Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand there are eighteen persons in one small room? I think, in that case, my hon. friend has made out a strong case for the purification of the atmosphere. If eighteen gentlemen are cooped together in one room, the atmosphere must be very unwholesome; and really the Hansard reporters have done their work, on the whole, so well, they deserve consideration from the House and from the parties in charge.

Mr. MITCHELL. There seems to be a very spacious room immediately opposite the entrance to this Chamber, which might be very properly appropriated for these gentlemen. This room certainly cannot be of very much use now, because the Government do not seem to need it for caucuses, or anything of that kind, and if it is merely for smoking or lounging purposes, a room could be got elsewhere. I think the Minister should consider the suggestion, to provide further accommodation for the Hansard reporters.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. After having heard what the hon. gentlemen say about this room, of course I will take care that we will provide these gentlemen with a larger room. If there are eighteen persons in the Hansard room, and 140 in the other room, the latter cannot be considered too large.

Mr. MITCHELL. I don't think I ever saw my hon. friend going in there smoking.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The third party is jealous of the first, and wants to get a bigger room.

Mr. MITCHELL. The third party is quite satisfied with the room they have. They had hard work trying to retain it.

THE VOTERS' LISTS.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to enquire of the hon. Minister about what time we may expect to receive the voters' lists? I called at the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery this morning for the voters' lists for South Grey, and was informed that he had not yet received them. It appears to me that these lists should be issued before this, and I would like to know when it is likely we will have them.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The voters' lists are getting ready as quickly as possible, and whenever a member enquires about the list of a certain county, I am always willing to give him an answer. It depends, to a certain extent, upon the revising officers to whom these lists, after being printed, are returned to be certified as being correctly printed, according to the minute which has been kept after revision. We expect that the whole of the lists will be printed during the next three or four weeks.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. There are two or three trifling amendations which I wish to make. Before doing so, I wish to say that the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has given notice that he would move a certain motion upon going into Committee of Ways and Means. I asked him today if he would have the kindness to let it stand over until I move to go into Supply, as I was very anxious to get a few items through in the Committee of Ways and Means, and to get concurrence on the resolutions, so as to leave me free for other work. The hon, gentleman very kindly consented to this, on the understanding that he would have an opportunity to bring up his resolution when the House again is moved into Committee of Supply. I wish to amend item 314 on the free list, by striking out the words "of cotton and woollen goods," and causing it to read: "blood albumen, tannic acid, antimony salts, tartar emetic, and grey tartar, when imported by manufacturers for use in their factories only." By leaving out the words "of cotton and woollen goods," we put these articles on the free list absolutely for all manufactures, whether for the manufacture of cotton or woollen goods or not. In item 214i, I wish to add the word "dressed" after the words "all other building stone," which bear 30 per cent. ad valorem. In item 148, I wish to strike out the words "ginger wine" in paragraph c, and insert the words "ginger wine" after the word "Vermouth" in paragraph g of the same item. I find that ginger wine is imported in varying strength, some of it being very weak, and some having a great deal of spirit in it. I wish to make this change so that there will not be so heavy a duty on the light article, and the alcoholic duty will be imposed on the article which is strongly alcoholic.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to ask the hon. Minister if this clause, contained in the notice of motion which he has given, embodies the proposition he is about to make:

"Spirituous or alcoholic liquors distilled from any material, or containing or compounded from or with distilled spirits of any kind, and any mixture thereof with water."

Is that the proposition the hon. gentleman is now going to make?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, this change seems to involve a considerable alteration in our whole system of levying duties on spirits, and it will be well for the hon. gentleman to explain in detail the full effects of it. As I understand, the hon. gentleman proposes to raise the duty on all spirits, except brandy—which at present pays $2 a gallon—from $1.75 to $2 a gallon; and he also proposes, as regards all alcoholic liquors of less than 85 degrees, that no reduction shall be allowed. He proposes to allow a reduction for any diminution of strength below proof down to 85 degrees, but below that he does not propose to allow any reduction, I suppose the hon. Minister is in a position to state to the Committee what the effect of that alteration will be. A large quantity of these articles have been brought in hitherto at degrees considerably below $5, and the effect of this change will be largely to increase the duty on them, wholly independent of the increase. The increase of 25 cents a gallon, I suppose, will bring about $150,000 of increased revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. I estimate that about $120,000 will be the total increase all around.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, only some one conversant with the details of the trade can say how the change will effect importations below 85 degrees. The 25 cents per gallon, I should think, would be worth somewhat more than the calculation the hon. gentleman makes. What is the quantity collectively of all spirits except brandy?

Mr. FOSTER. I had a memorandum of the whole matter, but cannot find it just now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think I can tell from recollection pretty accurately. I think the hon. gentleman will find that, apart from the brandy, the other liquors affected are about 800,000 gallons, so that the addition of 25 cents per gallon would amount to $200,000 per se, without taking into account what might be gained by abolishing the difference between the reduction down to any strength and the reduction down to 85. So that, prima facie, the amount will be nearer $250,000 than $120,000, unless the importation be largely diminished, which I do not think will be the case.

Mr. BOWELL. There will be a large reduction on the brandies, no matter what their proof. Now they are permitted to reduce to the extent of 15 per cent. below proof, which would be equal to 15 per cent. of the total importation, and Old Tom will show the same proportion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think that will be the case. Supposing they did, all brandy you levy duty upon is computed as if it were proof.

Mr. BOWELL. Before, but not now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You may be sure if it is brought in in proof, it is watered to suit the consumers just afterwards, and as a matter of course there will be no practical difference in the importation.

Mr. BOWELL. In Hennessy's and Martel's brandies they all range 15 and some a little lower below proof. Formerly they paid $2 upon each gallon for their proof, over proof or under proof. Now, with the 15 per cent. reduction, that would be equal to $1.70 instead of $2. That is the brandy brought in in bottles. The bulk brandy generally ranges from 1 to 4 per cent. above proof, and in all cases that has been admitted also at $2 per gallon, but now they will pay a proportionate increase in proportion to their strength. The proportions are very small.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Even so, 15 per cent. reduction on brandy would be, at the outside, balanced by the abolition of the reduction in the case of the other liquors.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes. Allowing for the loss to the revenue from the change in the rates on brandy and Old Tom generally, the increase on the other will more than compensate to the extent of about $120,000.

So, and the effect of this change will be largely to Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should increase the duty on them, wholly independent of say it will compensate to the extent of $200,000.

There are 800,000 gallons at an increased duty of 25 cents, apart from the brandy. Then you have the advantage of the abolition of the reduction below 85. It is a matter of calculation, which the trade alone would answer.

Mr. FOSTER. The calculation was carefully made by the officers of the Department, estimated upon the amount brought in last year; and taking in that which will give a decrease and that which will give an increase of duty, and balancing them, it gave about $120,000 or $125,000 as being the net increase. That statement I will bring over.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have received a communication giving the opinion of houses dealing in wines and liquors in Montreal, and also a private letter from a leading house on the same subject. With the permission of the Committee I will read the correspondence, in order that the Finance Minister may show to what extent he has met the difficulties complained of:

complained of:

"Dear Sir.—I, with others, have just been discussing the duty question on spirits in Mesers. Henry Chapman & Co.'s office, and Mr. Wonham read to ushis letter to you of the 8th inst., which is all right as far as it goes, and I write this as a supplement to be attached to it.'

Domestic Spirits.—The Government allowed the Canadian distillers to bottle spirits in excise bonds, in bottles of any size and of any strength, the distillers only paying the excise duty on the actual quantity of spirits used, and at the actual strength; for instance, a case of ryce whiskey will contain one dozen bottles, containing 13, 2 or 24 gallons of spirits, at 25 per cent. under proof; for instance, we will take a case of say 2 gallons, this pays duty on 1½ gallons of spirits, the 25 per cent. under proof being allowed. Therefore, why should not we as importers, paging a much higher tax, be allowed for the actual under proof and actual measurement of any spirits in bottles that we may import? What we want is the same measure of justice that is given to the Canadian distillers. I learn that no points have been given to any Opposition members but yourself, and would thank you to get the Hon. Mr. Cartwright to take notes from yours. Mr. Cartwright to take notes from yours.

The memo., which was the result of a meeting of the liquor dealers, is as follows:-

" MEMO. re PROPOSED CHANGE IN DUTIES.

"MEMO. re PROPOSED CHANGE IN DUTIES.

"The old duty, for years in force in Canada, was $1.75 per proof gallon on all spirits (except brandy), any additional strength was charged for and any lower strength below proof allowed proportionately; duty was also levied upon actual measurement of a case. This mode of collecting duty worked well, without friction and was quite satisfactory to the trade of the country. Cases contain from 1½ to 2 gallons, but the Government now propose to enforce payment of duty upon 3 gallons, while the largest case only contains 2 gallons."

M. HONTED That is recondied

Mr. FOSTER. That is remedied.

"Then again, it is sought to make us pay on the proof strength, allowing nothing for under proof, but taking care to collect for a single degree over proof."

Mr. FOSTER. That also is remedied.

Mr. FOSTER. That also is remedied.

"Brandy was for years charged $2 upon the proof strength, consideration being had for a lesser or higher strength, and actual measurement of cases. When on 20th February, 1889, the Government discovered that in accordance with their printed tariff they had made a mistake in their interpretation of it, and that brandy in cases in future must pay upon contents of cases, as if at proof, without any allowance for under proof.

"The new tariff proposes to exact a duty upon a gallon more than a possible measurement, which is two gallons." Examples of proposed change showing the enormous and inconsistent duties upon an article like gin.

"Say case of Red., containing 12 gallons: first cost, f.o.b. Rotterdam, 6s. 8d.; duty $7.16.

"Say case of Green, containing 12 gallons: first cost in Rotterdam, 3s. 7d.; duty $3.62.

"The practice of levying duty upon spirits upon a basis of proof is, we believe, universal in almost every country where duties are imposed, the principle is just and equitable. Why should Government impose additional duty for over proof, where a duty for Sir Richard Cartwright.

proof is fixed, and not permit a corresponding deduction when spirits are imported under proof either in wood or bottle? If a dealer or consumer desires to purchase, say, a case of gin containing 1, 1½ or 1½ gallons, why should he be compelled to buy a case containing 2 gallons, which he would have to do if the Government provide that all cases of spirits must pay duty upon 2 gallons? Consumers do not in any way suffer, and are not imposed upon by the seller of a weak spirit in small bottles, as the price of the article is regulated upon cost according to the strength and size of the bottle. Brandy is manufactured at a strength of 30 and 50 per cent, over proof, and there is no standard for shipment in cases, the shippers reducing the strength to suit the different markets of the world; therefore any fixed standard of proof at which brandy must be imported in cases would be arbitrary and not equitable."

Mr. ROWELL. When was this written?

Mr. BOWELL. When was this written?

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the change in the brandy tariff. As I understand, the two points raised are that, in the first place, they are charged for cases containing three gallons when they only contain two gallons.

Mr. FOSTER. That is remedied.

Mr. MITCHELL. You propose to charge them for proof when the spirit is under proof, though, if it is over proof, you make them pay for the amount that is over proof. I understand that, to a certain extent, that has also been remedied by the percentage being allowed down to 85. The other point is, that you allow the domestic manufacturer of whiskeys the right to put his whiskeys up in any bottles he desires, though you will not permit that in the case of the imported article.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the Minister of Finance is hardly disposed to apply the extreme doctrine of protection to the domestic manufacture of spirits. I think, however, by this tariff, he will considerably alter the ratio of duties on the domestic and the imported article. He has not stated that it is his intention to add to the excise duties on whiskey manufactured in Canada, which, I think, now amount to about $1.30 per gallon. What is he going to do in that respect? Is he going to specially protect the distiller or the whiskey manufacturer of Canada, or is he going to add an amount to the duty paid by the manufacturer at home in order to make that equal with the amount which he proposes to levy on imports? There is a question of policy, as well as a question of revenue, involved in that matter.

Mr. FOSTER. So far, we do not propose any The manuchange in the inland revenue tax. facture of spirits in this country is hedged around with very considerable safeguards, and is consequently put to very considerable expenses by the regulations which were introduced a year or two ago by my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue, whom I do not now see in his place. Manufacturers of whiskey in this country are compelled to keep their liquors for two years in order to age them properly and to eliminate from them, as I am informed, the more poisonous and deleterious elements. This necessity of keeping the liquors for two years is, of course, attended with large expense, and I suppose, as I am informed-for I know nothing of these matters myself,—it involves keeping three years' stock on hand in order to be ready for any demands that may take place. If you take that into consideration, and put the duties side by side, I think you will find that there is very little advantage given to the article manufactured in Canada. It is not proposed to change the duty upon that article. Taken altogether, the present solution of this question which I propose to the Committee is one which is agreeable all around, and is one which, at the same time, has the merit—if it be a merit—of bringing a considerable addition to the revenue from that source. When we proposed to charge the duty on the bottles, whether they contained the amount specified or not, with the effect of charging the duty upon three gallons of liquor when only two gallons were contained, the importers made very strong representations against that proposal, and their representations appeared to the Government to be so just that we have conceded that point, and the present proposal is entirely satisfactory to the trade. With reference to the question of proof, there was a very strong case made out against our charging upon proof. Various arguments were brought against that proposition, against our charging for what was over proof and not allowing for what was under proof, and I understand that various liquors, in order to be at their best; must be somewhat under proof. The Minister of Customs and myself, after considering the matter and the strong representations made, decided to allow the limit to go down 15 per cent. below proof. It is almost impossible to grade all the way down, and there must be a certain amount of arbitrariness about any regula-tion of this kind. Even to grade down to 30 or 40 per cent. would be an interminable bother, so we thought that 15 per cent. below proof was a fair compromise, and the other matters contained in the regulations were not objected to by the trade.

Mr. MITCHELL. You still charge the over proof?

Mr. FOSTER, Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not express any opinion as to the present mode of levying the excise duties, but I certainly did not expect to find the Minister of Finance appearing in the guise of a full-blown protectionist of the liquor manufacture in this country. Now, that is the rôle in which he appears at present. It may be for good financial reasons, but still it is a curious rôle to find him filling. As I understand, this two years' retention of whiskey in bond, of which he speaks as if it were an injury to the distillers, has really been, to all intents and purposes, an enormous protection to the existing distillers. By means of that rule you have practically given a monopoly, and entrenched a monopoly, to four or five great houses who alone manufacture whiskey in Canada, and you also give them a reduction of 10 per cent., I think——

Mr. FOSTER. 5 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. More than that, I think. There is a very considerable reduction given for the ageing, and everybody knows that whiskey increases in value by being kept, and I think it is also improved in quality.

Mr. MITCHELL. It diminishes in quantity.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; but probably the quality is better. Now, I do not think the distillers at present in Canada are at all entitled to be exempted from the increased excise by reason of whiskey being kept in bond for two years, as at present; therefore, to my judgment, that argument fails. I do not think it is at all an industry that deserves special protection at our hands. While we reduce, as far as we can, the taxes on necessaries of life, I think it is our bounden duty to get all that we can out of the whiskey duties; and I put it to the hon, gentleman, whether he himself will not appear in a very curious light before the country when he is shown by this tariff to have increased the duty on a great many necessaries of life-on pork, on flour, on fruit and a variety of other things—but he leaves the duty on whiskey untouched? I wonder how histemperance supporters on the other side can reconcile themselves to supporting increases in the tariff, all of which might be avoided by increasing the duty on manufactured whiskey in this country. I cannot say that the argument the hon, gentleman has addressed to the Committee seems to me convincing, but I do say that it is an extraordinary policy to abstain from increasing the duty on whiskey manufactured in this country, and at the same time go on increasing the duty on articles of prime necessity.

Mr. LAURIER. If I am correctly informed— I speak under correction -- the protection now given to the Canadian manufacturer of whiskey is 75 cents a gallon, against imported whiskey, and it would appear, from what the hon. gentleman has stated, that this infant industry of whiskey manufacture requires still more protection, that the Canadian manufacturer, being already hedged in on all sides, and having to keep his merchandise in a warehouse two years, still requires more protection than he now receives; and this, I understand, is the cause of the increased duty which is now suggested to the House. The proposition cannot have been made with a view of increasing the revenue, because the Finance Minister has already a surplus, and he expects a surplus next year. Therefore, if the reason is not for the purpose of increasing the revenue, then it must be for the purpose of giving more protection to this infant industry.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a pretty sturdy industry.

Mr. LAURIER. I call these protected industries infant industries, because they always require protection, and the more protection you give them the more protection they want. This particular industry is as old, almost, as the colony itself. I am informed that the Canadian manufacturer is also protected in another way, or rather the importer is hampered in another way. A letter has been placed in my hand by a firm in New York, who wanted to import some 5,000 gallons of spirit for the manufacture of perfumes in Montreal, but they are prevented from doing so by an order of the Customs Department, requiring that no importation should take place except in packages of 100 gallons. Is that the law?

Mr. BOWELL. That is the law.

Mr. LAURIER. May I enquire what is the reason?

Mr. BOWELL. The reason that clause was placed upon the Statute-book was to prevent the smuggling of goods in small packages across the line. I may inform the hon. gentleman that this law was on the Statute-book long before I had anything to do with Customs matters, and has never been changed. When the application to which the hon. gentleman refers was made by the firm of Lyman & Kemp, of New York, the only answer I could give, was, that the provision of the law prevented the importation of liquor otherwise than as described by the hon. gentleman, that is, in hogsheads of 100 gallons. Some years ago I made enquiry in the Department as to the reason why this restriction was made, and why that clause was introduced in the Act which was consolidated by the Government of which the hon. gentleman was a member, and I found the reason to be that which I have just stated to the House, that if you allowed whiskey to come over in small kegs it would be much more easily smuggled.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand at present this regulation is practically almost prohibitory, because I understand the ordinary packages of commerce contain from 45 to 50 gallons, a size which seems to me quite sufficient to prevent smuggling. I think it would be almost as difficult to smuggle a barrel of 50 gallons as to smuggle a barrel of 100 gallons.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think it is a pity the hon. Finance Minister lost his memorandum with regard to the importation of liquors, otherwise I think he would have been able to give us statements that would correspond more nearly with the returns which are in the hands of the House. If the hon. Finance Minister will refer to the Trade and Navigation Returns, he will find that last year we imported 484,000 gallons of gin, 99,570 gallons of rum, and 154,700 gallons of whiskey, making in all 738,270 gallons.

Mr. BOWELL. And 196,416 gallons of brandy. Mr. JONES (Halifax). Brandy is not affected. Mr. BOWELL. Oh, yes, it is materially affected.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is not affected for the purpose of my argument, because I am taking only these three items of gin, rum and whiskey. The hon. Minister of Finance said that the increase under this proposition would only show a gain to the revenue of $120,000. Now take the 25 cents alone on the 738,000 gallons of these three liquors, and you will have $184,000 of itself; besides whatever may be the effect of the change in the mode of levying the duty as between the proof gallon and the 15 per cent. under proof. Now, on certain articles affected by this resolution, there will not be much change, but on other articles, of course, it will count very largely in favor of the revenue. On rum, for instance, which is 40 per cent. over proof, the old tariff was $1.75 on the proof gallon; now I understand that the duty to be levied is $2 on 15 per cent. under proof; consequently, all that is gained between the 15 under proof and the proof of the old tariff, would be so much gain to the revenue from the present system. And that, according to my calculation, may be estimated at very nearly 20 cents a gallon more. If that is the case, it will give about 40 or 50 cents on the whole 738,000 gallons, making over $400,000 which will accrue to the revenue by this change in the system of levying the duties. The hon. gentleman, I think, will see at once that the 25 cents will give $184,000, and the 15 per cent. between the proof and 15 under proof will also form a very large item of itself, and I think the hon. gentleman by this change will obtain over $400,000 increase of revenue. If the hon, gentleman can show how in this House, and who sat on that side of the Mr. Bowell.

it will be otherwise, I shall be very glad to listen to him; but if the hon, gentleman will apply the specific advance of 25 cents and take the difference between the proof gallon and 15 per cent. under proof, he will see it will give quite the amount I have mentioned. It is a matter of sufficient importance to be more thoroughly explained than it has yet been explained to the Committee. This is a question that can only be worked out by taking the figures for proof and under proof and arriving at the result in that way. The specific advance is clear enough. Whatever may be the imports there is 25 per cent. on the quantity, and that will give about $180,000. The question as to the liquor below proof is not so certain, I admit, because there is an element of uncertainty with respect to those liquors; but the average of them being established, the 15 per cent. under proof will give, in my judgment, 20 cents more. With respect to the other point raised by the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) I think that is deserving of attention, particularly at a time like this when we are told the Government are bringing forward these increases in the tariff, as has been stated again and again, for the purpose of protecting manufacturing industries. This is a part of the system, and it is well to understand that the Minister of Finance, as the apostle of a great cause, is bringing forward this change to further protect the manufactures in this country.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, oh.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon gentleman may laugh, but that is the object of it. He may attempt to disguise it as he pleases. He is placing an increased duty on the foreign article, and is allowing the domestic article to remain at the old duty. There can be no doubt, the evident object is to keep out the foreign article and throw all the trade into the hands of the favorite whiskey manufacturers, who now supply and control the markets of the Dominion. That is the most obvious effect it will have, whatever may be the object in view. It is, however, only carrying out the policy which the Minister of Finance and his colleagues have announced frequently, in reply to enquiries made by hon. members on this side of the House, that their whole object and purpose was to carry out a little further the principle of protection, the National Policy, to domestic manufactures. They have applied it to almost everything, and in order to be consistent—I do not mean that they are inconsistent in carrying out the principles-they are applying it to the manufacture of whiskey. The country will understand that under the present Finance Minister the favored class, the whiskey manufacturers in this country, are placed in a more favored position than they have occupied heretofore. It is well the country should realise this, and understand it thoroughly. Going back to the difference of duty: if the Minister of Finance will refer to the Trade and Navigation Returns, he will find the quantity I have given is accurate, and by the change in the tariff he proposes, he is going to get at least $400,000 more out of the taxpayers of the country to add to what, he says, is already an overflowing revenue.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think I may congratulate the hon. gentlemen who favor prohibition House during the last two or three years, on the altered sentiment they seem to entertain at the present time, especially the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) and the hon. member for Queen's, N.S. (Mr. Freeman). It is rather a remarkable circumstance that these hon. gentlemen should favor a high tax on breadstuffs and on the necessaries of life, and they should also favor a tariff which encourages this infant industry, the manufacturing of spirits in Canada. I am quite sure the constituents of those hon. gentlemen will appreciate the earnestness with which they have hitherto supported the cause of prohibition. Those hon, gentlemen were loud in their declarations in favor of prohibiting the use of ardent spirits in this country. They recognise with as much clearness and with as much force as did the hon. gentleman who is now Finance Minister, the importance of carrying into effect the principle of prohibition. But I should like to ask those hon. gentlemen what new light they have had, for we on this side of the House have had no new light.

Mr. FOSTER. You never get any there.

 $\mbox{Mr. MILLS}$ (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman says we will never get it. No. We do not expect to get our spirits up by pouring spirits down. I do not know whether the hon, gentleman expects to do so or not. A marked change has, however, taken place in the sentiments of the hon. Minister The tariff he now proposes is hardly in the line he advocated from the platform and from his place in this House a few years ago. It is a new departure on the part of the hon. gentlemen opposite, that they have thought necessary to adopt a policy to encourage the manufacture of spirits in Canada. I had supposed those hon. gentlemen would rather have been disposed to discourage its manufacture everywhere, as far as it could possibly be done; but I was mistaken. Other hon, gentlemen are mistaken who formed an opinion of that sort, for we see hon, gentlemen opposite are now prepared to tax breadstuffs, meat, the ordinary necessaries of life, and yet encourage the production of old rye and John Barleycorn in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER, I do not suppose the hon. gentleman would expect that I should take seriously this small contribution to the debate which he has just got off for the benefit of the country, if not for the benefit of the House. I do not intend to impose upon the Committee any serious reply thereto. I am quite willing to take the consequences of anything that has been done in the matter. When I have, on the one hand, the knowledge that the country has its breadstuffs and the necessaries of life very slightly taxed, and, on the other hand, the knowledge that there is no article in Canada that bears a higher tax than intoxicating liquors, and when, with respect to the items under discussion to-day, I have the very weighty authority of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), that I have placed $400,000 extra taxes upon alcoholic liquor in this country, I do not think the argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills), which was certainly not a serious argument, will weigh very much against such facts and statements.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No portion of that tax falls on what is produced in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. I think myself that the matter of temperance or intemperance is very closely connected with the consumption of alcoholic liquor, but I am not aware that it is so closely connected with the manufacture.

Mr. FREEMAN. I think, Sir, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills, Bothwell) who has referred to the supporters of prohibition on this side of the House, has a greater desire to attack us than he has to promote the principle of total abstinence. Pretty much everything he says on this subject is directed on that line, and I can assure him that the total abstainers, of my own Province at least, give him very little credit for his presumed support of temperance principles. He refers to the views that our constituents take of our conduct here. Let me assure him that our conduct is highly approved of, and especially that portion of it where we would not allow him to make political capital out of the temperance question in this House, a few sessions ago. He is very clearly seen through by all the supporters of prohibition in my own Province, and, I presume, in the other Provinces also. If he wishes to support us in this matter, let him come boldly out and bring his friends with him and support a prohibitory measure in this House, and we will go with him.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, you will not. I have tried you and you would not do it.

Mr. FREEMAN. But, while he supports the manufacturers of liquor in this country, while he supports the manufacture of that deadly poison in this country, and throw his influence wherever he can in favor of the manufacture, and sale, and use of that article, I would advise him not to attack those who are opposing that traffic, and are doing what they can to destroy the manufacture, and sale, and use of liquor.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the Committee understands that the section I laid on the Table the other night, is to be substituted?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister has, no doubt, taken into consideration that if his former views prevail, he is largely increasing the value of the vested interests of the manufacturers of this country, or he will do so, by putting this additional tax on imported liquor and leaving the liquor manufacturers in this country alone. No doubt, since this tariff has passed, every manufacturer of liquor in Canada has a more valuable franchise by a large sum of money, than he had before, and if the question that was raised by his hon. supporter just now, and if abolition should come, and compensation is to be paid, the hon. gentleman having made the manufacture of liquor very much more profitable than it was before, will, no doubt, be prepared to consider this.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not believe in compensation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a great deal said just now about syndicates coming here to buy up the distilleries and breweries in this country, and I should not wonder if the prices were put up, many hundreds of thousands of dollars, just by virtue of the increased protection which the hon. gentleman, if this measure passes as at present, will give to these manufacturers. My own opinion is, that he is making a grave mistake in departing from the practice of his predecessors, who invariably caused a rise in the excise, when they added to the duty on imported liquors. must say that I disapprove extremely-although not a fanatic prohibitionist-of encouraging in any way the manufacture of what the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Freeman) called "deadly poison, and I think the hon. Minister is committing a serious error in encouraging it as he is now doing.

Mr. BLAKE. As I understand, there is a difference of opinion between the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Freeman) upon this subject, because, while the hon, member for Queen's, as a temperance advocate, declared that he was opposed to the manufacture of what he called a deadly poison, the hon. Minister of Finance, as I understand him, declares that temperance and prohibition principles are concerned with the consumption but not with the manufacture. He is, therefore, consistent in his

Mr. FOSTER. To change the subject, I pro-be to change item 411, schedule A. The Compose to change item 411, schedule A. mittee will remember that we changed the basis of this duty from an ad valorem on stereotypes to a square inch basis. That change was instituted in items 412 and 413 of the old tariff; but item 411 was overlooked. The proposition I have to make here is to change this duty exactly on the same principle as the other items, but to add nothing at all to the protection. This proposition is simply to place on the square inch basis, instead of ad valorem, the duty on stereotypes and electrotypes of standard books of two-thirds of one cent per square inch.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman may make it the same for the present moment, but he must observe that should any improvement be made in the manufacture of these, by which the price is reduced, the specific duty would become an extremely oppressive ad ralorem duty. It is a matter of constant occurrence, that where you change an ad valorem to a specific duty, and the price becomes cheaper, the specific duty is very much greater than the present ad valorem

Mr. McMULLEN. Before proceeding to the other items in which the Finance Minister proposes to make changes, I beg to call the attention of the Committee to an item in yesterday's Empire, which I will read for their information :

"A wealthy American syndicate, with a capital of $1,000,000, has just effected a huge deal in Canada by purchasing a controlling interest in all rope and binding twine factories in the Dominion, except one in Ontario, which still holds out. The factories purchased, are the old Converse factory in Montreal, J. Brown & Co.'s, Quebec: one in Halifax, one in St. John, N.B., and three in the West. Large fortunes have already been made here in this business, and there is a high protective tariff on the product, but latterly, the increase in the factories has led to considerable competition and cuts in prices. Now, it is believed prices will advance, and perhaps some factories will be closed, as it will only pay to manufacture for Canadian requirements, which is two or three millions annually."

Now, Sir, I consider that this is a very important announcement. We are about closing our changes in the tariff. The attention of the Committee has already been drawn to the fact of the enormous drain on the resources of the farmers which exists from the duty of 25 per cent. on binding twine, and they have been asked to put it on the free list but they have refused to do so. I thought it well | land.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

to bring this item before the Committee, in order to give the Government an opportunity of making the necessary change, and not being place in a position to call their followers to support them by their votes. The hon. Finance Minister has now an opportunity of taking a note of this item, and placing on the free list binding twine and other cordage which farmers use so largely, and which is going to be ruled by a syndicate. Unless he does so, or makes a change that will release the farmers from the imposition to which they have been subjected for the last few years. I will take the opportunity, when the Committee rises, or on the third reading of the Bill, of moving a resolution on this point. Then the supporters of the Government will not have the excuse of saying that they had not a chance of urging this change on the Minister in the Committee. It is clear that this syndicate will have in its hands every factory in the Dominion, and that the price of binding twine, and other cordage used by the farmers, will not be reduced, but will be increased; and as it requires two or three million dollars worth of binding twine to supply the farmers of this country, I would urge the Minister to place them on the free list, and prevent the formation of a monopoly to control them which will otherwise be formed.

Mr. COOK. I wish to give an illustration of what the hon. gentleman has stated. Only Saturday last my manager told me that we were very fortunate in having purchased our supply of rope for the season, because he said the rope factories had evidently gone into the combination, and prices had increased enormously.

Mr. FOSTER. I find, in order to make the ginger wine item all right, I have to move to strike out of item 399 in the old tariff, the word "ginger" in the second line. I wish, also, to move that the following be added to section 7 of chapter 33, 49 Victoria :

Provided that this section shall not apply to the export of any carcass or part thereof of any deer which shall have been raised or bred by any person, company or association of persons upon his or their own land.

The section of the Act at present is:

"The export of deer, wild turkeys, quail, partridge, prairie fowl and woodcock, in the carcass or parts thereof, is hereby declared unlawful and prohibited; and any person exporting, or attempting to export any such article, shall, for each such offence, incur a penalty of $100, and the article so attempted to be exported shall be forfeited, and may, on reasonable cause of suspicion or intention to export the same, be seized by any officer of the Customs, and if such intention is proved, shall be dealt with as for breach of the Customs Act."

That provision was, of course, adopted to protect our game; but there are parties who have preserves in this country in which they keep their own game, which is as much their own as cattle in their yard would be. If they attempt to take any of these out of the country in the carcass, they are liable to all the penalties under the Act, and it is believed that this addition to the clause will not militate against the due protection of the game, and will remove a hardship which at present exists in a few cases.

Mr. BLAKE. I am afraid the practical result would be the export of a great many deer or parts of deer under the pretence of their having been bred or raised on somebody's land.

But it must be on his own Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. BLAKE. How much of the deer's breeding or raising would have to be on the person's own land? It is very vague and indefinite. heartily approve of the proposal of the hon. gentleman's predecessor, because it is very certain that an immense deal of butchering was going on, and our game preserves were being rapidly depleted. If we could limit the effect to the ostensible purposes of the exception, I would not object to the change, but I very much fear that under it there will be a revival of those abuses which led to the original provision in the law.

Mr. TISDALE. I wish to say that in some of the American States, especially in the State of Michigan, which is a game State, they prohibit the export of game, but they allow exports to take place under circumstances more liberal than those proposed by the hon. Finance Minister. A gentleman going there to shoot wild game, under certain circumstances, and the authorities being satisfied he wishes it for himself to a limited extent and not for the market, is allowed to bring it out. This is much more limited. This is a reciprocal arrangement.

Mr. BLAKE. Perfectly unobjectionable, if it is kept within the limits.

Mr. TISDALE. I would suggest, if there is any doubt, that the onus should be put upon the party, and I presume the Minister of Customs will see the proper regulations are enforced.

Mr. MULOCK. What regulations does the hon, gentleman propose to make to prevent this clause from being abused?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose, in point of fact, there is really nobody except the proprietors of what is known as the Long Point Company who possess any herd of deer of any magnitude.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not know of any other, but I know of others commencing to raise them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. rather give you the permission to export a certain number in gross and no more, than open this door in the law which might give a good deal of trouble and lead to a good deal of abuse. I suppose there are several hundred deer on that Long Point property.

Mr. TISDALE. In the Ontario game law, there s a provision that anyone belonging to an organised company may export ducks, but no others. I am heartilyinaccord with the prohibition of the export of game, but do not think it should be carried to such an extent that gentlemen from the United States who become interested, as they have the right under our law, in the protection of game, should not be allowed to take home what they shoot. Ontario game law, there is a special exception that gentlemen who belong to companies which protect game shall be allowed to take ducks home with them. It may be true that the Long Point Company is the only company which breeds deer of its own; but this provision is, all the same, a great hardship. Two gentlemen from New York, who have been members of that club for twenty years, were prevented last year from taking home two saddles of deer. One of the employes of the company, who had been discharged, telegraphed to cated the deer, and these gentlemen had to pay, besides, a penalty of $100. I applied to the Customs authorities to have that fine remitted, as being a breach of the intention of the law at all events, but they declined. The Minister of Customs said he had no authority, as he was governed by an express statute and not by an Order in Council. I contended that the law did not apply to this case: but probably the Minister of Customs was right. Probably it does apply technically, but surely not in spirit. The law was intended to prevent pot-hunting and the slaughter of wild animals for a foreign market. But if a man raises them, he ought to have the right to send them out of the country. Raising or breeding on the lands of the parties does not mean that they grow in a state of nature.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). This provision of the old Act has been very beneficial in preventing the depletion of the forests of deer in my own locality, and since the adoption of this prohibition of the export of deer, that class of game has multiplied very considerably. I think, therefore, the Minister of Customs ought to be very careful about introducing any provision which would allow the exportation of those carcasses or parts of carcasses from the country under any circumstances. If he is determined to put through this clause which has been submitted to the Committee, he ought to be very careful in guarding, in the most complete manner, the exportation of the carcasses or parts of carcasses of these animals. I would like to enquire of the Minister of Customs whether the Department has fully determined whether live deer can be exported from the country under the provisions of this statute, or whether they cannot. My hon. friend will remember I brought a case under his notice once, in which a person desired to export two live deer to the United States. The ruling of the Commissioner of Customs was that under this clause prohibiting the exportation of carcasses or parts of carcasses, those live animals could not be exported, but subsequently the hon. Minister himself came to a different conclusion, in which I thought he was correct. I should like to know now whether the Department still holds that live animals constitute carcasses or do not.

Mr. BOWELL. The Department has come to the conclusion that a carcass is not a live deer, or a live deer a carcass, and, consequently, has given a decision that live deer can be exported. There is nothing under the provisions of this clause, or any other, to prevent the exportation of live deer. With reference to the difficulties which have been suggested by many gentlemen, I do not anticipate that the exportation of carcasses, or parts of carcasses, by gentlemen who hold stock in these reserves, will give any particular trouble to the Department. We can, with little trouble, ascertain who the stockholders are, and if the gentlemen who have spoken will read this amendment carefully, they will see that it is well guarded. But, in order to provide against any difficulty, and to give full power to make regulations, I would suggest that the words "under such regulations as may be adopted by the Governor in Council" be added. This will enable us to pass an Order in Council, providing that parties who desire to export these carcasses, or parts of carcasses, from the Customs officer at the bridge, and he confis- reserves in which they are stockholders, shall prove under oath that the animals were raised upon their reserve. I think that will meet the objection, and give the necessary protection. The case my hon. friend has drawn attention to is a very hard one. A gentleman from New York, who holds stock in the Long Point Company, was about taking home a saddle or two of venison, when one of the servants informed the Customs officer, who had to perform his duty. The gentleman paid the penalty, and there is no authority to refund it, as the law makes special provision that the goods shall be forfeited and a penalty of $100 imposed.

Mr. FOSTER. In regard to item 309, in the free list, wire when imported by manufacturers of toilet pins for use in the manufacture of such articles in their own factories only, I intended that to be out of the free list. It follows the general arrangement of the wire duty, that the article being now made in this country, we do not propose that the manufacturers of these pins shall import their material free.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is evident that women have no votes.

Mr. FOSTER. It was proposed to make ships' repairs dutiable at 25 per cent., but it is now proposed to drop that item (214k).

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that restore it to the free list?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose it will go under the unenumerated class, but I doubt whether there is any authority to tax these repairs.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What will be the duty?

Mr. FOSTER. If it came under the unenumerated list it would be 20 per cent.

Mr. BLAKE. I think we are entitled to know whether these repairs are to be dutiable or free, and, if they are dutiable, at what rate the duty will be charged?

Mr. FOSTER. As far as I can learn, the custom has been to collect a duty on repairs to ships. This has not taken place in regard to sea-going vessels, for the obvious reason that they may be away for years and years, and may come back to this country almost entirely new.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Would it not be better to provide that these repairs shall be free by a special section.

Mr. BLAKE. I know, as a matter of fact, because a constituent of mine was concerned in a matter of that sort, that it is the custom to collect duty on certain classes of repairs, and I presume this will apply to all classes of repairs. The result of this, I presume, would be to leave the duty at a higher rate than was intended by the proposal of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. No; at a lower rate. The proposal was 25 per cent.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think it would be desirable to leave this in a state of doubt or ambiguity.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Does the Minister propose to leave the question in this way, or is it an open question to be decided by the Government on the particular cases? There are two classes of repairs. A vessel may go to a foreign port to be repaired, or a vessel may be in distress, and may have to be repaired before she can come home.

Mr. Bowell.

Surely, under the latter circumstances, the Government would not exact a duty on the repairs necessary to bring her home? It should be distinctly understood under what circumstances this is to apply. I think it is an erroneous principle altogether, but, if the Government do not intend to levy a duty on repairs at all, they should say so, or, if they do intend to levy a duty on certain repairs, they should say what repairs they are going to levy upon. Of course, a vessel might go across to an American port for ordinary repairs, and that would be different from a vessel which requires repairs to enable her to return home.

Mr. BLAKE. The case which called my attention to this subject was one which illustrates this point. I was informed that the Customs Department did not levy a duty on repairs when a vessel was forced into a foreign port for repairs, and the repairs made were not in excess of the damage caused by stress of weather. Of course, as long as you keep up your system, if no duty is levied on repairs made under other circumstances, a master of a ship who desires to get a new sail bent, or some other repair made, can choose whether he will have it done in Oswego or in Toronto. The only question for him would be which was the cheapest market. Consequently, if the American lake port is the cheapest, the business would be done there, instead of in our own ports. Still, it would be indefensible to charge any duty on repairs which were rendered necessary by stress of weather.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In our case, when our vessels are repaired abroad, it is entirely in consequence of stress of weather, sails blown away or other damages, and these repairs should not be This is very important to our coasting dutiable. trade. There are a number of small vessels that meet with disaster and have to refit in New York or Boston, and certainly no duty should be charged on these repairs.

Mr. BOWELL. The example given by the honmember for West Durham (Mr. Blake), has been the practice ever since I have had anything to do with the Department, and upon enquiry from the Commissioner he tells me it has been the practice ever since Confederation. In no case have vessels been charged a duty upon repairs which were necessary to enable them to complete their voyage or to return home, nor have they been charged a duty upon sails which have been purchased in a foreign country to replace those lost while upon a But if they leave a port in this country and go, say from Kingston to Oswego, for the purpose of repairing a vessel and to purchase a new sail, or ropes, or an anchor, or any other article which is dutiable, then, upon their return, duties have been levied upon the articles so pur-The intention, in defining the rate of duty, at first, was to prevent the difficulties which have arisen as to the rate of duty which should be imposed upon the different articles which are purchased. For instance, a repair to an engine would pay a higher duty than a repair to a hull, because the one under the law is 10 per cent. while the other might be 30 per cent. At first it was thought better to make a uniform rate of duty of 25 per cent., but upon consideration it has been deemed advisable to drop the item altogether and leave the Department to judge as to the rate of duty to be imposed upon repairs to vessels according to the circumstances in which the repairs had taken place. The principle has never been applied to ocean going vessels; it is only applied to those upon inland waters, where they leave a Canadian port and cross to an American port and have work done to the vessel and purchase the different articles that might be required to complete the equipment, in such cases the principle is applied in order that the repairs may be confined to our own shipyards. In reference to repairs of foreign vessels in our own country we have been much more liberal than our neighbors in that respect. If a vessel lost her sail, or received damage of any kind while in a canal, or upon the high seas, or while on the inland waters, and she ran into a maritime port, we allowed the owner to send to the United States and bring into the country free of duty any article that might be required in order to repair the vessel, and put upon her a new sail, or a hawser, or an anchor, or anything of that kind. The Americans, however, unless they have lately changed their policy, have not followed that course, because my attention was called to a case a short time ago in which a Canadian vessel lost her mainsail in a storm in Lake Michigan. She made a port on that lake, and telegraphed to her owners at Port Dalhousie for a mainsail; the mainsail was forwarded vid Detroit, and upon arriving at the border the owner had to pay some $75 upon that sail as duty, before it could be forwarded to the port where the vessel had sought shelter and put upon the vessel to enable her to complete her voyage, her destination being Kingston. Now, we never have exacted from the United States shipowners any duty under those circum-

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Might not those articles be bonded?

Mr. BOWELL. No; they would not allow it to be forwarded in bond. That case I brought under the notice of the authorities in Washington, and although it is over twelve months ago, up to this time we have never received any answer. I may add that while I was drafting that dispatch to the Secretary of the Treasury, in Washington, an application of a somewhat similar character was made to the Department for a remission of duties which had been paid upon some articles that were Yarmouth, if I recollect the port aright. I at once attached a copy of that application to the dispatch as an evidence of the practice in this country, and asked whether some reciprocal arrangements of that character could not be made, but the Government has never received any answer to that dispatch. I can inform the House that since that time I have carried out the principle of reciprocity, and that when articles are imported, even for the repair of ships, they have had, since that time, to pay the duty. While this Government is quite prepared to extend and continue the privilege which we conceded to American recent American vessels in the past, we think it is only fair and right that the same privileges should be conceded to Canadian vessel owners; and as soon as an intimation is given that that practice will be extended to us, we will revert to the old practice of what is termed the constructive bonding of goods that are required for the completion of and repairs to foreign vessels. The result of the dropping of this resolution will leave us precisely in the position in which we were before it was introduced. It is my own opinion from the reading of the law, that the repairs that have been made to a vessel taken out of the country, as indicated by the hon. member for West Durham, would be dutiable. If, however, the Minister of Justice considers that I am wrong in that interpretation, then we shall not enforce it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the Government acted quite right in the course they have adopted in reference to this case to which the hon. member has referred. There is a great difference between charging duty on repairs to a vessel that has been in a foreign port, and charging duty on the articles which are required to repair a vessel in our own port. I think it is not at all unreasonable that if the materials, unless such materials can be produced in this country—there might be some sticks, or spars, or something of that kind which cannot be produced in this country—but I think that if the materials required to repair a foreign vessel in our own country can be procured in our own country, the duty should not be remitted on them when going into a foreign port. But, of course, that is different from applying the duty to repairs of a temporary character which have been made in a foreign port. I suppose the Minister has referred more to the lake ports than maritime ports.

Mr. BOWELL. It has never been enforced in the maritime ports.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is a new idea to me, and I was not aware of it until the hon. gentleman brought it up. But now that the subject has been raised, I thought it would be better to understand the ground upon which the Government will act in the future.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). A gentleman from Queen's, N. B., told me in St. John, that where repairs or sails were thrown away in case of disaster to a ship, no duty is charged.

Mr. BOWELL. In such cases no duty is charged even on the lake ports, and never in the maritime ports.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to move:

That it is expedient further to amend the Act 49 Victoria, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, entitled: "An Act respecting the Duties of Customs," by striking out from item 4 these words: "Skelp iron, sheared or rolled in grooves;" and to add a new item: "Skelp iron, sheared and rolled in grooves not wider than eight inches nor thinner than twenty gauge, until such time as it is manufactured in Canada, to bear a duty of 30 per cent."

The duty at the present time is $13 per ton, which is, at the present rate, about 34 or 35 per cent. It is not made in Canada. I propose that the duty shall be lowered to 30 per cent., until it is manufactured in Canada.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection to any lowering of duty on iron; but what is the reason?

Mr. FOSTER. This material is used in the manufacture of iron pipe. The Committee will remember I proposed to increase the duty upon that pipe; but after having made that proposal, I found it would interfere with so many other interests that I asked the Committee to allow me to go back to the old duty upon it; and instead of increasing the duty, I now propose to lower the duty about 4 per cent. on the raw material, skelp iron, which is not made in this country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The duty on the pipe is about as objectionable as any duty can be. This pipe is very largely used for the supplying of our towns and villages with waterworks and gasworks and similar conveniences, and this is a duty which the hon. gentleman ought to abolish altogether. However, I shall not object to the lowering of duty on iron, but I object altogether to this duty on the pipe.

Mr. BLAKE. Will this lowering of the duty reduce the price of the finished article?

Mr. FOSTER. The proposition is to strike out the articles which appear under item 217 on the old tariff, which bore a duty of $13 per ton, or equivalent to 34 or 35 per cent., and to insert a new item placing the duty at 30 per cent., this being the raw material for the manufacture of iron pipe, on which I proposed to increase the duty, but from which position I afterwards receded.

Mr. BLAKE. I beg to enquire whether it is the anticipation of the Finance Minister that this change will affect the price of the finished article, the pipe?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it will much affect the price of the pipe, but it will enable it to be manufactured in larger quantities.

Mr. BLAKE. It will give a larger 'market to the manufacturers, of course.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Two years ago the city of Charlottetown entered into a contract with a Glasgow firm, to buy from them the necessary pipe to lay waterworks; and under the duties imposed by Sir Charles Tupper, the city was compelled to pay $14,000 increased duty. Although the contract was made before the tariff was passed, the Government did not make any remission.

Mr. BOWELL. Is the hon gentleman certain that remission was not made?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Certainly. The commissioners for the construction of the waterworks in Charlottetown bitterly complained in their last report that although they had made application, no remission of duties had been made. I hope the hon. Minister of Customs is in a position to say that this should have been done, because I think he would be doing a simple act of justice in making that remission. The contract was made before the increased duties were imposed, and the commissioner represented those facts; but the commissioners in their report next year stated that they were unable to succeed in getting a remission made. It strikes the hon. Minister evidently that they should have succeeded, and he is evidently under the impression that they did succeed, but there is time yet for this remission to be made. I ask the hon. gentleman only to do that which his good judgment will prompt him to do, and what is evidently the course that should be adopted.

Mr. BOWELL. I am under the impression the hon. gentleman is in error. There was a special provision in the Tariffe Act of 1887, providing that pipe and all iron which had been purchased under contract prior to the introduction of the tariff, should be admitted at the old rate of duty; and in all cases that came under my notice Montreal.

the permission was granted, or if the increased duty had been paid, a remission of duty was made. I know in one case, by Order in Council, it was extended, in the case of British Columbia, to two or three months afterwards. for the reason that a vessel containing a cargo of pipe was sunk off the Horn, and it was impossible to raise it and get the pipe into the country, and so the privilege was extended a sufficient time to enable the people of British Columbia to import another cargo of pipe. If it has not been applied to the town of Charlottetown it ought to have been, and the people of that city certainly have a good claim; I will make enquiry to-morrow, when I go to my office, to see whether the statements made by him are correct. Perhaps an application was not made because the case was such as indicated by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), for in all cases where applications were made and the facts were sustained, permission was granted to enter at the old rate of duty, or a remission of duties made in case the increased duties had been paid.

Mr. LAURIER. Is it the intention to make a similar provision on this occasion?

Mr. BOWELL. No; it is not the intention so far, whatever the Government may decide hereafter. I need scarcely say that the concession made in 1887, when the duties on iron were increased, was an unusual one, and I am not aware that such course was ever followed before, except in the case of tea some years ago, when tea was placed on the free list.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The tea case was a vastly greater concession than the concession made in 1887, because in that case a sum of money was paid out of the public treasury to those who had previously obtained, presumably, the benefit of the increased duty on tea.

Mr. BOWELL. It is a very dangerous principle to adopt; and, from what has come under my observation, I am satisfied that the statement made by the hon gentleman is correct, and there were numerous frauds perpetrated under that concession, as I am confident there were under the concession given in regard to iron.

Mr. WATSON. By admitting strips of iron, up to eight inches in width, at a reduced rate of duty, does the Finance Minister expect that tubes will be manufactured here of two and a quarter inches diameter?

Mr. FOSTER. I think they will.

Mr. WATSON. All this is being done for one manufacturer in Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. There are two manufactories there.

Mr. WATSON. Would it not be better to assess the large number of manufacturers who are using tubing, and give it to them at a reduced rate, rather than give these two manufacturers in Montreal the raw material at a low rate. We are going to lose 4 or 5 per cent. on the raw material for the purpose of bolstering up some manufacturers in Montreal who have already sufficient protection. There are more men employed in using pipe for-other work than in manufacturing pipe in Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. The Committee will remember that the other evening the question was raised about a possible arrangement between our country, and Newfoundland and the United States, regarding duties on fish and the products of the fisheries; and the items in the old Customs law with respect to fish were subjected to the provisions of section 3, of chapter 33, 49 Vic. These two items respecting fish duties were repealed in order to add the words "or salted," and the question arose whether or not such repeal and the substitution of other items slightly changed, although the duty was not changed in the new, would not take these from under the provisions of section 3. We propose to add to items 215 and 216, the clause in each: "subject to the provisions of section 3, 49 Victoria, chapter 33," so as to prevent any doubt on that matter. I wish to make another change in item 22, so as to make it read: "buttons of hoof, rubber, vulcanite or composition, 5 cents per gross and 20 per cent. ad valorem," instead of 10 cents per gross and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There is an item which we passed the other day, and on which I would like to have a little more definite information from the Minister. There seems to be some misapprehension with regard to the two classes of pork, namely, the mess pork and the clear cut pork. The Minister said, in replying to the enquiry I made, that the Inspection Act defined the mess pork, and that it took in what is generally known as heavy mess pork, and clear cut pork as well. Is it to be understood from that, that the clear cut pork will be admitted at the same rate of duty as the mess pork?

Mr. FOSTER. Clear cut pork, made from heavy hogs over 200 pounds in weight, will be admitted at $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents, just the same as the mess pork.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Under what provision of the tariff does the hon, gentleman come to that conclusion?

Mr. FOSTER. On the item of the tariff which gives a definition of what constitutes mess pork.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The mess pork as defined by the General Inspection Act does not include clear pork; and if the hon. gentleman does include clear pork, certainly a large number of members of this House have been deceived in the passing of this tariff.

Mr. BOWELL. The law says, if I recollect, that mess pork shall be the rib pieces only.

Mr. GILLMOR. It is precisely the same portion of the hog they make mess pork of, with the ribs taken out.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Then the fact of the matter is, that if the hon. gentleman admits clear pork under the description of mess pork, at $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents, the protection which he supposes he gives to the farmers is gone, because the lumber camps will all be supplied with the clear pork, introduced at $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents, and the mess pork will not be purchased by them. It was supposed that the clear pork came under the \$6 a barrel or 3 cents per pound duty, and that it would offer a living protection to the farmers who produce the mess pork, or, in other words, the lumbermen would be obliged to buy the mess pork from the farmers. Now, the hon. gentleman is going to admit the clear pork a different way.

under the $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents duty, and the result will be that there will be no protection for the farmers. The thing is a delusion.

Mr. GILLMOR. The lumbermen can buy my hon. friend's pork, and the farmers will get a protection on it of $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound, that is \$3 a barrel. The mess pork comes from the same part of the hog as the clear pork.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It was not to ascertain who would get the protection that I raised this question, but simply that the House might clearly understand what class of pork is to be admitted at the low rate of duty. I hope the hon. Minister will make it clear.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it will be found to be clear enough.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). If it is understood by those who administer the law, I suppose it is all right, but at present it is not clear enough.

Mr. WELSH. I understood that the duty on clear pork would be 3 cents a pound; but I do not understand this new explanation the Minister has given. I want to know what class of pork will pay 3 cents a pound, and what class 1½ cents?

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I should like to enquire from the hon. Minister of Customs whether any decision has been arrived at regarding the introduction of what is technically known as back pork, that is, pork taken from the back of the animal, in the case of hogs of 200 pounds or over. It has been contended by some people that the pork known as back pork, being part of what forms mess pork, ought to be admitted at the same rate as mess pork. I should like to know whether the Department have come to a decision on that point, and if so, what that decision is?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have the Inspection Act before me now, and the mess pork is defined thus: "shall consist of the rib pieces only." The hon. gentleman says that it may be the rib pieces only, or it may be the same with the ribs taken out. That was not the meaning which the Committee or the country understood. It was understood that these duties were to be for the purpose of protection to home-grown pork; but you class clear pork used by the lumbermen under the title of mess pork, which may be imported under a duty of $\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound. Where is the protection to the farmer?

Mr. EDWARDS. He does not want any.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He does want it. If any class of the community wants protection, it is that class. As I pointed out the other day, among the whole four or five hundred articles mentioned in this tariff, the farmers do not get protection on any, while they are taxed for everything they use; and here is an article on which it was supposed they were going to get a quid pro quo, but it appears that, at the dictation of the lumbermen, clear pork will be admitted at the low rate of duty, and the farmers will get no benefit.

Mr. CHARLTON. I should like to know what is the difference whether pork cut from a certain part of the animal is in small pieces or in large pieces? It is the same pork, only it is handled in a different way.

Mr. WELSH. I always understood that mess pork and prime mess was from animals of 200 pounds and under, and that clear pork was fat pork from animals above 200 pounds, which is the pork the lumbermen use. This was the only item in this tariff which would benefit the farmers of Prince Edward Island, but I find that the interests of the lumbermen and other interests are going to swamp them, as they have always done in ninetynine cases out of every hundred. I would advise the hon. Finance Minister to stick to his first programme.

Mr. BÉCHARD. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down speaks for the farmers of Prince Edward Island, and it is equally well that some one should speak for the farmers of Quebec. This article of pork is the only article on which the farmers of Quebec can get any protection. The Province of Quebec is loaded with taxation. It is shown, by the official report placed in the hands of the members, that the Province of Quebec bears the largest part of the taxation on flour; of the whole importation of flour for consumption, Quebec consumes about four-fifths, yet there is no article produced by the farmers of Quebec on which they receive protection. The duty of 3 cents a pound on pork, as proposed by the hon. Finance Minister, would have stimulated the production of that article by the farmers of Quebec; but the duty of $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound on what is called mess pork, is no encouragement to them. What is the reason for this difference? I can understand why: it is to follow the general practice of this Government, namely, to protect the manufacturers only. The hon. Finance Minister has in view in this case the interest only of the wealthy lumbermen, who realise large fortunes and become millionaires in a few years at the expense of the public domain. I think they are a class who, amongst all others, should pay taxes in this country. You should not, in this instance, sacrifice the interests of the farmers for the interests of that class of manufacturers.

Mr. IVES. I have not taken any active part in the discussion of this question, but I have had an opportunity of judging how the tariff, as it is understood in the country, has been received by the people. I had extensive opportunities of feeling the pulse of my section of the country with regard to the pork duties; and no feature of the protective tariff which has been introduced since 1879 has been received with greater popularity or favor among the farmers of the Eastern Townships, and the southern part of the Province of Quebec, than the proposed duty on pork. The farmers of that section of the country are largely engaged in dairying enterprises; they raise pork to a considerable extent in connection with the manufacture of cheese, and they have congratulated themselves that a protection of 3 cents a pound would enable them to furnish the lumbermen of that section with the clear pork which they require to use. Beef is used now as well as pork. Clear pork we must have, and we made up our minds that we must pay the increased duty on pork, unpleasant as it is, for the sake of the farmers. I am very much surprised that a different construction has been put upon this item, and that under the tariff, as now explained by the Minister of Finance, we shall not import any but what will come under the 11 cents duty.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. COOK. The hon. gentleman contradicts himself. He states he must have clear pork for his shanty under any circumstances. it does not come into competition with the farmers' pork, and has not the effect of increasing its value. I quite agree with the hon, gentleman that the lumbermen must use the heavy pork which is grown in the United States. They must use Chicago pork, no matter what it costs, as the Canadian pork is too small and too thin. It does not pay our Ontario farmers to keep their pigs over the year, and they find it more profitable to slaughter their pigs when young, as they get a better price for it in the cities, towns and villages: but it does not answer the lumbermen, who must have the heavy and fat pork which is not grown here. Therefore, any duty upon mess pork, or what is called clear pork, is just so much money taken out of the pockets of the lumbermen without any compensating advantage to the farmer. Between clear pork and mess pork there is this difference: clear pork is pork cut into small blocks of four pounds without any lean whatever. It is cut from the heavy part of the animal and is very fat pork. That has to be used by the is very fat pork. lumbermen, principally in the Lower Provinces, and the fishermen, who use it in connection with the cooking of beans. The statement of the hon. gentleman is correct that a large amount of beef is consumed in the shanties. A lumberman from New Brunswick told me that, under any circumstance, if he had to pay $6 or even $10 a barrel duties for Chicago packed beef, he must have it. He could not get packed beef here to answer his purpose. That is my experience, and it is that of every lumberman. We must have salt beef, and we have to get what they call the salt mess beef of Chicago, as the men of the shanties will not eat anything else. We use large quantities of fresh beef which we buy from the farmers, but every dollar that is paid for mess pork, which is consumed by the shantymen, the miners and the fishermen, is so much taken out of our pockets without any compensating advantage to the farmer. This idea of stimulating production and giving protection to our farmers by increasing the duties upon heavy pork, is all a myth.

