is there to be a sum placed in the Estimates to cover these claims?

Mr. DEWDNEY. These claims have been considered. The claim of Mr. Hillyard Mitchell was for compensation for advances made to freighters for carrying flour from Fort Qu'Appelle to Duck Lake, in the spring of 1885. After these advances were made, and before the freighters had reached their destination, the Rebellion broke out, and the flour was never delivered. Mr. Mitchell's account was sent in to me when I was Commissioner of Indian Affairs at Regina, and was forwarded by me to the Department of Indian Affairs, on the 14th July, 1885, with a recommendation that it be paid. The whole of the facts and papers were submitted to the Department of Justice, and the Deputy Minister, Mr. Burbidge, now Judge of the Exchequer Court, twice reported that Mr. Mitchell had no legal claim. The case was then presented to the Rebellion Losses Commission, and was rejected by them as not being within the scope of their authority. The claim of Louis Goulet is for loss of crop, as is also that of John McNevins. Goulet's claim was not submitted to the Commission, but if it had been submitted, it would, as were all others of the same kind, have been disallowed as an indirect loss. McNevins' claim was submitted to the Commission, and was disallowed for the cause mentioned. The claim of the Widow Laviolette was not submitted to the Commission, and all that was ever laid before the Department was a statement of the articles lost. It was not accompanied by any evidence as to the circum-It was not stances under which the loss was sustained or any evidence as to the validity of the claim, although such evidence had been asked for by the late Minister of the Interior. The claim of Charles Thomas is based upon the allegation that his horses were taken by Col. Scott, commanding the 92nd Battalion, for the purposes of the military force. It is quite clear, therefore, that it does not come within the scope of the Commission, nor has it any connection with the business of the Department of the Interior. William Lyttle claims $770 for Rebellion losses. His claim was considered by the Commission, and upon the evidence produced $163 was allowed and paid. In view of this statement of facts, the Government would not be justified in placing a sum in the Estimates to cover these claims.

MAIL SERVICE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. GORDON asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to comply with the request made by the City Council of Nanaimo and by the City Council and Board of Trade of Vancouver, for a direct daily mail service between those cities? If so, when will the service commence? If not, what are the intentions of the Government and the Department with reference to the said applications?

Mr. HAGGART. In December last, the Post Office Inspector was instructed to give to the contractor for the New Westminster, Nanaimo and Comox service, six months' notice of the termination of his contract, and to arrange for a tri-weekly service between Nanaimo and Vancouver, such tri-weekly service to commence on the termination of the present contract (30th June, 1890).

BELLE CREEK HARBOR.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) asked, Were there a survey and report made upon Belle Creek Harbor and Breakwater, last summer? If so, by whom was it made; and will the Minister lay copies before the House?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was no survey in 1889. There was one in 1888. The report states, that to obtain eight feet of water would require an expenditure of $7,500.

SAVINGS BANK AT PETITE CASCAPEDIA.

Mr. TURCOT asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to establish a savings bank at the post office of Petite Cascapedia (Joseph Cyr, postmaster), in the County of Bonaventure?

Mr. HAGGART. No application has reached the Department asking for the establishment of a savings bank at the post office of Petite Cascapedia. The question has not, therefore, been considered.

BRIDGE ON GREAT CASCAPEDIA RIVER.

Mr. TURCOT (Translation) asked, Whether the Government have received a petition signed by a large number of the inhabitants of New Richmond, and of the adjoining parishes, asking for aid towards the construction of a bridge on Great Cascapedia River; and if so, is it their intention to grant the said aid?

Sir HECTOR I.ANGEVIN. (Translation.) In answer to the hon. member, I may say that in September, 1888, a petition was received. No action was taken on it.

APPOINTMENT OF A. D. C.

Mr. LISTER asked, Whether an A.D.C. has been appointed to the General Officer commanding the Militia? and if so, his name; and whether a graduate of the Royal Military College or an officer of the Canadian Militia has been appointed? If no such appointment has been made, are Royal Military College cadets and officers of the Militia eligible to fill such position?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. An A.D.C. being an appointment on the personal staff, and being necessarily brought into close social contact with the General, his selection has always, in every military service, been left to the General himself. The A.D.C. of the General Officer Commanding here has always been selected from the Imperial army, as he is required to have a fair knowledge of his profession, and of the interior economy of a regiment of the regular army. Major General Middleton, on his appointment—having previously made his acquaintance—selected Lieutenant Wise, of the Cameronians, who had been a graduate of the Royal Military College, Kingston, and he informs me that having been so fortunate in his choice, he would have taken another graduate from the Imperial army had he known any of them personally. Failing this, he has selected as a suitable officer Lieutenant Streatfeild, of the Gordon Highlanders.

MILITIA—DEPARTMENTAL SECRETARY.

Mr. LISTER asked, Whether a departmental secretary has been appointed to the Department of Militia and Defence? If so, the name of the person so appointed, and was such promotion given to the senior of the class; that is to say, was the person appointed the senior second class clerk in the Department?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Alphonse Benoit has been appointed secretary to the Department of Militia, from the 1st July, 1889. He was not the senior second class clerk of the Department.

LONELY ISLAND LIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. LAURIER asked, Until what date in the fall is the light at Lonely Island lighthouse, Georgian Bay, ordered to be lighted, and at what dates in the years 1886, 1887, 1888 and 1889 did it cease to be lighted?

Mr. COLBY. The light at Lonely Island, in common with other lights on the lakes, is ordered to be lighted until the close of navigation. The light was closed on the 18th December, 1884; on the 11th December, 1885; on the 6th December, 1886; and on the 1st December, 1889. The period of closing in 1887 and 1888 cannot be given at present, as the returns have been mislaid in the recent removal of the Department to new quarters. Enquiry has, however, been made of the light-keeper in the matter.

DUTY ON MANUFACTURING MACHINERY.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether duty has been paid on all the manufacturing machinery brought into Canada? If duty has not been paid, on what machinery is there a balance still due, and how long have such arrears been standing? By what manufacturing establishments are they due, and what is the amount in each case?

Mr. BOWELL. It will be seen that this question is of so wide a character that it would be impossible to answer it. It goes back to the time of Confederation, and how long before I do not know. If the hon. gentleman will move for the information, I will try to get it for him.

Mr. McMULLEN. With the consent of the House, I will move for a return comprising the information mentioned in the question.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN FLOUR.

Mr. WELDON (St. John) asked, How many barrels of Canadian flour were brought by sea or directly, or through the United States of America, into the several Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, during the year 1889?

Mr. BOWELL. We have no record that will give the information the hon. gentleman seeks, and the only way to obtain it is by writing to the different ports and securing, in addition to the records they possess, the manifests of the ships that brought the flour. If the hon. gentleman will move for the papers, I will endeavor to obtain the information for him at as early a date as possible.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I move for:

Statement of number of barrels of flour brought by sea or directly, or through the United States of America, into the several Provinces of Nova Scotia. New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, during the year 1889.

Motion agreed to.

BAIE DES CHALEURS RAILWAY.

Mr. GUAY asked, 1. Whether it is the intention of the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the immediate completion of the first one hundred miles of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway? 2. Whether it is the intention of the Government to take the requisite steps to compel the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company to keep steadily in operation the twenty miles of that railway extending from Metapedia to Cross Point, and constructed by the Government as a Dominion work?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To 1st question: The Government have taken steps to insure the completion of the first 100 miles by making the company deposit with them $200,000 of their first mortgage bonds as security for the completion under the terms of 52 Vic., chap. 3, sec. 2, viz., the 2nd May, 1893. To 2nd question: The sixth clause of the contract for the twenty miles referred to reads as follows, namely: "That the company will, upon and after the completion of the said line of railway and works appertaining thereto, truly and faithfully keep the same and the rolling stock required therefor in good sufficient working and running order, and shall continuously and faithfully operate the same." No part of this road was constructed by the Government as a Dominion work.

EASTER RECESS.

Mr. LAURIER. On Friday last I enquired from the Minister of Public Works, in the absence of the First Minister, if the Government were prepared to state their intentions with respect to Easter holidays. I renew the question, as the First Minister is now in his seat.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have seen a good many members on this subject, and I find the general desire is that there should be as short an interval as possible, and the Government concur in that view. The proposition is this: that when the House adjourns on Thursday, it stand adjourned until Monday at three o'clock.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). The announcement made by the First Minister is a severe disappointment to a number of members who had anticipated the usual Easter adjournment, and who obtained no benefit from the last adjournment, of which they were unaware until the day before, and who are now compelled to go home during the Easter recess. Seeing that Monday is a private day, we think it is not unreasonable to ask the House that an adjournment should take place until Tuesday, as it would not delay the progress of public business.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I agree with the observations of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon). The last adjournment for a few days was a surprise to a great many members. The previous adjournment took place because there was one day a holiday. Easter is the time when members look for an adjournment, and the proposition of the First Minister is, in fact, that there shall be none. It would only be reasonable that when the House adjourned on Wednesday night it should stand adjourned until the Wednesday following.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). While I am anxious that the business should be hurried through as quickly as possible, I think there might be an adjournment until Wednesday.

General LAURIE. I should like to add my influence to that of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), for, like him, I was unable to take advantage of the last recess. It might be possible to sit on the following Saturday and allow the House to remain adjourned until Wednesday. This would leave the same number of days for work, and would enable members to prolong their stay at home, if they desired to go there.

Mr. DICKEY. I hope the Government will take this view of it. The previous adjournment was practically of no use to us, because it was unexpected and only announced at the last moment. Marty hon, members have made arrangements to go home at Easter, and have engagements there. I think the suggestion of the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) would meet the requirements of the case.

Mr. McKEEN. I hope the Government will grant the concession asked by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon). We have been in session almost three months, and we should have an opportunity of attending to our private duties.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I hope the Government will adhere to their proposal respecting the adjournment. The proposed adjournment would only enable some of us to get half way home. Members coming from west of Lake Superior will, no doubt, endorse the proposition of the First Minister, that the adjournment be made as short as possible.

Mr. WALLACE (York). The Government have already taken two private members' days, and only one is now left, Monday. The House should endeavor to sit on that day, in order that the business of private members may be proceeded with.

Mr. ELLIS. I think we might compromise on the concession that the House should sit on Saturday. I concur with the hon member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) and the hon member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), that we were unable to take advantage of the last holiday, and I, with other hon members, would like to have another day added to the recess proposed.

Mr. GORDON. If the members for British Columbia were to go home we would have to ask for an adjournment of four weeks. I support the proposition of the First Minister.

are now compelled to go home during the Easter recess. Seeing that Monday is a private day, we not to have a holiday at Easter, but I hope that it think it is not unreasonable to ask the House that will not be taken as a precedent. I trust the hon.

member for Perth (Mr. Trow) will arrange to give pairs to those who wish to go home.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Many hon gentlemen who were unable to take advantage of the last holiday voted for it in order that others might benefit by it, and they did so under the impression that they would have a holiday on Easter Monday. It was impossible for me to get away last occasion, and I had previously made arrangements to go home at Easter. A number of other hon gentlemen are in the same position, and I think it is unfair to now refuse us Easter Monday. I hope the Government will consent to it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government is desirous of getting the views of the majority of the House on this question. The members of the Government remain at Ottawa all the time, and it is a matter of little or no importance to them whether there is an adjournment or not. I gather from a great many hon. gentlemen who spoke to me, that they are anxious to get away from this before the opening of the season, sometime in April, and it is with that view that I mentioned an adjournment from Thursday night until Monday. A good many of the members can make arrangements to pair if they must go home, and I think there would be few left who could not get pairs. I would really like to do what is the general wish of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me that we made a great mistake in so hurriedly adjourning the other day. I think we ought, once for all, try and come to some sort of understanding as to the principle on which these interlocutory adjournments should be made. They ought, at all events, to be arranged some time before, so that hon. members who feel that they have to go home may arrange to take advantage of them. The next proposition I would make is this: I think we ought, as far as possible, to concentrate any adjournments we have to make; and that if there are to be holidays beyond those which are obligatory—and I hope that the number of these may be reduced—they ought to be taken together, so that the hon. gentlemen who live at a distance may have a reasonable opportunity to go home. I do not see that there is any reason at all why any of us who are within a few hours of our homes should object to the holiday being very short, because it simply involves a pair, as the right hon. gentleman said, and the loss of a day in Parliament. It is a much more serious thing for those who require a longer adjournment in order to visit their homes. I think there is force in what hon. gentlemen have said, that it is customary to have a longer Easter recess than from Friday until Monday; and as they had some reason to depend, at any rate, on an adjournment over Monday, it would be hard for us at this moment to say that we will deprive them of the Easter recess. Perhaps the convenience of the majority would be served by sitting on Monday; but it seems hardly fair that, after deciding on the last holiday at a moment's notice, so that hon. gentlemen who live at a distance could not avail themselves of it, we should now deprive them of the Easter holiday.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If we follow the usual practice we might adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and adjourn on Wednesday night, for the reason that most of the members who wish to go home during the recess would like to be at home with their families on Good Friday. If we adjourn on Thursday they will be travelling all day on Friday, and I am sure many of the members would not like that. I think we must adjourn on Wednesday night, if we wish to give members an opportunity of going home.

Mr. LAURIER. I would suggest to the right hon, gentleman that the matter should be called up again to-morrow, and in the meantime it can be discussed among members.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then I propose that the two whips, Mr. Trow and Mr. Small, should ascertain between them what really is the wish of the majority of the House, and we will consider it to-morrow.

Mr. LAURIER. That will be satisfactory.

HARVEY AND SALISBURY RAILWAY.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would like to ask the First Minister if he would lay on the Table the last survey made of the Harvey and Salisbury Branch, which, I understand, has been sent to his Department.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no objection to lay it on the Table. I will bring it down.

TIMBER LIMITS.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like to enquire of the Minister of the Interior about what length of time will probably be required to bring down the returns in answer to a motion which I made regarding the grants of timber limits since March 1, 1885.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We are preparing it with all expedition. I will let the hon. gentleman know to-morrow.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Mr. DAVIN. I rise, Sir, to propose, seconded by my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall), the following resolution:—

That it is expedient that a Select Commission of Enquiry, having power to examine witnesses under oath, do issue, to enquire into the management of the North-West Mounted Police, and into the conduct of Lawrence W. Herchmer, Commissioner of the North-West Mounted Police, from the date of his appointment until the 31st of December, 1889.

When six o'clock came a few Wednesdays ago, I was in the midst of a description of the North-West Mounted Police; their morale, their physical, moral, and intellectual character, and I endeavored to do justice to a body of men of whom the Dominion of Canada may be proud. When, last autumn, the Governor General visited the Territories, this force was massed at Regina, in order not only to honor him by the manœuvres and to give him some idea what the Mounted Police were, but also to give him some pleasure, for he has the eve of a soldier; and a man looking at that fine body of men might, without the least hyperbole, apply the words which were applied to the famous Six Hundred, and which so pleased Lord Palmerston that he raised their author from poverty and obscurity to wealth and position. I will only give three or four lines of that remarkable description, which competent critics have pronounced superior even to that of Lord Tennyson; and I say they might be applied without hyperbole to our own Mounted Police on that occasion:

"Six hundred men for statues fit, Impatient in their saddles sit, Whose pawing chargers champ the bit, And sniff the sunlit air."

Well, Sir, Commissioner Herchmer had been drilled and coached how to manœuvre the men. Sergeant Mahoney, to whom I shall have to make reference shortly, had drilled him in the management of those maneuvres; but, when a body of men are mounted, and some of the horses are bronchos, various little contre-temps will arise in the movement of the horses, and, in that way, a got-by-rote command is sure to meet with some sort of disaster. Accordingly, the manœuvres on that occasion were not successful. Now, Sir, a light, and an instructive light, is shed on the character of the man whom I arraign before this House, by what occurred after the fiasco at Regina, when he went west to witness the movements of the western escort, which was commanded by a tried soldier, his own brother, Colonel Willie Herchmer, the second in command being Captain McIllree, also a very efficient officer. On that occasion, what did the Commissioner do? He turned around, and, in the presence of His Excellency, abused the western escort; but he was not out of earshot of the Governor General when he turned around to his secretary, and said: "Colville, I think that was a pretty good escort," and His Excellency showed his appreciation of the escort by making the commanding officer his A.D.C., an honor which, if he had been satisfied with the movements at Regina, he might have conferred on Commissioner Herchmer. Now, Sir, the offences which I charge against Commissioner Herchmer are no trivial offences. They are offences of sub-They are grave charges, some charges of defect of demeanor, some charges as to competency, some charges of going beyond what the law allowed him, charges of tyranny, charges of twisting the law to suit him, and forcing it beyond the bounds it prescribes. It must be remembered what the position of this body of men is. When I call the attention of the House to the Act, they will see that probably no human being could be more helpless than one of these troopers, in case the man administering that Act, and having such enormous powers, is not a just man. To begin with, the 11th clause, which relates to the articles of agreement to be signed by the trooper, says:

"Every constable shall, upon appointment to the force, sign articles of engagement, for a term of service not exceeding five years, and such engagement shall be made with the Commissioner, and may be enforced by the Commissioner for the time being; but such constable may be previously dismissed or discharged by the Commissioner." The Commissioner, by his mere volition, can dismiss any constable from that force, and a dismissal of a constable from the force is a disgrace which brands him for life. In my opinion, it was unwise to put into the Act a clause giving the commissioner such enormous power, and the only thing that could make it tolerable would be that the man administering it would administer it with a rigid justice-would never be influenced by partiality or by his passions, but would be a man having command over his temper-having, in fact, some of the first qualities of a judge. When we come to the clause defining the offences, there is some limit, to be sure, if it can be called a limit, to the mere exorbitancy of power that the Commissioner pos-A large number of offences are defined sesses. and declared to be breaches of discipline, and then sub-section 2 says:

"The Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner or Super-

"The Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner or Superintendent commanding at any post, or such other commissioned officer as is thereunto empowered by the Commissioner, may, forthwith, on a charge in writing of any one or more of the foregoing offences being preferred against any man of the force, other than a commissioned officer, cause the person so charged to be brought before him, and he shall then and there, in a summary way, investigate the said charge or charges, and on oath, if he thinks fit, and if proved to his satisfaction, shall there-of convict the offender—who shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding one month's pay, or to imprisonment, with hard labor, for a term not exceeding one year, or to both fine and imprisonment in addition to any punishment to which the offender is liable, in respect of such offence, under any law in force in the North-West Territories, or in any Province in which the offence is committed." Thus, you see that the Commissioner has power to punish, not only the offences committed under this Act, but any offence committed against any other Act of the Dominion of Canada. He is armed, so to speak, with the vast power of the criminal law, and also armed with this Act. But I wish to press upon the attention of the House that the Act prescribes the way in which a man shall be tried. It is true, it scarcely gives him a chance. It does not arm him with any code of rules such as those with which a soldier in the army is protected. For any of these offences mentioned there, for the most trifling offence that a soldier can commit, he will have to be tried according to certain army regulations. These offences are prescribed, and I will say here, what I have said before, that the power given to Mr. Herchmer, under this Act, is greater than the power which is vested in the Commander-in-Chief of the British army. But this much he is bound to do, and unless he does it he violates the law. He is bound, when a man comes before him, to have the charge written out and to take evidence—in a summary manner, it is true, but he is bound to take evidence. If I could bring forward no facts whatever, calculated to startle this House, calculated to alarm its sense of justice and of protection over these men who enlist in that one-sided way to protect and fight for Canada, I ought to be entitled to ask this House to consider whether some change should not be made in the Act itself. Take a man who has enlisted for five years; he can be dismissed at any moment, and the severest punishment dealt out to him; but, in any case, under that Act, you would expect that he would be arraigned before the Commissioner or the Assistant Commissioner or some inspector. You would expect, anyway, that he would be tried according to the Act. Now, by and by I shall have to deal with other offences, but the gravest offence that I will charge against Commissioner Herchmer is that he has taken that Act in his hand which he is bound to administer according to its provisions, and at his royal will and pleasure torn it in tatters. For instance, in the case of the man Somerville, who was brought before him without any charge whatever, before any charge was made or any evidence taken, he was sentenced to three months' imprisonment and to be dismissed. That man was not dismissed, and was let out before his time. It is not necessary to enquire-why. Whether it was because attention had been called to his case or not I do not know; but, anyway, the sentence was not carried out. Now, there were other grave cases of this character.

have been brought before the inspector at places sixty, seventy, aye, one hundred miles away from Regina, at the direction of the Commissioner, and the evidence sent on to him. The sentenced men he never saw. This has been done in three cases which can be proved, and I believe there are other cases, although I am cognizant of but three. evidence was sent on to Commissioner Herchmer, and without having the men before him, as is required by the Act, without having the accused brought face to face with their judge, he pronounced sentence. In one case, when Captain Deane was at Regina, a man was sent down from Moose Jaw charged with drunkenness. Mr. Herchmer was going west that day, and what did he do? He actually gave instructions defining what the punishment was to be. Without hearing the charge, he gave these instructions to Captain Deane. When the man was brought before Captain Deane, that gentleman said: While there is no evidence of a character to warrant my punishing you severely-in fact, while there is no evidence to do anything but to dismiss the case, here are my instructions, which I must carry out. Is that a solitary case? No, it is not. I can take you to Calgary, when Superintendent Antrobus was there, and can show you a case in which Mr. Herchmer actually gave directions contrary to the decision of a judge on the previous day. The judge, that is to say an inspector, armed with all the powers and the authority of a magistrate, heard the evidence and decided to inflict a heavy fine on two men, citizens of Calgary. When the men were brought up, the inspector, after trying the case, told the men that he would have to inflict a fine; but, having remanded the case until the day following, although he had previously intimated what his decision would be, he said, under instructions from Mr. Herchmer: "I am sorry to say I will not have to fine you only, but to imprison you as well, because I have directions to that effect." If there was nothing more than this, it is a most serious matter. It is tearing to pieces this Act which he has to administer; it is depriving of the last shred of protection both the citizens and members of the Mounted Police. But Mr. Herchmer has not contented himself with that. He has actually attempted to punish without trial for offences not set out in the Act at all. One, probably, is as flagrant a case of tyranny as has ever been perpetrated out of King Bomba's realm. There was a concert given at the barracks. A young lad, who sings and plays very well, performed at this concert. The concert was to be repeated in the town of Regina, and the young lad refused to attend. Surely it was not in his papers that he must perform at a concert; nevertheless, when Commissioner Herchmer heard that this young lad determined not to attend that concert he had him brought before him, and said: "If you do not I will dismiss you." In fact, the strongest language which could be used would give no idea of the profligacy of the attempts that this tyrant has made to construe the Act, which he is bound to administer according to its provisions, according to his royal will and pleasure. He thinks there is nothing he cannot do under it. He has flaunted and strutted up and down the platform at Regina, and told the people: "I will have you know that I am the law." There was the case of

know something. This man had money deposited in the post office savings bank, and he wrote to have the balance to his credit sent to him. The amount sent to him, he thought, was more that what he was entitled to. was not sure, but he hardly thought he had so much money at his credit. The moment this was reported to Mr. Herchmer, what did he do? He sent a telegram to have the man arrested and put in prison. For what offence? What offence under the disciplinary clauses of this Act—what offence under the law, had he been guilty of? The Postmaster General's subordinates at Ottawa had committed an error in sending this ,man another man's account. There was not any great discrepancy, but there was some discrepancy, and it was in favor of the man who drew the money, but the moment Mr. Herchmer heard of it, he sent to have him arrested. This man took out a writ of habeas corpus, which was granted by Judge Macleod; but what did Mr Herchmer do again? He actually sent word by telegraph to have him re-imprisoned, and actually tried to prosecute him at Lethbridge. The prosecuting counsel, who was practically the counsel of the Mounted Police, refused to prosecute. And so the thing fell through. I believe Craig intends to bring an action for false imprisonment against Mr. Herchmer, and if he does he will undoubtedly get a verdict. Somerville might have brought an action in the same way. one phase of Commissioner Herchmer's misconduct in regard to the law which he administers. Here is another: In administering such a Draconian statute as this, a man ought to be a just man; but his judgments are as capricious as the movements of a weathercock. A man may be brought before him to-day for one offence precisely similar to that for which another man may be brought before him to-morrow, and what do you find? The one man gets three months' imprisonment and is probably dismissed, unless by-and-bye an order comes from Ottawa forbidding the dismissal, as occurred in Somerville's case. Then there was the case of Gordon, who was sentenced to three months' imprisonment and to be dismissed from the force; but, instead of that, the Commissioner was ordered to limit the term of the imprisonment, and Gordon was not only not dismissed, but obtained a posi-tion. I will give you another instance: There is a man who was guilty of what I consider a very grave offence. It was a man named Thompson. He broke into the Commissioner's cellar and stole the Commissioner's beer.

that he must perform at a concert; nevertheless, when Commissioner Herchmer heard that this young lad determined not to attend that concert he had him brought before him, and said: "If you do not I will dismiss you." In fact, the strongest language which could be used would give no idea of the profligacy of the attempts that this tyrant has made to construe the Act, which he is bound to administer according to its provisions, according to his royal will and pleasure. He thinks there is nothing he cannot do under it. He has flaunted and strutted up and down the platform at Regina, and told the people: "I will have you know that I am the law." There was the case of Craig, of which the Postmaster General will officer's cellar. He committed burglary, and also the grossest breach of discipline. Nevertheless, Commissioner Herchmer fines him only $10. Next day, we will suppose, a man is brought before him for an offence far more trivial, and he is sentenced to three months' imprisonment and dismissed the force. As to the capriciousness of this officer, let me give another example. Sergeant Mahoney, the drill sergeant, who is one of the most capable men for drilling soldiers on the continent of America, goes before Commissioner Herchmer as a deputation from the sergeants' mess to ask that, instead of taking beer at the canteen, they may have the beer at their own mess. Herchmer breaks into a passion, and says he would not trust one of his sergeants or his sergeants-major, and that they "Then, could not have the beer at their mess. "Then," said Sergeant Mahoney, "I will drink no more beer at the canteen." "Come back," says Herchmer, "you are fined $30," and that is simply for saying that he would not drink beer at the canteen. The other man is fined $10 for breaking into Herchmer's cellar, stealing most of his beer, and taking it to his brother troopers. That is a great discrepancy in the decisions of this officer, but it is not so astonishing as this, that one man should be brought before him for an offence for which he would get two days' imprisonment in the army, and he is imprisoned for three months and dismissed the force, while another man is brought before him and is dealt with in the way this man Thompson is dealt with. There is another man there, and, while the Commissioner is on the spot, he does pretty well what he likes; but, when Colonel Willie Herchmer, the Commissioner's brother, came there, he gave this man notice that he did not care whether he sang in the choir or not, for that would not save him from going on the defaulters' list. Anyone who has observed the career of Commissioner Herchmer could not fail to come to the conclusion that either he was demented or that there were in him ingrained vices of such a character that the moment he got power they manifested themselves in such a flagrant manner as we have read of in the cases of tyrants endowed with unlimited and despotic authority. The point of view from which I have thus far dealt with the Commissioner is that of justice, because I think it the most important, because I think it the point of view that will most impress this Parliament, because I think it the point of view that should most impress this Parliament; for there is no helpless being over the wide Dominion of Canada, if there is the least oppression dealt out to him or her, whose case this Parliament should not be ready to investigate, and to punish the oppressor. I maintain that a more helpless creature does not exist than a man who enlists under the conditions of this Act, who yet wears the Queen's uniform, and may be called to die for his Queen and country to-morrow. Then, if any injustice is dealt out to him, this Parliament should see that in the future he gets protection, and that past offences should be condignly dealt with. I have dealt with this from the point of view of justice, but there is also the point of view of efficiency to be considered. Will any man tell me that, because there is a kind of terrorism exercised-because, after the men are enlisted, terrorism is used against them—the appearance of peace is a sign that peace exists? We, who live in the Territories, know that that is not the case. We know well Mr. DAVIN.

that, if trouble were to break out to-morrow, events would occur that would seriously deteriorate from the efficiency of that force. You cannot make efficient men, men full of the feeling of discipline, of courage, and of loyalty, especially in a free country like this, if they are still treated as slaves. It is not in human nature. There is another point of view from which Commissioner Herchmer's conduct has to be looked at. He occupies a very important position, one of the first positions in the North-West, a position that any man in the country might be proud to fill. It is a position of great responsibility. Now, if his outbreaks of violent temper only related to the police it would be a grave thing, it would be a grave cause for enquiry, but he has to deal with the public in many ways. His authority and his duties touch the people of the North-West Territories at many points, and the people of those Territories have had to endure his injustice, they have had to endure his insolence, to endure his violence of temper, they have had to endure his overbearing arrogance. Even if everything were right in the force, yet if it could be shown that to the people of that vast territory, where he occupies so important a position, his demeanor is of a character offensive, insolent, arrogant, oppressive, it would be a grave cause for enquiry, and, if the enquiry established it, full ground for dismissal. But when you look at it from the point of view of justice, justice to the troopers, justice to those men who may be kept there trembling, as it were, under lash of this man's capricious injustice, when you look at it from the point of view of the efficiency of the force, and then from the point of view of the interest of the Territories, and the feelings of the people, why, Sir, you have a cumulative case made out against this man, and I hold that it is the bounden duty of the Government to throw no difficulties in the way of a full enquiry into his conduct. Now, I charge against him that he is imcompetent. What I mean by saying he is incompetent is this: That, unless he has recently learned how to do it, he could not put a troop through its facings; and to have a man in that position, who cannot put a troop through its facings, means something very serious in its effect upon the officers and upon the men. Is it to be supposed that men who are in the position of soldiers, or of officers commanding these men, can respect the commanding officer who does not know his business? Now, I believe the right hon, gentleman who is at the head of the Mounted Police, and takes a deep interest in them, and who is proud of them, as he may well be, must have had, I know, the best grounds for promoting Commissioner Herchmer from a subordinate position in the Indian Department to be the head of this force. I have no doubt whatever that he had before him grounds that seemed to satisfy his mind, and that were calculated to satisfy any mind who applied itself to the facts which, no doubt, were laid before him. But it has not turned out fortunately, because there cannot be the least doubt that promoting him over the heads of the officers who were in the force hit the esprit de corps so hard that a very different management will have to be adopted in order to restore it. I charge him with tyranny to officers and men. Now, his tyranny to the officers in the Territories is gross as a mountain—open, palpable.

I will give you an instance of the way he treats these officers, to show how he is fitted to preserve their respect. When the Governor General went up to Banff a ball was given in his honor Canadian Pacific Railway hotel. at the After the ball Mr. Mathews, the proprietor of the hotel, gave a supper to a number of gentlemen, some of them well known to the head of the Government. Mr. Buchanan was one, Mr. Baker. I think, another, Mr. Pocklington another, and a number of civilians; but amongst the civilians were a few officers. Colonel Herchmer went to Mr. Mathews and said, that he thought they were disturbing the Governor General. Mr. Mathews said: "Well, I do not see how they possibly can, but I suppose if they are disturbing the Governor General he will send us word." Colonel Herchmer came in again in the most violent wrath, thundered at the door, and swore at his officers, and told them to leave the table, and that if they did not leave, they should send in their resignations. Now, it is to be remembered that these men have the position of gentlemen, they wear Her Majesty's uniform, they wear the uniform of the Mounted Police, and that is a very "crack" uniform; it would suit a hussar regiment. The idea of treating these officers in that manner! But that is trifling, compared with his usual treatment. The usual thing is to bully them before the men-to assail them, so to speak, with words before their own men. Now, if that should prove to be the nen. Now, it that should prove to be the case—of course I do not know anything about that—but if it should prove to be the case that these officers, up to this minute, have never sent in any complaint, what will that show? If they, up to this minute, have sent in no complaints, it shows that they fancy he is so strongly entrenched that, no matter what he does, there he remains, and his vengeance, sharp and sudden, may be dealt out to them when they least expect it. It is a common notion amongst them, and a common notion amongst the people, that if one of the officers offends him in the least way the colonel orders him off, even in the depth of winter; he will order him, probably, 200 miles away; probably he orders him off to live there permanently for three or four months, and the removal costs money. But I am not here to make any point about that. I will say, however, that it ought to be taken for granted, until proof to the contrary of the most absolute character is forthcoming, that when a commanding officer orders his subordinate officer away he has done it in the interest of the force. So I make no point about that; but I will say this: that, seeing his tyrannical conduct to the men, looking at his tyrannical bearing towards the officers, looking at his tyrannical bearing in a more delicate direction, to which I shall have to refer in a moment, it is fairly inferable, anyway, that in some percentage of the cases in which he orders officers away he has been guided, not by a desire for the efficiency of the force, but by a desire to wreak his own vengeance upon them. Now, I charge that he interferes, so as to cause grave suffering with the conduct of the medical officers in the hospital. It has been represented to me, on authority that I cannot question for a minute, that he will interfere actually with the prescriptions of these medical officers. One case was brought before me in which in the hospital, and who were, I suppose, somewhat feverish, and needed these lemons; and what did he do? He drew his pen through the prescription of the medical officer. So he is not only capable at a bound of being an equipped soldier, but he thinks he is an Esculapius as well. I charge him with unrighteousness in dealing with defaulters. I have already dwelt on cases that can be proved in support of this charge. I now charge that he has taken a course that was against the efficiency of the force, that was contrary to the interests of the North-West in establishing a canteen there, and in the manner in which he established it. How did he establish that canteen there? It is not the ordinary canteen of soldiers' quarters. They had every mortal thing at that canteen. am not going to dwell on that point, but what I dwell on principally is, that he has inaugurated a system whereby the man who runs the canteen is certain to have large custom and no bad debts. And why? A man goes there, and if he has the cash he pays for his beer; if he has not the cash, he gets a ticket. There is no limit to the tickets given to and taken from the men, as I am in a position to prove, and sometimes when a man goes to receive his pay at the end of the month he finds he has nothing to draw. That is a serious matter, for it strikes severely at the efficiency of the force. Of course, one of the objects of Commissioner Herchmer in establishing the canteen was, I think, to keep the men in barracks. That may have been a good object, but the effect has been that an enormous quantity of beer has been drunk, as may be seen by reference to the returns of the Lieutenant Governor, which show that large quantities of beer have gone in for consumption by the Mounted Police. I am not dwelling particularly on what, after all, was a thing to be condemned, namely. that he made the canteen a general store-I think that was objectionable and undesirable—but I dwell on the fact that the management of the canteen was of a character not conducive to the effici-tion, of which he is the head, as if it were a private affair. Instances of that kind can be given ad infinitum; but I do not regard this, of course, as so serious a charge as are the other charges. I charge him with yielding to his prejudices against certain nationalities. I am in a position to say, I have it on undoubted authority, that when the Governor General was there he issued orders that no French Canadian officer was to be allowed to take any prominent part; and if there is an enquiry we will summon officers in the force to depose to that fact. The Commissioner gave directions that during the visit of the Governor General no French Canadian officer was to be allowed to take any prominent part-he was, in fact, to be supreme.

mean by that expression. I have shown what the Act requires; and I have shown that he has not only done what I now charge, but that he punished for offences not within the Act. I will give an instance; it is a trifling instance in some respects, but a straw can show the direction of the current. A man named Garret was painting in the greenhouse. He did not know that the floor of the greenhouse was not to be painted, and he allowed one or two drops of paint to fall on the floor. eleven o'clock he went over to his quarters for some purpose connected with his business. came Commissioner Herchmer. He at once sent for Sergeant Hopkins, and said to him: "Make out two charges against Garret; one for leaving his work earlier than he should do, the other for messing the greenhouse." It would be difficult to find "messing the greenhouse" in the Act; but these were the two charges. He added: "Have these charges put before me, and I will fine him a couple of days' pay, and that will teach him to be more particular." The idea of a man saying, before he had heard any explanation, what he was going to do, shows, of course, that he is destitute of the very seminal principle of justice. I have already given other and greater instances. I charge the Commissioner with punishing men without giving them a hearing, as he has done in the case of There is a motion on the paper Somerville. that will bring the following charge home. I do not think there can be any misconduct in the case of a man not having power over his own movements, in having a pass on a railway. there is when a man can order himself two or three times a month to Calgary, and he has a pass, and he pockets the railway fare and payment for travelling expenses; and I venture to say that, if there is an enquiry into that feature of Commissioner Herchmer's conduct, it will be found that he added from $1,500 to $2,000 to his pay. Another charge is one which, probably, the House may not think is serious, and it is one which I do not think is as serious as some of the other charges, but the people of the North-West consider that some attention should be paid to it, namely: that the Commissioner, to use their own language, is down on local traders. He can take the prices of jobbers at Winnipeg and compare them with the prices of the retail merchants at Prince Albert or Regina, and he can show a difference; but that difference is delusive, because you have to add the expense of transport, and in the Auditor General's Report of last year you find among the items: freight, $18,000; transport, $421; waggon hire, $303; Canadian Pacific Railway, on account of transport, $30,000; or a total of $49,313. The greater proportion of that amount must have been paid for The freight rate is from 75 cents to $1 per 100 pounds, say for the railway up to the north, and, of course, the local tradesman can get as good freight rates as Mr. Herchmer, but he prefers, for some reason, to concentrate all his custom in the hands of the jobbers at Winnipeg. I will not discuss the statements that people make without authority; they have hinted this and that, but, in my opinion, they have not given any proof, and if there is no proof against a man it would be a ridiculous thing to press the charges.

Mr. MULOCK. It would be unjust. Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes; certainly it would be unjust and wrong, and I only mentioned this as showing that he is not very friendly to the North-West Territories. I charge Commissioner Herchmer that he has actually tried to suborn testimony, when these charges were put forward. After the charges had been made and published, he issued, on the 11th November, 1889, the following circular to his subordinate officers, who are also magistrates:

"A statement has been made in the Regina Leader that I have on various occasions interfered with officers of the North-West Mounted Police in the execution of their duties as justices of the peace, using my position as commanding officer in influencing their decisions as J.P.'s. Will you inform me officially whether I have ever interfered with you in such particulars, stating occasions, etc.

(Signed) "L. W. HERCHMER."
"Headquarters, Regina, 11th Nov., 1889."

I might tell the House that more than three of those officers refused point-blank to return the answer that he expected to force from them by this circular, and by which, in case of an enquiry, he could manufacture evidence beforehand. I say that this is a very serious affair. The North-West Assembly took this matter up, not from the point of view of any charges made in Assiniboia, but from the point of view of offences that had been committed in Alberta. On the 5th November, 1889, Mr. Haultain brought the question of Commissioner Herchmer interfering with the magistrates in the discharge of their duties before the North-West Assembly. I may say that Mr. Haultain is a barrister in considerable practice at Macleod, and facts came before him which forced this matter on his attention. He said, in the course of his address:

"One of the chief evils of the law was that subordinate officers of the police force were dictated to in their positions as magistrates by the officer in charge of the force, who had no more right to do such a thing than any member of this House. He was prepared to prove, when the time came, that sentences had been changed at the dictation of the chief officer."

As I have said, Mr. Haultain is a man in large practice as a barrister; he was a member of the Advisory Council at one time, and he takes a prominent part in the Assembly, and spoke on the responsibility that attaches to his position—as I speak with the responsibility that attaches to my position here in urging that an enquiry take place. So indignant was the Assembly, that on the 6th November, on the motion of Mr. Ross, seconded by Mr. Secord, the following motion was proposed:—

"That, whereas, very serious statements have been made on the floor of the House, reflecting on the conduct of the Commissioner of the North-West Mounted Police; be it resolved, that an humble address be presented by this House, through His Honor the Lieutenant Governor, to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that the matter be enquired into."

That motion was carried unanimously, and one of the reasons for its being so carried was, that there was not a member of the House who was not himself cognizant of some act of gross tyranny on the part of Commissioner Herchmer. There is a barrister at present in this city, occupying a high position politically, who lives in the west, and he is also aware of Mr. Herchmer's tyrannical warping of the law, and tyrannical interference with his officers in the discharge of their judicial duties—not at Macleod, not at Lethbridge, where these matters came before Mr. Haultain, but at Calgary; and I may add that every man who lives in Regina is fully aware of the condition of things that I think I have made out my case in a moderate way, and that a prima facie case has been established why an enquiry should be held, as asked for by this resolution. I will say here, and I speak the truth, I shall be glad if, when there is an enquiry, this man can establish so as to satisfy any reasonable mind that these grave charges have no foundation. I am afraid, however, that he cannot; I am afraid that the charges are only too true, and I am afraid that when the case is heard it will be shown that there are other charges more grave still than those I have alluded to. I believe that I shall be amply vindicated before the country and before the House in making the motion I have the honor to make.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no right to dispute the motives of the hon. gentleman in making this motion. He is, of course, governed by a sense of duty, but I rather regret the tone of personal feeling towards Commissioner Herchmer which was evidenced by my hon. friend in making this motion, and I think hon members on both sides of the House will agree with me in that regret. I may say, in the beginning, that I am opposed to this motion. I do not think there is any case made out, and I think it would be a great injustice to Commissioner Herchmer if this Commission were granted. The purport of the resolu-tion is most extraordinary. It says:

"That it is expedient that a Select Commission of Enquiry, having power to examine witnesses under oath, do issue, to enquire into the management of the North-West Mounted Police, and into the conduct of Lawrence W. Herchmer, Commissioner of the North-West Mounted Police, from the date of his appointment until the 31st of December 1889." December, 1889.

From this it would appear that the Commissioner was to be considered a criminal from the very day he took command of the force, and that he had committed an offence before or on the day he joined it. Now, the hon. member (Mr. Davin) has stated that one of the first charges he brings against Commissioner Herchmer is that he is incompetent to take the command, and that he has got to be assisted, and he draws a comparison between him and the tried soldier, his brother. It so happens that the Commissioner is the tried soldier, and that his brother never was in the army. Commissioner Herchmer entered the army, and on joining the depot at Hythe his military capacity was so speedily acknowledged that in the first year he was employed as acting adjutant, and the position of acting inspector of musketry was given to him almost when he was a recruit. In fact, he was and is a soldier, though not, certainly, a cavalry soldier. He served in India and, I think, in South Africa, and returned to Canada after four years' service, in consequence of the death of his father. So that he had considerable experience, at all events, as a soldier. The hon. gentleman says the efficiency of the force has greatly suffered in consequence of his conduct. Now, Sir, he was appointed because he was a good disciplinarian, a man of great firmness of character; and it is known—I do not wish to speak of the force in days gone by-that there was great laxity of discipline in the force, and some rather unhappy occurrences some years ago in consequence of that laxity. The screw had to be applied to the force gentleman says, that the officers are a high-class in order to bring it up to the right point of discipline; and Commissioner Herchmer had a most unpleasant, most disagreeable and most responsible task, in introducing order, discipline and subordination into a force where all these things had been neglected; and we have the testimony of the hon. gentleman himself, in the language he used before, and in what he says now, that for morale and physique there is no corps superior to it. He took occasion to quote language to show the efficiency of the force. Sir, it is a force that Canada has a right to be proud of. Every British officer of the regular service who has seen the force has pronounced it to be the very finest force he ever saw. It has also received the plaudits of the officers of the American army on the south side of the line, who are in constant and friendly co-operation with the Mounted Police in keeping the peace on the frontier and in putting down outrages that occur on both sides of the line. The Governor General, who is a soldier-it is in the report, and I may therefore allude to it—took occasion to address the force and speak of its efficiency. Now, much of this efficiency has been produced by the present Commissioner. The hon, gentleman says there is a system of terrorism in the force. What one man may call a due insistence on subordination may be called by another tyrannical. I believe that Commissioner Herchmer has the faults of his good qualities. He is stern, he is firm, he insists upon the strictest discipline, and I understand that he has certain faults of temper. Well, we cannot find angels in this world. He has done great service, and he has made some mistakes. Most of the cases the hon. gentleman has quoted—not all—are based on mere hearsay. He has gathered them from different persons up there, more or less credible I dare say. All the cases he has mentioned, or almost all, have been enquired into, and in most of them his conduct has been supported; in some of them he has been told that he has been a little too severe, and it would appear that his decisions have been reversed; but on the whole he has proved himself a good officer, his whole soul is in the efficiency of his force, and he has secured that object thoroughly well. The hon. gentleman says that the law should be changed—that he has too much power. Well, that is a question which I shall not enter into just now. It is a question that can only be discussed when the law concerning the Mounted Police is under consideration. If the law gives too much power to the Commissioner it can be altered, but it is the same power that has always been given to him since the establishment of the force, and I do not believe that the law can be altered or amended so as to relax that power without seriously affecting the discipline of the The hon, gentleman complains that in some cases the sentences have been too severe, and he complains also that in one particular case the Commissioner did not punish with sufficient severity a man who broke into his own cellar and stole some of his beer.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Trying his own case. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, the man who committed the offence was caught in the act. I do not know whether the Commissioner was trying his own case, or whether he handed the case over to some other person to try it. The hon.

lot of men. I believe they are a select and picked body of men; and do you suppose these men are so abject, so utterly devoid of gentlemanlike principle, that if they suffered in their positions or were trampled upon or oppressed in the manner the hon, gentleman has described, they would be such cravens or cowards as not to complain? Now, Sir, they do not complain. I have heard rumors of some being discontented at the hasty language of their commandant, but they have not complained, although they might be well assured that if there were good grounds for their complaints they would be completely justified and supported. So with the men. The hon. gentleman says the efficiency and morale of the force are destroyed in consequence of the terrorism with which the men are afflicted. Well, Sir, the term is a short term. They are enlisted for five years, and at the end oft hat time they are free men. This very season there were 122 men who had completed the whole of their five years' service, and of those 75 applied for re-enlistment for a term of five years. Why, Sir, this is a favorite service. It is an open-air service. The men have good pay, they have good appointments, it is a very interesting service, they are roaming over that country, and the young men like it. Some of them settle in the country, and it is very proper that they should. It is advantageous to the country that, after serving four or five years in the service, they should take out their lot if they wish to become farmers or settle into other trades or avocations, and this has had the effect of distributing men thoroughly disciplined all over the country. But it must be a favorite service when you find that out of 122 men, whose time has expired, 75 re-engaged without leaving, and 17 of those who took their discharge have since rejoined. So that, in fact, only 33 out of 122 of time-expired men actually severed their connection with the force. That, I think, is a sufficient answer to the charge that the corps is oppressed and the men trampled upon. Besides the efficiency introduced into the service by Commissioner Herchmer, he has administered it with great economy, so much so, that with an increased force the expenditure has decreased. The hon. gentleman has spoken about the canteen. Well, I can only say that the canteen is managed by the men themselves. Formerly, they were allowed to go out to the village, which is some distance from the barracks, and get all kinds of abominable drinks, and this had the effect of demoralising the By having a canteen managed by the men, where they can get a certain quantity of beer instead of buying forty-rod whiskey, or Perry Davis' Pain Killer, the force has been greatly improved. The canteen is on the ground, under the eyes of the officers, managed by a committee of staff-sergeants, and is in every way an improvement on the old system. I cannot consent to this commission of enquiry being granted, but I will see that any charges brought up are carefully considered, and I must ask the House to reject this motion.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me that the House will hardly endorse the criticism of the First Minister upon the motives which have induced the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) to bring up this motion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say anything about motives.

Sir John A. Macdonald.

Mr. LAURIER. I understood him to say that the hon, gentleman had spoken with such warmth that he must naturally have some personal motive. True, he has spoken with a good deal of warmth in tone and manner and even substance, but if the charges he brought are true, there is cause for his warmth of feeling. The First Minister has said that the force is very efficient. That has been admitted by the hon. member for Assiniboia himself, and it was an admission he need not have made, because every man in this House is proud of the Mounted Police, and, so far as that goes, Commissioner Herchmer is entitled to all the credit he can gain from it. But although Commissioner Herchmer may have displayed considerable administrative ability, if the charge brought against him, that he is subject to violent fits of temper, be true, that would go very far towards impairing his efficiency as commandant of the force. I do not understand the hon. member for Assiniboia to have made any special reference to the canteen with the view of finding fault with the manner in which it has been conducted; but what he found fault with was, that one of the officers, because he ventured to request Colonel Herchmer to have some of the regulations altered, had been summarily fined $30. That is a case of absolute tyranny—that for having made a simple remonstrance, and for having simply asked for an alteration in the regulations of the force, the officer who did so should have been treated as a culprit and summarily fined; and no man in this House can tolerate such conduct on the part of the Commissioner. I do not pretend to pass any criticism at this moment on the conduct of Colonel Herchmer. I assume that he is innocent of the charges brought against him, and that, if a proper enquiry were made, he would clear his character; but when a member of Parliament, from his seat in the House, brings charges against the Commissioner, on his responsibility as a member of this House, that fact alone ought to be sufficient to warrant an enquiry being made. do not say that the present motion should be granted, and I will come to that question in a moment; but when such charges are made by a member of Parliament, on his responsibility, it seems to me they cannot be treated lightly, and there is cause for an enquiry. True, the service may be popular. It may be true that no member of the force has made any complaint; but it is also true that the North-West Legislature passed a resolution asking for an enquiry.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand the hon, member for Assiniboia to have quoted a resolution passed by the Legislature, asking for an enquiry into the conduct of Commissioner Herchiner. If that be true, and it cannot be denied, there is cause for enquiry, and it seems to me the Government are not discharging their duty properly if they do not pay any attention to the motion. Why is it that pay any attention to the motion. we have a Local Legislature? It is because it is impossible for us to administer the Territories properly from Ottawa. The members of the Legislature are supposed to be more familiar, and they ought to be, with the doings of the North-West Mounted Police than we can be at such a distance, and when such a body, without a dissentient voice, express the desire to have an investigation, I, for one, am disposed to give that desire some attention. I do not say that I will be prepared to fully endorse the resolution, for it seems to me to go too The resolution is:

"That it is expedient that a Select Commission of Enquiry, having power to examine witnesses under oath, do issue to enquire into the management of the North-West Mounted Police."

I do not see any cause for enquiry into the management of the North-West Mounted Police at large; but, if the resolution had been confined to asking an investigation into the conduct of Commissioner Herchmer, I would be disposed to favor it. these circumstances, if my hon. friend does not succeed in having a proper investigation this year, he ought to come back next year with a motion asking Parliament to have an investigation into Commissioner Herchmer's conduct, and if the Government fail to grant such an investigation, they will be failing in their duty.

Mr. MACDOWALL. When the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) asked me to second the motion, it was not my intention to say anything on the subject, but, after what has transpired, I desire to explain the reasons why I consented to second it. In the first place, I think the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition is a very good one, and I should recommend the mover of the resolution to adopt his advice and strike out the words "into the management of the North-West Mounted Police."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Because I do not think there is any fault to be found with the management of the North-West Mounted Police. I will state the reasons why I seconded the motion. In the first place, several serious charges have been made against the commissioner in the press of the North-West, and that is a very good ground for appointing a commission of enquiry. second place, the Legislative Assembly of the North-West have unanimously passed a resolution asking for an enquiry into the conduct of the Commissioner of the Mounted Police. Another reason is that the commissioner himself is anxious that an enquiry should be made into his conduct, and he has stated that, if he is given the opportunity of appearing before any commission that may be appointed, he can disprove the charges and clear himself. In that way, I think, he has taken a manly course, and, as we have had two committees of enquiry appointed during this Session, I think he should be treated in the same fair way. The right hon, gentleman who leads the Government has spoken very highly of the officers who serve under the commissioner and the men who compose the force. I believe these gentlemen are everything he describes, but I do not think they can be called craven if they do not make complaints against the commissioner. know myself that there is a feeling throughout the North-West Mounted Police force, not only among the officers, but among the men, which I should say will not take a very long time, unless it is stopped, to destroy all esprit de corps. I do not support the charges which have been brought by the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). He has brought those charges on his own responsibility, but, when I consider that these charges have been brought by almost the whole of the press of the North-West, that they have been brought by the North-West 85 member of this House in his place against the commissioner, and when the commissioner is anxious himself to have an enquiry into his conduct, and when the esprit de corps of that fine and valuable force is likely to be destroyed, perhaps by the fact that the commissioner has not that tact and that touch with the men and with the officers of his force, which is absolutely necessary to maintain the proper status of the force, I think these are all good reasons for supporting the motion of the hon, member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), especially if it is reduced in the way which I suggest.

Mr. WATSON. I agree entirely with the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Macdowall). I think it is of the utmost importance that the people should have the greatest possible confidence in any one occupying the position of Mr. Herchmer, as commissioner. The member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) made similar charges a year ago, and the Government cannot justify any one holding the position which Mr. Herchmer holds without investigation, after such charges are made in this House by a member on his responsibility. The hon, gentleman (Mr. Davin) is in a position to know of what he speaks, and, as has been stated by the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall), these charges have been made in the press. It is nothing new that such charges should be investigated by a commission. The charges which have been made against Mr. Herchmer are almost as severe as those which were made against General Middleton, in regard to which the Government have authorised a commission of enquiry. I do not see why they should not grant the proposition contained in this motion. I would suggest that the management of the North-West Mounted Police should be omitted, according to the suggestion of the hon. leader of the Opposition. As far as I am aware, there has been no charge made against the management of the North-West Mounted Police, against their efficiency, or against the way in which they discharge their duties; but there have been grave charges made against Mr. Herchmer, and I have heard gentlemen from the North-West repeatedly complain in regard to his actions. I do not know personally whether these charges can be proved or not, but I think the House should allow a commission to enquire into those charges, more particularly when a resolution has been passed by the North-West Council, asking that a commission should be appointed to enquire into them. I, therefore, move in amendment, that all the words after "That" be struck out, and the following inserted in lieu thereof :-

It is expedient that a Select Commission of Enquiry, having power to examine witnesses under oath, do issue to enquire into the conduct of Lawrence W. Herchmer, Commissioner of the North-West Mounted Police, from the date of his appointment to the 31st December, 1889.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It is pleasant to note that all the gentlemen who have spoken on this subject testify to the efficiency of the North-West Mounted Police. They corroborate all that has been said by distinguished officers and others who have gone to the North-West, and have seen that body of men, that the force we have in the North-West is a credit to Canada, that they are possessed of a fine physique, that they are well drilled and Assembly, and that they have been brought by a well equipped, and that they are in all respects a fine body of men. That is the case to-day, but how long has it been so? It was only a few years ago that we were told that the force was not in such a state of efficiency, and I think you will find that it is since the appointment of Commissioner Herchmer that the change has taken place and the force has attained the high state of efficiency which it has to-day. Then we should give the commissioner some credit for that. We find that greater economy has taken place in the management of the force, and that the expenditure has been less than it was before the appointment of this commissioner. That is another point in his favor. But it is said that he is a great disciplinarian, that he is too strict. The hon. member who moved this resolution indulged in a great number of adjectives to describe the commissioner's conduct. He spoke of him as arrogant, and insolent and overbearing. I have known the commissioner for many years, and I cannot agree with the hon, gentleman. The commissioner may have faults like the rest of us, for we all have faults. His temper may not be of the best, but I believe that he is desirous to secure the efficiency of the force, that he is solicitous for the welfare of the men placed under his charge, that he is desirous to procure their welfare in every possible way. But there are complaints made against him, and that is natural. Where do we expect to find a man who is placed in charge of 1,000 men against whom no charges will be made? If complaints against commanding officers are to be ventilated here, and if commissions are to be issued to enquire into them, there will be no end to such commissions. I will undertake to go to every military school in this country and get complaints against the commanding officers. I will guarantee that, if these people will go to the first newspaper office whose editor may stand with mouth and ears open to receive complaints, any number of complaints will be made. This motion for a commission of enquiry is not so much a motion to enquire into Commissioner Herchmer's conduct, in my opinion, as it is to enquire into the management of the Department to which that force belongs.

Mr. DAVIN. No, no.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes; it is a commission to enquire into the management, by the right hon. Premier, of his Department. If that right hon. gentleman has allowed those complaints to be made, and has never investigated them, I say he is to blame; he is the man we ought to try here; it is the conduct of his Department that is arraigned here to-day. Commissioner Herchmer is but one of his officers, and any complaint, such as the hon. gentleman made here to-day, should have been sent to that Department; and if any such complaint has been made to the Department, and it has not been investigated, and justice has not been done, then it is the right hon. gentleman and the administration of his Department that we are called upon to enquire into. Let the hon. gentleman move for any papers in any particular case that he has complained about, but let him not take mere gossip, mere rumor, up there, that this man has said something, the other man has said something, and base his complaint on these. I say that any complaint that is worth being brought forward in Parliament, is worth being sent to the Department, and if it is not investigated there, then in making that motion without asking for a com-Mr. KIRKPATRICK.

the head of that Department is responsible. It seems to me that the attack which the hon. gentleman has made here to-day, is really made upon the Minister who has charge of that Department, and it is a question for the House to consider whether they will take the management of that Department out of the right hon. gentleman's hands and turn it over to a Committee of Enquiry. If the right hon, gentleman is not fit to enquire into it, let us know it. I think that these charges that have been made are all capable of explanation; some of them, I believe, are utterly baseless and frivolous—the charge that the hon. gentleman makes about the canteen, for instance. Why, every one who has had anything to do with men know that there is nothing more subversive of discipline, more calculated to bring the force into disorder, and to make it most difficult to govern the men, than to allow them to go out into the town and get what little supplies they want, whether a glass of beer or lemonade, or a pipe and tobacco, or anything of that kind. It is most desirable that this canteen should be under the control of the commanding officer, subject to his orders, closed and opened at certain hours, and only men of good record should be allowed to enter them. There is always a non-commissioned officer on duty to see that no man whose name is posted upon the canteen door for misconduct, is allowed to enter there. It is most desirable, in the interest of discipline and in the interest of the force, that these canteens should be established and maintained under the control of the commanding officer. For the last few weeks I have had an opportunity of seeing some of the officers of that force, and from not one of them did I hear any complaints against the commissioner. I have heard them all stand up for him, and state that his management of the force has been very good indeed, and that these charges are either all capable of explanation, or else that they are trumped-up charges. I was in that country myself about eighteen months ago, and saw a great many of the officers and men, and from not one of them did I hear any complaint against the commissioner. I presume I was just as likely to hear of them as was the hon. gentleman. It is known that his paper at Regina—I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is editor or it—but it is known that this paper is, unfortunately open, to hear complaints and to make charges against the commissioner, to listen to anything and everything that can be said against him. Let that paper, or the proprietor of that paper, instead of printing these charges, collect the evidence and send it down to the Department, and then, if the complaints are not investigated, let him attack those persons who are responsible for keeping that commissioner in his place; then justice would be done, and the great wrong, which he says the people of the North-West Territories are suffering, would be righted. For my part, I do not think there should be any commission granted in this case.

Mr. MULOCK. Last year the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) made a motion before this House for papers in connection with the conduct of Commissioner Herchmer, and on that occasion he referred to some of the matters to which he referred to-day. On that occasion, I deprecated the action of the hon. member for West Assiniboia, mission, because that motion led to nothing. did not think that the occasion of the motion for papers should be taken advantage of to make an indirect attack upon any person in the service, in the discharge of judicial duties, for the charge last year was made against Commissioner Herchmer, more particularly in reference to the discharge of his magisterial duties. To-day, the hon. gentleman has made certain specific charges against this officer, and has asked for an enquiry into the conduct of that officer. Therefore, I consider his action to-day is in the right direction, that is, if a charge is made against an officer, it ought to be followed up by a motion, giving that officer an opportunity to acquit himself in case he be innocent, and an opportunity for the member that is making the charge to establish it if he can. Now, there must be some way in dealing with offenders in the public service. I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) in his argument. I think it is to be regretted that on this occasion he has endeavored to appeal to party support of the Administration in order to vote down a motion in itself not in any sense a party motion. That is a favorite trick which is resorted to in order to dispose of inconvenient and unpleasant motions. This, he says, should have taken the form of a complaint to the Department The First Minister has assured the House that complaints have been made to the Department, and that the Department has enquired into these complaints, or is enquiring into them. He says that, so far as the Department has enquired into these complaints, it has found them without foundation. The Minister makes a statement as to what he found to be the result. member for Assiniboia takes issue with the Department distinctly. The hon, member makes a motion appealing, as it were, against the decision of the Department, and asking for an enquiry under oath. Now, what means had the Department of obtaining evidence as to whether these charges were true? They are of the very gravest kind. The Commissioner whose conduct is attacked is accused by the member for Assiniboia of one of the highest crimes that a judicial officer can be guilty of-he is accused of being untrue to his trust, of debauching justice, of being personally corrupt, of abusing his position, of not only failing to recognise the sacred position which he occupies as a judge, but also of using his office to put money into his own pocket. Could more serious charges be made against a person under such circumstances? I think these charges are sufficient to justify an enquiry, in a smuch as they are made by an hon. member representing the district largely affected by the conduct of this officer; by an hon, member supposed to be familiar, more or less, with the public opinion in the district, and who not only gives his own opinion in support of his motion, but purports to represent public opinion in the North-West. The motion is moved by a supportor of the Administration and seconded by a supporter of the Administration; it is also supported by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson); and these gentlemen speak from their positions in this House, as representatives of the country more or less affected by the conduct of this officer. Now, as a matter has assumed a great responsibility. He has made these charges on the floor of the House and before the public, and unless they are publicly investi-gated and disproved, Commissioner Herchmer's usefulness will largely be impaired. It is due to the administration of that portion of justice with which he is charged, that his character as a judge and as an officer of this Government should be investigated; and if the charges are found to be untrue, he should walk forth enjoying the well merited confidence of the public; but if the charges are established, there must be but one verdict. I, therefore, think the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) has sought to evade by a ruse a proper investigation into the charges. He has endeavored to prove that they must be untrue because the force is efficient. I do not understand that the entire efficiency of the force depends upon the conduct of the commissioner, nor that, however efficient the force may be, the fact would excuse the commissioner were these charges proved to be true. I ask the member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) whether, if the force were as efficient as it is possible for such a force to be, that would authorise or justify the commissioner doing the acts he is said to have done? Would it justify him in committing embezzlement? I ask the hon. gentleman, in his place to state to this House whether the efficiency of the force would be an excuse for the commissioner violating every law that bears upon him?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If there is any charge of embezzlement, there is a proper court to investigate this charge, and not this House.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon, gentleman has not answered the question. The hon, gentleman has objected to an investigation because the force is efficient; and if this contention were sound, the commissioner might plead it in justification of all possible offences. I do not take such a view of the situation. The two things are separate and distinct. And in view of the charges made by the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin), supported as they are by the North-West Council, and also by public opinion in the North-West, it is essential to the administration of justice, by the commissioner, that these charges should be publicly investigated-investigated with all the surroundings of a proper court of inquiry, not a Star Chamber investigation, not one made in private by the Department, where hearsay evidence, or improper evidence, may be admitted, and where there is no public demand made for evidence, in fact an examination made by the Administration largely with a view to exculpate the accused. It is true, as was said by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), that if any blame attaches to the officer, it may in some extent attach also to the Department. But it is not in that sense and spirit the enquiry is asked; but if the Department insists on holding an investigation of its own, then it will have the appearance of an accusation against the Department, and one which they are not willing to allow to be investigated. It has not been presented in that light, and I am not urging it in that light. So far as the charges are made I am assuming the Department is of justice to Commissioner Herchmer, the fullest wholly blameless, but if they prevent enquiry they opportunity should be given him to disprove these must assume the portion of the responsibility of charges. So the hon member making this motion the officer in question. I, therefore, feel it is my duty on this occasion to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson).

Mr. BLAKE. I hope this matter will receive further consideration from the responsible head of the Department, than it appears to have received up to the present time. I cannot help feeling that we here, whether we act executively or legis-latively, who are dealing with the affairs of a country so remote as that in which this force is situated, and in which these transactions are said to have occurred, have a special and peculiar responsibility, as we are under a special and peculiar difficulty. In those who are far removed from the centre of power and from the centre of investigation, it is well known, it is human nature, that there is a very much greater disposition to abuse that authority and power, from that sense of security which exists in the officer, and also from the difficulty, on the part of those aggrieved, of bringing forward and of establishing charges. The circumforward and of establishing charges. stances and the peculiar relations which a person in the position of commissioner occupies towards those under him, render it a difficult matter for charges to be brought. So that we have every element which should make us peculiarly jealous of the situation, and should lead us to hold to our power to see that enquiry is made; this is a power which we ought not lightly to abandon. This officer, of whom I have no warrant to say one single word in derogation of his character or conduct, of which I know nothing whatever, except what we heard to-day, holds a position of very great authority. He is in a position of very high command as commissioner of the force, of almost despotic authority, power and control; and he has besides very high and exalted magisterial functions. The hon. member who has brought forward these charges has submitted them in a speech, not taking the course of submitting them in a written form beforehand. He has laid a very great number of charges, some of which are of a general character, extremely difficult to be enquired into, but proper to be considered, proper to be carefully looked into by the departmental head, proper to be enquired into in that manner in which such general charges alone can be enquired into, but, perhaps, hardly fitted for judicial investigation; others are of an entirely different description, specific, plain, pointed, and which, if they be true, are of such a nature that whatever may be the merits of the officer otherwise, whatever good he may have done in the way of the restoration of discipline and efficiency in the force, he is not suited to remain in that position, or in any position of public trust whatever. However, as I have said, the form in which these charges are brought forward is not one satisfactory to my mind. I think some course should have been adopted which would have given the officer in charge, through the medium of his superiors, of the Department which presides over the force, the opportunity of giving his answer to such of those charges as he might think fit to answer, so that an explanation of them might have been presented, if the Minister in charge thought proper to present it on the floor of the House, at the same time as the charges them-selves were presented. Particularly do I think so with respect to such charges as affect the magisterial office, in which, I think, we ought to adopt, as nearly as we can, those analogies which prevail Mr. Mulock.

when this House exercises one of its highest functions, its inquisitorial function into the discharge of the administration of justice by those who are the depositaries of justice in the land. But we have to deal with the case at it is, in one form or other; and we have to consider what the effect is of these statements, they having been made upon his responsibility by a member of Parliament here, and this motion having been sustained by another hon. gentleman representing the same region of country, and by his declaration of opinion, apart from any personal acquaintance with the particular charges, that the condition of the force and the state of affairs demand investigation. We have to deal also, with the statement of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), who is also more or less familiar with the situation. We have to deal also with the statement and resolution of the North-West Council, the local body on the spot most familiar with the matter. We have to deal with what the hon. gentleman who seconded the motion has announced to us, with this additional circumstance, that the commissioner himself claims and asks that there shall be some enquiry into those charges. All these circumstances, to my mind, add to the difficulty in which we are placed in adopting such a summary disposition of this matter as the First Minister has proposed to us. I would ask in what position this House is to stand, and in what position Colonel Herchmer himself is to stand, if this matter is dismissed by a simple negation of this motion, and without any arrangement whatever for some enquiry into the affair. The House stands in this position: It is said we should dismiss altogether all that we have heard here to-day, and those additional facts to which I have just alluded, and that because the Minister calls upon us, and because a supporter of the Minister turns this—differently from what, I think, is the intention of everybody else—into an attack on the Department, or on the Minister himself, we should consider it is not fit that anything should be said about it at all, and that no action whatever ought to be taken. What would be our position; in what position would Colonel Herchmer stand, in what position would the force stand, and in what position would those towards whom he occupies that special relationship stand, if, after these statements made and heralded as they will be broadcast all over the country, we should take no action whatever? I say, Sir, that our position, as having the charge and the responsibility in this matter, and the position of Colonel Herchmer, alike require that some further consideration should be given before such a disposition as that is made of it. I do not myself admire the proposition of the hon. gentleman, even as amended. The same objection which I have taken a moment ago, to the absence of a statement in advance of what the charges were, applies, in my mind, to the form which even the amended motion takes. I think there ought to be very grave circumstances to justify the proposition to issue such a wholesale commission of enquiry generally, as is now proposed, into the conduct of this officer. I will not say that there are no circumstances which would justify it. I do not say, that this House may not be called upon to say, we find such a case made out on prima facie proof and otherwise, that a general enquiry is justified or demanded. But, I think the circumstances ought be much more exceptional than they are now, to render such a commission at all proper. At the same time I do feel, that when specific charges of the gravity and character of these which have been made to-day, have been made in this House, we ought to receive some assurance that these charges -however objectionable the form may be, or the spirit may be, as the right hon, gentleman has put it-will be efficiently investigated before we let go our own power of enquiry, and before we agree that this motion shall be negatived. Now, what I have to suggest to the hon. Minister is this: that this matter would be best met-under all the circumstances, and having regard to all that has taken place, the statements of the member, its support from other members of the locality, the attitude of the North-West Council, and the attitude of Colonel Herchmer himself—if the hon. Minister would undertake that a departmental commission should issue to enquire, on the spot, into the merits of such of these charges as have been specifically made, and are, therefore, capable of being specifically answered. If an intimation were received by us that such would be the course which the hon. Minister would feel it his duty to take, I, for my part, think that, upon the whole, that is the best disposition that could be made of this matter this Session, and if the results of such an enquiry were satisfactory, it would, of course, end the matter upon the specific charges for all time. It would leave the general questions which the hon, gentleman has adverted to, of demeanor and conduct, and so forth, to be dealt with as, I think, alone they can be dealt with, namely, otherwise than by such an enquiry, unless the case is much graver even than the hon, gentle-man has put it. It would dispose of the specific and very grave charges which I have referred to in a manner more suitable to the dignity of this House and to its efficiency as the great inquest of the country, and to the position even of Colonel Herchmer himself, than would result from the refusal of the motion without any arrangement for enquiry. If such a suggestion as I have made were accepted, I, for my part, would vote against the amendment and the motion; but unless some such suggestion is agreed to I must vote for the amendment, or for some amendment of the amendment which will include a more specific statement of the charges to be referred to the commission.

Mr. DALY. I rise for the purpose of saying that I have had occasion to come into contact with Mr. Herchmer himself in his official capacity. In my constituency alone has that force anything to do with the Province of Manitoba. Members may not be aware of the fact, but, it is, notwithstanding, true, that the duties of the North-West Mounted Police force are, with the exception of what they do on the frontier in the Province of Manitoba, confined to the North-West Territories. I have had occasion to come into contact with Colonel Herchmer in his official capacity, and I have asked him to look into certain matters connected with the men under his charge in southern Manitoba. I have always found him ready and willing to meet any views I have laid before him which he could reasonably give his adherence to. Now, Sir, I have also had occasion to see the Mounted Police force in the years 1881 and 1882, and again in 1887, 1888 and 1889. I must say that any person who has seen that force in numbers, such as they can be seen at Regina and at any of the other posts, cannot but come to the conclusion that the efficiency of that force has been so much improved in recent years that one would scarcely recognise them to be the same body of men. It may be that the physique of the men was as good before Mr. Herchmer was commissioner, as it is now, but I am borne out in my statement by the mover of the resolution and by the other gentlemen who have spoken from the North-West Territories, in saying, that the force to-day is in as highly efficient state as it could possibly be. I have no hesitation in saying that that efficiency is due to Mr. Herchmer and to the manner in which he has conducted the duties of his office. It should be remembered that a great many of the charges brought against Mr. Herchmer are matters of rumor, and that, so far as we know, there is no foundation for them. Mr. Herchmer, as has been stated by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, occupies a very responsible position. occupies a position which brings him to all portions and parts of the North-West Territories. It has been said, and, I believe, very truly, that Mr. Herchmer has certain infirmities of temper, but I have not the slightest doubt that some of the gentlemen with whom he has been brought in contact also have their infirmities of temper. I believe firmly that a great many of the charges brought against Mr. Herchmer have been brought by men, who, if their true mind were known, it would be ascertained that Mr. Herchmer did not agree to certain propositions which these gentlemen had made, or, that Mr. Herchmer did not do what these gentlemen asked him to do, and which, probably, it was not within his duty to perform. Any person occupying the position that Mr. Herchmer does must naturally make enemies in the discharge of his duty. It has been stated that the North-West Assembly passed a certain resolution. It may be that nearly every member of the North-West Council has come into contact with Mr. Herchmer, and that probably they have asked him to do what Mr. Herchmer did not see fit to do.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I must rise to a point of order. I do not think the hon, gentleman should bring such charges against my colleague from West Assiniboia or myself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He did not bring any charges against you.

Mr. DALY. I brought no charges either against the hon. member or against the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), but if the cap fits the hon. gentlemen they can put it on. I have no doubt that, in the course of the performance of his duties in the North-West Territories, Mr. Herchmer has come into contact with gentlemen who are now making the charge against him, and that he has not seen fit to do what these gentlemen have asked him to do. Now, the hon, member for North York says that the logic of the hon, member for Frontenac is not true—that this is really a direct charge against the right hon. Premier, who is the head of the Department controlling the Mounted Police. He said that the hon, member for West Assiniboia and the right hon. Premier were at issue on this matter, and the logical sequence is that the responsibility for the conduct of Mr. Herchmer must rest on the right hon, head of the Department. The resolution as framed would seem to go into the conduct of Mr. Herchmer from the time he joined the force to the present time; but I understand that the charges of the hon. member for Assiniboia do not go back to the time Mr. Herchmer took command of the force. To my mind, the most serious charge brought against him is that he had a pass on the Canadian Pacific Railway which he used on his trips to Calgary, and then charged the fares. If hon. members will look at the Order paper, they will find that after this resolution the next order is:

"Mr. Davin—Order of the House—Copies of form 93-North-West Mounted Police returns, in which payments were made L. W. Herchmer, Commissioner North-West Mounted Police, by paymaster at Regina. for contingencies from 1st July, 1887, to 1st July, 1888, and from 1st July, 1888, to 1st July, 1889."

If this return is brought down, it will include all payments for contingencies made by the paymaster to Mr. Herchmer, and the House will then be in a position to know whether the charges the hon. gentleman has brought against him, in regard to charging railway fares, are true or not. I certainly agree with the position taken by the last speaker, that the appointment of a select committee would not be a proper mode of investigating the charges. Mr. Herchmer, and others, who would be called to give evidence are at a great distance from the city of Ottawa. The investigation should be made through the Department. The right hon. Premier has stated that an investigation has been made by the Department into all these charges, and that they have not been proved-that all that was found against him was that he had been guilty of infirmity of temper on some occasions. I have no doubt the right hon. Premier has reproved him for that; and until such time as the hon. member for West Assiniboia, or some other hon. member, comes to this House and places on the paper specific charges against Colonel Herchmer, we have no right to enquire into them in the manner indicated.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

EXTENSION OF PATENT.

Mr. SMALL moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 98) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of George T. Smith.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice if he has looked into this Bill and come to any conclusion about it?

Mr. WALLACE. I think, as a general principle, we should look very carefully into applications such as this for the renewal of patents. The case of the George T. Smith Company with reference to its patents on the middlings purifier and mill machinery is notorious throughout the Province of Ontario. It is a well-known fact, that many millers and manufacturers of mill machinery have been subjected to a species of blackmail by this company. They started originally by claiming a patent to which the best legal authorities declared they had no legal right. They sued the manufacturers of middlings purifiers, among others the Grey Company and the Barter Company of Toronto. They sued the Grey Company for the infringement of their patent in manufacturing. The Grey Company, having gone to great expense, I believe, made preparations to defend their suit, which was protracted over a lengthened period, and they had such a strong defence, that the Smith Company not only withdrew the action, but paid them $10,000 for the trouble to which they had been put. But before this was done, the Smith Company went to all the millers who had purifiers in their mills of the country and extorted from them what can only be called blackmail. every case these mills obtain these purifiers at very large expense. In cases, where three or four purifiers were introduced into one mill, the proprietors have had to pay $80 to $90 for use of each machine. It is easily understood that a man having a claim of this kind, and being prepared to put it through all the courts, those who have used these machines, although they have a good case, would not care to be dragged into the expense of a lawsuit, involving, perhaps, an appeal to the Privy Council, which would cost thousands of dollars. It is estimated that in the Province of Ontario there are a thousand of these machines in use, and that this Geo. T. Smith Purifier Company have extracted from the millers no less than $100,000 cash, to which they were not at all entitled and had no legal right, and which was paid under the circumstances I have related. But now they come here asking to have their patent renewed. The circumstances they relate may or may not be true, but knowing the record of these people in the matter, knowing the fact that this company has no right to make the claims they do, knowing that the legal fraternity of Canada who have examined into the matter declare that they have no legal right as regards these mills to which I have referred, I think this House should not grant them the privilege they ask. I have here a letter from Goldie & McCulloch, manufacturers, which I have their authority to read. It is written by John E. Wilson, and is as follows:

E. Wilson, and is as ionows:—

"Dear Sir,—The enclosed sketch will show you what both patents cover; the object to be attained being the same in both cases, namely, to get a clear bolting surface the full circumference of the reel. Prior to the making of my machine, all flour bolts had the rod or bar marked 'A' in the sketches close to the outer surface, or silk, the result being that quite a space of the silk, longitudinally with each of these bars, is covered with the bar and with the stock that accumulates alongside of it, thus reducing the bolting capacity fully twenty-five per cent. from actual practice of what it will do, constructed under my patent.

"You will observe that the only practical difference between the two is in the wording, because he sets the rods 'A' in from the circumference the very same as in mine—using a band of hoop iron for the silk to rest upon; in mine the silk rests upon the round bar, in preference to a flat band.

mine—using a band of hoop iron for the silk to rest upon; in mine the silk rests upon the round bar, in preference to a flat band.

"You will observe that my patent was issued June 7th, 1884; Smith's on January 22nd, 1885. Had there been flour bolts in use prior to the date of my application, embodying the specific features which are claimed in both patents, I would not have been entitled to a patent; but it being the fact that mine was the first to have a clear bolting surface the full circumference of the reel, is it right or just that the House should, by special Act, renew a patent that has lapsed, and ought never to have been granted, and will be worthless when renewed, except to cause litigation and annoyance to other manufacturers, who have undertaken the manufacture of Patent No. 19,509, believing that the certificate of the Patent Office was a sufficient protection? Had there been any proper check in the examining department, the Smith patent would never have been issued, because with the subject-matter of my patent they were thoroughly conversant, as they had the application before them for two months, and I had several times been before they issued the patent; so I think you will agree with me that there was, to say the least, very loose work in issuing another for to say the least, very loose work in issuing another for the same matter.

"You will observe I send a sketch of mine in blue and Smith's in black.

"I hope you will use your influence to prevent this Act being passed, which can only be of service to cause litiga-tion and annoyance to the manufacturers under the prior patent, No. 19,509.

"Yours respectfully,
"JOHN E. WILSON."

Under these circumstances, these people object to the renewal of the patent now before the House. In the case of a great many of those patent rights, their manufacture and the circumstances attending them are all legitimate and proper, but in this case, as you will see by his letter, a previous patent had been issued for the same principle, only a better principle; I would, therefore, move that this Bill be read a third time this day six months.

Mr. TROW. The hon. gentleman is very much mistaken in reference to the patent in question. It is over an entirely different patent that litigation took place, and I am surprised at the hon. gentleman's statement. The patent in dispute was carried from court to court, and the various industries throughout the country were satisfied that it was an entirely different principle. reference to the Wilson's claim in the letter just read, I was in the Patent Office the other day and saw that the patent was an entirely different affair from the one he speaks of. When this matter was last discussed it was left to the Minister of Justice to decide, and he was convinced that Mr. Smith was perfectly innocent in the matter, and that his claim was perfectly good.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. TROW. He had a patent for five years, which he should have had renewed for another five He resides in Michigan himself and sent $20 to solicitors in Toronto, Messrs. Howland & Co., to deposit with the Patent Office in order to renew his patent. The solicitors cashed his cheque, and sent their clerk to get a post office order, but the clerk, instead of sending $20, sent only $10, and a few days after the error was found out. Mr. Smith was perfectly innocent, and, goodness knows has been punished enough for the negligence and carelessness of his solicitors in the city of Toronto, whose negligence will cost him $300 or $400, instead of the $20 which he sent to Toronto. Messrs. Howland & Co. are a very respectable firm, and Mr. Howland says all the trouble was due to the negligence of his clerk, whom he reprimanded and dismissed from his service. I do not see why this man should be deprived of his just rights. He has a large firm in the city of Stratford, which I know employs 160 or 170 hands all the year round, and they are only asking what is right and reasonable.

Mr. SMALL. In addition to the remarks of the hon, gentleman from North Perth, I would say that I have a letter from the solicitor in this case, stating that his books have been investigated since this matter was brought before the House, and irregularities found which were committed by the articled clerk who has been dismissed.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. Before the Committee on Private Bills the same line of opposition was taken to this Bill as has been taken to-night. I fail to see why it should be disposed of in the improper manner suggested by the hon. gentleman who has just moved the six months' hoist. I think we have very little to do with the disputants in this matter. This man had a patent in existence for the last five years, until it expired the other day. As the hon. member for North Perth has explained, and as was thoroughly and satisfactorily explained to the committee, by the negligence or something worse of the clerk in the solicitors' office, the sum of $10 was remitted instead of $20 to the Patent Office here, on behalf of the present applicant. There is no disputing the fact that $20 were remitted to the solicitor by Mr. Smith, and that it was only through the negligence or improper conduct of the clerk that half that amount was sent to the Patent Office, and when an answer came back from the Department that $10 was too little, by some peculiar negligence or misconduct of the clerk, this letter was laid aside and the matter allowed to stand over until the five years had expired. The circumstances, so far as Mr. Smith's coming to this House to obtain a renewal of the patent is concerned, are apparently fair and straightforward; he is not in default in any sense of the word, and has not been guilty of any negligence himself at all. In the case of Mr. May, a short time ago, this House passed similar legislation to that now before us, and I think it would be very unfair if this Mr. Smith were debarred of the right to have his patent renewed in consequence of a slight mistake. only objection made in Committee was of this character, that this man Smith and some other person had some dispute. The courts are open to any people who have disputes of that kind. patent was held for five years, and if it is now invalid the courts can set it aside; but now these parties ask us to try the question in dispute. This is a side issue altogether, and, if we were to allow ourselves to try the question by a side wind in this way, our time would be taken up for a great deal longer than it All we have to deal with is the question whether Mr. Smith has been guilty of any negligence or not, and whether there is any reason why he should not be allowed a renewal. The Committee has taken every precaution to protect any other claimants, and we have no one to deal with except Mr. Smith. If the other person desires to go to law, he can do so, and I, for one, should be sorry to prevent any one doing that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No one can be more strongly opposed than I am to a renewal by Parliament of a patent which has lapsed; even through negligence on the part of the holder. I felt some reluctance in agreeing to the passage of a Bill in regard to renewing another patent this Session, but I think this is a case in which we should allow the patent to be renewed, if we renew it in any case. I do not see that the patentee was himself guilty of any negligence whatever. If he had been, I would say that the House should not give him relief. Moreover, I understand that there was no negligence even on the part of the solicitors whom he instructed to have the patent renewed. I go further, and say that there was no negligence on the part of his clerk, but I think the patent was not renewed in consequence of a breach of trust, and probably in consequence of a fraudulent breach of trust on the part of the clerk. This patent expired, subject to renewal, on the 22nd January, 1890. On the 22nd December—one month before—the patentee's solicitors, Messrs. Howland & Co., received from the patentee instructions to renew the patent. Some correspondence ensued in order to get the patent itself. On the 4th January, eighteen days before the patent expired, Mr. Howland wrote a letter to the Commissioner of Patents in these words:

"We beg to enclose patent to George Thomas Smith for renewal for another period of five years, for which we enclose post office order for $20."

-that being the sum required. This letter was given to the clerk, with a cheque for $20. clerk cashed the cheque, and, instead of sending $20 to the Commissioner of Patents, he sent only $10, and a reply was sent to the firm of How-land & Co. informing them that the sum was not sufficient to secure a renewal of the patent. If that letter had not been suppressed, but had reached the hands of the solicitors, they would have had ample time to send the amount necessary, but it went into the hands of the same clerk who had embezzled the money, and he suppressed the letter until after the time expired to renew the patent, and then-judging from the evidence-he made up the $10 and sent it to the Commissioner of Patents, who very properly stated that it was too late. It appears, therefore, that neither the patentee nor his solicitors were in fault, both having made provision for the renewal of the patent in ample time. The only ground now taken is that this is an interference with a previous patent, and, therefore, should never have been issued. I agree with the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) that we should not try that question, because it is for the courts to deal with. It is useless to talk of blackmail or extortion in a case of this kind, as one hon. member did, because, as the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace) says, the other party has only to test the question in the courts. However, I have asked my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, to enquire of his officers, who are experts in these matters, in reference to this, and they adhere to the opinion that the patent was properly granted and is not an interference with a previous patent. The memorandum given to me on this subject says:

"Patent 9.981, granted May 26th, 1879, to A. Crabtree, is for a silk cylindrical reel of a peculiar construction, involving longitudinal bars and cylindrical rings, to admit of complete brushing over the whole surface—hence its cylindrical character. Patent 19,509, granted to J. E. Wilson, June 3rd, 1884, is for an uninterrupted annular bolting surface around the reel, to prevent accumulation of flour, Le., two heads, cylindrical in form, connected by slats, overwhich a series of rings; cylindrical in charater, overlying the longitudinal slats, leaving a free cylindrical space between the rings all around the bolt. G. T. Smith was granted a patent, 20,935, January 22nd, 1885, for a means of constructing a reel to prevent accumulation of ground material by the usual slats. The two bolt heads are connected by round bars, over all of which are fitted hoop carriers to receive a series of flat hoops at intervals on the length of the bolt. On these hoops is placed the bolting cloth, which arrangement does away with accumulation on both bars and rings." cumulation on both bars and rings.

So far, the report is, perhaps, a little too technical for most of us to follow, but now the reasons are "The reasons for the issue of the Smith patent, 20,935, are very obvious. The Wilson patent, 19,509, prevented the accumulation of ground material along the bars, but the accumulation took place at each of the rings to a certain extent; whereas the Smith patent, 20,935, not only prevented the accumulation of ground material along the bars, but also made the hoops so thin and placed them so far off the bars by the carriers that no accumulation took place at either bar or hoop; the flour passing all around Sir John Thompson.

the reel without obstruction from one end to the other of the bolt. Hence the justification of the office in granting the patent for a valuable improvement over all preceding machines."

That is the claim, that the present patent of Smith is an interference with the other for an improvement to prevent the accumulation of flour. According to the report of this expert Wilson's patent was defective in this particular, that it only prevented the accumulation of flour in one part of the apparatus, whereas, the patent now under consideration prevents its accumulation in all parts of the apparatus. Whether these conclusions are right, I do not pretend to say, but they satisfy me that this is a matter upon which this question ought not to turn. If we find it to be a case in which the party himself is not at fault, that his solicitors are not at fault, and that he lost the patent after using all possible diligence, I think it is a case in which we ought to give relief to the extent of permitting the Commissioner of Patents to receive an application for renewal. But if the commissioner, after further investigation, is advised by the proper officers that it ought not to be renewed for other reasons, he will still have power, notwithstanding the passage of this Bill, to take all these matters into consideration. It seems to me in that case that the jurisdiction of the courts is the proper sphere in which questions as to the fact of the patent infringing the rights of others can be investigated, instead of the Department.

Mr. WATSON. We have had very full explanations from the Minister of Justice and his views in this matter, and also from the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) in favor of passing this Act on the ground that it may give rise to litigation. I think that this House ought to guard against all possibility of litigation of that descrip-As has been stated by the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace), this company have had a great deal of trouble in connection with bolting machines and purifiers. The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) is accurate in stating this particular machine is not the one about which there has been a good deal of litigation. It is my opinion, after having carefully examined the model in the Patent Office, that the Smith patent should not have been granted; I have an exact knowledge of these machines and know whereof I am speaking. I can see no advantage in the Smith machine over the Wilson machine. The Wilson patent includes the same principle that is involved in the Smith patent. That being the case, I think this House should consider very seriously any proposition to pass an Act to renew a patent that had practically lapsed on account of what I would call negligence on the part of the solicitor, if not of the patentee. Now, I do not suppose this patentee will do any great good to the company. Smith is a man who was carrying on business until recently in the State of Michigan. True, there is a firm manufacturing this machine in Stratford, but that firm have had to pay Mr. Smith a royalty for the privilege of doing so. The Minister of Justice does not fully realise the difficulty that exists in the way of a miller who has been using a machine, and a man comes round and says: I have a right to the patent of that machine, and I demand a royalty. I know that large sums of money were extracted from the millers of Ontario on account of a patent over the Brush machine referred to by the member for

The firm of Goldie & McCullough, of Galt, had to fight a case from court to court, and it was finally decided in Smith's favor in the Supreme Court. The public is greatly interested in the use of all these machines, and I consider that Smith has had a greater benefit than he has been entitled to in the past for simply making a machine which had the same principle as the Wilson machine, which was patented six months previous to the Smith machine. At the time the Smith patent was granted, Wilson had some nine machines in operation, and he tells us in his letter that if these machines had been in existence and employing the same principle prior to his application for a patent, he would not have been entitled to the patent. On that ground, I consider that Smith had no right to the patent. As stated by the Minister of Justice, the patent of Mr. Crabtree, which was granted in 1879 and lapsed in 1884, included an iron band in place of the wooden rings used by Wilson; consequently Smith should have no right to that iron band. The only difference between Wilson's patent and that of Smith was that the former used an iron band that is reported by the Patent Office to have been patented in 1879. That being the case, I shall second the motion of the hon. member for York, because I thoroughly believe, after an examination of the model of this patent, that the Smith patent should never have been granted, as it involves the same principle, without any improvement, that Wilson's patent involved. I can easily understand that the officers who furnished the information to the Minister of Justice wished to carry out their contention, that they were right in issuing the second patent. That is quite natural, but I do think that the resolution proposed by the member for York should be adopted by this House.

Mr. HESSON. Representing the city in which these machines are being manufactured, I think I ought to know something about this case. think, with the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow), that it is scarcely fair for the hon. member for York to try to impress this House with the feeling that the Smith Company have not been honest with dealing with the millers of Ontario or Canada. The fact of the matter is, that the patent which created the trouble between the millers and the manufacturers was an entirely different patent. It had expired some years ago, and was renewed from time to time, as long as the law permitted them to renew-I think three different times. They had no alternative but to allow it to expire. is an entirely different patent, and there has been no loss over it and no expense to the millers.

Mr. WATSON. There will be.

Mr. HESSON. I am not speaking of this patent; I am speaking of a previous patent, the Smith Purifier, manufactured by Goldie & Mc-Culloch and by others. Other firms were manufacturing it precisely upon the same line that they are. I do not think the millers have any right to complain, whatever. If they purchased from other parties who had no right to manufacture, they simply placed themselves in the hands of the manufacturers, and they had no right to interfere with this Purifier Company in obtaining the passage of this Bill. I do not think the firm should be put to any inconvenience or disadvantage. They are entitled to their patent; the commis- to me to be legislation which ought to be most sioner makes the distinct statement that they are entitled to the privilege, and, so far as the benefits are concerned, he is of opinion that this is an entirely different patent from that of the parties who are claiming that the right should not be conceded. I hope the House will not object to the passage of the Bill. I speak from a knowledge of the facts, and from an interview I had with the manager of the works a week ago in Stratford, when I visited the office to get the necessary information; then I found that the fault rested entirely with the solicitor in Toronto. The House is not likely to create any difficulty, as has been suggested, in the direction of causing litigation; on the contrary, we will prevent it by renewing the patent, which should be renewed.

Mr. SPROULE. Hon. members who oppose the Bill are directing their arguments to the fact that, because there was a dispute between Mr. Wilson and Mr. Smith, a dispute which was settled long ago either by litigation or by compromise or otherwise, over a patent, this House should refuse to pass this Bill. It is, however, a matter of little concern to us what differences or contentions existed between Smith and Wilson, whether they both had the right, or whether either had the right to the patent, so long as the matter was settled outside of the House, and it was settled. The result was that Mr. Smith was entitled to all the rights under the patent. The other line taken by hon, members opposing the Bill is as to whether we should or should not grant a renewal of the patent because there might be something in the private character of the person making the appli-cation which we do not approve. That is an unheard-of principle to adopt. Mr. Smith may be an honest and honorable man, or the reverse; it is a matter with which we have nothing to do. The question to decide is whether he has or has not a right to get renewal of the patent, because it lapsed through the action of a subordinate over whom he had no control, and over whom his solicitor had no control. I hold that we are fully entitled to pass this Bill. If not, as the Minister of Justice has said, no case could possibly be brought forward where we would be justified in granting relief to any man in connection with the renewal of a patent.

Mr. BLAKE. I think there is no ground on which we can possibly entertain the consideration of the question as to whether this patent was the original invention of Mr. Smith or not. We are, moreover, not competent to deal with the question as to whether this patent is a good patent or not; and I agree with the hon, member who has just taken his seat, that we have nothing whatever to do with the question as to whether the issue was proper or improper. But, personally, I have felt exceedingly averse to sanction the view that the House should interfere with the law in this matter on other grounds. The law provides, as I understand it, that a patentee is entitled to obtain a patent for fifteen years, on payment of the fee, and he is given the privilege, if he chooses, of taking out a patent for five years, paying a proportion of the fee and renewing it for other two terms, paying a proportion of the fee each time; and it is upon the condition of that payment being made, that the patentee acquires his rights. It seems exceptional, and ought to be most carefully guarded against, when you propose to interfere with the operation of the law, and to relieve a man who, for whatever reason, has failed to pay the fee at the proper time, and so to keep alive his patent. But while I say that, and feel great reluctance to interfere, yet the very clear statement of the Minister of Justice, as to the wholly exceptional circumstances of this case, has led my own mind to the conclusion that they are such as ought to induce us to interfere as he proposes; and, therefore, I intend to do what I had been indisposed to do, to vote for the passage of the Bill. But I suggest to the Minister of Justice that it would be convenient to look at the preamble and adapt it to the circumstances which he has just now stated, it order that it may not afford a precedent for further invasions of the general course of the law. We may have a case of fraud, as has been pointed out by the Minister of Justice, but it is very unlikely; and the preamble should be limited so as not to afford a convenient precedent for other kinds of cases. It is of the highest consequence that patentees, who avail themselves of the privilege of not paying the fee all at once, should learn that it is only under circumstances of which it is almost impossible to expect a repetition, that they can be relieved from the consequence of non-payment in due time of the renewal fee.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I cannot agree with the Minister of Justice that the evidence was sufficient to establish the fact that the lawyer who had charge of a renewal of the patent was wholly blameworthy. The Minister stated that a clerk embezzled the funds; that having received $20 with which to buy a money order and send to the Department for the renewal of the patent, he used only $10, appropriating the other $10 to his own use; that the $10 was received at the Patent Office, and that the Commissioner of Patents wrote a letter stating that the funds sent were not sufficient and, therefore, the patent would not be renewed, and that this letter fell into the hands of the clerk, although it was sent to the firm, and was concealed for some time from the view of the solicitor. This might be an accidental circumstance, as the Minister has represented. If the clerk was guilty of embezzlement, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if any proceedings have been taken against that clerk to punish him for the crime committed. If this has not been done, no good ground has been offered for the renewal of the patent. Mr. Smith had a perfect right to take out his patent for five years instead of for ten or fifteen years took it out for five years, and long before December he was aware that the would expire if it were not renewed. plenty of opportunity to renew the patent, but he neglected to take any step until almost the last minute, and he then made application for a renewal. The patent not having been renewed. it The patent not having been renewed, it became the property of the State, and we have no right to interfere between the rights of the State and the patentee. Mr. Smith's patent is virtually dead, and we have no right to revive it, unless we have good cause to do so. The principal office of this firm is in Jackson, Michigan, and the institution at Stratford is only a branch, of which Mr. Smith is the sole proprietor, so that this is merely Mr. BLAKE.

a renewal of the Canadian branch of the firm. the Minister of Justice will examine into the proceedings which have taken place in the courts in Detroit recently, he might come to some conclusion why the application for the renewal of this patent was not made sooner than it was. It appears that this firm have placed the whole of their affairs in the hands of an assignee, and from an extract which I find in a newspaper I take the following:-

" ASSIGNEES APPROVED.

"Geo. T. Smith's Motion to Appoint a Receiver Denied by Judge Reilly.

by Judge Reilly.

"Detroit, March 3.—Judge Reilly this morning denied the application for the removal of the assignees and the appointment of a receiver for the Geo. T. Smith Middlings Purifier works of Jackson. The application was made by the Preston National Bank and Geo. T. Smith. In commenting on the case Judge Reilly said that the assignees had been chosen by a large majority of the stockholders of the concern and with the consent and approval of many of its creditors. They were under heavy bonds for the faithful performance of their duties, and he could see no reason why the court should interfere."

It appears from this that the firm in Jackson, Michigan, has failed, and this may account for the reason that the application was not made sooner. I feel that we ought not to grant this application as it is establishing a dangerous precedent that may be followed up hereafter. If we have a right to renew a patent after it has expired on account of neglect, we may renew patents irregularly after they have expired years. Therefore, I hope the amendment will carry.

Mr. GUILLET. It seems to me that the House is in great difficulty with regard to this question. I have listened carefully to the hon. Minister of Justice, but I am opposed to the motion that the House should go into committee, because it will be difficult to assume that the solicitors themselves are not fully responsible for this patent not being granted. If we assume that this young man is guilty of fraud, I think we are doing that for which we have no sufficient warrant. Every man is supposed to be innocent until he is found guilty. the young man has been guilty of fraud, we must remember that the solicitors in whose employ he was when he committed that fraud had compounded the felony by simply dismissing him, instead of taking proceedings to punish him for so grave an offence. I do not think the House can take that view of the question. If there has been a fraud committed, the penalty should fall where it belongs, and the solicitors themselves should bear the responsibility. If certain rights have been lost by the application not being made at the proper time the solicitors are to blame, and the people should retain those rights which have been forfeited and which they now enjoy. As regards the patent itself it is evident that there is litigation, and I should like to have had the opinion of the Minister of Justice as to whether it is an infringement or not. The Minister, however, has expressed the desire not to give an opinion upon that, and although the member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson). has stated that the Commissioner of Patents has given an opinion, we are informed that he has given no opinion, and that it is yet open to him to decide the question, I think this question can stand over, very properly, until a later period of the Session, or until next Session if necessary.

Mr. McMULLEN. After the very lucid explanation given by the Minister of Justice with regard to the manner in which this unfortunate occurrence happened. I do not think it would be at all creditable to this House if they declined to renew the patent. It is quite clear, that the owner of this patent took all the necessary steps to secure its renewal, and his solicitors evidently performed the duties devolving upon them by putting the money in the hands of the clerk to deposit. Because that clerk happened to act dishonestly, I think it would be derogatory to the dignity of this House if we took advantage of a small matter of this kind and declined to renew the The very clear and explicit explanation of the Minister of Justice ought fully to satisfy any man, that it is the duty of the House under the circumstances to renew this patent.

Mr. MULOCK. The objection that I take to the renewal of this patent is that the Bill itself, as amended by the Committee, does not cover all possible interests in the country. I do not propose to enter into any discussion of the abstract question, as to whether the patent should or should not be renewed. I admit there is no notice before the House in this particular case, of any interest having arisen since this patent elapsed which would be affected by the renewal, but we have to bear in mind that the publicity given to the Act of Parliament is, after all of a very limited character; two months advertising in the Gazette and two months in a local paper is all the notice which is given to the people of Canada from ocean to ocean; so that it is possible that an interest may have arisen which is not covered by the Bill. It is to be borne in mind that these Bills form precedents for future legislation, the text of this Bill will be considered as a satisfactory text to meet all other cases; but there is one class of cases which are not covered by the saving clause of this Bill. Supposing it has happened that some person, knowing that this patent has lapsed, has made financial arrangements to enter in the manufacture of the article. He has, perhaps, contracted for the construction of buildings, or has purchased machinery, or has made other arrangements, which would be entirely set at naught by the renewal of this patent. the hon. Minister of Justice think that is an interest that ought to be protected or indemnified? To-day the patent belongs to the public; there is no monopoly about it; and any person who has expended money with the view of manufacturing this article, would, the moment this legislation took effect, be injured.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He would probably save his money.

Mr. MULOCK. That may be, but we will assume that there is money in the article. I presume the applicant could only get a patent on the ground of it being a useful article, of which the public will gladly avail itself. I ask the hon. Minister of Justice, if he is prepared to protect that interest. I am sure that the sense of justice of this House is such that on its being informed that there is such an interest which would be jeopardised or wiped out by the passage of this Bill, it would require that the patentee should indemnify that interest or else he would not get the relief he asks for. The saving clause of this Bill does not meet the case.

It only saves rights that may have been acquired in the interval in the patent itself. There can be no right acquired in the patent because there is no patent to-day; and to acquire a right in the article simply means that some person may have bought this article from some other person. I have drafted an amendment to meet the case, and unless this amendment or something equivalent to it is adopted in Committee, I will oppose the Bill:

Provided always that said extension or renewal shall only take effect as against any person or persons who may have expended money or entered into any contract with a view to the manufacture of the patented article, upon his or their being indemnified to the satisfaction of said Commissioner, in respect of the money so expended or of any contract so entered into.

If this amendmend is made, I am prepared so far as my vote goes, to allow the Bill to pass.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hour for Private Bills has expired.

THE SAFETY OF FISHERMEN.

On the Order,

House in Committee on Bill (No. 96) for better securing the safety of certain fishermen.—(Mr. Jones, Halifax.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understood that the hon. gentleman was content to let this Bill stand until the hon. Minister of Marine comes back. He has had to be absent in Montreal to-day. He may, perhaps, be here later in the evening.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This is the third or fourth time that I have been asked to allow the Bill to stand, and I am apprehensive that it might not be reached again. I certainly have no objection to let it stand if the Government will assure me that it will be reached, or if they will place it among the Government Orders.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly, as the hon. gentleman has postponed it on several occasions on account of the absence of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries—the hon. gentleman probably knows that he was obliged to leave to-day to attend the obsequies of a relative—the hon. gentleman will have a full opportunity of moving the second reading of the Bill on another day.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. McMULLEN (for Mr. Cook) second reading of Bill (No. 30) to amend the Civil Service Act. He said: This Bill simply provides that any person applying for a position in the Civil Service, or applying for an examination, must have been a resident in Canada for five years previous to the time of his application. I think this is a Bill which should be passed, and it is intended to keep the Civil Service of Canada for those who are, and have been, residents in Canada for five years. I cannot see how any objection can reasonably be taken to the adoption of this measure. Based, asit is, on the principle of Canada for the Canadians, I may be permitted to add that almost all the labor organisations in the Dominion have passed resolutions urging its passage. I have here a list of those who passed such resolutions, and it comprises: -Local Association, 7,025, of St. Catharines; Local Association, 2531, of Merritton; Bricklayers' Association, of St. Catharines; Typographical Union, of Hamilton; Trade Council of Hamilton; District Association, of Toronto; District Association, of Hamilton; Builders' Association, of London; Local Association, 290, of Belleville; Local Association, 542, of Lindsay; Local Association, 570, of Bowmanville; Districts 1 and 2, of Montreal. So that almost the entire Labor Associations of this Dominion are in favor of this Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that the observations which the hon. gentleman has made in support of this Bill show that he is moving with the times, and is adopting the protective principle. His Bill, no doubt, has a good deal of value, in so far as it embodies the principle that this country ought to be for Canadians, but goes to an extreme in that direction which I think no public necessity calls for. The recommendations of the labor organisations to which he has referred are no doubt entitled to a great deal of respect; but I fail to see in what respect those organisations are affected by applications for positions in the Civil Service. understood the hon. gentleman to quote the Bricklayers' Association, and several other industrial organisations of this country, not one of which can have any interest in connection with applications for the Civil Service, not one of whose members belongs to the Civil Service, or are ever likely to enter it. The principle embodied in the Bill is one we should no doubt recognise and act upon on every possible occasion, and that is, that positions in the Civil Service should be given to Canadians having the necessary qualifications in preference to persons of any other country. But to propose that no person shall, under any circumstances, be eligible for admission to the service, or eligible even for examination, unless he has been five years in the country, seems to me to be carrying that principle far beyond what is warranted. Government, in exercising their powers of appointment to the service, are, at all times, open to the censure of this House, if they exercise that patronage unduly, or disregard any principle which ought to be observed in regard to the residents of this country, or in regard to giving preference to any persons not being residents. to enact by statute that no person shall be eligible to be examined for the service, unless he shall have been five years in Canada, seems to be carrying that principle far beyond what public necessity rerequires.

Mr. BARRON. I observe that the mover of this Bill has referred to the labor organisation of Lindsay, and I may tell the House that I have received a very strong letter from that organisation, asking me to support this Bill. I was not aware of its details, until a very few moments ago, and while, perhaps, it may be that five years is rather a long time to require any gentleman from the old country, or elsewhere. to reside in Canada, before he can be qualified for the Civil Service, there can be no possible doubt, but that a good deal of feeling has been created throughout the country, from the fact, which undoubtedly exists, that Canada is not for the Canadians so far as the Civil Service is concerned. There is no doubt, whatever, that any gentleman coming from the old country, who happens to have influential relations in the old country, can more easily get a position in the service than can a Canadian whose parents came at a time when they came years ago, and out had to hew out a Mr. McMullen.

make it what it is to-day. There is no doubt there is a good deal of feeling in the country, at all events in my part of the country, against the present system, arising from the fact that no one need apply for a position in the service in the face of the applications which come from people of influence in the old country. And although it is, perhaps, carrying the principle of protection a little too far, I think that greater care should be exercised than has been exercised in the past, and that preference should be given to young Canadians over those who have come out from the old country for the first time. I make these remarks in consequence of a request coming from my own town, and I am only sorry that the hon. member for South Victoria (Mr. Hudspeth) who also, I believe, received a similar letter, cannot be here to-night, owing to an unfortunate accident we all regret, for he would have said, only in much stronger words, what I have just remarked to the House.

Mr. CURRAN. I have very few words to say with reference to this Bill, which I regret is drafted in such a way as to necessitate a reference to the statute in order to make it intelligible. However, there is one observation which fell from the Minister of Justice in which I can hardly concur. is, no doubt, perfectly true that members of labor organisations have not, as a rule, occasion to apply for positions in the Civil Service, and to that extent I should say they are in a very much better position than those who do apply for them. though they may not have occasion, one thing is perfectly clear, that, as citizens of the country, having many of them young sons growing up, who may become candidates for some of those positions, they have an active interest in this question. They have a right to look to the interests of their families, they have a right to look to the future of these young men whom they are educating, and to see that a fair field for competition is open to them for positions in the service, if they think proper to seek for them. To that extent it is quite natural that members of all labor organisations should be interested in seeing that those who live in this country should have the first preference in the On the choice of positions in this country. other hand there is this to be said: If we make this rule absolute, we may require in the Civil Service persons possessing technical knowledge, and a Bill of this kind should be drawn with a great deal of care in order to avoid trouble in the future. Then, recent arrivals may be members of the families of those who have years ago come to this country from the old country, and prospered here, and made a home here, and helped to build up this country, who come out to join their relatives, and it might be unjust to close the doors to them if the term were extended to five years. A great deal has been said in certain parts of the country, and in certain sections of the press, about employment being given to young men who have been sent here directly to enter into the Civil Service. If that were true, that would be greatly to be deprecated, but I have never had any such case brought under my notice by labor organisations or by any other organisations. Up to this time, I think the Civil Service employment has been fairly administered. I do not know any one who is employed in any part of home in our forest and build up Canada and the Civil Service who has not undergone the Civil Service examination, and I think that in most instances the reports in this matter which have been published are unfounded. I approve of the principle of this Bill, but I think five years is too long a time.

Mr. MULOCK. What would be the proper time?

Mr. BERGIN. In common with the gentlemen who have spoken, I think this Bill is in the right direction. Perhaps, as the Minister of Justice has said, five years may be too long a residence previous to admission to an examination, but I do not think it would be too long before an appointment should be made to the Civil Service of this country. There is a very strong feeling throughout the country, whether rightly or wrongly, that men from the old country have a preference in these appointments, particularly when they are backed up by strong friends in the old country. I am not willing to believe this, but, as the feeling is abroad, it would be well to set that feeling at rest by putting on our statute-book a measure which would prevent these appointments within so short a time. I would not object to such men being examined the day after their arrival, but I think they should not be appointed before they have been here for at least five years.

Mr. BRIEN. I agree with the two previous speakers in regard to this measure, and I think the time is a mere matter of detail. It is only fair that our own Canadians should have a preference over any others for the Civil Service. In regard to the efficiency of the service, we know that Canadians who are brought up in this country, and have a knowledge of their work, will be able to perform their duty more efficiently than any foreigner can do, and everything should be done to keep Canada for the Canadians, as far as that is concerned. I am disposed to support this Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This Bill, which is specious in its nature, is very far-reaching, and may have effects which we do not at all contemplate or anticipate just now, and which I am sure it is not in the mind of the hon. member who introduced this Bill to bring about. The basis for the Bill appears to be the impression—as I hear from the hon member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) and my hon. friend from Stormont (Mr. Bergin)—that there has been undue preference given to strangers coming to this country, especially if they are backed by strong influence from abroad. That impression, as my hon friend has said, whether it be true or false, has got abroad and is affecting some portions of this country. I know perfectly well that there is no impression more unfounded than that. I know that, in the Civil Service, as far as I have had anything to do with the administration of public affairs, Canada has certainly been kept for the Canadians, and the fact of a man being a newcomer, even when he was peculiarly adapted for the service, has operated to his disadvantage and has kept him out. There cannot be anything more unfounded than the impression which the hon gentlemen say has gone abroad the same right when he comes to this country as he would have if he remained in that particular portion of the British Empire where he was born; and I would call the attention of my hon, friends on both sides of the House to the effect of the announcement in England, Ireland and Scotland that their people were to be considered foreigners and aliens here unless they had been in this country for five years. I would not like to prophesy as to what might be the effect of that exclusion. We hope to see the bone and sinew of the old country come to Canada. We hope to see them settling in the North-West. We hope that they will consider when they transfer themselves from England, Ireland or Scotland, say to Manitoba or the North-West, that they have the same right when they go to Regina or to Winnipeg as they would have if they had remained in the heart of England, Ireland or Scotland. It would be an unfriendly act on the part of the Dominion of Canada towards their fellow-subjects in the old country to declare them aliens. It may have a most unhappy and unwholesome effect on the connection with England, it will have the effect of loosening the tie which binds Canada to Great Britain, and loosening the interest of Ireland and Scotland in Canada. Therefore, I would strongly call upon hon. members on both sides of ine House to consider well before they make this announcement. Look at the North-West for instance, it is scarcely settled yet. Before five years expire we hope to have there a large influx of people from England, Ireland and Scotland and other foreign countries. They go there and form a community, and, to all intents and purposes, they become Canadians. There may not be a native Canadian among the whole of them, but for five years not one of them can hold any office in the Dominion of Canada. It is a reductio ad absurdum. If this Act passes it will render it impossible to govern or to administer the affairs of the great North-West. If there can be a just charge brought against this Government or any other Government that, for any reason whatever, they have neglected the rights of native Canadians and given preference to British subjects coming from without the bounds of Canada, then let the Government be met with all kinds of censure. But until that is proved, I think it would be only a mistake that we should declare that British subjects coming to this country are not to be considered on the same footing as other British subjects, that they cannot even compete for public employment, that they cannot even ask for public employment; even if they are specially qualified for some employment, they must be set aside for five years. Why, it is surprising that such a measure should be thought of, especially by an hon. member, the promoter of this Bill, who is in favor of unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, but is in favor of the restriction of the employment of his fellow-subjects.

be anything more unfounded than the impression which the hon. gentlemen say has gone abroad in reference to this, and I can challenge the most minute investigation of the Civil Service List as bearing out in every respect what I have just said. But we must consider what the effect of this measure will be. We are a portion of the British Empire. Every British subject has son why this Bill should not be adopted that it might loosen British connection. Now, if the principle at the bottom of this Bill is right, I should suppose that it would be in accordance with Conservative doctrine to say, "so much the worse for British connection.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not suppose the leader of the Opposition is serious in supporting this Bill on the ground that Canada must be for the Canadians.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is not our principle; it is yours.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We say that Canada should be for the Canadians, because we want to keep our own people at home; we want to give them employment at home, instead of adopting a fiscal system that would drive them to the United States. That is what we call the National Policy. But nobody ever dreamed of saying that the principle of Canada for the Canadians should operate to discourage immigrants from coming to our shores, and to refuse them equal rights with native Canadians after they got here. When an immigrant becomes naturalised he becomes a Canadian, and has all the rights of a Canadian. invite all the world to come to this country. pay large sums of money, we should pay larger sums of money, to induce people from abroad to come and make Canada their home, and it is absurd to say that those people who come here should, for five years, be debarred from obtaining any employment in the Government of this country. If the Bill is intended as a warning to the Government to give as little employment as possible to our fellow-subjects from Great Britain who may come to this country, there is no need of such a warning. There are now over three thousand young men and women, who have passed their examination, and are qualified for employment, and are entitled to the first consideration. But to prevent other people who come to make Canada their home, from getting positions in the Civil Service, would be nonsense, and would be a measure that no civilised Parliament in the world would think of passing. We are asking for good commercial relations with our neighbors, but shall we refuse to encourage immigration from among our neighbors? On this point I will not appeal to the hon. gentleman from Stanstead (Mr. Colby), whom our friends opposite are taking as being opposed to every kind of exchange with our neighbors to the south of us, but I appeal to hon gentlemen opposite. A man may come here from France, or Germany, or any other European country, and he may have special qualifications for some particular employment, and is it to be said that we are precluded from employing him even after he has become a Canadian by naturalisation? I do not think that there is any serious pretension to support this Bill, and if I am allowed to do so I would move that this Bill be not read now, but that it be read this day six months.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman who has just spoken says, that he does not agree with his colleague on the subject of reciprocity. I am glad that hon. gentleman still entertains the opinions that all the hon. gentlemen on that side entertained upon that subject a few years ago. We may congratulate the hon. gentleman on his conconservatism, which is different from that expressed by the President of the Council. I think there is no great difference of opinion between hon. gentlemen on this side upon the subject that is now under discussion. I apprehend that all who are British subjects and who are settled in this country with the intention of remaining here, and becoming citizens, are entitled to stand upon a footing of perfect equality, and that when people come from the continent of Europe or other countries and become Canadian entitled to exactly the same consideration as those who are born in the country, or born in the United Kingdom. come Canadian subjects, they \mathbf{should} Upon that subject I fancy there is no difference of opinion; but I apprehend that the abuse or practice, or whatever you may choose to call it real or fancied, which is pointed out by the Bill now under consideration, is this: That we do not favor the practice, if such a practice exists, of persons being brought here from the United Kingdom for the purpose of entering the Civil Service. We do not think it is right and proper that a man who would not be here at all if he were not promised a situation in the Civil Service should be brought here for the purpose of placing him in that service. Whatever the prizes may be, whether valuable or valueless, so long as they are so regarded, they ought to be those which pertain to the citizens of this country. I do not say that the citizen who was born in the country should stand in any better position, except from that superiority which his qualifications for a special office may give him. Apart from that, he should not stand in any better position than any other party; and, I think, before we undertake to pass a measure of this character we ought to be practically certain that there is a real abuse existing which it is necessary to remedy.

Mr. CASEY. I am in thorough accord with the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and I do not think it necessary to say much on the aspects of this question. I am sure this Bill is hardly needed, for one reason, that the constituents of the leader of the Government, of the Secretary of State, and of the other Ministers, are quite capable of looking after this matter, and I am quite sure no one who has no political influence in this country will secure a position in the Civil Service.

Mr. McMULLEN. I may, perhaps, be allowed to add that I am glad to hear the First Minister say that the Government have been exceedingly cautious in giving positions in the Civil Service only to those who are virtually Canadians. I am quite willing to accept the right hon. gentleman's statement, and no doubt it is true. Undoubtedly there must have been a suspicion in the public mind, that some men were admitted to the service who had been a very short time in the country. A case might arise when, as regards a particular position, the Government might find it necessary to employ such an individual, but I am glad to know that the Government are anxious to reserve the positions in the service for those who are residents here, and that this course will be followed. With respect to the statement of the Secretary of State, that three thousand young men and women have passed the Civil Service examination, I think it is a mistake to keep that servatism, and on the liberal character of that system in force as it now exists, and that a Civil-Mr. LAURIER.

Service Board of Examiners should go round once a year and invite candidates to come and be examined, and obtain certificates. In a great many cases the young men are induced to wait during several years in the hope of securing positions, and they even reach a period of life when it is almost too late to apply themselves to learning a trade or profession. The whole system of examination should be changed. The Government should be willing to accept a certificate issued by a school board or other body, such as would admit a man to a high school or collegiate institute, and if the persons holding these certificates were eligible for admission into the service, the Government would not be responsible for many young men waiting for several years anticipating engagements. change should be made, because, if it is continued, the number of young men waiting for employment in the service will certainly increase, and men will postpone learning trades or professions, which they should acquire, in order to become more useful to themselves.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Young men are well aware that they are not going to obtain situations in the Civil Service simply because they have submitted themselves for examination; but the fact of holding these examinations is not at all conducive to injury to the young men. They prepare themselves for a very severe examination. Every year the examinations are made more and more severe accepted other certificates, outside those of the Board, we would only increase the number of those qualified to be employed in the Service. do not object to certificates from high schools being accepted, but it would not remedy this supposed evil—I do not so consider it—of so many young men having passed the examination. In the United States, thousands of young men and young ladies take certificates entitling them to be employed as teachers or to hold positions in the Civil Service. It is the same here. It is perfectly well known to the candidates, and they are so warned, that, because they obtain a certificate, they are not entitled to a position in the Civil Service.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister said that the young men are perfectly well aware that the mere fact of passing examinations for the Civil Service does not entitle them to positions in the service. They do not know that, as a matter of fact. The hon. Minister's Bill, and the discussion which took place in the House, have led young men to expect, that if they pass the examinations they will secure positions in the service. I do not say it is the hon. Minister's fault. I think he means that they shall know what they do gain by passing the Civil Service examination; but it ought to be known, and is not known, that passing the examination does not entitle a man to a place in the service.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps, after the general expression of the House, the hon gentleman who moved the Bill will withdraw it. I think that would be the better plan after this discussion, and after the assurance given by myself on the part of the Government, and after the invitation I have given for any hon. gentleman to look over the Civil Service List, and see in what respect we have given undue preference to strangers.

I think my hon. friend ought, for this Session at all events, to withdraw the Bill.

Mr. McMULLEN. After the assurance that has been given by the First Minister that the Government will in the future, as they have in the past—

Mr. LAURIER. Oh no; not the past.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, after the assurance that Canada is to be kept for the Canadians, and after he has stated that when places become vacant the preference will be given to Canadians and not to those from outside, I have no objection to withdraw the measure.

Mr. MULOCK. Do I understand that the Government guarantee is that they will only do as well in the future as they have done in the past?

Mr. MITCHELL. They are going to do better. Mr. MULOCK. I think that the complaint about this Bill is that they have not done well in the past. They must do better in the future than in the past.

Motion withdrawn.

INDIAN ADVANCEMENT ACT.

Mr. DOYON (Translation) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 42) to amend chapter 44 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, intituled: "The Indian Advancement Act." He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this Bill I wish to make some observations. Chapter 44 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, intituled: "The Indian Advancement Act," was applied a year ago to the Caughnawaga Reserve. That Act provides that the Indians to whom it shall apply shall have the right to elect councillors. Section 10 of this Act states the objects as to which the council shall have the right to pass by-laws, but it also provides that these bylaws shall be binding only when sanctioned by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. This is the section I wish to amend. The object of the amendment I propose is to extend the powers of the council of the Caughnawaga Reserve, by providing that the by-laws of the council shall be valid without requiring the sanction of the Superintendent General. I am seeking to introduce this amendment to the Act in respect to the Caughnawaga Reserve only, because Tknow the Indians on this reserve more particularly, and I think they are more advanced than a good many other Indians. Indeed, the neighborhood of the towns of Lachine and Montreal with which they have daily intercourse, has greatly tended to their rapid advancement; their daily relations with the inhabitants of the Counties of Laprairie and Chauteauguay have also greatly tended to their advancement. There are to be found among the inhabitants of the reserve well-educated people. There are doctors, lawyers, law students, and they generally, a good many of them, speak the French language and the English language as fluently as their own language. There are even some who have taken to farming, and a good many are farming with the implements used by the farmers of the adjacent counties. The report of the hon, the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs mentions the fact that this Indian tribe is far advanced and supports my statement in reference to their farming with improved implements. I quote from the report for 1889 the following paragraph:—

"The Iroquois of the adjoining County of Laprairie experienced also a year of prosperity, but the crops of 1888 were, with the exception of oats and hay, inferior in their yield to those of the preceding season. The increase in the number of new houses and barns and in their supply of farming implements and cattle indicates healthy progress. They own among them as many as twenty threshing machines."

This is, among others, one reason that goes to show that these Indians are comparatively more advanced than a good many other tribes. Mr. Speaker, I am not concealing to myself the importance of the amendment I am seeking to introduce. But should I entertain doubts as to the justice of what I claim, the fact that the Government passed an Act granting them the right to vote for a member of this House would be sufficient in itself to warrant my present request. In fact, they were granted by an Act of Parliament, in 1885, the right to vote for a member of the House of Commons, and they were recognised as capable, like any other citizens of this country, to manage the public affairs. Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask whether, after that, it would be fair to maintain the restriction contained in this section 10 of the Indian Advancement Act which reserves to the Superintendent General the right to decide whether the by-laws passed by the Indians through their council shall become law or not. Mr. Speaker, I think I am warranted in saying that the management of local affairs requires less capacity and knowledge than the management of public affairs. And I take it for granted that it requires less skill for one to manage his own cooking than to manage that of the whole country. No one supported more than I did the Government when they granted to these Indians the right to vote. No one, moreover, wishes more earnestly than I do, that the affairs of this reserve be carefully and wisely managed, and that harmony should prevail among them. But one must remember that the powers granted to this council with respect to the objects as to which they have a right to pass by-laws, are not as extended as those which are granted to our ordinary municipal councils. Under the present system, it is the agent who, so to speak, exclusively manages the affairs of the reserve, for I think the Department interferes only on the advice of the agent, and, if I am not mistaken, I believe the Superintendent General never went there once in order to ascertain for himself how the affairs of the reserve were managed. I have here the resolutions which were passed a year ago by the council of the Indians, and a whole year's experience must be sufficient to enable us to judge whether these people are fit to properly manage their own affairs. Allow me to read a proof of these resolutions for the purpose of showing whether they know their interests and their needs, and whether they are qualified to properly manage their affairs. The first thing the council did, as soon as it was properly organised, was to ask for the appointment of a health committee. Here is the resolution:

"Resolved, no one dissenting, that Dr. Patton, Michel Delisle and Joseph Barnes, be appointed to take charge of the sanitary affairs of the reserve, as sanctioned at the last sitting of the council held on the 23rd April last."
Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter the Depart-

Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter the Department never thought of, and yet the Caughnawaga

Mr. Doyon.

Indians, up to last year, were exposed, like any other citizens, to contagious diseases. The House must remember that in 1885, when an epidemic of smallpox was raging in Montreal, several Caughnawaga Indians died of that disease. There was then no council, and had there been one it would not have prevented them from dying. But, by order of the constable and by order of the Government, children and adults were buried in the fields near the residence of their relatives. I, myself, saw the places where these people were buried, and the corpses are there still, enclosed with fences, in the heart of pastures. I think that, had the Caughnawaga council existed at that time, they would not have allowed that members of their tribe should be buried in the fields, for there was there, as everywhere else, a graveyard; and I am not aware that in any other parish in the Province, people who died of this disease or other contagious diseases, were buried in the fields. I know, as a matter of fact, that their being compelled to come to the Government, for the approval of by-laws passed by the council, is the cause of delays that are detrimental to the good management of the affairs of the reserve. Thus I find that on 3rd May the council passed a resolution asking for the appointment of a tumpike man, his predecessor having gone away. This resolution was passed at the time when the animals are generally sent into pastures. This toll-gate is situated over the common which intervenes between it and the quarries. Well, the answer of the Government did not come but a month later. The council also passed resolutions asking for the erection of fences to enclose Answers were very slow in coming. I do not say that that is owing to the bad administration of the Government; it is rather because the agent was compelled to draw up the resolutions, and forward them here, in order that the Department might consider them previous to their being carried out. The council passed another resolution, asking for the removal of the organist of the Catholic church, and the Department answered, a month afterwards, that they allowed the removal, and authorised them to deduct a month's salary, because the answer had been delayed a month's time. They also passed a resolution recommending a man named Murray as a measurer of stones; the Department would not allow the appointment. Mr. Murray was formerly chief of the tribe, and the present measurer of stones on the reserve is also a policeman; and, moreover, he is a mulatto. Were there no other reason than patronising a member of the tribe. I think the Government ought to have complied with the request of the council, even had that resolution only been passed by way of a petition. The council also appointed special constables, and the Government sanctioned the resolution passed to that effect. Subsequently, on 27th September the council passed a resolution recommending the removal of Mr. Moïse Lefort, as policeman, and the appointment in his stead, with a reduction of $200 in salary, of Mr. Louis Beauvais, a former Indian chief, an Indian who had held a chieftainship during thirty-four years, and the same party who had been removed as organist. That is to say, Mr. Lefort received a salary of $365 a year, and Mr. Beauvais was willing to do the same service for $165. Department would not approve of this resolution; not only did they not approve of it, but instead of complying with the wishes of the council, who were unanimous in asking for the removal of Moïse Lefort-for the six councillors were unanimous in requesting that he should be replaced; some were recommending Mr. Beauvais and some Mr. Stacey; but the whole six wanted another man at a reduction of about $200 in the salary-the Government, I say, not only would not approve of the resolution, but they also increased the salary of the policeman. By referring to the report of the Indian Department for 1888, I find that the salary of Mr. Moïse Lefort as policeman, at Caughnawaga, last year, was $233 and that he was allowed an extra sum of $19 for clothing. And in the report for 1889, I find that his salary has been increased to $396 and that he has been allowed for clothing a sum of $54.75. So that it can be seen that the Department not only would not yield to the wishes of the council by approving the appointment of another policeman who would have cost a good deal less, but that they also increased the salary of Mr. Lefort. Well, Mr. Speaker, this same policeman has been in Caughnawaga for more than ten years. Ten years ago, the Indians were not recognised as voters in the country, and I think they must have been less civilised than they are now. Last year, the council appointed two additional policemen to assist in the preservation of order on the reserve. I think this was a reason that should have impelled the Government to comply with the request of the council. But what reason did the Department allege for not allowing the replacing of Mr. Lefort? I think the answer of the Superintendent General concluded by saying: "So long as Mr. Lefort shall discharge his duties as he now does, the Government shall not deem it expedient to have him replaced." Well, this policeman holds two offices at the same time. He is both a policeman and a measurer of stones; so that he sells his time twice to the tribe, and he receives two salaries, although he cannot possibly be in two places at the same time. I think this is a serious evil. Moreover, I cannot well see how the hon. the Minister of the Interior can reconcile his answer to the council by which he declines to allow the replacing of Mr. Lefort, by an Indian, with the following statement contained in his report for 1889, pages 13 and 14:

"The presence on an Indian reserve of an officer of the law cannot but have a good moral effect on an Indian band generally, and by one of the members of the band filling that position the detection of crime will, it is considered, be rendered more certain, and proof of guilt will be more easily obtained than it could be were a white man to hold the office; besides, the expense is very much lessened by employing Indians as police."

Well, Mr. Speaker, quite the contrary was done. The Superintendent Genéral of Indians Affairs states the expense would be very much lessened by employing an Indian as policeman. I agree with him, and I am of the opinion that the employing of a negro is more expensive. It is a well-known fact that the present policeman is not an Indian. He is a mulatto. This is what the council understood last year, when they asked for the replacing of Mr. Lefort by an Indian, which the Government would not allow. The Department, by refusing to allow the resolution of the council, caused serious dissatisfaction among the tribe. Since the Department would not approve of the last resolution—that is since the 27th September—certain council-lors would no more attend the sittings of the council; if they ever went there it was for the sole purpose of enquiring whether the resolution passed at the last sitting had been approved of or not. This has been a source of difficulty, and I might say that the affairs of the reserve have been neglected. If I am to judge by the report of the hon. the Superintendent General, unfortunate reports were made to the Department. I quote again the following from the report for 1889:—

"The Indian Advancement Act was last year applied by order of Your Excellency to this band, but owing to the obstructive conduct of some of the councillors, notoriously of one of them who acts as their ringleader, the beneficial effects of the same upon the community, which were so hopefully looked for, have not been as yet experienced."

Mr. Speaker, I do not know who can possibly have brought the hon. Minister to such a state of mind. By referring to the report of the very agent of the Indians where the Department take their information, I notice that, on page 32 of the first part, after referring to the births, the sanitary condition of the tribe and the crop, he concludes by saying:—

"The Indians of this reserve are prosperous, and I can say that in general they are progressing." So that the agent says they are progressing, and the hon. the Superintendent General says they are retrograding. I am sometimes led to presume that there might be some secret correspondence between the agent and the Department that does not appear in the report. Mr. Speaker, after what I have just stated, I hope the Government will not be unwilling to accept the amendment I am seeking to introduce. We might perhaps be told by the Government that it would not be wise to extend the powers of the council. Allow me to relate a few facts recorded in the debates of this House which will enable us to decide as to the manner in which the Government have managed the affairs of the Indians and whether the council themselves could more unwisely manage their affairs. There is a large quarry at Caughnawaga, and the lease of it is one of the best sources of reserve for the tribe. The quarry was leased to the Indians. Some time ago I enquired from the Government, as to the names of the parties to whom the quarry had been leased; whether the Government had taken sureties, and whether those who worked the quarry were indebted? It appears from the answer of the Department that these quarries were leased without any surety being taken, and that the lessees are indebted to the amount of nearly $4,000. Those who are familiar with the law relating to Indians know that it is difficult to have their property sold, and I think judgments were rendered in Montreal, by which it was held that it was impossible to have the real property of the Indians or their houses sold. When I made that enquiry, I never intended to be informed as to the private affairs of the parties who had leased this quarry, but I thought it my duty to comply with the wishes of my constituents, and to ascertain how their affairs were managed. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Indians, left to themselves, would not have leased their quarry without taking some additional surety besides the word of the parties who leased it. Here is another fact. In 1882, the Government had the Caughnawaga reserve surveyed. The survey lasted from 1882 to 1888. The

man, but the Department appointed him on his own recommendation, as recorded in the Hansard of 1887. According to his report, the reserve contained 12,327 acres of land, and the Government paid for the survey of that reserve out of the funds of the band, the handsome sum of $22,250, that is to say, a sum of $1.80 per acre. Some time ago, the hon member for Huron enquired from the Government, as to the cost to the Government of surveys in Manitoba and the North-West, and the answer came that they cost a little over four cents per acre, including office expenses. Now, Mr. Speaker, I earnestly feel that the Government was not warranted in taking so large a sum out of the funds of the band to cover the survey of that reserve. I am not an expert in surveys, but all the surveyors to whom I have spoken about that matter agreed that it was an enormous sum; and they would not believe it, until I showed them the answer of the Minister as recorded in the debates of this House. There is a difference of $1.76 per acre between the cost of the survey in Caughnawaga, in close proximity to Montreal, and that of the surveys in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. All these facts show, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the Department do not manage the affairs of the reserves with much care and saving, and that it would not be unwise to grant to the Caughnawaga Council the object of my request. I have shown, moreover, some days ago, that there was a sum of $3,333.33 which belonged to the Indians, the interest on which they had a right to, and of which nothing was heard for these last ten years. I have no news of it yet, and, if I judge by the answer the Minister gave me, he is not quite sure of finding it out. Still it exists, and the Indians are losing the interest on it. Another matter which was not managed with much care—I have referred to it a few days ago in this House-is shown by the carelessness with which the seigniorial rents of Caughnawaga were collected. These rents are paid by the farmers of the Counties of Chateauguay and Laprairie. The Indians have been losing the benefit of these rents, which should have been paid annually, and the censitaires paid nothing whatever these last twenty-five or thirty years. While the Indians were incurring this loss no good service whatever was rendered to the inhabitants of those counties, who could easily have paid two, three, or four dollars rent each year, while they are now sued in sums ranging from two to three and four hundred dollars for the payment of these rents. This is another instance of the carelessness with which the affairs were managed by the Department, and they cannot plead now that there would be danger in granting to the Indians the management of their own affairs. Indeed, I think the latter could not do worse than that. But what is more, Mr. Speaker, if I am to believe the report of the Auditor General, there is nothing left in the funds of the Indians but a sum of $85.75. I have always heard that the traveller whose pockets are empty has no fear of singing out in the midst of thieves. And if they have nothing left there is no danger in freeing them. I shall, therefore, conclude these remarks by saying it would be fair to extend the powers of the council as asked for in my amendment, and I hope that my request will have the support of the whole House. Mr. Doyon.

Having a few Indians in my Mr. CASEY. county, I have an interest in this question, and as nearly as I can understand the principle of the Bill proposed by the hon. member (Mr. Doyon) is that the Indians shall have full municipal powers to carry on matters concerning their tribes, to the same extent as the powers given to township councils. At the present time, the powers of the Indians in regard to their municipal affairs are subject to revision from headquarters at Ottawa, or from the agent in charge of the tribe. I think, as my hon. friend does, that if the Indian is qualified to vote for a member of this House, he is qualified to manage his own municipal affairs, and, to put it briefly, for this reason, I support the Bill of my hon. friend.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am sorry I am unable to accept the Bill of the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Doyon). The Act which the hon. gentleman wishes to amend has only been in force for some two years, and very few of our Indians have taken advantage of it. From what has been reported to us, if there is one band of Indians who should not get the advantage proposed to be given to them by the hon. member, it is the band which that hon. gentleman has been advocating. The reports we have had in reference to the business which has been transacted by the council of the Caughnawaga tribe, has been anything but satisfactory. In fact the hon gentleman himself in his speech has indicated that that has been the case, because he read a paragraph of my annual report of this year, which goes on to say: "that the council of this band has been the cause of a good deal of trouble, and that the good results we expected from the Franchise Act being extended to them had not resulted." Before this Act was extended to this reserve, a petition was sent to the Department signed by a majority of the band. There was a large minority who were opposed to it, and when the election took place, the leaders of the obstructive party were the ones who were returned as members to the council. They passed several by-laws, and they were submitted in accordance with the Act to the Department. One of these was thought to be objectionable, and on its being returned to them and their being notified to that effect, two or three of the members of the council commenced to obstruct the business of the council, and from that day to this no business has been transacted. As the hon, gentleman has said, the by-law to which the Department took exception recommended that a man named Beauvin, I presume one of the Indians of the reserve, should be appointed to fill the place of the Dominion policeman on the reserve, who had for years occupied that position with satisfaction to the Department and to the restoration of order, which had hitherto been very much disturbed. The bill also recommended a man named Murray as a measurer of stones. Both of these recommendations were reported very strongly against by our agent. The man recommended for the position of Dominion policeman was reported by the agent as notorious for drinking to excess at times. It was on that report that assent was refused to the by-law. This is the first case in which any by-law passed by a band of Indians, which has taken advantage of the Enfranchisement Act, has been refused assent, and I think it would be a great pity at this early date, while the Act is still on its trial, to take this power out of the hands of the Superintendent General. To show that there is a very strong feeling on the reserve in reference to the manner in which these councillors have carried on their work, I will read the following petition, which I received a few days ago:

"The humble petition of Thomas Kanatsohare, Ennias Ohahakete, Louis Kenwenderhon and others, respectfully

waga was held at Caughnawaga, the twenty-sixth day of March last past, eighteen hundred and eighty-nine.