Mr. IVES. The hon, gentleman is entirely wrong. The average of Canadian hogs, picked up and taken to Montreal to the small packing establishments which they have there, will run 50 pounds over the average of the Chicago hogs. The average weight of the Chicago hog is under 200 pounds, and the average weight of the Canadian hog is over 350 pounds.

Mr. COCHRANE. I take exception to the statement of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Cook), that the farmers of Ontario cannot produce the pork required by Ontario, and I take the ground that the duty placed upon pork will stimulate the production of that commodity in Ontario to the extent of the requirements of the country. It is absurd to say that the farmers of Ontario cannot produce the pork which the country requires. It is humiliating for the farmers of Ontario to recognise the fact that we are importing over a million dollars of pork and paying duty on it every year. We can produce large hogs if we get a market for them, but, from the fact that large pork does not suit the taste of the people, there is no use producing it. I also take exception to the opinion of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who cannot see any difference between long clear pork and mess pork. Mess pork has the ribs left in, while long clear pork is the whole side of the hog with the ribs taken out, which makes a material difference. If a lumberman gets long clear pork as cheap as mess pork, he will not buy the latter. A hog does not require to be over 200 pounds in weight to make long clear pork, for that kind of pork is simply the whole side with the ribs taken out. I hope the Finance Minister will stand by his first proposition, and keep to the 3 cents duty on all pork with the exception of mess pork, and thus give the farmers of Ontario a chance to produce the pork the country

Mr. EDWARDS. I have no desire to enter into this discussion, further than simply to state that there must be some great misconception as to what is termed clear pork in this section. Several lumbermen have spoken, and they do not seem to understand what it is. What we term clear pork in this section is simply heavy mess pork with the bone taken out. What is termed clear pork in the Lower Provinces is, I understand, a different thing entirely. It is not long side or anything of the kind, but simply mess pork with the bone taken

Mr. WELSH. I do not agree with the remarks which have fallen from the hon, member for Simcoe. The hon, gentleman says they cannot grow pork over 200 pounds weight up where he lives. They must have very bad feed for their pigs. We can supply all the clear pork wanted in Canada from Prince Edward Island, and can supply pigs weighing 300 pounds each. I cannot understand how this discussion has sprung up again. I thought the question was clearly defined the other evening when we discussed this item.

Committee rose and reported progress, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It is a very important matter for the Maritime Provinces to understand exactly what kind of pork clear pork is. The hon, gentlemen who have spoken this afternoon all seem to differ as to what clear pork is. What we understand in the Maritime Provinces to be clear pork, is rather different from what was stated by the hon member for Simcoe (Mr. Cook), and the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards). It would be a very serious tax on the lumbermen and the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces, who use the clear pork and not the mess pork, unless this is defined, because otherwise I am afraid that we will be saddled with the higher tax.

Mr. SPROULE. I am surprised to find the lumbermen taking the view that the men they employ are not able to eat pork. As I understand, a great many of these men are taken from the agricultural class. They pursue their agricultural 1153 winter. In the summer they eat the pork from their farms, and I think they would be able to use the same diet in the winter. But the lumbermen speak of them as if their stomachs were different to those of other men, as if they could not digest pork, unless it were clear pork and that of the heaviest class. Perhaps, it may be that they think it would be cheaper, because the heavier pork could not be so easily digested. I know something of lumbering operations in this country for at least twenty years, and I know that the men were supplied in our part of the country with pork from the farmers. That was one of the valuable means the farmers had of selling their produce-supplying pork and oats and other necessaries to the lumbermen in the himber camps. At that time, there was no objection made to the pork which was raised by the Canadian farmer. No complaints were made then, but, of late years, because the lumbermen have found it to their advantage to bring in western pork, because it is a little cheaper than Canadian pork, there is a howl raised all over the country by the lumbermen in consequence of this proposal of the Government. If this duty does the lumbermen any injury by increasing the price of pork, it will do the farmers good by enhancing the value of pork. The hon. member for West Simcoe (Mr. Cook) and the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) have said something in regard to this question in opposition to the proposed duty, but these gentlemen are themselves interested in lumbering operations, and with them it is either money in their pocket or out of their pocket. They do not pay much attention to the interests of the great agricultural class of the community, many of whom they represent, or pretend to represent, because I think they are misrepresenting rather than representing the agricultural class. The interests of the farmers are to be set aside in favor of the interests of the lumbermen. They will sink the interests of the farmer because the lumberman can get American pork a few dollars cheaper than Canadian pork. I have never been able to understand why Canadian pork is not as useful, and will not sustain life as well, as any other pork. If a heavier class of pork is needed, Canadian farmers can raise it if you give them the market. There is one thing in which I think the Government are making a mistake, and that is in drawing a distinction between mess pork and clear pork. I fear the result of that will be that the larger portion of the pork which the lumbermen require will come in under the cheaper tariff. I think it would be better for the Government to make a duty of 3 cents a pound on meat all round, and do away with these fine distinctions. The farmers are an important class of the community, and they look to the Government to do them justice. It will be more in harmony with the wish of the agriculturists if the Government would drop these fine distinctions and put on a general duty of 3 cents a pound. The raising of pork is one of the valuable lines in which the Canadian farmers can engage, and I am sure they will look with disfavor upon any attempt to lower the rate of duty. I think the representatives of the agricultural class on both sides of the House are of the same opinion on this subject. They believe that if there is one question in which the farmers are vitally interested it is this question of avocations in the summer, and lumbering in the pork, and that the Government should put it up to a fair price, say 3 cents a pound, and so do justice to the farmers and do no injustice to the other classes of the community.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I do not understand much about the difference between mess pork and clear pork, but I do understand this: If hogs can come in at 30 per cent., and pork, except mess pork, is to be charged 3 cents a pound duty, the only result will be that Canada will be the scene of slaughtering all the hogs intended for this country Instead of their being slaughtered in the United States. Take a hog of 200 pounds live weight, at 4 cents per pound. That is about \$8. If you take that hog slaughtered, allowing 20 per cent. for shrinkage, you have a weight of 160 pounds, which, at 3 cents a pound, is \$4.80. The live animal will have to pay a duty of \$2.40 at 30 per cent., so that there is only a protection of \$2.40, or about $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound, which can be of no benefit whatever to the Canadian farmer. The only difference will be that the hogs which now come in as pork will come in as live animals and will pay 30 per cent., while the heavy pork will come in at $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents. The deduction which I have made, 20 per cent., is a little more than the usual allowance upon hogs which have to be slaughtered. I do not believe that it will ever pay the farmers of Canada to raise pigs to the weight of 220 pounds or 240 pounds, and I repeat what I said the other night, that the younger animal requires a smaller amount of feed in proportion to the older The system of feeding that we have at the present time, in putting our hogs on the market weighing 150 to 170 pounds to the animal, is the most profitable for the farmers of Ontario, and I believe for the whole Dominion; and if hogs are allowed to come in at 30 per cent. there is no protection to the farmers.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think the tariff should be altered in some way so as to make it more clear, otherwise I am satisfied there will be great confusion. My hon. friend will recollect that a memorandum was sent to him from New Brunswick, asking to have the barrels examined, for the purpose of ascertaining what description of pork they contained. People should be able to know what kind of pork they are going to buy. In our Province, the lumbermen want the best kind of pork; they want the best of everything, and they will desire to get the Chicago clear pork.

Mr. HESSON. I must confess that, like my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan), I am unable to distinguish between the different grades of pork, whether it comes in under the name of mess, or ham, or bacon. We do know, however, that something over 24,000,000 pounds of meat were brought into this country last year, which paid a duty of I cent per pound. I presume, from the discussion that has taken place in this House, that that is the class of meat which is chiefly required by the lumbermen, as I understand they require heavy fat pork, and that is a quality that can be produced by the farmers of Canada. That pork came in at I cent a pound, and 3,500,000 came in under the heading of hams and bacon, as I find in the Trade Returns, at the rate of 2 cents a pound. It is fair to presume that the laboring classes and the artisans who, perhaps, had to buy some of this latter class of American pork, were paying 2 cents a Mr. Sproule.

pound duty, whilst the lumbermen were paying l cent a pound. Now, we are going to have that matter made worse; if I understand the proposition of the Minister of Finance, the position will be made worse, for the people who have to earn their own living in towns and cities, than it has been in the past. I think the House heretofore has been somewhat misled by the interpretation of the Inspection Act, or by the arrangement of it under the present classification. We did believe that the purpose of the Government was to encourage the production of the heavier class of pork, and we are sure that the farmers of Canada can produce an abundance of that class of pork within six to nine months—all that is required for the wants of this country. I find that 24,000,000 pounds of meat came into this country during the past year, and I think that any one who is at all conversant with the capacities of this country to produce meat and to raise coarse grains, will agree that we could have produced all that meatourselves. Raising coarse grains to feed stock is certainly a more reasonable way of making money than to sell the grain and impoverish the farms; it would be much better to put it into the shape of meat, and sell the meat. I find that a pound of pork, at the lowest average, costs 6 cents to produce. The best feeders in the country give us to understand that a bushel of barley will produce 13 pounds of pork, and if you multiply that by 6 you have 78 cents for that bushel of barley. The same thing applies in a greater degree in the feeding of pease. A bushel of pease will make 15 pounds of pork. A hog can be kept on pasture at very little cost during the whole summer season, and if the pasture is short, a hog will live and thrive on ensilage the same as cattle. We know that a hog will live all summer and provide for itself, and then, if you put it up in the fall and feed it on barley, or pease, you can get 78 cents a bushel for your barley and 90 cents a bushel for your pease; besides, you will have the offal of that hog for the nourishment of the farm, instead of impoverishing the farm by exporting the grain from the country at 35 or 40 cents a bushel for the barley. It is said the farmers of this country, as a class, have been ill-provided for in the past. We understood that the Government, in this matter, had formed a policy which was to give some encouragement to the farmers of Canada. I will read you an extract from the experience of a person who has been in the pork business for some time. He is a farmer, and has been accustomed to fatten a large number of hogs and sell them in the market, and he knows what he is talking about. You see that the farmers were all under the impression that the proposition of the Government with reference to the imposition of 3 cents duty on American pork was going to be carried out in good faith. Here is what this writer says:

"Farmers can in this present year of grace make more money by raising pork than in any other line of animal or agricultural enterprise. Look at it this way: One bushel of corn will make 13 pounds of pork. That is not guesswork, it is the demonstrated fact. Pork at present is worth about 6 cents per pound. Then one bushel of corn turned into pork is worth 78 cents. We shall be told that our farmers do not raise much corn—in some parts of Ontario none at all. Well, one bushel of barley will produce 13 pounds of pork. Is it profitable to sell barley at 78 cents? But one bushel of pease will produce 15 pounds of pork. Is there money in pease at 90 cents a bushel? Let us go a bit further. Pork can be produced for less money than by feeding on barley, corn or pease.

Pigs will keep themselves in summer if allowed good pasture, and, when pasture fails, they thrive on ensilage as well as cattle, and need grain only when fattened."

If the Government are going to allow American hogs to come into this market at 20 per cent., and American pork at a duty of 1½ cents, it will be a question whether the farmers of this country will get any benefit from it or not.—

"For the next year or two, hogs will command high prices. Last year we imported for home consumption 4,000 hogs, 8,000,000 pounds of lard, and 23,000,000 pounds of bacon, hams and pork. That is equal to 20,000 hogs of average size. Farmers will be able largely to increase their sales; and those who have made a study of the matter tell us that a pound of pork can be produced for less money than is required to produce a pound of beef. It is better to sell pork at 6 cents per pound than wheat at $1 a bushel."

Now, when we could secure for our barley 78 cents a bushel, and pease 90 cents, by feeding, as is evident from this statement of a man who knows what he is talking about, the farmers are going to be very grossly deceived in this matter. They have been led to believe that they were going to make money out of hogs, and out of grain, that their farms would be the better for feeding this stock at home. It is a most unfortunate state of things that they should have been led to believe that for one moment, if the Government are going to recede from the position they took then. They may attempt to mystify us about the classification of pork. But there is one great fact staring the people of Canada in the face, and that is, that 23,000,000 pounds of meat have come into this country during the past year, and that $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound duty is not going to keep out American meat. It will still come in, and crowd our producers of pork to the wall. If 20 per cent. is not sufficient on the heavy hog, make it 30, or 40 per cent. Hogs can be raised in Canada, raised at a profit by any man who understands it, or who pays attention to the matter. I say that, notwithstanding the demands of the lumbermen-and they are the most successful and wealthy men we have in Canada to-daywe have to consider a much more important industry than that of the lumbermen, we have to consider the class of small farmers who are endeavoring to make their living out of the hardest toil in which men can engage. Now, I hope that the Minister of Finance will consider this question again and let us have a thorough understanding about it. I quite agree with the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), who deprecated any misunderstanding about the classification; perhaps very few of the officers at the different ports where pork is entered thoroughly understand the classification. Here we have gentlemen who have had some experience in this matter, and who are not agreed as to the particular classification of pork, or the particular style of the cut that should be in each particular barrel. You would have all the difficulty of opening the barrels and having them inspected, and in some cases the officers are not posted; and, under these circumstances, it would be much better to levy a duty of 3 cents per pound on all meat coming into the country, not only pork, but beef. The farmers of Ontario, and I am glad to say the same remark applies to Prince Edward Island, that beautiful island by the sea, are able to produce enough pork to supply the lumbermen with a heavy class of that article. I hope the Minister of Finance is not going to weaken on this matter; for, if he does so, he is going to make the most serious mistake committed during this Parliament. I do not pretend to say the Government can go through a Session without making some mistakes, but this would be the greatest mistake of the Parliament. I shall favor dividing the House on this question, no matter what the result may be.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No doubt the farming community will be very greatly misled if the Finance Minister insists on the views he appeared to entertain this afternoon. The hon. gentleman is aware that the McKinley Tariff is at present passing through the Congress of the United States. In Prince Edward Island we raise and export an enormous quantity of potatoes yearly, our market being largely in the United States. The increased duty proposed to be placed on potatoes entering into the United States will practically exclude us from that market entirely, and unless our farmers can utilise their potatoes by feeding them into pork they will be, to a large extent, a drag on their hands. The farming community were led to believe, when the hon. Finance Minister introduced this tariff, that such protection would be given to them on this one article as would ensure them the Canadian market. What did the hon. gentleman say in his speech? He said:

"It is proposed to introduce added protection to another series of the great farming products of the country. It is felt that in a country like ours, with its large grazing areas, equal to any in the world, with its rapidly increasing dairy and cheese industries, with its unrivalled facilities for the production of meats of various kinds, the time has come when these great industries should be protected by an adequate duty from the competition which they are at present receiving largely from the country to the south of us."

The hon. gentleman promised to put on an "adequate duty." What is his proposition? His proposition is that as regards the main classes of pork which are imported here, the duty shall be raised from 1 cent to $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents—that is all. The hon. gentleman is told by lumbermen all round the House, that the increased duty of half a cent a pound will not keep out pork from the South. But the hon. gentleman's proposition was to place the duty at such a sum as would keep it out and give our farmers the Dominion market. He went on further to say:

"Now, there is no reason in the wide world, to my mind, why Canada should not only raise all the meat necessary for the consumption of her own people, but should become one of the largest exporters of these different kinds of meat to foreign countries. It is with a view of fostering these meat-producing industries with a fairly protective duty, that the Government have come to the conclusion to protect the farmers by raising the rates on these meats in this way."

What is the hon. gentleman doing? He is placing a duty of $6 a barrel on a class of pork in which there is no competition. The hon. gentleman knows that the ordinary pork imported from the United States, so far as the shipping interests are concerned, comes into the country in bond; that the shippers in Halifax, St. John, Montreal and Quebec import all their pork in bond, and it does not matter whether there is a duty of $6 or $16 placed on foreign pork which comes into Canada in bond and duty free. What market is the farmer going to secure? So far as the lumbermen are concerned, there is to be an increase of only half a cent per pound in the duty on pork; and so the promise which the hon, gentleman made to the farmers is being broken, and the farmers are being deceived. It will not give our farmers sufficient protection to give them control of our markets; and, in view of the McKinley Tariff, by which our farmers will be practically prohibited from sending their potatoes to the United States, our farmers in Prince Edward Island will have no protection. The hon. gentleman who last addressed the House, spoke of the quantity of pork which Prince Edward Island could supply. I have no doubt whatever that we could supply the markets of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and have a large surplus besides; but, if the hon. Finance Minister persists in his decision in regard to the meat duties, as announced this afternoon, he will be keeping the promise of the ear but breaking it to the hope. The farmers will be deceived, and I protest against it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Any person acquainted with me will know that I am a protectionist out and out. I find from the Trade and Navigation Returns last year that there were imported into this country pork meats of all kinds and lard, the products of the hog, to the value of $2,300,000. Let us look at that for a moment from a practical standpoint. The lumbermen or merchants who import these products to that value have a merchantable article, and if it is sold and exported, Canada is no worse But we send off than when it was bought. $2,300,000 of our cash over to the United States to purchase those products. Suppose they are brought into the country and consumed here; the pork is consumed, but our money is out of the country. If, however, we pay the farmers of Canada this amount, although the pork is consumed here, the money is still in the country. Looking at the question in this light, from a national standpoint, it is clearly our duty to protect pork. In order that there may be no dispute about the classification of mess pork, clear cut and short cut, I would suggest that pork of all kinds when put up in barrels, salted, and beef when put up in barrels and salted, should pay a duty of 2 cents per pound or $4 per barrel; and fresh meats of all kinds, and hams and bacon, save and except pork salted and beef salted, should pay a duty of 3 cents per pound. Our farmers would then have as good protection as our manufacturers enjoy. Two cents per pound is at least equal to 35 per cent. protection on pork, taking the market value of pork the year round in the markets of the United States; for that would be paying $6 per 100, which would be a high price, as probably $5 would be a fair average value for pork in the United States. I think that would be the best solution of the difficulty, all classifications in regard to mess pork, clear pork, long cut, being wiped out.

Mr. BAIRD. I did not expect to have anything to say on this subject, but the interests of the Province from which I come require that something should be said. I am aware that it is very difficult to reconcile the various interests of this wide Dominion on a question of tariff; but if pork can be raised as largely as is represented in Ontario, surely its representatives should be satisfied with a duty of $3 a barrel, or 1½ cents per pound as sufficient protection. The lumbermen and fishermen of New Brunswick are willing to bear fair and reasonable burdens in the interests of the farmers; but when you place an excessive burden Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)

on them, a different feeling prevails. They have expected and believed that this duty would be raised as high as 1½ cents per pound, or a duty of $3 per barrel on pork. Then as regards the distinction between mess pork and clear pork, they had entertained the hope that that would be levelled down and no discrimination would be made. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) has truly said that the question of inspection will be a serious one. I understand from practical men, that the work of inspection is attended with considerable danger to the article of pork; that if it becomes necessary that every barrel should be opened to ascertain that it is clear or prime mess, the inspector will be obliged to take a quantity out of each barrel, probably to open both ends of each barrel, and afterwards it would be almost impossible to place that barrel in a water-tight condition. If, moreover, the pickle is lost, the pork is readily destroyed. I had hoped, and I still hope, that the Government will see their way clear to make no discrimination between those classes of pork used by lumbermen, because if you make one class subject to a greater duty than the other it would be simply to compel the consumer to buy mess, and the Government would reap no advantage from it. The most important point is the amount of duty you intend to levy upon pork. I say that this duty of $6 per barrel will be burdensome, and surely the wealthy people of the Province of Ontario ought to have some consideration for the people by the sea, who are not well prepared to go into the raising of pork. If pork can be raised as freely and as liberally as is stated here by practical farmers from Ontario, who, I believe, are speaking correctly, there is surely no need of a prohibitory duty on that article. We fully concede that the Dominion of Canada is able and well prepared to raise its own beef, and we care not how you raise the duty on that article. But in the interests of the lumbermen and the fishermen, I earnestly urge that you will give them a fair and reasonable consideration, and that when you come to a duty of $3 a barrel on pork you will stop there.

Mr. HESSON. I may say, in reply to the last gentleman, that whilst the farmers of Ontario are quite prepared to compete with fair and reasonable competition in their own country, it is utterly impossible to compete with the western producers of pork, who get their corn at 10 cents a bushel. The hon, gentleman must know that, although a farmer may produce barley or pease, or even cornand we produced about 17,000,000 bushels of corn in the ear in Ontario last year—yet they cannot produce it at 10 cents a bushel. No man of common sense can expect that a Canadian farmer feeding his stock on this most important food, can hold his own against the western farmer, unless he has protection. The American pork is not equal to the Canadian, every one knows that; and any one who has experience of Canadian pork will always prefer it to the western American. But it is impossible for our farmers to raise hogs to compete with the Americans; they have to pay duty for corn, and they cannot produce it as cheaply as in the Western States. What we want is protection against the American pork, and beef as well, without destroying the chances and hopes of our farmers through unfair competition. Gentlemen on the opposite side of the House have repeatedly stated that the farmers of Canada have not been sufficiently protected, and now, when there is an opportunity of protecting the farmers, I hope they will show their honesty of purpose and advocate it.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I do not know that I would have troubled the House with any further remarks on this question, were it not for some observations which fell from my hon. friend from Iberville (Mr. Béchard), in which he indicated that there was a conflict of interest between the farmer and the lumberman. I understood my how. friend to say-and I thought it a very singular theory to be announced by a member of the great Liberal party—that it was perfectly legitimate to put the lumbermen under contribution; I might say, to rob the lumbermen for the purpose of benefiting the farmers. If there is one principle, Sir, which hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have advocated ever since I have had the honor of a seat in Parliament, it is that one class should not be burdened for the benefit of the other; and if there is one principle they have deprecated, it is that the protective policy, as they contended, has had the effect of robbing one portion of the community for the purpose of enriching another portion of the community. It was, therefore, with a great deal of pain that I listened to the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. Béchard), and more particularly, because, from my own experience, I have come to the conclusion that there is no conflict of interest between the lumberman and the farmer. In my own locality, at all events, the lumberman has been the pioneer who has opened up the country for settlement. The lumbermen have opened up portions of the country which have subsequently been filled with the most prosperous farmers in that locality. Not only that, Sir, but the lumbermen have given to the farmers, in the newer portions of the country, a home market at higher prices than they could possibly obtain under any other circumstances, and, therefore, I hold that it does not lie in the mouth of my hon. friend to say, that there is any conflict of interest between the lumberman and the farmer. Sir, I am not here to dictate to the Government what course they should adopt with regard to the amount of duty they should impose upon this particular article now under discussion. The hon, the Minister of Finance, and the hon. the Minister of Customs, after a long deliberation, have come to the conclusion that they will submit to this Parliament a proposition to impose on the heavier grades of pork a duty of 1½ cents per pound. It seems to me that what we have to ask these hon, gentlemen to do, under the circumstances, is to declare to this House, and in an unmistakable manner to the country, what classes of pork they propose to allow to be introduced into Canada under that rate of duty. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs have declared it to be their intention to admit a certain class of pork, as defined by the General Inspection Act, at a rate of duty of 1½ cents per pound. The General Inspection Act declares that mess pork is to be the rib pieces taken from hogs weighing not less than 200 pounds. I do not quite understand the defi-nition of "rib pieces of hogs" to be exactly what my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) understands it to be. If I understood that hon. gentleman aright, Sir, he defined "rib pieces" to be those pieces that contained the rib. Well, if the ribs are taken out of these pieces, it seems to me that they are just as much mess pork after the ribs are taken out, as they were when the ribs remained in the meat itself.

An hon, MEMBER, No.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). My hon. friend says "no," but I would like to understand where the difference is. If you take a certain portion of an animal, and call it mess pork with the bones in it, surely it is none the less mess pork after you take the bones out of it. Fish would not be any the less fish, if you take the bones out of it, than if the bones remained in the fish itself. So I say, that although I am not going to dictate to the Minister of Finance or to the Minister of Customs under what definition they shall bring in this particular class of pork that is proposed to be introduced at a lower rate of duty than the other class of pork, yet it is their bounden duty to intimate to the House and the country what class of pork they are going to admit at $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound. I quite agree with the observation made by the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards), that the class of pork which we call clear pork in this section of the country is, perhaps, not the same class that is called clear pork in the Lower Provinces; it is mess pork with the bones taken out of it. I do not care whether the Administration determine to admit that as mess pork or not; but what I want them to do is to declare in the most unmistakable terms, so that importers will make no mistake about it, what class they will admit at the $l\frac{1}{2}$ cent rate, and what class they will admit at the 3 cent rate. For my own part, I have no hesitation in saying that, in my judgment, there is no possibility of importing any class of pork that would come under the definitions and regulations provided by the General Inspection Act; because it provides that all the barrels containing mess pork shall be branded on one of the heads, yet there is no brand on the mess pork coming from the United States at all; there is simply the name on the end of the barrel, and a description of the pork it contains. Therefore, I say it is necessary, in the circumstances, that the Government should define, in the most unmistakable terms, what they hold to be mess pork, and declare to the public what class they are going to admit at $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound, and what class at 3 cents a pound.

Mr. FOSTER. If the House will allow me, I will take this opportunity to make a brief statement in reference to this matter. I think it was altogether gratuitous on the part of hon, gentlemen opposite, or hon, gentlemen on this side of the House, to intimate that there was anything like an attempt by the Government to mislead either the House or the country in reference to this matter. I think the Government have been straightforward and outspoken on this matter ever since it has been introduced to the House. In the Budget speech I stated what has been read by my hon, friend from Prince Edward Island, that it was the proposal of the Government to put a protective duty on meats.

An hon. MEMBER. Adequate.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, I did say adequate protection, and I stand by that at the present time. When I came to give the proposals of the Government ten minutes later, the rates which were considered adequate by the Government were announced, and they are the rates which remain to-day, with the single exception of the rate on salt beef in barrels, which was reduced to 2 cents The Government thought that was an adequate protection, and such was stated to the House, and there has been no period since when any attempt has been made to mislead the House in any way with reference to the Government's intention. When the question was asked: what constituted the mess pork which should come in at 1½ cents a pound, there was no evasion then. Two or three evenings ago, when my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) asked the question, I told him that clear cut pork was interpreted by the Government as coming under the definition in the General Inspection Act -not only what was generally known here as heavy mess pork, but what was used in the Maritime Provinces by the lumbermen and the fishermen as well; and long clear cut pork, which was the same as the mess pork, which was taken from the same kind of hog, and was the same portion, except only that the rib was cut out, was supposed by the Government to come within the definition of the General Inspection Act. At that time, there was no attempt to mislead on this subject; and to-day, when the question was reiterated on the other side of the House, I made the same statement, which was consistent in every respect with the statement I made when the tariff resolutions were brought before the House. So much with reference to that. I quite agree with my hon, friend from Renfrew (Mr. White) that it is of the utmost importance that there should be no mistake or misapprehension on this question, and that the House and the country, and the officers of the Government, should know thoroughly what kind of pork is to be admitted at certain duties, and what kind at greater duties; and in that view, I am going to suggest, as this discussion has arisen on an item which has already passed the Committee, and as there is no item now before the Chair, that the better course would be to remit this conversation at the present time, and the Government will take into consideration the question of the definition of mess pork, and in a day or two there will be other opportunities for bringing the matter up, and we can give maybe a more mature consideration to the point.

Mr. IVES. Let me ask the hon. Minister of Finance if, under his interpretation of the Inspection Act, there is any part of the hog between the ham and the shoulder that is not mess pork; and if so, what it is?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the rib portion.

Mr. IVES. There is the loin between the ham and the point where the rib ceases. There you come across another difficulty, and it becomes more obvious that there is going to be a good deal of difficulty about this matter. We have the question now raised whether the loin of the hog would come under the definition of the Inspection Act as mess pork, and everyone knows that there is no possible reason why that part should be charged 3 cents and the other part only $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents. Mr. Foster.

Mr. BÉCHARD. I wish to say a word with reference to what has been said by the hon. member for North Renfrew.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would say to my hon. friend that this discussion is out of order and irregular, and if it continues longer, it should be on some motion. The item passed the House a few days ago.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is on the motion which the hon. Minister made before recess, that the Committee rise and report.

Mr. FOSTER. There was no motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There are various ways in which the discussion could be continued, and be in order.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I merely asked the hon. Minister to explain the point I raised, and the discussion has taken a wider range than I anticipated; but I think the statement made by the hon. Minister just now is a fair one, that he will take time to consider this matter, and let us know at another stage at what decision the Government will have arrived at.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the statement made by the hon. Minister is one that should be received without further discussion; but I cannot divest my mind of the fact that his promise was to give an adequate protection, and he has had a statement from the lumbermen on both sides of the House that the protection he has offered of $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound on clear pork will not have the effect of keeping out that class of pork at all.

On resolution 2 (p. 2553),

Mr. FOSTER. You will remember, when I went over these items, that this was omitted. It is a repeal of the section which has now been amended so as to bring it into harmony with what it has been made since.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). With reference to the duty on lime, the course taken by the Government may have the effect of destroying a very important and rising industry in New Brunswick, which has an output of a thousand barrels a day. The probability is that a prohibitory duty will be adopted by the Americans, which will have the effect of destroying that industry.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to that, I may say that the article of lime is one of the articles mentioned in the statutory offer of 1888. It is entirely in the hands of the Government either to reduce the duty or to take it off entirely, and it is not a matter that need be dealt with by the tariff. I do not think it would be wise for us to deal with it in the tariff before we know what legislation will be had with the United States, in reference to it.

Mr. MILLS. What about fruit trees?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The parties interested in endeavoring to prevent an increase of the duty by the United States say that the inaction of this Government neutralises their efforts, and that a prohibitory duty will be placed in the American tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. The efforts of the people interested in keeping the lime duty down at Washington cannot have been affected by the action of this Government, for we have taken no action so far as tariff legislation is concerned.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I said the inaction of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. In answer to repeated representations from the people of St. John, the Government caused to be made known that lime stood in a position in which parliamentary action was not necessary, and that this Government would meet the Government of the United States as far as it went in the matter-either lower the duty, or take it off altogether.

Mr. IVES. There are two sides to this lime question. The hon, member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) speaks as if New Brunswick were the only portion of Canada which produces lime. He speaks of a thousand barrels a day as being the output of the quarries in the neighborhood of St. John, but there is as large an output from a quarry in the Eastern Townships, a very large part of which is sold in the southern part of the Province of Quebec to the pulp mills. Probably from ten to fifteen car loads a day are placed in that part of the Province of Quebec, and if the duty were taken off lime, they could be as well supplied from St. Albans, Vermont. If the Government were to remove the duty from lime and open the doors to the products of the St. Albans lime quarry, they would be materially injuring the Eastern Townships quarry. So far as the course of the Government is concerned, we have been giving that matter in the Eastern Townships some attention, and have been led to believe that the action of our Government upon the question of lime would not affect in any way whatever the action of the United States Government. No doubt the Rockland lime people are moving Heaven and Earth to have the duties increased so as to shut out St. John lime, and if they can bring political influence enough to bear, they will succeed, but without any reference whatever to the action we may take here.

Resolutions reported, as follows:—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Act 49 Victoria, chapter 33—Revised Statutes—intituled: "An Act respecting the Duties of Customs," as follows:—

I. By repealing section one of said Act, and substituting the following in lieu thereof:—

In this Act, or in any other Act relating to the Customs, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) The expression or contraction "ad val." represents and has the meaning of the words "ad valorem."

(b) The initials N.E.S. represent and have the meaning of the words "not elsewhere specified."

(c) The initials N.O.P. represent and have the meaning of the words "not otherwise provided for."

(d) The initials F.O.B. represent and have the meaning of the words "free on board."

(e) The expression "gallon" means an Imperial gallon.

(f) The expression "ton" means two thousand pounds avoirdupois.

(a) The expressions "proof" or "proof spirits," when applied to wines or spirits of any kind, mean spirits of the strength of proof as ascertained by Sykes' Hydrometer.

meter.

(b) The expression "gauge," when applied to metal sheets or plates or to wire, means the thickness as determined by Stubbe' Standard Gauge.

(i) The expression "in diameter," when applied to tubing, means the actual inside diameter measurement.

(j) The expressions "sheet" or "sheets" when applied to metals mean sheets or plates of not exceeding three-sixteenths of an inch in thickness.

(k) The expressions "plate" or "plates" when applied to metals mean plates or sheets more than three-sixteenths of an inch in thickness.

2. By enacting that the interpretation clauses comprised in section 2 of the "Customs Act," 49 Victoria, chapter 32—(Revised Statutes)—as amended, shall, unless the context otherwise requires, apply to, and form a part of this Act; and that any power conferred upon the Governor in Council by the said "Customs Act" to trans-fer dutiable goods to the list of goods which may be im-ported free of duty shall not be by this Act abrogated or impaired.

3. By repealing sub-section 1 of section 5 of chapter 33 (Revised Statutes), and substituting the following in lieu thereof:

The importation of any goods enumerated in Schedule
"D" is hereby prohibited, and any such goods, if imported, shall thereby become forfeited to the Crown, and shall be forthwith destroyed,—and any person importing any such goods shall in each case incur a penalty of two hundred dollars.

4 Ry expecting that all medicinal or tollat preparations

4. By enacting that all medicinal or toilet preparations imported for completing the manufacture thereof, or for the manufacture of any other article by the addition of any ingredient or ingredients, or by mixing such preparations, or by putting up or labelling the same alone, or with other articles or compounds, under any proprietary or trade name, shall be, irrespective of cost, valued for duty and duty paid thereon at the ordinary market value, in the country from whence imported, of the completed preparation, when put up and labelled under such proprietary or trade name, less the actual cost of labor and material used or expended in Canada in completing the manufacture thereof, or of putting up or of labelling the same. 4. By enacting that all medicinal or toilet preparations pleting the manufacture thereof, or of putting up or of labelling the same.

5. By enacting that regulations respecting the manner in which molasses and syrups shall be sampled and tested for the purpose of determining the classes to which they shall belong with reference to the duty chargeable thereon shall be made by the Minister of Customs, and the instruments and appliances necessary for such determination shall be designated by him and supplied to such officers as shall be by him charged with the duty of sampling and testing such molasses and syrups; and the decision of any officer (to whom is so assigned the testing of such articles) as to the duties to which they are subject under the tariff shall be final and conclusive, unless upon appeal to the Commissioner of Customs within thirty days from the rendering of such decision, such decision is, with the approval of the Minister, changed, and the decision of the Commissioner with such approval shall be final.

6. By enacting that any goods or packages being the the Commissioner with such approval shall be final.

6. By enacting that any goods or packages being the growth, produce or manufacture of Canada, and having been exported therefrom and intended to be returned, may be admitted free of duty on being re-imported to Canada, provided such goods or packages were entered for exportation, and branded or marked by a Collector or proper officer of Customs, and fully identified by the Collector or proper officer, at the port or place where they are so re-imported; and further, provided that the property in such goods or packages has continued in the same person or persons by whom they were exported, and that such re-importation takes place within one year of the exportation thereof. exportation thereof.

exportation thereof.

7. By enacting that any person who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which shall be on the person accused, sends or brings into Canada, or who, being in Canada, has in his possession any bill-heading or other paper appearing to be a heading or blank capable of being filled up and used as an invoice, and bearing any certificate purporting to show, or which may be used to show that the invoice which may be made from such bill-heading or blank is correct or authentic, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to a penalty of five hundred dollars and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months, in the discretion of the court, and the goods which may be entered under any invoice made from any such bill-heading or blank shall be forfeited.

8. By extiking out from the Schedule "A" to said from any such bill-heading or blank shall be forfeited.

8. By striking out from the Schedule "A" to said Act the following headings, viz.:—

The words "Agricultural Implements, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 7 in said schedule.

The words "Books, etc.," which immediately precede item 33 in said schedule.

The word "Breadstuffs, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 52 in said schedule.

The word "Carriages" which immediately precedes item 83 in said schedule.

The words "Cotton, manufactures of, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 121 in said schedule.

The words "Cotton, manufactures of, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 162 in said schedule.

The words "Fruits (dried) viz.:—" which immediately precede item 162 in said schedule.

The words "Fruit (green) viz.:—" which immediately precede item 165 in said schedule.

The words "Furs, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 165 in said schedule.

The words "Glass and manufactures of, viz.:—" which immediately precede item ISI in said schedule. The words "Gunpowder and other explosives, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 193 in said schedule. The words "Iron and manufactures of, viz.:—" which precede item 213 in said schedule. The words "Pianofortes, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 344 in said schedule. The words "Stone, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 403 in said schedule. The words "Stone, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 403 in said schedule item 414 in said schedule. The words "Sugars, syrups and molasses," which immediately precede item 49 which immediately precede item 49 in said schedule. The word "Tobacco," which immediately precede item 441 in said schedule. The words "Trees—fruit trees, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 441 in said schedule. The words "Vegetables, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 455 in said schedule.

The words "Vools and woollens, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 473 in said schedule.

The words "Tobacco," said schedule.

The words "Tobacco," said schedule.

The words "Vegetables, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 457 in said schedule.

The words "Tobacco," said schedule.

The words "Wools and woollens, viz.:—" which immediately precede it ein 473 in said schedule.

2. Resolved, That it is expedient to repeal the following items in Schedules "A," "B" and "C" to the Act 49 Victoria, chapter 33—Revised Statutes—intituled: "An Act respecting the Duties of Customs," viz.:— Schedule "A" items numbered 2, 5, 6, 15, 17, 21, 22, 23, 40, 45, 47, 49, 58, 67, 81, 87, 98, 99, 100, 109, 110, 115, 117, 118, 119, 123, 134, 149, 153, 157, 165, 166, 167, 169, 177, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 194, 193, 295, 296, 298, 299, 258, 292, 294, 265, 268, 269, 271, 274, 277, 283, 286, 288, 294, 295, 297, 298, 591, 305, 311, 312, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 335, 336, 340, 341, 342, 358, 361, 363, 370, 372, 376, 379, 385, 387, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 402, 411, 412, 443, 415, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 432, 435, 437, 438, 448, 451, 452, 457, 459, 460, 461, 463, 467, 468, 473, 476, 481, 482. Schedule "B," items numbered, 489, 490, Schedule "C," items numbered, 489, 490, Schedule "C," items numbered, 505, 506, 507, 508, 599, 512, 513, 515, 518, 522, 523, 524, 526, 527, 529, 538, 599, 542, 544, 545, 550, 553, 554, 555, 564, 566, 568, 577, 571, 576, 577, 580, 581, 586, 587, 391, 594, 597, 601, 603, 604, 605, 608, 612, 613, 616, 620, 624, 628, 639, 699, 700, 703, 709, 710, 711, 712, 714, 725, 726, 783, 734, 737, 738, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 751, 756, 760, 762, 763, 764, 765, 769, 774, 778, 782, 793, 796, 801, 803, 804, 809, 810, and to make other provisions in lieu thereof by adding to such respective schedules, as follows: such respective schedules, as follows:

SCHEDULE "A."

SCHEDULE "A."

1. Acid, acetic and pyroligneous, N.E.S., and vinegar, a specific duty of fifteen cents for each gallon of any strength not exceeding a strength of proof, and for each degree of strength in excess of the strength of proof, an additional duy of one cent. The strength of proof shall be held to be equal to 6 per cent, of absolute acid, and in all cases the strength shall be determined in such manner as may be established by the Governor in Council.

2. Acid, acetic and pyroligneous of any strength, when imported by dyers, calico printers or manufacturers of acetates or colors, for exclusive use in dyeing or printing, or for the manufacture of such acetates or colors in their own factories, under such regulations as may be established by the Governor in Council, a duty of twenty-five cents per gallon and twenty per cent. ad valorem.

3. Acid phosphate, three cents per pound.

4. Precious stones, N.E.S., polished but not set or otherwise manufactured, and imitations thereof, ten per cent. ad valorem.

wise manufactured, and initiations therety, on per cent. ad valorem.

5. Animals, living, viz.:—Cattle, sheep and hogs, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

6. Artificial flowers, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

7. Feathers of all kinds, N.E.S., twenty-five per cent.

ad valorem.

Axle grease, one cent per pound.
 Barrels containing petroleum or its products or any mixtures of which petroleum forms a part when such contents is chargeable with a specific duty, forty cents each.

of all kinds, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

11. Blacking, shoe and shoemakers' ink, and shoe, harness and leather dressing, and harness soap, harness and leather dressing, and harness soap, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

12. Advertising pamphlets, pictures and pictorial show cards, illustrated advertising periodicals, illustrated price lists, advertising calendars, advertising almanacs, tailors' and mantlemakers' fashion plates, and all chromos, chromotypes, oleographs, photographs and other cards, pictures or artistic work of similar kinds, produced by any Mr. Foster.

process other than hand painting or drawing, whether for business or advertising purposes or not, printed or stamped on paper, cardboard or other material, N.E.S., six cents per pound and twenty per cent. ad valorem

13. Geographical, topographical and astronomical maps, charts and globes, N.E.S., twenty per cent. ad valorem valorem.

wespapers or supplemental editions or parts thereof, partly printed and intended to be com-pleted and published in Canada, twenty-five per cent. ad palorem. 14. Newspapers cent. ad valorem.

15. Bank notes, bonds, bills of exchange, cheques, promissory notes, drafts and all similar work unsigned, and bill-heads, envelopes, receipts, cards and other commercial blank forms printed or lithographed, or printed from steel or copper or other plates, and other printed matter, N.E.S., thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
16. Bookbinders' tools and implements, including ruling machines, and bookbinder's cloth, ten per cent. ad valorem.

machines, and bookbinder's cloth, ten per cent. ad valorem.

17. Fancy work boxes, writing desks, glove boxes, hand-kerchief boxes, manicure cases, perfume cases, toilet cases and fancy cases for smokers' sets, and all similar fancy articles made of bone, shell, horn, ivory, wood, leather, plush, satin, silk, satinette or paper; dolls and toys of all kinds including sewing machines when of not more than two dollars in value, and toy whips; ornaments of alabaster, spar, amber, terra-cotta or composition; statuettes, and bead ornaments, N.E.S., thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

18. Brass in strips for printers' rules, not finished, and

18. Brass in strips for printers' rules, not finished, and brass in strips or sheets of less than four inches in width, fifteen per cent, ad valorem.
19. Braces or suspenders and parts thereof, thirty-five per cent, ad valorem.

20. Rice, uncleaned, unfulled or paddy, seventeen and

20. Roce, uncleased, uninteed or paddy, seveneen and a-half per cent. ad valorem.

21. Wheat flour, seventy-five cents per barrel.

22. Buttons of vegetable ivory or horn, ten cents per gross and twenty per cent. ad valorem.

22½. Buttons of hoof, rubber, vulcanite or composition, five cents per gross and twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Carpetting, matting and mats of hemp; carpet linings and stair pads, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
 Tobacco pipes of all kinds, pipe mounts, cigar and the stair pads.

cigarette holders and cases for the same, thirtyfive per cent, ad valorem. 25. Clocks and clock cases of all kinds, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

26. Clock springs and clock movements other than for tower clocks, complete or in parts, ten per cent. ad valorem.

27. Horse clothing, shaped, N.O.P., thirty per cent. ad valorem cocoa mats and matting, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

 Cocoa paste and chocolate, and other preparations of cocoa, not sweetened, four cents per pound.
 Cocoa paste and chocolate, and other preparations of cocoa containing sugar, five cents per pound.
 Extract of coffee or substitutes therefor of all kinds, for contract preparations.

five cents per pound.

32. Collars of cotton, linen, celluloid or xyolite, twentyfour cents per doz. and thirty per cent. ad

33. Combs for dress and toilet of all kinds, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

per cent. ad valorem.

34. Colored fabrics, woven in whole or in part of dyed or colored cotton yarn, or jute yarn, or of part jute and part cotton yarn, or other material except silk, N.E.S., twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

35. Non-elastic webbing, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

36. Elastic webbing, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

37. Old and scrap copper, copper in pigs, bars, rods, bolts, ingots and sheathing not planished or coated, and copper seamless drawn tubing, ten per cent. ad valorem. naloren

38. Copper, all manufactures of, N.E.S., thirty per cent. ad valorem.

39. Copper in sheets or strips of less than four inches in width, fifteen per cent. ad valorem.
40. Cotton cordage and cotton braided cords, thirty per

40. Cotton cordage and cotton braned cours, three cent. ad valorem.

41. Cordage of all kinds, N.E.S., one and one-quarter cents per pound, and ten per cent. ad valorem.

42. Cotton denims, drillings, bedtickings, ginghams, plaids, cotton or canton flannels, flannelettes, cotton tennis cloth or striped sephyrs, ducks and drills dyed or colored, checked and striped shirtings, cottonades, Kentucky jeans, pantaloon stuffs, and goods of like description, two cents per square yard and fifteen per cent. ad valorem.

43. Cotton sewing thread in hanks, black, bleached or unbleached, three and six cord, twelve and a-half per cent, ad valorem dress staymakers for use in their own factories, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

44. Jeans and coutilles when imported by corset and dress staymakers for use in their own factories, twenty-five neg cent. ad valorem.

45. Cuffs of cotton. linen, celluloid or xyolite, four cents per pair and thirty per cent. ad valorem.

46. Curtains when made up, trimmed or untrimmed, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

47. Hammocks and lawn tennis nets, and other like articles manufactured of twine, N.E.S., thirty-five report ad valorem.

five per cent. ad valorem.

48. Drain pipes, sewer pipes, chimney linings or vents, and inverted blocks glazed or unglazed, and earthenwaretiles, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

49. Feathers, viz.:—Ostrich and vulture, undressed fifteen per cent. ad valorem.
 50. Feathers, viz.:—Ostrich and vulture, dressed, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

51. Apples, 40 cents per barrel, including the duty on the barrel.

52. Blackberries, gooseberries, raspberries and straw-berries, N.E.S., three cents per pound—the weight of the package to be included in the weight for

53. Cherries and currants, one cent per quart.
54. Cranberries, plums and quinces, thirty cents per bushel.

55. Peaches, N.O.P., one cent per pound—the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty.

56. Gas meters, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

57. Crystal and decorated glass table-ware made expressly for mounting with silver-plated trimmings, when imported by manufacturers of plated ware, when imported by manufacturers of plated ware, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

58. Glass carboys and demijohns, empty or filled, bottles and decanters, flasks and phials of less capacity than eight ounces, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

59. Lamp, gas light and electric light shades, lamps and lamp chimneys, side-lights and head-lights, globes for lanterns, lamps, electric lights and gaslights, N.E.S.. thirty per cent. ad valorem.

60. Common and colorless window glass; and plain, colored, stained, tinted or muffled glass in sheets, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

61. Ornamental, figured and enamelled colored glass; painted and vitried glass; figured, enamelled and obscured white glass; and rough rolled plate glass, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

62. Stained glass windows, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

63. Silvered glass, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

64. Silvered glass, bevelled, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

valorem.

65. Plate glass, not colored, in panes of not over thirty square feet each, six cents per square foot, and when bevelled, two cents per square foot additional forms. tional.

66. Plate glass in panes of over thirty and not over seventy square feet each, eight cents per square foot; and when bevelled, two cents per square foot additional.

67. Plate glass in panes of processy parts square feet each.

67. Plate glass in panes of over seventy square feet each, nine cents per square foot; and when bevelled, two cents per square foot additional.

68. Imitation porcelain shades and colored glass shades, anitation porceiain snades and colored glass snades, not figured, painted, enamelled or engraved, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

 All other glass and manufactures of glass, N.O.P., including bent plate glass, twenty per cent. ad colorem.

70. Gloves and mitts of all kinds, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

71. Gold and silver leaf, and Dutch or schlag metal leaf, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

72. Gun, rife and pistol cartridges; cartridge cases of all kinds and materials; percussion caps, and gun wads of all kinds, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

74. Hats, caps, and bonnets, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
76. Honey in the comb or otherwise, and adulterations and imitations thereof, three cents per pound.
77. India rubber boots and shoes with tops or uppers of cloth or of material other than rubber, thirty-five

78. India rubber boots and shoes and other manufactures of India rubber, N. E. S., twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

79. Corset clasps, spoon clasps or busks, blanks, busks, side steels and other corset steels, whether plain, japanned, lacquered, tinned or covered with pa per or cloth; also back, bone or corset wires, covered with paper or cloth, cut to lengths and tipped with brass or tin, or untipped, or in coils, five cents per pound and thirty per cent. ad valorem.
113. Colors, dry, N.E.S., twenty per cent. ad valorem.

80. Ferro-manganese, ferro-silicon, spiegel, steel bloom ends and crop ends of steel rails, for the manufacture of iron or steel, two dollars per ton.

81. Builders', cabinet-makers', harness-makers' and saddlers' hardware, including curry-combs, carriage hardware, locks, butts and hinges, N. E. S., and tools of all kinds, N.E.S., thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

82. Fire-arms, twenty per cent. ad valorem.83. Surgical and dental instruments of all kinds, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

84. Lap-welded iron tubing, threaded and coupled or not, one and one-quarter to two inches inclusive in not, one and one-quarter to two inches inclusive in diameter, for use exclusively in artesian wells, petroleum pipe lines and petroleum refineries, under regulations to be made by the Governor in Council, twenty per cent. ad valorem.

86. Wrought iron or steel nuts and washers, iron or steel rivets, bolts with or without threads, nut and bolt blanks, T and strap hinges and hinge blanks, N.E.S., one cent per pound and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

87. Jellies, jams and preserves, N.E.S.. five cents per pound.

88. Laces, braids, fringes, embroideries, cords, tassels, and bracelets; braids, chains or cords of hair; lace collars and all similar goods, lace nets and nettings of cotton, silk, linen or other materials, thirty per cent. ad calorem.

89. Lard, tried or rendered, three cents per pound, the weight of the package, when of tin, to be included in the weight for duty.

90. Lard, untried two cents per pound, the weight of the

90. Lard, untried, two cents per pound, the weight of the package, when of tin, to be included in the weight for duty.

91. Lead, nitrate and acetate of, not ground, five per cent. ad valorem.

92. Lead pipe and lead shot, one and one-half cents per pound.

Leather-board and leatheroid, three cents per pound. 94. Skins for morocco leather, tanned, but not further manufactured, fiftteen per cent. ad valorem.

95. Belting leather and upper leather, including kid, lamb, sheep and call, tanned, but not dressed, waxed or glazed, fifteen per cent. ad valorem; if dressed, waxed or glazed, twenty per cent. ad. valorem.

96. Belting of leather or other material, N.E.S., twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

97. Liquorice paste, two cents per pound.

98. Liquorice in rolls or sticks, three cents per pound.

99. Extract of malt (non-alcoholic) for medicinal purposes, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

100. Magic lanterns and slides therefor, philosophical, photographic, mathematical and optical instruments, N.E.S., twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

101. Mess pork, as defined by the General Inspection Act, one and one-half cents per pound, the barrel containing the same to be free of duty.

101½. Salted beef in barrels, two cents per pound, the barrel containing the same to be free of duty.

102. Meats, fresh or salted, N.E.S., three cents per pound.

103. Dried or smoked meats and meats preserved in any other way than salted or pickled, N.E.S., three cents per pound; if imported in tins the weight to include the weight of the tin.

104. Milk food and other similar preparations, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

105. Mucilage, and liquid glue, thirty per cent. ad

105. Mucilage, and liquid glue, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
107. Linseed or flaxseed oil, raw or boiled, one and one-quarter cents per pound.

quarter cents per pound.

108. Lubricating oils, composed wholly or in part of petroleum, and costing less than thirty cents per gallon, seven and one-fifth cents per gallon.

109. Oil cloth and oiled silk, in the piece, cut or shaped, oiled, enamelled, stamped, painted or printed, india-rubbered, flocked or coated, N.O.P., five cents per square yard and fifteen per cent. ad naloger. nalorem

110. Opium (crude) one dollar per pound, the weight to include the weight of the ball or covering.
111. Paintings, prints, engravings, drawings and building plans, twenty per ceut. ad valorem.
112. Dry white and red lead, orange mineral and zinc, white or carbonate of zinc, five per cent. ad

114. Paints and colors, pulped or ground in oil or other liquids, and all liquid prepared or ready mixed paint, N.E.S., thirty per cent. ad valorem.
115. Paints, ground or mixed in, or with, either japan, varnish, lacquers, liquid dryers, collodion, oil finish or oil varnish; rough stuff, fillers, and all liquid, prepared or ready mixed paints, N.E.S., five cents per pound and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty.
116. Oxides, ochres and ochrey earths, umbers and siennas and fire-proofs, ground or unground, washed or unwashed, calcined or raw, twenty-five per or unwashed, calcined or raw, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

117. Paints and colors, ground in spirits, and all spirit varnishes and lacquers, one dollar per gallon.

118. Paper hangings or wall paper in rolls, on each roll of eight yards or under, and so in proportion for all greater lengths of the following descriptions, viz.:-

(a) Brown blanks and white blanks, printed or plain,

(a) Brown blanks and white blanks, printed or plain, two cents.

(b) White papers, ground papers and satins, not handmade, three cents.

(c) Single print bronzes and colored bronzes, six cents.

(d) Embossed bronzes, eight cents.

(e) Colored borders, narrow, and colored borders, wide, six cents.

(f) Bronze borders, narrow, and bronze borders, wide, fourteen cents.
(a) Embossed borders, fifteen cents.
(b) All other paper hangings or wall paper, thirty-five

(h) All other paper hangings or wall paper, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
119. Paper sacks or bags of all kinds, printed or not, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
120. Union collar cloth paper in rolls or sheets, not glossed or finished, twenty per cent. ad valorem.
121. Union collar cloth paper in rolls or sheets, glossed or finished, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
122. Paraffine wax, stearic acid and stearine of all kinds, three cents per nound.

122. Paraffine wax, stearic acid and stearine of all kinds, three cents per pound.
123. Lead pencils of all kinds, in wood or otherwise, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
124. Perfumery, including toilet preparations (non-alcoholic) viz.:—Hair oils, tooth and other powders and washes, pomatums, pastes, and all other perfumed preparations used for the hair, mouth or skin, thirty per cent. ad valorem.
125. Photographic dry plates, nine cents per square foot.
126. Aluminised paper chemically prepared for photographer's use, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
127. Pickles in bottle, forty cents per gallon, including the duty on the bottles, and each bottle holding more than one-half pint, and each bottle holding more than one-half pint, but not more than one pint, shall be dutiable as containing one pint, and each bottle holding more than one pint, that one than one quart, shall be dutiable as containing one quart.
128. Pickles in jars, bottles or other similar vessels, fortreachers are relieved to the central processing and the processing of the processing o

128. Pickles in jars, bottles or other similar vessels, forty cents per gallon on the ascertained quantity, the duty to include the duty on the jar, bottle or other vessel.

129. Pickles in bulk, in vinegar or in vinegar and mustard,

129. Pickles in bulk, in vinegar or in vinegar and mustard, thirty-five cents per gallon, and in brine or salt, twenty-five cents per gailon.
130. Plumbago, fifteen per cent. ad valorem.
131. Plumbago, all manufactures of, N.E.S., thirty per cent. ad valorem.
132. Printing presses and printing machines, such only as are used in newspaper, book and job printing offices; folding machines and paper cutters used in printing and bookbinding establishments, ten per cent. ad valorem.

133. Lithographic presses, ten per cent. ad valorem.

134. Prunella for boots and shoes, and cotton netting for the lining of boots, shoes and gloves, ten per cent.

ad valorem.

135. Woollen netting for the lining of boots, shoes and gloves, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

136. Red and yellow prussiate of potash, ten per cent. ad

- valorem.

 137. Rubber belting, hose, packing, mats and matting, and cotton or linen hose lined with rubber, five cents per pound, and fifteen per cent. ad valorements.
- 138. Sauces and catsups in bottle, forty cents per gallon, and twenty per cent. ad valorem; and each bottle holding less than one-half pint shall be dutiable as containing one-half pint, and each bottle holding more than one half-pint but not more than Mr. FOSTER.

one pint shall be dutiable as containing one pint, and each bottle holding more than one pint but not more than one quart shall be dutiable as connot more than one quart shall be dutiable as containing one quart.

139. Sauces and catsups in bulk, thirty cents per gallon, and twenty per cent. ad valorem.

140. Soy, ten cents per gallon.

141. Seeds, viz.:—Garden, field and other seeds for agricultural or other purposes, N.O.P., when in bulk or in large parcels, ten per cent. ad valorem: when put up in small papers or parcels, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. cent. ad valorem

142. Shawls and travelling rugs of all kinds and materials except silk, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
143. Sewing and embroidery silk and silk twist, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
144. Composition metal for the manufacture of filled gold

145. Slate pencils, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
146. Castile soap, mottled or white, and white soap, two cents per pound.

146. Castile soap, mottled or white, and white soap, two cents per pound.

147. Soap powders, pumice, silver and mineral soaps, sapolio and other like articles, three cents per pound, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty.

148. Spirituous or alcohole liquors distilled from any material or containing, or compounded from, or with distilled spirits of any kind and any mixture thereof with water—for every gallon thereof of the strength of proof, and when of a greater strength than that of proof, at the same rate on the increased quantity that there would be if the liquors were reduced to the strength of proof. When the liquors are of a less strength than that of proof, the duty shall be at the rate herein provided, but computed on a reduced quantity of the liquors in proportion to the lesser degree of strength; provided, however, that no reduction in quantity shall be computed or made on any liquors below the strength of fifteen per cent. under proof, so follows, viz.—

(a) Ethyl alcohol or the substance commonly known as alcohol, hydrated oxide of ethyl, or spirits of wine; gin of all kinds, N.E.S.: rum, whiskey, and all spirituous or alcoholic liquors, N.O.P. two dollars per gallon.

(b) Amyl alcohol or fusil oil, or any substance known as potato spirit or potato oil, two dollars.

(c) Methyl alcohol, wood alcohol, wood naphtha, (c) Methyl alcohol, wood alcohol, wood naphtha, pyroxylie spirit, or any substance known as wood spirit or methylated spirit; absinthe, arrack or palm spirit, brandy, including artificial brandy and imitations of brandy; cordials and liqueurs of all kinds, N.E.S.; mescal, pulque, rum shrub, schiedam and other schnapps; tnfia, angostura, and similar alcoholic bitters or beverages, two dollars.
(d) Spirits and strong waters of any kind mixed with any ingredient or ingredients and being or known or designated as anodynes, elixirs.

or known or designated as anodynes, elixirs, essences, extracts, lotions, tinctures, or medicines, N.E.S., two dollars and thirty per cent. ad valorem.

cent. ad valorem.

(e) Alcoholic perfumes and perfumed spirits, bay rum, cologne and lavander waters, hair, tooth and skin washes and other toilet preparations containing spirits of any kind, when in bottles or flasks weighing not more than four ounces each, fifty per cent. ad valorem; when in bottles, flasks or other packages weighing more than four ounces each, two dollars and forty per cent. ad valorem.

(f) Nitrous ether, sweet spirits of nitre and aromatic spirits of ammonia, two dollars and thirty per cent. ad valorem.

matic spirits of ammonia, two dollars and thirty per cent. ad valorem.

(g) Vermouth and ginger wine containing not more than forty per cent. of proof spirits, seventy-five cents per gallon; if containing more than forty per cent. of proof spirits, two dollars per gallon.

(h) In all cases where the strength of any of the foregoing articles cannot be correctly ascertained by the direct application of the hydrometer, it shall be ascertained by the distillation of a sample, or in such other manner as the Minister of Customs may direct. direct

149. Starch, including farina, corn starch or flour, and all preparations having the qualities of starch, not sweetened or flavored, two cents per pound;

when sweetened or flavored, four cents per pound, in all cases the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty.

150. Stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids for almancas, calendars, illustrated pamphlets, newspaper advertisements or engravings, and all other like work for commercial, trade or other purposes, N.E.S.; and matrices or copper shells of the same, two cents per square inch.

1502. Stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids of books and bases for the same, whether composed wholly or in part of metal or celluloid, two-thirds of one cent per square inch, and matrices or copper shells of the same, two cents per square inch.

151. Stereotypes, electrotypes, and celluloids of newspaper columns, and bases for the same, composed wholly or partly of metal or celluloid, three-fourths of one cent per square inch, and matrices or copper shells of the same, two cents per square inch, and matrices or copper shells of the same, two cents per square inch.

152. Water limestone or cement stone, one dollar per ton of thirteen cubic feet.
 153. Curling stones (so-called) of whatever material made,

153. Curling stones (so-called) of whatever material made, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
 154. Molasses derived from raw cane sugar in the process of its manufacture direct from the cane, not refined or filtered or bleached or clarified, testing by the polariscope thirty degrees or over and not over fifty-six degrees, when imported direct without trans-shipment from the country of growth and reduction.

over nity-six degrees, when imported affect without trans-shipment from the country of growth and production, a specific duty of one and one-half cents per gallon, or when not so imported, of four cents per gallon; when testing over fifty-six degrees and imported direct without trans-shipment from the country of growth and production, a specific duty of six cents per gallon, or when not so imported, of eight cents per gallon, or when not so imported, of eight cents per gallon; in all cases the package in which imported to be exempt from duty.

155. Syrups, N.E.S., cane-juice, refined syrup, sugarhouse syrup, syrup of sugar, syrup of molasses, syrup of sorghum, corn-syrup, glucose syrup and all syrups or molasses produced in the process of the manufacture of refined sugars, or in the refining of sugars, and all bleached, clarified, filtered or refined molasses, a specific duty of one cent per pound and thirty per cent. ad valorem, and the value for duty shall be the value thereof f.o.b. at the last port of shipment.

be the value thereof f.o.b. at the last port of snip-ment.

156. Provided that molasses when imported for or re-ceived into any sugar refinery or sugar factory or syrup or glucose factory, distillery or brewery, shall be subject to, and there shall be paid there-on, an additional duty of five cents per gallon.

157. Saccharine or any product containing over one-half of one per cent. thereof, ten dollars per pound.

158. Sugar candy, brown or white, and confectionery in-cluding sweetened gums, candied peels, condensed milk when sweetened and condensed coffee with milk when sweetened gums, candied peels, condensed milk when sweetened and condensed coffee with milk when sweetened, one and a quarter cents per pound and thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

159. Sweetened biscuits of all kinds, popcorn, preserved ginger, condensed milk not sweetened, and condensed coffee with milk not sweetened, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

per cent. ad valorem.

160. Telephones and telegraph instruments; telegraph, telephone and telegraph instruments; telegraph, telephone and electric light cables; electric and galvanic batteries, electric motors and apparatus for electric lights, including incandescent light globes and insulators of all kinds, N.E.S., twenty-fire per cent. ad reference.

groves and insulators of all kinds, A.E.S., twondy-five per cent. ad valorem.

161. Stamped tinware, japanned ware, granite ware, enamelled iron ware and galvanised iron ware, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

162. Tinware and manufacturs of tin, N.E.S., twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

163. Cut tobacco, forty cents per pound and twelve and ahalf per cent. ad valorem.
164. Manufactured tobacco, N.E.S., and snuff, thirty cents per pound and twelve and a-half per cent. ad valorem

166. Picks, kks, mattocks, hammers weighing three pounds each or over, sledges, track tools, wedges or crowbars of iron or steel, one cent per pound and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

167. Shovels and spades, shovel and spade blanks and iron or steel cut to shape for same, one dollar per dozen and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

169. Trunks, valises, hat-boxes and carpet bags, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

170. Satchels, pocket-books and purses, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
171. Plants, viz. "—Fruit, shade, lawn and ornamental trees, shrubs and plants, N.E.S., twenty per cent. ad valorem.

Gooseberry bushes, one cents each.

173. Grape vines costing ten cents and less, two cents each.

174. Raspberry and blackberry bushes, one cent each.
175. Rose bushes, costing twenty cents and less, three cents each.

cents each.

176. Apple trees, of all kinds, three cents each.

177. Peach trees, of all kinds, four cents each.

178. Pear trees, of all kinds, four cents each.

179. Plum trees, of all kinds, five cents each.

180. Cherry trees, of all kinds, four cents each.

181. Quince trees, of all kinds, two and one-half cents each.

183. Cases for jewels and watches, cases for silver and plated ware, and for cutlery and other like articles, ten cents each and thirty per cent. ad nalorem. valorem.

184. Cotton twine, one cent per pound and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

185. Twine for harvest binders, of jute, manilla or sisal, and of manilla and sisal mixed, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

186. Twine of all kinds, N.E.S., thirty per cent. ad valorem.

valorem.

187. Umbrellas, parasols and sun-shades of all kinds and materials, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

188. Umbrella, parasol and sun-shade sticks or handles, N.E.S., twenty per cent. ad valorem.

189. Tomatoes and other vegetables, including corn and baked beaus, in cans or other packages, weighing not over one pound each, two cents per can or package, and two cents additional per can or package for each pound or fraction of a pound over one pound in weight—and the weight of the cans or other packages to be included in the weight for duty.

190. Vegetables, when fresh or dry salted, N.E.S., including sweet potatoes and yams, twenty-five per cent.

191. Veleteens, and cotton velvets and cotton plush, twenty per cent. ad valorem.
192. Veneers of wood, not over one-sixteenth of an inch

192. Veneers of wood, not over one-sixteenth of an inch in thickness, ten per cent. ad valorem.
193. Walking sticks and canes, of all kinds, N.E.S., twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
194. Watches, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
195. Watch cases, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
196. Whips, of all kinds, except toy whips, fifty cents per dozen and thirty per cent. ad valorem.
197. Wire, of brass or copper, fifteen per cent. ad valorem.
198. Wire, covered with cotton, linen, silk or other material, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.
199. Pails, tubs, churns, brooms, brushes and manufactures of wood. N.E.S., and wood pulp, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.
200. Fibre ware, indurated fibre ware, vulcanised fibre ware and all articles of like material, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

ware and an articles of like material, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

201. Clothing, ready-made and wearing apparel of every description, including horse clothing shaped, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpace goat or other like animal, made up by the tailor, seamstress or manufacturer, N.O.P., ten cents per pound and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

valorem.

202. Carpets, viz.:—Brussels, tapestry, Dutch, Venetian and damask; carpet mats and rugs of all kinds, N.E.S.; and printed felts and druggets and all other carpets and squares, N.O.P., twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

203. Smyrna carpets, mats and rugs, thirty per cent. ad

203. Shiyina can poor, malorem.

204. Yeast cakes, compressed yeast and baking powders in packages of one pound and over and not over fifty pounds weight, six cents per pound, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty.

205. Yeast cakes, compressed yeast and baking powders in packages of less than one pound in weight, eight cents per pound, the weight of the package to be included in the weight of duty.

205½. Compressed yeast in bulk or mass of not less than fifty pounds, four cents per pound,

206. Wire of all kinds, N.E.S., twenty-five per cent, ad

valorem.

207. Electric arc light carbons or carbon points, not exceeding twelve inches in length and in proportion for greater or less lengths, two dollars and fifty cents per thousand.

208. Uncolored cotton fabrics, viz.: Scrims and window scrims, cambric cloths, muslin apron checks, brilliants, cords, piques, diapers, lenos, mosquito nettings; Swiss, jaconets and cambric muslins, and plain, striped or checked lawns, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

209. Manufactures composed wholly or in part of wool, 209. Manufactures composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca goat, or other like animals, viz.:—Blankets and flannels of every description; cloths, doeskins, cassimeres, tweeds, coatings, overcoatings, felt cloth of every description, N.E.S.; horse-collar cloth; yarn, knitten yarn, fingering yarn, worsted yarn, knitted goods, viz., shirts and drawers and hosiery, N.E.S., ten cents per pound and twenty per cent. ad valorem.
210. Plough plates, mould boards and land sides, when cut to shape from rolled sheets of crucible steel but not moulded, punched, polished or otherwise manufactured, and being of a greater value than four cents a pound, twelve and a half per cent. ad valorem.

nalorem

211. Wrought scrap iron and scrap steel, being waste or refuse wrought iron or seeel and fit only to be remanufactured, the same having been in actual use, not to include cuttings or clippings which can be used as iron or steel without re-manufacture,

212. Illuminating oils composed wholly or in part of the products of petroleum, coal, shale or lignite, costing more than thirty cents per gallon, twenty-five

13. Wrought iron or steel sheet or plate cuttings or clippings, as cut at the rolling mills or ship yards, and fit only for re-rolling and to be used for such purpose only, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

214. Sulphuric ether, five cents per pound.

3. Resolved, That it is expedient to repeal the following items in the Schedule "A" to the Act 49 Victoria, Chapter 33, Revised Statutes, intituled "An Act to amend the Duties of Customs," viz.:—items numbered 30, 210, 221, 416, 417, and to make further provisions, by adding to the schedules to the said Act as follows, viz.:—

SCHEDULE "A."

214a. Bird cages, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem. 214b. Brass and copper nails, rivets and burrs, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem. 214c. Boots and shoes, N.E.S., twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

214d. All manufactures of leather, N.E.S., twenty-five per cent, ad valorem.

214e. Barrels containing linseed oil, twenty-five cents each.

214/. Lime-juice, fortified, with or containing not more than twenty-five per cent. of proof spirits, sixty cents per gallon.

And when containing more than twenty-five per cent. of proof spirits, two dollars per gallon.

2142. Lime-juice, sweetened, and fruit syrups, N.O.P., 214g. Lime-juice, sweetened, and fruit syrups, N.O.P., forty cents per gallon.

214h. Lime-juice and other fruit juices, N.O.P., non-alcoholic, and not sweetened, ten cents per gallon.
214i. Grante and freestone, dressed; all other building stone dressed except marble, and all manufactures of stone, N.E.S., thirty-per cent. ad valorem.
214j. Grindstones, not mounted, and not less than twelve inches in diameter, two dollars per ton.
214k. India rubber clothing or clothing made waterproof with India rubber, N.E.S., thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

ad valorem.

214l. India rubber surfaced waterproof clothing, ten cents per pound and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem. 214m. Biscuits of all kinds not sweetened, twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

SCHEDULE "B."

215. Salmon, pickled or salted, one cent per pound. Subject to the provisions of Section 3, Chapter 33, 49th Victoria, Revised Statutes of Canada.
216. All other fish, pickled or salted in barrels, one cent per pound. Subject to the provisions of Section 3, Chapter 33, 49th Victoria, Revised Statutes of Canada.

SCHEDULE "C."

217. Admiralty charts.
218. Alkanet roots, crude, crushed or ground.
219. Precious stones, in the rough.
220. Aloes, ground or unground.
221. Alum, in bulk only, ground or unground.
Mr. FOSTER.

222. Aluminum or aluminium and alumina and chloride of aluminium or chloralum, sulphate of alumina and alum cake.

223. Anatomical preparations and skeletons or parts thereof.

224. Aniline dyes and coal tar dyes, in bulk or packages of not less than one pound weight, including alizarine and artificial alizarine.

225. Aniline salts and arseniate of aniline.

226. Antimony, not ground, pulverised or otherwise manufactured.

factured.

227. Ashes, pot and pearl, in packages of not less than twenty-five pounds weight.

228. Asphalt or asphaltum and bone pitch, crude only.

229. Argal or argols, not refined.

230. Beans, viz.:—Tonquin, vanilla and nux vomica, crude only.

231. Bells, when imported by and for the use of churches.

232. Bismuth metallic in its natural state.

233. Books printed by any Government or by any scientific association, for the promotion of learning, and letters and issued in the course of its proceedings and supplied graduitously to its members and not letters and issued in the course of its proceedings and supplied gratuitously to its members, and not for the purposes of sale or trade.

234. Books specially imported for bona fide use of public free libraries, not more than two copies of any one book; and books which shall have been printed and manufactured more than twenty years, bound

235. Borax, ground or unground, in bulk only, of not less than twenty-five pounds.

236. Botanical specimens.

237. Old scrap bruss and brass in sheets or plates of not less than four inches in width.

238. Fire bricks, for use exclusively in processes of manufactures.

239. Gold or silver bullion, in bars, blocks, or ingots, and bullion fringe.
240. Burrstones, in blocks, rough or unmanufactured, not bound up or prepared for binding into mill stones

241. Cups or other prizes won in competitions. 242. Cabinets of coins, collections of medals and of other antiquities.

243. Canvas of not less than forty-five inches in width, not pressed or calendered, for the manufacture of floor oilcloth.

244. Celluloid or xyolite in sheets, and in lumps, blocks or balls in the rough.

245. Chalk stone, china or Cornwall stone, feldspar, and cliff stone, ground or unground.

246. Citron rinds in brine. 247. Clays.

248. Anthracite coal and anthracite coal dust. 249. Cocoa beans, shells and nibs, not roasted, crushed or ground.

250. Communion plate, when imported by and for the use of churche

251. Copper in sheets or plates of not less than four inches in width.

252. Cotton yarns not coarser than No. 40, unbleached, bleached or dyed, for use in covering electric wires; also for the manufacture of cotton loom wires; also for the manufacture of cotton loom harness; and for use in the manufacture of Italian cloths, cotton, worsted or silk fabrics.

253. Cotton yarns in cops only, made from single cotton yarns finer than No. 40, when used in their own factories by the manufacturers of Italian cloths, cashmeres and cotton cloths for the selvages of said cloths, and for these purposes only.

254. Indian corn, viz.:—"Southern Dent Corn," of the variety known as Mammoth Southern Sweet, and "Western Dent Corn," of the variety known as Golden Beauty, when imported to be sown for soiling and ensilage, and for no other purpose, under regulations to be made by the Governor in Council. Council.

Council.

255. Colors, metallic, viz.:—Oxides of cobalt, zinc and tin, N.E.S.

256. Diamond drills, for prospecting for minerals, not to include motive power.

257. Diamonds unset, diamond dust or bort and black diamonds for borers.

258. Emery in blocks, crushed or ground. 259. Entomological specimens. 260. Extracts of logwood, fustic, oak, and of oak bark.

261. Mexican fibre, and tampico or istle.

262. Fish hooks, nets and seines, and fishing lines and twines, but not to include sporting fishing tackle or hooks with flies or trawling spoons, or threads or twines commonly used for sewing or manufacturing warnesses. turing purposes.

262. Foot grease, being the refuse of cotton seed after the oil has been pressed out, but not when treated with alkalies.

264. Fowls, domestic pure bred, for the improvement of

264. Fowls, domestic pure bred, for the improvement of stock, and pheasants and quails.
265. Gas coke (the product of gas works), when used in Canadian manufactures only.
266. Grease, rough, the refuse of animal fat, for the manufacture of soap only.
267. Gums, viz.: — Amber, Arabic, Australian, copal, damar, kaurie, mastic, sandarac, senegal, shellac: and white shellac; in gum or fake, for manufacturing purposes: and gum tragacanth, gum gedda and gum barberry.
268. Hair, cleaned or uncleaned but not appled or athered.

268. Hair, cleaned or uncleaned, but not curled or otherwise manufactured.

wise manufactured.
269. Indigo auxiliary or zinc dust.
270. Brass, copper, iron or steel, rolled round wire rods under half an inch in diameter, when imported by wire manufacturers for use in making wire in their factories.

271. Jute yarn, plain, dyed or colored, when imported by manufacturers of carpets, rugs and mats, and of jute webbing or jute cloth, for use in their own factories.

Kryolite or cryolite, mineral.

273. Liquorice root, not ground. 274. Litharge. 275. Lemon rinds, in brine.

275. Lemon rinds, in brine.
276. Lumber and timber planks and boards of amaranth, boxwood, cocaboral, cherry, chestnut, walnut, gumwood, mahogany, pitch pine, rosewood, sandalwood, sycamore, Spanish cedar, oak, hickory, whitewood, African teak, black heart ebony, lignum vitæ, red cedar, redwood, satinwood and white ash, when not otherwise manufactured than rough sawn or split; and hickory billets to be used in the manufacture of axe, hatchet, hammer and other tool handles, when specially imported for such use; and the wood of the persimmon and dogwood trees, when imported in blocks for the manufacture of shuttles; and hickory lumbersawn to shape for spokes of wheels, but not further manufactured; and hickory spokes rough turned, but not tenoned, mitred, throated, faced, sized, cut tolength, round tenoned or polished.
277. Locomotive and car wheel tires of steel, when in the rough.

rough.

278. Locust beans and locust bean meal for the manufacture of horse and cattle food.

279. Mineralogical specimens.
280. Mining machinery imported within three years after the passing of this Act which is, at the time of its importation, of a class or kind not manufactured in Canada.

in Canada.

281. Models of inventions and of other improvements in the arts; but no article or articles shall be deemed a model which can be fitted for use.

282. Iceland moss and other mosses, and seawed, crude or in their natural state or only cleaned.

283. Oil cake and oil cake meal, octton seed cake and cotton seed meal and palm nut cake and meal.

284. Oils, viz.:—Cocoanut and palm in their natural state.

285. Orange rinds in brine.

285. Orange rinds in brine. 286. Ottar or attar of roses and oil of roses.

286. Ottar or alum of the 287. Pelts, raw.
287. Pelts, raw.
288. Pipe clay, unmanufactured.
289. Platinum wire; and retorts, pans, condensers, tubing and pipe made of platinum, when imported by manufacturers of sulphuric acid for use in their works in the manufacture or concentration their works in the manufacture or concentration of sulphuric acid.

290. Rags of cotton, linen, jute, hemp and woollen, paper waste or clippings, and waste of any kind except mineral waste.
291. Rattans and reeds in their natural state.
292. Resin or rosin in packages of not less than one hundred pounds.
293. Roots, medicinal, viz.:—Aconite, calumba, ipecacuanha, sarsaparilla, squills, taraxicum, rhubarb and valerian.
294. Rubber crude.

and valerian.

294. Rubber crude.

295. Seed and breeding oysters, imported for the purpose of being planted in Canadian waters.

2952. Seedling stock for grafting, viz.:—Plum, pear, peach and other fruit trees.

296. Seeds, aromatic, which are not edible and are in a crude state, and not advanced in value or condition by grinding or refining or by any other process of manufacture, viz.: Anise, anise-star, caraway, cardsmom, coriander, cummin, fennel and fenument 2961. Silver, German silver and nickel silver, rolled or in 2905. Silver, terman silver and mekel silver, folded of a sheets.

297. Soda, sulphate of, crude, known as salt cake.
298. Soda ash, caustic soda in drums; silicate of soda in crystals or in solution: bichromate of soda, nitrate of soda or cubic nitre, salsoda; sulphide of sodium, arseniate, binarseniate, chloride and standard of sodium.

sodium, arseniate, binarseniate, chloride and stannate of soda.

299. Steel of No. 20 gauge and thinner, but not thinner than No. 30 gauge, to be used in the manufacture of corset steels, clock springs and shoe shanks; and flat wire of steel of No. 16 gauge or thinner, to be used in the manufacture of crinoline and corset wire, when imported by the manufacturers of such articles for use in their own factories.

300. Sulphate of iron (copperas); and sulphate of copper (blue vitriol).

Terra japonica or gambier or cutch. Ultramarine blue, dry or in pulp. Whiting or whitening, gilders' whiting and Paris white.

Wool and the hair of the Alpaca goat and of other like animals not further prepared than washed, N.E.S.

305. Books printed in any of the languages or dialects of any of the Indian tribes of the Dominion of Canada.

306. Brass and copper wire twisted, when imported by manufacturers of boots and shoes for use in their own factories.

307. Noils, being the short wool which falls from the combs in worsted factories.

308. Seeds, viz.:—Beet, carrot, turnip, mangold and mus-stard.

310. Crucible cast steel wire when imported by manufacturers of wire rope, pianos, card clothing and needles, for use in the manufacture of such articles in their own factories only.

311. Ribs of brass, iron or steel, runners, rings, caps, notches, ferrules, mounts and sticks or canes in the rough or not further manufactured than cut into lengths suitable for umbrella, parasol or sunshade sticks, when imported by manufacturers of umbrellas, parasols and sunshades for use in their factories in the manufacture of umbrellas, parasols and sunshades only.

312. Fruits, viz.:—Bananas, plantains, pine-apples, pomegranates, guavas, mangoes and shaddocks; and blueberries and strawberries, wild only.
313. Camwood and sumae for dyeing or tanning purposes when not further manufactured than crushed or ground.

314. Blood albumen, tannic acid, antimony salts, tartar emetic and grey tartar, when imported by manufacturers for use in their factories only.

315. Manufactured articles of iron or steel which at the time of their importation are of a class or kind not manufactured in Canada, when imported for use in the construction of iron or steel ships or vessels.

316. Wire of iron or steel, No. 13 and 14 gauge, flattened and corrugated, used in connection with the machine known as the wire grip machine for the manufacture of boots, shoes and leather belting, when imported by manufacturers of such articles to be used for these purposes only in their own factories.

317. Steel of No. 12 gauge and thinner, but not thinner than No. 30 gauge, when imported by manufacturers of buckle clasps and ice creepers, to be used in the manufacture of such articles only in their own factories

318. Blanketing and lapping and discs or mills for engra-ving copper rollers, when imported by cotton manufacturers, calico printers and wall paper manufacturers, for use in their own factories only.

319. Yarns, made of wool or worsted, when genapped, dyed and finished, and imported by manufacturers of braids, cords, tassels and fringes, to be used in the manufacture of such articles only in their own factories.
320. Chlorate of potash in crystals, when imported for manufacturing purposes only.

321. On imported Indian corn, to be kiln-dried and ground into meal for human food, or ground into meal and kiln-dried for such use, under such regulations as may be made by the Governor in Council, there may be allowed a drawback of ninety per cent. of the duty paid.

To amend Schedule "D" by striking out the following words which immediately precede item 813:—

"The following articles are prohibited to be imported under a penalty of two hundred dollars, together with the forfeiture of the parcel or package of goods in which the same are found, viz.:—"

"which the same are found, viz.:—"

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to repeal the following numbered items in the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 39, intituled "An Act to amend the Act respecting the Duties of Customs," viz.:—

Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 9, 14, 16, 18, 19, 20, 23, 25, 26, 31, 32, 34, 37, 39, 40, 44, 45, 72, 79, 80, 85, 92, 94, 95, 102, 103, 105, 106, 108, 113, 115, 116, 119, 120, 122, 130, 147, 148, 149, 150, 152, 153, 159, 163, 164, 165, 167, 168, 169, 171, 179, and by striking out from the said Act the following headings, viz.:—

The word "carriages," which immediately precedes item 11 in Section one.

The word "cottons," which immediately precedes item 21 in said Section one.

The words "Iron and Steel, manufactures of, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 39 in Section one.

The words "Iron and Steel, manufactures of, viz.:—" which immediately precede item 39 in Section one. The words "Tools and Implements," which immedia-tely precede item 142 in the said Section one. And the word "Woollens," which immediately pre-cedes item 155 in said Section one.

5. Resolved, That it is expedient to cancel certain Orders in Council made under the provisions of section 245, sub-section (1) of the "Customs Act." Chapter 52, Revised Statutes, transferring certain articles therein specified to the list of goods which may be imported into Canada free of duty, as follows, viz.:—
Sections 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12, 13, 17, 19, 21, 22 and 24 of Chapter 15, and the whole of Chapter 16 of the Consolidated Orders in Council of Canada, and the following as published in the Supplement to the said Orders in Council viz.

published in the Supplement of it, viz.:—

Special regulations re lithographic printing presses;
Special regulations re ferro-manganese, ferro-silicon, &c., passed on the 4th and 26th of June, 1889; and the following additions to the Free List as also published in said Supplement as items added to the said Free List, viz.

Re felloes of hickory wood, O.C. November 16th, 1888. Re homo-spring steel wire, O.C. December 6th, 1888. Re sulphate of alumina or alum cake, O.C. May 22nd, 1889.

Re sumac, O.C. June 4th, 1889.

Also the Orders in Council defining the rates of duty payable upon certain articles as follows, viz.:—
On celluloid balls, etc., O.C. April 12th, 1887.
On Vermouth bitters or Vermouth wine, O.C. August 25th, 1888.

On sapolio and silver soap, O.C. April 4th, 1889.
On veneers of wood, O. C. May 14th, 1889.
And the following transfers to the Free List, viz.:—
Wire, for the manufacture of wire cloth, etc., O.C.
May 14th, 1889.

Cotton yarn for covering wire, etc., O.C. May 14th, 1889. Jute yarn, O.C. May 14th, 1889. Wire of iron or steel for wire grip machines, O.C. May 14th, 1889.

14th, 1889.
Steel for the manufacture of buckle clasps, etc., O.C. May 14th, 1889.
Blanketing, lapping, etc., O.C. May 14th, 1889.
Yarns for the manufacture of braids, etc., O.C. May 14th, 1889.
White ash lumber, O.C. June 10th, 1889.
Camwood, O.C. June 10th, 1889.
Steel wire for the manufacture of pins, O.C. September 19th, 1889.

Steel wire for the manufacture of pins, O.C. September 19th, 1889.
Wire for crinolines, etc., O.C. September 19th, 1889.
Sulphate of soda, O.C. November 22nd, 1889.
Cotton yarn for loom harness, O. C. November 27th, 1889; and the Order in Council of May 14th, 1889, defining the rate of duty payable upon plough plates, mould boards, &c.

6. Resolved, That it is expedient to further amend the Act 49 Victoria, Chapter 33, Revised Statutes, intituled: "An Act respecting Duties of Customs," by striking out from the item 399 in the Schedule "A" to the said Act the word "ginger" in the second line of said item.

7. Resolved, That Section 7 of 49 Victoria, Chapter 33, Revised Statutes, be amended by adding at the end thereof the following words;—
"Provided this section shall not apply to the export of any carcass or part thereof of any deer which shall have been raised or bred by any person, company or association of persons, upon his or their own lands, under regulations to be adopted by the Governor in Council."

8. Resolved, That it is expedient to further amend the Act 49 Victoria, Chapter 33, Revised Statutes, intituled: "An Act respecting the Duties of Customs," by striking Mr. Foster.

out from item 46 (Act number) (217, Departmental number) the words "skelp iron sheared or rolled in grooves," And substituting therefor:
"Skelp iron sheared or rolled in grooves not wide.

Skelp iron sheared or rolled in grooves not wider than eight inches in width nor thinner than twenty gauge, until such time as it is manufactured in Canada, thirty per cent. ad valorem.

9. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the foregoing resolutions and the alterations thereby made in the duties of Customs on the articles therein mentioned, shall take effect on and after the twenty-eighth day of

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of the resolutions.

Mr. McMULLEN moved:

That the resolutions be not now read the second time, but be referred back to Committee of the Whole with the view of reducing the duty on binding twine and cordage. I intimated to the Government this afternoon that I would introduce this amendment if they did not change this provision in the tariff. I think, in view of the statement made in the Toronto Empire that the manufactures of twine and cordage are being bought up by a syndicate which desires to control this product, which is so much used by the farming community, the Government should have taken the hint and should have reduced the duty, even if it did not place it upon the free House divided on amendment of Mr. McMullen:

Messieurs

Innes, Jones (Halifax). Armstrong, Barron, Beausoleil, Laurier. Béchard, Lister, Bernier, Lovitt, McIntyre, McMillan (Huron), Blake, Borden, Bourassa, Bowman, Campbell, McMullen, Meigs, Mills (Bothwell), Cartwright (Sir Richard), Neveu, Platt, Robertson, Charlton Choquette, Čook, Rowand, Davies, Ellis, Ste. Marie, Scriver, Fiset, Gauthier, Semple, Trow, Trow, Waldie,
Weldon (St. John),
Wilson (Elgin),
Yeo.—44. Geoffrion, Guay, Hale, Holton.

NAYS:

Roome,

Messieurs

Audet. Bain (Soulanges), Baird, Barnard, Bell, Boisvert, Bowell, Boyle, Brown, Bryson, Cameron, Cargill, Carling, Caron (Sir Adolphe). Chapleau, Cimon, Cochrane, Cockburn, Colby, Coughlin, Coulombe, Daoust, Dawson, Denison. Dewdney, Langevin (Sir Hector), LaRivière,

Laurie (Lieut.-Gen.),
Lépine,
Macdonald (Sir John),
McDonald (Victoria),
McDongald (Pictou),
McDougall (Cape Breton), McGreevy,
McKay. McGreev McKay, McKeen, McNeill, Madill, Mara, Masson, Moncrieff, Montague, Montplaisir, O'Brien, Patterson (Essex), Porter, Putnam, Riopel, Rykert, Dickey, Shanly, Small, Smith (Ontario), Dickinson, Dupont, Earle, Ferguson (Welland), Sproule, Stevenson, Foster, Freeman, Gigault, Taylor, Thérien, Thompson (Sir John), Tisdale, Tyrwhitt, Girouard, Grandbois, Guillet, Vanasse, Hall, Wallace, Hesson, Hickey, Ward, Ward, Wilmot, Wilson (Lennox). Wood (Brockville)—85. Ives, Jones (Digby), Kenny, Kirkpatrick, Amendment negatived.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is one other item in this tariff which, I think, in the interest of the country, should not be adopted, and that is the duty on nursery stock. I, therefore, move:

That the said resolutions be not now read the second time, but that they be referred back to Committee of the whole House with instructions to strike out the duty imposed upon nursery stock.

Amendment negatived on the same division.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I wish to read a letter which I have received from one of my con-

"Dear Sir.—If you have an opportunity, will you please correct the statement made by Minister Foster that the duties on nursery stock ordered before the existing duty was re-imposed would have to be paid by the shipper or agent of the house selling the goods.' He is mistaken, or ignorant of what he is talking about. Our neighbors do not do business that way.

"I had a few things ordered before anything was heard of putting on the present duty, and I find I will now have to pay $10 or $12 duty on the stock I have coming in. I had to wait until the proper time came for shipping, and now must pay this outrageous duty, which on many things is much more than their cost.

now must pay this outrageous duty, which on many things is much more than their cost.

"I am not alone. I know of four or five others in the same fix. My loyalty, as loyalty is understood at Ottawa, is gradually dwindling away; I will not be troubled with it very long."

Mr. PLATT moved:

That the resolutions be not now read the second time, but that they be referred back to Committee of the Whole House with instructions to remove the duty upon coal oil, refined, and used for illuminating purposes.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Mr. TAYLOR moved:

That the said resolutions be not now concurred in but that they be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend the same by providing that all cheese imported into Canada for export be branded by the Customs authorities as follows:—"Cheese for export, the product of the United States."

I may just say in connection with this motion, that I brought this matter before the attention of the House some two years ago. Shortly afterwards there was a meeting of the Dairymen's Association, and the matter was discussed by them and they represented to the members of the Government that such action was not at all necessary. I hold in my hand a circular issued from Liverpool, England, in regard to this matter, which I will read:

"THE LIVERPOOL PROVISION TRADE ASSOCIATION AND EXCHANGE COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Secretary's Office, 24 North John Street, "Liverpool, 26th March, 1890.

"Dear Sir,—We desire to inform you that a Committee consisting of the undersigned has been appointed by this Association to watch the interests of the cheese trade, which are being seriously menaced by the continued increase in the manufacture of the article known as 'Filled' Cheese. 119

"We desire to co-operate with you in the direction of obtaining such legislation as will lead to the suppression of the manufacture of this article.

"The legitimate interests of the 'trade' are seriously imperilled, and the reasonable expectation of the consumer disappointed, and we are clearly of opinion that the distribution of 'Filled' Cheese is disgusting the British public with the pure article, and that our trade and mutual interests are in danger of suffering a permanent and lasting injury.

"We are in communication with our home sanitary-permanent and lasting injury.

"We are in communication with our home sanitaryauthorities, and are placing the matter before our Agricultural Government Department, and members of theHouse of Commons.

"We venture to suggest that you should call upon your Government and State Legislatures to prohibit the manufacture of these goods.

"We would ask you to inform us what steps are being: taken on your side, and what course should, in your opinion, be adopted to bring about the end we have in view.

"We await the favor of your reply.

"Yours faithfully.
"W. CARSON.
"A. W. DUNN.
"J. L. GRANT.
"C. HOLLAND.
"T. LONSDALE.
"SAMUEL WHITE.
"J. S. HARWOOD BANNER, Secretary."

This is a circular issued by the principal cheese dealers in the old country, who, I am sure, are purchasing cheese imported from Canada and they believe it to be the product of Canada, while in fact it is the product of the United States; for I do not believe that we have in Canada, any manufacturers of bogus cheese, cheese filled with cotton What they call in England "filled cheese" is adulterated cheese, cheese made out of a mixture of milk and cotton seed oil. This, if allowed to continue, will bring the cheese of Canada into disrepute in the English market, and I think it is high time that the Government should immediately take some action and apply the law so that when cheese is imported into this country for export, wherever it is bonded, the Customs officer receiving the cheese and placing it in bond, should be furnished with a stamp, and he should stamp not only the box, but the cheese, with the words "Cheese for export, the product of the United States." Then, when that cheese is placed on the market in England, it will be plain for the consumer to see that it is not an article of Canadian manufacture. The importance of the cheese trade to Canada is very great. I hold in my hand a circular containing a statement that four factories in the western part of Ontario last year produced 11,000,000 pounds of cheese, which brought a sum of $969,760, nearly $1,000,000. We have too large a production of cheese to allow our market to be imperilled by the export from this country of adulterated cheese from the United States, and being sold in the English market as Canadian Therefore I hope that the Government cheese. will consider this matter seriously and take the steps that are necessary to protect the credit of our cheese on the English market.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would ask the hon. gentleman to point out what relation this amendment has to the tariff, in what way the result he is aiming at can be attained. I do not see that it has any relation to the tariff.

Mr. TAYLOR. I fancy the tariff is dealing with the Customs regulations, and this is a matter, I think, that the Customs can deal with better than any other Department of the Government. If my resolution is out of order, or not relevant, I am prepared to withdraw it with the understanding that the Government will deal with the question at the next Session of Parliament.

Mr. CHARLTON. The matter has been brought to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture by a deputation of cheese makers from Western Ontario. I visited the hon. gentleman in company with the deputation, and I think the Government are disposed to take the steps that are necessary in this matter, and I would suggest to my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) that the matter be left in the hands of the Government. The deputation of cheese makers were entirely satisfied with the representations made by the Minister of Agriculture, and no doubt proper steps will be taken by the Customs authorities to put an end to this abuse, that no doubt does exist with regard to the exportation of American cheese passing through Canada in bond, which is then sold in England as Canadian cheese, but which is in fact a spurious and inferior article that has worked an injury to our own cheese interest.

Mr. TROW. I highly approve of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor)-

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind hon. members that the motion has been ruled out of order, and it cannot be discussed.

Mr. FOSTER. You might allow me for a moment to say to the hon. gentleman that although his motion has been ruled out of order, the very important subject he has brought to the attention of the Government will certainly receive the necessary consideration at our hands.

Motion agreed to, resolutions read the second time and concurred in, on a division.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 143) to amend the Act respecting the Duties of Customs.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Secretary and Chief Clerk Railways and Canals..... $2,800

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The right hon. the First Minister promised an explanation in regard to this increase.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The salary of the Secretary and Chief Clerk of the Department of Railways and Canals is at present $2,400, and it is proposed to increase it to $2,800. This increase arises from the importance of the officer's duties, and the admirable manner in which he performs them. Mr. Bradley, as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) will remember, performs the double duty of Secretary of the Department as well as the duty appertaining to a chief clerk. He is one of the best officers in the whole of the service. He has, practically, charge of the organisation of the whole of the Department of Railways and Canals, both branches of the Department being under his supervision; and, as a special mark of approbation for his great desired to give him this promotion. A similar act of gratitude, I may say, for faithful service, was done in the case of Mr. Hall of the Department of the Interior. I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will not object to this increase.

I think there are sufficient Mr. McMULLEN. grounds for objecting to this increase. who receives a salary of $2,400 a year, with the prospect of superannuation, receives a sufficient salary, and it is unfair that the Committee should be asked to consent to this increase. When once the principle is admitted that a servant who thinks himself entitled to exceptional consideration is able to secure from the Government a recommendation for an additional salary to be presented to this House, all sorts of applications will be submitted by men occupying similar positions in other Departments, and the result will be that we will have applications from year to year. When civil servants are engaged to discharge particular duties, there should be a distinct understanding in regard to the increases in their salaries. If the increase is to be $50 a year, which is the ordinary standard, that principle should be strictly adhered to, without any exceptions being made. If they are entitled to retiring allowances under the Superannuation Act, they look forward to such an allowance to support them after they have retired from the service. If you admit that an increased amount should be granted for special services you break through the principle established, and, as a result, you will have a large number of applications for increases, and all sorts of influence exercised to secure them. This increase should not be agreed to on this ground. Mr. Bradley may be a very efficient officer, and no doubt he is; I do not know what particular duties he performs, but a man who gets $200 a month for his services is fairly well paid; and it is unfair to ask this Committee to make an exception in his case, and add $400 a year to his salary.

Towards establishment and mainten-ance of Experimental Farms..... $75,000

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Before entering into a criticism of this item, I may say that I have examined the report of the Minister of Agriculture, and I consider that it is high time a change should be made in the report of these farms. I criticise this report I wish it to be distinctly understood that I believe the hon. Minister and the professor in charge of the experimental stations are doing the best they can to make them a success. But in order that they may be successful and that the farmers may derive that benefit to which they are entitled from the large experiments made, there must be considerable change in the manner of getting up the report. Each experimental farm should give a financial statement, and a statement in detail of all the expenditures of the farm. instance, the statement shows that during last year $12,660 were expended for labor upon this experimental farm of 450 acres, and during the last three years no less than $39,000 were expended. That amount would keep a gang of 42 men, paid one dollar a day the year round, summer and winter, which is a large number to be kept on such a farm. I say there should be a change in the pre-paration of the report. There should be a statement given of the amount of labor required to run abilities, and his great zeal and earnestness, it is the farm properly; there should be a statement of Mr. TAYLOR.

the amount required to run the experimental portion of the farm; a statement of the amount the horticulturist requires for labor, and this should be divided into branches for raising small fruits and vegetables, and further a statement from the horticulturist of the amount of labor required for raising and distributing trees. A very large amount of grain has been distributed from the farm all over the country, and the amount of labor should be taken from that and credited. In justice not only to the farmers of the Dominion, but in justice to the managers of the Central Farm itself, it is an actual necessity that this ought to be done, in order that the farmers may understand correctly what amount of labor is spent on the farm proper, and what amount is spent on experiments. I may be told by the Minister; that we can find all these things in the Auditor General's Report, but I would ask how many of the farmers of the Dominion of Canada, even if they do see the report of the Minister of Agriculture and the report of the Experimental Stations, have the opportunity of seeing the Auditor General's Report, and making an examination of that in connection with the farm. We should also have the statement, every year, of the number of horses kept on the farm, the number kept for general farm purposes, the number kept for experimental purposes, and the number kept for driving purposes, with their values. We should also have a statement of the stock kept on the farmand the value of that stock, together with the prices paid for the stock and the prices obtained for them when they are sold. Where animals are purchased as they have been on some of the experimental stations, for fattening purposes, we should have a statement of the weight of the animals and what was paid for them. have a statement of what was paid for certain animals on the Nappan Farm, but we should also be told their weight at the time they were purchased, and at the time they were sold, the prices realised, and the manner in which they were fed, for I hold that every operation on these farms ought to be of an experimental nature. Then, when we come down to the farms proper, we ought to have a statement of land under crop, and the description of the crop, and we ought also to be told what the crop was that preceded the crop men-tioned in the report. We ought to be told whether manure was applied to the farm, or how long ago since manure was previously applied, because every agriculturist knows that the success of a crop depends in a great measure upon the condition of the land, and the condition of the land depends on the amount of manure that has been applied, and the length of time since it has been applied. It is admitted by practical agriculturists, that not more than half the manure is taken out by the first crop, so that three or four, or perhaps five years will run around before the entire effects of the coating of manure will be exhausted. It is impossible for farmers to gain any benefit from that report unless they know the previous crop that has been in the field, the manner in which the soil has been cultivated, and everything in connection with it. I may be told that this is going into very minute details; but since we have gone to such a large expenditure in establishing these farms, the country is entitled to the fullest de-tails. We find in last year's report, that fiftythree varieties of corn had been set on the experimental farm to be tried for corn fodder or for ensilage, and we are told that certain fertilisers have been used, but the report ends there. I expected, when we got the report this year, that we would have a statement of their experience with respect to ensilage. I find merely the statement that they are going on experimenting with a certain number of varieties of corn; but there is no result given with respect to the variety which produced the best results, or the benefit of the fertilisers. I find that on the Central Farm, they have put up a silo last year. I saw the silo myself, and I was well pleased to see the ensilage was excellent food, but when we get the report, it is perfectly dumb with regard to that, except that the silo has been built. The farmers of Canada are all watching the experimental farm, and are awaiting all the information they can get with respect to the success of silos. I hold that every year the experimental farm should give us their experience with all fodder corns, to the cost of their silos. This is something which has been asked at every farmers' meeting I have attended for the last twelve months. We get none of this information now, but I hope we will get it in time to come. Again, we find in the report last year, that there were some 251 varieties of potatoes, and that a certain amount of manure had been purchased, but there is nothing with respect to the We are told that perhaps this will be left for a bulletin to be issued at a future time. hold that all the experience gained on that farm, and every detail in connection with it, ought to be embodied in the annual report, from year to year, so that any practical farmer throughout the country can take the report and compare the progress of the farm each year, and that he can compare what is being done with what has been done. If we get this information in bulletins, it will be spread through the country, no doubt, but the farmers of the country cannot make the same comparison as they could if it were published in the report. I hold hat bulletins ought to be supplementary to the annual report of each farm. I may be told that this would require a great amount of labor, and that it would be very voluminous, but seeing that we have voted up to the present year over $400,000, for the establishment and maintenance of these stations, I hold that the farmers of the Dominion should have the fullest information in every respect. I am pleased to see that on the Nappan Farm, we got a very good description of the work there. They have given us the number of rods drained and the cost of the drains, but they have neglected to state the depth of the drains and the description of the soil. We can tell the cost of these drains, but we cannot in reality tell whether it is at a high rate or at a low rate, unless we knew the depth the drains were put into the earth, and the quality of the soil. These are all experiments the result of which the farmers of the Dominion are entitled to, because there is no information which the farmer requires to-day more than a thorough knowledge of drainage, and I am sorry we have no account of that from the Experimental Farm, in Ottawa, except the statement that there are some fourteen or fifteen miles of covered drains, and so many of open ditches. I hold that we are entitled to get a statement of the cost of the covered drains, and whether they are made in ordinary clay or in clay loam, and whether rocks had to be blasted or not. There are many farmers who would be willing to go into farms to improve them, but they want to know something about the cost, and they are all looking to the experimental farms for information on this subject. It is time we had a correct report, in every respect, with reference to these farms, seeing the enormous amount of money that has been spent on them. I will give the House now a few items of the expenditure on this farm. I find that there was expenditure on this farm. I find that there was expended in labor on the Ottawa farm, in 1887, $6,425; in 1888, $20,861, and in 1889, $12,662, or a total sum of $39,949. This would keep up a gang of 40 men for 313 days at $1 per day. I would like to ask what wages are paid to the permanent hands, and if they are hired by the day, the month or the year?

1191

Mr. CARLING. I think they are hired by the week, and they are paid $1.25 per day.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I say that on a farm like this, the hands ought to be permanent and hired by the year. The Finance Minister may laugh and grin at it, but he only shows his ignorance of the condition of affairs in the country. There is no practical and thoroughly posted farmer in the country who does not hire his hands permanently from one year's end to the other, and I hold that the wage of $1.25 per day is higher than the farmers thoroughout the country are paying by a large amount. If they paid $313 a year, that would be $1 per day, summer and winter. I have compared what is paid on this farm with what the farmers are paying their men in Ontario, and I find that men are hired in Ontario by the year, and boarding themselves, for from $251 to $254 on the average. But I think it only fair that the men employed on this model farm should receive $1 a day, or $313 a year, because the men hired on an ordinary farm receive some little perquisites, which men employed on this farm do not get. I do not think the Government should introduce a system of extravagance in conducting this farm, and I hold that good practical men, can be got for $1 a day the year round. Then I find that for teams there was expended in 1888, $5,361, and in 1889, $1,576, besides what was spent for labor. I would ask how many teams are kept on the farm?

Mr. CARLING. We have six working teams on the farm. The teams to which the hon. gentleman refers were engaged in clearing the land, which was in a very rough state when we bought it. We had to clear 150 acres, and the teams were mostly employed at that time. I may say that the wages paid to the teamsters are $1.25 a day during the summer months, and $1 a day during the winter.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). The next item I come to is manure. This is one of the questions which is agitating the farmers of the Dominion to-day, especially in the older settlements, how a soil that is worn down can be recuperated by the products of that soil. Any farmer can recuperate a wornout soil if he has sufficient money to spend for manure to put upon it; but on this experimental farm green crops ought to be grown and experimented with thoroughly, with the view of ascertaining how a worn-out soil can be renovated.

Mr. McMillan (Huron).

During 1887 there was spent on manure $1,682. during 1888 $1,379, and during 1889 $252; in all, $3,315. Now, if a large amount of manure is to be used, a portion of this farm ought to be set aside to be well manured, and the proceeds of that portion should be kept by themselves. Then the results would be ascertained, and you would find how many cattle could be kept on a given quantity of land. An experiment like that would certainly be beneficial to the farmers. I find that on implements $2,643 was spent I do not say that there are more implements on this farm than it requires. A large farm like this should have a large supply of implements; it requires more than an average farm, and I do not say that the expenditure on implements has been extravagant. But on harness there has been spent $611, which amounts to $100 for each of the six teams. That is a very large amount to spend on harness on a farm like that. The next item is law expenses, on which there was spent in 1888 $1,255, and in 1889 $2,805.

Mr. CARLING. I think a question was asked early this Session with reference to those expenses, and I explained that we had no law expenses in connection with the farm at the present time at all. All those expenses were in connection with the title to the property. There were fifteen or sixteen holders whose properties we had to expropriate, and we had to employ the law officers to see that we had a good title. We had to pay them, together with witnesses and arbitrators. But there have been no law expenses since.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Then, how come they to appear in the accounts for 1889?

Mr. CARLING. They were not paid until that year.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I find in the last Auditor General's Report that the firm, which had already been paid $1,000, was paid over $2,000 more last year. The explanation given by the hon. Minister of Agriculture was that that firm had been engaged to go around with the arbitrators, and that that was their fee.

Mr. CARLING. That firm was employed by the Government to look after the titles and see that everything was correct, and to attend the arbitrators, and, I think, their charge was not too much. We had to have an arbitration with regard to nearly almost every piece of land we obtained, and in every case the Government had to pay the expenses of both sides; and I do not think, for the fourteen or fifteen cases, the expenses were very large.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). There are no witness expenses for last year, and I was led to believe that the title was completed. There is another individual here, a Mr. McCracken, who had a bill in 1888, and who had another in 1889.

Mr. CARLING. That gentleman was employed on the other side, and we had to pay his expenses, because the arbitrators so decided.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). That is the very answer given us to the bill of over $300. Here is another bill of over $400 paid to that same gentleman.

Mr. CARLING. These gentlemen were not employed by the Government at all, but by the parties who own the property.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Are the titles complete?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Here is a little sum that may appear very insignificant, but which the farmers will require to have accounted for. For surcingles and horse covers and rugs, $165, since that farm was established. If the farm is to be a model for farmers to go by, it should have everything which is actually necessary, but on as economical a principle as possible. Then, with respect to fertilisers, I find $38 for potato manure, but in the report we cannot tell what benefit the manure was, whether the potatoes to which it was applied excelled the other potatoes. Then we have other fertilisers to the amount of $252. We ought to have a correct statement of all the fertilisers, the land they have been applied to, and what special benefits have been derived from their use, and there ought to be a part of every field left without being subjected to any fertiliser of any description. The next item is a purchase of cattle. Seven cows and one horse have been bought at $948, but I find that the amount it cost to purchase these is $392. I find a statement here with respect to services of Mr. Sharp for travelling and purchasing horses. Who is Mr. Sharp?

Mr. CARLING. Heistheagriculturistappointed in British Columbia, and he was engaged making these purchases.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I have not the least doubt that it is necessary to spend a certain amount of money, but we should have a statement of the different animals, and the price paid for each. I see there has been a little loss, such as will take place on every farm. Two animals died of inflammation of the stomach; we ought to have a statement in the annual report of the treatment by the veterinary surgeon, and what he considered the cause of the disease. What is the benefit of an institution like this unless everything, favorable and unfavorable, is laid before the country?

Mr. CARLING. The veterinary surgeon, after making the examination, gave us this statement: A Jersey cow took suddenly ill and died in a short time. A post mortem examination showed that the tissues of the stomach were much diseased, and the veterinary surgeon was of opinion that the cow had died of inflammation of the stomach.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Then we find cartage, express and freight, $1,361. What was this for ?

Mr. CARLING. On the tiles purchased for the drains, we had to pay freight and charges, and they had to be brought out by teams.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Farm teams or hired

Mr. CARLING. It depended upon whether at the time the farm teams were engaged on the farm.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). How many driving horses are there on the farm?

Mr. CARLING. Two driving horses belonging to the Government, and six working horses.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I find the sum of $224 here for cab hire.

Mr. CARLING. While the work was going on and during the Session of Parliament, a number of distinguished people have come to Ottawa with | Columbia, will be completed this year.

the view of visiting the farm. I have taken them out at times, and have often taken a cab myself to go out and visit the farm during the progress of the work. It was necessary to pay some attention to the visitors and show them the advantages of the farm, and I do not think the amount spent is a large one.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I find the use of a horse for twenty-one days charged.

Mr. CARLING. One of the horses was sick, and a horse was hired in its place.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I find on the Nappan farm that there were twelve steers bought for the farm, for which $344 were paid. Are those the same steers of which there is a description given in the report of the revenue derived from the farm?

Mr. CARLING. These were steers bought and fed with the products of the farm, and sold again. I suppose they are the same ones.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). With respect to the other farms, considering they are just newly established, I am pretty much pleased with the report they give. They give careful reports with respect to experiments on different varieties of grain. One thing lacking, except in one of the reports, is the number of acres under crop. Each farm should give the number of acres in crop, and the fields of each farm should be numbered and a correct account kept, so that we would know what labor has been expended, and the result obtained. I approve of the system of distributing grain, and some of the grains distributed have been very beneficial to the farmers. I received myself in the spring of 1888 two little bags of grain, two and a-half lbs. of barley. I grew them the first year, believing they were two varieties, but we could not distinguish them, although we kept them apart. I sowed them last year and found them again the same variety of barley, but one of the best variety we have ever had. I think a strict account should be kept of the quantity of grain, and its value should be entered as revenue to the farm. In regard to the buildings, I find we have spent a great deal of money on the Central Farm, about $258,000. The Minister of Agriculture told us that the farm here would be established at the cost of about $160,000. I find that we had an estimate of the expenditure on the farm here of $17,200 on barns, $18,140 on the staff residences and about $5,000 on the fences, making $40,300 on the buildings and fencing. But up to May, 1888, we find that the expenditure ran up to $59,006. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture if the buildings on the Central Farm are nearly completed?

Mr. CARLING. I think they are all completed except some small buildings for experimental dairies.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I would ask if the buildings on the other farms are let by contract, what the contracts are, and if they are nearly completed?

Mr. CARLING. The buildings at Indian Head are completed. The buildings at Brandon are contracted for, and will be completed during the present summer. The buildings at Agassiz, British

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I see that for the buildings at Indian Head $29,000 were expended up to the 1st July, 1889, and $39,000 were spent at Nappan. I would ask what is the contract on the Agassiz farm?

Mr. CARLING. The contract for the building at Agassiz has not yet been let. We are now asking for tenders.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Returning to the building at Ottawa, I was out on the farm and I saw a hen-house about 100 feet long and 20 feet wide in the centre which cost $3,000. Was that contracted for, and was there any advertisement for tenders?

Mr. CARLING. It was advertised for by the Minister of Public Works and let in the same way as usual.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Was the contract let to the lowest tenderer?

Mr. CARLING. That is the usual practice.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I know something about that business, and I could have put up the building for about one-fourth of what it has cost. Of course, I know that the Government always pay more than a farmer would pay, but I think that was a most exorbitant price for the building. Then there is a root-house there. What material is that composed of?

Mr. CARLING. It is founded on cedar posts. and constructed of good material.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I see that has cost $1,111. Certainly, stone would have been much preferable to timber for a root-house, because timber will throw a certain amount of heat, and that building should not have been put up in that way. Besides that, it is built in a very inconvenient place. One of the first things to be considered in building a root-house is convenience and economy in getting the roots in and taking them out to feed animals, but this is not in a place convenient for either purposes, and I also consider that this is a most exorbitant sum for the building of that house.

Mr. CARLING. Does the hon. gentleman know the length of that building?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I should say it was about 80 feet.

Mr. CARLING. It is 100 feet long by 25 feet wide.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Then I find a charge of $829 for alterations to Baxter's cottage. One would imagine that buildings put up at so large a cost would not require alterations so soon. What was wrong with Baxter's cottage?

Mr. CARLING. It was a cottage removed from one of the lots, and it was practically rebuilt.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I see also there is an amount of $1,684 for alterations to other buildings.

Mr. CARLING. I can hardly explain to the hon. gentleman all these particulars, because they come more under the Department of Public Works than under my Department, but I have no doubt that these alterations were required in connection with the very large number of buildings on the farm.

Mr. CARLING.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I see that something like $1,000 has been expended for heating apparatus and material. I am afraid the system adopted has not been a very judicious one. I have been told that, in one of the buildings, it took twenty one tons of coal to keep it heated during the winter. That shows that the system adopted was not ter. That shows that the system adopted was not very judicious, and I suppose it was in one of those buildings that it was found necessary to make this change.

Mr. CARLING. It was found necessary to put some additional coils in these buildings, but the parties themselves furnished the coal.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Here is F. Germain, work paid on contract, $348. What was his contract?

Mr. CARLING. When part of the land was purchased there was upon it a building partly finished. We found it necessary to have it finished for the use of a couple of workmen and their families, and a contract was let for plastering, painting and doing other things to complete it.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Here is a large quantity of timber, 13,710 feet, and another lot of 12,740 feet. Was this timber used on any of the buildings, or was it for fencing?

Mr. CARLING. I cannot give the particulars just now, but the timber was used in constructing some sheds and some temporary buildings.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Here is another matter. Last year I put the question to the Minister whether any of the staff on the farm was to receive any perquisites except their salaries, and the Minister replied that no perquisites were to be given; the Government were to give a salary and furnish a house, and that was all. I find here that Prof. Saunders got a house furnished at a cost of $2,242. Now, while I believe that every individual should be fully paid, I believe that a salary should be given and that no house should be furnished for any officer. Let the Government give the house, but let each officer furnish his own house. That is a far better way. This is certainly a large perquisite.

Mr. CARLING. It is not a perquisite, because it was in the agreement with Prof. Saunders when we engaged him, that the house should be built and that ordinary furniture should be put into the house.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Then the Minister in his reply last year saying that no perquisite was to be given—

Mr. CARLING. What I understood by the hon. gentleman's use of the word "perquisites" was that the officers should have something in addition to their salary, which is not the case. It was part of the contract that a house should be built, and furnished with ordinary furniture.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). It ought to stop there; it is a bad system indeed. We have had a great deal of discussion here with respect to one institution that is furnished at a large amount of cost, and if all the officials on the farm were to have their houses furnished, we would have another similar state of things. Here is a little sum that I see by the Auditor General's statement, that was paid outside the Order in Council. Has that been refunded?

Mr. CARLING. In relation to that sum mentioned by the hon. gentleman I would like to read a letter written by Prof. Saunders to myself in relation to it:

"OTTAWA, 3rd February, 1890.

"To the Honorable "The Minister of Agriculture.