"That, according to the Indian Advancement Act, the first election of councillors for the Reserve of Caughnawaga was held at Caughnawaga, the twenty-sixth day of March last past, eighteen hundred and eighty-nine.

"That, at the said election, one Louis F. Jackson was elected councillor for section six (6), which comprises the elected councillor for section six (6), which comprises the village of Caughnawaga.

"That ever since said election, said Louis F. Jackson has unworthily discharged the office of councillor.

"That said Louis F. Jackson has worked openly against the best interests of the Indians of the Reserve, by continually obstructing the business of the council for said Reserve of Caughnawaga, he being assisted thereto by two other councillors, to wit: Mitchell Bourdeau and Mitchell Daillebout, whom said Louis F. Jackson induced to absent themselves from the meetings of the council in order to cause want of quorum.

"That out of twelve meetings of the council called for by the Indian agent from the twenty-second day of April, eighteen hundred and eighty-nine, to the twenty-seventh day of January, eighteen hundred and interty, they the said Councillors, Louis F. Jackson, Mitchell Bourdeau and Mitchell Daillebout did not assist at seven council meetings, and at three other council meetings, they assisted of a quorum.

"That these proceedings, to which said Councillors, Louis F. Jackson, Mitchell Bourdeau and Mitchell Daillebout resorted, are inimical and detrimental to the welfare and prosperity of the Indians of the Reserve of Caughnawaga.

"That said Louis F. Jackson is unworthy to sit as a member of the Council, being an habitual drunkard, which, according to the hereinabove mentioned Act, is sufficient to disqualify a member of the council.

"That all these facts mentioned in the premises are well known and public.
"That the election for new councillors will take place on the twenty-sixth day of March, instant, at the Village on the twenty-sixth day of Alaxon, Alaxon, and of Caughnawaga.

"Wherefore your petitioners pray that the disqualification of said Louis F. Jackson, Mitchell Bourdeau and Mitchell Daillebout be immediately proceeded with and that, at the coming election for new councillors, they be not allowed to become candidates.

"And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray.
"CAUGHNAWAGA, 18th March, 1890."

This petition is signed by ten of the principal Indians on the reserve and by one councillor. I have no doubt, as the hon. gentleman states, that there are a great many sound and intelligent Indians on the reserve, but they do not appear to take an active part in the municipal affairs of the reserve, and while that is the case, I think we shall have to continue the very wise provision which gives the Superintendent General the power of approving the by-laws which have been passed. The reports that have reached me compel me to come to that conclusion, and I think any one who knows the Indians and remembers that this Act is really on trial, will see the wisdom of continuing that provision at present.

Mr. LAURIER. The Act which it is now sought to amend by this Bill is entitled "The Indian Advancement Act," and it provides that the municipal councils on the reserves shall have the power to pass by-laws, which, however, may not become law on the reserve until they have been approved by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. The powers given to the councils are not of a very high order. They provide of ten men only, in charging him with drunkenness for the maintenance of schools, the care of the public health, the preservation of public order, the repression of intemperance, the sub-division of the land in the reserve, the prevention of trespass, the construction and repair of schoolhouses, the construction and maintenance of roads and bridges, the construction and maintenance of water-courses, and so on. Now, the object of this Bill is simply to provide that in the reserve of Caughnawaga the by-laws passed by the council shall become valid without the sanction of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. In my judgment the Bill of my hon. friend only lacks in one respect, that it does not go far enough and apply to all the reserves. At present we have this anomaly: this Parliament, influenced by the Government, passed a law some five years ago giving the suffrage to the Indians; so that though you allow them to participate in the affairs of the country, though you give them the right of exercising the highest privilege of civilised men, yet you do not allow them to dispose of their own petty affairs on their reserve. In the name of common sense, I ask the hon. Minister who now resists this Bill, and in whose opinion the Indians of Caughnawaga have a right to vote in parliamentary elections—a right to pronounce on his conduct as a Minister—on what principle can he defend this anomaly or refuse to allow them to conduct their own municipal affairs? If there is any reason whatever why the franchise should be given to the Indians, I cannot conceive how, in the name of common sense, this amendment should not be adopted. The hon, gentleman says that the Indians have not shown themselves fit to exercise the powers given them on the Caughnawaga reserve. He said that the councillors have been obstructive, and charged one of the men known to the whole world as Capt. Jackson, who commanded the Canadian boatmen in Egypt, during Lord Wolseley's campaign, with drunkenness. I was surprised to hear this man charged with drunkenness by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is from his own friends.

Mr. LAURIER. This is from his enemies. The hon, gentleman was all the less warranted in making that assertion since he knows that Captain Jackson, whom he was asked to disqualify by ten men of the tribe, has been elected as councillor no less than three weeks ago. In the face of such a certificate given to Mr. Jackson by his own fellowcountrymen, the hon. gentleman has no warrant in charging him with drunkenness, and I lay against the hon, gentleman that he did not discharge his duty as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs towards this man, who is his ward, and that Mr. Jackson deserved better treatment at his hands. The hon, gentleman has received a petition demanding the disqualification of Jackson as a councillor, but that petition is signed by only ten men of the tribe, and, if I am not mistaken, the hon. gentleman has in his hands a petition coming also from the tribe, but signed not by ten men, but by 110 men, approving of every act of Mr. Jackson as a councillor. I do not know whether I am wrong or not, but I am informed that the hon. gentleman has such a petition in his hands, and if he has, how in the name of justice and fair play could he rely upon a petition especially when the conduct of Mr. Jackson as a member of the council has been approved by his election by a handsome majority over his adversaries. I may also state that Capt. Jackson is an interpreter in the courts of Montreal appointed by the Quebec Government. The hon gentleman has also said that the council have not discharged their duties properly. I cannot see that from anything that has occurred. If I followed the speech of my hon. friend from Laprairie (Mr. Doyon) correctly, he stated that one of the first acts of the council was to appoint a board of health; a resolution, by the way, which received the approval of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. Then, they passed a resolution with reference to a toll-gate, which also received the approval of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs; then, they passed a by-law to compel parties to erect fences, which also received the Superintendent General's approval. In fact all the by-laws and resolutions received his approval, until the resolution was passed dismissing Lefort, who was receiving a salary of $360 a year, and appointing another in his place, who was to cost the tribe only $165 a year. This resolution did not receive the approval of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. No valid reason has been given by the hon. gentleman for his refusal. It is the opinion of the Department that wherever possible a full-blooded Indian should be appointed in preference to a white man or a half-breed, and in proposing Beauvais as constable to replace Lefort, who is a half-breed, the council acted on this principle, and showed a proper economy in the expenditure of their own money; for by appointing Beauvais, who was approved by the Indians, they saved $200 a year. Unless, therefore, some very good reason can be given by the Department for interfering with the action of the council, they cannot be justified in acting as they did. If I am to believe, and I have no reasons for not believing, the statements of the hon. member for Laprairie, the Indians would have administered their own affairs infinitely better than they have been administered by the Department of Indian Affairs. What do we hear? My hon, friend brings this charge against the Department, that a survey was made, under orders of the Government, of the reserve which contains 12,000 acres, and yet this survey cost no less than $22,000. It cost $1.80 per acre, although the reserve is at the very door of Montreal, within five miles of that city, and in face of the fact that, in the North-West Territories, the survey of the wild lands there cost but four cents an acre. Under such circumstances, what reason can be given by the Department in defence of their own action? There was at one time a lump sum in the hands of the Department to the credit of the band at Caughnawaga, and there is now left, I understand, but the small sum of $85; and this is due to the squandering of $22,000 on a survey of 12,000 Under such circumstances, the acres of land. Indians are justified in believing that they would have managed their own affairs better than the Department has managed them, and that is a good reason why the amendment of my hon. friend should pass. I find only one fault with the Bill of my hon. friend, and that is that it does not asked for this change, must, therefore, not need it go far enough; but he takes the interests of those whom he has in charge, and the reasons reserve with which I have more personal connection Mr. LAURIER.

he has given should induce the House to accept the Bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not rise with the object of adding anything to the discussion of this Bill, so far as it applies to the reserve of Laprairie, with which my hon, friend from that county is more particularly acquainted; but I do rise for the purpose of saying a word in connection with the effect of the Indian Advancement Act on the Indians in the reserve in the county which I have the honor to represent. Let me say at once, that the proposition of the leader of the Opposition is a very debatable one, namely, that this Bill should apply to all the reserves that come under the operation of this Act. On the other hand, the Bill of the hon. member for Laprairie, applying as it does to only one reserve, does not seem to me to be one which we should deal with very seriously. It seems to me that the question which the hon. gentleman discusses is this: That there has been a dispute in the reserve of Caughnawaga recently, such as might arise in a township council of any municipality in any of the Provinces, and on account of that dispute and the evil effects arising therefrom, the hon. gentleman asks us to pass a measure, an Act in this House, which shall apply to that reserve and no other. It appears to me, Sir, that such is not the kind of legislation which is the rule in this Parliament. I do not for a moment doubt the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's statements that the Indians whom he has the honor to represent are an intelligent tribe, but the expressions of compliment and eulogy which he has used in regard to them, apply also, and perhaps in a stronger sense, to some Indians in the Province from which I come. I know that as to the Mississaugas of the Credit, who have their reserve in the County of Haldimand, anything which he has said may be said more strongly in regard to their intelligence. They are cultivating the soil extensively; there are many of them highly educated; they live in good houses, and one of them occupies the responsible position of Indian agent on the reserve. They are one of the few bands, I believe, in the Province of Ontario who have been, at their own request, allowed the operation of the Indian Advancement Act, and no difficulties have arisen in the operation of that Act among them. They have not at all objected to their by-laws being supervised by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and I am not informed of any reserve, except the one to which the hon gentleman refers, on which the Indians have asked that they should be relieved from the revision of their by-laws. seems to me that it is necessary to have an Indian agent, representing the Government, resident on and in practical control of the reserve, because he must be the means of communication between the Indians and the Department of Indian Affairs. Not only that, but he must be the officer of the Department in connection with the reserve; and as long as the Indian agent is admitted to be a necessity, he remains the adviser of the Government, and the Government must follow his advice in relation to matters connected with the reserve. It appears to me, that the Indians not having is concerned. There are certain amendments, which I think, though they have not been very strongly agitated, are, nevertheless, necessary to the successful operation of this Act. Hon. gentlemen who refer to the Indian Advancement Act will notice that the reserve has to be divided into wards for the election of councillors. I believe hon, gentle-men from Ontario, at all events, will admit that the division of rural municipalities for the election of municipal councils did not receive very great support, and that, where that system was once adopted, it was ultimately dropped in many municipalities. That is true in regard to the Indian reserves, and the necessity of dividing them into wards should be amended, so that the members elected from the reserve to the council may be elected by the reserve as a whole. Another amendment which is required is that there should be one day for nomination and another for polling, as there is in the other municipalities. Another amendment asked by the Indians particularly, is that those who become members of the council of the reserve shall be empowered to have pay voted to them, if they have the funds, as other municipalities are empowered. While these amendments are desirable and some of them necessary, I do not think the one proposed by the hon. gentleman is necessary, as the Indians have not asked for it, and there has been no question raised in regard to it, except in the reserve which he represents, and no voice to this Parliament but his own, and I am inclined to think he is entirely influenced by the dispute to which I have referred. I shall, therefore, oppose this measure.

Mr. BURDETT. While I have pleasure in agreeing with a good deal of what the hon, gentleman has just said, I do not understand why he and others on that side of the House do not treat the Indian as they speak of him, and talk of him, and talk at him. Then he is an intelligent and refined gentleman, but, when they deal with him here, he is a ward of the Department, and must be looked after under the protection of the Royal Court at Ottawa; and, as in the case of a good many improvident guardians, I think the infant's estate has suffered from these to a great extent, to the benefit of the guardian and the loss of the infant and his friends. I happen to know something of one Indian reserve at any rate; and it appears to me to be very extraordinary, if these Indians are so well educated, and so intelligent, and so well informed—and many of them are—and if, by the persistence of the Government, they have been given the power to vote at Dominion elections, they cannot be allowed to pass a by-law to appoint a constable without its being liable to be set aside by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. resolutions and by-laws must be dealt with by the Government here while no other municipality is so dealt with. The by-law passed by any other municipality must be dealt with by the courts of law. Why not treat with these highly educated and intelligent Indians as you do with any other intelligent gentlemen, and why not allow the councillors elected by the Indians to have the same power to pass by-laws which others have. I have. a great interest in the Indians? I was born on an Indian reserve, and can claim some interest at all events in the locality.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You were enfranchised.

Mr. BURDETT. When the First Minister did me the honor, before the last election, of visiting that reserve with what, I think, was called the chestnut combination—a company composed of many members of the Government, and others—he was received at Deseronto, a flourishing town which was formerly a part of the reserve, with great kindness and cordiality, and he was presented by the head chief of the Mohawks with a fine cane. I am glad to see that he has not been called upon to use that cane in consequence of any failure of his physical power. I was not invited upon that occasion, possibly because of my political persuasion, but I was informed that the hon. gentlemen said Sam Burdett claims to be a half-breed, but I am a full-breed. Well, I now ask this fullbreed to give the other full-breeds the full municipal power to manage their own affairs, and I have no doubt the hon, gentleman will do so when it is called to his attention. Now, with respect to this question of giving the Indians the right to vote, although there may or may not be any objection to it—I was not here and did not take a hand in the argument—it appears to me that it is hardly consistent with the liberty a man ought to enjoy. when he votes, that you should say to him: I control your moneys, I control your lands, I control the appointment of your officials, I control the power to remove your councillors for intemperance or almost anything else, although I cannot do it in other municipal councils; in other words, I have you tied hand and foot, so now you are free, go and vote as you see fit. If you give these men the power to vote, also give them the liberty to vote freely as they see fit. If you give them the power to elect councillors, give those councillors the same power as you give to others. I do not look upon the Indian as a ward, I look upon him as an ally. I do not understand they are subjects by subjugation. They came in by treaty. The Six Nations claim that they came in by treaty, that they are independent nations, that they are allies, and when they address the Governor General or any other superior, they address him as brother, because they claim that they are equals in a national sense, although under the protection of this Government, because the Government gave them that right in our original treaties. But by law and by statute they are allies of the British Crown, and any liberty that has been taken from them, or any rights that have been taken from them, have been taken by Act of Parliament, and they now ask to have some measure of those rights given back to them. I quite understand the objection to this Bill being limited to one tribe only. It ought not to be so limited, but it ought to apply to all tribes in the same position, and in the same condition. I, therefore, respectfully submit that as the Indians are growing in intelligence and in prosperity, they ought to be further enfranchised, they ought to have greater liberties allowed them, in fact they ought to be treated as equals and not as wards.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is a very important Bill, and it is in a great measure the necessary outcome of the legislation of the Government. A few years ago the hon. gentleman, whonow leads the Government, made a report upon the subject of establishing municipal councils amongst the Indians, and he stated that upon enquiry he did not think they were qualified to discharge the duties that devolved upon an ordinary council in reference to municipal affairs. But the hon. gentleman very shortly afterwards thought those people who were not qualified to discharge the duties of ordinary municipal councillors, were qualified to discharge the important duties of the elective franchise; while not capable of judging with regard to their local and municipal matters, they were capable of judging with regard to the affairs of the nation. Now, it seems to me that it is impossible for the Government to stand still; they must either resile from the position they have taken on the subject of the elective franchise, or they must go further and grant to the Indians full emancipation. The hon, gentleman has, in the report relating to the political enfranchisement of the Indians, recognised the principle of property qualification. Now, so far as the white population are concerned, property is regarded as an indication of thrift and industrious habits, and the party who possesses property is, primâ facie, supposed to be qualified to exercise the electoral franchise. But that rule does not apply to the possession of property by the Indians. The Superintendent General controls his property, he cannot put it in jeopardy; in effect the Crown holds it for him, and no matter how unthrifty he may be in his habits, no matter how extravagant or idle, he still retains the qualification upon which he is entitled to vote. No white man stands in that position. The Indian is not a part of the body politic, he does not assist in the administration of justice, he does not act as a juror, he is not called upon to discharge any military duties, he is an isolated individual so far as the general population is concerned. He is simply a member of a tribe, and so far as the Six Nations are concerned, they no doubt stand by treaty in the exact position which the hon. gentleman who has preceded me has stated. They claim to be the allies of the Crown, they are so recognised by treaty. The Six Nations and the Cherokees in the colonies took a particular position and never claimed to be subjects of the Crown. They were always spoken of and treated as allies, and in the Treaty of Utrecht, by Article 15 these Indians were expressly recognised as allies, and the land of which they were in possession was held in trust by the Crown on their behalf. Of course, by the action of the British Government and by the decision of the courts, this principle has to some extent been departed from. But it would not be difficult for the Indians to discharge the duties devolving upon them with as much success as they are discharged by the Superintendent General in this particular. Now, my hon friend beside me (Mr. Laurier) tells us—I think it is a matter to which this House ought to give some attention-that 12,000 acres of a reserve was surveyed, and that the survey of that reserve has cost upwards of $22,000—that it has cost about $1.80 an acre. does seem to me that was an improvident expenditure of the Indian fund, and it ought not to pass without the serious consideration of Parliament, and the Superintendent General ought to bring down to the House the papers which would enable the House to form some judgment with regard to this particular transaction. Now, my hon friend behind me (Mr. Doyon) has called attention to the the rest of the community; but if the Government Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

condition of things that exists in this particularreserve. This House, upon the advice of the Government, has conferred upon these Indians the electoral franchise. You have said they are capable of exercising judgment, not merely with regard to the qualification of councillors, but with regard to these important questions that are put in issue in every general election, questions of free trade and protection, the question of the independence of Parliament, the question of elective franchise—all these are questions upon which the Indians are asked to pass an opinion, and if that is so, how can the Government come down to the House and say that these people are not capable of electing a council without our interference, that they are not capable of judging of the simplest matters without having to refer to the Superintendent General? I do not say that we ought not to exercise a supervision over the Indians and protect their interest, but if the intellectual and social condition of the Indians is such as to require an interference from the Superintendent General, and require his supervision, they are not in a condition to exercise the elective franchise properly; neither are they in a position to exercise the elective franchise properly if they are made wards of the Government. If the Government is capable of supervising their acts and interfering with their liberties at every step, you must either withdraw from that position and give to the Indians complete control over their own affairs, whatever the consequences may be to them, or you must withdraw from them those elective privileges which you have conferred upon them, by which you undertake to make them part of the community if they are not part, and of which they never were a part. He has stood separate and apart from the rest of the community, recognised, as the Congress of the United States has said, as a dependent nation; he is no more a member of the community than a member of a tribe of gypsies is a member of the body politic. That being so, the Government cannot, on any fair or just principle, resist the measure which my hon. friend has They must either consent to abandon submitted. their supervision over the Indians and give them full emancipation, or withdraw from the position they have taken, and withdraw from them the elective franchise. The ordinary course of proceeding is to begin to confer these rights which are regarded as the most elementary. No one in his senses will undertake to teach a boy the integral calculus before he has learned arithmetic, and become acquainted with the more simple elements of mathematical calculations. He will not undertake to teach Greek before English. would undertake to confer on an Indian the very highest mark of modern civilisation and with-hold from him those provisions which every civilised community permits to be exercised by members of the community. But that is what the Government have been doing, and they must either go further or retrace their steps and leave the Indian as he was before, to become a member of the community and enjoy the rights that pertain to every other citizen when he is prepared to assume the responsibilities which belong to every other man. If he has control of his own property, if he is capable of holding it and disposing of what he possesses, then he stands in the same position as take charge of him and his property and treat him as incapable of taking care of himself, why ask Parliament to confer on the Indians the power of controlling the destinies of the country, as was done by the Act considered some time ago? The position of the Government is a most illogical and absurd one, and they must either give up the ground which they formerly took, or they must give up their protection over the Indians.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has addressed to the House an argument, full of his usual acuteness and ability, against the Franchise Act which was passed some years ago, and some of the arguments, I fancy, have been used on a former occasion. But this is not a question at all connected with the Franchise Act, it is not connected with it in the slightest degree, and the circumstances are quite different. I remember perfectly well that hon. gentlemen prided themselves on the persistence with which they opposed the Indians receiving the franchise at all, and by their persistence they forced the Government to limit the franchise to those particular Indians who were able to show that by their position, prudence and acquisition of property they were worthy of the franchise. There is a wide distinction between voting by an Indian under the Franchise Act and voting by an Indian with respect to tribal In the latter case there is no limitation. Every Indian, including the wild and dissolute Indian, has a right to vote in the council of the tribe as well as those who have not earned under the Franchise Act the right to vote in elections to this House. The hon. gentleman says he is in favor of the Superintendent General having supervision over the Indians. He and I agree on that point, and he agrees with the law as it is to-day. It may be if we resist this motion, if he and I vote together against this Bill, that I may be inconsistent. that is not the question. The question is, whether, under this Bill, the law should be altered so as to allow the Indians to act without any supervision. The hon, gentleman will not agree that they should be allowed to act without any such supervision, and he will not agree that the present law should be altered. After that Bill is defeated and the present law remains, then my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) may come forward with a Bill to alter the Franchise Act, so far as it affects the Indians.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What will you do?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The arguments of the hon, gentleman might have some weight then, but they have no bearing on this issue now before the House, which is simply this: whether the Indians should have unrestricted power in regard to disposing of property on their several reserves. When the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) introduces his Bill for an amendment of the Franchise Act, I will give him permission to hit as hard as he likes against us for the so-called inconsistency.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman voted us down on that question. I hold that we must go on, but the hon. gentleman is prepared to go back.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These are quite different subjects; the one affects tribal relations of the Indians among themselves, the other confers on certain Indians the right to vote for members of this House. They are quite different subjects. I move that this Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read the second time this day six months.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Bill now under discussion for second reading does not go quite as far as the First Minister said. The mover asks in this Bill that so much of section 10 of the Indian Advancement Act as relates to the approval and confirmation, by the Superintendent General, of the by-laws, rules and regulations made by the council, shall not apply to the council of the Indian reserve of Caughnawaga, in the County of Laprairie in the Province of Quebec. I understand that my hon, friend has been induced to introduce the Bill at the request of the Indians whose interests are involved. That is a point which weighs on my mind. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) has spoken about the Bill being deficient, in that it does not take in other bands of Indians, but for my part I think we are warranted in dealing with this Bill when it comes at the request of the Indians themselves.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There never was a request forwarded to the Government. Some of the Indians may have asked the hon. gentleman, but the tribe has never expressed the desire to have this law.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The First Minister was not in at the time the previous part of this discussion went on, but I presume the hon. member (Mr. Doyon) is warranted in bringing in the Bill from the well understood wishes of the band. The Superintendent General of Indian Affairs has read a petition signed by ten names against the chief councillor on the reserve, but that was replied to by the hon. the leader of the Opposition, who stated that he was informed and believed that a petition signed by more than a hundred names had been forwarded in favor of Jackson.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That does not refer to the

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No; but I instance that as an answer to the statement made that my hon. friend has been asked by only some few of the Indians. If he had been asked by the ten, and 110 had spoken in another way on another question, it might be inferred that he was not advocating the wishes of the band; but when he is advocating the wishes and desires of the council elected by that band, and by whom the chief councillor was reelected we find that four out of five who constitute that council, that council are in accord with the chief whose conduct has been censured here, and who has been denounced as unworthy. I cannot give full credence to the view that has been indicated by the Superintendent General as to the character of these Indians. I think that if the Minister felt strongly with regard to this matter he ought to have used the power he has under this Indian Advancement Act to have him removed from office.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I consulted the Department of Justice, and I found I had no power to remove him. That is the reason I have given notice to bring in a Bill this year to amend the Act in order that I may take that power.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Amendment Act says that every member of a council elected under the provisions of this Act, and who is proved to be an habitual drunkard, may be removed.

Mr. BURDETT. Drunkenness is one of the causes for removal.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think there is a case of one being removed for drunkenness on the reserve in the county of my hon. friend from Hastings. If I understand the Superintendent General correctly, be has charged drunkenness against this man at Caughnawaga, and the Department has either acted outside the law in the case of the Indian on the Hastings reserve, or they have the power to remove this man here.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The accusation of drunkenness was not made against Jackson until in the petition which reached me some three days ago. The proposition I submitted to the Department of Justice was that he should be removed for obstructing the business of the council, and the Act does not give us that power.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). As I understand the only obstruction to the business of the council, was that the council made some regulations, and that when these regulations were disapproved by the Department here, the members of the council then took the not unreasonable ground of saying: "What is the use of our meeting in council and passing by-laws and regulations which are right and proper in themselves, and in the interest of the band if they are to be disallowed?" They took that not unreasonable view of the situation, and, as I understand, they have simply abstained from going to council?

Mr. LAURIER. That is all.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Here is a council composed of electors of the Dominion of Canada, and they are passing by-laws dealing with their own reserve, their own lands, and their own moneys, and they in their wisdom see fit to appoint an individual at something like $165 a year to discharge a duty for which another was being paid some $350. One would have thought that was a matter that was clearly within their competence, and that it was a matter, as we should term it in a flunicipality of white people, that was a wise and economical transaction. However, that is disallowed by the Department, and the obstruction, as it is termed, simply arose from the fact that when they attempted a matter of economy of this kind in the internal affairs of the tribe, it was disallowed at Ottawa, and they said: "There is no use attempting to do anything at all." That being the case they have asked my hon. friend to introduce this Bill, which leaves considerable power in the hands of the hon. Superintendent General yet, but does away with so much of the section of the Indian Advancement Act as requires the approval and confirmation of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs of the by-laws, rules and regulations of that council at Caughnawaga. I think this state of things has been brought about by the First Minister leading the House in the direction of giving the Indians the right as citizens to vote. When that proposition was made, I expressed my opinion that it was not desirable that should be done without the Indians themselves first having asked for it. The First Minister assumed the responsi-Mr. DEWDNEY.

bility of doing that and he has brought upon himself complications in connection therewith. seems to me that in giving the greater power to them to vote on national affairs, and to withhold from them the power to say whether a man shall be paid $360 of their own money for discharging the duties of an office when they could get a man for $165 to do the same, is treating them as wards, without even intelligence enough to determine a small matter of this kind. Naturally those Indians of Caughnawaga reason to themselves that it having been admitted by the Parliament of Canada and by the Government that they were able to judge of national affairs, and that they were able to judge of great questions of State that agitate the Dominion, it is simply ridiculous that they are not given equal power with other white people to have the entire control of their own internal affairs. The question is not as the First Minister views it. He has taken the point that this is not manhood suffrage to allow them to vote for members of this House, but that every one over the age of 21 years on the reserve can vote for members of the municipal council. In the Province of Ontario, all over the age of 21 years can vote for members of the Local Legislature; but they cannot vote for members in this House; but it does not follow that because all over 21 years of age and not entitled to vote for a member for this House, they are, therefore, not possessed of character and ability to fit them to cast as intelligent a vote as others who are permitted to cast that vote. So with regard to the Indians on the reserves. It is not to be argued, simply because they happen to be over 21 years of age and have not the qualification necessary to vote for this House, that they are necessarily dissolute characters and lacking in the capacity for the guidance of their own affairs. The Indian Advancement Act, it seems to me, will have to go further than it does go in the light of recent events. The First Minister cannot fail to see that the circumstances were changed when he introduced that provision into his Franchise Bill, and I do not see how he can well hesitate, when an Indian band, having been given the right to vote in all rational matters, asks for the same privilege in municipal matters. I think it is evident that that Act shall have to be extended to the extent now proposed, so that the assent of the Superintendent General to the by-laws of the councils shall not be requisite. This is asked by the representative of the Indian Reserve at Caughnawaga. I do not take exception to the amendment on the same ground as my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague). If the Bill is considered in committee, the hon. member for Haldimand could then move to include other bands if he saw fit. With reference to my own Indians, as the hon. Superintendent General knows, they have not adopted the Indian Advancement Act. I believe they are as advanced a body of Indians as any to be found in the Dominion; but they have always taken the position that they are not subjects, but allies of the Crown, having come here under a treaty; and they are very fond of speaking in that way. They hold to their old system of managing their affairs-by chiefs, and the chiefs seem to have the confidence of the band. I have myself always taken the ground that we should not force anything on the Indians—speaking more particularly for my own-which is contrary to their own expressed desire. I took this position with regard to the Franchise Act. They had not asked for the privilege of voting in Dominion affairs, and I thought it was not wise to force the suffrage upon them. But it was done, and many of them abstained from voting simply because they thought it might lead to a condition of things of which they did not approve. As they are not under the operation of this Indian Advancement Act, I cannot speak of the working of that Act on the reserves to which it has been applied. I heard the testimony of my hon, friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) that it works well among the Indians of the Credit. They are a very advanced band of Indians, as are also the Caughnawagas. But the fact that this Bill is limited to the Caughnawagas is not, to my mind, a reason for rejecting it. I hold to the principle which I laid down before, that it is better not to force anything on the Indians for which they do not ask. I take it that this amendment has been asked for by a majority of the Indians on the Caughnawaga reserve, because a najority of them have re-elected, apparently, those Indians who are condemned as obstructionists, simply because they refused to attend a meeting of the council, because their acts were disallowed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The fact that the Indians have the right of voting under the Franchise Act cannot be accepted as a reason why they should be allowed to exercise legislative powers; these are two things distinct from each other. The hon. gentleman might as well say that because the white people of Ontario have the right to vote for the members of the Legislative Assembly, that body ought to have the right to pass statutes irrespective of the assent of the Crown or the Lieutenant Governor. He might as well argue that it is inconsistent with the right of the people of Ontario to elect members to the Legislature of Ontario to pass statutes, that these statutes are subject to disallowance by the Federal authority. He might as well argue that it is inconsistent for the people to exercise the franchise for members of this House, and yet have this House, when it passes an Act, require the assent of the other two branches of Parliament. That is the argument the hon. gentleman advances to the House. The question is not whether the Indians in their councils should be controlled in their decisions as to whether they should appoint a man receiving $160 or a man receiving $360; but the question is whether an Indian band should have the right to pass any by-laws they please, or whether there should be any power to control them or keep their legislation within proper limits. Surely there is no parity of reasoning between by-laws passed by a municipal council and by-laws passed by an Indian band; and to say that the validity of a by-law passed by an Indian council should be decided only by the courts, is to say that the affairs of a little Indian band shall be in a confused state until they get litigation before the courts. Time and again it has occurred that they have attempted to pass by laws entirely beyond their authority-by laws dealing with the criminal law, or imposing penalties on people outside of the reserve altogether; and when it was called to the proposition is that any of these bands, when they ask for it, shall have the right to pass any by-law they please, irrespective of any control whatever—that because the Indians have the franchise, they ought to be allowed to pass any legislation they please without any control.

Mr. LAURIER. The question is whether these Indians shall have the right to pass by-laws which the statute gives them the power to pass, untrammelled by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. The law provides that certain powers shall be exercised by the councils of the Indians. Is there any reason why they should not have the power of any municipal council, and that their by laws should not become valid by the mere fact that they have been passed by the council? Any other council can pass by-laws which cannot be affected one way or the other by the interference of the Government. The argument which is used is that if these men are allowed to vote in national affairs, a fortiori they should have the right to vote on their own local affairs. Certainly, if they have the right to pass judgment as to who shall be the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, they should have the power to decide who shall be the tollkeeper on their own reserve. If they can vote as to who shall be Prime Minister, they should have the power to appoint a constable. It seems to me if they have the greater power, they should have the lesser power also. The Indians have reason to believe that their affairs have been mismanaged by the Department, and that they would manage them better themselves. Whenever the Department have interfered with the by-laws of these Indians, the Department has been in the wrong, and a striking instance of the mismanagement of the Department is the manner in which the money of the Indians has been squandered by the Department in surveying the reserve. If they are so advanced in the opinion of the Government that they can exercise proper discrimination and judgment in relation to their own affairs, it seems to me, as a matter of sequence, they should be allowed to manage their own business without the interference of the Government, and that is the object of the Bill.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister of Justice surely does not mean to say that the by-laws and regulations passed by municipal councils require the assent of the Crown?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was speaking of legislative assemblies and not of municipalities. The argument of the hon. gentleman was that the people who exercise the franchise should be allowed to legislate without control, and I said that did not exist with regard to legislative assemblies, in respect to which the people of the Province exercise the franchise, but the legislation of which is subject to the assent of the Crown.

decided only by the courts, is to say that the affairs of a little Indian band shall be in a confused state until they get litigation before the courts. Time and again it has occurred that they have attempted to pass by-laws entirely beyond their authority—by-laws dealing with the criminal law, or imposing penalties on people outside of the reserve altogether; and when it was called to their authority, they were of course prepared to be controlled by the Superintendent General. But service, not only in Quebec but in the North-West Territories. A few days ago, before the Public Accounts Committee, during an investigation into the travelling expenses of agents in the North-West, we found that some men were allowed to draw under this head $2,500 to $2,800 a year, besides their salaries. That is undoubtedly an abuse, and this survey appears to me to be in keeping with such extravagance and mismanagement.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This question has already been brought up on the motion of the hon. member for Laprairie, and I told the hon. gentleman I was preparing a copy of the plan, which he insisted on having, and which will cost between $300 and $400; and I said further, I would bring down all the papers in that connection. The survey was a most intricate one. Whether it was necessary it should be made so intricate I am not aware. The plan is some eight or ten feet in length and five or six feet in breadth, and shows not only the boundaries of the reserve, but every field and building on it. This work was done at the request of the Indians, for the purpose of seeing what amount of land belonged to each Indian family on the reserve. It was then determined to sub-divide the reserve into rectangular sections, in order that the Indians might be allowed to locate on these different sections; and it was understood that if any Indians were disturbed in their own holdings, they would be compensated for their improvements. survey took some time to make and cost a good deal of money. It was done at the request of the Indians, and is not yet completed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 1st April, 1890.

THE LATE MR. PERLEY, M.P.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, it is my painful duty to announce the sudden death of one of our hon. colleagues, Mr. Perley, the senior member for the city of Ottawa. I believe that every member of this House who has known him will join me in feelings of deep regret at hearing this announcement. Mr. Perley was a man of sterling Mr. McMullen.

coming to this country from the United States, who have sought their fortunes here, and who have, by honest industry and ability, acquired positions here, and have identified themselves with Canada and become, in every sense of the word, Canadians. In his commercial pursuits he was singularly successful. By patient industry, by enterprise, by attention to his business, and by the confidence that he had earned through a uniform life of honesty and integrity, he rose, as he deserved to rise, high in the estimation of the people in this vicinity, and among all who knew him. That confidence enabled him, I am happy to say, for the sake of his family, to acquire a competence which provides for them, I believe, in all The character that he had won, socially and commercially in business, was so high, that he was invited by those whose political opinions accorded with his to become their representative in this House. The hon, members of this House all know his demeanor in it. In no way obtrusive, in no way attempting to take a position which he felt, perhaps, that in his inexperiences he ought not to claim; he was always a careful, a thoughtful, and a conscientious member of Parliament. can say no more, and desire to say no more, with respect to him. You have all known him; you have all seen him; and I believe all the members of the House who have come in contact with him must have appreciated his good qualities; even those, if there are any in this House, who did not come into contact with him socially, must have observed the uniform propriety of his demeanor, and must have observed, also, that he worthily represented the important constituency which had selected him as their representative. Mr. LAURIER. I heartily endorse every word the right hon. gentleman has spoken, in regard to our late colleague. I can well understand the feeling with which the Prime Minister has spoken of one, who was not only a faithful follower, but, as I understand, a faithful friend. The tribute which the right hon, gentleman has paid to our colleague, is fully deserved in every way. Mr. Perley was endowed with all the good qualities, which the right hon. gentleman has claimed for Those who were opposed to him politically, will, I am sure, be most ready to pay him an equal tribute to that which has been paid to him by his leader. As the First Minister has said, Mr. Perley was unobtrusive in his manner; he was a party man, and an upholder of the principles of his party, but, at the same time, he had the rare gift, of never making himself offensive to any one. He was endowed, also, with many business qualities; but, and this is not so well known, except to his friends, he was, also, endowed with great social qualities, and many of us have pleasant remembrance of visits to his house, thanks to his personal qualities and to the qualities of the amiable woman who was his companion in life, one of the most what he was. Coming from the United States, where he had been a citizen, he was at first a among those who knew him in this city. He was charming women to be found in the capital. Every one will agree with the statement made by the First Minister, and every member, on both sides of the House, will join with his family in their sorrow and bereavement.

EASTER RECESS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Before the Orders of the Day are reached, I desire to call the attention of the House to the question of the Easter adjournment. There is a little difference of opinion on the question of adjournment. From memorandum given me I find as follows :- In favor of adjournment from Wednesday night to Tuesday, 38; from Wednesday to Wednesday, 5; Thursday to Monday, 20; Thursday to Tuesday, 45; Thursday to Wednesday following, 1; Thursday to Friday following, 1. The largest expression of opinion is from Thursday to Tuesday, 45; but that in favor of an adjournment from Wednesday to Tuesday, closely approaches it, 38 votes. So it is very difficult to come to a conclusion. As I said yesterday, the Government are quite in the hands of the House. They are obliged to be here, and they will have no holiday, whatever holiday other hon members will enjoy. The decision, so far as the Government can decide the question, will depend very much on the debate on the tariff. I think hon, gentlemen opposite will allow that it would be very unfortunate if we should discuss the tariff to-day, to-morrow, and Thursday, and adjourn with the debate unfinished, to recommence after Easter recess. Hon. gentlemen who have been long in Parliament know that when an important subject is being discussed, no matter how long, and an adjournment then takes place, the whole debate is opened de novo, and the discussion goes on as if it had never been commenced. I would throw across the floor the suggestion that if we could make an arrangement by which the debate would close to-morrow night, in so far as the amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is concerned, and we could have the Tariff Bill introduced, and read the first time, with the understanding that the discussion would go on with the Speaker in the Chair, just as if we were in committee, we would make very considerable progress and greatly shorten the Session. If that were agreed upon, I, personally—and I have no doubt my colleagues would agree with me-would agree to an adjournment to-morrow night, so that hon. members leaving to morrow night would spend Good Friday with their families, at all events those who are within a reasonable distance of Ottawa. Many hon, members like to be with their families and enter into their religious duties on Good Friday. If we adjourn on Thursday, they are travelling on the day when they would prefer to be with their families and attending to their religious ordinances in the bosom of their families. So my proposition would be this: If we could come to an arrangement by which the debate on the amendment would be closed to-morrow night, and the Tariff Bill introduced, and read the first time, with the understanding that the whole discussion could go on as if we were in committee, I think we would make great progress and shorten the Session.

Mr. LAURIER. Whatever day may be selected this broad country with reference to the proposed for the adjournment, whether to-morrow or the changes, in order that no mistakes may be made.

day afterwards, it is difficult to see in advance whether the debate will close or not. It is impossible to lay down, in advance, any rule as to the course the debate will take. For my part, I am very much disposed to favor the closing of the general debate before the adjournment; but the right hon, gentleman must remember that we are afterwards to take the resolutions into consideration. They are numerous and important, and will, no doubt, require a good deal of discussion by themselves, and it will be impossible to proceed with that discussion before recess. The only point we can settle is whether we can close the general debate on the amendment to-morrow or the day afterwards, but it is impossible to say in advance, and I would not even express any opinion at this moment without hearing from other members of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am very much afraid, judging from what has been said to me by hon. members on this side of the House—of course for the other side I cannot speak—that there can be no possibility of closing to-morrow night; that, in any case, Thursday night will be the earliest time that can be fixed for the closing of the debate. But I will make this suggestion to the First Minister and to the Finance Minister. I understand the First Minister to say that his proposition was that the Bill founded on the resolutions, should be introduced, and we should go into com-Looking at the very much larger mittee on it. number of changes which are being made than I had anticipated from the speech of the Finance Minister, and looking at the possibility, to say the least of it, that he may find it necessary to modify some of those propositions, I would say to the First Minister that time would be saved by our treating those resolutions pro formâ, and taking them back into committee and having a discussion there. The First Minister will understand that if it is required to modify these resolutions, there will have to be new motions in committee, and the rest of it. I doubt whether time will be saved. The safest plan will be, to take all the resolutions and have a searching discussion in committee upon them.

Mr. BLAKE. After the statement of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), that he does not think the principal debate can close until Thursday, I think the question is settled. I agree with the First Minister that the present debate should be disposed of before the adjournment, and as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is of opinion, from what he has learned, that the debate cannot be closed on Wednesday, I do not see how an adjournment can take place until Thursday. Even if it were possible, I would, as a private member, very strongly object to the course which the First Minister suggests, namely, that we should so expedite matters as to pass the whole tariff of this country through all the preliminary stages, introduce the Bill, pass it, give the second reading and get it into committee. These various stages are for a purpose; they are for the purpose of avoiding too rapid action, for the purpose of giving time for consideration, and for the purpose of giving an opportunity for representa-tions being made from various persons all over this broad country with reference to the proposed

What the hon, gentleman proposes is that we shall proceed, first of all, and forthwith, to almost the last stage. Now, Sir, the regulations of the House give us a Committee of the Whole upon these resolutions, which, for the moment, we waive in order to afford the hon. gentleman the convenience of putting them in force, provisionally, at the Customs houses at once. That opportunity we should have at this stage, of a full and free discussion, and on the concurrence and on the stages of the Bill we shall have opportunities for presenting our views formally by motion. It is likely, and I hope it will be the case, that there will be upon the Bill itself very little discussion, but there may be discussion, and the opportunity should be afforded for it. Certain considerations may be brought to our attention before the later stage, and in the interval, which may make it very important that we should bring them forward. It is to be remembered that even the Government itself, when it frames these tariff changes, acts under very considerable difficulty. It is utterly impossible for the Government to obtain at first that thorough and full advice on these subjects which it is important that it should obtain. cannot indicate its intentions on these matters beforehand, without the grossest frauds being perpetrated at the Customs houses, or without its intentions being made use of for private purposes. Therefore, those who are framing the tariff require a certain interval after their proposition is elaborated, just as much as the House and the country does, to consider the various bearings of this proposition. I feel now, as I have always felt that it would be a monstrous thing to impute serious incapacity or neglect to a Finance Minister, who, bringing down propositions for a change under these difficulties, should say frankly at a subsequent date different views were presented to me after I brought down those resolutions which do modify my opinion upon them. My view is, that the difficulties of the case necessarily require that that degree of elasticity should be readily accorded, without comment or observation, to the Finance Minister, so that he, like the rest of us, may have an opportunity, in a country which stretches 3,000 miles across, to get at public opinion upon this subject. Therefore, without the slightest desire to protract the Session, I must protest against what, I think, are the evil and dangerous consequences of hurrying through all the preliminary stages, and at a very early date getting towards the final stages, in a matter which it really does require time and consideration and general fnformation to properly mature.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If I may be allowed to say a word again, I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that the tariff ought not to be hurried through, and I quite agree with him, also, that it would be the duty of the Minister of Finance, and of the Government, to make alterations, if, during the course of discussion, he or they saw occasion to vary the propositions originally made. No doubt the House will receive such modifications, with the reasons for them, in the spirit in which they will be offered. We must understand, Mr. Speaker, that the proposition I made was for the purpose, if possible, to meet the varying views of the hon. members in the House Mr. BLAKE.

the remark made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and I would like much, if it could be done without any undue delay to the public business, that the House should adjourn on Wednesday, if we do not adjourn on the original proposition from Thursday until Monday, for the reason I have given already. Suppose these hon. members on both sides, who feel it their duty to debate this subject, would agree to it, I think it would be well that we should come to the conclusion to end the debate on the amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to-morrow night, and then that we would adjourn over, either until Monday or Tuesday; Tuesday, I think, would be the better, because the majority of members will not be back until that day, as they will not wish to travel on Sunday, in order to be here on Monday. Then we can go back into committee again.

Mr, BLAKE. Yes; re-commit the resolutions. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. resolutions, and discuss the whole of them as fully as in the inception of the proposition of these reso-If that were understood, and I have no lutions. doubt, unless any hon. member shall object to it now, we may consider it arranged, as these arrangements are made across the floor, that a vote should be taken on the amendment of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to-morrow night, then we could adjourn until the following Tuesday, and the House can go into committee again on the resolutions.

Mr. MITCHELL. I, of course, pay very great respect to anything that the right hon. gentleman says-

Mr. WALDIE. Louder.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know there is great anxiety to hear me, and I do not think I have often to be charged with speaking in too low a tone. As I said, I have the greatest respect for the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government, and for his desire to advance the business of the country, but I think the course he now suggests does not recommend itself to the general sense of the House. It does not recommend itself to me, at all events. In discussing so important a question as the tariff, we should not limit or restrict ourselves in any particular to anything but the fullest discussion of a matter which so deeply interests the public at large. No harm can be done by a lengthened discussion on so important a question as the tariff of the country, and particularly so, where these tariff changes involve very serious consequences to certain classes of the community and affect almost every man of that community, both in city and country. I have very great objections to the tariff as proposed by the hon. Minister of Finance, because it affects very peculiarly the people I have the honor to represent, and it affects a class of the community who are not so generally represented here as the wealthier and richer classes—I mean the poor people of the country, the laboring men, and the producers who employ the laboring men. I, for one, have the very greatest respect for the opinion of my hon. friend who leads this important body of men on this side of the House (Mr. Laurier), and for my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir as to the length of the recess. I was struck with Richard Cartwright), and my hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake), and many of the suggestions they make are, no doubt, very good. shall only be too happy to aid them and the Ministry in getting a full and free discussion on this matter, but I do protest against any arrangement being made which will affect the freest and fullest discussion on such important questions affecting the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend does not see that the tariff can only be discussed in the committee.

Mr. FLYNN. I rise to protest against any lengthened adjournment at Easter, and I cannot see why there should be a longer adjournment this year than there was last. We are here now going on three months, and if we should have a short adjournment any Session it should be this one. We had to adjourn for a holiday a fortnight ago, and it was understood, if a certain number of days were taken then there would be the shortest possible adjournment at Easter.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

That was the proposition that Mr. FLYNN. was made to me, and on this understanding I did not oppose the adjournment then. I find several hon. gentleman are, as the Prime Minister says, anxious to worship at Easter in the bosom of their Well, if that be the case there are plenty of facilities for them to worship here, if they choose to worship. There are plenty of churches for them here; but what about the minority who object to this adjournment? What of the members from British Columbia, Prince Edward Island and Cape Breton? Are they not entitled to some consideration? Those gentlemen who want to have a long adjournment want it at the expense of those who remain. I question their right of compelling me to put my hand in my pocket to pay my expenses here while they are away. I care not how small the minority is: I care not if there were only two, but there are forty, and it is not fair to impose this upon We had a long adjournment at the time of the last holiday, with the understanding that we should have a short one at Easter. I am willing that there should be an adjournment from Thursday evening to Tuesday at 3 o'clock—that is as long an adjournment as we had last year; but I think any longer adjournment would be unfair to those of us who should be compelled to remain.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then, I suppose my hon. friend who has just spoken expresses the feeling of the House, and I give notice that I will move on Thursday, that when the House adjourns on that day, it shall stand adjourned until Tuesday next.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster, for second reading of Resolutions reported from Committee on Ways and Means, and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Mr. McMULLEN. In rising to continue the debate on the Budget, which has been so ably conducted on both sides of the House, I feel that I am, perhaps, assuming a serious responsibility in undertaking to follow the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me. The hon. member for South with the statement presented to this House by the hon. Finance Minister. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) followed with a very exhaustive speech dealing largely with the different phases of the hon. Finance Minister's statements. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) also delivered a very able address, dealing with the whole question of protection as it affects the people of this Dominion. Under these circumstances, I should have considered myself quite justified in leaving the question to go before the electors of this country without offering another word, were it not that I represent a rural constituency, and one that is deeply interested in the fiscal policy which has prevailed in this country for the last ten years. Now, Sir, the hon. Finance Minister made one statement to which every member on this side of the House has taken exception so far. That statement was that the general condition of the business of the country is fairly satisfactory. I should be glad, indeed, if I were in a position to endorse that statement, but I am sorry, that my knowledge of the real condition of the people of the country will not permit me to do so. Had the hon. Finance Minister endeavored to gather from the people them-selves a correct idea of the condition of the business of this country, I think he would not have ventured to place upon the records of this House a statement to that effect. If he had, for instance, consulted the bankers of the country, I think they would have told him, although, no doubt, they are always anxious to present the best possible side of the case to the public, that the experience of the banking institutions of this Dominion for the last year has not been fairly satisfactory. If he had consulted the wholesale trade, I think they would also have confessed to him, privately and confidently, that the wholesale trade of the country has not been in a healthy condition during the past year. If he had also consulted the retailers of the country-if he had even gone down to Sparks street, in this city, and had asked the business men from one end of this city to the other, their opinion of the general condition of business, I think they would have said to him: "We are not satisfied with the year's transactions, because they have not been as good as what we have experienced in years past." I think he would have received that answer everywhere. If he had also consulted the manufacturers of the country-a great many of them, I do not say all—they would also have stated to him, that the manufacturing business had not been as satisfactory, as it had been in some previous years. Then he might have consulted another larger class, to which he has paid very little attention in the last year; had he called a meeting of the farmers, I care not where-in the city of Toronto or in any other trade centre, or in any other portion of the Dominion—I venture to say, that they would have told him that their experiences during the year, had been of a very unsatisfactory kind. In view of the condition of all these classes, it has been a matter of surprise to me that the hon. Finance Minister should have made the statement to the House that the business of the country has been fairly satisfactory. I am not one of those who wish to cry blue ruin; I have no desire to say a word with regard to the general Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) dealt very fully condition of business in this country, that would tend in any way to injure the general trade of the country; but when hon. gentlemen opposite will persist in making the statement to this House and the country, that the general trade of the country is in a healthy condition, it is our duty in the interest of those who are suffering financially, to present what we conceive to be the true condition of things throughout this country. is another point to which I would call the hon. Finance Minister's attention. If he will examine the public records, I think he will find that there have been in the past year more business failures in Canada than in any other year for the last ten years. That certainly is not an evidence that the business of the country is in a satisfactory condition. I would also call his attention to the general condition of the business in the rural sections of the country and in towns that are largely dependent for their trade on the farming community. If he makes an investigation, he will find that in the rural districts there is a great deal of discontent and disappointment on the part of business men. Of course, being largely dependent on the farming community for their trade, as the resources of the farmers are curtailed the receipts of the retail merchants are reduced. I contend that if he had consulted that class, they would have told him very plainly that the affairs of this country are not in a satisfactory condition. Another statement of the Finance Minister was that this $36,500,000 collected from the people is a princely gift. It is wrong to call it a gift. If the hon, gentleman had called it an extortion, he would have given it its proper name. It is by far more money than should be collected from the people. Hon. gentlemen opposite, years ago, when on this side, shouted themselves hoarse in protestations against the hon. member for York (Mr. Mackenzie), because he had allowed the expenditure of the country to run over $22,500,000; but the moment they took office, they started increasing that amount from year to year, and it has gone on rapidly increasing, until to-day we, a population of only 5,000,000, are under an expenditure of $36,500,000. Now, this is not the only extortion to which our people are subject, because, in contributing that sum of money to the Treasury, they contribute, under the operations of our pernicious tariff, a corresponding amount which goes into the pockets of the manufacturers. The people are not only called upon to pay enormously towards the general revenue, but an enormous sum towards keeping up a number of manufacturers who have been in the past years reaping a very rich harvest in this country. I contend that the introduction of this protective system was an unfortunate event in the history of this country; I contend that had we followed the system we formerly pursued from the time of Confederation up to 1878, although a few years of that period were not as prosperous as we would have wished them to be, our people would have been in a much better position to-day, for the true, the solid, the honest system whereby revenue should be exacted from the people, is a revenue tariff levied according to the necessities of the country. Any other tariff is a dishonest tariff. The Finance Minister, this year, has endeavored to give some little consider-faring man, who, travelling from Jerusalem to Jericho, fell among thieves. They have fallen among thieves and have been badly stripped during all that time; but, to-day, the Political High Priest of the Dominion, the Finance Minister, who passed by on the other side during the last ten years and gave them no consideration, has, at the eleventh hour, drawn near and looked at their miserable condition. He does not, however, propose to take them out of that condition in which they have been and are being robbed of everything they have, but he says to them: I will give you license to rob some one else; I will give you the privilege of adding one cent per pound to your pork and a little more to your beef. This is all the relief he is willing to give to the farmers, who are at present struggling with embarrassments and difficulties. The National Policy, inaugurated by hon. gentlemen opposite, is an unjust policy. tariff which unfairly weighs on the resources of any class of the community is an unjust tariff; and in the framing of this tariff, as I will show later, the poorer classes have not received that consideration and attention to which they were entitled. The rich, those who are in a position to pay taxes, are not reached by the operations of this tariff as they should be. Look at England. There revenue is collected by means of the income tax largely, which reaches the people in proportion to their means and annual income. That is an honest way of levying taxes, as under it every man is called upon to pay proportionately to his ability, whereas our taxes are levied on the very opposite principle. There are many features of our National Policy which are very objectionable from the standpoint of the poorer man, and I contend it is a most pernicious law which imposes upon one man the necessity of contributing to the well-being of his neighbor without giving him a fair consideration for his earnings. No law should be placed upon our statutes which declares that one man shall, by the sweat of his brow, contribute to the wellbeing of his neighbor without receiving a proper and fair return for the money he contributes. Any such law is a dishonest law, and I contend that our tariff law operates in that way. Take a farmer who has three sons, and who makes of one a farmer, of another a lawyer, and of the third a doctor. Would that father be acting fairly towards his family if he put a clause in his will declaring that his son whom he made a farmer should contribute out of his means to the support of the lawyer and the doctor? I do not think any judicious, honest, conscientious, loving father would ever deal with one of his sons in that way. are here to deal with the people of this country honestly, and if we continue in existence a statute which unfairly taxes one class of the community and compels them to contribute out of what they have earned by the sweat of their brow to the wellbeing of any other, we are upholding a law which is unjust by the decrees of God, and cannot be made just by the decrees of men. This so-called National Policy has three legs to stand upon, namely, deceit, treachery and fraud. When it was introduced, the First Minister was telegraphed from the Maritime Provinces as to what his intentions were, and he replied that he had no intention of increasing the duties, but only intended to readjust them. In this he was deceiving the people. Then he said to tion to the farmers. During the last ten years this he was deceiving the people. Then he said to this class has been in the position of the way- the farmers: I am going to give you a home market for your products; there are many things you have which are now of little use to you, and I am going to give you a home market for your products. Has he done that? No; the promises he made to the farmers have never been fulfilled, and to-day they are beginning to realise that they were treacherously deceived. We have evidence of this in the resolutions which have been passed by the different farmers' institutes throughout the country. never had in this country such a demoralising condition of the public expenditure as we have to-day. Up to the time of the introduction of the National Policy, hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House felt it was their duty to husband the resources of this Dominion, but, after the policy had been in force for a few years, hon. gentlemen opposite were so elated by the enormous amounts which were brought into the Treasury in 1885 and 1886-I believe in one year it brought to their coffers six millions, and in the other about eight millions of a surplus—they were so elated by the possession of these amounts of money taken from the pockets of the people that they began to be extravagant, and that extravagance has continued to the present time. When the manufacturers commenced to draw more largely from the resources of the people, and, as a result, the coffers of the Dominion did not receive the amount which had been expected, as the money went into the manufacturers' pockets in place of the Dominion Treasury, the Dominion Government commenced to borrow from the people through the Post Office Savings Banks, and then they commenced to borrow from England, until we have now a national debt of about $234,000,000. We have borrowed from the people about $40,000,-000, and we have to pay interest amounting to about $10,250,000 annually. This is a very serious consideration for the people of this country, that they should be under the enormous drain of ten millions and a quarter a year in order to pay the interest on their national debt. I will now deal with a question which has not been dealt with, so far, in this debate, and that is, the increase of our duties by the then Finance Minister, Sir Charles Tupper, with the view of bringing about the production of pig iron and of all kinds of iron in this Dominion. At that time he pictured to us in glowing terms the results of the policy which he then introduced. He pictured our enormous resources in iron. He travelled from the Straits of Belle Isle to Vancouver to show us the value of our iron deposits. He told us that, by the adoption of the policy he was about to introduce, we would have enormous developments in a very short space of time. stated that he believed there would be an influx of 200,000 miners and smelters, and that would give an additional home market to the farmers, besides enabling us to produce all the iron we required without importing any from abroad. He stated that we would have smelting furnaces at Kingston, Pembroke, Peterborough, Cobourg, Port Hope, Owen Sound, and all along the line to Vancouver; and he told us how our iron mountains would be honeycombed by miners and how the people would get rich in the development of this industry. What have we realised out of all these promises? He declared that the money was ready to be invested in these enterprises, and that nothing was wanting but the sanction of Parliament, and the

have the best results of a National Policy realised. What has been the result? Have we produced any more pig iron during these three years than we did before? I will give you the imports for In 1887, we imported 46,295 those three years. tons; in 1888, 48,973 tons; and in 1889, 73,844 tons. In order to show the increase in the duty we paid on iron, I will give the entire volume of iron of all kinds imported during those three years, and also, for purposes of comparison, I will give the quantity imported in 1886. It is as follows:--

1887	9,746,667	2,168,392
1888	8,757,204	2,632,151
1889	9.680.967	2,950,890

In all these years, you will notice the large increase that took place each year in the amount of duty that was paid. In addition to this, we have imported steel rails free of duty to the extent of $2,544,995. In order to show the increase of duty which has been paid by the consumers of this country, I will give the amounts of pig iron we have imported and the duty paid upon it. In 1887, we imported 46,295 tons of pig iron, and paid a duty of $93,373. In 1888, we imported 48,973 tons, and paid a duty of $195,275, or, in other words, on about the same quantity of pig iron imported, we paid about $102,000 more duty. In 1889, we imported 73,844 tons, and paid a duty of $288,459.21. The third year after that tariff went into operation, we paid a little less than $200,000 more duty on the iron imported into this country than we did in 1887. You will notice that, instead of our imports decreasing, they have increased. During the time to which I have referred we have collected, in that way, from the consumers of the Dominion a total of $7,751,433. In the distressed condition of the farming community, I think I am justified in making a proposition to hon, gentlemen opposite. Fourfifths of this amount have been collected from the farmers of this Dominion, and the policy has failed in the object which the hon. gentleman had in view when it was introduced. No one occupying a responsible position can say that it has accomplished what was promised. Under these circumstances, I think it would be only fair that hon. gentlemen opposite should devote a considerable part of that money to giving a bounty to the large amount of produce and of stock which our farmers have to export to the United States, which is their only market. As I said before, they have collected $7,751,433. We exported last year to the United States 17,277 horses. Hon. gentlemen are aware that the Government of the United States are imposing an additional duty on horses. I would like to ask them under the circumstances-and the farmers of this country will require an answer from them—where are you going to get them a market for those horses? They have a right to look to the Government of this country to give them a market. Now, Sir, we have sent to the United States 9,934,501 bushels of barley, upon which we paid, in order to get it to their market, $993,450 in duty. We sent them 308,583 sneep, on which paid a duty of $168,425 to get them across the border. We exported 82,308 tons of hay, on which we paid $164,616 to get it across the border. exported to the United States 717,668 bushels of assent of the Governor to that Bill, in order to potatoes, on which we paid a duty of $107,650 to get them over there. The farmers of this country have paid, during the last year, $1,856,897 in order to get their produce to market. Multiply that sum by three, and we have $5,570,671 paid by the agriculturists of this Dominion to find a market for their produce during three years. An unreasonable sum has been collected from them in point of duties, and I propose that the Government should contribute that $5,570,671 by offering a bounty equal to the amount of duty the farmers will have to pay for the next three years, until such time as the hon. gentlemen opposite will be able to find the farmers a better market. They know well that there is no other alternative, they must jump the fence that has been erected, and in order to enable them to do so, I think the Government of this country ought to go half way. We cannot possibly send these animals to Great Britain; they are not wanted there. There is no other country, that I know of, where we can send them in the meantime, and I contend that, in order at this time to help the farming community over the financial embarrassments with which they are surrounded, it is the bounden duty of hon. gentlemen opposite to grant them that relief, and I do not see how it can be granted in any better way than by offering the bounty I propose. Now, Sir, I say to the farmers, that it is absolutely necessary that they should combine in their own interest. I am glad to see that they are combining. I am glad to notice that farmers' institutes are being formed throughout this country, and I am glad to see the farmers taking an interest in these institutes. I am glad to notice that the political complexion of those who form these institutes is Reform as well as Conservative, and Conservative as well as Reform. I believe that if they combine, as they ought to do, in their own interest, and send their deputations to Ottawa to wait upon the Government, I am quite sure, from the experiences of the manufacturers in pressing their views upon the Government in their own interest, that the farmers will find that they will be listened to; I am satisfied the Government would have to give an ear to them, because they would realise that if they did not do so, the farmers would depose them from power, as they would be uite justified in doing so. Now, one may ask: Is there any precedent for carrying out the proposition I make? I contend that there is. We have been giving a bounty on pig iron for years; the producers of pig iron in this country have been receiving a bounty of $1.50 a ton, and I say that, when the Government have been paying a bounty on pig iron, it is just as reasonable and as just, yea, it is more so, that they should contribute to the well-being of the farmers in their present embarrassment by offering a bounty upon those things I have mentioned. We have also been giving a bounty upon fish. I ask in the name of all reason, is there anything improper or unjust in contributing to the well-being of the great class in this country known as the agriculturists, when we have year after year been contributing to the welfare of our fishermen by granting a bounty upon fish? I think this proposition is worthy of consideration by hon. gentlemen opposite. I contend that it has been an act of deception on the part of the Government by their policy to draw out of the pockets of the people of this Dominion country. The hon, gentleman who presented that statement to the House did it with all the evidences of sincerity and positiveness that used to characterise his utterances in this Chamber. Well, Sir, that hon. gentleman is no longer here to explain why he misled the House and the country. Why did he say that we might depend upon those promises being carried out? We have no person to answer that question. That hon. gentleman is now basking in all the gaieties and pleasures of London life, at a cost of $15,000 or $16,000 a year to the people of this country. That has been his reward for the deception and the treachery that he practised upon the people of this country when he introduced that policy. But the deception has not been confined to the High Commissioner; it has been practised by other prominent individuals in this Chamber. Why, Sir, not many years ago, when the members of this House were asked to consent to a loan of $30,000,000 to complete the Canadian Pacific Railway, we can well remember the glowing and prophetic utterances made by the First Minister and by Sir Leonard Tilley with regard to our North-West. On that occasion we can also remember the very glowing statements that were made by the present High Commissioner. Sir Leonard Tilley pointed out the probability of our having an export of wheat from the North-West, by the year 1890, of 59,000,000 bushels. Sir Charles Tupper went into a calculation that took this House by the ears for a moment. He said: Let us make a calculation. Supposing 200,000 farmers in the North-West cultivate 400,000 acres, and they grow forty bushels to the acre, we would be able to look forward to the shipment of 80,000,000 bushels of wheat out of that country by the year 1890. Well, have we realised these promises? Have all these prophetic utterances been fulfilled? No, Sir. Well might the prophets say, if there were any of them living in these days, that they are neither prophets, nor the sons of prophets. Every single utterance that they made, with regard to that question, has utterly failed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They promised us 640,000,000 bushels.

Mr. McMULLEN. I know it was a very large amount, but I do not sport so much cheek as the hon, gentleman who made the statement, else I would have said 640,000,000. Now, he stated to us at that time that, owing to the progress of the production of iron in the United States, there was nothing to hinder Canada from following in the same line. But we must remember that in the Uuited States they have 60,000,000 of people and we have only 5,000,000. In the United States they had 37,000,000 of people before they commenced to produce iron to any extent. Their population rapidly increased, and the result was they had a demand for their products. How did they do it? In the United States they encouraged the production of iron by a bounty. I contend that if it is thought desirable, in the interests of this Dominion, that we should become great producers of iron, we should produce it by a bounty and not by a duty; for this simple reason I hold, if it is looked upon as a national necessity that we should become great producers of iron, the entire the enormous sum I have mentioned in the way of people should pay for it. It is unfair to put the reduty, with the hope of producing iron in this sponsibility of encouraging the production of iron in Canada entirely upon the consumers of iron. Every man, however wealthy, would, if the bounty system were adopted, contribute to the development of the iron industry, the same as the poor man who handles his shovel and spade. That would be a proper system to adopt, rather than to encourage it by a duty which strikes directly at those who cannot very well afford to pay it. I now come to deal with a few of the changes in the tariff proposed by the Finance Minister, and I want to point out how unfairly they will operate on some of the people, while they will allow others to escape. Take, for example, cottons of all kinds used for summer wear. It is proposed to levy a duty of 2 cents per square yard and 15 per cent., which virtually means from 32 to 35 per cent. Next, it is proposed to impose a duty on drain pipe of 25 per cent. This pipe should be admitted into this country at as low a rate as possible, for nothing tends to improve the condition of our farms so much as underdrainage; but this duty is imposed for the purpose of giving a few manufacturers of drain pipe in this country an advantage over those who import the pipe. While a duty equivalent to from 32 to 35 per cent. is imposed upon cottons and denims, which are largely consumed by the poorer classes, the Finance Minister proposed to allow ostrich feathers to come in at 15 per cent. I fail to understand how hon, gentlemen opposite can justify such a discrimination. Again, 30 per cent. is to be charged on lamp glasses, which are used more particularly in poorer houses, and at the same time the hon gentleman admits ornamented, figured and enamelled glass at 25 per cent. I can not understand how hon, gentlemen opposite can justify a tariff of that kind. Again, there is a duty of 30 per cent. on gloves. I contend that all gloves should not be charged at the same rate of duty. The finer class of kid gloves, sold at \$1.50 and \$2 a pair, should bear a higher duty than the Lisle and cotton gloves used by the poorer classes; but there is no distinction made. I contend that this is not a right principle. A change is also proposed in regard to felt hats. It is suggested to impose a specific duty of \$1.50 per dozen. All specific duties are unjust, I care not in what way they are levied. When you levy a specific duty on a commodity, the finer class of goods does not pay its proportionate share of duty as compared with the lower class, and, accordingly, a specific duty of that kind is not fair. You charge \$1.50 a dozen on felt hats and 20 per cent., or equal to 35 per cent. On hats and caps, the duty has been raised from 25 to 30 per cent., but, at the same time, ladies' hats and bonnets are only charged 25 per cent. Again, the duty on saddlers' hardware is placed at 35 per cent., while that on fire-arms is 20 per cent. Another change, which is an exceedingly unjust one, is the duty on strap hinges, 1 cent per pound and 25 per cent., which is virtually 45 per cent. These hangings are used altogether in the erection of farm buildings, and the imposition of such a duty is nothing short of gross injustice. Ground paints have been placed at 5 cents per pound and 25 per cent., or 45 per cent. They are used by farmers in the country, who desire to improve their buildings and houses and vehicles, and who do the work of painting themselves. It is unfair that an increase of that kind should be imposed upon paint largely used by them. An- ton to the value of \$1,662,348, on which was paid other change to which I object is this: Silver and German and nickel plated watch cases are 10 per cent., while a duty is imposed of 35 per cent. on tinware, japan, iron and galvanised ware. well known that japan ware is largely used by the farmers. I notice also shovel and spade blanks, iron or steel, cut to shape, \$1 per dozen and 25 per cent., or at 45 per cent. The duty on clothing is changed to 10 cents per pound and 25 per cent. ad valorem, or virtually 45 per cent. It is unfortunate that this duty of 10 cents a pound is placed on cloth, which, perhaps, costs not more than a dollar a yard, and which is imported for the purpose of making heavy winter coats for the laboring classes, while on the article used for black frock coats, which costs, perhaps, \$4 or \$5 a yard wholesale, the same duty of ten cents per pound is charged; and this, I contend, is unfair and unjust to the poorer classes. A specific duty is always unjust, because when it is imposed by the pound or the yard the quality of the article is never taken into consideration. The result is that the poorer classes, buying the cheaper quality, pay a higher rate of duty, while the richer classes, buying the best quality, pay a less rate of duty. While you charge upon cloth a tariff that virtually is 45 per cent. to the poor man, you admit Brussels carpet at 25 per cent., and the poorer classes do not use that luxurious commodity. I ask now, why is it that you admit Brussels carpet at 25 per cent. and charge 35 per cent. on the poor man's tinware, and 45 per cent. on his clothing? I say that is unfair. I will now call the attention of the House to some of the tariff charges that have not been altered by the Finance Minister. You admit silk at 30 per cent., while you charge the poor man 32½ per cent. on his cotton dress stuff. You admit German and nickel silver cutlery, which is not used by the poor at 25 per cent., and you charge on nails, tools and implements of iron, 35 per cent. You admit gold and silver jewellery at 20 per cent., while you charge on agricultural implements and trimmings for harness 35 per cent.; you admit kid tan for ladies' shoes at 10 per cent., and you charge the poor man for his upper leather 20 per cent.; you admit kid gloves at 30 per cent., and you charge the poor man on his cotton batting 35 per cent.; you admit the finest quality of table cutlery for 25 per cent., and you charge the farmer for his harrows, mowing machines, spades, forks and other articles which he uses on his farm, a tariff of from 35 to 40 per cent. You admit linen canvas for ship sails at 5 per cent., and you charge for the canvas that is used for the bedding of the poor farmer, 25 per cent. Twine used by sailors you admit at 5 per cent., and you charge the farmer 25 per cent., for his binding twine. You admit silk hats for the city gents at 25 per cent., and you charge the poor man on the goods with which he wants to clothe his wife, $32\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bamboo rods for fancy walking canes free, you admit strings for musical instruments free, you admit raw silk for manufacturing purposes free, and you charge the farmer 25 per cent. on his binding twine. I now wish to say a few words with regard to the cotton printing business. Some years ago we increased the duty for the purpose of encouraging the establishment of a printing business in this Dominion. I notice that we imported into this country last year, printed cota duty by the people of 32½ per cent., amounting to \$540,308.80. Deducting the amount that is now paid over and above what was paid in 1878, when the rate of duty was $22\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., I find that the poor people of this country contributed, for the purpose of keeping alive one printing establishment in this Dominion, during the last year, \$166,234.80. I know whereof I speak in this matter, because I have stood for about thirty years behind the counter, and I can say that enormous quantities of this particular class of goods are used by the poorer people. Let us now consider the article of sugar, which should be sold to the poor at the lowest possible price. We imported of sugar, last year, \$5,857,993 worth, on which we paid in duty \$3,675,724, or an average duty of 613 per cent. Of woollen goods we imported last year \$10,414,963, on which a duty was paid of \$2,963,937, or about 30 per cent. duty was paid of \$2,000,007, or was a control of the poor classes of this Dominion pretty fiercely by the manner in which this duty is levied. We imported, last year, cotton wool waste to the amount of \$3,835,516 free. I contend that this is unfair to the producers of coarse wool, to admit these things into the country free, because, if we are to have duties at all, they should be subjected to a duty, so that the farmer who grows wool may be protected. We admitted into the country, last year, hemp to the value of \$1,201,999, and then the farmer was taxed 25 per cent. for his twines. Now, Sir, I will make a short allusion to the condition of the farmers as brought about by the opening up of the North-West Territories. We admit that the opening up of the North-West was a necessity, in order to develop this Dominion. We do not deny that; but we contend that it has caused a very serious drain upon the resources of the farmers of the older Provinces. It has tended largely to add to our debt, which will be a burden to the entire Dominion, in the first place, and it has drawn away a great many of those who otherwise would have remained in the older Provinces, to develop the undeveloped resources of these Provinces, and to add to the resources of the farmers there. I say it was unfair that these farmers should be asked to contribute so enormously by an annual revenue, towards the construction of a road that is virtually injuring them in place of doing them good. We admit that it was a necessity from a national standpoint, but we contend that it should not have been constructed in such a way as to compel the farmers of this country to pay such an enormous sum. Now. something has been said with regard to the mortgage indebtedness of the farm property in the several Provinces of this Dominion. Hon. gentlemen opposite have taken very pointed exception to the statement presented by the hon member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). I have made some little enquiry myself, and I find that in one township of the county in which I live, having 70,000 acres, the registered mortgages amount to It has been said by some hon, gentle-\$640,340. men that in some cases these mortgages have been paid off. It will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen that some years ago an Act was passed in this House to do away with the consolidation of the interest with the principal in mortgages; and since that Act was passed nine-tenths of all the mortgage encumbrances have been put in such the principal is payable at the end of the term. The people had got so fleeced under the operation of the consolidated system, that they made up their minds to get rid of it as soon as they could. In obtaining these figures I only took the mortgages last recorded, so that I am satisfied that they are under the mark rather than over it. At 6 per cent. that township would have to pay on that mortgage indebtedness \$38,420.40 of interest annually. Now, hon gentlemen opposite have challenged the statement made by the hon. member for South Oxford. All I would say in reply to that is this: The hon.member for South Oxford has thrown across the House a very fair and reasonable challenge. He has said that the records of this Province are open to hon gentlemen opposite, and if they will vote a small sum in comparison with what they have squandered on the Franchise Act, and apply it to secure from the registrars a correct list of the recorded encumbrances on properties, they will then be in a position to see whether the hon. gentleman has exceeded the actual facts or not; and I would say to them, in the language of the sportsman: Either put up or shut up; you have no right to challenge the statement if you are not prepared to accept the terms he has proposed; until you do so, it is mere wind to challenge the hon. gentleman's statement, after he has gone to the trouble he has to get possession of the facts and present them to this House. I wish, also, to refer to the duty on flour. I dare say hon, gentlemen fancy they are pleasing the farmers of this country by imposing that duty, but I can tell them that in the changed conditions of milling in the country, the duty on flour is not an advantage, but an injury, for this simple reason: There is not a mill in this country that will receive a man's wheat and grind his grist as formerly. The custom is that a man takes his wheat to the mill and exchanges it for flour, so that the miller will give him the ordinary current price for his wheat, and will then turn around and sell him the flour with the 75 cents of duty added to the price. Under these circumstances the duty on flour is of no advantage to the farmer, but an injury. It would have been very much better, in my opinion, if the hon. gentleman had decided to reduce the duty on wheat to a point that would bring it to an equality with the There is another point to which I would call the attention of this House. I am sure that everybody will agree that the United States is our market for horses; it is quite clear that if we had not sent them there, we could not have found a market for them. Last year, although subjected to a duty of 20 per cent., we sent 17,277 horses to the United States, while we sent to Great Britain only 164. I think it has been clearly shown that our market for sheep is in the United States; we sent 307,775 sheep and lambs there last year. Hon, gentle-men opposite insist that if we entered into commercial union or unrestricted reciprocity with the mercial union or unrestricted receptable. United States, Canada would fairly flood the United States with sheep and horses. To dispose of that statement, one has only to draw the attention of the House and the country to the enormous consumption of these animals in the United States. Horses are largely used in the cities for street cars and other purposes, and sheep and lambs are in great demand in the large cities. The city of a shape that the interest is payable annually and New York alone consumes over 2,000,000 lambs in he year; and when you consider that we sent to the United States last year only about onefifth of the quantity consumed in the city of New York alone, you will see how impos-sible it is for any man who studies the fact to make the assertion that if we had unrestricted reciprocity we should be likely to flood the United States with sheep. The United States is also the market for our eggs. It has been clearly shown by our experience during the last few years that there is no other country to which we can send them. I do not know what may be the motive of the United States Congress in putting a duty on eggs; but there is a Canadian duty imposed on egg boxes, which, I think, is exceedingly objectionable. An American cannot come to Canada and bring his egg boxes with him in order to fill them with eggs and take them back to the States without paying a duty on the When the United States were willing to take all our eggs without imposing any duty on them whatever, I think it was a small and shabby piece of business, simply for the purpose of promoting the production of eggs boxes in Canada, to impose 25 per cent.on American egg boxes, when they admitted our eggs free. I believe it is the existence of pernicious exactions such as this, that has brought about the condition of things we see in the United States to-day. Instead of treating them with courtesy, we have annoyed and worried and badgered them with our duties on egg boxes and fruit baskets and other little things, in a way that is unworthy of one nation to treat another. We know that Great Britain is our market for fat cattle, for butter and for cheese, and also, I am glad to say, it is becoming a largely increasing outlet for our export of fat sheep. But, in the face of all this, our farmers must not confine themselves to the production simply of these commodities. Mixed farming is the only farming which will pay in this Dominion, judging from the experience of the past, and if our farmers do not resort to that they will be sure to suffer. In considering this whole question, having regard to our relations with the United States, had hon gentlemen opposite, before they decided to increase the duties on commodities coming in from that country, given weight, fairly and justly, to the whole circumstances and history of the case, they would have been more prudent and cautious than they have been. When we consider that we have unrestricted liberty to send everything to Great Britain, while we have a tariff against us of virtually 20 per cent. on our exports to the United States, it is most humiliating to us to find, by the Trade Returns of last year, that we exported to the United States \$38,490,571 worth, while we exported to Great Britain but \$38,088,051 worth, and that we import ed from the United States to the extent of \$50,537,-440, and from Great Britain \$42,317,389. Virtually, we exported more to the United States than to Great Britain, and also imported more. In view of that fact, and in view of our close proximity to that great nation of 60,000,000—although I am not prepared to say that they have displayed in all their transactions with us that generosity and high spirit of honor we were entitled to expect from our powerful neighbors-it does not suit us to deal with them in a scanty, illiberal spirit. In this connection I think it my duty to point out the treaties with foreign nations. Our experience with the United States for a number of years past has shown most clearly that Canada should ask to have conferred upon her the right to send her own agent to Washington, and the right to negotiate her own treaties. Did we enjoy that right we would have avoided a great deal of the bitterness which, I am sorry to say, exists in the minds of many people towards us, arising from the fact that we are a dependency of Great Britain. Nothing gave me more pleasure, on a former occasion in this House, than voting for the resolution introduced by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), in which it was declared that we should have the right to exercise this power freely; and until such time as we secure from Great Britain that right, I do not think that we will have the trade relations with the Americans which otherwise we would be able to secure. I was sorry, Sir, to hear the President of the Council declare that even if it were in our power to go back to the old condition of things, and have reciprocity in natural products, it would not be advisable to do so. But I was glad to hear another prominent member of this House, and, I think, a member of the Government, state that he did not consider himself bound by that expression of opinion, and that he held the contrary view. I think it is of the highest importance that we should bring these people to understand that we are willing to enter into the freest trade relations with them; and if they have passed the resolution, as I believe they have, in Washington, declaring their willingness to instruct the President, at any moment our Government are willing to enter into negotiations to that effect, to appoint a deputation or a committee to meet at Washington a similar deputation from this Government, in order to discuss this whole question, it would be a suicidal policy on the part of our Government to decline to accept a proposition of that kind. The developments which have taken place in India ought to make it clear to the mind of every man in this House that we are not likely to be successful in our attempts to compete with the people of India in the British market, and will, therefore, have to seek consumers on this continent for a very large amount of our products. When we consider the enormous volume of wheat produced in India, and when we regard the developments that are taking place in that country with the view of bringing its commodities to England, we cannot fairly look forward, with any reasonable degree of hope, to our being able to maintain in the British market the position we have there enjoyed for some years past. It is quite clear that the English people, owing to the policy of the United States—a policy which, in our humble way, we are imitating-in shutting out English manufacturers, feel driven to the necessity of seeking other outlets for their goods, and, consequently, are expending vast sums of money in developing India in the matter of railways, canals and other public works, their expenditure so far amounting to over £9,000,000. It is, therefore, quite clear that, in the future, we will not find in England the market for our produce we have hitherto enjoyed. As a result of that, I contend we will have to seek a market upon our own continent instead of in England, for a large amount of the produce we are now exnecessity of our having the power to make our own porting. It is another unfortunate fact that our trade with England, instead of increasing, has diminished in the last few years. If we divide the fifteen years which have elapsed since 1873 into three periods of five years each, and examine the trade aggregates of each period, two things are at once made manifest-first, that the National Policy, introduced in 1879, has injured British trade; secondly, that instead of helping British at the expense of American trade, it has had a directly opposite effect. From 1873 to 1877, both inclusive, our gross trade with Britain amounted to \$478,000,000; in the second period, from 1878 to 1882, it amounted to \$424,000,000; in the third period, from 1883 to 1887, it amounted to \$441,000,000. On the other hand, while our trade with the States from 1873 to 1877 trade with the States from 1873 to 107, amounted to \$415,000,000, and to \$377,000,000 in the second period, it rose in the last potice to \$438,000,000. That period under notice to \$438,000,000. That is to say, our trade with the mother country from 1883 to 1887 was \$36,000,000 less than the trade from 1873 to 1877, whilst our trade with the States was greater by \$23,000,000 in the former than in the latter period. A further examination will show that British exports to us have been seriously affected, the aggregate from 1873 to 1877 having been \$272,000,000, as compared with only \$222,000,000 between 1883 and 1887. American exports to Canada have, however, held their own. From 1873 to 1877 they amounted to \$249,000,000, while from 1883 to 1887 they aggregated \$244,000,000. Striking as they are, it is doubtful if these figures show the whole amount of our trade with the States of late years, for since 1879 a large smuggling trade has been done from the States into Canada. It is also evident from the British official figures for the half-year closing on June 30, that our trade with Britain has not yet reached the bottom rung. From those returns it appears that, as compared with the corresponding half-year in 1887, British exports to Canada have declined by £490,000, or over \$2,400,000; while British imports from Canada have fallen off to the extent of £180,000, or about \$900,000; showing for the six months a total decline of \$3,300,000. It is quite clear from those figures that our trade with the mother country has not been growing, while our trade with the United States has been growing. Another point is, that it is clear that we are going to be subjected to an enormous annual expenditure in order to protect ourselves against smuggling. As the price of goods goes down in the United States and increases here, the result will be that an enormous amount of smug-gling will be carried on. There is a large amount of smuggling now along the frontier. I remember the time when the smuggling was all from Canada into the United States, but then goods were dearer there than they were here, and that was not under the present policy of the Government. Since the establishment of the National Policy, goods have continually been going up in price in Canada, while the price in the United States has been going down. In one establishment in Buffalo with which I have some acquaintance, it is a very common thing for Canadians to go across, and to go a considerable distance, to buy goods, and those goods are smuggled across into Canada. I notice that the Minister of Customs has asked for an increased staff of preventive officers.

country having to protect a frontier of 3,000 miles in length, with a population of 5,000,000 people, in order to keep out the goods of a country with 65,000,000 people. That of itself is, to my mind, a reason why a closer and an unrestricted relation in trade should exist between us and the people to the south. In the United States recently, for example, they have taken off the duties on cigars and tobacco. I should like to know how the Minister of Inland Revenue expects to protect this long frontier against the importation of those articles. I desire to show that our relations with the United States are a necessity. If we had closer relations with them, the material benefits of unrestricted reciprocity would be very great. Take the case of the farmer, for instance. He knows very well, that unrestricted reciprocity would mean money in his pocket every year-money saved by buying in the cheapest market, and money gained by selling in which he buys. We imported last year from the United States baking powder to the value of $91,786, on which the duty paid was $19,502. We imported from the United States books to the value of $418,095, on which $62,725 duty was paid. Of cotton goods we imported from the States over $700,000 worth, on which over $200,000 duty was paid. Of proprietary medicines, which are very largely used by farmers, we imported from the United States $100,000 worth, on which $25,000 duty was paid. Of lamp shades and lamp chimneys we imported $170,000 worth; duty $51,000. We imported $526,000 worth of hats, caps and bonnets from the same country, and paid $137,000 duty thereon. Of house-furnishing hardware we imported $2,741,000, and paid $82,000 duty. We imported sewing machines to the value of $117,000, and paid $39,000 duty on them; boots and shoes $164,000, duty $41,000; harness and saddlery $21,092, duty $7,361; floor oilcloth $15,000, duty $5,700; seeds $239,700, duty $35,900; sugar $719,000, duty $459,000. Let us now look at some of the things the farmer has to sell. According to Mr. Blue's report for 1887, we sold to the United States in the year ending June 30; 1887, 18,225 horses, at a price of $2,214,318. Had it not been for the American duty of 20 per cent., the returns would have been some $400,000 more. We sold them, also, 45,765 horned cattle, value $887,756; and 363,046 sheep, value $974,482. I will not detain the House by reading all these items, because it must be quite evident to any one who takes our returns as they are furnished to this House, that it is useless to attempt to shut out our people from obtaining what is absolutely necessary to them from another country. Now, I know the argument that is usually used with regard to the results that would follow if we entered into unrestricted reciprocity with the United States—it is said that our manufacturers would be ruined. Well, if you take up our last census and look over the different classes of this country, I think every man will come to the conclusion that a policy that is virtually laying hold of a considerable percentage of the people of this Dominion and placing them in an advan-tageous position, while it reduces the others to a disadvantageous position, is a most suicidal policy. look forward with very grave apprehension to this We are going very soon to have a new census, and I Mr. McMullen.

earnestly hope that it will be taken in such a way as will enable us to form an opinion as to how this tariff affects the different classes. Now, there is another thing. I am sure that every man who is unbiassed in his own mind, will not deny that we must have the American market for our surplus products. It has been stated by Senator Cullom in the United States:

"That that market is worth to the American farmer, $3,330,000,000 a year? They are fond of telling the Canadian farmer that his best market is to be sought in Great Britain, and not in the United States. Can they break the force of the argument that England is going, from India, where labor is cheap, rather than from the United States (or Canada), where labor is highly paid."

Now, I think it is quite clear, and must be patent to every unbiassed mind, that it is an absolute necessity for us to have liberty of trade or unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. olden times, it was said that it was the privilege of kings to sweat the people. It appears to me that in Canada, the Government of the day have decided that it is their privilege to sweat the farmers of this Dominion, and they have been doing so for the last ten years. It has become a matter of great necessity that our Government should devote, themselves earnestly and honestly to the task of taking the farmers of this country out of the financial embarrassments that have overtaken them, and of doing something to assist them, because, I am satisfied, in my own mind, that if the condition of things which we are now in should continue, before long we will be in the most deplorable condition that has ever been witnessed since Canada became a people. per capita debt, at this moment, has reached $60 per head, while across the border they have only a debt of $25 per head. I stated to this House some time ago, with regard to the increase of our indebtedness, that the Government had increased our responsibilities by a million a month. I am quite satisfied in my own mind that it will be found upon investigation that they have increased the responsibilities of the people of this country by a full million a month. I speak with authority when I say that there is a feeling in this country that this thing cannot go on much longer. When we consider the amount of money we have borrowed and spent in this country for the last number of years, the amount that has been borrowed by mortgage associations and loaned to people for the last number of years, it will be seen that our borrowing capacity is about used up, and we cannot expect to go on for the next ten or fifteen years and borrow and spend as we have been doing in the past. Where has all this money gone to? Where is the enormous amount of money spent on the Canadian Pacific Railway and other roads? Look at the enormous and extravagant expenditure in connection with the enlargement of canals, in connection with the construction of railways, in connection with the subsidising of lines in every direction where the Government could possibly spend money that would be of any use to the Tory party. The Government has spent money most shamefully in every direction, and, as a result, we have arrived at the present unfortunate condition of things in this country. I say that, in looking over the whole case, and regarding the future from this standpoint, it seems to me to be fraught with the gravest dangers, and it is my honest conviction that unless an agreement is come to by both parties on both sides of this House to go to work systematically and determinedly to cut down the annual expenditure and bring it within some reasonable limit, doing away with all extravagance on the public works, railways and matters of that kind, the future of this country is going to be such that the people will positively be enslaved, and they will find themselves in such an embarrassed condition financially that they will not get over it for many years to come. The experience in the United States has been somewhat similar to our own. I have before me a short recital of a speech delivered by a member of the United States Senate with regard to the unfortunate condition of the farming community under the opera-tion of a policy of protection. The speech was delivered by Senator Voorhees, and it was delivered at Washington, March 19, of this year:

"The resolution offered by Senator Voorhees, as to the agricultural depression, was taken up, and Senator Voorhees addressed the Senate in relation to it. He spoke of the deep, strong current of anxiety, discontent and alarm prevailing in the farming communities, and said he proposed to aid them in the enquiry as to the causes of the existing depression.

"It was now nearly thirty years since the close of a terrible war had given to unhallowed avariee an opportunity to prey upon the self-sacificing pariots of the country such as had never before been presented to the passions of vice. The mensures then resorted to for the taxation of one class of citizens and for the enrichment of another class had been the legislation by which the burden of the public debt had been doubled and a high protective tariff as a curse and not a blessing. He was dealing not with a theory, but with a condition which even a ing not with a theory, but with a condition which even a blind man could look at and draw from it an unerring conclusion. The farmers of the United States to-day did not receive, on an average, more than 10 cents a bushel blind man could look at and draw from it an unerring conclusion. The farmers of the United States to-day did not receive, on an average, more than 10 cents a bushel for their corn. 50 cents for their wheat, and from 2 to 3 cents a pound for their hogs.

"The time would come, at no distant day, when the farmer would look on the proposition to tax him and his wife and children for the protection and benefit of other people besides himself, as he would look on a law of Congress to establish the army worm and weevil in his wheat, to infest his cattle with murrain and his bogs with cholera. Every pretence of a home market for the farmer was a fraud, and every pretence of taxing wheat and oats and potatoes for his benefit was a cheat and sham. It was a notorious and self-evident truth that the tariff as it now stood increased the farmer's expense account from 35 to 100 per cent. on every implement of industry with which he toiled, and last year binding twine had been enhanced to 18 cents a pound by the tariff and twine trust. He did not believe that the hands of the farmer would hold a Republican ticket at the next presidential election. He declared that not only had there been no increase in the value of land for the last quarter of a century, but there had been an absolute loss of 33 per cent. If the improved farm lands of the United States were put to sale to-day, under the most favorable circumstances, they would not, he said, on a general average, realise more than two-thirds of what their value had been twenty-five years ago. The farms of the State of Ohio were now under mortgage to the amount of $30,000,000.

"Twenty-three per cent. of the whole face of the State of Illinois was under mortgage. The State of Michigan was still worse. Forty-seven per cent. of the whole surface of that State was under mortgage. The State of Michigan was still worse. Forty-seven per cent. of the whole surface of that State was under mortgage. The State of Michigan was the farm lands were under mortgage at such rates of interest as farm lands were under mortgage at such rates of interest as the farmers could never pay out of their crops, to say nothing of the principal. The farmers were thus brought face to face with the loss of their homes, with ruin, and hundreds of thousands of them were standing in that attitude at the present day and hour. Nor were the farmers of New England different in that respect from those of the Western States. There was the same decadence in Vermont and New Hampshire, where there was a movement to re-colonise them with Scandinavian immigrants, and where farm lands could be purchased at from $1 to $2 an acre. In the face of such appalling facts who, he asked, would eulogise the workings and results of a system of tariff protection which had, for a continuous term of twenty-eight years, accomplished nothing save the concentration and amassment of wealth in the hands of a few protected people. He went on to speak of the recent Carnegie banquet in Washington, reading some of the newspaper headlines—such as 'Gorgeous dinner that outrivalled an ancient Roman feast,' 'A menu which almost the world furnished.'"

Mr. McMULLEN. I continue:

"That banquet brought to his mind that other historical feast which Belshazzar, the king, gave to a thousand of his lords, and when the king saw the fingers of a man's hand write on the wall 'over against the candlestick' the 'Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin,' his earnest prayer and belief was, that the handwriting on the wall of the Carnegie banquet would presage the overthrow of a system of extortion and robbery more wicked in the sight of God and man than all the sins of Babylon, when her robes were searlet with iniquity. The remedies to be applied were: First, tariff reform. Summing up, he said: 'In the face of these things (referring to the subsidising of the press, the purchasing of votes in blocks of five, official patronage, &c.), and with a full knowledge of what is before us, we will gird up our loins like men and go forward to the fight. The battle may be long and weary, but the sun will go down on a great final victory, of the eternal right over legalised wrong, of freedom and equality over casse. Hail mighty day of the swift coming future.'"

That is virtually the experience of the people of this country also. Those words uttered by that hon, gentleman with respect to the condition of the farming community in the United States will find an echo in the breast of every farmer in this Dominion. The man who will read these words will realise that their experience is identical with that of the farmers in the United States since its protective tariff was introduced, where the people have been ground under exactions by the operations of the tariff. In the inception of the protective tariff in this country the farmers asked nothing from the First Minister. He promised them many things, but they asked nothing. His promises were, however, not fulfilled. He promised them a home market, prosperity, Canada for the Canadians, and everything that he thought would secure their votes and influence at the election. He promised them fish, but for a fish he gave them a so pent. He promised them an egg, but he gave them a scorpion, in the shape of the National Policy, which has ruined them, deprived them of their rights, made them slaves to other people, and placed them in a position so that they are getting poorer every day. I come now to examine some of the causes which have largely conduced to bring about our present financial condition. that the extravagance which has characterised the action of the Government during the last ten or eleven years has resulted in our enormous national debt. When we examine the expenditure of the Departments, we must come to the conclusion that extravagance reigns in every Department. There extravagance reigns in every Department. has been added to the annual extravagance since 1878 no less than $16,000,000. An increased expenditure appears in every Department. the Department of the Interior for last year. When the question of the expenditure connected with this Department was before the House last Session, I took exception to the statement made by Mr. McMullen.

that the expenditure was far in excess of the statement presented. This year I have further statement presented. examined the expenditure of that Department. The expenditure, without charging the item of surveys to the annual expenditure, was $325,011; the entire receipts from the North-West, from North-West lands and all sources of revenue, were $288,250, leaving a net loss, without including surveys, of $36,760, and a net loss, including surveys of over $167,000. An investigation of the accounts of the Department with respect to the extravagance there observable is sufficient to make any honest-hearted Canadian blush. been expended in connection with that one Department $167,738 over and above the entire receipts we drew last year from all sources in the North-West. This result must be compared with the estimate made by the Minister some years ago, that by 1890 there would be a revenue of $59,000,-000 out of the land and other resources of that country; and further, the statements made by other hon, gentlemen that it would prove a mine of wealth in the future, and that the lands of the North-West would recoup this country for every dollar expended, and the statement of the First Minister that we should, on the faith of that estimate, grant $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have also had a similar experience with regard to many other matters, and I could present to the House other items showing the extravagance of the Government in other Departments. From the first pages of the Auditor General's Report it appears there are 631 civil servants, drawing an average salary of $1,200, who, during 1888-89, by a system inaugurated and encouraged by this Government, drew $190,224 for extra services. In view of the fact that a civil servant is employed but a few hours a day, such a system should not be encouraged. Last year only 481 civil servants drew extra pay. I desire now to direct the attention of the House to payments for interest in London. I observe that we paid $7,348,450 for interest in London. I ask the House to go back to the time when Sir Charles Tupper was appointed High Commissioner. Hon. members will remember that the First Minister stated that we would save more money in commission, by having Sir Charles Tupper in London, than it would cost to keep him there. Notwithstanding that statement, we paid, last year, to two agencies in London, for receiving money and paying interest, a sum of $36,416. Sir Charles Tupper is there, and he has a large staff, as we can see from the Auditor General's Report, but the labor performed in this way would be too slavish for a man who wants to enjoy his time luxuriously; and he is not there to serve his country in that capacity. Last year an appropriation of $185,018 was appropriated for handling the public debt, but I find the expenditure was $202,000, which is $17,258 more than the appropria-Now, Sir, I will come to another item. Early in this Session I asked the House to consent to a return being brought down that would show the House the amounts spent by the several Cabinet Ministers, from Confederation down to the present time, on account of travelling expenses and cab hire. The House refused me that return, on the advice of the First Minister, but I took the trouble to have it prepared at my own expense. the Minister, and I claimed to be able to show and I have it now before me for the last ten years.

I notice that the Ministers of this country have down for cab hire and travelling expenses, over and above their salary and sessional allowance, $71,297.65. Now, I say that this shows the system of extravagance that has prevailed in this country for years past. I contend that, on the face of such statements as I am now presenting, it is quite clear that extravagance has ruled in every Department. I notice that our legal expenses are largely increasing each year. Last year, according to the Auditor General's Report, there were spent for legal expenses, $117,825, and for advertising and printing, $243,815, an amount which has already been criticised by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. All these items go to show the extravagance which prevails in every Department of the Government, and the manner in which the expenditure has been run up from year to year. Another extravagance is the enormous increase of the cost of running the Intercolonial Railway. That line was originally built as an independent outlet to the sea-board, but in place of utilising that line properly, and trying to work it in such a way that the people of this country would not be called upon to contribute annually towards its being operated, the Government have, for purposes best known to themselves, gone to work and duplicated that line in several sections, with the result of decreasing its earning powers. We have the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway running virtually alongside of the Intercolonial Railway, and taking trade away from the main line. We have millions of money sunk in such railways; and for what purpose? Is it because additional lines are wanted? No; but because it was looked upon as a necessity, in the interest of certain persons, that these constituencies should be kept in line by the Government, at the expenditure of an enormous amount of money. We can well remember in what glowing terms the High Commissioner presented to this House his scheme in regard to the construction of that road. He pronounced it the great European Short Line to the sea-board, and one of the greatest things the country had undertaken. He portrayed how it would be the means of shortening the distance between the coal-fields of Nova Scotia and the consuming centres in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. He also went on to show that the grades on the Intercolonial Railway were such that it would be impossible to get up a coal trade between the Upper Provinces and Nova Scotia; but we got from the Chief Engineer the condition of that line when it was built, that in place of that line being 43 miles shorter than the Intercolonial Railway, it is only 7 miles, and in place of the grades being lower they are higher. All these things show the manner in which the affairs of this country have been conducted. I should have liked very much, as I intended, to reply to some remarks made by the member for Renfrew (Mr. White), but it is, I know, desirable that the debate should close, and I do not wish to keep the time of the House longer.

Seme hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. McMULLEN. That hon, gentleman, in reference to our paying $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. for money, said it would be better to pay our people $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., than to borrow in England at 4 per cent. If there is any one thing which has tended to keep up the price of money to the borrowing classes, the farming community particularly, it is the fact, as already stated by the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), that the Government of this country have been in the market in opposition to the borrowing class, and the result is that the rate of interest is higher.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). How do you account, then, for the banks raising their rates of interest almost simultaneously with the reduction of the rate on the part of the Government?

Mr. McMULLEN. Simply because the Government were competitors with the banks. The banks required a certain amount of deposits, and the Government had been competing with the banks for years past in the handling of the surplus money of this country. The Government have had millions of that money at an interest of 4 per cent., and recently they have reduced it to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. I say, that if the borrowing class in this country had the advantage of this money being thrown on the market to seek permanent investment, instead of the Government borrowing it, it would have been much better for those that were under the necessity of borrowing money. The hon. gentleman (Mr. White) also boasted with regard to the construction of local lines of railway. There has been some aid granted in Ontario to local lines, but I contend that in a great many instances that money has been virtually squandered. In some cases you can see lines running parallel to each other—one road built by contributions, in the Province of Ontario, from the municipalities, and the other built solely and only because it was in the interest of parties who occupy the Treasury benches that these roads should be subsidised. I say that is wrong. I am surprised that my hon, friend from Renfrew should have supported the expenditure of money in the Province of Ontario for the construction of roads at a subsidy per mile, while he supported the same Government in building up, at a cost to this country, roads in the Maritime Provinces where the people of the locality have not been called upon to pay one single farthing towards their construction. The people of the Province of Ontario have contributed enormous amounts towards the construction of their railways, while the people in the Maritime Provinces have in some places got their roads built absolutely at the cost of the Government, especially in Nova Scotia. I will close my remarks by expressing the regret that I have been called upon to present this statement to the House. I do so honestly and conscientiously, and with a sincere desire for the welfare, and prosperity, and the future of my country. We are sent here by the people to legislate for them, and we should look to our country with the desire to benefit its condition financially. We should look forward to its future as a great and growing country, and do everything we can to place the people in a happy, comfortable and contented position. The Government, for the last ten or twelve years, has done exactly opposite to this. They have been legislating in such a way that to-day, the agriculturists of this Dominion are in a worse condition than they have ever been in for thirty years before. I am sorry to have to confess this; but I earnestly hope that some change will take place, that will light up the future of this country for the poor agriculturists. If it does not, I am seriously and honestly afraid, that their future will be that of an enslaved portion of this Dominion; that they will not have that prosperity to which their honest efforts entitle them. Many of them came to this country with their parents, who assailed the forests as pioneers and turned them into fertile fields, and it is too bad that they should be obliged to struggle as they are doing now, without getting any aid or consideration, except the privilege of charging the lumberman a little more for his pork. Now, Mr. Speaker, I apologise to the House for the length of time I have occupied, but I considered it my duty to present this statement in the interest of my constituency.

After Recess.

Mr. BROWN. In the course of this debate we have been treated, first, to the old original blue ruin speech of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) with a revised edition since the pilgrimage to Washington; then we have had a repetition of the blue ruin speech usually delivered by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), embellished with the first contribution of his letters from the hot regions; and we have just had a long oration from my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) in which he has chosen to decry the credit of the country and to speak ill of the position of the farming community. He seemed to labor very hard in endeavoring to prove his position, because I feel assured that no one knows better than he he does that the state of the farming community in Canada, as regards their indebtedness, and in fact as regards their general prosperity, is the very opposite of what he represented it to be to this House. Any one hearing or reading the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite who have so far addressed the House could come to no other conclusion than that Canada is in a state of ruin, that the farmers of Canada are in a state of hopeless depression, that their farms are so encumbered and mortgaged that there is no extrication of them from their difficulties, that, in fact, Canada is the country of all others in the world which offers no attraction to immigrants and no hope to the people who live in it. I propose, Mr. Speaker, in the few remarks I have to make—and I promise the House that it will not be wearied by me with a long speech I will not follow my hon. friend in his long criticism of the various items of the tariff; there will be an opportunity afterwards in committee of discussing those items in a proper way. Suffice it to say, speaking from my own standpoint, that I regard the tariff as a whole as conducive to the best interests of Canada; and I sympathise deeply with my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. Trow) in the difficult position in which he is placed, to get speakers enough on the opposite side of the House to come out with any energy in opposition to this tariff, because in their hearts they must know that the tariff which is submitted to this House is one not only conducive to the best interests of the whole of Canada, but more particularly to the farming community, and they dare not attack the Government. The hon member who last spoke indulged in the old cry of high duties for the poor man and low duties for the rich man; he spoke of the woollen glove and the kid glove. Mr. McMullen.

When the hon, gentleman speaks of the heavy cloth required for the poor man, does he not know--yes, he does know; because he has had experience—that the duty is put on for the purpose, and has had the effect, not only of encouraging the industries of the country, but of giving to the people of Canada cheaper materials than they had before, and giving employment besides for the labor of the country and better prices for all the products of the soil? It is not true that the protective duty of 10 cents a pound which has been put on tweeds instead of 72 cents adds to the price of the material or the price of a suit of clothes. The experience of the last ten years has shown that the articles which have been protected in this way have been produced to the people of Canada at a less price than they were before or could possibly be. But, Sir, twelve long years ago hon. gentle-men then sitting on this side of the House heard the doleful predictions of hon. gentlemen oppo-My hon, friend the present leader of the Opposition declared that within six months every mother in every cottage of Quebec would curse the day this tariff was put into execution, for adding to the anxieties of her life. Those six months have passed—six years and double six years have passed—and prosperity has beamed on the country and happiness has filled every cottage in Quebec and every home in Canada, instead of being, as before, filled with despair and hopelessness. My hon, friend from North Norfolk, who is as great in predictions as he is in the marvellous letters which he gets from the hot regions, said: "Let the people go to the polls, and they will hurl from power the men who have placed so iniquitous a tariff as this on the statutes of the country." Well, they went to the polls, and they came back sustained by the people, who saw that they had saved the country from hopeless despair. The people have learned by experience the benefits and advantages of the National Policy, and on almost every occasion, when asked to give a verdict, they have returned the Liberal-Conservative party to power. My hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has, ever since he has been in the House, been predicting the downfall of the Government, and although those predictions have been singularly unfulfilled, he still, hoping against hope, clings to the delusion that some day what he ardently desires will come to pass; and to-day, he says that in a year or two more, very likely there will be a disaster to the country. But let me tell the hon, gentleman that the farmers of Canada know what is to their interest as well as the next man. They are not to be deluded, and they know better than to pin their faith to the nostrums of hon. gentlemen opposite, and the statements they circulate throughout the country of the tremendous indebtedness of the farming community, thus attempting to destroy the credit of the farmers of Canada. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) made a statement the other night, regarding the mortgage indebtedness of the farmers, and when called to book in his statement, he said: Go to the registry offices of the country. Why, Sir, we know that these offices do not contain a proper record. We know that, while there may be mortgages upon farms running for five of ten years, and payable in annual instalments, the full indebtedness of the mortgage appears on record in the registry offices until the last instalments are paid and the mortgages cleared, and to make up a statement from such records, and give that as a true statement of indebtedness, is a slander on the farmers of Canada. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) proposed, and I wonder he was not ashamed to make such a proposition, that a sum of money shall be voted by this House for an investigation into the registry records, in order to determine the amount due on mortgages. I would like to know what the farmers of Canada will think of a proposition of this kind, to hold an inquisition into their business, and to enquire minutely into the condition of every one of them. I will tell the hon. gentleman something about farm mortgages, which, perhaps, he does not, but which he ought to know: The mortgage indebtedness encumbering the farms of Ontario is equal to about $3 per acre of the occupied land. The farm lands, with houses, in Ontario are worth an average of $38 per acre. mortgages have increased in the past five years about $15,000,000; in the period during which farm mortgages have increased $15,000,000, the cultivated lands have increased 800,000 acres, the partially cleared 400,000 acres, and the value of buildings about $25,000,000. Are these indications of a healthy state or otherwise? It is a very good showing that nine-tenths of the value of the farms is practically free from mortgage encumbrance, less than one-tenth of the value being required to meet the face value of the mortgages. Questions pertinent to this discussion are: 1st. Are the farmers paying off their mortgage indebtedness? 2nd. Are they unable to pay interest, thus becoming delinquent borrowers in arrears of interest and principal? 3rd. Are compulsory proceedings of one kind and another multiplying? 4th. Are enforced sales increasing? The position of affairs is this: It appears that during the past few years the amount of old mortgages paid off (at the end of 1888) about equals the total amount loaned on real estate security on the 31st December, 1883. A portion of this is book-keeping payment. That is: A. goes to the loan company on the expiry of his mortgage term and gives a new mortgage. In the books of the company the old mortgage money appears as money received on the one side, and, on the other, it appears as a loan made on mortgage during the year. The returns do not give the proportion, but it is understood that a very fair proportion of the clearances consists of money actually paid in. I mention this particularly, because hon, gentlemen opposite—God forbid I should say all of them are seeking to make the people believe that it would be far better for us to ally ourselves in commercial union with the United States; and I wish to show that the farmers of Canada are in a better position to-day than are those of the country to the south of us. The following table is an exhibit of what has taken place during a period of ten years in Ontario:-

So that our farmers have been able during the last ten years gradually to reduce their mortgages, and, besides, many of them have mortgaged their farms for the purpose of increasing their farm buildings and stock. I make this statement without fear of contradiction, and I make it in the interest of the farmers. I know that our farmers will thank us on this side of the House for standing up for them, and seeing that their credit is not decried without protest. Hon. gentlemen opposite will stick at nothing in the hope of getting office. To achieve that end, they picture the farmers of Canada in such a state of depression and inability to meet their debts, in such a condition of blue ruin, that one would fancy we were on the verge of great national disaster. Everyone knows, on the contrary, that there is absolutely no foundation for Our farmers are, as any such statements. regards their mortgage indebtedness, in a firstrate position, far superior to that of the same community in any part of the United States, with which hon. gentlemen opposite seem to desire the closest connection. My hon. friend also, with his usual exaggeration, stated that the per capita debt of Canada was $60 per head, whereas it is only $47.50. He stated that the American people had grown tired of protection, and this in the face of the fact that at the last elections they returned a protective Republican Government in opposition to a free trade Government. In 1878 hon. gentlemen on this side of the House undertook to solve a great They did not shrink from the responsibility of grappling with the condition of the country, and they have, to-day, good reason to be satisfied with the stand they took, because every year since has shown that the policy they inaugurated was the salvation of the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite saw the position into which the country was drifting and never lifted a hand to relieve it from distress. One of the speakers opposite dilated at length on what he called the exodus or the decrease of rural population. But we know very well that, though in some portions of the country the rural population has to some extent decreased, the urban population has increased, and thus, while the consumers of farm products have increased, the farmers themselves have had less competition to contend against, and have been able, consequently, to obtain better prices for their products. But, if the rural population has decreased in certain parts of Ontario, what has been the effect? It is not, as hon. gentlemen opposite have contended, that this decrease was caused by men leaving for the United States, but by men either added to the urban districts or going out to settle in our glorious North-West, where they are thriving and building for themselves and their country a great future. It is deplorable to find speeches made by hon, gentlemen opposite couched in such a doleful strain as to convey the impression that there is no prosperity in Canada, and that the people are discontented. The people of Canada are not discontented; the people of Canada are happy; the people of Canada see in their country a great future. From the Atlantic to the Pacific there is a contented people. There may be differences of opinion as to the best way in which the affairs of the country should be managed, as to the best means to be adopted for the advancement of the country, but the people of Canada are in a better position to-day, financially and otherwise, than the people of the United States. It will be necessary and proper that I should, at this stage, state before this House facts, absolute facts, facts that cannot be denied, facts that are verified and certified to by the Government of Ontario, and I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite will not dispute them. We are told that the farm lands of Ontario have decreased in value. Of course any hon gentleman may go into any part of Canada, may go into any township, and may find a farm, which, under peculiar circumstances—an overflow of water or something of that kind-has been sold at a low price, but this is not the way to estimate the position of affairs. The true way is to find the position of the farms from the verified returns. The average value of farm lands in Ontario, was $31.33 an acre in 1882, and $44.75 in 1888, or an increase of 42 per cent, in the value per acre during the only years in which the farmers of the United States experienced a shrinkage in the value of their farms. During the six years from 1882 to 1887, the average per acre of Ontario farm lands, was $29.67 per acre. In 1888, the value was $44.75. In 1888, the value of farm lands, farm buildings, implements and live stock, shows the large increase over 1882 of $987,000,000. During that period, the Canadian farmers exported about $60,000,000 of live stock and meats, the greater portion of which came from Ontario. Farm buildings have also gone up in value, and competent authorities agree that there has been a great deterioration in farm buildings in the United States, Central and Western, Kansas alone, for example, showing 5,000 deserted farms last year. I have to-day had the following extract placed in my hands :-

"The pamphlet just issued by the New Hampshire State Commissioner of Agriculture and Immigration, Hon. N. J. Bachelder, is an appeal to people to 'Secure a Home in New Hampshire, where Comfort, Health and Prosperity Abound.' The words we have quoted appear on the title page, and the facts adduced sustain the claims thus advanced. The State is really a pleasant and prosperous one. It is true that 1,442 of its farms have been abandoned—that is to say, are not inhabited. Still, the value of cattle in the State is increasing half a million dollars yearly, and the last few years have given birth to summer hotels and boarding houses ample to accommodate thirty thousand guests, and the setting up of sixteen creameries proves an extension of pasturage lands and a demand for their products. The farms, which are fully described by the commissioner, are distributed among the different counties, as follows: Rockingham, 113: Strafford, 52: Belknap, 54: Carroll, 124; Merrimac, 215; Hillsboro', 228; Cheshire, 211; Sullivan, 160; Grafton, 265; Coos, 20. We are among those who think that the disposition to leave the State has culminated, and that most of the deserted neighborhoods are more likely to improve than to grow worse. Of course, energetic youths will continue to seek the centres of population, but if the same energy is manifested in reviving and keeping up the energy of the churches as is displayed in secular departments, New Hampshire is bound to be in the future, as it has been in the past, a nursery of noble men and women."

The true reason probably for the depression in some of our farming districts there, and in Eastern Canada as well, is that the competition they have to meet is that of the virgin soil of the North-West and the West, but no one should run away with the idea that Canadian farmers are in a bad position in comparison with those of the United States, or accept the picture which hon. gentlemen have painted, that we are in such a bad position, and that, if we could join with the people to the south of us, we would be in a better position.

Mr. Brown.

Canada self-reliance. They sought out new channels for trade. They had stout hearts and strong arms, and they said they would fight for them-selves, and so they did. The time was when the people of Canada would have been glad to do anything in order to renew that treaty in natural products, but I am prepared to take my stand and say, that we have a people here who can depend upon themselves, and can hew out their homes in this country, and that it depends upon them whether this shall be a country at all. The great future for Canada is to fight out its own destinies, and I, for one, will side with those who propose to carry out a policy of that kind. I find, that in 1882, the value per acre of farm implements was $1.83. From 1882 to 1887, the average value And so all along the line. Whatever was $2.15. you may talk about, everything was increased in value, and the mortgages on the farms were decreasing every year. Instead of hon gentlemen trying to lead the country and the world to understand that our farmers have been getting deeper in debt, they should state the fact that the contrary is the case. In 1879, according to the loan companies' returns, the percentage of principal and interest overdue on mortgages and in default was equal to 5 per cent. of the total amount secured by mortgage, and, in 1880, it was 8 per cent. Then, as to compulsory proceedings. During the period from 1884 to 1888, there was one compulsory proceeding to each $106,000 on mortgage. In 1880-81, there was one compulsory proceeding to each $52,100, showing a reduction of one-half in the period first mentioned. Then in regard to enforced sales, an examination of the Official Gazette of the Province of Ontario for the years 1878 to 1888, establishes the fact that, notwithstanding the increased number of farms, sheriffs' sales in 1888 in Ontario, were but 37 per cent. of those in 1878. So much for the attack which has been made upon the farmers of Canada in regard to the position in which they are placed by mortgages and encumbrances. My hon friend the member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) was in 1879 one of the prophets. I have no doubt that he believed all he said, because I have a great deal of confidence in that hon, gentleman speaking exactly what he thinks. In 1879, he made, as he always does, an admirable speech, and he quoted the position of bank stocks of Canada, and said they were depressed and that was only what was to be expected from a Government which had been only a few months in power and from the inauguration of a national policy. The evil influence, according to the hon. gentleman, was felt over land and sea, it was felt in bank stocks, in navigation stocks, and so on; and the hon. gentleman told us how these stocks had fallen in so short a time. prepared to say now what causes there were for the decline in the value of bank stocks at that I have no doubt there were causes, because it is all folly for hon. gentlemen to try to make the country believe that it was the fault of the National Policy, or that the Government could promise anything more than what human power could grant and human influences and human energies could bring to pass. There may have been causes for this decline in these bank stocks. My hon. friend says When the Reciprocity Treaty was abrogated, as far this was the effect, and so it would be under the as Canada was concerned, it taught the people of influence of the National Policy. Now, let us see. this was the effect, and so it would be under the

When this policy was introduced, the Bank of Montreal stock was 140. The National Policy has existed 12 years, and Bank of Montreal stock to-day is 227. He stated that Molson's Bank stock was then 77, but such has been the baneful influence of this National Policy that to-day Molson's Bank stock is 161. Bank of Toronto then was 151½, and under the baneful influence of the National Policy it has risen to 217. Merchants Bank was then 801, to-day it is 142. The Bank of Commerce was then 103, to-day it is 125. So much for their predictions, and the same predictions they made then have been repeated year after year, and have been repeated in this House since this debate commenced, and, no doubt, will be repeated before it is closed; but if we are to judge by the predictions of the past, we will be able to show that the same evidences of prosperity which the country has shown in the past will be seen in the next 12 years. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to forget that our country is something more than the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. We have an inheritance the like of which no other nation under the sun has ever had; we have an inheritance of which every Canadian should be proud. I tell these hon, gentlemen to take a leaf out of the book of the Americans they so much admire. Where will you find a Republican or Democrat in the States who, in speaking of his country, will not stand up for the place in which he lives? If he lives in a certain township, it is the best township in the county, his county is the best county in the State, and his State is the best in the Union. As a humorous friend of mine said to me to-day here in Ottawa: "I am astonished at the way the hon, members in your House talk about your country. Why, in the States, even a resident of Florida will stick up for a crocodile hole, and say it is the best crocodile hole in the country." Let hon, gentlemen opposite take that lesson to heart, and instead of decrying their country when they speak of it, let them speak with a proper feeling of appreciation. They seem to desire to befog and becloud the minds of the They seem farmers; they endeavor to bring out all the points that may create a difference of opinion among them. They do not rejoice, as they should rejoice, in the fact of the progress of the country in any particular industry. Why do they not tell the people that to-day we export more cheese to England than the United States? Why do they not tell the people that we have overshot the Americans in the article of cheese? To-day our cheese in England stands away above American cheese. Last year (1888) Canada exported of Canadian-made cheese 84,173,267 pounds. The United States exported 88,008,458 pounds, going ahead of Canada by about four nillion pounds. But the United States export was only worth $8,736,000, while the Canadian was worth $8,928,-000, or nearly $200,000 more. Brought down to a per head basis, Canada exported $1.80 per cent. and the United States 63 cents. Canada exported three times the amount the United States did. In proportion to population to-day we stand at the top of the heap in the English market as the producers of foreign cheese, but it does not suit hon. gentlemen to say that, because it is a tribute to our prosperity, and so they do not say it. My hon. friend said that the United States were becoming disgusted with protection, and they realised that they had adopted a wrong principle in establishing a protective duty on iron. My hon. friend has not read the book aright; I am afraid he sometimes makes speeches without reading the book. The protective duty in the United States was what made the iron industry of that country the mammoth industry it is today? There was a time when every rail used in the United States was imported from abroad, and to-day if there is such a thing as an entry made of a rail into the United States from abroad, that entry can be put into a museum of curiosities. All the rails of the United States are made in that country, and it is because they adopted the protective tariff that they are able to make their own rails. We, here in Canada, have got the mineral wealth in the bowels of the earth, but we have done comparatively nothing to unearth it. I regard the tariff on iron, in Canada, as the top stone of the National Policy, and I am only sorry that it was not adopted many years ago. Hon. gentlemen will ask us to point to the blast furnaces. Sir, every thing cannot be done in a day. Yet the Londonderry works have orders booked a year ahead and have made arrangements to blow in a second furnace. The New Glasgow iron and coal works increased 314 per cent. in its business between 1884 and 1889. The iron tariff has already worked wonders in this country. I will tell you something about what the iron tariff has done in the manufacturing industries When I speak of the city from which I of Canada. come (Hamilton), I desire to say that I also speak of every large city in Canada that has established industries like those to which I refer. It is a boast of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and I have no doubt of a great many on the other side of the House, and ought to be the boast of every one who has the honor of a seat in this House, that when he comes here he does not come as a representative of Ontario, he does not come as a representative of Quebec, he does not represent one Province more than another, except the special interests that require his care, but he must feel that he is a representative of the whole of this vast Dominion. Being each one a representative of this vast Dominion, we have got to give and take; we have got to devise means by which the resources of this whole country shall be brought to light, and one of the means of doing so is to bring to the surface that hidden wealth that lies in the bowels of the earth. See what our neighbors have done with their protective tariff; give us time, and we will do the same thing. Already the tariff on iron has been productive of immense benefits. The iron produced in Canada to-day, the iron rolled in Hamilton and other cities in Canada to-day, has given employment to a great number of men, and the men who are employed in these factories are strong, stalwart fellows. These factories are producing excellent iron, the best that can be got, and they are supplying the whole country. When this duty was placed upon iron, the advocates of that policy pledged themselves to the country that the policy was one that, when honestly administered, would cheapen the article to the consumer. Let me give the facts concerning the Canada Pipe Foundry in Hamilton, and there are others in Nova Scotia, others in Montreal, others in Toronto, and they have all had the same experience as the factory in Hamilton. Mr. Gartshore writes to me:

"I duly received your favor of 21st instant asking mehow the late change in the tariff had affected my business? I am happy to say that the results have been most beneficial since it has come into operation. I have about trebled the number of my workmen, and besides we have now constant employment the year round. There have also been new works started in the same line in Montreal, Londonderry and, I believe, in Three Rivers. In addition to this, the Toronto foundry has doubled its capacity. With regard to importation of pipe, this has almost ceased—excepting in a few cases where they were required so rapidly that it was impossible to make them in time."

The output of all combined is from 30,000 to 35,000 tons of pipe, and they are producing in Hamilton to-day the best pipe in the world. can remember the time when Toronto and Hamilton could not obtain in all Canada pipe for their waterworks, because it could not be cast here. remember in Hamilton, when the waterworks were constructed, an offer was made that any man who would cast waterworks pipe in Canada should receive $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. additional to the price at which foreign pipe could be got, but no manufacturer could do it. The Canadian makers now understand this business, and, under the operation of the tariff, they are making water pipe for the whole country, and at this moment I understand parties are figuring to fill a contract for the growing city of Vancouver, on the shores of the Pacific Ocean. That is not the only point I have to offer. There are the Ontario Rolling Mills in Hamilton, and that establishment speaks for all the rolling mills of Canada. I desire to read some facts to show that they are prospering and doing the right thing with the trade. They said to the Government, when the tariff was proposed, that if the tariff was adopted, it would be found that iron would be made much cheaper here than it could be imported under the new duty. Hon, gentlemen opposite raised the cry, and they have rang changes on that cry all over the country, that if we imposed a tariff on those manufactures and imposed a duty, it would involve so much additional charge to the consumers. The duties have done nothing of the kind. The members of that company write to me, and state as fol-

"The average price of English ordinary Staffordshire cars f. o. b., Liverpool, last year, as obtained by taking one quotation in the Iron Ay" and American Manufactures for each month and dividing by twelve, was £6 11s. 5½d. = $31.99; add for freight to Ontario. 25s. = $6.09. Cost per gross ton (2,240 lbs.) on board, $38.08, or $1.10 per 100 lbs. This would cost, with duty added, $2.35 per 100 lbs. Our average selling prices here are, $1.89 f. o. b., and in Toronto, $1.98. Very little foreign iron is brought into our market; what there is, is of special quality or size."

These facts show the benefit this tariff has accomplished in assisting the establishment of rolling mills in Canada; and any man who declares that the establishment of a rolling mill in this country, employing 400 or 500 men, is not of advantage, is a man who should be leased out to Barnum. The Ontario Rolling Mills state that the amount paid in wages in 1887 was $87,850; 1889, $188,645; the output, 1886-87, 10,212 tons; the output in 1889-90, 23,887 tons. Men employed in 1887, 185; men employed in 1889, 445. In addition, this same company have nail works, the output of which in 1889-90 was 54,646 kegs, and wages paid amounted to $24,370, and their iron and nails are giving the greatest satisfaction, and wholesale dealers declare that they are more than satisfied. The Hamilton Bridge Works, another successful concern, making structures which are a credit to Canada, and I only bring these facts forward to show that all these Mr. Brown.

establishments are successful. The president, Mr. William Hendrie, wrote to me on the 29th ult. as follows:—

"Below we give you some information regarding our company for the last few years. Since 1886 our annual output has increased more than 25 per cent., and we have been gradually enlarging our premises year by year; we keep fully employed an average of 150 men the year round. We have executed large contracts for iron and steel bridges for the following railway companies and corporations:—Grand Trunk Railway, main line and southern division; Canadian Pacific Railway; Detroit Extension and Ontario and Quebec Railway; Midland Railway; North and North-Western Railways; Northern and Pacific Junction Railway; Oxford and New Glasgow Railway, Nova Scotia: Niagara Central Railway; Michigan Central Railway, Canada Southern Division; St. Clair Tunnel Company, Sarnia; Crown Lands Department, Ontario Government; County of Middlesex, highway bridges; city of Ottawa. highway bridges; county of Elgin, highway bridges; County of Halton and Peel, highway bridges; City of London, highway bridges; County of Huron, highway bridges; Townships of Waterloo, Rainham, Wilmot, Trafalgar, highway bridges turned out lately, "Some of the principal structures turned out lately,

"Some of the principal structures turned out lately, are as follows:—Don viaduct, Toronto, for Canadian Pacific Railway, 1,200 feet long; iron bridge, Caledonia, for Northern and North-Western Railways, 750 feet long; swing bridge, Thorold, for Niagara Central Railway, 310 feet long; iron bridge, over River John, for Oxford and New Glasgow Railway, 360 feet long; steel bridge, River Thames, Chatham, Canadian Pacific Railway, 360 feet long; steel bridge, Grand River, Michigan Central Railway, 306 feet long; King street subway, city of Toronto, 900 tons steel; St. Clair Tunnel Company, shield and air locks, &c. Bridge work turned out of our hops has always given great satisfaction to the engineers of the different railways whom we have supplied, both as to design and construction."

Are hon. gentlemen to be believed when they say that they do not see in the prosperity of such companies all over the country, and in the employment of labor and the results that follow the employment of skilled labor in the country, any advantage to Canada? Now we have in this country bodies of men and women everywhere who are well remunerated for their labor and who in consequence have happy homes, and we have workingmen who go home on Saturday night with well-lined pockets after a hard week's work. Hon, gentlemen opposite are welcome to the stand they have taken, but we on this side of the House have also taken up our As was stated in 1878 by those who defended the First Minister and his colleagues, who introduced this policy, we nailed the colors of protection to the mast-head then, and we are not going to take them down without a fight. The people of the country are behind us and will support us in this struggle. We must have no narrow and contracted ideas of the Government of this country. I believe mutual concessions are desirable all round; that is the true policy on which this country should be governed. Hon, gentlemen opposite forget that we have a great North-West growing up. If we had followed the course pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite in days gone by, where would our North-West Territories be to-day? Where would the development of the mineral wealth of the Rocky Mountains have been to-day? What would have been the position of Canada, which now occupies a position in the world as that of being the highway uniting different portions of the earth? Oceans no longer keep the world apart, since the Canadian Pacific Railway crosses this continent and unites Canada with all points on the other side of the world. Who can tell the possibilities of trade between this country and Australia and Britain's

Indian possessions? We have the Grand Trunk Railway, one of the most magnificent railway systems in the world, with 3,197 miles of road in operation; and any one travelling from Montreal to Toronto at night in one of their electric lighted cars, could fancy he was in fairyland. We have also We have also the Canadian Pacific Railway, with 4,900 miles in active operation; and a passenger can start from the eastern end of the line and travel to Vancouver, and at the end of his journey he will feel loath to leave the car, because of the luxury of travelling, and the company he has enjoyed day by day on the trip, to say nothing of the magnificent scenery through which he has passed. I have taken that trip, and I know of what I speak; and I am looking at some hon, gentlemen opposite who have likewise taken the trip, and have spoken most enthusiastically of it. I have taken that trip, Sir, and I have passed through Manitoba and the North-West, and if there are persons out there who have been cursing their Maker because they went there, as hon. gentlemen opposite say, I did not see them. If there were any such, they were in hiding. I will tell you what I did see. I saw men in prosperity there; I saw men, both in Manitoba and the Territories, who had gone there five or six years before, and who had developed into successful farmers, and had money in the bank. One of these farmers said to me that he did not know what it was to be without anxiety of mind before he left the old country, but now he was happy and contented. Hon. gentlemen talk of settlers leaving Manitoba and the North-West for the purpose of going to Dakota. I would like to give them a nut to crack just here. Here is a telegram from Winnipeg, which reads as follows:-

"Advance guard of 100 persons here from Michigan to inspect the Lake Dauphin district, and if the report is favorable all will remove here at once."

What do they say to that? I saw a man in Brandon who arrived with his family from Dakota, and the exclamation of this good man was: "Bless the Lord, I am here at last." Do not cry down your country, gentlemen on the opposite side of the House. I tell you there is a country out in the West which has area enough to grow more than will feed the whole hungry world. Yet, we have hon. gentlemen on that side of the House who not only seek to conceal the great possibilities of this country, but actually try to make people believe that it is not a place for them to come to. is a gentleman lecturing in this city to-night whom many members of this House know, a gentleman of the very highest respectability and reputation, the Rev. Leonard Gaetz, a man of eloquence and a man of culture, who went out to the Deer River country some years ago; now let the House hear what that gentleman has to say about that country. He says:

"Rich bottom land—black sandy loam, yield in profusion, all grains of commerce except Indian corn. Some varieties of oats, 70 bushels to the acre, weighing 40 lbs. to the bushel, others 60 bushel, weighing 52 lbs. Great resources, adequate to a great nation. In Assimboia and Alberta, 64,000 square miles ranch country, capable of raising 3,000 to 8,000 head of cattle, giving each 20 acres to graze upon. In 1887, in Alberta, were 10,000 cattle, 25,000 horses, 32,000 sheep. In 1888 leases were fewer, but stock largely increased. Fifteen years from now 75,000 head of cattle will be shipped from Alberta to Great Britain."

Yet this is a country that seems to be despised by hon. gentlemen opposite. The policy of the Conthat of hon. gentlemen opposite to pull down. We have sought to make the country progressive. We have sought in every way that man could devise to make the Dominion prosperous, but it must be remembered that no tariff is perfect from the beginning, and that it has to be perfected by experience. The great future of this country is assured by the fact that the foundation of its prosperity is a substantial remuneration for the labor of the people. The tariff submitted to this House shows that the farming interest of Canada has been taken care of by the Government, and the farmers would be the first to know, and to experience that fact; besides this the great and growing industrial interests are cared for. Hon, gentlemen may decry this country as they will, but the near future will show that the mischief that these machinations and pilgrimages to Washington can effect are realised by an indignant people. Recent letters and recent correspondence in this country have shown that commercial union, unrestricted reciprocity, or any other name you give to these wicked fads tend only to the political union of this country with the United States and are intended to bring that about. If you compare the utterances in this country, and the utterances in the States, and read between the lines, you will find, if these hon. gentlemen opposite and their friends have their way, that Canadians will live under the folds of another flag. But the people will never consent to that. They will be true to the British flag. In the words of a young writer of Toronto whose heart is in the right spot:

You may say it is a small bit of bunting, You may call it an old tattered rag, Yet freedom has made it majestic, And time has ennobled the flag.'

Canadians will re-echo these words throughout the That is the flag we will live whole Dominion. under, and all who pretend to offer us unrestricted reciprocity or commercial union, or offer to sell our nationality, will find that the people of Canada will oppose them, and will decide to continue under the grand old British flag. As Dr. Beers said: Canada is not for sale. In no country under Heaven are there greater opportunities for advancement, preferment, and progress, than in this country. We want men of the right stamp to come here to help us to develop it, men who will have the welfare of the country at heart, but we have no room here for agitators, or for those who will strive to unsettle the minds of the people. Every man in this House, as well as every man, woman and child in the country, is writing the history of Canada to-day, and it is for us to see that we do not blot the page of the history we are individually writing. We should endeavor to do credit to Canada by our lives, and by our deeds in this country, and by adhering to those principles which have made the country, from which most of us have sprung, great and glorious. Let hon gentlemen opposite own up like men when they see the country prosperous. When they see the busy industries of the cities, when they see the rural population getting good prices for their products, when they see the farmers paying off their mortgages year after year, and only an infinitesimal amount of mortgages remain unpaid; let them stand up like true Canadians and speak for their country as their country deserves to be spoken for. servative party throughout has been to build up; Let them feel that they are not legislating for this one particular locality, or for that locality, but for a great country with immense possibilities. Hon. gentlemen do not like to quote anything about the savings banks deposits in Canada, but if the savings banks deposits had been on the decline they would have pointed the finger of scorn at this side of the House, and attributed the decrease to the policy of the Government. They do not say anything about the matter, however, when they find the people's savings are increasing to an enormous extent. It may help hon. gentlemen opposite. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) smiles. I know that he has generally a good night's rest, but I would like to give him a good nightcap now. find that the deposits in the savings banks in 1878-79 were $6,102,000 and $19,925,000 in 1888-89, an increase of $13,000,000 in ten years; the deposits in the post office savings banks in 1878-79 were $3,000,000, and in 1888-89 $23,580,000, an increase of over $20,000,000; the deposits with the loan companies in 1878-79 were $9,426,000, and in 1888-89 over $17,307,000, an increase of $7,880,000; in the City and District Savings Bank of Montreal, &c., in 1878-79, the deposits were $5,500,000, and in 1888-89 $10,761,000, an increase of $5,000,000; or a total increase in the ten years of the savings of the people of Canada under the pernicious influence of the National Policy of $47,000,000. Now, when the people read these figures and put them alongside of the three blue ruin speeches that we have heard in this debate, they will know how to value them. Probably before this debate is over there may be some interesting information given to complete the literature in connection with the tea party which took place in Washington while this celebrated antagonistic American tariff was being hatched. But to bring my remarks to a close-

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is there anything in this tariff to prevent trap-shooting?

Mr. BROWN. Hon. gentlemen will please keep their patience. They know very well that I never weary the House, and I have a great desire to shorten the time of this debate. I am very sure of one thing, that I will not perpetrate on the House a speech two and three-quarter hours long, true but few hon. gentlemen listened to it, and no one wanted to hear it at all. Hon. gentlemen are already beginning to count the cost of printing. the long harangue. It may be interesting, however, if I should read this letter from Mr. F. W. Glen.

Mr. LANDERKIN. He is a rebel.

Mr. BROWN. He is, I believe, a very close bosom friend of hon. gentlemen opposite. I think, when he comes to this country, he boards with them; at all events, he has let the cat out of the bag. Here is what he says:

Here is what he says:

"Mr. F. W. Glen, a former member of the Canadian House of Commons and a strong supporter of the Liberal party, now a resident of the United States, publishes a letter in to-day's Empire re-avowing his annexation sympathies, for reasons furnished by him. In regard to Mr. Hitt's resolution in Congress he says: 'A resolution was lately adopted by the Committee on Foreign Relations of the House of Representatives at Washington, apparently favoring reciprocity between Canada and the United States, which cannot fairly be described, so far as it interests Canadians, by any milder term than misleading. It was passed at the personal solicitation of Sir Richard Cartwright and Mr. Erastus Wiman. Sir Richard Cartwright, during Mr. Blake's absence in Europe and without his knowledge and consent, adopted unrestricted reciprocity as the platform of the Liberal party. I cannot describe it otherwise than as the act of a politician who realised that he was going down for the third Mr. Brown.

and last time, and therefore grasped at a straw. When Sir Richard first adopted unrestricted reciprocity Mr. Wiman was pressing his commercial union fad. About that time, in a conversation with me, he pronounced unrestricted reciprocity utterly impracticable. I replied that both propositions in that respect were exactly alike, but that of the two a commercial union treaty for a definite term of years was the less objectionable of the two. Mr. Wiman has abandoned commercial union and, like Sir Richard Cartwright, grasped at the unrestricted reciprocity straw. The resolution as passed by the Congressional Committee is, in plain English, political clap-trap. It is mortifying to be compelled to add that a committee of the American Congress has permitted itself to be used by two Canadian politicians who have blundered and misled the Canadian politicians who have blundered and misled the Canadian politicians who have blundered and misled the Canadian politicians who they humiliating to confess that a resolution adopted unanimously by the Committee of Foreign Affairs of the American Congress is a political fraud on the Canadian people, perpetrated at the request of two leading Canadian politicians professing to desire their well-being.