"To the Honorable
"The Minister of Agriculture.
"Sir.—In looking over the report of the Auditor General for the year ending 30th June, 1889, I have read with some surprise, a letter published by him at the foot of page 242 D, which will, I fear, produce a false impression. The letter is dated 14th January, 1889, and states in regard to the supply of some crockery and mattresses in furnishing the house I occupy, that the Order in Council which authorises the furnishing of the house expressly excludes articles of these classes, and calls for a refunding of the money expended on these items. The conclusion which would be reached by most readers on seeing this document, would be, that this was a case where the party in question had succeeded in obtaining, at the public expense, articles for his own use in direct violation of an Order in Council, that attention had been called to it nearly a year ago, and no answer having been received, and no restitution being made, the Auditor General had felt it his duty to call attention to it, by placing his letter in an unusual position, at the foot of the page on which the items occur. In justice to myself, permit me to state the facts. In the first place, the letter is wrongly dated. It was written on the 14th January, 1890, not 1899, and the Auditor General's Report was submitted (see page 3) on the following day, 15th January, 1890. The official copy of the Order in Council, relating to my appointment as director of experimental farms, which was sent to me from your Department, and which I herewith submit, stated that the house was to be provided with the necessary furniture, except bedding, cutlery and plate, and when the question of supplies was being discussed, this copy was produced by me, and the necessary articles were furnished, in accordance therewith, by the Department of Public Works. Now, until after the Auditor General's Report was printed did I learn that the word crockery was associated with cutlery in the original Order in Question to the Secretary of the De time for an explanation.

"I have the honor to be "Your obedient servant,
"WM. SAUNDERS."

That is the explanation I have to give, and I think the hon, gentleman will admit that Mr. McDougall was very unfair towards Professor Saunders, because he only notified him on the 14th, and had his report sent to the printers on the 15th. It appears in the report that Professor Saunders' letter was written in 1889, instead of 1890.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). As I understand it the Auditor General has got to act strictly under the Order in Council, and if he finds anything paid outside of that, it is his duty to take action at once; he is not to know one individual from another. I would ask the hon. Minister if there good cattle who has not a thoroughly posted herdsman. It is of the utmost necessity in a place where there is such a large amount of money being spent on cattle of various breeds, that a skilful man should be in charge of them.

Mr. CARLING. We have a thoroughly posted herdsman who has had ten or twelve years' experience on the farm of Mr. Gibson, who, as the hon. gentleman knows, is a very excellent farmer.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Are you consuming on the farm all the feed you produce, or are you bringing some of it into Ottawa in the shape of straw taken from the farm? One of the advantages of this experimental farm is to show how many animals can be kept on it, and in order that this can be done, everything produced must be consumed on the farm. If this course is not followed, the farmers are not benefited by the course pursued on this experimental farm. We all know that farmers settled near large cities are in a different position in regard to procuring manure than the general run of farmers in the country. But this farm should be conducted on principles so that farmers all over the country can pursue a similar course to that followed here. All the food produced on the farm should be consumed on the farm, and as many animals should be kept as possible, in order to show the farmers what can be done in this direction, because the most successful farmers to-day are those who are able to keep the largest number of stock on the smallest quantity of land.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman is aware that this is practically a new farm; at least the land had been tilled, but it had been worn out to a certain extent. It was necessary, as we had not a large number of stock, that we should procure manure for the farm. We did not sell the straw, but we arranged that in the winter our men should come into the city, obtain manure, and give straw in exchange.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I disagree with the hon. Minister, Every practical farmer will agree with me that if our farmers are to benefit from this experimental farm it must be conducted on lines which they can follow. It is impossible for them to follow the experiments made on this farm, which is supplied with manure not made on the

Mr. CARLING. If we had a small farm of 50 or 100 acres we should not require all this manure; but we have a farm of between 400 and 500 acres, which we are only getting into good condition, and of course it requires time and continuous supplies to get the farm properly manured. The committee will agree with me that we acted wisely, before we had stock, in making an exchange with the people of the city, according to the custom of the place, in giving straw for manure. When the farm is in proper condition we do not intend to have a full supply of stock on the farm. I suppose stock for 500 acres would be 150 to 200 head, but we do not intend to keep more than are sufficient to experiment with. We have already 4 or 5 different breeds, Holsteins, Short-horns, Jerseys, Ayrshires, and Polled Angus. We are experimenting with is a thoroughly posted herdsman in charge of the these breeds; but, of course, we do not intend to cattle, who knows exactly about feeding and keep a large number. When the calves grow up, breeding animals. No farmer will keep a herd of they will be sent to the experimental farms in British Columbia, or Indian Head, or Brandon, or We do not intend to compete with the farmers, but we intend to make experiments and give the results of our experiments to the farmers of the country. The hon, gentleman has said we do not give sufficient information, that all the details and information should be given to the farmers. I quite agree with the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), but it will be seen that Professor Saunders states in his report that bulletins will be issued covering these particulars. All this work, however, requires This report is prepared for time to accomplish. the calendar year ending 31st December, and it was with great difficulty we could get such a report of 150 pages ready to present to the House. But Professor Saunders is taking great care to have all the particulars with respect to corn, barley, wheat, pease, and oats, and other products of the farm properly arranged; and no doubt in a short time they will be given to the public; and when the hon. gentleman receives these bulletins, no doubt he will be satisfied that they contain all the particulars. The hon, gentleman has referred to the cost of these farms. The Central Farm, covering about 500 acres, is situated near the city of Ottawa and has an excellent site and it possesses all the different varieties of soil we require for experimental purposes; and we have selected all the farms in the other Provinces with the same object in view. The hon. gentleman is a member of the advisory board of the Guelph farm, and no doubt he knows what that has cost. No doubt he is aware that that farm up to the present time has cost something like $400,000, and it has been in operation a great many years. I think considering we have a farm nearly as large as the one at Guelph, that the expenditure has been not at all out of the way.

Mr. SPROULE. I suggest to the hon. Minister that, when the bulletins are issued, the name of the subject dealt with should be placed on the outside for convenience of reference. I do not agree with the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) that the annual report should contain all the particulars he thinks it should embrace, because it must be got out in time for the Session of Parlia-If it contained all the particulars suggested it would be very bulky and expensive, and perhaps it would form one of the items of expense criticised by the hon. gentleman. It is to be regretted that he, as a practical farmer, should make an attack on an institution in which the agriculturists are directly interested. It is a very important and valuable institution, and it will issue, from time to time, information which will be of the greatest importance to the farmers. It should be the last institution against which the hon, gentleman should say one word. No doubt the hon, gentleman is justified in urging the reduction of the expenditure as far as possible; but in criticising the expenditure up to the present time, he has overlooked the fact that a large amount of work has necessarily been accomplished in a short time. The work, including the taking of a section of the wilderness and preparing and cultivating it for a farm, not only clearing it from stumps, but draining it, erecting buildings and conveniences thereon, in order to carry on agriculture on a large scale. Considering the size of the farm, over 400 acres, and the state of culti-Mr. CARLING.

vation in which it is found to-day, within three years of the time of its purchase, the expenditure has not been a large one. The hon, gentleman has also criticised the cost of the implements put on the farm. But the hon, gentleman, the other day, gave us a statement of the implements required for an ordinary farm, and if he applied the same test—

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I named the quantity of implements, but I said I did not criticise them; and I did not find fault with the cost of the implements.

Mr. SPROULE. If that was not the hon. gentleman's object in making the reference, of course I have nothing further to say regarding it, unless, that if the cost of these implements are measured by the same expenditure he laid down to the House a few evenings ago, I say they are cheap; because, considering the amount of land, they are below the cost he estimated should be incurred for carrying on a farm of this description. The hon. gentleman says that this report should contain the minutiæ of all that is done on the I take exception to that. I believe it farm. would be much more valuable for the farmers, and they would be more likely to take note of it, if, from time to time, bulletins were got out which applied to the subject which was then under consideration. For instance, at the time corn was about to be grown, would be the important time for a bulletin to be issued on the subject of ensilage and green corn, so as to give the farmers the benefit of the experience gained at the Experimental Farms. I think they would take much more interest in it at that time, and they would be likely to gain greater benefit by it than if it were issued at any other time of the year. The same rule holds good in regard to experiments on other matters. The hon, gentleman criticised at some length the principle of putting up these buildings without advertising for contracts, but the hon. gentleman, it seems to me, arrogates to himself the right to take the contract to do the criticism for the whole of the Opposition in this House on this particular question, and he has neither invited tenders for it nor advertised to see whether it could be done cheaper and better by others. that is hardly carrying out the principle he himself advocates.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman takes good care that the Government are not in the same position, for he always supplements every observation which the Minister addresses to the House by something which he has to say himself; but the hon, gentleman has not succeeded in drawing from the Minister any statement showing what has been done in the way of feeding pigs on chaff and straw.

Mr. SPROULE. We do not happen to be on that subject now, and the hon. member from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) would be the first to call me to order for transgressing the rules of debate if I referred to it.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I may say, Sir, that the Government have no necessity to advertise for one to offer criticism before the House so long as they have the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Stroule), for he is always ready to give his criticisms on any subject whatever it may be. The statement made by the Minister proves conclusively what we have all along contended, namely, that the Government has bought far too much land for this experimental farm. They have only fifty head of cattle on 450 acres, and we have contended all along that the land purchased was far too large for an experimental farm.

Mr. CARLING. It is not intended for a stock-raising farm.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Then why did you buy more land than was necessary to experiment with, for both grain and cattle raising? I hold that 200 acres would have been quite sufficient. In looking over the list of experimental farms on the other side of the line, I find that a farm of 150 acres is the largest they have got for experiments for both grain and cattle.

Mr. CARLING. I believe the hon. gentleman is one of the advisory board of the Guelph farm. They have 550 acres, and I would ask him, how many cattle do they keep?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). That is a question I cannot answer, for the reason, as you are all aware, that the Experimental Farm, at Guelph, had to put away their stock, but they have got new buildings now, and since I was there, they have bought a large amount of stock.

Mr. CARLING. Can you tell me about how many head they had?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron.) I think they had 50 or 60 head of cattle.

Mr. CARLING. Only that number on 500 acres?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). There is a large amount of wood on that farm, but the Ottawa Experimental Farm is all cleared. The Minister of Agriculture stated, last year, that the Guelph farm cost $400,000, but I hold in my hand a statement of the Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Ontario, that that farm, up to the 31st December, 1888, only cost $307,000. As hon. gentlemen are aware, two great calamities swept that farm, and they twice lost their buildings. The hon, gentlemen will also remember that there is a large college at Guelph, capable of accommodating 150 students, in connection with which they had to erect extensive buildings, but there is nothing of that kind on the Experimental farm here, and, therefore, there is no comparison between the two. I believe that if the farm is to be thoroughly beneficial, bulletins should be issued; but I believe that these bulletins should be published besides in the annual report. I think it is not too much to have the report of a farm like this, even if the financial year does close on the 31st December. I think that in six weeks or two months the report could be handed to this House if the printers would get through with it. The accounts ought to be properly kept on that farm, and there ought to be no difficulty collecting them at the end of the year. I own a farm of 450 acres myself and I keep over a hundred head of cattle, and I can, in five days, give an account of the whole of its operation and a statement of every animal with its weight, and everything connected with it. Where there is a gentleman kept as accountant, as there is on this farm, I do not see that there should be any great difficulty in laying a detailed statement of each of these farms before the House.

Mr. KIRK. I do not think the Minister of Agriculture has anything to complain of, with regard to the criticisms made on this farm since its inception.

Mr. CARLING. Not at all.

Mr. KIRK. I think he will admit that the Opposition in this House have given him every reasonable assistance. It does appear to me that there is a very large amount of money expended on this farm, for which very little good has as yet been obtained. The advantages of this farm to the Dominion are yet to be seen, for there has not been much advantage so far. It does appear to me that the expenses of this farm are far greater than there is a necessity for, and it is remarkable that on a farm of 400 acres, on which there has been so large an expenditure, the receipts from its produce should only have amounted to $2,563. If the hon, gentleman is going to set an example to the farmers, he ought to be able to give a better showing than that.

Mr. CARLING. The hon, gentleman knows that we have been distributing the different varieties of grain all over the Dominion in small parcels of two lbs. each. I think we have distributed 3,000 bushels already to the principal farmers of the Dominion, and we are getting reports from these farmers as to the results.

Mr. KIRK. Even if the value of these 3,000 bushels is added to the revenue, it would not amount to a great deal. I would ask the hon. Minister what was his object in building such an expensive hennery as to cost $3,000. Is it the intention to raise hens and eggs for sale? I am afraid, if it is, it will be a losing concern if the United States are going to put 5 cents duty on eggs. Of course, I do not know what sort of building it is, but it does appear to be a large amount for a hennery. However, I must not forget that this is not a model farm by which the hon. Minister is trying to teach the farmers how to cultivate their lands, but that it is an experimental farm, and that this is one of his experiments.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). There is another item of $5,608 charged to the general expense account. I would like to know what that is spent for?

Mr. CARLING. That is the way the Auditor General classifies these accounts, after every detail has been given to him.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I see also that so many seed grain mortgages are set down to the Agriculture Department.

Mr. CARLING. They have nothing whatever to do with the farm. Some money for seed was advanced some years ago in Manitoba, and mortgages were given for the seed.

Mr. FISHER. Before this item passes, I would like to say a few words. I am not at all disposed to enter critically into an examination of the expenses of the farm, because I can understand that up to the present time, at all events, the hon, gentleman and his assistants on these farms have had to labor under a great many disadvantages to bring them to the stage which they have already reached. But I would venture to make a suggestion or two to the Minister in regard to what I think might assist him to promote the efficiency of these farms for the advantage of the country at large. In looking over the reports, I do not find, either in the Auditor General's Report or in the report of Prof. Saunders, any indication given of the heads under which the various moneys have been spent. We know that on these farms there are a number of different departments, such as stock-raising, experimental plots of grain, fruit trees and small fruits, and the sending away of immense quantities of grains to the farmers of the country for experimental purposes; but I do not find in any of the reports any information as to what amounts of money have been expended on these different services. I know perfectly well that in some respects this neglect-for I think I may call it soreally tells against the management of the farms in appearance, because a great many of these expenditures which appear to be charged against the farms in the Auditor General's Report, ought not to be charged against the farm at all. Then, there are the expenses which the hon. gentleman alluded to, of sending away thousands of bushels of grain, and the expenses of making up and sending away bundles of fruit trees and other trees and plants. All appear as if charged against the farm itself, although we know they have nothing to do with the operation of the farm as a farm, but they are really expenses connected with the work of the Department of Agriculture. I think in this respect the account keeping, as it has been conducted up to the present time, has not been of that service to the public which it might be. It seems to me, that an accurate and strict account ought to be kept of all these different operations and expenses. For instance, an account of the stock-feeding operations should be kept and published in the report, so that any farmer who wished to find out the expense of keeping certain animals for a day or a month or a year would be able to find in the report the details he desired on that subject. In the same way a fruit-grower ought to be able to find in the report what has been the expenses of some particular experiment, as the planting out of an orchard or the establishment of strawberry beds, or the comparative results and expenses of different methods. We have no such separation of the accounts made in the report; and while I am not going to criticise at all severely the fact that it is not being done up to the present time, I think for the future it ought to be done. In this way a great advantage would be reached for the farmers at large. There are other expenses which ought to be indicated in detail, for instance, all the expenses connected with keeping the teams on the farm. think the expense of the team, when it is applied to the farm proper, ought to be separated from the expense of the team when it is utilised for the purpose of carrying loads of grain which are being sent off for distribution by the Department to the farmers throughout the country. In the same way an accurate account of the work of the men on the farm should be kept from day to day. I think the foreman should also, at stated times, make up accurate accounts of the labor employed in each building and on each crop. I understand from private information that that is being done, but there is no indication of it in the report of the farm or in the Auditor General's Report. I will not elaborate that point any further; but there is another point on which I wish to say a few words, that is with regard to the buildings. I must say Mr. FISHER.

that while it may be, and I believe is the rule of the Government, that all public buildings should be under the Department of Public Works, I think it most unfortunate for the manage. ment of our experimental farm that buildings of that farm should be under the control of another Department than that which has the control of the farm. I understand that the hon. Minister of Public Works has a large staff of officials who are better acquainted with building operations than the staff of the hon. Minister of Agriculture; but I venture to say that it is practically impossible for the architect and contractors under the control of the Minister of Public Works to satisfactorily carry out the needs and desires of those in charge of the farm, and I feel convinced that until a change is made in the mode of carrying on the building for the farm, you cannot avoid great extravagance and loss, and in many cases unfortunate mistakes being made in the building, which will entail further loss and mismanagement in carrying on the operations of the farm itself. I think it is one of the essentials of the successful carrying out of these experimental farms that the Government should so arrange it that the Minister of Agriculture and those who have control of these different farms, should be allowed to manage their own buildings, as well as their own operations on the lands. I do not mean to cast any reflection on the Department of Public Works, but we can quite understand that it is practically impossible for two Departments to have control of an arrangement of this kind and manage it as economically and successfully as if it were in the hands of one Department. It would be very desirable that not only the farm building at Ottawa here, but all the different branch farms should be under the control of the Department of Agriculture. The hon. Minister has spoken about the size of the farm at Ottawa. It may not be amiss for me to point out that when these farms were initiated, hon. gentlemen on this side protested vigorously against the large area being purchased, which was bought for the farm, and I think that what has been shown to-night and the words of the Finance Minister himself, clearly indicate that our advice should have been followed. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), a little while ago, talked about this farm as being practi-cally a section of the wilderness which had been created into a farm. The hon, gentleman is not very far wrong. A good part of that farm was a section of the wilderness at the time it was bought, and, as a consequence, a very large outlay was required to make it into a farm. We regretted that the Government saw fit to buy a section in the wilderness. I think at present the difficulties are accumulating which arise from the too great size of this farm. If it is to be used as an experimental farm for experimental work, there is no difficulty whatever in carrying on such experimental work on a farm of less than half the size. Its size simply adds to the difficulties of those carrying on experimental work. They have to deal with a large area, and they have to do farm operations which are in no way experimental; they have to do what I may call the ordinary rough and ready method of farming in this part of the country, and while some of their crops are very successful as experiments, other crops have shown that they had more or less to grow them for the sake of those experimented with, and the result has been that the whole farm is not up to the average. believe myself if the Government had followed the advice we gave them, and have less than half the area they bought, it would have been a great deal better, and I regret that since then the Government bought large areas in other Provinces, where the same mistake will be repeated and the same difficulty in the success of carrying out of experiments will be experienced. In regard to the bulletins, I wish to endorse what the hon. members for Grey (Mr. Sproule) and Huron (Mr. McMillan) have said. It is essential these bulletins should be sent out as promptly as possible. Without wishing to criticise, I must urge strongly that in future, before the spring operations are commenced in any part of the country, a report of the last season's work may be laid before the farmers. Whatever was done last season should be reported upon, and a bulletin issued before the farmers commence their next season's work. The last year I am aware on the farm at Ottawa a series of experiments were made in the growing of corn for fodder and ensilage purposes. Those experiments will bring out results of great value to the farmers. It is to be deplored that those results have not been laid before the farmers before this period, so that they might base their coming operations on the results of last year. A great deal of work has been done, and there may be good and valid excuse for this not being done at this time, but I take this as an illustration of what may be aimed at in the future. If the results of the corn experiments were before us or had been in the hands of the farmers, they would more or less decide their course in the coming year in the growing of fodder and grain by the results of those experi-Not knowing the result of those experiments, they can be of no use to us this fall, but only a year hence, and thus much valuable time is lost. I merely urge this so that the bulletins may come out so promptly as to help the farmer as soon as possible. In regard to the management of the farm, I wish to give full credit for all that has been done particularly. I do not wish to unduly criticise what has been done. I feel that a great and good work has been done and I feel very much interested in the success of the work, but I know a great deal more can be done to benefit the farmer by this work which the Department of Agriculture has undertaken, than has been done yet, and I hope measures will be taken to make it as efficient as possible.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If there is any one part of their administration of which the Government have a right to feel proud, it is the experimental farms. It seems to me that as regards the officials in charge, there is a happy mixture of enthusiasm in the pursuit of their various offices, combined with great practical common sense, which is bringing about the most beneficial results. It might possibly be found convenient that the bulletins might be in such a beneficial results. shape that they could be bound together in separate volumes apart from the report, as to put them in one report would make them too bulky a volume. I wish also to say that it seems to me that, in the operations of a farm, when you take the year's operation you ought to take the whole period which end the first of April of the next year. You then get the whole cost of putting in your crop, the cost of gathering it, and the use you make of it afterwards. It is necessary to begin in April and to end in April. Then you have the whole crop from the time you put the seed into the ground until you dispose of it. I think that would be the most satisfactory result which could be derived from these experiments.

Mr. ROWAND. This is a subject upon which I feel great interest as a farmer myself. I want it to be understood that any criticism I may make of the farm is not made in an ungenerous spirit, but we are bound to criticise these public institutions. I am very anxious that the farm should prove a success, and that, when I go to my people, I may be able to defend the large expenditures we are making upon it. There is one thing wanting in regard to this experimental farm which we want to demonstrate to the farmers of Ontario, and perhaps to the farmers of the rest of the Dominion. Our lands at this time are practically exhausted. We have followed a system of farming which has been ruinous. We want to demonstrate to the farmers that the farm can be brought back into a fruitful state without going out of the farm itself. I am told by men who have tried it that that can be done. If that is so, the experimental farm should be used to demonstrate it, and if that could be demonstrated, we might have hope for I see there is a large expenour country yet. diture for labor on this farm, about $12,000 last year. If I tell that to the farmers in the County of Bruce, they will think there is a great waste of money. I think, the Government might avoid that to a large I think some of that money must have extent. been expended on what we call permanent improvements. The Government are planting trees and experimenting with trees, and I have no doubt, that some of this was expended for that purpose. I think all that should be placed by itself, and that the ordinary expenditure on the farm labor should be shown by itself. I do not see why the farm should not take credit for the seed grain which it sends out. These seeds are worth a certain amount of money, and it requires a certain amount of labor to send them out; and, if these things were credited to the farm, I think the accounts would look better. In reference to the farm itself and the buildings, of course I am aware that public affairs cannot be managed on the same basis as private affairs. I have gone over the farm several times, and have examined the fencing and the buildings, and it appears to me that there has been a most extraordinary expenditure. If I go home to the farmers in Bruce, and they ask me to describe the buildings and their cost, which I certainly shall do, they will say that is a farce; you cannot possibly advise us to go into such a style of building and farming. If I advise them to raise fowls, they would ask me what it would cost to build a hen house. If I say it costs $3,000, they will reply that they cannot expend so much money in that way, that a farm with its buildings, hen house included, could be purchased for that amount. If there is not a practical man on the farm who knows something about building, I think such a man should be secured, because I relates to one particular crop, and to do that, you know from my own experience of farm bulldings ought to begin on the thirty-first of March and that the buildings on this farm have cost twice or perhaps three times the amount they would in my section of the country. It is in no feeling of hostility to the farm that I make these remarks, because I believe that, if it is managed judiciously and economically, it will do a great service to the country.

Mr. KIRK. The hon, gentleman from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) gave great credit to the Government for the manner in which they have conducted this experimental farm. I do not see what right they have for so much credit. Certainly they have good officers. I do not think you could get a better officer in the Dominion of Canada than the present superintendent. But I want to know what credit is due to the Minister when Parliament has placed in his hands almost unlimited money to carry out this undertaking. Nearly $95,000 were expended upon that farm last year, and, if the Minister could not make a good showing with that amount of money, I do not know how much he would require in order to do so. I see, under the head of conservatory, three items-fitting up water main, heating apparatus and testing house—amounting to $1,252.98. It appears there is a conservatory there, and this is an extra expenditure upon it. I should like to know what is the total amount which this conservatory has cost.

Mr. CARLING. This is really the seed testing house, and part of the money which appears there was, I think, used in fitting up the laboratory for the chemist. Has the hon, gentleman been on the farm?

Mr. KIRK. Yes; but not this year.

Mr. CARLING. I think, if the hon gentleman visits the farm and sees what has been done there, he will find that this vote is not extravagant.

Mr. KIRK. I did not ask the question in any fault-finding way.

Mr. FISHER. I think this shows how utterly unsatisfactory is the present system of book-keeping on that farm.

Mr. CARLING. We have detailed statements of all these matters at the farm, but we cannot get these details out at the end of the year. The report of 150 pages was the work of Mr. Saunders. In our books will be found the cost of keeping cattle and horses per head for each animal.

Mr. FISHER. The Minister will see that while there may be some excuse for last year's work not being in Prof. Saunders' report of this year, at all events similar accounts for the year before have not appeared before the public in any way. If the Minister would say that he intends in next year's report to report up to the last year, he will meet my views to a considerable extent, although even then I do not consider the answer would be complete. I think the books ought to be kept in such a way, as my hon. friend at my side suggested, as that at the end of the year the public might see what had been done. A few weeks' work of the accountant would be sufficient to make up such a report. It would not be the work of Prof. Saunders. I am not so unreasonable as to ask that every individual item of this expenditure should be laid before the country, but I think the report should be in such a form as that, if it is asked for, it Mr. ROWAND.

the different experiments with their debtor and creditor accounts, and the balance at the end of the year, ought to be included in the annual report of each farm, and until that is done I do not consider that the result of the farm's work will appear so as to teach very much to the people of the country. Now, I would just like to supplement a suggestion made by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), who asked the Minister to begin his farm year on the first of April instead of the first of January. I have done a little farm book-keeping myself, and I would suggest that the Minister commence his farm year on the first of October, and not the first of April, because I have found that the season's work has to be prepared for the fall before, and that the real work for the crop of the next autumn, before that crop is sold, is about finished by the first of October of each year. Therefore, I think that in keeping the accounts of the farm, or of special crops, or special fields of the farms, it would be much better to commence the year on the first of October and end it on the 30th of September.

3800

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would like to ask the Minister in what position the farm at Nappan is now? I notice in the Auditor General's Report there is a sum paid to Rhodes, Curry & Co., $10,540, on account of contract work. What was the contract for?

Mr. CARLING. The Minister of Public Works, perhaps, is not prepared to answer that question, but I am told that the contract was for $12,000 or $13,000 altogether, for the barns, stables and houses that were necessary for the people working the farm. I believe that will complete the outlay.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I notice there is a credit to the farm here in the sale of cattle. I suppose these cattle were purchased and found not serviceable.

Mr. CARLING. No; they were ordinary cattle purchased for the purpose of using the hay and roots grown on that farm, and for the purpose of making manure.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). At that farm we are not making experiments or distributing grain from it in the same way as from the Central Farm at Ottawa?

Mr. CARLING. No; I think not. They are selling any grain they have to spare, but they are not making any distribution.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The farm here, then, so far as expenditure is concerned, is about complete?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). And the results have been successful, I hope ?

Mr. CARLING. I think so.

gested, as that at the end of the year the public might see what had been done. A few weeks' work of the accountant would be sufficient to make up such a report. It would not be the work of Prof. Saunders. I am not so unreasonable as to ask that every individual item of this expenditure should be laid before the country, but I think the report should be in such a form as that, if it is asked for, it could be obtained by the Public Accounts Commentuments of the public Accounts Commentuments. I think that the results of the construction of those buildings and the way the contracts were given. I was greatly interested in what I saw at the farm, and very much pleased with it. I suppose a great deal of the money spent in it does not show at present. I hope the farm will be successful, and I think farmers generally take a good deal of interest in it, and are watching very closely what it is going to accomplish.

Mr. FISHER. I would ask whether any further appointments have been made to the staff of the farm?

Mr. CARLING. No new appointments. Mr. Hilborn, the horticulturist, resigned and started a farm for himself, and Mr. Craig was appointed in his place. That is all, except the appointment of Mr. Robertson as dairy commissioner.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to ask what Prof. Robertson's duties are in connection with the farm; what position he holds?

Mr. CARLING. He holds the position of dairy commissioner, and also as agriculturist to take charge of the stock, and to consult with Prof. Saunders as to agriculture generally on the farms; also to deliver addresses in different parts of the Dominion on butter and cheese making, and to make himself generally useful in imparting information to people in regard to dairy matters.

Mr. FISHER. Does Prof. Robertson take charge of the other farms as well as the Central Farm?

Mr. CARLING. No.

Mr. FISHER. I must say that it seems to me rather difficult if not impossible, for a gentleman who is so much called away from the Central Farm as Professor Robertson is, to deliver addresses and instruct the people on dairy matters all over the country, properly to attend to agriculture on that farm. When it was recommended to the Government to appoint a dairy commissioner, I know the Dairy Convention and those who were specially interested in dairying, believed the whole time of a competent dairyman would be completely engrossed in the dairy interest alone, and I am rather sorry to hear that Professor Robertson has any other duties at all except those connected with the dairying industry. I can quite understand that Professor Saunders' frequent absences from Ottawa in looking after the other farms, require that he should have some assistance in looking after this farm at Ottawa, but I hardly think that one who is so frequently called away as Professor Robertson must be, can properly look after a great deal of the work upon the farm outside the dairy branch of it. I regret to hear from the Minister that the dairy commissioner has any additional duties to perform. Did I understand the Minister to say that Professor Robertson's assistant had been appointed?

Mr. CARLING. Professor Robertson's assistant has been appointed; he is a Mr. Chapais, of Quebec. He is to act as assistant to Professor Robertson in furthering the dairying interests of the Dominion.

Mr. FISHER. I desire to congratulate the Minister on his announcement to the House. I am personally acquainted with Mr. Chapais, and his appointment I am quite convinced will be satisfactory to the French people of the Province of Quetec, for whose benefit, I suppose, chiefly his applications, requiring very small accommodation, have had very considerable amounts of money expended on them, more than, in the opinion of people of the province of Quetec, for whose benefit, I suppose, chiefly his application.

pointment has been made. Although I cannot speak perhaps authoritatively for the French people of that Province, I have seen enough of Mr. Chapais' work in that Province, and among his own particular people, to know that he is thoroughly competent to do the work which will devolve upon him as Professor Robertson's assistant; and his well known enthusiasm and experience in the dairy business, and his own practice and acquaintance not only with scientific but practical dairying in Quebec, will be of great value to the people there and to Professor Robertson and to the Department. I am very glad to hear that this appointment has been made. I hope Mr. Chapais will be able to devote considerable attention to dairying in Quebec in particular, but at the same time I trust Professor Robertson will be able to come to us there and give us, especially the English people, the benefit of his experience, knowledge and teaching. I am convinced that with the harmonious working together of these two gentlemen, and I am sure they will be able to work harmoniously together, we will be able to reap great benefit.

Repairs and working expenses, Intercolonial Railway...... $3,200,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will the First Minister give us an idea if there is likely to be an understanding arrived at with respect to freight traffic over the Intercolonial? He told us to-day that they had not yet come to an understanding on this matter thoroughly. I desire to impress on him again the point of view which I submitted to him on a previous occasion. I quite understand the advisability, in fact the necessity, of having a uniform classification of through freights, but I thought the suggestion I made might meet the difficulty with which the hon, gentleman has to contend, and my suggestion was to preserve the classification on the Intercolonial for local freight through the Maritime Provinces and not disturb the existing arrangements. When you once disturb all the industries affected by a change of rates along the line you at once raise a hornet's nest which it is not easy to suppress. I make this suggestion in the interest of the hon. gentleman himself, as well as of the people who are going to be benefited, because I know the difficulty that will be met with in reconciling conflicting interests. Again, with respect to the Cape Breton road. That, I understand, will be finished this autumn. I should like to ask the First Minister whether he intends working that road as part of the Intercolonial Railway, or whether he is going to work it on a separate system, and what I consider to be an erroneous system, as is pursued with respect to the Eastern Extension. It would be much better to work the Cape Breton road as part of the Intercolonial system; and that, of course, the Government will have to decide when the road has been opened. Another point I have heard remarked upon is this, that there has been very extravagant expenses for stations throughout Cape Breton. In every small and unimportant place, I am told, the station buildings are unnecessarily expensive. I have heard from a dozen different sources, that merely way stations, requiring very small accommodation, have had very considerable amounts of money expended on them, more than, in the opinion of peo-

to enquire whether the cost of the bridge over the Narrows has not exceeded expectations? I am sorry to hear the foundations have been more expensive, and that they together with the bridge, were likely to cost more than was originally contemplated. It is desirable that we should be informed what is likely to be the cost of that structure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With respect to the first point, as to the classification: I think we must hold to the uniformity of classification, so that the Intercolonial Railway shall have, with respect to all matters of freight, the same classification as the other important railways in the Dominion. That, however, is one point. other point is as to the freight rates for the different classifications. The hon. gentleman has truly said that that increase, in order to keep up to a certain extent the rates charged by the two great railways in Canada, has raised a hornet's nest about my head, perhaps arising from the rates being put into force too suddenly, but to-day we have been able to come to an arrangement which I think will be satisfactory to all reasonable men who use the Intercolonial Railway. I will be able to-morrow or the next day to lay on the Table the Order in Council showing the rates to be charged on the Intercolonial. With respect to the Cape Breton Railway, it is a Government railway and is a portion of the Intercolonial, and it will be run as The Eastern Extension stands on a different Perhaps in time it may be thought well also to make it a portion, technically, as well as in fact, of the Intercolonial system.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Why on a different foot-

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was originally a different railway. As regards the expenditure on station buildings, I am not able to state anything with regard to those buildings just now, but I have a very great opinion of Mr. Schreiber's economy, and I do not think he would plan or suggest an undue expenditure on these buildings. The road, of course, is a national one, and not only in regard to its road-bed but also as regards its buildings and appointments, it must be equipped as a Government railway and as a national work. I cannot give to-night to my hon. friend any statement as to the bridge at the Narrows. I have not heard there was any failure in the foundations. It was known to be an expensive work when it was undertaken; it was known, from the depth of the waters and other causes, that it would be a matter of considerable engineering and architectural skill to build that bridge, and it was considered to be such an expensive work that it was a matter of doubt as to whether we should not have a steam ferry instead of a bridge. But, after full consideration, we came to the conclusion that the first expenditure would be the best, that the bridge once built would cost little or nothing, and it would obviate accidents of all kinds, which must be reckoned on in case there is a steam ferry running, accidents to which all vessels of this kind are liable. As regards these two points, however, the expense of the station buildings and the state of the bridge at the Narrows, I will get my hon. friend the information to-morrow if he likes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Can the hon. Minister give me any idea whether they are likely to make is arising as to the effect of these various cross-Mr. Jones (Halifax).

any expenditure in Halifax with regard to the extension of the road there, this season. Minister is aware that there has been a good deal of discussion on that point, and an annual appropriation has been made for increasing the accommodation, either by securing lands opposite to the present railway terminus, or extending the system down to the wharves. I have been one of those who always thought that the extension to the wharves would be in the interests of the railway as well as in the interests of the public generally. The right hon, gentleman is aware that there has been considerable opposition to that by some of the wharf owners, whilst others have signed a document intimating that they are willing to transfer their property and give the right of way free. I gave that ground, for I believe it would be in the interest of the railway, and in the interest of the city eventually, if that course was adopted. I would like to get some idea from the Minister, if he could give it to me, whether the Government propose taking any step this summer to further investigate the matter, or to make the expenditure in one direction or the other. It is evident that some increased accommodation is necessary, and I hope this season will not be allowed to pass again without the Government arriving at some decision in the matter. I would like to know if the Minister's attention has been drawn to the subject. I am aware that during the sitting of Parliament he has not time to devote to matters of this kind, but I hope that when he happily gets rid of all of us here, he will consult his engineers to see if they can arrange to carry out this work at an early date, which is required in the interest of the city and of the Intercolonial Railway as well.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can assure the hon. gentleman that my attention has been already called to the matter. I am inclined to agree with the hon. gentleman, although I speak without any local knowledge of the subject, that the best plan for the trade of Halifax would be to extend the road across the wharf. One thing or the other must be done, and will be done if I have anything to say to it. Either the terminus will go down, as the hon. gentleman says to the deep water, or we must extend the road across the wharf. There is considerable opposition, as the hon. gentleman has stated, to this, and even this afternoon I got a very strong protest from one of the gentlemen who has property there, saying it would be ruinous to him if it were extended in that way. However, in one way or the other, the increased accommodation called for must be obtained.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman got the receipts and expenditure of the Intercolonial up to 1st April?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not.

I have the Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. statement up to the 1st March, and I am sorry to say that the results are very unsatisfactory. There was then a deficit of $416,000, if my memory is correct. I would like the hon, gentleman to give me the figures up to the 1st April.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will make note

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, the Minister sees that a question of great importance roads on the Intercolonial Railway. If I am correctly informed, the probabilities are strong that in some way or other we will be forced to make a revision. Even, though as my hon. friend suggests, and as the Minister knows, it may be unpleasant to the customers, we shall have to make a revision of the charges on the Intercolonial Railway, because there is a certain point beyond which it is utterly impossible, I think, for us to go, in the way of supplying a service at less than cost. In connection with that, I should like to know what the policy of the Government is likely to be? We are just now beginning to experience the force of the competition of the Short Line. We will have probably a further loss of traffic on the Intercolonial Railway, and further competition when the Temiscouata line comes into operation. time is not inopportune for calling the attention of the Minister to it, and for revising certainly some of the tariff arrangements which are now made. In that connection it is very important to know what the receipts and expenditure of the road are.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon, gentleman has seen the receipts and expenditure up to the 1st March. He will see that there is a falling off, but not a great falling off, since last year, and that falling off, as I take it, is to be attributed to the Short Line. However, it is marvellous to think that the difference between the time to Halifax viât Chaudière and the Grand Trunk Railway and around by the Intercolonial Railway is only three hours greater than the time by the Short Line.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But to St. John you will find there is a material difference.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no doubt about that. As regards the Temiscouata and Moncton line, that depends entirely on the future. But, of course, with the Short Line and the Temiscouata line—if the road is built from Temiscouata to Moncton, and down to Halifax—it looks as if the Intercolonial Railway would become nerely a local road. It is very difficult, as I have already found out, and as the hon member has alluded to, to arrange the rates so as to make them at all paying. The slightest change in the way of an increase raises a tremendous cry, but that, I suppose, is a fate common to all Governments.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). How about the Harvey and Salisbury line when it is built?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That will not interfere with the Intercolonial Railway so much as the Temiscouata line. I find that those who use the Intercolonial Railway exclaim most loudly against the slightest increase, but they are wonderfully silent about the numerous reductions which have been made in the past.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would just say, in reply to my hon friend in front of me (Sir Richard Cartwright), that, of course, it is a regrettable feature that the loss has been so much on the Intercolonial Railway, but my hon friend must remember that there has been an equally large, if not a larger expenditure, on the canals of the west, and the First Minister has announced, lately, that the sum of $12,000,000 or $14,000,000 is to be further expended in deepening the western canals to accommodate the trade of the St. Lawrence, and to bring that traffic down to Montreal. It is not expected, under these circumstances that we are to receive any direct returns, because I believe that the hon. Minister finds as much difficulty in dealing with the rates on the canals as he does with the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Quite as much. Mr. JONES (Halifax). And the right hon. gentleman is very often called upon to make considerable reductions to bring the traffic that way. Therefore, the Intercolonial Railway does not stand in an exceptional position. It stands in very much the same position as the canals. as it is for the general trade of the country. I believe it is of more benefit to the people of the west than to the people of the east, and the canals are entirely for the benefit of the people of the west.

Mr. KENNY. In confirmation of the last remark which fell from my hon. colleague, I beg to state that an examination of the freight carried over the Intercolonial Railway into Halifax will show that there has been a steady increase in the quantity carried from the west to the east, showing that the Intercolonial Railway is really of more use in developing the trade of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec with the Maritime Provinces, than it is to the Maritime Provinces themselves. There has been a great falling off, I regret to say, in the western-bound freight from the city of Halifax, which is largely due to the fact that the subsidised transatlantic line of steamers, the Allan Line, and also the Dominion Line, land all their westward bound freight at Portland. But we hope that the Government, when they make a contract for the transatlantic service, will insist that the steamers must make their terminal ports within the Dominion of Canada, which would very materially increase the traffic over the Intercolonial Railway. It has been pointed out that the residents of the Maritime Provinces have to bear their share of the taxes incidental to the development of our canal system, and we find no fault with that, because it is in the general interest. But it does fall harshly on our ears, when we are so constantly told as we are from the other side of the House and to bring that traffic down to Montreal. It is Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On hearing that not expected, under these circumstances, that we statement, which was rather an astounding one, I called the attention of the Department to it, and called for a report, which I hope to have.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). From both sides.

Mr. KENNY. My hon. friend will pardon me—especially from his political associates, that the Maritime Provinces are a great tax and a great burden on account of the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway. Now, the Intercolonial Railway has fulfilled its national mission; we could not have any national existence without it; and I hope, in the interest of the general trade of Canada, that the road from Edmundston to Moneton, commonly called the Temiscouata road, will be constructed, and that provision will be made for it by the Government.

Mr. KIRK. I would like to enquire of the hon. Minister of Railways if he has found any means for obviating the difficulty I mentioned to him the other night with regard to the delay at Truro of eastern-bound passengers and mails over the Eastern Extension Railway. I mentioned that the connections with the Quebec express from Quebec and the Halifax express going east from Truro were of such a nature that passengers and mails are obliged to lie over at Truro for 22 hours.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is not only the traffic on the Eastern Extension Railway that is delayed, bit all the passengers and mails for Prince Edward Island are in the same position, and it is a very serious matter. If I left here to go to Prince Edward Island, I would be just two hours late for the train that leaves Halifax in the morning, and there is no reason that I can see why that train should not be detained at Halifax until twelve o'clock in order to make connection.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I trust that the hon. Minister of Railways has heard something of the tremendous row that was made in St. John with regard to the rates of freight, especially those on lumber over the Intercolonial Railway. Some of these complaints were made in the paper which supports the Government. A number of shingle mills were obliged to close up in consequence of these high rates, which are practically prohibitory. Of course, there is a difficulty in consequence of the deficiency in the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway, which however, cannot be avoided. It merely shows that the Intercolonial Railway, from a commercial point of view, was put in the wrong place. Another complaint made is that everything has to be managed from Ottawa, which is a cause of great inconvenience. It would be better if the manager of the railway were stationed at Moncton, where parties could more conveniently make arrangements with the railway, and where it could be more efficiently controlled than at present, when everything has to be referred to Ottawa, a thousand miles distant.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As regards the tariff on lumber, the rates are very much lower on the Intercolonial Railway than they are on any other railway which carries lumber; but I will repeat to the hon. gentleman that for the present, at all events, we have returned to the old tariff, in consequence of complaints that contracts had been made under the expectation that the tariff would not be raised; and also from this consideration that the timber in the Maritime Provinces is principally spruce, an inferior kind of wood which will not stand the same freight as the pine which is carried in the west. The tariff will be quite satisfactory with regard to the lumber. With respect to the management being at Ottawa, the management is at Moncton, and the whole of the everyday business is conducted by Mr. Pottinger, who is a very good officer; and although Ottawa is a considerable distance from Moneton, the telegraph annihilates that distance. Mr. Pottinger has large powers as a manager ought to have, and it is only in special cases he has to apply here. If a good deal of business is done here, it is because of the complaints that the officials down there were too independent, and that there was a contract offered to tender, but when it was opened the unsuccessful tenderers claimed there was favoritism, and perhaps other grave charges were brought. It was with a great deal of reluctance and in consequence of great pressure brought upon Mr. Pope, my predecessor, that all those matters were removed here.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would suggest to the First Minister, inview of the competition likely now to exist between the Intercolonial and the Canadian Sir John A. Macdonald.

Pacific Railway, whether it might not be possible to have it understood that freight reductions could be arranged for. As an illustration, I might mention that a steamer arrived lately to my firm from Germany with a cargo of sugar for Montreal. The fixed rate over the Intercolonial is twenty cents, and rather than pay that, the steamer took it around to St. John and shipped it over the Canadian Pacific Railway for fifteen cents. Under such circum stances, special arrangements might be made by the Intercolonial rather than lose the trade alto gether.

Mr. KENNY. It is a matter of competitive rates, and I understood my hon. friend the other night to argue that it was not in the interest of the Intercolonial to accept freight from the city of St John, at the same rate as is charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Not if they lost by it.

Mr. KENNY. My hon. colleague must remember that these are competitive points, and that the Intercolonial, with its connections west, is bound to carry that freight at the rates at which the contract commences, and I do not think it is in the interest of the Intercolonial to lose that trade. I quite agree with the contention that it is the interest of the Intercolonial to accept the lowest freight rather than it should be diverted to another railway; and if my hon. friend's argument is good for a western it is equally good for an eastern-bound freight.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). My argument with reference to the eastern-bound freight was as to whether it was advisable for the Intercolonial to compete for freight from St. John with the Canadian Pacific Railway if they had to carry at a loss. I am not suggesting the Government should carry freight from Halifax at a loss at all.

Mr. ELLIS. I was going to make a remark sympathetic with the First Minister. The First Minister may have another application from St. John, if it is found he is cutting Intercolonial rates in the interests of Halifax as against the port of St. John.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I draw the attention of the First Minister to an outrage committed on the city of St. John. A little map is published by the Intercolonial Railway in which they have ignored St. John and described Halifax as the Canadian winter port.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not only received one complaint, but several, from St. John about this map. Well, the map says the truth. It says simply opposite Halifax, "the winter port for mails, passengers and freight." It is a winter port for mails, passengers and freight. I am going to cure that by having another map issued by which, opposite the city of St. John, will be placed also "winter port for passengers, freight and mails, when they go there."

Prince Edward Island Railway..... $230,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I hope the hon. gentleman will give his attention to the remarks I made the other day in reference to a short branch on that road from Hillsborough. The matter is being very strongly pressed by my constituents, and I believe the branch, which would be only about 15 miles long, would be the best paying part of the Island Railway.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we might better say the branch on which there would be the least loss.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There would be no increase in the rolling stock required, and there would be nothing but the cost of constructing the road through a very good country.

Rir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister has not given us any explanation of the increase of $25,000 in this vote.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a mis-The expenditure last year was $245,000 instead of $205,000, as it appears here, so there is a decrease of $15,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The expenditure last year appears to have been $247,000. There is no particular reason for taking estimates unless you can keep within them. I wanted to know why, when it cost nearly $250,000 in 1889, you are able to cut it down to $230,000 in the succeeding year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot state the reason at present.

Mr. KIRK. Does the Minister intend to build the Short Line Railway at or near New Glasgow in order to avoid the hills?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the fewer railways we build down there now the better.

Mr. MITCHELL. We have had enough money thrown away in the direction of New Glasgow.

Mr. KIRK. Does the hon. gentleman consider that the Pictou branch is to be utilised as a part of the Short Line?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will have to answer that question on a future day.

Cape Breton Railway..... $110,000

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is expected that this road will be placed under traffic about the beginning of July next. It is rather difficult to make even an approximate estimate of the traffic. It is estimated that there will be expended on locomotive power, $22,000; car expenses, $16,000; maintenance of works, $16,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Those seem to be operating expenses, and not for equipment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is for the supply of locomotive power, I take it, as well as car expenses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Those are almost of necessity operating expenses, all of

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand the hon. gentleman, there would be a dead loss of about $45,000 to begin with, and a possibility, I hear, of its rising from time to time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot answer as to that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have noticed on the Intercolonial Railway that as traffic rises the deficit increases. 120

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As the traffic rises more expenses are incurred in carrying it.

Committee rose and reported progress.

TRADE COMBINATIONS.

Mr. WALLACE moved third reading of Bill (No. 77) to amend the Act for the Prevention and Suppression of Combinations formed in restraint of trade.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I will not object to the passing of the Act. I see the object the hon. gentleman seeks to attain is to enable workingmen to combine as craftsmen without being subject to the penalties of the Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

THE EXTRADITION TREATY.

Mr. MITCHELL. Inasmuch as the Extradition Treaty has passed the United States Congress, and one has also passed the English Parliament, I desire to ask whether that Extradition Treaty is now in force, and if so, where we can get a copy of it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Extradition Treaty is now in force in this country, but it has not yet been transmitted by Her Majesty's Government to this Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.45 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 23rd April, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ASSENT OF BILLS.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received the following notification from Government House :-

"Government House,
"Ottawa, 21st April, 1890.
"I have the honor to acquaint you that the Honorable Sir William Ritchie, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber on Thursday, the 24th inst., at three o'clock p.m., for the purpose of giving assent to certain Bills which have passed the Senate and the House of Commons during the present Session.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,

"CHARLES COLVILLE, Captain, Governor General's Secretary.

The Honorable
"The Speaker of the House of Commons."

THE BREMNER FURS.

Mr. McNEILL presented the unanimous report of the Select Committee in reference to the furs taken from Charles Bremner, a Half-breed, residing at Battleford.

Mr. LAURIER. I would like to ask the right hon, gentleman if he is prepared to name a day for the consideration of this report in reference to General Middleton?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We must see it first.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes, certainly; but is the hon. gentleman prepared now to name a day?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, not now.

PATENT ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 144) to amend the Patent Act. He said: This Bill is intended to permit of leasing machines as well as absolutely selling them, applying the same principle here as has been adopted in England and the United States.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CARAQUET RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. Mulock) asked, What is the amount of the gross earnings of the Caraquet Railway Company for the year ending 30th June, 1889? What is the amount of the operating expenses of said railway for same period?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The gross earnings were $18,210.16, and the operating expenses $27,409.23.

MILITIA CLOTHING SUPPLIES.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. LISTER) asked, Is it the intention of the Militia Department to continue the system of asking a few firms, by circular, for prices for militia clothing, and giving three years' contract with virtually no competition; or do they intend to ask for tenders annually, by public competition, and give all who wish to compete a fair opportunity to tender for such supplies?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The Government intend to adhere to the three years' contract system. As to the second part of the question, I am not in a position to give an answer yet, as the matter is now under the consideration of the Government.

ONTARIO FISHERY OVERSEER.

Mr. SOMERVILLE asked, Has the vacancy, caused by the death of the late James Greer, Fishery Overseer, in the Province of Ontario, been filled? If so, what is the name of his successor? At what date was he appointed, and what salary does he receive? Is there any person named James Greer now in the employ of the Fishery Department.

Mr. COLBY. The vacancy referred to has not been filled, and there is no person of the name of James Greer at present in the employ of the Department.

THE BANKING ACT.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 127) respecting Banks and Banking.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. gentleman not going to give any explanation as to possible changes in the Bill, or are we to consider that the Bill as it stands is proposed to be put into force?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not any very extended observations to make with reference to the Bill, so far as contemplated changes are concerned.

Mr. LAURIER.

Discussions will, of course, arise on the separate provisions when the House is in Committee on the One change has been made, however, of sufficient importance, I think, to be entitled to notice at present, that is, with reference to the guarantee redemption fund. The House will remember, as I explained on the introduction of the Bill, that the proposition was to have a guarantee redemption fund, equivalent to 5 per cent. of the average circulation of the banks, of which $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. was to be paid in when this Act came into force, and 21 per cent. one year after that date; and thereafter the fund was to be kept up to 5 per cent of the circulation. Of course, the logical conclusion of that, and what would have been under the worst circumstances the practical conclusion would be that the banks would become mutual insurers of each other's circulation. If, for instance, after they had contributed 5 per cent. of their average circulation, one of the banks had failed, and its assets should not be sufficient to cover the notes, and the amount of the note issue remaining to be redeemed should absorb the 5 per cent. deposited, then the banks would have been called upon immediately to put up another 5 per cent.; in the event of other failures taking place sufficient to exhaust the second 5 per cent., the banks would be called upon for another 5 per cent.; and so on in that proportion. Of course, it is to be hoped that such a catastrophe will not occur in the financial experience of the country, and that no such extreme action will be rendered necessary by the state of business in the country and the consequent failure of banks. That, however, as I said, was the logical conclusion. The objections to that arrangement entertained by some of the banks were represented to the Government; and, after consultation, and a pretty thorough consideration of the representations which were made, I propose to change that provision in this way: The $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the average circulation will be put up when the Act goes into force, and the other 21 per cent. will be put up a year thereafter, making up the initial fund of 5 per cent. of the average circulation; and in the event of the impairment of that 5 per cent. guarantee fund, the banks, instead of being asked to make up the deficiency at once to the amount of the failure of the realised assets of the failed bank to recoup the fund, will be asked to make it up in instalments of 1 per cent. per annum, making the payments extend over five years. So that the guarantee fund which will be first provided, over and above the securities we have at present, will be 5 per cent. of the average circulation. In the event of the failure of a bank, we will have that fund, and we will also have the double liability and the assets of the bank, with which to meet the circulation of the failed bank. And the impairment of the fund, to whatever amount it may be impaired, and to whatever amount the realised assets of the bank fail to make up the deficiency-instead of being put up at once by the other banks to the full sum, will be contributed in instalments extending over five years, at the rate of one fifth per year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And at the end of those five years?

Mr. FOSTER. The fund will then have reached its full 5 per cent., though certainly it may reach that proportion before that.

 $_{\mbox{Mr.}}$ MITCHELL. Provided there are no failures before that.

Mr. FOSTER. If the assets of the failed bank are sufficient to recoup the fund to the full amount, then the fund comes up to 5 per cent. by that process of recouping from those assets.

Mr. BLAKE. There are to be no further contributions?

Mr. FOSTER. Not unless the fund is impaired.
Mr. BLAKE. Not beyond the second 5 per ent?

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose that when the 5 per cent. fund is paid up, a bank fails, and that the realised assets of the bank are not sufficient to meet the impairment and bring the fund up to its full 5 per cent.—say by 1, 2 or 3 per cent.—then the banks, instead of making that up at once, will make it up by payments extending over five years, at the rate of one-fifth of the impairment each year. It will then be up to its full amount again. Suppose a failure again takes place and the realised assets of the failed bank are not sufficient to recoup the fund, the banks will again make payments at the rate of one-fifth a year until the full amount is reached.

Mr. BLAKE. And so on indefinitely?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that is the chief change which I have to announce to the House. There may be some betterments that may be made in the different clauses as we consider them, and I ask the co-operation of the House in order to make these clauses as perfect as possible. I may mention here that there are two clauses concerning which very many representations have been made by the banks themselves, and by other parties who are not bankers. These are with reference to the audit and the item of unclaimed balances. The House will remember the discussion that took place, in which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) participated, with reference to the audit and inspection. Now, what was proposed in this Bill was not an inspection and was not a Government audit but was a shareholders' audit and not an inspection. Well, very many representations have been made to the effect that this audit, being simply an audit and not an inspection, would not have the effect it was destined to have, of being really an efficient check on the management of the banks; and that, on the other hand, as it would be understood by the public to be an audit, it might have the effect of inducing a sense of security out of proportion to the value of the statement of the auditors themselves. In consideration of those representations, and with the view of not making any change, which we do not think would be actually beneficial and result in increased security of a decided kind, I have concluded to omit the section with reference to the audit. With reference, however, to the unclaimed balances, although there may be some alterations made in the section—and that is open to the consideration of the Government and the House—I propose to stand by that item in its essence, as a vital part of the Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no intention of opposing the second reading of this banks have a very small capital. I believe there is one point which appears to me of great moment, and to which I would like to call mitted to us in regard to banks which are 1201.

the special attention of the hon. the Minister of Justice and also the hon, the Minister of Finance, and indeed, the House generally. But, before I proceed to deal with that, Sir, I will just repeat what I understand to be the construction of clause 55, which it is proposed to amend. By that, I understand, that whereas, under the existing clause, as we have it here, banks are liable to the full amount of their means for the circulation, that maximum of liability is practically reduced to 13 per cent. of the circulation in the ten years during which their charters run. There is, first, the liability of 5 per cent. to be paid up during the two years. There is, thereafter, a further possible claim of 5 per cent. by five yearly instalments, and should that also prove insufficient, there will be a further claim for the remaining three years of the term, amounting in all to 13 per cent. during the ten years. If I am in error, the hon. gentleman will correct me, but I think that is the necessary construction from his remarks. As to the Bill in general, so far as the public are concerned, there are two points of special moment. public, no doubt, are very desirous that our bank notes should be redeemable at par-the notes of all the banks of Canada all over the Dominion; and, so far as I can judge, although I reserve full right to discuss that item, and bearing in mind that we have already a Dominion note circula-tion of ones, twos and fours guaranteed by Government, I think that object is very fairly attained by the Bill. That, however, will be, no doubt, discussed in Committee. There remains, however, a second object of very great importance, the object which clause 55 was destined to carry into effect. With respect to clause 55, I think, as it stood, that it probably did give pretty perfect security, but at a risk so great that the banks were thoroughly justified in remonstrating against it. Now, with respect to that, I think, looking at the alterations proposed by the hon. the Minister of Finance, that it is probable the guarantee he now proposes will be sufficient in the case of banks doing business in an ordinary way. But I can see, and this is a question to which I want more especially to address myself, that, under existing circumstances, a very grave risk does exist where bank managers and cashiers attempt to practise a fraud on the public, and that there is no sufficient guarantee taken against that. It is for the Government to consider whether any means can be devised which will provide a suffi-cient guarantee against the particular fraud which, I think, may be practised under the provisions of this Act. Up to the present time, our note circulation has practically regulated itself in this way : It is, to all intents and purposes, impossible under our present system for a bank to get out more than a reasonable amount of circulation. The bank cannot put out its circulation to an unlimited extent at present, or, if it did, it would find it impossible to get parties to take it. But the whole status of bank notes is altered by the hon. gentleman's present proposition. The bank notes issued by the smallest banks in the Dominion are to be put on a par with the notes of the largest, the best managed, and the most solvent institutions. have nearly forty banks in this country-I believe the exact number is thirty-eight. Many of these banks have a very small capital. I believe there is no serious risk in the propositions now sub-managed in the ordinary way. In regard to banks which are so managed, I believe that the precautions taken will be sufficient, but I submit for the consideration of the Government and for the consideration of the House that, should cases arise in which two or three resolute, unscrupulous scoundrels were to get possession of a bank, it would be quite possible for them, under these provisions, to issue a circulation-not perhaps to a practically unlimited amount, as might have been done under clause 55 as it originally stood, but a circulation largely in excess of what this Act permits them to do. No doubt the Minister will say that legal precautions can be taken against this difficulty, and that the men can be punished; but there is no guarantee at all provided against the case of deliberate fraud, and there can be no doubt that a very great temptation, a very great premium, is offered for the commission of such an offence by persons such as those who, in former times, got hold of two or three of our minor banks. Unless I am misinformed, in regard to some banks which failed recently, attempts were made to put a large amount of their notes in circulation, although the quantity was far below that which could be put in circulation under this provision. Many of our banks have a capital of only $200,000 or $300,000. It is not an unreasonable stretch of imagination to suppose that men of an unscrupulous character might get hold of those banks, and I cannot see any provision in this Bill, should those parties contrive to issue, say, two million dollars of their notes-and that would be about the maximum of the guarantee of 5 per cent. in the first instance—should they get that amount legally issued, I can see no means taken in this Bill to prevent it, and I believe the associated banks would be obliged to redeem those notes to the last penny. Of course, the parties who issued these notes might be prosecuted and punished, but that would be no consolation to the country or to the parties who are depending on this clause for the security of the note issue. I do not think there is any guarantee in regard to that, or that there is any possibility of preventing it under this provision, other than the punishment which might be inflicted upon the designing scoundrels who might be guilty of it. But the men who would be guilty of such an action would not be likely to remain in Canada in order to be punished, and these bank notes, as far as our guarantee goes, are made as good as gold, and, I believe, we would have to redeem them to the uttermost. I am not going to divide the House upon that point, at all events for the present, but I think it is one which deserves the serious attention of Government, and I do not see how such a proceeding is guarded against by any provisions contained in this Bill. I shall reserve any remarks in regard to the other clauses until we get into committee, but I think that clause does require very serious consideration on the part of the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. I was very glad to hear the statement of the Finance Minister in reference to the audit clause, because I am more than ever convinced that it would be practically illusory, and would, therefore, being a pretence of a protection which does not really exist, be very injurious in its operation. As to the point to which my hon. to solvent and conservatively managed institutions friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) which the scheme involved. I am glad to know, its operation. As to the point to which my hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

alludes; there is no doubt whatever that, to the extent to which you give an added security for the redemption of bank notes, you render possible the emission and the longer circulation of a some. what larger quantity of that species of security. You render it possible for an obscure bank to issue notes in a remote part of the country with greater ease than it could to-day, and you also render it possible that these notes may remain perhaps somewhat longer in circulation than they now would. The natural course of commercial dealings will restore these transactions to their normal state. An excess of circulation will find its way back to the banks, and there will be a return to the normal state by their redemption. All the change which I can perceive in regard to the normal operations of our system, which is now being proposed, is that there are somewhat greater facilities given for the emission, in remote parts, of notes of an obscure bank, and possibly the keeping of them in circulation for a somewhat longer time than under the present system. My hon, friend has pointed out that there have been cases of abnormal issues when banks were in extremis, or when banks were desirous to increase the funds at their command by an excessive circulation, even though they were not actually in extremis. I fail to see how it is possible to guard against the deliberate fraud which my hon. friend suggested as possible. You have to balance the advantage and the disadvantage in cases of this kind, and you cannot give the public the security desired in regard to the issue and, at the same time, declare that if there is a fraud the notes will not be redeemed. It is only by a very vigorous application of stringent provisions of the criminal law, and perhaps by a more rigid supervision of the issue operations of the banks by the officials of the Department, that you can guard against that species of fraud. other point to which the hon. gentleman alluded led him to make some remarks which I heard with some disappointment. The clause to which he alluded in reference to unclaimed balances, as it now stands, is, I think, of a very arbitrary and violent character, even if it were propounded in a Legislature which had a proper jurisdiction to deal with the people's property: but I regard it as objectionable from another point of view. This is not a proposal to tax, but it is a proposal to alter the devolution of personal property and to provide that, in such cases, there shall be a sort of escheat of personal property to the Government of the Dominion. I think that is an invasion of the just rights of the Provinces, and, though I admit the right of this Government to provide for taxation, 1 think the proposal so to alter the status of the private property of citizens of this country is a matter to be dealt with by the Local Legislatures, which are charged with the disposal of property and civil rights, and not by this Parliament.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). When the Government policy in the renewal of the bank charters was made known, I gave notice of an amendment to the effect that any bank which secured its note issues by a deposit of Dominion bonds with the Finance Minister, should be relieved of the necessity of contributing to the redemption fund, and I proposed this amendment because of the injustice therefore, that upon deliberation by the Government, that element of injustice has been, to a large extent, eliminated from the proposition. But the fact the Government had thought it necessary to bring in the security of 5 per cent., indicates that, in its opinion, the adequately secured.

The element of injustice still remains, to some extent, although, I grant, in a modified form. Now, Sir, the proposition which I intend to submit to this House will not, I dare say, meet with general acceptance, but I would like, with your permission, to support it with two or three authorities. The proposition is not a new one. It was introduced in the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury, in 1861, but long before that, in 1844, it had been incorporated with the banking system of England by Sir Robert Peel. As hon. members are, no doubt, aware, more than £16,000,000 of the notes issued by the Bank of England are rested upon the security of Government bonds, so that the force of precedent is in favor of a bond-based currency. Another objection made is that the system in the United States is now failing, that the National Bank currency there is rapidly disappearing, and, as a matter of fact, within the last ten or fifteen years, the amount of National Bank notes outstanding in that country has fallen from $360,000,000 to about $125,000,000. But the National Bank circulation of the United States is shrinking, not because there is anything inherently weak or wrong in the system, but because the Government, out of its excess of revenue, is so rapidly redeeming its bonds. That is a difficulty which I hope some day will beset us in Canada, but we are not likely to encounter it for the next ten or twenty years. Now, Sir, one of the strongest opponents of the bond based currency system is the general manager of the Bank of Commerce, in Toronto, Mr. Walker, a banker of large experience in the United States and Canada, and of recognised eminence in his profession. In a pamphlet which he has issued to members of the House, I find that he uses these words:

"It must seem strange to leading financial authorities in the United States, that at a time when ex-Comptrollers of the Currency, such as Mr. Knox and Mr. Trenholm, are suggesting schemes to replace the National Currency, now secured by United States bonds, by some so-called National Currency secured in quite a different manner—in order to avoid the extinction of the National Banks—there are still people in Canada desiring to create a currency based upon a public debt."

Now, the authorities quoted by Mr. Walker, namely, John J. Knox, who was at one time Comptroller of Currency in the United States, and Mr. Trenholm, who, until a little more than a year ago, was Comptroller of the Currency, are, curiously enough, both strongly in favor of that very system. Only in the month of January last Mr. Knox was heard before a Committee of the House of Representatives on the subject of banking and commerce, and he was asked by one of the members of that committee, Mr. Wright:

"What is your opinion of a circulation based upon the capital and assets of a bank, without other security?"

And this was Mr. Knox's answer:

"It is said that an unsecured note issued by the banking institutions of the country, based upon the assets of the bank and the individual liability of the shareholders, would respond to the demands of business. If the volume was too great the notes would return home for redemption; if the volume was too small a greater amount would be issued. But if elasticity should be obtained at the risk of safety, the mistake would be irreparable. The currency of the State banks previous to the late war was said to be elastic, but unfortunately it was as elastic in value as in volume, and there is no danger of an unsecured bank currency being substituted for treasury or bank notes which are perfectly safe."

Now, that is testimony given only in the month of January last by one of the authorities quoted by Mr. Walker as being hostile to the currency system now prevailing in the United States. quote testimony equally strong given in his last report by Mr. Trenholm, late Comptroller of the Currency of the United States. But it will be said that experience in Canada has proved that our currency is amply secured. Since our banking system was established in Canada, only one case has occurred in which notes were not paid at 100 cents on the dollar, that is, the case of the Mechanics' Bank of Montreal, which failed prior to 1880. If the present provision of the law, giving note holders a preferential claim, had been in operation at that time, the note holders of the Mechanics' Bank would not have suffered the loss of one dollar. But the objection, as I take it, to our system is this, that while it gives elasticity, while it gives enormous facilities for profit to the bank, it does not give that security to the public which the public is entitled to have. Now, I doubt very much whether many people in Canada are aware of the fact that the banks are not required to hold one single dollar of reserve. In no other country of the world does so lax a system of banking prevail as in Canada, not so much as respects the administration of that system as the law upon which it is based. The issue of the Bank of England, over and above the amount of Government securities held, must be covered, dollar for dollar, by gold. The issues of the Bank of France are represented by $10 in gold for $12 of currency; the issues of the Imperial Bank of Germany are covered in the same way. In the case of the Scotch banks, upon which our own banking system has largely been modelled, the banks hold more than 70 cents in gold for every dollar in notes. In the United States, not only are the banks required to deposit Government bonds, to secure their note issues, but over and above that, they are required to hold in the cities 25 per cent. of all their deposits in gold or legal tender, and in the country and rural districts they are required to hold 15 per cent. of their deposits in lawful money. Look at the position in Canada as compared with the United States. On 30th September last there were 3,290 National banks in the United States, having liabilities, that deposits and circulation, amounting to $1,604,000,000; against which they held in specie, United States bonds and legal tender, $465,400,-000; or they had in cash, 29 cents for every dollar of liability to the public, and their loans and discounts were only 60 per cent. of their total assets; while in Canada, on 28th February of this year, the liabilities of the banks were $154,400,000, against which they had in specie and Dominion bonds only $18,500,000, or 12 per cent. of their liabilities in cash, as against 29 per cent. in the case of banks in the United States. The percentage of mercantile loans to total assets in Canada was 75 per cent. It will be said, however, that the system works in Canada so as to develop our resources and promote the commercial prosperity of the country. I dissent from that view. What, in my try. I dissent from that view. opinion, it does, is to foster and promote mercantile competition, rather than to develop the resources of the country, and if hon. members will look at the bank statements they will find that the tendency has steadily been, in periods of prosperity, towards a reduction of the reserves and an increase of the loans, until finally more sail is spread than the keel will counterbalance, a sudden contraction of loans is necessitated, and a commercial crisis precipitated. But I say more than that. I say that, taking the banking system of Canada as operated during the last fifteen or twenty years, it has never been fully tested, and I will tell you why. The reason is because the Government, the railways, municipal and other corporations have been constantly borrowing money abroad. The Dominion Government, during the last fifteen years or thereabouts, have borrowed some $200,000,000, the Canadian Pacific Railway have borrowed many millions, the Grand Trunk and other railways have borrowed largely, the Provincial Governments have followed the same course, as have also our municipal corporations, and the result is this, that by means of these loans the supply of foreign exchange has been kept up, the means of liquidating foreign mercantile indebtedness and of remitting interest on foreign loans, supplied, and a strain has not been put upon the banks that otherwise they would have sustained, while if we had been compelled to pay our foreign indebtedness out of the resources of the country the reserves of the banks would have been found utterly inadequate for the supply of exchange. To-day it is no exaggeration of the facts to say at least $25,000,000 have actually to be sent out of the country each year, either in the shape of goods or of gold or foreign bills for interest alone, in payment of interest on amounts borrowed abroad, and we know the amounts are not sent in goods or gold. We have been maintaining the equilibrium of the exchanges by securing these foreign loans, but the moment we cease to do so and we are thrown back on our own resources, we must necessarily fall into a condition which will expose the utter inadequacy of the present bank reserves. This was not the condition some years ago, when we had a less flexible and pliable currency system; before the period when the banks found it so profitable to establish agencies for the purpose of enlarging their circulation, before they got into the habit, which unfortunately is their habit now, of straining their credit to the very utmost, to carry as large an amount of loans as possible. In 1868, the banks held 35 per cent. of their liabilities to the public in coin, legal tenders and Government securities, whereas, to-day, including not only the legal tenders and the Government bonds, but adding also the net foreign balance due the banks, their reserves are only 19 per cent., the decrease being some 16 per cent. as compared with twenty years ago. In my judgment, and from what study I have been able to give to the question, I am satisfied, that looking at the experience of the past, unless our bank reserves are increased, there may be produced, at a comparatively early day, a serious financial stringency in this country. It was so in 1875. At that time, the Government had been borrowing largely for public works, from the also said.

Mr. White (Cardwell).

period of Confederation down to 1874 or 1875: credit had been inflated in every direction, enter. prises had been abnormally stimulated, our imports largely exceeded our exports, the balance of trade was heavily against us, and the way in which the position of affairs became revealed, was by the inability of the banks to meet the demands made upon them for foreign exchange to satisfy our mercantile indebtedness abroad. At the end of February, 1875, the banks were to the extent of $5,300,000, whereas only two years before, in February, 1873, the banks had to their credit abroad $8,571,000; that is to say, they had exhausted $14,000,000 of foreign balances in the two years over and above the exports sent abroad during that period. Inasmuch as the Government do not see their way to enforce on the banks a better system of currency, it will be regretable if they do not insist on adequate reserves being held by the banks at all times against their liabilities to the public. Under the new law proposed by the Finance Minister, the existing system will not be improved one iota, because the banks will continue circulating their notes and holding a small reserve against them; indeed the position will be worse, because these notes will rest on the security of every solvent bank in the country; and the position, in my view, will be rather aggravated than improved, and the result can hardly fail to be most unsatisfactory in practical working.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I do not rise to discuss the question which has been raised by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), although I may express the hope that, if the proposition contained in section 55 of this Bill is adopted by the Government, the proposal of my hon. friend, or something nearly akin to it, will be accepted by the Government. I rather desire, at the present time, to express my want of confidence in the proposal of the hon. the Minister of Finance in this section of this Bill accomplishing the object he has in view. The object sought to be attained is to provide for the prompt redemption of the circulation of all banks in case of suspension or failure. course, is a very desirable object, but unless we can make ample provision to secure it, I think it is better that we should leave the matter stand as at present. My first objection to this scheme is, that it is entirely inadequate to accomplish that object. The amount held in reserve, or supposed to be held in reserve, by the Government, 5 per cent. on the circulation of the country, while it would be sufficient to provide for the redemption of the circulation. tion of any of the smaller banks, is entirely insufficient to provide for redemption of circulation in case of the failure of one or more of the larger banks of the country. There are at least five or six banks which, in case of failure, would entirely exhaust this fund, and then leave their notes only partially redeemed. There are other objections to this Bill. The element of injustice which it contains, and which has been referred to by the hon member for Cardwell (Mr. White), and the danger of fraud which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) referred to—a danger against which I scarcely see any mode of providing at the present time, as the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has There appears to me to be still another objection to this proposition, and one which has not yet been referred to. The proposition compels all the banking institutions of the country to guarantee to a certain extent the circulation of other banks. Attention has been drawn to the fact already, that this obliges the larger banking institutions of the country to come to the rescue of the smaller banks in case of suspension or failure. It is a good feature of the proposition that it makes the larger banks responsible for the circulation of the smaller, to the degree provided for, at all events; but it must be remembered that at the same time it makes the smaller banks responsible for the circulation of the larger. Now, in case one of the larger banks of the country-through overspeculation, or through any implication in any of the large commercial transactions into which the people of the country are engaged—should be obliged to suspend payment even temporarily, and the circulation of the bank were to come upon this fund, it would be exhausted, and the effect of that, to my mind, would be, to create a general panic among the banking institutions of the country. If this clause had remained in the position in which it was when the Bill was first introduced, that effect would be disastrous in the extreme. The inevitable result, in my opinion, would be, that every banking institution within the country would be compelled to suspend payment at once. These results may be, to some extent, modified by the changes which the hon. Minister has proposed to-day, but still, the danger is not yet removed. My own view of the position of the smaller banks is this: Their business is largely of a local character; they depend for the continuance of their business upon the local knowledge of their patrons, upon the confidence which the managers, directors and shareholders of each particular bank have in the business of that bank; and also upon the confidence which the creditors, the depositors and the persons having business transactions with the banking institution, have in the management of its affairs and in its power to meet its liabilities. Now, the effect of creating this joint liability is to introduce an element which tends to create distrust in the minds of the very best friends of every banking institution in the country. I may here remark that, where one bank fails, our experience in the past goes to show that many others are probably involved by the same causes, and may be obliged to suspend about the same time. The effect of having this liability forced upon the banking institutions of the country, a liability which the banks have no means of providing against, is to create distrust in the minds of the best friends of these institutions, and in time of difficulty, as we all know, every bank requires the help of its best friends. Those who are most likely to come to its rescue on such occasions, with the help of private means, or by the help of their credit, will be deterred from doing so, from the very fact that they have a liability over which they have no control forced upon them by the provisions of this Act. It appears to me, Sir, that this is a very serious feature in this proposition, and, as far as I am concerned, I regret that this principle has been introduced in the Bill. I do not propose to oppose the passage of the section, because I understand there is some arrangement desire to express my opinion that it is a mistake in regard to the best interests of the banks themselves, as well as in regard to the business of the country generally.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not propose to say anything on the question of policy, but one or Sir JOHN THOMPSON. two questions of a legal character have been raised, upon which, perhaps, I should say a word. hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) called our attention to the inadequacy of the provision in the Bill for the restriction of illegitimate circulation, and he has already been replied to upon some of the points which he raised. I would merely mention in this connection, that a clause making it highly penal for the directors, or any of the officers of the bank, to issue more than the legitimate circulation, was drawn yesterday, and will be moved during the progress of the Bill in Committee. With regard to the constitutional question which was raised in relation to the legislation on the subject of "unclaimed balances," should venture to hope that the view put forward by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) is not one which, on reflection, he would be inclined to adhere to. I do not propose to enter into an elaborate discussion at present, but merely to say enough to show that the point has not been overlooked. I shall present in brief form, for his consideration, and that of all the other members of the House, the contrary view, which is one that, I think, can be sustained on a more full and careful consideration of the principle. The objection, that we are interfering, in claiming the "unclaimed balances," with the prerogatives and powers of the Provincial Legislatures, and virtually changing the devolution of personal property, seems to be based on the theory that this Parliament has no control over civil rights. The provisions of the Bill in that regard seem to me supported by the principle which is put forward on high authority, that we have power to deal with civil rights, and to deal with civil rights to the fullest extent, in so far as whole and complete legislation is concerned, in relation to the subjects over which this Parliament has jurisdiction. I admit that this is not a provision in relation to taxation, that it cannot be founded on any principle which gives this Parliament the right to tax the banks. It is a provision in relation to banks and banking, if it is a provision within our powers at all; and this Parliament, and this Parliament alone, has the power to constitute a bank, to say what institutions shall carry on the business of banking in this country; and, having that power, we have a right to say under what limitations that business shall be carried on from time to time, what rights the shareholders of the bank shall possess in its shares, what liability they shall incur, what limitations shall exist in relation to their transactions, and even in what manner the shares of the institution shall devolve, whether as ordinary personality or otherwise. We have a right further—as we have done in a number of statutes referring to important matters under our jurisdiction, such as works of a Dominion character, promissory notes and bills of exchange-to provide, even the civil procedure in our courts, for everything that concerns banks and banking. Although stating this in positive terms, I am not by which the banks have accepted it; but I still putting it otherwise than simply as a statement of the view on which, I venture to think, the soundness of this provision can eventually be sustained, on a full discussion which we shall, no doubt, have upon it in Committee.

Mr. CASEY. I very much regret that the hon. Minister of Finance has not decided to adopt the suggestion frequently made in this House and in the press, that the Government should establish a truly national currency. The issue of currency of any kind is properly a function of Government, and is in no sense a necessary function of a bank. The true business of a bank, to put it briefly, is to deal in debts. Genuine banking business consists in dealing in debts which one person owes to another, the collection of which is carried on in a bank. To such an intelligent assemblage as this, I need scarcely elaborate that idea by pointing out in detail how a bank does deal in debts. Everyone knows that when a bank lends money on a business transaction, it buys one man's obligation to another, and takes the onus of collecting the debt The lending and thereby making a profit. of money by a bank does not in any sense involve the issue of currency by a bank. When we remember that no bank in England, except the Bank of England itself, has any power to issue notes at all, and that the Bank of England is, so to speak, merely a machine for issuing notes for which it has put up an equal amount of gold, we can see that the power to transform the bank's credit into currency is no part of the lending business of a bank. I say, to transform the credit into currency, for that is the power our Canadian banks have. They do not hold securities of any kind for their notes. are not compelled to put up full security, even with the Government, for their notes. They are allowed to coin their credit, to turn their credit amongst a mercantile community into a currency which passes from hand to hand virtually as money for currency which passes without question is to all intents and purposes money. This is a privilege not possessed by any banks in Great Britain, nor by any banks in the United States. I cannot speak with such confidence of the banks of other countries; but in those two countries it is recognised that a bank has not a right to coin its credit and to issue a currency based merely upon its own credit, for that is what our bank notes are based upon. If the bank is not known to be solvent, its notes are of no value. The value of a note depends entirely on the public estimate as to whether the bank will be able to pay it on demand, as expressed on the face of the note itself. Sir, I believe that the Government, which has a credit vastly greater than that of all the banks put together, should derive whatever advantage is to be derived from this coining of credit into cur-This principle is recognised in England. The Bank of England, although compelled to put up a sovereign for each pound, pays to the Government a very handsome sum annually, I think $200,000, just for the privilege of printing and issuing notes; and if, following our somewhat broader system here, notes are to be issued dependent almost entirely on the credit of the issuer, I think the advantage derived from that issue should accrue to the Government and not to the banks; and the right to issue currency upon credit should, consequently, be taken from the banks and be held solely by the Government of the country. We have, Sir John Thompson.

to a certain extent, utilised our credit by the issue of Dominion notes. I believe that no notes should be in circulation in the country except Dominion notes, or such as bear the direct guarantee of the Dominion, which would practically amount to the same thing. I have already explained to the House my views on this point in some detail, and I shall go no further in that direction than to say that I believe the best method in which the nation could avail itself of its credit would be by an issue of notes in the name of the Dominion, and directly payable by the Government of the country, though not issued directly by that Government, to the users of the currency. In other words, the currency of the country should be a Dominion currency, issued by the Government, and circulated through banks only. That is to say, I do not think the Government should have the power of printing notes whenever they think fit, and issuing them in payment for public works or for any liabilities of the country as such. In this respect I would restrict the present facilities possessed by the Government for issuing notes. The issue of notes Government for issuing notes. The issue of notes by the Government in that direct manner is practically a forced loan without interest, because those who deal with the Government are compelled to take these notes, and by such acceptance of the notes, the Treasury practically effects a loan on which they pay no interest. Now, I do not think that is a wholesome power to be in the hands of any Government. It tends to foster extravagance in the undertaking of public works or other enterprises when the debt can be paid, for the time being, merely by the issue of paper. Of course, in the long run, our notes being on a gold basis, they must be paid in coin; and, therefore, our system allows the Minister who has control of our finances to incur at any time, lightly, debt, the payment of which may fall upon the Treasury unexpectedly, and when it will greatly embarrass the country to pay it. I conclude from these two lines of argument, that the Government should be the sole source of the issue, and the banks the only means of distribution of the currency of the country, and this currency being a national currency, being based on a promise to pay in gold, being based on the credit of the country, should be made a legal tender, payable as gold, on all debts and obligations whatever. The scheme devised by the Government to assure the security of note holders, certainly does seem as if in the long run, within a greater or less time after the suspension of any bank, it would secure the payment of all the outstanding notes of that bank; but I consider this scheme is one scarcely fair to all parties, and certainly not immediately efficient in maintaining the standing of the notes of a suspended bank. I say it is scarcely fair to all parties, because I do not consider it is absolutely fair to undoubtedly solvent banks to be called upon to contribute to a fund which shall be temporarily used at least for the payment of the notes of banks not able to redeem their circulation. I submit this is scarcely fair, although it is probable the bankers may have agreed to it, or else, I suppose, we should hardly find such an important proviso in the Bill. But it does not follow, because they have agreed to it, that it is a fair or the most effectual arrangement. It is quite possible that the banks might agree to something which they do not consider absolutely fair because it is preferable to the introduction of a system which would deprive them of the right to issue notes at all. Very probably, if they accept this proviso, it is from some such idea as that. The banks, of course, wish to retain the power of issuing notes, and might probably agree to something which would bear rather hardly upon them in many cases in order to maintain that power. Again, it is provided that the notes of a suspended bank shall bear 6 per cent. interest up to the time of payment, whether that payment be made by the liquidators of the bank, or, failing that, by the Government itself out of the redemption fund. Of course this provision is based on the fact that the notes have become non-negotiable securities, and that the holders are practically out of their money until the notes are paid, and are, therefore, entitled to interest. But this 6 per cent. interest on the circulation of a suspended bank is a pretty heavy drain on its assets, and diminishes by that much the amount ultimately payable to other creditors of the bank. It is rather hard on those other creditors, that the bank notes which constitute a first lien should bear interest at 6 per cent., which interest must come out of their share of the assets. It is clear, if the Government issued or even guaranteed the circulation of the country, there would be no necessity for this 6 per cent. interest, for the simple reason that the notes of the suspended bank would never cease to be negotiable. No matter what might become of the bank, the notes issued by it and guaranteed by the Government would remain perfectly negotiable and could be cashed at any time, and there would be no necessity, and indeed, no desire, on the part of holders to cash them. They would be just as good after the bank failed as before, and there would be, therefore, no necessity to diminish the assets of the bank by paying this 6 per cent. I spoke on my own motion with regard to this matter in the early part of the Session, I argued that the Government would be amply guaranteed by a first lien on the assets of the banks, in guaranteeing their circulation. This is true certainly of the banks as a whole, but might not be true of individual banks. It probably would be better, in every respect, if a scheme of national currency were devised by which the banks would be required to deposit with the Government a certain percentage of their circulation in the form of Government bonds; and I do not think the percentage would need to be large. I do not think that we need introduce the United States system of requiring a deposit equal to the amount of the circulation or anywhere near that. Probably 25 per cent. in addition to the first lien would make the Government perfectly secure in guaranteeing the note circulation of any bank. And the requirement of such a deposit of bonds would have another good effect, apart from obtaining absolute security for the notes and an absolutely uniform currency throughout the Dominion. Such a requirement would induce, and, in fact, compel the investment of a considerable amount of funds in Government securities, which would be thus held in Canada, instead of being sold abroad. Now, it is undoubtedly a great advantage, that our public debt should be held at home, and that the Government should be indebted to the citizens of our own country, instead of the private banker for acting as middleman between citizens of foreign countries. That principle is fully appreciated in England, and in the United States, where the National Bank system has compelled a large, though, to my mind, an unnecessarily large investment, in the debt of the country. I will now leave the question of a national currency, with the simple repetition of the position I have taken, namely, that it is as much the duty of the State, and of the Government representing the State, to issue and secure the absolute soundness of all paper currency, as it is their duty to look after and monopolise the coinage of metallic currency. Every note allowed to be circulated in the country, should be as good as the metallic coin circulated, and should be under the same guarantee—the guarantee of the Government and the State. Regretting that this principle has not been appreciated by the Finance Minister, that he has not turned his great ability towards working it out in its proper form; regretting that he has had recourse to the old patch work style of adding a few patches to this legislation, I will leave that branch of the question as to chartered banks. But I want to say, in addition, that there has been room for a long time for the introduction of a measure dealing with a smaller class of banks than those which are dealt with by this Act. I regret that the Finance Minister has not introduced a measure by which small local banks could be incorporated by letters patent, without special Acts passed in Parliament, and by which they might obtain, on the deposit of bonds or other securities with the Government, a certain amount of currency from the Government for local use. It is known to all of us who come from farming constituencies, that the farmers of the country, although most of them are amongst the most solvent people of Canada, are frequently in need of small amounts for immediate wants. They have no difficulty in borrowing $1,000 or $2,000 on mortgage, but they find it difficult to get $300 or $400 to use in harvest time, or at other times when they need small sums. The chartered banks object to deal with the farmer, no matter how sure they may be of ultimately receiving their money. They prefer to deal with the mercantile man, with whom they than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over their money more rapidly than they can turn over the control of t has necessitated the creation of a class of local banks throughout the country, who lend money to the farmer at whatever rates they can get a bargain made for. They put the farmer's note into the bank as collateral security, and get their own note discounted in order to carry on the business still further. The rate of interest obtained by these private bankers from the farmers is generally much larger than that charged by the chartered banks to mercantile men. They get from 12 to 15 per cent., and sometimes a great deal more. The local banker is thus a middleman between the farmer and the chartered bank. He gets money at about 7 per cent., and lends it to the farmer at 12 per cent., putting in the farmer's note as collateral in the bank. The local banker is simply a middleman, and his capital increases as a snow ball increases as it rolls along. Practically, it is the farmer's security which the bank holds for the loan, and yet the bank will not deal directly with the farmer, and the result is that the farmer pays an enormous commission to the himself and the chartered bank. He, therefore, probably has to pay twice as much as any man engaged in business in a town would have to pay to a chartered bank for similar accommodation. The same thing applies to small dealers in country villages who are unable on account of distance to deal directly with a chartered bank, and have to deal with the local banker instead. It appears to be quite unnecessary that the farmer or the local dealer should have to pay such tremendous rates for the money he borrows when his security is perfectly good, and if the present class of chartered banks do not care to deal with him directly, it would be easy for the Finance Minister—the present occupant of that position possessing such great abilities—to establish a class of banks that would be able to deal with this portion of the community. It might be that no local banker would be able to lend to the farmer or the small dealer at the same rate as a chartered bank can lend to a mercantile man, but still he could lend on reasonable rates which would leave him a large profit. It seems to me that something similar to the scheme which prevails in the United States, of national banks might be introduced in regard to these local banks, though I admit that system would not be applicable to the large chartered banks. If any individual, or any association of individuals, were to deposit in the hands of the Government, say $100,000 or $50,000, or any reasonable sum, and obtain letters of incorporation and were allowed to hold a certain amount of Government currency for circulation, there is no doubt such a scheme would be taken advantage of very largely throughout our country districts. Even in places where no one private banker had the necessary capital, two or three would join together and enter into the business. That would absorb a large amount of the issue of bonds representing the debt of the country, and would afford much greater facilities to the farmers than they now possess. They would not take away anything in the long run from the business done by the chartered banks, because all these smaller lines of business ultimately flow into the larger branches of commerce. Every dollar the farmer borrows and spends augments the business the merchant would do with the chartered banks, and the same thing applies to all other classes of the community. The farmer and the small dealer would get their money cheaper, and the country would be advantaged by selling a larger portion of its national debt at home. I hope the Minister of Finance will, before next Session, try to devise a scheme to carry out such a desirable result. I understand that the escheat clause of this Bill is to be so modified that it is not necessary to discuss it now, but I desire to join my protest with that of others against such a clause having been introduced at all, because I do not think the State has any right to seize upon any deposits or dividends, no matter how long they may lie in the banks. I received a letter to-day from the manager of a bank in St. Thomas, in which he said he had recently paid a deposit receipt which had been outstanding for sixteen years. The audit clause, I am glad to hear, has been abandoned, and as to the exact amount of the guarantee fund and other matters, of course, discussion will take place when we get into Committee.

3824

Mr. CASEY.

Sir DONALD SMITH. When the hon. the Finance Minister brought down the resolution on which this Bill was founded, I addressed the House very briefly; I do not intend to speak long at present, but I wish to say just a few words on the subject. I said then that I could not agree with the hon. gentleman that the proposition of 5 per cent., as it then stood, would be efficient, or would be of any benefit as a security in respect of all the banks. I think so now, and I doubt very much if the alteration made will have the effect of ensuring security in any way. On the contrary, while I presume it has been in a certain sense accepted by the banks as a compromise, I hardly think that the country will agree to the view that in having 5 per cent., and in having afterwards 1 per cent. to lean on, the public will have what will secure them against any important failure of any large bank, or of any two or three small banks. However, it is a concession, and one which I am glad to see the hon. gentleman has granted. As I said before, I should greatly prefer, and I believe the country also would prefer, that we had a thoroughly secured currency. I do not know but that the hon. gentlemen themselves, who think it desirable to make this proposition, may also be of the same opinion and that ultimately we ought to come to that. I give them credit for doing what they believe is best at the present moment, but, of course, there are differences of opinion with regard to that. Suppose that instead of honesty on the part of all the officers of the banks, we have in some one or more of those banks, cashiers or even some directors who may think that it would be well to make money honestly if they can, but to make it in any way, and that they may put foward at a certain time a great deal of money in circulation, far beyond what they are entitled to do, what is there to prevent them doing so? I would ask, could not that be done? Could they not put out bundles and stacks of their currency throughout the country at any moment they so desired? The hon. Minister of Justice has just told us that to provide against any such felony, for of course felony we all agree it would be, a stringent penal clause would be enacted. True, it is very well to punish those people, but in the meantime, where has that money gone? How are we to recover it? So that really I think in this respect we are not in a very sure or a very safe position with the 5 per cent. I am glad to know that the Minister of Finance has decided that we are not to have that audit, which it was supposed at one time would do so much good, and would be such a protection to the country. I feel sure that it would be anything but that; it would be a delusion, it would lure on people to suppose that that they had a substantial audit, while they were really having nothing but the appearance of one. As to the Government taking up all outstanding balances, I really think that is a point which we might well have left alone. Is it the case in England, or in any other country of Europe? Is it so in the colonies generally, or in any other colony except, I believe, one colony in Africa? Well, are we so much wiser, are we so much better accustomed to banking, or so much better acquainted with banking, or with finances, than those who have had to deal with these matters in England and elsewhere for so many years, that we should wish to try this experiment? Are not those moneys safe in the hands of any solvent bank, and will they not be delivered up to the proper owner when called for? Is it not to be supposed that they will take every proper means of finding out to whom these moneys belong? I have no doubt that every good bank, every bank that is honorably conducted, has done so, and will continue to do so, and that they desire to keep no moneys which do not rightfully belong to them. Then, why find another set of trustees; and why, instead of leaving it always in trust as it is at present, should it be taken over by the Government in trust at all, as it is proposed now to do in a roundabout sort of way—I desire to say so respectfully—so that it may fall into the public treasury at length? Surely there has been nothing in the past in the conduct of our banks which justifies that policy. If we find that it is not so throughout the United States, if it is not so in any other portion of the world, with the exception, perhaps, of the Cape of Good Hope in Africa, must we ignore everything that has been done in every other portion of the civilised world and go to Africa to find means of imposing, what is, after all, a sort of penalty on the banks? If we do so, should we not also go to some of those countries to see what greater privileges are given to the banks than are given to them in Canada? Now, I trust that the sense of this House, and of the country, will be that we should continue in the future a system which has worked well in the past, and that we should not attempt to take from the banks that which we have no reason to believe they have not administered well in the past. I can conceive that it might be well, with respect to those unclaimed balances, that when a bank became insolvent, then they should pass into the hands of the Government, not to be lost to the shareholders, but that they should go to the Government to be taken to satisfy the claims of the shareholders. That, I think, would be equitable enough; but to take the amount from the solvent banks would, I think, be a very great injustice. However, as I said at the commencement of my remarks, I desire only to say these few words at present, reserving until the House goes into committee such further observations as I may have to

Mr. KENNY. I was under the impression until I came into the House this afternoon, that the banking system of Canada was the best we could possibly have for the development of our country and for the advancement of our trade generally. To the faults found with our present banking system by some of the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, I desire to refer for a few moments. One of those hon, gentlemen has made the objection that the banks have given enormous profits to their shareholders. In this Assembly are many hon. gentlemen who are shareholders of banks, and when they consider the double liability which attaches to their investment, and that the average dividend is only 7 per cent. per annum, I think it will be recognised that there is not much in that objection to our banking system. I was under the impression that our system was so nearly perfect, that in its revision, it would be only desirable to secure the greatest protection possible to the involuntary creditors, the note holders, and to make provision for the negotiation at par of the bills of the banks in all localities throughout the Dominion. That is eminently desirable, and that, I hope, will be attained by the Bill which is now before the House. The audit clause, I am glad to find, has been removed; but it seems that it became necessary to go as far as the Cape of Good Hope to in-corporate a very objectionable clause in this Bill. I refer to the clause which contemplates the absorption by the Dominion Government of all unclaimed balances. The Bill as it now reads provides that at the expiration of eight years, those balances shall be taken by the Dominion Government. I do not know—I suppose we will hear in committee-whether unclaimed balances consist of current accounts only or if they also include deposit receipts, for which a deposit receipt has been issued and which is virtually a demand obligation on the banks. But, under any system, I think, it would be most unfair that the Dominion Government should insist upon appropriating to the Dominion Treasury those unclaimed balances. The hon. member for Čardwell (Mr. White), in the course of his remarks, if I understood accurately the purport of his argument, endeavored to convey to the House the impression that the American banking system is a superior one to ours. The banking system of the United States, we all know was a war system, which was brought before the American public under very peculiar circumstances, and which, I contend, is in no way to be compared to our own system. The hon, gentleman referred to a statement made by Mr. Knox, lately comptroller of the circulation. If I remember aright in a speech which Mr. Knox delivered in Boston in the early part of the present year, that gentleman stated that a currency not based upon Government bonds, but based upon Government securities and specie, provided a better circulation than a circulation based solely on Government bonds. But it seems to me we must go abroad to receive from a foreign country the most emphatic approval of our banking system. I find in the leading financial journal of the city of New York, a very complimentary reference to the Canadian banks. It is as follows :-

"Incident to the renewal of the charters of Canadian banks which expire in 1891, there appears to be a dispo-sition, in certain quarters, to modify the existing law in banks which expire in 1891, there appears to be a disposition, in certain quarters, to modify the existing law in respect to circulation.

"Taking it all in all, the Canadian banking system as it now stands is a model of banking legislation. The law does not needlessly trench on the liberties of the banks, and yet it provides safeguards that amply protect the depositors and note holders. It has so far worked admirably for the convenience of the banks' customers and of the public at large. Its provisions relating to circulation have satisfied every requirement as to elasticity and safety. While the banks, on the basis of their present capital, have the power to issue about $60,000,000 of notes, the actual issues have ranged between the maximum of $30,000,000 and a minimum of $30,000,000; showing that the liberal powers of issue have been exercised with conservatism and have not proved a temptation to inflation. The entire freedom of the circulation to contact and expand in adaptation to the changing requirements of business has shown its beneficial results in a moderateness and steadiness in the rate of interest previously unknown; and no case of failure has occurred in which the note holders have failed to be paid in full.

"We know of no system that more closely conforms to the best and broadest economic ideals of banking: none better calculated to afford the largest possible accommodation: none better adapted to insure a safe utilisation of the surplus balances of the people, and none better qualified to supply the daily fluctuating wants of trade with a safe and convenient circulating medium.

"Under existing law, the notes are a first charge on the entire assets of the banks with the duplicate liability of the stockholders added; and just what that means in plain figures will appear from the following statement as for November 30, 1889:—

Assets created by paid-up capital. $60,190,000 Assets created by reserve funds or "surplus". 20,140,000
All other assets 172,650,000

$252,980,000
Double liability. 60,190,000

Then this New York paper goes on to say:

"The amount of notes outstanding at the same date was $34,900,000; showing that the circulation was only II per cent. of the amount of assets pledged as a first resource for its redemption. The note holders of Canada need desire no better guarantee than this; and if they are wise enough to learn from the unfortunate experience of their neighbors in mixing currency arrangements with treasury finances, they will never permit resort to any such vitiation of banking functions within their domain."

I think that is a panegyric upon the banking system of Canada, which goes far to meet the objections which have been raised by hon. gentlemen in this House. But it is evident that hon, gentlemen who contend that our Canadian system is inferior to the American system are not borrowers of money. If they were living to-day in Montana or Dakota and compelled to pay from 1 to 2 per cent. per month for money, while Canadians settled immediately north of those States borrow all the money they require at 6 or 7 per cent. per annum, they would then find there is a great difference between the American and Canadian system. But, Sir, some hon, gentlemen seem to imagine that there is great danger from the failure of larger banks, and others from the failure of small banks, and that the system which has been adopted with the concurrence of all the banks, of placing in the hands of the Dominion Government an amount of 5 per cent. upon their present circulation, as a safety fund, is inadequate to meet any difficulties which may arise in connection with the bank circulation. In my remarks I shall confine myself solely to the bank circulation, because I understand that the idea of the present legislation is mainly to protect the involuntary creditor. article which I have just read from the United States financial journal points out the amount of our bank circulation, and the protection which we have for that circulation. I find that on the 31st March last, the circulation of our chartered banks amounted to $31,704,281, and now let us see what we had available to meet that circulation. Sir, in the bank returns of that date, that we had on hand in specie, $6,128,388; in Dominion notes, $9,741,402; in Dominion Government bonds, $2,698,-783; in Provincial, British and foreign bonds, $5,398,053, and there was a balance to the credit of the banks, due to the banks of Canada from foreign countries, of $10,393,027. From that item I deduct the amount due to foreign countries by Canadian banks, $193,921, and it leaves a balance of $10,199,106 in their favor on that one item. Now, these figures aggregate $34,765,732, or, we had in these assets, immediately available, and in the hands of the banks, $34,765,732 to meet a circulation of $31,704,281. I desire to point out to my hon. friend from Cardwell (Mr. White), who called our attention back to 1875, when the banks of Canada owed $5,000,000 to foreign creditors, to the fact that today, I am happy to say, the banks of Canada have Mr. KENNY.

at their credit, in the hands of their foreign creditors, the sum of $10,199,106. The hon. gentleman may meet me by the statement, that money being cheaper in England than it is in the United States, the Canadian banks have gone to England to borrow money; but when I look at the bank returns of the 31st March, 1890, I find that the Canadian banks owed Great Britain $2,291,824, and there was due to the Canadian banks from Great Britain $1,841,-256, leaving a balance of indebtedness by all the chartered banks of Canada to Great Britain of only $450,568. Now, Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend from Cardwell (Mr. White), instead of travelling back to 1875, had given us the condition of our banks to-day, I think it would be more satisfactory to the House. The opinion has been expressed by the hon, member for Montreal West (Sir Donald Smith) that the proposed system of making a provision for the protection of the note holders will not be deemed satisfactory either by the House or by the country, and some hon. gentlemen expressed the opinion that whilst it might meet the difficulties in case of failures of small banks, it would be inadequate to meet any strain which would be imposed upon the banking system of the country, by the failure of any of the larger banks. Now, Sir, in order to inform myself on that point, I have taken the trouble to look carefully into the circulation of the five largest banks in Canada, excepting the Bank of Montreal and the Bank of British North America, and I find the following results:-

Merchants' Bank of Canada, circulation	$2,691,038
Canadian Bank of Commerce	2,090,102
Molson's Bank	1,558,618
Imperial Bank of Canada	1,328,232
Bank of Toronto	1,322,611
-

$9,496,601

These are the largest circulations of any five banks in Canada, with the exception of the two I have named, and they aggregate $9,496,601. I have examined the assets of these banks, in order to see what they had to meet this demand liability, and I find that these banks, on the same date, held the following:—

Specie. $1,652,395
Dominion notes 2,898,619
Notes and cheques in other banks. 2,105,070
Dominion Government stock and other debentures 1,329,747 Provincial, British and foreign bonds 1,149,248

I have examined the foreign indebtedness of these banks, and I find that the balance due to them in foreign countries, which, I assume, means principally the United States of America and also due to them from Great Britain, amounts to $794,595. Therefore, in these assets alone, which may be considered as cash assets, and largely immediately available, these banks held $9,929,674 to meet a total circulation, as I have mentioned before, of $9,496,601. Whilst the total assets of these banks amounts to $76,186,517, the circulation therefor is only 121 per cent. of their total assets, and if you add to these assets the double liability for which the shareholders are responsible you aggregate an amount of $93,000,000, upon which the circulation only amounts to 10 per cent. But some of my hon, friends seem to be alarmed at the condition of the smaller banks, and for my own information —and I venture to trespass on the time of the House to read it—I have examined into the condition of the five smallest banks of issue in Canada. I mean smallest in the matter of circulation. 1 have made this examination solely from the standpoint of protection of the circulation, and I find that the five chartered banks of Canada having the smallest circulation on the 31st of March last, are the following:—

Exchange Bank of Yarmouth$ 50,387
Banque St. Jean 52,405
Commercial Bank of Windsor 81,132
Bank of Yarmouth 81,810
Banque de St. Hyacinthe
Total$412,943

Now, I have heard hon. members of this House contend that the greatest danger to our banking system is the existence of the smaller banks of Canada, and reference has been made to the very small reserves some of these banks hold. I am not here to defend the banks which hold very small reserves. I consider such banking business illegitimate and irregular, very unwise and injudicious, and very unsafe for the shareholders of these banks, as well as for the general public; but I do say, looking at the condition of the five smallest banks of Canada, that we need have no alarm as to their perfect ability to meet their circulation. I find the assets of these five banks, on the 31st of March last, to be as follows:—

Specie	54,059
Dominion notes	64,494
Notes and cheques of other banks	32,623
Balances at credit of these banks in Great Britain and foreign countries
Dominion Government bonds	19,200
Foreign and Provincial securities	89,500
Total 4	387 519

I am surprised further to find that there was due to those five smaller banks from other banks in Canada, $210,197. From this I deduct the indebtedness of these five banks to other banks in Canada, amounting to $4,142, leaving $206,055. This, added to the above total of $387,519, makes their total assets $593,574, or $180,000 in excess of their circulation. So that I state unhesitatingly that, with that condition of things-which hon. gentlemen can verify by the returns of March last-we need have no anxiety as to the safety of the circulation of our smaller banks. But applying to them the same principle as I have applied to the larger banks, I find that the total assets of these banks amounted to $3,602,089; so that their circulation is only 11½ per cent. of their total assets; or if we take into account the double liability clause, their circulation is only 6½ per cent. of their total assets. Thus, the liability of these five smaller banks is actually liability of these five smaller banks. banks is actually less than the liability of the five large banks. Therefore, I hope that my hon. friends who had some misgivings as to the effect on the involuntary creditor of the suspension of a number of our larger banks or a number of our smaller banks, will realise that there is no good ground for alarm. My hon, friend from Cardwell (Mr. White) thinks our present banking system fosters local countries. W. II. Sin I think that fosters local competition. Well, Sir, I think that is eminently desirable. If we had not this local competition in our banking, we should have to pay a very much higher rate for our money than we are paying to-day; and if we adopted the American system, which some hon. gentlemen recommend, Canadian merchants and farmers would have to pay a much higher rate of interest than they are now paying. There are other points in connection with this Bill with which we may have an opportunity to deal in committee; but I contend that our present banking system is admirably fitted to meet the requirements of the commerce of our country.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is one of the most important questions that have been brought before the Legislature during the present Session. There is nothing on which the country more depends for its prosperity and success than a proper and judicious and safe banking system. We have got along very well with our banking system in Canada in past years. There have been occasional difficulties, but those difficulties, as they have arisen, have been removed every time the Banking Act has been renewed. Successive Governments have tried to remove friction wherever it has existed, either in the working of the banks or in regard to the security to the public for the involuntary indebtedness which people are bound to assume in accepting the notes of the banks, as they have had to do in Canada. I am sure this House must have been very much pleased at the able exposition of the present banking system, and the relative character and standing of the different banks, which the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) has given in the very able speech he has delivered. But, Sir, it appears to me that this question has thinned itself down to one single point, as between the banks and the public, or the Government and Parliament of Canada. As I understand it, there were four points to which, when this Bill was introduced, the banks of the country took exception, and the public also took exception. Three of those points have been removed. The concurrent redemption of the notes of all banks anywhere in the Dominion of Canada was very much desired, and was not provided for in any previous Banking Act; but an arrangement has been come to between the Government and the banks by which that is provided for in the Bill now under the consideration of the House. There was nothing the country wanted more than that. If a gentleman from Ontario travelled to Halifax, he found that the notes of a Western bank were at a discount there; if a gentleman from Halifax or St. John came to Montreal, he found a discount taken from the notes of the Eastern banks there; if he went to British Columbia, he found 5 per cent. taken from the notes issued in Montreal, while in Montreal 5 per cent. was taken from the notes issued in British Columbia. The next point about which there was some discussion was the security of the circulation. We have had a fair security for the circulation of the banks in Canada in past years; but I must say I think the Government have taken a reasonable precaution to give additional security to the country for the involuntary indebtedness the public have to accept from the banks in carrying on the business of the country; and, as I understand, the banks have agreed to the terms the Government are proposing to the House on that point. I need not recapitulate the arrangement; it is that 5 per cent. of the circulation of the banks is to be put up as a security in case of the failure up as a security of other banks. That is the point that concerns the banks more than the general public. What the general public have to deal with in this case is to see that the currency which they are bound to expend in the carrying on of the traffic and business of the country is properly secured to them as in the ultimate result; and that is, I now understand, secured. Therefore, upon that point there is no need for any further discussion. the next point, the different kinds of audit, I am glad to think the Government have settled that point. It is almost impossible to have an audit which would be thoroughly reliable. Take the case of some of our larger banks with thirty or forty agencies spread throughout the country, how would it be possible to have an audit. It would have to be done in one day in the different places, in order to have a perfect audit. It would be a mere delusion, and I am glad the Government have abandoned that proposition and have come to an understanding with the banks in relation to that. It is not a question the public are affected by, as the public are secured, and therefore need not care whether the audit is a perfect one or not. The last point about which there is likely to be some discussion, is in relation to these unclaimed This is not exactly the stage of the Bill at which we should discuss that point, but while on my feet I may state my opinion about these unclaimed balances. I would like to ask, what is the object of the Government in seeking to take out of the hands of the banks in which the people have deposited money, the unclaimed balances for which these banks are liable? Is it for the purpose of revenue? I can see no other object. Under the securities which are now provided in the Act, these unclaimed balances are perfectly safe, and may be called for at any time. If it is for fear they will be outlawed, let the Government put a clause in the Bill providing that the statute of limitations shall not run against unclaimed balances in any chartered bank in the country. That will secure them on that point. If the Government think these balances are safer with them than with the banks, they have either given security to the depositors by the Bill, or they have not. If they have not they should do it. If they have, it is better for the public that the money should remain where it is deposited. Otherwise after a lapse of years, a depositor or his heirs would have to come to the Government, and submit to interminable delays and expense before he could get what was due. I can see no possible reason for asking that unclaimed balances shall be absorbed by the Government, but I have been told the Government did this under the belief that it is the custom in England. I am informed, however, on good authority that no such custom prevails in England. It is true that where the English consols are paid as they are at the Bank of England, deposits are made by the Government of England in the Bank of England to meet these consols; if after a period of years any of these balances are unclaimed, the Government ask that these moneys shall be repaid to them. Is that a parallel case to the one the Finance Minister asks this House to assent to? It is not. In the former case, the Government are asking to have their own money repaid to them which has not been called for, and they are quite right, but in this case the Government are asking that the money of myself and others or our forefathers, if it be uncalled for in the course of five or ten years, shall be paid into the hands of the Government to become the property of the country. There is no reason take at all for this except one, and that is tion. There is no reason Mr. MITCHELL.

that the Government are short of revenue, and the amount of the unpaid balances is a sufficient object to make them enact a law of this kind, which I think would be actual spoliation, and I think this House ought not to agree to it. There is no parallel for it in any Government but the Government in Cape Town, in the south of Africa; and I think we are much more able to legislate intelligently as to the wants of the people than they are in a remote colony like that, and much more likely to know what is best in the interests of the country. is a question the public is interested in, and I think it is not in the interests of the general depositors who may choose to deposit their money in the banks, that balances which may be left unclaimed should be handed over to the Government, know that very often a man, on the birth of a child. may deposit $100 or $500, only to be called for when the child comes of age. Is it to be said that this money shall be paid over to the Government of the country, and the person entitled to it shall have to come and memorialise the Government and employ a lawyer, and be delayed probably from week to week before he can get his money? No; let us leave the money where the people deposit it. If it is not safe there, make it safe. If it is safe by this Bill, and the Government say it is, there can be nothing short of the necessity of raising some money which can induce them to submit such a proposition. I can see no object whatever in taking from the banks these unclaimed balances and passing them into the hands of the Government. I am glad to know that harmony is likely to prevail in relation to this Bill. We do not want unnecessary changes in our banking laws; we want to have safety and security and permanency established in relation to the currency of the country. We want to have our banking laws disturbed as seldom as possible; and if we find in the past we have had a reasonable amount of security and elasticity in the system established under our Canadian Banking Act, let us continue that system. Do not let us alter or haggle with so important a thing as the banking system. I, therefore, think the Government would do well, as they have agreed to three propositions, to agree to the fourth, and leave the unclaimed balances in the hands of the banks where they were originally deposited.

I must confess I feel rather Mr. HESSON. disappointed in the Bill presented. I think my opinions are pretty well known as to what would, in my humble opinion, be the best course to pursue in reference to granting to the chartered banks of Canada again the privilege of circulating their own bills. I am in favor of a national currency and a legal tender issue, and I hold most firmly that it is the duty of the Government to take that circulation entirely into their own hands. They have gone a certain distance in that direction; they have taken up the circulation of the ones, twos, and fours. Let them go a step further and take up the fives and the tens, and I believe that would leave very largely the circulation, at all events, in the hands of that class of people who suffer most from the failures of banks to redeem their circulation at a particular time. We all know well that $^{\rm no}$ security could be so satisfactory to the people as that offered by the Government which should take the responsibility of issuing the circulation. The banks are in a perfectly sound condition, and can easily put up securities in order to obtain all the circulation they require for the wants of the trade of this country. Possessing a paid-up capital of over \$60,000,000, it cannot be difficult for them to acquire such Government securities, or other satisfactory securities, specie or 4 per cent. bonds, or any other satisfactory securities, in order to obtain all the circulation they need. Their present circulation, on a capital of more than \$60,000,000, is about \$34,000,000 or \$35,000,000, which, I believe, covers the utmost wants of the people. If these banks cannot find means to put sufficient security in the hands of the Government to obtain a circulation sufficient for the wants of the business men of the country, there must be something very strange about their paid-up capital. It may be said that there are no Government bonds to invest in. Why, in the British markets to-day, they can obtain Dominion securities on as good terms as they can obtain any other financial securities in the world. What has been the result of the United States insisting on their national banks putting up similar securities in order to obtain the circulation? It has been to put up the price of the United States 4 per cent. bonds to 126. I would be satisfied that the Government here should issue dollar for dollar, that for every dollar issued there should be put up Government securities at 4 per cent. The Government security would be there to redeem that circulation at any time. Why should we not allow the banks to issue to the fullest extent of their capital, so long as the Government are satisfied with the security and it remains in the hand of the Government? The bank would be earning 4 per cent. on that amount so deposited, and it would be better to have that amount paid to the banks here than to those who are fortunate enough to hold our securities in Great Britain. I have here the report of the Fourth National Bank, which is one of the largest banks in the State of New York. It appears that their whole circulation is \$180,000 upon a deposited security of United States bonds of \$200,000. That is, 90 per cent. of circulation is obtained by the bank putting up one hundred cents on the dollar in Government securities. That bank, under its admirable management, has been enabled to do business amounting to more than twenty-four millions of dollars during the last year. In that amount I find discounts and time loans, \$7,752,000; demand loans, \$8,581,000; legal tender notes, \$1,000,000, and gold reserve, \$3,640,000. Now there is a bank carried on upon a gold basis. We boast of our banks doing business on a gold basis, and do not desire to disparage the standing of our banks, but the management has been such that I am surprised that more grievous disasters have not fallen upon this country, because of the way in which our banks have been compelled to carry on their business. Otherwise, when the business men of the country needed assistance, the banks could have come to the rescue, but the amount of reserves they were compelled by law to keep would prevent that. I have been asked to oppose the audit clause. Four or five requests have been made to me, by letter and telegraph from bankers in the west of Ontario, to oppose that clause. At first, I thought that it would be in the interest of the people and the bankers as well to allow the people to know the true state of affairs in each bank, but I think the bankers are themselves most likely to know the true state of affairs. We are aware that the banks have been compelled to make returns from time to time to this Government, and that serious disasters have often followed just after favorable reports have been I am, therefore, pleased that the Minister has thought proper to withdraw that scheme of audit as valueless and troublesome. In regard to the unclaimed balances, the same gentlemen who asked me to oppose the audit clause have asked me also, to oppose the clause affecting this question. I cannot agree with them in that respect. The banks have concealed from the public the fact that there are any unclaimed balances; but I am inclined to think, in consequence of the extraordinary efforts which are being made by the banks to have this clause eliminated, that there must be such balances and that they are desirous of retaining them. If these balances exist, there can be no wrong done in allowing it to be known. We know that they hold certain amounts on deposit, that they have certain amounts of reserve, that there is a certain circulation, and all other matters connected with the affairs of the bank are made known to us, but we have yet to hear that the banks have reported to any one that they held unclaimed balances. It has been said by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) and others that these unclaimed balances are safe in the hands of the banks. My answer to that is a return brought down to this House showing fourteen banks which have gone into insolvency and have been wound up, and not one of those fourteen banks made any return, either to the public or to the Government, or even to the depositors, of their holding any such balances. It has never been known what has become of those unclaimed balances, and we have serious reasons to believe that they do exist, when the banks make such strong exertions to prevent the passage of this clause. I think it would be no disgrace to have it known that certain parties had funds lying there to their credit.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. HESSON. When you left the Chair at six o'clock I was referring to clause 89, with reference to unpaid balances. The hon, member for Montreal West (Sir Donald Smith) holds that they are at present in the hands of the very best trustees when they are vested, as they are, in the various banks of the country. Now, in reply to that, as I said before, I have the utmost confidence in the management of the banks, although we have seen some unfortunate wrecks occurring where all seemed, at one time, smooth and successful sailing. I have here a return of fourteen banks that have gone into liquidation, and it occurred to me that if they held unpaid balances, or unpaid dividends to stockholders, these claims might have remained for a number of years without having any applicant, and they were made over to friends of those parties who, perhaps, were dead and gone, and the banks were, at all events, none the worse in consequence of that unclaimed balance remaining in their hands. But they would have been unsatisfactory trustees for the friends and relatives of the depositors, or those who might have considerable interest in the payment of those bal-The banks I refer to will be remembered by many gentlemen in this House. They are: The Commercial Bank of New Brunswick, the Bank of Acadia, Liverpool, N.S., the Metropolitan Bank, Montreal, the Mechanics' Bank, Montreal, the Consolidated Bank, Montreal, the Bank of Liverpool, Liverpool, N.S., the Stadacona Bank, Quebec, the Exchange Bank of Canada, Montreal, the Maritime Bank of the Dominion of Canada, the Pictou Bank, Pictou, N.S., the Bank of London in Canada, the Central Bank of Canada, the Federal Bank of Canada, the Bank of Prince Edward Island, Charlottetown, P.E.I. Now, these banks were at one time flourishing and successful corporations, and had large paid-up stock; in many cases they had good prospects, but they proved in many cases to be unworthy trustees. Now, I hold that the Government are altogether better trustees than any bank corporations could possibly be. I have a communication from a bank manager, amongst a number I have received the last few days, in which, referring to clause 89, he says:

"As to unclaimed dividends and depositors' balances which it is sought to escheat, these are simply debts due by the bank to its shareholders and depositors, and no bank dare outlaw or plead the statute of limitations as a reason for non-payment."