"The tariff means practical business; the resolutions, as I have said, political clap-trap of a very low type. As you are well aware, I aggressively opposed Sir John Macdonald from August, 1873, until I left Canada in 1886, and am in no sense an admirer of the hon, gentleman's policy; but I am compelled to admit that he is not a fool. If I were a member of the Canadian Parliament to-day and compelled to choose between Sir John, protection and statu quo, and unrestricted reciprocity, I should, without any hesitation whatever, vote for Sir John, with all his faults. It is painful to write this of my late political colleagues, but I abhor all attempts to deceive or mislead the people of Canada upon the question of reciprocity, independence or annexation. Mr. Winnan has not been candid with the people of Canada in discussing the question of commercial union and unrestricted reciprocity, to which he has lately become converted. In his speeches in Canada he tells the Canadian people that reciprocity is the only antidote for annexation. In Washington he tells the leaders of the Republican party that reciprocity will lead to annexation, which, he assures them, is his ultimate object. In a certain sense, the hon, gentlemen who compose the Committee of Foreign Relations of the American Congress have a right to disgrace themselves personally, if they choose to take the consequences, but acting as a committee of the National Legislature, they have no right to dishonor the nation, as they have done, in passing the resolution apparently favoring reciprocity with Canada, because there is not the slightest intention on the part of the Republican leaders to grant Canada free access to our markets on any terms whatever, so long as she remains an appendage of the British Crown.

"The records of Canada marineta stall understand it."

on the part of the republican leaders to grant canada free access to our markets on any terms whatever, so long as she remains an appendage of the British Crown.

"The people of Canada may just as well understand it first as last. I have too high an opinion of the Canadian people to believe that they will ever follow a leader who asks them to make an unreasonable demand of England and for the purpose of finding an excuse for a rupture of the friendly relations which now exist between England and Canada. To demand the power to make a commercial union treaty with the United States, such as was proposed in Congress through Mr. Wiman's influence, would be unreasonable and dishonorable on the part of the Canadian people while Canada remains a British province, for whose actions England is responsible to other nations. Unrestricted reciprocity is still worse. Beyond all question, when the Canadian people are ready for separation from England, and demand it as in their own best interests, the demand will be cheerfully granted, and the blessing of the glorious old mother land freely given with it. The interests of the Canadian people are far more important and sacred than the success or failure of Sir Richard Cartwright's or Mr. Wiman's political aspirations. I have none but the most friendly feelings towards Sir Richard Cartwright. From my standpoint he is the ablest Minister who has controlled the finances of Canada between 1860 and the present time. But that is no reason why the people of Canada should now be sacrificed to save him from the effects of the fatal political blunder he made in adopting unrestricted reciprocity as a party cry. Every one here appreciates, respects and admires genial and generous Mr. Wiman. He is a liberal contributor to the campaign funds of both political branties. He does not make fish of one and flesh of the other. He was an active and earnest advocate of the reelection of Grover Cleveland and revenue reform until the Sackville-West exposure, when he immediately sent a handsome cheque himself to changes in the administration as promptly as the late lamented Vicar of Bray. These are all strong points in a way in Mr. Wiman's favor, and yet I hardly think they justify the action of the Congressional Committee in passing their resolutions in favor of reciprocity as a personal favor to Sir Richard Cartwright and himself. The New York Sun, in yesterday's issue, states the case to the Canadian people in candid, straightforward and unmistakable terms, as follows:—

"'That there may be no needless misunderstanding, we beg our Canadian friends to understand that they can have free trade with the United States—the only important system of real free trade in the world—on the same terms as the United States themselves enjoy it, namely, on the terms of political union. All other propositions, such as that of Mr. Hitt, in the House of Representatives the other day, can lead to nothing but vanity and vexation of spirit."

"There are only three courses of action open to the Canadian people: 1. Sir John protestion and extra market in the same desired and extra market in the course of action open to the Canadian people: 1. Sir John protestion and extra market in the course of action of the Canadian people: 1. Sir John protestion and extra market in the course of action and extra market in the course of action of the Canadian people: 1. the other day, can lead to nothing but vanity and vexation of spirit."

"There are only three courses of action open to the Canadian people: 1. Sir John, protection and statu quo. 2. An independent republic with high protection to home industries and an attempt to maintain an independent national existence as a competitor of the United States for European emigration. As a matter of course the 5,000,000 of Canadians will have the short end of the whiffletree, while the 65,000,000 of Americans will have the long end. 3. Independence as the first step towards annexation. The maintenance of an independent republic is possible but not at all probable, and, therefore, practically, there are but two courses open to the Canadians, namely, statu quo or annexation. It gave me infinite pleasure to be assured that the Hon. Edward Blake does not approve of the policy proposed by Sir Richard Cartwright and Mr. Wiman. I predict that if the Liberal party appeals to the country at the next general election with no other policy than the undefined and undefinable one of unrestricted reciprocity, the result will be overwhelming defeat, and if I were an elector in Canada I should use my best endeavors to make the majority against as overwhelming as possible."

That is the letter. That is the letter.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Would you just read what Solomon White says, now?

Mr. BROWN. I have nothing to do with him. I wish to emphasise, in conclusion, that we should do the utmost in our power to neutralise any effort to weaken our allegiance, not only to our own country, but the country from which we sprung. There may, as the years roll on, be changes of some kind or other in Canada and the other dependencies of the Empire—who knows?—but, whatever changes may come, will most assuredly be of a character to strengthen and bind closer and closer the ties which attach us to the Throne of England. We possess the grandest and most magnificent system of railways in the world; we possess the largest and best managed railway in the world; and I have no sympathy with the picayune way in which some hon, gentlemen talk about our expenditure in connection with immigration. Instead of $50,000, I would gladly see $500,000 expended in bringing emigrants to this country. What we want is to people the country. Let us, regardless of politics, stand shoulder to shoulder in seeking to bring out men to people this country. Let us make every attempt to unearth what is precious beneath the soil of our Rockies. $94,000,000 a year is taken out in gold from the United States Rockies, and an expert told me, when I had the pleasure of visiting the Pacific coast, that there is no reason why we should not develop an equal amount of wealth in our Rockies, and I, therefore, approve of the action of the Government in admitting mining machinery free for a term of years, in order to develop the mining industry of British Columbia. I have visited that Province, and I know there is a great future for that country, of which we should be proud. It has forests, grand beyond the conception of man, seas teeming with fish which have as be largely affected by the proposed changes, I feel yet scarcely been touched by the nets of the fisher- it my duty to protest against them. When the men; it has vast possibilities of every description, hidden in the womb of the future, which we Canadians cannot possibly estimate. Let us, then, do what we can to develop those resources, and let us show, in every way, our devotion to those principles which will advance the interests of the country. Let us maintain those free institutions we possess, and which have made the country from which we spring honored by the whole world. I have no sympathy with a man, be he of what politics he may, who will be found silent when the progress of his country is at stake, just because that progress is promoted by the party opposed to him in politics.

Mr. BROWN. The leader of the third party, who has not a greater admirer in this House than myself, knows well—nobody knows better—that our great object to-day should be to fill the North-West with people, and I shall hail with joy and pleasure every reasonable proposition to bring men of the right stamp to settle there. It is a land

Where a man is a man if he's willing to toil, And the humblest may gather the fruits of the soil. But it is no land for the idler. It is a land where the hard-working peasant of England, though he be poor, will find material for the making of an honest living, and where he can acquire a farm for himself and achieve a position of ease and independent competence. We must not allow ourselves to be led away by the cry to prevent certain kinds of immigration. Let the man of stout heart, strong arm and determined will, come out to our North-West, and assist in every way in his power in building up that country; and let us endeavor in every way possible, to bring out such men to build up that country. The more who go in there the better for our manufacturers. The day is coming, Sir, when that great North-West will be dotted over with cities and divided into various Provinces, and become the centre of great industries. To-day, in Vancouver, they have organised a sugar refinery, and we will soon hear sugar coming down from the Pacific coast, and meeting the sugar refined in Montreal, Moncton and Halifax. The great Canadian Pacific Railway, the greatest civiliser next to the Messenger of the Cross, has done more to develop and open up that country than man could possibly conceive. Let us see that we do our duty in taking advantage of the openings there made by that railway and the branch railways which, through the wise action of the Government, are piercing that country in numerous directions; for, in the words of the Earl of Selkirk, the day is coming when that country will be the home of three millions of people. Let us rise to a sense of our duty and responsibility, and endeavor by the manner in which we administer the affairs of Canada, to promote its welfare, so that we may follow in the steps of that great country from which most of us have come—and which has bequeathed to us her spirit and her fame—and leave to our posterity a land of peace, prosperity and power.

Mr. FLYNN. I desire to offer a few observations on the resolutions which have been submitted by the Finance Minister. I am aware that nothing I can say will have the effect of altering anything contained in those resolutions, but, as I represent a constituency in a Province which will be largely affected by the proposed changes, I feel National Pelicy was adopted in 1879, it was to be a policy of redistribution rather than of protec-The policy adopted by the Government has since been sustained by the people, but the present proposals are calculated to make the taxation fall heavily on the poorer class of the people, and it is on that ground that I feel bound to protest to-night on behalf of that class which is the most deserving of consideration. Two classes of people have sought relief from the Government this Session. The one class was the fishermen. My hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) introduced a resolution asking for an increased bounty to the fishermen, and he as I did on the same occasion, that it would be no additional burden to the people of this country, as the fishermen were only claiming the allowance from the interest on an amount which was paid by a foreign Government on the award of arbitrators. But these fishermen had only my hon. friend from Lunenburg, myself, and a few other members to defend them. The other appeal to the Government was made by the milling in-dustry. That industry was more powerful. They came here and asked the Government to add to the duty on flour, and they were successful, and now 25 cents a barrel is to be added to that duty, and that will be largely paid by the fishermen who were refused the boon which they asked. When the National Policy was introduced, it was understood that there was to be a duty of 50 cents a barrel on flour and 40 cents on cornmeal. It was then stated that this would largely affect the people of the Maritime Provinces, that it would be a sectional tax, but, in order to give the people of the Maritime Provinces a compensation, duty was put upon coal. That existed until two years ago, when the duty on anthracite coal was taken off, while the duties on flour and cornmeal were left as before. If justice had been done to the people of the Maritime Provinces, the moment the duty was struck off anthracite coal, the duty should have been taken off cornmeal or flour. The duty on bituminous coal would be of no use without the duty on anthracite. The millers complained to the Government that 50 cents a barrel on flour was not sufficient protection to them, as they had to pay a duty on wheat. Then the best course for the Government would have been to reduce the duty on wheat or abolish it altogether. But, while this increased duty of 25 cents on flour will be felt very severely by the people of the Maritime Provinces, the duty on pork and beef is much more serious, and will be much more burdensome to the people of those Provinces. increased duty on pork and beef will be no protection to the farmers of this Dominion, as the quality of pork required by the lumbermen and the fishermen is not raised in Ontario, but is raised in the United States, where they have cheap corn on which to raise it. Our farmers cannot compete with the United States in raising that quality of pork, so that, whether the duty is $2, $3 or $5, the fishermen must purchase it from the United States, and it will be no protection to the farmers of Ontario. Then, taking the article of beef, on which the enormous duty of $6 a barrel is placed, we must get the beef from the United States. no matter what the duty may be, and that will be a very heavy tax on the people of the Lower Provinces. Beef, pork, lard and flour are prime necessaries of life for the lumberman and the fisherman. Mr. FLYNN.

and these are the articles on which the greatest increase is made in the taxation submitted to Parliament by the Finance Minister. According to the Trade Returns of last year, the quantity of beef imported for consumption was 3,806,397 lbs., value $161,392, on which a duty was paid amounting to $38,063.97. The amount of pork imported was 15,206,172 lbs., at a value of $992,438, on which a duty was paid of $152,061. The quantity of flour imported was 258,830 barrels, on which a duty was paid of $129,406. Quantity of lard imported, 8,285,266 lbs., on which a duty was paid of $165,707.65. On all these articles, prime necessaries of life for the poor man, the duty has been largely increased. Now, assuming that for the coming fiscal year we import the same amount of these articles as we imported last year the duty has been increased to this extent: On beef, from $38,063 to $114,195; on pork, from $152,061.72 to $228,092; on flour, from $129,407 to $194,110; on lard, from $165,705 to $248,058; or, in other words, a duty was paid in these four articles last year amounting to $485,240; and on the same articles this year the duty will amount to $784,358, or a total increase in duties on flour, beef, pork and lard, of $299,117, or within a fraction of $300,000. Now, it is to be remembered that these very articles, mess beef, mess pork, lard and flour, are consumed chiefly by the poor people of this country, so that the greatest portion of this increased taxation will be borne by those who are the least able to bear it. I regret that the hon. Finance Minister had not the same consideration for this class of people, the lumbermen of his native Province, and of the rest of this Dominion, as did the gentleman who preceded him in the office of Finance Minister. Leonard Tilley introduced his tariff resolutions in 1885 he felt that it would be injurious to that interest to increase the duty on pork, and he resisted all pressure to induce him to impose a higher duty. He recognised the importance of the lumber interest to this country, and realised that it would be a gross injustice to that industry to tax that article of food. On that occasion, Sir Leonard Tilley used these words:

"We have endeavored not to injure the lumber interests, because they now have a very important article used by their people at about the same rate of duty they had it before. I refer to pork."

I, therefore, regret that the present Finance Minister, who comes from the same Province, had not the same consideration for that important industry that Sir Leonard Tilley had. When I take other articles on which the duty is increased, it appears to me that the revenue will be increased by at least one million dollars. Now, Sir, I ask myself the question, and I may be permitted to ask the Finance Minister, where is the necessity for this increase of taxation? What reason does the Finance Minister give for asking to impose these further burdens on a class of people who are least able to bear them, that is, the lumbermen, the fishermen and the poorer classes? He has assigned no reason. In the same speech in which he introduced this proposition to raise the duties on these articles, the hon. gentleman announced to the House that he had a surplus for the current year of $2,700,000, and he expected a surplus for the year 1890-91, of $2,500,000. Now, I remember that in 1875, when the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), occupied the position of Finance Minister, and when bringing down his Budget he announced a small surplus of half a million, he was attacked by Sir Charles Tupper, who stated that a Finance Minister had no right to have a surplus. The contention then of Sir Charles Tupper was that it was the duty of a competent and capable Finance Minister to make an estimate of the probable expenditure during the year, and to arrange the revenue so as to meet that expenditure, and that every dollar he received beyond that sum was so much money taken from the pockets of the people. On that occasion Sir Charles Tupper used these words:

"I say the Government have no right to have a surplus; if they have, they should endeavor to get rid of it and the best way to do so is that pursued by us and by the Government of Great Britain, by lightening the taxes on the people; and when I tell you the article of sugar pays in this country 50 per cent. on its cost, while in England the Government have swept the tax away altogether, I think the House will agree with me that the time was most opportune to have used this surplus, not in adjusting the tariff for sugar, as the hon. gentleman proposed last year, but by such a decrease of duty upon the lower grades of sugar as might accomplish the object the hon. gentleman had in view when bringing the tariff before the House, and which would be received as a boon by the poorer classes of the country."

Such was the language of Sir Charles Tupper when criticising the Budget speech of my hon. friend from South Oxford. But to-day, not only is the sugar tax much greater than it was then, but every other article used by the people of this country has been subjected to a higher taxation; nevertheless, the Finance Minister announced to this House the other night that he had a surplus of \$2,700,000 for the current year, and he expected to have one of \$2,500,000 for the next year. More than that, he proposes resolutions for the consideration of this House, by which, I believe, if they are adopted, the people of this country would pay an additional tax of \$1,000,000, if not more, and this tax would fall chiefly upon the poorer classes of this Dominion. The hon. members on this side of the House have often pointed out that it is the poorer classes of this country who feel the burden of the National Policy most severely. seems that every turn of the screw by which that policy is extended, the poorer classes feel it still more severely. The article of flour is one of the prime necessities of life, and the Finance Minister proposes to increase the tax upon it. As an offset to this tax the hon. Minister says: But you are to have cheaper molasses and cheaper corn. He said on that occasion that the article of cornmeal was largely used in Nova Scotia; and, as an hon. member suggested, the hon. gentleman appeared to intend to feed the people on molasses and mush. me, for a moment, to consider how much cheaper the people of the Maritime Provinces are going to obtain their molasses. The reduction of duty is $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per gallon. Let me presume that an average family consumes forty gallons a year, that being an outside estimate. On that calculation the amount really saved to a poor family consuming molasses would be 60 cents during the twelve months. Then, again, how does the hon. gentleman propose to treat the cornmeal question? He proposes to treat it by giving a rebate of 90 per cent, if ground in the Province. I am now supposing that we have mills in the Province. An hon friend near me says they are all at present closed down by the operation of the tariff. I will suppose, however, that they will spring up again, and if the local millers grind this corn, they will avail themselves of the protection of 40 cents a barrel given to them. If meal is quoted at \$2.50 to-day in Halifax, they may sell it at \$2.48 or \$2.49; but the cost to the consumer will remain the same, he paying the duty, if not to the Government, to the miller. Accordingly, there is no reduction in cornmeal. Ever since 1879, when the First Minister and his Government introduced the National Policy, they have always said they had one object in view, and that was to increase the tariff so as to secure reciprocal trade with the United States. That view has been constantly placed before the country. It has been announced again and again, and even as late as 1888 Sir Charles Tupper stated that:

"Down to the present hour we have adopted the policy on both sides of the House, and we have pledged ourselves to the people to do everything that lay in our power to obtain a free market for the natural products of our country with the United States."

With that statement, made to the House no later than two years ago, the people of the country were led to believe that, although hon, gentlemen opposite were opposed to unrestricted reciprocity, reciprocity in manufactured goods, still they were in favor of reciprocity in natural products, until the astounding statement was made the other day by the President of the Council that it would be most injurious to the farming interests of Canada if a treaty was entered into with United States' natural products. Now we have the announcement on that side of the House that those hon, gentlemen are not favorable even to partial reciprocity, to reciprocity in natural products. I think that announcement must have been heard with anxiety by the people of this country, and especially by the people of the lower Provinces, for while we on this side of the House have constantly advocated the fullest and freest trade relations, and the most unlimited and unrestricted trade with the United States, hon. gentlemen opposite have told the people they could not get unrestricted reciprocity, but they might get reciprocity in natural products, and the Government were in favor of that course. But now the President of the Council has announced a different policy, and it has not been denied by any of his colleagues, and it has even been reasserted by one of the Government supporters, that the Administration is no longer in favor of reciprocity in natural products. I say that announcement will be heard with some anxiety by the people of the lower Provinces, for they remember up to this hour the benefits they received from that treaty with the United States which was in operation from 1854 to 1866, when our country made most rapid strides in prosperity. They will regret to hear the announcement of the Government that they are no longer in favor of a reciprocity treaty in natural products. According to my view the resolu-tions submitted by the Finance Minister may be viewed in two important aspects. The one aspect is the enormous increase of taxation which they impose, unnecessarily impose, on our fishermen and lumbermen and laboring classes generally. But important as this aspect of the case may be, and it is a very important one, when you find it imposes onerous burdens on the poorest classes of the people, at a time when agricultural depression and depression of the lumbering business prevail, there is another, and, to my mind, a much more important, a much graver aspect. When we consider our present relations with the United States, it seems to me that this becomes a very serious and important question. also the case, when we to-day consider the state-ment by the late Finance Minister, the present High Commissioner in London, when he said that a-commercial war was an actual war, and when we were told how near we were to such war, and what he did to prevent that commercial conflict; when we see to-day the McKinley Bill before Congress, imposing higher duties on the natural products of this country entering the United States; when we see and know that the important question of the fisheries is still unsettled—when we see all these questions remaining unsettled, it is evident that this is not the time to irritate the people to the south of us. They are a people with whom we should have the most intimate social and commercial intercourse, and I am only afraid that the declarations made by the Government will tend to strain the feelings that exist and to lead to consequences that may be much regretted hereafter. At this time I deem it most unwise, I think the moment most unsuitable at this critical juncture of our history, that these resolutions should have been submitted. was no necessity for them, the revenues did not require them; the protecting policy adopted by the Government did not require them, for every branch of industry has been protected; nothing required them, but everything demanded an opposite course. Knowing the position we occupy towards our neighbors it would have been a wise and statesmanlike view to have adopted a policy diametrically opposite to that adopted by the Finance Minister. I look upon this aspect of the case as a most serious one. view of the announcement of the President of the Council, that the Government would refuse to enter into a treaty in natural products, the prospect of freer and fuller trade relations with the United States may look somewhat gloomy, and the prospect may not be as bright as we might hope; but there is a growing and intelligent sentiment in that country opposed to that restrictive policy, and favorable to breaking down those artificial barriers which have been set up, and desirous of entering into the fullest and freest trade relations; and while that sentiment is growing in the neighboring Republic, it is also growing in this country, and the time is not far distant when, under better auspices, and under a more enlightened policy adopted on both sides of the line, all these artificial barriers will be swept away, and the broadest and fullest trade relations will exist between this country and our neighbors to the south of us.

Mr. HESSON. I desire to congratulate the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn), who has just taken his seat, on having made a very temperate speech from that side of the House. fortunately, we have not been accustomed to hear the moderate tone in debate from hon. gentlemen opposite which the hon. member for Richmond has displayed, especially when the question of the tariff is under consideration. I shall make a remark or two with reference to some statements which have fallen from that hon. gentleman. Mr. FLYNN.

was no duty on coal. Now, if I am not mistaken, the consumers of coal in Ontario, at all events, are paying very heavy duty on the coal that they consume most, and which is produced in the Province from which the hon. gentleman comes. There is no such thing as anthracite coal produced in the Province of Nova Scotia or in Cape Breton, so far as I can understand, and, consequently, the hon, gentleman would not be any better off if there were a duty on anthracite coal, seeing that it is not produced in that Province. As to the increase of duty on flour. If the hon, gentleman will remember what has transpired during the last few years since the duty was first imposed he will have within his recollection the declining price of flour as rather strange, in view of the fact that there was duty paid upon flour with a view of protecting it, and on the fair assumption that it would increase the value. The price of flour is lower now than it has ever been before in the history of Ontario, and the hon. gentleman will find that the duty has not been an oppressive one, so far as the consuming population of any part of Canada is concerned. With reference to the duty on pork, it has been said from the other side of the House that, from the day the National Policy was first adopted, the farmers were the class, above all others, that no provision had been made for by this Government. Now, Sir, there was some grain of truth in that, but not so much, after all, as some gentlemen would lead the country to believe. The farmers have been protected with reference to many of the products of their farms, as I intend to show before I sit down. The additional duty on pork was, I think, one of the wisest things this Government has undertaken on behalf of the agricultural industry-the greatest industry of the country. I am glad to hear that there has been very little objection taken to that particular tariff by hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House. Surely no gentleman who represents a rural constituency, either in Ontario or Quebec, will object to the Government having found it at last proper to place an additional protection upon pork. The farmers of Canada have been passing through a very serious crisis, owing to the falling off of products for some years past. It is true that we have not been able to give them the prices that existed during the continuance of the American rebellion, or prior to the years before India and Russia became such strong competitors for the markets of the old world. But, Sir, we have been able at all events to give to our own producers, to a very large extent, the advantages and the benefits of their home markets, which was all that the National Policy ever undertook to do. To that extent, I think, we may fairly claim that the National Policy has been a success. It has been said by hon. gentlemen opposite on the stump, and in this House, that the followers of the Government promised they would keep up the price of wheat to a dollar a bushel, or some such large amount, .notwithstanding what the value might be in any other country in the world. We never made such propositions to the people. All that we ever said to the farmers of Canada in addressing them in reference to the anticipated results that would follow from the introduction of the National Policy was; that we would give them at least their own market in Canada. I heard the hon member for Richmond understood the hon. gentleman to say that there (Mr. Flynn) say something with reference to the imposition of tariffs, and its result in reference to the sale of corn in his Province. I am able to say, from information I have received from a gentleman from the Lower Provinces this afternoon, that since this new tariff has been brought down to the House 10,000 barrels of Nova Scotia commeal have been sold in the city of Halifax at the reduced price of 20 cents less than it had been sold at any time before this tariff had been brought down. The hon. gentleman ought to appreciate even that small favor, as he may consider it, for the benefit of the fishermen or the poorer class of the community who may use this article. I shall not further refer to the remarks of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) and I propose now to present to the House my views on this question as they occur to me. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in his reply to the Budget speech of the Minister of Finance, made what I consider one of the most damaging statements to the farmers of Canada that has ever been made on the floor of this Parliament, when he spoke in reference to the indebtedness of the people of Canada. I need not quote that hon gentleman's speech, as it must be fresh in the memory of hon. gentlemen, and I shall simply read what is necessary in order that I may answer it. The member for South Oxford says in reference to this question of the indebtedness of the farmers of Ontario:

"I have always believed that it was the duty, both of this Government and of the Local Government, who have investigated this matter, to have ascertained and put on record the increase or diminution of mortgage indebtedness, especially on farms, from year to year; and I regret much that neither one nor the other of these Governments has seen fit to do so. As the Governments would not act, and as I had cause to know that this indebtedness was increasing enormously, I took such means as were fairly open to me to ascertain what was the extent of the mortgage indebtedness of the Ontario farmers, and I am going to submit to this House a brief calculation, based on actual investigation, which may, perhaps, open the eyes of some people here and more people in the country to the condition at which the farmers of Onterio have arrived. I caused eleven ridings to be selected in various parts of the country, such as, in my honest judgment, afforded the fairest samples of its condition. Among those, I selected certain townships and certain concessions; and I have here from the reports of the registry offices of these counties a rather ample statement, to which I call the particular attention of my hon, friends from Ontario, showing the extent of the mortgage indebtedness among the farmers of this Province."

Then the hon. gentleman goes on to say what were the results he obtained from eleven ridings. Then, to show how careful he is about it, the hon. gentleman goes on to say:

"In no case were any village properties included, and in no case were any farms of less than 50 acres put down" This is no conclusion arrived at in a hasty way. The hon gentleman had apparently spent considerable time, if not money, in getting the information which he desired and which he sought for in a very extraordinary way, when he went to the registry offices to ascertain the actual original amounts of the mortgages existing. A little further on he says:

"In the greater number, probably, of the older settled townships of the Province of Ontario, the average indebtedness of a township, according to its size, will range from $500,000 up to one million dollars; that the average indebtedness of each contituency, according to its size, will range to two or three millions; and that the total mortgage indebtedness of the Province of Ontario is probably well over 200 million, if it does not attain to 300 million dollars."

Here is a very bold statement made by an hon. gentleman who holds a very prominent position in the country and in his party, a gentleman who has had the responsibility of office, and who ought to know the danger of making statements which have really no foundation in fact, when he had it in his power to get just the information which he professed to be earnestly seeking for. I do not presume that the hon, gentleman is so ignorant, after all, as he would lead us to believe in the statement he made to this House, because I presume that a gentleman of his standing and position must be aware of the fact that not only one Government, but both Governments, have made reports with reference to the mortgage debt of the country, which would have given the hon. gentleman the information which he so earnestly sought in a small way through the side lines, probably, of those townships most likely to be encumbered. He could have found this information in a report of the loan companies and building societies in the Dominion, published by order of the Deputy Minister of Finance, made by N. S. Garland, clerk of statistics, for 1888.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman suppose that those cover all the mortgages in Canada?

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman will get my answer in a few moments. I venture to say that they will cover all the mortgages, except, perhaps, such as the hon. gentleman himself may have against some unfortunate farmers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am sorry the hon. gentleman is so very ill-informed.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman may find out before I am through how well I am informed. Here are the reports for 1888 of seventy-eight companies in the whole of Canada, including sixty-five of the savings institutions of the Province of Ontario. They are all compiled here for the information of the hon. gentleman, and he need not have gone to the highways and byways to get the best report he could find or to draw upon his imagination.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know all about it.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman could not have taken the precautions that most gentlemen in his position would have taken if anxious to give the best opinion he could of his country. Then, reports are given from ten companies in the Province of Quebec, one company in the Province of Manitoba and two companies in the Province of Nova Scotia. The capital stock of these companies is $81,816,000, and the paid-up capital $32,400,000. The deposits are $17,307,000, and probably a portion of these belonged to many of these very farmers who may have made deposits in the very year that they negotiated their mortgages. The current loans secured on real estate by mortgages made by these companies is $91,713,319. The hon. gentleman may say that there were large amounts in arrears. We would necessarily infer from the hon. gentleman's description of the condition of the country, that the farmers would be increasing their indebtedness, and the result would be that there would be large amounts of liabilities which they would be unable to pay as they matured. The amount of principal and interest overdue and in default in 1880 was $4,130,000. Now, according to the hon. gentleman's statement, the people are so distressed and so ground down by taxation that they are fleeing from the country as from a plague, so that we would naturally suppose that there would be a great increase in this amount; but what are the facts? The amount of principal and interest overdue and in default in 1880 was $4,130,000, but in 1888 it was only $2,516,000. That is just the condition of the country so far as the mortgages are concerned, and the hon. gentleman can take a good deal of comfort to himself in reflecting on Now, I will give the hon. gentleman this report. some further information on this matter. In 1887 the loans amounted to $17,162,000 and they paid back $18,987,000, which may be taken to represent to some extent what the borrowers paid back. In 1888 the loans were $17,049,000, and the borrowers paid back $18,839,000 of principal and interest. So that in the two last years of which we have returns no less than $3,600,000 over and above loans was paid back, representing I presume interest, besides the principal that was borrowed. I do not presume that these loans were made and paid back in the same year, but they were no doubt payments of former loans, and the figures go to show that the indebtedness was not increasing. Here you have 78 companies of the most sterling character in the country, with which I presume many members of this House are identified as stockholders or directors or presidents, and they know whereof I am speaking. I will give the hon gentleman another statement connected with this matter. We have the report of the Ontario Bureau of Industries, issued in Toronto, under the auspices of the leader of the Reform party in the Province of Ontario, the Hon. Mr. Mowat, who has I think some affection for his country and desires to speak well of it, contrary I believe to the desire of hon. gentlemen opposite. So far as the Hon. Mr. Mowat is concerned, I believe he desires that Canada should have a good reputation both at home and abroad. He feels like most Canadians, that it is honestly deserving of such a reputation, and that it illbecomes any man who prides himself on being a Canadian, to seek in any way not fair, open or honorable, to damage the country by making statements unworthy the consideration of the House. I will give a statement of fifty-five companies which are reported in the Bureau of Industries published by the Ontario Government. I find that the total loans and investments made by these companies doing business in Ontario, the loans outstanding and secured by mortgage, amount to $81,235,305; and these figures cover not only the indebtedness of farm land in rural districts, but the indebtedness of If I were to cities, towns and villages as well. weary the House by going into the details, I could show exactly the proportion of this $81,000,000 which is due by the farmers, and I am confident I could prove that not one-fourth of the amount is on farm lands. The total indebtedness in the Province of Ontario, as shown by the companies doing business there, is $81,000,000, covering the towns and cities as well as the rural places. The loans, during 1887, by these companies were $17,162,412, and the borrowers paid back $18,-987,927, and the loans during 1888, were about the same, $17,049,796, and the borrowers paid back again $18,839,040. It may be said that the counties are very grievously taxed, and that every county and municipality is heavily in- House. I think he excelled himself in one par-Mr. Hesson.

debted. I was led to believe that myself, from having heard it so often, but I took the trouble to investigate the reports made by these county councils in Ontario, and was greatly surprised at the results. I find in Blue's Report, folio 100, table 15, that the total county indebtedness in Ontario, in 1887, was $4,065,283, and the township indebtedness was, strange to say, very much the same, $4,237,396, representing a total, township and county indebtedness, of $8,303,679, in the year 1887, the report of that year being the last report I could lay my hands upon. I need hardly mention, because it is pretty well known to hon. gentlemen, who have seats in county councils, that they have very large assets. Their assets exceed by $600,000 their liabilities, which are partly met by good securities, partly by real estate, and partly by taxation of the townships and municipalities. So much for the picture of blue ruin in which hon. gentlemen opposite delight. Let us see now, from Mr. Blue's statistics, how badly the farmers have suffered. Take the report of 1888, at page 150, and you will find that the average value of farm lands, from 1882 to 1888, was $638,772,948. 1887 it was $636,883,755; in 1888, $640,480,801, and in this estimate buildings are not included. Here is an increase in 1888 over the average, from 1882 to 1888, of $3,700,000. Is that an evidence of ruin and of people fleeing from the country, and of farms being left vacant? I would like hon. gentlemen opposite to point out to me any farms ever worth the attention of the settler which are idle I know of none, and I have the pleasure of living in a county where we know what farming means. We find that in buildings, the increase over 1882 is $15,600,000; in implements, $3,000,000; in live stock, $3,000,000, the average from 1882 to 1888 in live stock being $99,839,261, and the value in 1888 being $102,839,235. Put these figures together and what do we find as the result? From 1882 to 1888, the average value of farms, buildings, implements and stock was $956,832,048; in 1887, the value was $975,292,214; and in 1888, $981,363,094, showing an increase of $24,481,-046, in 1888 over the average from 1882 to 1888. Does that look like ruin and decay? These figures are taken from the returns made by the councils of the various counties, and I think we have a right to rely upon the calculations of men who are directly interested and who, besides, are under the apprehension that if they gave over-estimates they might in all probability be taxed on these values hereafter, and so made to pay more than they ought to pay. This is not a result we need at all be ashamed of. I would like to ask where these men, who are represented as fleeing from the country, can go to better themselves? Whither are they flying? Is it to the country which is so desirable in the eyes of hon. gentlemen opposite that they are going, being weary of their hard life in Canada? Are they flying from a country overtaxed to one where the people do not understand what taxation means? Surely these hon, gentlemen do not ima-gine the people are so credulous as to accept any such statement. The hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in his admirable—shall I call itessay, made one of the most remarkable speeches I have ever had the pleasure of listening to in this ticular direction at all events, and that was in going beyond the mark. The hon. gentleman has always been strong in exaggeration; he generally draws upon his imagination for his facts, and will lend color to anything rather than face the actual state of affairs. Then the hon. gentleman took a little journey the other evening in the essay which he gave us in this House. He says:

"Why, we have not the inducements to draw them here, we cannot get them to come here."

This is referring to immigrants-

"Not only do we fail to get immigrants to come here, but our own people are forsaking us, and the result is that we have fear for the future, and the consequence is a great exodus of people feeing from the wrath to come, realising that the country is going to ruin, and they are bound to get out of it, and I cannot deny that they are showing good sense in doing so."

Did you ever listen to such trash as that? Did you ever listen to such language used in a deliberative body supposed, at all events, to represent the best interests of our people? I must confess that for any one who professes to love his country, the hon. gentleman shows remarkable taste in the way in which he tries to induce people to come here or remain here. He goes on to give the case of one of his constituents—poor fellow, I have no doubt he voted for the hon. gentleman and was sorry for it afterwards. He said:

he voted for the hon. gentleman and was sorry for it afterwards. He said:

"It is said that a farmer down in my section of the country died lately, and some spirit medium professed to say what happened after his death. He had gone to market and sold his little crop of wheat for 81 cents a bushel. He had gone to his storekeeper, and finding he had only sufficient money to pay one-half his bill, he gave his note at six months for the balance. He had saved a little money for the absolute necessaries of life, and he made a few small purchases. He bought a dollar's worth of sugar, and he found between the Government and the refiner they took 50 cents of the dollar he expended. Then he wanted a felt hat for his little boy, and on it there was a duty of 25 per cent. which, with the profits of the wholesale and retailer, brought his cost to 37 per cent. more than it should be. He bought a few nails to fasten a few boards on his barn, and on them there was a duty of a cent, making the amount one and half a cent more than they could have been purchased under free trade. He bought a razor, and that was taxed 25 cents. Then he looked at some glass goblets for his wife, but as the duty was 30 per cent, they were beyond his resources. Then as to binding twine he found that cost 25 per cent, more than should have been charged, especially as the Government were supposed to do something for the poor agriculturist. He wanted a cloak for his child who was attending Sunday school, but he found a duty on it of 7½ cents a pound and 20 per cent. ad ralorem, and that was beyond his wealth. Two and a half cents per pound have been added to the duty, I understand. Next he bought some yarn for his mother-in-law to knit stockings, and on that there was a duty of 7½ cents per pound and 20 per cent. He looked at some kid gloves, as his daughter was about to be married, but he could not reach them as the duty was too high; then he bought a sheet of paper to write his will on, and he paid a tax of 35 per cent. on that. He went home, and he ca Write his will on, and he paid a tax of 30 per cent. on that. He went home, and he came to think over matters, and he made up his mind that this was no world for the farmer to live in, so he took that 25 per cent. razor and he went out to the barn and committed suicide. We have the rest of the transaction only through the spirit medium, and I do not know whether it was true or not, but it is represented that he went to Hades, and his Satanic Majesty met him and took him kindly and cordially in. He put him into a chamber where there were a great many Conservative politicians and Conservative editors, who died in their sins, but the farmer did not feel at home there. Then he moved him to a place where there were a couple of deacons and a number of election agents, who had met together in a Conservative caucus to devise means for carrying the Country of Haldimand, but he did not like that association, and he went next into a place where there were a number of doctors and lawyers, but there he did not feel at home either. Then the Devil came round and asked him what he wanted, and said to him:

What are you?' and the other replied: 'I am a farmer.' 'Where are you from.' said the Devil? 'I am from Canada," he replied, and 'Who did you vote for?' enquired his Satanic Majesty."

No doubt it was perfectly understood for whom he voted. However, at last the hon. gentleman says the farmer was taken into a place where he found a great number of people hung up "and the farmer said 'What does this mean?' 'Well, 'said the Devil, 'these are Canadian farmers who voted for Sir John A. Macdonald and the National Policy under the impression that it would rise the price of grain, and as they are too green to burn, I have hung them up to dry.'" I think those farmers will not be too green to recognise that they should not have that man to represent them in this Parliament any longer. I have had great respect for that hon, gentleman in years gone by, but I regret that he should try to deceive the people by stating that the population is flowing from this country to another because of the National Policy. If they are going to a country where the taxation is much higher than ours, they cannot understand the principles of the hon. gentleman. Let us see some of the items of taxation in that country. At the head of the list we find sugar and molasses taxed 78 per cent. Wool and manufactures of wool taxed 58 per cent. iron and steel taxed 40 per cent. These are some of the necessaries of life, so these poor fellows who are fleeing from Canadian rule are fleeing to a country where a larger taxation exists than exists here. Then we have flax and manufactures of flax, 28 per cent.; silks, 49.71 per cent.; cotton, 40.17 per cent.; fruits, 27.90 per cent.; chemicals, drugs and medicines, 35.03 per cent.; tobacco and manufactures of tobacco, 83.32 per cent. I think that is one of those things that the poorest man might be permitted to use without being heavily taxed. Then glass and glassware is taxed 59 per cent; earthen, stone and chinaware, 56 97 per cent.; fancy articles, 41 per cent.; animals, 20 per cent.; hops, 42 64 per cent.; fish, 21 per cent.; vegetables, 24 por cent.; rice, 64 per cent.; salt, 49 92 per cent., and so on. I think they will get pretty well salted when they get over there. I think they will realise that they have not escaped all the ills that flesh is heir to. Now, let us see what our exodus is. We have some evidence on that matter. The United States Bureau of Statistics in its report dated the 30th June, page 818, gives us the total exodus from the Dominion, including Newfoundland and Labrador. It begins with the year 1881, when the National Policy was just commencing, and comes down to 1885, when they stopped giving the statistics from Canada in consequence of the scrutiny which was made by a committee of this House into the way in which they were obtained: I think hon, gentleman who took a hand in that matter will recollect it clearly. Here we have in 1881 an exodus from Canada, including Newfoundland and Labrador, to the United States, of 125,391 · in 1882, 98,295; in 1883, 70,241; in 1884, 60,584; in 1885, 38,291. I find a note

"Thus immigration from British North America is not included since 1885."

Here is a very good showing, I should say. This is the tremendous exodus that has given such trouble to the country, as we find it in the figures of the Americans themselves, published in their own reports, reports that the hon. gentleman often refers to, but, for his own reasons, he has omitted to quote these, because they would show that the exodus was not so great as has been described. These figures show the contrary to his contention, and, therefore, he does not present them to the House. Now, the American Government, in consequence of what had transpired, in consequence of the enquiries made by the immigration department here to the immigration authorities on the American side, decided that their figures were so unreliable that they dropped making these statistics The statistics they did give us, however, show a gradual diminution of the exodus from this country, and yet the National Policy has been extended from time to time, and if our people were going away at any time, according to the theory of hon, gentlemen opposite, they should be going away in greater numbers now than they did then. Now, let us see what kind of a country our Canadians are fleeing to. Senator Voorhees offered a resolution in the Senate, on 17th March, to the following effect :-

"Whereas, the deep and widespread depression and decay of the agricultural interests of the American people, the enormous and appalling amount of mortgaged indebtedness on agricultural lands; the total failure of home markets to furnish remunerative prices for farm productions, and the palpable scarcity and insufficient money in circulation in the hands of the people with which to transact the business of the country and effect exchanges of property and labor at fair rates, are circumstances of the most overwhelming importance to the safety and well-being of the Government; therefore, be it "Resolved, that it is the highest duty of Congress, in the present crisis, to lay aside all discussion and consideration of party issues, and to give promised and immediate attention to the preparation and adoption of such measures as are required for the relief of the farmers and other over-taxed and under-paid laborers of the United States."

Now, it seems strange to us in Canada, who have been led to believe all the wonderful tales of success and the great fortunes that were being made in that country by all classes who had gone there from Canada and elsewhere--it seems strange to us to read a resolution of this kind offered in the American Senate. We find that the American people are sensible enough to realise that they are passing through the same crisis as all other western peoples, and perhaps Great Britain as well. Now, there are matters that are not under the control of legislation, which affect the prosperity of nations, although they may be ameliorated to a certain extent by legislation. We all know that Russia is now competing in the British market. She has very much cheaper labor, and is able to put the products of her farms into the British market at a much lower price than the farmers of this country are able to do, and live comfortably. Now, let us see what the Los Angelos Times, of 17th February, says regarding the destitution in the American North-West:

North-West:

"The Chicago Tribune recently sent a special commissioner out to investigate, who found that the half had not been told. It was very difficult to ascertain the truth, and every difficulty was placed in the way of sending off facts, by real estate agents and others interested in hiding the truth. Here is a picture of the fearful destitution prevailing among the farmers:
"Curtainless windows of deserted farm-houses look back vacantly. It is rarely you meet a sledge, and then it is one loaded with coal, never with grain or hay. In the houses the floors are bare, a blanket is a luxury, a suit of woollen underwear unheard of, and there is a total lack of shoes and stockings of a kind that will keep out the cold and wet. It is of no use attempting to describe a family here and there; in every farmhouse it is the same. The drouth was spread evenly over all the fields of grain. Destitution followed in its track. The clothing Mr. Hesson.

of those new settlers is worn out, rations are low, feed for the stock there is none, and money is absolutely unknown. Credit is a thing of the past."

Now, there is a picture of a country that hon. gentlemen have often held up to us as being a very desirable place for settlement and one that was a strong competitor for emigration from Canada as well as from the old country. When hon, gentlemen hear tales like that they ought to feel satisfied with their own country. I defy hon gentlemen opposite to point out anywhere, in the agricultural districts of Canada or in the cities either, where such a tale as that can be told. Those hon, gentlemen made it a point to go round and find out the indebtedness of the farmers, in a peculiar way, and possibly they may draw upon their imaginations and misrepresent to others a state of things that does not exist; but when the facts are known, we have much to be proud of, and a great deal to congratulate ourselves upon in the present state of our country. Now, there is another point we must remember, and that is that in the United States they have to provide for an army of pensioners. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) very often gives us a dissertation upon our superannuation list, and I do not know but what we might fairly term it our pension list, although it is scarcely fair to those who have been contributors to that list. Hon, gentlemen opposite have often spoken to us about American affairs, and perhaps some of them are desirous of throwing in their lot with them, for good or for evil. Let me tell them that in the United States there is an army of no less than 489,725 pensioners now maintained at the public expense, and in the year 1889 that army was paid no less than $89,131,780. I ask: Do any of our strong, able-bodied men want to go from Canada to a country where there is so much destitution, and help to make up this fund of eighty-nine million dollars a year to pay pensioners? I flatter myself that no Canadian would like to contribute toward any portion of that sum to pay these men who are living as idlers, many of them. It is estimated that within the next four or five years this pension fund will run up to nearly one hundred million That is a state of things that we do not want in Canada. I am sorry that the hon, member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) is not in his place, for he might correct me, if I am wrong, in making a little reference to a communication that I find here from the Portage la Prairie Review, under date of 18th September. It is headed, "Disgusted Dakotans:"

"Mr. A. D. Campbell, of Glenfield, Foster County, Dakota, called at the Review office* on Saturday, and gave us the benefit of an interview with him relative to some of his experiences during the past five years in Dakota. Mr. Campbell is an intelligent young farmer, who moved from Brant County, Ont., to Dakota five years ago. He is well known in that part of Ontario, but, perhaps, not so well as his brother, who is now treasurer of the County of Brant. Mr. Campbell's present trip to Manitoba is for the purpose of seeking homes for his own and twenty-five other families living around him in Dakota, who are disgusted with the country, and are bound to get out at any cost. He had been west as far as Calgary, and stopped off here on Friday to look over the Portage plains. He said, in relating his experiences: 'there are lots of young men in Ontario, who are, perhaps, working on rented farms, and they may be thinking of coming to Dakota, and I want to give them a word of warning not to come. We made the mistake in going there, and they can profit by our failures. I have worked away there for five years, sank what money I had, and I'll not be able to take out $600. I'd be mighty glad if I could sell for that amount when I go back. Two years ago our crops were a total failure, and the county had to furnish us with seed. Last year the same thing happened, and the county again came to our rescue. This year we had no crops, and the county cannot help us, for it has already borrowed money to the extent of its bonding power, and what we are going to do now, if the United States Government does not come to our rescue, God only knows, The only sure thing we have about farming there is taxes. We pay fifteen mills on the dollar of county tax and twelve mills besides for school tax. Everything is taxed in the house and out of it. In good years, when the crop is not a failure, the best average is fifteen bushels an acre. We live thirty miles from market, and last year we couldn't get anything for our butter. When we took it to the store the merchants gave six cents a pound for it at first and then they quit taking it altogether. We begged them to ship it to St. Paul, and get what they could for it and give it to us, but they wouldn't touch it. In addition to this bit of his experience, Mr. Campbell gave us a little of his opinion, too, and we give it as nearly as may be, as we got it. He said: 'You fellows are all Grits up in this country. You needn't deny it now; I know all about it, for haven't I talked with people from Winnipeg clear through to Calgary, and you are just cutting your own throats. You hink if you get the duty off and get American machinery in here you would be all right, but you are mistaken. The Yankees will use you well till they get you all solid with your duty off, and then look out. Why, I saw an American plough up the line sold for $75, and they charge us down in Dakota $85 for the same machine. These Yankee land agents and railway people are nice enough till they get you located, and then you are not of much account after that. You people here had better build up a Pennsylvania and Connecticut down in Ontario and Quebec. They'll do your manufacturing, and you raise stuff to feed them. Don't send your money to build up St. Paul and other cities in the United States, Canada for the Canadians I

That is the kind of literature we should distribute to the people, especially when it comes from men who have had experience. I hope that it will be the means of retaining many young men in Canada. I have some further facts here. The New York Times says the farmers of the United States are struggling under a burden of mortgage indebtedness approximating nine thousand millions of dollars. The Times further says:

"The greater portion of the money represented by the faces of these mortgages has not been expended in improving the farms, because the larger proportion of the farms were supplied with buildings before the mortgages were laid. The money has been spent to enable the farmers to live,"

The Chicago Times says:

"Farm mortgages are swallowing up millions of acres of land in the Southern and Western States and Territories."

Professor Henry, lecturing in Richmond, Wisconsin, said:

"One of the richest prairies in the United States is that of St. Croix Valley in Wisconsin."

Of that valley he said:

"To-day the richest part of it is almost without fences; the majority of the farm buildings, especially the barns, are poor, and the people complain bitterly of hard times."

Frank Wilkeson, writing in Bradstreet's—an American writing in an American journal of high character—says:

"The present prosperity of Dakota is based upon the expenditure of the capital procured by mortgaging the farm lands. The farmers are spending their farms, mortgages are at 8 per cent. to 10 per cent., and the impoverished farmers have to pay an additional 10 per cent. on renewals, so that interest is really 11 or 12 per cent."

The Cleveland Plaindealer says:

"The mortgages on farms in Ohio amount to more than 700 million dollars, and are gradually increasing, and this, too, in an old, well developed farming country."

Mr. Cleveland, in one of his latest messages to Congress, said of the farmers in the United States:

"Their lands are declining in value while their debts increase."

A report made to the New York State Legislature in 1887 (vol. 2, No. 24, page 16, N. Y. Senate documents, 1887), says:

A despatch to the New York Tribune of 8th February says of the farmers in New Jersey:

"Many of the best and oldest of them say they cannot make both ends meet, and that the outlook is not encouraging. Many farmers have made assignments and others are in the hands of the sheriff."

The New York Post recently called attention to the fact that one of its correspondents counted in a drive on the main road from Lowell, Mass., to Windham, N. H., a distance of twelve miles:

"Six deserted sets of farm buildings, besides several which had already gone to ruin, while fields and pastures were growing up to wood."

If the ex-Finance Minister and other hon, members who have taken a prominent part in the discussion of the exodus would consider these statements, they would find there is no cause for our people being driven out of this country by the legislation of this Government. These figures I have quoted refer to the State of Ohio, which has always been regarded as one of the leading and most wealthy States of the Union. Here are pictures which hon. gentlemen opposite would do well to bear in mind when speaking of our own country, and they would do well to try to say a good word for Canada, and to assist our people to stay in this country with bright hopes for the future. pictures are by the best American authorities, not by tourists, but by parties who are most deeply interested in the failure or success of the farming industries of the country, and pictures painted by such hands are worthy of the consideration of every intelligent citizen of Canada. It ought not to be imposed on any member of this side or the other side of the House to take up the cudgels in defence of his own country and to draw attention to the misfortunes of others, because we have a greater work to do if we are to realise the purpose for which we were sent here by our constituents. I will now come to a State very closely situated to Ontario. I refer to Michigan, which lies to the immediate west of Ontario, and which has always been considered as successful and progressive as our Province. What is the condition of Michigan to-day? An investigation was made in 1887 into the indebtedness of the farming community of Michigan. The result was that the commissioner computes "that the mortgage indebtedness of the State in 1887 was \$129,229,553, on which an The result was that the commissioner annual interest of \$9,451,851 was paid." will find this statement on page 2, report Bureau of Statistics, Michigan, 1888. Two facts are brought out in this statement. First, that the average rate of interest is about 8 per cent. In Ontario, according to the sworn returns of the land companies the rate of interest ranged from $5\frac{3}{4}$ to 6, $6\frac{1}{4}$ and $6\frac{1}{2}$

The second fact is that the nine million acres of improved lands in Michigan had an interest burden upon them greater by \$700,000 than the net interest paid by the whole people of Canada on their whole public debt, and then did not raise, by any means, as much live stock, as great a number of cereals as Ontario, nor produce as many pounds of butter and cheese. Now, Sir, there is the interest paid by the State of Michigan, which we suppose to be wealthy and prosperous, and yet we find that the interest paid upon the debt of that State is greater than the interest on our national debt. If hon. gentlemen doubt my statement they will find it corroborated at page 2 of the Report of the Michigan Bureau of Statistics for 1888. The fact is hon, gentlemen would do well to recognise it, that while the rate of interest is about 8 per cent. in Michigan, in Ontario, according to the sworn returns of the land companies, the rate of interest ranges from $5\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. to $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., the rate of $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. being the highest. The nine millions acres of the improved lands of Michigan have an interest burthen upon them greater by \$700,000 than the net interest paid by the people of Canada on their net public debt. These statements are, I think, interesting and I hope hon, gentlemen opposite will bear them in mind when they are speaking ill of their country. Let me quote another fact with regard to the State of Michigan, which may be interesting to hon, gentlemen opposite:

gard to the State of Michigan, which may be interesting to hon. gentlemen opposite:

"On page 84, Michigan Report Bureau Labor Statistics, 1887, there is a statement of mortgage foreclosures of farm properties in Michigan. There were in the year ended 30th June, 1887, no less than 1,667 foreclosures and 244 sales by levy of execution, or nearly four times more than in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island taken together, the total population of Michigan being 300,000 less than that of Ontario alone, and the value of farms about two hundred and thirty million dollars less than that of the farms of Ontario (according to the latest statement of both.

"In Canada we know very little about chattel mortgages on farm implements, growing crops, &c., &c. An investigation into these evidences of indebtedness in the State of Illinois showed that in 1887 farmers had given 25,442 chattel mortgages and 2,073 mortgages on growing crops. The result of the depression in agriculture in this State is that Illinois has lost in rural districts, between 1880 and 1886, 84,521 of its population.

"Checking these returns by the reports of the land companies, I find that the Erie and Huron Investment Company report for 1887 that the arrearages were only 4 per cent. of the capital invested; that they were 22 per cent. less than in 1886; that only two-thirds of I per cent. came back in the shape of property through foreclosure, and that the farmers in the vicinity of the company's hands over a million dollars for investment. The Canadan had placed in the company's hands over a million dollars for investment. The Canadan were 25 per cent. higher than in 1886. The North of Scotland Canadian Mortgage Company reported that the amount of real estate which, in 1887, had reverted to the company through foreclosure was but $30,000 out of $3,000,000 invested. This same company had £620,000 sterling of money lent in Canada, the amount of foreclosed property was less than $410,000. The Canada Land Company reported for illustrate the business of Canada in one respect, by giving the total of its imports and exports for a year and comparing them with the imports and exports of the United States. The imports and exports of the United States for 1889 amounted to $1,487,533,000, and counting the population at sixty millions, we get an average per head of $24.67 as representing the business activity of that great nation. Let us turn now to Canada, the country whose condition we heard so much deplored by hon. gentlemen opposite. The total imports and exports of Canada for 1889 amounted to $204,000,000, and if we divided that into a population of five millions we have $41 per head, instead of $24.67 in the United States. I appeal to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, if that is not a fair indication of the business activity of this coun-I am sure that business men and farmers as well, will recognise that as a fair illustration of the business enterprise and industry of the people of this Dominion. I may say, Sir, that the figures which I have quoted, and which I intend to quote, are collected by myself, and I believe they will be found correct. I have carefully endeavored to obtain them, as I always do from the most reliable sources, and I challenge their contradiction. Let me turn to some other statistics which will further prove that this country is prosperous, and that it is not in the condition alleged on the other side of the House. The deposits in the chartered banks in Canada in 1880 were $130,000,000 as compared with $66,000,000 in 1874, showing an increase of $64,000,000 during the period of our National Policy. If we look at the savings banks, building societies and loan companies, we find that in 1878 the deposits were $8,269,295, and last year the deposits were $17,712,885, or an increase of $9,443,590. I wish to draw particular attention to these figures, for it will be seen how the country fared during the five years of the Administration of the party opposite, who claimed to have achieved a great success as financiers and administrators of the affairs of the country, and who claimed that their revenue tariff was quite sufficient for the wants of the country, and better than our National Policy tariff. Let us look at the Dominion savings banks deposits. In 1874 the total deposits were $15,101,195, and in 1879 $14,222,074, or a decrease of nearly one million dollars from 1874 to 1879, when hon gentlemen opposite were in office. In 1887 the deposits in the Dominion savings bank amounted to $50,-944,785, or an increase over 1879 of $36,722,711. Let us add these figures together, and we will see what we will get. In 1878 the following were the deposits in Canada:

We have heard so much about the want of vitality of the business life of Canada, and the inactivity in commercial circles, that I have been led to investigate whether there are any foundations for Mr. HESSON.

Government Savings Banks	14,222,074

Now let us compare that with the total deposits in the same institutions at present, after ten years of the benefits which the National Policy has conferred on the country. In 1888 the total deposits in Canada were as follows :-

amounting to $88,491,369 and you have the enormous increase of $109,760,449 since the National Policy has been in operation in Canada. I think, Sir, if that does not represent the business life and business activity it would be almost impossible to give an illustration to the people of Canada. If that does not represent the very best results of the enterprise and the energy of the Canadian people, and if it is not accepted by hon. gentlemen opposite, I think it would be very hard indeed to give them any reason at all, to show that we have prospered. We have another way of illustrating the business energies of the people. In 1874 the money orders issued amounted to $6,757,000, and in 1878 they amounted to $6,788,000, a very trifling increase. In 1889 we find that money orders were issued to the amount of $10,328,984. Does that represent business enterprise and energy, or do people take exchanges and buy money orders for amusement simply to show that they have some wealth? The number of letters and post cards issued, which passed through the post office in 1878, was 50,750,000, and in 1887, the last year for which I could get the figures, 90,750,000, a jump up of 40,000,000, in the post office business of the country, which, I think, is another good illustration of business life and activity. Take another illustration: In 1874 the postal revenue of the country amounted to $1,476,000; in 1879 it amounted to $1,534,000, an increase of $58,000, an average increase of $10,815 a year. In 1889 the postal revenue amounted to $2,984,000, an increase of $1,449,000 in eleven years, or an average of $131,804, against $10,815 during the period the Reform party were in power. Now, there are several ways of ascertaining the degree of prosperity in this country under the National Policy, and let me trouble the House with another statement on that point. The construction of railways in this country we have a right to take as representing whether the affairs of the country are stationary or progressive. In 1879 there were 6,225 miles of railways built, and in 1888, the last year for which I could get returns, there were 12,700 miles built, an increase of 6,445 miles since the National Policy was inaugurated. The passengers carried by these railways numbered 6,500,000 in 1879 as against 11,-500,000 in 1888. Is that any evidence of energy, activity and business life? We have another way of estimating the prosperity of the business of Canada. We find that in 1879 8,348,000 tons of freight were carried by railways, while in 1888 17,172,000 tons were carried, or an increase of 8,823,000. Then, take the railway earnings. In 1879 they amounted to $19,925,000, and in 1888 they amounted to $42,159,000, an increase of $22,234,000. Not only by land, but by sea, the country has been displaying enterprise and energy, and I congratulate the House on the fact. The tonnage of sea-going and lake vessels in 1879 was 11,500,000 tons and in 1888 14,500,000 tons, an increase of 3,000,000 tons. Now, the hon. member for North Wellington stated that there was a serious number of business failures during the past year. I have not the figures for the past year, but I will give the result of my investigation of the failures as presented in two period of times. From 1874 to 1879 the failures in Canada reached the enormous sum of $133,000,000, which divided by the five years during which the Reform party were in power, gives an annual average of $26,500,000. Does that represent a satisfactory condition of things to the people of Canada, and what reason have we for supposing that it would not have continued if that party had remained in power? Contrast that showing with the showing for the nine years from 1879 to 1888 during the existence of the National Policy, when the total failures amounted to $106,000,000 or an average of $11,500,000 a year. Is that not an evidence that the country is really prosperous and is going on in a most satisfactory way, notwithstanding the assertion of hon. gentlemen opposite, that it is going to ruin and decay? I might drop the subject there with the fullest assurance that the House has heard enough to justify the statement I have made, that we have clear evidence of prosperity; but I will give some further evidence to the same effect. If there is any one thing more than another which shows the success and prosperity of a people, I believe it is the extent of their life insurance. As a rule, when men are not prospering they will not involve themselves in the expense of life insurance; they will rather carry their risk. When payments are pressing upon them, they will be careful to consider whether they can afford to take a risk of $5,000 or even $1,000 on their lives, and it is only the business men of the country who can afford to do it at any time. It is done very little by the rural population, although I believe they are beginning to find themselves in a better position to do it now than ever before. But the business men have made investments of that kind, not only for the future protection of themselves and their families, but for the sake of their credit, because a man can get better terms and treatment from a wholesale house if he has insured not only his life but his buildings, than he could under other circumstances. Now, the number of life insurance policies issued in Canada in 1879 was 53,000, and the value of the risks was $86,000,000; in 1887, the last year for which I am able to get the figures, the number of policies was 131,000, an increase of 88,000, and the value of the risks $191,500,-Now these 000, an increase of $105,000,000. are startling figures, and they are on the satisfactory side. They are figures on which we may congratulate ourselves. The same remarks I have made with reference to life insurances will apply to fire insurances. In 1879, the amount of fire policies was $407,000,000 and in 1887, $633,000,000, showing an increase of $226,000,000; and adding the two amounts together, we have $331,500,000 of fire and life policies in existence more than we had during the Administration of the hon. member for York (Mr. Mackenzie). I have here a statement carefully prepared from the Public Accounts, showing the products of the farm imported for home use into Canada, from 1874 to 1879 inclusive, and I include 1879, because, although the Conservative party was then in power, the National Policy had not then had time to have any effect. We imported for consumption to the extent of $55,000,000 worth, so that the products of the farmers in Canada had to meet this competition in their own market. I would ask could we hope for prosperity under such circumstances? Our farmers had to compete with American products in every market town. Every merchant could say to them: I can lay this wheat or these oats here from Chicago, at such a price, and if you do not take that price I will import the goods. The result was that $55,000,000 worth of foreign products were brought into Canada to come into competition with our own farm products; or, on an average, $9,166,000 per year came in, and, worse still, came in without paying a dollar of taxation. Our farmers did not even have the miserable consolation of knowing that the Americans were helping to swell the receipts of our treasury, by paying a tax on these products with which they flooded our markets. Our farmers can produce all that the people require. It may be said that we do not grow enough corn, but I will be able to show that this country grows a good deal of corn, and that it was well worthy the consideration of the Government to put a tax upon corn for more reason than one, and I will quote Mr. Blue's statistics to prove this. From 1879 to 1889, we imported American grain and products of grain, amounting to $36,400,000 or at the rate of $4,100,000 a year, as compared with $9,000,000 a year during the six years of the Mackenzie Administration, and there is also this difference that, whereas in the one case, these products came in free, in the other they were subject to very heavy duties. What has been the effect of that policy? We have kept our market for our own people, as we declared the National Policy would do, to the extent of the difference between $55,000,000 in six years, and $36,000,000 in nine years. During last year, 1889, I find we collected $449,000, or nearly half a million dollars on our importation of American grain and grain products. Is not that a wise policy? Or should we admit free the products of the labor of American farmers to swamp the markets we have been endeavoring to build up for our own people, by means of bonussing railways and of establishing industries in this country? But no amount of reasoning, or figures, or facts, can convince the hon. gentlemen opposite, to whom we all know that the mention of the National Policy is like flaunting a red flag before a bull. In the great American Republic, on the contrary, both parties are united as to the necessity of protecting native industries, and there is no such party as a free trade party known there. The hon member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) spoke of the cotton industry as one of the grievances of the country, claiming that the poor people are compelled to pay a high taxation on the cotton they purchase, but I can tell the hon gentleman that our manufacturers are not only selling cotton cheaper than the imported article was ever sold for, but it is of a superior quality, and besides we are giving employment to our own artisans and people. In 1879, the quantity of the raw product imported was 7,250,000 lbs., whereas, in 1887, it amounted to 30,971,000 lbs., being an increase of 23,721,000 lbs. of raw cotton imported and manufactured during that period. Surely that ought to be taken into account when gentlemen are talking about the National Policy and the decay of the present condition of Canada. But that is not all. In 1878 there were imported from Great Britain and the United States 12,771,896 yards of bleached and unbleached cottons, valued at $971,685. Last year we only imported 1,634,190 yards, valued at $174,873. think the difference in that alone illustrates what it really means, to import the raw product and manufacture it in this country. In 1879 we imported 6,230,084 lbs. of wool for manufacture. That was during the Administration of hon. gentle-Mr. HESSON.

men opposite. In 1887 we imported 12,038,693 lbs., or nearly double. Was it of no importance to the people of the country that that was imported for manufacture in this country? I cannot understand the dogheadedness of an individual who can stand up and say that it is not to the advantage of the people of this country to manufacture these goods in Canada. Hon. gentlemen may say that this wool came into competition with our own wool, but it is not so. The wool which would have competed with our wool has been shut out by a very proper duty. The long combing wools are very different from those which go into the manufacture of the fine cloths we are now using in Canada. There has been a good deal said about the increase of our national debt. No doubt that has increased very largely, but I think we have value for it, and I think I shall be able to show that we have. At the time of Confederation. there was a debt of Ontario and Quebec amounting to \$62,500,000, Nova Scotia \$8,000,000 and New Brunswick \$7,000,000, or a total of \$77,500,000. That was simply taking over the burdens of the older Provinces, and placing them, as a matter of book-keeping, upon the broader shoulders of the Federal Government. In 1869 Nova Scotia comesin, under Better Terms, with \$1,186,756, and in 1873 the following amounts were added:—The old Provinces, \$10,056,089; Ontario and Quebec, \$4,-897,503; Nova Scotia, \$2,343,159, New Brunswick, \$1,807,720, Manitoba, \$3,725,600, British Columbia \$2,029,392, Prince Edward Island \$4,884,023. have here a total of \$109,430,149. Is there a single dollar of that part of the national debt that hon, gentlemen opposite would say should not have been assumed? Does that increase the burdens of the people or the taxation? I have no doubt that pressure was brought by the Provinces upon the Government to accept the responsibility of this burden, and the Federal Government, as I think properly, did accept the responsi-bility. Let us see how the other portion of the national debt has been created. We have built and aided railways at the request of our own people, and for their benefit. Our own people have pressed for the construction of these roads in order to open up the country and develop the land, the forests and the mines, and specially to develop the far west. We find that we have expended \$103,142,393 on railways since Confederation, chiefly on the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial Railway. Then we have expended on canals \$32,847,148. If that is not a wise expenditure, hon. gentlemen should object to it. We are now led to anticipate some other expenditures in the same direction, and I believe large works are being carried on on the Sault Ste. Marie and the Cornwall and other canals. I believe both the east and the west are a unit in approving of that expenditure, though counties such as that I represent may not feel interested in canal enterprises. Still, as forming part of this Confedera-tion, we are bound to accept our share of the responsibility. The canals are competitors with the railways and afford means by which we can get our products into the best markets. On public buildings, we have expended \$12,539,261, and on other public works, \$15,861,053. That makes a total of \$164,389,854. Will hon, gentlemen opposite say which of these public works should not have been constructed? I know that objections have been taken to the construction of the Intercolonial Railway by some people, but very few, because I think the interests of Confederation necessitated the construction of that work. I do not say that it was done in the wisest manner. I am not here to justify the expenditure of every dollar as having been made in the wisest manner, but I do justify the course which has been taken in the construction of railways, and we know that the people everywhere are pressing the Government to assist the municipalities in the construction of those railways. If you take that amount of \$164,389,854, and add to it the debts which were assumed, amounting to \$109,430,149, you have a total of \$273,820,003. That accounts for our national debt at once. I need not go a step further in order to show that we have full value for our national debt, which amounts to \$237,530.000. And this is not all. the total net debt is 237 millions, whereas we account for 273 millions, the difference arising from expenditures on great public works and assuming the burdens of the Provinces. Not very long ago, at a meeting of the Young Men's Liberal Club in Toronto, they discussed the question of subsidies to the Provinces. The question was long and ably debated, and I may mention that the exleader of the Opposition, the Hon. Mr. Blake, was appointed president of that association. The association adopted unanimously I think a resolution that in their opinion subsidies to the Provinces should, for the future, be discontinued. I do not know that hon, gentlemen in this House will agree with that. I am sure there will be but one voice in this House that these subsidies should not be withheld or withrawn from the Provinces, yet we find the ex-leader of the great Reform party is made president of a club which has passed a resolution to that effect. Now, let us see what we have paid to the Provinces. During the twenty-two years since Confederation, we have paid \$76,867,506 to the Provinces out of the revenue of this country. Now, do hon, gentlemen suppose that we can have our loaf and eat it too? Do they suppose that we can go on carrying the heavy burdens of the Provinces without increasing our liabilities? I find that we have increased our liabilities from this source on an average of 31 million dollars a year. If we take the year 1889 there is no less a sum than \$4,051,427 put down in the Estimates for subsidies to the Provinces this year. Now, if hon. gentlemen are opposed to this expenditure, let them rise and denounce it as an unwise expenditure on the part of the Government, although it is forced upon this Government in consequence of the necessities of the Provinces. I want to make one more remark about the interest of the farmers. I find in the United States Trade and Navigation Reports for 1889 a table showing the proportion of grain imported by Great Britain and the country from which wheat is imported—when I say grain I mean wheat in this case. From 1871 to 1879 Canada exported 6½ per cent. of the total imports of wheat into Great Britain; from 1879 to 1888 we exported 41 per cent.; but in the last year, I am sorry to say, there has been a decline, and we are now exporting but $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the whole imports of wheat into Great Britain. How stands it with our rivals, the Americans, who, I am free to admit, do grow grain cheaper than we have yet been able to do it in the older Provinces? We find that our exports of grain to England have steadily declined since 1871, whereas they ought to have been inincreasing. I think I explained the reason to-day to be that we had been importing too much Amer ican wheat into this country, and the farmers had found it unprofitable to grow wheat, and the result was a decline in our export of that article. From 1871 to 1879 an average of 44 per cent., almost one-half the imports into Great Britain, was made from the United States. From 1879 to 1889 they had increased their exports into Great Britain to 54 per cent. of the whole, whereas in the case of Canada, our exports declined during that period. This is a matter of very serious import to the farmers of Canada. They have got to face the fact that not only in the great prairies of the American west, but on our own prairies, they have got to face competition; they have likewise to face competition from France, Germany, Russia and British India, and I think it is known how cheaply wheat can be produced in British India. In 1871 only one-half of one per cent. of the imports of grain into Great Britain came from India; in 1879 the proportion had risen to 3 per cent., and in 1888 to 12 per cent. Here is clearly the source of the trouble—it is that with the high priced labor the Canadian farmer has to employ we are not able to compete with the cheap labor of India, and of Russia, and of Germany, and of France; consequently our farmers must turn their attention to something else. Now, let me show how the matter stands with respect to the prices of grain in Canada and in England. In England, in 1879, the price of wheat was \$1.80 a bushel; in Canada, in the city of Toronto, it was \$1.32, a difference of 48 cents a bushel between Toronto and the British market. In 1890 the price of wheat in England is \$1.08, in the city of Toronto it is eighty-seven cents, or a difference of twenty-one cents, so that we have improved our position with regard to the English market by the difference between forty-eight and twenty-one cents per bushel, or a difference of twenty-seven cents in favor of the English market, now, if we were exporters there, as against the state of things that existed when wheat was bringing \$1.80 a bushel. Now, in 1879 the price of wheat was \$1.49 cents in New York, and \$1.32 in Toronto, or a difference of seventeen cents in favor of the United The price of wheat in England, as I said, was fifty-eight shillings per quarter, or \$1.08 a bushel, in 1879; while in 1890 it is thirty-five shillings per quarter, or \$1.08 per bushel. Let me now give the prices in Canada: Toronto, 1879, wheat \$1.32; 1890, eighty-seven cents, or a decline of forty-five cents. New York, wheat, 1879, \$1.49; 1890, eighty-seven cents, or a decline of sixty-two cents. I point out that since the National Policy prices between New York and Toronto are precisely the same. If this has what has caused it? The same means of communication between New York and Toronto exist, and also between New York and These facts show that under the Liverpool. operation of the National Policy wheat is worth as much to-day in Toronto or Montreal as it is in the leading cities of the United States. No. 1 hard wheat, produced in the constituency represented by the hon, member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), is quoted to-day in Canada at \$1.07 a bushel, which is a higher price than is given for any other wheat on the continent. It is encouraging also that the price of wheat has been approaching that in the English market closer than was the case in 1879, and we have also evened up with the prices in the best markets in the United States, a condition of things that did not exist in 1879. While the price of wheat to-day is 87 cents in Toronto and New York, it is only 79 cents in Chicago. We all remember ten or twelve years ago it was the rule for grain prices in Chicago to rule higher than in Toronto. Now it is equally as common to have the prices of grain higher in Toronto, and wheat from 8 to 10 cents per bushel higher than in Chicago. Oats in Chicago yesterday were 22 cents, in Toronto 30 to 33 cents. I remember the time when oats were much higher in Chicago than in Toronto, but the case is reversed to-day and the Toronto market is higher by about 8 cents per bushel than Chicago years ago. Corn is selling in Chicago at 29 cents a bushel. The question of corn is an important one for us in Canada. The Government have wisely retained the duty on it, for two reasons: first, because it comes into competition with our coarse grains; and, second, because it is a great and growing industry in this country. Its production has ran up greatly for the last few years, and it appears, according to returns of the Statistical Bureau of Toronto, that we raised in 1889 no less than 17,436,780 bushels in the ear. The year before last the crop was a partial failure, only about 8,000,000 bushels being produced, while for the preceding year the quantity was about 12,000,000 bushels. The price now quoted is 29 cents per bushel in the ear, which is the price in Chicago to-day for shelled corn. I regret it was necessary to detain the House at such length, but I have found it difficult to listen day after day to statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite without making any I did not offer any remarks on the tariff last year. I represent, however, as important a constituency as there is in Canada, and one of the garden counties of Ontario, and I have a right to speak in the interests of my constituents; and, at the risk of making myself troublesome to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, I have simply discharged my duty as a representative of the farmers in my county. The more I see of the National Policy the more I admire it, and although I may have had at one time perhaps some misgiving, owing to the issues raised by hon. gentlemen opposite, as to the benefits that would result from it, those doubts have been cleared away. I am confident as to the future of this country, and I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will follow the course adopted in all other deliberative assemblies on this continent or elsewhere, and join heart and hand with one accord to do our best to secure the success and prosperity of the people of Canada.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I must confess it is a rather ungrateful task, at this late hour to address the House, not so much for myself as for my hearers, but I presume that were I not to speak, another hon. member would, so that the result should be about the same for the House. This is why, although the hon. members seem anxious and tired of hearing speeches, I think it my duty to the electors I have the honor to represent, to state my views in reference to the question now Mr. Hesson.

before the House. The hon, member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown), who addressed the House this evening, made a statement which, to my mind, gives a fair idea of the political system which the Conservative party have been carrying on these last years. He said that should one go to the United States, one should hear almost every American say that the township in which he lives is the finest in the county, the county the finest in the State, and the State in which the county is situated the richest of the whole Union. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that is about what the hon. members on the other side of the House have been saying these last few They have taken as their political tactics, hoping thus to promote the interests of their party, to extolling the prosperity of the country and crediting their policy with it. I do not intend to follow them on that ground. I agree with them on a most important point, that this Dominion is among the finest countries in the whole world; but, on the other hand, I think it is among the worst as far as government goes, and that, perhaps, explains why it does not enjoy the prosperity one might desire. In the twelve years I have had the honor of a seat in this House, I never saw a Budget speech received with so scant applause as the one delivered, on Thursday last, by the hon. the Minister of Finance. In 1879, when Sir Leonard Tilley and Sir Charles Tupper submitted to this House the so-called National Policy, they brought forth from their friends an indescribable enthusiasm; the two speakers were at every moment interrupted by frantic applause. They had succeeded in carrying their friends in a new world, the fool's Paradise. And yet the financial situation was not then flourishing. The current year promised a large deficit; the great commercial depres-ion was not yet over. Nowadays, although the public treasury is overflowing; it is with but a trembling voice and an evident diffidence the hon. the Minister of Finance proclaims his surpluses and his political friends receive the news, good in itself, with the most evident coldness. Why is this? Where is the explanation of such a marked difference in the hearing of this House? It is because then, Mr. Speaker, there were hopes, and now there is the painful reality. Our surpluses are but the result of exaggerated taxation; and, with the distress of the people before them, the hon. members on the other side feel they would be committing an outrageous insult were they to applaud. But the hon. the Minister of Finance is not the only one who is doubtful and almost apprehensive. These last two or three years, the Government, feeling that the delusions of their protective policy were fading away, have been constantly waivering up to these last few days, when they finally resolved to adopt retaliatory duties against the United States, and maintain till the next elections the protective policy carried on since 1879. I think it my duty to oppose this policy, as I always did so far; and while craving the indulgence of this House, I intend, Mr. Speaker, saying a few words with respect to the situation now existing in the country, to its relations with the United States and to the means of improving our position at both the commercial and agricultural standpoints as well as that of the general interests of the people of this Dominion. I do not intend criticising in its details, the general management of public affairs nor recriminating as to faults and evils which are common to all parties under constitutional Governments. In a democratic country like this, where frequent elections are held, where contests are very close in many counties, political exigencies arise as well as obligations under which Governments are to their friends, which indeed are not possibly warrantable as to morality and the interests of the country, but which nowadays are in some measure tolerated, inasmuch as they are the inevitable result of our policy and the political morals of our people. harsh a censure, a censure as to details, would not be fair, for one must not exact from others what one could not do one's self. I readily agree that it was impossible for the Government, notwithstanding the promises of economy made by some of their members when in Opposition, to prevent an increase in the public expenditure. But there is nothing to warrant an increase of 60 per cent. in the public expenditure, an increase of more than 60 per cent. in the taxation of the country, and an increase, in ten years, of 75 per cent. in the public debt. Never was there a satisfactory explanation given by the hon. members on the other side as to that alarming state of our finances. There exists but one explanation, which I venture to mention: it is that system of unscrupulous corruption, organised many years ago, by the present leader of the Government, and which, in these last few years more than ever he has resorted to in order to hold to power. The favorite argument of the hon. gentleman when pressed from this side, and short of any other argument he might offer to this House in refutation, is that, notwithstanding his faults and frailties, the people still prefer him to members on this side and keep him in power. There never was a more untrue statement. It is not true that the present Government had in their favor the public opinion and that they actually had in their favor a majority of the Canadian voters. At the last general election, out of a total vote of 718,788, the Government only had a majority of 6,494, not including members belonging to both parties returned by acclamation, which would not materially affect the general result. That majority does not represent quite one per cent. of the total vote. Can any hon. member fairly contend that the victory of the ministerial party would not have been changed into a humiliating defeat, had not the Government controlled the voters' list through partisan revising officers and the vote itself through returning officers, all of whom were their political friends; had they not, moreover, annulled the vote of the free and independent voters by the vote of the Indians, who were mere tools in the hands of the Government agents, by the vote of the public officers, by the vote of the laborers controlled by the manufacturers in the country, and especially, by the vote of the venal part of the electorate, which they bought out by means of the most unscrupulous bribery ever witnessed in this our country. Had the elections been carried on without bribery, I can assure this House that the Liberal party, not the present Government, would now be in power. Few people in the country have an idea of what it cost them in the past to give the Government this narrow majority, and what it still costs them each year to keep into power the hon. gentlemen on the other side. I charge the Government with governing the country in the sole interests of the Conservapeople in the purchase of the public favor in many counties. We are presently undergoing, Mr. Speaker, a system of bribery which is ruinous to the public treasury. There lies the explanation of such a rapid increase in our expenditure and public debt. On 30th June, 1889, our public debt amounted to 237 millions of dollars, in round numbers, representing an increase of nearly 100 millions in ten years, or nearly 10 millions of dollars annually. The public debt comes to about \$50 for each man, woman and child in the Dominion, which is \$500 for each family of ten members. It is an enormous amount, if we add to that all the Provincial, municipal and private debts which reach a large figure. The Honorable Minister of Finance said last Thursday that in return for our debt we have public works and institutions of a princely value. He has not named them. I am going to permit myself to name some of them in his place. First, let us look at the Intercolonial. The debt of the Intercolonial has this day reached the incredible sum of \$51,000,-000, and has an annual deficit varying from \$100,-000 to \$400,000 on the cost of management. Apart from that, it is adding to its debt about \$1,000,000 a year. There, Mr. Speaker, is a public enterprise which pays royally, not the public (nobody would dare to claim that), but the Conservative party, which for many years has made use of that iron road as of an electoral machine, to assure itself of the counties through which it passes and to show favor to the political friends of the Government, by reductions on the charges of transport. The Intercolonial, far from paying, costs the country about 14 millions a year. Why? Because it is a railway worked with a political aim in view, and with no other object. We have made another fine investment of public money in the section of the Pacific Railway of British Columbia, and that of the north of Lake Superior. I shall not recur to this oftimes discussed subject, but I believe that the Government must itself admit to-day that it then committed an error which has cost the country many millions. We may now still recall like a sort of fantastic history, the extravagance in the construction of the Grand Trunk, and the enormous sums paid by the country for that undertaking. Far from me, Mr. Speaker, be the idea of censuring the policy of the construction of railways. What I censure is the manner of execution and the enormous waste which has accompanied the accomplishment of these great works. If I did not fear to abuse the attention of this House I would cite the whole of a list of election railways, for which the country has incurred considerable responsibilities. I shall name only a few of them. Let us take ahead of all the others the famous Chignecto marine transport railway, which in 1886 obtained from the Government a grant of \$170,602 a year, during 20 years, being in all about $3\frac{1}{2}$ millions of dollars. The object of this road is to transport vessels not exceeding 1,000 tons burden from Baie Verte, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to the River la Planche, in the Bay of Fundy. This grant took place in the year preceding the elections of 1887, and its only aim was to favor the election of the members for the neighboring counties. This is what may be called literally throwing millions into the water. Another line, the road from Oxford to New Glasgow, which is parallel with the road of Truro and tive party, and wasting the money of the Pictou. This line was constructed on the assertion of Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Railways, that it would be 45 miles shorter than the other line; but it only shortens the route by about seven miles. And now it is proved beyond all doubt that the only aim in the construction of this line was to bribe the counties through which it passes. It is impossible, Mr. Speaker, to find anything more condemnable from a political point of view than the outlay occasioned by the construction of the Short Line, and the continuation projected by the road of Harvey and Salisbury. I shall recall today the transactions and political underhand dealings which drove the Government to subsidise the railway called the Short Line. This question has already been the subject of a debate before the House. We occupied ourselves some time since with the line of Harvey and Salisbury, which will continue the Short Line of the State of Maine as far as Halifax. The road of Harvey and Salisbury will cost the country at least \$5,000,000. What will be its utility? It was clearly proved before this House that it will have no utility in view of the general interests of the country, unless by shortening by some miles-20 to 25 miles-the route from Montreal to Halifax. Not only will the road cost 5 millions, but it will, besides, have the effect of causing competition on that part of the Inter-colonial which runs from St. John to Moneton; of diminishing by one-half the revenues of that portion of the Intercolonial, and consequently to cause the Dominion Treasury to lose a great many thousand dollars. Not only is this road not useful, but if will be in the future an occasion of dead loss to the public treasury, and nothing can explain the conduct of the Government in this affair, unless that in thus acting it satisfies the desires of the electors of the surrounding counties, and fulfills the promises made at elections. There are quite a legion of railways subsidised in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, either before the elections of 1887, to dispose the electors to vote well, or immediately, to fulfil the promises made at elections. I cite the grants made to the Maritime Provinces, because the bribery there was more direct and more patent; but the same system has also been carried on in the other Provinces of Canada. I regret to say it, Mr. Speaker, for several years we have seen a scandalous application of the public money for the construction of small pieces of railways, which are asserted to be lines constructed for the general advantage of Canada, while more important lines are neglected. 1 repeat it, I am in favor of subsidising railways with a view to the interests of the country; but it is my duty to condemn such subsidies when their only aim is to give partisans to the hon. gentlemen on the right. Now, Mr. Speaker, if we can take away from the public debt all the money which has been expended since 25 to 30 years the aim of bribery and political partisanship, for the construction and, in certain cases, for the working, of the Grand Trunk, of the Inter-colonial, of the Pacific, of the lines which I have just named, and of a crowd of others subsidised with a political view, I believe that you would be astonished at the enormous reduction which by such means we should make in the public debt. I do not expect to make hon, gentlemen accept my opinion, or to make them pass sentence of con-sixty-five millions, perhaps a hundred millions of dollars on our public debt, and from four to five millions of dollars for the annual expenses of the interest on our debt, and of management upon the lines which belong to the Government at the present time. In every case the estimates are certainly not too high, if we add to them the other public works, executed within the same lapse of time. During this session there have been numerous attacks against the extraordinary expenditure made since a good number of years in the Department of Public Works. I do not wish to cast a doubt on the present capability of the hon. Minister of Public Works in the management of his Department. It, however, appears evident to me that he has allowed himself to be carried away by the general tide of the policy of bribery of the Government, and that a host of edifices and public buildings have only been erected to fulfil promises given at elections or to please electors during electoral struggles. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to pass on to another subject nearly allied to that which I have just been treating. I wish to speak of the public expenditure. The public expenditure for the year ending June, 1888, was \$36,917,779; 1878, it was \$23,501,000, or an increase in eleven years of about 60 per cent. shall go over some items of annual outlay with the view of proving that it should be possible for an economical management to keep down a host of useless expenses. Quite recently, we had a long debate in this House asking for the repeal of the Electoral Act. The administration of this law has already cost the country hundreds of thousands of dollars. The Liberal party did not succeed in causing the repeal of this law. Why? Because the Government makes use of this iniquitous law to give itself advantages over its opponents during election The hon. Secretary of State estimated times. the cost of preparing the lists at over \$150,000 a year; some hon. members of this House have made a still higher estimate of the cost. However that may be, the saving effected by suppressing this law would be considerable. Mr. Speaker, another expense which is rapidly increasing is that of the Civil Service. This expense has increased about 60 per cent. since 1878. The hon. Minister gave as a reason the considerable increase in the business of Canada. I may state, by the way, Mr. Speaker, that it is very unfortunate that business has not increased in the Department, because our commerce has remained stationary for 20 years. These expenses in 1878 amounted to \$800,000, and now they are nearly \$1,300,000. Formerly, when the hon. gentlemen on the right were in the Opposition, they were in the habit of reproaching the Mackenzie Government with appointing too many public officers, notwithstanding the proverbial economy of that Government. I recollect that all the Conservative papers, La Minerve, Le Canadien of Quebec, and several other papers, made it a crime of the Government to have appointed a great number of inspectors of weights and measures. first thing that the Conservatives did on coming into power was to dismiss the inspectors of weights and measures. But what was not the surprise of the public, some time ago, to find that we now spend for the inspection of weights and measures demnation on their past conduct; but I believe exactly the same amount that we expended in that, without doing the least harm to the well-being of Canada, it would have been easy to save at least number of inspectors were appointed, but this expense has increased so rapidly that it is now, as I have just said, as high as when the Mackenzie Government was in power, and the inspection is done with a great deal less efficiency. I said just now that the Mackenzie Government were upbraided with filling the public offices with employés. To-day they are so filled up that there is no longer any place to put them in, and the hon. Minister of Public Works was obliged to erect an immense building, which is going to cost upwards of half a million dollars; and I may say that in three or four years these new offices will be filled, and another building may perhaps be necessary to lodge them. I allow, in every case, that there may be reasons for increasing the number of public officials to a certain extent, but up to the present time I have not heard any good reason from the hon. Minister of Finance to explain as great an increase as that which I have just mentioned. Another excessive expenditure of the public funds exists in the superannuation fund. I shall not press this point, but will merely cause it to be remarked, that the system adopted for some years has been purely and simply a means of paying a double salary for a large number of officials. The amounts granted for superannuation have more than doubled during ten years. In 1878 they were \$106,588; they are now \$218,993. The institution of superannuation had a twofold aim-to care for such officials as became incapable, and to increase the efficiency of the public service, by making their dismissal more easy in cases where they ceased to be useful through infirmity, age, or otherwise. Unfortunately the present Administration has abused the superannuation law to the extent of making of it a veritable tool for bribery and a burden to the public treasury. In order to make room for political friends asking for employment, able employés are put aside, with pensions which are sometimes high; and the result of this is that the country is paying double salaries. My hon. friend from Simcoe East (Mr. Cook) spoke some time ago of Mr. LeSueur, who at this very time draws over \$1,000 from the superannuation fund, while receiving a salary of over \$1,200 for another Government employment. This Mr. LeSueur resigned in favor of a relative a situation bringing him a salary of \$2,400. What proves that he was neither incapable nor disqualified is that another situation was given to him. The hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) mentioned, some days ago, two or three dismissals and superannuations which took place in the city of Quebec without any reason or apparent cause. I will not enter into details, but it is not exaggeration to say that at least twenty-five or thirty cases of the arbitrary dismissal of perfectly capable persons were reported before this House, with the only aim of making room for political friends. We have at this very time in all parts of the country a host of people able to earn their living, who are living at the expense of the people of Canada, for the only reason that positions had been promised to the friends of the Government and that it was necessary to give them. It is a system which costs the country very dear, and which does not do justice to the public employes. There is a host of persons who for twenty years have drawn from the public treasury sums varying from \$5,000 to \$20,000. A striking case, which I was forgetting, is that of Judge Clarke, whom I

Committee in favor of the great Pacific Company. This eminent man, who probably receives from $15,000 to $20,000 a year, was superannuated with a judge's pension, as being incapable of filling his position. Facts of this nature speak more for it than long speeches, and require no comment. Another detail, that of double salaries. have often argued about the salaries of public officers, which in many cases are reasonable, on the principle that in order to have good officers they must be well paid. But a blamable excuse is that of double salaries for work done after office hours. There are 618 employés who thus increase their pay by 25 and 50 per cent. -some who double their salaries. After studying this question, and having had explanations of it before the Committee on Public Accounts, 1 could not do otherwise than arrive at the conclusion that in a great number of cases this system of double salaries is a means of including a sinecure with a regular employment, in order to show favor to a friend of the party at the expense of the public treasury. It would be difficult to find in the whole world a Government which has more absurd Government positions with a view to bribery, or which has showed a more machiavelian aptitude in the art of multiplying positions, and of scattering the public money among its favorites. A striking example is found in the administration of the Department of the Interior, and especially in the Indian Department. I have often endeavored to account to myself for the affairs of these Departments. The Committee on Public Accounts have sometimes also sought to explain to itself the enormous expenditure of the Indian Department, of the public lands—in a word, all the expenses of the Department of the Interior. But it will be said that the Prime Minister of Canada, who, among his friends, passes for one who commands the various elements, has done all in his power to envelop this part of the administration of public affairs in mystery. There all is mystery and darkness. No one has ever been able to explain, for example, how it happens that it is necessary to pay such a large number of employés to so mismanage those distant territories. No one has ever been able to make me understand how it happens that the administration of public lands costs the country over $300,000 in salaries and expenses of management, only to bring in this year $227,000, by the sale of public lands. There is negligence and evident bad mismanagement. The cost of the journeys of inspectors of every description in the Indian Department, agents for the public lands, represent each year thousands and thousands of dollars. The North-West has become a gulf which has not only swallowed a great part of the millions which now compose our national debt, but which, each year, absorbs several million dollars of taxes which are paid by the electors of the old Provinces of Canada. This swallowing up of the public funds has certainly in a great measure injured the colonisation and material development of the old Provinces, and these millions have been so badly spent, and so badly distributed, that the North-West is only developing with a surprising backwardness, which has overthrown the hopes which had been built on that immense territory. The subsidies to the Conservative journals under the form of advertisements and various printing each year reach a couple of hundred thousand dollars. heard a few days ago pleading before the Railway Such subsidies vary from some hundreds to some thousands of dollars for each sheet. The Mail of Toronto alone absorbs over $2,700. These subsidies to newspapers have the double fault of costing the country dear, of increasing the public expenses, and of depriving the press of all independence. This explains why the proceedings of the Government are accepted and defended by the whole of a political party in Canada. These few facts will suffice to prove that a considerable economy might each year be made in the administration of public affairs. But I might multiply these examples, if I did not fear to encroach upon the attention of the House. These examples not only prove the extravagance of the Government, but that the administration of public affairs is carried on with the sole view of favoritism, of rewarding political friends, and not for the real interests of the country. It is to meet this extravagant expenditure that the people pay enormous taxes, and in no way with regard to the revenues of the electors of the country. And here again, in the manner of levying taxes, we still find that spirit of favoritism and want of principle which characterises the present Government. Not only does the Government raise considerable revenues to meet these public expenses, but it has adopted a system of assessment of taxes which makes them still heavier for the tax-payers of the country to support. This is what I am going to prove by facts. The very principle of protection is a false and dangerous principle, because it implies favoritism of a class or of certain classes at the ex-What have pense of the other classes of society. we seen since 1879? Delegations of all kinds representing the various industries of the country repairing by turns to the Minister of Finance to obtain special favors for themselves. One may tell which are the suppliants who will be listened to, and which will be those to be refused. It will suffice for that to know their political color and the amount of influence they can dispose of at election The present tariff is not founded on any principle, nor upon any particular law. It de-pends entirely on the absolute will and on the caprice of the Minister of Finance or on the political needs of the Government. There is not a single member in this House who can deny that under the present régime any manufacturer who controls the elections, in a county may impose and in fact does impose, his will on the Government, at his desire to fix the tariff for the kind of industry in which he desires to make his fortune. The Government of the country is, at the present time, at the mercy of commercial coalitions and of the manufacturers of Canada. It is they who have given power to it, who will support it, and will dictate, from a commercial point of view. In protectionist countries, the wretched classes are those which are not protected. In Canada these classes are artisans and farmers. Government receives deputation after deputation on the part of manufacturers and railway companies, it does not receive any on the part of farmers. Why? Because the agricultural class feels well that its voice would not be listened to. Since 1879, at each Session, the members of the Opposition made themselves the echo of the numerous and just complaints of the agricultural class of the country. We asked for the farmers their share of protection. What did the Government do for them? Nothing; absolutely nothing. I defy the hon. members on the right to prove before this House that the Government has ever given Mr. RINFRET.

any encouragement to agriculture, and that it has done anything to favor it in this country. The policy of protection did not succeed and could not succeed in creating a national market, and the price of all agricultural products is at the present time lower than it has been for more than 20 years. The agricultural depression is terrible, alarming. I shall permit myself to cite here the opinion of practical farmers of the Province of Ontario. I have myself translated the following resolution, passed last year by the Farmers' Institute in Toronto, to enquire into the causes of agricultural depression in the Province of Ontario, and the means of remedying it. It reads as follows:—

"That the agricultural industry of the Province is considerably depressed is a fact which will not be denied by any of those who at the present time have any interest in agriculture. Your committee is of opinion that the principal causes of the agricultural depression are, among others, the excessive taxation which has been imposed to meet the expense incurred for the establishment of the Provinces in the west of Canada, and to meet the interest on our debt, which is growing to alarming proportions: these taxes in a great number of cases being imposed in a manner contrary to the interests of this country.

"As to the proper remedy for any or all of these causes, opinion may differ to a wide extent, but your Committee believe that the following suggestions are along the line in which, at least, a measure of relief may be obtained: (1) Free entrance to the markets where our products have to be disposed of; and your Committee would strongly advise that in future all legislation in regard to import duties be in the direction of lowering those duties."

I will also read to the House the following petition to the Government, adopted by the Central Farmers' Institute of Ontario:—

"Whereas we consider the present high tariff is very injurious to the agricultural interests, making what we buy proportionately dearer than the products we sell; and whereas, the present high tariff has given rise to the combine system by which competition is, to a great extent, prevented; and whereas, the agricultural interest is suffering under a serious depression, and unable to bear the strain occasioned by the tariff and the combine system aforesaid, and as the agricultural interest represents the largest majority of the population; that, therefore, this, the Central Institute, do respectfully ask the Government to reduce the duty on articles of prime necessity to the farmer, such as iron, steel, coal, cottons, woollens, rubbers, sugars, corn and salt, to such an extent as to relieve the agriculturist of the unequal burden under which he is laboring."

The agriculturists say that the tariff is too high. I shall only instance some articles. Sugar costs 4 cents in England and 8 cents in Canada. difference in price represents the amount of the tax. Coal oil costs 8 cents in the United States and 20 cents in Canada. The tax upon liquors is so high that at present the contraband article is a veritable scourge all over the country. upon flour has just been raised to 75 cents a barrel. They are unjust, and constitute a real oppression of the poorer classes. The taxes on iron, cottons, woollen goods, imported under the name of protective duties are almost prohibitive duties, and constitute an intolerable burthen to the farmers and working class of the country. The honest and working class of the country. The honest consumer could never be made to understand that the Parliament of Canada has the right to force him by legislation to pay, for the convenience of another citizen of his country, from 25 to 30 per cent. dearer than he would otherwise do for every manufactured article that he buys. "Exchange is as much a natural right as property,

Any law which, without making any compensation, encroaches on the rights of exchange of any particular class of the population is a law contrary to justice and legally a robbery. I represent an agricultural county, Mr. Speaker, and I undertake in this House the defence of the electors who have put confidence in me; I make it my duty to protest with all my strength against an unjust, iniquitous policy, against the policy of favoritism, which the Government maintains in this country. Let us see what is now the position of Canada, of which I complain, and of which ninetenths of the electors have a right to complain? The public expenditure amounts to $8 per head of the population. The taxes to $6 per head, only for the Customs revenues and Excise duties, without counting $3 or $4 more per head, which are really paid upon articles manufactured in the coun-try. We have a public debt of about $50 per head of the population, which has increased, during eleven years only, by about $20 per head of the population. The public expenditure and the taxes have increased by about 60 per cent. upon the amount to which they had risen in 1878. The amount of taxes paid by the people only for the government of the country is enormous for Canada, because the Dominion taxes are not the only ones, the cost of maintaining the Local Governments, the municipal and school taxes, must be added. This constant increase of the public debt and of the burthens which weigh upon the people are serious affairs, when it is stated that the extent of our commerce is nearly the same at present as it was fifteen or twenty years ago, notwithstanding the enlarging of our territory and the growth of our population. Our commerce, which fifteen or twenty years ago was nearly $55 a head, is now only $40 per head of the population. This increase of taxation, in the face of the decrease of the incomes of the consumers, gives a full explanation of the large emigration of our fellow-countrymen to the United States. This emigration will continue, or rather it will go on growing from one year to another, as long as the Government of the country does not find the means either to diminish the taxes and public expenditure or to adopt any measure whatever which will put our population in a position to support the heavy burthens now imposed upon it. The hon. President of the Council, in the magnificent speech which he made in answer to the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) said, that our young people emigrated to the United States because they are carried away by their spirit of adventure, because they lose their heads by reading reviews which give a brilliant description of the North-West and West of the United States. It may be that some young people who emigrate may be carried away by a spirit of adventure; but this remark certainly does not apply to the fathers and mothers of families who emigrate with their children. The hon. who emigrate with their children. President of the Council does not share in the opinion of Mr. Gladstone upon this subject, who said one day that it is as difficult for a man to emigrate as to uproot an oak. I can never be made to believe, for my part, that it is from lightness of heart that heads of families decide upon selling their cattle, their furniture, and all their old family souvenirs by public auction. Not from caprice do people part with all these things. Neither is it from caprice that these people separate themselves from their friends at an age when it is always difficult to make new ones. What causes Canadians to emigrate is debt; it is poverty; it is because they can no longer find the means of living in the country. The hon. member for South Oxford gave a reason in laying before the House the sad situation of the farmers of Ontario. I regret to say that that of the farmers of Quebec is not much better. The commerce of Montreal is worse than it has been for 30 years, and agricultural products are lower in price than I can remember, for my part, to have ever seen them. In the face of this situa-tion, what does the Minister of Finance do? He imposes fresh taxes. He believes that this is the only remedy he can apply to the situation. claims that it is necessary, at the expense of the class which suffers, to enrich still further the manufacturing class, who are overflowing with riches. This new imposition of taxes is infamous under the circumstances. It is vexatious, Mr. Speaker, to It is an insult have raised the duty on flour. to the Province of Quebec and to the Maritime Provinces. There was, however, something better than that to be done. Never had a Minister of Finance a better opportunity to make himself popular all over Canada. The United States offer with one hand free trade with them, and with the other a commercial war — commercial war or a prohibitive tariff on our native products, that is, 30 per cent. on horses, fowls and animals of every description; 5 cents on eggs; 25 cents a bushel on potatoes; $4 a ton on hay; heavy duties of 25 to 30 per cent. on pease and beans—in a word, on all the agricultural products which we export to the United States. It is the ruin of our Canadian farmers. On the other hand, if the Minister of Finance had adopted reciprocity in native products, that is to say, the only thing which will at this time save us from the agricultural depression from which we are suffering, our farmers could have sold their products from 20 to 25 per cent. dearer than they can sell them now, and they could easily tide over the depression which has been produced at the present time. Commercial reciprocity would, besides, have the effect of considerably developing the working of our mines. We have in the country rich mines of iron, copper, asbestos, and of coal, which only await American capitalists, only reciprocity to bring riches to the country. Having to choose between these two alternatives, the Government preferred to yield to the importunities of the manufacturers, and to sacrifice the remainder of the population. They make a great mistake, and the people will hold them responsible for it at the next general election.

Mr. McKEEN. I do not often trespass on the time of the House, and at this very late hour of the night I must ask the indulgence of hon. members, while the observations that I shall make shall be as brief as the circumstances of the case permits. My attention has been called to a statement made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in his recent speech, which in justice to myself and the county I have the honor to represent I cannot allow to pass unnoticed. He said:

"My connection with the Mining Commission of Ontario brought forcibly under my consideration the great advantages which would result, not only to Ontario, but to all sections of the Dominion having mining resources, from free trade with the United States. For instance the only coal fields on the Atlantic coast from Florida to Greenland are in Nova Scotia. The consumption of bituminous coal in the New England States and in the Atlantic seaboard cities of the United States amounts to from 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 tons a year; and with free trade Nova Scotia could, in all these markets, undersell the bituminous coal brought from the interior of Pennsylvania and the paltry export trade of about 500,000 tons a year, which I think it is at present, could be increased indefinitely. Would that not confer great advantages on Nova Scotia?"

Now, Sir, while holding the highest respect for the hon. gentleman, and for the position which he occupies in church and state, I may be pardoned if I presume to venture the suggestion that the hon. gentleman has not given this important subject the attention which it deserves, and that possibly his opinions may be influenced more by political prejudices than with a view to any advancement of the mining industry. The hon member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in 1878, when speaking on this subject, stated from his place in the House as follows:—

"The Minister of Public Works read them a telegram a few minutes ago stating that the sale of Nova Scotia coal in Montreal this year was to exceed that of last year by 10,000 tons, and that with the remission of canal tolls, and other favorable circumstances, had some hopes of selling 20,000 tons more further west. For the purpose then of conferring that degree of benefit on the Nova Scotia mine owners, they were to have 266,432 tons of anthracite imported into Ontario, which could not be replaced by any other, and a great part of the 321,000 tons of bituminous coal brought into that Province taxed 50 cents a ton. This sacrifice was to be inflicted in order to sell not more than 50,000 tons more of Nova Scotia coal. Any policy more absurd could scarcely be conceived."

And again:

"The tariff was a two-edged sword which cut in every direction to the detriment of Canadian interests. He saw no reason for anticipating a rise in the price of coal in the United States, but rather a decrease. In fact there had been a heavy decrease during the last four or five months and this duty stepped in to deprive the Canadian consumer of all benefit he would otherwise have derived from that decrease. Of all the absurd features of this tariff, the imposition of the duty on coal, and especially on anthracite, was the most absurd."

Speaking again on this subject in 1889 the hon. member is reported in Hansard to have said:

"However, I crave permission at the outset to make a few remarks in reply to the observations of the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKeen) with respect to the coal duty. That hon, gentleman informed us that some 15,000 or 20,000 people derived their subsistence directly or indirectly from the business of mining coal in Nova Scotia. That business, I believe, is confined to three counties in that Province, and the duty designed to protect fifteen or twenty thousand people in three counties in Nova Scotia is made to bear with extreme severity upon many important manufacturing industries, and upon the interests of the general public in the Dominion at large. Our importations last year of coal amounted to 1,325,000 tons, the value of which was $3,644,000, and upon the whole of this vast amount of coal imported a duty was exacted for the benefit of a portion of the population of three counties in one of the Provinces of this Dominion. Now, Sir, the imposition of that duty upon coal has a direct tendency to render unsatisfactory any attempts at engaging in iron manufacture in this country. Coal is a raw material, and from coal is produced the coke which it is necessary to use in the reduction of iron ore into pig iron; yet the Government by imposing a duty upon coal and upon coke, a product of coal, used in the manufacture of iron, have almost if not entirely neutralised the protection it affords, by a duty upon pig iron and by bounties. I hold, Sir, that coal is a raw material, and that the imposition of a duty upon it bears unjustly upon the whole population of this Dominion who require to use coal as fuel, and with unjust and undue severity upon the iron interest and the other industries in this Dominion where coal is used either for the conversion of ores into metal or as fuel for propelling machinery. I repeat that I consider this an impolitio and an unjust tax."

Mr. McKeen.

Now, Sir, with such evidences of hostility as these utterances indicate, it is not surprising that the miners of this country view with some suspicion any professions of interest that the hon. gentleman may make with a view of advancing our coal industries. Had his advice, and the advice of the party opposite of which he is a prominent member, been taken, the collieries which to-day are affording employment to thousands of industrious and honest miners, and which are giving an impetus to business throughout the whole of that section of our country, would to-day be practically closed, and would, I may say, have ceased to exist. Those who are most interested in the success of our mining industry believe that reciprocity in coal would be most disastrous to us. We contend that without protection we could not hold the markets of the St. Lawrence, but with protection our trade has increased from 80,000 tons in 1878, to somewhere about 680,000 tons, in 1888. In proof of this we point to the quantities of American coal which are to-day being brought into Montreal. Our shipments to that city last year fell off 50,000 tons or thereabouts, and why? Because the opening of a new railway leading by Massena Springs, and connecting with the Grand Trunk Railway, afforded the means of supplying that company, of replacing with some 50 or 60 thousand tons of American coal, the coal which they had hitherto obtained by vessel from Nova Scotia. This shrinkage in our trade is due entirely to American competition. The fact of our having for the last tenor fifteen years met with the attempted competition of the American coal owners in the markets of Montreal, proves that without this protection our markets there would be practically closed. Now, Sir, assuming that we shall to a large extent lose these valuable and to us important markets, the next question is, are we going to have compensating markets in the United States? In discussing this question in this House two years ago I took the ground that it was impossible, owing to the changed conditions of trade, and owing to the different channels in which the coal trade of the United States is now running, ever to obtain the foothold which we had during the few years subsequent to the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty. In support of that contention, I showed that for six years following the abrogation of that treaty we sent to the United States, under a duty of $1.25 per ton, 1,562,000 tons, or an annual average of 262,230 tons. I further showed that for the six years preceding 1888 our exports to that country, under a duty of only 75 cents a ton, had fallen to some 85,000 tons annually, one-half of which was culm coal, valued only at from 30 to 40 cents a ton. Last year, if my information is correct, we sent to the United States 5,465 tons of round coal and 74,000 tons of culm coal, the latter realising to the producer only 30 cents a ton. So that these markets have been almost entirely wrested from us. I do not ask the House to accept my uncorroborated opinion on this matter. It is well known that some of our largest collieries are controlled by gentlemen residing in the United States, who, having invested their capital in them, have for years watched the course of the coal trade. The colliery I am connected with is owned by myself and three American gentlemen, one living at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, another in Boston, and the third in Washington. These gentlemen, from their long experience in the trade, ought to be able to judge what the possibilities are of our sharing in the United States trade if we had unrestricted reciprocity; and they have unhesitatingly averred that the coal trade as it now exists is infinitely better for their interests than any system of unrestricted reciprocity that could be arranged. These gentlemen speak from a non-partisan standpoint; but I will give also the evidence of a gentleman in New York, whose means are more largely invested in the coal mines of Nova Scotia than those of any other gentleman on this side of the Atlantic. This gentleman is capable, from his business experience, the New England trade, and his interest in the collieries of Nova Scotia, to give an opinion that should merit the confidence of every hon. gentleman in this House, and with the permission of the House I will read a few extracts from a letter written by him in January last. He says:

"At the present quotations for American coals in Boston, $3.10 to $3.20 per ton of 2,240 lbs., the Pictou coals could not compete there. Acadia is now selling at $2.50, and Vale and Albion at $2.25 f. o. b. at Pictou. Out of this, the company pays the Intercolonial Railway freight from the mines to Pictou.

"We will suppose, however, the American duty removed, and that for shipment to the United States the coal is sold for $2 per ton at Pictou. To deliver it in Boston there must be added freight, which will average at least $1.60 per ton, and insurance, &c., five cents more, making a total of $3.65 against $3.10 and $3.20 for American coal, which latter, for manufacturing and locomotive uses, is worth some fifty cents per ton more than Nova Scotia coals, except, possibly, Acadia, which, as we can sell all produced during the shipping season at $2.50, would not be exported at $2.

"Unless, therefore, the prices of American coals should advance in Boston to $4 per ton, no Pictou coals of any consequence could be sold there, and the same applies to the entire New England coast, for the freights to Boston are not in excess of those to other points—in fact, rather less.

"During the Reciprocity Treaty, Cumberland coal shipped at Baltimore, sold in Boston at from $4 to $5 per ton. The Pocahontas and Kanawha coals from West Virginia, shipped from Norfolk and Newport mines, at the entrance to the Chesapeake Bay, were not then in the market. The railways now transporting them have been completed within the past ten years. Also the Clearfield Coal Field, served by the Pennsylvania Railroad, has since been developed, and is considered the equal of the old Cumberland. the old Cumberland.

"These four are not only produced by rival coal companies, but are also brought to tidewater by competing railways, so that any increase in the shipping prices f.o.b. at points of delivery, is most improbable. Moreover, many of these coals lie most favorably for cheap mining, the veins being almost flat, above water level in the mountain sides, and requiring no expensive haulage, no pumning for drainage nor much artificial ventilation. pumping for drainage, nor much artificial ventilation.

"The best Virginia coals are produced, I believe, at about 60 cents per ton, f.o.b. cars at the railway connections, and the Cumberland and Clearfield for about 80 cents and they thus start with a great advantage over the Nova Scotia coals, which, from their geological position, are much more expensive to mine.

"The same general condition for cheap production exist in Western Pennsylvania, where are found the coals that are brought to Montreal by the new Massena Springs connection of the Grand Trunk Railway.

connection of the Grand Trunk Railway.

"The foregoing refers to Pictou. Cumberland County is more advantageously placed with reference to freights to New England, having ports upon the Bay of Fundy, but I doubt if the difference would exceed 30 cents per ton, nor can I see, at the rates spoken of for transportation of vessels by the new ship railway, that Pictou will benefit at all by its construction. From Cape Breton to New England the freights would be about the same as from Pictou, and the Cape Breton coals can be mined and put f.o.b. much cheaper than those of Pictou, but their value in the market is not so great, except possibly, Old Sydney for domestic use (see Montreal quotations) and this would about equalise the position. 891

"There is no doubt that if the conditions of the bituminous coal trade were the same now as during the existence of the Reciprocity Treaty, the removal of the duty would greatly increase the consumption of Nova Scotia coals in New England. Even with the duty on and the other conditions unchanged, much more of the trade would have been retained. But in addition to the introduction of the new coals before mentioned, the Westmoreland, Pennsylvania coals have entirely superseded the Pictou and Cape Breton coals for gas making. They have a much higher percentage of gas, are almost entirely devoid of sulphur, and the price, combined with their superiority, together with English coals of the same quality, coming in ballast, will retain the market in future. During reciprocity, as much as 40,000 tons per annum of Albion were sent to the Boston Gas Company alone, and large quantities of Cape Breton to the New York gas companies and to small cities in New England."

The impression made by these facts remain in the public mind, but the changes which have gradually taken place in the circumstances are not known, and hence delusion exists respecting the effect that the removal of the duty here would produce. I do not mean to say that no increase of coal shipments would ensue, but the increase would not be material or at all commensurate with the loss which would result from the repeal of the Canadian duty. There is one direction in which the removal of the American duty would unqualifieldy benefit Cumberland County, and incidentally Pictou, and that would be the development of coal trade by rail through the interior towns of Maine. But for this probable development, I do not see any advantage which would accrue from the removal of the duty. He goes on to say :

You may be quite sure, however, that the repeal of United States duty by the present Administration will not be brought about by any concession that Canada may offer, but solely and simply by home agitation and changing opinions on the question of free raw materials, without reference to reciprocal interests and wholly with a view to the benefit of the United States."

With the permission of the House I will quote a few extracts from the evidence of another gentleman who is thoroughly well posted on this subject, and whose testimony, I think, should carry weight with every impartial person who takes an interest in this matter. He took the ground in giving his evidence before the commission, in Boston:

"That the removal of the duty here from Nova Scotia coals would not increase our imports over 30 to 50 thousand tons per annum, and the removal of duty on all coals would admit 100 to 200 thousand tons from England, chiefly gas coals. This upon the assumption that the American companies bringing domestic coals to tide water should continue present freight tariffs, or, in other words, removal of the duty will simply compel American coal railroad companies to reduce their rates. My testimony was not reported by the newspapers, but the Journal and Advertiser gave me very complimentary editorials. editorials.

"I stated that there is no coal in Nova Scotia that can "I stated that there is no coal in Nova Scotia that can be used here for iron purposes, except Acadia, and that being a superior house coal, the limited product of the mine finds ready local sales, at prices that shut it out from here, free of duty. The fact is that the Norfolk and Western Railroad, with their Pocahontas coals, and Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, with Kanawha coals, will not permit foreign steam coal to come in here. They made heavy contracts in 1888 and 1889 at $3.10 to $3.20 per gross ton delivered here into shed, and in some cases above three bridges, from March to March covering winter ocean freights.

"Their position is to sell their coal—the only point being to get the trade at any figure that will secure it. Both of the above companies have sold 400,000 tons (each) east of Cape Cod, during the past year. If the duty is removed here, the Dominion Government will doubtless remove it on American coal going into Canada, and it will seriously affect your Canadian trade."

We beg to differ with this gentleman in that respect. This is the testimony of two gentlemen who are as competent to judge of the position of our trade with the United States and other countries, and the conditions which govern it, and all the possibilities which may arise from reciprocal trade with the American people, as is any hon. gentleman in this House, who has ventured to give an expression of opinion on this subject. It is most unfortunate that hon. gentlemen, without properly informing themselves on this question, should hazard opinions that might be taken hold of and be disastrous to a prosperous and important industry. I would further state that while admitting that our own prospects with regard to our trade have largely improved within the past few years, they are not yet what we would like them to be. Owing to our very isolated position, particularly in Cape Breton, during the winter months, we have a great deal of idle time, and our mines to a certain extent are closed; yet, if I can judge from newspaper reports, our miners, in their circumstances, can favorably compare with those of that very much favored country to the south, which has been held up to us as being the most prosperous on the face of the earth. I have no doubt that had the hon. gentleman seen accounts from the mines of Nova Scotia as gloomy as those we have had of the mines of Pennsylvania, he would have taken occasion to bring this wretched and despondent condition of affairs before the notice of this House, but this state of things which exists in Pennsylvania may have escaped his notice. At any rate he made no allusion to it. With the permission of the House I will read a few extracts from the newspaper reports, which will perhaps open the eyes of some hon, gentlemen present, as to the condition of trade in that country, which we are told is going to open up such immense avenues for our surplus mine products:

helping the poor. Mr. Fellows vigorously denounced the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company for its neglect of its starving miners. He said that corpo-ration was responsible for most of the destitution in and about this city, and it had not contributed one cent for the relief of its workmen. It was notorious, he asserted, that this company had crowded its mines with laborers, and opened more collieries than were necessary for the and opened more collieries than were necessary for the purpose of cutting down wages by glutting the labor market. Now, when the mines are idle and the men starying, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western magnates turned a deaf ear to their cry of distress. He favored the doubling of the poor tax so that the company would be compelled to bear its share of the burden it had imposed on the community by impoverishing the great army of miners and laborers who have been reduced to starvation. Mr. Thomas, of the committee, said he had personally investigated the condition of the poor and found it absolutely appalling. The Poor Board voted $500 for immediate supplies, and will co-operate with the Relief Committee. In the meantime the great coal corporations are expected to do something for their starving workmen."

I have read these extracts in order to show that, poor as our country may be, it is not so bad as the condition of a large body of miners who are working under the same circumstances and in the same avocation as the miners in our own country. Though the condition of our miners is not what I would desire it to be, I am thankful to say that it does not at all compare with the condition of those men in the United States. Our miners are independent, and, as far as I can judge, live comfortably. In a conversation I had a short time ago with a gentleman who holds an important position in the Knights of Labor, and who is well known to many members present, I gathered from him that he had the opinion that the condition of the miners in the United States was not to be compared to anything in England or in Nova Scotia, or to anything outside of the condition of those who work as condemned convicts in the mines of Siberia. There is the country which we are asked avenues for our surplus mine products:

"Scranton, Pa., 25th.—A shadow blacker than anthracite is extending its phantasmal proportions through all the coal regions of Pennsylvania. It is the shadow of want and suffering, and its baleful influence is felt in hundreds of homes throughout the mining valleys of the Keystone State. Mr. B. G. Morgan, of Hyde Park, a prominent member of the Relief Committee, says that the destitution is beyond description. He tells of a man who went to a storekeeper and begged to be trusted for a sack of flour. The storekeeper said he could not afford to give any more 'trust.' When the man was going away he seized and carrier as a few minutes later and hastened to the man's home. There he saw a sight which touched him to the heart. The sack of flour lay open on the floor and the poor man's children were sitting around it helping themselves to its contents with spoons. Stories of distress all along the mining hamlets of the region are numerous and western Company; the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, and the Pennsylvania Coal Company, whose men are starving in the very shadows of the silent coal breakars, should come to the rescue at none and do something substantial. These coal companies, as well as others, are responsible for the overcrowding of this region with labor and the glutting of the market with anthracite. They cannot be legally held for the misery they have helped to cause. A month's pay would be but a small portion of the wealth the coal kings have derived from these valleys, where wealth accumulates and men and western gorn the coal companies to relieve the necessifies of the coal comp to open our markets to, the country which we are quish our claims, and we purpose to bring this matter up again, and we hope the Government will be in a position to grant an increased duty. If not now, we hope that, at the next Session, the Government will be able to grant us this protection which is most important for this industry.

Mr. WATSON. How much?

Mr. McKEEN. That we shall leave to the discretion of the Government, but we expect to get an in-We are thankful for what has been done. We appreciate it. We appreciate the coal policy of the Government, in the face of the strongest opposition of gentlemen on the other side, but we feel that, under changed conditions, the protection is not enough for our present trade. As I stated before, we are subject to inconveniences in carrying on our trade which do not exist in other places. The long winters shut us out from navigation, but I am glad to see that, through the generosity of the Government, we are likely to have access to an open winter port, which will certainly give an impulse to our coal trade. At present we have no open port in the winter, but with the extension of the Louisburg railway, which we hope for from the Government, we have every reason to believe that, before another year goes by, we shall have a winter port and shall be able to ship our coal at any time of the year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 2nd April, 1890.

THE INTERPRETATION ACT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 130) to amend the Interpreta-tion Act. He said: With the permission of the House, I will read the Bill, which is as follows:-

I. Section 7 of the Interpretation Act, chapter one of the Revised Statutes, is hereby amended by adding the following paragraphs thereto:

'58. The repeal of any Act, or part of an Act, shall not be deemed to be or to involve a declaration that such Act, or the part thereof so repealed, was, or was considered by Parliament to have been, previously in force.

'59. The amendment of any Act shall not be deemed to be or to involve a declaration that the law under such Act was, or was considered by Parliament to have been, different from the law as it has become under such Act as so amended. so amended.

"60. The repeal or amendment of any Act shall not be deemed to be or to involve any declaration whatsoever as to the previous state of the law.

"61. Parliament shall not, by re-enacting an Act, or part of an Act, or by revising, consolidating or amending the same, be deemed to have adopted the construction which may, by judicial decision or otherwise, have been placed upon the language used in such Act, or upon similar language."

Mr. MITCHELL. As it would require a Philadelphia lawyer to understand the meaning of what the hon. gentleman has read, perhaps he will make a further statement.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As an explanation has been asked, I may be permitted to add that, occasionally, when the Government amends an Act in order to make it plainer, and to remove doubts on the subject, the amending Act is liable to be construed as having changed the law, and questions which have arisen under the law as it originally stood are adjudicated on under the amending Act. The courts are inclined to take the view that the law must have been changed from what it was, or else Parliament would not have passed the amendment; whereas, in point of fact, the object of Parliament may have been to make the original law more clear.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ST. ROCH'S TRAVERSE LIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. DESSAINT asked, Whether Odilon Pelletier is keeper of a telegraphic or marine signal station built on the mainland opposite St. Roch's Traverse? Does he receive from the Marine Department any salary for making signals? And what salary?

Mr. TUPPER. A signal station has been established for some years opposite St. Roch's Traverse, and Odilon Pelletier is in charge. He receives no salary from the Marine Department for making signals, but is paid by fees for messages sent.

STONY MOUNTAIN PENITENTIARY.

Mr. LAVERGNE asked, 1st. Whether any report was made by the warden to the inspector, of evidence under oath, as to an offence committed by convict No. 41 in Stony Mountain Penitentiary, with a view to corporal punishment? 2nd. If so, when? 3rd. Whether any report was made by the warden to the inspector as to the infliction of corporal punishment on convict No. 41, and if so, when?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The report referred to in the first branch of this question was received about the 18th of December last. I may add for the hon, gentleman's information, that the recommendation made in that report for corporal punishment, has not been approved. No report has been received but one, to the effect that corporal punishment was used.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT—EXTRA CLERKS.

Mr. TURCOT asked, 1. Since when have the supernumerary clerks of the Technical Branch of the Department of the Interior worked until five p.m.? 2. What are the office hours for supernumerary clerks, under the Civil Service Act? 3. What are the names of the supernumerary clerks of that branch; at what date did they enter the service; what is their work and salary? 4. Is the accumulation of work in that branch such as to compel the said employés, for a considerable time yet to come, to work for an extra hour each day? How much has such extra work cost the Department up to date?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I. The clerks in all the branches of the Department of the Interior have worked until five p.m. since the commencement of the Session of Parliament. There are many of them whose duties have made it necessary for them to work not only until five p.m., but occasionally much later. 2. The Civil Service Act prescribes no hours for clerks, either temporary or perma-That matter is regulated by Order in Council, which gives to heads and deputy-heads of Departments power to call for the attendance of all or any of the clerks in their Departments at any hours the public service may require. 3. This information, if wanted, should be moved for in the usual way. 4. The work of the Department will require the attendance of the clerks as at present until the close of the Session, and perhaps longer; work done within the hours at present prescribed does not cost anything in addition to the salaries of the clerks.

BLISS' LETTER-BOX.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to adopt Bliss' patent letter box?

Mr. HAGGART. The box described by the hon, gentleman has been received by the Department, and sent to the person who manufactures these articles, to report upon it. There has been no report as yet received on the subject.

NEXT CENSUS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, Whether the Government intend to cause the number of persons actually present in the Dominion, at the time of taking the census, to be recorded as well as those enumerated under the de jure system?

Mr. CARLING. It is the intention to take the next census in accordance with the de jure system, and as much care will be taken as possible to obtain accuracy.

VOTERS' LISTS-RETURNS.

Mr. BARRON asked, Have the revising officers throughout the Dominion, all of them, made return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery at Ottawa, of duplicate copies of the voters' lists finally revised and certified, within their respective electoral districts, for the year 1889, in accordance with the statute in that behalf? If not, for what electoral districts, if any, has the duplicate copy of the voters' list been received by the said clerk subsequent to the 31st December, 1889? For what electoral district, if any, has the duplicate copy of voters' list for 1889 not yet been received?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. According to the information I have received from the Queen's Printer and from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, I have a list here of the revised lists which have been forwarded, for the year 1889, by the revising officers in all the electoral districts. They have all been forwarded in time, with the exception of twelve. These are: six in the Province of Ontario, namely: Brockville, Essex South, Essex North, Frontenac, Leeds and Grenville South, Leeds South. In the Province of Quebec, four: Iberville, Maskinongé, St. Johns and the town of Sherbrooke. In the Province of British Columbia, one: New West-Mr. Turcor.

minster. The list of this district was received, but minus one polling division. In the Province of Manitoba, one: Marquette, making a total of twelve.

I. C. R.—FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) asked, What rate of freight is charged over the Intercolonial Railway on pig iron from Londonderry to Montreal?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. $2.46 per ton; that is to say, the distance from Londonderry to Chaudière is 598 miles and the $2.46 per ton yields a fraction over four-tenths of a cent per ton per mile.

QUEEN'S WHARF, ANNAPOLIS.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis) asked, Does the Dominion Government, or the Government of Nova Scotia control the remains of the Queen's wharf, its site and approaches, on the Garrison Ground at Annapolis Royal, Nova Scotia?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The remains of the Queen's wharf on the Garrison Ground at Annapolis Royal, N.S., are under the control of the Dominion Government.

BOUNTY ON PIG IRON.

Mr. FOSTER moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide by law that a bounty of two dollars per ton be paid on all pig iron manufactured in Canada from Canadian ore between the first day of July, 1892, and the thirtieth day of June, 1897, inclusive.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether any, and what bounties have been paid on iron in the past? I believe a law was introduced some years ago for a bounty, and I want to know whether there has been any paid.

Mr. FOSTER. The total amount or the rate?

Mr. MITCHELL. The rate.

Mr. FOSTER. The rate at present paid is $1. Previous to this year it was $1.50.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would the hon. gentleman state the total amount that has been paid?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the total amount here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I presume, from the wording of the resolution, that the present duty expires on the 1st of July, 1892.

Mr. FOSTER. It does.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And it is now proposed to fix a seven years period. I think that is very objectionable.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, my hon. friend has misapprehended the resolution. The $2 per ton is not proposed to date from this year, but from the date of the expiry of the present term.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am aware of that. We are paying a very considerable duty at present; and, although I shall not discuss that now, it appears to me a very objectionable practice for one Parliament to tie up the hands of its successors for seven years. The resolution ought to be so worded as not to extend the term beyond the life of one Parliament. We have done such things, but they are very objectionable.

Motion agreed to.

DUTY ON SEED CORN.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. A gentleman some time ago purchased a car-load of corn for seed purposes, which will be delivered in a few days. He writes to me to ascertain whether under the new tariff it will be brought in free.

Mr. BOWELL. It will if it comes under the description of item 254 in schedule C, which has as full effect and force now as it will have after it is sanctioned by the House. The entries made between this time and the final passage of the tariff require to have written across their face, "Subject to amendment," so that in case the tariff, as it stands, should not become law, they would have to pay duty.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What evidence is required to show that the corn is to be used for seed purposes?

Mr. BOWELL. That is a matter of departmental regulations, which will be found among the instructions issued to collectors. Item 254 is as follows:—

"Indian corn of the varieties known as 'Southern Dent corn' (Mammoth Southern Sweet) and 'Western Dent corn' (Golden Beauty), when imported to be sown for ensilage, and for no other purpose."

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster, for second reading of Resolutions reported from Committee of Ways and Means, and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This House has been in Session about two months and a-half, and I think it is a subject of regret to the members generally that such an important measure, affecting the financial policy of the country, has been left to this late hour for discussion. We were under the impression, from the information generally received, that the Government were considering some changes more important in principle than those involved in the resolutions before the House, and that in consequence they required a length of time to mature their conclusions. But when the tariff was submitted by the hon. Minister of Finance, I think the impression generally was that it might have been arranged in a very short time by that hon, gentleman and the hon. Minister of Customs. I listened with great interest to the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance, and I am willing to congratulate him on the very plain, business-like statement he made; but I am sorry to say that I cannot congratulate him on the manner in which his tariff was explained. I think the hon, gentleman should have given this House much more information in detail than he laid before us. The changes which have been made generally are of a much more important character than they appear at the first glance. The proposals have been so divided and cut up, one way and another, that it is almost impossible for any business man in this House to judge of the tariff as a whole and arrive at a correct conclusion as to its operation on the country. I think, from what I have been able to gain from my own observations of it, as well as from what I have learned from other hon. gentlemen who have bestowed their attention upon it, that these tariff proposals will take at least half a million dollars out of the taxpayers of this country. Of course this is merely an estimate, necessarily made in a hasty manner. I listened to the hon. Minister of Finance with great pleasure when he informed the House that the finances of the country were in a prosperous condition. The hon gentleman may be well assured that any statement of that kind emanating from the Finance Minister will always find a hearty response from this side of the House. Every one interested in the welfare of this country, be he on the Government side or on the Opposition side, must naturally feel a great interest in maintaining our public credit, and, therefore, we must all feel, when told that the financial exhibit of last year shows a surplus of over a million and a-half, that it is a very satisfactory statement to go to the public. It is highly important that the credit of the country should be maintained. We know that the money market of the world is very sensitive, and nothing is better calculated to sustain the credit of the country there than the fact that we have been making fair progress, and that our financial balance is on the right side. But, Sir, while congratulating the hon. gentleman to that extent-and I am willing to accord to him all the credit I can—I cannot follow the hon. gentleman in his congratulation with regard to the condition of the country under the administration of the Government for the past few years. I do not think the hon. gentleman and his colleagues can find much cause for congratulation in the financial operations of the Government during the past five or six years. In 1883-84 they had a deficit of \$2,240,000, in 1884-85 they had another deficit of \$5,834,000, and in 1885-86 they had another of \$810,000; or a total deficiency in those three years of \$8,884,000. In the following year, 1886-87, there was a surplus of \$97,000, in 1887-88 another surplus of \$1,865,000, and in 1888-89 another surplus of \$1,800,000; or a total surplus in the three years of \$3,762,000, which, deducted from the deficiencies of the previous three years, would show a net deficiency of \$5,122,000 for these six years. Now, if such is the case, as is proved by the returns before this House, I do not think the Government are in a position to throw across the House the statement which they are very frequently in the habit of doing, that the Government of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was a Government of deficits all the time it was in The Government, finding these deficiencies accumulating from 1885 to 1886, were brought face to face with their actual condition, and it was then that the hon. Finance Minister of that day, the present High Commissioner, increased the duty on iron. We all remember the eloquence with which he introduced those resolutions to this House-how he pointed out that before many years elapsed we should have iron blasts going from one end of the country to the other, that iron would in no way increase in value, that the native ore would be smelted by native coal and native industry, and that the policy he was then pursuing was calculated to greatly develop those great mineral resources which we know this country possesses. But, up to the present time, what have we seen? We have one or two weakly manufactories. We have one, notably, in Nova Scotia, which has been fostered by the Government with a large bounty and with cheap coal, which is hauled over the Intercolonial Railway at a rate much less than that charged to any other industry in Nova Scotia; and we know that to-day the product of that manufactory is brought to Montreal over the Intercolonial Railway at a rate far below that of other freight coming over the same railway; and yet, with all these advantages, this industry in the Province of Nova Scotia is in such a position to-day that the hon. Finance Minister has just intimated his intention of asking this House to increase the bounty which has been previously paid to that company. Now, if, after so many years, this company, which was considered to be most favorably situated, has not been able to show a successful balance sheet, but asks this Government to give a further bounty such as that proposed by the Minister of Finance to-day, the country will arrive at the conclusion that these industries are not indigenous to it, and that they are fostered at too great expense to the Although we would be glad, and no one more than I, to see this or any other industry of a similar character in a prosperous condition on its own merits, few would be willing to agree to the principle that they are to be sustained and fostered, as this industry is, solely by the system in existence. When this Government found themselves face to face with a deficiency, the Minister of Finance of that day asked this House to consider the whole question of the duty on iron. Those who were in the House at the time are familiar with the discussion which then took place. We know that the duty on iron was raised from $17\frac{1}{2}$ to about 65 and, in some cases, 75 per cent., and that in consequence the Government have been able to take out of the consumers of that article about \$1,250,000. This article coming into use in almost every branch of industry, there is, perhaps, no tax which could be imposed that would be of a more general character. I admit that if we have to raise revenue on any article, a fair revenue on iron might be more fairly raised than on many other articles, because it is used by a large portion of the people, but under that system the Government imposed more than a revenue tax. But this was not sufficient. They found, with this deficiency of \$5,000,000 staring them in the face, that they had to look in other directions and see where more taxes could be levied, and, therefore, the Government changed the duty on sugar from the combined specific and ad valorem system to the polariscopic system. I do not wish to be understood as saying one word against the polariscopic system which is now in operation. I was one of those who recommended it, and I believe that, if properly administered, it would prevent the scandals and irregularities which were found in many of the Custom houses in this country, but I was not prepared for the application of that principle to the extent to which the Government applies it. That principle, if applied as it might have been, if the wants of the Government had not been so pressing, might have taken not more than the same duty on sugar which was received under the combined specific and ad valorem tariff; but the Government seized the occasion to apply a percentage much higher than we ever supposed they would apply, under the operation of which they received about \$500,000 more. That was a measure which, perhaps, was not thoroughly understood by the business men of this House, because it was a principle which could only be understood by that class of people who are familiar with that class of business. Therefore, when I mentioned it, a year ago, hon. members were surprised somewhat that their attention had not been drawn at an earlier date to this increased taxation. These taxes, combined with the tariff now before the House, are, no doubt, impairing the resources the industrial classes of this country. We have seen it established here, as a fact that has not been contradicted, that the Government have taken sixty millions of revenue out of the country more than was required for the ordinary That has gone directly services of the country. into the treasury, but we have seen that, by the operation of the protective system, that is only a small portion of what the consumers have to pay. Nearly as much more goes into the hands of the favored classes, nearly as much more is distributed among the combines and the manufacturers, in order to make a few millionaires while leaving hundreds of thousands who are living from hand to mouth, and as many more hundreds of thousands who are hardly able to pay their way. The people of this country have been industrious and honest and economical enough, but, with all these advantages in their favor, with a fine climate, with a fine soil, with a good country to live in, the fact remains that the industrial classes of this country have not made that permanent headway which they had a right to expect. The farmer will they had a right to expect. say: I work as hard as ever I did, I spend as little money as ever I did, I rise early, and go to bed late, and why, at the end of ten years, do I find myself in a worse position than I was in ten years ago? He does not realise the fact that this tariff is sapping his He does not see, that in his daily resources. occupation there is a process going on which takes from him the hard earnings of his daily toil, but this man is taught to believe—particularly if he is a friend of the Administration-that any such system with which such great promises were connected could have no such effect upon his condition. What is the fact we have to meet to-day? We have been told, and I am very sorry to hear it, by reliable and responsible men in this House and out of it, that the condition of the farmers in this country, and notably in the west, is not satisfactory. I am extremely sorry to hear that. I regret to hear complaints of that kind coming from any part of the Dominion, because, if the farming interest is not in a flourishing condition, the business ramifications of this country—whether they refer to the banking business, or the retail shop, or any other business-must be affected, directly or indirectly, by the position of the farmers. In my own Province of Nova Scotia, I am happy to be able to believe that, with that variety of resources we possess-with our coal and fishing industries, with our agriculture and our fruits, with our lumber and our shipping industries, we are able to make up a general average which leaves us, perhaps, in a better condition than the Provinces in the West. I was rather startled the other day to hear an observation which fell from a prominent man who is connected with the financial institutions of the country and is well acquainted with the condition of the various Provinces. He said that he wished that the farmers and the business men in the West were in as sound a condition as those in the Maritime Provinces. If that is the condition of affairs, it is shown conclusively that the condition of the farmers in western Canada is not satisfactory, and that much which has been stated in regard to that position must be true. The drain of these people has been, as I have shown, continuous and increasing under the operation of the National Policy. This National Policy was established by the Conservative party with four objects. first object was to increase our trade with Great Britain, the second object was to reduce our trade with the United States, the third object was to secure a reciprocity treaty, and the fourth was to create a home market for the products of the country and secure high prices for the farmers' products. The question naturally arises, whether the National Policy has accomplished any one of these designs. Can any hon, member on the other side of the House point to the accomplishment of any one of the designs for which the National Policy was advocated and established? I remember in 1878 being on the other side of the House, listening to the arguments of the present leader of the Government and the present High Commissioner in England, when they pointed out that under a change of Government with the introduction of a National Policy, we should have in this country all the advantages which they claimed under these four conditions. They said that they would make the condition of the farmers' interests better, because they would build up manufacturing industries which would consume the products of the land, and so the products of the farmers would be sold at higher prices. The answer to that was given by the President of the Council only a few days ago. The President of the Council told us that it was impossible for any fiscal regulations of a Government to affect the products of the country, to increase or to lower their price. He made an admission at that time which, I think, was involuntary, like another admission which he made in regard to the Reciprocity Treaty. However, the hon. gentleman admitted the contention of the Liberal party in 1878, that no action of this Government or of Parliament could affect the value of an article which was affected entirely by its value in other markets. I congratulate the hon. gentleman, as a member of the Government, on having at last arrived at such a sound conclusion. Doubt-less we shall not hear any more of the previous contention, because now, when prices are lower, it does not suit the Conservative orators to propound a doctrine such as that under which they managed to gain the confidence of the farming community in 1878. I have said that the National Policy was introduced, in the first place, to increase our trade with Great Britain. What has been the result? Our exports to Great Britain in 1878 amounted to \$45,941,539. Ten years after that time, in 1889, our exports to Great Britain only amounted to \$38,105,126, or a falling off of \$7,836,413. Then it was intended to increase our trade with Great Britain. the Government were moved by patriotic fervor to take our trade away from the Americans, because they said we could do without them. And from that moment we have been reaping the fruits of the position which the Conservative party took on that occasion, by the feeling towards us in the United States. Then take, for the same time, the exports to the United States. In 1878 they amounted to \$25,244,898; in 1889, ten years later, they reached \$43,522,404, or an increase of \$18,277,505, showing that while our exports to Great Britain fell \$7,836,413, they increased during the same time to the United States to \$18,277,505. Therefore, the operation of this tariff, which, it was said, would have directly the opposite effect, has proved the contention which had been taken by members on this side of the House, that our natural trade being with our neighbors to the south of us, no financial or fiscal regulations, no matter how absurd or stringent they might be, would prevent that flow of intercourse across the line between two peoples requiring the exchange of each other's products. Then, again, take our aggregate trade with each country. In 1878 our aggregate trade with Great Britain was \$83,372,719; in 1889 it was \$80,422,513, showing a falling off of \$2,950,000. Then take our trade with the United States during the same period. In 1878 our aggregate trade amounted to \$73,876,437; in 1889 it was \$94,059,844, showing an increase of \$20,183,407, and showing here, also, that while our aggregate trade with England fell off nearly three million dollars, our aggregate trade with the United States increased over twenty million dollars. will prove conclusively to the framers of that policy that whatever tariff regulations they may introduce to this House, they cannot prevent the natural flow of commerce from one country to another. Then, again, we were told that if we introduced the National Policy and assumed an independent attitude towards the people of the United States, they would come down on their knees to us, they would be the first to offer negotiations for a renewal of the treaty. That was the doctrine propounded from day to day by the Conservative party in this House; that was the doctrine which was inculcated through the press and on the platform of every political gathering from one end of the country to the other. There was a very strong feeling throughout this country, generally, in favor of a renewal of that treaty. We had had experience of its benefits for twelve years before, and our people, not only in the Maritime Provinces, but throughout the West as well, had found that by opening up the markets of the United States for our natural products, we were having the benefit of customers at our very Under those circumstances, it was not unnatural that those people who were longing for a renewal of that treaty, should have lent a willing ear to the promises of the Conservative speakers of the day, that by adopting the National Policy, they would be taking a step in favor of securing a renewal of the treaty. In 1878, Sir Charles Tupper, in Prince Edward Island, said:

"All we have to do to-day is to support the protective national policy of Sir John A. Macdonald, in order to obtain a reciprocity treaty with the United States within two years."