It may be there is not a statute of limitations; it may be that they had not refused to pay their shareholders, and, so far as the shareholders are concerned, the Government should not interfere; but, so far as the depositors are concerned, and parties who were deeply interested through them, they may have suffered through men who may have had some peculiar notion as to the way in which they should provide for their families. Suppose a case of Smith depositing a thousand dollars to the credit of some member of his family, to be paid over as a marriage dower, or to some person when he or she becomes of age. The father or the friend has deposited that to the credit of a certain account, for a certain number of years, it may be ten or fifteen years before he thinks of interfering with it. The person who originally deposited the money may die before the end of the term, and it may be a matter that was known only to himself and the bank, no one else may know anything about it. At present there is no way whereby we can reach cases of that kind, because the banks hold they are not bound to disclose those things, that they are bound to secrecy so far as depositors are concerned; and that is perfectly right so far as general accounts are concerned. I do not know if any such cases exist, but it looks to me very much as if there were large items of this kind, when there is such a tremendous effort made to have this clause dropped by the Government. I trust that the Government will not drop this clause, notwithstanding that I have been canvassed against it by four or five representatives of banks, both by letter and by telegram. If the banks are safe trustees for the people, surely the Government are much safer still. Now, I wish to give some figures relating to the fourteen banks that we find by the returns of this House have become insolvent and wound up their business, showing that they were very bad trustees. I do not wish the House to suppose for a moment that I am referring to the management of the banks in general. These are special cases, Mr. HESSON.

it is true, but they are too numerous to be overlooked. As in the case of the Mechanics' Bank when it failed, the people are led to believe that these banks have reserves which make their circulation equal to gold at any moment. I will present the figures in reference to these banks in a tabulated form:

Bank.	Specia	Dom. Notes.	Total.	Notes in Circu- lation.	Deposits.
Mechanics' Cons'ida'ed Exchange. London	$ 1,17 16,75 1,71 16,38 54,07	0 13,159 5,022 6 19,911 120,068	29,909 6,730 36,297 174,141	$ 168,132 537,039 380,218 155,970 492,855 1,734,214	1,013,000 1,715,000 2,138,000 1,001,000
Bank.		Stock Sub- scribed.	Re- serve.	Stock Paid Up.	Dividend
Mechanics'		$ 1,000,000 2,092,000 500,000 1,000,000 500,000	$ 300,000 50,000 45,000 d. capita	$ 194,797 2,080,920 500,000 241,101 500,000	Full. Full—64 Full. Full—86

Now, Sir, any gentleman who has brains can calculate what that represents. It is just about three cents and a quarter on the dollar that they had in gold to pay these unfortunate bill holders and depositors, It may be said, and is said, that in the case of some of these banks the creditors were paid in full. In the case of the Mechanics' Bank they had a paid-up capital of $194,797 and they paid back 57½ cents on the dollar to the bill holders 57½ to the depositors. The Exchange Bank paid their circulation, but they paid only 54 per cent. to depositors. The Central Bank paid their circulation in full, and 86 cents on the dollar to the depositors. But what I wish to point out is this: that when banks come to grief it is not the wealthy man who suffers but the poor man, the man who, perhaps, goes with his weekly wages to a store on a Saturday night and then finds that the bills he has received for his week's wages are worth only 30 or 40 cents on the dollar. Some speculator, however, is ready to buy them at that figure, and he holds them until they realise par. This is an unfortunate state of things, which the Government would avoid by tak-I hold, ing the circulation into their own hands. and I shall maintain it if I stand alone, that the Dominion Government has the right to endorse every dollar of the circulation, and not only so, but that every bill should be a legal tender for all purposes. At the present day any one can refuse to accept a bank bill, because he has heard rumors in regard to the bank or he does not approve of its management; there is no law to compel a man to accept a bank bill. I do not care how good the basis for the circulation may be, there may be doubts as to the position of a bank, and in distant portions of the country, and abroad also, bank bills are refused except at 4 or 5 per cent. discount. As I have shown, the specie and Dominion notes held by five of the banks, when they closed their doors, would not pay three and a quarter cents on the dollar. I maintain this would have been avoided if the Government had taken up the circulation of paper money. We have at present a Dominion issue, and no one will deny that that is the best circulation, for the banks to-day esteem it as a gold reserve. When discussing this question before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives on 16th January, 1890, Hon. J. Knox, late Comptroller of the Currency, said:

"Owing to the rapid reduction of the circulation the banks have had on deposit with the Treasurer of the United States since July, 1880, not less than $20,000,000 in gold, for the purpose of retiring their notes. Since 1st January, 1886, the amount so held has not been less than $42,000,000, and since 1st May, 1886, not less than $61,000,000. From March, 1887, to March, 1888, the amount was over $100,000,000, and since that period it has at all times exceeded $70,000,000, which large sums on deposit in the Treasury, without interest, have been of great service to the Government in maintaining gold payments."

Thus Mr. Knox points out that there is on an average \$70,000,000 of gold lying at the credit of the banks which are entitled to issue circulation. I have pointed out that the Fourth National Bank of New York only had \$180,000 of their own circulation, but they did a business of \$24,000,000, and they had \$4,000,000 of gold in reserve. If the Government would take the circulation into their own hands the whole country would be better off, and the people would feel more confident in regard to the circulation, and the results would be altogether more satisfactory. The American banks, notwithstanding what has been said about their reducing their circulation, have been able to accumulate large quantities of gold, and they find it cheaper to take the gold and lock it away than to buy American securities. The banks have only the right to issue 90 cents on the dollar on the amount of their paid-up capital, and they refuse to invest in Government 4 per cent. securities, for which they have to pay a large premium as high as 26 per cent. I believe the United States Government have been considering the propriety of issuing bonds at $2\frac{1}{4}$ and $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. instead of 4 per cent. The country and the Government would reap great advantage by the Government taking the circulation into its own hands, and I maintain that the banks would then be in a position to lend money when the people require it most. It is well known to business men that when the time of depression comes and you need the aid of the banks, you fail to obtain relief. They have plenty of paper money, and you will take it and give them the best security that could be offered. Yet they are not at liberty to give you discount, no matter how good the securities may be for the agencies of strong the securities may be, for the agencies of strong banking institutions pick up the circulation and demand that it be redeemed in gold. Thus the banks cannot keep out their circulation. If such a change were brought about here banks would be able to work up to their full limit of \$60,000,000 circulation, instead of being limited to \$30,000,000, and accordingly the banks would be better off and the whole people would have the advantage, which is now deprived them, of a circulation at a much less rate of interest than at present, because they are obliged to hold \$10,000,000 of legal tender notes and \$6,000,000 in specie, or \$16,000,000, which are locked up and don't earn a dollar. That is done in accordance with the terms of their charters. If the banks had greater freedom in some respects it would be better for the country. I am sorry the Finance Minister has not gone so far as I had anticipated, but it may be the dawning of a better day. No doubt young men will live to see a legal tender issue by the Government, and I hope still the Government will take further steps in that direction. The late Finance Minister, I think it was, went a considerable distance in that direction. He first took up the issue of ones and twos, and then of fours, and I hope the present Finance Minister will yet take up the issue of fives, and then of tens, and in this way the result so much desired will be accomplished.

Mr. WALDIE. In the discussion that has taken place on this question, the attention of the House has been drawn to the character of the circulation in the United States, and several commendations from the ministerial side of the House as to that system of banking have been made. I am quite satisfied that the system of banking in Canada is preferable, for the people of Canada and for the commerce of Canada, to the system of the United States. I am very much pleased that an arrangement has been made, and will be embodied in the Bill we are now discussing, by which the objections to our circulation have been removed. The objections to our circulation were that the holders thereof could not convert it at all points throughout the country. This having been removed, and the banks having come to an agreement with the Minister of Finance on the subject, I think that our circulation is in one of the best positions that the circulation of any country could be in. It has pliability, it can be increased when the large quantity of products in this country are being marketed. It has greater power of expansion than has the circulation of a currency based on the deposit of public securities, which is limited in its amount, and the disadvantages to the Government are not so extensive as the House would be led to believe by the remarks of the hon. gentlemen who favor national currency. In our circulation of $30,000,000, there is at least 30 per cent. held as a loan made to the Government upon which no interest is being paid. Against the $30,000,000 or odds at present in circulation, the banks are lending the Government about $9,000,000 without receiving any interest. They are carrying Dominion notes locked up in their treasury, which are Government circulation, and which are not used, and the Government have the benefit of that money in consideration of the privileges of circulation the banks have obtained under their charters. order that every one may feel that the circulation is based upon safe principles; in addition to the 30 per cent. of the Dominion notes, the banks are carrying 20 per cent. in gold, and an additional sum in other Government securities, so that there is really over 50 per cent. of available assets in gold, Government notes, and Government securities represented, as against the circulation. When the banks have agreed among themselves to redeem the notes of other banks, I think that everything has been done in that direction that the country demanded, and I think that the Government deserve credit for having succeeded in meeting the proper and right demands of the country in this matter. I do not think any danger will arise to the larger banks from this arrangement which has been entered into. Five per cent. upon our present circulation is a million and a-half dollars, and there are only three banks in the whole Dominion which each have a circulation exceeding a million and a-half. I do not think that any danger will arise from this in the near future. The protection afforded being satisfactory to the banks, I believe it ought to be satisfactory to the country also. Then as to the banks themselves. The House should remembanks themselves. ber that a bank which tries to force its circulation beyond the proper extent is immediately met by the other banks taking that circulation and returning it whence it was issued, and drawing against it for exchange or gold. It is only during the period of the transmission of that money that the risk is run of the larger banks suffering by the over-issue of the smaller banks. Now, with regard to the dangers of an over-issue, I have listened to the remarks of the hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House on this subject, and I do not think there is much danger of an over-issue, but against any possible danger that may arise in this direction, the Government have provided very severe penalties—I think unreasonably severe penalties. I have confidence in the management of our banks as a whole. not only safe to obey the law of the land in the amount of circulation, but they are also safe custodians of the deposits that have been placed with them. I think it would be unwise on the part of the Government to disturb the custody of these deposits in these banks, and I believe that the proposition to do so has not been called for. statement has been made that it was at the request of the Montreal Board of Trade that provision is introduced; that unclaimed balances should be appropriated by the Dominion Government. As against that proposition I have in my hand, and I will read it to the House, a resolution passed by the Council of the Toronto Board of Trade, which takes an entirely different view of this matter. It reads as follows:-

"Re unclaimed bank deposits, dividends, &c,

"TORONTO BOARD OF TRADE,
"COUNCIL MEETING,
"26th February, 1890.

"26th February, 1890.

"Moved, seconded and resolved: The attention of the Council having been drawn to the resolution passed by the Montreal Board of Trade in April, 1899, calling for legislation to compel all corporations, individuals, trustees, executors, &c., to send legal notification to the address of any person to whom such corporation, individual, trustee or executor, is indebted, of the amount due to such person, if the account between the parties has remained unchanged for three years, and to compel such corporation, individual, &c., to advertise in the newspapers of the place where the account between the parties was opened, of the existence of such indebtedness, and to compel returns to be furnished to the Government of the particulars of such indebtedness. This Council is of opinion that any such legislation would seriously interfere with the privacy of contract, would disclose the confidential relations between institutions and their depositors whose accounts often remain unchanged for a long term of years, would lead to encourage claims being made by impostors, would entail unnecessary expense upon the parties interested, and is not a matter falling within the legislative powers of the Dominion Parliament. This Council is further of opinion that no Mr. WALDIE. Parliament. This C Mr. WALDIE.

such legislation as has been suggested be granted, and order that a copy of this resolution be ferwarded to the Minister of Finance.—Carried."

This resolution was carried by the Council of the Board of Trade of Toronto, and is in direct opposition to the resolution that was carried some time ago without discussion by the Montreal Board of Trade. The Montreal Board of Trade intended their resolution to apply to all unclaimed amounts and balances, no matter in whose hands they were. and was not intended to apply to banks alone. I believe that the banks, having been made the custodians by the depositors, are entitled to retain the custody, at least, until some more substantial reason is given against the principle than a casual resolution passed by a Board of Trade. There are other reasons against this provision. There is no such legislation in England nor in the United States, as has been stated, and these are two countries which are referred to very frequently in our legislation. In addition to this, it is looked upon as an assumption of power by the Government of this country, and gives to the legislation of this country a degree of instability which should not attach to it. I hold in my hand a newspaper published in the city of New York, the Mail and Express, dated Wednesday, April 16, which has an article with the following heading:-

"A Canadian grab—The outrageous Banking Act introduced to Parliament—A scheme to rob the people—It provides that all deposits remaining unclaimed after three years shall be turned over to the Minister of Finance for the public uses of Canada—The depositor might recover it later if he had great luck."

After quoting the portions of the Act bearing on the subject, the article says:

"LOOKS LIKE SPOLIATION.

"LOOKS LIKE SPOLIATION.

"This seems to be an attempt at downright spoliation on the part of the Canadian Government when they enact that, after so short a period as five or eight years, they should seize unclaimed dividends and deposits 'for the public uses of Canada.' The joint stock banks of England and Scotland, some of which date back nearly two hundred years, hold all such moneys sacred, and no Government of Great Britain has ever dared to seize any so-called 'unclaimed' funds. The United States Government have never made any such demand on their banks, and, in fact, Congress would never allow such a measure of spoliation to pass, being the guardians, as they are, of the rights of the people.

"It is known to many officials of the old New York banks that claimants or heirs of old deposits or dividends will now and then appear, after from ten to fifty years or more have elapsed. The banks and people of Canada are likely to stoutly resist any such attempt at spoliation as that quoted above. The Canadian Government, whose high credit is undoubted, is inconsiderate to suggest such an enactment, as it damages its own good name by an enactment, as it damages its own good name by seeming to resort to such devices to raise money. The depositor who placed his money in a good bank for security and interest would find it no easy task to recover it if, after a few years, he found it had been appropriated 'for the public uses of Canada,' as the Act so benignly puts it."

With the exception of this provision for appropriating uncalled for deposits and dividends, I will support the measure now before the House. the course of this discussion, some unfair criticisms have been made of our banks, with regard to the proportion of their liabilities to their secu-I may say that it is possible to make that rities. proportion appear greater than it really ought to be, by taking large deposits made on Government account at certain periods, and taking the returns of the bank at those periods, and drawing an unfair comparison between them. I think it is more reasonable to trust the banks of Canada with the monetary affairs of this country than to load on the Government further responsibilities and duties in that respect. The Government now have the responsibility of levying on the people nearly $25,000,000 to meet the interest on the public indebtedness, and I am afraid that if trade does not improve, they might, if they took any further control of the finances of the country, cause greater stringency than at present exists. I trust that the Banking Act will be shorn of that clause to which I have referred, and will be adopted by the House.

Mr. COCKBURN. I regret to observe on this side of the House a disposition to regard as unsatisfactory the present monetary system established in Canada. For myself, I know no system of banking better adapted to the wants of a young and growing country—none which could have so well kept pace with its rapid development, and none which is better suited to still further promote that development. The banking system of Canada is based to a great extent on that of Scotland, and I think it will be acknowledged on all sides that while in England, in France, and in Germany there have been commercial convulsions which have torn those countries asunder, Scotland has been well guarded against similar attacks. We have been referred, strange to say, from this side of the House to the United States, as the country from which we might get an example of a monetary system, which we might wisely follow. Now, Sir, I have taken the trouble to look into some points connected with the United States banking system, and I desire, in the few remarks I have to make, to confine myself mainly to this aspect of the case. I find that as far as the percentage of gold or legal tender is concerned, we need not trouble ourselves much about the comparison. To a banker the important question is not the percentage which he may hold of gold or legal tenders, or both, but the question in his mind really is how readily he can convert his assets; and when you see the form in which our banking assets are held, as was shown by the hon member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) this even-ing, you will concede that every provision has been made that a Government can make, for the immediate and secure redemption of any notes issued by the banks. When a Government has gone the length of securing that every note issued by a bank shall be paid in coin on demand, it has gone the length of its duty; and in my opinion the less the Government interferes with the banks after it has secured that object, the better for the banks and for the commerce of the country. With regard to the United States system, I do not think any person in that country occupying a prominent position in economic science now holds that that system ought to be retained any longer than is necessary to replace it by some so-called national currency secured in a quite different manner, far less that it ought to be considered worthy of being adopted in any other country. It was the creature of the distressing circumstances of the great civil war, a state of affairs which I trust we shall never see in this country. In 1862 there existed some 1,500 banks chartered by the various States, all more or less weak, and all unable to support the Government in the dire crisis of the civil war upon which they had entered. The result was that the Government themselves were compelled to find the sinews and a much larger sum in bonds. The legal tenders were put out at the same time that the 1,500 banks had their notes out. The result was that in the conflict between the greenbacks and the notes issued by the banks, the banks were, perforce, compelled to suspend payment. When, in 1863, Secretary Chase and President Lincoln formed the present banking system in the United States, if you can call it a banking system, it was not with the idea of establishing a permanent system adapted to the commercial wants of the country, but to save the life of the nation by forcing the issue of the new national notes. A currency should be the outcome, not of the wants of any Government or of the supreme demands of the war department in a special crisis. Such crises must be met by the particular devices of the time. A currency ought to be the outcome simply of the commercial wants of the country, and be commensurate with the volume of trade; it ought to represent the flux and reflux of trade; it ought not to be in the form of a solid, immovable mass, as you find it in the United States, so that at times when the trade rises to a certain point it is utterly impossible to obtain enough money at any price; but it ought to be founded, as our Canadian system is, on the expansion and contraction of the trade of the country. When Secretary Chase brought forward this measure, he found that if they were to carry on war against the Southern States, they must have the means at their command; and accordingly in 1863, this system was devised. He attained his object by the new bank circulation based upon Government bonds, and the system of fixed money reserve. The assistance thus afforded the Government may be seen by the fact that in 1866 the national banks held no less than \$200,000,000 in legal tenders and over \$330,000,000 in bonds. And what amount of specie, of which we hear so much as being the basis of this system, had they to guarantee this issue? Why, to maintain those \$530,000,000, they had only \$9,000,000 specie. As far as actual cash held by the banks can be taken as an evidence of strength, we can bear comparison with any other country. The proportion of specie and legal tender to liabilities in the United States is about 12½ per cent, leaving out the legal note issues; in Canada, the proportion against all liabilities, including note issues, is about 10 per cent. In England the reserve of cash, including cash balances, is only 10.30 in the ordinary London banks; in some of the city banks they have only a cash reserve of seven, and in others it is as high as fifteen. But the average actual gold reserve held in England is said to be much less than 10 per cent. The question may be asked: why is it that in Canada we have so small a gold reserve? Well, that is a question I leave the Government to answer. The Government have taken from the banks already ten million dollars in gold; that is to say, the banks have paid ten million dollars gold and received in return ten million pieces of paper called legal tenders or Dominion notes. On these notes the banks are not receiving a dollar of interest, while in the United States, the banks receive a certain per cent. return on their deposits with the Government, in exchange for the legal tenders issued to them. In Canada the banks are handicapped to that extent that they have given about ten million dollars gold supposed to be lying in the Dominion Treasury, for which of war and to issue \$400,000,000 of legal tenders they have received ten million dollars legal tenders, and at the same time there are in circulation, in the smaller denominations of ones, twos, and fours, some five million dollars. If the banks had not been compelled by the Government to put up these ten million dollars, they could now have in their strong safes over ten million dollars of gold. Some one has spoken of the large profits obtained by Canadian banks. There are no banks in the British Empire so weighted down, in one way and another, as the Canadian banks. Let me read to you from the Bankers' Magazine, how matters stand in Great Britain. I find that the aggregate deposits in the British banks reached no less a sum than \$3,000,-000,000, and that these represent in proportion to the aggregate capital and surplus profits 5.95. That is to say, that the deposits in the banks in England amount to at least six times the capital and the surplus, or they are about nine times the amount of the paid-up capital. How is it in Australia? There the aggregate capital of the banks is \$83,750,000, and the aggregate deposits \$683,000,000, so that the banks hold \$8.15 in deposits for every dollar of capital they have subscribed. This is taken from the Bankers' Magazine of August, 1889. United States, I find from the Comptroller's accounts of 1889, that the aggregate capital of the banks was \$612,584,000, and that the proportion of the deposits to the capital is \$3.10 to every dollar paid up. How is it in Canada? We have \$60,200,000 of aggregate bank capital, and our proportion of deposits is only \$2.19, or $2\frac{1}{5}$ times. Yet, still we have those weights put upon us, loading us down, of payments having to be made in a manner out of capital, before we can touch any profits. Let us never forget that all restrictions upon banks are taxes upon the public. Well, what have the profits been? I find from the Comptroller's report of the United States National Banks that, during the year 1889, they paid dividends averaging 8 per cent. Our Government returns show that the Canadian bank dividends have averaged 7:11. If I put together the statements of the leading banks of England, including the Bank of England, I find the average dividend is 12.79. Leaving out the Bank of England, the average would be a great deal higher, as the Bank of England is the central depot for the reserve of gold, and it is obliged to keep a much larger gold reserve than the others. The highest dividend paid by any American bank was 100 per cent last year. The highest dividend of any Canadian bank was 12 per cent., and of any English bank of which I have any knowledge 20 per cent. The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Hesson) held before us a paper, showing the failures which had taken place in Canada since Confederation, and which he had extracted from a return submitted to this House. But I read a different story from that return to that which the hon gentleman gave us. I see in it signs of encouragement. What do I find? I find that since Confederation there have been thirteen banks which have more or less failed. Nine of these have failed, and four of them have gone into voluntary liquidation, but I find that every one paid its note holders in full, with the exception of the Mechanics' Bank, which paid only 57½ per cent., and it would have paid the note holders in full had the prior lien on the assets then existed, and the same precautions taken then with reference to the management of banks which are taken now. With reference to depositors, I find every bank paid Mr. Cockburn.

1211

in full with the exception of the Mechanics' Bank which was in existence before Confederation, and it paid 57½ per cent., while the Exchange Bank paid its notes in full and 64 per cent. to the depositors, and the Central Bank of Toronto, which is still in liquidation, has already paid its notes in full and $86\frac{2}{3}$ per cent. to depositors. This is a record of which we may well be proud. When we turn to the United States, which have been held up to us as an example, what has taken place there since 1863? The total number of national banks organised since the 5th February, 1863, is 4,148, of which 3,319 are now in operation, 829 having disappeared from the national system. These are accounted for as follows:

oounted for do rone .
Passed into voluntary liquidation to wind up their affairs	542 79
corporate existence Placed in hands of receivers	$\frac{79}{130}$
Flaced in hands of receivers	830
Less restored to solvency and resumed business	_ 1
Total passed out of system,	829

Thirty-eight of these have been reorganised. With reference to these banks which have failed since 1863—three years before Confederation—what are the returns? The note holders, of course, were paid in full, because the Government held the securities put up by the banks. But, how were the depositors treated? With two exceptions, the depositors in Canada were paid in full. In the United States, since the organisation of the National Banking system 130 banks have failed thereunder, paying dividends to creditors—not to shareholders—as follows:—

reholders—as	follows:
Banks Failed.	Paid Div'd.	Banks Failed.	Paid Div'd.
Banks	Paid Div'd100 p.c	Failed.	Div'd
1	68 67 66 65 64 63	1 2 1 1	24 23 20 17

That should be sufficient to show that we ought to be content with the system which has been so signally successful in Canada, and that we should not feel any temptation to fall back on a system which has produced such a result in the United States in so short a time. Here is a return of insolvent National Banks showing the progress of liquidation during the year ending the 1st November, 1889, with the dividends paid to the depositors in each case:

DIVIDENDS paid to Creditors of Insolvent National Banks during the past year, with the total dividends in each case, up to 1st November, 1889.

Name and Location	Date of	DIVIDENDS PAID DURING THE PAST YEAR.			Total Dividends	Proportion of Interest of Bank.	appointment of Receiver.	Date.	Amount.	Per cent.	paid Depositors.	paid De- positors.
			$ cts.		Per cent.	Per cent.
Lowell National Bank, Lowell, Mich do do Girst National Bank, Auburn, N.Y do do do do do do do do do	Heb. 20, 1888. Mar. 31, 1888. May 9, 1888. Oct. 11, 1887. April 22, 1882. Sept. 13, 1878. Sept. 14, 1878. Aug. 24, 1887. Jan. 20, 1886. Aug. 25, 1884. Aug. 17, 1887. Jan. 14, 1889. May 22, 1882. Nov. 2, 1881. June 27, 1887. June 27, 1887. Aug. 26, 1884. Nov. 15, 1887. Aug. 26, 1884. July 23, 1884.	April 20, 1889. April 21, 1888. Feb. 19, 1889. Dec. 27, 1889. Dec. 20, 1888 Feb. 16, 1889. June 3, 1889. June 3, 1889. Peb. 12, 1889. Feb. 12, 1889. Feb. 12, 1889. Mar. 22, 1889. April 1, 1889. April 27, 1889. April 27, 1889. April 27, 1889. Aug. 31, 1889. May 10, 1889. June 22, 1889. June 29, 1889. June 21, 1889.	35,893 25 45,166 57 76,597 04 39,433 51 39,542 18 31,072 50 32,307 45 16,303 23 68,357 16 43,502 61 4,473 45 1,889 72 403 65 15,067 86 34,316 25 17,158 07 5,264 41 12,502 75 292,882 23 45,182 71 47,942 14 129,678 95 33,694 58 388,280 84 3,285 50 108,601 75 109,959 22 7,317 23 21,040 68 $1,706,447 49	40°. 50°. 10°. 5°. 10°. 5°. 20°. 25°. 50°. 7285 20°. 10°. 20°. 10°. 20°. 10°. 65°. 10°. 2°. 4°885 1°27 10°. 9°. 10°. 28°50 2°. 30°.	40° 90° 35° 40° 45° 30° 45° 100° 75° 43°50 40°7285 90° 100° 65° 75° 57° 66°135 66°405 33° 100° 90° 28°50 73° 30°	100.

If you compare these statements in any way you please, you will find that, as far as the note-holders and the depositors are concerned, the position in Canada is far better than the position in the United States; and, therefore, I deprecate hon. gentlemen asking us to adopt a system which has produced results so bad in comparison with our own system, which is an admirable one, and is founded upon the Scotch system which has weathered many a commercial storm. Then, look at the manner in which our banks, which are few in number, are disseminated throughout this country. We have only thirtyfour or thirty-five banks in Canada, but they have, including head offices, about 420 branches, which are spread throughout the length and breadth of the land, though they are under the control of the powerful central institutions, so that the same rate of interest is practically charged from one end of the country to the other. On the same securities that you can obtain money in Toronto at 6 or 7 per cent., you can get it beyond the Rocky Mountains at about 1 per cent. more. In the United States it is very different. Looking at the rate of interest during the last nine years paid for money in New York I find that the result has been this:

Year.	Lowest Rate.	Highest Rate.	Equal in Per-	No. of Weeks in which Ex- cessive rates Prevailed.
1st half 1880 2nd do 1st half 1881 2nd do 1st half 1882 2nd do 1st half 1883 2nd do 1st half 1884 2nd do 1st half 1885 2nd do 1st half 1886 2nd do	P. cent. 2 1½ 2 2 1½ 1 1 1 1½ 1 1 1 1 1½ 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	P. an'm P. diem 6	52 144 371 52 52 30 25 6 1,100 4 4 10 9 192 97 10 6 10	10 5 4 12 5 13 9 2 2 1 3 19 16 13

It is urged that these excessive rates are very seldom paid, but it cannot be denied that this table shows that they prevailed during portions of

113 weeks out of 468 weeks, or during about 25 per cent. of that time. It may be said that these high rates were charged to stock brokers, but generally stock brokers offer first-class securities, and those are the amounts which they had to pay. I ask if any such fluctuating money market as that has been found in the history of Canada. Such a fluctuating market as that is enough to derange the whole commerce of the country. There is nothing stable or settled about it. It is here to-day and there to-morrow. I hope, therefore, that hon, gentlemen will be careful to go through the figures which I have placed beforethem, and to see if these offer a ground for supporting the system which they advocate. We have now a system admirably adapted to meet the demands of the country by providing for contraction and expansion. We know that large demands for money are made at certain times by the community on the banks for the purpose of carrying lumber, produce, cattle or wool or other products of the country, and there is comparatively no difficulty in consequence of that, but in the United States, with the solid iron wall which has been erected there, the banks are unable to meet those increasing demands, while our admirable system, based on the Scottish system, enables us to meet all these crises, so that they pass quietly over us, and we are almost unconscious that they have existed. With reference to the proposal that the Government should appropriate the unclaimed balances, I regret to say that, while I am at one with the Minister of Finance in the general scope of the admirable Bill which he has presented to us, I cannot agree with him, that these unclaimed balances should, at any time, be appropriated by the Government. The Bill says that after a certain time, these unclaimed balances shall be paid by the banks to the Minister of Finance and Receiver-General on behalf of Her Majesty, and shall be appropriated for the public uses of Canada. I could understand that the Government might, in strict legality, take the position of trustees of these unclaimed balances and might occupy the same position that the banks now hold, but that the Government should actually appropriate these sums for the public uses of Canada, and expend them on public buildings or canals, and should place me in this position, that, if I wanted to have my money after a certain time had elapsed, it would be necessary for me to go to the Treasury Board, hat in hand, and beg them to recommend by report to the Governor in Council to restore to me by an Order in Council, the money I thought I had safely deposited in a bank, is, I think, a claim which no Government has a right to put forward. The Government claims here all the dividends of the banks which have remained unpaid for more than five years. I think there is no reason why they should not go a step further and claim, on the same basis, all the stock which those dividends represent. I trust the Minister may see his way to make some arrangement, which will probably effect the object he has in view, which I cannot suppose is to appropriate the few paltry balances in the banks, at a time, too, when the banks are to put up about $1,750,000 in connection with the guarantee fund. I suppose his desire is to establish some means by which in the case of people who have left those balances and who

Mr. Cockburn.

known to the banks, their friends may be made aware of the fact that such balances are lying there. I think the whole object will be attained if every year the banks make a return to the Finance Minister of all sums that have been lying in the banks unclaimed for at least the last ten years, and about which there has been no communication between them and the depositors, about whose identity or existence the banks may be in doubt. But that the bank should make a statement of a private account between it and an individual who is perfectly cognisant of the fact that he has money there, and that this private account should be divulged to the public, is, I think, not necessitated by the circumstances, and is a requirement unknown in England and not imposed by the Federal or by any State Government in the United States. I cannot but think if these returns were made annually to the Finance Department, and a register kept there of the names and last known addresses of all persons having money in the hands of the bank, the owners of which the bank did not know, the object would be obtained, and people would understand at once that in the Department at Ottawa they could see at a glance the names of all those persons, and that they could obtain all the required information at the banks. I hope that as the Finance Minister has so graciously yielded the point with reference to the audit, he will take into his serious consideration the propriety of adopting this proposition with reference to unclaimed balances. I would also draw attention to another point. I doubt very much whether it would be competent for this Parliament to override a provincial law in a matter of this kind. It appears to me that it would be an attempt on our part to override the decisions that have been arrived at, for instance, in the Mercer and other cases, with respect to property. No doubt that was a matter of real estate and this is a matter of personal estate, but I think the same law will apply to both, and that it would be beyond the competence of this House to appropriate, for the public uses of Canada, money that had been handed over to any bank for safe deposit. If we were to do so, we should, in justice, also require all the loan companies of Canada to give in their returns, we should want the Government Savings Banks to give up what they have, and all the courts, all the trustees, all the corporations, all the executors, everyone, in fact, who had, in any shape or form moneys that did not belong to him, and the real owners of which he did not know. reference to other points in the Banking Act which are matters of detail, I shall refer to them in the committee. As this is a question in which neither party is seeking to gain any political advantage, I feel assured we may expect assistance of hon. gentlemen opposite in making such a Bill as will be commensurate to the wants of the country, and will keep our finances on a sound basis, and continue them in the same sound channel in which they have hitherto run.

balances in the banks, at a time, too, when the banks are to put up about $1,750,000 in connection with the guarantee fund. I suppose his desire is to establish some means by which in the case of people who have left those balances and who have since died, or whose existence is no longer sum that is in question, for if the sum was a paltry one, you would hardly see the banks making such strenuous efforts to retain control of it. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) I think, instanced a case where a child might have money put into a bank for its use. That is covered by the latter part of clause 89, which says:

"Provided always that in case of moneys deposited for a fixed period, the period of five years above referred to shall be reckoned from the date of determination of such fixed period."

There is no doubt, therefore, that that particular instance, which was put forward with the idea that it was a strong point, has no weight what-ever. Now, the question comes up, who is best entitled to these unpaid balances? If they are unpaid, it is either because the general public are not aware of the balances lying there, that the parties are dead, or for some other reason. Who are best entitled to that sum? I consider, of course, that the Government who represent the public, have the best right to these unpaid balances, instead of the bank which is composed of certain individuals. It is said there is no other precedent for this action but that of a colony in South Africa, but if we consider it desirable that a change should be made in this direction, I think we may well go to Africa for a good precedent. Even if there were none, that is no reason why Canada should not originate a new idea, if it is a good one. I think it would be quite proper for us to start out now and change the law in this direction. There is one other point that I will mention. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) referred to a number of telegrams and letters he had received from his constituency. I understand he is not the only member who has been flooded with telegrams and letters with reference to this matter. I know that on every side of me hon, members have been flooded with these letters and telegrams. That only shows that the banks are endeavoring to manufacture public opinion to serve their own end, and I think we should not be guided by their opinion, but that we should have in view solely the interest of the public.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. WELDON (St John). The word "ship" is used in a very different sense in another part of the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. The expression will be changed to meet the case.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). In sub-section d I find it stated that the expression "warehouse receipt" includes specification of timber. I should like to know whether it is to be understood in that sense, and if a specification of timber is to constitute a warehouse receipt. That has not been the practice heretofore. The specification is the mere evidence of the measurement and quantity of timber in the lot, and it seems to me that a specification should not constitute a warehouse receipt.

Mr. FOSTER. It appears that this expression is in the old Act, and I will look into it and see if any addition need be made.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Sub-section d, as now framed, may make a very considerable difference in certain cases. The rulings of the court, and especially of the Supreme Court, have been that it was necessary that a receipt should be given by the party who receives goods for other persons on his wharf. An important case has been recently decided in Quebec on this point.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. These clauses in the present Bill are altogether different from those in the old Act.

Mr. FOSTER. In sub-section d, on line 24, I propose to add after the word "merchandise" the words "delivered to him as bailee and" which confines that to a bond fide warehouse receipt.

On section 10.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). 1 do not see why we should insert that provision making the minimum capital $500,000. There will be applications made to this Parliament, no doubt, for the incorporation of banks with less than $500,000 capital, and if the demand is made for good reasons, this clause will be set aside. Of course we cannot bind the future course of this Parliament, and our successors would be at liberty to grant charters to banks having only $200,000 capital, if they choose to do so. This stipulation would only amount to advice to our successors; it would be simply an intimation that the opinion of Parliament, as a general rule, is unfavorable to incorporating banks with a small capital. But I do not think it is the business of this Parliament to give that opinion in the statute.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is the advantage of putting it in the Act. The impression has gained, and it certainly has been the impression of the Government, that the amount of capital embodied as the minimum in the last Act was too small, and that the capital stock ought to be enlarged. Of course this cannot bind future Parliaments, but it shows what the opinion of this Parliament is, and, consequently, so far as that goes, it is a guide, and I think a help, in the way of keeping up what we consider to be best, namely, the formation of banks with a large capital. I do not think there can be any objection to the provision, and I do believe there would be an advantage.

Mr. CHARLTON. What was the minimum stated in the last Act?

Mr. FOSTER. $200,000 and $100,000 paid up. Mr. CHARLTON. I doubt if it is a wise policy to increase that by 150 per cent. as it is a rather long step in advance. It seems to me that the minimum stated here is somewhat large.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it is too large.

On section 13,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). This provision would be much more severe in the case of a bank formed with a capital of $500,000 than in the case of one with a capital of say $2,000,000, because the amount required to be paid up in both cases is exactly the same, namely, $250,000. That is, 50 per cent. of the capital is required to be paid up in the one case, and only one-eighth of the capital in the other case; so that it would be much more difficult for a small bank to start business than a large bank. Would it not be better to require that a certain percentage of the capital should be subscribed and paid, say that 75 per cent. should be subscribed and 50 per cent. paid up, so that the conditions would be the same, in the case of both a large bank and a small bank?

I understand that the hon. Mr. FOSTER. gentleman does not object to the amount of $250,-000 being required to be paid up in the case of a bank with $500,000 of subscribed capital. If a bank has a capital of $1,000,000, the security is just as great, so far as the note circulation is concerned, because the bank can issue only to the amount of the paid-up capital. I do not see that the objection lies, provided we require a sufficient amount to be paid up. I wish to amend this by striking out on page 4, line 6, the words, "and such number of auditors not less than two.

Mr. WALDIE. I would call the attention of the Committee to the provision requiring the capital to be paid into the hands of the Receiver General or the Minister of Finance. Under the Old Act, the money was deposited in a chartered bank, and the payment was certified to the Treasury Board, the chartered bank allowing interest on the money, while the new bank was in process of getting into operation. This change does away with that, and prevents the organisation of a bank, say at Winnipeg, or at Calgary, or at other points where there is no Receiver General, and where the Minister of Finance cannot easily be reached; and it also entails a loss on the subscribers to the new bank, by preventing the payment of interest on the money, pending the commencement of operations.

Mr. FOSTER. On the other hand, what we are striving for is attained by this provision, and would not be attained by the provision in the old The facilities for making the deposits were altogether too great under the old Act-so great that in operation there was really no security at all. Now, it will be certain proof of the bond fides of the subscribers if they put up the money in real cash.

Mr. WALDIE. I do not see that there is much difference as to the bonâ fides. The security would be ample if one of the chartered banks would give a certificate that the money had been deposited. Under the present provision they would certainly lend the money which would be deposited with the Finance Minister, and in that way they could get round it. I do not see that this extra burden should be put upon new banks while they are being organised.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I think it would be far better that the money should be actually paid in to the Finance Minister.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not see any objection to the money being paid in. On the contrary, I think it is a most desirable provision in order to prevent mere paper payment. I would submit, however, that it is not necessary to provide that so much as $250,000 should be paid in. Under the old law, $100,000 was sufficient, and we know that some of the best banks had only half a million dollars of subscribed capital to begin with, and $100,000 paid up. The object must be not so much to preserve a monopoly for the existing are established on a safe and sure basis; and anything that will tend to prevent the estab-lishment of new banks will operate against the best interests of the country. If you require $500,000 to be subscribed bond fide, and a proportion of each share to be paid up, say 25 per cent., or $125,000, then you may consider that you will have ample security for the payment of $500,000 in a short time. If you allow the $250,000, or whatever the deposit may be, to be made up by one shareholder paying more than his proportion, and another less than his proportion, you will have an unsatisfactory share list, because you may have fictitious subscribers. Twenty-five per cent. on each share of the subscribed capital of $500,000 would give a paid-up capital of $125,000, and each share would be forfeited unless the shareholder paid the three-quarter balance, so that, practically, you have $500,000 available in a very short time, and the concern would not be hampered at the very outset. It is desirable that banks should be established, and that existing banks should not have the whole monopoly, and I would ask whether there be an objection to cutting down the cash amount required to be deposited to $125,000. There is an impression that the amount fixed is largely the result of the views or solicitations of the banks. I understand the bankers pressed this point on the hon. Minister, no doubt in the public interest, and no doubt with due regard to their own interest, but their advice is not to be accepted as representing both sides of the question. I would suggest that each share-holder pay 25 per cent. on his subscribed capital in order that we may have $125,000 deposited on a subscribed capital of $500,000.

Mr. Langelier (Quebec).

Mr. FOSTER. That would only make half the guarantee.

Mr. MULOCK. Just half. Formerly the subscribed capital had to be half a million dollars, and each subscriber had to make a payment of 10 per cent. on the amount he subscribed, and the bank was required to have $100,000 on deposit in some chartered bank before it could commence business; but under that provision a bank could start on a nominal capital of $500,000, of which $400,000 might be entirely valueless. All the safeguard the law required was that there should be $100,000 in some chartered bank, and a subscription list of $500,000, and there was no provision for any investigation to see whether that $500,000 was bond fide stock on which 10 per cent. had been paid. Now you are going to the other extreme.

Mr. CHARLTON. This provision would require a bank, with a capital of $500,000 subscribed, to deposit 50 per cent. of the capital. If the capital subscribed were a million, only 25 per cent. need be deposited: and if the capital were two millions, only 123 per cent. need be deposited. The application of the clause would be unequal and unfair, and it would be better to adopt a provision requiring a certain percentage of the capital stock to be paid in.

Mr. WALDIE. With regard to making the payment to the Receiver General, while it may be entirely agreeable to the representatives of the Government banks, it may not be so agreeable to the bankers in the other parts of the Dominion. It really is just taking the moneys of subscribers banks as to see that banks brought into existence to new capital in the organisation of new banks, and placing it in the Government banks, because the Minister of Finance will hand it over to the Government banks, and I do not think any of the chartered banks would facilitate the organisation of an unsubstantial bank.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose we had better discuss this, not as to what the bankers propose, but as to what we think would be sufficient security. I think we are all agreed, that the facilities have been altogether too great for the formation of banks within the last few years, and that at present the impression is we have about as many banks as the business of the country calls for, and that, while we do not wish that there should be any monopoly in the banking business, yet the opinion is that when a newcomer makes its appearance it should establish its bona fides beyond doubt, and that it should not be an easy matter to start a new bank To put up $250,000 on a subscribed in Canada. capital of $500,000, or of a million dollars, ought not to be a hardship in the case of men who are in good faith establishing a reliable bank, nor is there any hardship that it should be handed over to the Minister of Finance and remain here a certain time. The object of that was to make sure that there would be a bond fide raising of money as a guarantee of the integrity of the new institution. That money may not have to remain here very long, but the promoters of the bank may push forward its organisation.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it fair to give a bank with a million dollars subscribed capital double the facility you give one with half a million dollars? The same amount is here required in all cases, whether the capital be $500,000, or $2,000,000, or $5,000,000. An equitable arrangement would be to require a certain percentage of the capital of the bank to be deposited.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is nothing inequitable in the clause, if we remember its real object. The real object of this provision is to establish a minimum under which a bank cannot be organised. The question of policy involved is whether it is wise to allow a bank to go into operation with a smaller capital than half a million dollars subscribed, and a quarter of a million dollars paid up. If we arrive at the conclusion that that is a safe minimum, what is the necessity of imposing restrictions on banks with larger capital? Why call up a larger proportion of capital in relation to a bank with a subscribed capital of one or two million dollars, which cannot be used? but there is no necessity of imposing restriction on a bank of larger capital. On the contrary, in relation to that class you have a much larger security. The object is to prescribe the minimum of subscribed capital and of paid-up capital before a bank shall start business. As regards the amount, and in relation to what the hon, member for North York said, the matter has been pretty well considered, and not considered only in the light of representations from the bankers, but also in the light of existing facts; and it is a significant circumstance that we have followed here the practice of the last decade in incorporating banks. I do not think there is an exception to the rule; and if there is, there is, at any rate, a fixed rule on the subject, that this amount of subscribed capital and paid-up capital shall be required before a bank comes into operation. This provision is necessary to prevent sham organisations.

Mr. CHARLTON. You are providing for a minimum amount of capital before a bank can be organised, and a minimum security for the larger banks. I think that the larger bank should give a greater security than a bank starting with half a million of capital.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the security for?

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the amount should be in proportion to the capital.

Mr. FOSTER. This is only to insure that the bank will commence business.

Mr. CHARLTON. A bank with half a million of capital is placed in a much worse position than any of the large banks. It is well to provide that the money shall be paid into the hands of the Receiver General; but I think it is not equitable to require the same amount of money from a small bank with half a million of capital as from a large banking institution. I think it should be so much per cent. on the capital.

Mr. MULOCK. I think my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) fails to consider the whole scope of this Act. The subsequent clauses provide for an increase of capital afterwards, but every bank will start with the minimum capital required by law.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). In any case, so long as they have half a million subscribed and $50,000 paid up, they can start.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes, and we want to make a safe minimum. People who desire to enter into the banking business will avail themselves of the easiest methods, and will in any case provide that the stock shall be as small as possible under the law. The Minister of Finance talks of millions as if millions were to be picked up on the bushes every day. I have had some experience in lending assistance towards the establishment of a bank, and I know it is not an easy matter to get the money required for the bank to go into operation. I am not referring to a weak institution, but to one that stands at the head of the banking institutions of this country, as far as the share list is concerned. If the Minister looks at the proposition I have made, he will see that it possesses some elements of strength which do not exist in his own scheme. Under his Bill there is no proposition to make a shareholder pay anything on his subscribed capital, so that, although there may be $500,000 subscribed and $250,000 paid, there may be a number of the subscribers in default. I propose to make every subscriber pay in gold 25 per cent. of his subscribed stock, so there would be $125,000 in gold paid on the $500,000 subscribed, and you are absolutely certain that the whole will be available, because every subscriber who has paid up a fourth of this stock will follow his capital, and the whole of the capital being intact, either he will continue to follow it or someone else will. That continue to follow it or someone else will. would be a great security to the bank. I am at one with the Minister in the view that every safeguard should be established in regard to banking, but I think that a bank with $500,000 subscribed and a quarter of the amount paid up is just as sound as a bank at this stage need be. The soundness of the bank does not depend on the amount of money on hand, but on the amount of available assets as compared with the liabilities, and the bank with $500,000 to begin with will increase in wealth, as circumstances will admit, but you are now going to prevent the establishment of small banks. It is not in the interest of the country to hand over the whole banking system to the existing banks. The Minister of Finance may take the view that the country does not require more capital to be invested in banks, but others may take a different view of that subjet. We know that in times of stringency large sums of money find their way out of Canada and are invested in New York or Chicago. In those times of stringency, small banks would be available for the local needs of the people. Whether the present suggestion came from bankers or not, I know that anything which would prevent further rivalry in banking circles would meet with their approval. I am in favor of the general scheme of the Finance Minister, but I object to a policy which would hand over the whole banking system of the country to the existing banking institutions. I move, if the Minister of Finance will not accept my suggestion, that $250,000 be struck out and $125,000 substituted. The masses have no show here at all. If there is an attempt to make a railway law at all to meet the requirements of the masses, the railways can prevent such legislation. Now, if it is to bring banking capital within reach of the people the bank influence in this House is strong enough to prevent any relaxation of the law in that respect.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. It is so, because I can scarcely make a proposition that hon. gentlemen opposite do not come out and denounce it. Now, have they considered this scheme? I ask the senior member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown), who is so anxious to prevent any further facilities for the public, if he has considered it? I never knew him to fail to re-echo a sentiment from the Treasury benches, on this occasion as on every other, like the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson), he is always found ready to endorse a proposition of the Government, I will say, it looks to me, without reflection. I move that the sum of $250,000 be struck out, and that $125,000 be substituted.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I do not know where the suggestion came from that the minimum should be $250,000; but, trying to regard the matter, as I hope I do, in the interest of the public at large, and not that of any bank, I am somewhat surprised to hear the hon. gentleman say that it is a difficult matter for any number of gentlemen who would associate themselves together to form a new bank, and in whom it was likely that the public would have confidence, to raise $250,000 as a minimum.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes; it would be difficult.

Sir DONALD SMITH. Still I cannot look upon it in the same light, and I trust that the Minister will adhere to the proposition.

Mr. ELLIS. I think it would be difficult. No doubt there are gentlemen in Montreal and Toronto and other large cities in Canada where there is a great deal of wealth, who find it easy to raise hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars; but in other sections it is not so easy a matter to control such large sums. It may be quite right to have the capital of the bank made $500,000, but I agree with the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) that it would be better, looking at the country as a whole, to prevent the monopoly which the banks evidently desire, whether they have moved in that direction or not. I think it would be better not to insist upon this large sum of $250,000 to be paid up. In the section of the country from which I come it would be exceedingly difficult to raise such an amount of money to be paid up for the formation of a new bank.

Mr. MULOCK.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. CHARLTON. I move that the words " $250,000" be struck out, and the words " 25 per cent. on capital stock" be substituted therefor.

Amendment negatived.

On section 14,

Mr. FOSTER. The sixteenth line comes out, as not necessary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have not got the General Banking Act before me. Looking at it generally, this is a pretty large sum. I would request the Minister of Finance, if he is making any alteration in the clauses, to notify the Committee of what he is doing. There is no alteration, I suppose, in those we are now discussing, except this amendment he is proposing to make.

Mr. FOSTER. The old law gave the right to the Treasury Board to issue a certificate on being satisfied that $100,000 has been paid up, and the section just before makes it necessary that $250,000 shall be paid up.

On section 15,

Mr. MULOCK. This simply means, with the help of clause 13, that no bank can be established at all, because, under section 15, as worded at present, the bank must make this deposit within one year of its getting its Act of incorporation. I do not know whether the Minister intends to adhere to that requirement.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Why not?

Mr. MULOCK. Because a bank may be incorporated to-day and it will not be possible to complete its working organisation within one year.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). If they cannot raise $250,000 within a year after getting their Act of incorporation, their Act ought to cease.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon, member may think so, but I think he will find there will never be a bank incorporated.

Mr. FOSTER. The last phrase is to prevent the keeping of the prospective organisation of a charter dangling before the public for an indefinite length of time.

Mr. COCKBURN. I think one year is a very wise provision.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think it is quite long enough.

Mr. MULOCK. The bank again speaks.

On section 17,

Mr. FOSTER. After the word "aforesaid" in the fourth line, please insert the words "without interest." Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I was going to call attention to that. Under the law it was the practice for banks to deposit the amount subscribed and paid up in an incorporated bank and that bank was in the habit of paying interest. Under this law there will be no interest paid, and it will, in fact, be a loan made to the Government without interest. I think the Government should allow interest on the amount in their hands.

Mr. WALDIE. The Minister of Finance can arrange with the Government to allow interest on the deposit at some rate of interest, and it is unfair that more drastic clauses should be inserted in this Bill than existed in the former Act, and that also there should be a loss of interest. You are making it more difficult to organise the bank, and then you are denying the promoters the privilege of receiving interest on their money until their organisation is completed. At least 3 per cent. interest should be allowed.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I hold that interest should be allowed at the rate of 3 per cent. after ninety days.

Mr. FOSTER. The provisions were framed for the purpose of preventing a charter remaining a long time without its provisions being taken advantage of. That idea will be vitiated the moment you allow the parties a percentage on their deposit.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The question of interest could be no object as influencing delay.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When we borrow money it is at 3 per cent. But we do not borrow the money in this case, but it is deposited with the Government. In the case of regular loans they cover a certain period, but in this case the money is liable to be withdrawn at any time, and it is not worth 3, 2 or even 1 per cent. to the Government.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The Government receives money in the savings banks and allows interest.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No sum of $250,000 is accepted and 3 per cent. interest paid.

Mr. CHARLTON. The proposition is that interest at 3 per cent. should be allowed at the expiration of three months. The money is, at all events, in the hands of the Government, and it is only fair that interest should be allowed.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is unfair that the Government should ask those who associate themselves together for the purpose of starting a bank to place $250,000 in cash in the hands of the Government or in any chartered bank for three, four or five months. No doubt they should protect the public against the establishment of institutions that might prove disastrous, but a reasonable amount of encouragement should be afforded those desirous of starting new banks. We expect the country to grow and the population to increase, and we are all looking forward to a great future in the North-West. This being the case, the Government should afford facilities for the establishment of new banking institutions. Instead of doing so, the Government are virtually placing an embargo on new banking institutions. The Government should allow, after thirty days, the current rate of interest, and fifteen days' notice should be required on the withdrawal of the deposit.

Mr. FOSTER. We must recollect that the payment of $250,000 down is not necessarily the initial step towards organising the establishment of a bank. I suppose business arrangements can be made and a great deal can be done with respect to organisation of a bank before that amount is required to be deposited. Then, again, the Government may not be in need of money. I do not see what reason there is for the Government being obliged to take a forced loan and pay interest upon it. All these considerations go to show that a provision not to pay interest would be far more beneficial, considering the object in view.

Mr. CHARLTON. It must be remembered that, while this may be a forced loan, it is the Government that requires the organisers of a new bank to deposit this money in their hands.

Mr. FOSTER. They will do it more quickly if no interest is paid.

Mr. CHARLTON. After the money has been in the hands of the Government three months, interest should be allowed at 3 per cent.

On section 18,

Mr. MULOCK. Is it not possible to bring this one bank (La Banque du Peuple) under the general law?

Mr. FOSTER. The bank occupies now, and has occupied for a series of years, an exceptional position. It is founded on a different principle, its charter was granted a great many years ago, thirty-five or forty years ago, and at each revision of the Bank Act it has been allowed its separate privileges to a certain extent. The present proposition is to allow the same so far as they have been allowed heretofore almost entirely, and in their internal regulations they are regulated by the terms of their own charter. These are not, so far as this section is concerned, very inportant matters. But on all important points, with one or two exceptions, the bank has to conform to the sections of the banking law.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Does it affect their circulation?

Mr. FOSTER. Not as yet.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does the double liability apply to the shareholders of the bank?

Mr. FOSTER. It does not apply. Later on I will have a proposition to submit to the Committee on that point.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it bound by the guarantee provision which applies to other banks?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The shareholders of this bank are personally liable for the whole amount.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister will see that one very important provision in the Banking Actis not applicable, I refer to the provision in the law which limits the amount which the directors are permitted to borrow from the bank. Perhaps there may be some provision in the charter of that particular bank, limiting the borrowing powers of the directors, but under section 18 of this Act, that provision is not made applicable to the bank in question, and unless there are some restrictions in the charter of that bank, the directors may borrow the whole capital of the bank themselves, and yet the other banks are, to a certain extent, liable for their conduct. Is it right that that power should be left to the directors?

Mr. FOSTER. By their own charter they are restricted.

Mr. CHARLTON. What are the restrictions? We should understand what the powers of the officials of this bank are. We may know how the bank stands to-day, but we do not know how it will stand a few months hence.

Mr. FOSTER. We will allow that clause to stand.

On section 19.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Sub-section 2 of this clause provides that every director of a bank must be a natural born or a naturalised citizen of Her Majesty. The Bank of New Brunswick is very awkwardly placed in regard to this. A number of the shareholders are persons who are living in the city of St. John, who are citizens of the United States, the number of persons eligible as directors is very small. We have also a large American business done on our river, and it is really very essential that the shareholders should be at liberty to elect American directors if necessary. I do not see why there should be any restriction as to the nationality of a director, but if there is to be a restriction, instead of all the directors being British subjects, it might be provided that the majority of the board shall be British subjects. I think there could be no objection to that. My opinion also is that there should not be a provision to prevent persons holding less than $3,000 worth of stock becoming directors. The experience of persons connected with banks is that men who hold a smaller number of shares often take a greater interest in the bank than those who have a large number of shares. I would suggest that the clause should read "the majority of the directors shall be natural born or naturalised subjects of Her Majesty.

Mr. FOSTER. There can be no very great difficulty experienced in this so far. That has been the law.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Yes, there is a difficulty now, and I know a difficulty will exist in a very short time in the Bank of New Brunswick. As my hon. friend knows, we have a very large American business connected with the logs from the State of Maine, coming down our river, and it is very important to have a person connected with that business on the board. I cannot see at all how it endangers the stability of the bank that a shareholder who happens to be an American subject or a French subject, should not be eligible. If there is any possible danger that can be anticipated, the provision that the majority of the shareholders shall be British subjects, ought to be sufficient.

Mr. COCKBURN. I do not see any necessity for providing that directors must not be American citizens, or of any other nationality than our own. I do not think there should be any such national distinction drawn in this matter. If American citizens are shareholders in a bank, I cannot see any possible reason why they should be debarred from being elected directors of the bank if it is thought necessary, and I think it better to leave out that provision altogether. We need not consider the question whether a man is an EnglishMr. MULOCK.

man, a Frenchman, a Chinaman, or what country he belongs to, provided he pays up his money like any other shareholder.

Mr. TISDALE. I cannot agree with the hon gentleman that we should allow the possibility of our monetary institutions getting under the control of aliens. You will find that all the tendency in the United States is in quite the contrary direction.

Mr. HALL. We should not overlook the provision of the law that in ordinary companies the majority of the directors are required to be British subjects.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the suggestion of the hon, member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) might be adopted, that the majority should be required to be British subjects.

Mr. BOYLE. I would like to ask whether all the directors would not have to be put on the same footing. If this qualification applies to one, should it not apply to all? Do not the shareholders elect directors irrespective of any other director, and might they not elect a majority of aliens?

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like to ask whether the provision requiring that a stockholder, to be eligible as a director, must hold $3,000 of stock, was a provision of the old banking law?

Mr. FOSTER. He had to hold the stock, but this requires in addition that the stock shall have been paid up.

Mr. CHARLTON. Would it not be well to let the shareholders exercise their discretion as to who is the fittest person to be a director? Some person might be considered well qualified to be a director, though holding a smaller quantity of stock.

Mr. FOSTER. We have to look not only to the qualification of the director, but to the security of the public, and the security of the public is increased by the clause as it stands. It is a question in my mind, whether any difficulty will be experienced in obtaining well qualified directors holding $3,000 of paid-up stock.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I quite agree with the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Some of the small banks with $200,000 capital will experience a difficulty in electing directors under this clause. I think a limit of $2,000 would be quite sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the difficulty will not be a practical one.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT, As regards the larger banks, with a capital of $500,000 and upwards, it is probable the difficulty will not arise; but as regards the smaller banks with $200,000 capital, the difficulty will arise. That difficulty will be met by qualifying on borrowed stock. The clause will be evaded by a dead certainty, and, therefore, I doubt the wisdom of putting it in the Act. If the hon. Minister will look over the list of shareholders of the banks, he will find that in the case of a number of smaller ones this provision, which he thinks a valuable precaution, though I do not, will have the effect of limiting the choice of directors to a very small number, and very probably depriving the shareholders of the opportunity of using the services of some of their best men.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In the Bank of New Brunswick, for example, which has a capital of $500,000, there are only thirteen persons who are eligible for directors. Some of them cannot be got under any circumstances, and others are out of the city; so that practically there is scarcely more than the number required by law who are eligible for directors.

On sub-section 5, section 24.

The term has been reduced Mr. FOSTER. from three to two years. Three years seems to be a long time for a proxy to run, considering the greater facility we have now for travel. In fact, two years now is far better than three years at the time the previous Act was adopted.

Sir DONALD SMITH. There might be many cases in which this provision would prevent shareholders from having a voice at the meeting.

Mr. FOSTER. What case can you suggest? Sir DONALD SMITH. It is a great inconvenience to renew the proxies, and it is more likely to place the management of the affairs of the bank in the hands of the few who are able to attend, notwithstanding the fact that travelling facilities by steam are much greater, and that post office arrangements are improved, so that letters and proxies can be sent much more readily and quickly. Still, people may be travelling in Africa or in China, or anywhere else, and, where they have given proxies for three years, they may be inconvenienced by the change to two years. I should like to know if there is any good to be derived

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The objection would apply to three years as well as to two

Sir DONALD SMITH. Not to the same ex-

Mr. DESJARDINS. The shareholder can remove his proxy and give it to someone else.

Mr. TISDALE. It is well known that people give their proxies to persons, without taking the trouble to recollect when they expire.

Sir DONALD SMITH. As there is no principle involved in this, I hope the Minister will allow the law to remain as it is now.

Mr. MULOCK. I think there is a principle involved in this, and I think that every proxy should expire after the annual meeting. People give their proxies to others, and it is a delicate matter to cancel them. The result is that the bank, practically, passes out of the control of the shareholders into the hands of the directors on proxies given in years gone by. We know that proxies may be revoked, but I think the shareholder should be protected against his own good nature, and the proper thing is to allow the proxy to run out at the end of the year.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Canals-Repairs and working expenses $481,116 Sir RICHARDCARTWRIGHT. How do present are considerable other expenditures in addition to this $481,000 incurred on account of canals. The vote for railways and canals chargable to income amounted to no less than $302,000, so if you add this sum to the $481,000 you get a total expenditure of $783,000. I am not quite sure at this moment what the total receipts are.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can have the receipts on concurrence. The items for the Intercolonial Railway are in the Supplementaries.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I find from the Public Accounts that it is as I supposed. The receipts have been growing small by degrees and beautifully less. The sum total that we received in 1889 appears to have been a little under $300,000, and our total expenditure on the canals in the two items to which I called attention, verges on $800,000. Now, that is even worse than I had supposed it to be. I do not know that the hon. gentleman is specially blameworthy about that, but at the same time, it is a very serious matter. If my memory serves me, we used to get within $100,000 or $150,000, at any rate, of the money that we expended. Now, we are confronted with a deficit on canals of $500,000 a year. That suggests that one of two things, either they are becoming monstrously unprofitable, or that there is serious mismanagement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe the management is unexceptional; I have not heard any question of that. As regards receipts, that depends, first, upon the immense increase of railways; second, in the diminution of the tolls themselves, which has been considerable, as the hon. gentleman knows. For instance, the tolls on cereals in the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals are reduced from 4 cents to 2 cents. reason to hope that when our canal system is completed, there will be a large increase of the craft on the canal, because the tendency is, as the hon. gentleman knows, to increase the draught, and size, and carrying power of the barges, vessels and propellers plying on the canal. When the whole system is increased to fourteen feet, I have little doubt but that there will be a large increase of transport on those canals.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should be very glad to think that would be the case; but recollecting our past experience, I entertain very great doubts indeed as to whether the results will do more than to keep up our present very small receipts, and that means a very much increased loss on anything we have been accustomed to heretofore.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is so. I have not got the whole receipts at present with me. But this matter can be brought up again on the Supplementaries.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Everybody would like to see our canal system made as perfect as it can be with reasonable regard to economy, but in the teeth of the fact that we expend $800,-000 a year and only get $300,000, and that as the result of a very large expenditure going on during the last fifteen years, it raises very grave questions as to the correctness of the data on which the hopes of the hon, gentleman are founded as to getting increased receipts. I do not mean to say that it receipts compare with the total expenditures? There is not possible that the thing may be compensated in other ways. But the loss is very heavy, we are losing nearly $3 to $1.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This discussion is quite apropos to the discussion that took place last night with reference to the Intercolonial Railway, when I pointed out that the reduction on the canals was likely to involve as heavy a deficiency as has been unfortunately sustained in the working of the Intercolonial Railway. I was not aware then that the deficiency was as large as has been pointed out by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). It is evident, I think, from this expenditure which has been given, that if the working of the canals involved this large annual deficiency and the Government propose to spend a further large amount, as indicated by the First Minister, for deepening the canals and they propose to reduce the freight through the canals, we should not hear so much as we have been hearing about a deficiency on the Intercolonial Railway, and about the necessity of rearranging the tariff over that road. I think they should both be treated in the same way, because one public work is of as much importance to one section of the country as the other is to the other.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is quite true, but the inference to be drawn would be rather that we should try to amend both. The net result is that we are losing, probably, over a million a year in the public works which, I think, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance pointed to as being a source of revenue to us—I think he called it a "princely endowment," but it is one which involves a dead loss, over and above the interest, of a million dollars a year.

Mr. MULOCK. I should like to ask the Minister when the contract was issued for the deepening of the Rideau Canal?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no contract made. The work is required to be done speedily and completed before the canal was opened in the spring. The Department have, therefore, employed men and are doing the work themselves.

Mr. BARRON. Had the fact of an election coming on in this city anything to do with it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not fair. The remark is not worthy of the hon. gentleman,

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose there was a vote last Session for the work?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; there was a general vote for maintenance and repairs, and the money required is being taken out of that vote.

Mr. MULOCK. I am surprised the work was commenced so late. I understand it was commenced only a month ago. It might have been commenced early in the winter, and have supplied employment for the people, instead of rushing it through as is now being done. What wages do the men receive?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, I will tell the hon. gentleman to-morrow. The work was commenced in consequence of considerable pressure being brought to bear by steamboat owners who have put craft on the canal requiring a greater depth of water, and also, because the volume of water has very considerably diminished with the clearing up of the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. MULOCK. I only complained that the work was not commenced earlier and carried on during the winter, so that it might have given employment to the people.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The attention of the Department was called to it before by the steamboat owners shortly before it was commenced.

Mr. MULOCK. If the Minister's attention was called to it only shortly before the work was commenced, that is an answer to my question. The necessity for the work must have been known for a considerable time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I never heard it before. If so, that would account for the work not being commenced sooner.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I call attention to one or two of these entries. We will take the case of the Rideau Canal. The hon. Minister is asking for a vote of $63,000 for maintenance and repairs of the canal, while considerable sums appearing under the heading "chargeable to income amounting in all to $40,000. We are, therefore, spending on the Rideau Canalthis year over $90,000, chargeable to income, and the total receipts are put down at $7,000. It appears to me that this canal requires to be carefully investigated and overhauled. It seems to be almost impossible to spend so much money, if the matter was properly investigated.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think the expense of keeping up the canal has materially increased for years. The canal was a military work constructed by the Imperial Government to give an interior line of defence in case of war. Accordingly, it has never paid in any way whatever. Still it must be kept up. There is an immense population living in its vicinity, and it supplies means of transport to a very large and important community. The canal cannot be filled up, and it must be maintained. There is an increase of $2,000 for the item, for the purpose of meeting some claims of damage for overflow in the vicinity of Kingston. A surveyor will be engaged to ascertain the values of those claims.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Looking at the matter in a business point of view, the Minister is aware that the Rideau Canal, which was valuable at one time, has been almost entirely superseded by the number of railways constructed in that quarter. I think he would do well to consider between this and next year what can be done with the Rideau Canal, for a charge of $90,000 for its maintenance and receipts for $7,000 do not constitute an item that is defensible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We must keep it up, I take it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is an open question whether it is worth the trouble.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope we will be able to give a more satisfactory account next year, but I cannot promise. The hon, gentleman no doubt remembers when the Rideau Canal paid well. I remember the time when an enormous business was done through it, that was before the St. Lawrence Canals were built; and to add to the misfortunes of the canal half a dozen railways have been built.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Surely the hon. Minister does not adduce those sentimental reasons for spending $90,000 next season. That is an appeal ad misericordiam, and might come in under certain circumstances, but scarcely for the benefit of the Rideau Canal. I will not press the matter further, but I thought it right to draw the attention of the Committee to it, because the subject calls for more investigation than it has received from the head of the Department for a considerable time. It is impossible to suggest what could be done; but there is a huge quantity of land which was lost by the construction of the canal, and it is possible that thousands or hundreds of thousands of acres might be reclaimed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is possible that some of the lands might be reclaimed and sold. Applications have been received from various parties on the line of the canal for lands, if they could be reclaimed.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Who has the superintendence of the work here?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The superintendent of the canal is Mr. Wise, and he employs foremen or overseers. He is responsible for it. We do not appoint these men in solemn conclave of the Council, we do not ask what their politics are, all that we know is that the engineer is told to get the necessary number of men to blast these rocks, and place them on the work.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am not saying that the Minister enquires into the political stripe of the men employed, but I did suppose he would have an idea of the amount the work would cost, and the number of men employed. Has he received any report as to when the work is likely to be completed? Of course the canal will have to be opened as early as possible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe it is announced by the Superintending Engineer that the canal will be opened on the 1st of May perhaps.

Mr. MULOCK. There is another matter in regard to canals to which I wish to call attention. During last summer the public were greatly shocked by an investigation going on with regard to certain matters connected with the management of the Welland Canal, and we have learned in our part of the country, with very great pain, the report of a strife between an hon. member of the Senate, and, I think, to same extent, the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), in regard to the management of the canal. The Senator in question charged some of the officials, if I remember the evidence aright, with profiting by their position, with using some of the public servants for their own advantage, with obtaining material for their own benefit, and so on. I think the Government should lay the report of the Commission on the Table, that we may have an opportunity of seeing if there is anything in these accusations.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There were some charges brought against the superintendent of the Welland Canal, Mr. Ellis, by an hon. gentleman of the other House. These charges were made in his place in the Senate, and he gave specific statements as to certain short-comings of the local superintendent and the Government granted a commission to investigate that. A gentleman was appointed for the purpose, whose report, I think, has been laid on the Table of the House.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). Yes; weeks ago. Sir JOHNA. MACDONALD. The report speaks for itself. There have been some irregularities, but the integrity of the officers has been maintained by the report of the commission.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask what progress has been made in regard to the Trent Valley Canal. We know that at one time the First Minister, and especially the former Minister of Railways (Sir Charles Tupper), was deeply interested in this work and promised its early completion. I think, as early as 1881, he announced that this canal would in a very short time connect the upper waters with Lake Ontario, but, although, some slight work has been done here and there since then, the canal does not appear to have materialised to the extent promised. We heard of a commission roaming about the country, occasionally. Nearly two years ago, the Minister of Railways announced that he intended to have a commission appointed, as to whether or not the work was practicable. It would occur to one, that that was an enquiry which should have preceded the original promise made to the House and to the country. The fact that they appointed the enquiry after the promise was made that they would complete the canal, is rather calculated to make one think that the Government make promises before they have evidence that they could carry them out. The commission to which I refer appears to have held its meetings at odd intervals, and the commissioners do not appear to proceed with any great degree of business promptitude. In fact, they appear to be fully sustaining the reputation of some commissions, that it is a commission not for the purpose of discovering how the work could be carried out, but how the work could be strangled. We ought to know if the Government have determined to abandon the work, or if they are prepared to say that what they promised in 1881 was a premature promise without proper foundation, then we should know it. We should know why the Government have not completed this work with the promptitude they promised on the eve of the general election, in 1882. Is the report of the commission to be kept for a year or so, until the thing shall do good work again? I think it is important that we should have some information about this matter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We had all this discussion before during this present session, on the items for the expenditure for the Trent Valley Canal, and I do not know that it would be of much service to go into it again. The hon. gentleman is not correct in stating that when the Government of the day commenced the Trent Valley Canal, they did so without necessary information. The hon. gentleman is not as old as I am, and cannot look back for so many years, but there were two elaborate reports by engineers of skill as to the construction of this canal, its object and its value as a commercial work, with a full estimate of the cost. These are to be found in the blue-books of the time. When the question of this canal was revived, after great pressure from that part of the country, they had these reports before them. Although the hon. gentleman speaks rather contemptuously of what has been done, there has been work of great value locally carried on, giving interior navigation of a very considerable extent, which has been fully acknowledged and appreciated by the people. Whether the cost of the construction of canals has increased I do not know, but it was ascertained from reports of the scientific officers of the Government that the completion of the whole system would cost a very much larger sum of money than was estimated in the two reports to which I have alluded—one by Mr. Clarke, and the other I think by Mr. Shanly; and it was thought prudent to go on with these interior works, improving the route locally, and having a commission to ascertain what would really be the cost at the present day of completing the original scheme. That commission has met from time to time and taken evidence. Although the commissioners have been appointed for some time, they are not paid for that time; they are only paid for the time they actually expend in the search and examination into the question. When they will be able to report I cannot say just now, but when I give him the other information, I will also tell him when I expect that the report will be made.

Mr. BARRON. I would like to impress again on the hon. First Minister the great importance of having the report distributed during the recess, if possible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have promised that.

Mr. BARRON. And not only that, but also, if possible, the evidence which has been taken and on which the commissioners base their report. is believed in our part of the country that the report is going to be adverse to the building of the Whether that impression is justifiable or not, I do not know; but it would not be fair to those who believe that this work is a necessary work, to ask them to accept the commissioners' report, without being able to arrive at a conclusion from the evidence as to whether they were right or wrong. They have gone to the other side to take evidence with regard to the Erie Canal, and it would be well for us to have that evidence also. Inasmuch as the hon. First Minister said at the beginning of the Session, that he expected the report this Session, I think he ought to ask the commissioners to report as quickly as possible, because there is a feeling throughout the Midland district that the Government are not altogether relieved from the responsibility for the delay in the commissioners' report.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The report of the commissioners, as soon as it is received, will be printed. The evidence, however, may form an enormous volume. If it comes within reasonable proportions it will be printed with the report; but if it contains plans and drafts, and all that sort of thing, the cost of printing it would be enormous. At any rate, it will be accessible to all parties who wish to examine it, and if necessary, and it is ordered by Parliament, a précis of the evidence may be printed.

Mr. BARRON. The cost of this work is estimated by some of the engineers at $10,000,000, been extended. Sir John A. Macdonald.

and that expenditure is fully justified by the large number of people in the locality who are interested in the work. If that is so, even if the evidence is lengthy and the cost of getting it great, that is no reason why we should not have the evidence in full, in view of the great importance of the work. It would be impossible for us, from a condensed statement of the evidence, to judge whether the commissioners had arrived at a proper conclusion or not. Even supposing the commissioners have thus far sat forty days, and have taken evidence for five hours each day, I do not think it could possibly be so voluminous as the hon. Minister supposes.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the nature of the reference to the commission?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is principally as to the cost and the best mode of construction of the last portion of the Trent Valley Canal, which extends to the River Trent at the head of the Bay of Quinté. The commission was issued before I had anything to do with the Department, but I am quite sure there were no instructions of any kind to the commissioners as to how they would report. Indeed, if they were gentlemen, they would not submit to any suggestions of that sort. They had a free hand to report as men of science what their estimate was, and what was the best and cheapest mode of finishing the canal. As regards the evidence, I hope that it will not turn out to be so voluminous as to make it inexpedient to print it with the report. At all events, we are in the hands of the House, and if the House orders it to be printed next Session, it will be printed. In the meantime, it will be accessible.

Mr. MULOCK. Of course, the canal was recommended for two reasons—that it might serve the local purpose, and that it would be a means of communication between the upper waters and Lake Ontario for larger vessels. There will be a great difference, of course, whether it is to serve as a local work or as a through work. Does the reference to the commission cover both classes of works? Perhaps a copy of the commission could be laid on the Table.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly; I will get a copy of the commission.

Collection of slide and boom dues.......$6,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought arrangements were in progress by which these were going to be transferred to the Local Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought some negotiations were going on.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why is there an increase of $2,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The lines have been extended.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About how many miles does this cover?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are three different systems. In Cape Breton the distance is 1261 miles; New Brunswick, 42 miles; the Magdalen Islands, 1563 miles; Grosse Isle, 53 miles; and the north shore of the St. Lawrence, 732 miles.

Telegraph Lines, North-West Territories. $25,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How far north do these extend now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As far as Fort Pitt. There is another called Victoria, also.

Salaries and contingent expenses of the

Mr. FOSTER. I saw the leader of the Senate yesterday and he told me they are going into a very thorough examination of this whole matter, and that the report is pretty nearly ready, and will be submitted to the House. This also may come up on the Supplementary Estimates, for there will be an item with reference to the Senate in that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If this is allowed to pass, it is on the distinct understanding that an explanation will be forthcoming. It is a matter of importance, in several ways, that we should get it. I will not vote for the principle that we are to vote money here and are not to get an account of it from the Senate.

Resolutions reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjourn ment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.15 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 24th April, 1890.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock. Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT.

A Message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows :-

Mr. Speaker,-

His Honor, Chief Justice Sir Wm. J. Ritchie, Deputy Governor, desires the immediate attendance of your Honorable House in the Chamber of the Honorable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Senate Chamber.

And having returned.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that the Deputy Governor had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following

An Act to authorise the Toronto Savings Bank Charitable Trust to invest certain Funds.

An Act respecting the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto.

An Act respecting the Erie and Huron Railway Com-

An Act to amend "The Patent Act."
An Act to amend "The Copyright Act."
An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Manitoba and South-Eastern Railway Company.

An Act to incorporate the Rainy River Boom Company.
An Act respecting the Brantford, Waterloo and Lake Erie Railway Company.
An Act to incorporate the Owen Sound and Lake Huron Railway Company.
An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Victoria and Sault Ste. Marie Junction Railway Company.
An Act to confirm an agreement between the Montreal and Western Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.
An Act respecting the Confederation Life Association.
An Act respecting the Summerside Bank.
An Act to incorporate the Grand Orange Lodge of British America.

British America. An Act respecting the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company. An Act to incorporate the Interprovincial Bridge Company.

An Act respecting the Calgary Water Power Company (Limited).

An Act further to amend the Adulteration Act, chapter one hundred and seven of the Revised Statutes.

An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company

An Act to incorporate the North Canadian Atlantic Railway and Steamship Company.

An Act to grant certain powers to the Chambly Manufacturing Company.

An Act to grant certain powers to the Chambly Manufacturing Company.

An Act respecting Agricultural Fertilisers.
An Act to incorporate the Montreal Bridge Company.
An Act to incorporate the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company.
An Act respecting the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company, and to change the name of the company to "The Kingston, Napanee and Western Railway Company."
An Act to incorporate the National Company.

An Act to incorporate the National Construction Company.

An Act respecting the Columbia and Kootenay Railway and Navigation Company. An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Dominion

An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Dominion Mineral Company.

An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Imperial Trusts Company of Canada.

An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the River Detroit Winter Railway Bridge Company, and to change the name of the company to the River Detroit Railway Bridge Company.

An Act respecting the Central Ontario Railway.

An Act respecting the Central Ontario Aniway.

An Act to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of Samuel May.

An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Saskatchewan Railway and Mining Company.

An Act to prevent the Disclosure of Official Documents and Information.

An Act respecting the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I would like to ask if the Government has any idea of our sitting on Saturday, as many of us are anxious to get away as early as possible?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think we can give up the first Saturday, but we can compromise by taking next Monday for the Government. After next Saturday, we will take Saturday.

Perhaps the right hon. Mr. MITCHELL. gentleman can give us some slight information, judging by the amount of business the Government have to submit to the House, as to the time when we are likely to get through, assuming that this side of the House treat them generously, as we are prepared to do.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am glad to hear from the third party that they are going to treat us generously.

Mr. MITCHELL. We always do.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will not dispute that now, as the hon. gentleman is in a generous mood, and I have no reason to complain of the course of the Opposition, generally. We will endeavor, by acting together, with slight differences occasionally, to get through as soon as possible. I think by Monday we will be able to speak more positively.

Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can tell us to-day whether he has any more measures to introduce.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can state that we shall have Supplementary Estimates for 1890-91, and a measure respecting certain railway subsidies, and also respecting some land grants for railways; and a special measure respecting the Calgary and Edmonton road. I may say across the floor that the proposition is in order to ensure the immediate construction of the road from Calgary to Edmonton—the Royal assent having been given to the Act to-day—to grant it the same terms as those under which the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Prince Albert Railway has been constructed.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the hon. gentleman when he thinks it probable that these railway subsidies will be submitted to the House?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Next Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) May I ask if it is the intention of the Government to proceed with the Bill on the Order paper in the name of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to amend the Fisheries Act? It very largely affects the lobster fisheries in the Maritime Provinces, and a great many representations have been made to hon. members from those Provinces asking them to object very strenuously to the punitive clauses of the Bill, and there will be very strong opposition to it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will give the hon. gentleman an answer on Monday.

Mr. BLAKE. And there is the Act respecting the protection of navigable waters. I would like to know if that is to be pressed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will answer on Monday.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would the right hon, gentleman also give an answer on Monday as to whether the Act respecting stamping on leather will be dropped?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Minister of Inland Revenue will be able to answer that.

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to ask if the report from the officer investigating the charges made against Captain Robertson of the steamer Baltic has been received?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We shall be able to tell the hon, gentleman as soon as the President of the Council, who is acting as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, comes in.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I might remind the hon. First Minister that three months at least have elapsed since that commission was stated to have been issued, and the commissioner surely ought to have been able to make his report by this time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe he has reported.

Sir John A. Macdonald.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 134) respecting fishing vessels of the United States of America.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose to add the words "on the Atlantic coast" to the third line and to make the fees $1.50 per ton.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is omitting two important sections of the old Act which has now expired, the one providing that United States fishing vessels will not be required to enter or clear at the Customs when they do not remain more than twenty-four hours in port, and the other that American fishermen shall only be liable to forfeiture in the two cases of fishing or preparing to fish.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No doubt the subsections referred to are no longer law. They were originally part of the protocol intended to establish a modus vivendi, under a treaty to be considered by the United States, and as such they were given vitality for two years. It is not intended to re-enact them, but simply intended to establish a license system, which has been generally called the modus vivendi, although that extended to other subjects as well.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This is a great change of policy on the part of the Government, and it may have serious effects. If the hon, gentleman intends to require that American fishing vessels, when they enter any bay or harbor, must report at the Customs each time, he would bring about the same state of irritation which existed before the modus vivendi was brought into operation. The chief cause of complaint made on behalf of the United States fishermen was that they were required to enter at the Custom house every time they entered a port and pay the Customs' fees. That caused more irritation and annoyance, and was the cause of more correspondence than any other complaint the Americans made. The solution which was arrived at by the passing of the third sub-section, rendering it unnecessary to enter at the Custom house, was a satisfactory one. That did not give dissatisfaction to the American fishermen, or cause any loss of national dignity on our part; but, if the hon, gentleman repeals these clauses, and enacts that whenever the American fishermen come into our waters for repairs or for bait, or for any other purpose, they are violating the law unless they enter at the Custom house, he will bring up again the same trouble which existed before this modus vivendi was agreed to. The other section appears to be still more important. As a matter of policy, we decided to put a modified construction on the Treaty of 1818, though it was susceptible to a number of different constructions. There were offences specified there under which the American fishermen would be liable to forfeiture, but it has been agreed under the modus vivendi arrangement that only two offences would render the vessels liable to forfeiture. The one was the actual offence of fishing, and the other was the offence of preparing to fish. For us to revert to the old system would be to cause endless trouble, perhaps from the hasty action of our officers on the coast, so that the trouble from which the Government have been extricated with some difficulty will arise again. The Government will bring the country into a great deal of trouble in this matter if they pursue this course.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We are not requiring any vessel to enter at the Customs house and pay dues. Any vessel of the United States entering for the purposes for which it was permitted to enter under our law, as far as I can discover, was never required to pay one cent of Customs dues or any other dues. The master of a vessel was never required to pay any Customs duties, but he had to report at the Customs if he remained more than 24 hours in the harbor. We are not of necessity returning to any system of administration which existed before, but we are conferring exceptional privileges upon those vessels for which licenses are taken out. We are not renewing any privileges previously granted, but any United States vessels that enter our ports will be dealt with in accordance with the treaty, in accordance with the legislation of this Parliament, and on friendly terms so far as they are consistent with our fishery protection.

Mr. MITCHELL. I agree with what my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), has Either the clauses which are omitted from this Bill were necessary at the time the modus vivendi went into operation, or they were not necessary. If they were necessary, what reason has the hon. gentleman for excluding them from this Bill? Those clauses worked very well at that time, and why should we create a new state of things which may lead to complications with the United States, possibly from the ignorance of Custom house officials on the coast, or from a disposition, which has sometimes been evinced, to annoy. That might lead to complications of a very unpleasant character. These clauses were either necessary in the old Bill or they were not necessary. If they were necessary in the Bill which was passed two years ago, they are necessary now, and it appears to me that they should be added to this Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They were not necessary, and it is not proposed to introduce them now.

Mr. MITCHELL. They must have been thought necessary at the time by the hon. gentleman or his predecessor.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They were put in because they were in the protocol.

Mr. BLAKE. From an observation which dropped from the hon. gentleman in the course of his explanation, in which, as I understood, he said it was not intended, with reference to vessels taking licenses, to alter the system of administration which has prevailed up to this time, I drew the inference that, if it was not thought advisable to alter the system prevailing at the present time, it might be a matter of policy to hold in terrorem the power of altering the system in regard to vessels which had not taken out licenses.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We do not alter the system as to vessels which take licenses, but we do not propose to alter the law in regard to vessels that do not take out licenses. I do not wish to be understood to say that we will revert to any system by which the provisions of the protocol will be dis-1221 commissioners was that the Act had not been disregarded, and it is not intended by the Government to enforce any more stringent provisions in the future than those which have been enforced heretofore, but it is necessary to have a strict supervision of our waters for the protection of our fish-

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Do I understand that these fishermen will have to enter at the Custom house?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Does that also apply to the second clause

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot at this moment undertake to say to what class of offences the penalty of forfeiture would be applicable.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think it is unfortunate that the Government think it advisable to pass this Act, which is only a temporary Act for one year, and not to insert the conditions and agreements come to by the contending parties at the time of the Treaty of Washington. The same contention was made then, that the Government did not exact from the American fishermen any improper entries. It was contended by the American fishermen that they were harassed, and it was to meet their views that this clause was put in. By removing these clauses, you will create a great deal of suspicion as to your intentions in regard to the American fishermen, and I cannot see why that matter cannot be left as it was, seeing that it only affects one or two years.

Bill reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved third reading of the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. I just wish to say that I do trust that the Government are well satisfied that the greater degree of governmental elasticity and power which they obtain by the omission of these statutory provisions, will compensate for what, I apprehend, may be the suspicion and hostile comment provoked by that omission. I feel the delicacy of the situation, and I shall say no more than this. I cannot help believing that, from the circumstance of these provisions having been inserted in our statute for the past two years, a considerable, and perhaps an undue degree, of emphasis will be attached to this change, and that, unless there be important reasons for reserving the powers which their omission does reserve, there are very important reasons against a change for the proposed short period of a single year; but of this I feel the Government are the best judges.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time.

CONFUSION IN THE HOUSE.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before proceeding further I would take the liberty of drawing the attention of the Government to a matter of vital importance to members of this House. The members on the back benches on this side-I do not know how it is on that side—often cannot hear a single word when the Ministers speak, nor frequently can we hear, on this side of the House, what is said by members on the front Opposition benches. Now, it is highly desirable, either that better order should be kept in the House, or that members, if regarded. On the contrary, the contention of our they have got to communicate with each other, should do so in very subdued tones, so that those on the back benches may have the privilege of hearing what Ministers say, as well as what is said by those on this side of the House. If the back benches are so often empty, it is because the members find it too tiresome to sit there when they cannot hear what is going on.

BANKS AND BANKING.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 127) respecting Banks and Banking.

(In the Committee.)

On section 27,

Mr. COCKBURN. I think that we should provide that stock which is not taken up, and which may be selling at a higher price than the rate fixed by the directors, should be made free and should not be tied down to the pro rata to which the other stock is tied down. There is one amount of stock taken up first which is fixed by the directors, and which shall not be sold if the stock is selling at 50 premium, or shall not be allotted at less than 50 premium. But there is some other stock not taken up at all. Then, I say, let that fetch the market price, whatever it is.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no objection to that.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I quite agree with that proposition.

Mr. WALDIE. There has been a principle adopted by some banks and by some companies where shareholders were unable to subscribe for additional stock and the stock was selling at a larger premium than it was allotted at, that the stock was so sold and the premium paid over to the party entitled to it. In the case of parties unable to subscribe for additional stock that seems a very inequitable way to do, and this will prevent it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I was going to suggest to make the time three months, instead of six months, within which the allotted stock shall be taken up by the shareholders.

Mr. FOSTER. It was three months before. My hon. friend last night was very anxious for an extended time, but now he seems anxious for a contracted time.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Three months will be sufficiently long. If the time were extended to six months the shareholder would have time to speculate as to whether he would take stock or not. Ordinary people would take the stock when it was first allotted, but the wary and clever speculator would wait until the six months had almost expired in order to see whether the stock would rise in value or not, and if there was a rise he would sell his right to subscribe. Our postal arrangements are so perfect that communication can be rapidly had with shareholders in all parts of the world, and an answer can readily be obtained within three months.

Mr. FOSTER. Three months appears to be a sufficiently long time. It is possible if it were extended to six months that cases such as have been mentioned might occur. But we must look at the other side of the question also. A subscriber here in every case.

Mr. McMullen.

must be allowed due time to get his notice. He also may find it necessary to make financial arrangements to meet his allotment of stock. If the Committee place the time at three months the time may occur in the holiday season, the subscriber may be travelling and it may be impossible to hear from him within that time and for him to make arrangements to take his stock. In that event he would lose it. I think time should be given to prevent these not remote possibilities.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I consider that three months is ample time. There is ample time for negotiations for stock within that time. In the meantime the shareholders would be tying the hands of the directors of the banks for six months, notwithstanding the fact that the increase of capital is for the benefit of the shareholders and for the public.

Mr. FOSTER. It is simply a balance of inconveniences.

Mr. COCKBURN. Although the time allowed was longer than six months, I, on one occasion, lost an allotment of stock, when travelling. Six months is a very short time to allow, for notice is required to be given to all the shareholders who are travelling, and time is required to consider whether they will take up the stock. I would prefer a longer time than six months.

Mr. DESJARDINS. Speculators in stock move more rapidly than people who invest bonû fide; so six months would be a fair time to allow.

On section 28,

Mr. FOSTER. This section provides for the reduction of the capital stock.

Mr. ELLIS. The Committee last evening fixed the minimum amount of both subscribed and paid-up capital. Does this section imply that the Government can go below that limit; and if a bank can go below that limit, why should not a bank start on a less amount of capital than the Committee fixed last evening? If $250,000 is the least at which a bank can start and carry on business, surely when its capital falls below that sum, it should be closed, if the argument which prevailed in the Committee was a good argument.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The capital stock can be reduced at the instance of the Treasury Board, but they would not follow a policy injurious to the interests concerned.

Mr. BLAKE. We have, however, already provided that a bank should not start business with a capital below half a million. We may very well put a provision in this clause, providing that the reduction shall not be below half a million dollars. I think if we insert in the first line the words "may be reduced to any sum not below $500,000," that would be right.

Mr. FOSTER. We will allow the clause to stand for the time being.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Clause 5, section 28, would seem to imply that the reduction of the capital is not to take effect, or have any force, until a Bill is passed by Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be either way.

Mr. KIRKPATICK. It ought to be one way or the other. I think we ought to make them come here in every case. Mr. FOSTER. It was not the proposition that in every case they should come to Parliament. The idea was, that just as the capital stock may be increased, under the safeguards which are placed in the Bill, so there may be a means by which capital stock may be decreased, under the safeguards in section 28; or, if the bank chooses, it may come to Parliament and ask for legislation in order to decrease its capital stock.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Do you not think that may cause doubt of the legality of a reduction, without the sanction of Parliament?

Mr. FOSTER. This is the sanction of Parliament.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. But, if in some cases the bank has to come to Parliament for a Bill of sanction, we ought to say in what case they need not come.

Mr. BLAKE. We can say in the clause " if in any case legislation is asked" before the words " to sanction."

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that would be right.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I suppose it would not be necessary to have a certificate of the Treasury Board.

Mr. BLAKE. Not if they get prior information, so that they may form a judgment on what they should do if the Treasury Board should refuse it.

On section 29,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think the words "shall be personal estate" in the second line, declaring the character of the property in bank stock, ought be in the clause at all. We have nothing to do with saying what the character of the property shall be.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well; strike the words out.

On section 30,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that the provision here relating to the appointment of executors, administrators and curators, and dealing with the stock after the death of the owner, is a matter with which we have nothing to do. It will depend on the law of the Province relating to personal property how the interests of any deceased person in bank stocks shall be dealt with.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. You might say "personal representative," and entitle him to take the place of the deceased.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think it is necessary at all. I think these words should be struck out.

On section 32,

Mr. HALL. It seems to me that the regulation with reference to the cancellation or forfeiture of shares ought to be by by-law, otherwise the directors might exercise their discretion about it, and it might be irregular, and sometimes unjust. I would suggest that you add after the word "or" in the twelfth line, "under the provisions of a by-law to that effect."

Mr. BLAKE. I think it would hardly do to deprive the directors of the right to exercise discretion in individual cases. If a defaulting share-holder became insolvent, the proper course would be to forfeit, and if he were solvent, it might be a question in each case whether it were best to forfeit or to sue. The matter cannot be dealt with by a general by-law, but the directors must have discretionary power, which is exactly what the Bill gives.

Mr. FOSTER. The section is exactly the same as the old law.

On section 33,

Mr. COCKBURN. The 18th line of this section says: "if the directors declare any shares to be forfeited." Does that mean any of the shares mentioned in the same paragraph?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. COCKBURN. This seems to be a little wider. For instance, the directors might declare shares to be forfeited which were held as collateral for a debt.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It should read "any such shares."

Mr. COCKBURN. In the case I mention it might be deemed advisable to sell the shares; or, if there were other creditors, it might not be necessary to sell them at all. If you make it read "any such shares," that would confine the provision to the shares mentioned in this item.

Mr. TISDALE. I think six months is too short a time within which to require the bank to sell forfeited shares. We might say twelve months.

Mr. BLAKE. I think wherever the bank possesses itself of its own stock by forfeiture or otherwise, there should be a very short limit within which to dispose of that stock. The public will be under the impression that there is a double liability, when in the case of the forfeited or acquired shares there would be none at all, and it will not understand the extent to which the bank holds its stock in its own hands.

On section 34,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It seems to me that this clause, making provision with regard to pleading, is beyond our power, and would only cause confusion. I know that I have successfully urged that view before the courts with regard to a fire insurance company.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The subject of insurance is not necessarily a matter of Dominion control. In ordinary cases I would agree that this Parliament has no control over procedure; but in banking transactions, I submit that our power is just the same as it is in the case of bills of exchange and promissory notes, to regulate the procedure in regard to those matters which are under our jurisdiction. The point was argued in my own Province, where it was decided to be intractives, and I know it is a very useful provision indeed.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I admit the force of the objection of the hon. Minister of Justice, but it is not necessary in this case. When we provide for banks calling up their shares, that is as far as we can go; to enforce their payments, the banks have to go to the courts, and those courts are regulated by the Local Legislatures. I have a very strong opinion that we have no right to interfere in the matter of pleadings in the courts.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. We have special power given us by the British North America Act, to legislate upon procedure in criminal matters, but we have expressly taken from us the right to legislate on procedure in civil matters; and surely this is a procedure in civil matters. The criminal law is under our jurisdiction, and if merely having that jurisdiction carried with it the right to legislate on procedure, it would not have been necessary to give us that right specially in the Act. I agree with the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) that we have no right in this matter to legislate as to how the declaration should be framed.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think our right to legislate on the subject of banking extends as far as the hon. the Minister of Justice says it does. That right properly includes the right to legislate on the general principles of banking, the incorporation and the powers of banks and bank managers, but I do not think it necessarily includes our right to legislate on procedure in the particular civil matters connected with banks any more than in other civil matters, because such procedure is under the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures; and, as the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) has said, the procedure in criminal matters being placed under our jurisdiction, and that in civil matters not being so placed, we have no right to legislate on the latter. I want the House to consider what will be the consequences of this doctrine, applied to the extent the hon. the Minister of Justice proposes to apply it. We are going to have two sets of civil procedure—nay, perhaps, two dozen sets. At any rate, we will have two sets all through the Provinces. We are going to have the set which the Province which has to do with procedure in civil matters, provides, and which presumably will be satisfactory, for the only interest the Province can have is to provide reasonable facilities for the prosecution of all civil matters in its courts; and we may well leave all to the Province. But if we say no; if we decide to intervene—then for the banks we establish one code of procedure and one rule of evidence; for railway companies we may establish another; for bills and notes a third—and the result will be confusion worse confounded. At the best it is the establishing of two codes instead of one; and that is very bad indeed. Therefore, it seems to me, it would be better to omit the reference to procedure in this matter, and to trust to the Local Legislatures whose duty it is to provide efficient remedies in this as in all other cases.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I shall be delighted to assist my colleague in removing from the Bill, or any Bill of the like kind, any provision which is not clearly useful, concerning which our jurisdiction is questioned, with a view to avoid doubtful ground. This seems to me an eminently useful provision, and one that has been repeatedly applied, and applied with advantage. As I have already stated, there exists no Provincial legislation providing for a case of this kind. section is an exact transcript of a section which has been on the Statute-books for nine years at least, and it has been found very convenient in practice. It has stood the test of legal examination, and has been decided to be intra vires of this Parliament. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) calls attention to the fact that civil pro- that may come within that rule is, I agree, implied Mr. Weldon (St. John).

cedure is given to the Provincial Legislatures. So are civil rights, but there is not a clause or subsection of this Bill which does not treat of civil With regard to the inconvenience of having several sets of procedure, that is undoubtedly very great, and that is simply a reason why. when dealing with Customs law, federal works, bills of exchange, and banking laws, we shall endeavor not to multiply the systems, but to have them nearly as uniform as possible. If we are to hesitate about this section as being within our powers. what shall we say of the law for the protection of revenue officers, which provides that in a suit for damages in a civil court, in any Province, on a simple plea of "not guilty," or of the general issue certain things may be given in evidence, or of provisions all through the Railway Act as to what shall be evidence, for reasons of public convenience, such as the provision that a simple certified transcript of the document itself shall be received in evidence, to avoid inconvenience and loss of suits arising from documents having to be searched for at Ottawa. In every phase of our legislation we have to provide for the inconveniences of the federal system as well as its convenience, and we have to see, when dealing with subjects under our control, that we provide reasonable facilities for their prompt execution and for the protection of our officers. In this case we have to provide a simple means of recovering money due on a bank share. We had an illustration of the same thing occurring the other day with regard to bills of exchange, concerning which it was proposed, and I understand the proposition has been adopted in the other House, that we should adopt a provision with re gard to costs in proceedings on bills and notes. every phase, it seems to me, the right to deal with this subject of procedure is bound up with our right to legislate on a subject at all. Whether it is necessarily involved, is a very difficult question to decide.

Mr. BLAKE. That is just the question, whether it is necessarily involved. That is the question put in the case of "Cushing and Dupuy" before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In dealing with the question of insolvency, they stated an insolvency law is a law of such a nature that procedure is essentially and necessarily a part of it; and inasmuch as insolvency is placed expressly in the jurisdiction of the Federal Parlia ment, and inasmuch as procedure is essentially and necessarily a part of it, the Federal Parliament has the right to deal with the procedure. I agree so far. But you have always to come to the question of reasonable necessity, and not to the question of convenience which the Minister suggests. He says we must provide for the inconvenience of the federal Yes, but we have to recognise honestly system. its inconveniences. We have to recognise that with its advantages there are certain inconveniences, and we have to submit to those possible inconveniences instead of endeavoring to accomplish the impossible-instead of endeavoring at once to take the benefit of absolute legislative union and the federal system together. There will be points of conflict, points of contact, points of divided authority. What is our rule? Our rule is that everything which is essentially necessary to the execution of the federal power is given it. All ex necessitate; but anything which is a mere question of convenience I do not think is implied. I grant there is a large doubtful border land in respect of which the Legislature has to act conscientiously and carefully so as not to exceed its powers, and in respect of which, acting conscientiously, it is extremely difficult on many questions to know what is the judicious solution, but I do not see that we are on that border land just now, because there is no pretence that this provision as to procedure under the Banking Act is necessary at all.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. On the subject of convenience, when I speak of convenience, it seems to me that involves to some extent a question of necessity—not necessity in its absolute sense, but the necessity we are under of providing a free and economical working of the system of banking which we establish. With regard to that, I am most anxious to avoid crossing the boundary line or touching on doubtful territory even; but what is the position? The convenience of this clause, if it be intra vires of this Parliament, is admitted. It is admitted that without some provision of the kind the procedure would be difficult, cumbersome, and expensive. There is no Provincial legislation upon the subject. It is more than doubtful that the Provincial Legislatures have any power to deal with it. I am so strongly of opinion on that point that I would not hesitate at this moment to advise the disallowance of a provision of a Provincial Legislature that a declaration on a bank share should take a certain form. I only mention this to show I am perfectly convinced on the point. There has been the decision of a court in one Province on the point, and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) tells me that in a case which he thinks analogous, but in respect of which I think there is a wide distinction—that is, the insurance case—there was a decision, though whether by one judge or the full court of the Province I do not know. This is a provision which has been on the Statute-book for nearly a decade.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). My hon. friend says this has been on the books for a decade. Can he point out the case in which any question has been raised upon it? I recollect one nisi prius decision which was delivered by the present Chief Justice of Canada, where he held that it was beyond the powers of this Parliament to order a party to give evidence in a special case. Here the Dominion Parliament creates the debt as between the shareholder and the bank. Once the debt is created, to enforce it is a matter of property and civil rights, which, I think, is altogether within the power of the Local Legislature.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If I understand the Minister of Justice rightly, he makes a distinction between an insurance case and a case of a bank, on the ground that a Local Legislature may legislate on insurance as well as this Parliament, and may, therefore, provide for procedure within its own jurisdiction.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; what I meant to say was that insurance, unless in relation to insurance business in more than one Province, is altogether a matter for the Province.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In that case, the question of procedure would not be a matter of jurisdiction at all, but a matter of policy. If the position of the Minister of Justice was pressed to the extreme, it would amount to this: that in order to give effect to any Act of the Parliament of Canada, it would be within the power of this Parliament to provide for the procedure in any particular case. If that is so, then there is no jurisdiction given by the British North America Act in matters of civil procedure, or except in matters which come within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislature. I do not so understand the provision in that Act. I think that construction would render it meaningless and nugatory, and the same thing would apply in regard to the administration of justice in civil cases. There would no longer be exclusive jurisdiction on the part of the Local Legislatures in regard to procedure in civil cases where the legislation was within the powers of this Parliament. I do not think that is within the meaning of the British North America Act, and I think we are to legislate upon the subject-matter proper, leaving the matter of procedure for the Local Legislature to determine, and the question of convenience is for them rather than for us to consider. In the case of Cushing against Depuy, the Privy Council said the procedure was a necessary part of the Act of In-solvency. It is easy to see that you cannot legislate in regard to insolvency without provid-ing the procedure. The questions as to how the property shall be dealt with, how the estate shall be wound up, and how it shall be distributed amongst the creditors, are all questions of procedure; but that is not applicable to a bank.

Mr. BLAKE. I recognise the force of the view of the hon. gentleman as to our obligations in consequence of having, for a number of years, acted upon an Act which we passed in regard to this matter, but I do not think it is right, because we once went wrong, that we should persist in going wrong for ever. There is a safety-valve given to the Dominion of Canada with reference to its laws, both civil and criminal. If that safety-valve did not exist it is clear that the execution of these laws might be altogether rendered nugatory under the British North America Act, because if the power to create courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction existed only in the Local Legislature, there would be a possibility of excluding all jurisdiction in regard to Dominion matters. But it was not the intention that the Dominion should meddle with the procedure in civil and criminal courts. It was the intention that this should remain with the Provincial Legislatures, and that intention is indicated by the terms of the Act. But this safety-valve was provided that, for the better execution of the laws of Canada, the Dominion might create additional courts to execute those laws if necessary, so that if any Province failed in its duty so far, abrogated its jurisdiction so far, or acted in any matter so arbitrarily or vexatiously as to create great disadvantage and difficulty, this Parliament could stretch forth its hand and make its laws effective by creating another court. No doubt in that case the power to create the procedure would be incidental to the power to create the court. But as long as that case, which would be entirely abnormal, does not exist in any Province, we are not to interfere with the procedure in any of the courts. When we have necessarily to create a court for the execution of Dominion laws, we must, of course, create the court totus, teres, atque rotundus; we must make it adequate to discharge the duties which devolve upon it, but I feel that in this case we are exceeding our just limits when we propose to interfere with the procedure in the courts of any of the Provinces.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I think we should see where the line is to be drawn between the Provincial and the Federal power, and it seems to be judicious that members of Parliament here should take a reasonably large view of our own powers. The case of Cushing and Dupuy has been referred to by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). I think that few hon, members are prepared to say, following that rule, that there are not a considerable number of sections in the Insolvency Act of 1869, or in the Act of 1875, with respect to which it would be a straining of words to say they are absolutely essential or absolutely necessary to the working of the Act. They could be better described by saying that their presence was very convenient, and that is all the Minister claims for section 34, which is now challenged, that its presence there makes greatly for convenience in the working of the Act. The old rule that the concession of a power involves the concession of all that is necessary to make that power effective, is the rule that we must rely on. I was not impressed with the reasons given by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), because we know that in more cases than one the clauses of section 91 have been construed and held to involve the power to legislate on a matter of civil procedure. It occurred to me as I followed the arguments of the Minister of Justice and of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken across the House, that the matter is one of some doubt, and that it is a reasonable description of this section to say that it would make greatly for the convenient operation of the Act. It can hardly be claimed that it is absolutely necessary or essential; but I say again that the words "absolutely necessary" or "essentially necessary" are not a fair description of the ratio dicidenda that was relied upon by the Lords of the Privy Council in that notable insolvency case; and if there is any doubt in the matter, seeing that our brethren in the Local Legislatures in Ontario, in Manitoba the other day, and in Nova Scotia, are very properly straining to the utmost the assertion of their powers, let us give ourselves in this Parliament of Canada the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. HALL. In the company's Act, still in force, this provision exists in exactly these words; so that, I think, our legislation in this respect might be made uniform, and that if we give this provision in the case of an ordinary company, which was incorporated under the general Act, we should at least continue the same provision in the Banking Act.

Mr. BLAKE. That is, if we be wrong, let us be uniformly wrong.

On section 39,

Mr. HALL. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to the provision with reference to authenticating these declarations of transfer. Of the banks upon the frontier, many of the shareholders reside across the line in the United Mr. BLAKE

States, and it is found very inconvenient indeed for them to be obliged to make those declarations, as they must under the provisions of the Act, before a British consul, and in the border States it necessitates making the declaration before a British consul residing either in Boston or New York. These provisions do not exist with reference to the transfer of real estate, and I would suggest that after the word "authenticated," in the 16th line, we add these words: "by the clerk of the Court of Record, under the seal of said court." I think that would be authentication enough for the protection of the banks, and I am sure that it would be a great convenience to parties in the border States who have to make such transfers.

Mr. FOSTER. I will make that change.

Mr. MASSON. The Ontario Registry Act requires the judge of a Court of Record or the chief magistrate of the town to certify these declarations. It would be well to have uniformity in the provisions.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think it would be better to leave the section as it is, for British consuls are found in almost every place, and difficulty might arise if the clause were extended.

Mr. HALL. It is very well for hon. gentlemen to be satisfied with the provision where a British consul is near at hand; but those cases I have mentioned are cases of shareholders in banks, living on the frontier of this Province, in the United States. Under this provision a transfer cannot be made in the United States without authentication is made before a British consul, and in many cases such consul will not be nearer than Boston or New York, 300 or 400 miles distant.

Mr. TISDALE. That is the way real estate can be transferred, and it should be sufficient for the purpose of this Banking Act.

On section 40,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). This clause is in direct contradiction to the Civil Code of the Province of Quebec, for it would allow a married woman to dispose of her shares without the consent of her husband. It is a direct contradiction of Article 77 of the Civil Code, which says that a married woman can never transpose any portion of her property without the consent of her husband. Even when separated as regards property, a married woman could not dispose of bank stock or shares without the consent of her husband.

Mr. BLAKE. This section attracted my attention in the sense mentioned by my hon. friend. It is an attempt to follow the law of Ontario, and, as I understand from the hon. member from St. John (Mr. Weldon), of New Brunswick also. It is an attempt to indicate what the civil relations between husband and wife shall be in a certain sense and to a certain extent in regard to this particular species of securities. Can it be said that this is necessary, or even so very convenient for the working of the 'Act as to come within the border land of necessity'.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). This subject is considered of such importance, and it is in fact our public policy, that no agreement in a marriage settlement can change the law and can give a wife power to dispose of her property without the consent of her husband.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON! I am not disposed to hold that it is even necessary, or even highly convenient.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Suppose a case, which is the most frequent one in the Province of Quebec, where there is community of property between husband and wife, because, under our law, when two parties marry without any marriage contract made before the marriage they are supposed by law to have agreed to be in community of property. In that case all bank shares and movable property belonging to the wife now belong to the husband and are considered to be the absolute property of the husband. I would suggest to the Minister to reserve this section and endeavor to draft it so as to meet the laws of the Province of Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. Let the section stand.

On section 43,

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to this clause. It simply provides, where the bank entertains reasonable doubt as to the legality of the suggested means by which the alleged transmission is occasioned, for its filing its petition in the courts and making declaration, &c. That certainly does not seem to be within the limits we have now discussed, even according to the hon. gentleman's own views. I suppose the hon. gentleman is aware that in some of the Provinces at any rate, if not in all, modern and well advised provisions have been made for trustees and shareholders applying to the courts. In my opinion it would be better to leave this out of the Bill altogether.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes; I think the provision is ample in all the Provinces. We will allow this clause to stand until I consider it.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I would suggest a provision similar to the one which has been found useful in the Province of Quebec. Where there is any doubt of the ownership of any property, notice of the application to the court is published in the Opirial Gazette and in one English and one French newspaper. It must be published two months before the application is made to the court, and when application is made any one who is interested can appear.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has found that law a good law in the Province of Quebec, and let him have it. We are satisfied with our law in Ontario and let us have it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The law in the other Provinces is not so much in the interests of the newspapers as in the Province of Quebec. When a petition is presented in the court in the other Provinces, notice is given to such parties as the court requires to be notified and in such manner as the court orders.

On section 44,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). There is an objection to that clause, as it conflicts with the law in the Province of Quebec. In our law, when there is any joint ownership, each of the owners can only dispose of his share of the joint property and draw his share of the dividend, but under this, if there is joint ownership, one of the owners can draw all the dividends by power of attorney.

On section 46,

Mr. BLAKE. As to this forty-sixth clause, I wish to call your attention to a proposition which I, for a long time, have felt would be an improvement, with reference to the accounts submitted to shareholders of companies-not exclusively of banking companies, but inclusive of banking companies. You will observe that the last paragraph of this clause says that the statement shall exhibit: "the amount of debts due to the bank, overdue and not paid, with an estimate of the loss which will probably accrue thereon." It is, therefore, proposed to be recognised by the Legislature that an important element in considering the condition of a bank to be announced to its shareholders, is a statement of the overdue debts and an estimate of the loss, probably accruing on them. We know very well, by sad experience, that that provision by itself is frequently illusory, because arrangements are made, anterior to the general meeting, by which debts cease for that occasion only, to be overdue debts, and the amount of overdue debts stated does not always represent the actual amount. I do not impute this as the normal condition, because I do not know. But what we do know is, that when a bank does break, and the secrets of the prison are revealed; it is made quite clear that a large number of accounts which did not appear in the last annual statements as overdue debts, but which, according to all sound principles of banking, should have been treated as overdue debts for a long time, were, through the manner in which the business was carried on, prevented from so appearing. That we cannot altogether remedy, but what we can do is this; we can speak of the past, and insist on not simply confining ourselves in the information that we provide for the shareholders to receive, to what the net profits made were. We can require a statement which will practically give the gross, by stating the amount which out of the gross had been written off, or passed to "suspense account," in respect to bad or doubtful debts during the operations of the current year. I believe the losses to the public and to shareholders in our banks have been due almost exclusively to the fact that the knife was not put into the rotten accounts at the time it ought to have been put in. There is, in private as well as in corporate life, a sort of reluctance on the part of people to acknowledge that a debt is bad or doubtful. Now it is a sign of such extraordinary and exceptionally good fortune as to be almost in itself suspicious, when a large public institution, engaged in lending millions of money to the public, and under the conditions under which such loans are made, pretends to carry on its operations for twelve months without having incurred losses; and what I think we ought to know is, what amount the directors of a bank have either written off or put to suspense account for bad or doubtful debts in the course of the year for which they give an account to their shareholders. I propose that you add to the section, after the word "circulation" in the eighteenth line, the words, "the amount written off, and the amount placed to suspense account, for bad and doubtful debts."

Mr. CURRAN. Will that cover the gross receipts for the year?

Mr. BLAKE. It practically covers them, because the directors would state the amount written off. You might require to know also, what they had spent in the administration of the bank for make sure that it will always be given. the year.

Mr. KENNY. I would respectfully suggest that that is a matter which, with all propriety, might be left to the shareholders of the bank themselves to regulate by by-law. The hon. gentleman contends that the annual statement should show what the suspense account is. If there is a suspense account, the annual statement will show it. The Committee must remember that the usual phraseology in bank reports now is that provision has been made for all bad and doubtful debts; and to the accuracy of that statement the officers and directors of the bank pledge themselves when they submit it to their shareholders. As regards bad or doubtful debts, I do not know what very great advantage it would be to the general public or to the shareholders of the bank to have their precise amount stated. If the shareholders of the bank do not make provision in their by-laws for such a statement, I do not think it necessary that we should incorporate it in this Act.

Mr. BLAKE. Why do we provide in this Act for a statement of what the directors expect will become bad out of the amount of overdue debts? We provide for the anticipations of the directors; they are obliged to tell what they expect they are going to lose, and the hon, gentleman tells us that it is not right to require them to state what they have lost.

Mr. CURRAN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would point out what particular objection there would be to requiring the gross receipts of the bank to be given. Knowing what they were, and seeing the net result, the shareholders would have an opportunity of pronouncing upon the actual management of the bank; they would know whether it had been properly conducted or not. If there be any reasonable objection to the insertion of the particular words which would give us that result, possibly they might be left out; but my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Kenny) has merely stated that that might fairly be left to the shareholders themselves. I think it is the duty of Parliament to protect the public, and to see that these institutions are managed in such a way as to give the greatest possible security to the public, and unless some tangible reason can be given why these words should be omitted, I think they should go in.

Mr. KENNY. What the general public are specially concerned in, and what more immediately concerns the shareholders of the banks, are the net profits. No matter what the gross receipts are, the earnings of the banks are simply the net profits, and I do not see what advantage could be derived from changing a system which has worked very well in the past.

Mr. CURRAN. How can you tell how the management has been, if the gross receipts are not shown?

Mr. BLAKE. Precisely.

Mr. CURRAN. They might give a statement of what the profits were, but the shareholders could not tell the margin between the gross profits and the receipts.

Mr. KENNY. I never heard of that being refused at an annual meeting,

Mr. Blake,

Mr. BLAKE. If it is never refused, let us

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). In support of the proposal of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), I would mention two cases that came before this Parliament. Two of our local banks came here some years ago to get their capital reduced. One got its capital reduced 30 per cent., and the other got its capital reduced 40 per cent. The annual report of those institutions, presented only a few months previously, represented to their shareholders that, after having written off all bad and doubtful debts, they were in such a position that the capital seemed to be intact; and yet they came to this Parliament shortly afterwards to have their capital reduced. If the provision proposed by the hon. member for West Durham had been in force, it would have been impossible for those banks to have made such reports. They were entirely misleading. I know people who bought the stock of those banks, believing it was good, while, as a matter of fact, they were swindled. If the provision suggested by the hon. member for West Durham is adopted, it will compel the directors of banks to be prudent, and it will protect the shareholders as well as the public who are interested as buyers of the stock of those banks. The case of the Consolidated Bank is known all over the country. The last annual report of the directors to the shareholders of that bank represented it to be in a most prosperous condition, and in that report was the statement that they had written off all bad and doubtful debts. They did not say, however, how much they had written off; if they had stated that they had written off the whole capital of the bank, they would have stated the truth. These cases illustrate the necessity of the provision proposed.

The hon, member for Sir DONALD SMITH. West Durham (Mr. Blake) has truly stated that if a bank came forward and said they had lost nothing in the year, that might create the suspicion that their statements were not very correct; but, on the other hand, the hon. number for Montreal (Mr. Curran) says if the public were told what was lost they would know whether the bank was well conducted or otherwise. I really think it might very well be left as before to the banks, but as it is not of very great consequence and there seems to be a feeling that it would have a good effect, the alterations proposed by the hon. gentleman might very well be adopted.