The hon, gentleman at that time was so certain about it, that he actually fixed the date. knew, he said, that if we once showed our independence to the people of the United States, within two years—he seemed to have thought that it would take them two years to make up their minds—we should have reciprocal commercial relations with the United States. Well, Sir, the time passed away. A majority of the people of this country, unfortunately, as I conceive, for their own interests, sustained the views which were propounded by the Opposition of that day, now the party of the Administration, and placed them in power. Time went on, and no reciprocity treaty was obtained. Year after year passed away, and there was no evidence that we were likely to obtain any larger measure of commercial intercourse with our neighbors to the south of us. The producers in the various parts of this country saw a market across the border open to them, if they could only take down the tariff barriers and regulations which impeded free intercourse. nothing of the kind was—I will not say attempted, though much does not seem to have been attempted—at all events, nothing was accomplished. Then, in 1886, eight years afterwards, in view of another general election, the same gentleman, now High Commissioner, visited Prince Edward Island for a second time. On that occasion the hon. gentleman is reported to have said:

"Since the expiration of the latter term of twelve years of the Washington Treaty, we have shown our American neighbors that we intend to stand up for our rights and interests. By adopting that policy we shall obtain a commercial treaty with the Americans at no distant date. I think there is reason to hope that we shall have it within two years."

On this occasion the hon, gentleman was not quite so confident as he was in his first assertion, when he said we were going to have it within two years. Now he says: "I think there is reason to hope that we shall have it within two years." Well, the two years have passed away, and we are in the same position to-day that we were in 1886, and the Government have not been able to show us that there is any early probability of securing a renewal of that treaty. It is true that to-day we have two propositions before us. The one is the gloved hand of freer intercourse, under the Hitt resolution; the other is the iron hand of tariff war, under the McKinley tariff proposal. Which shall we accept? The people of this country were in hopes that, with the history of the question before them, the Government would at once have shown a willingness, without loss of dignity, without loss of respect, without lowering their own positions, to intimate in some way, directly or indirectly, that we would be willing to meet the proposal, the magnanimous proposal, I may say, under the Hitt resolution. But instead of that the President of the Council was put forward, the other night, to express the views of the Government, that reciprocity in our natural products would be a calamity for the farmers of this country. Sir, I was amazed when I heard that statement had been made. was not in the House when the hon. gentleman delivered his speech, but, when it was reported to me afterwards, that he had committed the Government to that position, I thought that really it was capable of some explanation; but, when I took his speech and read it in his own language, where he stated most emphatically, and gave his reasons-which, of course, we assumed were the reasons of his colleagues—why reciprocity in natural products would be an injury to the farmers of this country, I saw then that the Government had at last arrived at the conclusion, had at last expressed the opinions which had always been in their own minds, that while they were preaching through the country their great desire to obtain reciprocal relations with the United States, they had an arrière pensée in their own minds, that they never would have a reciprocity treaty with the United States, even in our natural products, and the President of the Council was the first to give utterance to that opinion. Shall we now, I say, under these circumstances, show our willingness to treat with them; or shall we, as under the proposal before the House, attempt to set them at defiance? The tariff proposals of the Government are nothing more or less than a defiance of the United States. We know to what state a tariff war may be brought. We had a statement made by the present High Commissioner to England, and we did not require his statement to make us aware of the fact, that a tariff war was not very far removed from a natural war; and with all the irritating questions now existing between the two countries, the present Administration, in my judgment, has committed an act of which they have not yet seen the full fruits. We have before us another difficult question with the United States, namely, the fishery question. I do not wish to enter into the subject, or to express any opinion with respect to its present position, more than this: that, if there is anything calculated to make the Americans stand on their dignity, and insist on the fullest construction of their contentions with respect to the fishery question, which we know under the Blaine Administration they are disposed to do. this Government could not have adopted any course more calculated to irritate the American Government than that now before the House. They are not only irritating, but they are insignificant matters: 5 cents duty on a gooseberry bush, 3 cents on a bunch of strawberries; but small as these matters are, they show the animus of the Government, and that the Government are determined to show the Americans that we will not have anything to do with them in trade relations. To the American people at large that will be taken as a declaration of war. If anything is calculated to secure the passage of the McKinley tariff now before Congress, the tariff which this Government has brought down will have the desired effect. I believe there is no factor that will exercise such an important influence with the United States Congress at the present moment as the announcement made to them, as it has been made to them, of the intention of this Government to impose these small, insignificant but obstructive duties and regulations against American intercourse. The American against American intercourse. people have watched this matter from its very They have shown a desire, as commencement. expressed by the Hitt resolution, to meet us in a fair spirit, and it would be no loss of dignity on the part of Canada and the Canadian Government to express, so soon as they have the opportunity, their desire to meet American commissioners, I do not say, to see how far they may go, but to ascertain if there is any ground on which they can meet the American Government with a view to the solution of these great questions. It is their duty to do so, and the country will hold them responsible, and there is no question which in this country will receive more attention henceforward than this question; and if these resolutions become the law of the land, I dare the Government of Canada to resist for twenty-four hours, to stand on the defensive and say: We will not meet you and discuss this subject in the interests of friendly intercourse and the advantage of commerce at large. The Government would not be sustained by their own friends. We have already heard murmurs from their supporters. Those hon, gentlemen who have spoken in defence of their policy were not able to go to the extent of sustaining the Government in the views they have adopted with respect to this great question. They will find, moreover, that behind the members of the House are the constituents, intelligent, reading and thinking men, who will ponder over these questions, and who will naturally ask this question: Here we are in Canada with surplus products, we have a market to a certain extent along our line, we send there certain articles which no other country will take, we have these certain articles which must be sent there no matter what the duty may be; and will the Government dare to resist a proposition from the American Government asking for the consideration of the question as to whether we may not meet and devise some means upon which we can trade together on fair terms? It has been stated by hon. gentle-men opposite, that the American farmers are very much worse off than our own farmers. am sorry to hear that the farmers are not well off in any part of the world, but, if there is anything in that contention, it goes to prove, as has been observed by hon, gentlemen on this side of the House, that the American farmers are in a worse position simply from the fact that they have lived twenty-five years under the iron heel of protection, while we on this side of the line have only had ten years' experience of it. Do we require fifteen years more to place our farmers in the same position which these American farmers are described to occupy? Our young people are going out of the country, because, despite all the advantages which this fine country possesses, they fail by honest toil, patience, economy to make headway, and they somewhere else, no matter where it may be. They will go out of the country and seek new fields abroad. They may go to our own North-West, and in many cases they do go, and we do not lose them. But many go to the United States and to the south and to various other parts of the world, and I know, from my own experience in my own Province, that the young men, the bone and sinew of our people, the fishermen along our coast, the farmers of the interior, the mechanics and hard-working industrious men are going to the United States in the spring, and perhaps some of them return in the autumn to spend some days at home. That is a condition of affairs, however, which is an injurious one as regards the advancement of this country. The next object of a National Policy was to create a home market for our products and to give good prices to the farmers. I have already discussed this question. We must all regret to hear that the farmers in the West are not in a flourishing condition, and it is apparent, from the best information that can be obtained, that, as a whole, the farming industry is Newfoundland, and this is his reply:

not in a satisfactory condition. It is doubtless true, I believe, that under favorable conditions farmers are doing fairly well. But, taking the whole industry, I think it will be admitted by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, that the farming industry of Canada is not in as favorable a condition as we should like to see it to-day. After having humbugged the farmers for the past ten years, leading them to believe that the National Policy was going to give them a home market and higher prices, and leading them to believe that if they would trust the country into Conservative hands, the condition would be changed, we now have the admission made by the President of the Council, that no fiscal policy of the country could affect the value of the home products either one way or the other. I am glad the hon. gentleman made that admission to the House. They now propose an increase in certain articles of large consumption in the Maritime Provinces. Well, Sir, the Maritime Provinces have to pay the increase. We raise very little beef or pork there except in Prince Edward Island, where a good deal of pork is raised; and our hardy fishermen pursuing their hazardous and uncertain calling, our mechanics and laborers, and all classes which go to make up the general com-munity will be called upon to contribute towards these half million dollars which this tax imposes. Our fishermen will pay $6 a barrel on pork and beef, and at least $1 a barrel more on flour than they would have to pay if they could get it from the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. How much do you say on flour?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). $1 a barrel. Some say the flour will be no dearer, and the hon. the Minister of Finance, the other day, in his desire to make it pleasant to both ends of the Dominion, assured us that his increase of 25 cents would make flour no dearer in the Maritime Provinces. If it does not make it dearer in the Maritime Provinces, I fail to see what advantage is going to accrue to the millers of Ontario and the West. Their object is to keep out the American flour, and if this tax does not keep out the American flour, then, of course, they have no advantage. The hon. gentleman was afraid to admit, as he should have admitted, that while this tax might, under certain circumstances, not always cause an increase directly, still, indirectly, from the nature of our position, and from the nature of our trade with the United States, there must always naturally be a very considerable difference between the price of our flour and that of the United States. The hon. Minister asked me what difference this tax would make on flour, and I answered frankly, $1 a barrel. I will prove to him, I think, how that is. The Island of Newfoundland is a large consumer of flour, and Conservative authorities in Halifax have said to us: "Why, look at Newfoundland; they have no duty, and the American flour enters Newfoundland on "Why, precisely the same terms as the Canadian flour I confess that, when I began to consider it in that light, it did strike me as singular that, with both American and Canadian flour entering on the same terms, the people of Newfoundland should get so much flour from Canada as was stated to be the case. I, therefore, took the trouble to write to one of the largest flour importers of

"We think the whole import of Canadian flour in 1889 did not exceed 10,000 barrels out of 278,000 barrels imported. Out of about 100,000 barrels which we and the bakery in which we are interested imported, not over 6,000 barrels were Canadian."

Now, Sir, here is an answer to the hon. gentleman's statement. Here is Newfoundland with no duty on flour imported either from the United States or from the Dominion of Canada, and here are the Messrs. Harvey & Co., one of the largest and most respectable houses in St. John, Newfoundland, stating under their own signature that out of the 278,000 barrels imported, there were only 10,000 barrels of Canadian flour. Put us in the same position as they are in Newfoundland, and we would naturally go to New York for our flour. We would have the haggle of the market in New York, and it will be admitted that flour can be obtained as cheaply in New York as in the west, assuming that it is no cheaper. It costs us in the Maritime Provinces 15 cents to get it from New York, whereas it costs us 60 cents to get it from the West. There is a difference of 45 cents a barrel, and on our consumption in the Maritime Provinces of about one million and a quarter barrels that alone amounts to $562,000. It must also be remembered that there is a large quantity of flour in the United States which is not up to the standard of the best Canadian flour, and that flour was largely used in the Maritime Provinces by the fishermen who desire to save half a dollar or a dollar. flour could be bought from half a dollar to threequarters of a dollar cheaper than Canadian flour of the same standard. It may not be quite so white in color, I admit, but it is quite as strong and quite as sound an article. The hon. gentleman may be able to afford the best black cloth to protect himself against the weather, but he is not better protected than his less fortunate brother who wears a homespun overcoat. A lady arrayed in her silks and satins is not better protected against the weather than her less fortunate sister who has to wear a cheaper garment; and so it is with consumption of this flour. The man who desires to buy the most expensive article can buy it, but the fishermen and the farmers along our coasts will be satisfied to take a barrel of flour that is equally as wholesome as the best, if he can get it at from three-quarters of a dollar to half of a dollar cheaper. He will save the money by buying this cheaper article and apply it to his comfort in some other direction. That is the operation of the tariff in this respect. It has been the custom of Conservative speakers in my Province, and it may be in this House before the debate is over, to quote my hon. friend in front of me (Mr. Mackenzie), who led the Liberal Government in 1878, to show that, under the operation of the duty, flour would not be made dearer in the Maritime Provinces. I took the trouble to refer to the utterances of my hon. friend, and I find that what he said in Halifax is as follows :-

"Now, when your leaders come down here, they declare, as Dr. Tupper did the other day, that a tax on flour would not raise the price one cent, and Dr. Tupper quotes me as an authority for that statement. Well, I do not believe it; I believe that no tax will affect the price of a commodity of which we produce a surplus. "But it will affect the course of trade in that commodity. A very large proportion of the flour consumed in the Maritime Provinces finds its natural channel by your trade with the States, and immediately that you stop the purchase of American flour, and compel the transmission of Ontario flour by a particular way to Mr. Jones (Halifax).

these Provinces, you simply do an injury to those that do business in that direction. But when Sir John Macdonald goes about in the West, and he was near my county the other day where they are all farmers, he told them he wanted a duty on flour to raise the price."

Again, in the Hansard of 1879, at page 517, the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie is reported to have said:

"He desired to correct the hon. gentleman who had just spoken, in quoting his remarks respecting the flour

"He said that he (Mackenzie) proved conclusively that no duty would increase the price of flour. What he said was that no duty would be of any benefit to the producers of flour in Ontario, but that the price or duty put on the flour imported into the Maritime Provinces would be a serious hardship to their people, inasmuch as the trade was not with Ontario but with the States."

That is the opinion of the hon. gentleman, which has been quoted on many occasions in support of the view that the price of flour would not be increased. But, Sir, I have an authority here which, whatever value we may attach to it on this side of the House, should carry great weight with hon, gentlemen on the other side. Charles Tupper said:

"Mr. Blake told you that I said in Pictou that $400,000 was paid in coal, and paid by the people of Ontario. Now, if he did, he is not a candid man. Do you not think that Mr. Blake would have acted the part of a candid man if he had told you that of the $300,000 revenue collected on wheat and flour, not one cent was paid by Ontario, and all was paid by the Maritime Provinces?" That is an authority which, I think, hon. gentlemen opposite are bound to respect. But, let us men opposite are bound to respect. see what the duty on these articles will amount to in the case of an ordinary family. An average family along the coast would consume, I suppose, one barrel of pork, one barrel of beef and five barrels of flour. The duty on five barrels of flour would be $5, on a barrel of pork $6, and on a barrel of beef $6, making, in all, $17; and against this enormous taxation, which these poor people cannot avoid paying, they get the concession of the reduction on a barrel of molasses which, at one cent and a-half a gallon, would amount to about 60 cents for the barrel. The hon. Minister of Finance must think that the people of the Maritime Provinces have very little intelligence, if he supposes that they are going to be hoodwinked by such reductions as this. hon, gentleman must surely see that if these people are compelled to pay a largely increased price for these articles, they will realise the full extent of the injury done to them. More than that, this duty will fall on the poorest class of our people. The duty on pork will not apply to our shipping industry or to our fishermen engaged in bank-fishing. When they go away in the summer to the fishing banks, they take their beef and pork in bond, and are, consequently, not compelled to pay this increased expense; but the poor fisherman on the coast, who goes out in the morning and spends the whole day to catch a few fish and bring them home at night for his family, cannot avoid paying this tax, because he cannot get the article in any other way. He must get a barrel of beef, and a barrel of pork, and a barrel of flour, and each will be that much dearer to him. I cannot conceive for what reason or upon what principle the Minister of Finance can put a duty of $6 on the pork and beef which these poor people consume, when he only puts a duty of $3 on the pork consumed by the lumbermen scattered all over the country, who are infinitely better able to bear taxation. I hope the hon. Minister will consider this before he completes his resolution. The Minister of Finance, the other day, in speaking of what his Government had accomplished, told us that they had poured out money like water, which was true enough. He told us they had spent large sums in opening up new channels of commerce, forgetting that he could have, without the expenditure of any money, customers alongside of him who had made him an offer to trade with us on equal terms. I was amused when he told us he had opened up communication with the West Indies. Why, the hon, gentleman must have been ignorant of the fact that a steamer has been running to Jamaica, under a subsidy from the British Government, for the past fifteen years, and that during these fifteen years no new development of trade was created by that enterprise, because only the arcicles which are carried by our sailing vessels were carried in that steamer. Now the hon, gentleman boasts that he is spending $15,000 to run a steamer to Jamaica, which will only carry articles that would otherwise be carried in our own vessels. I showed him, on a previous occasion, that this steamer brought nothing back from Jamaica, and did not contribute in any way to the commerce of this country. He told us that he had opened up communication with Cuba, being again probably not aware that no more articles go to Cuba, under this arrangement, than went before, and yet he is paying $20,000 a year for that steam communication. The steamer takes out some quintals of fish and barrels of potatoes, and she returns to Halifax in ballast. I will send the hon, gentleman a Halifax paper, giving the manifest of that steamer's cargo the other day, on her return trip, showing her total return cargo to have been six cases of cigars; and this is the magnificent enterprise which the Government are assisting with $20,000 of public money. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on his enterprise. Then he referred to his other enterprise—the opening up of communication with Demerara. I need not further refer to that, as the subject was well discussed the other day, when it was shown that the hon, gentleman has made a contract to give a subsidy of $4,000 in order to carry $6,000 of our produce, which would go, under any circumstances, to the British West Indies. If the hon. gentleman considers that statesmanship, I do not. I was very sorry to hear what he said with reference to the English mail contract. A year ago we were told that we were going to have a fast line. My colleague the other day brought to the notice of the House how imperfectly the service was performed by some of the steamers now on the route, and since then there has been no great improvement. What do the Government propose to do? The Finance Minister says that, considering the high prices of steel at present, the Government do not propose to make any effort to secure another contract for the improvement of the service. Had the hon. gentleman accepted the advice tendered him two years ago, and reduced his pretensions down to a moderate service, suitable to the wants of our country, had he not mounted his high horse and told the country we were going to have a fast line, equal to the fast lines in the United States, he would have been in a position to ask the House to-day, to support a reasonable scheme. He is already in possession of an offer to put on a sixteen or seventeen knot service, if the Government would entertain the proposition.

Two of the largest companies having relations with this country, have two large steel steamers of 6,000 tons each now building on the other side, and they have intimated to the hon. gentleman, that they are only waiting the decision of the Government to know whether they should make them seventeen knot steamers or put in less power and make them a thirteen knot service. Yet the hon. gentleman took no notice of the proposal, and the Government have apparently no intention of taking any step to improve the mail service between this and the old country. If they were in earnest they would accept within twenty-four hours this proposition, and have a mail service of seventeen knots an hour established at a moderate rate. The policy of the Government and the policy of the Opposition are very fairly contrasted in the amendment of my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright). The amendment calls upon us to say:

"That it is the bounden duty of this House, instead of adding to the existing oppressive taxation, to apply itself to the reduction of the burdens now impeding the progress and prosperity of the principal producing classes of the Dominion, and for this purpose to abolish or reduce the taxes now imposed on articles of prime necessity to farmers, miners, fishermen and other producers."

That is a proposition which I am sure will find a response in this country, and be acceptable to the calm and responsible judgment of the people. The whole question of our financial policy is embodied in that amendment, and it is for hon. gentlemen on the other side to consider the responsibility they incur in voting down such a proposition. would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance, if, during the multiplicity of his labors, he has had time to read an article which has lately appeared from the pen of that distinguished statesman, Mr. Gladstone. I refer to the correspondence between Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Blaine, that no less celebrated protectionist authority of the United States. Here is an opinion coming from an authority which, I think, the hon. gentleman and his party, with all their prejudices, are bound to respect. It is the matured judgment of a man who to-day probably stands head and shoulders above any other living statesman—a man whose utterances command attention in every part of the world. There probably is no man living to-day, who, when he delivers himself of a public utterance, has so many readers, and whose opinions are so carefully scanned and discussed. What do we find Mr. Gladstone sav ? He savs :

say? He says:

"The constant tenor of the argument is this: High wages by protection, low wages by free trade. It is even as the recurring burden of a song. And I can state with truth that I have heard this very same melody before; nay, that I am familiar with it. It comes to us now with a pleasant novelty; but once upon a time we British folk were surfeited, nay, almost bored to death, with it. It is simply the old song of our squires, which they sang with perfect assurance to defend the corn laws. Protectionists terrify the American workman by threacening him with the wages of his British comrade, precisely as the English landlord coaxed our rural laborers, when we used to get our best wheats from Dantzic, by exhibiting the starvation wages of the Polish peasant.

"These arguments were made among us, in the alleged interest of labor and of capital, just as they are now employed by you; for America may at present be said to diet on the cast-off reasonings of English protectionism."

I think Mr. Gladstone might have included Canada

I think Mr. Gladstone might have included Canada as well.

"But we broke down every protective wall and 'flooded the country' (so the phrase then ran) with the corn and the commodities of the whole world; with the corn of America first and foremost. But did our rate of wages thereupon sink to the level of the continent? No; it rose steadily and rapidly to a point higher than it had been ever known before.

"Mr. Giffen, of the Board of Trade, whose careful disquisitions are known to command the public confidence, supplies us with tables which compare the wages of 1833 with those of 1883 in such a way as to speak for the principal branches of industry. The wages of miners, we learn, have increased in Staffordshire (which almost certainly is the mining district of lowest increment) by 50 per cent. In the great exportable manufactures of Bradford and Huddersfield the lowest augmentations are 20 and 30 per cent., and in other branches they rise to 50, 83, 100 and even to 150 and 160 per cent. The quasi-domestic trades of carpenters, bricklayers and masons, in the great marts of Glasgow and Manchester, show a mean increase of 63 per cent for the first, 65 per cent. for the second, and 47 per cent, for the third. The lowest weekly wage named for an adult is twenty-two shillings (as against seventeen shillings in 1833), and the highest thirty-six shillings." Then he goes on to say:

"The argument of the tree trader is that the legislator ought never to interfere, or only to interfere so far as im-perative fiscal necessity may require it, with this natural law of distribution."

The hon, the Minister of Finance has not been able to show that there was an imperative necessity for imposing the further taxation which he proposes now. Mr. Gladstone further says:

"All interference with it by a Government in order to encourage some dearer method of production at home, in preference to a cheaper method of production abroad, may fairly be termed artificial. And every such interference means simply a diminution of the national wealth."

Then Mr. Gladstone goes on to show that Americans are prosperous on account of their great resources. He says:

"Let me now mention some at least among those elements of the unrivalled national strength of America, which explain to us why she is not runed by the huge waste of the protective system. And first of these I place the immense extent and vastness of her territory. She carries on the business of domestic exchanges on a scale such as mankind has never seen. Of all the staple products of human industry and care, how few are there, which, in one or another of her countless regions, the soil of America would refuse to yield. Apart from this wide variety, I suppose there is no other country of the whole earth in which, if we combine together the surface and that which is below the surface, nature has been so bountiful to man. Now, this vast aggregate superiority of purely natural wealth is simply equivalent to the gift, say, of a queen in a game of chess, with this difference—that America could hold her own against all comers without the queen. By protection she makes a bad move, which helps us to make fight, and ties a heavy clog upon her feet, so that the most timid among us need not now to greatly dread her competition in the international trade of the world."

That is to say, that America, with all her advan-

That is to say, that America, with all her advantages, with all her great natural advantages, does not compete with England under free trade in any part of the world. He further says, and this is a peculiar sequence of the whole, which hon, gentlemen should well consider:

men should well consider:

"America makes no scruples, then, to cheapen everything in which labor is concerned, because this is the road to national wealth. Therefore, she has no mercy upon labor, but displaces it right and left. Yet when we come to the case where capital is most in question, she enables her shipbuilders, her ironmasters and her millowners to charge double or semi-double prices; which, if her practice as to labor saving be right, must be the road to national poverty. Econverso, if she be right in shutting out foreign ships and goods to raise the receipts of the American capitalist, why does she not tax the reaping machine to raise the receipts of the American laborer?

And he concludes in recard to the nuoral aspect of

And he concludes, in regard to the moral aspect of the subject, in these few words:

"I urge, also, that all protection is morally, as well as economically bad. This is a very different thing from saying that all protectionists are bad. I have seen and known, and had the opportunity of comparing the temper Mr. Jones (Halifax).

and frame of mind engendered, first by our protectionism, which we now look back upon as servitude, and then by the commercial freedom and equality which we have enjoyed for the last thirty or forty years. The one tended to harden into positive selfishness; the other has done much to foster a more liberal tone of mind."

Therefore, independent of all the advantages from a national standpoint, independent of all the advantages which free trade has conferred on that great country, independent of all these lower considerations, if they may be so termed, Mr. Gladstone, that distinguished man, points out the fact that it has had the effect of removing national animosities, of bringing the inhabitants of one country into closer contact with those of other countries, and, generally, of bringing about a better feeling among the nations of the world. I believe that nothing is so much calculated to bring about a better feeling between us and the people of the United States, which is so desirable, than to show to this great people on the south of us, that we are willing to consider any reasonable proposition tending to this end. I believe that, notwithstanding all the expressions of public opinion, gathered from general elections, and notwithstanding all the assertions which have been made to the contrary, there is an underlying feeling deep down in the heart of every reasonable, sensible man in this country, who is not directly interested or benefited by the present policy, that a policy of free trade, putting in the possession of the great masses of the people those articles which are necessary for the benefit of themselves and their families, would be of the greatest possible That feeling is growing. I believe importance. we are standing to-day almost on the brink of a precipice. I believe the Government have now They have exhausted every means of taxation. divided and cut up, and sub-divided and re-divided every possible branch of taxation by which they could take anything out of the people; but I believe they have at last reached the end of their tether. If this Government go on at the rate they have been going on, and pour out their money like water without reference to the necessities of the case, I believe the time is not far distant when the Minister of Finance will be brought face to face with an alarming condition in the finances of this country. I think the hon, gentleman hardly knows how near we are in this country now to a financial crisis, if all accounts are true. I think he hardly realises the fact that there is a great feeling of uneasiness pervading the commercial people from one end of the country to the other, and that, if once the public confidence is destroyed, if once a financial disaster occurs at one end of the country, it will find an echo from one end of Canada to the other, and no one can tell to what it may reach. warn the hon. gentleman that not long hence he may find the country in a different condition from that in which it stands to-day. I should regret it very much as a business man, and as one interested in the development of this country, but I should not be amazed if the vast folly of the Government, and the course which they have pursued in sending such enormous amounts out of the country and putting them in unproductive enterprises, should not bring about its natural result. There is no exception likely to be made for the present Government, or in behalf of the very able Finance Minister. The immutable laws and the great principles which control the financial operations of the world are based on authorities and on principles higher than his, and they may come back on him at a time when he cannot withstand the recoil. I warn the Government as to the effect of the policy they are adopting, and I believe that when the people realise the position in which they are placed, especially by this last attempt to tax them another half million of dollars, to be taken from their hard earnings, they will come to the conclusion that hon. gentlemen opposite should make way for better men. I believe that will be the feeling of this country when the people come to realise the true position in which they stand. I am not usually of a desponding character. I am not a man who is despondent by nature or by disposition. I always like to look upon things in the most favorable light, and with a sanguine temper; but, as a prudent business man, as an observer of what is passing around, I feel that I should not be discharging my duty here, if I did not appeal to the Finance Minister to stay his hand. I should not be doing my duty here, if I did not call to his attention those great operations which are going on over this country, partly as the result of the policy which he is directing to-day. I ask him and the Government to reflect, whether it may not be even to their own interest carefully to consider what steps they are going to take with reference to the financial policy of this country in the future. Sir, I cannot resume my seat without again saying to the Minister of Finance, that I hope he will reconsider many of those propositions which he has brought down in his tariff resolutions, because he will find that they are going to impose a very heavy burden upon a class of people who are the least able to bear these taxes. Perhaps the hon, gentleman has not had this matter brought home to him as clearly as I have en-deavored to do so, and I humbly submit to him to-day, that the people along the coast of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick will be seriously affected by the operations of this tariff, if it passes. I hope, therefore, that the hon gentleman, before these resolutions take their final stage, will consider whether he may not be able to lessen the taxes on those articles which I have particularly referred to.

General LAURIE. Some years after Confederation it was the practice in the House of Assemby of Nova Scotia, when they had nothing else particularly to talk about, to resolve themselves into a committee to discuss the general state of the Province. Now, it does seem to me, although we have something else to talk ahout, that my hon. friend has followed the practice of those with whom he was for a long time politically associated with in Nova Scotia, and has resolved himself into a committee to discuss the general state of the I must say, that the larger portion of his speech that he has addressed to the House, had nothing whatever to do with the subject before us. It seemed to me that he went over every matter except the one that we are considering. We are except the one that we are considering. considering, I take it, the tariff—there was hardly an allusion to the tariff in his speech.

An hon. MEMBER. The Budget speech.

General LAURIE. Ithink the Budget speech was made in introducing the tariff. It is true that, in making the Budget speech, the Minister of Finance to ply between Canada and Jamaica, and ne said did allude to the state of the country, and in that that it had not built up trade. I think my hon.

sense, perhaps, my hon. friend's speech was pertinent. But I cannot help thinking that the old proverb applied largely to his speech: that what was true was not new, and what was newwell, I will simply say, was fallacious; it was a little deceptive in the argument and the way it was placed before the House. I propose to consider some of these points which my hon. friend has alluded to, and I must say it is a little difficult to follow him, because he was rather interjectory in many portions of his speech. Well, first of all, he talked about Gladstone. Mr. Gladstone's opinions are very valuable. He has tried every policy, he has been a Protectionist, he has been a Free Trader, and, I think, he has been three times Prime Minister of England, and as the result of his last Premiership, we have the report of a Royal Commission, appointed to enquire into the depression of trade and industry of England. I think that report is a very fair result of the policy that Mr. Gladstone has advocated and carried out, and afterwards he had to call the leading minds of England together to advise him as to what was the trouble with the country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In what year was that report?

General LAURIE. In 1886. Now, I will give you some of the results formulated by this Royal Commission. As we have had Mr. Gladstone, we may as well have the Royal Commission against Mr. Gladstone, and hear what they have got to say. If England is a free trade country, it is due to Sir Robert Peel, and not to his follower, Mr. Gladstone, who left the protectionist party and came over to free trade. The Royal Commission stated in their report that one of the causes of the depression was:

"The effect of foreign tariffs and bounties, and the restrictive commercial policy of foreign countries in limiting our markets."

This shows that, after all, protection is not an injurious policy in those countries that have kept English goods out of them. We find that another cause of depression is stated to be:

"Foreign competition, which we are beginning to feel both in our own and in neutral markets."

Those are some of the principal causes of depression of trade in England, as stated by that Royal Commission. There are various other causes, to which I may allude later on. The hon. gentleman also alluded to what he called a danger and a serious objection, according to himself and the party with whom he is in accord, in that the Conservative party and Government have been building up millionaire manufacturers who are taking the cream and employing operatives at starvation wages, so to speak. Now, Sir, the result of the examination into the trade of England, a large manufacturing country, is reported by this Royal Commission to be:

"There can be no doubt that, of the wealth annually created in the country, a smaller proportion falls to the share of the employers of labor than formerly."

So that, so far from a number of millionaire manufacturers taking the cream, they are the people who are suffering, while labor takes a larger proportion of the profits of manufacturing than it formerly did. My hon. friend went on to allude to the subsidy given to a steamer, fifteen years ago, friend is in error. If my memory serves me, that steamer used to go to St. Thomas, and it is only within the last three or four years that the British Government urged that the steamer should lengthen its trip to Jamaica; and if our Halifax merchants are to be believed, they were building up a very profitable trade with Jamaica during that time. But my hon. friend objected to the steamer; he was one of those who circulated a petition to the British Government requesting that the subsidy to that steamer going to Jamaica might be withdrawn, and the result has been that, as it was found necessary to have communication with Jamaica, this Government now has to subsidise a steamer to that port, and we have to thank my hon. friend and his colleagues for that subsidy having been withdrawn by the Imperial Government and placed upon our own Government. The hon gentleman made an extraordinary calculation as the effect of the tariff upon our people in Nova Scotia. I was surprised to hear him state that the addition of 25 cents a barrel to the duty on flour, made flour $1 a barrel dearer. I do not know how he arrived at that calculation, but it must have been by some extraordinary process which I have not been able to follow. Then he stated that the lumberers were only to pay $1.50 a hundred weight on pork and beef, that is to say, $3 on a barrel, whilst the fishermen had to pay $6. I am not aware there is any discrimination in favor of the lumbermen as against the fishermen. Both stand on the same footing, they can go to the same market, they can buy the same article, and they are called upon to pay the same duty. And under these circumstances I say the statement made was doubly There are some other points to which my hon. friend alluded, but I do not know that I should occupy the time of the House in dealing with them, yet I am loath to pass them by. Many of these subjects have been dealt with so frequently, and the assertions have been answered over and over again, that I almost expected to hear the word "chestnut," and I almost expected to hear that word when I reply to those assertions by arguments which so often have been presented. We know that if the export trade of the country has not increased to the extent we might wish, the in-ternal trade, the trade between Province and Province, has increased enormously. We know, for example, according to the Trade Returns, that more raw material comes in now and takes the place of manufactured goods, and under that head there is a larger quantity of raw material coming from the United States, and our trade with the United States has thereby apparently increased. And so it has increased; but it has increased in a way which benefits our working people, because it enables us to manufacture the raw material, instead of bringing manufactured goods from Eng-England is in no sense a country for raw England exports manufactured promaterials. ducts; and, if our imports from England decline, it is because we do not import so many manufactured goods as in the past, and because we obtain more raw material from new and less developed countries, and manufacture that raw material ourselves, and employ our own labor thereby. When we hear that the Hitt resolution and the Mc-Kinley tariff are to us, on the one hand, an invitation and, on the other hand, a threat of open war; and General LAURIE.

our Ministry dares not to move the matter, or dares to refuse an invitation from the American Government, they will not stand twentyfour hours, and that the Government are simply standing on their dignity on this question—I say I trust the Ministry will recognise the dignity of Canada, that they will recognise we have a dignity, and that our dignity will be considered by those who have been appointed to administer the Government of the country, and that our dignity will be duly considered by the Government, and I deem it is in the best possible hands. The hon. gentleman said that when the National Policy was introduced in 1876, he, sitting on the other side of the House and on the Government benches, listened to it but was not convinced. That is true, no doubt, and that is the reason why he is on this side of the House at the present time. But when the advocates of that policy went to the country, they secured a reasonable majority in support of the National Policy. Hence, he is on this side of the House, and I am afraid, until he is convinced, he is likely to remain on the Opposition benches. With the permission of the House, I will quote some remarks made by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), giving reasons why we should stimulate manufactures in the interests of the con-The hon. gentleman said:

"There are many classes of manufactured commodities capable of being produced in this country, which require, for their economical production, a large market. There is nothing clearer as to numerous classes of commodities, that, within certain limits, which far transcend our population, the larger the market the cheaper the goods can be produced; and long ago, in some particular cases, we had supplied to the full the home market, created to some extent a foreign trade, and were dependent for the further extension and growth of our manufacturing interests upon the facilities that one might obtain by cheap production and reasonable arrangement with foreign nations, in sending forward our goods into their countries. That development of manufacturing to which I have alluded is one not interesting to the manufacturer alone, but of interest and importance to the whole community, to the consumer as well as to the producer, because it is based upon the theory that economy of production will ensue from the largeness of the production, and from that economised production, the consumer will obtain a portion of the benefit, so that it may be argued that while there are in other respects apparent or real divergencies of interests between the manufacturer and consumer, it cannot be said in this respect that there is even an apparent, still less a real, divergence of interest."

I only quote these remarks made by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), a strong advocate of the party policy that is enunciated from the Opposition side of the House, and a strong co-worker with his party, because I think his opinions are to be received with respect, at all events by the Opposition; and certainly, when he argues in that direction, I take it that we should accept his statements as a recognition of the fact that in pushing production we are benefiting the consumer. I do not think it is necessary to enter at great length into many of the questions that have been brought forward and to go over ground that has been already travelled, but I have one or two points that I desire to bring to the attention of the House. I regret that, owing to the imperfect acoustic properties of the Chamber, I was unable to hear a large portion of what was said by hon. gentlemen who addressed the House, but I did hear one or two remarks from the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), and I should like to join issue with him. I heard him state and when we are told that | yesterday, to my great surprise, because I know how faithful a financial student he is, and how closely he analyses financial questions, that the income tax in England, which he advocated, is a preferable tax to an import duty, that it is a just tax, that it is a tax according to a man's capacity to pay taxes. If he were to study the opinions of leading men in England, he would learn that, so far from that being the case, it is one of the most unjust and unfair taxes known. In considering this question, it is always important to consider that the people are opposed to direct taxation, and, of course, they prefer no taxes at all; but, if their contributions must be obtained to the revenue, the people certainly prefer to make them by indirect taxation. What is the income tax, and how is it raised? A large number of young men educate themselves and acquire a profession or a calling, and, during their earlier years, train themselves so that in after life they are able to go into the world and follow their profession as a doctor, lawyer or engineer. Now, these young men are taxed to the full extent of their earnings, and the capital which they have invested in their education in their early life is practically taxed in full. It is expected to be within the power of any man who has invested his capital in acquiring a profession, to accumulate sums to replace the capital sum invested, and these sums he will, no doubt, obtain from his profession. All his earnings, which should go to replace his capital, are heavily taxed, and, as a result, the income tax is most unpopular with every one except the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and by him alone it is approved, because it is very easily raised or lowered, according to the financial necessities of the country. We, fortunately, do not have to so change the amount we raise year after year. We have no foreign disputes, no large army and navy to maintain, no wars to carry on, and, therefore, there is no necessity for any change being made in the income we raise. Accordingly, the only arguments that justify the imposition of the income tax in England are quite foreign to us here, and an income tax is a most undesirable tax in itself, and it certainly would be most unpopular here, and would be a most unwarrantable tax. I desire to refer to a point made by the mover of the amendment. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) seldom speaks in this House without in some way suggesting that the Government have debauched constituencies and whole Provinces, and by inference, if not by actual statement, he has made that charge against the Province of Nova Scotia, the Province from which I come. I take it as a gross insult to our Province that such remarks should be made, especially when they have been controverted again and again. Such an assertion is most unfair, most unwarranted, and most unjustifiable, and I say, that nothing of the sort has occurred. In every part of the Province where railways have been built, the counties, as a matter of fact, were already Conservative, and so far, therefore, from their being influenced by railway subsidies, I may say, that as regards the counties which I and my friends have won from the Opposition, no railway subsidies were granted to such counties, in any shape or form. I feel bound to say, that the state-from that Province, resent it; and I regret that other hon members from that Province sitting around the hon. gentleman, and otherwise supporting him, do not repudiate a charge made against the Province. I do not propose to continue the discussion to any length, and I did not intend to speak. But when I found, as I did find, that no hon, members from the Maritime Provinces had taken part in the debate, and when there were some points in the tariff that I had most strongly urged upon the Government, I felt I would be false to my position, if I did not say a few words on these points. I wish to say something as to the tariff perse. We have heard it stated that it is a tariff hostile to the Maritime Provinces, and myhon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones) spoke of $1 a barrel being added to the price of flour by an increased duty of 25 cents. I fail to follow his arithmetic there, and I fail to follow the argument by which he endeavored to back it up, except the statement he made that a Newfoundland merchant said so. do not know whether that gentleman has prospered in Newfoundland, or whether he has failed, like so many others have; but I do not understand his calculations. Let us take the tariff as it affects the three lower Provinces, and on the three important points on which the duty is altered. I will give the House the statistics as to the importations of wheat, flour, cornmeal and molasses last year, with the duty that was paid under the old tariff and the duty which will be paid under the proposed changes. Last year the importation of wheat flour into the Maritime Provinces was as follows:-Quantity.

Add 25 cents a barrel	$ 9,390 56 4,695 28
And the total increased duty will b	e $14,085 84
e importation of cornmeal was a Quantity Nova Scotia
100.077	$54.784 00
Total 136,977 Deduct 90 per cent. rebate	49,305 60

We imported into the Maritime Provinces last year 2,240,557 gallons of molasses, on which a duty of $70,923.15 was paid, and if we import the same quantity next year, the reduction of duty will amount to $35,462. Therefore, on these three items, the balance sheet shows that we only pay an increased duty on wheat flour, if we choose to import United States flour. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones) says that we like to buy inferior stuff, and that we do not want the good Canadian flour. However, I may say that, far from that, our fishermen in buying flour insist on having the very best quality. They will not buy the inferior American flour, and it is quite a delusion of the hon. gentleman to suppose they will. We, therefore, find from the tables I have quoted, snape or form. I feel bound to say, that the statement of the hon. gentleman is an unfair and gross slander on our Province, and I, as a member reduction of the duty of molasses would be $35,462 and the reduction on cornmeal $49,305.60. We have, therefore, reduced the duty to the extent of $80,072.32 on these three articles joined together, and given that to the benefit of the farmers and fishermen of the Maritime Provinces. We have, as I said, lessened the duties to the extent of $84,767 on molasses and cornmeal from the fishermen, as against an increase only of $4,085 on flour, and which increase it is at their own option to incur or not. The fisherman cannot buy his commeal elsewhere, except in the States, he cannot buy molasses anywhere without paying a duty, but he can get his wheat flour free of duty if he chooses to use Canadian flour. . I may state that you can buy American or Canadian flour in bond, from the merchants in Boston, at the same price, but Canadian flour can be obtained here without duty, whereas American flour has to pay duty. If a man prefers, under these circumstances, to buy inferior American flour and to take it to Nova Scotia and pay 25 cents a barrel duty on it, I do not see how we can prevent his folly. He can buy from De Long & Seaman, or any other large merchants in Boston, as much Canadian flour as he wishes; and as the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Jones) says that Canadian flour is better than American, we are helping the people in advising them to buy good flour instead of bad. like to look at both sides of this question. I do not want to look at one side and present it to the House, without looking at the other side also. It is true that there is a large increase of duty in the Lower Provinces on the beef and pork imported. I am, perhaps, new to parliamentary life, and I may not be most capable of ascertaining facts from blue-books, but I find that if we buy the class of pork which pays $6 a barrel duty, the price will be increased to the amount of $64,397. I may as well say, at once, however, that we shall not continue to import that pork. On the contrary, our farmers are well able to provide the supply for our home markets, but the surplus from the Chicago markets has been forced into the country to crowd out the product of our own farmers. It is quite a mistake; it is one of those fallacies to which I have referred, to say that our Maritime Provinces do not raise sufficient meat for their own consumption. They raise plenty of beef and pork, but the difficulty with our farmers has been that they were not able to dispose of it in face of the competition from the Chicago product, sent in to compete with them at slaughter prices. I believe that the placing of this duty is a judicious step, but whether it might be judicious to modify the tariff in favor of the salt meat as against the fresh is another matter for consideration. We have no right to assume that these figures, by any means, refer to the salt meat alone. They refer to means, refer to the salt meat alone. the salt and fresh meat together, and the fresh meat we can supply in any quantity. I shall be very much surprised if Prince Edward Island does not lift up its head and do a little better in pork production in the future than it has done in the past. We know the people of Prince Edward Island are fastidions—we know the hon, gentlemen who represent the Island in this House-yet I find that even they imported a very small quantity of pork last year. They did not import inferior American pork, as we are recommended to import inferior American flour, but they imported 200 pounds of good English pork, and paid $2 duty on it. If General LAURIE.

they continue to import that pork they will have to pay $6 duty on it; but they will, no doubt, buy their own pork instead.

Mr. WELSH. Have they said anything about that duty during this discussion?

General LAURIE. I have not heard them.

Mr. WELSH. Well, don't pitch into the representatives of Prince Edward Island.

General LAURIE. I am not pitching into the representatives of Prince Edward Island at all, Sir: on the contrary, I am praising their good taste. With reference to the question of the agricultural depression, which my hon. friend, as well as previous speakers, touched upon, their argument is met by the statement that the farming industry of the United States is also depressed, which shows the absurdity of the proposition to improve the position of our farmers by placing them in competition with the farmers of the United States, who are worse off than themselves. The cry is at once are worse off than themselves. The cry is at once raised from the Opposition: "The United States farmers have suffered from protection for twentyfive years, while our farmers have only suffered from protection for half the time, and are consequently better off." I will now cite what is said, not by a protectionist, but by a free trader, Mr. Albert Spicer, who was a Gladstonian candidate for Essex in the last election in England. Addressing the Union of Congregational Ministers in England on the question why the country congregations were falling off in England, he said:

"If we look first at our rural districts, we find that the purely agricultural portions of England are gradually becoming comparatively depopulated. Our ministers in country churches know this, and have suffered from the effect of it for some time. And Dr. Ogle's paper, recently read before the Statistical Society, has shown that the alleged depopulation is no mere assertion; for he has conclusively proved that counties like Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge, Huntingdon and Rutland, have lost during the last thirty years 6, 8, 10, and nearly 12 per cent. of their inhabitants, to say nothing of the loss of their natural increase. He also shows that this loss of population consists of about 13'2 per cent. of men and 10 per cent. of women, and that it includes those between five and forty-five years old, thus clearly demonstrating that the best life-blood of the rural districts is gradually drifting into our great towns and cities."

Yet, Sir, when the progress of our towns is mentioned in this House, hon. gentlemen say that they are growing to the injury of the country, and that this is the result of the false system of protection; but in free trade England we find the same thing going on:

"This same decrease was also apparent in Suffolk, but in Essex it was still more striking. East and West Essex lost 12,000, whilst urban Essex, including the population of West Ham, had increased by 100,000, indicating how direct is the drift from the rural districts to the great centres of population.  Professor Alfred Russell Wallace, in his 'Bad Times,' has worked out the figures from the census returns of 1871 and 1881. In 1861 three agricultural counties showed a slight decrease; in 1871 eight, and in 1881 fourteen counties showed a diminished population; whilst in several other counties the increase was very small. Comparing the two census returns in the light of the returns of births and deaths during the intermediate period, Professor Wallace finds that a total of nearly two millions of people have, in the short space of ten years, been forced by the struggle for existence to leave the country for the towns."

They were not driven out by the National Policy or because protection ruined them; on the contrary, although this man is a free trader of free traders, he tells the truth, even though it argues against him. New South Wales is the only other large community of Anglo-Saxon people which has attempted to carry out free trade principles; and this gentleman says, with reference to that country:

"In a recent lecture, the Rev. Dr. Jeffreys, our esteemed minister of Pitt Street Congregational Church, Sydney, has been dealing with 'pauperism,' and after thirty years of colonial experience, he has a strange story to tell. 'New South Wales,' he says, 'is rightly described as one of the richest countries on the face of the earth, and yet even here, with the great wealth already made and the vast resources for the creation of future wealth, there are between 30,000 and 40,000 persons who are recipient of state charity, and a very large number who are assisted by private charity. In Sydney there are evidences of poverty, squalor, and infamy.'"

Now, here are two free trade countries, and I produce these statements as an answer to those who say that our agricultural population suffer in a minor degree, because of the system of protection under which they live; and I think it is a pretty good answer. My hon. friend, shortly before he wound up, told us he viewed the prospects of the country in the gloomiest colors. He says he is not a desponding man. Well, I do not think he is, because one of his last utterances was that he expected soon to be back on the Treasury benches. Well, Sir, if he can see the slightest indications in this House or in the country to justify that expectation, I must say that, like Mark Tapley, he is jolly under difficult circumstances.

Mr. O'BRIEN. A great many extraneous subjects have been brought into this debate; hon. members have travelled over a great many different roads; and one hon. member, to obtain weapons for his attacks, found it necessary to extend his researches into the infernal regions. For an hon. gentleman, whose aspirations, from his past course, we should expect to be of a celestial rather than a terrestrial character, to go to such a place for weapons, argues a great paucity of material on the part of the hon. gentleman. From what the hon. gentleman said, it is quite evident that in the realms of Pluto none but Tories are to be found, because there were no Grits there. gentlemen have, perhaps, heard the story of the old Norseman who, when almost persuaded to be baptised, bethought himself to ask the missionary where his progenitors were. The missionary, where his progenitors were. actuated, no doubt, by the most sincere conviction that he was telling the truth, said: "They are all burning in hell." "Well," said the Norseman, "if that is the case, I would very much prefer taking the risk of being with my ancestors, to being your convert." I think it is a hard thing if we who are honestly in favor of the National Policy are not only to meet the wrath of hon. gentlemen opposite in this life, but must expect to meet the wrath to come; but on the question of adhering to the principles of the fiscal policy in force in this country, I, for one, like the Norseman, would prefer to hang up to dry in the realms of Pluto, than to reign in glory with the Grits.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You are carrying it very far.

Mr. O'BRIEN. To lay aside all such arguments as these, I would like to say a word or two with regard to the speech of the hon. member for South Oxford. The hon. gentleman has based his whole argument on two assertions, from which he has drawn certain conclusions. Those assertions relate to the depression of the agricultural interest, of which he has given certain object lessons as proof. He has talked about the large amount of mortgages on agricultural lands, and has referred to the depression in the value of farm property. With regard to the mortgages, I take most decided issue with him. I contend that the money invested in mortgages on agricultural property in this country is not a debt in the ordinary sense of the term. It represents capital which has been invested by the farmers in the legitimate carrying out of their calling. That is what the mortgage debt of this country truly and properly represents. Any one who traces the career of a farmer from the beginning, will find that most of our farmers have begun with almost no capital at all, beyond an axe, a few tools, and about six months' provisions. Having taken up a farm in the woods, and after spending a few months in chopping and putting up a house, the farmer brings his family and then goes off to work. He spends the remainder of the season working for somebody else; he comes back with his earnings, and buys another six months' provisions. That is so much capital invested in the farm; that goes on from year to year until he has forty or fifty acres cleared, and he finds it worth while to obtain more capital. His property, during this period, has, by his exertions, been brought to such an improved condition that it is good security for the invest-ment of capital. He borrows $500, which he invests in putting up buildings, buying stock, agricultural implements, and in improving his farm generally. That capital so invested is not a debt in the ordinary sense of the term, but is properly and legitimately invested in the increase of capital stock. The next argument against the National Policy is based on the assertion that farm property has largely decreased in value. But we must not forget that at the close of the Crimean war, and at subsequent periods prior to the opening of the North-West, agricultural lands in the Province of Ontario had risen to a value far beyond their legitimate value, and far beyond that which could yield any return for the money invested. Anybody who knows anything of farming, knows that a farm valued at $100 an acre, as many of our farms were, is given a fictitious value, which must necessarily fall. When the two causes I have mentioned operated, namely, the fall from the extraordinary prices of grain which formerly prevailed, and the opening of free lands in the North-West, as a matter of course the value of land fell, and I maintain that it simply fell from a fictitious to an ordinary value, because, no man can expect to make money out of farming lands at more than their present value, $40 to $50 an acre. So much for the alleged depreciation in the value of farm property. That disposes of the two principal grounds upon which the hon. gentleman based his assertion, that the National Policy had been injurious to the farmers of this country. The hon, gentleman talked about object lessons. Let any man travel through this country, and what are the object lessons which meet him at every hand? Unless my vision has been singularly contracted, the object lessons which have met my view, have been better houses, better farms, better agricultural implements, better stock, more expenditure in drainage, and in every way that can possibly promote agricultural prosperity. That is evidence of anything but despondency on the part of agricultural population. A further object lesson may be found in this: Let any one attend where farmers congregate-at markets, fairs, churches, or anywhere else-and, I think, he will see, in the horses they drive, in the harness, in their carriages, and their dress, and every indication, that the agricultural population is not suffering, any further than he is undoubtedly suffering from the temporary depression which is being caused by a year of bad crops and low prices -causes which are entirely beyond the operation of any fiscal policy whatever. Now, there is one other point to which I wish to refer, and that is the question of reciprocity. I agree with the President of the Council in saying that we do not want reciprocity in natural products-speaking from an agricultural point of view. I think reciprocity is not the basis upon which our fiscal policy ought to be founded. It seems to me the proper course for us is to admit free what we want, and tax what we do not want, and what enters into competition with our own resources. I lay down this proposition, that between two countries producing the same articles and rivals in the same markets, there cannot be reciprocity. Take the trade in the main article of our agricultural productions, the cattle trade, upon which the future prosperity of our farmers must mainly depend. I happen to know, from personal observation, that at present the cattle trade in the United States stands, as regards prices, in a very inferior position compared with ours. Here are two countries side by side producing the same commodity. The country which has the largest production and the lowest prices, must inevitably rule the market in the country which has less production and higher prices. Therefore, if we had reciprocity in cattle with the United States, our market must necessarily fall to the level of theirs. Any one who knows anything of the Chicago market knows that it rules the whole Western States, and knows also that Iowa, Illinois, Kansas, to say nothing of the ranches in the west, are mainly given to the production of cattle, and that 60,000 head per week is a very moderate estimate of the number of cattle sold in the Chicago market. Not only does the Chicago market rule, but two or three individuals rule that market, and the result of the reciprocity in cattle would be that within a month Armour and two or three other dealers in Chicago would rule our market. The only exception would be with reference to the better class of cattle which we export to England, but as regards our second and third class, and inferior cattle, our markets would be entirely ruled by the Chicago market, which is under the control of two or three capitalists. If that be the case, I am unable to find out in what way reciprocity would be advantageous to us. By it we would lose, in addition, the advantage we now have in the English market, of having our own cattle admitted free under the most favorable circumstances. As regards unrestricted reciprocity, I should like to say this: The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has shown a good deal of assurance upon several occasions. He has shown that he is able to exhibit the silver as well as the brazen side of the shield, according to whichever might happen to suit his purpose, but I can hardly imagine even that hon. gentleman, were he, to the misfortune of his country, to take the position of Mr. O'Brien.

the Colonial Secretary: We, in Canada, find that we might gain some advantage by unrestricted reciprocity, which means absolute free trade with the United States, and in order to attain that we propose not only to tax English goods, as we tax them now, but also to impose such increased taxation as will enable us to carry on the revenues of the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would do it. Mr. O'BRIEN. I am very sorry to hear the hon. gentleman say so. I think myself he would not do it. I think that if he found himself seated on the Treasury benches, he would not do anything of the kind. He would hardly venture to take a step which would bring this country, and everything connected with it, into most immeasurable ruin. There is one other subject I would like to call the attention of the Finance Minister to, and that is the imposing of a duty of 75 cents per barrel on How is he going to ascertain that the effect of the duty will not be entirely done away with by the discriminating rate which railways give to the millers of Minneapolis and St. Paul, and other points in the United States? It has been thoroughly well established that the duty of 50 cents per barrel, which we had hitherto, was almost entirely destroyed, so far as the millers of the country are concerned, by the discriminating rates imposed by the railway companies in carrying this particular article. Before voting for that increase of duty, I should like to have some assurance from the Finance Minister that any benefit which we may be expected to derive from that duty, is not done away with by the selfishness, or whatever other name you may apply to it, of the railway companies. Of course I do not speak of flour carried in bond, but it has been ascertained that flour has been brought from various points in the United States and landed at St. John and Halifax, at rates which render competition by the Canadians impossible. If that should be the case, the duty on flour would be of no value whatever. As I am anxious that the debate should come to a conclusion at the earliest possible moment, I will confine myself to the points I have stated, and not trespass further on the time of the House.

After Recess.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). If I consulted my present health, I would be silent in this debate, but, feeling that I have a duty to perform to my constituents, I am constrained to discuss this question to the best of my ability, and I, therefore, crave the indulgence which I have always received from members on both sides of the House. I do not rise to make what the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) last night called a "blue-ruin" speech. No person in this country has a higher estimation of the country than I have. No one on this side of the House, as far as I have heard the discussions this year, and in past years, ever sought to depreciate this great country. No person knowing the great sources of wealth it possesses, could decry the merits of the country; but what we have done on this side has been to impress upon the Government that they should adopt a better Finance Minister, would have the assurance to go Government that they should adopt a better to the foot of the Throne and say to Her Majesty or policy in governing this great country than the one which is now in existence. We have pointed out, and we shall continue to point out the deleterious results of the policy adopted in 1878 and which has since been continued in this country. That policy has not brought the promised prosperity to the farmers of this country. It has not increased the price of farm produce, as was promised in 1878, but it has increased the burdens of the farmers by increasing the price of every article they pur-Therefore, we hold as a party, and I hold as an individual, that the policy that was in-augurated in 1878, though it may have been beneficial to a portion of the manufacturers of this country, has been deleterious to those classes who are outside the manufacturing interests. Before proceeding to discuss the main question upon which I intend to touch, I desire briefly to refer to some of the remarks made the other evening by the hon. President of the Council. That gentleman came here in 1868 as a brilliant young statesman, possessed of brilliant talents and great eloquence. In the first speech he delivered, in 1868 on the Budget, when he was fresh from the Eastern Townships and possessed a knowledge of the wants of the agricultural classes, of which he had said he had made a special study, hav-ing a full knowledge of the relations be-tween the farmers of Canada and the farmers of the United States, he was strongly in favor of reciprocity in natural products. After an experience of ten years, he appeared on the floor of this House, in 1878, and spoke on the celebrated amendment which was moved by the present leader of the Government. He made a speech on that occasion which was considered by his friends the ablest made in the debate. So able and so thorough was it that it was printed at the expense of the Government, and circulated throughout the length and breadth of this country, in order to bring before the people the information therein contained, and influence the electors of Canada in favor of the proposed National Policy. I admired the ability of the man, though I had not seen him at that time, who was capable of making such a good speech on the question then before him. But, after speaking in favor of a restrictive policy for the manufacturers of this country, he came back to his first thoughts as to the farmers of this country. He referred to the statement he had made in 1868, and impressed upon the Government the necessity of doing something of that kind for the farmers of Canada. Allow me to read an extract from that speech which he delivered on the 12th of March, 1878. He said:

"I should not be doing justice to my own convictions of what my duty is in addressing the House upon this question, if I did not make reference to the following proposition contained in the amendment:—And moving, as it ought to do, in the direction of reciprocity of tariffs with our neighbors, so far as the varied interest of Canada may demand, will tend to prooure for this country eventually a reciprocal trade."

"If every other member of this House should go back on the proposal contained in this amendment of the right hon, member for Kingston, I certainly could not do so without very glaring inconsistency. On the first occasion that it was my privilege to address this Parliament as a new member, as early as 1868, the doctrine which is there announced was urged by me upon the attention of the Government."

The hon. gentleman stated, the other night, that he was a close student of all questions affecting the agricultural industries of the country. He came would be injured. The Government must take here in 1868 with a full knowledge of what was for their benefit, and he laid down the proposition that reciprocity in natural products was absolutely necessary for the people he represented. If it was absolutely necessary in 1878, why is it not absolutely necessary in 1890, when he has taken altogether a different position? His influence in 1878 went so far as to secure a clause in the Customs Act of that year, providing that if the United States would allow the natural products of this country to go into their market free, the Canadian Government would permit similar articles to come into this country free. of the Customs Act of 1879: I will read section 6

"Any or all of the following articles, that is to say: Animals of all kinds, green fruit, hay, straw, bran, seeds of all kinds, vegetables (including potatoes and other roots), plants, trees and shrubs, coal and coke, salt, hops, wheat, pease and beans, barley, rye, oats, Indian corn, buckwheat and all other grain, flour of wheat and flour or rye, Indian meal and oat meal, and flour or smoked), lard, tallow, meats (tresh, salted or smoked), lard, tallow, meats (tresh, salted or smoked), and lumber, may be imported into Canada free of duty, or at a less rate of duty than is provided by this Act, upon proclamation of the Governor in Council, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satisfaction that similar articles from Canada may be imported into the United States free of duty, or at a rate of duty not exceeding that payable on the same under such proclamation when imported into the same under such proclamation when imported into Canada."

Now, I would ask this House, and I would ask the country in all seriousness, whether the Government did not believe in 1878 that it would be to the interest of the farmers of this country to have free trade in natural products? In 1888 they repeated almost identically the same section in the amended Customs Act of that year, section 9 of which reads as follows:-

"Any or all of the following things, that is to say: Animals of all kinds, hay, straw, vegetables (including potatoes and other roots), salt, pease, beans, barley, malt, rye, oats, buckwheat, flour of rye, oatmeal, buckwheat flour, butter, cheese, fish of all kinds, fish oil, products of fish and of all other creatures living in the water, fresh meats, poultry—"

And so on to the end. Now, that shows that the Government in 1888 believed that reciprocity in natural products between the United States and Canada would be beneficial to those engaged in those particular industries. Now, in the face of that standing statutory offer to the United States, of reciprocity in those articles, the President of the Council stated the other night, that if that offer were accepted by the United States, it would be detrimental to the interests of the farmers of this country. Is it consistent to state that reciprocity would be injurious to the farmers of this country, that it would bring down the price of barley to the corn standard, and still maintain upon the Statute-book the standing offer that I have read? Is the Government consistent in offering to the United States a reciprocity which, if accepted by them, would destroy our markets? In 1883 the United States did accept a portion of that offer, and in 1888 our Government placed those articles upon the free list; and if the United States tomorrow accepted that offer in its entirety, I ask, would this Government pass an Act to grant reciprocity in all these particular articles? If they would not, then they are inconsistent in holding out the offer; and if they did according, to their one horn or the other of the dilemma, and whichever horn they take, the position is anomalous. The President of the Council told us a doleful story about Vermont. I will read some of the hon. gentleman's statements that he made during his address. This is what the hon, gentleman said with regard to the State of Vermont:

"I say, with a full knowledge of the State of Vermont—for I know it from one end to the other—that it compares favorably with the farming districts of the Dominion throughout, and I think I might almost say, with the favored districts of Ontario."

Further on he says:

"When a person tells you, Sir, that that beautiful valley, which is one of the most beautiful on the continent, comparing almost with that of the Shenandoah, one of the richest alluvial valleys, is not a fine agricultural section, he tells you what he knows nothing about. If he tells you of these beautiful pastures, those hillside pastures in Vermont, which are unsurpassed in any part of this continent for dairy purposes, for pure water, for luxuriant feed, if he says we have better pastures in Canada than those for dairy purposes, I tell him he does not know Vermont as well as I do."

Immediately afterwards he quotes a circular which was issued by the Commissioner of Agriculture and Manufactures of the State of Vermont, which says:

"Good farms, with fair buildings and maple sugar orchards, can be purchased at from $3 to $5 per acre; others, with better-buildings and near railway or village, can be bought for from $5 to $10 per acre. None of these lands are far from a ready market, and all are adapted to dairy purposes. Payment is made easy. Farm labor is in great demand at good wages. In many sections those desiring can procure work through the winter on wood and lumber jobs."

Then he concludes by saying:

"Now, where are those lands? In what part of the State? I ask hon members opposite to look at the proportion of that map which is marked red, and there you see the proportion, in the Connecticut Valley, in the best counties and towns in Vermont, of lands that are to be sold from $3 to $5 an acre, and many of them unoccupied." Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman, no doubt, meant what he said. He said that the lands were good, that the grass was luxuriant, that the plains were as fertile as the valley of the Shenandoah, he said that they were equal to those of Ontario, and then he reads a circular stating that such beautiful land, containing such pastures, such alluvial virgin soil, upon which were erected good farm buildings, could be purchased for from $3 to $5 Is there any person in this House who believes that story? Is there any one who reads the whole account and who believes that lands of that quality, with fair farm buildings erected thereon, can be bought for that money? Why, the buildings alone would cost more than $300 to $500. The farms we are told are adapted for raising cattle and for dairy purposes. We know that the markets in New York take a great deal of dairy products, we know that Boston and other cities consume immense quantities of dairy produce, we send our own produce there; and do you suppose that the farmers of Vermont, having access to the same markets, without having to pay any duty, can be in such a condition that they would sell their lands for from $3 to $5 an acre? $500 would not build a house and barn, so the land itself must be given away. Then he says that good wages are paid to farm hands, with ready employment. How could a farmer whose land was only worth $300 to $500 These lands were near a good market for farm hon. gentleman to make a simple question of Mr. MACDONALD (Huron).

products, and yet the hon. gentleman had the hardihood to try and palm off on intelligent members of this House such a story as he told. is another point to which I desire to reply, and I think I can present an answer which will satisfy the hon. gentleman. If my own argument will not suffice, I shall call in the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) to assist me. The President of the Council said:

"As to the exodus which is so much talked about, there was never a greater humbug attempted to be palmed off on any intelligent body than this great exodus which has been exploded in this House from time to time. No evidence is ever given of it."

I måde a calculation some time ago, which I thought would be acceptable to the House, and the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) made a statement which endorses almost exactly the estimate I made in regard to the exodus of this country. Let me point out how the hon. gentleman kindly came We, of to my assistance in the hour of extremity. the Opposition, do not decry this country when we say that many thousands are leaving it annually; we only regret that the exodus is so large as it is. This country has expended within the last ten years nearly $3,000,000 for immigration purposes, especially to place immigrants in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and we are anxious to see the magnificent resources of the North-West developed. We are willing to admit that our North-West is far superior to anything on the other side of the line, and we are anxious to send people there; but surely, if the Government have expended $3,000,000 during ten years and have brought 763,119 immigrants to this country, it is deeply to be regretted that so many of them have filtered through to the United States, to add to the strength, dignity and power of another and a foreign nation. In 1881, the population of this country, according to the census, was 4,345,292. The natural increase over the death rate should be at least one and a-half per cent, per annum; it is generally placed in books at 2 per cent. Making a calculation on that basis would give an additional population of 521,435. According to the report of the Minister of Agriculture for 1889, it appears that during the last eight years 763,119 immigrants arrived who stated their intention to remain in Canada. Adding those figures together we should have a population of 5,629,846. Assuming that we have a present population of 5,000,000, we have lost 629,846 during the last eight years. challenge any hon. gentleman to make a calculation upon a more sound basis than this. I now call upon the hon. gentleman for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) to come to my assistance with his evidence. He has great faith in American blue-books.

Mr. HESSON.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). At all events, when a Canadian blue-book will not suit his purpose he selects American blue-books, and obtains the figures to prove his contention.

Mr. HESSON. No.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I am willing to accept the authority he adduced last night. stated that, according to the United States bluebooks, 393,000 Canadians entered the United States during the years 1881-82-83-84-85; and he said that since 1885 there was no basis per one hundred acres, pay high wages for labor? for information. But if it had occurred to the rule of three he could have obtained the result. The question, would be: if, during five years the United States obtained 393,000 Canadians, what number would they have obtained during the eight years and he would have obtained the fourth number of the equation. It would be 628,800 who went to the United States during those years.

Perhaps the hon. gentleman Mr. HESSON. will allow me to explain, as he asked me to come to his assistance. What I said last night was that the American returns gave 129,000 Canadians as going to the United States in 1881. That number gradually declined year after year, until the last year of the statement showed only 38,000. The figures showed a gradual decline, so that the number would have entirely run out in the course of three years more; and yet the hon. gentleman was so unfair as to make his calculation on the average of the first year, while there was a sliding And the hon, gentleman knows I am correct.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The hon, gentleman gave the numbers for each year. He is correct in stating that there was a reduction for the first year, but the other years stood nearly equal.

Mr. HESSON. No.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Every person who is conversant with the history of the country well knows that during the last two or three years there were more people leaving this country than for years previous. Hon. members will remember that the period of prosperity under the National Policy, if such a period ever occurred, was during the years 1881-82-83, and during those years of prosperity, fewer people left this country. During the last three years, owing to the failure of the crops, low prices, heavy taxation, extravagance on the part of the Government, and increase of debt, the number of those who have left the country has largely increased. I have taken the minimum, and the hon. gentleman, according to his statement, makes out that nearly as many people have left the country as I stated.

Mr. HESSON. We do not accept the figures as correct.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I cannot usually compliment the hon. gentleman as to his accuracy; but I agree with him in the figures he presented the other evening. I will now pass from the consideration of the remarks made by hon. gentlemen and come to another part of the subject under discussion. I do not understand hon, members when they say that the imposition of duties on the necessities of life does not increase the price. The action of the Government ever day proves the contrary. did they, the other day, impose an additional duty of 25 cents per barrel on flour? Will not the millers receive an additional price for that flour? Do you think, Sir, the millers from every section of the Dominion who have filled the lobbies of this House so long and so continuously during the last few years, do not intend to obtain an additional profit? Do you think the millers attended the farmers' institutes throughout the country, and told the farmers that, if they received an additional duty on flour, they would be able to pay an additional price for their wheat, without expect-to give an advantage? It will benefit one class at the expense of another. There is the removal of the duty on molasses. Was this not proposed for the purpose of compensating the Maritime Provinces' people for the increased duty on flour? Why was the tariff revised in regard to the duty on commeal, if it was not for the purpose of giving compensation to the people of the Lower Provinces for the increased duty on flour and pork? In this way, on the one hand the Government says: We will improve your position by enhancing the price which you can obtain on the market, but we will give to another class a compensation in an opposite way; thus admitting every day that the imposition of duties increase the price of the articles upon which they are put. Not only that, but the imposition of duties upon these articles will increase the price of every other article of a similar nature that is manufactured or produced in the country. This is the fundamental principle of political economy. There may be a few exceptions, but they are caused by pecular conditions. It is not a duty in the true sense of the word. The money does not go to increase the revenue, but, Sir, the extra price paid upon these articles by the hardworking people of this country, goes as an additional profit into the pockets of the manufacturer and into the pockets of the parties who supply the people of this country with these articles. No person who has studied political economy will deny that this is the effect of the imposition of duty. Well, Sir, the ablest Finance Minister we ever had in this House—one of the ablest, I should say, for of course we always have the ablest on our side-the ablest Finance Minister we have ever had on the Conservative side, acknowledges the principle that wherever duty is imposed on any particular article, every article of a similar nature, whether manufactured in the country or not, is increased in price, and when the duties are reduced upon articles the effect is to reduce the price on every other similar article. Let me first quote what the present Finance Minister stated last Session in his Budget speech, and then I will quote what Sir A. T. Galt, the able Finance Minister to whom I have referred, said on this subject:

"Now, Sir, we will take the case of the farmer of this country, whom we all love, and for whom we all desire to do the best we can. The farmer of this country lives upon his farm in the rich Province of Ontario, we shall say. Nearly all the foods that are used by the farmer are raised upon his own farm and pay no duty; the wheat he raises he has ground at the neighboring mill, it is brought into his home and he pays no duty upon it. The home itself, the outhouses, the barns, all that is necessary in the way of housing for the work of the farm is built out of woods which grow in this country, of which we have a surplus and upon which he pays no duty. The clothing for himself and his family is in many cases made from the wool which is raised by the farmer himself, or, if not raised by the farmer himself, or, if not raised by the farmer himself, and his family with the products of our mills, the raw material of which is admitted free. His lumber of all kinds, his farmitupe of all staple and solid kinds, his farming machinery is made, and made to the best advantage, out of the woods of his own country. His fuel grows in the forests which are all about him, or is found in the mines in inexhaustible quantities in this country. So that, taking it in the gross, in the rough, the staple articles of consumption, and of housing, and of fuel for the farmer are those of which this country produces a surplus, which are free within the borders of this country and upon which not one cent of tax is paid."

Speaking of the artisan, the Finance Minister says:

Speaking of the artisan, the Finance Minister says:

ing some profits? How do you expect they will be able to pay an additional price for wheat, if there is to be no addition to the price of flour? Do you think that the imposition of duties is not going the larger items in the expenditure of the artisan, as well as in the expenditure of the farm, are obtained in this country, which produces a surplus of them, and no duty is paid upon them."

I do not know whether or not the Finance Minister was trying to humbug the people of this country by using the word "duty," or whether he meant that the farmer in using these particular articles, which were not imported from foreign countries, paid no tax into the Treasury. I contend that on all these articles mentioned by the Finance Minister, the farmer and artisan pay an extra price to the manufacturer or to the party who produces them, and, therefore, it matters not to the farmer and artisan if a dollar is taken out of their pocket, whether it goes to the Minister of Customs or to enrich the manufacturer. The dollar is gone, and the imposition remains the same. Now, Sir, let me read the testimony of the Hon. Sir Alexander Tilloch Galt in opposition to that theory of the present Finance Minister. Sir A. T. Galt, in his Budget speech of the 16th April, 1862, page 37 of the Hansard, says:

"Now, if upon one hand we get increased trade by a low tariff of Customs, it is equally clear on the other that every article made in the country will be decreased in value to the consumer by the reduced amount of duty upon that particular article at the Custom house.

"It is not merely upon the quantity of imports and articles taxed that the price is raised, but every similar article consumed in the country is increased in price tantamount to the duty imposed."

That is the testimony of the wisest financier that ever appeared in the Conservative party in the history of Canada. I might strengthen Sir A. T. Galt's evidence by quoting the opinion of Sir Leonard Tilley, in regard to him. Speaking of Sir A. T. Galt's appointment as delegate to Spain and the British West Indies a few years ago, Sir Leonard Tilley says:

"Sir A. T. Galt, one of the ablest statesmen of the Dominion—a gentleman whose experience in connection with the finances of this country and whose knowledge of its trade and commerce cannot be surpassed by any."

Now, Sir, I have looked through the records in the library to see if any one has said so much of our present Finance Minister, but I can find no note of commendation for him. I have placed before this House the opinion of our present Finance Minister with regard to the taxation. I have contrasted his opinion with the opinion of Sir A. T. Galt, and taking Sir A. T. Galt's opinion in preference to that of the present Finance Minister, we find that the farmers and the artisans of this country pay duty on the following articles of prime necessity: Sugar, spices, raisins, currants, early fruits and flour, from 30 to 60 per cent.; locks, nails, hinges, paints, varnishes, glass and putty, 35 to 50 per cent.; carpets, blinds, pictures, chairs, tables, sideboards, bedsteads, bedclothes, &c., 35 to 60 per cent.; crockery, stoves, tinware, knives and forks, spoons, &c., 35 to 60 per cent.; cottons, prints, denims, dress stuffs, hosiery, mantles, tweeds, trimmings, beavers, gloves, mitts, hats, shoes, rubbers, &c., &c., 30 to 70 per cent; hoes, rakes, ploughs, harrows, cultivators, scufflers, seed drills, forks, spades, reapers, mowers, threshing machines, waggons, carriages, cutters, harness, &c., &c., 35 to 60 per eent. Now, if these things bear an extra price in these hard times, when the fertility of the soil has failed the farmers, when prices in the home and foreign market have been largely reduced, can you wonder that the Reform party feel country if they would not prefer to accept the Mr. Macdonald (Huron).

deeply in earnest and plead with the Government to adopt a policy more in consonance with the needs of the great consuming classes of Canada? we point out the effects of this policy on the various consuming classes, we are told by the supporters of the Government that we are not patriots, but are decrying the great country to which we belong. No, Sir; we are standing by the helm of the ship of state while she is buffetted by storms and implore the pilot to guide this ship of state, with a steadier hand; that is what we are doing. Sir, I want to give the opinion of the agriculturists them-selves. We have professional politicians in this country and in this House, who tell us that the farmers of this country are fairly prosperous. I think the hon. Finance Minister, the other day, used that expression. Well, I do not think that hon, gentleman has posted himself on the actual condition of the farmers in my section. He did, I believe, come to Huron on one occasion electioneering, with the leader of the Government, in the car "Jamaica." They came to ask the people there to support the Government. They made able speeches, which resulted in defeating a Conservative candidate in a Conservative constituency and sending to this House a supporter of the Opposition. The question whether there is a depression in this country among the farmers or not should be left to the decision of the farmers themselves. They met the other day in the Central Farmers' Institute in Toronto. There were seventyfour present at the meeting, where a resolution was passed which I will read. They were all skilled agriculturists and intelligent men. There were Conservatives and Reformers there. After full deliberation they passed the following resolution by a vote of seventy to four :-

"That this Central Institute do memorialise the Dominion Government that—
"Whereas, we consider the present high tariff is very injurious to the agricultural interest, making what we buy proportionately dearer than the products we sell;

only proportionately dealer than the products we sent, and "Whereas, the said high tariff has given rise to the combine system by which competition is to a great extent prevented; and "Whereas, the agricultural interest is suffering under serious depression, unable to bear the strain occasioned by the tariff and combines systems as aforesaid, and as the agricultural interest represents a large majority of the nonulation:

the agricultural interest represents a large majority of the population; "Therefore, the Central Institute do respectfully ask the Government to reduce the tariff on articles of prime necessity to the farmer, such as iron, steel, coal, cottons, woollens, rubbers, sugars, corn, and salt, to such an extent as to relieve the agriculturist of the unequal burden under which he is now laboring."

Now, Sir, it is not likely that the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) or the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) understand the interests of the agriculturists of this country as well as those seventy-four men; yet the hon, member for Hamilton, who understands no more about the interests of the agriculturists than he does about pigeons, comes to this House and tells us that there is no depression among the farmers of this country, and the hon. member for North Perth comes with a smiling face and genial countenance and tells us that he knows from his experience that there is no depression among the agriculturists of Ontario. On the one scale we place the opinion of seventy practical farmers, and on the other scale we place the opinion of the hon. member for North Perth, and I ask the House and the testimony of those men who speak from their own experience.

Mr. HESSON. I am afraid they are all Grits.

Mr. MACDONALD(Huron). If the hon. member for North Perth would not be so boisterous, he would bestow a favor on me and a little more dignity on this House. I wish also to read a resolution that was passed in a farmers' institute in the riding which I have the honor to represent. The president of that institute is a good, honest and conscientious Liberal-Conservative. I met this gentleman on the public platform in 1887. I found him a very liberal Conservative, so liberal that he wished to conserve the farmer's interest by the policy of unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. At that institute there was present Mr. Plewis, a man capable of representing the interests of the millers of this country, who asked that institute to pass a resolution favoring a duty of $1 a barrel on flour. After a speech of an hour before the farmers at that institute the son of my eminent friend from South Huron (Mr. Mc-Millan) moved this resolution:

"That, whereas, the present tariff upon wheat, flour and other coarse grains is highly injurious to the agri-cultural interests of Canada; be it resolved that we, the farmers of East Huron, hereby demand that these duties be entirely removed, thereby removing those unjust restrictions on the farmers."

There, was a body of farmers, consisting of both parties in politics, and that resolution I am told was passed with only two dissentients. That expresses the judgment of the farmers. Yet the hon member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown), who probably never was in a farm house for three days in his life, and the hon. gentleman from North Perth (Mr. Hesson), will set up their authority in exposition to the judgment of these men, and say that the National Policy is not bearing so heavily against the interests of the farmers. I will give you the reasons the farmers in my section are opposed to increased duty on flour. During the last few years, the system of milling has entirely changed. The system of grinding by the stone has largely passed away. The farmers do not receive the product of their own wheat, but they sell their wheat to the millers at export prices, and then they buy the flour from the millers they require for home consumption, or, which is the same thing, the farmers exchange wheat for flour. They sell their wheat at prices governed by the Liverpool market, and buy their flour at prices governed by the increased duty, and as there is comparatively no export trade in flour of the grade sent to the Maritime Provinces and the eastern markets, the price of flour is governed by different conditions than that of wheat. The increase of duty imposed upon flour is borne by all consumers, whether they be farmers, artisans or laborers. Let me give a miller's opinion of the duty. I will give you the opinion of a man well up in his business, whom I have known for twenty years. He writes to me as follows:-

twenty years. He writes to me as follows:—

"I observe that the millers are down there strongly represented, and leaving no stone unturned to get the $\foat{Sl}$ a barrel duty put on flour. Our firm is not in sympathy with the movement. It is a relic of the age of barbarism. From the time of the inauguration of the accursed National Policy it has been a continual and severe struggle for a bare existence. Before that period the writer paid a rent of $1,800 per annum for his mill. Kept everything in repair, and made money. * * * * The Divine curse has and will rest on the whole scheme. It is dishonest as between man and man. It lacks every virtue of good business principles. It is ruin to both the milling industry, and the farming community.

"What do we need? To kick down the fences, send the Tory army of Custom officers to the d——l if they will the Tory army of Custom officers to the d—lif they will not reform.

"Then let every mill or miller who cannot successfully compete with Uncle Sam, without $1 a barrel protection, if placed upon equal terms in competition, get out. It is only a question of a little time, when, owing to disagreement among themselves and the pinching and rained condition of the milling and farming industries, the Tory party will get hurled from power and the name of Sir John Macdonald, with many of his colleagues, will become, in Canadian history, as odious as that of Warren Hastings or Cardinal Wolsey, the son of the butcher."

Mr. HESSON. Is that from the president of the Millers' Association? Because I know the gentleman very well, and I know he was here as a delegate asking the imposition of the duty on flour -Mr. John Hayes, of Listowel, a good Reformer.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I have no objection at all, when a proper question is put, to answer it. I know Mr. Hayes. I know that he owns a mill, and that he has been seeking an increase of duty, and has obtained it, and no doubt it will put money in his pocket. That is his business. He is a shrewd commercial business man, who looks to his own interest, and lets politics take care of themselves. I want to turn to another question, and that is the results accomplished by the National Policy. It is a policy which is con-tinually changing. The United States constitute a large market for our export. The Committee on Ways and Means, the other day, of which Mr. McKinley is chairman, reported to Congress a resolution recommending an increase of duties upon importations from Canada. The committee propose to add duties on articles imported from Canada, which will be disastrous to our trade if the proposition receives sanction by Congress. The proposition receives sanction by Congress. committee proposes to increase the duty to $30 a head on all horses up to the value of $150, and 30 per cent. afterwards; on cattle, it proposes to charge a duty of $10 on any beast of over two years of age. Again, it is threatened to impose 25 per cent. on all other live animals exported to the United States. Barley, one of the principal products of the farm in this country, and a crop which pays better than any other cereal produced in this country, is threatened with a duty of 30 cents a bushel, which will be prohibitive, and will consequently have the effect of confining the barley production of this country to the wants of the Canadian market. Butter it proposes to tax 6 cents a pound; cheese, 6 cents; eggs, 5 cents. We sent last year to the United States, 14,000,000 dozen eggs, to the value of over $2,000,000; or, in other words, about one-half the value of all the exports from every manufacturing industry in this country. If a duty of 5 cents per dozen is placed on the export trade of eggs from this country, the result will be injurious to the Canadian farmers. Hay, $4 a Apples, 25 cents a bushel, or 75 cents a When we consider that we sent last year ton. to the United States 144,000 barrels of apples. Then there are 2 cents a pound on lard, 3 cents on live poultry, 5 cents on dressed poultry, 5 cents on bacon, and so on through the list. On the other hand, a resolution has been reported to Congress by the Committee of Ways and Means, of which Mr. Hitt is chairman. It reads:

as would result in the complete removal of all duties upon trade between Canada and the United States, he shall appoint three commissioners to meet those who may be designated to represent the Government of Canada, to consider the best method of extending the trade relations between Canada and the United States, and to ascertain on what terms greater freedom of intercourse between the two countries can best be secured, and the said commissioners shall report to the President, who shall lay the report before Congress."

On a casual consideration of these reports we would almost suppose that the two were inconsistent, but they are perfectly consistent. The United States say to us, on the one hand: If you want to have a policy of retaliation, we are prepared for you; we have sixty-five million people and you have only five million, we can afford to dispense with your trade altogether, but you cannot afford to dispense with our markets without disaster to your interests. If, upon the other hand, you want greater freedom of trade, appoint your commissioners and we will name ours, and then let them meet and reason together. Let them consider the whole commercial relations of the two countries, and devise means by which freer and broader trade relations may be established between the two countries, equitable and beneficial to both. If anything were proposed against the interests of Canada, surely our commissioners could refuse to accept anything derogatory to our dignity or to the best interests of our people. I cannot understand why the Government of this country are determined to keep up their National Policy, irrespective of the interests of the people, unless it be on the ground stated by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) the other evening, that he would rather follow the Tories with protection into the place which burns with fire and brimstone than he would go into Paradise with the Reformers and free trade. I would remind that hon. gentleman that he is an Equal Righter as well as myself, and we all expect to go to Paradise, and I hope he will not leave us until we bring him into that happy land.

An hon. MEMBER. The noble thirteen.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). We can only count twelve, if the hon. gentleman has decided to leave us and we will have to report that:

There were a dozen and one who left the party fold, But one went out on the hills for party policy or gold, He's away on Tory mountains bleak and bare, Away from the dozen's to his old chieftain's care.

Allow me to pass to another subject. I was speaking as to the burdens that have been placed upon the people of this country in the form of taxation, but that is only one kind of burden. can appraise the financial burdens placed upon the people in the way of taxation, but the money of the people may be extravagantly expended, and the debt may be increased, and burdens may be imposed upon them in that way. It would behoove the Government, when the farmers and laborers are suffering, instead of adding duties, to reduce them, and to give up this policy of vacillation in the tariff. The National Policy is not a permanent policy. It is changed from year to year. Our lobbies are filled by deputations asking for changes on this and that article. The position of the Government in this matter reminds me of a little story. He was An Irishman was taking a bull to market. leading him by a rope, one end of which was tied round the bull's horns and the other around the wrist of the Irishman. They went on all right until they got to the market town, when all at once the bull tossed his head in the air and rushed down the Government own all the water-works that Mr. Macdonald (Huron).

the street. He sharply turned one corner and then around another, and dragged the Irishman after him. A countryman who was standing near said: "Hilloa, Pat, where are you going?" "By my sowl," said Pat, "I don't know; ask the bull." So it is with the Government of the present day. The Government are every year changing the tariff to suit interested parties. They are driven from to suit interested parties. pillar to post by outside influence, and when they are asked where this tinkering is to stop, they are as ignorant as the Irishman was of his destination. We are told that they do not know the power that controls them—the manufacturers, monopolists and combinesters. The hon. member for Perth (Mr. Hesson) last night made a reference to the debt of the country and to the assets we had against that debt. He admitted that there was a very large debt, but he said there was the Canadian Pacific Railway from one ocean to the other, and there was the Intercolonial Railway, and there were our canals, which were aiding the commerce of the country, and all these were assets. I ask the hon. gentleman if the Canadian Pacific Railway is an asset of this country? Who is receiving the profits from the running of the Canadian Pacific Railway? Into whose pockets are the large profits of that road going? Where is the income arising from the Intercolonial Railway? Where is the income arising from the canals; there is no income from these public works? Sir, there is no colony of the British Empire to-day that is so heavily burdened with debt as Canada, and which has less to show for it.

Mr. HESSON. Australia.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I will show very soon that the hon, gentleman knows very little about Australia. We have a net debt of 237 millions; we have the Intercolonial Railway, which has cost us 52 millions; we have canals, which have cost us about 37 millions; and we have not one solitary asset in Canada to-day that is yielding a revenue. Last year the Intercolonial Railway represented a net loss of \$454,000, which would represent a debt, instead of an asset, of over 15 millions, and we might justly add this sum to our present debt. Now, in regard to Australia. The seven provinces of that country have a debt of 830 million dollars, or \$230 for each man, woman and child. That is a larger debt than ours, but the hon, gentleman must remember that of that 830 million dollars of debt of Australia, 480 millions were borrowed for the purpose of building national railways, of which they have no less than 12,000 miles, owned by the Government, not by private companies, and the proceeds coming into the national exchequer, and not going into private pockets. The railways of Australia are not in the position of our Intercolonial Railway, for they gave a net return last year of nearly $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon the capital invested in them or a total net earning of \$13,500,000. I would ask the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) to compare that showing with the showing of our Canadian railways. In addition to that, all the telegraph lines of Australasia are national in their character, they are owned by the Government, and have cost that country many millions; many of these lines are now bringing in a revenue to the Government. Sir, I hope the hon gentleman will listen and learn. In addition to the railways and telegraph lines, have been built for the purposes of irrigation, and which are let out to parties using them, and in that way a large revenue is brought into the public exchequer. In addition to that, the Government own the sewerage system, which also brings in a revenue. Moreover, all the educational insti-tutions of that country are supported by the several Colonial Governments. Last year four of the seven colonies paid no less than 11 million dollars for educational purposes, and during the last 20 years 150 million dollars have been paid for educational purposes, for which there is no corresponding expenditure by the Federal Government of Canada. When we consider all these things, it will be seen that the debt of Australasia does not bear as heavily upon the people as has been represented by hon. gentlemen opposite. There is another point which I wish to present to the House. Canada, with a population of 5 millions, has a foreign trade of only 200 million dollars, whereas Australasia, with a population of $3\frac{1}{2}$ millions, has a foreign trade of \$510,390,000; showing the extraordinary volume of trade which the people of that country carry on with foreign nations, and the wealth which pours into that country and enables them to pay the interest on their debt without feeling it. The Finance Minister, last year had the hardihood to compare the debt of Canada with that of Australasia; whereas, according to these facts, no comparison can hold between them. Deduct the cost of the railways, canals, water-works, sewers and educational institutions from the 830,000,000, and Australasia has a less debt to-day than Canada, and much greater wealth to meet it. Let me give a few more items of information to the hon. gentleman, which will, perhaps, prevent him from interrupting future speakers on this question. We cannot suppose that the debt weighs heavily upon the Australasians, when a small colony like Victoria, with only one million of people, spent \$132,128,530 on railways; on water-works, \$26,725,750; on state schools and buildings, for which we have no corresponding expenditure in Canada—because education in this country is borne by the various Local Legislatures—\$8,754,845, or a total for public works of \$147,609,125. Now, when we consider the immense wealth of Australia, and the condition of Canada to-day, I think I am justified in saying that there is no colony in the British Empire upon which its debt rests so heavily as it does on Canada. The value of the assessable property in Victoria is \$689,428,505, and the average per capita is \$680. Do you suppose the average wealth of the people of this country, notwithstanding its boasted prosperity, averages \$680 per head? The average for each family in Victoria is \$3,400. Now, let me give you another fact to prove my point that the burden upon this country is heavier than it is upon Australia. heard an hon. gentleman to-night speak about New South Wales as being a free trade country, and he compared it with other countries that had a restrictive policy. New South Wales is situated alongside of Victoria, and possesses about the same population, and has gained equally in commerce, in population and in manufacturing industries. I might go on and describe it, but it is unnecessary, as its history is nearly the same as that of Victoria. I think, therefore, that I have proved my point. Have I not shown that the upon them in order to meet those expenditures?

debt of Australia, large as it is, does not bear so heavily upon the people as our debt does on Canadians? Now, while I am speaking of debts, it may be interesting to see how our debt compares with that of the United States. The following table shows the debt of the United States at several periods in their history :-

Year.	Population.	Debt.	Per Capita.
1830 1840 1850 1860 1870 1880	12,820,868 17,019,641 23,067,262 31,183,714 38,115,641 49,371,340 60,000,000	$ 48,565,406 3,308,124 63,452,773 64,842,287 2,480,672,427 2,120,415,370 1,134,062,246	$ 3.55 0.20 2.75 2.10 65.00 43.00 18.90

In 1889, notwithstanding the expenditure connected with the last civil war, when money was poured out as water, the debt of the United States was only $18.90 per capita, while that of Canada, which had not gone through a single fight, except that of Batoche, when half a dozen were engaged on each side, reaches no less than $47.80 per capita. It is time the Government called a halt, and ask themselves if the public moneys are not being expended too extravagantly. In 1868, when we had a population of 3,500,000, our total expenditure was $13,460,000. When the Reform party came into power, Sir Leonard Tilley said that the whole business of the country could be managed on an expenditure of $22,000,000, and if the Conservatives were in power they would succeed in doing so. The hon, member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), during the five years his Government were in power, only increased the expenditure $187,000, or an annual increase of $37,500. When the Tory party came into power in 1878 the expenditure increased by leaps and bounds, until to-day it is very nearly $38,000,000, or $16,000,000 more than Sir Leonard Tilley stated, in 1873, the country could be thoroughly and efficiently governed in all Departments. Yet we find the Finance Minister to-day stating that the expenditure cannot be cut down one dollar. He stated the other day-I hope in the interests of the country his prophecy will prove true—that the increases had now reached a close and that the annual expenditure would be reduced. He said the present expenditures would not continue to increase after 1892. Sir Charles Tupper made the same prophecy when he was going out, but he went out, and the expenditure has increased, as the Finance Minister told us the other day. It is time we should call a halt, and look carefully at the expenditure side of the financial question. Why should we, during the depressed times, make such large expenditures in the Department of Public Works? Why should we give so many subsidies to build small railways in different sections of the country, which roads are wholly for local purposes? Why should we build Customs houses and post offices in various towns for the purpose of securing votes at the elections, when the people are already groaning beneath their burden? Why should we expend $200,000 a year in pensioning civil servants while the people are groaning under taxation imposed

Why should so many contingencies appear in the Auditor General's Report? Why should we expend over a million dollars on the militia, when We are one-half would suffice to defend Canada? in no danger of being attacked, and the raw material from the farm and the counter would be sufficient to put down any rebellion or quarrel among ourselves, instead of spending a million and a quarter on militia. I might go through other Departments and point out where large expenditures might be saved and reductions effected. know the Minister of Militia is thinking that I am talking nonsense in regard to militia; I see it in his face. But if the militia were wiped out, the hon. gentleman would not be Minister of war, and he would not be so bold, so valorous, or so loyal, probably, as he is to-day, because these qualities are forced upon him from the position he occupies in connection with the militia of Canada, and, therefore, I can quite understand why he does not agree with my view of this particular question. I desire briefly to allude to the foreign trade of the country, which has not been dwelt upon by any speaker in the course of this debate. The Finance Minister last year touched upon it very daintily, and I wish to bring to the attention of the House what the hon. gentleman stated last year, and I am sorry the First Minister is not in his place, because I intend to show what he stated in regard to foreign trade a few years ago. I have shown that the foreign trade of Australia is $510,390,000, or a per capita trade of $142, while the Canadian foreign trade is only $200,000,000, or a per capita trade of $40. But hon, gentlemen, in 1878, stated that, even if they failed to secure reciprocity with the United States, they were determined to open up foreign markets-those of British Guiana, the Argentine Republic, the West Indies, France, Germany, and other countries, which were ready to take the products of our people. If the United States refused, by their high tariff, to admit Canadian products into their markets, Canada would have other markets independent of the United States. Speaking on this question on 21st April, 1882, Sir John A. Macdonald is reported in Hansard, page 1085, as follows:

"I am not aware—my memory may be at fault—that those gentlemen opposite ever made a single advance to any foreign nation, or sought to develop the trade of Canada in any port of the civilised or uncivilised world. I believe it was in our time that the development and extension of our trade was commenced, and I am proud to say that our mother country is truly a mother country in the best sense of the word, always assisting us, especially of late, in any attempt or any expressed desire of Canada for the development of her trade with any and every country in the world."

Further he said :

"We commenced at once to extend our trade. In the first place we went to a nation on this side of the Atlantic, and we have now got the official, the not ostentatious, but, to a great extent, the expressed assistance of Her Majiesty's representative at the Court of Brazil, and we have now a line running monthly between Canada and Brazil, and although that trade is in its infancy, I think the indications are clear that one of our best markets in the future will be Brazil. The commodities of the two countries are of such diverse nature that we can profitably send our productions to Brazil and receive hers in exchange."

Now, Mr. Speaker, just notice here the evidences of success that were set forth by the right hon. the First Minister. He said that we would have the experienced assistance of Her Majesty's official officer at Brazil, that the products of that country were diverse from the products of this country, and, therefore, that Brazil would become a profitable market for the products of Canada. Let us see what the hon. Finance Minister said with respect to trade with these countries. I call his particular attention to the remarks he made last year, and I was astonished this year that in his Budget speech he did not make any reference to that trade which he promised us. Last year the Finance Minister said:

"There are, lying to the south of us, countries that are willing to trade with us and in which an advantageous trade to Canada could be established. The vast country of South America, with its different governments, with its vast natural resources, with its demand for certain articles which we can supply of the best kind, is ready for trade with us on equal conditions with all other countries of the world. The West Indies, rich in elements of trade which complement ours and needing a great many of the products and manufactures which we can supply, afford a field for what we believe to be a permanent and profitable trade."

Now, Sir, these were the prophetic visions of two members of the Government a year ago, and I would call the attention of the Finance Minister now to what has been accomplished. After he and the First Minister made that boast, and after portraying such a beautiful picture as the Finance Minister did, it will be interesting to know how much of our products we send to these countries. Brazil has a population of 14,000,000 and our exports to that country for the years mentioned are as follows :--

In 1882 we had a subsidised line of steamers, and the representative of Great Britain in our fayor, as the First Minister said, and yet our exports decreased. Instead of extending our trade to these southern countries, during these eight years we have a decrease of 32 per cent., after all the efforts that have been made by the Government of this This may arise from either one of two First, because Brazil may not be a country. natural market for us, or that we fail on account of Canada not having the power of making our own treaties. The failure of the Government may be owing to the operation of both these causes as well as to their own negligence, but whatever the cause or causes may have been the failure is quite appparent. At all events, it proves conclusively to this House and to this country, that we have not established that trade with Brazil which was promised by the Government. Now, Sir, I will give the hon. members of the Government a little more information with regard to our trade with the south, and I hope they will look after it. In British Guiana, one of the countries of South America, with a population of 1,250,000, the following are the statistics for 1887, the last year for which I could obtain them :-

TRADE WITH BRITISH GUIANA.

These articles which I have mentioned can all be supplied by Canada just as well as by the United States. It will be seen from these returns that we did not export one single pound of cheese to British Guiana from Canada, the greatest cheese producing country in the world, which exported cheese to Great Britain and to other markets last year of over 88 million pounds. Is this the result of the efforts of the Government in establishing a trade towards the south? Is this the only result they can show, after having a line of steamers running for several years and three lines of steamers during the last year, subsidised by the money of the people of Canada? I believe that we, on this side of the House, are entitled to receive some information as to the reason why no better success has attended the efforts of the Government? If no market can be established there, why should thousands and thousands of dollars be spent in seeking to establish one where there is not a natural market for Canadian products. We were told by the Finance Minister last year that he was bound to establish a large trade with the West Indies. What has he accomplished in this direction? Let me give you the figures of the export trade of Canada to the West Indies. They are as

1885	1,583,800
1888	1,491,824
1889	1,658,844

In 1878, the Reform Government was in power, but every year since that the export trade with the West Indies has been a declining trade, notwithstanding the boast and the efforts made to extend it in that direction, and last year we found it decreased 51½ per cent. as compared with the trade in 1878. While at the same time they were shutting out the United States markets, which are our natural markets, the Government did not succeed in establishing markets in other lands which would purchase our products. Now, Sir, let me refer to France. France is a country with which I have always thought Canada should trade to a very great extent. We are bound to France by ties of consanguinity. Nearly 1,500,000 of our people belong to the same nationality, speak the same language, worship in the same church, and have the same habits and The people of France require a large quantity of the articles produced in this country, and we require a large quantity of the articles produced by France; and what could be more reasonable on the part of the Canadian Government than to establish a lucrative trade with that country? But what has been the case? Sir Alexander Galt went, a few years ago, to France to negotiate a trade treaty between that country and Canada; but he had to stand behind the Ambassador of England, and, according to his own statement, he was not able to reach the proper executive power in France; but everything he had to say had to be filtered through the English Ambassador, and he failed to secure a treaty. Afterwards Sir Charles Tupper, another able man, went to France with the same object, but he also failed to secure enlarged trade with France. Now, Sir, let us look at the meagre export trade of Canada to that great country. In 1878 our exports to France amounted to only $369,391; in 1882 they rose to $825,573;

in 1885 they fell to $303,309, and in 1889 they were $334,210, $35,181 less than twelve years ago. At the same time the Argentine Republic, a country 2,000 or 3,000 miles farther away from France, and producing almost the same products as Canada, with only 3,800,000 people, sent to France in 1887 $24,871,354 worth, or 72 times as much as Canada sent in the same year. Now, I ask the hon. Finance Minister why we cannot establish a similar trade; and if we cannot, we should seek to establish better commercial relations with the country to the south of us. Let us look at our trade with Spain. It was said a few years ago by the party in power that there would probably be a large trade establish between this country and Spain. Has that prediction been fulfilled? Canada's exports to Spain in 1878 were $47,816, in 1882 $108,082, in 1885 $132,695, in 1888 $52,417, and in 1889 only $13,526; whereas the Argentine Republic, which is 2,000 miles farther away, sends to Spain $1,321,203 worth of products, or 95 times as much as Canada. Will hon, gentlemen opposite tell us the reason of the failure of our trade with foreign counties, and especially the failure of their efforts to open up the markets of Spain to the products of this country? Now, we have a country almost adjoining ours with which our trade is declining; I refer to the colony of Newfoundland. Our exports to Newfoundland have been as follows :-

1885	1,670,968
1000	1,000

This shows a decrease of 37½ per cent. since 1878. Now, if our trade is decreasing all around us, what are the Government doing to enlarge our markets and bring capital into Canada? Our exports to Britain in the same years have been as follows:—

	 38.105.126

Or a reduction since 1878 of 17 per cent. Now, where has our trade gone? I have shown that it has not gone to Brazil, to British Guiana, to the West Indies, to France, to Spain or to Great Britain. Where has it gone to? It has gone into the natural market of this country in spite of the restrictive policy of this Government. Our trade has been forced over those high barriers, a fact which abundantly proves that the United States is the natural market of Canada. Our exports to that country in the same years have been as follows:—

	 43,522,404

Or an increase of 42 per cent. during the last ten years, notwithstanding the persistent efforts to shut us out of that natural market for Canadian products. Under these circumstances, I ask, is it right, in the interest of the great producing classes of this country, that fresh barriers should be erected between Canada and the markets of the United States? Now, I want to state the Canadian exports to all countries other than the United States and Great Britain, and hon. gentlemen will notice from the figures I give how our trade with foreign countries outside of those two is declining. The following is a statement of the Canadian export of home produce to all countries other than the United States and Great Britain, expressed in percentages of the whole export trade :-

Name.	1878.	1889.	Increase.	Decrease.
Canada	p. c. 12	p. c.	p. c.	p. c.
Nova Scotia New Brunswick Prince Edward Island British Columbia. Manitoba Ontario. Quebec	None 2	46 5 25 15 1 1 1 6 2 1	18 1 1	15 5

You will notice from these figures how the trade of our country, both as a whole and as Provinces, is decreasing in exports to other foreign countries outside of Great Britain and the United States. Now, I propose to give you, Sir, the Canadian export to Great Britain. It is as follows:—

Name.	1878.	1889.	Increase.	Decrease.
Nova Scotia	16 70 69 10 92½ 29 83	23½ 56₹ 5 20 48 13½ 78	7½ 10	14 64 64 44 ¹ / ₂ 15 ¹ / ₂

It will be noticed from that statement, which has been carefully prepared, that our trade with Great Britain-both taking Canada as a whole, and taking it in different Provinces-is equally de-Now, I come to our export trade with the United States, and the following statement will show that, notwithstanding the restrictions and barriers placed between the two countries, to prevent their having commercial relations with each other, our trade is overleaping these barriers to seek its natural market. The following is a comparative statement of Canadian exports to United States :-

Canada	p. c. 34	р. с. 47	p. c. 13	p. c.
Nova Scotia New Brunswick. Prince Edward Island. British Columbia. Manitoba. Ontario. Quebec	23 20 24 76 71 69 9	39 70 65 51 85 15‡	7½ 19 4643½ 16 6½	11

I ask this House if these figures do not prove conclusively that the United States are our natural market? And that, notwithstanding the efforts Mr. Macdonald (Huron).

the purpose of extending our trade in other directions, our trade with the United States is enlarging? What, therefore, is best to be done under the circumstances? It is to open that market as speedily as possible to our goods, if that can be accomplished upon just and honorable terms and conditions. Let us send our manufactured goods into the various centres of the United States, and let the United States send their goods into Canada. We should not be afraid to compete with the Americans; we are their equals in ability, skill and physique, and why should we put up a high tariff wall when we can have free access to their markets by allowing them the same privilege. It is, therefore, the duty of the Government to seek an interview with the representatives of the United States, and I am convinced that, in such an event, they will come to the conclusion that the freest commercial intercourse between the two countries is the only panacea for the depressed condition of our farmers as well as in the interests of the country as a whole. I am sorry to have detained the House so long, but I felt it my duty to give my views on these questions to which I refer. I have no doubt differed very widely from the opinion of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I thank them for their courtesy and the attention they have given my remarks.

Mr. SMITH (Ontario). I do not intend to detain the House more than a few minutes, although the questions now under discussion are, perhaps, more important than any that have engaged our attention during this Parliament. Although I am new to parliamentary practice and to the matters which engage our attention, I would like before the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) leaves the House, to ask him if the amendment to the motion which he has made were carried, would it do away with the duty on flour, beef and several other articles in which the farmers of the country are interested? I take it that the hon, member knows that would be the result. senior member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) made a remark in reference to a letter which he read, purporting to have been written by my predecessor in the representation of South Ontario. I dare say you have seen the discussion that has taken place between him and Mr. Wiman, because the Ontario Reformer has been distributed broadcast through this House. I know that my predecessor when he left Canada left it for Canada's good. He has suggested testing South Ontario as to the annexation feeling which he says prevails in this country. I say that South Ontario is loyal to the core. I was born and brought up there, I have mixed with the people, and I do not believe a dozen electors could be found in the South Riding of Ontario, which is one of the finest counties in the Dominion, who would support the statement which was made. I admit that the farmers have felt a depression during the past year. I must admit that, being one of them myself. I contend that we would have been in a far worse condition but for the National Policy and those duties which the Government in 1879 placed upon many of the articles in which we are interested. In regard to the duties levied upon flour, I take this ground, which I believe cannot be disputed. Large quantities of flour have come into Canada during the past ten years, and, if that flour came in paying a duty of fifty cents, although of the Government, and the large subsidies paid for the price may be ruled to a great extent by the price in Liverpool, the market in Canada must be better than the foreign market. Though the duty has now been increased by twenty-five cents per barrel, still wheat in Canada has been higher in price by from eight to twelve cents than it was in the United States. That, unquestionably, must be beneficial to the farmer. The increased duty upon flour will have the effect of helping the millers of this country, and also the laborers, the coopers. and the forwarding interest, who are all directly interested in the flour trade. I would also refer to the increased duty upon hogs. As I said last year, I believe that the farmers have benefited by the duty on pork more than a million dollars a year, and I believe that now, with the increased duty, they will benefit to the extent of about two millions a year. I am very much mistaken in the temper of the farmers of Canada if they do not recognise these facts at the polls on the first opportunity. As to the beef industry, that may not have been much affected until within the last eighteen months or two years, but since that time the Americans have been coming in to our market with their beef, and I believe that in two years more they would have controlled our beef market. The present Administration have adopted a wise policy which I believe will give that market to ourselves. Allow me to draw the attention of the Government to the fact that strong efforts are being made to bring American cattle in here in bond to be killed. I hope the Government will never allow anything of that kind, but will realise the great advantage we have in our cattle being allowed to enter the ports of Great Britain, which privilege I believe is worth at least one cent a pound to us. As I believe the Government have the interest of the farmers at heart, I am confident they will never allow American cattle to come into Canada for such a purpose. If time permitted, I might discuss several other items, but will content myself by saying that the market of Great Britain is almost illimitable for every article of farm produce. In Great Britain they require even more than Canada and the United States can give them. In 1888, they imported 377,000 head of cattle, of which Canada only sent 60,000; and they imported 966,000 sheep, of which Canada sent only about 45,000. I might refer to cheese and butter, hams and bacon, and show that the proportion is similar. We have entered upon a new period. Farming will probably undergo many changes, and we will probably become greater competitors in the old country market. Instead of sending cattle to the United States at $30 a head, we will probably send cattle to the old country at $90 a Instead of sending sheep and lambs to the United States, we will probably feed them here on our coarse grains and sell them to the old country at $8 and $9 a head. In the cheese and butter market there is a great future before us, and, if we are wise, we will not allow these things to slip out of our grasp. With the fostering care of the Government, with the great judgment which they show in these matters, with the eye which they have on the great agricultural interests of the country, we need have no fear for the future. is already clearing, and I look forward without any apprehension to the future, so far as the agricultural interests/are concerned. With these great markets of Britain open to us, ready for us to take Possession of, the farmers need have no fear, and, men of this country, is to be commended, and notwithstanding the dark pictures of blue ruin that hon. gentlemen opposite have been drawing, I venture to say that within twelve months from to-day they will have to tell a different story. They may repeat these dark statements, because they have become so accustomed to the pessimistic pleasantries of the member for South Oxford that they desire to imitate him in every particular; but, if they are true to their country and to the great agricultural interests of Canada, they will be true to the facts and not draw these dark pictures. The farmers do not thank them for it. They are able and willing to help themselves, and with the assistance the Government has given them by the changes in the tariff, I venture to say that the bright day is not very far off when we will be able to take advantage of those changes.

Mr. MACMILLAN (Huron). I believe the great question under discussion between members on the two sides of the House is the National Policy. We contend on this side that the National Policy, as it has existed for ten years past, has not been in the interests of the Dominion of Canada generally, and especially that it has not been in the interest of the agricultural community. The First Minister and his colleagues, when they introduced the National Policy, promised us:

"That it will restore prosperity to our struggling industries, now so sadly depressed; will prevent Canada from being made a sacrifice market; will encourage and develop an active interprovincial trade, and moving—as it ought to do—in the direction of reciprocity of tariff with our neighbors, so far as the varied interests of Canada may demand, will greatly tend to procure for this country, eventually, a reciprocity of trade."

These were some of the blessings which were to be showered upon this country under the benign influence of this National Policy. I was very much astonished the other day, when the hon. Finance Minister told us that the farmers and fishermen of Canada had been fairly prosperous, and he showed how taxation had steadily increased. agree with him that taxation has steadily increased. It has not only increased steadily, but it has borne more heavily upon the workingmen and upon the farmers of Canada; it has steadily borne more heavily upon the classes who produce the wealth of this country, and I hold that those who are the producers in a country, ought to receive the first consideration in legislation. Now, let me show how taxation has increased, and how the Government are extracting the money from the pockets of the people. I am going to show how the rate of taxation has increased faster than population has increased. I find that in 1880 there were $560,994 collected more than the increase of population would warrant; in 1885 the sum was $8,023,834; and in 1886, $11,401,611; or in all, from 1880 to 1889, the sum of $53,267,885 was taken out of the pockets of the people of this country in taxation, more than the increase of That is what has population would warrant. enabled hon, gentlemen opposite to boast of having surplusses, whereas the Government that preceded them had deficits. I ask whether a Government that continues to impose heavier taxes upon the people each year is to be commended more than a Government that refused to increase the taxes. I ask you whether the present Government, with a surplus during the last year of $1,800,000 extracted from the pockets of the farmers and the workingthey are doing this at a time when the struggling masses are hardly able to make both ends meet. Then we are told that manufacturing industries were springing up. Let us see how much increase has taken place in some of the manufactures of this country. The only article in our manufactures, the product of which has increased very much, is that of cotton. I will give the following table to show how the case stands with respect to the value of some of the chief articles of import:—

Cotton goods $	10,204,465	$ 4,245,868
Woollens	8,742,024	10,414,963
Wood manufactures	909,139	1,486,331
Iron and steel	8,598,250	9,680,967
Carriages	123,687	398,293
Earthen chinaware	439,029	697,947
Leather manufact's	1,473,754	1,521,868
Musical instruments	375,138	487,519

So that according to these figures, taken from the Trade and Navigation Returns, the statement of the Finance Minister in his Budget speech is not borne out by the facts. Last year he made a statement concerning the incidence of taxation paid by the rich men, and he told us that when a wealthy man wanted to get a fine musical instru-ment he went over to New York and bought a piano for which he paid $1,000. But I have examined the Trade and Navigation Returns very carefully, both for the years 1888 and 1889, and not one single rich man of Canada went over to the United States and bought this fine piano worth $1.000—not one came into the Dominion of Canada. The hon. gentleman told us, also, that when a rich man wanted to buy a fine carriage he would go over to the other side and get one worth $500. I have also examined the Trade and Navigation Returns for 1888 and 1889, and I find not a single carriage imported from the United States valued at $500. Four carriages valued at $535 each came from England, and this is one of the incidents of taxation. The hon, gentleman went on to speak of the duties on flour and wheat, and to these I will now refer. The duty on flour will bear heavily on the farmers of the country. I will give the House an opinion from a grange on this subject:

an opinion from a grange on this subject:

"At a regular meeting of the Hullett Grange No. 393 it was moved by John Cuming, sr., seconded by John Brigham, and carried unanimously, that this Grange in session, condemns the action of the Millers' Association in asking a higher tariff on flour, as we think it is an injustice to the farmers. Also, that this Grange thinks that the present tariff in exchanging flour for wheat is too high, and we are of opinion that the Government should pass a law regulating, in some way, the quantity of flour and offal that the miller should give in exchange for our wheat, as we are of opinion that they do not give us a fair exchange."

I believe the millers came to the conclusion that it was not in their interests that the duties on wheat and flour should continue in the future as in the past. At a meeting of the Millers' Association held on 6th August at Peterborough, a decision was arrived at to ask a reduction of duty on wheat and flour. At a meeting on 10th July, they wanted flour to be protected $1 per barrel in order to place it on an equal footing with other protected industries. Mr. J. Waxcup said that other property had doubled and trebled in value, while mill property was stationary. I deny most emphatically that farm property has doubled or trebled, while mill property has remained stationary. Another miller stated that Mr. McMillan (Huron).

they were dying from consumption caused by too much opposition; that they could produce 18,000,000 barrels a year, when the country could only consume 5,000,000 barrels. I ask the people of this country if it is justice to our workingmen and to our farmers to impose an extra duty upon a commodity, when one of the principal grounds for the duty is that too many have engaged in the industry? We have so many mills in Canada that they can run only four months in the year and remain idle during eight months. Have the farmers and the workingmen, whose burdens are already too grievous to be borne, to be taxed to support a class, simply because there is too much competition in that particular industry? Of course, I do not blame the millers for securing relief, for, no doubt, they have been suffering for a number of years. Mr. James Stark, of Paisley, said, with respect to free trade with the United States, that he believed we could hold our own. I see in the Globe to-day, that at a meeting of the Millers' Association, it was stated that the present position of the flour business could not continue, that they must purchase wheat from the farmer and sell to the farmer his flour. I hold that the flour which the farmer gets from the miller from his own wheat will pay duty as well as the flour obtained by any other class in the community. I hold that the increase in the duty will have the effect of raising the price of flour. Why should the millers come to the Government and ask them to place an additional duty on flour, if it is not to give them an advantage? And I hold that that advantage is to be obtained at the expense of the farmers and working people of the Dominion. The oatmeal mills are in a similar condition to the flour mills. We have 60 oatmeal mills in the Dominion, according to a statement made to the Combines Committee two years ago, and four mills will abundantly supply the consumption in the The same evil exists in regard to the country. flour mills; there are far too many engaged in that branch of industry, but that has been induced by the National Policy and the imposition of a duty of $1 per barrel on oats. These are not, however, the only industries that have been injured in Canada, and I hold this Government has a duty to perform, that is, as those best acquainted both with the oatmeal and flour milling interests have suggested, to remove the duty altogether, and allow wheat to come in free, and flour also. The greatest political economists have always stated this, that wherever there is a retaliatory tariff imposed by the Government, it has always acted to the injury of the people under that Government. We have been told time and time again, that the National Policy has increased the price of grain to our farmers, and that it would be great injury to them if we allowed grain to come in free. We were told last night, that the price of wheat is to day as high in Canada as in any part of the United States; but I want to tell hon. gentlemen, that at the time when the National Policy came into force wheat was higher in Canada than in the United States. Let me quote from a Government return placed in my hands, showing the prices of wheat in Canada and in the United States in 1881, at about the time the National Policy came into existence. That return states:

"That this difference is not exceptional between the two years taken, but is due to a steady and persistent decline in prices during the intervening period, is shown by the table of prices of some of the same articles at Montreal in the years 1881 and 1896:—

Average Price in Montreal.
Per Barrel of Flour. Average Export Price in the United States. Per Barrel of Flour.

This is a reduction of only 97 cents a barrel in the United States while it had been reduced $2.08 in Montreal. Now let us take wheat. He shows that in 1881 wheat in Montreal was worth $1.33 per bushel and in 1886 85 cents, or a reduction during the five years of 48 cents per bushel. Wheat in the United States in 1881 was worth $1.11 a bushel, or 22 cents lower than it was in Canada during that wear, and in 1886 wheat was 87 cents in the United States, or only 24 cents per bushel of a shrinkage, just half the shrinkage of the price in Canada during these five years. Will that satisfy hon, gentlemen opposite, when I prove it from a return that they cannot dispute, that it has not been in the interests of the farmers of this Dominion to have this National Policy. Just to show how men's minds will be warped when they have an object to accomplish and when they want to show the better side of a bad case, let me read another remark with respect to the fall in the price of wheat in Canada during that period:

"The very marked effect which the adoption of the Na-"The very marked effect which the adoption of the National Policy, in 1879, had upon the imports of wheat and flour, will be immediately apparent upon looking at the above table. It will be seen that while the average importation of wheat in each year from 1868 to 1879 was $5.480,735, in the period 1880 to 1886 it only averaged $163,097 per annum, increasing the home market for wheat to the extent of $5,312,638 annually."

Now, Sir, we might say that this shows that a great benefit had been conferred upon the farmers of Canada by giving them a market for the extra 5 million bushels of wheat. But let me read the next paragraph, which will explain itself:

"The decline in the price of wheat during the last five years has been very marked. In 1861 in Montreal it was $1.33 per bushel, and in 1886 only 85 cents per bushel, being a reduction of 48 cents. According to United States official reports, the export price of wheat in 1881 was $1.11 and in 1886 87 cents, a difference of 24 cents a bushel."

That is the great blessing that the National Policy conferred on the farmers of Canada. It reduced the price of their wheat 48 cents a bushel, while wheat only reduced 24 cents per bushel in the United States during the same years. That bears out the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Huron (Mr. Macdonald), who preceded me. Now, Sir, when we come to examine closely we find that Indian corn, an article which we do not raise very much in this country, was, in 1881, 60 cents per bushel in Canada, and, in 1886, 49 cents, a reduction of 17 cents per bushel in Canada, while in the United States, in 1881, it was 55 cents per bushel and in 1886 49 cents, or a reduction of only 6 cents in the United States. This shows that the National Policy has not had the effect of giving us a market for our own coarse grains, for it shows that corn has fallen off more in price in Canada since the duty was imposed than it has in the United States. I state positively, with respect to great blessing to the farming community of this. country if we could import that commodity free of duty. The Finance Minister has also proposed us an extra duty on beef. Well, Sir, with respect to that duty there is not the least doubt on my mind that some parts of the country will be benefited by cutting off the 3,800,000 pounds of beef which come into the country. But so far as the Province of Ontario is concerned, the extra duty will have very little effect in that Province, for the reason that there are only 432,000 pounds of beef imported there. In the Province of Ontario the most of the beef we raise is for the English market, and it is that market which regulates the price of our beef cattle. There is no doubt, however, but that in the localities where a great amount of slaughtered beef comes in the farmers will derive a certain amount of benefit from this duty. There is also no doubt that the duty of half a cent per pound put upon pork will put a little into the pockets of the farmers, but I am in perfect agreement with a letter which appeared in the Globe yesterday, written by the principal pork-packer in the Prov-ince of Ontario, from Liverpool, when the news reached there of the intention of the Government with regard to the duty on pork. He said that the pork-packers will not be benefited by the extra duty : that Ontario, or Canada, is not a pork-packing country, and that the farmers would be more benefited if the duty were allowed to remain as it was, and if they were allowed to import free corn, in order that they might be able to raise cheap pork in this country. I am in perfect accord with that statement, and I believe that a greater benefit would be conferred on the farmers if such a course had been pursued. If the tariff, which is outlined in the United States Congress, is put in force, of which there is very little doubt in my mind, the action of this Government in increasing the tariff on certain articles will be the cause of the United States Government imposing a prohibitory tariff on the trade of Canada, and it will be passed as a retaliatory measure, because of the action of the Government here. If the tariff proposed in the United States is carried into effect it will inflict a greater injury upon Canada than it is possible for any person to calculate at the present moment. I have figured up that on the 17,277 horses, valued at $2,113,000, we will have to pay, under the new tariff law of the United States, if it goes into force, a duty of $518,310. Last year we shipped 37,000 head of cattle to the United States, a class of cattle which it is not worth sending to the English market. I was rather astonished to hear the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Smith) say that these cattle would go to the English market and that we could get between $80 and $90 for them. These are cattle which will not pay to take across the ocean, and it would be ruinous to a number of farmers if they cannot ship them to the United States. Those cattle were sold in the United States at $13.07 per head, out of which, if the farmers paid $10 per head of duty, it would leave them the handsome price of $3.07 per head. Then, Sir, we were told that the duties are to be increased on woollen goods. We have already been paying a very high duty on woollen goods, and the manner in which the duty is imposed places the heaviest duty on the class who are the least able to bear it. The increase of Indian corn, that it would be a great benefit and a | 2½ cents per pound will, perhaps, increase the price to that extent to the wealthy man who can buy his fine broadcloth, while at the same time it will increase the price 5 or 6 cents a pound to the poor man, who can only afford to buy woollen goods of the value of 50 or 60 cents per yard. Then, the hon. President of the Council gave us a very bright picture of how Canada had been prospering, saying that the value of land in Ontario has been steadily increasing from 1883 to 1888. Well, Sir, it is very strange that I must apply to the very same report from which he took his statement in order to show a very different result. I find that in 1883 land alone in Ontario was valued at $654,793,025; in 1888 it was valued at $640,480,801; but the advance report for 1889, which I have in my possession, shows that the value of land in that year was only $632,329,433, a reduction of $22,463,592. But this does not take into consideration much more than half the reduction that has actually taken place, because from the reports in the Library I find that from 1883 to 1887, 300,000 acres of land in the older townships had been placed on the assessment rolls, and 400,000 acres had been cleared. The 300,000 additional acres at $29 an acre will give $8,700,000, and the 400,000 acres, which were cleared at $20 an acre, will give $8,000,000, which adds $16,700,000 to the amount to be deducted from the value of the land, which brings the reduction of the value of the land since 1884 to $39,100,000; and yet the hon. President of the Council congratulates the Province of Ontario upon the steady increase in the value of property in that Province. I wonder, Sir, how long the country will continue prosperous if the same rate of decrease should continue for a number of years? Why, Sir, these figures do not tell half the tale. Does that hon. gentleman know anything about the Province of Ontario? During the last few years the municipalities have been spending large sums of money in digging ditches and reclaiming a great deal of waste land. That is not taken account of in this calculation. A very large amount of under-draining has also been going on, improving the quality of the land in reality; and yet the price has been steadily reduced. With regard to buildings, although we find that they have increased, there is a good reason for that. The farmers find that they can no longer farm or keep stock successfully in the buildings which they were formerly accustomed to have, and they have been building new and improved barns for the care of their stock, either for beef or dairy purposes; and many of the mortgages that have been placed on farms have been to enable the farmers to get proper buildings. That is not the only reason, however, why we have so many farms mortgaged in Ontario. Another reason is that many farmers have been sending their sons away from home to settle in the North-West or in the United States, and in other cases they have purchased farms for their sons, and in order to do so have mortgaged their own. For these and other reasons the farms of Ontario are very heavily mortgaged indeed. Then, Sir, we were told by the honmember for North Renfrew that the present Government have been doing a great work for the farmers of the Dominion, and he asks what the Mackenzie Government did to encourage the farmers to follow scientific farming or to encorage them otherwise? Just let me read a little state-Mr. McMillan (Huron).

Alexander Mackenzie encouraged the farmers of this country during the time they held office. During that time we could get all our agricultural implements into the country free; now we they now pay 35 per cent.; waggons were free, they now pay 41 per cent.; a hay-knife was free, it now has to pay $79\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; hoes were free, they now have to pay from the United States 45½ per cent. and from Great Britain 53 per cent.; a clothes wringer was free of duty, now it has to pay $73\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; scythes were free, now they have to pay $79\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; picks, spades and shovels were free, now they have to pay $40\frac{3}{4}$ per cent.; tiles were free, now they have to pay 20 per cent.; fertilisers were free, now they have to pay 20 per cent.; timothy, clover and other seeds were free, and we have had timothy and clover free only during the last two years, but now a duty of 15 per cent, is imposed on them; turnips, mangolds and beets were free, and we have been paying a duty of 15 per cent. on them up to the present time, but now they have again been placed on the free list. What is the reason that Mr. Massey, the manufacturer of agricultural implements of Toronto, stated that the duty of 35 per cent. did not benefit the agricultural implement manufacturers of the Dominion? Mr. Massey said that the increase in the duties which took place last year, would take \$10,000 in taxes out of their pockets in one year. During the time of Mr. Mackenzie pig iron came in free, while to day it is charged 31 per cent. duty. Let me read a statement with respect to what that industry has cost the country at present. I have here a statement which shows that in Canada, during the year 1888, 21,799 tons of pig iron were manufactured, on which a bounty of \$43,790 was collected. That was not all. There was a duty on 68,333 tons of \$273,332, amounting in all to \$316,930, which it cost the Dominion to manufacture 21,799 tons of pig iron. Under the Mackenzie Government it was different. He allowed the manufacturers to have free iron from which to manufacture agricultural implements, and he allowed agricultural implements to come in free to the agricultural societies. Bar iron, rolled or hammered, was taxed only 5 per cent. under Mr. Mackenzie, but we find, according to the Government return of the quantity of iron manufactured and the quantity imported, and the duty paid, that malleable iron pays a duty of 53 per cent., and yet hon. gentlemen opposite have the audacity to point to benefits which the present Government has conferred upon the agriculturists. We do not deny that the Government have established an experimental farm, and that \$400,000 have been voted to establish this farm, but that any great benefit has been derived by the farmers to the present time from this expenditure, I deny. However, I will discuss this question when the estimate is before us. The President of the Council went on to make a comparison between the value of the crops in Ontario and in the several States of the Union. This is a question that demands considerable attention. It is not at all times the country which raises the greatest amount of crops, or the farmer who raises the greatest amount per acre, that receives the greatest amount of profits from the crops. I will take a statement from the Bureau ment to show how the Government of the Hon. of Industries, with respect to the year 1887. In the Bureau of Industries for 1888, giving an account of the same year, there is a statement of the amount required to raise an acre of fall wheat, an acre of spring wheat, an acre of barley, an acre of oats and an acre of pease; and that this report has been compiled from 190 of the most correct reports sent in by the farmers all over Ontario. To raise an acre of fall wheat, it costs \$19.43, according to this statement. In 1877 we only raised sixteen bushels and one tenth per acre, and the value was \$12.61, showing a loss to the farmers, of \$6.82 per acre, or causing a total loss in fall wheat alone, of \$6,422,607, that is on 897,743 acres of fall wheat. I will not take up my time in reading over all the table, but just state that I found that of fall wheat, spring wheat, barley, oats and pease, there are 4,559,129 acres. The whole value of the crop was \$49,465,196, showing a loss to the farmers, during that year, of \$23,272,030, and those are the principal crops raised in Ontario. Is it possible that with such a loss as this in the products of the farm, the farmers of Canada can be in a healthy condition? I say it is utterly impossible for such to be the case. Let me compare that with another which I have, showing the amounts which the farmers realised. During the year 1882, the total value of the crops of fall wheat and spring wheat, barley, oats and pease, amounted to over \$93,000,000 in Ontario, and the crop was pretty nearly the same. During that year, the farmers of Ontario, through the increased yield and the very high prices they got, made a profit of over twenty-three millions of dollars from crops of that description. I have another return which shows that, for the years 1882 to 1887 inclusive, the average loss to the farmers on crops of that description was over seven millions annually. Allowing for the cost of production, the cost of labor and the price per bushel, the total loss was \$43,000,000. This proves more conclusively than any other argument that can be produced that the farmers in Ontario cannot be in a prosperous condition, because a farm is only worth the amount you can realise on the products after the labor is paid for. I may be asked why the farmers of Ontario have not, under these circumstances, become entirely bankrupt? The only way in which I can account for it is that they have been working their own farms with the assistance of their families, and I know that within the last four or five years many of them have not been able to make both ends meet, throwing in their own labor and that of their families to boot. There is no doubt that the statement which has been made in regard to the mortgages on farms is correct. If any one will go to the president of any insurance company and examine the policies that come in and the mortgages upon the lands generally, he will find that the statement made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) will be fully borne out. Before I left home, I was visiting a certain concession where I was well acquainted with the people, and in conversation I found that there were seven hundred acres mortgaged to the tune of \$22 per acre. If the truth were made known, I have no doubt that it would be shown that the amount of mortgage is very heavy. It seems strange to me that gentlemen on the Government benches can give such correct statements and can give such credence to their own statements as to value, and the amount of duty paid on each:-

the amount of mortgages and to the indebtedness in other countries, while they question every statement which is made as to the indebtedness and mortgages in Ontario. In Ontario we have just as reliable information as can be obtained in any part of the United States. The statement was made that our young men would not remain on farms at the present time, but that they went off in all directions, some to the United States, some to the towns and cities, and all over the country. Is it to be wondered at when we find that all classes of the community are, as it were, preying upon the farmers? Young men are now receiving a superior education to that which their fathers received. They are able to analyse the affairs of the country correctly, and to examine the fiscal policy of the Government, and they find that, although the income of the farmers is not great, one-third of that income goes either into the treasury or into the pockets of the manufacturers. In this connection let me say something in regard to binding twine. I said something about that last year, and an hon, gentleman on the other side tried to hold me up to ridicule for saying that such large amounts of money were paid for twine, because he showed that only $15,000 had been paid on binding twine. But that only included 432,000 pounds of binding twine imported into this country. Mr. Massey was examined before the Labor Commis sion, and he is well acquainted with the whole of that trade. He stated that we required 3,000 tons of binding twine during the summer of 1888. Taking 2,000 pounds to the ton, we have 6,000,000 pounds of binding twine on which there must have been a duty paid of $210,-000. Mr. Massey stated that the reason why he objected to the large duty on binding twine was that the raw material came into the country free, and the manufacturers got the whole benefit of the duty. In this case there was one dollar going into the treasury and eleven dollars going into the pockets of the manufacturers, and that was taken from the farmit has become a very grave question with the farmers of Ontario whether they should purchase binding twine or should return to the reaper and bind the grain by hand. Binding twine is one of the articles which certainly ought to be placed on the free list. When the Government of the Hon. Alex. Mackenzie was in power we had no binders, or there is no doubt we would have had free binding twine. We have been told by the President of the Council that the older Provinces did not use improved implements. I am not very well acquainted with the Province of Quebec, but I know that in the Province of Ontario we do use improved implements. I want any intelligent farmer on the other side of the House to correct me if I refer to any implement which is not used on any well conducted farm in Ontario, and I know many farms on which a number of implements are used which I have not counted. I desire to show some of the blessings and benefits which the present Government has conferred on the farmers compared with the Mackenzie Government. The following list will show the average number of implements used on farms in our Province, the

Here we have a statement of the duties which a farmer, occupying 100 acres of land, has to pay on his farm implements in the course of ten years, because I estimate that, on an average, these implements will last ten years, and we may add to that sum $3 a year for binding twine. Now, I hold that this list is a fair and honest list. Last year the member for Toronto Centre (Mr. Cockburn) criticised this list in a very unjust manner. statement made by the President of the Council was that these improved implements are not used in the Province of Quebec, but we know there is a large amount of land in Ontario upon which they can be used. Now, we come to examine the census of 1881, by which I find that there are some 200,000 farmers who occupy between 50 and 200 acres of land; there were over 90,000 who occupied less than 10 acres; some 150,000 who occupied less than 50 acres. According to the Bureau of Industries of the Province of Ontario, the average size of farms is 121 acres, which, allowing 82 acres for cleared land would give something less than 200,000 farmers in the Province of Ontario who are able to use these implements. I would like to know where the member for Toronto Centre last year found his 650,000 farmers who used these implements in Canada. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman drew upon his imagination for his facts. I say that a large amount of the tax paid for agricultural implements does not go into the treasury, but it goes into the pockets of the manufacturers. It is no difference to the farmer whether the money goes into the treasury or into the pockets of the manufacturers, except that if it goes into the treasury, it is spent, or ought to be spent, in the interest of the country, but the amount that we pay to the manufacturer is money legislated out of our pockets for which we do not receive a corresponding return; it is money taken out of the pockets of the farmers, and the laborers, and the workmen of this country, and put into the pockets of the manufacturers, for which these latter give no corresponding value. You may call it what you like, but I hold that it is a Mr. McMillan (Huron).

dishonest system of legislation that takes money out of the pockets of the producers and puts it into the pockets of any class of the com-munity, when the latter do not give any adequate return to the individual from which the money is taken; if it was parliamentary, I would say that it is legalised robbery. Now, we were told that under the Mackenzie Government there was a deficit, while under the present Government there is a surplus. Is if to be wondered at that there is a surplus under the present Administration? The hon. gentleman from Brant (Mr. Paterson) showed the other day that fifty-three million dollars had been taken out of the pockets of the people in taxes, more than the increase of population would warrant; is it to be wondered at, therefore, that the Government have a surplus at the present time? It is not creditable to this Government to boast that they have a surplus, when depression is over-spreading the land, and they are legislating in such a manner as to increase that surplus. I hold that the changes in the tariff are not going to benefit the farmer to any extent. Last year we had clover seed and timothy seed free, but now we have to pay 15 per cent. We have got to pay extra for flour, because I contend that the flour will be increased in value. The millers of Canada are alive to their own interest, and they know that if you put 25 cents a barrel upon flour, the farmers of Canada have got to pay that money, and they will get no corresponding benefit. The millers have made the statement that they are not going to pay the extra price for wheat, that they cannot be benefited as a class. Much has been said by hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to Canada being a more desirable country than any State of the Union, so far as agricultural products are concerned. Let me state this, and I press it upon hon. gentlemen opposite, that I know hundreds of farmers who left Ontario and settled in the United States, and to-day I can count on the fingers of my right hand all those who have returned. If the farmers in the United States were in the deplorable condition alleged, why do not these men return to Canada and purchase farms which can now be obtained at reduced prices. gentleman before the Immigration Committee the other day pictured the condition of farmers in the North-West, and the condition of farmers in Dakota. He told us that he had been through Dakota, and he had ascertained the condition of the farmers there, and also the condition of the farmers in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and he endeavored to show the great advantage that would accrue to farmers by removing from Dakota into Canadian territory. When the question was put to him, as to how many he knew had moved; he knew of two who were going to move, or were moving; and that was all the result of the large sum given to that gentleman during the past twelve month. Many statements have been made with respect to the condition of farmers in Canada and the immigration from Canada, and its causes. Let me read a statement from Mr. Grahame, Governmentagent in Winnipeg, as it appears in his report. He says:

"Many will be surprised that the number of actual settlers in our Province and Territories has not been as large as expected, neither has the amount of wealth brought in by those who have come been as considerable as that of former years. This may appear strange, when we consider the many efforts that were put forth by the many different organisations, to induce immigration to the Province and neighboring Territories, but it is nevertheless a fact, that out of the many thousands who left the mother country, ostensibly for the North-West, a large number of them found occupation and homes on the Pacific coast, and I regret to say, a large majority of these are on the American side."

He continues:

"I took a keen interest in this matter and interviewed the pursers of the local steamboats from whom I gathered information that would lead me to believe that the steamboats plying between Vancouver, Victoria, San Francisco and the American ports at the head of Puget Sound carried very little less than 10,000 immigrants, most of whom left Europe with the intention of remaining in British possessions."

Here are immigrants who have been led astray by representations made to them, that they would be able to obtain employment in British Columbia and the North-West Territories. But let me say here, that when an honest immigration agent gives a fair and honest statement with respect to immigration, the Government consider it to be their duty to notify him that if he does not send in his resignation they will be compelled to dismiss him. The Government do not want a correct statement with respect to the condition of this country; but any individual who will not state the correct condition of affairs, whether prosperous or the reverse, is not doing his duty to himself or to his country, or to the people who think of coming here from other countries. Much has been said in regard to taxation. I have a short statement which I desire to submit, and it shows the amount of duty collected and the amount of that duty which has passed into the pockets of manufacturers. Of binding twine we imported 454,278 lbs., on which a duty was paid of $15,904. Of this sum $15,904 went to the treasury and to the manufacturers $194,096, being in the proportion of one dollar to eleven dollars. Thus for every one dollar that goes into the treasury eleven dollars go to the manufacturer. Take coal oil. We imported 4,523,056 gallons, on which a duty was paid of $325,655. There was refined in Canada 9,833,228 gallons, on which a duty was paid of $707,992. So that for every dollar that went into the treasury $2.20 went to the refiner. Next as regards sugar. We imported 201,839,821 pounds, on which a duty was paid to the Government of $3,433,334. On this article, $2,566,666 went to the refiners and $3,433,334 to the Government. Take cotton goods. We imported these goods to the value of $4,200,072, and in 1881, $10,204,465, and $2,345,627 was paid to the Government. It is only fair to say in regard to cotton goods that while the imports were reduced from $10,000,000 in 1881 to $4,000,000 in 1888, a corresponding increase took place in the goods manufactured in Canada, because we find that of raw cotton there were 16,000,000 lbs. imported in 1881, there were 39,000,000 lbs. imported in 1889. So that while we pay $1,191,509, which goes into the treasury, we pay $2,383,000, which goes into the pockets of the cotton manufacturers of the Dominion. In 1881 we imported woollen goods to the value of $8,742,024, and in 1889, to the value of $9,842,319. We imported raw wool, for the manufacture of cotton goods, in 1881, amounting to 8,040,287 lbs. and in 1889, 10,266,440 We find there were manufactured in 1881 in Canada $8,113,055 worth of woollen goods, while according to the amount of raw material imported we should have manufactured $9,842,000 worth.

Taking into consideration the reduction of the price of goods, it is a low estimate to say that for every dollar that goes into the treasury another dollar goes into the pockets of the manufacturer. In this connection I would like to state, that it is a favorite argument with the Conservatives of the present day that we never had goods so cheap as they are to-day in Canada, and that a dollar will purchase more to-day than it ever did before. We admit that a dollar will purchase more goods to-day than it ever did before, but take this in connection with the statement made by the Minister of Finance last year, that there is a shrinkage of goods in the British market of 31 per cent., and will any gentleman tell me, and tell me honestly, that goods have been reduced as much in Canada as they have been in the United States or in Great Britain? When the National Policy was proposed we had only a tariff of $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and to day we have a tariff of something like 29 or 30 per cent., so that goods cannot have shrunk in value as much by 11 or 12 per cent., as they have done in the markets of the old country. Another favorite argument with hon. gentlemen opposite is that times are so bad in the United States that the farms are mortgaged to a large extent. Is it to be wondered at that the farmers of the United States are in a depressed condition? Since 1865, they have suffered from a system of protection that has drained the very heart's blood out of the farmers of that country, and when we have suffered for so long a period from the same cause, I do not know what this country will be reduced to. We have endeavored from this side of the House time and again to impress upon the Government and their followers the reduction in the price of land in the Province of Ontario. Last year and this year some hon, gentlemen opposite admitted that the prices of land had been reduced in Great Britain and in the United States, but they denied it was reduced in Canada, and said that the farmers of Canada were prosperous. As a farmer in Ontario for the last 47 years I have never before gone among the farmers and found them in so bad a condition as they are to-day. We have been told that it was not in the interest of the farmer to allow the tariff walls to be beaten down between the United States and Canada, and that it would ruin our markets for coarse grains. Let us make a comparison between the coarse grain markets of the United States and Canada. No. 2 wheat in Toronto is selling at from $83\ {\rm to}\ 86\ {\rm cents},$ and No. 2 spring from 86 to 87 cents, and in Buffalo it is near the same price as it is in Toronto. We find barley in Toronto selling at from 50 to 52 cents, and Canadian barley in Buffalo selling from 63 to 65 cents, a difference of 13 cents a bushel in favor of the Buffalo market, which shows conclusively that if we had a free interchange of our agricultural products with the United States, we could sell our barley in the United States at something like 50 cents and buy our corn at 40 cents. If we could have 10 cents a bushel more for our barley, and at the same time 8 lbs. more feed per bushel for our cattle, it would be of great benefit to us. Oats in the Toronto market are selling at 29 to 31 cents per bushel, and in Detroit from 281 to 29 cents. must be borne in mind that while the Canadian measure is 34 pounds to the bushel, in the United States it is 32 pounds to the bushel, so that relatively oats are just as high in the United States market as they are in the Canadian market, when you calculate the difference in weight, and yet we are told that if corn were allowed free, it would be a great injury to this country. We imported something like 15,000,000 lbs. of pork from the United States and if we go back to 1877 we find we exported \$800,000 worth more of all kinds of meat than we imported into the country at that time. At the same time we imported over 8,000,000 bushels of Indian corn. At the present time we import over \$1,000,000 worth of meat more than we export, but we only import at present a little over 2,000,000 bushels of Indian corn. At the time we imported 8,000,000 bushels of Indian corn, our oats stood higher in the market, compared with oats in the United States, than they do to-day; and yet hon. gentlemen opposite tell us reciprocity would ruin the farmers. Why, Sir, the Government has told us steadily from 1878 down to the present time, that it was their policy to bring about reciprocity with the United States. The hon, the First Minister told us that the only way to bring about reciprocity was to have a retalia-tory tariff to bring the United States to their senses. Now, we are placed in this position, that if the Government want to obtain reciprocity, which we on this side of the House have always argued for, I believe they have now an opportunity, and if they do not embrace it, and obtain for us that which I believe will relieve the farmers of this country more than anything else that could be done for them, they are not true to their own policy as declared since 1878; they are not true to the statements made by Sir Charles Tupper in 1888 when he came down to this House and stated that it was the policy of the Government, as it had been the policy of the Reform Government when in power, to get reciprocity with the United States at as early a day as possible. I hold that there is nothing we could get that would confer such benefit on the farmers of the Dominion of Canada as free and unrestricted trade. Now, before I close, I am going to give a few statements that I heard in a well delivered sermon last Sunday evening. The preacher said it would be ridiculous to admit that the Government cannot control the avarice of corporations. Why, Sir, at the very time the preacher made that statement, it occurred to me that it was true that the Government cannot control the avarice of corporations. Why did the Government call the members of this House together on the 16th of January when they were not ready? knew that the corporations would not bring pressure upon them until the House had met. We were here for a month, and the corporations were here. The corporations may be called the tail and the Government the dog, and the tail wagged the dog, and it has continued to wag. The corporations control the Government of this country. Then, the preacher said that we should insist upon the economic value of all honest labor, and no individual should be allowed to take out of an industry more than he had put in. If the Premier was in the church, I hope he benefited from that sermon, and will take the advice of the preacher and give every man the just reward of his labor, and not compel me and every other farmer in the Dominion of Canada, when we go to buy an agricultural implement, for every \$100 to the manufac-Mr. McMillan (Huron).

turer to pay $35 to the treasury, or to some manufacturer in the shape of taxes. Then, the preacher said that the golden rule of political economy that ought to prevail was to allow every individual to sell the fruits of his labors in the dearest market in the world and to buy in the cheapest. sounder political economy was ever preached, and the gentleman who announced that doctrine I have been told is a strong Conservative; but being a minister of the gospel, he no doubt feels the injustice that is done to a large number of the people of this country, and wishes that justice and righteousness should prevail on the face of the earth, and that the Government of this country should do justice to all classes. He further stated that society is in a barbarous condition so long as every man does not reach the honest rewards of his labor.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is the preacher?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). The Rev. Mr. Herridge. He went on to say that it was the duty of the Government to find out what was the proper policy for a nation to pursue, and to teach the people to follow it. I only hope the gentleman may preach that sermon wherever he goes, and I hope that when members of the Government go on their knees to-night, they will think upon their actions for the last ten years and the injustice they have perpetrated on the farmers of the Dominion of Canada. Let them pray earnestly that they may get forgiveness for the great evil they have perpetrated, and resolve to do better in time to come.

Mr. FISHER. I do not propose to make any lengthened address, but there are a few things which I think it is absolutely necessary should be said before this vote is taken. First, I must express my surprise that the hon. Minister of Finance, when he introduced his resolutions, showed an incomprehensible disregard of the actual state of affairs in this country, when he said that our farmers and fishermen were fairly prosperous. I will not quote those resolutions which have been so frequently put before this House to show the absurdity and inaccuracy of this statement. I quoted them on a former occasion; but there are one or two which have come from the Province of Quebec since that date which I think proper to put before my hearers. I will first, however, refer to the resolution which was passed in that great parliament of farmers in the Province of Ontario, the Central Farmers' Institute, at the meeting at which they discussed the question of the agricultural depression. A report was presented to the meeting by a committee which had been directed to consider that question, and this is how they wound up that report:

"As to the proper remedy for any or all of these causes, opinion may differ to a wide extent, but your committee believe that the following suggestions are along the line in which at least a measure of relief might be obtained: (1) Free entrance to the markets where our products have to be disposed of; and your committee would strongly advise that in future all legislation in regard to import duties be in the direction of lowering those duties."

Then they agreed to this resolution:

"Whereas, we consider the present high tariff is very injurious to the agricultural interests, making what we buy proportionately dearer than the products we sell; and "Whereas, the present high tariff has given risa to the combine system by which competition is to a great extent prevented; and "Whereas, the agricultural interest is suffering under a serious depression and unable to bear the strain occasioned by the tariff and the combine system aforesaid, and as the agricultural interests represent the larger majority of the population; that, therefore.—

"This, the Central Institute do respectfully ask the Government to reduce the duty on articles of prime necessity to the farmer, such as iron, steel, coal, cottons, woollens, rubbers, sugars, corn and salt, to such an extent as to relieve the agriculturist of the unequal burden under which he is now laboring."

It does not look as if the agriculturists asking these things were fairly prosperous or satisfied with their present condition. I have here a resolu-tion passed in the little village of Danville, in the Eastern Townships, where the dairymen of that district were gathered at their annual meeting. Their resolution was as follows :-

"Moved by Capt. Mairs, seconded by Mr. R. Allen, and resolved: 'That it is in the interest of agriculture, that corn, cotton seed meal and flax seed meal should be placed on the free list, and the importation of adulterated lard should be prohibited, and that the Federal Government be petitioned so to do.'"

As an evidence that the farmers in that section are not satisfied with their present condition, and are not prosperous as they think they ought to be, and as they would be if the Government would yield to their desires, and consider their interests, I have here a petition which was largely circulated among the agricultural societies in Quebec, and which a large number of them instructed their officers to sign and forward to this Parliament. In that petition they say, alluding to the state of agriculture:

"That in consequence we look forward with anxiety to the future and the competition confronting us by the United States, and the other countries which have in the past, and will in the future, receive of the fertility of our past, and will in the lateric, recently request:

"That the following articles be placed upon the free import list, namely: Corn, cotton seed, flax seed, and all cattle food, ground and unground. Also all manures, chemicals, minerals, and all materials whatsoever for the manufacture of manure."

It was partly in consequence of this, and other demands such as this, that a little while ago I took upon myself to ask the Government to put corn upon the free list. I know that cotton seed and flax seed were upon the free list, of which fact these gentlemen did not seem to be aware, and they remain on the free list still; but, unfortunately, the Government did not see fit to take the advice I offered. What has the Government done to aid the farmer in this new tariff? The Minister of Finance said that the agriculural industry of this country was fairly prosperous, but in almost the same breadth he expressed his intention to aid the farmers and help them out of their difficulties. What is his remedy? Protection and further protection. I am not going into this question at great length, but I wish to bring the attention of the House, as an antithesis to the Finance Minister's proposition, the demand of the farmers, which, briefly stated, is reduction of the duties and free raw material. It is the duty of the Finance Minister to meet these demands which have been clearly and distinctly put before him and his colleagues from the different bodies of farmers throughout the country and by several gentlemen on the floor of this House. But instead of doing so, he increases the tax on woollens, and puts a tax on their grass and other seeds which were formerly free. By his re-adjustment of the tariff, he practically forces the traders to charge higher prices on their goods so as to ensure against loss. Those who have gone into a calculation of the result of the increases of duty in this tariff and the re-adjustment of the duties say that they amount to an imposition of $500,000 a year of increased taxation, and I have every reason to believe this calculation is exact. Unfortunately, the farmer will have to bear the greater part of this increased burden. I need only allude, as a specimen brick in the new tariff, to the fact that the increased duty on woollen goods is imposed on the heavier and coarser fabrics, as the specific duty is increased, but the advalorem duty remains as it was. This is an instance of the way in which the farmers' interests are legislated against. The Finance Minister has gone still further by adding to the price of flour to the eastern farmer who cannot raise wheat cheaply and profitably, and can use his land for other purposes to better advantage. But the Finance Minister in his speech, placed in close juxtaposition to this increased duty on flour his proposition to compensate the farmer by allowing seed for ensilage corn in free, but he takes care to prevent the farmer having free choice as to what kind of seed he must use; for, although he has not had any experience himself in farming, the Finance Minister takes upon himself to dictate to the farmers the exact kind of corn seed he must use, whether his experience has proved it to be the best or not. He proposes also that the farmer shall get his molasses and his commeal at a lower rate. Provided he can fulfil the conditions, which the Minister of Customs is sure to make as complicated as possible, necessary to obtain a rebate on corn, which may be kiln-dried and used as human food, the Finance Minister, in the kindness of his heart, will allow him to use his molasses and cornmeal together; so that when the farmer is obliged, by his depleted purse and the increased price of flour, to substitute Johnny cake for the wheat bread he was in the habit of using, he may sweeten them by an unlimited application of molasses instead of the butter he might be reasonably expected to use. I wish now to state what, in my opinion, the Government might have done. We want free raw material, free corn, free artificial fertilisers, &c., and the farmer wants a chance to buy where he can cheapest, or at any rate not to pay an outrageous tax on articles of necessity. He has asked that when changes are made in the tariff they should be in the direction of lowering the duty. But what has the direction of lowering the duty. But what has the Finance Minister given him? He proposes a reduction of duty on dry plates for photographs, and also gives him the great and inestimable blessing of being able to buy wall-paper a little cheaper The Finance Minister and his friends than before. propose to protect the farmer. This is their great panacea—protection, nothing but protection. They seem to think that protection has been so successful that they can apply it on every occasion. I would call their attention to the fact that in former days, when they tried to protect the farmer in his wheat and wool growing and by putting a duty on corn, what has been the result? That kind of protection, instead of aiding the farmer, actually hurts him, and to-day these farmers, who for the past eleven years have been enjoying that protection, are calling on the Government to put wheat and flour on the free list; but the Government insist on taking the opposite course. In this connection, I would like to read an extract from a newspaper which hon. gentlemen opposite cannot consider as totally opposed to them, although on certain occasions it attacks their policy. I refer to an editorial in the Mail newspaper of 7th February, written after the meeting of the Farmers' Institute in Toronto, and in which the writer puts clearly the position from the farmers' standpoint :

"Looking at the tariff as it stands, it is difficult to find in what particular it assists agriculture. It does not improve prices at home when there is any sort of a crop to sell and it certainly acts as a check rather than as an assistance to exportation. The British and foreign markets to which we wish to send our surplus and to which we must send our products in order to pay our interest on our debts, do not respond to the upward movement of our tariff.

"The heavier burden is being felt at this moment. We see this in the reduced agricultural exports, in the loud demand for higher import duties on fresh and salt meat and in the interest that is everywhere apparent with regard to the future of our foreign trade, some seeking closer trade relations with our neighbors, others asking that Great Britain shall discriminate in favor of seeking closer trade relations with our neignosts, saking that Great Britain shall discriminate in favor of the colonies with a duty of five or ten per cent. It is not at all desirable that the Government should come to the research of the farmer with bounties or rebates. What it rescue of the farmer with bounties or rebates. What it should do is to reduce the tariff as to place him in a better position to compete with his rivals."

Here is a very clear and able exposition of the gist of the whole matter, but, instead of this, the Government has proposed to assist the farmers by granting higher protection. In other words, it is proposed to raise the wall, and, therefore, they have increased the duty on beef, pork, bacon and ham. The intention may be very good, but I do not think experience will show good results. Finance Minister, in speaking of this matter, said:

"Now, there is no reason in the wide world, to my mind, why Canada should not only raise all the meat necessary for the consumption of her own people, but should become one of the largest exporters of these different kinds of meat to foreign countries. It is with a view of fostering these meat producing industries with a fairly protective duty, that the Government have come to the conclusion to protect the farmers by raising the duty on these meats in this way."

He expects that to be brought about by increasing the duties on these commodities at home. could that foster our export trade? The Minister knows very well that the price of these articles in the countries to which we would export them is not regulated by what we export, which has an inappreciable effect on those markets. While we might get a little better price out of the home market, we cannot affect the prices of these articles in the foreign market. The Finance Minister ought to know that, whenever we have a surplus and export to the foreign country, the price in the home market is invariably regulated by the price for export purposes. He cannot expect, and he knows that our farmers will not be able to obtain an appreciably larger price in the home market than they will obtain for what they will export. I do not believe that our farmers can get any great benefit from these extra duties. The farmers will not be able to get any greater price from the pork packers, the bacon curers or the lard triers. I think the duty on live hogs will prove to be a little less than the duty on mess pork, and the pork packers will not give any better price than before. I find by past experience, that where a business of this kind is started it is the middlemen and not the producers who make the benefit out of the increased duties. I suppose there will be increased prices to the consumer, but I am afraid the farmer, who is the producer, will not get the benefit of them. The home market has been held up to us as the great compensation for all the evils from which the farmer has suffered under the protective policy of hon. Mr. FISHER.

gentlemen opposite. We have been told, over and over again, that the farmers ought to have a great home market. I read with great attention the speech of the President of the Council. I was sorry I was not present, because he is always an eloquent and able speaker, and I listen to him with pleasure. But I was surprised at some of the statements made by him. I was astounded at the deductions which were drawn from the facts he stated, and one of the most extraordinary was that, as has been stated over and over again by the hon. gentleman and his friends, the home market in the United States has enabled the farmers there to obtain increased prices, but he kicked over his own argument by the statement that in the New England States the farmers are in a condition of despair, and, in fact, are much worse off than our farmers What is the comparison between the home market which the farmers of the New England States have and the home market which our farmers have? In the New England States there are a number of large towns. In Massachusetts, New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and down to Pennsylvania and even down to Washington and Baltimore, you find that large cities are so close together that, when you are on the railway, you can scarcely get out of one before you arrive at another. Yet, even there, the hon gentleman says that the farmers are in despair, that they are leaving their farms and seeking other pursuits. this an example of what is to happen to our own farmers in eastern Canada? I do not believe that the home market has done much for the farmers in the Eastern States, and I do not believe it will do much for our own farmers. I agree to a certain extent with what the President of the Council has said in regard to the New England States, but I must differ with some of his statements. I know something of the New England States. I live close to them. It is true that I have not lived there so long as the President of the Council, and no doubt I have not travelled so much through those States as he has, but I know something about them, and, while I confess that it is easy for the hon. gentleman to point to certain farms in certain districts which the people have left, districts which are depleted and farms which are no longer profitably cultivated, yet I know that contiguous to these farms he will find farmers who are amongst the most prosperous on the continent of America, men who have taken advantage of the home market to which he refers, and who, by taking care to suit their wares to their market, have made money and are prosperous. Those who know the New England States know well that there is a great deal of waste land in that country. There are immense ranges of mountains and rocky places which it would be folly for any farmer who understood his business to attempt to till. On the other hand, the river bottoms are fertile, and where the washings of the hills have accumulated there is good land, and there are farmers there who are very prosperous and who are producing the articles which are suitable for their home market. But, in the same municipality with them, you will find hill-sides which it would be folly to attempt to till. If an investigation were made, I believe it would be found that the farms which are vacant are such as I have described, that those which are worth $2 or $3 or $4 an acre are those which it would be folly for any man who understood agricultural pursuits to try to make a living out of. I will read a short extract from the State Board of Agriculture of Vermont, the last which I was able to obtain in the Library. A gentleman writing about what crops the Vermont farmers should raise, says this:

"From where I now write I can see a range of mountains and note the difference in the value of the clearings. One part is a pasture noted for its productiveness, has good living springs upon it, was all or nearly all cropped to wheat or rye, and produced large crops. Joining this is a large tract cleared the same way, cropped the same, but instead of stopping near the top of the mountain it was cleared to the very summit. Now, what is the difference of the two? The first with a heavy growth of forest above it so protects it from the winds that snow stays upon it with little drifting. The natural decay of leaves and other forest matter is washed down by the melted snow and rains, all of which and many more cause to enrich, protect and water such lands on the side of our mountains, but where cleared to the top and over, it matters but little how rich and productive the natural soil is, and a great many years will not pass without its showing signs of deterioration."

There is another point to which I wish to allude in connection with the statement of the President of the Council. These farms in the New England States have been tilled far longer than our farms in the Eastern Provinces. It is true that all over the eastern part of this continent we have, to a large extent, exhausted the native fertility of the soil. but those New England farms have been tilled for a hundred years longer than the farms in the Eastern Provinces of Canada, and it is not to be wondered at if at length their fertility has become exhausted, and the farmers are feeling the effects of it. But, although this state of affairs exists in the New England States, I know that during the last season the prices of some farm products have been lower in the United States than they are in Eastern Canada, but it is only within the last year that such has been the case. Although our farms have not been tilled nearly so long, and our farmers have not been under the baneful influences of protection nearly so long, our farmers are rapidly reaching a condition which will very soon be absolutely worse than that on the other side of the line. We know that our farmers have only suffered from protection for 11 years, while the farmers of New England have been suffering for 25 years, and it is no wonder that the latter have at last reached that stage which was depicted by the President of the Council. But there is another point which the hon gentleman overlooked, and which I think partially explains why these farms have been able to stand the drain upon them longer than ours have. In the American Union, while they have a high protective wall round the whole Union, they have free trade over a large territory, and with a great population; while we, unfortunately, have free trade amongst a very small population, although over a large extent of territory. There is another comparison which the hon, the President of the Council made, and which I must allude to. He quoted statistics to show that the farms of the Province of Ontario are much more productive than the farms in the United States. I do not, for a moment, suppose that the hon. Minister had any intention of misleading the House, but he could not have chosen figures which would more easily mislead his hearers, had they not been fully aware of the facts. On the one hand he took the crop reports of the Province of Ontario, and on a rebate on corn.

the other hand he took the average crop reports of the whole of the United States. Now, anybody who knows anything about Ontario knows that that Province is the garden of the American continent, and that its lands are tilled by the very best farmers to be found in America. The figures he quoted included not only such favored States as Ohio, Illinois and New York, but the crop returns also included the prairies of the west, which are tilled in a very crude manner, although profitably enough, no doubt; they also included returns from the Southern States, which have generally a poor soil, tilled by ignorant black laborers, who know nothing about farming, and in a climate unsuitable to the production of crops which the hon. gentleman chose for his comparison. He took these figures and compared them with the figures from Ontario, comprising, as I said, the best farming lands in America, which land is cultivated by the best farmers on this continent, and then he takes a great deal of satisfaction in showing that Ontario presents a great superiority over the United States. So I say that his comparison is not fair, and the Minister could not have appreciated the way in which he was misleading and deceiving his hearers, and the way in which his words, if they went to the country without explanation, would be likely to deceive and mislead the people. Now, we do not pretend to deny that the farmers of the United States are suffering; the farmers of England are suffering. The world is coming under new conditions, owing to the opening up of channels of communication between different countries, and new fields are being brought into the markets of the world, and farmers are being handicapped as they never were before. But the fact that the farmers of the United States are suffering does not disprove the fact that the policy of the hon. gentleman is to blame for the suffering amongst the farmers of Canada. We see that the farmers of the United States, in their various organisations, are protesting vigorously against the protective tariff, and are asking to be re-lieved from the burden of taxation under which they are laboring, and the farmers of Canada are asking the same thing. If the Government wish to continue the parallel a little further they can take an example from the Government of the United States, and look at the McKinley Bill and the present resolutions before Congress, and see the example which they are inclined to follow. But I do not think that is the true policy. On the contrary, a much better policy is proposed by the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in the amendment he has moved to the resolutions of the Finance Minister. I have said that the Finance Minister proposed to give us, in return for additional burdens imposed on the farming community, an export trade in pork and beef. A little while ago the Minister of Finance was urged to give us free corn. Before that again the Minister was asked to give us a rebate on corn fed to animals for export, just as he gives a rebate on corn made into whiskey for export. At that time the Minister of Customs said it would be exceedingly difficult to arrange a rebate and to arrange for the farmers to get the benefit of it, and we supposed the Minister was therefore afraid to give us the rebate, and certainly he was not going to have anything to do with We asked for free corn.

The Minister of Finance has refused us free corn; but, contrary to the tenor of the remarks of the Minister of Customs, he has undertaken to give us a rebate on certain corn. He has arranged to give a rebate on corn, not fed to animals for export, but when prepared and eaten ourselves. In other words, we are not allowed to take the corn and feed it to our cattle and get the advantage of a rebate, but the hon. Minister insists that in order to get the advantage of this tariff we must feed the corn to ourselves. I prefer to feed my corn to my cattle rather than to myself, and I think it is more suitable food for them than for me. We, in this country, do not raise any quantity of corn. raise coarse grains for various purposes, and in Ontario notably they raise barley, which they can sell at a higher price than corn. It is natural, that we in this country should import, and we will continue to import, notwithstanding the increased duty of the hon. gentleman, a very large quantity of pork products, bacon, ham and so on. If the hon. Minister had enabled us to have free corn to feed to our animals, we would have been much better able to supply the home market with those products than we are under the present conditions and with the increased duties. The seven cents per bushel duty on corn is a much greater hardship to the farmer in feeding pork than is the advantage of the extra duty placed on pork, even as regards controlling the home market, while the latter is of no use in enabling him to secure an export trade. It is well known among farmers to-day that the only solution of the agricultural question is to reduce the cost of production. Competition is so keen that, unless our farmers are able to place the products on the market at the very lowest prices, they have no chance to secure business, and an import duty on those products does not aid us to decrease the cost of production, it simply enables us to fleece our neighbors who are obliged to buy our products. But if the Government had given us free raw material in the shape of corn, also free artificial fertilisers and free seeds, our farmers would be able to reduce the cost of production and have been able togo to work at once and compete with a much better chance of securing profit and increasing their trade. There is one particular item in regard to the export trade to which I desire to allude, and it is extraordinary. From the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick we exported last year live cattle to the value of $62,000, which, according to a calculation of the hon, member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), would be worth about $13 per head. They were the unfinished products which were exported to the United States, to be fed with the cheap corn which the New England farmers are able to obtain from the west without paying duty, and after feeding them they sent the animals back to the Maritime Provinces to be eaten by the people there. What is the actual loss in that trade last year? While we exported live cattle from those Provinces, as I have said, to the United States, of the value of $62,000, we imported from the United States beef to the value of $167,-Can anything be a more suicidal commercial transaction? I do not know of any. We send over lean cattle, and the farmers of the United States, having the cheap corn, are able to fatten them and return them to this country in the shape Mr. FISHER.

they go to the United States, and on the beef when it comes into this country; and the result is that the people who eat the beef have to pay higher prices for it, and the farmers of the United States reap the larger profits. A more complete expose of the fallacy and extraordinary character of the present policy cannot be placed before the House. What do the Government They propose to raise the tariff propose 9 higher than before, they are throwing down a challenge to our neighbors to enter on a war of tariffs. I did not expect it of the Government, I did not even expect the Finance Minister to be so reckless; I thought that, although the gentleman who was the greatest statesman of the party is now High Commissioner in London, his shadow and spirit would have controlled them even up to the present time, and they would not have dared to take this step. But after reading the speech of the President of the Counciland the announcement he made. I suppose with the approval of his colleagues, that he is not in favor of any kind of reciprocity any longer, the murder is out. We know now with longer, the murder is out. We know now with what we have to deal. The hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) endorsed that petition, but the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) said he did not go so far, that he was not prepared to go that extent, and I rather thought he would go very far against reciprocity and conciliation with the United States. But I was glad to find that that hon. gentleman, showing his usual independence, was prepared to come out, and at all events utter a word of caution to the President of the Council and his colleagues in the Administration. I am rather surprised that the President of the Council was chosen to place before the House a statement of that kind. He has not generally spoken in that sense. Some hon, members can look back to the day when he made a very important speech in this House, in the course of which he pinned his faith to reciprocity, and in which, although he asked for a higher tariff to be passed, he said he did not want to force a war of tariffs, but he said he was in favor of reciprocity of tariffs because he wished to enforce reciprocity of trade. I need not, however, go so far back as that speech. The hon, gentleman has had abundant opportunities since that time to make this announcement. The question of reciprocity has been brought up on various occasions, and hon. members on this side of the House have stated themselves in favor of it. Never, until the other night, has the hon gentleman spoken in that direction. Nay, more. Last summer I met the hon. gentleman on the hustings in the Eastern Townships, and he made a long address dealing with reciprocity, but he did not go so far as he did the other night. On the contrary, he said he was in favor of reciprocity in agricultural products. He pointed to the statutory offer which hon, gentlemen opposite always point to when they deal with this question, and said he and his friends were in favor of agricultural reciprocity, although not in favor of unrestricted reciprocity. I was surprised that that hon, gentleman, coming from the Eastern Townships as I do, should have made that statement, but he is not alone in his party in his former sentiments with regard to reciprocity. We know what the leader of the Government has said on various occasions, and I happened to come across some remarks of the First Minister, made not of beef. Duty has to be paid on those cattle when | later than 1884, when my hon friend from Queen's,

P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), moved in favor of unrestricted reciprocity and which remarks will bear quotation to the House:

"I do not know any reason why the hon, member who moved this or the seconder, laid before the House these elaborate statements to show the value of reciprocal trade or trade of any kind with the United States. That is admitted. That goes without saying. We all admit that it would be well that we had a large trade with the United States, rather than a small one; and I think Canada as compared in her action with the action of the United States, has done everything that she could well do in order to secure that desirable object."

Here was the leader of the Government in 1884 asserting most positively that he was in favor of limited reciprocity, but still reciprocity, and boasting of the fact that he and his Government had done all they could to accomplish that fact. But now we hear the President of the Council declaring himself practically against all kinds of reciprocity, and what occasion is this on which he does so? It is at a time when in the United States there are two parties fighting on this very question; it is at a time when we know there are two propositions before the Congress of the United States, just as there are two propositions before this House and before the people of Canada. We have on the one hand in the United States the Hitt resolution We have on the one which comes very close to the proposition made from this side of the House, and on the other hand we have the McKinley resolution which imposes a prohibitory tariff on Canadian products. I can only conclude from the remarks of the Finance Minister, and from the remarks of the President of the Council, that the McKinley Bill is the one which they desire to see brought into force. They cannot expect anything else from the Congress of the United States, for at the very time Congress is asked to pass judgment on these resolutions the Minister of Finance says: "We will no longer keep our standing offer on our Statutebooks; we do not want even the limited reciprocity we have had, we will not have reciprocity even in natural products." What answer can we expect from the people to this? The only answer we can expect, and I fear it is the only one we will get, is, that the United States will put in force these severe tariff restrictions which have been proposed in the McKinley resolution. Let us see what will be the result of this. For some weeks we have had these tariff resolutions before us and during that time I have met many farmers from my own district, and I have had correspondence with many others. have heard what was going on, and I have seen what was written in the newspapers, but I have not met with any farmer or with any one who takes any interest in the agriculture of this country, but who is fully aware of the fact that if these resolutions become the law of the United States, we, the Canadian farmers, will suffer materially and severely. If there were any dishonor in any way whatever to Canada, in the proposition which we make, I would be the last to advocate it, but when we find that there is a large section, if not an absolute majority, of the people of the United States who are prepared to meet us half way in arranging our trade relations, it seems to me the height of folly that our people should refuse to meet them and refuse to try and bring about a reasonable and proper understanding on this question of recipro-Although I believe this question of reciprocity affects every industry in this country, although I believe that our manufacturing industries, | and our trade and commerce will be benefited enormously by the most unlimited measure of reciprocity we can bring about, still I believe that the interests of the farmers more than that of any other class are involved, and that it is more to their advantage than to any others, that reciprocity should be obtained. I will give you an instance of what will be the result of the two policies now before the people of Canada and the people of the United States. My hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) proposes an amendment, of which I will quote the last paragraph as it is a concise statement of its purport. It says:

"That the additional taxation which is now sought to impose will still further increase the burthens of the people, and is likely still further to aggravate the distress unhappily existing among a large portion of the farming population of this Dominion, and that under such circumstances it is the bounden duty of this House, instead of adding to the existing oppressive taxation, to apply itself to the reduction of the burdens now impeding the progress and prosperity of the principal producing classes of the Dominion, and for this purpose to abolish or reduce the taxes now imposed on articles of prime necessity to farmers, miners, fishermen and other producers."

While he proposes that we shall have unrestricted reciprocity with the United States the hon, gentlemen opposite propose just the reverse, viz., the raising and the increasing of the tariff wall between us and that country. I have applied the two policies to one article which is largely exported from my own Province. Hay is largely exported from the Province of Quebec to the United States, and there is a duty of $2 per ton upon hay going into that country. Under that duty our people can with a moderate degree of profit export that hay, and it is a business which is largely carried on, as may be seen by a reference to the Trade and Navigation Returns. Last year Canada exported $822,000 of hay to the United States. We propose to make hay free going into the United States by means of obtaining unrestricted reciprocity, and thereby giving the farmer $2 per ton more on all his hay. The policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite proposes to make the United States duty on hay $4, a practically prohibitory duty, which will absolutely shut out that nearly a million of dollars worth of hay going to the United States. Such a policy will prevent our people reaping the profit of that export trade, and will throw on the people, especially of the Province of Quebec, a large amount of land which to-day is not very suitable for other agricultural operations. way the market of this country will be glutted to such an extent that the prices will be largely reduced, and there will be no consumption for that hay which we now export. Any one who knows farming knows that that land cannot be changed in one or two years so as to make it suitable for other crops. This is a fair specimen of the way in which the two policies now before the people of this country will affect the farmers of Canada, and I think it is a very fair example indeed. I would not venture to characterise that policy in the way I heard it characterised a little while ago by one of their own friends, but I cannot help thinking that the epithet applied to it was a pretty correct one. An hon. member opposite during this debate, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson) said:

"Whoever heard before of people trying to make a bargain as hon, gentlemen opposite seem to be trying to make a bargain with the United States decrying what they have to sell? If they are striving to have reciprocity on fair terms with the United States, why do not hon, gentlemen do as any man would do if he was selling a horse or any other commodity—let the other people find out the bad qualities?"

Now, I confess that I do not want to see our statecraft in this country carried on in the way in which horse jockeys do their trading; I do not want to see in this country what I might call horse-trading politicians. I would not have characterised the policy of hon, gentlemen opposite in this way if their own follower had not thus characterised it. I think it bad enough for men with no great reputation to trade horses in that way, and try to take advantage of and cheat their neighbor as much as they can; but when an hon. member gets up in this House and asks the people of Canada to endorse such a policy, I do not think it is a very dignified procedure, and I regret to think that the hon. gentleman should suppose that his own friends would be guilty of a horse-jockying statecraft like this; but I think it is a sufficient condemnation of their policy. It is not undignified, but it is only selfrespecting and dignified on our part to hold out the olive branch to the people of the United States. I do not think that in doing that we should be lowering our dignity so much as we would by following the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, the hon. member for South Oxford has announced an alternative; he has moved an amendment of which I have just quoted the last paragraph; and I feel convinced that it is my duty to vote for that amendment in preference to the resolutions the hon. Finance Minister has proposed. If that is not carried in this House, I have confidence that when the people of the country come to judge between the two policies, the farmers at all events, who are the largest class of voters in the country, will feel that the hon, member for South Oxford has understood their needs and interests and has sympathised with them, and that they will support and endorse that policy. At any rate, I know full well that the vote I am going to give will be endorsed, not only by the people I represent, but by the other people in the Eastern Townships, whom I feel I have a better right to represent than the hon. President of the Council in the utterances he has given in this debate.

Mr. TURCOT. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, at this advanced hour of the evening, I shall not long occupy the attention of the House with the discussion of the subject which has been brought before our consideration during three or four days. Since the beginning of this discussion I have heard speeches from both sides of the House. But notwithstanding the eloquent speeches made by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown), as well as by the member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) I cannot be persuaded that there is, at the present time, as much prosperity in the Dominion of Canada as they wish to make us believe. question which is now occupying us is a question of general interest, and having the honor to represent an agricultural county, I believe that it is my duty to say a few words to explain the vote which I shall have to give on the amendment of the hon. member for Oxford South (Sir Richard Cartwright). A great deal has been said about prosperity on the other side of the House; but, Mr. Mr. FISHER.

Speaker, no argument has been advanced to convince me that there is any great prosperity in the country. According to my idea, the signs of prosperity in a country should be manifested by an increase in commerce, an increase in exportations, an excess of exportations over importations, and, in short, I believe that the best sign of prosperity of a country is a rapid increase in the population. In examining the Trade and Navigation Returns we find that there has been no increase in navigation since 1874. In 1874, the sum total of our commerce was \$217,565,510, and in 1889, the sum total was only \$204,414,098; that is to say, a decrease of \$13,000,000 between the two periods. Now, if we take the years 1883 and 1889, we find a difference of nearly \$26,000,000. In 1883 the sum total of our commerce was \$230,339,826, whilst last year it was only \$204,414,098. It is impossible to see in these figures any signs of prosperity, since our commerce instead of increasing has decreased. I said that another sign of prosperity was in the increase of exportation. If we again examine the Trade and Navigation Returns we find that our exports, in 1883, amounted to \$98,085,304; and in 1889 they were \$89,189,167; that is to say, a difference of over \$9,000,000. Thus, then, notwithstanding the speeches of the hon. members on the right, we cannot, in these figures, see any sign of prosperity. The third sign of prosperity of which I have spoken, is an excess of exportations over importations. In examining into the amount of our importations, I find that in 1883 we exported to the amount of \$98,085,804, and that we imported to the amount of \$132,254,-022; that is to say, that there was an excess of importations over exportations of more than \$34,-000,000. In 1889, the last year for which we have the returns, we had an excess of \$26,000,000 of importations over our exportations. And, if we take the total amount since Confederation, we find that our exportations amounted to \$1,834,344,456, and that our importations amounted to \$2,285,361,-310, or a surplus of importations over exportations of \$451,016,854; making an average per year of \$20,500,000. It is, therefore, impossible to see in these figures any signs of prosperity in our coun-Mr. Speaker, in reading the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance, I perceive that he tells us that we are in an era of prosperity, because the Customs and Excise revenues are increasing. He tells us that in 1881 the Government revenues, arising from all sources, were \$29,635,297, and that in 1889, the last fiscal year, these revenues amounted to \$38,762,870, making an increase of \$9,147,573. These figures are perfectly correct; but, Mr. Speaker, I believe that a surplus in the taxes, especially when the population is not increasing, denotes rather a sign of decay than of prosperity. The fourth sign of prosperity that I have mentioned is a rapid increase in the populamentioned by the hon. Minister of Finance, 1881 and 1889, I see that in 1881 the population of Canada was 4,324,000, and in 1889 it was 5,075,000, that is to say, an increase of 751,000, or $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Now, if we take into account the immigrants who come here at our expense from foreign countries, and who, according to statistics, reach the number of 750,000, we find that our population has remained stationary since 1881, and that there has been no increase. I said, a moment ago, that the hon. Minister of Finance announced, in his Budget speech, that we were in an era of prosperity, seeing there was an increase over the revenues of the consolidated funds of \$9,147,573, from 1881 to 1889. That is to say, that in 1881 the revenues were \$29,635,297. and in 1889 they were \$38,762,870. The reason of this increase is easily understood. It is due to an increase of taxes upon importations. Thus, in 1874, we imported to the value of \$128,-The duties collected upon this sum 213,582. amounted to \$14,421,882.67, or 11½ per cent. 1878 the figure for importations was \$93,081,787, and the taxes levied amounted to \$12,795,697.17, or 135 per cent. I now take the figures for 1880, the period of the inauguration of the National Policy; the importations amounted to \$86,489,747, the taxes amounted to \$14,138,849.42, or $16\frac{1}{2}$ per Whilst in 1874 our importations amounted to \$128,000,000 in round numbers, the duties levied amounted merely to \$14,000,000; that is to say, that there was a difference of \$42,000,000 upon the importations, and that the amount from taxes was the same. This result is very easy to understand. It is that in 1878, after the inauguration of the National Policy, a tariff of 35 per cent. was imposed upon manufactured articles, instead of 17½ per cent. as it was in 1874. There is the kind of prosperity such as understood by the hon. Minister of Finance, according to his argument. Now, let us take the amount of importations in 1881. They Now, let amounted to \$105,330,840; the duties levied to \$18,500,785.97, or $\$17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the total amount of our importations. In \$883, importations \$132,254,022; duty collected, \$23,172,308.97, or 17½ per cent., making an average of six per cent. higher than in 1874. In 1887, during the first session that I had the honor of sitting here, there was an amendment to the tariff. In 1887 the importations amounted to \$115,224,931; the taxes collected amounted to \$23,784,523.23; that is to say, that with a deficit in the importations of \$17,000,000 as compared with 1883, the taxes were the same as in 1883. Now, if we compare these figures with the population, we shall see that in 1868 the tax per head was \$2.62; these taxes have risen year by year to about \$6 per head. Well, if we seek for signs of decay in a country, I believe the rapid increase in its debt, the rapid increase of its expense and taxes, are exactly what we should look upon as indications of such decay. Let us look at the state of our debt. In 1881 it amounted to \$155,395,740.40; in 1889 it amounts to \$237,-530,041.65, or an increase, in that space of time, of 882,134,261.25, equal to 53 per cent. more. In 1881 the debt of Canada was \$35.76 per head; in 1889 it is \$46.50. The expenditure has increased very nearly in the same proportion. In 1881 it was \$25,502,554.42, and in 1889 it was \$36,917,-834.76, making an amount per head of the population of \$5.90 for 1881, and of \$7.27 for 1889. If We now calculate the amount of such expenditure per day, counting 365 days in the year, we find that in 1881 this expenditure was \$69,870.01, and in 1889 it was \$101,144.78 per day. The increase in taxation has also increased at the same ratio. The taxes in 1871 were about \$4 per head; in 1881 they were \$5.53 a head, and in 1889 \$6.03. Thus, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the prosperity about which they hold forth to us from the other side of the House, we see that our taxes and our debt are rapidly increasing, whilst our commerce is diminishing, whilst our population remains stationary, and whilst our imports exceed our All the speakers whom I have heard have said that on our side we do our best to cry Well, Mr. down the credit of our country. Speaker, there are some truths which are sad to tell, but they must be told. I represent an essentially agricultural county, and I believe that it is difficult at this time, for those who know the farmers, and who keep themselves informed of their condition every day, to say that they are in a prosperous state. It cannot be said that they are not courageous, for they always strive to prosper from year to year; but I am certain that the hon. Minister of Finance, when he tells us that the farmers' incomes are no less than in ordinary years, and that on the whole they are in a prosperous state, does not know much about their condition. It is true that we cannot expect anything from the Government in favor of the farmer, because, according to the speeches which we have heard from the hon. Minister of Finance and from his supporters, these gentlemen assert that the farmers are rich. We cannot, then, believe that they will do anything for the farmers because they think that they want nothing. Does not the hon. Minister of Finance know that the greater part of the farmers work and pay discount upon their future? Does he not know that farmers, in years such as those through which we are now passing, begin by getting into debt, paying discount upon the future, and finally, when they find themselves in a position when it is impossible for them to pay their debts, they sell their farms, and whatever remains to them to go to the United States? If the Government knows the condition of the farmer, I have no doubt that it will apply a remedy to it. But for all answer the Government tells the farmers, particularly those of the Province of Quebec, that it will give them protection by imposing an increased duty of 25 cents upon flour, when we know that there are not 10 per cent. of the farmers who do not buy flour during six months of the year. Truly these gentlemen make me think of the physician who was attending a sick person to whom it was necessary to give violent poisons. He begins by administering a small dose and he increases the dose gradually, and his patient finishes by being able to take a quantity of poison that would kill any one who had not been accustomed to it. Just so is it with protection. They began in 1878 by imposing a tax of 50 cents a barrel on flour, and now that the farmers have continued to keep these gentlemen in power, that tax has this year been increased by 25 cents, and if the farmers do not grumble too much, it is certain that in a few years, they will finish the dollar, the tax being gradually administered like the poison. Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the farmers of the Province of Quebec, understand that tax. It is true that the Minister of Finance said that to make amends he would take the tax off molasses, but I must here remark that people use much more flour than molasses or black strap, as it is commonly called. If the Government labors to protect the farmer, I believe that it is not on molasses that they would levy taxes because in the Province of Quebec the farmers possess fine groves of maples and make a great quantity of sugar and syrup. If the hon. Minister of Finance doubts this, as I intend spending some days in the country during the Easter holidays, I will bring him some latire and sugar, to show him that a great deal of sugar and syrup is manufactured in the Province of Quebec, and he will see that he should take some other means to protect them than by providing molasses at a low price. Mr. Speaker, several speakers who have spoken about the duty on flour have told us that such a tax has not increased the price of flour. The hon. Minister of Finance tells us that the revenue for the last year was increased \$106,015 by the tax upon flour. Then, who pays this For if the tax on flour does not increase how does he hope to make anything, the loss of \$60,000 caused by diminishing the tax upon molasses? He tells us that the removal of the tax on molasses is to compensate farmers for a diminution of the tax on flour. He, therefore, hopes to make up on flour the diminution of the revenues on syrup. I heard a certain merchant who loved competition, and who thought to make his fortune, say, that he decided to sell molasses and syrup at cost price to attract custom. tomers came in abundance, but only bought molasses and syrup, and at the end of two or three years the merchant was obliged to assign. I hope the Government may not become bankrupt, but I also hope that at the next elections the electors will thank him for his molasses and his syrup and that they will be inclined to support men who are opposed to taxes upon flour, which is an article of the first necessity. The hon, Minister of Finance has besides announced great prosperity to us, for he tells us that this year there is a surplus of one million and more. This is about the best argument he has given us; but, if I consult the Trade and Navigation Returns, I find that in 1888 the taxes were \$28,177,413, and in 1889 they were \$30,613,522; that is to say, that there is an excess of taxes in 1889 of one million and a half over 1888. That is where the signs of prosperity of the hon. Minister of Finance are to be found. This year Minister of Finance are to be found. This year the hon. Minister of Finance thought he ought to reconstruct the tariff anew in order to increase the taxes still more. He finds his present surplus in taxes imposed upon the people, and he does not consider himself prosperous enough I suppose, for he is amending the tariff to make next year prosperous also. And he tells us that the present Government has inaugurated a system of protection under which the country has prospered, and that he intends to continue in. I believe that he is mistaken. I believe that the National Policy has brought prosperity to the Conservative party but has not made the country prosperous, that is to say the party of consumers. I have no doubt that he is satisfied, but the people are not so well satisfied. The hon. President of the Council (Mr. Colby) in his speech of the 27th March, admitted that our people were emigrating to the United States by hundreds of thousands; but he said also later on in his speech,the translation is my own: "I can affirm that if our farmers were more prosperous than those of Vermont or New York it is because we have protected them upon our markets, in a manner so that they can sell off their products at reasonable prices at our local markets." Does not the hon. President of the Council know what the price of agricultural products are on our markets? Thus, butter upon the Montreal market, which is I see that last year we exported to England 43,417 Mr. TURCOT.

the largest market that we have, is only worth 9 or 10 cents a pound.

Mr. DESJARDINS. How much? When did you learn that?

Mr. TURCOT. I did not learn that from the statistics. I am a dealer in that article and have seen for myself. I have at this present time several tubs of butter on the market, and if I could find one of the hon. Ministers to give me 13 cents for it I should be quite satisfied with a profit of two cents a pound. It often happens that there is no reason in depending upon statistics, but the man who is in the trade, and who has articles of this description upon the market, has no need of statistics. Let any one believe me who wishes, but I can say upon the authority of the best houses in Montreal, who sell butter on commission, that good butter is now sold at from 9 to 11 cents, and I have seen creamery butter sold lately at 15. The hon. member for Napierville (Mr. Ste. Marie) who is a dealer in hay, informs me that pressed hay sells for $7 a ton. Oats bring in 30 cents for 32 pounds. And that is called good prices for agricultural products. the only protection possible, to my mind, is to open foreign markets, since we produce more than we consume. Because there is no doubt that if the population of Canada consumed less than it produced prices would be higher; but as we produce more than we consume we must find a market to dispose of our surplus products. This end might be attained by establishing commercial relations with the United States. For, in spite of the high duties that we pay, as set forth in the Trade and Navigation Returns, the United States buy the greater part of our products. 1888 our exports to England amounted to $40,084,-984; to the United States they amounted to $42,-72,065; or a difference in favor of the United States of two millions and a half; in 1889 the exports to England amounted to $38,105,126; to the or a difference of five millions and a half in favor of the United States. I say, therefore, that the United States is the most natural market that we can have. I spoke a moment ago of the trade in hay. I believe that the only market that we can have for hay is that of the United States. Thus, in 1889 we exported 82,308 tons of hay to the United States, or a value of $822,381. Moreover, this hay is taxed to the amount of $2 per ton, and the poor farmer is obliged to work hard to harvest this hay; he pays besides 35 per cent. duty on agricultural implements. Is this what we understand by protection to farmers? Let us see now about horses. 164 horses were exported to England, representing a value of $26,975; 17,277 horses were exported to the United States, representing a value of $2,113,782. What should we do with our lambs if we had not the United States markets? I have no statistics of lambs, nevertheless, I have bought them for several years, as many as I can buy, in my own parish, as well as in the surrounding parishes; and in spite of a duty of 20 per cent., which makes a tax of nearly 50 cents a head, we sell lambs to the United States 50 cents, 60 cents, and sometimes 80 cents, dearer than on the Montreal market.

Mr. CIMON. And calves?

Mr. TURCOT. I will speak about them soon.

sheep, amounting in value to $303,009, and we exported 307,779 to the United States, amounting to $918,334. The American market is again, therefore, the natural market for this product. As to eggs, Mr. Speaker, we exported 98 dozens to England, amounting to $18, whilst during the same period we exported 14,011,017 dozens to the United States, making an amount of $2,156,725. As a great deal has been said about barley by our friends from the Province of Ontario, I shall excuse myself from speaking about it. Let us now pass on to potatoes. Two years ago I, myself, bought and despatched, from the station at Ste. Julie, about 10,000 bushels of potatoes, and was compelled to pay 15 cents duty to the United States. Not a year passes without a large quantity of potatoes being exported to the United States. If it were not for this duty of 15 cents per bushel upon potatoes, that would be a great source of income to our farmers, particularly in counties such as that which I represent. Last year we exported 444 bushels of potatoes to England and 717,668 to the United States. lost on horses, on account of the duties which we had to pay, more than $400,000, on sheep over $180,000, on hay $164,616, and on potatoes $107,-The only means then of protecting the farmers would be to obtain free trade between the United States and Canada. Our farmers produce more than they need for their consumption, and we necessarily require a market to dispose of our surplus products. But we are told that free trade between the United States and Canada would destroy the trade of our manufactures. I do not believe that there are many men who are inclined to maintain that trade in the country is in a prosperous condition. I find in the Journal of Commerce, page 124, a speech made by Mr. Bosquet, of La Banque du Peuple, in which he tells us:

"The considerable increase in the number of failures during the last year forms the dark side of the picture. The reports of commercial agencies point out in the Province of Quebec, in 1889, 651 failures, as against 482 of the preceding year, an increase of 169. The total amount of liabilities in 1889 reaches $6,856,105 as against $4,466,824 in 1888, an increase of $2,389,281."

In 1878, when we inaugurated the system of protection, I began to occupy myself with elections, and I saw influential Conservatives come to our country parts and say to the farmers: if you wish to sell your butter for 50 cents a pound vote for the Conservatives; if you wish to sell your pork for 20 cents a pound vote for the Conservatives. The people allowed themselves to be deceived by these fine promises. We have tried protection, and after twelve years' trial we are now in a worse state than that in which we were in 1878. If this protection which was to do so much good to the country has done nothing; if this protection which ought at least to have been favorable to the interests of manufacturers and merchants has not succeeded in bring prosperity to either merchants, or nanufacturers, or farmers, I believe that it should be time to try some other means. I know that the hon. members on the other side of the House have said that they have always voted in favor of protection, and that for this reason they ought to maintain it. But I do not believe in that theory. The country has its needs and ought not to work always in the same direction; it sometimes happens that a work is done after one manner, and it is successful, but that the following year the system ought to be changed. If we have tried the protective system for twelve years without any result, and I am in a position to believe it, because being in trade myself, having business with farmers, having business, so to speak, with all merchants, I am in a position to say that the country is not prosperous; if the protective system, I say, has not given any good results, why continue it? One thing is certain, it is that in protecting some one, we are protecting him at the expense of others. If we believe the papers which informed us that for a long time the Government has been receiving deputation upon deputation to change the tariff, each coming to make his complaint and finding that the tariff is in the way to make his fortune, we may judge from that that everything was not rose colored. But I do not believe that the last changes in the tariff can be any more satisfactory, and the hon. Minister of Finance will again receive a number of deputations and appeals against that tariff. I know that he has already received appeals against that tariff. I received this morning from the firm of Hudon, Hebert & Co., which I know personally, and which is one of the best groceries in Montreal, the following letter :-

"Sir.—We enclose you a copy of the petition presented to the Minister of Finance, on the subject of the proposed changes in the duties on liquors. By supporting the contents of this petition you will certainly meet the views of the trade of the Dominion.

"Yours respectfully,
"HUDON, HEBERT & CO."

Here is now a copy of the petition which has been presented to the hon. Minister of Finance:

" To the Hon. George Foster,

"Sir.—We, the undersigned, being a committee duly nominated to represent the wine and spirit interest of the City of Montreal, would respectfully bring to your notice the fact that the proposed changes in the Customs tariff relating to the duties on spirits are unsatisfactory.

"A case of imported whiskey, rum, brandy, &c., of one dozen bottles, reputed quarts, contains not more than two gallons. By the proposed tariff, a case is made to pay duty upon three gallons, an excess of, at least, one gallon over the actual contents.

"It is the universal custom to import spirits in bottles at various strengths under-proof, and we would respectfully submit that the levying of duty on bottled spirits, without allowing for such under-proof, is not equitable, as when imported over-proof we have to pay extra, because it will lead to the bottling of liquors by the purchaser here. Thus the safeguard of the shippers' branded cork and registered label will be lost and the consumer will, in very many instances, pay a high price for inferior and very often injurious liquor.

"We, therefore, pray that proof strength be taken as a standard, and that over-proof be charged extra and underproof be allowed for in proportion. As to the contents of cases, we ask that the duty be levied on actual measurement.

"We also pray that ginger wine now proposed to be

"We also pray, that ginger wine, now proposed to be classed as a cordial, be classed as a wine as heretofore.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, you see that even before the tariff has been put into force the Minister begins to receive petitions asking for a change, and as soon as it is voted deputations will continue to arrive from all parts. I believe that particularly in the interests of the farming class, in the interests of the county which I have the honor of representing, we should abandon this protective system and endeavor to have free trade with the United States. For these reasons, I shall vote for the amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and the Government will certainly not be surprised to see me give a vote of want of confidence.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I would ask the hon. leader of the Opposition whether he finds that there is no possibility of finishing the debate to-night?

Mr. LAURIER. I think it is absolutely impossible to finish the debate this morning. Several hon, gentlemen yet want to speak on this question.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In that case, I hope the hon gentleman and his friends will do their best to finish the debate at the next sitting of the House, otherwise we may be sure that it will be continued all next week.

Mr. LAURIER. It is certainly desirable that it should be finished as early as possible, but, at the same time, I cannot say that it will be finished at the next sitting.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I hope the hon. gentleman will do his best to have it finished then.

Mr. LAURIER. I certainly will do my best.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 1.40 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 3rd April, 1890.

ALIEN LABOR BILL.

Mr. TAYLOR moved:

That 500 copies of Bill (No. 8) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in Canada, be printed and placed at the disposal of the Select Committee to whom the Bill has been referred, and that Rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. TAYLOR. I might just say that there are a great many enquiries for copies of this Bill, and the supply is exhausted. There was a resolution passed in committee yesterday asking that this number should be printed.

Mr. LAURIER. Is that in accord with the resolution of the committee?

Mr. Turcot.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot see why we should depart from the usual rule in this matter. It is customary to bring any question of this kind before the Printing Committee, and I cannot see why that is not done now. Is this intended to be a kind of advertisement for the hon. gentleman who brought in the motion. There must be something to induce the hon. gentleman to bring the matter before the House, and to try and smuggle it through just at a time when a number of members are not here. We require a full explanation of Mr. GILLMOR. The explanation is, that the members of the committee understood there was a large demand for the Bill, and that it was important that it should be circulated. The committee desires that the Bill should be printed, if the House is willing to grant it.

2912

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It appears to me, that the Bill, if printed, should not be confined to the Committee; it should be distributed to members of the House, so that they may deal with it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This Bill met with very general disappointment when it was first introduced. It contains, to my mind, very objectionable principles, and very objectionable legislation, which I cannot approve of in any sense or The House disapproved of it, the leader of the Government pronounced against it in very strong language, the member for Northumber-land (Mr. Mitchell), one of the most experienced men on this side of the House, pronounced against it, many hon, gentlemen denounced it as containing possibly injurious consequences of a very grave nature, and the result was, that a select committee was appointed to report on the Bill generally. That committee may make a report for a modified Bill, or for a new Bill if necessary, but when that Bill comes before the House, it will be time enough to consider it. The present Bill will meet with greater disapproval outside of the House than it met with in the House, and in view of what is transpiring in the House of Representatives at Washington, I know of nothing which could be more injurious to Canadian interests than the publication of this Bill in the country, the leading of the workingmen country to believe that we are \mathbf{of} the adopt such a measure. I, for one, will not give my assent to this proposal. I did hope that when the Bill was referred to the matter would be calmly and quietly considered, and that we should have a report containing the result of the mature deliberations of the more sober-minded men of that committee, which would in some degree reflect the opinion of the House. I can see nothing but evil from the circulation of this Bill among the general public, as it would lead them to believe that it had a second reading in this House. It received a second reading on the understanding that it was only read pro forma, and the House was in no way or sense committed to it. If this Bill is printed, it will be understood outside that the Bill has received the assent of the House, and the declaration made on both sides that it only received a second reading in a technical tense, and not any endorsement of its principle, will not be understood. I hope this resolution will not be agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman is late in the day in discussing the merits of the Bill. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) asks why was not the usual rule followed and the committee allowed to recommend this printing? The committee did recommend it. I can say, for one, that I have had many applications for copies of this Bill, and was unable to supply them. If they are wanted by people in the country, I think there is no reason why we should not supply them.

Mr. MITCHELL. I entirely agree with my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), that this is no time to set the heather on fire; and if there is anything likely to do it, it is this spirit of retaliation which has grown up in this Parliament towards the people of the United States. In place of that, we ought to try to conciliate and subdue that feeling of antagonism. I entirely disagree with the proposition to publish additional copies of this Bill for circulation throughout the country. The hon. member from Prince Edward Island has correctly stated that, in giving this Bill a second reading, the House was not assenting to the principle of the Bill; that was distinctly stated by the hon. First Minister. The Bill was merely allowed to pass its second reading pro forma, in order that it might be sent to a committee to examine witnesses and obtain informa-tion to be placed before the House; and nothing can be gained by circulating additional copies throughout the country, except to excite antagonism towards the United States. What will be the result? The result will be to intensify the feeling against Canada at Washington, as represented by the McKinley Bill, which, if carried, will have the effect of destroying the markets of the United States for the farmers and other producers of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. McMULLEN. I should like to know if a resolution of this kind is in order without notice?

Mr. GILLMOR. I think the merits of the Bill ought not to be discussed when it is not before the House. The committee which has been appointed to consider this matter has been taking evidence at several meetings. This may be a small matter to our friends who are not living along the You talk about creating excitement. The excitement has already been created; the difficulties exist; and, therefore, it is a matter of serious consideration all along the frontier of 3,000 miles. Nor is it due to any legislation of this Parliament or any act on this side of the line. Nothing has been done in Canada to call forth this Bill. The trouble is all in consequence of legislation which took place at Washington. This Bill is a copy of the Act passed at Washington, which is being enforced all along the line, to the serious interference of Canadians. No matter how anxious we may be for conciliationand no one is more anxious for it than I am—there is a point at which a man of self-respect must resist, and if we, as a people, want to maintain our self-respect, we must at least let the United States understand that we do not approve of their measure, and if they are determined to enforce it and drive Canadians out of their country when they go there for employment, they ought to be shown that we have power to return that compliment. This measure is well understood in the United States. We are told that the United States Government do not wish to enforce their Act. Why, there is a clause in that Act providing that those who give information shall be remunerated out of the fines imposed on Canadians; their officers are acting upon that provision, and our people are being harassed beyond endurance.

Mr. LAURIER. The point of order has been taken, and perhaps the House may think it better to have this matter postponed to another day.

Mr. SPEAKER. As a matter of course the question cannot be put.

TERRITORIES REAL PROPERTY ACT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 131) to amend the Territories Real Property Act. He said: This Bill consists of a multitude of details in connection with the Act. Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

MONTREAL HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. LÉPINE (for Mr. Curran) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to appoint the Commission to report upon plans for Montreal Harbor improvements, early enough to enable the Commission to inspect the present condition of the River St. Lawrence, before the ice shoves and is carrried away?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is the intention of the Government to appoint such a Commission. I suppose it will be appointed early next week.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That when the House adjourns this day, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, at 3 p.m.

Mr. TROW. I wish to say that a number of the members have already left, a number of others are going at half-past four or five o'clock, and others desire to go west at ten o'clock to-night, and it is utterly out of the question to think that a vote can be taken on the question before the House to-night, for I am aware that from ten to twelve desire yet to speak on this side of the House. Therefore, is it not advisable that the House should adjourn to-night at six o'clock?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If there are so many members to speak that it will be impossible to close the debate to-night, surely that should not prevent the House sitting and going on with the debate; but I should hope that the speeches will not be so numerous or so long that we cannot take a vote to-night.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the hon. gentleman is right that the House should sit, and that members should go on and deliver their speeches; but the importance of the division on the resolution now before the House cannot be ignored, and I do not see how we are going to take a division in the absence of three-fourths of the House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I thought the understanding was that we should, if at all possible, take a vote last night. The leader of the Opposition informed us that was not possible, and so we adjourned at two o'clock in the morning, thinking we might possibly be able to take a vote to-night. If we could do so, that would certainly hasten very much the close of the Session, but if we do not, we will probably reach Thursday before taking a vote. If the leader of the Opposition thinks it is not possible to come to a vote to-night, I would suggest that both sides should agree to close the debate at eight o'clock on Tuesday.

Mr. MULOCK. I hardly think that arrangement could be made. A large number of the members will have visited their constituents during this so short recess, and may desire to submit their views to the House; and it would not be fair to make an arrangement which would prevent their doing so.

Mr. KENNY. I understood the arrangement was made two days ago that the debate would be closed last night if possible. These delays, instead of being a convenience to private members, are a great inconvenience.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). It will be impossible to take a division to-night, as the House cannot sit after midnight; and if we sit until then many members, who object to travelling to-morrow, will have to delay their departure until Saturday. I have no objection myself to travelling to-morrow, but the objections of others should be respected.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understand from the whips that the absent members have paired, so that their absence will make no difference. They have paired for their convenience, and that should not prevent our going on with the business of the country. If we do not take a vote to-night and do not sit to-night, we cannot take it on Tuesday, and another week will be taken, which will certainly delay prorogation until late in May. It is not our fault if the debate does not close to-night.

Mr. LAURIER. Let the debate go on to-day as long as it can, and we will take a vote on Tuesday.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If members cannot be here on Tuesday in time for the vote, that will be their own fault. They ought to be here. Gentlemen from the distance Provinces are anxious to get through the business of the Session, but every now and then arrangements are made by which members who live near Ottawa can go home and get back in time for work. This is not fair towards gentlemen who live at a distance, and, therefore, cannot possibly attend to any business during a short adjournment, as for practical business purposes it is useless for them to take advantage of these adjournments.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would suggest that the vote be taken on Tuesday next without naming the hour, and when hon. gentlemen know that is the understanding they will not want to sit up until three or four o'clock.

Mr. MARA. My impression, and that of the majority on this side of the House, and of a great many members opposite, was that the division would be taken to-night. If that arrangement is to fall through, why not adjourn until Saturday, and let the House sit Saturday. In that case a division might be reached on Saturday night. If one arrangement is to be broken, there is no reason why we should hold to the other.

Mr. MULOCK. Were this an ordinary question, it would be reasonable to endeavor to come to such a conclusion as has been suggested. But Sir Hector Langevin.

the question we are debating is one of such vast importance, so far reaching in its effects, involving, in fact, the national life of this country, that Parliament would not be doing its duty if it adopted any measure calculated to restrict the expression of public opinion. There is a question before this House involving more or less our relations with a foreign country, and the expression of public opinion here should not be stifled. The adjournment, which is to take place for a few days, may be of great benefit to the country. Hon. gentlemen, when removed from the excite ment of this Chamber, may form opinions and gather information which would add to that already possessed by the House. I do not think we are doing our duty to the country to enter into any arrangement by which the humblest member of the House should be prevented from expressing his views. Though I have no desire to add anything to this debate, I will reserve the right to speak at any time, no matter what arrangement may be come to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the suggestion which has been made, to have the vote taken during the sitting on Tuesday, should be adopted. We may have to sit to two or three or four o'clock in the morning, though I cannot expect that any one will make us sit up to that hour. I understand the proposition to take the vote on Tuesday is acceptable to the members of the Government, and I think it should be to members on this side of the House.

Motion agreed to.

THE FISHERIES QUESTION.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to refer to a very important matter in regard to which I think this House ought to receive some information. We have recently had a Minister of the Crown at Washington—the hon. gentleman who is at the head of the Fisheries Department. He has been back for some days, and the country is interested in the proceedings which have been taken, or likely to be taken in regard to the fisheries. The modus vivendi being practically at an end, I think it is the duty of the Government, if they can do so without interfering with considerations of public policy, to inform us as to the present position of affairs.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not here at this moment. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will renew his question when he is here.

Mr. MITCHELL. I saw the Minister here a few minutes ago, but, if the Government are not prepared to give us information now in regard to the present status, they ought to be prepared to do so when the House resumes its sittings on Tuesday next.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps the hongentleman will ask the question when the First Minister is here.

WAYS AND MEANS-THE TARIFF.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster for the second reading of Resolutions reported from Committee of Ways and Means, and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

I feel it due to myself, to Mr. MITCHELL. the constituents whom I have the honor to represent, and to the country, that I should give my views in relation to this tariff. There never was a time during my public life when I felt it was more important to call attention to the course which the Government is pursuing, and the direction in which we are drifting. I desire to give a little bit of past history as to what has led us to our present position, and that will take me back to the time when the First Minister and his colleagues at that time interjected themselves into the gathering of delegates from the Maritime Provinces which took place in Charlottetown, Some hon. members may con-P. E. I., in 1864. sider this ancient history, but I consider that it is necessary, to understand the attitude which was taken at that time, and the manner in which we have drifted since into a very different position in regard to the trade policy of this country. At that time we in the Maritine Provinces, representing a very small minority of the people of British North America, were induced to forego the scheme for the adoption of which we had met at Charlottetown, by the present leader of the Government, whom we were glad to welcome, and whose presence there we were all glad to see. He asked us, and we decided, to postpone the important measure we had met to consider, and to meet again in Quebec in order to make a larger union of the colonies of British America. The project captured my youthful mind at that time, and the plausible manner of my hon. friend and the way in which he addressed the gathering of delegates there, induced me to believe that it was in the interests of the country to unite the scattered Provinces and to come under one Government, and so to cement British rule on this continent. We were told what advantages this would give us in dealing with the United States. We were told that we were excluded by the protective tariff of the United States, which was not as high then as it was after the war necessities came to be understood. We listened to the voice of the charmer and agreed to his views, and we met in the following October in Quebec, for the purpose of creating one grand British nationality on this continent. I am pleased to say-although I have some regrets in regard to it—that the national object which the right hon, gentleman presented to us, has since been carried out. But, while I am willing to give the right hon. gentleman every credit for his sincerity of intention at that time, in stating that the smaller Provinces would have their rights carefully guarded, I regret that we did not take the necessary safe-guards which would have completely insured to the smaller Provinces that protection which we then thought they would require. A picture was presented to us on that occasion of the great advantages that would flow from the connection of those isolated Provinces by railway with the greater Provinces of Canada, and ultimately, by the extension of the system, with the West. That scheme was so grand, so magnificent, that it captured the imagination of every person at that meeting. We consented to go to Quebec, in order to see what could be done by way of an arrangement which would unite under one Confederation all the colonies of British America. I raged in the United States; the people were comam not going to take up much time of the House pelled to put on what were then called war $92\frac{1}{3}$ with too much ancient history, but I feel that something must be said of the origin of Confederation, in order that we may ascertain where we may stand to-day. What was the policy of Canada on that occasion? My right hon. friend knows that the policy of the statesmen of that day, including himself, was one of free trade. What was the policy of the Maritime Provinces that were led into that union? It was a policy, from one end to the other, of free trade, with the least possible amount of taxation upon the people, and with Customs duties comparatively small. Sir, I recollect well some of the conversations I had, and I recollect my admiration for one particular despatch that was read to us at that Quebec Conference, a despatch written by the then Finance Minister, Sir Alexander T. Galt, in which he took stand, in relation to what the tariff of Canada should be, and that we should regulate it ourselves. I could not help but admire the manly position which was taken, because I may say now that the smaller Provinces then had not that amount of freedom, and did not exercise, in their government, that amount of independence which the older and more independent Provinces did. I felt that the union of those Maritime Provinces with the greater Provinces of Canada ought to result, under almost any reasonable circumstances, in advantage to the whole. Sir, we became united. I am not going through the process by which it was done, the time that it took, and that we public men sacrificed to build up this nationality, the time spent in England before the British Parliament, in securing the British North America Act under which we exist to-day. Sir, that Act was passed, and I am pleased to say that the knowledge, and judgment, and acumen, and shrewdness of the right hon. gentleman did a great deal to bring about the creation of that Act under which we exist as a Confederation. Sir, in 1867, when we first met as a Dominion, what was the policy of the country then? Why, there was not one public man in the Parliament of Canada that would venture to proclaim what we have heard proclaimed since this debate commenced. The whole theory of the fiscal policy of this country was one of friendship to the United States, and an endeavor to meet our friends on the other side of the border in an effort to bring about reciprocal trade arrangements, and a contin-uation of the reciprocity treaty that went into effect in 1854, the reciprocity treaty of Lord Elgin. Sir, the existence of that treaty was shown to be of such benefit to the people of Canada that there was but one sentiment among all the delegates, both at Quebec and in Prince Edward Island, and subsequently in London-there was but one feeling amongst the delegates, namely, that the policy of this country should be a policy of friendship towards the United States, and an endeavor to perpetuate that reciprocal trade arrangement which existed when Confederation was accomplished. Sir, I need not recapitulate the reasons why that arrangement came to an end. The American war, which had broken out some time before, led to the imposition of enormously high duties in the United States. They were imposed from the necessities of that country, from the enormous demands made by the civil war which duties, and which were understood throughout the United States to be put on merely for war purposes. Sir, we know what it means when any Government gets a duty placed upon the statutes of the country, and we know how difficult it is to get it removed. Then there was the feeling of antagonism which grew up in the United States, arising from either a real or an imaginary cause, that we had been hostile to the North, and this led them to give notice of the termination of the treaty. We know what happened in this country after that treaty was terminated; we know that a great feeling of distrust prevailed throughout the whole of Canada. Our lumber interests were affected by it, our farmers on all hands felt that they wanted the market which the Lord Elgin treat had given them, and every industry which we possessed was in a measure paralysed by the cessation of that treaty, and by the refusal of the American Government to continue it, because they believed that would have been hostile to the interests of the North, during their internecine war. In 1867, when we first met together in Parliament, it will be recollected what the feeling was then. I am sorry my right hon. friend is not now in his place; I am sorry he cannot find a little time to listen to a few truths which I hope to tell him; I am sorry the right hon. gentleman is not here to hear me, because I do not like to speak of him in his absence. I have already conceded, I am willing to concede, the great ability which he showed in framing the constitution under which we are now governed, and I say that he has done much since that time, to promote and encourage the development of this country. There is no doubt about it, and I recognise it. I am proud to say, that I was one of those who assisted him from the time of the Quebec Conference, in 1864, up to 1878, to carry out the policy which it was understood should be carried out by the Dominion of Canada, in relato its fiscal arrangements. Sir, supported him up to 1878, when I was unfortunately led, by his persuasive powers, to adopt the system called the National Policy. But when I attempted to understand what that National Policy meant, and when the right hon. gentleman, in answer to my question whether it involved a duty upon the food of the people of Canada, told me that it did not, I said: Well, I am willing to go into the National Policy thus far, I am willing to put a reasonable duty upon imported manufactured goods, the maximum not to exceed 25 per cent. I did not assume the attitude which many of my hon. friends here have assumed in this House. I was not opposed to all duties, but I was willing to accept those that were necessary for fiscal purposes; I was in favor of so adjusting the amount of duty as that it should be sufficient to carry on the business of the country, and at the same time to protect those industries which could be profitably pursued in the country. That was the National Policy that I believed in, and that I understood my right hon. friend advocated at that time; and I state here that I accepted that policy on the distinct understanding that there was to be no duty upon the food of the people. But, in the midst of a general election, in 1878, when I found myself committed to his National Policy, I discovered that speeches were districts, promising a duty upon flour, upon cornmeal, upon pork and beef, and upon all the articles which entered into the consumption of the masses of the country, and which were absolutely necessary for the preservation of the chief industries of the Province from which I came. Sir, what are we doing to day? I find, for the first time in this Parliament, that the Government has thrown off the cloak, they have come out boldly, and the President of the Council has made a declaration which I will refer to later on. During the whole campaign of 1878, the right hon. gentlemen never delivered a speech, never gave a public utterance, in which he did not proclaim to those who were listening to him, that the object of the National Policy was simply to compel, or coerce, or whatever you like to call it-to induce, I would rather say—the Americans to take off their restrictive duties, and return to reciprocity. That was the object of the campaign of 1878. It was the means by which hon, members who sit behind the First Minister were induced to come in and support the new departure from the past policy of Canada. How do we stand to-day? True it was that some were slaughtered by the course pursued. Owing to the flour duty and the food duty, I was left at home for four years. to that time I was a supporter of the right hon. gentleman; but when I found that the duty on the food of the people was to be heavily taxed, I doubted the correctness of the National Policy, and especially when, instead of a maximum duty of 25 per cent., the rate was gradually increased until to-day we have duties imposed on articles imported equal to 150 per cent, and even higher. When we find that staple articles like iron, which enters into the consumption of every man, farmer, lumberman, mechanic, is taxed an average of 50 to 55 per cent., it is enough to unsettle any one who has a desire to see reciprocal relations between this country and the United States. But it remained for the House this Session to see the cloak thrown aside. Is there any desire on that side of the House to have reciprocal trade relations, as was announced during the campaign of 1878? No; we find the President of the Council rising in his place and announcing, in the course of his speech, in which he enunciated the policy of the Government, that he would deprecate the idea of reciprocal arrangements with the United States, even in natural products. are we to understand from that statement? I can understand the Government refusing reciprocity in manufactured articles, because they have built around themselves a set of boodlers, if I may call them so, of companies and corporations, who, for anything I know, may have furnished them with money to carry on the elections, and I believe they have done so.

which could be profitably pursued in the country. That was the National Policy that I believed in, and that I understood my right hon. friend advocated at that time; and I state here that I accepted that policy on the distinct understanding that there was to be no duty upon the food of the people. But, in the midst of a general election, in 1878, when I found myself committed to his National Policy, I discovered that speeches were being made throughout the west in the farming Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. MITCHELL. I cannot hear what you say; you had better close up if you cannot speak out. Corporations have been built up under this tariff, so that they have become a power in regard to the Government of the day. We find that, year after year, the Government are increasing the taxation of the people without just cause. We could understand, if there had been a deficiency in the revenue, the hon. Minister of Finance coming down to the House and asking for the imposition of additional duties for the purpose of making up that deficiency in the revenue. But he tells us the Government had a surplus last year, and that there will be a surplus this year of $2,500,000, and yet he comes down and asks us to impose additional duties such as are described in the resolutions, which, for anything we know, may impose two and a-half million dollars more taxation on the people. The hon. Finance Minister tells us in his glib way that there can be only so much revenue derived from these changes. I have been making some calculations, and my hon. friends around me have been making calculations, as to what the imposition of these duties will result in, and, in my opinion, there will be an increased revenue of $1,750,000 or $2,000,000 by the imposition of these duties. How is this being done? I ask this House, if there is any wonder that I should have refused longer to follow the right hon. gentleman, when this state of things exists, and when, taking my own Province, and particularly my own county, there is not one industry that is benefited by the National Policy. Yet, the Government go on, year after year, imposing additional duties on the people of my Province and my county, without giving them any direct benefit from their policy. It was not enough that the Government should place a tax of 50 cents a barrel on the flour of the people in 1878 and 40 cents on cornmeal, an article grown only in a couple of counties in Ontario, and then not in greater quantities than sufficient to feed the people there; but they have now added 25 cents per barrel on flour, an increase of 50 per cent. on the food of the people. I believe, about 1,250,000 barrels of flour are used in the Maritime Provinces, and we know that in many of the localities, the people have to pay about 60 cents a barrel freight on the railways to get the flour from the place of production in Canada, to the place of consumption in those Provinces; whereas, if the duty did not exist, they could get flour from New York for 15 cents and from Boston for 10 cents per barrel by schooners along the coast of Nova Scotia and a portion of New Brunswick. Is it right that our people should be sacrificed—for what? There is an election coming—we might as well speak plainly—and the change would never have been made except to conciliate Ontario. I dare say it is very well for the First Minister and his friends from that section of the country to look out for themselves, but they should show some sense of right and justice in dealing with the people. They should consider the position of the people of the smaller Provinces, and in dealing with the tariff should not impose duties for the sake of one portion of the people, when those duties are unfair, unjust and outrageous. Let me consider for a few moments the interests of the Province. I do not know what the members of the Government know of the condition of New Brunswick, but I may say the principal industries in that Province are lumber and fish. The agriculturists do not raise farm products for exportation. If they raise what will maintain themselves it is enough, and it is all they expect to do, and all they generally accomplish. The chief markets for their hay and oats is the lumberman's camp. The lumbermen have, however, had a most difficult and trying time in carrying on their business. While the umber of the Ottawa valley and western Ontario is mainly composed of the superior kinds, pine, oak, and the more expensive and valuable woods, our timber is almost entirely composed of spruce, for which there is only one market, namely, the English market, and there it comes into competition with the cheap spruce from the Baltic. Under these circumstances, lumbering has been a struggling business for many years in the Maritime Provinces; and, in making that statement, every one from that portion of the country will say I am telling the truth. There are five articles forming the staple food of the men in the lumber camp, and also their families: flour, pork, lard (which is the butter of the camp), beans and beef. What has the Government done in regard to all these articles? They thought it was not sufficient when a duty of $2 a barrel was placed on pork going into the camps, and a pork that cannot be raised in Canada, for there is no such thing as mess pork, such as is used in lumbering camps, raised in Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I say "no," and I know all about it. I leave it to any lumberman whether, if they had their choice of taking the local pork of the country as against $4 per barrel tax on mess pork from Chicago, it would not be more economical and better to buy the foreign pork than to obtain the pork of the country. For several reasons: First, because the men in the camp will not have the local pork; and, next, because Chicago mess pork will go a great deal further than the local pork raised in this country. Now, Sir, every one acquainted with the nature and condition of the lumber business, knows that they are unable to stand the strains put upon them; and I hold in my hand a remonstrance from almost every leading lumberman in the part of the country which I represent. I will read to the House the telegram :-

"CHATHAM, N.B., 1st April, 1890.

"To Hon. P. MITCHELL.

"Strong feeling here against increased duties on provisions. We, on behalf of the lumber interest of the North Shore, urge you to use your utmost influence against proposed increased duty on flour, beef, pork and lard, which commodities are largely used in our business."

(Signed)

"E. Hutchinson,

Now, with the exception, perhaps, of a couple of gentlemen, one of whom I know is out of the locality at present, every leading merchant connected with the lumber business in that district, has signed that remonstrance. I think it is a most unfair thing, when a business is depressed as the lumbering industry of this country is, that this Government should submit to this House, through their Minister of Finance, a scheme for putting additional taxation upon the staple articles which are the foundations of carrying on this great staple industry of the Province from which I come. I will make a few references to the incongruities of this proposed additional tax on pork. The Government have put $3 a barrel, which is an additional dollar, upon mess pork, and they have put upon all other pork and beef and flesh food $6 a barrel of 200 pounds, making 3 cents a pound on mess pork.

Some hon. MEMBERS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am quite right. They have put 3 cents a pound upon mess pork by the increase of $1 a barrel, and they have put 6 cents a pound upon every other kind of meat.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No. no.

Mr. MITCHELL. I speak subject to correction. It is $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound, but it means \$6 a barrel.

An hon. MEMBER. No; $3 a barrel.

Mr. MITCHELL. I may not understand the multiplication table, but if you will listen I will endeavor to convey my ideas as I understand them. I will read the item:

"Meats, fresh or salted, 3 cents per pound." Well, 3 cents per pound upon 200 pounds in a barrel means $6, if I know a little about it.

An hon. MEMBER. That is right. Mr. MITCHELL. If that is right, that is all I am contending for. The lumbermen are charged $6 a barrel upon every barrel of pork that goes into their camp, except it is mess pork. I will now refer to some of the incongruities of this particular Mess pork is selling to-day in Chicago for 50 cents a barrel higher than clear pork. pork is considered, under ordinary circumstances, worth 50 cents a barrel more than mess pork, but owing to the peculiar circumstances of the market at Chicago, mess pork is selling for 50 cents a barrel more than the clear pork. This clear pork is subject to $6 a barrel duty, whereas mess pork is only subject to $3 duty. It is the clear pork that is most valuable for transportation to the lumber camps, because where there are long portages and difficulties of transit the uneatable por tions of the port, such as bone, are taken out, and so the clear pork is more valuable to the lumbermen than the mess pork. Under this tariff the mess pork is only charged 11/2 cents a pound, but the clear pork is charged 3 cents a pound. It is manifest to any one that the person who made that tariff did not understand the nature of the trade, and I merely mention this thing now to show one of the inconsistencies of this tariff, and to ask the Minister of Finance, when the House goes into committee on this resolution, that he will rectify that matter, and in the meantime endeavor to get information from some of his friends on that side of the House who are engaged in the trade and knowing something about I will mention another circumstance connected with this trade. My hon, friend the Minister of Finance has said to us, that in order to compensate the people of the Maritime Provinces, and more especially the Province from which he comes himself, for the imposition of this pork and flour duty, he agreed to take off one-half the existing duty on molasses. I will read to the hon. gentleman what some of his friends in the city of St. John say about that. I may say the firm that wrote this letter, which I am about to read, are strong supporters in the city of St. John of the administration of my hon. friend.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Very strong? Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; perhaps the strongest supporters he has in the Province.

Mr. FOSTER. Hall & Fairweather.

Mr. MITCHELL. You know. The following is the letter :-

"Molasses:—A good deal of inconvenience and friction will be experienced if the tariff goes through as proposed, i.e., polariscope test not over 55 degrees, 1½ cents a gallon duty; over that test, 6 cents duty. Two things will combine to make this very disadvantageous to the trade, namely, the uncertainty of what the duty will be, and the delay in ascertaining it. First, molasses which tests, say, 56, may not be of more value than if it tested 55—yet the duty would be quadrupled. The uncertainty of the test would add to the risk of the importer. A cargo arriving and being rated even on degrees above 55, while of scarcely perceptible commercial value to about 55 test, yet the duty being 6 cents, would exclude the goods for this market, and necessitate its re-importation to some other country. Secondly, delay in ascertaining the quality for duty would be a great inconvenience. A cargo must be landed, samples sent for examination, result waited for—all delaying sale and business. Heretofore a purchase could be made in the West Indies, cabled, and the merchant could commence selling to arrive, being able, approximately, to ascertain cost. As the tariff is proposed this could not be done, but the tedious process above outlined would have to be gone through. If a standard could be fixed that would, without doubt, admithe customary kinds of molasses, without risk of exceeding the test fixed on, so that the danger of incurring the high duty would be avoided, it would be very much in the interest of the trade. With 55 degrees test it is to be feared a good deal of risk and uncertainty may prevail."

That is what is said about molasses. That is what is said about molasses.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not bad.

Mr. MITCHELL. It certainly is not good, coming from your friend. He is much dissatisfied with you and points out the very serious difficulty of carrying on trade under this tariff. Now let us hear what is said about pork:

"Pork:—Some difficulty is likely to arise from the provision of the tariff making one description. Mess pork, as defined by the general 'Inspection Act' dutiable at 1½ cents a pound and other salted meats 3 cents. Clear pork is, in New Brunswick and by the lumbering and fishing industries quite as largely used, perhaps even more largely used than mess. Clear pork is, in New Brunswick and by the lumbering and fishing industries, quite as largely used, perhaps even more largely used than mess. Clear pork is intrinsically of the value of 50 cents to $1 per barrel more than mess; this difference should not make it liable to double duty. But there is another consideration. It happens often, and is the case now and for some months past, that mess pork is the subject of speculation in the cheap market, and this circumstance causes it to be held higher than clear pork. Our people, therefore, buy clear almost exclusively, getting better value therein. The difference in the tariff or double rate for clear would enforce the purchase of the inferior article at the higher cost. There is apparently no reason for clear pork being dutiable at double the rate of the other—mess pork. Mess pork and clear are used for the same purposes; some buyers use the one kind, some the other, though of late much the larger proportion of clear has been imported. It will prevent much embarrassment if the definition in the tariff is made to cover clear pork at 1½ cents per pound duty. At latest advices the sort of clear which is most largely imported, was 50 cents a barrel lower than mess."

These are a couple of instances of the incon-

These are a couple of instances of the inconsistencies of the tariff. Now I will give my hon. friend something which I received yesterday from the manager of that important paper which hon. gentlemen opposite love so much, the Herald. The hon, gentleman proposes to alter the tariff on stereotype plates. My hon. friend from the city of St. John (Mr. Ellis) also has a statement which is far stronger than mine, which I suppose he is prepared to put forward himself. I asked the manager of the Herald to send me a statement of what the additional tax on these plates would amount to, and, very much to my surprise, he sent me this:

"The new tariff sections 150, 151, have made a very large advance in the cost of stereotypes for newspapers. 150, relating to newspaper advertisements, has been changed from 20 per cent. to 2 cents per square inch; and 151, from 5 cents per pound to \(^2\) of a cent per square inch; the latter includes all plate matter for newspapers, and is an advance of 150 per cent. as \(^2\) of a cent is equal to 12 cents. The former is a prohibitory measure as regarding importations of plates for pamphlets, almannes, &c., but as regards newspapers it will be serious. Now, our advertisers in the States and England send us stereotype and electrotype cuts of their advertisements, they charge us nothing for them, and it saves setting up type, but if we have to pay such a duty as 2 cents per square inch, it will fall somewhat heavy, as it will be impossible for a newspaper to collect any duty from an advertiser. I enclose a circular from Toronto, which looks very plainly that the tariff has been amended in this particular, for these parties."

Included in that letter was a circular from an institution in Toronto, which favors the Administration of the day, and the managers of which, I have no doubt, got the ear of the Minister, and induced him to make this alteration for their benefit, affecting almost every newspaper in the country. I ask the hon. Minister if he thinks it is right to increase the tariff from 20 to 150 per cent. on such an article, which gives information to the people? I do not think the people of this country will approve of that. I might go on to show how this tariff affects the fishing and lumbering industries, in which my county is largely interested. farmers of that county grow but very little for export; what they grow they dispose of in the domestic market, for the lumber camps and the fishermen; so that they receive no benefit from the National Policy, while they find the duties increased on every barrel of pork and every barrel of flour they buy. Four-fifths of the flour used in that county is imported, as our farmers find it more profitable to grow oats and other products for the lumber camps, and import their flour. Then, this tariff taxes woollens $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound. We all know that the woollens the laboring classes wear are the cheapest kinds: there is no feature in which the National Policy benefits that section of the community; and I ask if it is judicious, right, honest or fair to impose additional taxes on the food and clothing of people who cannot afford to pay them. I might go through this tariff and refer to the duties imposed on fruits, seeds, and other things, to show that this Government have really abandoned the policy of reciprocity even in natural products. What are they doing by their policy? They are creating antagonism in the United States. We know that there are two parties in the United States, as there are in Canada, one party favoring protection, and the other party favoring closer trade relations between the two countries. party in power will, I presume, support the Mc-Kinley Bill, which is an exclusive Bill, which proposes to put a duty of 5 cents a dozen on eggs, 20 cents a bushel on barley, 10 cents a bushel on oats, 84 a ton on hay, 30 per cent. on horses and 20 per cent. on cattle; and I ask if the policy now proposed by this Government will strengthen the hands of the men who want reciprocity in trade with us, or those of the men who want to impose prohibitory duties? If any additional evidence were wanted to prove the truth of the statement of the hon. Paesident of the Council and some other hon. gentlemen, that the Government do not want reciprocity with the United States, the evidence is before us in this tariff, which will do more to strengthen the hands of those who are supporting the McKinley Bill than anything else we could do. Sir, there is a growing feeling in the United States for closer trade relations with Canada among men like Mr. Hitt, who has moved for the appointment of a commission to see how those trade relations can be promoted. How will they be aided by a tariff like this, which will take the wind out of their sails, and give Congress an excuse for passing the McKinley Bill? Instead of doing anything to promote reciprocal trade relations with the United States, hon. gentlemen opposite are doing everything they can to kill our trade with that country. I regret to have heard the statement of the hon. President of the Council. I had hoped, notwithstanding the policy hon. gentlemen opposite have been pursuing, that they still believed in reciprocal trade relations in natural products; but the Government have now thrown off all disguise, and to-day they stand in the position of establishing a policy of prohibition towards the United States, and desiring to put up a Chinese wall between the two countries. It is well the country should know their policy and not be deceived by any pretensions they may make. I may state what my opinion is regarding the true course to be pursued by us in the interests of Canada. I believe that the prohibitory tariff proposed in the United States will paralyse Canada.

Mr. HICKEY. Nonsense.

Mr. MITCHELL. I tell my hon. friend, and I warn the Government that if there are any annexationists in this country, they are the men who are creating them; they are the men who are doing more to drive this country into annexation by their policy than by any other policy we could adopt.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. No? Where will you go with your barley? Where will you find a market for the $2,000,000 worth of eggs which we export to the United States, yearly?

An hon. MEMBER. England.

An hon. MEMBER. We will use them ourselves

Mr. MITCHELL. Why did you not send them to England before? Where will the French Canadians, all along the border, find a market for their horses? I am sorry the President of the Council is not here, for he comes from the border.

Mr. HICKEY. He knows them better than you do, and his opinion is worth more.

Mr. MITCHELL. He does not; I have forgotten more than ever he knew about them. But I am not so interested in misrepresenting things and in keeping silent; I am not in the receipt of the revenues of a Government office.

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria). That is the trouble.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have placed in my hands here what the President of the Council used to think. This paper says:

"After watching events for a couple of years, the member for Stanstead came out in the House on a fiscal question by moving the imposition of a duty of 5 cents a pound on hops, to meet a similar duty in the United States. Mr. Colby said: 'They preferred reciprocal free trade, but if there must be a United States tariff, let there be reciprocity of tariffs.' As this question of reciprocity has now become a serious one for the Cabinet of which Mr. Colby's platform in the election of 1872. In his nomination speech he said: 'What had commended the Government to his support was the desire that he knew they had to accomplish reciprocity. It was contended that the country could do very well without reciprocity. It was true, that since the repeal of the treaty our exports had largely increased to the United States, while imports had diminished; but to the Eastern Townships he considered reciprocity paramount, and he would go against the Government which did not endeavor to obtain it."

Mr. COLBY. We have not been able to obtain it since, have we?

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you expect to obtain it by flaunting the red rag of defiance in the face of the people of the United States?

Mr. CAMERON. They showed it first.

Mr. MITCHELL. If you wanted to obtain it, you would endeavor to strengthen the hands of the reciprocal tradesmen in the United States; and nobody knows better than the President of the Council that at this moment there is an important element, both in the Congress and the Senate of the United States, anxious for reciprocal trade arrangements with Canada; and yet the Government, of which the hon. gentleman is a member, put the hon. gentleman forward to announce that they do not want reciprocal trade even in natural products. The Government of this country have obtained their position by fraud. They professed to be advocates of free trade arrangements with the people on our southern borders, the only people with whom profitable trade can be obtained by us for the general exports of our country. They got into office on the strength of that policy. They alleged in the campaign of 1878 that their National Policy was only established for the purpose of enabling them to use it as an argument to obtain reciprocal trade with the United States; but after increasing the duties from time to time, they have at last thrown off the cloak, and they now denounce the policy on which they rode into power and through which they are holding their positions of emoluments and office. This country has been sadly misgoverned. If there ever was a time when the attention of the public should be called to the condition of things as they are, it is now. What is the condition of the people of the North-West? Why, the members of the North-West here are in rebellion. There are the mutterings of rebellion among them, but they dare not speak out what is in their minds, because the votes and grants, the aid they require, the representations they make the Government, would be disregarded if they did. But let a convulsion come, let anything happen, such as happened in 1873, and you will find that phalanx behind the Government melt away like April snow, and leave not a corporal's guard behind. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) spoke words of truth and soberness the other night. I never heard more graphic and epigrammatic truths told than what he said about the Government, and I could not help but admire him. He spoke of the magnetism that exists in the head, but that leader, he said, is no statesman. He is a man of education and ability, but no statesman.

Mr. MULOCK. A manager of men.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is just what he isfirst-rate manager of men. He is a gentleman who has no great foresight, no great ability for scheming, and planning, and plotting, but he has the Mr. MITCHELL.

has succeeded pretty well in obtaining power and holding it by false representations. What is the holding it by false representations. condition of the North-West to-day? Why, the promises the First Minister held out to us-of the teeming population which was to flow in there, and which would repay the millions we have expended -these magnificent promises of the present High Commissioner in London, which we have had repeated over and over again, in all our outlays, not only of revenue but of capital-what has been the result of all these? It has been that the immigration into that country, one of the most fertile in the world, offering a home to hundreds of millions of people, has hardly been at the rate of four or five thousand a the rate of rour or and r. What has been the cause? Ask the vear. representatives of North West. $_{
m the}$ speaking in the presence of one of the most independent of them, who gave an independent utterance the other night, and I say if you will poll their candid sentiments, they will tell you the Government have been a failure, so far as regards the settlement of the North-West, and that, if that country is to be developed, a very different policy will have to be pursued. The prosperity of Canada turns largely upon that of the North-West Without that territory as a back-Territories. bone to Canada, in the face of this China-wall policy of the Government, that country will be driven into annexation, just as sure as we sit on these benches.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a thing to be deprecated. Every one who knows my public career, knows that I have been true to the flag. I have been true, as a matter of sentiment; after my adherence to it, as a matter of interest. But I tell herence to it, as a matter of interest. you, Sir, that if this thing goes on, if we continue that policy of driving out the Americans and causing them to retaliate, and if we do not settle that North-West country of ours-

Mr. SPROULE. We should lie down and let them trample on us.

Mr. MITCHELL. No; I would assert our rights, but I would pursue such a policy which would combine conciliation with a firm, manly, selfassertion of our rights. What I blame this Government for is for not having taken a practical way to bring about reciprocal trade arrangements with these people. They have not taken one single step in that direction; they have been questioned time and again as to what they are doing towards obtaining reciprocity, and they have not given a single utterance to show that they are alive to a sense of the duty imposed upon them by their position. No, Sir. They have neglected their duty. There is no public documents before this country showing that they have made any strenuous effort to bring about reciprocal trade relations with the only country with which we can properly trade in regard to the products of our forests, our farms, our mines and our minerals. We have valuable mines all along the line of the Pacific Railway. What has been done by the Government to assist in their development? We see now, that nickel has been taken off the free list in the United States and that our iron ores are to be prevented from entering that country. Take every natural product of Canada, the timber and the lumber of this capacity of grasping and sucking the brains of duct of Canada, the timber and the lumber of this those who do scheme, and plan, and plot; and he country, and you find that, when we put an export duty on logs, the United States retaliate by putting a clause into their Tariff Bill providing that a corresponding duty shall be put on the imports. I will come now to something which interests my people a little more than that which I have been referring to. A large portion of the population in my county are fishermen, and they are generally of the poorest class of people. They are industrious, they risk their lives in going out in fishing boats in all weathers, they toil hard for everything they get, and they have to pay these duties on the pork and the cornmeal that they use. Speaking of cornmeal, there is another fraud. The hon. gentleman says he has given, as a compensation for the duty on flour and cornmeal to the Province of New Brunswick, the reduction of half the duty on molasses. He also spoke of the advantage which they will obtain by allowing corn to be imported free of duty for human food. That is a delusion and a snare. Does the hon. gentleman know whether there is a single mill in the Province of New Brunswick for grinding corn?

Mr. FOSTER. I know several of them.

Mr. MITCHELL. Name them. Where are they?

Mr. FOSTER. There are two in St. John.

Mr. MITCHELL. Where are the rest?

Mr. FOSTER. You might ask your friend from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor).

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, I will take your word for it, but I should like to know if there is one such mill in actual operation?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Even if they are, does that help the people of the north shore? The freight will cost more to take the cornmeal to the north shore that the freight on a barrel of flour from Boston along the coast of Nova Scotia, and the people of our country would have to go to these little millers to get their meal. Why do you not allow cornmeal to come in free, if you have an honest intention to benefit your people? They cannot use the corn to feed their hogs or to feed themselves. There is not a mill for this purpose from Restigouche to Westmoreland; and the hon. gentleman knows it. Yet he says he is giving this as a compensation for the duty on cornmeal and on flour. I have already taken up more time than I had intended. My hon, friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has handed me a memorandum showing that the duty on flour is 75 cents and the freight for carrying it to the north shore is 70 cents, making a total of $1.45. Now, there is a kind of flour, darker in color, it is true, but sound flour, which has largely taken the position which cornmeal formerly occupied in our Province. If the people can get that flour for 20 cents a barrel as against 70 cents for the other with 75 cents duty, it would enable them to save the cost of the long haul and the extra cost of the flour.

Mr. FOSTER. You had better not take Jones' calculations.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would rather take his calculations than yours. Mr. Jones has no interest in making false statements. He is not interested in using the suppressio veri, and that is putting it moderately. I would rather take his statement as to the subject which he understands, than yours in regard to a question which you do not understand. I have spoken longer than I intended to.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. MITCHELL. I generally sit down when I have done, and I have pretty nearly done now. Perhaps I have spoken a little warmly, but I have said nothing which I did not consider it my duty to say. I found a great excitement existing in the county which I represent, and in that section of country, in regard to this tariff. I find that it is going to be very oppressive to a class of people who get no benefit from the National Policy. I have been made responsible for some of the misrepresentations which have been made as to the benefits which the National Policy, which to a certain extent I once supported, was going to bring about. I would not regret my action if the original propositions of the Government had been carried out: but this policy has grown to such proportions that no one can see the end. We find that there is an increase of 50 per cent. on food, and a large percentage on other articles. What this will reach to afterwards if these hon, gentlemen remain in power, as I hope they will not, no men can foretell. They have declared themselves in favor of reciprocal trade arrangements being made, but, under the pretence of readjusting the tariff, they are taxing the people for the purpose of revenue and in order to build up local manufactures in certain parts of the country. This is unfair and unjust to the people of the country, and it is a condition of affairs which I do not believe the people will endorse when they next get the opportunity to express their views at the polls.

Mr. KENNY. I always listen with particular pleasure and interest to the speeches of my hon. friend the member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). I look upon the hon, gentleman as one of my political sponsors. I cannot forget that the first time I came to the city of Ottawa, and that is many years ago, the hon. gentleman was a very energetic member of the Cabinet which was led by the right hon. the present Prime Minister. It is, therefore, with pleasing recollections of those early days that I listen to his utterances. The hon, gentleman has told us that in the early days of Confederation what attracted him more particularly was that, under the new arrangement, the confederated Provinces would have the power of making their own tariff. That is the one thing that the Parliament and the people of Canada are as anxious about to-day as they were in the early days of Confederation. They desire, above all things, and they are determined, that they shall retain the power to make their own tariff. I congratulate my hon, friend from Northumberland in being able to make a speech from that side of the House without saying one word disparaging or derogatory to Canada, or to the people of In that respect, the speech of that Canada. hon, gentleman is a bright exception to the harangues with which we have been favored since this debate commenced. From the start of this debate until this moment, nearly every hon. gentleman who has addressed the House from that side, has spoken of Canada in the most depreciatory and disparaging manner.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. KENNY. From the first day, led by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), who moved the amendment that is now under consideration, I say nearly every member who spoke from that side of the House has spoken disparagingly of Canada. Not only in this debate, but during all the time I have had the honor of a seat in this Parliament, not a year has passed that we have not been obliged to listen to the same baneful utterances; every year we hear the same doleful sounds and cries of decay, and every year we have these pessimistic stories about distress, and ruin, and decay in Canada. These dismal statements, so regular, so frequent and so persistent, that at first I was disposed to attach some importance to them, but having since become more familiar with the state of Canada, and the position of its people, I have come to realise that these utterances are simply the distorted and perverted utterances of a diseased political imagination. These hon, gentlemen are never so animated, and apparently are never so happy, as when they are belittling and besmirching their own country. I have seen them almost applaud the recital of a calamity which I should suppose, as it was national, as it was Canadian, would appeal to their sympathies and excite their commiseration. Every indication of commercial depression, every sign of manufacturing stagnation, every form of financial or mercantile difficulty which is brought to our notice here, instead of these hon, gentlemen endeavoring to mitigate or palliate, they invariably magnify, exaggerate and intensify. If the crops are poor, and if there is distress in the agricultural and rural districts of the country, the hon. gentlemen have not a word of sympathy for those who are suffering, but they invariably turn round and blame the Government and say that the National Policy of Canada is responsible if the crops will not grow. The farmer of Ontario seems to be the pet aversion of these hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not know what the farmer of Ontario has ever done that these gentlemen should be so hostile to him; I am not sufficiently familiar with the domestic history of that Province to be able to solve that question. I always supposed that the Province of Ontario was in a prosperous condition. I was wont to point with pride to the condition of that, our greatest Province, and I am still hopeful that the stories that I have heard of the ruin, the depression and decay which exist there have been greatly exaggerated. But the attempt to injure the Province of Ontario must react upon the whole Dominion. In order to establish their contention that Ontario is in a depressed condition, I find these hon, gentlemen have been obliged to ignore the ordinary sources of information which are available to every person who desires to seek them honestly and impartially, and instead of having recourse to the books that are published by the Liberal Government of Ontario, they have been obliged to resort to the expedient of manufacturing their own statistics. Sir, as regards the Province of Ontario, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion which has taken place, and I have come to the conclusion that the stories of distress which are told about it, are very much exaggerated. But it is not the Province of Ontario alone that suffers from the re-Mr. KENNY.

believe that the country is all right, that the Dominion is fairly prosperous, and that, after all, it is only the Grit party in this Dominion that is wrong. I believe that all this pessimism may be traced to political disappointment. The political position of the party opposite is so hopeless and so helpless that they actually have to resort to the wretched policy of disparaging their own country. It has been stated that this depression is very general, and in order to emphasise it, and in order that their policy may have some weight, I suppose, in the country, some influence on the minds of the people, they endeavor to convince us that the country is going to ruin. I do not find that to be the case. The hon member for South Oxford has stated that during the year 1876-and I assume he means all the years during which his party was in power-the condition of this country was comparatively prosperous. In order to inform myself in this respect, I went back to the blue-books, and looking over the trade of the country, and comparing the figures for the two periods under the Mackenzie Administration and that of the right hon. gentleman (Sir John A. Macdonald), I find the following results :-

	93.210,346	1887	112,892,236
1877	99,327,962	1888	110,894,630
1878	93,081,787	1889	115,224,931

TOTAL EXPORTS OF CANADA.

1876	80,966,435	1887	89,515,811
1877	75,875,393	1888	90,203,000
1878	79,323,667	1889	89,189,167

Showing an increase for Liberal-Conservative period of $40,106,818. Then I have compared the total trade of those periods, and I find that during the four years to which the hon. gentleman has referred, when the country was, as he says, in a prosperous condition, the total trade, imports and exports, from 1875 to 1878, reached $722,742,856, and that the total trade for the last four years amounted to $797,595,650, which gives an increase of trade for the last four years of $74,852,798. So if the condition of affairs was so very satisfactory to the hon. gentleman during the years from 1875 to 1878-if he is simply judging of the condition of the country and not referring to the political position he then occupied—it is evident that the present condition is eminently more prosperous. But hon. gentlemen are disposed to judge of the prosperity of the country by the excess of imports over exports. have examined into that question too, and I find that from 1875 to 1878 the excess of imports over exports was $94,637,904, and that during the last four vears, from 1886 to 1889, the excess was $89,277,066. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has laid great stress on the indebtedness of this country for its imports, and this statement shows conclusively that, during the years when he administered the finances of the country, the excess of imports over exports exceeded the excess marks of these hon. gentlemen; the whole during the past four years by $5,360,838. I have Dominion has also been disparaged. Well, Sir, I also, in order to inform myself accurately and correctly on this matter, and in order to ascertain if we are really retrograding at the rate hon. gentlemen opposite are endeavoring to make it appear, entered into an examination of the exports, the products of Canada, for the first ten years of Confederation, and I find they amounted to $617,-489,132, and for the last ten years they amounted to $787,100,665, or an increase, during the last ten years over the first ten years of Confederation, of $169,611,533. I think these figures will show conclusively that the general trade of the country is in a satisfactory condition, and that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), when he drew a comparison between the general prosperity which reigned in 1876 and the present time, was more influenced by his recollection of the position he then occupied than by the actual facts. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) also referred, in order to show how rapidly this country was going to ruin, to the fact that during the last five months the deposits in the savings banks had declined $1,800,000. The hon. gentleman is perfectly accurate in those figures; but if he had taken the trouble to look at the deposits in the chartered banks, which bear interest as the deposits in the savings banks do, he would have found that the deposits in those chartered banks had increased during the same period, and I will give the figures in order that there may be no mistake. At the end of August, 1889, the deposits in the chartered banks were $69,500,000; on 28th February, 1890, they were $72,400,000, or an increase of $2,900,000. If, therefore, we deduct $1,800,000 withdrawn from the savings banks from this sum of $2,900,000, there will appear an increase in these items, showing an increased amount of the earnings of the people to the extent of $1,100,000. also find that the amount on deposit in Dominion savings banks at the end of 1879, before we began to feel the full effect of the National Policy, was $14,700,000, while the amount on deposit at the end of 1889 had reached $53,700,000, or an increase during these ten years of $39,000,000. also look at the condition of the deposits in the chartered banks. In 1879 they amounted to $63,000,000, in 1889 to $123,000,000, showing an increase of $60,000,000; and thus, during these ten years from 1879 to 1889, the savings of the people of Canada have increased, because that is really what these figures mean, namely, that after the people have supplied themselves with all the necessaries of life and many of the luxuries and comforts, they were able to invest in this form, during those ten years, $99,000,000. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) spoke of the condition of the Province of Ontario, and I suppose it is a reflection of the condition of the whole country; and he said the condition was worse than he had remembered it for 35 years. At all events it is gratifying to us—who, perhaps, have not the same sources of information as the hon. gentleman, for he seems to have very original sources of information—to know that while the country is retrograding so rapidly the savings of the people in interest bearing bank deposits alone during the ten years have increased by $99,000,000. I remember a remark made by an hon. gentleman opposite on one occasion, that whenever he had a suggestion to address to the Government he always made it in open House. That is not the custom followed by supporters of the Government, but even a supporter of is separated from Canadian commerce, had the Government sometimes finds it advantageous to make a suggestion on the floor of the House; and, before leaving this question of the savings banks of Canada, I desire to call the attention of the Finance Minister and of the members of the Government to the regulations which prevail, today at least, in Halifax. These should be amended, and the amounts which these regulations allow to be deposited annually, and also the total sum to be deposited, should be increased. present regulations provide that no one shall deposit more than $300 in one year or a total sum of $1,000. The object of the bank and the use to which the bank is applied is essentially that of a savings bank, and it does not at present fulfil as it should do that mission. For this reason: that if a man is anxious to save money to purchase a home for his family, he cannot acquire a suitable property for $1,000. respectfully suggest to the Finance Minister that he should look into the matter and allow the amount of deposit to be increased. An hon, gentleman opposite referred, the other evening, to the statistics of the population of Canada, which is a favorite topic with hon, gentlemen opposite when it becomes necessary for party purposes to endeavor to create the impression that the country is not prosperous. Sir, I find that the Province of Ontariothis Province which is said by hon, gentlemen opposite to be so depressed, to be going to ruin, and to be a country only fit to get out of-I find that, when I compare the increase of population in that Province with the great State of New York, we have the following result :-

Population of Province of Ontario, 1871... 1,620,857 Population of Province of Ontario, 1881... 1,923,228

Or an increase of 18.6 per cent. Therefore, the ratio of increase of the Province of Ontario, which is going so rapidly to ruin, if we are to believe hon. gentlemen opposite, was much greater than in the rich and thriving State of New York. If we go back to the days of our grandfathers—I do not know how many of them were on this side of the Atlantic—we will find that, ninety years before the last census, the population of the United States had increased from 4,000,000 to 60,000,000, just twelve and a half times, while Canada in the same time increased from 156,000 to 4,324,000, or nearly twenty-eight times. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman who moved this amendment made no reference specially to the Eastern Provinces of the Dominion, when relating his story of depression, but as I reside in the Eastern Provinces I have taken the trouble to compare the statistics of population of the four New England States, Eastern and the four Provinces of this The four States I refer to are Dominion. Vermont. New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Maine, including, of course, the great city of Boston. I find that their increase of population between 1860 and 1880 was 24 4 per cent., while in the four Eastern Provinces of the Dominion, Prince Edward Island, New Bruuswick, Nova Scotia and Quebec, between 1861 and 1881, the increase was 25 6 per cent. New Hampshire and Vermont increased only 6 per cent. while the Province of Quebec increased 9 per cent. Prince Edward Island, which for five months in the year increased its population from 1860 to 1880 by 28,000, whereas from 1861 to 1881 Vermont, which was in uninterrupted contact with the traffic of the sixty millions of people of the United States, and had free access to its markets at all times of the year, only increased 17,000. Therefore, these New England States, having free access to the trade of the sixty millions of people of the United States, and being nearer that market than we are, had not such an increase of population as the Provinces of this country which lie close to them. The statistics of farm lands are still more remark. able. The increase in the number of acres under cultivation in the four New England States from 1860 to 1880 was 11 per cent., and in the four Canadian Provinces I have referred to, the increase was 43 per cent. In the four New England States the increase in the number of acres under cultivation was 1,200,000, whereas in the four Eastern Provinces of Canada it was over three millions. Although these statistics are no doubt exceedingly tiresome, it will be necessary to enquire a little further into them. Let us take the live stock in these four States, and compare it with the live stock of the Eastern Provinces of Canada. In 1880, as compared with 1860, these four States, having the enormous markets of sixty millions of people, had a decrease of 400,000 head of live stock, whereas in the four Eastern Provinces of Canada, from 1860 to 1880, there was an increase of 465,000 head. That is the result of twenty years of stock-raising, and it shows, after all, that the trade of these sixty millions of people has not done much for the stock-raising of these four north-eastern States. Let us look for one moment at the several principal items of farm produce, namely, wheat, barley, buckwheat, Indian corn, oats, rye, potatoes. In these four New England States the produce was 35,813,451 bushels, and in the Eastern Provinces of Canada 75,000,000. There was a positive decrease in the four New England States of 3,500,000 bushels, while the increase in the Eastern Provinces of Canada was 16,250,000 bushels. These figures will show that in agricultural development and in stock raising our Eastern Provinces will compare favorably with the adjoining States of the Union. hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) referred to the changes in the tariff, on beef, pork, flour and lard, and he intimated that this would be a very serious charge upon the people of the Maritime Provinces. Now, in order to arrive at the condition of the people of the Maritime Provinces, and to be able to appreciate the effect that this increased taxation will have upon them, I shall, with the permission of the House, give an authority which, I think, will be unquestioned by the Opposition in this House. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), in the course of his address yesterday, referred to Mr. Gladstone's views of the political economy of the United States of America, and to the controversy which is going on between that distinguished statesman and Mr. Blaine, the Secretary of State of the United States. Whilst I have the greatest confidence in Mr. Gladstone, and the greatest admiration, and the greatest respect for him, I do say that as regards the United States of America, and as to what best suits the people of that country, I would sooner take Mr. Blaine as an authority Mr. KENNY.

question of the condition of the laboring classes of the Provinces of Nova Scotia, I think I can give my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Flynn) an authority which he may consider undoubted. I find that on 8th May, 1884, the Hon. A. G. Jones, addressing the Chamber of Commerce at Halifax. stated:

"Before 1878 the laborers were paid only 80 cents a day, but this was gradually increased to the present rate. He was of opinion that Halifax laborers had no good reason to be dissatisfied. If more money had to be paid for labor, the merchants of Halifax were going to be seriously handicapped. He believed a laboring man who was sober and industrious could get along in Halifax as well as anywhere in the world. He had an idea that we were educating a great many people now out of their sphere of action, and the burden came heavier on us because we had to bear the cost of their education. We were educating too many for emigration. He was glad to know that laborers were living much more comfortably now than they did in the past. He could recollect when wages were 75 cents per day, and flour was $12 to $14 per barrel. Now it was $6.25 per barrel, with tea, potatoes, cottons, and most all the other necessaries of life were just as cheap as ever they were, with wages $1.25 per day."

That shows the condition of the laboring classes

That shows the condition of the laboring classes in the Province of Nova Scotia in 1884, as described by an authority which I am sure my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Flynn) will not question. Now, Sir, let us examine into the increased taxation since that date, when those people were living in comfort and were better off than they had ever been before, when tea, potatoes, cottons, and most of the other necessaries of life were just as cheap as they ever were. What has been the augmentation of taxation on the necessaries of life? It is all contained in the present tariff, and I examine it from the standpoint of my own Province. I find that there has been a very appreciable increase in the duties on beef, pork, flour and lard, which, to a population of 500,000 people, as we may assume the population of Nova Scotia to be, will amount to an increase of about 10 cents per head. My hon, friend from Richmond told us that the reduction of the duty on molasses amounted to about 60 cents per family, or, allowing five persons to a family, 12 cents per head. If he is accurate in that estimate, and as a rebate of 90 per cent. of the duty is to be allowed on the cornmeal ground in Canada, there will positively be no increase in the taxation. My hon friend spoke of the increased amount which the fishermen would have to pay. My hon, friend must surely be familiar with the fact that the fishermen-those, at least, who are engaged in the bank fisheries—get all their supplies duty free, so that the duties on beef, pork, lard and other provisions do not affect them. hon. friend the Minister of Customs tells me that it is contemplated to extend the same privilege to the coast fishermen.

Mr. BOWELL. It has been done, not contemplated.

Mr. KENNY. I was not aware of that. Now. Sir, while we are considering these increased duties, I must certainly say that I agree with the remarks that fell from my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), that the duty on the kind of pork called clear pork should not be higher than the duty on mess pork. I also desire to point out to the Government that the proposed duty of \$6 a barrel on beef actually amounts to 100 per cent. Now, Sir, as I am a protectionist, and I am not ashamed to proclaim myself one here or elsewhere, than Mr. Gladstone. But when it comes to a I am in favor of doing everything possible to develop the great beef and pork interests of this country; but I think that might be accomplished without such a very large increase of the Customs duties on these items. I hope, therefore, that the hon. Finance Minister, before we go into committee, will carefully revise these two items. My hon. friend from Richmond referred to the increase in the flour duty. The hon, gentleman must remember that the hon. Finance Minister explained to us the reason for that increase—that it was simply to adjust the disparity that existed between the duty on wheat and the duty on flour. He explained to us, that at the rate of $4\frac{3}{4}$ bushels of wheat to a barrel of flour, the duty on sufficient wheat to make a barrel of flour, would be in the neighborhood of 71 or 72 cents, and the increase of 25 cents a barrel on flour will equalise it with wheat. My hon, friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), during the course of his remarks, forgot entirely the remission of the duty on cornmeal; and when that is considered, I think he will recognise that there will be absolutely no increase in the per capita taxation on the people of Nova Scotia. The hon. member for Richmond said that we should not have a surplus; he seemed to contend that a surplus was not very desirable; but I would say to my hon. friend that if we had not a surplus, we must increase the funded debt of the country, and he knows very well that we in the Maritime Provinces are clamoring for subsidies to railways, and that these railways must be assisted by the Dominion. My hon. friend referred to the deficits which had taken place from 1884 to 1889, and my hon. colleague, the senior member for Halifax, pointed out that they aggregated \$5,122,000; but the hon. gentleman must remember that we paid something like \$5,000,000 for rebellion losses, and if we deducted that item, there would be absolutely no deficit during that period. The hon, member for South Oxford gave his opinion that the conditions of Canada do not fit it to become a manufacturing country. I regret that the hon. gentleman did not refer to my hon. colleague, who would have been able to tell him that since the National Policy was inaugurated we have started in the Province of Nova Scotia, sugar refineries, cotton mills, woollen mills, and many other industries, which, if they have not been very remunerative to their shareholders, have employed a very large amount of labor.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). And lost their entire capital.

Mr. KENNY. That may be; I, unfortunately, cannot contradict that as far as the sugar refinery is concerned. It was an infant industry, and the hon gentleman seems to have taken a particular dislike to all infant industries. other day when an hon. friend mentioned one, he assailed it on the single ground that it was an infant industry and ought to be strangled. But let me point out to the hon. gentleman that, in the course of his address, he referred to the duty on iron, which, he said, was imposed in consequence of deficits in the revenue. in the House when the iron tariff was introduced by the then Finance Minister, the present High Commissioner in London, in 1888, and he made it undoubtedly an eminently protective duty. one who has looked into the question must know that there is no industry in the country of greater consequence than the iron industry and that in no country has it been successfully developed except by means of protection. We know that in England for many years iron industries were protected, and that England owes her manufacturing supremacy to those industries, to which all the other industries are very largely contributory and upon which they are largely dependent. In the United States we know that by the imposition of a protective tariff the iron industry has been amply developed. In Canada, as my hon. colleague (Hon. A. G. Jones) has said, it is an infant industry. It has only been two years since the protective tariff was adopted; yet a great deal has already been accomplished, and I believe much more will be accomplished in the early future. This is a question in which Nova Scotia is particularly concerned; yet, he said, it is not indigenous to that Province. He seems to be of the same opinion as regards the iron industries, as the hon. member for South Oxford is with regard to our manufacturing industries generally, namely, that none of them have a future in this country. I dissent entirely from that view. I think that the iron industry is eminently indigenous to our Province because we have the iron ores and the coal in close proximity, and, under proper management and protection, they will in a few years be largely developed. Our iron ores of Pictou will be developed, and I find, on looking at the Official Gazette of Nova Scotia, that the Lieutenant Governor of that Province was made to say, in a speech which was placed in his hands by the Grit Repeal Government of Nova Scotia:

"Arrangements have been made by my Government for subsidising a line of railway connecting the Intercolonial Railway with the iron mines of the East River, in Pictou County, under conditions which give assurance that the work will be prosecuted immediately, and that at an early date these valuable deposits of iron will be opened and smelting operations on a large scale carried on."

It is evident, from this quotation, that the members of the Nova Scotia Local Government consider that the iron industry is indigenous to our Province, because they proclaim that they have done all they can to assist it, and express their belief that these deposits of iron ore would be opened and smelting operations on a large scale carried on. That is a very satisfactory answer to the statement of my hon. celleague. But as regards the protection to our iron industries, hon. gentlemen connected with shipping know that, twenty or twentyfive years ago, our sailing ships were regularly engaged in carrying pig iron from England to the United States. The owners of Nova Scotia shipping will also remember that when the protective policy was inaugurated by the United States, the transportation of that article ceased; and I was very much surprised this morning at receiving from an hon, gentleman who takes an interest in the iron industry, a statement regarding the development of that industry in the United States, which statement will be a surprise to hon, gentlemen who study that question. By protection in the United States, as we are aware, an immense development has taken place in that industry. They are now producing steel rails in the clear to the House that his object was to encourage United States almost as cheaply as in any part of the development of our iron industries. That was the world. The quotation I am about to read is one which will prove conclusively that under the protective system, the iron industry in the United States has been marvellously developed, and we may expect that the application of the same system to the Dominion will lead to the same results. I read in the Philadelphia press, as follows:—

"There is a good deal of significance in a contract which the Thomas Iron Company have made for the delivery of 1,000 tons of pig iron in Liverpool. Owing to the beneficial efforts of protection, very little pig iron has been imported into the United States of late years, while the price has been steadily declining. While under the protection system the competition within the United States has steadily reduced prices, we have now reached a point when we can export pig iron to England. That is the result of the application of the protection policy to the United States. The prices have so declined that to-day the United States manufacturers are able to export pig iron to England."

Let us see under what tariff this was brought The first protective tariff imposed on iron in the United States was, I think at the rate of $8 or $9 a ton. It was then reduced to $7 a ton, and is now reduced to $6 a ton. Our tariff to-day, even with the bounty, amounts only to $6 a ton, but we allow scrap iron in at $2 a ton. In the United States there has been a wonderful development of the iron industry under their protective system, and I believe in Canada the same results will follow the policy this Government have adopted. The advantage of this iron industry to the whole population of a country must be so self-evident that it would be hardly worth while dealing with the question in an assembly like this, were it not that some hon, gentlemen have stated that the farmers of the United States have been crushed under the iron heel of protection. I appeal to hon gentlemen if they do not think that the condition of the farmers of the United States, bad as it is to-day, would be infinitely worse if they had not a large home market for their products, and whether, if the men employed in the factories and mines were idle, the condition of the farmers would not be absolutely worse?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What about reciprocity?
Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman will hear all about that in due course. I might ask my hon. colleague some questions in regard to his arithmetic. He stated that the difference in the price of a barrel of flour would be $1 under this increased duty. He is one of the most successful business men in our community, and, if he can make 25 cents do the work of a dollar, we may be able to understand the secret of his success. The increase is not a dollar.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not say that was the increase. I said that, under this system of putting 75 cents duty on a barrel of flour, we would actually find our flour $1 dearer a barrel in our market than in the American market.

Mr. KENNY. The facilities of transportation are the same now as they were before the duty was increased, and the hon. gentleman knows, that Canadian flour in bond can be carried very easily from any point in the New England States to our seaboard. Therefore, the position is just the same as it was before the change was made. My hon. colleague also referred to the fact that, in the colony of Newfoundland, a larger amount of American flour is imported than of Canadian flour, and he gave us the statistics of last year to prove his statement. I regret that he did not give us the Mr. Kenny.

statistics of several years, because, if my memory serves me aright, a much larger amount of Canadian flour went into Newfoundland before last year than during the period to which the hon. gentleman refers. We know that, in the colony of Newfoundland, during the last year or two, the population has been in anything but a prosperous condition. They have been in a worse condition than that which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) makes out the farmers of Ontario to be. They have been so badly off, that the Government of the colony had to send food to the fishermen there, and it is reasonable to suppose that they are not able to buy such a quality of flour as the miners, the lumbermen and the fishermen of Nova Scotia are able to buy. In Sydney, one of the most distant points in the Dominion, a barrel of good, sound Canadian flour can be bought for $5, and, while good flour can be bought at such a price, those people will not likely buy an inferior article. As a matter of fact, the price of flour to-day is no higher than it was since the duty was imposed, and I am told by a friend of mine who is engaged in the business, that the price of home manufactured cornmeal has been sensibly reduced. My hon. colleague could not get through a speech in this House without having a slap at the Jamaica steamers, and he told us that they had been running for fifteen years. I hold in my hand a letter which I received the other day from Halifax, from a gentleman who is well able to give accurate information on this point. It reads as ${f follows}:$

"I have your letter of the 18th instant. The change from St. Thomas to Jamaica was made in January, 1880, and the steamers stopped running in June, 1886. For the first few years after the change was made, we could get little or no freight for Jamaica. Before the steamers stopped running, a different class of shippers got into the business, and a regular order of business was established, dealers in Jamaica sending up their orders which they could count upon receiving regularly to the day or almost hour, and, as I take it, a much more wholesome kind of trade between the two places was established."

Therefore, instead of these steamers having run to Jamaica for fifteen years, they have only run from 1880 to 1886.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Who is your authority? Mr. KENNY. I have no objection to show the hon. gentleman personally the signature to this letter, but, as it is a private letter, I do not desire to mention the name across the floor of the House. But does my hon. friend deny the statement? He stated that we have had steamers running to Jamaica for fifteen years. I state that they were only running between 1880 and 1886, and during the two years from 1888 to 1890. That is a very different thing from fifteen years, as the hon. gentleman stated. The hon. gentleman referred to the small cargoes which we received in return from the islands of the West Indies. The very reason why we ask for a subsidy for these steamers is that the return cargoes are small.

After Recess.

Mr. KENNY. I desire to correct an error into which I was inadvertently led before recess, by a remark which fell from the Minister of Customs. I stated that the bank fishermen were privileged to take their necessary supplies in bond, and consequently paid no duty on pork or other provisions and supplies which they require. I understood the Minister of Customs to say that that privilege is not restricted to the bank fishermen; I understood him to imply that it was also extended to the boat fishermen. In that respect I find I made an error. surprised at the time the hon. Minister made the statement, because I could not see, knowing the manner in which the boat fishing is conducted, that it was possible to apply such a system to the boat fishing; I desire, therefore, immediately to correct that mistake. Referring again to the West India trade, and the advantages of having a subsidised line of steamers to the West Indies, our object, mainly, was to advance and develop our export trade. Whilst this trade, in the return cargoes, is yet very much smaller than we desire it to be, it is satisfactory to know that in the item of exports, the trade is increasing. I heard, very recently, of one contract alone for the supply of 1,400 tons of hay for Cuba, and the delivery of it extends over a period from this date until September. That item in itself shows that there is a trade there for the agricultural productions of Canada. Reference was made by the senior member for Halifax to the polariscopic test as applied to our sugars, and the hon, gentleman paid a just tribute to the Minister of Customs for having adopted that improved method of testing our sugars. But the hon. gentleman should also have told us that the Government of which my hon. friend the Minister of Customs is a member, has done much more than that for the West India trade. When the senior member for Halifax was a member of the Parliament of Canada, sitting on the Government side of the House, he vainly endeavored to induce the Government of which he was a supporter to take some steps to improve the condition of the West India trade. He told them repeatedly in 1876, and in 1877, that they were depriving the Maritime Provinces annually of from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 of trade; and in 1878 he also told them that he had been a true prophet, and that Boston and New York had become the capitals of the West India trade. If, now that trade has been brought back to our own country, we have to thank the present Government for it. I desire to say a few words in reference to the condition of our farmers, and the proposal which is made by hon. gentlemen opposite to place the farmers of Ontario on the same plane as the farmers of the United States. I find that the New York Times, referring to the condition of the farmers of that country, states:

"The farmers of the United States are staggering under a burden of mortgage indebtedness approximating $9,000,000,000."

I find also that, with reference to the State of Wisconsin, Professor Henry, lecturing in Richmond, Wisconsin, states:

"One of the richest prairies in the United States is that of the St. Croix Valley in Wisconsin."

Of that valley he says:

"To-day the richest part of it is almost without fences; the majority of the farm buildings, especially the barns are poor, and the people complain bitterly of hard times."

We are told that in Kansas:

"The farmers of this vicinity are burning corn for fuel, finding it cheaper than coal. Corn is sold on the farm at 20 cents per bushel, while the average price of coal delivered at the farm ranges from 21 to 23 cents per bushel. The Farmers' Alliance brought the attention of the farmers to the relative prices of the two commodities, and advised that half the corn crop be used as fuel, thus advancing the price of the other half and saving money in fuel bills. The farmers have begun to act on this advice."

These are States that are tributary to the market of sixty millions of people, yet this is the condition of the farming population of the States of Kansas and Wisconsin. In Ohio we find, from an official statement prepared by the Secretary of State, that:

"The mortgage indebtedness of that State at the present time is no less than $515,511,000. This bears an average interest of six per cent. So that the people of Ohio have to pay $31,000,000 a year in interest, or about $10 a head of the total population. They have also to pay $12 a head for state and municipal taxation, and $5.76 a head for federal taxation. This is how matters stand in Ohio." Now, Sir, these gentlemen who would try to convince us that the condition of the farmer in the United States is better than that of the farmer in Canada, must know that when the federal, municipal and state debts are added together, the farmer of the United States has a much heavier taxation than the farmer of the Dominion of Canada. Residing in the eastern portion of the Dominion, I naturally take more interest in the condition of the people in those States that are nearest to my own Province, and I find that so great was the decline in the value of farm property in the New England States, that an effort was made by a Mr. Nott, who was a contributor to the York newspapers, to find out the cause, and in the course of his enquiries, he writes as follows to the New York journals :-

"" A Good Farm for Nothing.' The farm which suggests the title is the Foster farm, on the Cold Spring Road, a mile distant from the most beautiful village in New England, Williamstown, Berkshire County, Massachusetts, and within two miles of the station at which twenty passenger trains a day stop. The farm has twice taken a premium as the best managed farm in the district. The price of agricultural products, except hay, mutton and butter, is the same in the neighboring villages of Williamstown and North Adams as in Troy and Albany. There are a farm house and ten farm buildings, which it would take $10,000 to replace, and which are fully worth $6,500 now. Yet the whole farm is offered at the latter price, and, therefore, it is said that the 105 acres of land are really offered for nothing."

Now, I do not think that even the hon. member for South Oxford could show such a condition of things as that in the Province of Ontario. I read again in the Boston Globe of this month:

"What a pity to see people rushing like madmen into the wild Sioux reservation country, without food or shelter, while farms in New England can be bought for five dollars an acre, with houses and barns on them which alone cost six times the purchase money. And all to raise corn, at 10 cents a bushel, with no market at that, and reap a yearly crop of cyclones."

Mr. Speaker, I expressed the opinion, that we may attribute all these disparaging remarks which we have heard in this House applied to the people of Canada, to the political disappointment of our friends opposite. These gentleman have told us that in the year 1876 the country was in a prosperous condition. I have read to you tonight statements which were taken from the bluebooks, showing the aggregate trade of the country in 1876, and at the present day. And when you consider further the great development of the banking capital of the country, the great expansion of our manufacturing enterprises, the increased savings of the people, as illustrated in the savings bank returns and in deposits in the chartered banks, I think we must come to the conclusion that the people of Canada to-day are in a condition eminently better than they were in 1876. I am not so optimistic in my views as not to fully recognise that caution ought to mark the guarded way recognise fully, that nationally, commercially and financially, we have been going—I do not want to say, too fast, but, at all events, at a pretty rapid pace. We have been going under very full sail, and I think it would be wise for us to shorten sail. In my individual capacity as a business man, associated with financial institutions in this country, that is the advice I would consider it my duty to give to those in whom I am interested. And as it affects the individual so it affects the nation, and I do not hesitate to say that I think we should be exceedingly careful in our public expenditure. Not that I see anything that immediately necessitates alarm; but we have been fairly prosperous, we have been spending large sums of money collectively and individually, and therefore we must expect that there may be some In the course of this debate much has been said regarding our relations with the people of the republic to the south of us. I quite agree with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), that we should endeavor to cultivate the most friendly feelings with the people of the United States. I think that is the desire of the people of Canada, that always has been the desire of the people of Canada, and I believe that the Government of Canada have entertained and do earnestly entertain that desire. Our public men are much better informed of the condition of the United States than the public men of the United States are informed of the condition of Canada, or of the sentiments of our people. With the American people we have much in common. They are of very much the same offspring as ourselves, and they are a bright, intelligent, hospitable people, and those who visit them, I am sure, always hope to go again. I say, then, that we have nothing to blame ourselves as regards our treatment of the American people, or the disposition which our people and the Government of Canada have always shown towards that great nation. Reference was made, also, by the hon member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), to the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty in 1866. But that hon. gentleman knew well, as we all know, that the treaty was abrogated by the action of the United States Congress, that its abrogation was not the act of the Canadian Parliament; and we all know that every subsequent trade arrangement we have made with that people was abrogated and nullified by the action of the people of the United States, and not by the people of Canada. Only this afternoon the non. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), when a reference was made to the Alien Bill which was before this House, called attention to the fact that legislation on that question originated at Washington and not at Ottawa, and that, therefore, if there has been any friction between people living on the boundaries of the two nations, the Government of the United States and not the Government of Canada is to be blamed, and must be held respon-Mr. KENNY.

United States, hon. gentlemen opposite, in their party difficulty and dilemma, have discovered that the panacea for all their troubles is the fad of unrestricted reciprocity, or commercial union, or continental free trade, or whatever they choose to call it. There is not one of those hon. gentlemen, who has ever undertaken to tell us what he means by unrestricted reciprocity; we have never had a definition of it from those hon. gentlemen. by the public press, that a very prominent Canadian politician has recently visited New York, and it is incidentally stated that he also visited Washington. To-day, the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) asked the Government what news the Minister of Marine had brought back from ington. I think, when we ask the Minister of Marine to tell us what news he brings back from Washington, we might also ask the hoa. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), if he has any information to give us from Washington? I repeat, that no hon. gentleman opposite has given us a definition of unrestricted reciprocity; but now that one of their number has visited their friends in the United States, we may hope to get a more accurate interpretation of it. Some of us have the good fortune to visit Washington. We go in our individual capacity, and it sometimes falls to our lot to meet gentlemen, not of the exalted position which an envoy would meet, but gentlemen connected with the politics of the United States. I happened to be in Washington a year or two ago. I was not accompanied by the New York leader of the Grit party on that occasion. I was there in my individual capacity. I had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of some gentlemen in fairly prominent positions there, and ever since those gentlemen have been good enough to send me all the public papers printed and circulated at Washington which bear upon the trade relations of the United States of America with Canada. Amongst the documents which have been forwarded to me and which interest us, as every discussion at Washington must interest us which in any way pertains to the relations of that country with Canada are certain speeches made in Congress. I have read them for the purpose of ascertaining what is the animus of the public men of the United States towards Canada. I hold in my hand an official copy of a speech made by Hon. John Sherman of Ohio in the Senate of the United States, on 18th September, 1888. On that occasion this distinguished senator, who, it will be remembered, before the last presidential election was quite a possibility for the position of President, moved on that occasion the following resolution :-

"Resolved, that the Committee on Foreign Relations be directed to enquire into and report at the next Session of Congress the state of the relations of the United States with Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada, with such measures as are expedient to promote friendly commercial and political intercourse between those countries and the United States, and for that purpose to have leave to sit during the recess of Congress."

Those hon, gentlemen opposite who tell us that we cannot live without this commercial union with the people of the United States have never pointed out to us that nearly every public man in the United States, either in Congress or out of Congress, that nearly every newspaper that has ever referred to the question in any way, that nearly every magaz-Canada is to be blamed, and must be held respon-sible for it. As regards our relations with the that commercial union, means political union. In glancing over this speech made by the Hon. John Sherman there are some statements in it which, with the permission of the House, I will read. The first extract is one that is not political, but it refers to the Canadian canals, and it, therefore, may interest hon, gentlemen. Senator Sherman may interest hon. gentlemen. said:

"We have no right to complain that Canada levies tolls on vessels passing through her canals, though we levy none on American canals, for that right is expressly recognised by the Washington Treaty. All that we can ask is that no higher or other tolls are levied on American vessels than on Canadian vessels, that no discriminations are made under cover of drawbacks or bounties in favor of Canadian ports and against American ports. If we object to tolls we should do what we ought to have done forty years ago, and for which I voted for thirty years ago—build a canal around the falls of Niagara on American soil." can soil.

The senator, in the course of his speech, further said:

"Our whole history, since the conquest of Canada by Great Britain, in 1763, has been a continuous warning that we cannot be at peace with each other, except by political as well as commercial union.

Now, Sir, there is the emphatic opinion of one of the most prominent and distinguished senators of the United States, and yet I remember the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) told us the other day that we should always hold out the olive branch to the people of the United States, and that we should be exceedingly careful that we should not refer to them in a contemptuous or impertinent manner. I have never heard any reference in this Legislature to the people of the United States that was at all contemptuous or impertinent. I have heard the assertion of our own rights, but I have never heard anything that savored of impertinence. I suppose, however, that the hon member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) would be quite satisfied with this olive branch, which is tendered us from the Senate at Washington, and which tells us distinctly that there can be no peace except by a commercial and political union. In the sentence which I shall next read to you, delivered by Senator Sherman, of Ohio, he speaks more kindly and more confidently of Canada than the hon. gentlemen opposite are in the habit of doing in the Legislature of their own country. Hon. Mr. Sherman says:

"Canada is now stronger, more populous and wealthier than the United States was when the Constitution was formed. In one hundred years, our country has been increased fifteen-fold in population, five-fold in extent and twenty-fold in wealth, productions and resources. We may anticipate for Canada, the same proportionate growth in population and wealth."

Hon. gentlemen opposite are not as hopeful of the future of Canada as the distinguished Senator from Ohio evidently is. He goes on to say:

"But neither can grow in extent, for the continent is shared between us."

I will quote the concluding part of this remarkable speech :

"True statesmanship consists in an earnest effort by honest means, to promote the public good. No greater good can be accomplished than by a wise and peaceful policy to unite Canada and the United States, under one common government, but carefully preserving to each state its local authority and autonomy. This controlling principle of blending local and national authority—many in one—was the discovery of our fathers, and has guided the American people thus far in safety and honor, and believe can be and ought to be extended to the people of Canada. With a firm conviction that this consummation, most devoutly to be wished, is within the womb of destiny, and believing that it is our duty to hasten its coming, I am not willing, for one, to vote for any measure, not demanded by national honor, that will tend to postpone the good time coming, when the American flag will be the signal and sign of the Union of all the English speaking people of the continent, from the Rio Grande to the Arctic Ocean."

Now, Sir, I tell hon: gentlemen opposite that that is what their agitation for commercial union leads I tell them that it is not fair to the people of Canada to attempt to mislead us by telling us we can have commercial union without political union, when the other parties to the bargain tell us, honestly and candidly, that it can only be obtained by political union. This document which I have read from, as I told you, is an official document issued by the Printing Bureau at Washington, and it is headed: "Relations with Canada—Annexation." Now, that is one olive branch offered to us, and let me give you another one. I will quote the views of the Hon. Benjamin Butterworth, whose name has been very frequently before the Canadian people in this controversy. The article reads as follows :-

"Before the United States Congressional Committee on Friday last, Congressman Ben. Butterworth appeared and addressed the committee in support of his Bill for reciprocity with Canada. He said: 'As between Canada and the United States, there is not a gentleman who does not know that from every standpoint the United States has the coign of vantage. The trouble with the question of reciprocity is that politics enters into it and not statesmanship. I do not appeal to politics, but to that statesmanship which would give to our people an opportunity to have the benefit of the broad domain north of the St. Lawrence. Canada would be assimilated. (I do not use the word annexed, as it might be unpleasant north of the St. Lawrence. Canada would be assimilated. (I do not use the word annexed, as it might be unpleasant to some people). It was so written in the book of destiny. The people of Canada are our kith and kin, and a very good assortment too. The highway to assimilation is closer commercial relations, because where a man's treasure is, there will be his heart also.' Such is the Butterworth scheme."

So speaks one of the greatest authorities on the commercial union fad. Now, Mr. Speaker, the name of Mr. Wiman, of New York, formerly of Canada, has been long identified with the project of commercial union. As far as I know, it has either originated with him, or in the fertile brain of some discontented Grit politician in Canada. Be that as it may, in quoting the name of Mr. Wiman in this Legislature, I desire to do so in all personal respect to that gentleman. I have never met him, but, some years ago, he extended great kindness to members of my family whom he met abroad, and for that I have always felt grateful to that gentleman. But, Sir, as a public man in Canada, dealing with a great question, dealing with the future of this country, dealing with the question which we are forced to deal with by the resolution now before us, I have to refer to that Mr. Wiman appeared before the gentleman. Committee of the United States Senate which was collecting evidence on the trade relations with Canada; and I hope I will not weary the House if I give you a few extracts from his evidence, as reported in the Toronto Mail:

forced annexation could not be thought of. He believed that annexation at present in practical politics was an absolute impossibility. There were those who conceived that the best way to get a political union between the two countries was to open up an intimate trade alliance."

Therefore, Mr. Wiman tells these hon. gentlemen who have been associated with him, who, I understand, have been in constant correspondence with him, that the only way in which we can have a commercial union is by political union; and we must, at all events, admire that gentleman's candor. In the course of his evidence—and I desire to call the attention of the hon. leader of the Opposition to this statement—Mr. Wiman says:

"One objection to the annexation of Canada was the immense increase of late years of the French Roman Catholic population."

It seems that the great objection to political union is the fact that we have a large number of French Roman Catholics in Canada. I do not know how the number can be reduced. I believe, across the border, it is not customary to have large families; but while the French Canadians increase as fast as they do, I think it will be a long time before Mr. Wiman or any one else gets them out of Canada. Mr. Wiman went on to say:

"The fact that Canadian railways were not under the interstate commerce law gave them an advantage. If a proper commercial arrangement were made between the two countries, this would not be so."

In other words, he thought the Canadian railways should also be assimilated or annexed. He was asked by Senator Hoar as to what raw material Canada could furnish the United States with; and the answer interests us, because it shows us that the great champion of commercial union is obliged to tell the Senate Committee what raw material the United States will take from Canada. He replied:

"Canada can furnish us with lumber, coal on the Pacific coast, nickel, asbestos and iron ore."

That is the best authority we can get as to the trade in raw material which commercial union will open to us, if we surrender our political existence and our right to make our own tariff—if we surrender all that Englishmen and free men in every country prize most highly. That is very encouraging. Not a pound of coal from Cape Breton or Pictou—only the coal on the Pacific coast. What is the reason these gentlemen do not want our Nova Scotia coal? I find the reason in the report of the same Committee of the Senate, but not at the same meeting. That committee held a meeting in the city of Boston, where the president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, in the course of his evidence, said:

"Our country produces all the coal, iron ore, and pig iron that is necessary for our home consumption."

He tells us distinctly that they do not want our coal, iron ore or pig iron, as they have plenty of those materials of their own. At the same meeting evidence was given by Congressman Morse, who said—and this is one of the olive branches they are extending to us:

"If the Dominion of Canada would conform its protective tariff to ours, so that we would have uniformity of tariff and protection to American industries, and if Canada would also consent to a just and fair adjustment of the fishery dispute in the two oceans, I would favor a reciprocity treaty between the two countries."

It is very unfortunate that we should be obliged to cross the border to get information on a sub-Mr. Kenny.

ject which concerns us so much, when hon gentlemen opposite possess all the information, if they would only divulge it and tell us what they do mean. But I will submit to the House another olive branch. Hon. gentlemen, I dare say, are acquainted with General Wilson, who gave his evidence before the same Senatorial Committee, and who contended that, nolens volens, Canada should be annexed to the United States. Mr. Wiman and his friends were rather shocked at that proposal, and a meeting was held where this question was fully discussed by Mr. Wiman and General Wilson. I will make this short extract from Mr. Wiman's speech:

"He expatiated on the value of Canada's trade, which he said was now equal to $10 a head of Canada's population, and added: With the barriers between the United States and Canada obliterated, English goods discriminated against, and an open and a free market for the development of natural resources within Canada, every Canadian would be worth $100 instead of $10 as a customer of the United States."

That is what commercial union is to give us, and I think it would be very difficult for hon. gentlemen opposite to show that we would get anything like compensation for such a surrender. Mr. Wiman here lays down his scheme of commercial union, to which I invite the consideration of this House. He says:

"The tariff of Canada should never be lower than that of the United States. In fact, the tariff of the continent should be regulated at Washington. As to its height, it should be administered by a joint commission, in which, of course, the United States should have a preponderance. The total receipts should be pooled in one purse, and the amount divided according to population."

Now, I ask the hon. gentlemen opposite, as Mr. Wiman has told us what he means by commercial union, if that is also what they mean? Now, Sir, accepting Mr. Wiman's interpretation of commercial union, let us apply it to our condition. The members of this House will see that it is contemplated that our Customs tariff should be raised to that of the United States. The practical effect of that would be that we should have to pay some $3,000,000 a year more in Customs duties than we pay now, inasmuch as the tariff of the United States is so much higher than ours. What would we get back? We would pay into the common fund $3,000,000. Our population is 5,000,000, and that of the United States, 65,000,000, so that we would get back one-thirteenth of that sum, or $240,000. We would, therefore, be $2,760,000 worse off on that item alone. Besides, by this arrangement, our treasury would lose the revenue which is now derived from the duty on imports from the United States, and which amounts to $7,300,000. How is that amount to be made up? It will have to be made up, I suppose, according to a suggestion which fell from an hon, gentleman opposite during the course of this debate-by an income tax. It would have to be made up by direct taxation. If our revenue is to be depleted to that extent, there is nothing else for it but direct taxation. I suppose, when I make this statement, I shall be called captious or, perhaps, impertinent; but that is the only outcome I can see to such a condition of things. Now, this meeting to which I have referred, between these two gentlemen, who take such a very great interest in our affairs, was closed by the following remarks by General Wilson : - single word that Mr. Wiman had said, for both were in favor of annexation, but sought it by different methods."

It is not fair or just, with this knowledge before us and these impressions on our mind, that we, having a public duty to discharge, should conceal them either from our fellow-members in this House or from the people of Canada. During the course of this debate, I find that one hon. gentleman opposite complained of the National Policy, because wheat had declined, from 1879 to 1890, 45 cents, and he blamed the National Policy for this decline. Well, that hon. gentleman must have known that the price of wheat in Canada is regulated by the price in the great markets of the world, and that while, in 1879, wheat in England was $1.80 a bushel, in 1890, in the same market, it was $1.08. There was, therefore, a decline of 72 cents in England, as compared with 45 cents in Canada. But, of course, not one hon. gentleman opposite would be happy if he did not take advantage in this debate of the opportunity to assail the National Policy; in fact, everything which tends to create a national sentiment in this country, seems to displease hon. gentlemen opposite. What has the National Policy done for this country?

An hon. MEMBER. Nothing.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman does not We would never have heard of commercial union but for the National Policy; even their own fad would never have blossomed into existence but for it. Who ever heard of Mr. Wiman or of the emissaries of the American manufacturers coming amongst us until we had the National Policy? Who ever heard before of pilgrimages from the United States by leading American politicians to this country, and the more of these gentlemen come the better, for God forbid they should judge of Canada by what they hear from the Opposition. I am delighted when I see gentlemen holding responsible positions in the United States visiting our country, as they did last year, and I am always glad when hon, gentlemen on either side of politics extend them welcome. I hope when return visits are made to Washington, that the same hospitality will be extended to our representatives. National Policy has not only made us more pros-perous at home, but it has made us better known abroad.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It has sent a million of Canadians across the line.

Mr. KENNY. If the hon, gentleman had remained in power from 1878 to 1890, I hardly think there would have been a Canadian left in the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You quadrupled the emigration once you got into power, and you drove away immigrants also.

Mr. KENNY. The National Policy has developed our manufacturing industries enormously, no matter what hon gentlemen opposite may say. I believe these industries have not been very remunerative to individual shareholders, and I can speak feelingly on that point. We have not become millionaires, but we have found employment for our people, we have developed the resources of our country, and have kept our population at home. I say, therefore, that we never would have received this amount of attention which we have received from the Legislature and the press and the people of the United States, but for the National Policy and the construction of our great transcontinental railway. I believe that our transcontinental railway system succeeded in attracting the attention of Congress and the people of the United States towards us a great deal more than our National Policy did. I readily admit that, so long as the American manufacturers could use Canada, as they did when the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was Finance Minister, as a slaughter market for their surplus productions, that was all they wanted, and in those happy days we never had visits from Mr. Wiman and the other missionaries of the fad. We would not be doing our duty to ourselves or to our constituents if we did not endeavor to ascertain what these hon, gentlemen mean by unrestricted reciprocity. Not one of them has ever explained it, and I have, therefore, been driven across the border to ascertain exactly what the other parties to the bargain mean by commercial union. No matter how hon gentlemen may attempt to disguise it, no matter how they may be misled, no matter how willing they may be deceived, the fact remains that commercial union means political union. If I were an American, I would be very glad indeed to see this country attached to the United States. We are worth a great deal more than we were in 1876.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Particularly our farm lands. They are not worth by $200,000,000 what they were worth twelve years ago.

Mr. KENNY. I say, unhesitatingly, that we are worth a great deal more to the people of the United States than we were in 1876. I believe they desire the acquisition of this country, and I am not surprised at it. A country which has shown the recent growth which Canada has shown, a country of our manufacturing development, a country with a population like ours, would be a great acquisition to any nation, and I do not wonder that the people of the United States desire the acquisition of Canada. In our intercourse with them, they do not disguise this desire. There is scarcely an American who knows anything about this country who does not believe that it is their manifest destiny to rule There is one trait of the American character which we should admire, and that is their love of their country. No matter how much an American may differ from his fellow-countrymen, he always has a kind word to say for his country. That is a lesson which I hope hon gentlemen opposite, when they go to New York and to Washington, will learn; and I hope that when they come back their patriotism will be developed, and they will think and speak more kindly of Canada than they have in the past. I have wondered what the legislators and the public men of the United States must think of certain of our public men when they read the annals of our Parliament, and the remarks made by certain hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to their own country. Whatever may be our opinion as to the Government of the country for the time being, whatever may be our party differences, let us take care that we utter no uncertain sound when our political status is assailed. Let us show that we desire above all to retain the right of self-government, and to arrange our own fiscal policy in conformity with the varying interests of our own country. Self-government is our inheritance, and it should be the ambition of every Canadian to hand it intact to his children.

Mr. WATSON. It is not my intention to follow the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat through the long speech which he has made. As a representative from a Western Province, I intend to deal more particularly with the interests of the Province from which I come. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Kenny) has stated that if the American statesmen were to read the speeches delivered in this House they would be astonished. I think that when the people from his Province read his speech they will be astonished.

Mr. KENNY. They have heard it before.

Mr. WATSON. We have all heard it before. The hon, gentleman did state that, as a business man, he would advise the Government to draw in the sail. In other words, he admitted that the Dominion of Canada was becoming extravagant.

Mr. KENNY. I did not say that.

Mr. WATSON. In fact, he has given advice to his friends in business, and also to the Government, to go a little slower. We can, at all events, agree with him in those sentiments. He has quoted statements from many individual members of the United States Congress in reference to freer trade relations with Canada, but he has not referred to the resolution introduced by Mr. Hitt, who represented a Committee which passed resolutions tending to freer trade relations with us. If he had referred to that as an olive branch held out by the United States to Canada, he would have touched the question more directly. We have before us the Hitt resolution and the McKinley resolution. One is held out to us as inviting freer trade relations, while the McKinley resolution is entirely opposite to that, and will probably be put in force, especially after the speech made by the President of the Council. Representing, as I do, an agricultural district, I believe that, if that resolution is put in force, it will be a bad thing for Canada. We are not in a position to attempt to enforce a retaliatory policy against the United States. The Legislature of the Province which I represent passed, on the 20th March, a resolution which I will read. I believe that the policy advocated by that House would be supported by 90 per cent. of the people of Manitoba. This resolution was passed unanimously, and was based on a similar resolution which was passed on the report of a special committee, formally appointed for the purpose of seeing how the tariff affected the Pro-vince of Manitoba. The resolution reads as follows :-

"Whereas, in the year 1884, a special committee of this House was appointed to enquire into the operation of the tariff on agricultural implements, lumber, canned fruits, &c., and submitted a report to this House, signed by the Hon. Mr. LaRivière, then a member of the Government, stating, among other things that the tariff on articles absolutely necessary for settlers bears very heavily upon our people:

"That the said report was approved of by the Legislative Assembly and presented to the Dominion Privy Council by the delegates sent by this Province in said year 1884, by the delegates sent by this Province in said year 1884, to obtain certain rights:

"And the tariff has continued, since the year 1884, and still continues, to press very heavily upon the people of the Province of Manitoba;

"And whereas, on account of our geographical position, it would be a very great benefit to the people of this Province to have closer trade relations with the States of the American Union lying to the south of us;

Mr. KENNY.

"And whereas, this Legislature considers the question of closer trade relations with the American States, as aforesaid, so important to the interests of the people of this Province that, although the subject is one beyond our jurisdiction, still, it is advisable to make representations to the authorities that have jurisdiction in the matter, with a view of obtaining an amelioration of our

"And whereas, the late Honorable John Norquay, and Honorable C. E. Hamilton, representing this Province at the Quebec Interprovincial Conference in 1887, agreed to a resolution in favor of unrestricted reciprocity:

"Therefore, be it resolved, that a humble petition be presented by this House to the Parliament of the Dominpresented by this House to the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, praying that steps be taken by the said Dominion Parliament to negotiate with the Government of the United States of America, with the view of arriving at some arrangement by which there should be unrestricted reciprocity in trade between the two countries; and also, that a humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General in Council, praying that he will take the state of the Province into consideration, and take such steps as may be necessary in order to facilitate the bringing about unrestricted reciprocity in trade between the Dominion of Canada and the United States of America."

That resolution was carried unanimously in the Local Legislature in Manitoba on the 20th of March last, and I feel satisfied, knowing the people there as I do, that that resolution is endorsed by at least 90 per cent. of the people of Manitoba, and the other 10 per cent., if they oppose it, do so for reasons not in the interests of the Province of Manitoba. The people of that Province are becoming satisfied that the existing protective tariff bears more heavily upon that Province than it does on any other Province of the Dominion. That has been contended in this House for years, They have no large manufactures in that Province to benefit by a protective tariff, and we feel that it is a heavy burden upon our people to pay such heavy taxes for the purpose of maintaining the manufacturers in the Eastern Provinces. I may say that, so far as I am personally concerned, I do not believe that the manufacturers of eastern Canada are making such large profits as some people imagine. In 1883, when the increased duty was placed on agricultural implements, the manufacturers in eastern Canada asked the Government to admit the raw material free of duty. Government said: No; we will not admit raw material free of duty, but we will give you 10 per cent. increase protection on the manufactured article. The result is that the eastern manufacturers to day are paying a high duty on the raw material which enters into the manufacture of the goods consumed by the farmers of Canada. A week ago I was up west, and in speaking to one of the largest firms, manufacturing and shipping implements to Manitoba, they told me that at that time they were importing several car-loads of bar iron from Pittsburg, upon which they were paying a duty of $13 per ton. Now, when these gentlemen pay such heavy duties on raw material, it cannot be expected that we are going to get implements as cheap as we would if there was no duty on raw materials. They have got to pay the price of the raw material, they have got to pay the duty in cash, and pay the freight, all, probably, twelve months before that material is manufactured into the article and sold to the consumer; besides, they have got to pay interest on the investment. Now, it has been contended by hon, gentlemen in this House that the duties do not bear heavily on the people of Manitoba, inasmuch as implements are cheaper there now than they were ten years ago. I think that is no argument, because implements are cheaper everywhere. I am satisfied that, if we did not have this high duty on implements, they would cost just about the amount of the duty less in Manitoba than they cost to-day. I am satisfied that, not only do we pay duty on the goods which come into our Province, and that are imported directly, but we have to pay almost as high for all the goods that come from the east as we pay on the imported goods which we import and pay duty upon. Manitoba is purely an agricultural country. No doubt we have natural mineral wealth in that Province which will be developed in the future; but at the present rate of immigration we cannot expect that the natural wealth of the country in minerals will be developed, because it would not pay to erect large factories for the purpose of manufacturing the raw material. Now, I find, in looking over the Trade and Navigation Returns, that we still import from the United States a large quantity of agricultural implements which are necessary for the farmers of Manitoba for tilling the soil. I wish to show the quantities that we have imported and their value, and the amount of duty we have had to pay. I say that that Province, with 125,000 of a population, is paying more duty on agricultural implements than all the rest of the Dominion put together, and I think that should be sufficient evidence that, so far as we are concerned, we cannot be satisfied so long as this high rate of duty is maintained on agricultural implements. I find that last year, according to the Trade and Navigation Returns, we imported the following agricultural implements from the United States, with the values and duties as given below:

It has been contended in this House that practically we do not import any harvesters and binders. Now, I wish to say that the farmers in Manitoba realise that they have to pay an extra price for their harvesters and binders on account of the 35 per cent. protection; they realise that they pay fully 35 per cent. more for that article than it is sold for across the line. Mr. Maxwell informed me that they sold in Manitoba for \$160 cash, or \$180 on credit. That is the information I received from Mr. Maxwell, in St. Mary's, about a week ago, and I think that statement cannot be contradicted. These same binders are sold in Dakota for \$120. This is the information given me by a man who purchased binders there recently. The duty on these machines does not amount to much, but we have to pay the same price for Canadian machines that we have to pay for the American machines, consequently if the duty was reduced, we would get the benefit of that reduction. The Ontario manufacturers have had to combine in order to keep up the price on account of the tremendous expense and outlay they have to meet in buying the raw material that they require. There are other articles less important that the farmers of Manitoba have imported from the United States, and on which they have paid duty; but, I have not taken the trouble to enumerate them. It further appears that Manitoba has paid on lumber, an article that must be used by every settler, \$17,714. When this amount is added to the duties paid on implements, it is found that Manitoba contributed last year directly to the revenue no less than \$64,058. While we are endeavoring as best we can to secure the rapid and complete settlement of Manitoba, the Government are not acting with sufficient liberality, and I do not altogether approve of the means of distributing the small amount they do expend; and I desire to point out that the Government by their system of taxation, collects in duties on necessary implements for the settler, and the lumber required to erect his house, \$10,000 more than they are spending this year on immigration. This is a matter that should receive the consideration of the Government, when they are endeavoring to induce people to go into Manitoba and the North-West. Last year I submitted a statement of the extra cost to a settler starting in Manitoba as compared with Dakota, simply on account of the duties he is called upon to pay, and I showed that \$240 more was required by a settler in Manitoba as compared with one on the south side on the international boundary line. In addition to these items to which I have drawn attention, there is that of fencing wire, and on that article I contend that the consumer pays the full amount of the duty in every instance. Further, there is binding twine, an article which I contend should be placed on the free list. It is estimated that this year there will be 1,000,000 acres under cultivation in the Province of Manitoba, and as regards the North-West Territories, we have no figures on this point; but it is safe to say that there will be 1,000,000 acres under crop, taking Manitoba and the Terri tories together. On an average, two pounds of binding twine are required to bind for an acre under crop. The duty on binding twine is 11 cents a pound and 10 per cent. ad valorem, or about 21 cents. Admitting that we do not pay the full duty, we undoubtedly pay a duty of 2 cents a pound. On 2,000,000 pounds of twine, we will accordingly pay a duty of \$40,000. This is a subject which should be considered by the Government. It must also be remembered that binding twine is not a large industry, for all the rope-walks do not employ more than 400 or 500 men, and many of these are cheap laborers. being the case, the people of Manitoba could afford to bonus these establishments to go out of business, and as there are only five rope-walks in Canada manufacturing binding twine, the people of Manitoba could afford, out of the extra amount paid, to bonus each factory to the extent of \$8,000 a year each to go out of the business. Under these circumstances it is evident that this is a very heavy tax imposed on the people of the North-West. On a farm of 160 acres the settler is paying $4\frac{1}{2}$ cents an acre for the privilege of using twine to bind his crops. We also find that instead of advocating what we suppose they favored, unrestricted trade with the United States, and we on this side of the House do not ask commercial union, but unrestricted trade, hon. gentlemen opposite now appear to view such a proposition with disfavor. I had hoped from the speeches delivered last year that the Government favored unrestricted trade, and especially so when they placed green fruits on the free list, which was a great benefit to the people of Manitoba. While we can grow the small fruits, such as currants, fruits such as apples and plums are imported from the United States or the eastern Provinces. A duty on such fruit becomes a serious matter when this duty has to be paid on the whole consignment, while probably one-half is spoiled. I regret very much to notice that the Mr. WATSON.

dutiable list. He does not adopt this action as one beneficial to a large portion of the population, but he does so to meet the views of the growers in two or three counties, who cannot supply even the local demand; and yet, in order to meet their wishes, the hon. gentleman imposes undue taxes on the people at large. I think Manitoba, situated as she is geographically, and removed from those eastern portions of Canada which may to some extentalthough I think otherwise—benefit by the protective tariff, should have some exceptions made in her favor, especially as regards articles required by the settler. If we expect people to come there, we must show them that it is a cheaper country to live in and to start farming in than the States to the south of us. I am not here to speak of Manitoba, as I have heard some gentlemen speak for the Provinces they represent. I have no doubt in my mind, from what I know of the Province of Ontario, and from what I heard from gentlemen on this side of the House, with regard to the indebtedness of the farmers of that Province, but that the statements they make are absolutely correct, so far as I can speak as a representative of the Province of Manitoba. I say that, comparatively speaking, Manitoba is in a flourishing condition. Manitoba, I believe, is to-day the best country in the world open for immigration. We have a better country than they have to the south of us. We have natural advantages there which they have not to the south. On account of their elevation they are troubled more with drought and frosts than we are, and we are unacquainted with the terrible cyclones they have in summer, and the fierce blizzards they have in winter in the States to the south. We have the finest country in the world for agricultural purposes. I have lived thirteen years in Manitoba, and I have seen thirteen crops reaped in the surrounding country of the town in which I live, and I can say, from my experience, that I have never seen a failure of a crop either from drought or frost. It is true that some portions of Manitoba have suffered from these inconveniences, but you will find such exceptional districts in all portions of the Dominion of Canada. Naturally, we hear more about frost and drought in Manitoba, on account of its being a new country. For instance, if we were to take the condition of the people around Kingston a year ago as a sample of Ontario, it would not be fair to Ontario, and so, if we were to take some isolated sections of the Province of Manitoba that had suffered by drought or frost, we would not be speaking fairly of Manitoba and the North-West generally. Situated as we are geographically, and considering our facilities for manufacturing, and our easy access to the markets to which we can send our produce, I do maintain that if the Government expect that Province to grow, as we hope it will grow, and as it must grow, they must move in the direction indicated by the resolution of the Local Legislature of that Province. It is of the utmost importance that we should have freer trade relations with the people to the south, not only for the purpose of obtaining our supplies, if we can get them cheaper, but also to find a market for our produce. To-day we are situated in rather an awkward position in the Province of Manitoba. Finance Minister again places these goods on the There is a duty of 15 cents per bushel on wheat, and, so far as that duty is concerned, the freight charges for bringing the wheat from, say, Winnipeg, to any portion of Ontario, is just about the duty in excess of the freight charged in shipping wheat from Duluth to the eastern portions of Canada. That being the case, it is of great importance that we should have the market of the United States for our grain. The wheat-fields of Minnesota are failing, and are not yielding the large crops for the last few years as they did formerly. The result is, that the millers of Minneapolis, where they have capacities for grinding immense quantities of flour daily, want to get our Manitoba hard wheat. If we had unrestricted trade with the United States, Minneapolis would be an enormous market for our No. 1 hard wheat. In the United States they have competition in railway freight rates which we have not as yet in Manitoba. We have, it is true, since the Northern Pacific Railway went in there, better freight rates than we had a few years ago, but that railway has not yet its connection in the east and we have not the same competition as they have in the States. The freight from Minneapolis to Montreal is $32\frac{1}{2}$ cents per 100 pounds and from Winnipeg to Montreal 46 cents per 100 pounds, which shows the disadvantages under which we are placed with regard to railway transit. South of the line they have railway competition and their freights are lower. It is true that where railways have a monopoly in the United States they charge all they can, for I believe that corporations have no souls and they will take no less than they possibly can get. As I said before, we have in Manitoba and the North-West the best field for immigration open to the world to-day, and we are endeavoring to induce the Government to increase the expenditure for the purpose of making our country known throughout the world as a field for immigrants. One of the best arguments that could be used in favor of people settling in that country is, that we could tell them that we have unrestricted trade with the United States. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) has asked us what we understand by unrestricted trade with the United States? My idea of unrestricted trade is, that I shall be allowed to sell my products in the dearest market, and that I shall be allowed to buy what I want in the cheapest market. Hon, gentlemen on this side of the House are not advocating commercial union. I believe myself that commercial union might lead to political union, and so far as I am concerned, and so far as the people of Manitoba are concerned, they have no wish for political union. But, if there is one thing that will drive the people of the western portion of the Dominion into seeking and asking for annexation, it is the policy at present pursued by the Government. If we have freer trade relations with the people of the United States, we are perfectly happy and content with the laws under which we live, but, under existing circumstances, as I have pointed out, notwithstanding the number of years the National Policy has been in existence, and notwithstanding all the efforts to protect our manufacturers, we are still importing a large quantity of American implements which are necessary for the cultivation of the soil. That being case, you cannot expect the people to submit to a high rate of unnecessary taxation.

I shall not detain the House longer, but I hope that members from the west will take a similar line to what I have taken in my remarks to-night. I have tried to show the natural advantages of our country. I have tried to show the disadvantages of our country, which, I am happy to say, are artificial and can be removed, and I think it is the duty of the representatives of the people from Manitoba to also point out these disadvantages and to show how they can be removed with benefit to the country. I shall hope that the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), will ably endorse the remarks which I have made here to-night. He was the chairman of a committee that reported a similar resolution to this, which was passed by the Local Legislature of Manitoba. In fact, that resolution was taken as the basis of the resolution proposed by Attorney General Martin in the Manitoba Legislature a few days ago. The hon. member is not in his place to-night, but as this debate is to be carried over until Tuesday, I have no doubt that hon. gentleman will have seen no reason to change his views, as expressed in that resolution at that time, and will take a similar line to what I have taken to-night.

Mr. PORTER. The hon, gentleman who has just taken his seat has, I am happy to say, evinced that he is not devoid of all feeling for his country, but has some patriotism left in his politics. He does not adopt the role that has been adopted by so many gentlemen on that side of the House, of decrying the country in which they live, or of depicting it as in a decayed or ruined condition. He says, and I believe he says truthfully, that Manitoba is in a most flourishing condition; and I am sure that every member of this House and every person in the Dominion is pleased of that statement, because I think every one in this Dominion should rejoice in the welfare and prosperity of any part of the Dominion, even if his own section should not be so flourishing as he could wish. But the hon. gentleman, although evincing a patriotic spirit, nevertheless cannot entirely divest himself of the partisan feeling of a party man, but must show in his utterances that he has an animus against the Government in regard to their fiscal policy. The whole burden of his speech was undoubtedly directed to show that the policy of this Government is injurious to his section. I think, however, that if the hon. gentleman would consider for a moment, he would see that no Government would be justified in adopting a sectional policy. All policies must be constructed and devised for the welfare of all, and he will admit that although certain things may be burdensome to some parts of the country, yet, in the spirit of wisdom and fair play to all, it is necessary for a Government to construct such a system as will be best for the general good. If the hon, gentleman had been in the House this afternoon and heard the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), who spoke very calmly and very wisely, and gave us reminiscences of nearly thirty years ago, he would have learned that the object of the Canadian Government was not to foster a sectional feeling, but to unite every part of British America into one united whole and make us a nation if possible. In order to accomplish that purpose, there must undoubtedly be some things which certain sections would prefer not to have, and other things which they would prefer to have, but which would not be reasonable or fair to all; and if the hon, gentleman would consider this matter, I think he would not blame the Government for the policy they have adopted. Since I have had the honor of a seat in this House, every session the fiscal policy of the Government has been assailed by hon, gentlemen opposite with unflagging strength and diligence. No repulse will check or stagger them, no argument convince them; but with a versatility that would be admirable if it were not mischievous, they persevere continually in assailing this policy, and if their assaults were successful, I think it would be calamitous to the Dominion of Canada. Every device which clever men can invent, every weapon which they can forge has been used; and but that the members in this House or the people outside of this House are convinced of the wisdom of this policy, it would be almost impossible to resist the fierce and interminable onslaughts of these hon. gentlemen. They have endeavored to set class against class, the producer against the consumer, the rich man against the poor man, capital against labor; and to throw an air of profound wisdom over it all; they have deluged the House with an immense array of statistics, accompanied with dissertations on the principles of political economy. But, Sir, the experience of the past eleven years has taught these hon, gentlemen that if they are ever to hope to drive the present Government from the Treasury benches they must adopt some other course; the old guard must be brought to the front, and recourse must be had to every means of assault, or their efforts will fail. What is the burden of their their efforts will fail. melancholy song which is now heard in this House? The central figure in the picture which they give of the ruin of Canada is the poor Canadian farmer. When these hon. gentlemen contemplate this oppressed personage they pour out volumes of sympathy and rivers of tears for his condition. When listening to their utterances, we are almost led to believe that the Canadian farmer at the present day is almost as overburdened and borne down by his Government as were the Russian serfs in former days. The burden of the complaint of these gentlemen consists of four propositions, and I have endeavored to extract these propositions from the speeches of hon. gentlemen, and I will direct my attention to them for a short time to-night. The first proposition they announce to this House is that the National Policy has reduced the prices of farmers' products. They tell us that since the National Policy was introduced prices have fallen so low as to be scarcely remunerative at all. Now, Sir, I wish to ask hon. gentlemen, without going into figures on this question, has the National Policy in any way lowered the price of a single article that is produced by the Canadian farmer? Will any hon, gentleman in this House go into a farmer's barn or granary and say to him:

"The National Policy has reduced the price of your wheat 5 cents a bushel, your barley 5 cents a bushel, your oats 5 cents a bushel?" Will he go to his dairy and say: "The National Policy has reduced your cheese 5 cents and your butter 5 cents?" Will he go to his barnyard and say: "The National Policy has reduced the price of your cattle 2 cents a pound, your pork 2 cents a pound, Mr. PORTER.

sell 2 or 3 cents a pound?" Can any hon. gentleman say that this is the case? Will you mention to me a single article which the National Policy has caused to be lowered in price by the mere fact of its existence? If the National Policy has not caused any of our articles to be lower in price than they would otherwise be, before these gentlemen undertake to disturb our present fiscal arrangements, it is incumbent on them to show that the abolition of the National Policy will cause these goods to increase in value. Can they go to a farmer and say: If you abolish your present tariff, you will get 5 cents more for your wheat, 10 cents more for your barley, 5 cents more for your cheese, and more for your oats, butter and everything you have to sell? Will any hon. gentleman, who understands business, and who notes the prices in Canada and the United States, say that if our National Pocily was abolished the Canadian farmers would be one cent the better off? Is it possible to believe that they would get better prices for their stock, consisting of pork and beef, living and dead, if they were brought into competition with the stock of the United States? Can it be argued that Manitoba wheat would sell one cent dearer if it were brought into competition with American wheat, which is a little inferior in quality and cheaper in price? Will any one contend that our dairy products would be increased in value if the National Policy were abolished, or that our butter and cheese would improve in price? The cheese industry affords a valuable illustration of what is meant by a protective policy. At the time of Confederation, we were attempting to develop the dairy industries of Ontario and Quebec, but we were met by this difficulty that our markets were supplied by foreign goods, and worse than that, that the inferior goods manufactured across the lines were shipped into Canada, and then re-shipped to the various markets of the world, especially England, as Canadian goods; and in this way they were destroying the character and reputation of our goods and the hopes and prospects of our dairy industries. Shortly after Confederation, a duty of 3 cents per pound was imposed upon cheese, and from that time forward the cheese industry has been one of the most valuable industries in the Dominion. At present the export of cheese has increased by 250 per cent., and of the 201,000,000 pounds imported into Great Britain, Canada has supplied about onethird. Were it not for the fostering care of protection, that cheese industry would to-day be little more advanced than what it was at the time of Confederation, or probably have altogether failed. It is quite evident that the National Policy has not caused any of our goods which we export to be cheaper, nor would its abolition cause any of these goods to be dearer, while, in many instances, not only the cheese, but also the cattle industry, it would operate very much to our disadvantage, and cause almost the complete extinction of a great and valuable industry. The second proposition hon-gentlemen opposite have endeavored to demon-strate is, that the National Policy has caused a decrease in the value of farm land. They told us that, in later years, in the Province of Ontario, National Policy has reduced the price of your not going to deny the partial truth of that propocattle 2 cents a pound, your pork 2 cents a pound, and everything on your farm that you have to think any one will deny that, during these last few years, some farm lands, at least, are not worth as much as they were some years ago, but that is not at all due to the National Policy, but to other causes not chargeable to any policy of the Government. The causes of the decrease in the value of farm lands are: first, the depression from which not only Canada but other countries has suffered, and I may say here that if there is depression in Canada at present in the agricultural industry, we are not alone in that respect. There is no civilised country in the world which has not felt that depression, no matter what its tariff may be. The depression is not at all owing to any form of tariff, but to circumstances which no fiscal arrangement can control. Since the times became bad and prices low, capitalists do not care to put their money into cultivated farms, as they fancy they can derive larger interest from their money by investing it in some other industry. Another reason for the lower price of land in some parts of the country in this: that since prices are so low, the products are not so remunerative; this is not owing to the National Policy, but to other circumstances. The farmers themselves do not think it wise to invest money in property which will not yield as remunerative production as it did several years ago. Another reason is that men of enterprise, men embarrassed in circumstances, men with large families, think that by selling their property which is still treble the value in the older section of the country, and moving away to other parts of the country, where free land are pressed upon them as a gift, they can better their circumstances, and in this way the value of farm lands is very materially affected. So that the National Policy in this respect, does not affect the value of farm land. Then there is another argument, which these gentlemen use, and it is a very serious charge against the National Policy, and, in my opinion, would be fatal if it could be established. That is, that the National Policy takes out of the pockets of the farmers of this country and other people, large sums of money which never reaches the Treasury. Hon. gentlemen opposite use very indefinite language on this subject. Some say that immense sums are taken out of the pockets of the people in this way, as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) said; some say eleven times, some say four times, and some say twice as much is taken out of the pockets of the people as goes into the Treasury, but we are not furnished with any actual definition of the amount. As these gentlemen use such vague language, everyone is left to put his own interpretation upon their words, but we are not left altogether without a clue to what they mean. There is a writer on political economy who has stated that of all moneys raised by indirect taxation, only one-fourth reaches the public chest. If we assume that this statement is true, let us look at the consequences of the assumption. In the last year, the Customs and Excise duties in Canada amounted to $30,613,-If this assumption is true, the people of Canada paid $125,000,000 in duties of Customs and Excise. During the last ten years we have derived from Customs and Excise the sum of $262,362,430. According to the proposition to which I have referred, there must have been taken from the people of Canada in that time, $1,050,447,720 in taxation. That is a thing which no reasonable man will believe, considering the amount of our population also adapted to enable us to obtain sufficient funds and the character of our resources. There must be something wrong about the calculation. In order to arrive at the truth as nearly as we can, in order to arrive at some satisfactory knowledge of what really is taken from the people more than the exact duty, I have made a calculation which I will present to the House. It is based upon the present duty of 21 per cent. We will suppose that a wholesale merchant obtains goods of the value of $100. The duty is $21, which, for the sake of argument, we will assume is added to the amount of his purchase, though that is a very debatable point. That makes $121. Of course, it is reasonable that he should make a profit on what he sells. Suppose the profit to be 20 per cent. That would give $24.20, which, added to the original cost of the goods, would make the cost in the wholesale merchant's warehouse, $145.20. Suppose the retail merchant makes a profit of 25 per cent. on this, that would be $36.30, making a total of $181.50, so that these goods, which had originally cost $100, when they reached the consumer would cost $181. Now take another calculation. The average duty when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power was 16 per cent. Allowing the same profit to the wholesale and retail merchant, I find the cost of $100 worth of goods at that time would be to the consumer $174. In order to arrive at the amount which is taken out of the pockets of the people, we will suppose that there has been no duty at all, but that these goods have been admitted free. In that ease, allowing the profit to the wholesale and retail merchants, $100 worth of goods would cost $150 to the consumers. Thus the difference between $150 and $181 is the difference between free goods and goods under a duty of 21 per cent, and the difference between $150 and $174 is the difference between free goods and goods under a 16 per cent. tariff. It may be said, let us look at the percentage of this. If we do that, we will find that the amount paid over the original cost averages about 50 per cent. so that the calculations which hon. gentlemen opposite have made as to the vast sums which are represented to have been dragged out of the pockets of the people are singularly exaggerated. If we consider the difference between direct and indirect taxation, though that is a question upon which I am not called upon to pronounce, I do not think the people of Canada have ever given any indication of their desire to depart from the present system of indirect taxation. Again, suppose we adopt a direct system of taxation, what would happen? Even this 50 per cent. might not be reduced, because we know that in any system of direct taxation the burden must fall either upon real property-and in that case it would be crushing upon the farmers of the Dominion, and would not be thought of-or it would fall upon the income of merchants, manufacturers and professional men, and they, of course, would add the tax to their services the same as merchants do now to their Therefore, it is doubtful whether there is much difference between our present moderate system of taxation and the direct taxation which hon, gentlemen urge occasionally upon the floor of this House. Now, if my argument is correct, it is quite evident that our present system is one which, under all the circumstances, is well adapted to our condition as a people, and from the results that have been manifested in years gone by, it is to develop the great resources of this country. We have many things to do in this country. have canals to dig, we have railways to build, we have public buildings to erect, and we have the northern half of a continent to develop. these purposes we must have money, it must come in some way, it must come by indirect taxation or by direct taxation, whichever mode you choose, the money must be obtained for these purposes. I think there is no gentleman in this House who would wish to see the progress of Canada marred or checked; I think everyone is anxious that we should go on and develop our great heritage, and that we should do what lies in our power to make this a great country, and in order to accomplish this end, in order to obtain the victories of peace, money is just as much the sinews of those victories as it is the sinews of war. These general observations, in reference to the duty, apply to the whole population of this country, but there is one classthe special favorites of hon. gentlemen opposite— the farmers. Oh, the dear farmer! How very fortunate it is for us farmers, who are in the majority in this country, that these gentlemen should take such a sudden liking to us. They do not call us hard names now as they used to do. We were a very stupid lot of people on the 18th of September, 1878, but now we are a very intelligent class of people, and these gentlemen have now awakened to the situation in which the National Policy has placed us. They tell us that we are a longsuffering and an ill-treated people; they tell us this tax is grinding the money out of our pockets, that it is ruining us, and that the great burden of taxation is causing depression in our business. But I challenge hon, gentlemen to come down to particular facts and reason them out, and show wherein the farmers of this country are being over-burdened by the present system of taxation; I challenge them to show that the farmer is paying any more in taxation than any other person in an equal station in life, and owning the same amount of property. There is not a farmer in Canada who wants to shirk his responsibilities as a citizen. Neither do we wish our interests to be overlooked for the sake of others; all we want is that, when the general interests of the whole country are being considered, our interests also should be considered; and, I think that, in the present arrangement of the tariff, the Government have, very wisely and very judiciously, considered the circumstances at the present time. Times change. Twelve years is quite a space in the history of a young nation. Twelve years ago things were much different to what they are to-day, and twelve years hence they will be much different to what they are now; and the Government, with that prudence, with that wisdom, which, I believe, has characterised all their actions, have certainly caught the spirit of the moment, and have attempted, by every means in their power, to advance the interests of the agriculturists of this country by giving them a fair protection against all outsiders, no matter who they may be. Sir, in making this argument which I have been laying before the House, it will be observed that I have used no statistics, that I have not wearied you with a deluge of dreary I have avoided that, especially for the purpose of not causing this House to feel bored, Mr. Porter.

Not only that, but I have learned, in the four years that I have been in this House, to look with a great deal of mistrust and circumspection upon any argument into which figures enter largely, or in which figures form the basis for a judgment. believe that statistics, to be of any value, must be exact and full, and to be profitable to us, we must consider all the relations and conditions surrounding these figures; otherwise, although figures won't lie, yet they will lead an inattentive observer very far from the truth, and will lead him into conclusions that would be very ruinous and injurious to himself. Let me give an illustration which will explain why I am so very careful in the use of statistics, unless I have fully digested and analysed them. Last night the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan)—who is not in his place at this moment-spoke of the burdens of taxation which were crushing and pressing down the farmers of Ontario; and more especially he spoke of the burden of taxation borne by them in the purchase of their implements and in the duty paid upon them. He enumerated a large list of implements, binding machines, drills, forks, harrows, harvesters and binders, and so on through a list that I need not detain the House in reading. But he said that the agriculturist in the Province of Ontario, on the articles which he requires to cultivate his farm in a proper manner, pays an annual duty-because he said that these implements would last ten years—of $34 and some cents. Last year the hon, gentleman placed that Now, we will suppose that in duty at $32.50. the Province of Ontario there are 250,000 farmsthere are somewhere between 200,000 and 250,000; I will take the latter figure. If each farmer, according to that hon gentleman, pays $32 yearly in duty upon his implements, the farmers of the Province of Ontario pay each year in duty upon agricultural implements, 8 million dollars. But The value of implements imthat is not all. ported into that Province-even taking the vast array of figures given by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson)—was $192,913, paying a duty of $71,795.38. Now, the people of the Province of Ontario, according to this calculation, paid 110 times as much money in duties as went into the Federal chest, for implements in every part of the Dominion. That is one instance that has rendered me very careful in trusting to any argument based upon figures. I know very well that the hon. gentleman, when he was making his speech, used these figures believing them to be true. He wished to be strong, and his idea of strength is to prepare an enormous array of figures. and hurl then at the heads of inoffending listeners. No matter what the figures may be, no matter what the relations may be, these figures must be accepted, and, therefore, he thought that he was making a very strong argument. Another illustration used this Session was one which will be in the minds of many hon. gentlemen, and it is one that has been repeatedly referred to. Many illustrations of the utter worthlessness of a mass of bare figures may be found in the speeches of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). The other evening, when replying to the Finance Minister, and while he was daubing the black upon his picture, not with a brush but with a because it is very annoying to have to hear so trowel, in order that the work might be artistically many figures when we cannot grasp their meaning. finished à la Cartwright, he spoke of the great indebtedness of Ontario. His first statement was this, that 10,200 acres were burdened with mortgages of $139,983. That would be a very serious matter indeed, if the hon. gentleman had come to his conclusion after a full investigation and analysis of the whole surrounding circumstances. But he did not do so. No doubt much of that money, and this is within the knowledge of every member of this House who has any acquaintance with business, had been paid. I also have no doubt that in many instances while a mortgage for, say, $1,000 may appear on the registry books against certain property, all the debt will have been liquidated except perhaps $200 or $300. So that this amount of money standing on the registry books against the property does not, by any means, show that the whole amount of that money was owing; and, therefore, the hon, gentleman when he made that statement did not properly analyse the debt and state all the conditions that surrounded it. But a careful statistician would have gone further, and have enquired into the nature of the debt. It may be that much of the money was borrowed for the purpose of buying land. This often happens. A farmer who has saved a little money, say $2,000, purchases a farm from his neighbor, and pays down $2,000 and borrows $3,000 more to pay the purchase money, $5,000. In that case the $3,000 mortgage represents a $5,000 property. If the debt had been liquidated still the farmer was $2,000 to the good. In other cases money is borrowed for the purpose of making agricultural improvements. Men sometimes wish to improve their farms by building large barns, and a well-constructed barn is a very remunerative investment. Men will also borrow money to procure valuable blooded animals for the improvement of their stock and the stock of their neighbors, and if this is properly managed and well conducted it also proves a remunerative investment. Others will invest in drainage, and that is the most profitable of all the channels in which a farmer can invest money. So if the hon, gentleman had investigated and analysed the figures and given all the relations of the transactions, as a true statistician would have done-of course I do not expect it from a bitter partisan—then it would have been seen that the debt, although apparently a large one, perhaps was not one-quarter as great as it was made to appear, and that even then it would not have been of any serious consequence. I might give more illustrations of that very objectionable mode of conducting an argument, but I have given sufficient to show that we should be very guarded in accepting an argument having figures for its basis. For this deplorable state of affairs which the hon. gentleman has attempted to picture, and which hon. gentlemen opposite say overwhelms the farmers of Ontario, and by implication all the farmers of the Dominion, hon. gentlemen opposite have a remedy, unrestricted trade with the United States. For a moment we will look at that remedy. Hon. gentlemen opposite have often been taunted with their lack of a policy. This reproach is, nowever, now taken away because they have now placed themselves on record in this country. the south of us lies a great nation. national life, the independent life of The national life, the independent life of that country is only 100 years old; that nation is the youngest and one of the foremost of nations.

commerce, her great development as regards natural resources and natural advantages, her rapid accumulation of wealth and all the luxuries and comforts that wealth can give, have been to the ignorant and poor in other lands as a fairy tale on a winter's night, and to educated men they have proved a fascinating study. No doubt it is quite true that the citizens of that country have shown themselves to possess shining abilities in every walk and pursuit of life. Their genius in money-making has become proverbial, their enterprise borders almost on the reckless, and in everything they undertake they display a vim and vigor which are certainly admirable and almost always successful. But above all these grand qualities and beyond all these qualities, these men, the sons of the Republic to the south of us, are distinguished by a quality and characteristic which is evidently lacking in some members of this House, for they are animated by a patriotism intense and ever vigilant. They have never grudged to give their money and to shed their blood for the maintenance of the unity, the honor, the dignity and the glory of that great Republic. This is an enticing spectacle, but "all is This is an enticing spectacle, but "all is not gold that glitters." If we look at the people on the other side of the line, if we contemplate the condition of the agricultural population, we are led to enquire: Is their position so much better than our own that by agricultural unrestricted trade or commercial union (for I cannot find any difference in the two terms) we would be improving our condition by joining our lot to theirs? Hon, gentlemen opposite are not quite decided on that point. They do not yet exactly know whether by opening our markets to those people and having their markets opened to us, the benefit would be decidedly in our favor. The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), the other evening, in those ringing tones that awaken the echoes in the distant corridors, described to us that a certain portion of the United States, stretching from the Atlantic to the confines of New Jersey, was almost destitute of the necessaries of life. He delared that in all that country there were not 10,000,000 bushels of wheat grown and there were 10,000,000 of people, that in all that country they could not raise sufficient potatoes for themselves and that other vegetable products were scanty and in great demand; and he said: Is it not wise that we should widen our relations with those people when we would be able to supply them? I might observe that so far as wheat is concerned, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec would not be able to supply a very large quantity, and Ontario, I am sorry to say, is now turning its attention to something else, because wheat has ruled at low prices. So these poor, hungry, starving Yankees would receive very little wheat from us. But, Sir, when he was describing this great future for ourselves, and this great market for our products, the hon member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) no doubt differed from him, because, when he rose to speak he told us, that when a small quantity of any goods was introduced to a market where there was a large quantity produced, of course, the small quantity had to pay the duty. He told us that for our benefit. Now, it is quite evident that the member for North Her phenomenal growth in population, trade and Norfolk believed that we produced what he called a penny-ante quantity-whatever penny-ante may mean in the language of the saint. I do not know and that all the goods we could sell to the United States was simply but a crumb from the loaf, or a drop from the bucket. With these sentiments I entirely concur. The large amount of cultivated land in the United States no doubt produces far more than supplies their own most extravagant wants, and although they import from us certain quantities of agricultural products, it would be a nice study for an impartial statistician like the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to find out how much of that importation they use, and how much they ship to foreign lands. Those who will read the report of the commission to the West Indies will see that even in the West Indies there were a quantity of Canadian goods that had reached those islands from the United States. However that may be, whether they consume all, or whether they only consume part, it does not appear to me that the opening of our markets in exchange for the opening of their markets would be a very great advantage to us, The hon. President of the Council has been taken to task very severely by hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, in reference to his statement made the other evening, that he thought a free interchange of natural products would not benefit us-and by natural products I understood him to mean agricultural products, because he was speaking of the condition of the farming community. I am not a member of the Cabinet—and I do not know that I ever shall be unless the leader of the Government changes his mind very much—and my statement has no authority. I only speak as a private member of this House, as one who has lived for forty years among the farmers of Canada, knowing their circumstances well, knowing their feelings, knowing their condition of life, and knowing their principles as well as any member of this House. I venture to think, and I say that under the present circumstances—under the changed circumstances that have taken place within the last twelve years —in my opinion, a free interchange of all agricultural products between this country and the United States would not be in the best interests of the Canadian farmers. It may be that there are some things that we could exchange with them to our mutual advantage. It may be that there might be some arrangment made under which, by giving them some things and taking some things from them free on both sides, the commerce of our country would be materially helped; but on the whole to break down this tariff wall-for which the Conservative members of this House are so severely berated by hon gentlemen opposite—to break down this tariff wall entirely and completely, would, I think, have a most injurious effect upon the agricultural industry of this country. To use a physical illustration. We know very well that water will find its level. We have heard in this House, and it has never been denied, that the agriculturists of the United States at the present time are in a depressed condition, much more so than the farmers of Canada are. have heard, and it has not been denied, that the lands in some of the oldest States, some of the best lands in the Union, are decreased in value much more than the lands in Canada. Do hon. gentlemen suppose, by any process, human or imaginary, that by annexing ourselves to these people we would increase the price of our products or increase the value of our lands? Can any reasonable man suppose that? Lay aside your party feeling-you are very anxious no doubt to come to the Treasury benches, the seals of office glitter in your eyes, and they obscure your vision-shut your eyes, and use your reason, and I ask you, can you really believe that by annexing ourselves to these people we would benefit the condition of our farmers? I know it is quite natural that men in Opposition should seek for a chink in the armor of the Ministry in which to plant an arrow—a poisoned arrow it may be—if they can. Their object is to oppose, their object is to find fault, but in all their fault-finding, I think if they were Canadians, and if they had the interest of their country at heart, they would not seek to overthrow the Ministry by decrying their country or betraying its best interests. Sir, another point. It is said that the farmers of this country would be benefited by unrestricted trade or commercial union—and the hon, gentleman for Marquette (Mr. Watson) will pardon me for using the two terms as synonymous, because I can see no difference between them, and if he will take the trouble to show me some time at his leisure where the difference lies, I shall be infinitely obliged to him, We are told that the farmers of this country would be benefited by this commercial union. told that one of the greatest causes of depression in agriculture in this country, is the immense burthen of taxation which has ground the people of this country by what they call this iniquitous National Policy. I like that word "ground," because it is a classic word. Now, Sir, if this grinding of money out of the pockets of the people of this country is the cause of the depression, in what way do they hope to alleviate this depression, in what way do they hope to make it less burdensome by annexing us to a people where this grinding process is terribly intensified? Are we to believe—using another physical illustration—that because a dose of poison kills, that, therefore, a dose and a half will cure you and make you well? Which of these hon. gentlemen would try the experiment? None, Sir; for in a case of this kind they trust their instinct and their reason, rather than their party feeling. If the people of Canada are injured by the National Policy it is quite evident that their circumstances would not be benefited by joining with a nation that is intensely protective, and, therefore, it cannot be true when they tell us that the depression in Canada is caused by the present protective system. I have but a few more words to say in reference to this matter, and indeed I feel that I have detained the House much longer than I should have.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. PORTER. If the farmers of Canada are to be benefited in any way by the abolition of the present system, why, if it is well to have free trade with our neighbors, should we not have free trade with all the world? If free trade with the United States is advisable and beneficial, why not have free trade all over? I admit myself from my reading and from what observations I am enabled to make, that, theoretically speaking, free-trade with every nation is, perhaps, the best plan that man can devise. We know that does not exist anywhere; it is a utopian theory; it is not practicable anywhere. But if free trade with the United States is desirable, is it not desirable also with all the world? Why should we bind ourselves to the United States? Are the people of Canada not able to manage their own affairs? Are we sunk so low that we have not the courage or the Intellect to control and guide our own affairs?

Must we go whiningly and ask these people to have pity on us? Must we say to them:

"Come and arrange our tariff, tell us what nations we shall trade with, and how we shall trade with them, and give us what money you please for us to carry on our Government?" No matter what treaty we have ever made with these people, they have construed it and acted upon it in the way that best suited their own views. Are we sunk so low that it is necessary for us to confess to these people our helplessness, our shiftlessness and our stupidity, and ask them to come and guide and control our affairs for us? You tell us that we should get a market of 60,000,000 people. Well, there may be parts of the Dominion of Canada which would be benefited, but we must not look to Prince Edward Island or to Quebec or to Ontario alone; we are one and indivisible, and we must consider what will be beneficial to the Dominion as a whole. In the United States there is today a great agricultural depression, a heavy mortgage debt, and a great depreciation of farm lands; even their great staple is used for fuel; and what could we expect to gain as an agricultural people by annexing ourselves to them. Well, you say, where is our market? The people of the United States are angry with you, and you are pursuing an irritating policy, and they will retaliate. Sir, that is strange language for free men to use. Hon. gentlemen talk about holding out the olive branch of conciliation. When these gentlemen talk about conciliation they mean submission. We have never irritated the people of the United States. I defy any hon gentleman to point to a word that has ever been uttered in this House contemptuously or defiantly of the people of the United States; the great Conservative party at least has never sought to irritate them or make them angry. But, as the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) observed, there come times when a man must stand on his dignity; even a worm will turn if it is trod upon. In all the discussions that have taken place in this House, the leaders of this Government, and indeed all the members of this House, have spoken with respect of the Republic to the south; and if at the present time there are mutterings of hostility across the line, or if we are threatened with a tariff that will be prohibitive of many Canadian products, the fault is not ours. We know that that tariff was promulgated before it was known what the tariff of the hon. Finance Minister would be; and, therefore, it is absurd to contend that the feeling of hostility evinced by some people in the United States against Canada has been induced by anything said or done in this House. Why should we not construct our tariff for our own benefit? Why should we, in managing our own affairs, not look entirely to our own interests? Let us act gently and kindly towards all the nations of the earth; but every civilised nation industries, why should we not impose them? They do it themselves. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that it is our own fault that reciprocity has not been obtained years ago. I fail to see that Canadians have done anything to warrant that assertion. We have been willing to enter into a reciprocity treaty that would be favorable to ourselves and to them, according to our standpoint. We want a reciprocity treaty which will allow us to control the management of our own tariff, and is that not right? We are told that Canada displayed a hostile feeling towards the Americans during the war, and that this is the cause of the present irritation against Canada. I scarcely think that this is the case; for I think Canada gave no indication that it was hostile or unfriendly towards the people of the North. We know that many Canadians were in the Northern army and fought and bled and died for the maintenance of the Union; and from that day to this the Government of Canada have never by one word or action shown any hostility towards our neighbors. All we ask in Canada is that neither enemies from without nor traitors from within should mar the progress of this great Dominion. We ask that both now and in days to come men shall say that something good has been done in Canada, that something has been done for humanity, that some step has been taken in human progress, that something has been accomplished for which the world is happier, wiserand better, by those who have lived and died in this great north land.

Mr. ELLIS. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, has made a very interesting speech, but he has not, so far as I could observe, given any indication of what his views are on the proposed changes in the tariff. There is one point on which I agree with the hon. gentleman, that is, with regard to the little reliance to be placed on speeches containing statistics, for the hon. gentleman last year delivered a speech in this House, bristling with statistics, and when the Hansard came to me last year I took the opportunity on a foggy day to read his speech, and can corroborate what he says about the unreliability of a speech based on statistics, and treated in a purely party spirit, especially if the speaker is not thoroughly sincere in his views. It is not my intention to discuss at any very great length the question now in hand. Whatever my intention may have been, the speech delivered by the hon member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) this afternoon, dealing as it did so well with the position of the Province of New Brunswick, takes, to a certain extent, from me the ground I would otherwise have covered. Before I proceed, however, to refer to the particular matter in hand, I wish to call attention to some remarks made by the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny). The hon. gentleman began his speech by a criticism of the methods of the Opposition, which he considered very objectionable indeed; but he proceeded immediately to follow along the same line. devoted a great deal of time to a comparison of the condition of the country when the hon, member for South Oxford was Finance Minister with its condition at the present time. He submitted a great does as we do, it controls and manages its affairs according to its own best interest. If we think that certain duties would be beneficial to certain they were, were very far astray, or rather that he did not take into account all the matters he should have in making a comparison of that kind. instance, he made a comparison between the imports of a period of that time and those of a period of the present time, and he undertook to show that as the excess in the latter period was greater than in the former, therefore our condition could not have been so good then. But he entirely overlooked the fact that this country had gone into the markets of Europe and had borrowed a large amount of money, a great proportion of which must have come back to us in imports. That was the form indeed in which the larger portion came, but he gave no credit whatever to that in making his statement. The hon, gentleman also endeavored to make a point, which has often been made by the supporters of the National Policy, as to the effect of our manufacturing industries. He said it is quite trueand everybody who has had anything to do with the business in the Maritime Provinces unfortunately knows that it is quite true—that a number of industries have been started in those Provinces which have not paid; but, said he, we have given employment to a great many people. Can you conceive, Sir, a weaker argument to support a bad cause? Why does the hon. gentleman not take out of his own capital and go to work and employ thousands of men if he has the means? He will be giving employment, but the result will be the destruction of capital; and one of the great causes of depression, certainly in New Brunswick, is that for a long period of time, since 1880, in the effort to establish manufactures, a large amount of capital has entirely disappeared, by reason of the fact that it was invested in non-remunerative work. appears to me it is a matter of common sense that unless you start enterprises which will pay, unless you start enterprises which will not only maintain intact the capital invested, but also yield a certain amount of interest, you will not carry on an industry at all beneficial to the country, and in the end must lose by it. The hon gentleman also made, for a purpose I did not clearly understand, comparisons between certain Provinces of this Confederation and certain States of the Union. It appears to me that when we are dealing with the countries as a whole, we cannot make comparisons between particular States and Provinces. It may be very useful for certain Provincial purposes to make such comparisons, but in contrasting the conditions of the two countries we must take into account the countries as a whole. It is a fact that there is an outflow of population from the Eastern States to the west, but the people still remain inhabitants of the United States. They contribute by their industry to swell the profits of that country, they bear their share of the taxation, and every duty they have to perform as citizens is performed by them, no matter in what State of the Union they are. But it is a fact, as regards the Maritime Provinces, which cannot be denied, that a large number of our people are constantly leaving them and going to the United States. These people help to fill up that country, and hon. gentlemen opposite may find as much fault as they please and say you are decrying your country by stating these facts: they are facts which the statesmen of the country should look in the face and take measures to alter. If you take the States of Maine and Massachusetts, you will find there is an outflow of their popu-Mr. Ellis.

lation, but that outflow is made up, very large extent, by people who go there from our Provinces and who displace the population of Maine and Massachusetts. I know of whole sections of Maine into which the population of New Brunswick has overflowed, and in which these people really constitute communities by themselves; and I believe that is true also of the Province of Quebec. What is the use of hon, gentlemen endeavoring to found an argument on the fact that the population of Maine leave that State and go to the Western States) when the outflow is replaced by people from the Province of New Brunswick? Then the hon gentleman made a long deliverance on the ques-tion of annexation. I assume that the effect of these frequent references to annexation in this House, where it is not a discussable question, will be some day to make it a discussable question. One thing is quite certain, and that is that hon. gentlemen opposite by continually putting this question forward, are constantly familiarising the minds of the people with it, and it is quite certain that familiarity will, if the question ever comes to the front, and it may come to the front, make of the question more than a theory, and it will be a question not so difficult to take hold of as hon. gentlemen think. It is bad policy on the part of hon, gentlemen who profess to be so opposed to annexation to be so continually talking of it in this House. The hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) the other night endeavored to found an argument on a quotation from the New York Sun which published an editorial pointing out that if Canadians wanted the benefits of the United States system they must become part of that Well, that is the doctrine of a single country. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. newspaper. Kenny) quoted Senator Sherman and one or two others—I do not remember who they were—as giving opinions which should warn this House and affect the members of this House in any trade matters with that nation. Well, these are the opinions of individual men, speaking to their constituents, and endeavoring to induce people to accept the views which they hold on some particular questions. The true way, it appears to me, to deal with a matter of this kind, is to take the official utterances of men who speak with official authority. It has often been quoted in this House, but I desire to quote once more what Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State, said in his letter to Sir Charles Tupper, in 1887, when they were endeavoring to open up negotiations with regard to the fisheries. Secretary Bayard, after expressing his desire to have an understanding with regard to the fishery question pointed out that:

"The fishery trouble interferes, and seriously embarrasses the good understanding of both countries in the important commercial relations and interests which have come into being since its ratification, and for the adjustment of which the treaty of 1818 is wholly inadequate, as has been unhappily proved by the events of the past two years. I am confident we both seek to attain a just and permanent settlement,—and there is but one way to procure it, and that is by a straightforward treatment on a liberal and statesmanlike plan of the entire commercial relations of the two countries. I say commercial, because I do not propose to include, however indirectly or by any intendment, however partial or oblique, the political relations of Canada and the United States, nor to effect the legislative independence of either country."

It does appear to me that, as a matter of reason and common sense, the utterances of a public man like Mr. Bayard, speaking with the authority of his position—the First Minister, in a measure, of that country—ought to have far more influence on men discussing, as a Parliament, a public question, than the statements which appear in a newspaper and which have no special interest beyond the events of the day or the utterances of men more or less addressing their constituents. However, I desire to refer more particularly to the increases in the tariff which have been proposed by the Minister of Finance. They are far more important to the Province from which I come than any other subsidiary matter can be. We, in New Brunswick are differently situated from the people in Nova Scotia. I do not think there is much compensation given to the Province of Nova Scotia by the duty on coal, but in New Brunswick we do not raise any coal to speak of, and the duty on coal is a serious tax upon us. I trust the Government, notwithstanding the influences which may be brought to bear upon them by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Mc-Keen), will not increase the duty upon coal. In New Brunswick, we are principally engaged in the lumber business, as the hon member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) pointed out this afternoon. The total export from New Brunswick last year was $6,700,000 in round numbers. Of that amount $4,960,000 were the product of the forest, $3,793,000 being the product of the Province itself, and $1,695,000 the product of the neighboring State of Maine. Though the trees are cut on that side of line, and in the State of Maine, the lumber itself is made by residents of our Province. The supplies go largely through our Province, the lumber is floated down our rivers, and is cut at the mouth of the St. John river. It is, therefore, sufficient to say that of the export from our Province of $6,700,000, $4,960,000 is the product of the forest. The taxation which is proposed to be added to the taxes which are now burdening us so severely will affect that industry in the most crushing manner, particularly in regard to the duties upon pork and beef and lard which enter so largely into the consumption of those who manufacture the lumber. While there is a considerable amount of agricultural industry in the Province of New Brunswick, the bulk of the agricultural portion of the community do not rely upon agriculture alone. They live along the rivers and during one part of the year they are engaged in agriculture, and during another part they are engaged in lumbering. It might be better that they were engaged in agriculture alone, but that is not the existing condition of affairs, and it is the existing condition of affairs with which we have to deal. You might travel from the boundary line throughout the whole Province, along the Tobique river and the St. John river and all its branches, you might go into almost every house from the boundary of Maine to the Gulf, and you would scarcely see any fresh meat used. The farmers have to live on the fish they get out of the rivers, and on such salted meats as they can procure. This shows that the condition of the people is not such as to justify a large increase in the taxation. The next industry to which I will refer is the fisheries. Last year we exported $705,000 worth of the products of the fisheries. The greater portion of that is from the inshore fisheries, within the coast line and along the rivers. I understood the Minister of Customs the exports of the boat fishermen.

Mr. BOWELL. No; I said that the same concessions were made to vessels that left for the gulf as to those that left for the banks. The hon. member for Halifax understood that I said that the concession was extended to the boat fishermen, but that was an error.

Mr. ELLIS. Then, this concession is not made to the boat fishermen. There is no class of people whose lives are so close to what they earn as the boat fishermen. Their business is a risky one. They depend almost entirely upon the United States market, and they have to look to the conditions of climate. I live close to a community which carries on this industry. I know something of their joys and their sorrows, and I am within the mark when I say that they are constantly on the watch to make enough simply to live upon, that any accumulation of funds is a very unusual thing with them, and that to put an additional tax on pork or flour is to inflict a serious hardship upon them. The next industry is that of manufactures.
That is a misleading word. We exported last That is a misleading word. year $362,759 worth. Some of these manufactures are of this character: Extract of hemlock bark, $34,533; grindstones, $13,770; junk and oakum, $5,775; lime, $116,355. In regard to the article of lime, I think we in the city of St. John have a good cause of complaint against the Government. Last year a representation was made to the Government that it was necessary, in the interest of that industry, to make the duty on lime entering this country the same as the American duty upon lime. This was a new industry, they were entering into close competition with the Americans in their own markets, and the lime manufacturers on the other side went to the Government of the United States and represented that they had to pay a duty of 20 per cent., I think it was, to get lime into Canada, but Canadian lime could go into the United States for about half that duty. Although every effort was made to get the Government to take the matter up, nothing could be done. There was a policy of delay, a policy of to-morrow. Now the lime manufacturers have got the ear of the American Government, as we see by the new tariff, and we anticipate results which will completely close that industry. Then take the item of ships—we sold $57,000 worth; of wrought stone, $22,141; wooden barrels, $7,644; of the same to Great Britain, $14,375; of the same to the United States, $2,475; we also sold some to the Argentine Republic, making altogether $266,314 worth of manufactures -not such manufactures as are usually spoken of in this House, made from imported materialsbut manufactures made from the native raw material of our own soil and country. It will be seen that this increased taxation, therefore, does not help the manufacturers of New Brunswick, but it puts an additional burden upon the toilers, men who are creating these manufactures out of the natural products of the country. The same thing with regard to the mines. We exported products of the mine to the value of $105,692. This proposed taxation just reaches these miners. It adds to the tax on flour which they eat, to the tax on lard, and pork, and other provisions which they use, and, therefore, it makes their life harder. Putting these four items together it makes $6,700,898. sum are included animals and their produce, $346,to say that there would be a drawback allowed on 215. I do not know whether they are the sole products of the Province of New Brunswick; I do not know what the Customs arrangements are, but it is quite likely that some products of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia are included. Of agricultural products we exported only $171,000, so that when hon gentlemen talk about protecting agriculturists, they entirely overlook the fact that, in the Province of New Brunswick, there are practically no agriculturists to protect, in the sense in which the farmers of Ontario are intended to be protected. Now. I bring these figures to your attention in order to show that the proposed taxation falls upon all the persons engaged in important labor in the Province of New Brunswick. It is true that we have a factory or two, I think we have two cotton factories in St. John, but, unhappily, they are of the kind referred to by the hon. member for Halifax, that give employment to the people at the expense of the capital engaged in them. From 1880, up to last year, the condition of things in the Province of New Brunswick was worse than I ever knew it to be before, in my residence of over thirty years in that Province. There can be no question that almost every industry was depressed, the capital invested in manufacturing and in public works was not remunerative. But within the last two years there has been a change in the Province, owing to the fact that the vessel property has been earning some money. I think I am quite within the mark in saying that the vessels owned in New Brunswick have, within the last two years, earned two million dollars, perhaps that is a low estimate. That money coming into the Province has relieved to a considerable extent the pressure which was upon us before, and it may be that just at this moment, the Province of New Brunswick is more favorably situated, financially, than the Province of Ontario itself, although, of course, I do not know enough about Ontario to state that positively. But while this has been going on, what is the result? We are not building new ships, our ships are disappearing at the rate of 15,000 tons a year so far as the city of St. John is concerned; at the rate of 20,000 tons a year, for the last four or five years, for the whole Province. I think that in ten or twelve years over one hundred thousand tons, not quite onethird of our shipping, has entirely disappeared. Men have not been able to replace it, and that industry is and has been seriously threatened. But supposing there is a revival in that business, suppose we are able to go on and build, as some men have made an effort to rebuild, ships, what is the effect of this tariff upon them? It burdens the provisions, it burdens flour, it burdens a great many articles which are used by the workingmen, and, therefore, increases the difficulty of the situation in our Province in respect to that industry. I regret to have to appear to be taking a purely provincial view of the matter; but these are the people among whom I live, these are the people whom I represent, these are the people whose interests are my interests, and the welfare of that community, I feel bound to say, is the first consideration with me. Now, what will you give us in return for the tax you are imposing upon that industry? If I were to express my honest convictions in this House—and I do not hesitate to speak them—I would say that I do not think it is worth our while to remain in this Con-Mr. Ellis.

federation at all. I would not hesitate, if I were a younger man, to go among my people and tell them that the feeling of this House is one that will not give to the industries of the Maritime Provinces that just consideration which they ought to have. You have added on burden after burden. We came into this Confederation with a debt of $7,000,000, not all of which was an actual debt. To-day we owe nearly $20,000,000. Our share of the public debt, with our local debt, is nearly 20 millions. We are burdened in every direction. Every interest is pressed upon by the policy which prevails here. Although it may be a very satisfactory policy to some people in this part of the Dominion, it is not a policy which promotes the interests of the Province from which I come. It appears to me it would be a more statesmanlike proceeding to consider what would be best for all the Provinces of this Confederation, and to devise a policy which would be better for them all. It has always appeared to me that a policy which would give us trade with the United States would be better for all concerned. I regret to say that these new proposals of the Government are entirely opposed to that policy. It appears to me like the last straw which breaks the camel's back, to hear the President of the Council declare that he is opposed to reciprocity in natural products. I think every man in New Brunswick, I think that I speak for the Conservative party of the Province of New Brunswick as well as the Liberals-if my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Skinner) were here he might be able to correct me, or my hon colleague from the City and County of St. John, perhaps, can confirm me when I say that I think there is scarcely a man in the Province of New Brunswick, whether among Conservatives or Liberals, who is not in favor of the broadest kind of reciprocity with the United States. There is no division practically among our people on that question. To-day we send more than half our exports to the United States. The market is continually enlarging, and it is the only market in which we are certain of a profit on the goods we have to sell. The Government should make a determined effort to secure for us reciprocity with that country. Take, for instance, the coasting trade. We build a number of small vessels of a very good class, but we find that the men we train as captains, to run those vessels, are compelled by the conditions of trade to go to the United States. I know at least a dozen master mariners, men competent in every way, who within the last two years have moved to the United States, because the coasting trade of that country offers greater advantages than are presented by the coasting trade of Canada. I do not know how this is to be remedied, but I observe that no effort has been made to secure that trade for us. The condition of that trade should engage the attention of some one connected with the public affairs of Canada, for not only are the master mariners, trained and skilful men, leaving us, but the capital that was once engaged in building vessels is now passing to the United States. I do not know the means by which this is done, but a large amount of New Brunswick capital has been withdrawn from the coasting trade of our own Province and has found its way into the coasting trade of the United States. I do not know whether there is any public man among hon, gentlemen opposite who thinks it is worth while to pay any attention to this subject, but if I were a public man charged with the destinies of the country I should think it worth while to devote attention to it. It appears to me that, perhaps, hon. gentlemen who represent western constituencies do not fully consider how very severely the tariff presses on the people of the Maritime Provinces. Take, for instance, clothing worn by workingmen. Such clothing is already heavily taxed, and yet it is proposed to increase it. Again, we are compelled to use Canadian oil, except that which we are able to smuggle from the American side, and there appears to be a pretty good smuggling arrangement in operation which the Minister of Customs does not appear to have been able to discover. But leaving that out, we are compelled to use Canadian oil at a very heavy duty and at heavy railway charges, whereas if we could bring in oil from the United States we would be able to carry it in our own vessels and lay it down in our own Province at almost the cost of production in the United States. I do not intend to occupy the time of the House further, I have made these statements in a plain and simple way. I have pointed out the effect of the increased taxation in still further adding to reduce the burdens already imposed upon us, which are exceedingly severe. I shall ask the Government to reconsider some items of the tariff, on which I shall have something to say at a later stage, but which I shall not enter into at the present moment; but I trust the Government will do one of two things: either reduce the taxation which bears so heavily on the people of the Maritime Provinces, and especially the Province from which I come, or, turn their attention seriously, honestly and faithfully, although I have very little hope that they will do so after hearing the speech of the President of the Council, to making a strong effort to secure greater freedom of trade with the United States. Unless that is done, as I stated to the House two years ago in a few observations I addressed to it, the people themselves will find some way to secure it. I am satisfied this increase of the burdens will intensify that feeling. Perhaps it is not necessary to do more than utter this word of warning. Under all the circumstances I feel bound to support the amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright).

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster, for second reading of resolutions reported from Committee of Ways and Means, and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Mr. Speaker, I think it is to be regretted that a measure of such importance and so momentous to this country should have been brought down at such a late period of the Session, and more particularly at a time when it is likely to seriously affect the business community by compelling them to pay heavy duties when they had made their arrangements on the faith of the old tariff. Seventy-one days of this Session had elapsed before the Budget speech was addressed to this House, and although the excuse made for the delay was that delegations had to be met, I think my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has found by this time that since the tariff has been made public, the delegations have not decreased, but are coming in larger numbers every day. Indeed, the delay in bringing this tariff down indicated the consciousness of the Government that the changes they were proposing to make would be universally condemned, and we find that their condemnation, has been universal; all over the country public discontent with them is increasing day by day and hour by hour. The other evening, my hon. friend the member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), reviewed the history of Confederation as it affected the Province of New Brunswick, and no member of this House is more competent to speak on that subject than that hon. gentleman. No more vehement or ardent supporter of that project could be found in the Province of New Brunswick; I think I may say that my hon. friend was the chief instrument by which that Province was induced to cast in her lot with the Union; and my hon, friend's frank avowal, the other night, that it was by misrepresentation he had been induced to urge the Province to join Confederation, did honor to him, and his statement, I think, will find a response, not only in the Province which he and I have the honor to represent, but in a large portion of this Dominion. I myself was opposed to this Confederation, and I can attest to the truthfulness of the statement made by my hon. friend in regard to the misrepresentations made to the Province of New Brunswick at that time. Enjoying a tariff of from $12\frac{1}{2}$ to 15 per cent., the people of New Brunswick were led to believe that no greater burden of taxation would be imposed upon us, or that if our taxation should be increased to the same point as that of old Canada, the increased volume of business, and our increased prosperity under it, would more than compensate for the increased burden imposed. Further, we were told, that by joining this Confederation we should be enabled to have reciprocal trade with the United States. Those were the two cries raised at that time: First, that taxation would not be increased, and secondly, that the union would bring about reciprocal trade, which was universally desired throughout the Maritime Provinces. Such were the promises by which we were brought into Confederation; but eleven years afterwards, the gentleman who afterwards became Minister of Finance, complained to us that the tariff imposed by the Mackenzie Government was too high, that the Administration was an extravagant Administration, and that by returning to power the party now in office, which was then in Opposition, not only would the burden of taxation not be increased, but we should obtain reciprocity. That gentleman, in the city of St. John, in 1868, said:

"We want no increased taxation, but we do want the tax properly imposed. The duties on non-enumerated articles should stand at 15 per cent."

That hon. gentleman further said:

"I would vote against the duty on coal and flour, but if it came up as part of a general scheme in favor of reciprocity, I would vote for imposing the duty."

Then, we all remember that memorable and neverto-be-forgotten telegram from the right hon. Prime Minister to Mr. Boyd, assuring him that there was to be no increase of taxation, only a readjustment. These were the promises which were put forward before the Province of New Brunswick; and when you look at the taxation of to-day and that proposed, no comments of mine are needed to show a contrast between the promises of that day and the actual facts as they at present exist. No promises were more distinct, or have more distinctly failed, than those made to the Province of New Brunswick; and I feel, as a native of that Province, that now, after nearly a quarter of a century has elapsed, I have nothing to regret that I lifted my voice against the union then consummated. I have never regretted, though nearly a quarter of a century has since elapsed, having lifted my voice against that union. So far as our Province is concerned, considering our position, we look to the neighboring republic as our best market, and one of the great inducements which induced us to join Confederation was the hope that by that means reciprocal intercourse with the United States might be obtained. But now we find that is not the policy of the Government, but they have now an entirely different policy. So far as regards the question of increased duties, the tendency of a highly protective tariff is to become more and more protective, and no better exemplification of this can be found than in the course adopted by the Government since the National Policy was introduced in 1878. From time to time the duties have been increased and additional burdens imposed on the people. We find, in fact, that protection begets protection. From the largest industries to the smallest, from the sugar and cotton industries down to the smallest machine shop, from the heavy manufacturer down to the itinerant umbrella mender, they all seek protection in the shape of taxes on the miner, the farmer, and the laborer. In his turn the miner seeks to have duties put upon iron and coal, the farmer clamors for a duty upon flour to meet the increased prices he has to pay for agricultural implements, clothing and sugar; and even now we find the laborer coming forward, demanding the passage of a law to debar the immigrant from coming to our shores, in order that labor in this country may be protected. Thus it goes on; and, instead of this country being made a low-taxed country, where cheap living would induce immigrants to come in and fill up our vacant lands, we find ourselves in the unenviable position of having, with few exceptions, the highest tariff in existence. Such is the posi-tion in which we stand to-day. So far as regards the general principles of the tariff, the Government are proposing to impose additional heavy burdens on the people, which will give an increased Mr. WELDON (St. John).

revenue at a time when it is not needed. As regards our relations with the neighboring republic, this tariff is simply a retaliatory tariff formed for the purpose of creating irritation and ill-feeling with our neighbors by erecting barriers between the two countries, and instead of encouraging trade with our largest consumers, we are doing all we can to hamper it. And while we are doing this on the one hand, on the other we are sending a High Commissioner to Spain for the purpose of opening trade with that country; and we have sent a Commission to the West Indies, and another to the Argentine Republic for the same purpose; and, if report speaks truly, an hon. Senator and the hon. member for Hamilton are to be sent to Australia to see if trade cannot be opened with that country. Thus we are seeking to open up trade with these distant lands in competition with the very men with whom we are asked to believe that we cannot compete in our own country. So far as the prospects of successful results from the efforts of these commissioners are concerned, I need only refer to the Trade and Navigation Reports to show what little hope there is of success in that direction, and if the result of the Pan American Congress is to be the entering into of reciprocal treaties between the Argentine Republic and the other South American States, and the great country to the south of us, we will then be shut off entirely from competition. Concerning the effects of our tariff on our relations with the United States, I would call attention to an article from the New York Commercial Bulletin :

New York Commercial Bulletin:

"The people of the United States and of the Dominion of Canada have now before them the views of their respective Governments on tariff revision, as expressed in newly introduced Tariff Bills. In both countries protectionist theories have formed the basis of proposed legislation, and its difficult to avoid the suspicion that in the Canadian Bill retaliation against ourselves has also been a motive power in framing certain clauses. The intentions of the Ways and Means Committee with regard to the agricultural section of our own Tariff Bill, have been known quite long enough to admit of their exercising a very considerable influence on the Ministerial party in Canada in its tariff deliberations. Whether they have done so or not, we have the unedifying spectacle of two countries that ought to be, from their natural position and character, in close commercial relationship, engaged in legislation calculated to still further widen the existing differences between them.

"In both Tariff Bills the farmer and his interests play an important part. The United States farmer is to be protected against the Canadian farmer and the Canadian farmer against the United States farmer. Farming interests in this country are said to be suffering from the inroads of Canadian competition, whilst, according to the Montreal Gazette, "of late years American farm products of various kinds have been gradually overrunning the Canadian market to the injury of our agriculturists; and especially has this been the case with beef and flour." We do not attempt to explain the inconsistency of the two positions, as they are mutually destructive and much stronger evidence in favor of an unrestricted interchange of such commodities as each country can best produce than in favor of increased 'protection'

"The changes in the Canadian Tariff Bill most affecting ourselves are as follows: The duty on flour to be raised from 50 cents to 75 cents per barrel; mess pork and pork, from 1 cent to 2 and 3 cents per lb.; prepared me value was four million dollars, of which eleven million dollars, or 27½ per cent., was made up of the agricultural products referred to."

"As the advances in duty range all the way from 50 to 250 per cent. on existing rates, this outlet for our excess farm produce will be very seriously interfered with, and in some instances closed altogether. Our imports of agricultural products and stock, affected by the Mc-Kinley Bill, from Canada, were valued at eighteen million dollars, out of a total import of forty-three million dollars, out of a total import of forty-three million dollars, or 42 per cent. As, however, the import figures are complete, and those for export confessedly short, the difference between the two is certainly less than shown above. In any case, the other changes in the Canadian tariff make it a drastic measure of protection against the United States, and guite as retaliatory in effect as if conceived in a spirit of reprisal.

"It is the radical weakness of protectionist policies that they have no logical resting place. They are less under the control of the country favoring them than of outsiders, inasmuch as they are entirely dependent for their supposed value on the cost of production by those outsiders. If that cost sinks below a certain level upon which a protective tariff has been based, further revision is incumbent, or the interests affected are no longer protected. Both Canada and the United States are illustrating the force of this, and building the protection wall higher and higher as the general cost of production falls lower and lower. They are building against one another, under the mistaken idea that their respective positions will be improved by each additional stone added to the barriers against free commerce. The policy is an unnatural one, and the only present consolation to be derived from it is the certainty that the higher the walls of protection are built the sooner they will topple over, and the more complete will be their fall."

We have heard statements quoted from newspapers,

We have heard statements quoted from newspapers, but I think the expression of opinion given by Secretary Bayard is far better than any of those. We find that Sir Charles Tupper put forward the principle, at the time of the introduction of this policy, that it was desired to bring about reciprocity within a short time, and that that could be accomplished by building up a wall to defend the industries of this country. The effect of the course we are now pursuing is to build up walls much higher than those which were then indicated. And those walls at last will become so high that they will tumble over and crumble to the ground. Another result of the system adopted by the Government, is that which the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has endeavored to counteract, but which I fear he will fail in doing, as long as this policy exists—that is, the combination of the manufacturers by which the prices to the consumers are enhanced. But even this is not sufficient for protectionist purposes, and the public works are pressed into the service in order to enable the manufacturers to reap larger profits. We find that our railways are carrying our fuel and other materials at unremunerative rates. Mr. Schreiber, in regard to the Intercolonial Railway, congratulated himself there was less loss, owing to less coal being carried at unremunerative prices. The workingman has to pay the cost of this National Policy in three different ways. In the first place, he has to pay the impost of the Customs duty; secondly, he has to pay the enhanced price under the combines; and thirdly, he has to pay the amount required to make up the unremunerative cost of transportation. Thus the burden becomes more and more oppressive every year, and we are in this way as much bound under slavery as were the Israelites in Egypt. In regard to the changes which are now proposed, if we accept the statement of the Minister of Finance that there are large surpluses expected, and yet that it is proposed to add still more to the burdens of the country by increasing the revenue, we should ask on what principle an increased Customs tariff should be adopted. In the first place, the Customs tariff should be levied to meet the requirements of the country, and the expenditure necessary for the advancement of its works, as well as for the ordinary services, and that should be so levied as to fall equally upon all classes in the Dominion. Secondly, if it is necessary to levy such a tariff, it should be so levied as to afford some protection to the manufactures by the free admission of raw material in order to enable the people to obtain cheap goods, and so to reduce the burden of taxation as the manufacture increases in value as to made it commensurate with the burden of taxation. Now, we are drawing from the people more than is necessary for the expenditure of the country and for the expenditure which is required on the works necessary for its advancement. No one can look at that tariff and say that it will bear equally upon all parts of the Dominion, or that it will not bear very heavily upon the Maritime Provinces. I appeal also to my hon. friends from Manitoba and the North-West, as I do to those from the Maritime Provinces, to state whether this tariff will bear fairly upon them. Instead of protection to the manufactures being given by allowing the raw material to come in free, we find the raw material is taxed, we find that the food and the fuel of the people are taxed, and, instead of the price of living being reduced, it has practically been increased to the workingmen. The Finance Minister has stated that there was a surplus of $2,700,000 last year, and that he expected a surplus of $2,000,000 this year, and yet he proposes to add to the burdens of the country. The principle adopted in the mother country has been that, when the revenue increases, the taxation should be reduced. That principle was put forward by Sir Charles Tupper when he was in Opposition, and that was the principle adopted by this side of the House when it was in power. That principle has not been carried out. Even in the neighboring republic, we find that principle adopted to a certain extent. But how is our surplus expended? I am sorry to believe that in many cases it is expended in debauching constituencies and obtaining the election of members to this House for the party in power, in erecting buildings which are not required, and constructing railways which are not in the interest of the country. We find there is a continual decrease in the receipts from certain articles on which the tariff is levied Taking the Toronto Mail, I find a statement showing that there will be reductions in the receipts from taxation on paperhangings of $19,-811; on common and ornamental glass, $29,712; on molasses, $46,030; making a total reduction under the proposed tariff of $95,523. This makes a total increased burden of $719,600. Deducting from that the reduction, in round numbers, of $100,000, it leaves the net increased burden $619,600. I believe, as my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has said, it is impossible to say whether the actual increased burden may not extend to a million and a half. In regard to the general prosperity of the country, I am willing to admit that, as far as the Maritime Provinces are concerned, we are enjoying a greater share of prosperity than we did a few years ago. This is owing to a great change with regard to our ships. Our freights have risen, and lumber has also advanced. Handicapped as our lumber business has been by the duties imposed by this tariff, still it became more remunerative, and it is owing to these facts that we have enjoyed a certain amount of prosperity. But there is no use in disguising the fact that the exodus from our Province is large, and I think no member from that Province will deny this. So far as the district I represent is concerned, I do not believe there is one household where you will not find one or more vacant chairs of persons who have gone to another country; it may be that in some instances they have gone to our North-West, but I am afraid that in the greater number of instances they have gone to a foreign country. Immigration has also ceased, and as regards the several thousands which were stated by the Minister of Agriculture to have settled in New Brunswick during the last year, I must say that I have been unable to ascertain where any of them have been located. These are facts that it is no use to attempt to disguise. It is not disloyalty to speak the truth, and to go on in blind ignorance of the facts, is simply to live in a fool's paradise, and I think that it should be the honest endeavor of every member of this House to ascertain the truth, and to find a solution for the difficulties of our position. I believe that our troubles have arisen from the oppressive and burdensome system of taxation under which we now live. Such, I contend, are the results which have flowed from the National Policy inaugurated in 1878, and so far as regards the Province from which I come, I can say without hesitation that the tariff is the cause of the evils which I have described. With regard to these particular burdens which the Minister of Finance proposes to put above fifty-five is to be subject to a higher duty, Mr. Weldon (St. John).

upon us, my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has already pointed out many instances in which it will affect New Brunswick. My hon, friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones) and my colleague from St. John (Mr. Ellis) have also given many instances in which these propositions will affect New Brunswick and the Maritime Provinces generally. However, these details will have to engage the attention of the Committee. When my hon. friend from Halifax said that the lumbermen would have to pay a less duty on pork, I think he will find, on reflection, that the same duty will fall upon the fishermen. Both classes will fare alike and will have to pay the \$6 a barrel. The other evening my hon. friend from Northumberland, in the paper he read, showed clearly that the lumbermen of New Brunswick will have to pay \$6 a barrel for pork. The Minister of Customs said the other evening, in reply to the member from the city of St. John, that the fishermen going to the banks would not have to pay this duty. It is true that fishing vessels may be relieved from this duty, and I think that even before they were entitled to take their pork out of bond without paying the duty. But with regard to the boat fishermen, who were described by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) and the hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Ellis), they will have to bear a heavier burden. With regard to those in my own county, men who toil in boats in the bay, endeavoring to eke out a precarious living, they will have to pay this duty. I think my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) will say that the poor men along his shores, who toil from morning to night in order to gain a livelihood, will have to bear this additional burden, while the wealthier men, who fit out schooners for the great fisheries, will be free from it. even the families of these men who are left behind will have to pay this additional duty on the food they eat. Such will be the effect of the pork duty in New Brunswick. Now, the Minister of Finance said that we would be compensated, in regard to the flour duty, by the reduction of the price of molasses, and by the rebate on corn. Sir, this is a tacit admission that the price of flour is increased, and the only object of making these reductions is that the Government may be able to put an additional price on flour. This is the put an additional price on flour. This is the principle that was put forward by Sir Charles Tupper a few years ago, when he said that the duty on flour paid by the Maritime Provinces would be compensated by the duty on coal paid by Ontario. Now, I find that last year 927,014 barrels of flour were brought over the Intercolonial Railroad, and most of it remained in the Lower Provinces. We find that a large amount was also brought into those Provinces by sea. Upon all this flour the duty has got to be paid by the workingmen, by the fishermen and the lumbermen. believe it is estimated that in the neighborhood of 300,000 barrels of flour are consumed annually in our own Province, and I believe that figure is rather under than over the mark. If we have to pay the additional 25 cents a barrel, that would amount to \$75,000 on that item alone. True, it is said there is a compensation on the molasses. Last year the duty on molasses consumed in New Brunswick amounted to \$15,000; but if, as I understand, a specific duty is to be put on molasses, the duty will become heavier. Molasses and I see that the molasses chiefly imported into New Brunswick ranges about fifty-seven; so it is very questionable whether we shall not have to pay an increased duty on molasses. Besides that, we shall have to pay duty on the casks, which we never did before, and that is the compensation we are to get for the duty on flour. Then we are told there is a rebate on corn; that means that we can give up our wheat-flour, which every man is entitled to eat, and come down to mush and molasses, for the purpose of getting more revenue for the country. That is the way we are being dealt with in the Lower Provinces. I would also call attention to the freight on flour over the Intercolonial Railroad and the duty which we have to pay. To St. John, the freight on a barrel of flour is 55 cents, and the duty now will be 75 cents, bringing up the extra cost to \$1.30 which we will have to pay on flour. That flour could be imported by our little schooners sailing from the Lower Provinces for from $12\frac{1}{2}$ cents to 15 cents a barrel, from Boston or New York. To the town of Newcastle, in the County of Northumberland, the duty on the carriage of flour is 70 cents, and the duty is 75 cents, making \$1.45, while it could be imported by sea for 25 cents; so there is a difference of \$1.20 which we shall have to pay additional. It is said the price to the consumer is not enhanced. Why, then, is this additional duty put on? Why is this difference of from \$1.15 to \$1.20 added to the price the consumer will have to pay for his flour? It is for the purpose of enhancing the revenue of the country, and of protecting the millers. The best evidence of this was the statement of the hon. member for Halifax the other day. Speaking of the flour coming into Newfoundland, he said that of the whole quantity of 278,000 barrels imported into that colony, 268,000 came from the United States. With regard to the effects of this tariff, I desire to call the attention of the House to the view taken in our Province, and I take this view from the St. John Sun, the organ of the Government, and a paper which has supported this Government ever since it was founded. It says:

"We publish to-day the views of a number of business men on the tariff changes. The consensus of opinion is rather against some of the new features of the tariff. Business men as a rule do not like tariff tinkering. They Business men as a rule do not like tariff tinkering. They are not so much troubled by high tariffs as by changing and uncertain tariffs. * * * Most of them are not speculators in the stocks they hold, but expect to make true profits by small margins of gain on all transactions. Tariff changes confuse business men by closing up or obstructing old channels of trade and by causing abrupt and arbitrary fluctuations in the value of stock already purchased but not received or already sold but not delivered." * * *

I think that applies with peculiar force to the Maritime Provinces, for we find that to-day many of our merchants have purchased stocks in foreign countries, on which they now find they will be called upon to pay increased duties. It goes on to "The general opinion appears to me that the Government has overdone the thing in some directions. Notably in the very large increase in duty on salt meats."

I will now submit for the consideration of the House a statement from a leading firm engaged in the dry goods trade. Macaulay Bros. & Co. said:

"Are directly opposed to the changes, as far as their business is concerned. Two members of the firm were seen. The changes are directly in the interest of the Upper Province merchants.

"Their season is a couple of months earlier than ours, and these changes made just now give them a big ad-and these changes made just now give them a big advantage.

"The Upper Province men are to be found in the markets of Europe securing their fall and winter stock when we, down by the sea, are securing our summer goods; so that now we have to put our goods (which will have to pay the increased duty) into competition with the Upper Province men, who have got their goods in before the tariff changes. This is decidedly unfair, and the Government, when contemplating such radical changes, should give at least thirty days' notice.

"Take the extra duty put on coatings—which will never changes, should give at least thirty days' notice.

"Take the extra duty put on coatings—which will never be made in Canada. Then take corset steels; they are to pay so much a pound. Why, it is beyond the comprehension of the trade, except it be that some little manufacturer wants te get a start. Again, there are umbrellas and parasols, which are not made in Canada to any extent. There are fifteen lines—purely dry goods—which show a total increase of 50 per cent. in duty, and this increase will naturally have to be paid by the purchaser.

"Messrs. Macaulay believe in the duty in grey cottons, shirtings and in grades of coatings, or in any line of goods which can be manufactured in Canada, but object, as they put it, to duty being put on goods not manufactured here."

I have also the opinion of Mr. C. H. Fairweather, of Hall & Fairweather, another gentleman engaged in the same trade. He said:

"No difference in flour was expected. Their firm had not been importing from the States and saw no reason to anticipate they would. He had hoped that the duty on cornmeal would be reduced one-half and thought it would have satisfied the millers just as well, for they can see the danger of overdoing the business. The reduction of duty on molasses was a direct gain to that extent, provided the test is such as to allow the customary regular of duty on molasses was a direct gain to that extent, provided the test is such as to allow the customary regular grade of molasses to come in. He did not see why there should be any difference in the duty on pork. Mess pork has been for years selected as the grade for speculative purposes. He had seen it run up and held for weeks at $10 a barrel over a normal price. It is at the present moment held about 30 cents above a barrel or clear, which is always worth one dollar a barrel more than mess. Through speculation mess is held higher. This duty directs the whole Canadian demand on mess, preventing our people from buying clear pock, which costs less and is our people from buying clear pork, which costs less and is worth more. As to seeds, he regretted to see the duty put on. He imported five cars every spring, and was doubtful if Canada could supply the demand. The duty would increase the costs."

H. J. Thorne, of Clarke, Kerr & Thorne, hardware merchants, said:

"The changes of the tariff affected their business very "The changes of the tarili affected their business very slightly. He was glad to see the duty reduced on glass; it should never have gone on. Mechanics' tools had been advanced from 30 to 35 per cent., and he would rather have seen them remain as they were, as many of the more delicate tools were not manufactured in Canada, but the reduction on glass would fully offset any slight measure made in other lines."

G. Wetmore Merritt, of Turnbull & Co., said:

G. Wetmore Merritt, of Turnbull & Co., said:

"That the duty of 3 cents a pound on lard, including the net, would mean a duty of 3; cents on lard and would increase the price. Canada, he thought, could not at present produce enough to supply the market, and would, therefore, have to import. Regarding pork, he said that the major part of the pork imported here is short cut clear, on which the duty is $6 per barrel. On mess pork, the rate is only $3. The two rates opened up a fine chance for smuggling. Long cut clear pork, under the Inspection Act rate, pays as mess and enters at $3. It would be very easy since both are in precisely similar barrels, to brand short cut clear as' long' cut clear and enter it as such. It would be necessitate a whole army of inspectors. Canada does not and cannot, for some years at least, produce enough pork, and will, therefore, import the American. Of course the mess pork will be the kind, though clear is the favorite. While their firm paid duty the other day on 150 barrels mess, they paid on 650 barrels of clear. The rate should be made uniform. Mess pork has gone up $1 a barrel and lard one cent a pound since the duty was changed. Clear pork is being held to see, if the rate will not be uniform with mess. If not, it will have to go up much higher than mess. As to the American beef on hand the price of that will be governed by what Canadian packers can do. Quotations have been asked for from the Upper Province packers, but no reply has been received as yet. The article has already gone up here, however, $3 per barrel. It is not known yet at the Custom house, whether any rebate will be allowed on goods bought up but not delivered before the duty went up. With regard to the duty on seeds, there seemed to be an indefiniteness in the statement of the tariff. The rate on large parcels was 15 per cent., and on small parcels 25 per cent. It seemed hard to say where a small parcel merged into a large one. The duty on seeds would increase the price. Their firm have now to pay $150 duty on a consignment just received."

George McAvity, engaged in the brass and hardware trade, said :

"The duty on sheet brass and brass wire would increase the cost of production of their goods, and to that extent be an advantage to United States competition, inasmuch as there was no increased duty on the manufactured product. If the duty on their line of manufactured goods had been made 35 per cent., the same as on hardware, they would have been satisfied. The new duty adds 3 to 4 per cent. to the cost of production.

While speaking on the subject Mr. McAvity said the old duty of 10 per cent. on copper, still retained, operated against any export trade. They were just about to ship a lot of samples to Thomas A. Ashton, Sheffield, England, where they were assured a considerable trade could be where they were assured a considerable trade could be worked up. They had also opened up some trade with Barbadoes. Not unless we got copper wire made free or a rebate, say, of 5 per cent. on the invoice were allowed, a large export trade could not be developed."

I have called attention to these statements, as they are statements from persons practically engaged in business. I find that, since the new tariff, O'Neill Bros., of St. John, have made an importation of meat, on which the duty payable before the tariff was $36, whereas it is now $108; and another firm have made a like importation on which they would have had to pay a duty of $201.65, but they now have to pay $601.65. Such are some of effects of the proposed changes in the tariff. Such are some of the have recently been building up a trade in lime, but, in view of the adoption of this retaliatory tariff, I fear the duty in the United States will be so increased as to prevent its development, while we had hoped that this industry, which had rapidly developed from a few thousand barrels, would have grown into half a million barrels this year. other question of vital importance to the Maritime Provinces is the export duty on logs. It is at present $1 per thousand on spruce logs, and we find that the American tariff provides that while the duty may be reduced from its present standard of $2 per thousand, the amount of export duty shall be added, so that the duty on spruce logs going to the United States will be $3 per thousand, which will be practically prohibitory. We send from New Brunswick to the United States, spruce logs to the value of $700,000 or $800,000, and $1,160,000 of American lumber which comes down the river St. We now have to pay this $2 additional export duty in the Province of New Brunswick, and the result of this will be, that practically that trade will be destroyed. That export duty in that Province last year only produced $1,017, and even that duty was only collected upon small wood, cut out by the farmers and the poor people of the country during the winter time, a class who are least able to pay duty. This duty also affects us in the large amount of coasting trade which we enjoy with the United States. Look at the daily reports of the vessels inwards and outwards from the port of St. John, and you will find that our small coasters are laden with cargoes of lumber outwards, but their holds from one of the Lower Provinces, while I come Mr. WELDON (St. John).

are empty on the inward voyages. If you put on this extra duty our poor people will have to pay it in addition to the present duty, and it will be so much withdrawn from the market, and will prove a great loss of employment for our small coasting vessels. I protest on behalf of New Brunswick against this export duty, and I say, it is a violation of one of the terms under which we entered into the Union. Under the British North America Act, the export duty which we then had placed upon all lumber was secured to the Province of New Brunswick and given to it as its right, subject only to the condition that it should not be increased. That duty we held for six years after Confederation, and, until by the Treaty of Washington, the Imperial Government undertook that they would use their influence with the Dominion Government and the Government of New Brunswick to extinguish that export duty, and so negotiations were entered into and a final arrangement was made between the Province of New Brunswick and the Dominion Government on one hand, that, for a certain sum, New Brunswick should surrender that right —but she surrendered it to be extinguished, and not to be transferred. We maintain that the understanding was in good faith, that that export duty which had belonged to our Province, should be extinguished, and it is in violation of that understanding, and in violation of the position we took at the time of Confederation, that this duty should now be imposed. The position is now, that whereas the New Brunswick export duty was levied upon all alike, Dominion and foreign, the Dominion duty to-day is levied upon the Canadian alone. Such is the position in which we stand under this Confederation, and such are we harassed under this tariff. As has been graphically pointed out by my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), the imposition of this duty is a violation of the understanding on which we entered Confederation. Our Province in this case is in a most unfortunate position, and, more unfortunate still, she has been placed in that position by those who belong to her. The first heavy duties levied upon New Brunswick on this matter were made by an hon. member of this House who now sits in the gubernatorial chair of his native Province. My hon. friend, the present Minister of Finance, is also a son of her soil, nurtured in one of her universities, and honored by the representation of one of the finest districts of New Brunswick. These are the men at whose hands our Province has been so badly treated. I might say of my hon. friend, as was said of Rehoboam of old: that while Sir Leonard Tilley scourged us with whips, the present hon. Minister of Finance has chastised us with scorpions. Our Province is in the unfortunate position that her own sons have burdened us with this heavy taxation. In conclusion, I might use the words of the dying eagle transfixed by the hunter's dart feathered with her own plumage:

"Keen were her pangs, but keener far to feel She nursed the pinion that impelled the steel; That the same plumage that had warmed her nest, Drank the life-blood of her bleeding breast."

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to follow closely the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), who has just taken his seat. The hon. gentleman_comes from the other end of the Dominion, and probably it will be better for me to leave a reply in the hands of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who come from the Province of which the hon. gentleman has the honor of being one of the representatives. I shall confine my remarks, principally, to a reply to the speech made the other night by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), but in reference to the remarks on the duty on flour, made by the member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), I feel it necessary to say a few words. I ask that hon, gentleman if he, or any other member on the opposite side of the House, can say that the price of flour has been raised in the Maritime Provinces since the increased duty was announced the other day? Until such time as an increased price on flour in the Maritime Provinces has been occasioned by this duty, it does not lie in the mouth of hon. gentlemen opposite, or of any person else, to say that the people have been prejudiced by the duty. On the other hand, I may say to the hon. gentle-man that the farmers of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, as well as the flour millers of these Provinces and the flour millers of Ontario, are going to be benefited to a large extent by that increase in duty upon flour, and instead of the Americans being able to compete with us in the markets of the Lower Provinces, our millers will be able to supply them with flour of equal or better quality, at the same price, and probably at a less price, than they paid formerly for American flour. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) pointed out, the other night, that a resolution had been lately passed by the Local Legislature of Manitoba, asking that this Parliament should undertake to bring about unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon, gentleman forgot to tell this House that that resolution was moved in the Legislature of Manitoba by the Hon. Mr. Martin, Attorney General; and the hon. member for Marquette forgot, also, to tell the House that, upon different occasions, the Hon. Mr. Martin has announced himself as an avowed annexationist.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; he said so in this city.

Mr. DALY. I say yes. The hon. member for Marquette forgot, also, to say that that Legislature is composed of thirty-six members, and out of that number thirty-two of them were elected to support the present Government of Manitoba, and if they were in this House they would be opposed to the existing Administration here. There is nothing of importance in this resolution being passed, except that four of the members who supported it belong to the Conservative party. I have not the slightest doubt that if these hon, gentlemen had looked into the question as I have looked into it, and as, I think, I shall be able to present it to the House, they would come to the conclusion that, so far as the Province of Manitoba is concerned, she and her people are not in such a bad position as they are sought to be made out by hon, members of the Opposition in this House. The hon, member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) referred to the fact that the resolution he spoke of quotes a report of a Committee of the House of the Manitoba Legislature, made in 1884, and he states that during that now a supporter of the Government in this House, was a member of the Local Government and was chairman of the committee who made the report. It might have been well if the hon. member for Marquette had told the House that, at the time that resolution was passed, the people of Manitoba and the North-West had not through connection with the Eastern Provinces of Canada, that all the goods and all the produce brought into that country then, were brought through the United States, and that, in consequence of the high rate of freight, and of our not having railroad communication with the eastern markets of Canada, we were obliged to import largely from the United States. Why, Sir, according to the Trade and Navigation Returns, I find that, in 1883, under the one item of agricultural implements, we imported into the Province of Manitoba from the United States, 1,093 mowing and reaping and threshing machines, of the value of $141,516, upon which we paid a duty of $35,505.10. We imported in that year, from the United States, ploughs to the value of $108,367, upon which we paid a duty of $27,178.05. We imported from the United States, portable steam engines, valued at $39,473, upon which we paid a duty of $10,206.75. We imported agricultural implements, not elsewhere specified, to the value of $107,104, on which we paid a duty of $26,930.05, making the total imports of agricultural implements from the United States in that year $396,460, on which we paid a duty of $99,819.95. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman gave figures to the House, the other night, to show that the people of Manitoba paid in 1888-89 a total duty of $46,123.47 less duty by $53,696.48 than was paid in 1883, a year previous to the adoption of the resolution to which he referred in the Manitoba Legislature. The hon-gentleman stated that the people of Manitoba last year paid a duty of $17,714 on lumber. Now, I find, on looking at the Trade and Navigation Returns for 1883, that we imported into Manitoba from the United States in that year lumber to the value of $564,314, on which we paid a duty of $112,868.25, whereas in 1889, having in the meantime had communication opened up with the Rat Portage lumber district, from which we get the bulk of our lumber, the importation was only to the value of $88,621, on which we only paid a duty of $17,714.20, or a difference between the duty we paid on lumber in 1883 and in 1889 of the magnificent sum of $95,154.05. If you take the difference between the value of the lumber we imported from the United States in 1883 and the value we imported in 1889, you will find that last year we put into the pockets of the lumber merchants of Rat Portage, and that neighborhood, the sum of $475,693; and but for the tariff on lumber that amount and probably more would have gone into the pockets of our American neighbors. Moreover, since the opening up of the communication with Rat Portage and the Eastern Provinces, the price of lumber has been reduced in Manitoba below what it was in 1884 when that resolution was passed. I have no doubt that at that time the people had a right to complain of the price they were paying for lumber; they did not then enjoy the direct communication with the Eastern Provinces which they enjoy at the present time; time the member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), but since the opening up of that communication, the price of lumber, as well as the price of all other necessaries, has decreased. My hon, friend, in his speech the other night, stated that the farmers of Manitoba were injured, not only by the duty on lumber, but by the duties on agricultural implements, and he dwelt with great gusto especially on the duty on binding twine. In that connection he made the extraordinary statement that in the coming season the farmers of Manitoba would pay $40,000 of duty on binding twine. He stated—and in this I agree with him—that there would probably be a million acres under crop in Manitoba this year, and as the farmers use about 2 lbs. of twine to the acre, they would require 2,000,000 lbs. to harvest the crop of 1890. They may require more; I hope they will; but when the hon, gentleman stated that the farmers would pay $40,000 of duty on that twine, he stated not only what was ridiculous, but what he must have known at the time was false, because the hon. gentleman has access to the Trade and Navigations Returns, and if he had looked at them he would have found that, last year, the total quantity of binding twine brought into Manitoba from Great Britain was 35 lbs., valued at $10, on which a duty of $2.50 was paid, and that the total quantity from the United States was 3,649 lbs., valued at $714, on which a duty of $178.50 was paid.

Mr. WATSON. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman wishes to misrepresent $\hat{\mathbf{w}}$ hat I said. stated that we would pay \$40,000 more than we would pay but for the duty on twine.

Mr. DALY. I will read what the hon. gentleman said:

"The duty on binding twine is 1½ cents a pound and 10 per cent. ad valorem, or about 2½ cents. Admitting that we do not pay the full duty, we undoubtedly pay a duty of 2 cents a pound. On 2,000,000 lbs. of twine, we will accordingly pay a duty of $40,000."

Now, Sir, on this question of binding twine, I have had occasion to inform myself. I find that in Canada there are as manufacturing this twine. We have the Dartmouth Rope Company of Halifax, Thomas Connors & Sons of St. John, N. B., John Brown & Co. of Quebec, A. W. Morris & Bro. of Lachute, the in Canada there are at present six rope-walks Bannerman Bros. of Lachute, the Montreal, Brantford Cordage Company of Brantford, and a small concern at Toronto the name of which I could not get. I find, from communications with these gentlemen, that the production of binding twine is sufficient for the demand at present and for some years to come. I had also occasion to communicate with the Massey Manufacturing Company of Toronto, one of the largest manufactories in Canada, asking them from whom they bought their twine. I have a reply from them to the effect, that last year they sold 300,000 lbs. of binding twine in Manitoba and the North-West, that every pound they bought last year and the year before was bought in Canada, and that on no occasion do they buy any from the United States, except in some extraordinary year when the supply runs short when they get some in Minneapolis, because it is nearer than Halifax. These gentle-

The present cash price of our standard 3 A binder, delivered freight prepaid to Brandon or any other station in the Province of Manitoba, is $160, or on time payments to farmers, $180; whilst we have another machine that we are selling for $10 less, namely, at $150 cesh or $170 on time payments. cash, or $170 on time payments. Mr. Daly.

1883 and 1884 was about $320 cash, and $340 on time payments.

"Third. The quantity of binder twine that we sold in Manitoba and the North-West last year was about 300,000 lbs., which was, of course, limited to so small a quantity owing to the unfortunate circumstance of a bad crop. The price varied, according to quality, from 19 cents to 20 cents a pound. That which we shipped to Manitoba was manufactured in Halifax by the Dartmouth Ropeworks Co. We did not sell any American twine last year, and neither have we any year, only at such a time when there has been as shortage shown at the last minute, and when we have been able to find a small lot possibly carried over by some dealer or manufacturer in St. Paul's or Minneapolis, and from whence it should be got much quicker than shipment been able to find a small lot possibly carried over by some dealer or manufacturer in St. Paul's or Minneapolis, and from whence it should be got much quicker than shipment from Halifax at the last moment of the season. Therefore, what we have handled of this has been of a very limited quantity indeed.

"Fourth. We certainly consider twine made by the leading manufacturers of this article in Canada to be fully equal and in some instances better than that made in the United States. The price of a standard twine manufactured out of half manilla and half sisal hemp we believe is worth in Chicago to-day in wholesale consignments of say 100 tons, about 13½ cents to 14½ cents a pound, while pure manilla is worth from 15 cents to 15½ cents a pound, while pure manilla is worth from 15 cents to 15½ cents a pound, with a discount of 3 per cent, for cash, at ten days. It might possibly be a little higher than this now, but certainly not any less, as a rule; and we can vouch for the past two or three seasons that binder twine of equal quality has been retailed in the United States at a greater price than in Canada. To further substantiate the price named above we enclose you herewith a clipping from the Farm Implement Neas, published in Chicago.

""You will notice that the lowest quotation made to us in 100 ton lots is 9 cents per pound f.o.b. cars. New York city. We might say for this same twine, which is being manufactured by the Dartmouth Ropeworks Company of Halifax, and which we are rusing a goodly quantity of, we are retailing to Ontario farmers, payable on the 1st day of October next, at 10 cents per pound, and in Manitoba delivered at farmers' stations at 13 cents a pound. The standard manilla twine as indicated above, we retail in Ontario at 15 cents, and in Manitoba at 17 cents, which goes to show that we retail twine to farmers in Ontario at about the equivalent price as it is being wholesaled by the manufacturers and dealers in the in Ontario at about the equivalent price as it is being wholesaled by the manufacturers and dealers in the States, and only a bare addition of 2 cents a pound, to cover the additional freight and expenses incurred in the Manifest trade. Manitoba trade.'

The clipping from the Farm Implement News, referred to in the letter, is as follows:

"The binder twine situation has not improved. The binder twine situation has not improved. Inose whose interests are merged with the association, are persuaded that established card prices are bound to prevail a little later on in the season, on a basis of about 164 cents for pure manilla sold out of St. Louis. In support of this position they cite the fact that seventeen mills of the National Cordage Company have been sold, so as to permit the cleaning out of the old stocks. But the demoralisation of prices goes on merrily in spite of all warnings and admonitions; and it is to be noticed that more cheap grades of twine than ever are offering. For instance, there has been a wonderful increase of the American and New Zealand hemp article, whose usefulness is claimed to be greatly advanced since the fibre is presented in single rather than in the three-ply form in which it went to the market two or three years ago. Furthermore, dealers complain that certain jobbers are Furthermore, dealers complain that certain jobbers are having sisal made up on half-and-half, one-half being colored to represent manilla. In such circumstances the low price people are getting the lion's share of the trade going; but buying is, nevertheless, not to say active. The prices ruling for the business are about as follows:—Manilla, 15c. in car lots, and 15½c. in less than car lots; standard, 13½c. and 14c.; hemp, 11½c. and 12c.; jute, 10½c., 11c. and 11½c. These are close, too, if they are not the lowest quotations obtainable by half a cent."

Now, I may state that the manufacture has arisen in the United States of a new kind of twine called the silver composite twine. That is now also being manufactured by a Halifax company, and it is being offered by the Massey Company to the farmers of Ontario, payable the 1st October following, at 10 cents per pound, and to the farmers of Manitoba delivered at farmers' stations at 13 cents per pound, while the lowest quotation from

New York is 9 cents per pound delivered free on board cars at New York in wholesale lots. Yet those gentlemen are retailing the same kind of twine at 10 cents in Ontario. The next question which the hon gentleman took up was the price of binders. He stated that binders were sold in Manitoba for $160 cash or $180 credit, and I believe the hon. gentleman's figures are correct, but he went on to say that they could be bought in Watertown, Dakota, for $120, whereas it is a fact that the price of binders in Dakota last year was $180 in two payments, or an advance of $5 additional when supplied with a sheaf carrier. figures are equally reliable as those produced by the hon, gentleman. The hon, gentleman told us that the 35 per cent. duty on agricultural machinery weighed heavily on the people of the North-West. Well, I asked the Massey Manufacturing Company for the prices at which they sold their machines in 1884, when this resolution referred to was passed by the Local House of Manitoba, and I was informed that their selling price for binders was $320 cash and $340 time, payable in 1883 and 1884; whereas to-day they sell a better article to the farmers in Manitoba at $160 cash and $180 credit. Thus the effect of the increased duty was to enable the manufacturers in Ontario to have more confidence in their business and to supply the people, not only of Ontario, but also of Manitoba and the North-West, with a cheaper and better machine than they could get before the increased duty was put on. More than that; if the farmers of Manitoba desire to have American binders, we find that the American manufacturers have reduced their prices in the same proportion from 1883 and 1884 to the present day. Taking the figures which the hon. gentleman gave, we find that the total number of harvesters and binders imported by Manitoba from the United States last year was only 21, the value of which was $2,745, and the duty on which was 8960.75, while the Massey Manufacturing Co. alone sent into Manitoba last year over 1,000 binders, over 700 mowers, over 600 rakes, over 500 seeders, over 500 harrows, over 1,200 waggons, over 500 buggies, over 40 threshing outfits, over 1,400 ploughs, and other implements in proportion. If we had not these increased duties, and had not shut out the American manufacturers who were prepared to flood our country with inferior machines, these people would not have been able to send that quantity of goods into that Province, and the Massey Company is only one of several firms of implement manufacturers. There are the Harris Sons & Co., and the Patterson Bros. Co., who are also sending large quantities to that Province; and just as the population of the country increases and the demand increases, the manufacturers of these articles in the Lower Provinces will increase their business, and the demand for labor will increase; as the demand for labor increases so will the consumers increase; and as the consumers increase, so will increased prices be obtained by the farmers of Ontario for the products of their farms. The hon, gentleman said the other night that the resolution passed by the Legislature of Manitaba representations of One control of the products of th Manitoba, represented the opinions of 90 per cent. of the population of that Province. I beg to take issue with him on that point. I want this House to understand, that during my election in 1887, I held thirty or forty meetings, at every one at that we had competition in Manitoba to-day in which this question of the National Policy was railway rates. I would ask him, where is that discussed, and in every one of which I took the same ground that I now take. Yet, in spite of all the efforts made by gentlemen of the same calibre as the hon. gentleman and representing similar views, I was elected by a handsome majority. I say that the constituency I represent have shown by that vote that, in so far as they are concerned, and they represent the opinion of the greater proportion of the population of the Province of Manitoba, they are satisfied that they are not oppressed by the present tariff, as the hon, gentleman and the Local House, by its resolution, would fain make us believe they are. The hon, gentleman referred to the fact, and I was glad he did so, that, so far as he was concerned as a representative of Manitoba, he could not follow the same line of argument which was taken by gentlemen from the other Provinces. I am glad to say that I can agree with him in his statement that in Manitoba we are not in the dark, weeful condition in which hon. gentlemen opposite have pictured Ontario and the Maritime Provinces to be. But I do not know that that condition is to be improved by the mode of procedure taken by hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not know that the advantages of the North-West are likely to be appreciated by people living in foreign lands, if hon. gentlemen opposite keep continually crying out that the population of the other Provinces are in a downtrodden position. All that we ask in Manitoba is that the people of the older Provinces should recognise this fact, that, so far as the National Policy is concerned, it has been established in the interests of the whole Dominion, and that although possibly it may oppress the people of Manitoba, yet the people of that western portion of the Dominion are proud of the fact that they are Canadians, and are prepared to support the policy which is in the interest of all Canada. Although I am willing to stand up here and advocate the interests of Manitoba, as I have always done, I cannot forget that I am still a Canadian; I cannot forget that that Province is only a part of Confederation, and that the National Policy has been established for building up this nation as a whole. We look at it in this way: that unless this policy is maintained as a whole, the fabric of Confederation must go. The hon. gentleman spoke as if this question had never been discussed in this House before or among the people. He seems to have forgotten that the question was discussed before the people in 1882, just as it is being discussed now, and that it was discussed again with equal vigor in 1887, and that the people on both occasions gave their verdict by a very substantial majority in favor of the Government. The amendments made to the tariff this year have been made in the interest of the whole people. They possibly may bear heavily on the people of the Maritime Provinces; but only give it time to work, and then these people will find that it has worked in their interests in the long run. All sections must work harmoniously, and each be prepared to contribute its share to the general welfare. The West cannot expect to have everything from the East, nor can the East expect to have everything from the West, if we are to build up a strong confederation, as we have been seeking to do ever since we introduced the National Policy. The hon, gentleman referred to the fact that we had competition in Manitoba to-day in competition? I am aware of the fact that he supports the Government in Manitoba, which has spent some $750,000 of the people's money to obtain a so-called competition, but rates have not been reduced.

Mr. WATSON. They have.

Mr. DALY. Not by the expenditure of $750,000 of the people's money, not by the fact of the Northern Pacific Railway coming in there at all, for although that company has been called on time and again to show in what particular they have reduced the rates, they have not been able to do so. The hon, gentleman has stated that our people in the West do not go in for political union with the Americans. Of that there is not the slightest doubt. Although far removed from the older Provinces from which most of us come, we are just as loyal as before we settled in that country, and just as desirous of maintaining the confederacy as any other section in the Dominion. I speak for the majority of my constituents, when I say that our people are perfectly satisfied to maintain their present position under the sovereignty of England, and that they have no desire for political union with the States or annexation. No more loyal people can be found to the Crown of Great Britain than those who reside in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, but those people want to say, and I want to say, to the members who come from Ontario and Quebec, and to the members of the Opposition also, if you will assist us to move the Government to increase the vote for immigration, we will show a people in that country that will redound to the credit of the Dominion. If that question is properly dealt with, a market will be opened to the manufacturers of Ontario and Quebec, of which at present we have a very small conception. Instead of those hon, gentlemen opposite condemning the Government for their fiscal policy, I think it would be more in the interests of the Provinces and of the constituencies they represent, if they would assist those who are endeavoring to get the Government to adopt a better immigration policy. I heard the hop. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) express his agreement with the reduction which has been made in the appropriation for immigration. If he had the interests of the people at heart, he would urge the Government to increase that vote in the interests of the people of Manitoba and the North-West, and until that is done there will be no certain influx of population. I have spoken a good deal about my own Province, and I will show that I am justified in saying that we have great hopes of our country, that we have great aspirations for that country, that we believe we have a soil and a climate which are not excelled in any of the States to the south of us, and that, though the population has not increased as it should have increased, yet we have made immense strides, that our internal resources are being extended to the fullest, that according to the table given by Mr. Greenway, the Minister of Agriculture of Manitoba—and that, I think, will not be disputed by hon. gentlemen opposite—we have obtained an amount of prosperity which is at least equal to that of any of the States of the Union or of any of the other Provinces of the Dominion. The follow- Gazette of 20th March: Mr. DALY.

ing statement will give hon, gentlemen an idea of our increase during two years:—

Total acreage prepared for crop Number of Horses	636,295	893,402	257,107
	29,915	45,746	15,831
	101,682	148,209	46,528
	12,540	31,341	18,801
	35,713	51,657	15,944
	87,444	135,649	48,205

As a further evidence of the progress of the country, the Canadian North-West Land Company make the following interesting announcement regarding the sales of their farm lands during the six months ending 30th June last, as compared with the corresponding period in 1888:—

	Acres Sold.	Value.
1888	20,620	113,432 80
Increase	11,700	$ 77,969 85

In addition to that we have the crop report issued by the Manitoba Government, which shows that the average yield of spring wheat per acre in 1887, was as follows, in the different localities referred to:—

Manitoba	32.4	bushels
Ontario		do
Wisconsin	10.3
Minnesota	11'6
Iowa	10.0	do
Nebraska	10.1	do
Dakota	14.3	do

Last year, owing to the drought, our average yield of wheat was 12.4 bushels per acre, as against 32.4 bushels in 1887, but, although last year it was so much less than it was in 1887, it was only two bushels less than it was in Daokta in the year 1887, which is well known to have been one of the most favorable years for crops in the North-West. In fact, our yield last year was more than that of any of the States or Provinces in 1887, except that one of Dakota. Taking the counties in the North-West, you find even a larger yield than appears there. In the County of Dufferin the average in 1889 was 14 bushels per acre; in Lisgar it was 16.5; in D'Iberville it was 12; in Morris it was 19.7; in Marquette it was 13.7; in Portage la Prairie it was 19.5; in Norfolk, 15.6; in West-bourne it was 23.4; in Beautiful Plains it was 16 bushels; in Minnedosa it was 14.8, and in Russell it was 13.5. Thus we have a number of counties in the Province of Manitoba which have a yield in a dry year greater than that in Dakota in such a favorable year as 1887. These figures should show enough to any hon, gentleman who is desirous of learning and of explaining to the world the advantages which that country offers to immigrants, to convince him that, if they or their friends go to that country, they would be justified in taking up their abode there. Further than that: we have statements from some of the highest authorities in Europe as to the quality of our wheat, and they state that its quality exceeds that of any other I will now quote from the Canadian wheat.

"Mr. John Dyke, the Canadian Government Agent at Liverpool, when in the North-West last year, requested Mr. Waugh, of the Nor'-West Farmer, to select some samples of Red Fyfe wheat and send them forward to him for exhibition purposes. Two samples of Red Fyfe wheat, one grown by Mr. Limlay, of Rapid City, and the other by Mr. T. H. Harris, of Bridge Creek, near Minnedosa, have been received through the Department of Agriculture, and have been submitted to some of the highest authorities in Great Britain. Mr. Woodward, a leading member of the Liverpool Corn Exchange, and the representative of the corn trade on the Mersey Docks and Harbor Board, and probably one of the best judges in Europe, writes thus of them:

and probably one of the best judges in Europe, writes thus of them:

"As an experienced judge of the article (constantly engaged in arbitrating questions of quality in various descriptions of wheat). I may say that I consider the two samples you send are about the finest, in every respect, I ever saw in the shape of red wheat. Such quality would meet a ready sale at the very top price of the day here.

"Other British agricultural authorities declare themselves as follows, as to the value of the samples of this wheat submitted to them:—

"Bell's Weekly Messenaer:—Those who have ever been in Manitoba and the North-West, and have seen and tested the qualities of the grain grown on the extensive prairie wheat-fields, do not need to be told anything of the high-quality wheat grown. For years the Ministers of Agriculture for the Dominion at Ottawa and for the Province at Winnipeg have been working hard in order to improve the sorts grown, so as to make them command the top price in the British markets. An important stimulus to the importation of Canadian wheat is likely to be given by a verdict which has been passed upon samples just received at Liverpool. The samples, consisting of two large sacks of Red Fyfe wheat, have been received by Mr. John Dyke, Canadian Government agent at Liverpool, from the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa. Mr. Dyke thereupon submitted them to the judgment of one of the leading members of the Liverpool corn trade, who has a large practice as arbitrator in disputes as to quality of grain, with the result that the wheat is pronounced has a large practice as arbitrator in disputes as to qualhas a large practice as arbitrator in disputes as to quality of grain, with the result that the wheat is pronounced to be the finest Red Fyfe wheat seen in the Liverpool market, and of a quality to command a ready sale at the top prices of the day. We have also received samples which fully bear out this high opinion. They are first-class millers' wheats—heavy, plump grain of a fine bright color."

Now, Sir, coming from such high authorities as I have quoted there can be but one conviction in the minds of hon. gentlemen who have heard these quotations, namely, that in Manitoba and the North-West Territories we can produce the very finest wheat grown in the whole world. I have shown you by statistics that the average yield of that magnificent wheat is greater in Manitoba than it is in any other Province of Canada, or in any State of the Union. Having these facts before us, can we arrive at any other conclusion than that there is a great future before that North-West country, and that it is in the interests of the whole of Canada that the Government should take immediate and vigorous steps to promote immigration and to bring in people to fill up that country? If that country is filled up the manufacturers of the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario will reap the benefit of an increased market for their products. Now I come to another point, and that is the position taken by hon gentlemen opposite with regard to the condition of the Eastern Provinces. Having been born in the Province of Ontario, I naturally take a great interest in that Province. Those of us who come down from the West every year, if we keep our eyes open, cannot have failed to be impressed with the immense strides that Province has taken during recent I ask any fair-minded man who has taken a trip from this city to Toronto over the Canadian Pacific Railway, or from Toronto westward into the heart of the best argricultural districts in the Province of Ontario, if he does not see every year most substantial evidences of increased prosperity along that line of railway. As far back as I can remember I have been travelling over the Grand Trunk Railway between Stratford and Toronto, and every year I have seen increased evidences of prosperity along that line of railway. The Province has been increasing in population, it has been erecting public buildings, and more than that, the passenger traffic on the railways has greatly increased. Every day almost every train that leaves the Union Station at Toronto is crowded with well-dressed, respectable, well-to-do passengers. When I look back ten years from the time I left the Province of Ontario, I can see increased evidences of prosperity. I see that the people are better dressed, they live in better houses, they live more comfortably, and they seem to have more money to spend in travelling about from one place to another. have not heard any hon. gentleman quote statistics as to the increased mileage of railways, but I hope before this debate is closed, if the House is not too fatigued, some hon. gentleman will do so, because I think there is no better evidence of increased prosperity than the increased mileage on railways. Why, Sir, the increased traffic returns of the Canadian Pacific Railway alone, in the Province of Ontario, should be evidence to any person who desires to look at the fact with an unprejudiced mind, that the Province is increasing in prosperity. I am satisfied that it is only a matter of a few years at least, when the Province of Ontario will stand as high in the eyes of hon, gentlemen opposite as it does in the eyes of hon members on this side of the House, although I believe that time will never come until hon, members opposite sit on this side of the House, which I hope they will not do for a long time to come. I have listened with a great deal of patience to the funereal remarks made on the other side as to the condition of the people in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and as to the condition of the people of the Maritime Provinces. These statements are all made for the purpose of making the farmers of this country believe that they are being down-trodden by the tariff, that it is oppressing them, that their farms are decreasing in value, that their farm products are not being sold at a proper price, and that, if the door was only open to them across the line, they would receive better prices for their farm products, that their farm lands would increase in value, and that consequently they would be more prosperous and happy than they are to-day. When I was going up in the train the other day, I picked up the Buffalo Express, dated Sunday morning, April 6, 1890. This paper, I may state, is published in the State of New York, immediately across the line from the Province of Ontario. I found in this paper an article headed, "New York Farmers," and it says:

"GOING OUT OF THE BUSINESS BY THE SCORE-MANY FORCED SALES.

"A Saratoga correspondent writes to the New York Times:

"Although the ice cutters have not wholly forsaken the lake, preparations for the season when ice is used, not made, are rife in this village, which invariably takes time by the forelock in arranging for its summer gayety. There are already many nibbles for cottages, and a few weeks later the gleeful real estate agent, who gets 5 per cent. on rentals, will see the hooks swallowed.

"Never, within the recollection of the oldest inhabitant, heave the roads been in such excerable condition as now.

have the roads been in such execrable condition as now.

Why should not the State of New York have Roman roads? Unless, indeed, the members of the Legislature pay more attention to the needs of those engaged in agricultural pursuits, and decent roads is one of them, there is likely to be a change in the personnel of that branch of the Government. Thoughtful people know and regret that the farmers in this and all parts of the State are not in a flourishing condition. Conservative as a class, and slow to join new parties or to take kindly to isms, their circumstances are driving them to join leagues, associations, and societies that profess to be in the interest of the farming class. The decline of agricultural pursuits in the New England States is an accepted fact. It is scarcely less so here.

suns in the New England States is an accepted fact. It is scarcely less so here.

"One has only to observe the numerous notices of sales by auction posted at the various four corners, post offices and taverns, to be convinced that farming does not pay."

Here we see it stated that farming does not pay in the State of New York, and yet we are told by hon, gentlemen on the other side that as soon as the markets of New York and of other States are open to us, farming will pay in the Province of Ontario:

"These auctions, by the way, have some curious features. One of them is the 'vendoo note,' so called. A lawyer fresh from city practice would be puzzled to know how it differed from the ordinary promissory note, but he would presently find that it took its name from these sales, which are called vendues, and that it is a promise to pay a sum of money for property purchased at a country auction. The 'vendoo note' is generally given for one year three months without interest if paid promise to pay a sum of money for property purchased at a country auction. The 'vendoo note' is generally given for one year, three months without interest if paid when due, and if not interest from date. A farmer is liable to pay twice as much as an article is worth for a year's credit. Money that is earned by the sweat of the brow is slowly parted with; hence these auctions are profitable to the seller. The sale itself is possessed of no little interest. It is generally held from five to fifteen miles from a railroad station, and the attendance takes in all the residents of surrounding country. Whole families come en masse and make a day of it or longer, as frequently two days are consumed in selling off an old estate. When the house is exhausted, the yard and barn, filled with implements and vehicles of all sorts, are still a treasure mine to the crowd. Odd and rare objects are frequently cried. Spinning wheels over 100 years old, brass and irons of curious pattern, ancient sideboards and mahogany dressers of great intrinsic worth, plates and dishes, tankards and flagons that would delight a Fifth-avenue collector, all often go for a trifle.

"At a recent sale, the bread-tray used by some of Burgoyne's officers was sold for 20 cents to a gentleman who would not part with it for any price. The Times' correspondent, two years ago, at one of these country vendues, purchased as a curious relic a small trunk covered with horse-skin and studded with brass-headed nails. In a slit in the cover on the inside was found a package of love-letters, written in 1801 by a young man in New York to his affianced. Their interest is fascinating. They are couched in language as choice as Addison's, and breathe an air of tenderness and chivalry that impels one to believe the tender passion flourished with a purer glow a hundred years ago than in these days of love versus lucre.

"The number of these sales this year is unprecedented.

"The number of these sales this year is unprecedented. Farmers are leaving their farms, and more are giving up the life altogether than are settling upon new ones. There is not only no money any longer in the business—there does not seem to be even a living. Hay has been sold as low as $4 a ton, oats at 26 cents a bushel, and corn at 40 cents; cows bring only $20, and other farm necessities are proportionately low."

Yet, Mr. Speaker, that is the market which the farmers of this country are told by hon. gentlemen opposite is going to make them rich if it can be opened to them.

"The wages of male help are as high as $25 per month, and the hired man at the end of the year has made more than his employer. Many farmers in this section do not intend to plant this year.

"They run behind the best way they can manage it. A farmer with his place free and clear is more than likely, after paying his farm hands, to be in debt after harvest. Add to the situation a mortgage, on which interest must be paid, and the outlook becomes gloomy for the farmer and not bright for his creditors. Many foreclosure sales of farming lands will take place before the year is out.

Mr. DALY.

"The result of this state of things is that the farmers are banding together to enforce legislation. They complain that real estate is heavily taxed, and personal property escapes its just share of the public burdens; that the legal rate of interest is too high by at least 1 per cent.; that the canals should be supported by the General Government, as they are used as waterways to bring the produce of the far West into competition with home production; that Congress should increase the duty on potatoes and other edibles, so that Scotland cannot flood the New York markets with them, thus forcing the price down to less than $1 per barrel—these are some of the things the farmer is demanding.
"Farming has no attractions to offer to young men. In "The result of this state of things is that the farmers

Farming has no attractions to offer to young men. "Farming has no attractions to offer to young men. In Vermont and New Hampshire there are over eight hundred abandoned farms, and unless speedy relief comes to the agricultural classes in this State the only profitable farming will be done by the play actors in such drames as 'The Old Homestead,' 'The Country Fair,' and 'The Midnight Bell.' A seeker for political preferment in the future must be right on all questions that affect the farming interest or he will find that his vote in the rural districts will not materialise."

I ask any hon. gentleman who has heard that speech read if he can fail to come to but one conclusion, and that is, that the farmers of the State of New York are in a far worse position than are the farmers of Ontario. In circulating their speeches, as no doubt they will do, among the electors throughout the length and breadth of Ontario, I would ask hon, gentlemen opposite to extract this paragraph from my speech and paste it on the speeches they are sending out, and thus the farmers will obtain both sides of the question, and be able to arrive at a proper conclusion. But it is most humiliating that any man, or any set of men in Canada, should rise and take the position hon. gentlemen opposite are continually occupying on this question of the tariff. As I have said, the people have pronounced on it; they have declared by their votes, and by the majority they have sent to this House to support the First Minister, that they will have none of the hon. gentlemen opposite, that they will still entrust the affairs into the hands of the First Minister and his colleagues, that they are satisfied with their conduct of affairs, and just so sure as the right hon. Premier secured a victory in 1882, and again in 1887, victory will crown the efforts of the right hon. gentleman's party in 1891. I will not occupy the time of the House further than to say that, although my views on the tariff, as expressed, may be in direct opposition to the resolutions passed in the Local Legislature of Manitoba, I have the courage of my convictions. On platforms in my own county and in other constituencies I have expressed these views, and I still maintain them. So far as I can read as an intelligent man, the position taken by the present Government, upon the question of reciprocity and upon the tariff resolutions before the House, is the correct position so far as the true welfare of Canada as a whole is concerned. The people in the west feel in some instances that they are pinched owing to the duties imposed upon certain articles, but at the same time they must remember that they are a part of this great Confederation, that they must give in a little on these matters, and the figures I have given to the House will show that they are not in the position they occupied in 1883 and 1884 when the resolutions to which I have referred were passed. I am satisfied to go to my people at the next election, if I am chosen a candidate, and take the same stand as I have taken in this House, and, notwithstanding any speech made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), and any resolutions that may be passed by the Legislature of Manitoba, I am satisfied the people will take the same view as they did in 1887, and send me back to this House by even an increased majority over that which I received at that time.

Mr. SEMPLE. I desire to offer a few remarks on the question now before the House, for if I failed to do so I would not be doing justice to the constituency which I represent. Although at the present time the amendment does not pronounce directly in favor of unrestricted trade with our neighbors of the United States, it is because this is not the proper time to submit such a motion. We feel, however, how important it is that this should be carried out and that there should be no room left for disputes. When the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 was entered into, it took six years to discuss it before it was fully carried out, and no doubt this question of unrestricted trade, which the Liberals desire, may take some time to accomplish, but undoubtedly it will be brought about sooner or later, and the longer it is delayed the more injurious it will prove to Canada. It was my privilege to be engaged in selling grain and other products of the farm at the time the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 came into effect, and I am aware, from practical knowledge, the immense advantage it conferred on this country. I have sold all commodities raised on the farm, the buyers buying for ship-ment to the United States, and for which good prices were paid. It has been asserted by hon. gentlemen opposite that grain coming into Canada from the United States would reduce the price of our coarse grains. I know that such was not the case, and we heard nothing of it during the twelve years the Treaty of Reciprocity lasted. The first year of the Reciprocity Treaty the amount received from the United States from our agricultural products was $9,000,000, but the last year of the treaty it reached $54,000,000, and this was proof that the American market was the best market for everything we had to sell. It is well known that the nearer the market the better it is for the seller. No doubt it is advantageous to have a home market; but we have not a sufficient number of people in this country to give a home market, and, therefore, the next best thing is to have a market as near this country as possible. In order to obtain such market it is necessary to remove all the shackles from trade. Two years ago we expected we would be in a better position, from the reports we received that the Democratic party would no doubt rule at Washington. However, as elections sometimes go contrary to expectation, our anticipations were not realised. The Democrats were always more favorable to developing trade with this country than were the Republicans. I will read to the House some remarks made by a very eminent gentleman, who once occupied a distinguished position here, touching what he considered the near approach of free trade. Sir Charles Tupper said:

"We have made concessions as I have said, but we have made them with the avowed object of placing all our people, not only the fisherman, but the agriculturist, the lumberman, every man in this country, in a better relation with the United States than he was before. What is the result? As I have said, Mr. Bayard told us, the American plenipotentiaries told us, that there was but one way of obtaining what you ask. You want greater freedom of commercial intercourse. There is but one way to obtain it. Let us by common concession be able to meet on common ground, and seek to remove this irritating cause of difficulty between the two countries out of the way, and you will find that the policy of this Government, the policy of the President and Heuse of Representatives, the policy of the great Democratic party of the United States, will at once take an onward course in the direction you propose, and accomplish that which you would desire above everything else. These were not empty words, those were the sober utterances of distinguished statesmen, who pointed to the avowed policy of the Government of the United States as proof of the sincerity of what they said. What has happened already? What have we got? Why, the ink is barely dry upon this treaty before Mr. Mills, as the representative of the Government, and chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, brings forward a measure to do what? To make free articles that Canada sends into the United States, and upon which we last year paid into the United States, and upon which we last year paid $1,800,000. * I am very sanguine that this Bill will pass during the present Session. Modified it may be, but I am inclined to think the amendments will be still more in the interest of Canada than as the Bill stands to-day. If this is the case, I think we may congratulate curselves upon securing the free admission of our lumber, upon which we paid no less than $1,315,450 last year to get it into the United States.

"On copper ore, made free by the Mills' Bill, we paid $96,946. On salt $21,992 was paid. Of wool we sent last year $1,319,309 pounds of one kind and a variety of other kinds, upon which duty was paid to the extent of $183,852. Now, as I say, on articles of prime importance and interest to Canada the removal of duty by the Mills' Bill amounts to no less than $1,900,193 a year." into the United States, and upon which we last year pai

Now, Sir, at the time this distinguished ornament of the House of Commons was speaking on this subject, he was very sanguine that we would be able to have unrestricted reciprocity with our neighbors on the other side. Matters have changed since then. It appears that the Government do not, at the present time, want reciprocity at all, but I, for one, shall endeavor to do all that lies in my power, in the interest of the farmers whom I represent, to have free trade with the United States, so far as it is obtainable. If it cannot be obtained we shall do what we can towards securing it. As I have pointed out, Mr. Speaker, Sir Charles Tupper showed that we paid $1,800,000 in duties upon articles of prime importance going in the United States, which, if they had been admitted free of duty, that amount of money would have gone in the pockets of the people of Canada. I shall quote to the House statistics to show the extent of our exports te the United States, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1889:

These figures show that there were $829,916 more realised from the sale of eggs in the United States markets than from the sale of wheat, flour, oats and oatmeal put together. It is a very important fact for the farmers to bear in mind, that when such a seemingly unimportant item as eggs goes free into the United States, the export of which is spread all over the country, a sum amounting to $2,156,000 is realised, which exceeds by $829,916 the amount realised from such important articles of our produce and manufacture as oats, oatmeal, wheat and flour. At all events one thing is clear, and that is, that there need be no alarm that oatmeal will be imported into this country from the United States. But at present large quantities of oats are shipped from the United States in bond, the oats ground in Canada and the oatmeal shipped to Great Britain. I was speaking, a short while ago, to a gentleman who is extensively engaged in the egg trade, and he informed me that last year the average price of eggs was 13 cents per dozen, while the effect of this mad policy of the Government to-day is to reduce the price to 8 cents per dozen. Another hardship on our farmers is the increased duty on clover seed. It has been advanced 50 cents a bushel, which will have to be paid by those who want to seed down their farms. Clover is really our best crop to keep the farm rich. It is really the best fertiliser we have got, and the more encouragement given to farmers to sow it the better. I may here remark, that if the people of the United States wish to have a tariff like that proposed in the McKinley Bill, the Government of Canada is powerless to prevent it, but our Government should at least show a little foresight and prudence, and conduct their line of policy in such a way as not to provoke the people of the United States into retaliatory legislation. The financial statement this year shows that there is a surplus, notwithstanding the fact that very few changes in the tariff have been made since 1887. There is evidently no need that money should be raised by increased duties, and why, then, does this Government bring in a tariff measure which is irritating to the people of the United States, and burdensome to the people of Canada. The Government tells us that, notwithstanding the duty, flour, pork, meat, apples, trees, shrubs and many other things come into Canada from the United States, and that they want to prevent this and to keep Canada for the Canadians. This policy has intensified feelings in the United States, and that country will very likely say to us: "We will take you at Mr. SEMPLE.

your word, and allow you to have Canada for the Canadians, but we will have the United States for the Americans." If this policy is adopted by the United States, it will strangle our most profitable export trade with that country, from which we obtained last year \$44,000,000. We will have the satisfaction of knowing that we, on this side of the House, in advocating unrestricted trade with the United States, have been acting in the best interests of our country. The Government have pursued a policy that is certainly irritating to our neighbors, and if they retaliate the Government will be justly held responsible. The Liberal party have been endeavoring to bring about a better state of things between the two countries. In regard to the manufacturers, we have heard a great deal about what they are doing for this country. I have not statistics to show how many manufacturers there really are in the country; but it was said in 1878 that the balance of trade was against us. In that year our imports were \$93,081,787 and our exports \$79,323,667, leaving a balance of trade against us of \$13,758,120. It was said then that we bought too much from abroad, but that if we encouraged the manufacturers, this would be changed, they would manufacture all we wanted, and the balance of trade would be turned the other way; but what do we find? We find that after the manufacturers were protected to their heart's content for five years the imports in 1883 amounted to \$132,254,-022, and the exports to \$98,085,804, leaving a balance of trade against us of \$34,169,218. This did not show that the manufacturers were increasing very fast or were doing very much to stop the balance of trade against us. The same state of affairs has continued; and when the manufacturers say they are not prosperous, they come to this House and ask for more protection, and they generally get it. In the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1889, we imported \$115,224,931 and exported \$89,189,167, showing a balance of trade against us of \$26,035,764, nearly double what it was before the National Policy came into existence. The manufacturers are wise in their generation. They do not want to sell at a low profit, but they simply want to shut out outside competition, and as soon as they get the duty increased, they raise their prices. There is one thing certain, the manufacturers cannot sell anything outside of Canada at any higher price; consequently it comes out of the consumer, and every increase of duty is in the same direction. A few years ago Sir Charles Tupper made some very fine promises to us as to what the iron duties would do. He told us of the large deposits of iron and coal and lime which we had in different parts of this country, and the prosperity that would come if we had a duty put on iron. He stated that this policy would give employment to at least 20,000 men, which would represent an increase in our population of from 80,000 to 100,000, and he expected an increase in the revenue of about \$500,000 a year from the increased duty on iron We have realised that increase of revenue; but what was the effect of the change? It was only a short time in operation when all the manufacturers of iron met in conclave and raised prices, so that for everything the farmer used into which iron entered, he had to pay more than before. Mention has been made of the depression of the farming community in the United States. I do not dispute that depression exists among the farmers of that country; but that is not a proof that free trade with the United States would not benefit our people, because we know that large quantities of our sheep and lambs and other products find a market at Buffalo and other points in the United States, and if the duty on them were removed, so much more would go into the pockets of our farmers. Then, some parts of the country are particularly well adapted to the growing of potatoes. A year ago potatoes were sold at 25 cents a bag, and shipped to the United States, where a duty of 22½ cents a bag was paid on them, so that the duty was within $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents per bag of the price of the potatoes, waile had the duty been off the price to the farmer would have been 47½ cents per bag, which would have been profitable considering the good crop of that year. There has also been a fresh duty put on fruit trees. The very best fruit trees in this country are those that come from the United States, and they are highly appreciated, but this duty will prevent our people buying those trees and planting them as they formerly did. It has been said by the hon, member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) that we should expend more money on immigration. But I entirely agree with the hon. Minister of Agriculture in reducing the immigration expenditure, and I have good reason for doing so, because I find from the report of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that when there was twice as much spent on immigration as we spend now, we had less immigrants; now they brought more money and goods with them, cost less, and were of a better class. that is the case, I think the hon. Minister of Agriculture ought to be congratulated on his efforts at making a reduction. I notice that during the last few years more immigrants have gone to Manitoba than formerly. This is because the railway monopoly has been done away with. Formerly, a man who took a farm in Manitoba, and raised a large quantity of grain, had to pay the railway companies most of the profit, and he got very little left; but now, when the railway monopoly exists no longer, we find more immigrants going into the country, they bring more money with them, and they are brought in at less expense. That is very gratifying. We are told that it is a magnificent country, and that it is making great strides. When that is the case, there will be plenty of immigration, because the greatest encouragements for immigration into that country are the favorable reports of the people themselves to their friends. Now, I wish to pay a little attention to the remarkable statement of the hon. President of the Council. That hon, gentleman is probably aware that the Government appointed Mr. Webster to visit Dakota, giving him a kind of roving commission to look after things in general, and he is certainly an expert delineator of desolation. I asked in the Committee if he knew anything of Valley City, Dakota, and he said not, that he had never seen it, so that I came to the conclusion he was looking out for the bad land and poor people to be found in Dakota. The statement of the President of the Council will go a long way to counteract that statement of Mr. Webster, for he informed us that the best lands could be got in Vermont for \$10 an acre. We must certainly put a good deal of dependency on the word of a Minister, and if the land, which he states, can be got in Vermont at \$10 an acre, is up to the standard for pasturage purposes, a person could sell 100 acres in Ontario, and, with the proceeds, purchase 400 acres in Vermont, on which he could raise sheep and sell them, saving the duty at 75 cents apiece more than they could be sold for in Canada, or he could go into the dairying business and realise larger prices in the New York market than he could in this country. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has any property in Vermont or not; but judging by his statements, he would be an excellent agent to induce people to leave this country and take up lands in Vermont and New Hampshire. He tells us:

"It is because we have given protection to our farmers in our markets, so that the products of the farm may be sold at fair prices in the local markets."

You would infer, Sir, from that statement that we can get higher prices in Canada than in the United States. I was curious to ascertain what the prices were in the different markets, and on referring to the Empire of 27th March, 1890, I found that wheat in Toronto was selling at 86c. to 87c., and in Buffalo, at 86c.; barley No. 1, in Toronto, at 50c.; barley, 63c. to 65c. in Buffalo; oats, 29c. to 30c. Toronto, and 281c. to 29c. Buffalo; but it must be borne in mind that there are two pounds less to the bushel in Buffalo than in Toronto. Pease, Toronto, 53c.; none quoted in Buffalo. But we find that corn is 35½c. in Buffalo; so that we could import corn at 35½c., which would make it 40c. in Toronto, and sell our pease at 53c., and our farmers would gain by the exchange. I believe we have nothing to fear from competition with the United States. The hon. gentleman has said that we stand in a better position because our farmers are protected. Sir, you cannot protect the farmers. They do not want protection; they are able to compete with the whole world, and we have to compete with the whole world whether we like it or not, and have to keep the infant spoonfed industries in existence besides. So that it is all nonsense to say the farmers are protected. The President of the Council went on to say :

President of the Council went on to say:

"That being the case, if we are not inundated and overwhelmed by the products of the United States coming into competition with the products of our farmers, it is due in a very large degree to the superior condition of the farmers in Canada to that of the farmers of the United States. Even now, does the hon. gentleman suppose that we for one moment could compete on even terms in the markets that are common to Canada and the United States, if we were one country? Can we produce corn as cheaply as they can? Can we produce the equivalent of corn as cheaply as they can? I say we cannot. Our barley is the equivalent to their corn for feeding purposes and is nearly as valuable. The introduction of their corn reduces our barley from an average of 50 to 40 cents a bushel. That would be the effect upon the coarse grains which the farmers do produce, and will produce, notwithstanding the high scientific farming that is coming by-and-bye. The effect of an intimate relation with the United States, of being upon even terms with them, would be to bring down the prices of our own coarse grains to the corn standard, and not only the coarse grains, but even the products of animals that are fed upon coarse grains. Our prices would be brought down to the corn standard of the United States, as against the barley standard of Canada, if we were brought down to a level with the United States. Their prices control our prices."

That is rather extraordinary, that their prices should control ours. Our prices are nearly the same as theirs and we have nothing to fear. In fact there are times when we can sell oats to the Americans, although there is a duty of 10 cents a bushel, and we have sent them pease, and I believe there is no reason why we should fear their competition. I heartily endorse the amendment of the hon, member for South Oxford, who goes on to say.

"That in fact the values of farm land have greatly diminished and the amount of mortgages thereon have been much increased throughout a very large portion of this Dominion since 1879."

It is a fact, judging from the sales I have heard of, that the value of the land has decreased about 35 per cent. We have been referred to the Bureau of Industries, in which an honest attempt has been made to arrive at the correct values, but the one essential element necessary in compiling these reports, namely, accurate information, is wanting. It is very easy to ask for reports as to the values of farms, and the owners will, no doubt, put on a good large value; but it is only when land is sold that its real value is arrived at. My experience in sales has been that the values of lands have decreased 35 per cent. during the last ten years. The rental of land in Wellington is about 5 per cent. of the value of the farm, so that a farm valued at $4,000 would be rented at $200, and if that farm increased in value so that the rental could be raised to $250 that would make the value of the farm $5,000; and any taxation the people have to pay takes from the value of the farm. you have an additional $50 to pay over five years, you reduce the value of a farm worth $4,000 or $5,000 by $1,000. This has been one reason why farm lands have decreased in value. I will read a short extract from a Kingston newspaper, which will give the House an idea of the condition of the people in that district, although if there is any place the sun shines on it ought to be Kingston which is so ably represented by the First Minister'.

"Doctors, Christian visitors, relief committees, and ministers, whose work lies among the poorer classes, all testify that such a time of distress as the present is almost unexampled. Our relief societies will need largely augmented funds for when there is sickness as well as poverty, none in want can be refused. Those who know what it is to have sickness in the house with plenty of beef tea, lemonade, and all the comforts of the sick-room at hand, can judge what it must be with an empty cupboard and almost empty stove. If you have not yet given your mite to our relief societies, send it in at once. If you have done so, make it more than a mite if you can. Instead of costly entertainments to rich neighbors, enjoy the pleasure of feeding the hungry, giving those who need no luxuries merely the higher pleasure of social reunion. Remember there are half-starved families all around you."

You see that there is a great deal of hardship in the old substantial city of Kingston, but it is left to a Conservative member to give the worst picture of the distress. Here are the remarks made by Mr. Blythe, a Conservative member in the Local House:

"Mr. Blythe spoke of the difficulties the settlers in Muskoka had to contend with, and remarked that the Government could not afford to desert them, for they were so poor they could not be taxed."

These were the words of a Conservative member. Hon. gentlemen say that we on this side draw a dark picture, but we must dissent from that. They have been the artists themselves, and we simply direct attention to it, and have drawn the picture, and they have the opportunity of knowing that at all events things have not changed for the better. The latter part of the resolution of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) reads as follows:—

Mr. SEMPLE.

"That the additional taxation which it is now sought to impose will still further increase the burthens of the people and is likely still further to aggravate the distress unhappily existing among a large portion of the farming population of this Dominion, and that under such circumstances it is the bounden duty of this House, instead of adding to the existing oppressive taxation, to apply itself to the reduction of the burdens now impeding the progress and prosperity of the principal producing classes of the Dominion, and for this purpose to abolish or reduce the taxes now imposed on articles of prime necessity to farmers, miners, fishermen and other producers."

This is strictly correct, and in accordance with a resolution passed by the Central Farmers' Institute of Ontario. Farmers from the different parts of Ontario met in Toronto to compare notes and to give expression to their views, and they put on record the statement that it was desirable that there should be a reduction of taxation "in such articles as iron, steel, coal, cottons, woollens, rubbers, sugars, corn and salt, to such an extent as to relieve the agriculturist of the unequal burden under which he is now laboring." Representing an agricultural constituency, I deem it my duty to point out the difficulties under which the agriculturists are laboring. One farmer told me not long ago that such hard times as prevailed now had not been known for forty years. Others say that they do not know what will become of the country if the McKinley Bill, now before the United States Congress, is carried out; they believe it will destroy the trade of this country. It is hard to foretell what will be the result of that, but if anything so disastrous should occur as the destruction of the trade between this country and the United States, the Liberal party will not be responsible for so deplorable a result. I hope that the Hitt Bill may be carried, and that the Government may appoint commissioners to see what can be done to bring about a result which would be so desirable to all classes.

Mr. WARD. At this late stage of the debate, I do not propose to detain the House at any great length, but I desire to offer a few observations upon that portion of the speech of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright)—who, I regret to see, is not now in his seat-in which he dealt with the mortgage indebtedness of the Province of Ontario. No one with any practical knowledge of this subject can regard the utterances of the hon. gentleman otherwise than as a slander upon the Province of Ontario and the Dominion at large. Statements of this nature, involving as they do attacks upon the prosperity of a magnificent Province, should not be made without reliable data. If the hon, gentleman intended to make a point against the Government—and, I think, it is not uncharitable to suggest that he might have such a motive-the sources of information from which he drew should have been very carefully selected. As the hon. gentleman stated, his sources of information were the statements received by him from the registrars of Ontario. From a practical knowledge of the registry laws of that Province, I am certain that no registrar can give any reliable figures upon which to found such statements. The registrars of Ontario can only furnish the information which appears upon their books, and that can only include the mortgages upon any particular property, and the amounts of such mortgages at a stated time. I do not intend to weary the House, by giving the reasons why they cannot give reliable information, because hon. gentlemen on this side have already gone into this subject very extensively, but I may have to refer casually to these reasons at a later stage. I will refer to some of the figures submitted by the hon. gentleman in his speech, as it appears in Hansard. He says:

"At this present moment the total assessed value of the entire Province of Ontario is something like $429,000,000, and it needs no great degree of calculation to see what a proportion such a mortgaged indebtedness as I have alluded to would involve."

I have no doubt the hon, gentleman had the opportunity of revising his speech before that statement went into Hansard, and, therefore, he is responsible for whatever mistake may have occurred. I have here a statement of the assessed values of fifteen cities and towns in Ontario, taken from the assessments of the past year, and I find that their aggregate assessed values amount to $232,405.778, and, as these are the only ones from which returns have been received, I think it is fair to estimate $40,000,000 for the rest of the cities and towns, which would make $272,000,000 of assessment for the cities and towns. Taking that from the assessed value of the Province, according to the hon. gentleman's statement, it would leave $157,000,000 as the total assessed value of the farms of Ontario. That is not correct, and cannot be, judging from a subsequent reference to this subject in his speech. According to this statement, the farms in Ontario are mortgaged for double their assessed value, or, according to another of the hon. gentleman's statements, half the farms in Ontario are mortgaged for four times their assessed value. That statement is not correct, for, in examining the report submitted by Mr. Blue, you will find that the total assessed value of the farms of Ontario is about what the hon, gentleman has stated as the assessed value of the entire Province of Ontario. The assessed value of half the farms of Ontario would, then, only be $214,000,000, subject to a mortgage indebtedness of $300,000,000. think that proposition would be equally absurd. Now, I wish to give a memorandum taken from the statements of the assessed value of the cities of Ontario for the year 1889, to show the difference between that and the assessed value of 1887, which is the latest given by the report of Mr. Blue. The assessed value of the cities of the Dominion for 1887 was $132,839,465; the assessed value for 1889 for the same cities amounts to $219,663,725. Surely that ought to give some comfort to the hon. gentleman, and lead him to suppose that we are not progressing in the wrong way, as his speech would appear to indicate. I can that the assessed value of the city of Toronto has just doubled in two years. Two years ago it was $69,469,969; last year it had attained the magnificent figure of $137,230,778, showing that the city of Toronto in 1889 had a higher assessed value than all the cities of Ontario in 1887. Now the hon, gentleman of Ontario in 1887. Now, the hon, gentleman gives the result of his researches in the registry offices of certain counties of Ontario. He shows that ten concessions have an average indebtedness of $96,000, and as a natural result each township in the Dominion has a mortgage indebtedness of $960,000, assuming ten concessions as an average for each township. Now, I have taken the trouble to get a return from the registrar of my own county, $2,760 per 100 acres. 95 and I do not believe that my county is any more prosperous than the other counties of the Dominion. I procured this return in order to satisfy myself that the country was not in the terrible condition that the figures of the hon. gentleman would appear to show. I wrote to the registrar asking him to give me the mortgages actually standing on the books for the fifth concession of each township and the return shows a very different state of affairs in my county from that which exists in the other counties as set forth by the hon. member for South Oxford. The indebtedness in my county amounts to an average of $69,671, or $27,000 less than the indebtedness which the hon. gentleman would make it appear exists all over the country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the length of the concession?

Mr. WARD. In two cases twenty-five lots, and in the others, thirty-five lots. They would average about the same as the hon. gentleman's figures with regard to acreage. In examining these statements sent to me by the registrar of East Durham, I find several cases where mortgages appear against property worth, perhaps, $8,000, amounting to a larger sum than the actual value of the property itself. There is one case of a property worth about $8,000, upon which there is one mortgage for $4,000, and another for $5,000; so it would appear on the books of the office that there were two mortgages of $9,000 altogether existing against that one property worth $8,000. Now, any one who is familiar with the dealings of loan companies, and with their mortgages, would be satisfied that the second mortgage of $5,000 is the only one unpaid upon that property. When a mortgage is taken by a loan company it is frequently the practice, and I can speak from personal experience, to get the previous mortgage, which they are paying off, dis-charged, place the discharge inside the mortgage, and file it away in their vaults with the other title deeds affecting the property. As a natural consequence there are two mortgages apparently existing against that property, whereas there is only one really unpaid and a charge upon the land. There are several mortgages of that kind in the statements furnished to me, but I will not detain the House by referring to more than one or two of them. There is one in which there are six mortgages against one lot, clearly showing that those six mortgages cannot possibly all be unpaid; some of them must have been discharged, and the discharges are in the hands of the loan company. I know from personal experience in examining titles that plenty of these cases occur; and from my knowledge of the payments which farmers in my section of the country have made during the past year, I have no hesitation in saying that this average indebtedness of $69,000 would be reduced by payments and by mortgages paid, but not discharged on the registry office books by fully 25 or 30 per cent.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Did you ascertain how much that would be for 100 acres?

Mr. WARD. No, I did not.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I noticed just now it was

Mr. WARD. The hon, gentleman can see these statements at any time he cares to look over them. I will give the hon, gentleman one or two circumstances which have come under my personal knowledge, in order that he may know more about these mortgages. In one case a farmer who was going to the North-West sold his farm for $6,500 to a neighbor, and the latter, desiring to purchase that property, borrowed the whole amount upon another farm belonging to him and the farm which he bought. That mortgage was created in order to buy property from one who was going to the North-West. There is a great number of these cases where men sell out and go to the North-West, and the mortgages thus created do not show any additional burden upon the people, but simply that the burden has shifted, and that the money has gone to the North-West for the benefit of men who intend to farm in that country. This will account for a large number of mortgages that are in existence in Ontario. Every county, I fancy, is situated somewhat as mine is, and a large number of its best men go to the North-West and take their money away with them; but this shifting of burdens, this removal of money from one part of the country to another, is not in any way an injury to the Dominion. Now, I can give the hon. gentleman a little more comfort with regard to the state of the Province; I refer to the reports of the different loan companies doing business in the Province of Ontario, and I think they afford a very fair index as to the condition of the farmers who are borrowing from them. The Home Savings and Loan Company report that $814,000 is invested in mortgages, and the payments during the past year have amounted to $95,000. The Guelph and Ontario Loan Company's report states:

"During the year, borrowers have met their payments very astisfactorily, and the company has no property on hand."

The Ontario Industrial and Loan Company report:

"Payments on loans have been very satisfactory." The Hamilton Provident and Loan Society report:

"Business eminently satisfactory. Loans, $3,476,456; repayments, $84,485."

The Ontario Loan and Deposit Company report:

"We have reason to be gratified with the character of payments by rural borrowers in a season of defective crops and low prices."

These are brief extracts from reports which appeared in the Monetary Times of 28th February and 7th March. I think the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) will find that the farmers of Ontario are a shrewd, thinking and reading people; that they are quite as capable of judging cause and effect as is the hon. gentleman himself, and I think that, with the exception of a very few who regard the hon. gentleman as an oracle on all questions relating to the well-being of the Dominion, those farmers will come to a different conclusion from that at which the hon. gentleman has arrived. I do not desire to detain the House longer, and, in conclusion, I will only add that I believe the Province of Ontario, so far from being in the state of depression which the hon. gentleman has pictured, is in a fairly prosperous condition on the whole, and the farmers as a class, contented and looking forward to a better state of affairs in the near future.

After Recess.

Mr. CAMERON. I rise, as no other hon. member appears to desire to take the floor at this early hour of the evening, to offer a few observations in reply to some remarks made by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) a few evenings ago. I do not suppose the hon, gentleman desired to mislead the House while discussing this question, but I feel that he himself must have been misled, otherwise he would not have made the assertions which fell from his lips. Discussing this question, and referring to the increases of duty on several articles, he came down to the question of flour and pork; and he said:

"They now propose an increase in certain articles of large consumption in the Maritime Provinces. Well, Sir, the Maritime Provinces have to pay the increase, We raise very little beef or pork there except in Prince We raise very little beef or pork there except in Frince Edward Island, where a good deal of pork is raised; and our hardy fishermen pursuing their hazardous and uncertain calling, our mechanics and laborers, and all classes which go to make up the general community will be called upon to contribute towards these half million dollars which this tax imposes. Our fishermen will pay $6a barrel on pork and beef, and at least $1 a barrel more on flour than they would have to pay if they could get it from the United States."

In answer to the question of the increase of the cost of pork in the Maritime Provinces, I may say, that in the county which I have the honor to represent, there is no difficulty at any time in securing first-class pork at from $8 to $10 a barrel, that our fishermen and mechanics in that part of the country can at all times secure pork at that reasonable figure. I cannot, therefore, understand how the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) could have come to the conclusion that this tariff would increase the price of pork in the Maritime Provinces by $6 a barrel. It, also, must not be forgotten, that Prince Edward Island produces more pork than is required for home consumption in the Province of Nova Scotia, and a great deal more pork than we import from outside; in fact, very little is imported into Nova Scotia from outside, and it can be raised as cheaply in the Maritime Provinces, including Prince Edward Island, as in any other part of the Dominion. The hon. gentleman went on further to say:

"Some say the flour will be no dearer, and the hon-the Minister of Finance, the other day, in his desire to make it pleasant on both ends of the Dominion, assured us that his increase of 25 cents would make flour no dearer in the Maritime Provinces. If it does not make it dearer in the Maritime Provinces, I fail to see what advantage is going to accrue to the millers of Ontario and the West."

The explanation is a very simple one. The object of the Ontario farmers and millers is simply to retain the home market, and if they can secure that market for themselves at a figure as low as the figures at which the goods can be imported from the United States, there must be great gain to the millers and farmers of Ontario. The hon, gentleman went on further to say :

"Their object is to keep out the American flour, and if this tax does not keep out the American flour, then, of course, they have no advantage."

That is certainly an erroneous idea, because, as I have already stated, if they have the market of Canada secured to themselves by this tariff, it must be a great advantage to the Ontario farmers. The hon. gentleman, referring further, said:

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair. have admitted, that while this tax might, under cartain Mr. WARD.

circumstances, not always cause an increase directly, still, indirectly, from the nature of our position, and from the nature of our position, and from the nature of our trade with the United States, there must always naturally be a very considerable difference between the price of our flour and that of the United States. The hon. Minister asked me what difference this tax would make on flour, and I answered trankly, $1 abarrel. I will prove to him, I think, how that is. The Island of Newfoundland is a large consumer of flour, and Conservative authorities in Halifax have said to us: 'Why, look at Newfoundland; they have no duty, and the American flour enters Newfoundland on precisely the same terms as the Canadian flour does,' I confess that, when I began to consider it in that light, it did strike me as singular that, with both American and Canadian flour entering on the same terms, the people of Newfoundland should get so much flour from Canada as was stated to be the case. I, therefore, took the trouble to write to one of the largest flour importers of Newfoundland, and this is his reply:

"We think the whole import of Canadian flour in 1890."

write to one of the largest nour importers of Newloand-land, and this is his reply:

"We think the whole import of Canadian flour in 1889 did not exceed 10,000 barrels out of 278,000 barrels im-ported. Out of about 100,000 barrels which we and the bakery in which we are interested imported, not over 6,000 barrels were Canadian."

Now, Sir, I have before me the last sessional papers from Newfoundland, which show conclusively that the information furnished to the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) was erroneous; in the first place, because the Government of Newfoundland does impose a duty on flour, and secondly, because the import of Canadian flour is very much larger than the hon. gentleman's correspondent represented. In the earlier part of that year, 28,000 barrels of flour were imported into Newfoundland from the United States, at a duty of 25 cents a barrel, and at the latter part of the season, 24,599 barrels were imported from the United States. In the latter part of that same year, at a low duty, 184,452 barrels of Canadian flour were imported, and during that year a very large quantity of Canadian flour was imported into Newfoundland, more, in fact, than was imported from the United States, and yet the statement made by the hon. member for Halifax was that only 10,000 barrels of Canadian flour were imported into Newfoundland that year. That is unquestionably, to say the least, an erroneous statement. I would like to know if my hon. friend, the senior member for Halifax, would like to have the Newfoundland tariff, which he calls a free trade tariff, applied to the poor fishermen, to the poor mechanics, and to the poor farmers of the Maritime Provinces? The tariff of Newfoundland is, in fact, so very similar to the tariff which was in operation during the Mackenzie Administration in the Dominion of Canada, that I am not at all astonished that he would be enamoured with it, but I quite disagree with him, that the farmers, the fishermen or the mechanics of the Maritime Provinces would tolerate any such tariff, as compared with the tariff which now exists in the Dominion of Canada. The fishermen of the Maritime Provinces have, for instance, their lines and twines for the fisheries free; they have salt imported for sea or Gulf fisheries free; iron for vessels free (by drawback). They have all articles ex-warehouse for ship stores, for all isheries free; they have wire rigging for vessels free, they have tea and coffee free, and practically, now, they have molasses free. In addition to that they have the products of their fisheries protected by the National Policy, in other respects by the imposition of duties on fish of all kinds imported in the Dominion of Canada. Now laters are like the Navigued and of Canada. Now let us apply the Newfoundland shall now quote a person who is looked upon as a tariff, which is a so-called free trade tariff, to the articles consumed by the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces, and we will see what will follow. find that coffee, which is free under our National Policy tariff, is taxed in Newfoundland 5 cents a pound for green coffee and 7 cents a pound for roasted coffee. Molasses, which under our new tariff will be only taxed one and a half cent a gallon, is taxed 7 cents a gallon in Newfoundland, or more than 400 per cent. greater than is the duty on it in Canada. We find that tea is taxed in Newfoundland 20 per cent. ad valorem and 6 cents per pound specific duty, while it is free in Canada; we find, also, that anchors and cables, copper and composition metals for ships, including bars, bolts, sheathing and nails of the same material, canvas, sail-cloth and tarpaulin, canvas for ships' use, cordage, rope and hemp and manila cables, corks and cork wood, fishing tackle and salt are all well taxed in Newfoundland, while they are free in Canada, when used by the fishermen. I would like to know if my hon. friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) would consent to have that free trade policy of Newfoundland, or the revenue tariff policy of the former Government of Canada, applied to the poor fishermen, to the poor farmers and to the poor mechanics of the Maritime Provinces? The present tariff system is so admirably adapted to the county which I have the honor to represent, and, I believe, to the farming industries all over the Dominion, that I did not feel it was necessary to say a word on the question, except for the purpose of correcting the very erroneous statements which were made by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones). That hon, gentleman maintained that the price of flour will be increased $1 a barrel by the new tariff, and he puts words in the mouth of the hon, member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) which misled that hon. gentleman to believe that the price of flour would be increased by the present tariff by $1.45. The hon, member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) in his speech, said:

"My hon, friend the senior member for Halifax has handed me a memorandum showing that the duty on flour is 75 cents, and the freight for carrying it on the North Shore is 70 cents, making a total of $1.45."

This statement, to say the least, is misleading, because I believe we can purchase Canadian flour in the Maritime Provinces at a shade lower price than it is sold in any section of Canada. That may seem strange, but flour is an article that has an intrinsic value, and the millers know it. They place flour in the Maritime Provinces at wholesale figures, at a lower rate than they ask in the home market. That may seem strange to those who have not enquired into trade questions of this kind, but I can assure the House, that just in the same way, fish can be purchased at a lower price in the city of Halifax than it can in the counties where fishing is carried on. There is a home price for fish, and there is also a market price. home price for the twenty-eight years in the fishing sections of the Dominion has not changed, to my knowledge, to any extent whatever, while the market price has invariably changed to a greater or lesser extent. As an authority against my hon. friend the senior member for Halifax, in reference to the probability of an increased price of flour, I good authority, namely, Mr. W. W. Ogilvie, of Montreal. In an interview with the Montreal Star he said:

"The increase of the duty on American flour simply removes the greatest anomaly of the Canadian protective tariff. It puts a stop to the collection of a higher duty on the raw material than on the manufactured article, but it does not yet place the Canadian miller in a fair way to compete with the Americans, who are protected by an advalorem duty on flour of 20 per cent, amounting to about a dollar a barrel. We ask the Dominion Government to give us the same protection, but this addition of 25 cents a barrel as against the American miller's dollar. The change places exactly the same duty on American flour as is charged on American wheat. To give you an idea of the utter absurdity of the old arrangement, I need only tell you an incident in the history of our own firm. We brought in American wheat to make 1,000 barrels of flour at the same time that a merchant ment. I need only tell you an incident in the history of our own firm. We brought in American wheat to make 1,000 barrels of flour at the same time that a merchant imported 1,000 barrels of American flour. To get our wheat out of bond we had to pay $650 in duties, while the merchant had to pay only $500 for his American flour. In 1878, when the Canadian crop was short, we millers had actually to shut down our mills and bring in American flour; if such a contingency should occur again we shall be able to import American wheat. This change, however, practically gives the Canadian miller no protection, for this reason: The Americans have their through out rates of freight so arranged that the low rates obtained by the western American miller pay three-quarters of the present duty."

"How will the price of flour to the consumer be affected?"

"Not at all. There appears to be a general impression abroad that we shall put up the price of flour at once, but I can assure you the prices will not be advanced a single cent. We have had numerous enquiries from all parts of the country asking us what the rise would be, and to all I have replied as I do to you. Here is a telegram I have just sent to Hall & Fairweather, of St. John, N.B., the largest produce firm in the Maritime Provinces, offering to sell them twenty carloads of flour at yesterday's prices."

This proves conclusively that the existing tariff does not increase the price of flour, the object being merely to secure the Canadian market for the Canadian miller and the Canadian farmer. not my intention, as I have stated, to speak at all on this question, and I would not have done so but for the misleading statements made by my hon. friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) who I am glad to see now in his place, and I am sure I would have very great pleasure in having my hon. friend come down to Inverness and meet me on the platform and deliver the same speech in that fine agricultural county which he has delivered in this House. If nothing else would secure my re-election, such a speech as that would certainly do it.

Mr. BARRON. It is, Sir, because the amendment of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is designed particularly to benefit the farmers of this country, and because the proposals from the other side of the House are calculated as far as possible to help the onward progress of hon, gentlemen opposite in their efforts to make this country a dear country to live in, that I deem it my duty, at this late hour of the debate, to rise from my seat and give my views on this very important question. It is neither my intention nor my inclination to enforce any of my arguments by giving statistical information. A vast amount of such information has been given by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House; but I do think that any fair-minded man, hearing the information given and the arguments advanced during this debate from this side of the House, must come to the conclusion that the farmers of this country have been compelled, in the past, to sell almost everything they Mr. CAMERON.

have had to sell in the cheapest possible market, and to buy everything they have had to buy in the dearest possible market. I had not the pleasure of hearing the hon, member for East Durham (Mr. Ward) this afternoon, as, unfortunately, I was absent; but I am told that with simulated indignation he questioned the figures given in this House a few nights ago by the hon. member for South Oxford. I am told that he argued that so unreliable were those figures that the hon. member for South Oxford could not have got them from the registry offices at all, and yet the hon. gentleman, in the very next breath, produced, figures which he said he himself had got from the registry office. It does appear to me very extraordinary that hon. gentlemen opposite will persist, speech after speech, in questioning the figures given by the hon. member for South Oxford with regard to the mortgage indebtedness of this country, while they studiously refrain from accepting the challenge from this side of the House, given by the hon. member for South Oxford, to grant a committee of enquiry to ascertain the true state of the facts. So long as they will not accept that challenge, it is unfair and unmanly in them to keep reiterating the statement that the hon. member's figures are not correct. So far as my information goes, I beg to corroborate those figures; I took the trouble of verifying them with regard to two of the best townships in my county, and I can say that so far as that particular locality is concerned, they are literally correct.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. BARRON. Some hon. gentleman says no. Perhaps he knows my county better than I do myself. That is just like hon, gentlemen opposite: they talk about things they know nothing about; they assume everything. They have never been in my county; yet when I state that which I know from actual research, they say no. Now, we are a surplus-producing country, which nobody can deny, and so long as that is the case, the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite is a bad and a wicked one for the farmers. The hon. Finance Minister cannot deny that we are a surplus-producing country, and with that admission out of his own mouth comes the condemnation of his own policy. So long as we produce a surplus, we must sell that surplus in the cheap markets abroad, and our farmers must buy what they require in the dear market which we have at home. Now, I want to ask the House to allow me to read a few passages from an article written by a very celebrated man on the other side of the line—a man at the head of the Democratic party of the United States, who I believe was at one time speaker of the House of Representatives; that is, Mr. John J. Carlisle. The article is headed: "The Tariff and the Farmer," and is contained in the Forum for January, 1890; and as it applies to the farmers of this country as well as to those of the United States, I will ask the kind attention of the House while I read it:

"Unless a commodity can be sold here for a higher price than it can be sold for in the country where it is produced; it will not be brought here; nor will an article be exported from this country for sale abroad unless the price there is higher than it is here. If the farmers of the United States would recognise the truth of whese self-evident propositions, they would see at once that the protective system, whatever may be its effect upon other classes of producers, cannot possibly increase the prices of the articles they have to sell, because without it they could have no foreign competition in their home market, and with it they cannot escape the most severe competi-tion in the foreign markets where they must sell their

and with it they cannot escape the most severe competition in the foreign markets where they must sell their surplus.

"And in this connection it must not be forgotten that the prices of all the principal agricultural products which the farmer sells at home, are fixed in the free markets abroad where he sells his surplus, while the prices of nearly all the things he has to buy are fixed in the protected markets here, and are largely increased by the total or partial exclusion of foreign competition and by reason of the unnecessary taxes imposed upon the materials used in their production. The fact that the home prices of such articles as we produce in excess of the home demand and therefore export to other countries, are fixed in the foreign ports where they are sold, is admitted by every intelligent protectionist; but if it were denied it could be easily established by a simple reference to the daily market reports in the newspapers. This is a most important fact for the consideration of farmers, and yet the protectionists generally ignore it entirely when they undertake to show the great value of the home market which, they allege, their policy has furnished for agricultural products.

"It must be admitted, however, that if the farmer had a sufficient home market for all his products—that is, a market in which the demand was equal to, or in excess of, the supply, so as to enable him to exercise some influence in fixing the prices—he would be in a far better condition than he is now; but it is certain that a century of protection, in a greater or less degree, to the owners of mines and manufacturing establishments, has not secured such a market for him, and the question he has now to decide is whether he will continue to tax himself for an mines and manufacturing establishments, has not secured such a market for him, and the question be has now to decide is whether he will continue to tax himself for an indefinite period in the future, in order that the impossibility of success may be thoroughly demonstrated. Finding himself at the end of a hundred years compelled to export a larger percentage of his products than at the beginning, it would seem that no argument ought to be necessary to convince him that he has been the voluntary victim of a nolicy which guarantees a home market and victim of a policy which guarantees a home market and high prices for the producers of the articles he has to buy, and leaves him to get such prices as he can in the open markets of the world for the articles he has to sell."

Then he goes on to say:

"While protection cannot, for the reasons stated, increase the prices of our domestic agricultural products, it does largely increase the prices of a great part of the manufactured articles which the farmer is compelled to buy and use. It is clear, that the purchaser and consumer of an imported article must pay, not only the original cost abroad and the whole amount of the duty, but also the profits of the dealers on that cost and the duty: and it is equally clear, that this enables the domestic manufacturer of the same kind of article to add the whole, or at least a large part, of the duty to the price of his article. This is the sole object of a protective tariff. When the price of a commodity is so low here that our manufacturers cannot profitably produce it, they immediately demand the imposition of a duty, or an increase of the duty if one already exists, in order that they immediately demand the imposition of a duty, or an increase of the duty if one already exists, in order that the consumer may be compelled by law to pay them such a bonus upon their investment as will enable them to commence or to continue the business as the case may be. For instance, there are no tim or terne plates made in this country, but we import all we use, although they are subject to a duty or tax of $22.40 per ton. Notwithstanding this duty, the prices prevailing here are so low that our manufacturers say they cannot afford to produce that class of goods. They are, therefore, demanding that the duty shall be more than doubled, because, they know that this would so increase the prices here as to enable them to go into the manufacture of the article, and realise a profit at the expense of the farmers and other consumers of their product. consumers of their product.

"It would not be difficult to show by a citation of authentic reports of the markets here and in other countries, that, in almost every instance, the domestic producers of protected articles have added the whole, or a large part, of the duty to the foreign prices of the same kind of articles, and thus forced the farmers to pay millions of dollars more every year for their clothing, medicines, paints, glass, salt, earthenware, agricultural implements, board and wire fences, barns and other buildings, waggons, harness and other necessaries, than they would have been required to pay if the duties had not been imposed, or had been properly adjusted and fixed at a reasonable revenue rate."

These are the words of a great map and a great

dition of things in this country to-day. But we are told that, because the prices upon some of the articles which the farmers consume are less to-day than they were in the year 1878, protection must be a good thing. That is a most fallacious argument. It has been used, I believe, by the hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Ward), but it is perfectly preposterous, because all such articles are much cheaper to-day in the foreign markets, and were it not for the excessive duties to which they are subjected every one of them would be cheaper in Canada to-day than they are. Let me illustrate that, although it is hardly necessary to do so, the proposition being plain. However, we hear that argument advanced in the country and supported by hon. gentlemen opposite, that, because some things are cheaper now than in 1878, protection must be a good thing, and I wish to illustrate its absurdity by one or two figures relating to steel rails. These figures are taken from the same authority I quoted a few minutes In 1871, in the United States, steel rails were quoted at $91.80 per ton; and we are told what a grand thing protection is, because in 1882 the price per ton was reduced to $57. But those who so argue are careful not to tell the people that in England the price per ton had been reduced in 1882 to $31.10, while in the United States it had only been reduced to $57. The following table will show the unnecessary burden imposed upon the American people by their tariff upon this single article during a period of twelve years, from 1871 to 1882, inclusive :-

But we are told, notwithstanding all this, that the farmer is prosperous and ought not to com-plain of his lot, because his lot is as good as it ought to be-that while the manufacturers, forsooth, may come down to Ottawa and complain about their condition, the farmers ought not to complain because their condition is good enough. On behalf of the farming community in my constituency, I resent such a statement. If I forget not, the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) the other night tried to convince this House that the farmers were satisfied and contented with their condition, and that the statement of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) regarding the state of the farmers was entirely incorrect, and his information unreliable. Yet, on that very day, the Grand Jury of the County of Simcoe, where, I believe, the hon. gentleman lives, made a presentment to the Judge of Assize on that occasion, and this is what the farmers in the hon. gentleman's own county state:

"We feel that our agricultural community should have legislation to help them out of their financial difficulties, as, it appears to us, that, if there is not something done along that line, it will soon become a matter of landlord and tenant; and, whereas, the chartered loan companies now in the Province get the bulk of their money from the old country at a very low rate of interest, and re-loan it at a high rate, that the Government might do something toward relieving this difficulty."

I will leave the hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) to settle with the farmers in his own county, who represent that state of things directly opposed to what he himself led the House to believe. But what is the other defence that hon, gentlemen opposite are driven into? When we endeavor, as is our bounden duty, to point out the condition of this country, hon. gentlemen opposite are driven to make the charge that we are decrying our coun-They seem to think, so egotistical are they, that they are the country, and that, when we attack them, we are attacking the country. We live in the grandest country the sun ever shone upon. I had time at my disposal I could show that the crops per acre in the Province of Ontario are greater in the last five years than in any State of the Union. I refrain from that, but I state that there is no State in the Union to be compared with the Province of Ontario, and that we have the best country in the world.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And the worst Government.

Mr. MASSON. In the Province.

Mr. BARRON. But, what did hon. gentlemen opposite say, when they were in Opposition, prior to 1878. At that time, this country, like all other countries, was passing through a period of depression; but I want to read the statement of Sir Charles Tupper, in which he relieved the then Government of Mr. Mackenzie of responsibility for the condition of the country. Speaking at Millbrook in October, 1877, Sir Charles Tupper said :

Now I do not say, -I have never said on the floor of "Now I do not say,—I have never said on the floor of the House or on the public platform—that this great and unhappy change which has taken place over the whole face of Canada, as respects the condition of the people, is entirely due to the present Government. I have never pretended, for a moment—and I do not now pretend—that there have not been causes outside of anything that any Government could do that would largely tend to bring about such a result."

Now, notwithstanding these words, with marvellous agility, the hon. gentleman swallows himself, for, speaking in the House, he said :

"The policy the Government has pursued has had the effect of depopulating the country. It has sent away the most skilled and intelligent labor, the finest sons of Canada, to a foreign country to obtain employment their own country denies them." own country denies them.

It is all right for hon. gentlemen opposite, when they are on this side of the House, to make statements of that kind; but it is all wrong for us. In the same way, we find Sir Charles Tupper further reported in the Hansard of 1878 (page 448) to have said:

"Well, Sir, what has the hon, gentleman to propose in the present disastrous state of affairs? What has he to propose in view of the suffering industries of this country? What has the hon, gentleman to propose by which the present depressed state of things in this country may be changed, or the people inspired with the slightest hope for the better?"

Mr. BARRON.

And further he draws a picture of the people in a state of absolute starvation. Then, what does the hon. gentleman who now leads the House say, and he is the one member who is always specially charging members on this side of the House with crying "blue ruin." He is the member who should set the example for that side and this side to follow. In 1878, he said:

"We have no work-people: our work-people have gone off to the United States. They are to be found employed in the Western States, in Pittsburg, and, in fact, in every place where manufactures are going on. These Canadian artisans are adding to the strength, to the power, and to the wealth of a foreign nation instead of adding to ours. Our work-people in this country, on the other hand, are suffering for want of employment. Have not their cries risen to Heaven? Has not the hon, the Premier been surrounded and besieged, even in his own Department, and on his way to his daily duties, by suffering artisans who keep crying out: 'We are not begars, we only want an opportunity of helping to support ourselves and our families.'

These are the words of hon. gentlemen opposite at that time, showing to the world, and especially to the United States, how the people were, as they stated, leaving this country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Deputy Minister, Mr. Lowe, at that time, said it was not true.

Mr. BARRON. I am reminded by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Landerkin) that Mr. Lowe said that statement was not correct. At Sweetsburg, the Premier said in 1877:

"It grieved me to the soul as a Canadian when in Sherbrooke the other day to be told that there in that beautiful and rising city, which had grown, in my recollection, from a village to a town, and from a town to a city, that the population had actually decreased under the malign influence of the present Government and that the young men and young women who had gone into factories there, unable to support themselves and unwilling to be a burden to their parents, were obliged to expatriate themselves and add to the strength and prosperity of the United States."

It must grieve the right hon, gentleman still more in his soul now, because since 1881 the population of Sherbrooke has decreased from 12,221 to 10,477.

Mr. DAVIN. How do you get at the figures?

Mr. BARRON. I take the figures for 1881 from the census of Canada. Vol. I, page 403. the figures for 1888 from the municipal statistics of the Province of Quebec for 1889, page 122. Then, further, see how the Premier cried "blue ruin" in 1878. Speaking at Toronto on the 30th July, in that year, he said:

"Is not our population leaving this country? (Cries of "Is not our population leaving this country? (Cries of 'Yes.') Are not the young men actually going to the United States? Oh yes, it is said 'make this a cheap country to live in.' Gentlemen, this will be a cheap country to live in when property becomes valueless, when you can buy land for next to nothing, when a man finds himself poorer every year in consequence of the shrinkage in the value of all kinds of goods. Why, there has already been a flow of population out of this country. The skill, energy and enterprise of the country are leaving Canada and going to other countries where such energy, and skill. and going to other countries where such energy, and skill, and enterprise are better rewarded and protected than in this country."

Then at Montreal he said:

Our credit was good in England, in the United States, and all the world over; but, gentlemen, what do we see now? Instead of confidence there is distrust, instead of solvency, look at the Official Gazettes, and every Saturday they show a long string of insolvencies. Look at our manufactories closed. Look around you, and you see our manufactories closed. Look around you, and you see the horny hands of toil asking leave to labor. They are now beggars, they do not desire to have silver spoons placed in their mouths, but they desire to have a fair day's wages for a fair day's work. (Loud cheering.) But what do we see? We see them drifting off to the United States: we see the skilled artisan, the strong-handed roung men of Canada, and the active young women of Lower Canada, drifting off to Lowell, to New Hampshire, to Maine, to Connecticut, adding to the wealth, to the power and the strength of a foreign nation, and depleting poor unfortunate Canada."

Now, I ask, in the words of my hon. friend beside me: Could there ever be a picture of greater ruin than that drawn by the hon. member himself? And yet when we on this side of the House point to a similar state of things for which the Government opposite are positively responsible, we are charged with crying blue ruin. The state of things existing prior to 1878, on the statement of Sir Charles Tupper himself, which I have read from his speech at Millbrook, was one for which the Government of that day was in no way re-sponsible. I might proceed almost ad libitum reading statements to a similar effect by the Premier and by the Postmaster General. I wish to refer before I close to the extraordinary statement made the other night by the President of the We have been told time and again that we on this side of the House pictured affairs on the other side of the line, in too favorable a light, that we ought not to applaud the Americans as some But what did the President of people justly do. the Council say the other night? Speaking of the State of Vermont, in answer to an hon. gentleman from this side of the House, the President of the Council, speaking for the Government, said:

"If he tells you of these beautiful pastures, those hillside pastures in Vermont, which are unsurpassed in any part of this continent for dairy purposes, for pure water, for luxuriant feed, if he says we have better pastures in Canada than those for dairy purposes, I tell him he does not know Vermont as well as I do."

 $\mbox{Mr.}$ LANDERKIN. He has gone into the immigration service of the United States.

Mr. BARRON. Let it be understood now by the farmers of the country that at last the Government have expressed themselves beyond any possible doubt upon the question of reciprocity in natural products. We have the statement of the President of the Council the other night to that effect, and let it go from end to end of our land, especially amongst the farming population, that the Government have stated distinctly, through that hon. gentleman, that they are not in favor of reciprocity in natural products, and that in face of the remarks of Sir Charles Tupper and of the Premier himself regarding such a policy. I will merely content myself with asserting that Sir Charles Tupper, when speaking in this House in 1878, page 465 of Hansard, expressed an entirely different opinion; I content myself with saying that the President of the Council himself, when speaking in this House in 1878, page 1047 of Hansard, spoke in an entirely different strain. What did the Premier himself say, speaking at Park Hill on 3rd July, 1878:

"The feeling in 1865, however, was very strong in favor of doing everything in our power in order to induce the Americans to renew the treaty. The Government did everything it could, and while its members were exerting themselves in that direction it would have been a suicidal course—it would have been thwarting the very purpose in view—if they had increased the taxes at that time even to inaugurate a national policy. Because the Americans could have said: 'How can we give you a Reciprocity Treaty when you are increasing the duties on our goods?' Therefore, from year to year, so long as there was any hope of a renewal of the treaty, Canada declined to raise a larger revenue than was absolutely necessary to carry on the Government."

Now, these words ought to satisfy this House and the country that the Premier knows perfectly well that increasing the duties on imported articles, as against the Americans, is calculated to delay our chances of reciprocity. I say, that reading these speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, they are today utterly inconsistent with their past utterances. I was surprised when the member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) was speaking, to hear the Postmaster General applaud him; I was surprised to see that hon. gentleman look particularly pleased when the member for Hamilton spoke about savings banks deposits, and argued that this country was prosperous because savings banks deposits were greater now than they were a few years ago. not acknowledge that consequence to follow. what did the Postmaster General say in 1878, speaking of what an hon. gentleman had said before him, alluding to the large amount of money in the banks as a proof that the country was prosperous? The present Postmaster General then said:

"The hon, gentleman had alluded to the large amount of money in the banks as proof that the country was now prosperous; but, on the contrary, this was always evidence of depression in commerce and in manufactures. When commerce was active and manufactures were flourishing, people did not deposit their money in the banks, but, instead, invested it in manufactures. Consequently, the argument which the hon, gentleman made use of in this relation was true in a sense opposite to that in which he intended."

I think the time has come for the people of this country to call a halt in the way the Government are managing our affairs. It is perfectly true, and no one can deny it, that the Government are, I may say, the abject slaves of the manufacturers of Time and again the manufacturers our country. have come down here, and hon, gentlemen opposite dare not refuse them their request. Why? Because they know that prior to every general election a certain very prominent member of the Government goes up to the Queen's Hotel in Toronto, and there has a consultation with the leading manufacturers, and the result puts them in such an extraordinary position that on the eve of every general election the manufacturers are able to come down here and ask the Government to do that which will benefit them at the expense of the general consumers of this country. Sir, I say that hon. gentlemen opposite are managing the affairs of this country not for the many but for the few, they are regarding the classes and not the masses, and inasmuch as the amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford is in the interest of the masses, I shall gladly give it my support.

Mr. MASSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt, at this late hour of the debate, to follow the hon. gentleman who has just sat down in all the various statements and arguments he has chosen to address to this House. It would be, to a great extent, a waste of time to follow many of the old arguments that were worn thread-bare years ago, and I only rise on this occasion, late as it is in the debate, to express my satisfaction with the tariff changes that have been proposed and made. I feel it my duty to express that satisfaction, for the reason that I represent a riding that will most decidedly be benefited by these changes. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat quoted from a presentation by a grand jury, wherein they asked that legislation be enacted to assist the farmers; and while that was being done, this Government has been introducing legislation that will most decidedly benefit the farmers of this country. The increased duty on pork and on fresh meat, on cattle and hogs, and on flour, will all tend most decidedly to the advancement of the farmers' interest. We have only to compare the prices of these products in the American market and in our own market to see exactly the posi-tion these markets occupy. We do not require to go back to 1878 or 1882, but simply to look at the markets of to-day, and we find that in the great western market, I refer to Chicago, the price of pork during the last two years has ranged from $2.50 to $3 below the prices in Toronto and in the towns bordering on Lake Huron and Georgian Bay. The cost of delivering it there is but trifling, and, except for the duty, our farmers during the last year would not have received within $2 of the price they obtained. During the years the Canadian Pacific road was being built along the shores north of Lake Superior and Georgian Bay, a large quantity of fresh meat was sent to that district from the portion of the Province in which my constituency Owen Sound was one of the principal ports for shipping cattle to supply fresh meat to the men employed in building that railway, and, but for the duty, not one bullock would have been sent there; and now, since the road has been built, and since means have been arranged whereby fresh meat in a frozen state can be sent there, that market, increasing as it is every year by the opening up of the mineral districts, by the establishment of towns and villages along the route requiring such products, is occupied by American fresh meat coming in, and during the last few winters the whole supply taken into the country in the fall was obtained from the American side. I hold, therefore, that to the western portion of Ontario this increase of duty on fresh meats will be a decided and appreciated boon. The hon, gentleman who has just taken his seat, said that the farmers were asking for legislation. But did the hon. gentleman or any of his friends on that side of the House propose any means that will increase the price of the products of the farmers? Not at all. They propose reciprocity with the United States, free trade with the United States, commercial union, call it what you like, the free importation of American products. That is what they propose to do for the benefit of the farmers, who, they say, are now suffering from low prices; while a comparison of prices to-day, not to speak of prices in 1878, 1882 or 1886, will show that, except for duty, the price of grain in Ontario would be, on an average, 10 cents a bushel less than it is at the present time. I will not detain the House by giving many figures to show that fact; but the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) referred to some figures and gave quotations for 1878 and and 1889, which, unfortunately, I will have to show to be inaccurate. I do not consider it necessary to refute these statements in themselves, but to show that the comparison I wish to make is a correct one. The hon, gentleman said: Mr. Masson.

FARMERS' PRICES. t. Barley. Ry

Oct. 1, 1878...$1.10 to 1.24 50 to 65 63e. 70 to 73 36 to 38 do 1, 1889... 0.81 to 0.90 40 to 50 52 to 53 53½ to 00 25½ to 27 There was an absolute statement made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), setting forth that, because the prices were less in 1879 than in 1889, that was an argument against the National Policy. To use the language of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barron), it was a most fallacious argument. Whether the prices are lower or higher, is of very little material moment, for it is a comparison of prices that shows the position. I say I shall have to refute these prices, not from any desire to refute them, but in order to make my comparison. I think the hon, gentleman made a mistake in taking 1878, and he should have taken 1883, the figures for which year would have answered the purposes of his argument equally as well as those of 1878, and, therefore, I do not impute a wilful, but an accidental error, in giving the figures for 1878. In order to show the exact state of affairs, I will quote from the Globe, which hon, gentlemen opposite will admit is a pretty fair authority. From that journal I find in the table of prices of 1st October, 1878, not wheat from $1.10 to $1.24 as stated by the hon. gentleman opposite, but from 85 to 90 cents. But, in order to follow the matter out, I will quote the language of the Globe at length. It is as follows:

"October 1st, 1878. Toronto—About 2,000 bushels of wheat, fall wheat bringing 85 cents to $1.01." Instead of from $1.10 to $1.24, as stated by the hon. gentleman—

"Spring wheat from 70 cents to 97 cents."

As the hon, gentleman does not say these are Toronto prices, I refer also to the Montreal Spring is given at \$1.01 to 1.02. But the hongentleman does not even say it is in Montreal, perhaps he does not mean it is in Canada, but I refer to New York, and I find the following quotations on 1st October, 1878: "Wheat, dull, sales 56,000 bushels, No. 2 red, cash, \$1.07 $\frac{1}{2}$; that he is evidently mistaken in the prices he has taken; and, I believe, he must have founded his figures on the quotations for 1883. The argument my hon, friend tried to draw is wonderfully weakened by this misquotation. I find that in quoting oats at from 36 to 38 cents, he evidently made a similar mistake, for on that same day he referred to, they were given in Toronto at 27 cents, and in Chicago at 19 cents, or about two-thirds the price he quoted. It was not, as I have said, to refute these figures that I referred to them, but in order to compare the prices in this country with the prices outside. We are told the great American nation, this producing people of 60,000,000, is our natural market, and that if this tariff wall were only thrown down, we would be able to send all our grain across the line, and get better prices. I would like to know where we would sent it to? Certainly not to Chicago, because there the price ranges from 10 to 12 cents lower than in Canada; and certainly not in New York, because for the last two years in that city the prices have been lower than in the city of Toronto. I will quote to the House the comparative prices of wheat and oats during October,

1889, in Toronto, New York and Chicago. They are as follows:—

We find that the advantage of price in wheat is all in favor of Canada, and it is the same with oats, as between Toronto and Chicago, which is the market for oats, which we have especially to dread. We find that oats was from 10 to 13 cents higher in Toronto during the same month than in Chicago. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is certain from all these comparisons that the legislation proposed by hon, gentlemen opposite would not benefit the farmers of this country in that direction. I will not attempt to follow the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barron) in his quotations from speeches made by the right hon. Premier in 1878, and from the speeches of the hon. the President of the Council, because I am willing to admit that in 1878, it was generally conceded and generally believed, that reciprocity in farm produce would be of advantage to us, and many of those who took part in the political discussions of 1878, took it upon the square ground that reciprocity in tariff was better than a one-sided free trade. Why was was better than a one-sided free trade. this the case? It was because in these hard times, people turned their eyes back to the good times that had been, during the years we had had reciprocity, and they were very apt at a casual glance to believe that these good times then passed away, were caused by reason of reciprocity. They forgot that in the first of the reciprocity years we had the Russian war; they forgot that immediately following the Russian war we had the East Indian mutiny, and that immediately following that again, we had the American civil war. All these wars tended to increase the price of farm produce and particularly the price of wheat, then the great staple product of Canada. We had not only these outside wars but we had also internal matters which did a great deal to enhance the value of our produce here, and to make money circulate freely. During these same years, we had the building of the Grand Trunk, the Great Western and Northern Railways, and people naturally did lean towards believing that a good deal, if not all of our prosperity then, was attributed to reciprocity. They forgot the other contributing reasons which caused the good times, and they also forgot that during the year 1857, right in the midst of the reciprocity period, we experienced the blackest financial page recorded in the financial history of Canada. But, Sir, it is not what we thought then, but it is what the experience of the last twenty years has proved, that we are to deal with now. I was greatly pleased indeed to hear the President of the Council state, in reply to a question put by the other side of the House, that he was not in favor of reciprocity in natural products. Most decidedly not, and why? Because he had studied the results which the experience of the last twenty years has proven, and it will tell any one who studies it that such reciprocity is not desirable in our own interests. Now, as the hon. gentleman for Victoria said, it is not comparison of a low price with a high price that proves anything, but it is the comparison with outside markets, and what are the causes which have produced the low prices of wheat especially? Every reading farmer knows that wheat is now grown in great abundance, and that the wheat-growing area has vastly increased all the world over. The farmers know that the products of wheat has been quadrupled during the last twenty years. I may quote to the House the figures given of the estimated crop of wheat for the year 1888. The total crop amounted to the enormous quantity of 2,152,000,000 bushels. We find that from the United States alone the yield was 416,000,000 bushels or thereabout, nearly one-fifth of the whole; from Russia, the yield was 254,000,-000 bushels, or about one-ninth of the whole; from France, 273,000,000 bushels, or one-eighth of the whole, and from India, 266,000,000 bushels, while Canada produced only 38,000,000, or about one-seventieth of the total yield. total yield. These facts show conclusively that the greatly increased product of wheat has lowered the price the world over, and it is only by comparing our own prices with the prices in other countries that we can see what benefit the tariff has conferred. Let us go back one step and see how outside prices compared with ours prior to the introduction of the National Policy. If you go back to 1877 and 1878, you will find that the prices in Toronto were lower than the prices in New York, an average of 20 cents in 1877, 18 cents in 1878 and 18 cents in 1879. Then came the National Policy, and the effect was immediate and continuous. will read from the Toronto Globe of 20th November, 1883, the prices prevailing at that time. In Toronto wheat No. 1 was \$1.14; No. 2, \$1.12; No 3, \$1.08. Again, wheat, \$1.12 for fall; \$1.08 to \$1.14 for spring, and choice Fife, \$1.24. In New York, wheat was \$1.13 to \$1.13\frac{1}{4}, and in Buffalo, \$1.12; No. 2 hard, \$1.11; No. 2, \$1.02. These figures show that prior to the introduction of the National Policy our prices were governed by the New York prices; we sent our wheat to England vid New York; but in 1884 a change came, and from that time to the present we have been holding our own in the Toronto market, and have generally had the advantage. So that, when we compare the condition of the market before the introduction of the National Policy with what it has been since, it seems to me that the argument is unanswerable that the change has been caused by the tariff. There is another view of the case, which was stated by the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald). He made a comparison of the prices of flour, and he was fair enough to compare the prices in the United States with the prices in Canada. Where he got his figures I do not know; I have not had time to trace them up; but he takes the years 1881 and 1886 for his comparison, and compares the price at Montreal with the export price in the United States. Now, the export price, as given in the Trade and Navigation Returns, gives the value per bushel. We find that in 1888-89 the United States exported in flour 9,374,803 barrels, valued at \$45,296,485, or \$4.83 per barrel, while Canada exported 131,191 barrels, valued at \$646,068, or \$4.92 per barrel, or 9 cents above the United States export price in favor of Canada. Making the same comparison with regard to wheat, I find that the United States exported 46,414,129 bushels, valued at \$41,652,701, or 89% cents per bushel, while Canada exported of Canadian wheat 490,905 bushels, valued at \$471,-121, or $91\frac{8}{10}$ cents per bushel, which is $2\frac{1}{10}$ cents in favor of the Canadian price. This is the market in which hon, gentlemen opposite wish our farmers to compete. This is the market for which hon, gentlemen opposite are willing to sacrifice the best interests of the farmers of Canada. They want us to compete in a market that exports 94 million barrels of flour and 464 million bushels of wheat, while we only export three or four millions of wheat and flour combined; we are to compete in that market and get the advantage in the competition, although, at the present time we get more for our wheat and our flour than our neighbors do. There is another view of the case, which I wish hon, gentlemen to consider. It was said, by one of the first speakers, whom I had the pleasure of listening to on the opposite side of the House, that a million dollars or half a million dollars, was considered a light thing in this House, but was a very serious matter for the farmers. I quite agree with that statement, and I wish to say that a few cents difference in the price of grain, may be considered a very light thing in this House, but it is a very material thing for the farmers. We find by the report of the Ontario Bureau of Statistics, that in 1888 the Province of Ontario produced 65,466,911 bushels of oats, 14,269,863 bushels of pease, 13,830,787 bushels of fall wheat, and 6,453,558 bushels of spring wheat, or a grand total of these three grains of over 100,000,000 bushels. Now, anything that depreciates the price of that quantity of grain, one cent a bushel, means a loss of \$1,000,000 to the farmers of Ontario; therefore, if the reduction should be, as I contend it would be 10 cents a bushel, it would mean a loss of \$10,000,000 to the farmers not of the Dominion, but of Ontario alone.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. MASSON. An hon. gentleman says "hear, hear."

Mr. LANDERKIN. Hear, hear. Mr. Masson.

Mr. MASSON. The hon. member for South Grey says "hear, hear." For his benefit I would refer to the figures more minutely. I find that the County of Grey alone, of which the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) is one of the representatives, produced over 3,000,000 bushels of oats, 8,862,890 bushels of pease, and about half a million bushels of wheat, so that even for that county alone about 4,000,000 bushels of these grains were produced, which at 10 cents a bushel would mean $400,000.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We used to get about 15 cents a bushel more before the duty was put on.

Mr. MASSON. The hon. gentleman says they used to get 15 cents more per bushel before the duty was put on, and has therefore used what the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) called the fallacious argument. The hon. gentleman pretends to speak for the farmers, but the farmers themselves know whether they are benefited by the tariff or not, and I have a letter, received this afternoon, from a constituent of the hon. gentleman's, which he closes with this postscript. The letter is not from a lady, but still the pith is in the postscript, which is as follows:—

"I think the Government is making a mistake in not putting on a duty of 25 cents on corn. Canada can grow plenty of feed for her cattle. The idea of going to Yankeeland for grain when oats is 23 cents a bushel, and barley 32 cents. Send the wall up 25 feet."

Such is the opinion of a farmer in South Grey, and such is the opinion of the farmers throughout Ontario generally.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Give us the name and we will see if he is a farmer.

Mr. MASSON. The letter is private and I cannot give the name, but the name is legion.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The name of the devil is legion.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon, gentleman had better not boast. He is living in a glass house himself.

Mr. MASSON. I will not detain the House longer as I promised to be brief, but I find there are so many points to be treated that one is tempted to proceed at too great length. I had intended to refer to the question of agricultural implements, but that has been so fully gone into by my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Daly) that I will simply confine myself to one point, concerning which I made personal enquiry, and that is as regards the prices of these articles in the Northern States. I refer to the northern part of the State of New York, in the vicinity of Watertown, where I found from personal enquiry that the prices of agricultural implements were, for reapers, mowers, and harvesters, from $5 to $10 above what they are in my own town, and I found on further enquiry that the time given for the payment of threshing machines and harvesters and the more expensive implements, were very much the same as in Canada, but while in Canada interest for the second and third year is charged at 7 per cent., in the State of New York, that highly favored State, the farmers are charged 10 per cent. I wish, in concluding, to congradulate the Government upon the changes they have made in the tariff, feeling satisfied that these changes will result to the benefit of the farmers, and assist them out of their difficulties. I grant that the farmers may not be as well off as I would like to see them, for I would like to see them free from all those mortgages we have heard so much about. Of my own knowledge, however, I can refute the statement that they are mortgaged to anything like the extent hon. gentlemen opposite allege they are, and the evidence given by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) is, to my mind, the most falla-cious and deceptive material or argument of any that could possibly be produced. Can any registrar, looking over his books, say how many mortgages there are unpaid on any farm? In many cases, as has been stated, where the mortgages are paid off, especially by loan companies, the prior mortgages are left undisturbed. Many mortgages, besides, are paid off by instalments, and it is impossible for a registrar to say how much has been paid off in this way. Whoever has had anything to do with searching through titles, knows well it is a common thing to find three or more mortgages registered against a property than are actually existing at the time. From my own personal knowledge, the argument based on these registrars' returns are most deceptive and fallacious. I would like to refer to one change in the tariff on which I would congratulate the Government, and that is the free admission of the raw material of iron and steel to be used in the construction of iron and steel steamers. That is strictly in the line of the National Policy, and there are particular reasons why these things should be admitted free, arising from the peculiar circumstances under which we are placed through British ships being allowed to come in free. sides that, we find that most of the vessels built in this country or built in the United States, are intended to trade between ports in the United States and Canada, which trade can be done by American bottoms as well as by Canadian bottoms, so that we have to compete with the American as well as the British vessels, and it has become a matter of grave necessity, if the industry of shipbuilding is to be carried on in Canada at all, that everything, not only iron and steel, which enters into the building of ships should be admitted free. While I congratulate the Government on having gone so far, I think they should go on farther, and let in everything, whether iron, steel, brass, copper, wood or tin which enters into the construction of a ship come in free, for the simple reason that it is a raw material, and in order to encourage a great industry which is bound to do great things for this country. In fact, although only a year and a half in existence, this infant industry employs five hundred to six hundred men and produces nearly a million and a half dollars worth of material. It is worth our while encouraging, not only the building of steel and iron ships, but also the building of wooden ships as well. Anything that will tend to encourage the building of Canadian bottoms and the use of Canadian bottoms should be encouraged to the fullest extent, and if that cannot be done by the direct removal of the duty, it should be done by way of rebate of the duties paid, or, as this industry is one of national importance, it would be well that even a bounty were paid in addition. trust, that from year to year the Government will trust, that from year to year the Government will revenue was a proof of prosperity in the country. continue its policy of making such changes in the The revenue depends upon the rate of taxation tariff as the progress of the country, the development of its resources, the enlargement of its manufactures and the promotion of its industries of various kinds demand, because tariffs, as was said by the Minister of Finance, are not by any means like confessions of faith. They are there to be altered as circumstances require, and when the Government in its wisdom deems the necessity arises, I trust they will have in the future as they have had hitherto, the manliness and the courage to make the changes necessary to suit the wants of the times.

Mr. HALL. I have no intention of entering into a discussion of the general_features of this debate, with which this House, I understand, has been favored for a number of days, but I simply desire to correct an error made by the hon, member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) in reference to the population of Sherbrooke. The municipal council of that city have adopted the practice of making an enumeration of the inhabitants of the city, for municipal purposes, from year to year. I have great pleasure in stating, in apparent contradiction to the statement of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron), that there has been a steady increase in the population of that city for the last ten years. Of course, it has not been so rapid an increase as we would like, but the census has been taken purely for municipal purposes, and upon that basis has shown a steady and uniform increase. It is hardly fair to compare an enumeration taken in that way and for that purpose, with the enumeration taken in 1881 for the Dominion census. I have no desire to enter into the general debate, but I did not wish it to go uncontradicted that a manufacturing city like Sherbrooke had shown a decrease in its population.

Mr. PLATT. There are two reasons why the statements made by the mover of the resolution need not be dealt with at any length. The first is the length to which the debate has already extended, and the second is the importance of the amendment of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), which I think narrows the question before us down to a consideration of the present condition of the agricultural population, the cause of that condition, and the remedy to be applied. That is the real subject which has been discussed in the latter portion of this debate; but I cannot refrain from offering my congratulations to the Minister of Finance upon the manner in which he laid the financial statement before the country. Optimism and high color seems to have given way to ordinary human hope and human uncertainty as to the future. Moderation seemed to characterise his remarks from beginning to end, and I congratulate him upon that. I also congratu. late him on the fact that he has determined that, in the near future, we shall be relieved from such an extravagant expenditure of public money, and that the public debt shall not increase after the next year. I am sure the people will be glad to hear of that determination on the part of the hon. gentleman. Of course, he spoke of the buoyant revenue which seems to have obtained for the last year or two, and of the prospects for the next year, and he points to that as an indication of prosperity in the country. I never could see that a large levied, and even a people more depressed than the people of Canada are now might have extorted from their pockets a much larger sum than that which has flowed into the Dominion Treasury. Again, I cannot accept the statement of the hon. gentleman that a surplus shows sound financial engineering on the part of the Government. surplus simply means the extraction from the pockets of the people of an unnecessary amount of money which, for their own advantage and for the advantage of the country, might better have been left with them. The existence of a surplus has also a very deceptive and sedative influence. average elector does not always grasp the fact that a surplus may exist and the debt of the country be continually increasing. We often hear it said that it is impossible that the debt can be increasing, because we have had a surplus for the last two years, and we could not increase the debt when we had a surplus. The separation of current account from capital expenditure goes far to blind the eyes of a great many of our constituents, and, if a simpler form of book-keeping could be adopted, the people would see more clearly how we come out at the end of the year. Take the last ten or fifteen years, and put the expenditure on capital and current account together, and compare that with our revenue, and the people will see that we have not had a surplus in any one of those years. But I must come to the other and, as I consider, the more important question, the condition of the Canadian agriculturist at present. I desire to study the cause of the depression which I claim, with others on this side of the House, does exist in this country. We claim, and it has been admitted by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, that the agriculturists of Canada are not in a prosperous condition to-day. The President of the Council stated that in plain words in his speech. Very much has been said as to the figures which were given by the hon, member for South Oxford. In the course of his argument he showed that depression did exist in the agricultural community. I am not going to burden my speech or weary the House by giving any figures on this occasion; but in regard to the statistics given by the hon. member for South Oxford, I may say that I only hope they are wrong, but I fear that for the greater part they are correct. I shall content myself by saying that I believe every hon, gentleman in this House has the best means of judging of the condition of the agriculturist by looking around him when he is at his own What a member of Parliament knows of his own constituency in that respect he is justified in stating to the House, and I think the county which I have the honor to represent may be considered a fair average of the counties in the Province of Ontario. It is not the best; it is far from being the worst. By many people and by myself it is considered to be one of the best, but I will simply place it as being a fair average. I know the farmers in that county pretty well, and I only state to the House what is stated to me by them. They do not consider themselves to be in a highly prosperous, or even in a satisfactorily prosperous condition to-day. They look upon the depreciation in value of their estates as being something very serious, and there is a feeling, I will not say of despair, but of despondency amongst them to-day. That there has been Mr. Platt.

a very considerable depreciation in the value of real estate is admitted on all hands, and the farmers say that the intrinsic or the selling value of their farms is similar to that of any other establishment; it is governed entirely by the producing They say that whatever amount of money they are able to make off their farms year by year determines what their farms can sell for now, and possibly what their value may be in the future. With regard to the exodus, or the loss of our population year by year, the best way is to judge of that by the same method. What does each of us know as to his own constituency in that respect? In the neighborhood of our own homes, do we not see and do we not know that many of our young men, that many of our population are leaving us, and do we not know their destina-tion? There is not a member of the House who, if he thinks of those who were his associates or his neighbors a year or two ago, cannot remember some who have left this for a foreign country; there is not one who cannot think of many whom he regrets to know have been forced by circumstances to leave, perhaps his constituency, perhaps to leave the country, as the Prime Minister said some years ago, "to build up the wealth of a foreign nation, and help to deplete poor unfor-tunate Canada." A few days ago I purposely picked up an old school register some ten years old, knowing many of the pupils who then attended school, and I went carefully over the list to see how many of them still remained at home; and I think, Mr. Speaker, if you will do the same thing, and scan the list of those who were your former schoolmates, you will be surprised to find how many of them are now in a foreign country. Take another list in the hands of almost everybody, take the voters' list of five or six years ago, the list of any locality where you know nearly all the voters, and ask yourself how many of those on that list have disappeared from the present list. Trace these men who have gone away to their destination, and there is not an hon. gentleman who, after having made this examination, will come to any other conclusion than that the exodus from this country to the United States is something to be very deeply regretted. A few days ago I had occasion to converse with a gentleman who has recently opened a ticket office, I think for the Canadian Pacific Railway, in the town in which I live. This office had only been open four or five weeks, and I asked him if there were many people leaving for the far West, and he replied that on an average he had sold to people going West 12 or 15 tickets a week for the last month. I then asked him if he could tell me the destination of these people, whether they were going to Manitoba and our own North-West, or whether they were going to the Western States. He could not answer at the time, but he told me a little later that he was sorry to find that out of the fifteen who had gone away in one week, ten had gone to the Western United States, and five to our own North-West; and he added that such was about the proportion in which our own and a foreign land happened to be the destination of those to whom he had sold tickets during the month. Now, I believer so far as my own locality is concerned, the information is reliable. Such are statistics which any hon. member can verify for himself in his own locality.

Hon. gentlemen, of course, can speak for their own constituencies as to whether any serious exodus has taken place from them to the United States. think it must be generally acknowledged that the exodus of our young men at the present time is greater than it has been at any time during the last twenty years. Another statement which I think will not be denied is that there has been during the last five years a more rapid depreciation in the value of farm land than has taken place during any previous five years. Now, I trust I have stated my opinion with regard to the condition of the farmer in such a manner as that I cannot be accused of slandering either the farmer or the country. The accusation is hurled at us across the floor of the House now and then, that we who are showing the actual con-dition of the farming population, are slandering the country, and decrying the reputation of the farmers. Sir, I say that accusation is no argument, neither has it foundation. We are only speaking of the condition of a single class, and Sir, we might read column after column from the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite in 1876, 1877 and the beginning of 1878, describing what they called the unfortunate condition of the country at that time. We know that the Premier himself went through the country decrying, if I may use the term, its reputation, and declaring that our young men and women were leaving this country to build up a foreign nation, and using stronger terms in depreciation of this country than any that have been used by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. I have already stated that the President of the Council admits that there is agricultural depression to-day. His words are: "Agriculture is not prosperous to-day." Now, Sir, every candid genprosperous to-day." Now, Sir, every candid gentleman before me, I believe, will accept that as a true statement. What are the causes assigned by the President of the Council? What are the causes which have been assigned by other hon gentlemen opposite? Their chief reason is that it is the competition of the foreign products which has been thrown upon the markets of the world. I grant you that is an important factor in the reduction of the price of our farm products. We have been told, and correctly told, that India itself is competent to supply a very large portion of the world. Russia, too, is becoming an important competitor. Our own North-West and the North-West of the United States taken together, in a very few years, will be able to supply the world with bread. The Argentine Republic is also coming to the front as a competitor with the products of the farm, and I grant you that foreign competition is a large element in the reduction of the price of our farm products. But, Sir, we are told to-day by hon. gentlemen opposite, that foreign competition is one of those things which cannot be combated by any fiscal policy, that no Parliament and no Government can meet and ward off the calamity which has fallen upon the farmers of this country through foreign competition. We were not told that ten years ago. We were then told that there was a panacea for that ill. We were then told that there was a remedy, and there was no stronger supports of the scripping in the country. stronger supporter of that opinion in the country than the hon. gentleman who is now President of the Council. But to-day he tells us that this But to-day he tells us that this is beyond the reach of any fiscal policy. I have granted that this foreign competition is a large factor in producing the present depression in agriculture, but it does not stand alone. If it were the only cause, if there were not a conspiracy of causes, then I grant you that legislation would have very little to do with it. But, besides this great natural cause, there are unnatural causes, and I need not use many words in pointing out what I mean by that—I mean that legislative interference with our commerce which is embodied in the National Policy. I believe that the protection which has been carried out in this country and in the United States has been one of the chief conspirators against the farming population. Ten years ago we were told that a policy might be adopted by this country that would remedy the evil of foreign competition. We have tried the remedy, and we have found that it is useless, simply because in the administration of it, a greater burden and difficulty were placed upon the farmers of this country than already existed in the foreign competition. Some contend it is impossible by legislation, even where there may be a protective policy in existence, such as has existed here for some time, to relieve the depressed condition of the agriculturists. We have been told by one hon. gentleman opposite, the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White), I think, that there is a remedy, and that we should set ourselves about its administration. And what was that remedy? To assist the farmer by lessening the cost of his production. How did he propose to do that? By teaching the farmer scientific farming. That is the method by which that hon. gentleman would lessen the cost of production, increase the result, give, as economists tell us, the maximum of results for the minimum of cost and effort. I take that as my ground. I say there is a remedy. I say we can assist the farmer of this country by lessening the cost of production: but I would not take the course laid down by the hon, member for North Renfrew (Mr. White). I think there is a better method of applying that remedy, and that is by cheapening the cost of production, by cheapening, if possible, the cost of all the products he is called upon to consume. I need not go over the list of articles taxed heavily before they enter into the consumption of the farmer; every person knows there is scarcely any article in common use by the farmer that is not very heavily taxed to-day. And whenever an article of consumption is heavily taxed before it reaches the farmer, it must of necessity increase the cost of his products, and an increased cost of product lessens the profit he obtains from his farm. Thus, I say, with the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White), let us decrease as much as possible, and assist the farmer in decreasing the cost of his production. The hon, the President of the Council told us it was not advisable to lessen the cost of production, that the raw material of the farmer should not be cheapened. He told us that the admission of free corn would bring whatever was the product of that free corn, beef or other products, down to a corn standard, that it would bring everything down to a corn instead of a barley standard; he, in effect, told us not to lessen the cost of production, but to use expensive feed for our cattle in order to keep up the price. He argued foreign competition upon the markets of the world that, if we had free corn, beef must necessarily fall in price, and we should not cheapen the cost of the farmer's product, but keep it up to the barley Why not feed wheat, and keep beef standard. and pork up to the wheat standard? I do not know who gave the hon. Minister that idea. I have never seen it mentioned by other economists; it seems to be an idea of his own, that we, in this country, must not cheapen the cost of production, because, if we do so, we will cheapen the price of the products. I will leave the member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) and the hon. the President of the Council to discuss that matter and settle it between themselves. But I will call upon the President of the Council to settle a dispute which exists between himself as President of the Council and himself as member for Stanstead in 1878. Then, that hon. gentleman, speaking on the floor of this House, his speech was sent broadcast throughout the Dominion (and I will give him the credit of saying that his speech had very much to do with moulding the opinions of the people), a different story from what he tells us to-day, that there is no remedy for depressed farmers; that a fiscal policy was of no use. In speaking of the condition of English manufactures, many years ago, when there was very great depression among all classes in England, the hon. gentleman did not say, then, that England did not know how to assist the manufacturers -he called it protection; I call it relief—and he used these words:

and the used these words:

"If she wanted to protect an industry, how could she do it? Not by the imposition of further duties, because that would not amount to anything. If a Chinese wall had been built around England, it would hardly have given additional protection, because no other nation could compete with her in her own market. How, then, could she protect her industries? She could not do it by the imposition of high tariffs, because they would be nugatory: but she did it by reducing the cost to the manufacturer, by taking off the duties on the raw material and on the food, so that labor and raw material would become cheaper; and to that fostering policy her manufacturers were indebted for their present position. I maintain that the removal of duties from raw material and the imposition of Customs duties upon manufactured products, are equally measures of protection."

Why cannot that rule, which was applied to the

Why cannot that rule, which was applied to the industries of England years ago, be applied to the farmers of Canada to-day? Why is it that to-day their condition is beyond the reach of fiscal legislation? If it was possible in England in years gone by to afford a system of protection by the reduction of the cost of production and lessening the cost of food there, why is it not possible to apply the same principle to-day and improve the condition of the farmers by lessening the cost of production and by affording them an opportunity of obtaining a maximum result at a minimum of effort and expense? He further said on that occa-

"When the protectionists were asking the Finance Minister to protect the sugar interest in this country,—when they represented that it was on the verge of peril, unless the Government did something for its relief, they told the Government that this might be done in one of two ways, either by a higher duty on refined sugar, or by reducing the duty on the raw material. Either of those means was protective, and the latter method would have given that industry the greatest advantage it could have in competition with the markets of the world."

The farmers are not asking for protection; they are asking for relief. They say to Parliament: Give us relief from taxation, lessen the cost of our production, and we will be able to hold our own. We were told a long time ago that this question of foreign competition could be very easily dealt! Mr. PLATT.

with, and I will not trouble the House by reading what was said in 1878 and on another occasion; but the effect of the argument was simply this, that all we had to do was to shut out foreign competition, and the farmers all over the land would be benefited; and we had hon. gentlemen opposite, then sitting on this side of the House, pointing to the fact that upon the other side of the line, where they had a protective policy, foreign competition We were told did not at all interfere with them. that all we had to do was to adopt a similar system, and we would no longer suffer from foreign competition. To-day, we are told that we are powerless because it is foreign competition that is injuring our farmers to-day. Hon. gentlemen opposite offer a consolation, I cannot call it a remedy; when they are bereft of all other arguments hold up the present condition of the farming population of the United States and say: Look there, farmers of Ontario, of Quebec, of Canada, take courage, take hope; as badly off as you are, they are worse on the other side of the line. I do not know that it will be a very great consolation for the farmers of the country who were told some years ago that to adopt the American protective policy would better their condition, if after ten years' trial they are now told: although the remedy is working badly with you, it has worked much worse in the United States. On the principle that misery likes company, the Government offers to the farmers of Canada that modicum of comfort. I am not going to dispute with these hon, gentlemen who say that the farmers on the other side of the line are suffering severe depression. I am going to grant you that the farmers of the United States, the farmers of Canada, and the farmers, I may say, of every portion of the world, are suffering a very deplorable amount of depression. I intend to substantiate—to fortify, I may say—the views expressed by hon. gentlemen opposite, by reading a short extract from an article by the Hon. D. A. Wells:

"All over New England, farms in abundance can now be purchased for less than the cost of the improvements upon them,—yes, for less than the cost of the construction of their stone walls."

The catalogue of the abandoned farms of New Hampshire contains particulars of 352 of these; referring to which the State Commissioner says, and I wish to call the special attention of hon. gentlemen to this:

"In most instances these farms have not been abandoned because the soil has become exhausted, or from the lack of natural fertility, but from various causes appearing in the social and economic history of the State."

On 11th August, 1889, the New York Tribune had an article on the decline of the farming industries of Vermont, in which it said:

Good lands are offered for sale as low as $3 an acre, Good lands are offered for sale as low as $3 an acre, and it is said that it will be necessary to make $5 an acre the maximum price for settlers, if the new Vermont boomers expect to compete with western lands. It may, as a vivid notion of the extent to which the depopulating process has gone on, be said that no difficulty was encountered in finding abandoned farms in one locality to furnish contiguous farms for the first proposed colony of fifty families. In fact, four such localities were found."

Now, Sir, I quote this for the benefit of hon. gentlemen who have been claiming that the American farmer was in a very depressed condition indeed. They have been told, in reply, that the same causes which produced the depression in Canada were exercising their baneful influence on the farmers of the United States, and I need not argue at length to show that this is the case. Writers upon the other side of the line have busied themselves more or less, during the last year, to point out the various causes affecting the farmers there, and able arguments—unanswerable arguments, I may sayhave been published in the press, and by various essavists, showing conclusively that the present depressed condition of the farmers can be directly traced to the unnatural policy in force in the United States. I wish, Mr. Speaker, to call the attention of the hon. President of the Council to the very proud position he occupies to-day. expressed a desire, or rather, a heartfelt wish, in a speech some ten years ago, and I believe he is now upon the eve of witnessing the realisation of his wish. What did he tell the farmers of Canada, ten years ago, when speaking on the floor of this House? He said, referring to New England, and to the policy of the United States at that time:

"The policy which I would like to see introduced into Canada, and which I believe is the true policy for Canada, is to make this section of the country which we now occupy on this Continent, the New England of Canada, and to plant here those same institutions which have been the harbingers of success in the neighboring States across the line. Our conditions are precisely the same as theirs. We have the same soil, we have the same facilities for manufacturing, we have all the conditions that are kindred to theirs, and we are shortly to have what they now have, a great North-West opening beyond and boundless, which is yet to be inhabited by millions of people. I desire to say to the farmers of Ontario—here is a lesson for you, consider it."

He wishes to make, he says, Ontario and Quebec the New England of Canada, and the hon. gentleman in a speech the other night, told us, and told the farmers of this country, what was the condition of their brethren in the New England States. He read to us statistics to show that good farms in the fertile valley of the Connecticut, and on the beautiful grazing slopes of the mountains there, were selling at from $3 to $5 an acre. He pointed to the abandoned farms of that country, where the forests were again growing; but, nevertheless, he says to the farmers of Ontario and Quebec, "what the New England States are to the United States I would have Ontario and Quebec become to the Dominion of Canada." How do the farmers of Ontario and Quebec like the picture which the hon. gentleman has drawn for them? How do they like the position which ten years ago he wished them to aspire to, and which they are now in great danger of arriving at? Concluding that same speech that hon. gentleman says:

"I welcome the day when the west will be opened up, and when Ontario and Quebec will occupy the same position relatively to that country, that New England does to the great Western States."

The hon, gentleman welcomes this day; he glories in the prospect which is now brilliant in the eyes of every observant man in Canada, and which prospect is that the farmers of Ontario and the farmers of Quebec, if we continue the system of protection now extant in this country, will very soon be in a similar position to what their brethren are in the United States; the farming population of Ontario and Quebec will be to the rest of Canada what the New England farmers are to the American Union. Now, Sir, I have spoken to you briefly about the conspiracy of causes which are exerting themselves to influence for evil the condition of the farmers of this country. The first is foreign competition, and the second is protection. One is an auxiliary to the other. Protection does not directly assist foreign competition in working for evil towards the farmer, but it prevents the farmer from withstanding the baneful effects and evil influences of foreign competition. Were it not for that system of protection, he would be in a condition to combat it. This protection, which seems to be built up mainly for the purpose of bolstering up manufacturers, is of such a character that though it can be applied in the case of manufacturers and large, wealthy corpora-tions of every kind, to tide them over a time of difficulty and depression by taxing the farming population of the country, it cannot be successfully applied, and it never has been applied for the purpose of helping the farming community. The farmers are at the mercy of the great corpora-tions everywhere. They are even at the mercy of the great corporations composed of members of their own class, who have bound themselves together to carry on extensive farming operations, who have seized on large tracts of country, and placed upon them the most improved machinery, and who are producing crops in abundance much more cheaply than they can be produced by any of the small operators on one hundred or two hundred acres of land. But you may say these large farming corporations are far removed from the home market, and that they are not near the cities of the New England States. How is it that we can give a market to our farmers, as you have told them, by building up large cities in their midst, when you point to these abandoned farms of New England, under the very shadows of the tall chimneys of the great manufactories! The people of the New England States are not fed by the farms of the New England States. Their food comes from the far West. These large bonanza farms send in their produce over the railways which the New England farmers have helped to build up, at the very cheap rates, at the almost marvellously cheap rates, I might say, at which these roads are able to carry the goods, simply because they have been assisted largely by the public funds. The railways bring in these western products right before the eyes of their competitors in the New England States, to supply the cities of that district, and to deprive the New England farmers of any profit whatever from their industry. If I had not promised the House that I would avoid figures, I might give statistics to show the condition of the farmers of that country, as compared with the persons who are engaged in manufacturing and other industries. I suppose, Sir, it would be considered unpatriotic if I were to point out the condition the farmers of Ontario are likely to occupy in the future with regard to foreign competition. I speak of foreign competition as the competition of any particular locality with that of any other locality. Protection cannot do anything for that, because the members of the same fraternity in the same country can produce at a less cost in some locality than they can in some other locality, and send their goods there for sale. That cannot be remedied. These farmers cannot combine like the manufacturers. A few corporations in the country can so arrange their trade under a protective system—and that system assists them in doing it—that if they have a surplus product, they can shut down their mills for a few months until that is sold off. That cannot be done in the case of the farmers, and you cannot protect the home market of the farmers against the farmers of any other locality. Who are the greatest competitors of the farmers of Ontario and Quebec to-day? Are they not the farmers of the great North-West, who have been encouraged and assisted to go to the North-West, for whose sake we spent a hundred millions of dollars or thereabouts to build a railway to enable them to bring their products into competition with those of the farmers of the older Provinces; and what can hon. gentlemen opposite do to relieve the farmers of the older Provinces from that competition? I do not think it is possible for them to do anything; it is utterly impossible for the protective policy of the Government to promote the welfare of the farming population. It may crush it, as it is crushing it in Canada to-day; but it cannot help it. It is a very great relief to some farmers, I suppose, to be told that although they are poor, there are a great many rich men in their midst, that although the fiscal policy of the Government has been depressing them, it has been building up other communities. The tall chimneys and the millionaires among the manufacturers may be pointed out to them, and they may be told to look at the large cities; but what do the farmers care for millionaires or large cities so long as they are in want and cannot make both ends meet? It is no consolation to the farmer to be told that his neighbor across the way is better off than he is, or that although he is poor there are rich people in the cities. I do not think the growth of a few large cities is going to benefit the farming population very much. History does not show that. What benefits agricultural population is to have large and thriving towns scattered over the country; but go through the country to-day, and do you find the towns and villages thriving in proportion to the cities? Not by any means. Our town and villages are becoming weaker every day, and the smaller home manufactories are becoming fewer; they are being wiped out by the large concerns. In many of our towns and villages, where there were thriving and prosperous carriage works a few years ago, you find to-day under the protective system that the large concerns are gradually eating up the smaller ones. If there is still a village blacksmith, instead of being busy in his shop as he used to be, he is now occupied in his garden or somewhere else, and has no call to his shop unless a passer-by loses a shoe from his horse, because all the things he used to make are now made by the great concerns. In many of the other walks of life, we find similar results of the influence of the fiscal policy which we have been foolish enough to adopt in this country. I shall briefly allude, Sir, to the question of reciprocity, which has been referred to only casually in this debate. The question of unrestricted reciprocity with the United States is not necessarily in argument just now; but we have been told that that is the only panacea which we offer for the ills of the farmers, and we are asked whether we can expect to receive higher prices for our products when we cast them on a market of 60,000,000 people who produce and export everything which we produce. Well, if it would be useless for us to attempt to deal with those people with the barriers broken down, how foolish it is Mr. PLATT.

for us to attempt to deal with them now when the barriers are up? And yet, we are dealing with them to the extent of about $40,000,000 of our That is a sufficient answer to that argument. But there is another argument. We do not propose largely to benefit the farmers of Canada by opening up a market for their staple products, the cereals that they grow; but changes are going on, and where we used to produce nothing but wheat, rye and corn, we are now producing a variety of articles with which we could enter into advantageous competition with our neighbors to the south, and of which we are already sending them large quanties over the tariff walls. We are not talking simply of reciprocity in the natural products of the farm. The hon. President of the The hon. President of the Council has told us plainly—and I believe that the number of his disciples is increasing daily—that he does not believe in reciprocity in natural products. I think there is a great deal to be said for that view, and if I were a protectionist I think I would adopt it; I think I should say: Let us have protection all around. I think I have heard on the other side: Either have free trade all around or protection all around, and I think, perhaps, the hon. President of the Council is consistent in that position. But he seems to have changed his opinion on so many points during the last ten years that I hardly know where we shall find him before this debate ends. It has been pointed out that he was the most ardent admirer of the principle of reciprocity when the great resolution of 1877 and 1878 was proposed. It was because of the last clause of that resolution that he threw himself so vigorously into the fight. He told the House, then, that if he did not stand up boldly for that resolution simply on the ground that it tended to produce reciprocity with the United States, he would be guilty of gross inconsistency. I shall not trouble the House by reading any extract from his speech at that time; that has already been done. He was then certainly strongly in favor of reciprocity; he tells us now that he is not in favor of a limited reciprocity, that he is not in favor of reciprocity in natural products only; so that he evidently goes for the whole thing—he is evidently with us in favor of unrestricted reciprocity. Either that or the two speeches of the hon. gentleman are contradictory. But this hon, gentleman told us some ten years ago that there was something in reciprocity. That does not appear to be his opinion now, because in a preface to that wonderful speech which he made on that remarkable occasion, and in which he apparently did not say all he intended—in the preface to the publication of his speech, a preface not prompted by the heat of debate or the excitement of parliamentary discussion, but written coolly and calmly, away from all public excitement—he made use of this argument in order to convince the farmers that there was something after all in the policy of reciprocity in natural products:

"That the American farmer has had the full advantage of this remarkable increase of price is not to be disputed. But that the Canadian exporter has had a similar advantage is by no means established. On the contrary, the Eastern Townships farmer knows that when an American drover pays to his neighbor living across the line two hundred dollars for a pair of oxen and pays him only one hundred and sixty-seven dollars for a pair of similar size, condition and quality, that the difference of $33 going to the United States Treasury is a direct loss to him, and not to the American consumer."

There he gave us an illustration showing the advantages which would flow from reciprocity in natural products. He went on to say:

"Similarly, the Nova Scotia farmer knows that the buyer of potatoes for the Boston market pays to the farmer in Maine 16 cents per bushel more than he pays to the farmer in Nova Scotia for a similar article, freights the farmer in Nova Scotia for a similar article, freights being the same, and that the loss falls upon him and not upon the Boston purchaser. The Prince Edward Islander knows that he loses the American duty when he sends oats to Boston. Ten or twelve years ago some lumber manufacturers in Ottawa thought the American consumer paid the duty upon Canadian lumber, but the hard experience of recent years has completely dispelled the pleasing illusion."

Here is another extract to which the hon. gentleman will listen with interest:

"In the long list of agricultural products, I think of only two in which the American consumer pays any appreciable part of the Customs duty, these are, combing wool and barley for malting purposes. These exceptions to the rule result from an insufficient home supply of the particular quality required for a special use. In these instances, the buyer is obliged to seek the residue in outside markets and pay the prices which prevail in the market of the country where he seeks them. As to the mass of our exports to the United States, large as it appears in figures, it is so small in comparison with the immense volume so abundantly produced in the United States, that it no more impresses the markets there than a little tributary streamlet swells the waters of the St. Lawrence." Lawrence.

He has there come down to the sensible doctrine. that when a people want anything they do not supply themselves, they have to pay part of the duty, at any rate, to procure it, but wherever the value of the article is decided by the product of the importing country, then the exporter pays the duty. that be true, and I believe it is an economic truth, in almost every instance the Canadian exporter has to pay the duty when he sends his goods to the American market. There are one or two other illustrations to which I might refer to show whether or not the farmers of this country should believe that reciprocity will be advantageous to them. Let me give you, Sir, an object lesson. We have in the county I have the honor to represent, an industry which is yearly growing and which has already attained magnificent proportions, and one which has inspired in our farmers a great deal of hope. Now that the barley industry in the older portions of Ontario has ceased to be profitable, the farmers of Prince Edward County have gone largely into the production of garden pease—very expensive and fine varieties of pease—which are sold in the southern markets, where they will not ripen. This has become a very large industry in that county, and, if the tariff laws do not interfere, the dealers will distribute among the farmers there something in the neighborhood of 15,000 bushels of seed for the purpose of growing these pease. These seeds are distributed among the farmers on a written contract, by which the seedsmen who furnish the seed bind themselves to give so much per bushel for the entire product, and the farmers, on the other hand, bind themselves to sow this seed upon certain designated fields, and to sell the whole crop to the men who furnish the seed. This industry has assumed magnificent proportions, and is second only to the barley industry in the County of Prince Edward. But what has been the result of the prospective tariff known as the McKinley tariff, which is now threatened in the McKinley tariff, which is now the manufactured in the McKinley tariff, which is now the manufactured in the McKinley tariff, which is now the manufactured in the McKinley tariff, which is now the manufactured in the McKinley tariff, which is now the manufactured in the manufacture threatened in the United States? It has completely paralysed both the farmers and the seedsmen. because if 40 cents a bushel are to be added to the cost of the pease imported into the United States, that will put an end to the industry. One of the seedsmen is reluctant to give out any seeds, and the other has got out of the difficulty by printing in red ink, across the face of the contract, the following words :-

"I bind myself to give—per bushel for this crop, provided there be no increase in the American tariff." Every farmer receives this paper when he takes the seeds, and I fancy it would be pretty hard to remove from his mind, in view of this binding provision, the idea that the Americans will have to pay the duty on the fancy seed pease when sent across the line. There are various other small items in the tariff which I might mention, but to which, perhaps, it would be better to refer when we are in committee. I am not going to speak on the barley question, although I represent a constituency which is largely interested in that article, because it does not come up here; but I will refer to another question which has excited considerable comment in my section of the country and in many others. I was told by one of our farmers that he was glad the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) had at last been elevated to a seat in the councils of the nation, because there was one outrage against which that hon. gentleman had fought years ago, and which, now that he was in power, he would no doubt do his utmost to put an end to. This man told me that, some years ago the President of the Council in that pamphlet which he sent broadcast over the country, had denounced the enormous tax upon kerosene or coal oil as "legalised robbery." He accused the then Government of having perpetrated legalised robbery by their legislation on this question in 1876-77. I turned up that pamphlet, and I found in it the following paragraph, headed:—

"LEGALISED ROBERY.

"Of all the industries in Canada, the production and refining of oil is, perhaps, the only one in which a monopoly is possible—and that is simply because the area of production is limited, and may, by finesse, be frought under one control.

"When they put on the duty of 6 cents a gallon, oil was worth 10 cents a gallon, they swept away the whole Excise duty and recouped the country by putting it on tea; but to favor thir industry, the only one which could be abused by protecs tion, they levied a Customs duty of from 50 to 60 pecent., making, according to their theory, the consumers of oil, which is made in Canada, pay, not to the Government, but to the manufacturer, 6 cents additional for every gallon, or on additional profit of 60 per cent. Was that legalised robbery, or was it not? In whose interest was that perpetrated?"

Then he goes on to say:

"Did it put every dollar of the revenue into the Treasury? Did they not know that every gallon bought of a Canadian refiner had paid him, not the Treasury, and additional six cents? Did they not know that two-thirds of the oil consumed is manufactured in Canada, and that every gallon paid six cents more than it ought to pay in consequence of the policy of the Government? If they are proud of their inaction in 1876 and of their legislation in 1877, they are welcome to any satisfaction which they can derive from the contemplation of it. So much for the oil question.

If that was such an egregious blunder on the part of the then Government—and I am not now going to discuss the origin of it—if it was such an egregious blunder then, it is equally a blunder now, and although those who defended it then may attempt to defend it now, the President of the Council is precluded from doing so, and taking his argument Isay that to continue it is to continue legalised robbery. There is no one tax placed upon the people of this country, the removal of which would be so immediately felt, as that upon the common article of coal oil. There is no commodity that I can think of which enters into such general consumption. tried to think of some commodity that I might compare with it, but I could think of nothing so generally used between the two oceans, and I had to make a suppositious case. Suppose that Indian corn was an absolute necessity in every house in Canada, that rich and poor alike had to use cornmeal, and that the County of Essex was the only county in which it could be produced. Suppose that corn could not be produced in Essex for less than 40 cents a bushel, while American corn could be had for 25 cents a bushel. could you say; what would even the present Government say, if, for the sake of benefiting one constituency only, a duty of 25 cents a bushel was placed on corn under the circumstances? That is a parallel That is what has been done in the case of coal oil; and I say the case I have supposed would be no greater outrage than the continuation of the tax on this very common commodity. I apologise for detaining the House so long, and I shall refer to only one other subject, which is the removal from the free list of certain products which, for the last year or two, have been admitted free. refer to the abrogation of the Order in Council of 13th May, 1888, by which green fruits, shrubs, trees, and so on, were put on the free list. I do not regard this as a very important change in the tariff, as far as the farming interests are concerned. Last year the Minister of Customs answered a question as to the value of imports and exports during the free period, and he stated that from the 4th April, 1888, to the 1st January, 1889, we had imported, of all these articles to which I have referred, $831,339 worth, and had exported $1,486,022 worth. So I cannot see that, if that year is to be taken as an index, any very great injury can accrue to our farmers from this change. But I refer to it now because it may affect a tariff to which the farmers are looking with some dread at the present time; and I think the impression has obtained throughout the country that this act of the Government will go a long way to justify our American neighbors in establishing what is generally known as the McKinley tariff. For ten years, a proposition has been held before the people of Canada and before the people of the United States as a flag of truce, as a standing offer. We have never been able to speak of reciprocity without having that standing offer thrown in our faces. The Government have said: We are for reciprocity; look at the statute, we are ready to meet the Americans on equal terms. That has been given, time and again, as a reason why we were not called upon to enter into negotiations for reciprocity with our neighbors. It might be contended that a simple offer on the Statute-book would not have any great international effect, that it was not binding as a treaty would be, though it was argued differently; but that contention was made on the floor of this House. Hon. gentlemen opposite took the ground that we were not obliged to fulfil that promise whenever the United States chose to select certain articles and place them on the free list. B Government departed from that view. But the Mr. PLATT.

yielded to the pressure from somewhere—I do not know whether it was from Washington or from their friends behind them—but they acknowledged that they were bound by that, and they met the Americans half-way, in consequence of that statutory offer, and, when we in this country did that, and placed these articles on the free list, I say, we sealed the bargain with the United States, and gave it all the effect of a treaty; and now, by a stroke of the pen on the part of the Government, without any notice as far as I know, this treaty has been abrogated. No doubt that will be used, I have heard that it has been already used, as one of the reasons why our American neighbors are justified in no longer extending to us the right hand of fellowship, in relation to the tariff. If that is so, I think it is the most unfortunate movement which the Government have made. Representing, as I do, an agricultural constituency, I thought I should say something on this matter, and, having eliminated all statistics from my remarks, I hope they will be received in the spirit in which they have been made.

Mr. SPROULE. This subject has been threshed out from every direction, and, were it not that such an attempt is made by hon. gentlemen opposite to show that no benefit is to be derived from these changes in the tariff by the great agricultural class of this community, I would have refrained from speaking on the subject. passing to the discussion of the subject proper, I will direct my attention for a few moments to some of the remarks of the hon, member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt). In his closing remarks he referred to our conduct towards the United States as one of a threatening character; he said that, instead of doing what we are doing, we should hold out the olive branch or the flag of truce to them as an inducement to them to return the same thing to us. What would that hon gentleman think of his neighbor who had his farm fenced in for the benefit of his family, what would he think of a corporation which had built walls to protect the interest of their city, if the neighbor would say, I am prepared to throw down my fence and allow your cattle to roam over my premises, and destroy my crops, although you keep up your fence against me, because I think this may be an inducement to you at some time in the future to throw down your fences to me? Would that be a prudent farmer? He would be looked upon as being insane. I think that in this enlightened age of the nineteenth century he would be considered little less than insane and only fit for a lunatic asylum. It would be natural for him, as it is for all individuals. as well as for corporations, first to take into consideration the interests of his own situation, the importance of looking after those who were entrusted to his care, either by nature or from any other cause, of providing for them, and of keeping his own resources as much as possible under his own control, so that they might be used for his advantage, and keeping the outside world, as it ought naturally to be, and as the law of all civilised countries provides it should be, at a distance until it would reciprocate on equal terms. The hon. gentleman has at last come out as one of the members of the Opposition, and he tells us what the policy of that party is. He says: We are twitted with having They no policy, but we have not yet abandoned our policy of unrestricted reciprocity. I believe, if I remember correctly, that that hon. gentleman was the first one amongst the Opposition members of this House to declare that their policy was unrestricted reciprocity some years ago, even in advance of his party. He says our policy is still unrestricted reciprocity, we wish to take down that tariff line. We wish to do away with that wall around our country, and we wish to allow foreign manufacturers to flood our country with whatever they have to sell. I would like to ask that hon. gentleman, and I would like to ask the farmers of Canada, whether they would be willing to allow the bogus cheese and butter that is made by millions of pounds over in that country, to be sent into our own country to the destruction of one of our most important industries. Why is it that this season we have sent out over 88,000,000 lbs. of Canadamade cheese into England, for which ample remuneration has been returned to the farmers of this The manufacture of cheese is one of the most important interests of the country to-day. Why, Sir, if we allowed those cheese made in the United States, composed largerly of rotten lard, cotton-seed oil, and other injurious ingredients, to be thrown into our country in tens of millions of pounds, it would effectually destroy that industry. There is no farmer in Canada to-day that could prosecute that industry profitably as he now does, if we had unrestricted reciprocity. The hon. The hon. gentleman spoke about Manitoba and the North-West as being strong competitors with the Ontario farmers. That hon, gentleman I must say is either pessimistic in his views, or else he is very illiberal in his conclusions. Does he not know that that is one of the important integral parts of the Dominion to-day? Does he not know that that country is largely absorbing the surplus products of the manufacturers of the east, and that the harvesters and agricultural implements that are sent into the North-West afford our manufacturers a benefit from producing these implements from our own raw material? We find a market for them in our own country, and our railways receive a return in the carriage of the products of our manufacturers up there, and in the carriage of the products of those people who live in that country to the east. It is a mutual exchange of products to the benefit of both, and not by any means to the disadvantage of either. think the hon. gentleman was very short-sighted if he imagines that either Manitoba or the North-West is going to be a drawback to this great Dominion of Canada. The hon, gentleman said that the farmers in every protectionist country in the world are suffering; and, although he did not say it in expressed words, he added, by implication, that it was not so with the farmers of free trade countries. Now, what is the history of the agriculturists of England, that free trade of free trade countries? Is better than that of the farmers of Ontario, or any better than that of the farmers on the continent of America? Why, it is worse. We find that in that country committee after combeen appointed to ascertain, as far as possible, what means might be devised for bettering the condition of the agriculturists in that country. What is it that has caused so much trouble to unfortunate Ireland in the last decade? Is it not because the agriculturists of that country, where there are no manufactures, cannot find a $96\frac{1}{2}$ confined to that one island, and they are suffering from competition with the agricultural products of other countries. I say there is no argument whatever, in the comparison the hon. gentleman has drawn from the condition of free trade countries. The hon, gentleman said it was an undeniable fact that wherever you cast your eyes the young men are leaving our country in dozens, he says in hundreds. He says: "Look around the locality where you live and see how many have gone abroad." He says he has looked over the school lists of years ago, and found that some of them had gone away and he asks: "Where are these people to-day? I find they are in foreign countries." Well, I can only say that if the young men of his country are subject to the education of the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt) and to the arguments he has given to this House to-night, I do not wonder that they go to those Elysian fields that are painted so brightly, and that are held up to them as the land of milk and honey. Many of them do go, I regret to say, and I believe it is largely due, in many instances, to the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite, coming from gentlemen whom they are accustomed to respect as men of intelligence, and who ought to know something of the situation. will not follow the hon. gentleman further than that. I will say that I think we are entitled to congratulate the Finance Minister for the very clear, concise and logical financial statement he has been able to make to this House and the coun-The hon. gentleman is in a situation to-day trv. that he can say that the coffers of the country have money enough to carry on the requirements of this country. The tariff that was devised a few years ago, and that was said by hon. gentlemen opposite would not raise a revenue, has raised a revenue ample for the requirements of this country, and we have a magnificent surplus being collected, year after year, by reason of that very tariff. I wonder if the hon. gentleman from South Oxford ever thinks of the speech he made in 1879, when he said: If this iniquitous tariff is imposed I can tell hon. gentlemen, and I speak from some experience, that the very object they have in view, of being able to raise a revenue by virtue of this tariff, will not be attained, they will have to disabuse their minds of that idea in a very short time, because if they should ever put this tariff on the Statute-book, I can assure them it will not raise a revenue. At that time he told the people of the country that they were blindfolded, they were deceived, they were imposed upon, that in due time they would begin to realise the fact. But time has passed, 12 years have passed since then, and we find that the revenue of the country is expanding, and that it is ample for the needs of the country. We have a surplus from year to year with which we are able to carry on the government of the country, and to accomplish those objects for the purpose of which that tariff was devised. Then what are hon. gentlemen saying in regard to that tariff? The general line of argument taken by hon, gentlemen opposite during this present debate has been one of gloom; there has been general despair. Almost every hon, gentleman who has spoken on the subject has followed this line of argument. The initiation was made by the hon. member for South Oxford, and it was followed up by one member after another who followed him in home market for their farm products? They are rapid succession, until almost every member on that side of the House seemed to catch the infection, for they could scarcely be up fifteen minutes before they fell into the same doleful strain of gloomy forebodings as to the condition of the country, its prospects, the condition of the farmers, the condition of the manufacturers, and the hard times that were existing in every part of the country. Notwithstanding all that, when we travel over our country we see in the prosperous appearance of the people that at least they have ample to supply themselves with in the shape of food; they are living in a healthy condition, they show all the signs of health, they go tolerably well clothed, they are able to keep themselves from the inclemency of the weather, their houses are comfortable, their barns are well stored with provisions and sustenance for their cattle, their fields are covered with flocks and herds for which they get remunerative returns whenever they wish to sell; and we find every indication of, at least, fair prosperity in the country, as much so, I think, as we can find in any other agricultural country under the sun. It is not to be wondered at that we have individual cases of want. It is not to be wondered that we have not as great prosperity as we enjoyed in 1882 and 1883 because the statistics show that in Ontario during the last three years there has been a falling off of, on an average, 7,000,000 bushels of grain per year? Is it to be wondered at that we do not experience such great prosperity now as we did formerly when the crops were up to the average of previous years? It is not. But, notwithstanding that falling off in the crops, the people of Canada to-day are as well supplied with the necessaries and comforts of life as are farmers not only in the United States and Great Britain, but in any part of the world. Hon. gentlemen opposite are constantly directing attention to the Elysian fields south of the border, and they are drawing comparisons between the United States and this Dominion. It is said that comparisons are odious, but they serve to draw the public mind to important questions. It appears to be the aim and delight of hon. gentlemen opposite to prove to this House and to the country that on the other side of the line there is nothing but milk and honey, and that nothing exists there but prosperity; but if we look at items which appear constantly in the public prints we will find there is nothing in the condition of the farmers there to justify such contention.

Mr. BARRON. What can the hon, gentleman say in regard to the statement of the President of the Council that there is no land in this country like the State of Vermont?

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon, gentleman will only keep quiet for a little while, I will give him my attention subsequently; and if he wishes to talk about inconsistency in statement, argument or logic, it will be found amply in his own case without appealing to remarks made by the hon, member for Stanstead. I have here a clipping from a paper in New Jersey. It goes on to say that in the southern part of New Jersey over 200 families are now homeless; that Sheriff Johnson, of Atalanta, has sold, within the past few days, 200 farms to satisfy mortgages in that part of the State, and has ejected 200 families. Hon, gentlemen opposite sometimes talk about the ungenerous influences that work in Ireland to-day, but the history of that country does not furnish a parallel to this record. Here 200 families were ejected from their homes in one day, and during the pitiless winter, when they had not sufficient to keep them protected from the elements and where they had neither food nor shelter. Such a record is not to be found in this country, and we have nothing in Canada to compare with it. I might read many items from different parts of the country to the same effect, although the cases might be greater or lesser in their severity.

Mr. BARRON. Give us now something about Vermont.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for South Grey in particular is anxious at various times to call out "hear, hear," when anything is said regarding the farmers of Canada, especially if it is anything against the interests of our farmers. He says that the farmers do not want protection, and are not benefited by it, but, on the contrary, a great injury is done to them. He says that if a duty is placed on pork, it is a duty which the farmers do not want. The hon, gentleman lives in an agricultural part of the country, and should understand the case better. According to our Trade and Navigation Returns, 15,865,139 pounds of pork were brought into Canada last year, principally into Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick, but very largely into Ontario, and yet he opposes any effort to keep out American pork although it would benefit the farmers. Hon. gentlemen opposite contend that this duty on pork is going to increase the price $6 a barrel, and at the same time they argue that it is not going to do the farmer any good. It assuredly is not going to benefit the lumberman. If, therefore, a farmer sells pork to a lumberman at an increase of $6 a barrel, is it not clear that he must benefit thereby, and the hon. member for South Grey possesses enough intelligence to know that they must be benefited. If the price advances only half a cent a pound, and it will be that at the very lowest computation, it means on 15,000,000 pounds of pork $76,030 for the farmers. Taking other lines of products, and beef, on which there will be a duty of 3 cents a pound, it is easily understood what an important advantage is given to our farmers.

Mr. BARRON. That was all mess pork.

Yes; it was mess and all other Mr. SPROULE. kinds of pork. What do we find to be the condition of affairs to-day? When I visited Toronto the other day, I was told that a car of meat from the wholesale butchers of Chicago passed through. It was opened first at London, and beef and pork were taken out and placed on the local market, and there sold to the detriment of our farmers. The head and feet were cut off the pig because they were not profitable on which to pay duty, but the other parts were entire. The car was afterwards closed, and taken to other points. Meat is thus brought in to enter into competition with the products of Canada, and it is retailed every day to the people in London, Guelph, Hamilton, Toronto and Montreal. This has been going on for some time, and the quantity is increasing. A farmer who saw this car arrive and the meat taken out, said it was a disgrace to our people that our farmers should be subjected to such unfair competition, and the Government should raise the duty sufficiently to keep American pork and beef out of the country.

I say so too. Our agricultural community, constituting as it does a very large majority of the people, should be protected by measures which would be beneficial to the whole people. Last year over 22,671,000 pounds of meat came into Canada in competition with the products of our own farmers, and the Government should make some effort to stop the inroads of American farmers to the detriment of our own farmers, and to their supplying our people, not only the lumbermen but the people of the towns and cities to the extent I have indicated. No less than 8,285,000 pounds of lard came into this country last year from the United States, this being another product of our farmers. It is not possible for our farmers to raise hogs profitably because the corn-fed pork and the soft rattle-snake pork of the west is brought into competition here. By this means great injustice is done to our farmers, and it is proper that the Government should devise some means by rasing the duty or otherwise to protect the farmers of the country. It is said by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barron), who is living in a part of the country which I am told is not a first-class agricultural district, but the farmers raise these things and sell them to the lumbermen without profit, while the lumberman is making a good profit on his business. Surely he should not stand up and say it is an injustice to the farmer that this duty should be put The member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) said the same, and although he told us that in his part of the country the farmers were struggling to get along, yet by this unfair competition he is willing to give the American farmer the Canadian home market which the Canadian farmer ought to have. The member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) seems to be imbued with the same idea, and every one of the hon. gentlemen opposite took up the same doleful strain, and endeavored to convince themselves and the country, if they could not convince the members of this House, that it is an injustice to the farmers that we should have this condition of things in the country. Now, I contend that the Government has done a good deal for the farmers in these changes of the tariff. They have put a duty of 40 cents a barrel on apples; they have put a duty on raspberries, strawberries, cherries, plums and cran-berries. In my part of the country there is a great deal of attention given to raising plums; we ship about 10,000 bushels a year, and if it was not for this duty of 30 cents a bushel, our orchard owners would be brought in direct competition with the American fruit raisers. The Government have put a duty of 3 cents a pound on lard to protect the farmers, and they have put a duty on butterine, and olemargarine, to the extent that they have kept all bogus butter out of the country, which is a great blessing to the farmers of Canada. They have put a duty on mess pork, meats, dried pork and flour, and in all these things we are told by hon. gentlemen opposite the duty is going to do the farmers injustice, and that it will not do them any good. Hon. gentlemen opposite have endeavored to prove that the consumer is using something for which he is obliged to pay more than he ought to pay because of this duty, and they have also argued that the producer of the article is not benefited by the increased price of the commodity which is consumed. That is a kind of logic which is paradoxical, and it is a kind of logic which is peculiar to the members of the Liberal party in this country. Hon. gentlemen opposite say, also, that this country is in a deplorable condition, notwithstanding the fact that our banking institutions show a very large increase of money deposits. I have yet to learn that a country with lots of money to deposit in bank is other than a prosperous country, especially if that money is divided among the people generally as it is in Canada. Our money is not hoarded by a few millionaires; it is divided among the people and benefits the people generally. We have in the post office savings banks the money showing the small savings of the agricultural classes, the wage-earners and the poor people generally. We have the deposits in the larger banks, showing the money which capitalists have accumulated in their business for the last ten or twelve years. We have also the money invested in the loaning companies, and in every one of these institutions, if we look carefully over the condition of the country, we can only come to one conclusion, namely, that the people of the country are not so much impoverished as they are represented to be. I have here, in the Monetary Times, a report of the Canadian Permanent Loan and Savings Company, a company which lends as much money as almost any two companies in Canada put together, and I find that their financial operations last year, both in taking in and paying out money, amounted to $11,265,000. The annual report of the company $11,265,000. contains the following :-

"Among our receipts the shareholders will, I am sure, be struck by the large amount received on account of mortgages. The payments made by our customers last year were most satisfactory, never better, and speak well for the general character of our investments."

Does that indicate the extreme poverty of which we have heard so much from hon, gentlemen opposite? Does that indicate that the farmers are mortgaged to such an extent that the people are leaving the country by hundreds and going to the United States? Does that indicate that the people are unable to supply themselves with the ordinary necessaries and comforts of life? I think it does not. I have only given the report of one company, but I might go over the whole list of them, and show that the general tenor of their reports is to the effect that they are receiving their money back that they lent out on mortgages in very considerable quantities; that the companies were well pleased with the amounts they were being repaid, and that measured by their own experience they look upon the condition of the country as prosperous. Hon. gentlemen opposite have spoken about the scarcity of money in the country and the shrinkage of the value of farms. I hold that is no great detriment to the country, if the land only reaches a value where a man's labor will be paid a return which will be a fair interest on the money invested in his farm, and if a man cannot rent his farm to pay 5 per cent. for the money invested, the agricultural land is too high. land comes down to its normal value to-day it is no great injury to the parties who are holding the land, because they do not want to sell it, but wish to continue carrying on their operations, and they receive a better return for their labor. The hon. receive a better return for their labor. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) gave us a peculiar illustration of the condition of the country, in stating that farms were extensively mortgaged, and that he took his returns, he said, from the registry offices of the Province of Ontario. Now, for several years past, I have been sending payments on a mortgage for a farmer in my part of the country, who mortgaged one farm some nine years ago for $1,000 in order to buy another farm. He was to pay $100 a year, and I have sent nine annual instalments, leaving only $100 on that mortgage now due; but if you go into the registry office in South Grey you will find there is a mortgage of $1,000 charged against that farm, although $900 have been paid off. The hon, gentleman must have known that such are the real facts of the case in very many instances, and, therefore, I can only assume that he was attempting to deceive the people of this country by his statement in reference to the mortgages on farms in Ontario, because if he wished to make a fair argument, he would never have made the statements he did, without explanation. He ought to have known, and probably he did know, that hundreds of thousands of people in the country, must see how fallacious, how unfair and how misleading his argument was. It was stated also by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) that the people were leaving the country by thousands, because they had sent back this Government to power, and he told us that the hon. Minister of Finance and his friends are living in a fool's paradise; therefore, of course, by implement we must assume that the people are fools. And why are they fools in the eyes of the member for South Oxford? Because they did not see fit to place the hon. gentleman and his friends upon the Treasury benches, and because they decided to allow them to remain in the cold shades of Opposition where they would do less injury and more good for the country. The hon. mem-ber for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), speaking of the farmers who supported the Government, gave us an account of his dream or séance, in which he stated that these farmers were only fit to be sent to hell, to be hung up to dry, because they were too green to burn. I wonder how the farmers of Ontario will accept the compliment. I wonder how they will repudiate the insinuation made by the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) when he asks them to return him again as a member of this House. I say that this statement of his was an insult to the agricultural classes of this country. It is a shame that an hon. gentleman who professes to be of the dignity and standing of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) should make such an illustration, because it was a gratuitous insult to the farmers. It was intended to be offensive, it ought to be offensive, and when the time comes again that the hon. member will have to appeal to his constituents I feel they will resent it. We have heard hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House make some very peculiar statements in Parliament, but the time will come when they will have to go back to their constituents, to ask their people to re-endorse their arguments and the position they have taken here, or to reject them, and send others in their places. But then and not till then we will find a change come over the spirit of their dream; we will find them again making excuses for their position and explaining it away; there will be another Malvern speech from the leader of the Opposition, and the people will be told that the country is committed to a tariff and that they dare not alter it at present, and on that ground they will claim the support of the manufacturers. It will take them as long to explain away their arguments of to-day as it does to explain their untenable position before the agriculturists of Canada; and I am afraid that the result will be about as pleasant to them as it was in 1882 and 1887. They will find that the people would rather live in a fool's paradise, as they are pleased to call it, and have some comfort, than enjoy the company of hon. gentlemen opposite, who could only drive the ship of state on the sands and shoals as they did before. producing and manufacturing classes of this country will prefer to support men who have shown their disposition, their willingness and their ability to assist them as they are doing today. But what is the present Government doing for the great agricultural class of this country to-day? They have put a duty on the products of the farmers, in which competition from the American side is becoming injurious to them—on meats, lard, butter, corn and oats; on every one of these lines the duty is a direct benefit to the farmers of this country. Then, the Government have kept the markets of the old country for the Canadian farmer, who is able to send his cattle there alive without having them scheduled as American cattle are. They have kept the home market of this country for the Canadians, which has been built up by our manufacturing industries. The manufacturers of this country are consuming millions of feet of lumber as raw material, which has been got out by the farmers. An hon-gentleman from Prince Edward Island said that this tariff benefits the class against the mass—that it benefits not the agriculturists, but the manufacturers; but the manufacturers of this country buy their raw material from the farmers, and thus by benefiting the manufacturers they benefit the farmers. If you go along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway in my county to-day, you will see great quantities of elm, maple, beech, ash, birch, cherry, and all kinds of hardwood and softwood piled up in the railway yards waiting to be shipped to Toronto to supply the Massey and other manufacturing companies. This company turned out over 20,000 agricultural implements last year for the farmers of this and other countries. They exported to foreign countries over 2,000 agricultural implements last year, and we have men travelling all through the country during the winter season buying up timber as raw material for the manufacturers. Is not that a benefit to the country? I know farmers who if the season is propitious will make from $100 to $400 in getting out this timber and wood, and it is largely the protective tariff adopted in 1878 that has enabled the manufacturers to increase their output from year to year, and thereby consume the raw material. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), in dealing with this question, said that the farmers, instead of being benefited by this tariff, were injuriously affected by it. He undertook to compare the condition of the farmers to-day with what it was a few years ago, and he mentioned a number of implements needed to carry on the operations of an ordinary farm in Ontario, giving the cost of those implements without the duty, and their cost with the duty. The hon. gentleman forgot that these articles are manufactured at home, no duty being paid on them, and that the wood used in their manufacture is produced by Canadian farmers. But he counted up the cost, and he found that every farmer in this country would need $994 worth of implements to carry on his farming operations on which according to his calculation, he would pay $376 of duty. I think in the case of almost any farmer of Ontario $376 would cover the cost of nearly all the agricultural implements about his place. Then the hon. gentleman went on to show how the Mackenzie Government encouraged the farmers of this country, and said:

"During that time we could get all our agricultural implements into the country free; now we have to pay 35 per cent.; waggons were free, they now pay 50 per cent.; a buggies were free, they now pay 41 per cent.; a hay-knife was free, it now has to pay 79½ per cent."

He mentioned various other farming implements which he said were then free of duty, but on which we have now to pay a duty. Now, I have a statement here of the duties paid on agricultural implements in 1878, and I say the member for South Huron in using the argument he did was only deluding the farmers of the country, and leading them to believe that under the Mackenzie Government they were getting those implements free, when such was not the case. I find that in 1878 agricultural implements not otherwise specified were imported to the value of \$20,756, on which a duty was paid of \$3,618.22, at $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent; and yet the hon. member for South Huron said they were free. Ought the hon, gentleman not to apologise to the people of this country and to this House for making such an erroneous and misleading statement?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). The statement I made was that the farmers could get all their implements in through agricultural societies free.

Mr. SPROULE. I have read the hon. gentleman's own words; it was afterwards he spoke of agricultural societies. I have a statement here showing that through agricultural societies there was imported only $1,901 worth. Then, I find that in 1878 there was imported $576 worth of chaff cutters, on which a duty was paid of $100.82; $1,391 worth of churns, on which a duty of $243.38 was paid; $184 worth of corn huskers, on which a duty of $32.54 was paid; $379 worth of cultivators, on which a duty of $66.36 was paid; $28,909 worth of hoes, rakes and forks, on which a duty of $5,059.70 was paid; $45,058 worth of seythes and snaths, on which $7,889.30 of duty was paid; $34,437 worth of spades and shovels, on which $6,043 was paid; and upon reaping and threshing machines, of which they brought in over $44,000 worth, there was paid $7,698 duty. In all $203,808 worth of agricultural implements of these kinds were brought in, on which $35,464 duty was paid, and yet the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) endeavored to persuade the farmers that under the Mackenzie régime they got their agricultural implements in free. I have gone over the hon. gentleman's statements in various lines, and if time permitted I could show that in every instance they are as misleading as is the one I have just exposed. The hon. gentleman, who is a practical farmer and is credited with a good deal of intelligence, should be ashamed to mislead the poor farmers into the belief that they were getting in agricultural implements free in 1878, and are paying so much now, when the reverse is the case. The hon. gentleman should apologise to this House and to the farmers of this country for having made so misleading a statement. From the little information I have had from the farmers since the new duties have been imposed they are very much pleased. Instead of the tariff being universally unsatisfactory, in my county, which I visited only two days ago, I did not find a single farmer, of either party. who was not prepared to admit that the protection given him was of the right kind. In fact the only objection he had was that it did not go far enough. They desire a heavier duty on pork and oats, and I think the farmers are entitled to an increase of the duties. I think, notwithstanding all the opposition on the part of the lumbermen, that it is not doing any great injustice to them that the farmer should get a little more for his pork. I see the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) applauding that sentiment. I know he is a lumberman and wants to get American pork in free of duty. But I think the farmers will not appreciate his good intentions when he goes back to them, and tells them that he is prepared to oppose the Government because they will not take the duty off pork and allow the lumbermen to bring it in free. hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), said that our Government were exasperating the Americans in every particular. He said that last year they put an export duty on logs, which worked great injustice to our Canadian exporters of lumber. How does it exasperate the Americans? It exasperates the hon member for North Norfolk a good deal more than the Americans. Why? Because he is carrying on his lumber operations on the shores of Georgian Bay, and instead of buying his pork from the Canadian farmers, he crosses the lakes and buys it in Michigan. Instead of buying oats from the Canadian farmer he brings them over from Michigan, and if the export duty were taken off logs, he would tow them over to the American side, transfer his mill there, and sell his lumber, without paying any duty, in the American market. He would carry on the greater part of his operations on the American side, and the only benefit that Canada would derive from his enterprise would be in the employment of a few men in the lumber shanties. I know for a fact that mills have been transferred to the American side and the logs towed across, and that the Americans are sending men to cut the logs, and as soon as the logs are in the water, they take them across, and leave their Canadian men often without paying them their winter's wages, so that many of our Canadians are compelled to beg their way home after working the whole season in the woods. Is that for the benefit of the Canadian farmers? We have a right to put a stop to this and legislate for our own people. These lumbermen are the wealthy men of the country. men who bought timber limits a few years ago and hold them to-day are rapidly becoming millionaires, and why should they not pay a little more for their pork and for their oats, and thus benefit the Canadian farmers who live among them and endure all the hardships and trials of life in the country? I hope the Government will keep up that export duty on logs, or even make it higher. Let the logs be kept in our country, let them be manufactured here, let the oats and the pork of our farmers go to feed the horses and men of our lumbermen, and let our own lumber be manufactured here. Those hon.

gentlemen, whether they come from North Huron, or Grey, or Bruce, or Simcoe, or any other part of the country, will be condemned by the farmers when it is found that they oppose this duty, which is specially intended to benefit the farmers. I hope the Government will make the tariff higher than it stands, and I am sure the farmers will stand by the Government, which is doing its best in the interests of the whole people.

Mr. LAVERGNE. We have heard many interesting speeches on the subject before the House from the other Provinces, but I do not think that the protests coming from the Province of Quebec have been sufficiently numerous, and for this reason I deem it my duty to express my views on this matter. When the President of the Council rose the other day I expected that he would have treated this question particularly from a Quebec standpoint, but I must say I was disappointed in that regard, for the hon. gentleman devoted almost all his time to attempting to refute the arguments of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and limited his remarks to very general considerations concerning the whole Dominion; but perhaps the policy of the hon. gentleman, in not speaking about his own Province, was a wise one under the circumstances, for I know that the hon, gentleman has regard for the truth, and I have no doubt that he felt scrupulous about going into particulars with regard to the Province of Quebec, since he could not do so with any advantage to the position he has taken. Judging from what we have heard, more especially on this side, concerning Ontario and the Maritime Provinces, judging from the statistics which have been given us and also from the blue-books, I must say that there is no cause for satisfaction in the actual condition of our country, more especially the condition of the Province of Quebec. President of the Council has expressed the opinion that he is opposed to reciprocity even in natural products, so that he has personally committed himself to oppose reciprocity in every respect; and considering the stand that the Government have taken on this question the prospects of the Province of Quebec are darker perhaps than those of any other Province in the Dominion. I intend to say but very little on this point, and will merely express my views in support of the policy proposed by my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). What has been the results of the policy of protection in the Province of Quebec? I admit that one single place in that Province has been favored by this protective system, and that is the city of Montreal. The rural districts and the towns and villages have not derived any benefit whatever from that policy, but have suffered many disadvantages. Take for instance the city of Quebec. In the division of that city represented by my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) there is the manu-That is prospering, facture of boots and shoes. but it was established before the principle of pro-tection was adopted. These manufacturers do not want that system of protection. They have often voted on that question, and last time they returned a free trader with a majority of 2,000. Take the city of Sherbrooke. I was told to-day, by a well informed citizen of Sherbrooke, that the only new industry there is a corset factory, which was estab-Mr. SPROULE.

lished in 1880. Take St. Hyacinthe. The industries there existed before 1879. They have increased since, but only by natural progress, and they protest against the present system by returning my hon. friend the present member (Mr. Bernier). Take all the other places in the Province of Quebec, the rural districts, the townships, the parishes, the villages and even the towns, and you will see that they have only suffered from this system. The hon, gentleman said he would protect the the farmers by causing new markets to be created. I ask him where are the new markets in the Province of Quebec, I do not know of one. The farmers who were to be benefited by this system have suffered instead of profiting by it. Perhaps they may have benefited in Ontario or in the North-West, but in the Province of Quebec we are bound to buy flour and corn and almost all the products of the farm from the western Provinces. It is a disputable question whether the duty on flour has increased the price or not. There is one thing which cannot be disputed, and that is that we pay the duty on the American flour that we buy. According to the Trade and Navigation Returns, we bought 200,000 barrels of American flour last year, upon which we paid a duty of $100,000. If you divide this among the 65 constituencies in the Province of Quebec, you will see that each constituency paid on an average $1,500. We paid last year $47,000 in that Province in duty on corn, which is an average of $750 for each constituency. On the two items of flour and corn, $2,250 were paid in duty on an average in each constituency in the Province of Quebec. Now, there has been another 25 cents added on each barrel of flour, and, supposing we bought only the r same quantity next year, the increased duty will mean $750 for every constituency in the Province of Quebec. This year, if we are to judge from the statistics of last year, the people of Quebec will have to pay an average duty of $3,000 on flour and corn. What do we pay in duties on what we import for consumption? The total duties amount to about 23 million dol-We have 215 constituencies, and this represents an average duty of over $100,000 in every constituency of the Dominion. This duty is more than the municipal taxes and the school taxes and the church assessments and the tithes and the local charges all put together. This is the result of protection. What will be the next result? The next result is retaliation. With the tariff which now prevails in the Province of Quebec, we can only export some articles to the United States, such as horses, cattle, hay, potatoes, eggs and some lumber. The duty now is high enough and leaves a very small margin for the producer. Now, on both sides of the line, we are raising a wall. The Americans are quick enough to retort to us. We are threatened with a tariff which will be double on some articles and as high on others as that which at present exists. This will amount to total prohibition in the Province of Quebec in regard to all that we export to the United States, and which we will now have to keep. It is said that those who sell hay ought not to do so, but ought to look for other pursuits. I say they have no right to say to these producers, you shall cultivate your land in other ways. There are many sections in the Province of Quebec, particularly on the north shore, such as Berthier and Maskinonge, where hay can be profitably grown and is grown, but the river St. Lawrence covers the land at certain periods of the year, and it is impossible to cultivate cereals there. In those counties the hay business is the most profitable one, and I do not think that hon. gentlemen opposite have the right to say: You must give up this pursuit and must look after others. The President of the Council challenged the member for South Oxford to discuss the question of reciprocity in natural products, on any platform whatever. I am sure the hon. gentleman will not have time to come to my county; but, if he passes through or near there, I shall be glad for him to come and discuss these questions before the farmers of Arthabaska. I would not promise him a very great success; I do not think he would succeed in making those gentlemen believe that it is beneficial to them to pay a tax on flour, that it is beneficial to them to pay a tax on corn. I must say that this custom, of buying corn for fattening cattle in the Province of Quebec although almost new, is increasing very fast. At Arthabaska Station, in my own constituency, for the past few months, as many as five or six carloads of corn have been received every week. These pay a duty of $45 a car-load, $300, which the farmers of two or three townships pay every month for corn. I invite the hon, gentleman to make these farmers believe that it is to their advantage to pay a tax on corn, as well as on flour. We are told that this great National Policy has had the result of developing our North-West. Well, I must say that the way that has been done, and the way the Canadian Pacific Railway has been built, has been detrimental rather than beneficial to the old Provinces. I must also say that this development of the North-West and the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the way it has been built, have been accomplished under false pretences. What were the promises of the hon, gentlemen when they carried that measure? It was said about 9 or 10 years ago that in 1890 the population of the North-West and Manitoba would be about one million, whereas it is probable that next year, which was the date fixed by them for the one million, the population of that country will not have reached more than 200,000. Those hon. gentlemen, therefore, have made as light mistake of 800,-000. We are also told that we would sell lands in the North-West to an extent exceeding 60 millions of dollars and that with this sum we would pay the money which we had expended towards helping the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Well, the time will shortly be up when we were to have received this 60 millions, and so far not one cent of this sum have we received. We have not yet derived from the sale of those lands enough to pay the expense of administering them. Now, the hon. President of the Council told us that there was no cause for the complaints which were made as to the condition of our agriculturists; he admitted there was hard times just now, and that there was some immigration, more especially of our young men. He told us that the young man is bold, fond of adventures, fond of seeing new countries and trying new enterprises. But, Sir. we know there are other causes for the exodus. Of course, I do not doubt the sincerity of the hon. gentleman in speaking of the County of Stanstead but in the section of the country where I live there are other causes to drive away the people. Almost every train that leaves the station of Arthabaska takes away five or six families to the United States. In one of the best township of Arthabaska, where there were 21 inhabitants in one range, there are now only five-the others have all gone to the States. No later than last week I met a man who came back from the States to see Mr. Mercier. He was the father of 12 living children, and he hoped that, as he had not been gone long away, he would be entitled to his 100 acres of land. Surely he was not a young man. Being the father of 12 children he must have had some little experience, and he had not been led away by a spirit of adventure. These examples might be multiplied. It is admitted generally that we are passing through a period of depression, that there is a crisis over almost the whole Dominion except, perhaps, in Manitoba and the North-West, which countries the members coming from them very properly take occasion to advertise in this discussion. The remedy the Government offers to us is additional taxation. We already pay a tax on flour, and it is proposed to increase it by 50 per cent. The Government propose a very general increase on almost every article, yet we have a surplus of over one million, and it is predicted that next year we will have a surplus of about two millions. Then where is the necessity of adding these taxes? Where is the necessity of increasing our burdens? The Finance Minister has our burdens? The Finance Minister been congratulated on his clear statement of the affairs of the country, he has been congratulated on these surpluses. I believe in the skill of the hon. gentleman, but I say these surpluses are no proof of his skill. Any one can make a surplus. The most incapable man in this House, if he were in the hon, gentleman's place, could have a surplus by increasing the taxation. long as you have not decimated the population, and as long as you have consumers enough to buy goods, you will have a surplus. Now, the policy we propose is reciprocity with our neighbors. We believe that if we had a larger market where there are 60,000,000 of consumers, we would have a chance to improve our condition. But hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that the Americans will not consent to it, because we cannot offer fair compensation. They say we are offering to the American producer a market of five millions only, while they would give us a market of sixty millions. I say this is no argument at all. If it were a good argument, it would equally apply to a proposition which would declare that it was no benefit to the other States of the Union to have free trade with the State of New York, because it has a population of only five millions. It would be advantageous to the States to parcel themselves off into groups and refuse to trade with each other. Another objection to our proposition is that it would bring about annexation. Well, I must say that I am not an advocate of annexation to the United States, but it is not because I dread it, I must say I can see several advantages in it. can sée that annexation might be favorable to the Province of Quebec, and that there might be more self-government in it. I do not, however, advocate annexation; but, if we were advocates of it, the policy would spread like fire. Who are its advo-cates in this House? The advocates in this House are to be found on the Treasury benches. They are virtually preaching annexation, and their policy is bringing us to annexation very quickly. We have had hon, gentlemen raise the loyalty cry. It has been said that we should cultivate close relations with the old country. Hon. gentlemen opposite are able to say what they like when it suits their purpose; but when they came to adopt the present protective tariff they had no more regard for England than they had for the United States, and the duties on English goods are the same as on American goods. If you want to avoid annexation, and if you are as patriotic as you boast you are, you should not adopt this policy, and I say the members of the Province of Quebec—that Province which is the greatest sufferer from this system—should be unanimous in opposing this policy which bears so heavily upon us, and there should not be among us, at any rate, a dissentient voice.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, at this late hour of the night I do not intend to occupy the House for a long time; but inasmuch as a number of statements have been made during the debate in regard to the North-West, and in regard to the position we occupy there, and the failure in connection with the settlement of the country and in connection with the land policy and other matters, I, who have been intimately connected with it for a great many years, consider it is my duty as one of the representatives of that country, to say something before the debate closes. With regard to the tariff I might say that we in the North-West consider that during the past we have been one of the Provinces which has been a principal sufferer in that connection, inasmuch as we have nothing there that is protected. But under the new arrangement of the present session, the principal industry, in fact almost the only industry in that country of a manufacturing character, and that is the flouring industry, has been placed on a proper basis, and the duty on flour under the resolutions has been made equal to that on wheat, and that is a very satisfactory arrangement for us. With respect to bacon and pork, the new duty will, I am satisfied, give satisfaction to the farmers of the North-West and remove some of the past grievances. Much has been said during this debate as to the duty placed on manufactured articles used on the farms in tilling the soil. While duties have been imposed, there can be no doubt whatever of this fact, that agricultural implements are cheaper to-day in the North-West than they were some years ago, before this duty was placed on those implements, whatever the cause may be for this state of affairs. Another matter of interest to the North-West is that of fruit. In 1883 the quantity of fruit in air-tight cans and packages, both from the United States and Great Britain, amounted to 301,795 lbs., of the value of $23,184, on which a duty was paid of $9,053. That was the duty under the tariff in 1883. Fruit in air-tight cans, not sweetened: total imports, 508,786 lbs., of a value of $31,221, on which a duty was imposed of $10,175. What do we find in 1889? Fruit in air-tight cans, in packages weighing not over 1 lb., nothing. Fruit in air-tight cans, weighing over 1 lb., both from Great Britain and the United States, 58,425 lbs. of the value of $3,449, on which a duty was paid by the people of the North-West of only $1,752, as against $10,175 in 1883. I would ask, why Mr. LAVERGNE.

do we in the North-West, if we be suffering in regard to these duties, continue to support this Government? One of the principal reasons is this: that we in the North-West have more confidence in, if you will call it so, the jovial optimism of the policy as indicated by the leader of the Government, in preference to the morose pessimism which decidedly characterises the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. In the whole of their speeches there is such sadness in style that each speech is a threnody in itself. We believe the people in the North-West, knowing the future of that country, and knowing the important part it has played and will play in the future of this Dominion, have more sympathy with the people who likewise have faith in the future of that country. In all the speeches delivered, especially the speeches of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), while the warp was made up of black threads, some of the weft threads had bright coloring, but they seemed to be introduced with the idea of throwing the dark shades more into prominence than as suggesting a bright future for the North-West and Canada. The hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) spoke about a visit he or some one had paid to Hades, where some innocent and misled Conservatives were dried first before being burnt. With respect to that visit, I do not know whether he indicated the position of affairs properly, but my idea is this, that men who vilify and misrepresent their country, when they get to Hades should not go through the process of even being dried before being properly disposed of. These gloomy prophecies have been going on for years and years. The Globe began them in 1884, when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company came down to Parliament asking for further aid. I may say that the Globe is the organ of hon. gentlemen opposite, and that journal then indicated that it was impossible for a railway to pay west of Moose Jaw, unless alkali could be made a merchantable commodity. It went on to say:

"For the settlers who have gone far west cannot be left without a railway on which their very lives depend. Trains must manage to crawl out to them pretty frequently. Doubtless the country might save a great deal by paying out and recompensing for his losses every man settled in the more distant west.

"If so, the railway beyond Manitoba could be left unused till overtaken by close settlement."

That was the prophecy in 1884. What are now the facts? We have towns springing up west of Moose Jaw. We have ranches with over 100,000 cattle on a thousand hills, we have over 50,000 sheep and horses on those ranches; Calgary, one of the most important towns in Canada, springing into existence with all the conveniences of modern civilisation; Donald and Revelstoke, where are to be constructed smelting works to treat the ores taken out of the mountains of British Columbia; Kamloops, which is growing into importance; New Westminster, developing rapidly; Vancouver, which four years ago was a forest, burnt down and Phœnix-like rising out of its ashes with electric railways, gasworks, waterworks and all the conveniences of modern civilisation and a population of about 15,000. We go over to Vancouver Island, and we find Victoria growing in like proportion and taking new life and springing into a new existence, all since the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, notwithstanding the predictions of The Globe of that date. Then, later on, we find that a member who represented South Norfolk (Mr. Jackson), stated in this House that there were 60,000 Canadians living in the State of Iowa and he was endorsed by the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) who always poses as a man who is thoroughly informed on what he speaks about. A short time after that gentleman made that statement the census of Iowa was taken, and instead of 60,000 Canadians being in the State, there were only 19,067, less than one-third of the amount stated by the then member for South Norfolk, and endorsed by the member for Bothwell. We find also from the census of that State that there were 2,010 less Canadians in 1885, than there were in 1880. That gentleman to whom I have referred also stated that there were 65,000 Canadians in Minnesota and 40,000 in Dakota, while the census of these three States I have mentioned show that there are only 97,973, whereas the statement made out there were 165,000 Canadians there. Those are samples of some of the statements made to this House time and time again, I may mention that the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Carthwright) stated at a meeting some time ago that 50 per cent. of the settlers of a certain district in Dakota were Canadian-born, whereas the fact of the matter is that by the census of 1885, which I have also here, the actual number of Canadians was only 17 per cent. of the population instead of 50 per cent. Later, the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) stated that there were as many Canadians in Dakota as there were in the whole of the North-West and Manitoba. Now what are the facts? At the census of 1885, in Dakota there were 33,413 Canadians, and in Manitoba and the North-West, at the census of 1886, there was a population of 90,612, or about three times as many Canadians in Manitoba and the North-West as in Dakota. Let us proceed a little further and enquire into these mis-statements of hon gentlemen opposite. The member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), stated last year, at a meeting held in Toronto, that there were 1,500,000 people in Dakota. Now, at the census of 1885 the population of Dakota was 415,000, and the wildest boomsters of that territory during the last year, when they were agitating for being organised into two different States, only claimed a population of 800,000 or about one-half of what the hon member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), in his generosity, gave them. A number of hon, gentlemen opposite have made the statement that half the people who went to Manitoba and the North-West crossed over to Dakota and stayed there. I secured from Mr. Nimmo, who was then the officer in Washington, who had charge of the statistics, and from the return he sent me, I find that from 1874 to 1884, at which time the United States Government gave up the collection of these statistics, only 4,767 Canadians crossed from Manitoba and the North-West Territories to the United States, and this migration was principally during the four years from 1881 to 1884. The greatest number that left Manitoba and the North-West Territories in any one year was in 1882, when 1,380 people crossed. Yet in face 1882, when 1,380 people crossed. of these statistics, collected by the American Government, statements are made in this House that 50 per cent. of the people who have gone to Mani-toba and the North-West have crossed the boundary and gone to the United States. When we consider our growth with that of the United States, I do leading newspaper in New York :-

not think we ought to be ashamed of the comparison. The increase of population of the States of Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, from 1830 to 1880, was 41 per cent., while the growth of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, during the same period, was 169 per cent. Take the six New England States, and you find that in the same period they increased 105 per cent., while the old Province of Canada, during the same period increased 299 per cent., or nearly three times as much. It has been said that the rural population of Canada is decreasing, but it must also be remembered that it is decreasing in the eastern part of the United States. In the State of New York, from 1870 to 1880, the rural population was less in the last named year than in 1870, but the cities in New York State had increased their population 600,000 souls. In the State of Illinois which is comparatively a very new State, the rural population is not increasing anything like as rapidly as the cities of the State are. In Indiana, which is a very new State in comparison with the Eastern States, we find the rural population is holding it own and very little more. The last census of the State of Iowa, one of the very newest States, showed that the rural population had not increased while the cities and towns had increased, and the New York Evening Post stated in an editorial that this was to be expected, for the tide of emigration was moving westward and these States, considered new a few years ago, were now becoming old States, and they, in their turn, would supply the people for the most distant States and Territories, just as the Eastern States had originally supplied their population. This is the fact all over the United States, and it is nothing more than we can expect in Canada. But there are reasons why the rural population are decreasing. One great reason is that the style of farming has changed. In the old days when we had a good many farm hands, and before there was so much labor-saving machinery the rural population was necessarily larger, but now we have machinery on the farms and the number of hands is reduced. Another reason for the decrease in the rural population is that in many parts of Canada and in Ontario especially, the farmers are going into stock-farming. I know men in the County of Middlesex in (which I have the honor of being born) who are now raising stock on three or four farms and who have only one hand guarding the stock on each farm, while in my early days we had whole families living on each of these farms and with servants attached to them. Some of these people in the rural sections on account of old age and deaths in the family are selling out the farms and moving into the towns and cities. Then, of course, we have the western movement and that must follow as a consequence if we are going to have the North-West peopled. We must expect some of the people of Eastern Canada to move out west and settle our fertile plains, where farming can be done so far more cheaply and where so much more can be grown to an acre than in the east. You must expect the same movement in Ontario, as they have in the States, in New York, Illinois, Indiana and other Eastern and Middle States of the Union. A great deal has been said about the mortgages in Canada, but there are also mortgages in the United States, and to prove the extent of these mortgages in the United States, I might quote the following from a

"The New York Times has recently published some startling statisticts showing to what extent American agriculturists are handicapped and crippled by mortgages on their farms. The amounts represented by the faces of the farm mortgages in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and Wisconsin, consin, are :-

In Illinois	$
Indiana	398,000,000
Iowa	351,000,000
Kansas	200,000.000
Michigan	350,000,000
Minnesota	175,000,000
Missouri	237,000,000
Nebraska	140,000,000
Ohio	701,000,000
Wisconsin	250,000,000

Total farm mortgages in the$3,422,000,000 ten States..

"The actual value of the farms in the ten States in question being $13,931,000,000. It goes on to show that there is no hope of this enormous sum ever being paid, as the profits from agriculture in the United States are quite inadequate to remove so heavy an incumbus. It figures inadequate to remove so heavy an incumbus. It figures the matter out as follows:—

"The interest money annually drawn from the ten States listed, if they pay 7 per cent. only, amounts to $239,000,000. The profits of agriculture do not warrant the payment of so great a sum. The total value of the farm products of the United States was, in 1879, $2,313,-000,000. Of this value the ten States produced $839,000,-000. This was the total value sold, consumed and on hand. Say that the ten States now produce to the value of $1,000,000,000. If but one-half the farms are mortgaged the produce they yield is worth $500,000,000. At least $139,000,000 of that value goes to pay interest money, leaving $251,000,000 of produce to support $86,000 farmers and their families, or $294 to each farmer. Out of this small sum they must pay labor, pay taxes, supply seed, buy tools, and they and their families live. The sum is utterly inadequate. It is not possible for these mortgaged utterly inadequate. It is not possible for these mortgaged farmers, as a class, to ever lift their mortgages."

This is the state of affairs represented by the New York Times to exist in some of the most prosperous States of the Union. Then, the Farmers' Review of Chicago sent out men to find the condition of the farmers in the following States: Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, Kentucky and Dakota; and the whole result shows an average of $38\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the farms to be mortgaged in those States. But, Sir, I have a more recent report with reference to the State of New York:

"We have, on the authority of the annual report of the state assessors, which was laid before the New York Legislature on the 24th instant (March last), an authoritative report as to affairs in that State. The report is lengthy, even as summarised for the press, but its importance warrants its reproduction. It says: There continues to be a marked depreciation in the value of farm lands in nearly every county, and the depression among farmers continues, while the prospect for improvement is not good. Many assert that after paying expenses they cannot realise from their farms sufficient to pay the interest on mortgages, and, consequently, thousands of interest on mortgages, and, consequently, thousands of farms are falling into the hands of a mortgagee."

Then, a few counties of the State are mentioned, of which I select one or two:

"Chenango—A purely farming county: in 1887, the real property was assessed $19,153,708; and in 1888, at $16,162,513.
"Brio—There is a constant and rapid appreciation of values in Buffalo, but there is a depreciation of the towns of the county, with one or two exceptions.

"Genesee—The residents of this county show that the farming lands have depreciated during the last twelve years, 332 per cent."

Mr. LANDERKIN. All that is against your system.

Mr. ROSS. Well, I want to show that we are no worse off than they are in the country you wish to drive us to. With regard to the State of Michigan, the Detroit Free Press the other day said:

Mr. Ross,

"The mortgaged indebtedness is 46'8 per cent. of the assessed valuation of the farms covered by it, just as Senator Voorhees said. In other words, 47'4 per cent. of the farms of the State are mortgaged to the extent of 46'8 per cent. of their assessed valuation."

Yet, Sir, we are told that because our farms in Ontario are mortgaged to a very large extent, we must have trade relations with those people across the line, who by their own showing are more heavily mortgaged than we are. It has been said that the United States has been settled up much more rapidly than Canada. There are many reasons for that. One is that there was a continuous wave of immigrants pouring over that country from one State to the other. There was no natural line of demarcation between one State and another, and the tidal wave of immigration kept pouring on from State to State, the Eastern States settling up the Middle States and the Middle States settling up the Western States. It was almost entirely the native population of the United States that settled the western parts of that country. Illinois and Indiana were settled at the same time, Missouri and Michigan at the same time, Wisconsin and Iowa at the same time, Minnesota and Kansas at the same time, Nebraska and Dakota at the same time. In Iowa only 18 per cent. of the people are foreign, the rest coming from the Eastern and Middle states; in Kansas only 10 per cent. of the people are foreign, while Illinois, Indiana and Ohio have sent to Iowa and Kansas 635,373 people. This is according to the State statistics of 1885, the latest on record. The conditions of Canada are entirely different. There are large breaks between the different parts of the country. Our Eastern Provinces are a long distance from Ontario, and between Ontario and Manitoba another large break intervenes, so that there is not that natural wave of immigration pouring from one Province to another that has marked the settlement of the United States. Then, it is said that our people are going to the United States. There is no doubt that too many of them have gone, but reasons can be given in explanation of that. The first reason is that a great many young men, owing to the superior quality of our schools, the vigor of our race, our climate, the intellectuality of our people, have become professional men, doctors and lawyers, and we have not the foreign immigration pouring into the country to supply the population on which these young men can operate or depend for subsistence. Then, other young men who have gone to business colleges and schools and have learned book-keeping and business habits do not find scope in this country, because we have not immigrants enough to provide a field for their energies, and they have gone to the United States, where, no doubt, many of them are doing well. But what we want in order to keep these young men at home is to adopt a vigorous immigration policy, to spend one or two million dollars for the purpose of bringing in immigrants to fill up the country; then these young men will come home and will become the lawyers, doctors and merchants to supply the people coming from abroad. Another reason why we lost some of our people in the past was that our route lay through the United States, and a great many of our people on their way to Manitoba and the North-West Territories, having to pass through Chicago and St. Paul, were delayed by American immigration agents and were induced to settle in Minnesota and Dakota, and never even saw Manitoba or the Canadian North-West. But, Sir, I am sorry to say that the very moment our own road was built on our own territory to the North-West, that very moment the Government, supported by the leaders of the Opposition, reduced the amount hitherto appropriated for immigration purposes, and to-day it amounts to practically nil. Instead of cutting down the amount for immigration, the Government should, in my opinion, have quadrupled it for the purpose of bringing people to this country and placing them on farms in the North-West. Many of the people who have gone to the United States have gone there to follow friends who preceded them from Eastern Canada, and not because they heard anything about that country superior in any respect to what it is in Manitoba and the North-West, but merely because their friends had gone there before, and they followed There is another reason, and it is a very important factor in connection with the settlement of that country, and that is the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, and the writings in newspapers supporting hon. gentlemen opposite, which have so misrepresented Manitoba and the North-West in this House and before the country, that they have induced many persons to go to the Western States. I can tell hon, gentlemen opposite that you can go, Sir, to points in Dakota to-day, and find that three-fourths of the Canadians who have settled there were, when in Canada, supporters of hon, gentlemen opposite. Two or three hon, gentlemen specially have continually stated in this House that the land policy of the North-West was not at all equal to the land policy of the United States. But let any American come to our country and study up our land policy, and compare it with his own, and he will acknowledge that ours is infinitely superior; and if we have erred in any one point, it is in being too liberal to the settler, sometimes to his own disadvantage. The land policy of the United States is not to be compared with ours in point of liberality. People have gone to the States thinking the laws there were more liberal, that their land policy was more liberal, and that it would be infinitely better for them on that account to settle in the United States, but in this they have been mistaken. I wish to refer to what our land policy was in Manitoba and the North-West when hon. gentlemen opposite were at the head of affairs. On the 26th December, 1874, an Order in Council was passed. What was it? It was to withdraw from settlement and sale every acre of land along the railway belt, that is 20 miles on each side of the located line, from the western boundary of the Province of Ontario to twenty miles west of Fort Pelly. settler could go in and settle on one acre of these lands, either as homestead or pre-emption, or in any way whatever. Another Order in Council was passed. What was that? It was to still further extend that reserve—to send it on to Battle River. A third Order in Council was passed, to still further extend it, from Battle River to Jasper House, ordering that the lands be withdrawn for twenty miles on each side of the railway, from a point twenty miles west of the Battle River to Jasper House, in the Yellow Head Pass through the Rocky Mountains. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), the then Minister of the Interior, came to Manitoba and the North-West, and I, the one hand they were playing a lament and with in company with some other gentlemen, called upon him in Winnipeg, and represented to him that something must be done in the interests of the country, that it would never do to block out from settlement twenty miles on each side of the railway. We spoke to him so strongly on the subject, that he assured us that on his return to Ottawa he would place our representations before his colleagues in the Cabinet. He did so, and an Order in Council was passed on the 9th November, 1877, an Order in Council the like of which, if this Government would dare to pass it, would create such a hue and cry from one end of the country to the other that the Government itself would not stand one day. Here is what the Order in Council said:

"be thrown open to actual settlement, but notfor home-stead or pre-emption entry, or for entry by military bounty or police warrants, or for ordinary sale. No person to be allowed to acquire more than one-half section or 320 acres, and such land shall be paid for by the occupant at whatever rate and upon such terms as may be fixed there-for by the Government, when the remainder of the lands in the Province of this class are disposed of."

No price is stated. It might be $20, or $10, or $5. And no time for fixing the price is stated. It might be twenty years, or ten years, or thirty years hence. It was to be fixed by the Government only when the balance of the lands in this class were disposed of.

"He further recommends that persons desiring to acquire such lands shall, previous to settlement thereon, be required to be entered therefor at the nearest Dominion Lands Office, and in order to prove their good faith, the applicants shall be obliged in each case to make a payment in advance at the time of entry of one dollar per acre in cash on account of the purchase, and further be required to settle on and commence to cultivate the land within one year from the date of entry, or, in default thereof, the payment so made to be forfeited."

A perfect system of landlordism. In addition to that:

"No scrip of any kind, or military bounty, or police warrants to be receivable in payment of the lands above described."

A number of farmers had settled in the county I have the honor to represent in this House. They were not able to get an entry, but when this Order in Council was published they were able to get an entry, had to pay $1 per acre, and they never knew how much more they would have to pay, or when the balance would be demanded. Nor could they, when they had improved their land, borrow $1 on it, as they could not get a titlé. When there was a change of Government, although I was not then supporting this Government, but was a member of the local House, I made representations to the Minister of the Interior and his deputy, and a number of others did the same thing. We induced this Government to change the policy of their predecessors, and every farmer in my district not only got his lands free, but if he had paid any money the money was refunded to him and his lands were given to him as a homestead. When we hear hon, gentlemen opposite talk about the number of Canadians who are leaving this country and going to the United States, we find there is a certain strain of sadness mixed with a certain element of pleasure in their tones. One would almost think that with the other playing a wedding march. There is a sort of wail among them at times when they hear about so many hundreds and thousands of Canadians going to the other side—the expression is almost heard: "Not lost, but only gone before." We in Manitoba are pleased with our growth. It has not been so satisfactory as we expected, or so large as we think the country is capable of. There have been a number of circumstances against us, but still our growth has been wonderful. Take the crop of oats, wheat and barley in 1881. The total returns were 2,567,545 bushels, and in 1887, six years afterwards, the total returns of these three kinds of grain were 22,022,000 bushels, making nine times more in 1887 than in 1881. I think that is a very satisfactory progress. A writer from an Ontario paper went to Manitoba a short time ago and visited a settlement near Glenboro', where he came across some Icelanders, and I may state to the hon. Minister of Agriculture that no settlers have gone to our country who have shown more satisfactory results, and adapted themselves better to the growing wants and requirements of the country, than those very Icelanders. They come there poor, they are willing to assimilate with our people, they are willing to work for the benefit of the country, and they have been very successful. I hope the hon, gentleman will succeed in bringing many more to the country. I will read you the result of this gentleman's visit to show the progress these people have made:

"Skapti Arson, settled in 1881, capital at time of starting $400; now worth $7,000. Paul Arnason, settled in 1887 without means, now worth $1,400. Thornstein Jousson, settled in 1881, capital $240; which is now increased to $8,150. Bjorn Walterson, homesteaded in 1883, capital $80; now worth $6,300. I might cite a score of other cases equally favorable, but enough has been said to illustrate the wealth of the soil, and what it will give to the worker."

These are results from the settlers who have gone to that country. On the whole they are very satisfactory, and nothing can be shown in any part of the United States more satisfactory to the individual than these results are. There is one thing for which I have to find fault with the Government. They have adopted the National Policy, the idea of which was to build up a great country on the north of the United States and to keep within ourselves the products of our own soil as much as possible and help to build up our own indus-Then, with a boldness and nerve which was wonderful, they took hold of the rapid construction and development of the Canadian Pacific Railway and completed it from ocean to ocean. In this they have also shown their wonderful fore-sight, and in this they were opposed by the Opposition in this House. The Canadian Pacific Railway is developing the internal commerce of the country by bringing the products of one Province to the other Provinces. This internal commerce is a very important factor in any country. In the United States it has been estimated that the internal commerce is seven times greater than the foreign commerce. It is likely that the internal commerce here would be the same. The construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway was a great factor in building up a great nation on this side of the boundary line, from ocean to ocean. But there was another thing to be done, and that was to get people, and we in the North-West complain that comes from India or any other country. That coun-Mr. Ross.

both sides of this House have been recreant to their trust in not inducing more people to come here to settle up the country. If they had done this there would be more credit given to the National Policy, more work for the Customs Department, and more work for the Canadian Pacific Railway. The moment you get the people there, untold results will accrue. What is it that is keeping up the factories and the spindles in Connecticut and Massachusetts? It is the population of Indiana and Illinois, it is the farmers in Dakota and the west who are filling up the towns and cities of the east by their demand for goods. If you were to blot out the Western States of America, where would be the New England States? Seeing this development of the manufacturing industry in the United States, it seems strange that our people have not got the same idea that they should help to build up our great west and by that means to settle and increase the prosperity of the east. You in the east have just as much interest—every town and village in Eastern Canada is just as much interested in this question as we are. Individually you are more interested, because I think we could get on as well if we had no relations with eastern Canada. The farmer would get as much from his soil, but the eastern population would not derive the benefit of his custom. One thing the Government has to do is to adopt a vigorous policy in regard to immigration, and to bring across the ocean people who are suitable to settle that country, and secure the speedy construction and completion of the Hudson Bay Railway, by which we will get a shorter outlet for produce, and bring immigrants by a short land journey into the heart of the North-West. By adopting this policy the future of the North-West and Canada is assured, for everything depends upon the successful development of the greater Canada. They have established colonies of people who have come from Iceland, Russia and Sweden, they have encouraged people to come from the old country, and these people for the most part went to the North-West and settled without having the advantage of an all-through rail carriage as they have now. The moment you feel that the country can be made prosperous by encouraging immigration, that the towns and cities in the east can obtain markets by establishing farmers on our great lands more rapidly than any other way, and in more prosperous shape than by placing any reliance on connection with the United States, the sooner this country's prosperity will be built up. When once the future of that great country is assured—no doubt it is new-but when once you get that country moving in the right road, from that moment Canada will commence to progress more than she has ever done in the past. It has been said that the North-West is a land of illimitable possibilities, and it will become a land of glorious realities. There are many hon, gentlemen here who have not seen the greatness of that country, who do not understand the vast extent of country which is open to our people. They think, when they hear you telling them of the beauties of that great west, that you are telling them fairy tales. It is, however, certain that 75 per cent. of the wheat growing country of this continent is north of parallel 49, and that country is ours, and we must take possession of it. Then we can successfully compete in the markets of the world with any wheat that try which we have in our possession is so great and so vast that it is impossible to find words to describe its capabilities. I believe in the future of Canada, but I know that the future of Canada depends entirely upon the future of the North-West, and I know that in that North-West there are possibilities which we can scarcely dream of. When the farmers take possession of that great territory, and their produce in wheat and in bacon is sent to British Columbia, the people of British Columbia will send in return their fruit, their fish and their lumber, The farmers of the North-West will send their products to the miners who are honeycombing the mountains of that Pacific Province, and are taking out, and will take out, the untold millions of wealth therein contained, to the fishermen and the lumbermen, and by the return which they will make they will prove that one part of this great country can help the other, and that, if eastern Canada ceased to exist, the west would still be a glorious reality an independent and selfsustaining country. In Canada it will be very long before the words "Go West" will become either decrepid with age or threadbare with use.

Mr. DAVIN. The North-West has been heard a good deal of in this debate, but up to this time nothing has been heard from a member of Parlia ment from the North-West itself. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Daly) made an exhaustive speech characterised by his usual ability, and now my hon friend from Lisgar (Mr. Ross) has made the speech which we have been anticipating for some time, and, as a member from the North-West, I feel grateful to him for the admirable manner in which he has placed the position of the North-West before the public. I need hardly say that very little is left for me to say, but I do not intend to keep the House more than a short time longer in order to complete the case which has been so admirably made for the North-West Territories. I would, however, point out that we are interested in the National Policy in a way which has not yet been shown to this House. Hon, gentlemen seem to think that, because we have no manufactures in the North-West, we are not interested in the National Policy. In the North-West we have such a fine ranching country that nothing in the United States can be compared with it. The great ranching men from the United States have come over there; they have visited the country south of Regina, of Maple Creek, of Medicine Hat; they have spoken to me; they have driven over the country, and have told me themselves that that was the country for the ranching kings of this continent. Suppose we had unrestricted reciprocity and they could bring in their horses and cattle without any embargo being laid upon them by my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, they would bring in their cattle and their horses, and they would take the grasses of that country for those animals, and then would take them over the Northern Pacific to Chicago and leave the country as the grasshoppers did when they swept every-thing that was fruitful in Egypt. They would not do anything for Canada or for the interests of the North-West, but they would send a few cow-boys the grass which should belong to our own ranchemen. So that, from that point of view, we are deeply interested in the National Policy. But I may say this, that even if it were not as my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Daly) proved, if it were not so that we were able to purchase machinery cheaper, actually cheaper than before the National Policy existed, I can assure this House, and I can assure the hon. members from Ontario, Quebec and the Lower Provinces, that our farmers have again and again said in my hearing: "Even if we do pay more for our machinery, we are well content to do it. It is true that we are Nor'-westers, but before we are Nor'-westers we are citizens of the Dominion of Canada, and we believe in building up a nation Now, I confess that this debate has disappointed me. It has disappointed me in this way: That having boundless faith, being of a sanguine temperament, and hoping all things, I had cherished the fond belief that this debate would bring forth something new. I have had the honor of a seat in this House now for four years, I have heard four debates on the Budget and the four debates are, so far as the mode of attack is concerned, so far as the missiles that have been used, so far as the tactics which have been adopted by my hon. friends of the Opposition are concerned, the four debates are as like as four peas. There has been nothing new whatever.

Mr. EDWARDS. What about the defence?

Mr. DAVIN. I am coming to the defence byand-bye. Now, let me say that so far as I can ascertain, even in regard to Ontario-and I have some friends in Ontario whom I constantly meet, and who tell me what they find—some hon, gentlemen on this side tell me that I am misinformed but I am assured by gentlemen who know Ontario well, that the farmers are laughing at the description of their condition given in this House. Now, Sir, must it not be so? There was one subject brought forward here by the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), to which I must allude. Both of these hon, gentlemen are men of great power; they are men that I think would take leading place in any assembly of the world. Nevertheless, for some reason or other, though the hon, member for South Oxford has given great attention to finance—it is probably presumptuous on my part even to whisper such a thing-but it seems to me that he does not understand the science to which he has given so much study. He moves over the surface of the science of finance, the bubble of his own presumption. I never find anything in his long drawn speeches year after year, that shows me that he thoroughly understands finance. What did he say in this debate? He actually brought forward the old bugbear of the balance of trade. My hon. friend the member for Brant, too, started before our eyes that phantom. believe the hon, member for South Oxford professes Well, Sir, if the to be a follower of Adam Smith. ghost of Adam Smith could come up and confront his phantom, the phantom would be scared away. Because I can tell him that when he brings forward here the theory that the balance of trade is a thing to frighten people, he is lapsing, he is backsliding, into the old mercantile system, and, from the point of view of Adam Smith, is guilty of gross and a few horsemen over the line and would sweep heresy. Now, will the House bear with me for a few minutes while I talk about this balance of trade? I will show them that this thing which has been made a rhetorical bugaboo from session to session, has nothing whatever in it.

Mr. FISHER. Brought forward by your own leaders.

Mr. DAVIN. I am not talking about my own leaders now, I am talking about this financial bugaboo, and about your leaders. I was fishing in my own stream, so taisez-rous, Lisette. Now, Sir, the statement is made that our exports for the last year were some $89,000,000 odd; our imports were $115,000,000 odd, and they say there is a balance of trade against us of $26,000,000. The year, before, I think, there was a balance of trade against us of $20,000,000, and the fact of there being a balance of trade of $26,000,000 against us this year shows that the aggregate trade, which was a point, I think, dwelt on last year, is increasing. Now, what must be done in order to take a true view of this question? Has it never occurred to the hon. gentlemen who talk about this balance of trade, that it is a very extraordinary thing that we are not ruined? It is not yesterday, or of to-day, that the balance of trade is against us. The balance of trade has been against us year after year. How is it we are not ruined? How is it that hon gentlemen on the Government side dare stand up and say that the farmers are prosperous, and we know they are prosperous? How is it, I say, that we are not ruined? Is not the balance of trade to the extent of millions of pounds sterling—not dollars—against England the whole time? How is it that England is not ruined? Now, I want to call the attention especially of the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who is a well instructed man in these matters, to the fact that the balance of trade is against the whole world. How is it that the whole world is not ruined? It is a permanent fact that to the extent of $1,080,000,000, the balance is against the whole world. Here is another fact for hon. gentlemen to digest, a nut for them to crack. is it that the balance of trade is against all progressive nations? It is only in the case of unprogressive nations: It is only in the case of unprogressive nations that the balance of trade is in their favor. There is something for them to discuss. Now, I will try to solve this matter. I will show that there is nothing whatever to fear with respect to this balance of trade. It surely must have occurred to some hon, gentlemen, in trying to make a point about this balance of trade, that they must have left out some factor necessary to the equation. You must first add on at least 5 per cent. to the $89,000,000 odd, in order to meet this fact: that the exports of goods are valued at the port of exit and the imports are valued at the port of entrance, and, of course, in order to equalise matters, you will have to add on the carriage, and that, I am told, will be about 5 per cent.; that will give you, speaking in round numbers, $4,500,000. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) spoke the other night of the large amount of interest we paid. We send across the Atlantic every year $7,500,000, which represents millions borrowed at 3 and 3½ per cent., and brought into the country where money is worth 6 and 8 per cent., and when it was borrowed, more than that. Why, Sir, that money must be very badly employed if it does not represent a pro-Mr. DAVIN.

fitable transaction, and as it is mainly employed in productive works, it does represent a profit, so that you have to add on to the $4,500,000 about $7,500,000, which gives you about $12,000,000. Mind, I do not say the $7,500,000 represents directly purchasing power, but indirectly it does, and in any case it must be taken as an export just as the millions sent over the Atlantic by emigrants, and to rich Americans in Europe, must be taken to swell the exports of the United States. But there is another consideration that I will ask my hon. friends from the Maritime Provinces to look to. There is a very large amount exported every year that my hon, friend the Minister of Customs does not, and should not, take note of—that is the amount of our shipping. We have at the present moment some 7,142 ships with a tonnage of 1,100,000 tons. I do not know exactly what the tonnage on the lakes will be; but if we take it at 100,000 tons, that leaves 1,000,000 tons. I am told the cost of building a new ship is $40 a ton, and the average value per ton of our shipping will probably be $35 a ton. That would give $35,000,000, and as earnings we should take 25 per cent., or a little more, and that would give $7,000,000 or $8,000,000. There you have $20,000,000 to take out of $26,000,000, and the sum is at once reduced to about $6,000,000—really, when counting the odd figures, only a little over $5,000,000. Is that a thing to scare us? You have then to take into account, what has been referred to incidentally in this debate, our immense internal development, the immense amount of wealth accumulated within ourselves; because remember that when hon, gentlemen of the Opposition make a point about the balance of trade, what they mean is this: we are living not on our income but on our capital. If we are in part piling up money, and if this is invested in houses, railways, canals and different works, if our private citizens are increasing in wealthbecause in the case of a commonwealth it is not sufficient to take into account the wealth of the Government, but you must also take into account the wealth of every citizen in it when you are considering how it is increasing in wealth-so when we see wealth increasing around us, when we see this vast railway built, commerce expanding, and Canada pluming herself more and more for still higher flights, it seems to me the most absurd thing that people should be scared with respect to a few million dollars, as though they were living on their capital, and that it is just as ludicrous as it was of the Roman epicure who, with a quarter of a million in his chest, poisoned himself lest he should die of starvation. When we speak of this internal development I want to call attention to one or two facts which are representative of dozens of similar facts that could be brought before the House on this question. First, I will take this one fact. In 1883 there were made 53,513,032 lbs. of cheese in the country. In 1888, 65,638,656 lbs. were made. In I888 the price was higher than in 1883. We exported only 12,945,099 lbs. of cheese in 1888, as compared with 16,415,872 lbs. in 1883. What does that show? It shows that we consumed 15,500,000 lbs. of our own cheese in 1888 more than in 1883. What does it prove? It proves an expansion in wealth, an expansion in the purchasing power of the people, and, of course, notwithstanding all that has been said by hon. gentlemen opposite, the next census will prove an expansion in population as well. Then the importation of raw material is going on along the whole line. I will take one fact. 1887 we imported 6,000,000 lbs. of raw wool; in 1888, 8,000,000 lbs. We know what that means. We are manufacturing more within ourselves; the National Policy is producing its natural fruit. Take another fact. In 1878 we imported and consumed 97,104,336 lbs. of refined sugar; in 1888 we imported 224,426,999 lbs. of raw sugar. The cost of the raw sugar was very little more than the cost of the 97,000,000 lbs. odd of refined sugar, and I am told by refiners that the amount of loss on material in the making of raw sugar into refined is very Look at the amount of sugar consumed which has been made here; look at the money invested in the factories here, and the number of men employed, and you have a light thrown upon the internal development of our wealth which should throw the $26,000,000 into insignificance, even if I had not accounted for it in the way I have done, namely, by the fact that—and it has not hitherto been brought out in this debate that we actually export purchasing material in the shape of shipping. Let me call the attention of the House very rapidly to one or two principles in regard to shipping. A non-carrying nation, provided it did not borrow or lend, ought to show in its accounts an approach to equality between imports at the place of arrival and exports at the point of departure, and a nation that does one-half of its carrying trade would be entitled to an excess in imports over exports to the full value of the cargoes carried one way; a nation that did its whole foreign carrying trade would be entitled to bring in goods to the value of the carriage both ways; and if a nation did carrying for other countries, it would be entitled not merely to what I have already stated, but entitled also to what it earned in carrying for other countries. What is the fact about ourselves? We are the fourth maritime power in the world. There is not a sea which our keels do not plough; there is not a harbor where our flag is not seen. We touch at China, at Japan, at the Brazils; we traverse the Mediterranean, we plough the Baltic; we sail in the Arctic and Antarctic seas. And that will explain why it is that we have a large apparent balance against us. Let me illustrate it by looking at the United States. I once stopped for a couple of hours on Staten Island. I saw the moving panorama of an immense commerce—steamers and vessels passing out and in. What flag did I see floating from the mast-heads? The stars and stripes? Not at all. The little piece of bunting to which the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) referred a few nights ago, that little bit of bunting that no pilgrim from the British Isles can see without having his heart swell within him and his eyes sometimes fill.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. An hon. member cheers, but it is a very feeble cheer compared with the cheer he would give if he saw that flag flying at the masthead. Look at the United States. Immigrants to the United States send over a vast sum to their Cartwright:

friends, a vast sum is sent by way of interest on investments, because there are billions of dollars invested in the United States, and a vast sum is sent over to Europe to the scions of millionaires who are enjoying themselves there. But in addition you must take the immense amount they pay for the carriage of their goods. These few remarks will, in my opinion, throw some light, at least I have the presumption to hope they may do so, on that phantom of the balance of trade that has been brought up, and will scare it away. I will say this, that sometimes I really regret that hon, members of the Opposition pursue this course of constantly referring to the United States, referring to it as though the United States was, to use the language of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), an Elysian country. I am sorry they do it, because I know this: I took the pains last year to make myself acquainted with the condition of Dakota. I know that the farmers in Dakota are not nearly as well off as are the farmers in the North-West. I saw they had not as good houses, that they were not as good farmers, and I will tell the House that, in my judgment, there is no comparison between Dakota and the North-West as a favorable land for settlement. The misery of these people has become notorious. I regret that men of distinction and of great power, such as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), the hon member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), and the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), that they should come here and perpetually speak as though they were speaking in the interests of the United States. I confess to you, Sir, that an analogy has sometimes been forced upon me. As I sat here listening to those hon, gentlemen my mind has sometimes been taken away to the time when the very existence of a great nation, and a great civilisation, was being struggled for; when the orators of Philip were insidiously playing their part at Athens against a patriotic statesman, until at last they were successful in overturning that nation and overturning that civilisation. But, Sir, there is this great difference. We have resources that country did not have. We are alarmed and awake, as that country was not, to the dangers that beset it, and I believe that those who outside cherish machinations against us have neither the centralised power nor the mental resources that belonged to the enemy of Athens and of Greece. But I say this: that the orators of Philip, in trying to circumvent Demosthenes, who was endeavoring to save his country, could never have taken a course more sinister than some of my hon. friends on the Opposition side of the House take. I hope, Sir, that we have heard the last of it this Session. I hope that next Session they will invent some new machinery, because I can assure them that the people believe no longer-in fact they never had any faith in the nostrums advertised by these hon. gentlemen, and having examined them they know very well that the diagnosis of the condition of the country that my hon. friends have made, is defective, and they believe that if they were to take the remedy offered them by these gentlemen, the result would be disastrous to the Dominion.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I am paired with the member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Borden). I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. WATSON. The member for Guysborough (Mr. Kirk), has not voted.

Mr. KIRK. I am paired with the member for Shelburne (General Laurie). I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. BOWELL. I move that the resolution be not now read a second time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of Ways and Means, for consideration.

Motion agreed to; and House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER moved that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

THE MODUS VIVENDI.

Mr. MITCHELL. I asked a question the other day when the right hon. the Premier was not in, in relation to the fact that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had returned from Washington, for some time, that the modus vivendi had expired or was about expiring, and that it was very desirable the country should know what was to be the condition of things during the fishery season. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon, friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries came from Washington to confer with the Cabinet, and he has returned there to resume his duties. With respect to the modus vivendi, a motion is on the paper for its renewal during next season.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 9th April, 1890.

FISHING LICENSE TO W. GAUTHIER.

Mr. SPROULE asked, Whether it is correct, as alleged in a communication which appears in the Empire of 1st April, that one W. Gauthier, a fisherman, has obtained a lease or license to fish with pound nets in the waters surrounding Duck Islands or in Big Channel, Cape Roberts, Bone Island and Bay, Grant Islands and North Shore, South Bay or Manitoulin Gulf, Mississauga Point and River, John's Island, both sides, and Spanish River, also Thessalon Point? If so, is it the intention of the Department to continue the privilege to Mr. Gauthier while refusing it to the fishermen of the Georgian Bay?

Mr. COLBY. The statement as alleged in a communication which appears in a copy of the Empire of 1st April, is not wholly correct. Mr. C. W. Gauthier does hold licenses to fish in the vicinity of Duck Island; he owns the island, having purchased it from the Indian Department; he also holds licenses to fish at Cape Robert, at Grant's Island, Serpent River Bay and John's Island; but not at Bone Island Bay, not at South Bay or Manitoulin Gulf, not at Mississauga Point, not at Spanish River, nor at Thessalon Point. No licenses to fish with pound nets have been issued in Georgian Bay since 1885, except two, one each to Captain Allan and David Porter, in 1888. These were issued in connection with the operation of procuring ova for the hatcheries. No fishermen have been refused licenses to fish in waters in which licenses were subsequently granted to Gauthier. It is not the intention to grant or continue licenses to Gauthier, to the exclusion of the fishermen of Georgian Bay, or any other applicant.

BREAKWATER AT MIMINEGASH, P.E.I.

Mr. PERRY asked, Whether the Minister of Public Works has given instructions to repair the breakwater at Miminegash, P.E.I.? If so, is the work now going on ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No instructions were given, as stated by the hon. gentleman. When the survey was made, I think two years ago, the report was that the repairs would cost $3,500.

LOCKMASTER CALDWELL.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, 1st. Whether Lockmaster Caldwell, of Iroquois, on the St. Lawrence Canal, has made application to be superannuated? 2nd. If so, what is the age of the said Caldwell, and upon what grounds does he make application for superannuation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In answer to the first question: Yes. In answer to the second: Age sixty-five. Incapacity for duty through bodily infirmities, which he ascribes to an injury received some sixteen years ago, through a fall into the hold of a vessel, while on lock duty. Supported by medical certificates.

MONTREAL HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. CURRAN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask the Government if anything has been done towards appointing the commission to report upon plans for the Montreal Harbor improvements? It is desirable that the commissioners should be able to observe the present condition of the harbor while the ice is there, and the ice may move out at any moment.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This question is now engaging the attention of the Government.

I.C.R.—FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I desire to ask the right hon, the Minister of Railways if he is prepared to lay on the Table the amended Intercolonial Railway tariff which he promised to lay on the Table after the recess. There is a great deal of agitation and complaint about it in Nova Scotia, and I hope the Government have arrived at some decision, and will at an early date let us know what it is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must admit that I had forgotten that matter, but the tariff shall be brought down at once. I may say that we have had a good many representations from the Maritime Provinces on the subject, and I have no doubt those representations will have their due effect in bringing about some alterations. I can lay the tariff as it was originally settled on the Table at once, or within two or three days I can bring down the tariff as it will be in force.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Better bring both. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You shall have both.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am aware of the difficulty the Government have been laboring under in reference to the transfer of different classes of goods, but, I think, they might have kept the old classification for the large local traffic on the Intercolonial Railway in Nova Scotia.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it would be well to have a special classification, even for local traffic. It is expedient that the railways all through the Dominion should have the same classification. If there is to be any amelioration of the tariff, I think it will be in the rates and not in the classification. I should be inclined to adhere to the classification, because it is absurd that what is described as first-class by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway and other railways should have a different classification on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There always has been a different classification on the Intercolonial Rail-

FREDERICTON CANTEENS.

Mr. GILLMOR. I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Militia to an article which appears in a paper printed in Fredericton, N.B. It is as follows :-

"AN IMMEDIATE CHANGE REQUIRED.

"" Open rebuke is better than secret love."

"'Open rebuke is better than secret love.'

"There is a growing evil in this city which is being perpetuated by the Dominion Government, whether they are aware of the fact or not, and as repeated reference to the matter has no effect on those who are the participants in the unholy alliance it becomes necessary to be plain and open in our remarks. Like the Middleton scandal, this has also reference to the Militia Department. We wish again to draw the attention of the Minister of Militia and the Government to the fact that for some eleven or more years the Canada Temperance Act has been the law of this city, repeatedly endorsed by the citizens and recently in a most emphatic manner.

"We call upon the Government then, in the name of the representative business men, the temperance men, the christian men of this city, to close up these public bars, and thus assist the citizens in their endeavor to carry out existing laws, and protect young and old against the evil of strong drink.

"We are bold to make this indictment in view of the sad scene we witnessed on Monday, and which the canteen and messes are directly responsible for.

"On Monday afternoon a number of the short term men completed their time and left the city by the train for their homes in Nova Scotia and elsewhere. A representative of this paper was on board the train and witnessed the beastly state of intoxication in which a number of the men, particularly a number of young sergeants, were in, and ascertained some facts from men returning home, with reference to the School, that caused our hearts to burn in shame for an institution in our own fair city were in, and ascertained some facts from men returning home, with reference to the School, that caused our hearts to burn in shame for an institution in our own fair city that would turn our loyal-hearted, true sons of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to their homes and mothers in a condition hardly less debasing than that of the brute, making the car resound with blasphemy and recking with the fumes of liquors received at the mess, ere leaving.

"Young men coming from the rural districts of Nova Scotia—the banner temperance Province of Canada—who have never known the taste of liquor, to return home in the fair way to fill drunkards' graves. Is this all? Ah! we wish it were. Sunday debauches as the result of the canteen system; men by the dozen unfit for parade on Sabbath through the effects of the liquor obtained from the canteen; and oh, so much more to make our hearts ache for their friends and mothers at home.

"We call upon the Government to order an investigation into the whole matter at once. We would not be true to the principle we have held, or to the Government we profess to support, if we did not point out the fact that they are being held responsible for these doings, and that there will be a day of awakening, both for them and their representatives in this Province—that will not be pleasant."

I have been asked to bring this matter to the

I have been asked to bring this matter to the notice of the Minister of Militia.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My attention has not been called to the facts referred to in the article which my hon. friend has read; but, if he will kindly send over to me the article in question, I will immediately take steps to investigate the matter, and ascertain the correctness of the statements.

ALLEGED OUTRAGE ON THE STEAMER BALTIC.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I desire to ask, in reference to the outrage which was committed on the Baltic last summer, what course has been taken by the Government in reference to it? I was informed some time ago that an enquiry would be instituted into the charges which were made against the captain in command of the Baltic at the time the outrage was committed. Hon, members will recollect that a young lad was assaulted in a violent manner on that steamboat by the crew, that he had a coat of tar and feathers applied to him, and it is said that turpentine was put into the tar, and the result was that he was so tortured that he became mentally disordered and jumped overboard and was drowned. Several of the crew were tried and were sentenced to be sent to the Central Prison for longer or shorter periods. It is said that the captain was aware of the occurrence; it is said that the captain knew that the lad had jumped overboard, and he declined to stop the vessel in order know. I will enquire. Mr. GILLMOR.

to go to his rescue. The friends of the young man and the community generally feel very much outraged at the crime that was committed. I have had a number of applications made to me in reference to it. Only a short time ago I had letters with reference to the matter, and the people feel that if the captain was aware of the fact that the young lad was overboard and declined to stop the vessel or to go to his rescue, that he should not be allowed a license to sail any longer. I thought it my duty to bring this matter to the attention of the Government. On two occasions I have asked questions about it. It appears some action has been taken; a commission has been appointed to enquire into the matter, and I would like to know if the Government propose to place before the House the proceedings of that commission.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The report is not made yet. The hon. gentleman is quite right in following up this matter, inasmuch as, from the statements that have been made, and the rumors connected with it, there was a great outrage committed; and if it be true that no effort was made to save the young man after he had plunged into the sea, there has been wrongdoing somewhere. The Government have issued a commission to Capt. Gordon, who, as the hon. gentleman knows, is an officer of the Royal Navy. He is a civil servant of standing, he has commanded our fishery fleet on the Atlantic coast, and, altogether, is a gentleman of very good standing. He will make a thorough investigation into the matter, and the hon. gentleman may depend upon it, that if any fault is shown, it will be punished.

Mr. DAWSON. I would say that, in so far as Captain Robertson is concerned, the reports have been, as I learn, very much exaggerated. There can be no doubt that a brutal outrage was committed by the crew of the Baltic upon one of their number, and that an unfortunate young man was drowned, but I believe that Captain Robertson was not, at the time, aware of the circumstance. I have here a little slip from the Empire newspaper, which seems to state the matter clearly and truthfully. is dated Collingwood, \mathbf{It} March 28:

"Lieutenant Gordon, R.N., has been here two days conducting the Government investigation into the circumstances connected with the Battic outrage. From the evidence it appears that Captain Tate Robertson did not obstruct or interfere with Constable Pierce, or any other constables in the discharge of their official duty, and Constable Pierce himself states that Captain Robertson did not make even a pretence at interference. It and Constable Pierce himself states that Captain Robertson did not make even a pretence at interference. It also appears, on the contrary, that he afforded every facility for enquiry and investigation, going so far as to forward Crown witnesses at his own expense, they not having been served with subpœnas. It is also clear that the outrage was committed so quietly that Captain Robertson knew absolutely nothing about it until all was over."

Now, Sir, I believe that to be a true statement of the case. Captain Robertson has been engaged from his youth upwards in the navigation of the great lakes. He stands deservedly high in the opinion of everybody who knows him, and I would be very sorry to believe that he was in the least concerned in any wrongdoing.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to enquire of the Government if the commission is to be open to the public?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I really do not

Mr. LANDERKIN. It would scarcely satisfy the public if an investigation were made, and the public were excluded from it. I think the greatest publicity should be given to the investigation, not only in the interest of the captain, but in the interest of every person who has a feeling in the matter. I may say that for myself I have no interest in the matter and no feeling in the matter personally. I never saw the captain, and I do not think I ever heard of his name until I saw it connected with this matter. I am only endeavoring to find out whether the captain was guilty of the charges made against him, and to see, if he is guilty, that he shall not be entrusted with a vessel again.

THE LATE MR. CHISHOLM, M.P.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I deem it my duty to inform the House that within a few days after the decease of Mr. Perley we lost another one of our colleagues, and I have no doubt that both sides of the House will feel deeply affected by this evidence of the uncertainty of human life. Mr. Chisholm, who has just left us, was, as hon. gentlemen know, a gentleman of great ability and of great respectability, who had earned his position by acquiring the good-will and respect of all those who knew him on the shores of the Pacific. He came here by the choice, I think by the unanimous choice, of his constituents in New Westminster, whom he worthily represented in this House. Unfortunately, he was not long able to perform his duties. Illness overtook him, and at last he succumbed to it. I have no doubt that this House feels great sympathy with those whom he has left behind, and regret very much the loss of another friend. I am quite sure that this mention will be fully responded to by hon, gentlemen opposite.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

3. By repealing sub-section 1 of section 5 of said Act, and substituting the following in lieu thereof:—

The importation of any goods enumerated in Schedule

D'is hereby prohibited, and any such goods if imported shall thereby become forfeited to the Crown, and shall be forthwith destroyed,—and any person importing any such goods shall in each case incur a penalty of two hundred dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. The only change is the addition of all the words after the dash, after the word "destroyed."

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is very desirable that the Customs Act should be made as simple as possible in order that it may be easily understood by the people. There are only five or six articles mentioned in schedule B, and they should be set out in this clause. It must be remembered that in the country districts copies of the statutes are not plentiful, and unless a merchant could obtain a copy of schedule D he might be unable to ascertain what it covered.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). When the Bill has passed through committee, perhaps the Minister will have the whole Act reprinted?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. What are the changes made in schedule D?

Mr. FOSTER. At present there is simple forfeiture; but it is proposed to provide a penalty.

Mr. LAURIER. I can understand immoral books being destroyed, but surely the Minister does not intend to destroy all reprints of Canadian copyrights that come in against the law?

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon, gentleman will turn to page 57 of the tariff he will find the following articles are prohibited to be imported under penalty of $200, together with the forfeiture of the parcel or package of goods in which the same are found: Prints, drawings, paintings, photographs or representations of any kind of any immoral or indecent character, or prints of Canadian copyrights, and reprints of British copyright works which have been also copyrighted in Canada. Under the present law a publisher securing the copyright of an English work has the sole control of it in the Dominion, and any importation from a foreign country is prohibited. That is under the Copyright law.

Mr. LAURIER. What will be the law as amended?

Mr. BOWELL. The same.

Mr. LAURIER. No. Respecting all that class of articles mentioned in section B, it is provided they shall be forfeited and destroyed.

Mr. FOSTER. The present law provides that goods enumerated in schedule D shall not be imported, but if they are imported, they shall be forfeited and forthwith destroyed. It is proposed to add a personal penalty.

Mr. MULOCK. Part of the penalty is in the enacting clause and part in the schedule. It is now proposed to place all the penalty in one clause.

Mr. BOWELL. That is provided for in paragraph 3 on the first page of the new tariff. It is provided that any goods enumerated in schedule B shall be forfeited to the Crown and forthwith destroyed, and any person importing such articles shall in each case incur a penalty of $200. This is made part of the general law, and these goods will be absolutely forfeited, with an additional penalty.

Mr. LAURIER. Then there is no change beyond a change in language.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Minister of Customs says the only change is twofold: to make absolute forfeiture of the goods, and to impose a penalty. Here we have the penalty and the forfeiture stated, and there is no change so far as I can understand.

Mr. FOSTER. On section 5 you have the destruction stated.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). As I understand, the only difference is that the penalty is put in the schedule and not in the statute, otherwise it is the same?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Finance has not referred to the suggestion of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), that the prohibited articles should be set forth on the face of the Act. The consequences of the violation of this section are so serious that persons should be able to see plainly what they cannot import.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not seem necessary to repeat the prohibition. When this Act is passed it will be bound together by the Customs Department and everyone can see the prohibition.

Mr. BOWELL. The object of placing these clauses in the general provision is to make it cover everything of that character, so that if you change the tariff in the future this clause will cover it without repeating the whole thing.

Mr. LAURIER. Do you contemplate any new changes?

Mr. BOWELL. When you cross to this side of the House, perhaps.

Mr. PLATT. Regarding the prohibition of oleomargarine and other similar substitutes for butter, would it not be well to include that in schedule D, so as to bring it prominently to the notice of persons. I think you should have all the prohibited articles under that schedule.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think that is necessary; they are all provided for in the general schedule.

4. By enacting that all medicinal or toilet preparations imported for completing the manufacture thereof, or for the manufacture of any other article by the addition of any ingredient or ingredients, or by mixing such preparations, or by putting up or labelling the same alone or with other articles or compounds, under any proprietary or trade name, shall be, irrespective of cost, valued for duty and duty paid thereon at the ordinary market value, in the country from whence imported, of the completed preparation, when put up and labelled under such proprietary or trade name, less the actual cost of labor and material used or expended in Canada in completing the manufacture thereof, or of putting up or labelling the same.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know exactly how this differs from the present law, in the first place, and what object the hon. gentleman proposes to attain by any alterations he is making? The clause is very curiously worded and looks almost prohibitory on the face of it.

Mr. BOWELL. The object of this clause is to provide against a repetition of the Ayer case. The interpretation in the past of the Customs Act, as it stands on the Statute-book, has been to charge duty on the relative value of any parts of an article imported and to be completed in this country. The object of the clause is, that if an article is brought into the country in different parts, simply to be put together when they are brought here, they shall pay the same duty as they would pay in the United States, when completed, less the expense of completing the article in this country. a new clause altogether, and it arose from the fact that on our former decisions upon questions of this kind, which had been the practice since Confederation, the court decided that we had no power to exact the duties in the manner in which they had been exacted. In order to provide against a repetition of that, this clause was framed.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Will it not be very difficult to carry that out? As far as I understand the Ayer case, certain articles were imported and then mixed here, while in reality the value of the article arose from its being labelled and described as a certain article. It was, I think, similar to the Johnston Aniline Pill case, which we had in New Brunswick. As I understand, the Minister proposes to charge duty on the basis of the price these

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is quite correct and I will give him a practical illustration of this, in reference to what are termed Carter's Pills. They are sold in New York at $18 per There is only one manufacturer and one wholesale house which has the sole control of them in the United States, and which fixes the price. They bring them in here in bulk and they have no value in the market until Carter's label is put on. This is what was represented to me, and I did not dispute the point, as I think it is not altogether incorrect. They bring the pills here in bulk, import the bottles, labels and corks, on which they pay a duty as well as on the fictitious value of the pills. Then they employ some hands to put them up and label them. In order to arrive at the value, I ascertained the cost of the label, the bottle, the mucilage, the labor of putting them up, and allow for insurance and interest on the investment; I add these together, and deduct the total from the price at which they are sold in the United States, and the balance is the value for duty. The House will readily understand that unless we adopt a principle of this kind, particularly with regard to patent medicines, nearly all the articles would be completed in the United States and brought into this country in bulk and then bottled. This is the principle on which my deputies tell me the Act has hitherto been administered.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I understand that in most cases the compound is not a secret, so that anybody could bring in the ingredients and make up from the formula.

Mr. BOWELL. Some preparations are secret, and their ingredients can only be ascertained by analysis. There was a time when locomotives were imported in pieces, on which the lower duty was paid, and in that way the duty on the whole locomotive was evaded.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not easy to understand the full meaning of this clause. I should like to enquire of the hon. Minister of Customs whether, if any single ingredient were brought in, the duty would not be levied, irrespective of cost, on the whole value of the preparation. So far as I can see, that expression, "irrespective of cost," might admit of that interpretation.

Mr. BOWELL. That was certainly never intended. I felt the same difficulty as the hongentleman has suggested, and this clause was submitted to the Minister of Justice, and it is really the result of his framing. However, I will draw his attention to the point raised.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I know a case in which certain pills were put up in barrels in Detroit and brought into this country, and then put up in boxes and labelled. There was no mixture of the compound in this country.

Mr. BOWELL. That case would come within the meaning of the law.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). How would the hon-Minister follow these articles? A druggist imports a quantity of a certain article, enters it at the Custom house, pays the duty on it, and does the same with another article. After he passes these articles through the Custom house, can he not do what he likes with them? If he puts them together, can the Government then step in and say to him, you must pay additional duty on these articles?

Mr. BOWELL. The Government never attempt to reach anything of that kind. If a druggist in this country desires to manufacture Ayer's Pectoral, for instance, he can import all the ingredients of which it is composed separately, and pay the duty on each, and do what he likes with them. But if the article is imported in a completed state, and only requires to be mixed here, this clause is intended to cover it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What additional revenue does the hon. gentleman expect from the operation of this provision?

Mr. BOWELL. We do not expect to collect anything additional. We propose to carry out the law in the future as it has been administered in the past. There will be no advantage taken, so far as I am aware, of the importation of the ingredients of these different compounds.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that apparently you now derive from proprietary medicines about $68,000. I should be inclined to think that under this clause a considerably larger sum would be likely to be collected, so that it practically means a pretty large addition to the taxation. Whether that be or be not for the advantage of Her Majesty's lieges, is a question.

Mr. BOWELL. It will not affect them in the slightest degree.

Mr. LAURIER. I should like to know how this provision will work in practice. Take, for instance, the case of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It is composed of sugar, spirits, and certain drugs. If the ingredients are imported separately, and then mixed in Canada, how is the duty to be arrived at? One day the spirits may be entered, the following day the sugar, and so on; how are you to arrive at the duty to be charged for the whole article when finished? I am afraid that this will lead to many complications.

Mr. BOWELL. If a man imports spirits, he pays the spirit duty. If he imports sugar, he pays the sugar duty. If he imports bark or something to give the mixture a taste, that may be free. If the druggist imports them separately, we never interfere; but if these mixtures are made up in the United States, we will take the wholesale value in the United States, and then deduct the expense of putting the mixture together, charging the duty less the expense of putting up.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the effect of the clause will be to kill the manufacture of these articles in Canada and have them made up in the United States. Perhaps this is what the Minister desires to accomplish, for that, it seems to me, will be the effect.

Mr. BOWELL. It has quite the contrary effect. A number of establishments have been moved from Detroit to Windsor for the purpose of putting up these medicines, on account of the high duty now imposed upon them. In cases where they bring over all the original ingredients, they pay the duty upon them and manufacture the article in this country, and what we desire is to stop the manufacture in the United States.

Mr. LAURIER. As I understand the Ayer case, two different mixtures were introduced which were mixed together in Montreal, constituting the mixture known as Cherry Pectoral. When mixed together they acquired a special value, and were known as Cherry Pectoral. If one of these articles is introduced with the intention of having it mixed with another to be introduced later, how much will be charged upon the one and the other, so as to collect the whole duty? This clause will lead, not only to the objection to which my hon. friend refers, but to many of these harsh measures of the Department of which the public has complained.

Mr. BOWELL. In the Ayer case they brought the mixture in in puncheons ready for bottling, and they bottled it at a nominal rate. We analysed it, and found it to contain a large proportion of spirits, and insisted on the spirit duty. They might possibly, when they brought the article over, have put in a little more alcohol to preserve it, or a little more sugar to sweeten it, but these, of course, they purchased in this country. hon, member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) is in error as to the practical operation of this clause, because the principle has been enforced since Confederation, and it was supposed to be the law which provides for imposing a proportional duty upon the parts of the article which is imposed on the complete article when it comes in, and it was only when the courts decided that interpretation was not correct, that we made the change.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I could understand that in the case of a mixture like Cherry Pectoral the ingredients could be ascertained, but in the case of pills it would be different.

Mr. BOWELL. That is a case it is impossible to follow. If a druggist imports pills, he may put them up into every conceivable shape and give them any name he pleases, but in cases such as the one I have referred to, the article is given a special label which gives it a special value.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do I understand that the three different substances which might enter into one of these articles would come in at the ordinary rates of duty charged upon them separately, whether used in a preparation of this kind or not, or will the duty be the full duty as prescribed for the finished product?

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly not. For instance, Peruvian bark is used very largely in all these medicines, and you might import a ton without paying any duty. It is not for us to know what you do with it. If you import a plum pudding, the raisins, the citron, the sugar, the flour and everything that goes to make it up is charged, as a whole, at a plum pudding rate. We do not propose to analyse the pudding once it is made, in order to charge a separate duty on each article.

5. By enacting that regulations respecting the manner in which molasses and syrups shall be sampled and tested for the purpose of determining the classes to which they shall belong, with reference to the duty chargeable thereon, shall be made by the Minister of Customs, and the instruments and appliances necessary for such determination shall be designed by him and supplied to such officers as shall be by him charged with the duty of sampling and testing such molasses and syrups; and the decision of any officer (to whom is so assigned the testing of such articles), as to the duties to which they are subject under the tariff, shall be final and conclusive, unless upon appeal to the Commissioner of Customs within thirty days from the rendering of such decision, such decision is, with the approval of the Minister, changed, and the decision of the Commissioner with such approval shall be final.

Mr. BOWELL. That simply applies the law as it stands on the Statute-book regarding the the polariscopic test of sugars to molasses, as it is proposed to introduce the same principle in the testing of molasses.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Why not say at once, that molasses are to be tested by the polariscopic test, and thus avoid ambiguity?

Mr. BOWELL. The resolution providing for a change in the mode of collecting duties upon molasses declares what the rate of duty shall be upon a test of strength to be ascertained by the polariscope, as is now the case in regard to sugar. I may say that, as to some molasses, it is impossible to find out what it is by the polariscope. We had samples a short time ago which actually indicated what is called the inverse proof; that is, the test did not indicate that there was a single degree of saccharine strength in the molasses, and the only way in which we could arrive at that was by analysis.

6. By enacting that any goods or packages being the growth, produce or manufacture of Canada, and having been exported therefrom and intended to be returned, may be admitted free of duty on being re-imported to Canada, provided such goods or packages were entered for exportation, and branded or marked by a Collector or proper officer of Customs, and fully identified by the Collector or proper officer at the port or place where they are so re-imported; and further, provided that the property in such goods or packages has continued in the same person or persons by whom they were exported, and that such re-importation takes place within one year of the exportation thereof.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to enquire of the Minister of Customs, whether it is the case, as I have been informed, that packages which have been brought into Canada enclosing smaller packages of goods, and have once paid the duty, are compelled to pay the duty again, and again, if they are used a second, a third, or a fourth time. I am informed, that that is specially the case in regard to the importation of certain fruits. It appears to me, that if a package has once been used, and has paid the duty, it ought to be free, at all events during the year, if it were sent back and used again.

Mr. BOWELL. In the case referred to by the hon. gentleman, there would be no duty. No package which is used exclusively for importation is dutiable. If, however, an American barrel of oil, or of pork, comes into Canada, and duty is paid upon the contents and upon the barrel, that cannot be taken back and refilled and brought in again without paying the duty. But any article of Canadian manufacture can be brought forwards and backwards. This provision is not new. I am only transferring the provisions of an Order in Council which has been in force for years into the Tariff Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not speaking of packages which are the product of Canada, but of other packages which enclose smaller packages, and I understand that, contrary to the statement made by the Minister, in certain cases duty has been charged upon those packages over again, they being of foreign manufacture.

Mr. Bowell.

Mr. BOWELL. Will the hon. gentleman state what cases he refers to?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is chiefly in regard to fruits. For instance, strawberries are usually put up in boxes of small weight, and there are forty or fifty or sixty of these in a crate which is generally locked. I understand that the crate has been charged duty more than once, and that is unusual, and, I think, is contrary to the intention of the Act, as I understand it. I also understand that, when those crates have been returned empty and have been sent back, they have been re-charged with the duty. Do I understand the Minister to say that is not done?

Mr. BOWELL. No, I do not say that. If a package containing fifty or sixty small packages of strawberries was exclusively for exportation, it would not be dutiable.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am speaking of importation.

Mr. BOWELL. If that is the manner in which they are sold in the market from which they come, they would be dutiable, and every article of American manufacture would be dutiable. That is the same as the American law on the subject.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be true, but it practically doubles the amount of duty which Parliament intended to levy on these goods. Bad as the duty is in itself, I think it is made ten times worse by charging the duty on the outside package.

Mr. GUILLET. I understand that these trunks will weigh as much as the baskets and the fruits and all which they contain.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So I am informed.

Mr. GUILLET. Thus the duty on these large weighty trunks would double the price.

Mr. FOSTER. No; that is not the case.

Mr. GUILLET. But, according to item 52, the weight of the package is to be included in the weight for duty.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the small package.

Mr. GUILLET. Then I think that should be specified.

Mr. BOWELL. It has never been the practice to charge on the weight of the outside package. It is only the weight of the small box or basket or case which contains the fruit, and the reason for that is that when the weight was not included in the value for duty, it was almost impossible to get at the ad valorem duty of these little baskets. The case referred to by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has never occurred. The crates are never included in the weight for duty. I understood that the point to which he specially called attention was that articles of this kind of foreign manufacture, having once come into the country, should be permitted to be taken backwards and forwards in the same way as articles manufactured in Canada. That would be opening the door to the use of those foreign articles in the same way as those manufactured in this country. If an importer or trader desires to carry on a business of this kind with the United States or any other country, he can obtain these articles in this country, and then can carry them backwards and forwards as long as he likes, or as long as the article will last, without the payment of any duty. For instance, we allow them to take staves from the Maritime Provinces to be made into barrels in the West Indies and returned to Canada filled with sugar or fruit, and returned without payment of duty. They are taken out in what is called the knock-down state, and put together in the foreign country, without paying any duty upon being returned to Canada.

Mr. WALDIE. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Customs to the practice of the fruit-They ship their early growers in our section. strawberries and early fruits to our own markets, because when early fruits become ready for market, they are in competition with the American fruits; but at a later season they send them to the American markets, when the American markets are bare of their own fruit; and they use the same package to send the fruits to Buffalo that they use in sending them to Toronto. I want to know from the Minister if the package, when returned, will duty be charged on that strawberry case when it returns from Buffalo? Fruits are going to Buffalo until late in the season; there is quite an extensive trade of that kind in the return of these packages. know the American Customs are, as the Minister states, very arbitrary and unfair.

Mr. MITCHELL. They are no worse than our

Mr. WALDIE. Yes, they are worse than our own: but that is no reason why the intelligence of this House should not construct for the people of this country a better law than they have in the States, and that is what I want to assist in doing. I hope the Minister of Customs will take that into consideration, and not shut these growers of fruit in Canada out of the American market by charging an excessive duty on the return packages. The fruits are perishable, and cannot wait for three or four days. They want the packages back immediately to fill them and send them back

Mr. BOWELL. They are not chargeable. The clause is clear enough. They must be so marked by the collector, or by the party exporting, as will enable the collector to identify them when they come back again, to see that they are Canadian goods. Those who are carrying on that export trade can easily make some mark, or their own initial. We have never had any difficulty in the

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has, perhaps, noticed that certain dealers in fruit were under the impression that these outside packages would pay duty. That is an error, I understand.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BOWELL. I move to strike out the word "or," in the sixth line, and the words "or both," in the seventh line, and to substitute the word "and" to the word "or" in the sixth line, so that it shall read :-

"And liable to a penalty of $500 and to imprisonment to

Mr. DAVIN. Should it not be "for a term," not "to a term?" You cannot say imprisonment "to a term."

Mr. BOWELL. You could say it, but it would not be correct. I will make the correction. This is a new provision, and the reason we ask the House to adopt a clause of this kind is, because, in a number of cases in the past, it has been discovered that the agents who were acting for parties in a foreign country, were sending goods into Canada and sending with them blank invoices certified to be correct, leaving the agent in this country to fill them up. There was, on one case in Montreal, which came under our notice the other day-and by which the offenders paid a penalty of some $6,000—where the parties had been in the habit of importing their article, and having these blank invoices in their possession, they would reduce the price paid for the article in the United States in order to bring it under a section of the Act which imposed a smaller duty, and by that means defraud the revenue. Not only is that the case in reference to the particular article to which I have referred, but it has been discovered also in reference to goods of various other kinds. The House will see at once that this is one of the worst kinds of fraud that can be committed. The parties who make the change not only reduce the value of the article for duty, but they actually swear to it as correct. Perhaps we have been too lenient in dealing with cases of this kind, where we have not prosecuted parties for perjury, instead of imposing a penalty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In fact the immorality encouraged by a high tariff is quite

Mr. MITCHELL. The tendency of the hongentleman's tariff to promote immorality, is marvellous. Here it has taken him ten minutes to point out what heinous crimes are committed under the auspices of a high tariff. They are doing something like what they are doing in relation to annexation. They say they do not think they are promoting annexation, yet by the course they are pursuing in putting up a Chinese wall around this country, they are clearly driving us into annexation. Now they are driving the country into immorality by the enormously high tariff they are putting on, encouraging people to resort to all sorts of falsehoods and subterfuges. The hon, gentleman should look after the morals of the country, and endeavor to protect them by reducing the tariff as well as the revenue.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. This is a very good clause, but the difficulty will be in enforcing it. How are they going to get the man who sends in these blank invoices? I do not suppose this crime will be included in the Extradition Treaty, and we will not be able to reach the man who sends the invoice. We may reach the man who brings it into the country, but in that case I am afraid that if the Minister of Customs enforces the law,

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

7. By enacting that any person who sends or brings into Canada, or who, being in Canada, has in his possession any bill-heading or other paper appearing to be a heading or blank capable of being filled up and used as an invoice, and bearing any certificate purporting to show, or which may be used to show that the invoice which may be made from such bill-heading or blank is correct or authentic, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to a penalty of five hundred dollars or to imprisonment to a term not exceeding twelve months, or both, in the discretion of the court, and the goods which may be entered under any invoice made from any such bill-heading or blank shall be forfeited.

he will lose the services of a colleague, because the man who will bring it into the country will be the Postmaster General; it will be brought in through the mails. He is the man who will bring it in, and are you going to enforce the law against him?

Mr. BOWELL. My hon. friend is a little facetious. It is quite evident that he has not read the clause. My hon. colleague at my left (Mr. Foster) intimates that my hon. friend is anxious for the vacancy.

Mr. MITCHELL. We all know that he is fishing for that.

Mr. BOWELL. Therefore, he has suggested a mode by which the Minister of Customs might get rid of the Postmaster General. However, to speak seriously, these invoices are not usually sent in by mail. The difficulty in administering the Act suggested itself not only to the officers of the Customs, but also to the Minister of Justice. If the hon, gentleman reads the clause he will find that it provides for the punishment of "any person who sends, or brings into Canada, or who, being in Canada, has in his possession any bill-heading," All we expect to reach in this case will be the agents who receive and falsify these blank invoices after having been brought into the country, and it will be a warning to the exporter who sends these blank invoices to his agent here to know that his agent can be fined $500 and imprisoned for twelve months at the discretion of the court.

Mr. MITCHELL. This appears to me to be a rather extraordinary state of affairs. An agent for an exporter in a foreign country of a particular class of goods may be a perfectly honest and respectable man. He visits the post office, and receives some invoices in blank from the exporter. On his way home he may be arrested by a police officer, and, as these blank invoices have been found in his possession, he may be fined $500 and imprisoned. It is a hard case that a man should be liable to be arrested for such an offence, of which he has not knowingly been guilty, for he may not have known that the articles he received at the post office would render him liable to a charge which might send him to the penitentiary.

Mr. BOWELL. The same principle would apply to counterfeit money.

Mr. MITCHELL. But this is a case of business, where an agent who is probably a fair and straightforward man, occupying a good position acts as foreign correspondent to an exporter, and receives from such exporter a letter, the contents of which he does not know, but the fact that blank invoices are found in this letter renders him liable to be sent to the penitentiary. The proposal is an outrage.

Mr. LAURIER. If I understood the Minister correctly, a party in Montreal who committed a fraud by false invoices had been fined $6,000.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, in connection with others.

Mr. LAURIER. If a person proved guilty of fraud against the revenue by means of false invoices can be fined $6,000, the law is ample to protect the revenue.

Mr. BOWELL. So it is, provided they are discovered. Why should not the exporter know who has blank invoices in his possession which are Mr. Kirkpatrick.

that there is a law on the Statute-book which will render all his goods liable to forfeiture by using blank certified invoices, which are filled in by his agent, who cannot by any possibility know when he received those invoices how they should be filled up. This provision is made in order to prevent this kind of fraud.

Mr. LAURIER. The Customs Act is already very severe. If the law at present allows the Minister to secure the infliction of a penalty of $6,000, he has ample power to protect the revenue, and this is the only object which a provision of this kind can have in view. It is now proposed to take new powers, although the Minister has already ample powers.

Mr. DAVIN. Robbery is a criminal act, and we have an analogous provision to this in the criminal For instance, if a "jimmy" or other burglarious instrument is found in possession of any man, he is liable to be prosecuted for being in possession of burglarious tools, unless he can give a satisfactory account. In the case covered by this clause, the agent is found in possession of a blank instrument, which is intended to rob, just as much as is a jimmy, hammer or pry found in the pocket of a The hon, and learned leader of the burglar. Opposition did not, in my opinion, put the case fairly. As the law at present stands you can only punish after the crime has been committed. is a provision to prevent the crime being committed, and to prevent large fines being necessary. As regards the speech of the hon, member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), I do not know whether he meant it as a joke, whether it was one of those elaborate humorisms that require a week to appreciate, or whether it was a carefully drawn argument. If it was a joke, I have no doubt after two or three weeks I shall find myself laughing heartily. If it was an argument, then I may say that the person who brings anything through the post is not the Postmaster General; he is not the person whom the law recognises, but the person to whom the letter is addressed.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman will see the danger which exists in giving more power to the Minister of Customs and his agents, for it is giving power for persecution. The clause uses the words "having in his possession any bill-heads appearing to be blank headings or blank invoices capable of being filled up." This gives to the agents of the Minister of Customs power to go into a store and search for these invoices. They may be perfectly innocent in themselves, but they may have a bad appearance, and on that ground alone a man may be dragged into court and subjected to the annoyance of a lawsuit. The Minister is aware that already complaints are made, and with great reason, that the Customs Act has often been Yet under made an instrument of persecution. this provision you are giving more power to the agents of the Customs, who have already too great power.

Mr. BOWELL. It is most extraordinary that hon, gentlemen on that side of the House will rise and not, perhaps, defend the most flagrant acts that can possibly be committed under the law, but they will at least excuse them and say that you should not punish the parties who committed them. This clause provides only for the punishment of a man who has blank invoices in his possession which are certified to be correct. What right, let me ask, has any person to have in his possession a document certified as being correct when it is in blank, and when the person sending it cannot by any possiblity know how his agent is going to fill it up? The law provides that an invoice shall contain a description of the goods sent into the country. It also provides that, before proper entry can be made, it shall be certified by the exporter to be a correct account both as to the value and quantity of the goods sent. When that is presented to the collector, it is passed if there is no evidence of fraud or undervaluation. But in order to commit fraud and invade if possible the punishment that would be inflicted, this method of certified blank invoice has been adopted. How can this invoice be truthfully certified to as correct, when it is not filled in; and how can the exporter certify to the correctness of a blank invoice, which is to be filled in by his agent in this country? Why should not these parties be punished? The hon. gentleman said there are complaints in regard to the administration of the Customs Act. There are complaints, and there always will be complaints so long as there is a Customs Act to administer, and an Opposition to find fault and assist dishonest importers, and make political capital; more particularly will these complaints be inforced when they are endorsed with the talent and suavity of manner which the leader of the Opposition has shown to-day. sole object in presenting this clause is to show exporters that if they send in false blank invoices in order to evade duties, they will be punished.

Mr. LAURIER. If the hon, gentleman by this clause could reach the parties who send the false invoices, I would have nothing to say. But an exporter in a foreign country with a guilty motive sends blank invoices to his agent, and the moment they reach their destination, the agent, never having had any intention to use them, is liable to the penalty because they are found in his possession, and if they are found in his possession, though he may have had them for only one single moment, and though he never had intended to use them, still he becomes liable to the penalty. Under such circumstances the argument of the hon. gentleman has been directed, not to the case of a man who sends the invoices, but to the case of the man who receives them, for he cannot reach the sender. If the receiver profits by this, if he commits a fraud by such invoices, we can punish, and the hon. gentleman has told us that an offender in that manner has just been punished to the extent of $6,000. It seems to me that under such circumstances the powers already vested in the Minister to detect and punish fraud are ample, and the objection I make to the whole of this Act is, that too great powers are already placed in the hands of the Minister. Of course, I do not pretend to defend offenders, but the hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that his accounts with the knows as well as I do, that his agents, with the object of discovering offenders, have committed persecutions untold upon certain business men. Such powers, therefore, are always dangerous, and should not be extended where there are already adequate powers to protect the revenue.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not surprised at anything that the hon. Minister of Customs may do or say when he is endeavoring to get an arbitrary Customs Act through this House. It is not the first occasion on which I have felt it to be my duty to criticise, and to criticise severely, the formation, the framing, and the arbitrary manner in which these Acts are forced through this House. But, Sir, it was reserved until to-day to have a charge thrown across the floor of this House by the Minister of Customs in his official capacity, that gentlemen who may choose to criticise the arbitrary enactments of a Bill which he proposes, shall be charged with aiding and abetting men who are trying to commit fraud on the revenue. Who is there on this side of the House who is open to this charge? Yet it is the inference to be drawn from the infamous remarks of the hon. gentleman on the other side. What do we hold our position in Parliament for? Are we here to pass any arbitrary law which may be submitted to this House, or are we here to see that the interests and rights of the people shall be protected? While the revenue of the country shall be properly guarded and its collection protected; while the officers of the Crown shall be secured in the execution of their legitimate duty, we are here to see also that an arbitrary Minister of the Crown shall not pass through this House, a measure which may place an honest man within the trammels of the law. Sir, what was said about the action of the Customs detective officers, three years ago, in the city of Montreal? Was there not an outcry from the whole commercial community against the arbitrary exercise of the powers which the existing law gave to these officers?-or, at all events, whether they possessed that power or not, against the construction which they put upon the law. The outcry was such as to demand a repeal or modification of these laws. The hon, gentleman ever since he has been in power, and from the first day he took the position of Minister of Customs, has upon every occasion on which an amendment or a consolidation of the Customs Act was proposed, endeavored to make its provisions bear more harshly upon the importers and upon the trade of the country. As I say, it is not the first time I have had occasion to remark upon this. To-day, he proposes a most outrageous provision. He tries to make it law, that one of the first merchants in the city of Montreal, mayhap, who receives a consignment from a foreign house, may be punished, although he has no intention whatever of committing fraud. It may be that that foreign house wishes to take advantage of the law, and if they choose to send this blank invoice to be filled up by an honest merchant, he can be punished if it is found in his possession. Is it possible that it can be proposed that the mere receipt on the part of that merchant of the highest respectability in the land, of a fraudulent invoice, shall lay him open to the penalty of being fined and sent to the penitentiary? The Minister of Customs had better alter that section of the law, and confine it to the actual criminal knowledge of the individual who receives the invoice, or his cognisance or the The law exercise of a criminal act on his part. should not be such that a person who may be obnoxious to an official may be laid open to the charge of criminally outraging the Customs Act, although he may never have intended to do so. It is quite possible that the enemies of a man may put up a plant upon him, and send him one of these blank invoices, wait for him at the post office when he receives his letters, and then arrest him and charge him with an offence for which he is liable to go to the penitentiary. I say, Sir, that this is a condition of things which ought not to exist in a free country.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This section is a very strong one and entails very serious penalties, and as it reads at present, a person having this invoice in his possession, innocently, may be punish-The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) contended that while the law was sufficient to punish when crime was committed, the object of this law was to punish a man before the crime was committed, and this seems to be the intention of the provision. The hon, member also said that it was analogous to the criminal law in the case of a burglarious instrument being found in the possession of a person, but, Sir, the mere possession of a burglarious instrument is not sufficient to convict, for the possession must be with the intent of committing crime, and it seems to me that a conviction should not be obtained under the law we are now discussing, unless intent to defraud is proven. The criminal law says:

"Everyone who is found by night armed with any dangerous instrument, with intent to break into a house, or to commit any felony thereby, without lawful excuse, the proof of which excuse shall fall upon him—" and so on, shall be subject to the penalty. I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Customs that there should be inserted in this provision, the words:

"Having in his possession with intent to defraud the revenue."

I think that provision would meet the objection. There is no doubt that there are attempts made to defraud the revenue, and, of course, the more ingenuity the Government displays in their attempt to enforce the high tariff, the more ingenuity they are met with to evade it on the other side. It seems to me that if these words I have suggested were inserted, it would protect an innocent party, and enable the Customs authorities to reach any person who attempts to defraud the revenue.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant.) The suggestion of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) is a good one, but I think that the objection taken by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), to the Minister of Customs, in some of his dealings, would hardly apply to this clause, if I read it aright. Exception has been taken to the Minister of Customs taking extra powers, but I do not understand that, in this clause, the Minister is taking any extra powers to himself, as the matter is not to be within his cognisance at all, but within the cognisance of the courts to decide.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is not that taking extra power?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). As I understand it, he cannot himself order a seizure and have it adjudicated on without an appeal to the court.

Mr. MITCHELL. Have not these officers power under the Customs Act to enter and search for papers, &c.?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has he not the right to search a man for papers, and if they are found upon him, although an infamous job may be perpetrated on the man, to punish him?

Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). As I understand it, the Minister cannot himself impose the penalty.

Mr. MITCHELL. No.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I see your point clearly enough, but, as I understand it, the Minister would not be taking extraordinary powers on himself, as it would be wholly a matter for the court to adjudicate upon.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). As this law stands, the officers of Customs are authorised to search, and if the invoice is found in the possession of an individual, no matter how innocently it may have come into his hands, the mere fact that it is found in his possession is all that is required to convict, which I think is contrary to the rule in matters of this kind. Therefore, considering the great power Customs officers have, to make searches, I think the ordinary principle of the criminal law should be applied in this case, and that it should be necessary to a conviction that the party should have the invoice in his possession for an unlawful purpose, namely, for the purpose of defrauding the revenue.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I started out with the proposition that it would be necessary to adopt the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon); but I am simply pointing out that in this clause, the Minister is not asking as great individual powers as he has done in other cases, for the matter is not adjudicated by him, but by the court. I think the Minister was not fair in charging a desire on the part of any member of the Opposition to do anything to assist frauds on the revenue. Perhaps most of us are engaged in trade, and anything designed to prevent frauds on the revenue, ought to receive the support of both sides of the House; but it is different with arrangements likely only to cause annoyance to men who have no intention of fraud. If you can imagine that there is a business man in Canada who is anxious to defraud the revenue by means of a duplicate invoice, he ought to be punished in the interest of the honest trader.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The clause as drawn is, of course, a very severe one; so is every law for the administration of the revenue. The present instance has been paralleled in a dozen cases, not only in the Customs Act, but in the Excise Law. For example, it is a highly penal offence for any one to have in his possession an empty cigar box that has been used, which, I fancy, is no greater moral offence than for a man to have a fraudulent invoice in his desk, which no one can suppose to be for any other purpose than to defraud the revenue. I think the hon member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) was perfectly correct in drawing the analogy he did, between this provision and the one read by the hon member for St. John. A person's offence does not consist in having the burglar's tools in his possession, for the purpose of committing a felony, but simply in having them in his possession without lawful excuse, and the proof of its lawfulness shall be upon him. The hon member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has cited the case of a man receiving something of this kind from the post office. Just as in the case of the cigar box, public policy requires, under a severe penalty, that an invoice of that kind should be destroyed immediately by any person receiving it. If people should be allowed to have these invoices in their possession and to keep them, all chance of checking fraud would be destroyed, and, therefore, the amendment proposed by the hon, member for St. John would render the clause worthless, as we should have to prove the intent to use the paper for a fraudulent purpose, which would be impossible unless the man himself confessed that his intention was to use it for a fraudulent purpose, or unless he actually uses it, when it would be too late to prove that it had been certified in blank. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) called attention to the difficulty of punishing the sender of the invoice as well as the receiver. There is a great difficulty in that; but if the sender should be in Canada, it would certainly be an anomalous thing if the receiver should be liable to a penalty while the sender would not be. But I would suggest, with the view of making the cases more parallel—and I hope the suggestion will meet the views of the hon. member for St. John-that we should adopt the same words as the Act he read contains, by enacting that the person in whose possession the invoice is found shall be liable unless he proves that he has it for a lawful purpose.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is a very important point—this cigar box business, and I have sent up to have the stamp erased on an empty cigar box in my possession, so that I might be free from prosecution. It is outrageous that because a gentleman may have an empty cigar box in his possession, on which he has not erased the stamp, he is liable to fine and imprisonment, but the Minister of Justice quotes that as a precedent for enacting a still more iniquitous law. The very illustration given by the hon, geutleman, is an additional reason for our not adopting any such law.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. All laws for the administration of revenue are severe and arbitrary, but the best evidence that this law with reference to cigar boxes is not oppressive is the fact, that although it has been for years on the Statute-book, the hon, gentleman was not aware of it. It has been applied solely for the protection of the revenue, and has not been used oppressively.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not suppose there is one man out of five thousand who has ever read that paragraph relating to the destruction of stamps on cigar boxes, but that does not render the law less liable to be abused, and it is no excuse for passing an iniquitous law, which will render a person liable to imprisonment, simply for having in his possession one of these bills, about which he may know nothing, and which may be sent to him through the post office without his having any will or intention in the matter.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, the Minister of Justice has shown a great deal of skill in the suggestion he has made and in the defence of the Minister of Customs. The provision of the law which the Minister of Customs proposes is, that certain facts shall be deemed a conclusive presumption of wrongdoing, subjecting the party, on these facts being proved, to punishment for misdemeanor. The Minister of Justice proposes certain words which will convert the conclusive presumption into a prima facie presumption, involving the necessity of proving actual wrongdoing before a person can be convicted. That is a radical change, and I think the suggestions made by my hon, friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon) and the Minister of Justice are in effect exactly the same.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the Minister of Customs needed any defence it was my fault, for the clause was drawn up under my instructions. I see, from the objections of hon. gentlemen opposite, that it is capable of improvement, and am prepared to improve it.

Mr. BOWELL. I think the Minister of Justice might have put a stronger case in reference to stills. A man may have had a still in his possession for a number of years, though not in use, but the fact of his having it in his possession subjects him to a penalty, and there is no discretion on the part of the courts in regard to it. I have no objection to the amendment suggested by the Minister of Justice, if it suits the views of the House. If my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) will compare the Customs Act now with what it was before I assumed charge of the Customs Department, he will find that powers which were then vested in the head of the Department have been taken from him, that, in fact, every amendment which has been proposed, though the penalties have been made more severe for infractions of the law, has not conferred additional power upon the head of the Department or any of its When I introduced the first consolidation of this Act, I took away from the Minister certain powers which were absolutely given to him. The question was then put to me, I think, by the hou. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), whether I had no confidence in myself, and my answer was that I thought no Minister should have such powers as those, but that the matter should be relegated for final decision to the courts. It is true that the Minister or the Commissioner must give a ruling in most of these cases, but there is no case in which the person affected cannot appeal to the courts.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The penalty is made $500 or not more than twelve months' imprisonment. I think it would be better to say that the fine should not exceed $500.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Act respecting punishments declares that, when any penalty of that kind is provided, it may be made less according to the judgment of the court.

Acetic and pyroligneous acid and vinegar, 15 cents per gallon and one cent additional.

Mr. FOSTER. This carries out the principle of charging on the strength of the acetic acid for every degree over proof. Heretofore, acetic acid of any strength was allowed to be imported.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is the same change which you have applied to spirits.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the same principle, and seems to be a fair one.

Acetic and pyroligneous acid of any strength, when imported by dyers, calico printers or manufacturers of acetates or colors for exclusive use in dyeing or printing, &c., 25 cents per gallon and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. This is the old duty on acetic acid, and it is thought well to allow these manufacturers to have these acids at the same rate of duty as before at any strength.

Acid phosphate, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a new item. Acid phosphate is largely used in the manufacture of cream of tartar and of baking powders, where it is used as a substitute for cream of tartar, It is made to bear the same rate as starch, which is another ingredient used in baking powders.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the supposed commercial value of that, per pound?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the information here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We should have that information, because it may be a small duty or a very heavy duty, and we cannot tell unless we have the information.

Mr. FOSTER. I imagine the duty is pretty heavy.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is it supposed to represent, ad valorem?

Mr. FOSTER. It came in before unenumerated. An hon. MEMBER. 75 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. like an absolute prohibitory duty. 75 per cent. is an outrageous rate of duty.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it is 75 per cent. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it manufactured here?

Mr. BOWELL.

Precious stones, polished but not set or otherwise manufactured, and imitations thereof, 10 per cent. ad

Mr. FOSTER. This is instead of several clauses, and simply groups all of them together, and adds also another item, which is found here, of imitations of precious stones, in the same category, and at the same rate.

Animals, living, viz.: - Cattle, sheep and hogs, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. The old duty was 20 per cent., which we increased to 30 per cent., as being about a proportional addition with reference to the duty to be placed upon dead meats.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is the anticipated increase of revenue?

Mr. FOSTER. On the importation of last year, it would be about $12,000.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does the Minister look for the same importation?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a matter which can hardly be forecast. Probably there will not be so much importation.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I would like to enquire whether, upon hogs imported, slaughtered and packed in Canada, the actual product of the hogs imported must be exported to obtain a rebate of the duty, or whether an equivalent would be sufficient to entitle the packer to obtain a rebate?

Mr. BOWELL. It must be the actual product. You will find that the Customs Act provides for that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that this is a very objectionable proposition. In the first place, I have not the slightest doubt that the hon. gentleman, by imposing this additional duty, is putting a very strong argument on the other side, two of them at least, who have Mr. Foster.

into the mouths of the advocates of additional protection in the United States. He knows very well that at the present moment there are propositions in Congress largely to increase the duty on animals exported from Canada to the United States. Such a clause as this is a direct invitation, a direct aid and inducement, offered by the Canadian Government to those parties in the United States who are desirous of imposing additional duties on Canadian animals imported into the United States. I can hardly conceive a more unwise thing than to do that, at the present stage of affairs in the United States. If the hon, gentleman and his friends desire to add to the duties on every animal exported from Canada to the United States, this is the way to do it.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope the Finance Minister will give that consideration to the remarks just made by my hon friend that they deserve. There can be no question about the soundness of the view which that hon, gentleman has taken of this question. Just now, beyond all doubt, is a most inopportune time for any advance in the duty upon live stock, or any movement in this direction, while Congress have their Tariff Bill under consideration, and the features of that Bill will not be fully settled until after Parliament is prorogued. We are simply inviting, by action of this kind, retaliation on their part. This it is unwise to do, aside from any question as to the rate of duty, which, I believe, is an excessive one in itself.

Mr. MULOCK. I just this moment looked into the Trade and Navigation Returns, to see what our trade in sheep was for the year 1889. I find, that we imported from the United States last year sheep to the value of $3,489, and we exported in the same year to the United States sheep to the value of $918,334. I may have made a mistake, since I have only glanced at it hastily, but I think these figures are correct. You will find the exports on page 661 of the Trade and Navigation Returns. The number of sheep is put down as 307,775, and the value I have given. The hon member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) hands me just now figures, showing the total amount, as set forth on page 4; to be somewhat more than I stated. It appears, that the total value of the imports was $81,863, less than one tenth of what we exported. Now, is it proposed to imperil that trade? In order to exclude $80,000 worth of sheep, it is asked that we should imperil a trade involving nearly $1,000,000. Now, does trade up to the present moment justify this action? Why should we increase our import duties 50 per cent. greater than the Americans have imposed against us? We are challenging them, because the Administration have declared that they have adopted a policy to impose just such duties as the Americans impose, and, of course, we have to expect to have the same treatment awarded to

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the implication lies, in the first place, that the object of imposing this duty upon cattle, sheep and hogs, has been to retaliate against the United States. I do not think that the objection can lie, either, that it is done with any purpose, on the part of the Administration, of inviting retaliation. My hon friends spoken, may have peculiar sources of information, and may know more intimately of what they speak than other members of this House. It seems to me that there are two things that we may safely affirm: the first is that we must always look upon ourselves as related to the countries with whom we trade and who lie near to us, and the second that we must more especially look to our own interest and form our own policy; we must do what we consider best for the country in which we live, always, of course, having reference to the relations that this country occupies to the countries with which it trades. It is simply and solely in pursuance of that object that this, as a part of the policy of the Government, has been adopted. The Government has come to the conclusion that farmers' products can be better protected than they have been, and it has determined to protect them. It has, therefore, placed duties on those articles that it is believed the Dominion of Canada is able amply to produce and supply in sufficient quantity, not only for the consumption of the Canadian people, but as well for foreign export; and it would, of course, be altogether absurd to place a duty upon dead meats with the idea of protecting those products and not place a corresponding duty upon the live animals out of which those dead meats are produced, and this addition is simply put as a proportional increase. Will hon. gentlemen opposite say that we are to go on from year to year and from century to century doing nothing in what we consider to be the best line for a country like this great in extent and in resources and with a population, which is respectable in numbers, and undoubted in its energy, its enter-prise and its power? Are we to go on from year to year and from century to century doing nothing because, forsooth, a threat may be held out against us, that, if we adopt measures for our own interests and do what we honestly consider best for our own success, another country near us or far away may retaliate and annoy us? I do not consider this is a principle which Canada at the present time is disposed to adopt. We come back here year after year with hope deferred, so far as reciprocity in natural products with the United States is concerned.

Mr. FOSTER. Hon. gentlemen may greet the words "hope deferred" with such cheers as they please; but the facts are against them, and facts are more powerful than cheers or sneers. Since the very first year of the enactment of the old Reciprocity Treaty we have found no approach to a spirit of larger and broader international trade with this country on the part of the United States. That treaty had no more than commenced its operations when dissatisfaction began to be expressed with it across the boundary along the whole line of the 45th degree of latitude, and it culminated at last in the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty, against the wishes and the desires and the repeated efforts of the Provinces of Canada at that time. And from that time to this, although efforts have been constantly made, although no Government has ever existed which did not make patent to the world its desire and its readiness to come down and frame a fair treaty of reciprocity with the United States whenever the United States were disposed to do so, although that has been the case, and the offer has been repeated not only by statutory provision, but also by diplomatic effort, nothing has appeared to give us the least hope that to-day the Government of the United States is one whit nearer to us in a desire for a reciprocity treaty which would be fair and equal on both sides. I say that the facts are against the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, what about this present proposal? It is said that this is retaliation.

Mr. MULOCK. A challenge.

Mr. FOSTER. I disclaim that this tariff has been framed with the idea of retaliation; I disclaim that it has been thrown out as a challenge, and the absurdity of a charge of that kind is shown by the trend of events in the United States, both for the period of which I have been speaking, and also for the last two or three years. When the contest took place which resulted in the election of the present President, and the present Congress, the elections were run upon the simple question of a degree of protection which we would consider high and a degree of protection which was still higher. It was not a question of free trade and protection; there was no party which went to the polls under a flag upon which was shown the legend of free trade for the United States of America. It was a question between a high tariff and a still higher tariff. And after all that took place in the discussions in the United States, the party which came out triumphant at the polls was the party that promised, and which now shows determination to implement its promise, to add to the protection of the various industries in the United States, and to do nothing which would take away from the industrial protection of that country, whatever it might do with respect to the raw materials which enter as a basis of its industries. That President came into power, that Congress came into power, the party which was triumphant holds the power, it may be by a small vote in one branch, and it is able to do what the former Administration was not able to accomplish, viz.—to control both branches of the Congress of the United States. What are the tariff indications? That they are going back on their promises, and on their platform, on which the election was run? Not at all. But days and months before this tariff saw the light, all the indications in the United States were that protection was to be pushed further, especially in the line of the agricultural interests; and the report of the Ways and Means Committee, of that section of the committee which represents the dominant party, amply fulfils that prediction, and amply proves what is to be policy of the dominant party in that country. This is not retaliation. We have been looking for the last 25 years in vain for an offer of a reciprocity treaty between us and the country to the south of us, and when at last the trend of events irresistibly shows that we shall not obtain such a treaty, we may as well tread our independent path; we may as well be a country now, and do what we honestly consider to be best for our country through and through, and if we meet difficulties we will meet them like men, we will not act the part of cravens, and simply sit down and do nothing. I will say one thing more. I hold it to be criminal almost—I may say without that restriction "almost," that I hold it to be criminal for any party to endeavor to create the idea in this country, and in the country to the south of us, that we are animated with a malicious motive of retaliating against them, and to use that idea and opinion as a means by which passions may be aroused, and political action may be taken, which will have the result which hon, gentlemen opposite, from their advocacy of this view, sometimes appear to me to desire, viz. :--of creating an impression among the people of the United States that we are actuated by a malicious desire to retaliate, and that, therefore, we should be punished in kind. I wish to state here, and to state it with all the emphasis that I can command, that the Government have had no intention to retaliate or to fling out any challenge against the United States, but that it has simply looked at the state of the country and endeavored to do what it considers, upon the whole, to be the best for the interests of this Dominion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the Government of Canada are not cravens they are writing themselves down precisely what one of their supporters, the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), described them the other evening. I will say this, that looking at the Trade and Navigation Returns, I never yet in all my life saw an instance of more utter imbecility, a more utter want of statesmanship, a more utter want of comprehension of the general interests of this country than has been displayed by hon. gentlemen opposite. What is this hon. gentleman doing? Here is a trade of four or five millions in sheep, horses and cattle, and, if I add eggs, a trade of seven millions.

 $\operatorname{Mr.}$ FERGUSON (Leeds). You fixed that down at Washington.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would do it infinitely better than the whole lot of them on the other side put together, because I understand more of what the real working wants of the people of this country are-not of their paymasters, the combines-but of the real working people of this country, than the hon gentlemen occupying the Treasury benches have attained to. Now, Sir, what are those hon gentlemen doing? A trade of many million dollars per annum is put in jeopardy for a miserable tax on an importation of perhaps one hundred thousand or two hundred thousand I turn to our statement of exports to the United States, and, first of all, I find we sent them last year, $2,169,000 worth of horses, we sent them $494,000 worth of horned cattle, we sent them $900,000 worth of sheep, and millions upon millions dollars worth of eggs and other articles of that kind; and I find that this trade is going to be put in peril, and in many cases utterly destroyed, for the sake of a trade of $80,000 or $90,000 all told, or may be, a couple hundred thousand dollars. I say that every agriculturist in Ontario, every agriculturist in the Maritime Provinces, and every agriculturist in Quebec sees one of the most valuable portions of his whole business put in jeopardy, and likely to be exposed to an almost prohibitory tax, for the purpose of these gentlemen airing a little clap-trap here to catch a few votes.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is what these hon. gentlemen are doing. I say, that if these hon. gentlemen suppose that such actions as theirs Mr. FOSTER.

will not be taken as a challenge on the part of the people of the United States, they show an ignorance of the temper and feeling of the United States, almost as gross as that which they exhibited a couple of years ago, when the High Commissioner described us as on the verge of war.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the Minister of Finance does not know what he is doing, let him consult the late Minister of Finance, Sir Charles Tupper. That hon, gentleman went down to Washington, and we know that he told us we were on the verge of actual war-at any rate, of We know what that hon. gentlecommercial war. man did with this Cabinet, when he came back from Washington. We know that when he found them attempting to embark, in one or two instances, on the foolish path they are marching now, he took them by the neck and compelled them within three days to do what they had declared was traitorous and treasonable. That is what the late Minister of Finance did. I am sorry to say, that the present Minister of Finance does not appear to possess anything like the same grip, or vigor, in dealing with his colleagues that the late hon. Minister did, or I am sure, his better sense would lead him to imitate his predecessor, and to do precisely as he did;—eliminate those most objectionable provisions.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

REPORTS.

Report of the High Commissioner for Canada, with reports from agents in the United Kingdom for the year 1889—(Mr. Carling).

Report of the Director and officers of the Experimental Farms, for the year 1889—(Mr. Carling)

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House resumed consideration of item 5:

Animals living, viz.:—Cattle, sheep and hogs, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before this item passes, 1 wish to say a few words with regard to the duty itself, which it is proposed to impose by this resolution, and also in reply to some remarks made by the hon. Minister of Finance, whom I am glad to see is in his place. The object of this increase of 10 per cent. in the duty upon cattle, sheep and hogs. I can quite readily understand. The Government find it necessary to placate the agriculturist of this country; and the Government of the United States find it necessary to move in the same direction, and the agriculturist of both countries has the idea dawning on his mind that the operation of a protective system is not in his interests. The farmer is beginning to suspect that the taxes imposed by the protective system are bleeding him at every pore, and the Governments of both countries are realising the fact that they must throw a tub to this agricultural whale, or there will be trouble with the agricultural vote, and, consequently, we have this proposal to increase this duty, which I think I will be able to show is absurd and unnecessary, taking into consideration the trade between the two countries in the animals mentioned in this resolution. Now, Sir, I have said the agriculturist is uneasy. He is beginning to understand that the great volume of Customs duties collected in this country, amounting to about $23,000,000 last year, did not measure to him and to the other producers the burden of taxation. He is beginning to realise that that amount of Customs duty forms part of the cost of the article furnished to the consumer, and that upon the duty as a part of the cost is assessed wholesale and retail dealers' profit, making the actual cost to the consumer 50 per cent. more than the Government receive, and making the tax to the producers of this country $34,000,000, in round numbers, for the $23,000,000 secured by the Government. He is beginning to realise that the increased cost, due to the tariff, on all the goods produced in this country, is a still more serious burden upon him and upon other producers, than the duty itself, and that the added cost of the Customs duties is a part of the cost of the article. He is beginning to understand that this system takes from the producer $3 in order to give the Government $1, and that it is building up monopolies. He sees the bright, intelligent farm lad working from sunrise to sunset, for perhaps 50 cents a day, and the artisan who works ten hours a day, receiving from $12 to $18 a week. The idea suggests itself that there is something about this system that is not advantageous to him or to the class to which he belongs, and the consequence is the Government find themselves in the position that they must endeavor to induce the farmer to believe they are doing something for him; and that, under the general system of spoliation called protection, some one has to be spoiled for the benefit of the farmer, to compensate him for being obliged to suffer for the benefit of somebody else.

Now, Sir, if we look at the statistics of the live stock trade, I think the House will be convinced that this duty is unnecessary—that it is, in fact, absurd. Our imports of animals from all countries in the last fiscal year were as follows:-

	Number.	Value.
Horned eattle	. 748	$ 21,750
Horses	. 4,105	149,836
Sheep	43,255	81,863
Swine	. 3,809	37,002
Total		$290,451

During the same year we exported, not to all countries, but to the United States alone:

	Number.	Value.
Horses	17,277	$2,113,782
Horned cattle	. 37,360	488,266
Swine	1.033	4,448
Sheep	307,775	918,334
Total	• · · · · · · · · · · ·	$3,524,830

Thus we find that our export trade in these four classes of animals to the United States was considerably more than twelve times as great as our import trade in these animals from all countries; and yet the Government proposes to increase the duty 10 per cent. on that trade. I think the farmer will understand, that this threatens a very important interest of his. He will see that the import trade amounts to very little, while the object of prime importance to him is to put the export trade on a proper basis.

Now, Sir, the system of protection is calculated to build up, and will continue to build up in this country and in every country that adopts it, a ring of monopolies and monopolists, who will naturally be the most liberal contributors to the election funds of the party that adopts their policy, and the party that adopts the protective system will, in all cases, derive its financial support chiefly from the interests which it protects. That is the case with interests which it protects. That is the case with the Conservative Government of Canada, as it is with the Republican Government of the United States, both of which act according to the behests of the great interests which they protect, and in return they depend on them for liberal contributions to carry the elections; and in any professions they may make of a desire to benefit the farmers by protection, they are merely trying to hoodwink and deceive that class of the community, because it is impossible for them to contribute to the benefit of the farmers one cent's worth where they take one dollar from them. The protective system builds up such establishments as that of Andrew Carnegie in Pittsburg, whose profits are $12,000 a day, who has amassed a fortune of $40,000,000, who was not worth $100 fifteen years ago. That man would have been abundantly successful if by industry and thrift during that time he had accumulated a fortune of $500,000 instead of $40,000,000; it would have been better for himself and for the country; and any system that enables individuals to amass such fortunes, is in the interest of monopolies, and not of the masses.

The hon Finance Minister, I see, does not propose a duty on horses; and I will give the statistics regarding cattle, hogs and sheep, the animals on which the duty is increased. Last year we imported of cattle, horses and sheep from all countries $140,615 worth, and exported to the United States alone $1,411,000 worth. In other words, our exports of these articles to the United States alone, was ten times greater than our imports from all countries, and the hon. Minister of Finance proposes to imperil that export trade by the imposition of the added duties. The hon. gentleman may, perhaps, imagine that the farmers think this is a good thing for them, but the hon. gentleman must know that it is not. He is inviting a policy on the part of our neighbors, the Americans, which will injure the farmers in a trade of $10, for the possibility of benefiting them in a trade of $1.

The hon. Minister of Finance, in his remarks before dinner, spoke of the repeal of the Reciprocity Treaty by the United States in 1866, and led the House to infer that it was an entirely unjustifiable act on the part of the United States—an act of wantonness. That the operation of that treaty was, in the highest degree, beneficial to Canada, there can be no doubt; under it our exports to the United States increased from $10,000,000 to $40,000,000 perannum in round numbers, during eleven years, and the country was prosperous; but the abrogation of that treaty was owing to the United States believing that a fair reciprocity treaty would be one that would enable them to sell to Canada the products of their labor which we desired to buy in return for the products of our labor which they desired to buy. They believed that a reciprocity treaty which enabled us to sell to them all our natural productions, of which they were purchasers to a large extent, but which would not allow them to send us, in return, those articles of which they were sellers to a large extent, was not a fair treaty. But there was another circumstance that had much to do with the repeal of that treaty—that was, the sympathy evinced by Canada for the Confederate cause, especially by the manifestation of applause in the Canadian Parliament at the defeat of the Federal Army at Chancellorsville. It was the spirit manifested by that demonstration of sympathy with the enemies of the Union that did, perhaps, more than anything else to bring about the abrogation of the treaty in 1866.

An hon. MEMBER. How do you know?

Mr. CHARLTON. Who asks this question? If there is any man in this House so ignorant of the fact that the American Cousul General at Quebec transmitted this intelligence to the American Government, he had better rise and say so.

Mr. BOWELL. And that a certain gentleman belonging to the party of hon. gentlemen opposite telegraphed to the Detroit Convention that if they intended to ask for a renewal of the treaty, not by any means to do it, because they would thereby drive Canada into annexation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who sent this telegram?

Mr. BOWELL. You know who sent it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Name the person.

Mr. BOWELL. Does the hon. gentleman not know who the gentleman was, in Montreal, who sent that telegram?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, I do not; give the name.

Mr. BOWELL. It was the gentleman who was then at the head of one of the telegraph companies of this country, from which he was dismissed after-

Give the Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. name.

Mr. MITCHELL. That gentleman was an American.

Mr. BOWELL. Suppose he was, he was acting in Canada and was a Canadian subject, so far as I know, and acting on behalf of gentlemen with whom the hon gentleman was intimately con-

Mr. MITCHELL. What has that to do with the Liberal party? More than that, that gentleman was promptly dismissed by the Canadian company at whose head he was.

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. CHARLTON. Whatever orders any one individual in Canada may have given to the Government of the United States, or to a convention at Detroit, I do not think they had very much influence on the Government or on the sentiments of the American people. But the fact that the Canadian Parliament had, in an open manner, shown their sympathy for the Confederate cause, and the realisation of the fact that the Reciprocity Treaty was one which, in any event, required revision as to its provisions, were the two causes that led to the abrogation of that treaty. The Finance Minister

United States of any desire for the negotiation of a treaty for reciprocal trade between the two countries. In making that statement, he has made a statement which is calculated to convey a false impression to the country as to the desires or wishes of the people of the United States, as a body, with regard to this matter, and a statement, moreover, which is not warranted by the facts of the case. Have we not the fact that last Session of Congress a resolution was passed by the popular branch of the United States Legislature, laying down a proposition with regard to reciprocity? Have we not the fact that this year the Committee on Foreign Relations of the House of Representatives has unanimously reported to the House a resolution empowering the President of the United States to appoint commissioners, whenever Canada shows its readiness to enter upon negotiations with a view to arranging the details of a reciprocity treaty? That resolution, of course, has not passed Congress. It has not reached that stage; it has not been acted on by Congress-

Mr. BOWELL. Is it to be?

Mr. CHARLTON—but it has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, consisting, in almost even proportions, of Democrats and Republicans; and the sentiment of that committee is one, in my opinion, indicative of the action the House of Representatives will take when that question comes before that House. I ask the hon. gentleman by what authority he tells this House and the country that the United States have shown no desire or disposition to make any arrangement with regard to reciprocity, when the House of Representatives of the United States formally passed the resolution I have referred to, and when it is well known that the Senate, if it had not been so late in the Session, would have also passed that resolution, inviting this country to enter into reciprocal trade relations, and when, this very Session, a step in the same direction has been taken by the Committee on Foreign Relations, indicating, so far as that movement has gone, that the United States Government are ready to enter into negotiations with us for the arrangement of a reciprocity treaty on a fair basis. I hold that the Government, in not responding to that resolution of last Session, in treating it with contemptuous silence, took the very course calculated to destroy that feeling which is necessary to lead to the negotiation and consumnation of a reciprocity Then the hon, gentleman told us treaty. that this Government has continually held out an offer of reciprocity to the United States, that we have a standing offer of reciprocity on our statutes. So we have; and a standing offer of reciprocity which we know will never be accepted; which we know is not an offer of reciprocity at all, but a jug-handled, one sided kind of offer, the advantages of which would be entirely on our own side-just that kind of offer which points to a treaty similar to that which the Americans abrogated in 1866, and which certainly they would not grant now, since they told us, in effect, that if we are ever to have a reciprocity treaty, we must have a true reciprocity treatyone which will give them the privilege of sending something to us, as well as giving us the privilege of sending something to them. When the hon. abrogation of that treaty. The Finance Minister of sending something to them. When the hontells us that no evidence has been given by the gentleman talks of our readiness to enter into reciprocal trade relations with the United States, he is talking of a mere deception. Every intelligent man knows that there is no hope of reciprocity on the basis of the standing offer which hon. gentlemen opposite profess to make to the United States. We have shown no desire to get a fair treaty; we have made no attempt to get one; we have, in fact, declared that we would not have a fair treaty, even if we could get one. The President of the Council, the other night, informed us that he considered reciprocity, even in natural products, would be a disaster, and the rest of the Government say they might possibly take that, but they would not go further; and the whole world knows that unless we do go further, we cannot get the thing at all. The country is not to be deceived by the position taken by the Government, by the pretended desire of the Government to get reciprocity, and their determined action not to take it.

Then the Minister of Finance told us that the action of the Ways and Means Committee at Washington with regard to the Bill which has lately been reported, or is to be reported, the substance of which is pretty generally known, indicates merely the fixed policy on the part of the United States Government with regard to this matter, and that nothing like bitterness of feeling or a desire to retaliate for fancied wrongs which they may have, in their estimation, suffered at the hands of this Government, has to do with it—that, in fact, they never took into consideration at all the attitude of the Canadian Government and people with reference to the fiscal relations between the two countries. I think the hon, gentleman is mistaken. I believe that the acts of the Conservative Government of this country in various matters of policy towards the United States, has irritated and produced a state of feeling in the United States which is not conducive to liberal trade relations between the two countries, and is not in the interests of the people of this country at all. We took, in my opinion, in the past, with regard to the fishery question, action which was not judicious or wise in attempting to enforce, in an arbitrary and offensive manner, the provisions of an antiquated treaty, which I do not think is defensible on the ground of international comity. The idea of telling the captain of a schooner coming into a Canadian port that she could get wood and water under the provisions of the treaty but could not buy a cask to hold the water; that she could buy material to mend a sail that was blown away, but could not buy any supplies of any description, and that she could not even land a sick man. What is the use of making regulations of that sort, which are only calculated to produce, and which did produce, the most irritating effects? We did enforce these regulations in a spirit which the Americans conceived to be a barbarous spirit, and we did produce irritation and ill-feeling, and acted in a way just the reverse of the course we should have taken if we had in view the promoting of our own interests. We have the right of sending and receiving any goods in bond through the United States by rail and of making connections with our own railways; we have never been denied access to their ports in sending goods through in transit, and yet we deny them the privilege of shipping from our country the fish they catch in our waters, and sending them in bond to the $98\frac{1}{3}$

United States. We impose on them differential tolls on our canals; a vessel passing through the Welland Canal has to pay 20 cents a ton, 18 cents of which is refunded if she goes to the Canadian port of Montreal but the full amount of which is exacted if she goes to an American port; while, in the face of that, the St. Mary's Canal, which belongs to the Americans, is open to our vessels free. It cannot be asserted that this course is a friendly one, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that it has produced a great deal of irritation on the part of our neighbors. There is a little matter with which the Minister of Customs is connected, to which I may refer When we took the duty off their fruit trees and peaches, our Government had to show its animus by imposing a little tax on the peach baskets; and while we were exporting to the United States $2,000,000 worth of eggs annually, which were admitted to that country free of duty, we had the meanness to impose a duty on the boxes which contained those eggs, when they were brought back. In all these little matters we have shown a spirit which has produced irritation and invited retaliation, and the consequences of our exhibition of that spirit we are now beginning to see; and when the hon. gentleman tells us that the attitude of the Canadian Government has not had anything to do with the course taken by the American Government, I must say to him that, in my opinion, he is mistaken. Now, it is proposed to increase this duty on cattle. We propose to put an increased duty of 10 per cent. upon an import trade amounting to $140,000 a year, in order to invite the American Government to increase their duty on an export trade ten times greater, a trade amounting to $1,400,000. whole thing is absurd. It is sheer fatuity on the part of the Finance Minister. I do not think the Finance Minister is acting in the interest of Canada or in the interest of the farmer. I desire, as much as any one, to see the farmer protected. anything can be done to give the farmer something out of this general plunder, it should be done, but it is of no use to attempt to do anything which will not help the farmer, and, therefore, I believe that this is not a wise policy, and I believe that the general policy of this Government in its dealings with the United States has not been in the interest of this country. For these reasons, I think the Government should drop this proposed duty. It is not very material one way or the other to the farmers, so far as protection is concerned, but it is material if it invites the United States to put a heavier duty on the articles which we export to that country.

Mr. FREEMAN. I think, when the friends of the American Republic in this House are contending for the interest of the United States, they had better give up the old story they have so long repeated to this House in reference to the American fishermen being ill-used on our southern shores. I believe that the charge they bring against the Dominion Government, that they instructed their cruisers to treat the American fishermen in a manner different from that in which they should be treated by civilised, christian people, is utterly unfounded. I have some knowledge of the fact. The treatment of those fishermen came under my own observation when these gentlemen were looking after the Ontario farmers, and I think they know nothing at all about it. They have taken