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad to hear the observations of my hon. friend, who speaks, of course, with great authority, and although he does not think the clause very useful, still he does not seriously object to it. I can assure him there are many people who do not happen to be bank shareholders, depositors and people occasionally interested in the operation of the banks, besides many shareholders, who have felt very much the want of this clause; and they believe that a good many of the very disgraceful statements which have preceded, sometimes only a few days, the collapse of banks would have been prevented if there had been some such protection as this. I do not pretend that it will give the exact facts, because you cannot prevent bank managers from being sanguine; you cannot prevent a banker, over-sanguine or venturesome, who has entered into a doubtful transaction, from taking the most hopeful possible view of it, and waiting until the last day or the day after the collapse before he will write anything off. All you can hope for is an approximation to the truth. It will be a little more light which I expect to obtain by this, and I think it will be valuable light, both by the suspicion which would be evoked by any considerable institution pretending to carry on its business without loss during the year and by the knowledge of the mercantile community in which the bank has its principal office. It is some clue, at any rate, to the character of the bank's transactions for the year; and as even those who take the natural view of the bank's directors, who are always desirous that these uncomfortable incidents should not become public, do not oppose it very seriously, I trust it will meet the favorable judgment of the Committee and of the Government.

Mr. COCKBURN. I see no material objection to the clause of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), although at the same time I sympathise with the views of the hon. member for Montreal West (Sir Donald Smith), that perhaps very much good will not result. If the bank directors are the sanguine people they are represented to be, they will, in drawing up their statements, make considerable difference in the amount they are going to write off or in suspense. So that those interested in buying stocks may perhaps be as much misled then as they are now; and thinking they have a rock on which to build their house, they may find themselves in the shelving quicksands. However, as there appears to be a general impression that the bank directors desire to conceal this knowledge from the public, I have no objection that the public should get all the information they can under this clause.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt this will be some protection, though not a great deal. The fact of the matter is that, as a general rule, where a bank has incurred considerable loss, that loss is very apt to be tolerably well known to a considerable number of people; and the knowledge that it is well known will operate as a very considerable check on bankers in making their statements; and to that extent, although of course you cannot prevent men from over-estimating their doubtful debts, it will afford a very considerable and valuable means of information to those who choose to take pains to inform themselves as to the condition of the bank.

On section 46,

Mr. COCKBURN. This section calls on the directors to declare the amount of reserved profits at the time of declaring the dividend. But at that time they are not in possession of that information.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not understand how bank directors can declare a dividend without having before them an estimate of their reserve profits. That is one of the elements on which they should proceed in determining a dividend.

Mr. COCKBURN. Yes, but this calls for more than an estimate. It calls for the actual amount. The directors may have an estimate which will justify them in declaring a dividend, but not all the data to enable them to give an exact statement.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is to ascertain the good faith of the directors in declaring the 30 per cent.

dividend and the justifiability of the dividend. If the dividend be unjustifiable when declared, it is not made justifiable by circumstances which transpire later.

Mr. FOSTER. I will allow that clause to stand and consider the matter.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest, if the hongentleman proposes to make a change, that he should not alter the clause but make an additional provision for an actual statement at a later day.

On section 51,

Mr. KENNY. I question the wisdom of allowing banks to declare dividends of 8 per cent., which have only 20 per cent reserve. I do not think that it is in the public interest that they should be allowed to do so. Hon, gentlemen must remember that sometimes directors of banks are subjected to great pressure from their shareholders for increased dividends, and I think it will be admitted that we have not a bank in Canada with 20 per cent. of a reserve which is paying more than 7 per cent. dividend. Further, I do not think that any bank, with 20 per cent. reserve, is warranted in paying over 6 per cent. dividend. I, therefore, submit to the Committee that it would be in the interest of the banks, and in the public interest as well, to increase this amount to, say, 50 per cent.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That is the other extreme. I think 25 per cent. would be enough.

Mr. COCKBURN. It is difficult to fix the rate. I quite agree with the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) in the statement that there is no bank with 20 per cent. reserve that can afford to pay more than 6 per cent. dividend. The average rate of Canadian banks is 7·11. I think we might make the reserve fund 40 per cent.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think 25 per cent. is enough.

Mr. TISDALE. This change has not been suggested until to-day, and it may be very serious to compel the banks to double up their reserve. I have never seen any discussion in the papers and I have never heard anywhere else an expression of opinion in favor of a change. This has been the law for many years, and it would be injurious to put up the amount of the reserve to 50 per cent. simply because one gentleman gets up and proposes it. Some 40 or 50 millions of capital are invested in these banks. The capital may become impaired, and for years the banks might have a very small return. If there is a desire to put up the amount of the reserve, I think it would be reasonable to put it up to 25 per cent.

Mr. BLAKE. If any change is made, it should be made with regard to the general earning power of money. It would be unfair to make such a change unless the bank had not a large rest. The present proposition is as illusory in regard to banks in Ontario as it would be to say that loan companies should not receive more than 8 per cent. I do not see how any bank with only 20 per cent. of a rest can earn more than 7 per cent. at the present rates of interest.

Mr. KENNY. My only object was to protect directors from the clamoring of shareholders, who are frequently very unreasonable.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the amount be made 30 per cent.

Mr. WELDON (St. John) moved that it be 25 per cent.

Amendment of Mr. Foster agreed to.

Committee rose and reported progress, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

FRANCHISE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 136) further to amend the Revised Statutes, chapter 5, respecting the Electoral Franchise, was read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I suppose there is no need on my part of discussing the merits of the Electoral Franchise Act. In 1885 the House had a most ample discussion on that measure. The law is now on the Statute-book, and is accepted by the country, if not cheerfully accepted by hon. gentlemen opposite. The object of the Government now, and it should be the object of Parliament, in amending the present law, is twofold; First, to facilitate as much as possible, and in a better manner than before, if possible, the working of the law; and second, to reduce the cost of the working of that law and render it less expensive. When the Electoral Franchise Act was introduced it was predicted that the cost of its working would be ruinous to the country. I must say that the prediction, if not realised, was, at all events, from our first experience with the law, in a certain manner warranted by the facts. The first revision cost, not three-quarters of a million, as had been predicted, nor even half a million, but somewhat over $400,000. The second revision took place in 1889, three years after the first revision, which took place one year after the passing of the law. As I had occasion to state in the beginning of last Session, the cost of the last revision was a little over $150,000. I stated then, and my expressions have been commented upon in an unjustifiable manner, that it was my personal opinion that if the operation of the law was to impose upon the country every year the sum which the last revision had cost, I, for one, would be prepared to say that the expenditure was too large. I stated then, also, that I thought that, at least, until the machinery for executing the law was more complete, a revision every year, with its attendant cost, was not necessary. That also was attendant cost, was not necessary. my personal opinion. I must say that I think the Government is responding to a sentiment which is not only shared by a large number of the members on this side of the House, but also by a large number of the hon. gentlemen opposite, in deciding that a revision in the present year is not necessary, and would entail too large an expenditure upon the country to warrant its being made. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, will say that when I introduced that measure I said that beyond the clauses which I then stated the Bill would contain, no other important clause would be inserted in this Electoral Franchise Act, nor has any material amendment been made to it with the exception of two or three amendments to which I have added a few clauses Mr. Foster.

sitting on the other side of the House. When I say that the Government will be approved by this side of the House, and I hope by both sides of the House, in not making a revision this year, I am not saying anything contrary to what I said in the beginning, when I said that no other amendment to the Electoral Franchise Act would be made to the Act. The suspension of the Act for one year is a measure by itself. The Government, I think, is responding to a desire felt, if not expressed on both sides of the House that a revision would entail too large an expenditure to warrant its enforcement during the present year. I might quote here an expression uttered on the floor of this House last year by an hon. gentleman sitting on the opposite benehes; he said that, outside the expenditure imposed upon the public treasury, a revision entailed a considerable expense on the individual members themselves; and on the candidates in the various constituencies. Nobody will deny that a revision involves a great deal of anxiety, trouble and expense, both to the members already representing constituencies, and to the would-be candidates for those constituencies. Now, whatever expenditure is imposed upon the individual citizen in this connection ought to be avoided, and the Government is not more justifiable in imposing that expenditure upon citizens individually than it would be in imposing it upon citizens collectively, when it would fall upon the public treasury. A revision during the course of this year would take place in most unfavorable conditions. If I am not mistaken, provincial elections will take place in two of the largest Provinces of the Dominion, Ontario and Quebec, in the months during which the revision would take place, and perhaps also a general election will take place in Nova Scotia, the third largest Province of the Dominion. We know the commotion, and the excitement, and the trouble which attend the holding of these If we had a revision this provincial elections. year it must be admitted that it would take place in very unfavorable circumstances. But is there no other reason why that revision should not take place? We have not yet reached the end of this Parliament; according to law this Parliament will cease in the beginning of 1892. The writs for the general election for the next Parliament will have to be issued before the date of the returns of the writs for the elections of 1887, if I am not mistaken, sometime about March, 1892. But, before the natural expiration of the life of this Parliament, a most important event in the Dominion must take place—a general census must be taken during next year, 1891. That census will occupy part of the year; but I understand the numerical census will be over about the month of July. Everybody knows that from the result of that numerical census the representation of the different Provinces may be altered considerably. result of the decennial census controls the representation in this Dominion, and while the representation of the Province of Quebec must remain stationary, according to the Act of Confederation, the representation of the other Provinces may be either increased or decreased, according to the ratio of increase or decrease in proportion of the standard population of the Province of Quebec. After the census of 1891, as after the census of 1881, in the course of natural events taken from measures proposed by hon, gentlemen the country would require that the representation should be remodelled or readjusted in the different Provinces. I do not suppose, for example, if after the census has shown an increase in population such as to warrant an increase in its representation in the same ratio as occurred in the census of 1881, that the electorate of Ontario would allow Parliament to sit for more than one Session before the representation was readjusted. The revision of the lists beginning on 1st June, 1891, will be continued from that date until its final completion on 31st December, 1891. The revision of the list has nothing to do with the census, and the census will not in any way affect the revision of the lists. The revision of the lists is a kind of an electoral census done yearly according to the law; it is an electoral census. The census, as I have said, has a great effect upon the representation in this Parliament. If in July, 1891, the census shows that the representation must be changed it will become necessary to have new elections soon after the census; and those elections should take place in the beginning of 1892, by the natural death of this Parliament according to the Constitution. The question which presented itself to me was this: By the experience of the past, could a revision, beginning in June, 1891, be satisfactorily made, and would it be ready for the eventuality of elections in 1892. There is no reason to doubt it. The delay which has occurred this year The was a delay that cannot occur another year. Bill itself will prevent it. We have thought, and rightly so, that for the work of revision supplementary lists should be printed, showing the number of votes to be removed and the number of votes to be added at the revision. We thought that the Government printing office at Ottawa might supply the want and do the printing of those supplemen-tary lists of names to be removed and names to be added. We have been mistaken in our cal-culation, for two reasons: First, the printing establishment after a year and a-half was not in a complete state for its efficient working; and, second, we had not calculated that the change in the different lists in the polling districts was so large after three years' revision. We had not We had not thought that the number of polling districts in the Dominion would reach 7,000, that the number of votes in the Dominion had increased from a little over 900,000 in 1886, to a little over 1,000,000 in 1889. No less than 7,000 polling districts now appear on the voters' lists, which means 14,000 different lists, the supplementary lists being double. These had to be printed, and they had to be printed at a time when great difficulties were encountered by the Government in the working of the printing bureau. But the Bill which, on behalf of the Government, I propose to-day provides that the printing of the supplementary lists may be done in the different districts by the revising officers themselves, under instructions and according to the rates of the Queen's Printer. Then the difficulty which we met with, and which has caused the revision to be completed later than the date fixed by law, namely, 31st December, will not occur another year. I may say that even with the difficulties we had to encounter this year, if the necessity had existed for an election to take place in February this year, the lists might have been completed for such election, and completed more perfectly than they ever were completed according to the old system of municipal lists. I have already stated that the voters' lists now existing as revised in the Dominion, are more perfect, more complete, than they have ever been before. I state that, whoever may state to the contrary. I more particularly refer to the Province of Quebec. In elections in which I have taken part so long ago as 1859, I know that, on an average, most of the elections were held on lists which were certainly, on an average, two or three years old. I maintain that age, two or three years old. I maintain that our present lists represent more truly, completely and perfectly than any lists ever before published, the electorate of the country. The question comes: how can we facilitate the working of the law as it is, and how can we reduce the expenditure? The cost of printing has been most singularly reduced since the beginning. The first revision of 1886 cost us 12 cents per name, or rather per line, for printing; but the supplementary lists which were printed last year have not cost us more than 3½ cents per name, or line. The first lists printed by the revising officers had to be kept in type by the printing offices in the different constituencies, for three or four months, during the whole period of revision; whereas in printing the supplementary lists, every page which is read and corrected by the revising officer, can be distributed, and every printing office in the country, no matter how small it may be, can do that work. In this Bill we have tried to reduce the expenditure, and I hope the House will approve The law at present states that the revising officer shall post the lists in three conspicuous places in each polling district; and as there are 7,000 polling districts, 21,000 lists had to be posted, which alone entailed an expenditure of between $11,000 and This posting of the lists has been represented by the majority of revising officers as useless. The first rain that fell, or the first wind that blew, or the first ill-intentioned person who wished to take down the list, made the posting useless, and hence we provide now that such posting shall not be obligatory. With the organisation of political parties as it is at present, and with the distribution of the lists precedent to the revision, to each member of Parliament, and to each of the unsuccessful candidates, as well as to others whom I shall name hereafter, we think the circulation ought to be sufficient without the posting. We restrict the distribution, and do not give the list to the unsuccessful candidate who has not secured the necessary number of votes to save his deposit; for I do not see why a man who is condemned by law to lose his deposit of $200 should be treated as an elected member of this House. When we have to distribute two copies to each of the successful candidates, to the unsuccessful candidates, to the mayor, the reeve, the deputy reeve, the secretarytreasurer, the school secretary, and when the lists are posted in the post office and in the office of the revising barrister, which during election time is open to the public, I do not see that it will be necessary to post the lists as before. The different clauses of the Bill will also explain some smaller reductions in expenditure. We have not yet faced the question of the reduction of the salaries of the revising officers, and the fact that the Government will not ask this year that a revision shall take place, will, if Parliament consents to this, give us time to consider the important question of the salaries of the revising officers. Two modes might be suggested to lessen the expenditure in this direction. One will readily see from the fact that there are 215 constituencies, and about 170 revising officers, that the expense is necessarily large in this direction. Taking the salaries of the revising officers, as now regulated, at an average of $500 each, you have an expenditure of $85,000 for salaries alone.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Abolish the Act.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We might also abolish Parliament, it would save a great deal of money to the country, and if I were to judge by some of the discussions I have heard here, and to which I have listened very patiently, it might not be a bad thing to do, but we cannot do it, and we do not do it. I say that two modes might be suggested for decreasing the large expenditure on account of revising officers' salaries. One would be to reduce the number of revising officers by extending the electoral districts over which they preside. It is not surprising that, at the beginning, this new system was difficult, and the best men we have employed as revising officers have themselves acknowledged that it could not be otherwise than difficult on application at first. But the difficulties of the duties of revising officers are greatly lessened and working of the law becomes more easy, as it becomes better known and as the officers become better acquainted with the operation of it. One mode would be to enlarge the electoral divisions as entrusted to the different revising officers, and so diminish the number of revising officers; another would be to reduce the salaries of the revising officers and find some means of rendering their duties less onerous than they are at present. We must not forget that throughout the greater part of this Dominion the officers presiding at the revisions are judges; and I might risk the opinion that these judges are not overpaid. Nobody will say that the county judges of Ontario are overpaid; I will not say that they are not paid enough, but certainly nobody will say that they are overpaid. In other Provinces, in the Province of Quebec for instance, a considerable number of the revisers do not belong to the judicial bench. I do not know whether it would not be advisable to increase the number of revising officers belonging to the bench. I know that in the Province of Quebec, the judges have shown themselves adverse to performing duties which they regard as connected in a certain measure with political action; I know that our judges of the Superior Court in the Province of Quebec have not in general felt disposed to assume those duties. wishing, as they have said, to remain independent of anything which would tend to bring political recriminations against them. But I do not see great strength in the objections which have been made, and I am one of those who think that a larger number of revising divisions in the Province of Quebec should be taken by gentlemen occupying the position of judges. Indeed, we might see our way, in satisfying public opinion, and perhaps in satisfying just claims, to prescribe those duties as part of the judicial duties of judges, as we have done with regard to the decision of electoral contests. Perhaps some of the provisions of this law may appear to be ridiculously insignificant; but we must not forget that the multiplication by very large figures makes important the smallest change in regard to cost of the revision of the list. For instance, suppose we could, as we will, in the printing of only one of the supplementary lists, decrease the price which we have paid, which was, I think, 3½ cents per name, or per line; suppose we decreased that by oneand-a-half cent per name, one would suppose that would amount to very little; but in the smallest supplementary list, that is, the one which has the fewest names to be removed, that would amount to an immediate saving, in the 7,000 polling districts, of over $1,000. Then, it appears to be a small matter to post up two or three lists on a fence or on public buildings in a municipality : but when we multiply the saving in this item by the number of polling districts, it reaches between $11,000 and $13,000. We last year reduced the expenses of clerical assistance. There is no need to have the services of criers in the courts, and by dispensing with them we will effect a further reduction. In this way, as the working of the law becomes familiar to the people who are charged with that work, and as soon as the law becomes more generally known, the working of that law will become as easy and regular as any municipal action. Those who have in charge the working of the elections, Conservatives and Liberals, will take the work in hand, and that work will be done carefully and well. It has been said on the other side of the House, and on this side too, perhaps, in Conservative newspapers as in Liberal newspapers, that the expenditure was very large, and that the Provincial system of voting would be preferable. I have it from one of the most intelligent revisers of Ontario, that the Provincial system of revising the lists by the Provincial authorities is not at all as cheap a method as some hon, gentlemen are apt to say. The cost of that system does not show as the cost of our system does, because the expense is divided and sub-divided among many different municipalities; but I could read, and during the debate I may read, the expression of opinion of that revising officer, who stated that he had certified, under that system, an account of so much for this clerk, so much for printing, so much for the assessor, so much for another municipal officer, all of which collected together amounted to more than the cost for a similar revision of the Dominion list. I do not say that the case is everywhere the same; but I say that the revision by the Provincial authorities is not so cheap as people have given it out to be. This Bill is practically a repeal of the Act of last year, substituting every clause of last year's amended Act by another clause amending in a different manner the different clauses of the Electoral Franchise Act. I thought it was better to do this than to have an amendment to the amendment which was itself an amendment, and which would render it difficult for the revising officers to understand the law. We have not repealed, as I intended at first, the Act of last year, because the Act of last year, repealing a great many clauses of the main Act, such clauses would not have revived. But practically this Act is the Act of last year amended in all its principal clauses.

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Mr. LAURIER. So that, after all, it appears we are not to have a revision of the lists this year. My hon. friend, I admit, on a previous occasion, did not state as much, but he hinted as much on another occasion. The hon. the First Minister, when questioned on that subject, almost practically declared there would be a revision. True, he did not say so in so many words; but, when asked whether there would be a revision or with asket whether would be, according to law.

Well, the law provides there shall be a revision every year; and when asked if the law would be amended this year or not, the hon. gentleman would not reply. Despite the fact that the law requires a revision every year, the hon. gentleman proposes to do again what he has done on two or three different occasions. He proposes to amend the Act, and to dispense again with the revision. The more we look into this Act, the more it is discussed, the more we must come to the conclusion that it is illogical, uncalled for, and absolutely unnecessary. If there is anything in the law on which there could be no doubt, it is that there shall be a revision every year, because an election may be held at any moment. We know to our cost that death is an ever-vigilant enemy, and that a constituency is apt to be opened at any moment, and we will be exposed to taking the votes of the people, not according to the existing electorate, but upon a list two or three years old, and an electorate which is not existing at the time. fact is the Government are both afraid and ashamed of their own progeny. They put a law in the statutes providing for a revision every year, and then they are afraid to apply the law. The hon, gentleman stated, as an argument in favor of the Act, that the revision of the lists under Provincial laws is almost as cheap as the revision under this law. If it is as cheap in the Pro-

Mr. CHAPLEAU. As dear.

Mr. LAURIER. Then why should his statement, when he said there would be no revision, have been cheered as it was? In making that statement he, no doubt, relieved the hearts of his

Mr. CHAPLEAU. And your's too.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes, because we believe the Act is altogether unnecessary, and we want to fall back on the Provincial lists. Why was the statement cheered so enthusiastically by the hon. gentleman's supporters? Because every man, whether on this side or on the opposite side, is afraid of the expense incurred by this revision. On this side we have to submit to the want of a revision, but on the other side they are in the majority, and could have the law amended in the sense in which we desire to have it amended by falling back on the Provincial lists. As to the amendments proposed, I will not say, as my hon. friend has said, that they are childish or even small. Some of them commend themselves to my judgment, and may perhaps tend to make the Bill a little less imperfect than it is.

Mr. BARRON. With regard to the saving of expense mentioned by the hon. the Secretary of State to be effected by not posting up the lists, great injustice will be done in many constituencies. The hon. gentleman suggests the advisability of keeping the lists in the revising officer's office for the inspection of any one who wishes to see them. That will not be satisfactory, especially in large constituencies and in constituencies in which the revising officer does not reside. Take, for invery long and extends very far back, and it will be utterly impossible for many people anxious to see the lists to see them to any advantage if they are confined to the revising officer's office.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I propose by the amendment that they shall be kept in every post office in every polling district. More than that, of the two copies given to the different municipal officers, they are obliged to have one of the copies posted up and exposed.

Mr. BARRON. Then I misapprehended the Secretary of State. He refers to the expenses of the revising officers. I will suggest to him a means of saving expense, by reducing the number of revising officers. There is no reason why the county court judge, who is considered efficient for the administration of justice in the whole county, should not also revise the list for the whole county instead of two revising officers being appointed, as there are for the county of Victoria, for instance. That, no doubt, is the case in many other counties in Ontario, because I do not speak for any other portions of the Dominion. It might be said that in that case the salary of the county judge would have to be increased, but, though that may be true, it would not be necessary to double his salary, and I think a great saving could be made there.

Mr. MITCHELL. Necessarily when a subject of this kind is discussed by the Minister whose duty it is to place the views of the Government before the House, it creates a great deal of interest. I have listened with a good deal of interest to the remarks of the Secretary of State in regard to this measure which very largely affects the election of representatives to this House. The hon. gentleman has gone into a great deal of detail in stating the intentions of the Government. At present I am merely going to repeat some of his words with the view of ascertaining whether I have rightly interpreted his statements. He says that the census will be taken in 1891, and that this House will expire in March, 1892, and I inferred from what he stated that we would not have an election until after the natural expiry of the term of this Parliament on the 31st March, 1892.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I hope so.

Mr. MITCHELL. No doubt the hon. gentleman hopes so. It is not what he hopes or wishes, but I want to ascertain for myself, as well as for the House and the country, whether I have rightly understood his statement, that the Government have resolved not to have an election until after the expiry of the present Parliament, in March, 1892. A friend of mine here suggests that they are drawing a herring across the track. I do not think so. My hon, friend is more suspicious than I am. I do not know if he is afraid of them. I am not. The reason stated is that there is a The reason stated is, that there is a decennial census to be taken under the British North America Act. We took one in 1881, and must take another in 1891, and by another provision of the Act a re-arrangement of the Provincial representation must be made, taking the Province of Quebec as the pivot. The Premier is aware, as well as others who assisted in framing the Constitution, that it is very difficult to decide how the increase or decrease of the representation should be provided for, and the method which now stance, the constituency which I represent. It is exists is the one which was agreed upon for the rearrangement of the representation in Parliament in proportion to population. If the Province of Quebec has a population remaining stationary, say at 2,000,000, and the other Provinces remain stationary, no change will be made; but, if the Province of Ontario, for instance, has increased 10 per cent. more than the Province of Quebec, its representation will be increased; and if the population of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick has been decreased, their representation will be lessened, so that the representation will be taken from the smaller Provinces and will be given to the larger Provinces, while the Province of Quebec remains with the same representation. My hon. friend the Secretary of State has at very considerable length explained the objects of this Bill, and I understand from him, that the redistribution will be made after the census is taken, which will not be later than July, 1891.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That is the numerical census.
Mr. MITCHELL. How can you have a census which is not numerical?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is something more in the census than the number of individuals. The largest part is outside of that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am speaking of the census which applies to the representation in this House, and that means the number of people in the different Provinces. Then, the numerical census having been ascertained in July, 1891, it will become the duty of the Government of the day to determine the manner in which the representation of the different Provinces shall be settled. I am not going to say that the population of Quebec will decrease or that that of Ontario will increase, but, if there has been no special emigration from Quebec, knowing the productive character of the population of that Province, I have no doubt that its population will have increased more than that of the other Provinces, or at all events that it will hold its own. The question becomes one for the smaller Provinces as to what the effect may be upon them; and if the exodus from these smaller Provinces has been as great as we have reason to believe, I am afraid there will be a necessity for a redistribution which may not affect the smaller Provinces so favorably. No doubt the western Provinces cannot be affected beyond a certain point by the increase, because until they have a certain amount of population, they have all got a representation far beyond what their population would give them if they come in on the basis of the old Provinces, and in all probability there will not be very much change made in them. Now, my hon, friend has gone on to state that in order to get at the basis of that representation this census will have to be taken, and, as he states, the Provinces never would consent to remain as they are for one Session, if the changed relations made by that census were such as to warrant the necessity of giving to Ontario, we will say by way of illustration, half a dozen members more than she had before. We might take from the Maritime Provinces one or more representatives, leaving them a less number than they had before, and these western Provinces would never consent to have a House sitting here in which they had a less relative number of members than they were entitled to under the Act. Then assuming that I have correctly stated the pro-Mr. MITCHELL.

position made by the hon, gentleman-and if I have not correctly stated it, then the hon. gentleman may correct me—the next conclusion we arrive at from what the hon, gentleman says, is that these Provinces which may be entitled to increased representation, will not consent to be represented in the House by a less number of members than the British North America Act, which is the charter of our country, gives them. Then we will have to have another Session; assuming that we had a Session in 1891, at the ordinary date, we will have to have another Session in the fall of the year, or in the beginning of 1892, which Session will terminate, as I understand, on the 31st day of March, 1892, or thereabout, and one of the great objects of that Session will be to carry out, not only the spirit, but the letter of the British North America Act, under which we sit here, and that will require a redistribution of the representation based upon the population, as given by the numerical census which is expected to be completed on the 1st July, 1891. In other words, then, I am to understand from the hon. gentleman that the Government contemplate having two Sessions of this Parliament more before a general election. There is nothing more before a general election. There is nothing like putting the thing in plain language, because my hon. friend wrapped it up pretty well, but I watched very closely what he was saying, and I now put it in plain and distinct language, open to correction by the hon gentleman, that the inference to be drawn from what he says is, that we are going to have two more Sessions of this Parliament before a general election takes place. My hon friend alongside of me (Mr. Davin) who occupies, perhaps, a doubtful constituency perhaps like myself, may rather like it; but I must say that I see no reason to object to it. My right hon, friend looks at me because he knows that I have a little suspicion of the inner workings of this thing. I entirely approve of it, not, perhaps, for the same reason as my hon. friend who sits beside me, namely, that our constituencies may be doubtful; but I approve of it because it must work in another way unless two sessions more are held, and for this reason: Suppose that next session, being the fifth session of this Parliament, the Government should choose to dissolve the House and go to the country before that census was complete, or before the distribution under that census was accomplished, what would be the result then? If Ontario was entitled to six constituencies more, do you suppose she would rest satisfied to have six less representatives sitting here in the House than she was entitled to? Certainly not. They would have to have another general election, and immediately afterwards a redistribution, after the census was completed, and therefore, as the matter may not be very generally understood in the country, and as there is a good deal of anxiety as to what the effect of this census may be, I may state that I entirely approve of the course the Government are taking. They cannot do otherwise.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. If hon, gentlemen who say "hear, hear" were as sure of their seats as I am, perhaps they would not be so ready to say that. I am not afraid of their machinations and manœuvres. They have tried them upon me often; I am ready for them whenever the time comes, whether it comes this year or next year. I want the people te understand what is ahead of them, and I want the Government clearly to state whether I have correctly interpreted the statement of the Secretary of State, that he means to imply that two sessions of this Parliament more will be held after this one, in order to complete the result of the census and carry out the British North America Act in readjusting the representation on the basis of that census. I think I have correctly stated what I sanderstood, at all events, from the remarks of the hom gentleman. Now, having gone thus far, let me say a little more. I have given the Government credit for pursuing a course which is inevitable unless they want two elections in one year. But, Sir, let me warn hon, gentlemen on both sides of the House, let them look out for gerrymandering; that is what they have to watch. My right hon. friend has tried the game before; he knows how needful and how necessary it is, but I want to warn my right hon. friend now, that if, under the pretext of carrying out the British North America Act and doing what he is legally entitled, and is probably compelled to do, that is, to readjust the representation, if he tries on his gerrymandering scheme, perhaps it will not result in the same way it has resulted before, and I just warn him now, and I warn him all in good part—I do not desire to impute to him an intention of doing it—but judging from the experience of the past, I am very much afraid that members on this side will have to look out for themselves and see that they do not get gerrymandered out of existence. That is all I am going to say at this stage of the Bill. But I want to have it thoroughly understood by my hon. friend beside me, who is situated as I am, that I think I correctly understand the intimation given by the Secretary of State that we are to have two Sessions before a general election will take place, if the spirit of the British North America Act is to be carried out. My hon friend says: "Oh, that is a red herring pulled across the track." I say it is not a red herring pulled across the track; I give the right hon. gentleman credit for understanding the spirit and the letter of the British North America Act, and he knows as well as I do that unless he wishes to have two elections in two years, it it absolutely necessary to have two Sessions, and one of them to occur after the census is completed on the 1st of July, 1891.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With respect to the question of my hon. friend whether we are going to have two Sessions more, my only constitutional answer is this: That I am not authorised by His Excellency the Governor General to announce in what mode the prerogative of the Crown will be exercised in that regard.

Mr. MITCHELL. No, Mr. Chairman; he is not authorised to announce it. But as the prerogative of the Governor General is exercised under a very wily and shrewd old statesman, and as I had some little experience not only with political affairs for the last forty years, but with my right hon friend, I venture to predict that in carrying out the spirit of the law, while he can command a majority in this House, unless some great crisis occurs, in which he is compelled to go to the country, he will just give us two Sessions more and we will have the census by that time, and he can readjust the representation; and if he comes in at the head of a majority, as he expects to do, but I shall be very much disappointed if he does, then, I say, he will have us five years more. The old bird will pursue such course as will perpetuate his power in office.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Of course, it is within the bounds of possibility that some other parties might have something to say as to the length of this Parliament's duration as well as the hon. First Minister. He might lose the confidence of the Opposition and of a sufficient number on his side of the House to prevent the hon, gentleman having all the say in the matter. We are unable to congratulate the hon. Secretary of State and the Government on their skill in legislation. We are again considering a Franchise Bill. In 1886, the Franchise Act was adopted, and it was well con-Last year it was amended, and all the talent of the Government brought to bear on it. The hon. Minister of Justice devoted himself largely to it, and I do not hesitate to say that, when he brings his abilities to bear on a subject, he brings great abilities; but he found the subject complicated and difficult to work, and this fact alone should have led the Government to have sought its total repeal. What credit is it to the Administration to note this fact, that the Act was passed only three or four years ago, after mature deliberation, and then, after a general election had been held under this revision, its defects were apparent and revision was needed. Last year a Bill was introduced to amend the Act, a Bill containing only 13 sections. To-night we have to consider another amended Bill, a Bill of 10 sections, and of those sections one is a new section to make legal what would otherwise be illegal, and of the remaining nine sections, six, namely, sections 2, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 9, are to repeal sections of the Act passed last year. That is a sample of the legislation introduced into this House by the Government.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is not so. While these sections may be repealed, they are re-enacted, but in slightly different terms, and in order to reduce the expense.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Certainly there are differences, and it is in regard to those differences I am commenting. We shall have this difficulty: that the Franchise Act will be complicated by the Amendment Act passed last year and the Amendment Act of this year, and it would have been preferable, if the Government thought that the amendments now proposed were all that would be necessary for some time, to have introduced a new Bill, so that the whole franchise legislation would be contained in one Act. But possibly the Minister thinks that amendments will again be required next year. The House already knows my views on this question. I do not believe in the Bill; it involves a great expense, and the Minister recognises this, for he is trying to curtail it by doing without a revision this year. If, however, an election should take place in any constituency or a number of constituencies, the result will be the disfranchising of hundreds or maybe thousands of voters who have the right to vote. These are objections always urged by hon, gentlemen on this side of the House on previous occasions; but I suppose our duty now is to consider the amend-ments introduced, and see what their bearing is as

Mr. CHAPLEAU. As I attach a good deal of importance to the good-will of my hon. friend who has just spoken, I must endeavor to remove the very unfavorable impression he has received of this Bill from a hasty reading of it. My hon. friend is a layman, he is not a gentleman of the long robe, and he does not see that I have been obliged to repeal several clauses only to amend them, and it would have created confusion if they had not been repealed. My hon. friend did not pay a compliment to my poor little Bill in failing to give credit to any of its provisions. I may say, however, that two or three of the best provisions in my Bill embody the suggestions made by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I did not pronounce that judgment on the Bill. My line of argument was that if the hon. gentleman approved of the suggestions made last year when he received them, why did he not embody them as amendments last year? I find fault with him in that regard, not with respect to this Bill, which we will discuss on its merits. Why did not the Minister, when experience showed him that our suggestions were correct, insert them in his Bill last year?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. For a very good reason, because we have had the experience of a revision this year, which we had not last year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. Minister's proposed amendments to the Franchise Act remind me of the improvements required in the old gun, that wanted a new lock, stock and barrel. The hon, gentleman's Franchise Act requires amendments of very much the same character, amendments that will remove every vestige of the measure as it originally stood on the Statutebook. The Government have set before themselves the very difficult task of making this a workable measure. So far they have amended it on several occasions without being successful, and they have now come to Parliament for further amendments. One of the objections we made when it was originally proposed was, that it would entail a very large expense on the treasury, and also a large expense and much trouble upon those who took an interest in securing a fair, and, on the whole, a complete voters' list for each constituency. The hon, gentleman in this Bill has proposed further amendments. He has not had the courage to propose to the House the total repeal of the Bill and a return to the more satisfactory system of preparing a voters' list, one more in conson-ance with the federal principle of the Government. The hon. Minister told us that this is not so expensive a system as that adopted in the various Provinces, and that, in fact, he hoped to make this a very efficient and inexpensive system of preparing a voters' list. The hon, gentleman forgets that we impose on the Provinces no additional expense by adopting their lists as voters' lists for the elections to the House of Commons. The Provinces are obliged to prepare for the election of members to the Local Legislatures voters' lists in every constituency in each Province of the Dominion, and so when we use these lists we do not entail any expense, nor impose any additional expense on the treasuries of the Provinces, and, we are told, no expense whatever upon the treasury of the Dominion, so that, however cheap the hon. gentleman may make the preparation of Mr. Paterson (Brant).

an independent voters' list under an Act of the Parliament of Canada, it will be so much in addition to the expense that the country was called upon to bear already. The hon. gentleman must in a large degree fail in any attempt at cheapness and efficiency, because there does not exist any machinery by which the Dominion Parliament can prepare a voters' list as it is prepared in the various Provinces. The hon, gentleman will see that in the very name of the officer, by whom these lists are prepared, there is a misnomer. You call him in the Bill, a revising officer. Who originally pre-pares the list; is it not this same officer? Look at the preparation of the lists in England, and you will find that the person who is called a revising officer, and who is appointed by the judge on circuit, is really a revising officer. The list is there prepared by other persons; it is prepared by persons acquainted with the people in each parish, just as the municipal council and the assessor are acquainted with the people in a township here. This Parliament has no such machinery provided for the original preparation of the list, and the result is, that in that preparation, if it were not for the large expense incurred by private persons, who aid in the preparation of these lists in the interest of party, the hon. gentleman's system would be even a greater failure than it is under existing circumstances. I think that failure is shown, not only by the various amendments that the Government have submitted to Parliament, each succeeding Session, but it is also shown by the fact that the Act is in a state of suspended animation for a great portion of the time. The hon. gentleman proposes now to suspend the law next year, as he has proposed to suspend it on former occasions, and so for a great portion of the time there is no voters' list which is not an old list. There is no voters' list on which there is not a large number of persons who ought to be struck off, and a large number of others who, by law, are entitled to be on the list, but who cannot be put there. Why did the hon. gentleman not prepare the voters' list for the years 1886, 1887 and 1888? It was because of the enormous expenditure. was because of the enormous expenditure. We, on this side of the House, told the hon. gentleman and his leader, that there would be serious expense incurred in the preparation of this list, but they did not believe our representations, whereas the facts have shown that we under-stated rather than over-estimated the amount of expense that would be incurred. The result was that hon, gentlemen on the Treasury benches were afraid to carry the law into operation; they were afraid that the enormous expense and trouble which would be imposed upon their friends as well as upon their opponents, would be such that the pressure from their supporters would have compelled them to remove this law from the Statute-book; and so it is suspended from time to time, in order that it may be maintained in existence at all. Any act or step taken to carry it into operation, year after year, would necessitate the repeal of the measure altogether. I ask the hon. the Secretary of State whether it would not be the wiser and more statesmanlike course to propose the repeal of this measure and to return to the condition of things which existed before the measure was introduced at all? The hon. gentleman himself has intimated views, at an earlier period of the Session, which, it seemed to me, pointed to the fact that his own private judgment was against the Bill, and that, in his opinion, it ought not to remain on the Statute-book. He did not hesitate to tell the House that if this expense cannot be largely reduced, he would favor the repeal of the measure altogether, so that the hon gentleman, after all, does not think that the measure is of so excellent a character that an unlimited expense would be justified in making it efficient. hon, gentleman in his statement, as it seemed to me, pronounced the condemnation of the policy of the law. From the character of our country, from the large number of persons put on the voters' list who are not permanent residents in any one constituency; workingmen whose earnings are sufficient to allow them to go on the list, but who may be in one county to-day and in another county to-morrow, it cannot be made a proper list. should vote, if they vote at all, in the constituency in which they are residents at the time an election takes place, and yet there is no provision made to place these parties on the list to which they properly belong. This could not be done. The hon. gentleman admits that the expense at the present time is so very great that it would not be proper to undertake to carry the law into active operation. What is the result of this suspended animation of the law? It is that there are from 20 to 30 per cent. in many constituencies, before the new list can be prepared, whose names are on the list who ought not to be there, and others whose names ought to be on the list who are not on the list at all.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. How many?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). 20 or 30 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Oh, no.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman says: "Oh, no." Of course I have not the data, but the hon, gentleman no doubt has, and he will be able to tell us how many names, on an average, ought to be struck off each list.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The average is not over 4 per cent. per year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And how many ought to go on ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I say the change on the average is not more than 4 or 5 per cent. per year. It is under 5 per cent.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have my list in my desk, and it represents twice that number.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend must remember one thing, which I am sure he knows as well as I do, and that is that the first revision was not done as it will be done in the future, when the law is better known and better executed, and it covered a period of nearly four years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And from the policy the hon. gentleman proposes to adopt, this is to be the normal condition of things.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He proposes only a fitful and occasional preparation of the voters' list. It is only when a general election is about to take place that the expense will be justified, by the necessities of the case. That is the position which hen, gentleman has taken; that was the position which led to three years' suspension, and that is the reason he proposes to take no action next year. I say that this is an extremely unsatisfactory conditional states of the case of the ca tion of things, because you declare by law, that a certain number of persons are entitled to go on the voters' list, and at the same time you declare that no machinery shall be provided by which these names shall be placed on the list. On the contrary, you say that they shall not go there. Now, Mr. Chairman, having said this much with regard to the principle involved in the Franchise Act, of which this Bill is an amendment, I would just make a few observations on the provisions which the hon. gentleman now proposes as an amendment. I notice that one provision the hon. gentleman makes, is, that on, or as soon as possible after, the 1st of June in each year, the revising officer shall cause a list of voters to be prepared, and so on. Well, I do not find any proposition at all for striking off any names; if any property has been sold or has changed hands, I do not find that the new proprietor or tenant is the only person whose name is to be put upon the list. names of parties which were on before will be put on again, unless active steps are taken, outside of any duty imposed on the revising officer, and the names that ought to be taken off the list will be allowed to remain. It does seem to me that the measure ought to go further and define with more distinctness the duties of the revising officer. In many cases he depends on others to do the work the law has imposed on him. The law says he shall do certain things—that he shall strike off certain names, obtain certain information, put on other names, and so on; and yet with regard to all these duties the usual practice is for the revising officer to depend on the local leaders of the respective parties to furnish him with the information, and to take the necessary steps to have some names put on and others taken off. This is not a satisfactory condition of things. What ought to be done is to devolve the duty on the revising officer to make a correct list, and to take the initiatory steps which are necessary to remove from the list the names that ought not to be there, and to put on others that ought to be on. I know, from communications which I have had from different parties, that this is not done. In many cases the revising officer believes that if the information is not brought before him, and if all the necessary steps are not taken by somebody else, he is not called upon to do anything. He acts as though he were sitting judicially, instead of acting as an administrative officer, whose duty it is to obtain the information for himself, and to make the changes which the law requires him to make, and which he is paid to make. The other parties are not paid, and I do not see any reasons why large sums should be paid out by people who, merely from public spirit and zeal for the public interest, perform those duties, while the officer who is paid to discharge them merely acts when information is brought under his notice. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman's Bill, assuming that we are to continue to operate this law, does not make it sufficiently clear and explicit what the duties of the revising officer are.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has expressed his view that this measure requires such complete reconstruction that the gun shall have a new lock, a new stock and a new barrel; and I observe that hon. gentlemen opposite, most of them, give some color to that

They admire the rifle very much; they polish up the barrel, oil the lock, and varnish the stock; but what must weigh on all of them is that, after all this is done, the gun they have all admired should be hung up in the hall and should not be allowed to shoot; because I understand that three years ago, after having tried the rifle once, they decided that it should not shoot for three years more

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It shot sometimes.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; it did the hon. gentleman's business. It shot then; and I understand that the proposal which is to be introduced into the Bill to-night, and which the hon. gentleman says is of small moment, is a proposal which was made under very great pressure from behind. The pressure from behind says: "However useful the weapon is, however admirable it is, however elegant it looks, for God's sake, do not let it shoot again." It reminds me a little of Don Quixote's helmet. made himself an admirable helmet, which, if I remember rightly, was composed largely of pasteboard. Having adjusted it, he thought he ought to test it, and he gave a slash at it with his sword. The helmet was so injured that he had to repair it; but he was judicious enough after the repair to decide that no further test should be required, and that the helmet should be considered and adjudged to be a sufficient and satisfactory helmet, capable of resisting every assault without any further test whatever. The hon. gentleman will postpone his test for another year in order to improve his helmet. No greater proof of the soundness of the views of those who opposed this measure could be given than the legislation which has been placed in your hands, showing that the hon gentleman realises it to be severe, unjust and expensive in its operations. I confess I am surprised that my hon. friend from Brant, contrary to his usual fairness, should have so much complained of these constant amendments, because he and I agree that the measure is so bad that it cannot be made good, and that the task—the impossible task—the Minister has set to himself is to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear.

Mr. DAWSON. I would suggest a slight amendment to the first clause of the Bill. Before doing so, however, I may remark that the electoral district which I have the honor to represent is so extensive that the rules which are applicable to other districts will not apply in all cases to it. It is as large in area as the whole of the rest of Ontario, being over 1,200 miles from east to west, and from 200 to 500 miles from south to north. The population is very thin and scattered in many places over that district; and yet, it is divided into different polling districts, which are in some cases so large that the revising officers, though they do the best they can to meet the requirements of the population, find it, in some instances, difficult to do so. Some of the polling districts are hundreds of square miles in extent, and how is it possible to accommodate the voters with only one polling station in each of such polling districts? How is it possible that the people can get to the polls? At the last election, the people in some places held separate polls of their own, as they could not pretend to get to the regular polls; but, of course, votes cast under such circumstances did not count. At one place, there was a polling station on an island in in putting the proposed voter on the list. Mr. BLAKE.

Lake Superior, fifty miles from the nearest settlement; and the people in order to get there under. went great hardships, going by boats through the ice, and otherwise exposing themselves in the severest winter weather that has been known for a long time. It is the same in other parts of the district. For instance, at Sudbury there is a polling district, and the same polling district takes in Moose Factory on the shores of Hudson's Bay. I should like to know how a voter on the shores of Hudson's Bay at Moose Factory, which is now in the Province of Ontario and district of Algoma, can come and record his vote on a given day at Sudbury where the polling station is. There is a way of remedying this to a certain extent without encroaching on the system at all, and I would suggest that in each polling district of the District of Algoma the revising officer may be allowed to establish more than one polling station so that the people may be able to record their votes. There can be nothing inconsistent in this, the District of Algoma being so enormous in extent that an exception might be made in its favor with-out giving ground for similar arrangements in ordinary districts. With the leave of the House, I would move, in amendment to the first section, that section 1 of the proposed Act be further amended by adding thereto the following as a sub-

That in the electoral district of Algoma, the returning officer may establish when it appears to him to be necessary for the convenience of voters, more than one polling station within a polling district.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is only one objection which, though not a great one, is a fundamental one. The amendment is an amendment to the Electoral Franchise Act and not to the law of elections. It applies to the returning officer and not to the revising officer. I have already one amendment in the same sense which, before the Bill is concurred in might be considered, and if necessary this small amendment to the Electoral Act might be introduced.

Mr. DAWSON. If that could be arranged, that is all I desire. I only desire some amendment in the law by which it would be possible for a returning officer to have two or three polling booths in the one electoral district.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I propose that in the first section the amendment of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette) be embodied, namely, that the occasional absence of any farmer's son shall not disqualify him from being placed on the list of voters, and I propose to add "or of an owner's

Mr. BARRON. I would suggest to the Secretary of State the consideration of an amendment which I proposed in private conversation with the Minister of Justice not long ago. It is this: I have found by the Act that on more than one occasion there has been a disqualification by reason of a proposed voter living with his mother on land owned by her, but the father not being dead. The Act requires in such a case, for the voter to be qualified, that the father must be dead, but I have known cases where the father has been living separated from the mother. In that case, the revising officer held that the law did not justify him in putting the proposed voter on the list. This would be the proper place to put in an amendment to provide for such a case.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I will consider the amendment, and before the Bill is reported will see whether I can do something in that sense.

Mr. MULOCK. In regard to the amendment proposed by the Secretary of State to section 3, I would point out to the Secretary of State that, while he provides for placing upon the list the sons of farmers and others who are absent for a certain time, there is no provision for keeping on the list those who have been already on the list, but who may be absent in the same way.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no objection to making the amendment in the 9th line read "placed or retained."

Mr. CHAPLEAU, If my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) had read the paragraph with the original clause, he would see that the amendment would not be necessary.

Mr. MULOCK. Is it not time that this Act should be consolidated? The same amendment should be made in line 10 of that clause.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no objection to that, but I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) places sufficient stress on the observation of the Secretary of State, that this section is to be read as if it were in the original Act.

On section 2,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the fact of a young man attending an institution of learning which is not in Canada to inure to his benefit under this clause?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. As it stands here, it refers to an institution of learning in Canada.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Many young men who are qualifying for the medical profession and other professions go out of this country for a time.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I do not see why a young man who happens to go to the United States or any other foreign country to attend an institution of learning should be disqualified. I think it would be just as well to say that they should have the right if they were absent for six months to attend an institution of learning, whether in Canada or not.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have no objection to leave out the words "in Canada."

Mr. LAURIER. Has the Minister of Justice been informed that some wage-earners have qualified themselves to vote in two separate districts, particularly those engaged on railroads—conductors, brakesmen and others, who travel from one section to the other, say from Campbellton to Edimouski, or from Rimouski to Point Lévis—men who are not married, who do not keep house, but are boarders at each place? They sleep one day at one place and another day at another. I understand that in some cases these employés have absent for mor qualified both in Point Lévis and in Rivière du Loup, which is not the intention of the law.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That subject was mentioned last year. I was under the impression that it was provided for in some way; I will look into it.

Mr. MULOCK. The first part of section 1 provides that any case of absence not beyond six months shall not disqualify the owner, and subsection a provides that the son of a mariner or a fisherman, a student, though away from home, shall be deemed constructively to be at home. Now, there are many other cases in which sons of owners are absent for a longer period than six months, and if this clause is left as it is, they will not have the same privileges as the sons of mariners or of fishermen, and students. Now, it is not an unusual thing for a son, the mainstay of his parents perhaps, who has acquired a trade, to move off to seek for labor, and he is absent, perhaps, a longer period than six months, why should he not have the same rights that the sons of some other tradesmen may have? Of course, I recognise the fact that the absence is more likely to take place in the case of the son of a mariner or of a fisherman, but the other case does happen, and it is happening every year. I remember a case happening in my own experience, where a son lost his vote by reason of being away longer than the period the law allowed. In one case I remember quite well a carpenter who had crossed from one riding to another, from the Township of Georgina into the Township of Scott, adjoining. His parents were living on one side of the road and he worked on the other side with a tradesman. He was absent longer than the time allowed and lost his vote, he had no vote in either riding. Now, on all the borders of ridings this risk is run all the time, and if you do not provide for this case and put that class of sons in the same position as the son of a fisherman or of a mariner, you are discriminating against a most worthy class. who are trying to do their duty by their country and by their families.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We must draw the line somewhere, and we have drawn it at six months. A young man may absent himself for two, three, or four months, and retain the right to vote, but not if he is gone six months. We have made a further extension of time in the case of mariner's sons. If a farmer's son is absent in an institution of learning for six months, he should have a right to vote.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Suppose the census is taken in the manner the hon. gentleman alluded to some time ago, the young man would be counted as a resident of Canada, even if he had been absent in a foreign country for more than six months.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the census is to be taken de jure, he will be taken; if the census is only de facto, he will not be taken, because he will not be present.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is to be taken de inre. I am told.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think so.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then he is a citizen of Canada and so enumerated, though he may be absent for more than six months in a foreign country; he is a citizen, but he is debarred from the right of voting.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. People becoming owners only ten days before the list is made are also de barred from the right of voting, although they are citizens.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Does the Government intend making a difference between a mariner's son and the son of a mechanic or of a laborer, who may go away for five or six months to work at his trade? If he goes away he is deprived of his vote, whereas the mariner's son retains his.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We say the owner's son is not a resident with his father if he is more than six months absent.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Then we are to understand that a mechanic's son is not placed on a footing of equality with a mariner's son?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Perhaps the latter has some advantage, that is all.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister has not made out a case for this discrimination. I can hardly understand a fisherman's son being absent for a longer period than six months and having the right to be deemed as at home, while you do not apply the same principle to the son of any other class of men. In the case of a fisherman's son pursuing his calling, under this section a, he may be away for ten years, but he is still deemed to be at home. It is an extraordinary doctrine. A mariner's son may be gone for ten years, but as long as he calls himself a mariner's son and is pursuing his calling, he retains a right to vote.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is not the mariner's son or the fisherman's son who may be absent, but it is the son of the owner, being a mariner or being a fisherman.

Mr. MULOCK. However long the mariner is gone, however long the fisherman is gone, provided that he is carrying on the pursuit of a mariner or of a fisherman, he is constructively at home for the purposes of this Act. The Minister will admit that there is no limitation of time. Now, why should there not be a similar provision in favor of other industrial classes? Why should they not be put on the same footing? The sons of landsmen should have the same rights as the sons of those who pursue their calling on the sea. I think that clause has got to be applied to all, or else repealed. It is one of the difficulties of the working of the Act, though, I suppose, in time the Act will be made more perfect. Perhaps, if you limit the right to vote to residents, it will be got over.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). How will it be with farmers' sons who leave the farm three, four or even six months? It would not be right to disfranchise farmers' sons under these circumtances.

Mr. WALDIE. I desire to call the attention of young men who work in the woods. My own son is away more than six months getting out logs.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The clause was framed especially to meet the cases of young men lumbering, and six months was thought to be a sufficient time.

Mr. WALDIE. They are absent more than six months, from October to May.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In any case in which a man earns more than $300 he has a vote as a wage-earner.

Mr. MITCHELL. I notice that sons of farmers and of fishermen have been taken care of, and this should also be done for lumbermen. Lumbermen go away early in October and do not return until May and why should they be disfranchised?

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They will be on the list as wage-earners.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The clause was made specially to meet men who might be away three, four, or five months lumbering, and six months was considered a sufficient time.

Mr. MITCHELL. If sons of lumbermen go away from home, why should they not be entitled to the franchise as are sons of farmers and fishermen? The Secretary of State asked the Committee some time ago, what more economy he could practice in regard to the Franchise Act. If he wants to economise, let him wipe out the Act entirely and adopt the Provincial lists, which can be done without expense. When the hon, gentleman introduced the first Bill on this subject I supported its principle, because, theoretically, this Parliament should make the law and control the law which elects the members to it. I received very little credit for my action, but I must say I condemn almost every feature of the Bill which has been introduced. If that principle had been honestly carried out and the system had been economically worked, it would have been a proper course, but it was not economically carried out. In the first year over half a million dollars were expended, and the Government are now postponing the revision of the voters' lists on account of the expense. If economy is desired, let us go back to the old system, for it is impossible to understand this Franchise Act, which is altered almost every year. ${f I}$ move in amendment :

That all the words in the first section after the word "Act," be repealed, and the following added thereto: "And all other sections of the said Act and Acts amending the same be and are hereby repealed."

That is a motion which must Mr. MULOCK. commend itself to the judgment and intelligence of this Committee. The Act stands condemned by the action of the Administration itself. In 1886 we spent three months in endeavoring to produce a workable and perfect measure. Each year the Administration has admitted the failure of this measure. One year they declare it is so bad it must not be inflicted upon a long-suffering people, and another they endeavor to improve it. They took two years to improve it, and in 1889 they tried to apply it again to the country. They aptried to apply it again to the country. plied it, and so convinced was the country that the Act was unwarrantable and not in its best interests, that I understand a large majority of the supporters of the Administration have petitioned the Government not to put the Act in force this Session. It is generally recognised that the Government, recognising the objectionable character of the measure, intend to suspend its operation at least for this Session. It is highly in the interests of the country, for very many reasons, that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) be adopted. The expense is an insuperable objection, and it has been proved beyond all question that it is going to amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, which this country is little able to afford in its present condition. We have built a vast structure to enable the Government to print these various voters' lists, and, in undertaking the business, the Government has entered into competition with the legitimate printing trade of this country, which, I presume, is not altogether appreciated by them.

I understand that the Secretary of State, in order to equip the printing bureau for the purposes of this Act, was obliged to issue orders for the purchase of plant in excess of the largest orders ever given for plant since printing was an institution. I understand that the Secretary of State ordered forty tons of one kind of type.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. More than that.

Mr. MULOCK. You see how moderate I am in my estimate. I have been told by printers who have seen the accounts, that the Minister was obliged to issue orders for quantities of plant of various kinds, exceeding in amount the largest order ever given by the largest printing establishment in the world.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Mr. MULOCK. The man who told that to

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Did not know what he was saving.

Mr. MULOCK. He knew a great deal about it. He is engaged in the selling of printing supplies, and has an establishment in England, and an agency in Canada. He told me that the largest order ever given in the world for a certain quantity of type, was given by the printing bureau, here, and that the next largest order for a certain kind of type, was given by the great thunderer, the London Times. The hon. Secretary of State spoke candidly, no doubt, when he said he did not court the patronage of having to run a printing office, in view of the difficulties he recently experienced in the working of this institution. These difficulties are going to continue, and it all means money out of the taxpayers of this country, to support the continuance of this Act. You have increased the burdens of the people until they are able to bear them no longer. The hon. Minister of Finance told us, the other day, that this country was prosperous and able to bear more strain, that the backs of the people were still not bent sufficiently, and so he proposed to put extra burdens upon them. Every now and then, when we on this side of the House sought to relieve the suffering people from additional burdens, the answer was given: that we must have additional money in the exchequer of the country. The other day, when we proposed to remove a tax involving $5,000 a year on the infirm and afflicted, the answer was given: that the money was required to carry on the affairs of the country. Why, Sir, if we abolish this Act, we could for fifty years allow surgical appliances and instruments, and articles of that kind, for the relief of a suffering community, to come into the country free. You propose to keep this Act in force at such an expense to the country, that you are obliged to tax people in every position of life.

An hon. MEMBER. Dispense.

Mr. MULOCK. I will not dispense until I express my opinion on this subject. For the information of the hon. member for Simcoe, I may say that words and language fail me in expressing all I desire to say on this measure, and if I cease to speak on the subject, it is not because the subject is exhausted, but because perhaps I may be.

House divided and amendment negatived.

Mr. MITCHELL. I object to the vote of the hon. Minister of Public Works, as he did not hear the question put. If the amendment is only negatived by his vote, as I believe it is, the vote should be struck out.

Mr. BARRON. I wish to draw the attention of the Minister, to the fact that under the income qualification, the income of a person to entitle him to vote, must be derived from some investment in Canada. It has come under my notice, where the income has been derived on investment in England and the money sent out here, that a gentleman having no other qualification, was deprived of his vote. I see no reason why this should be the case, or why a man should be deprived of voting who is a British subject and a resident in Canada, but whose investment is outside of the country

Mr. MONTAGUE. In some of the revisions last year, the revising barrister held that every portion of the income of a wage-earner, must be earned in Canada, which I do not think is fair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must ask hon. gentlemen to keep order. It is impossible to hear what is being said.

Mr. BARRON. Has the Minister considered my suggestion ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He would be obliged to invest in Canada instead of in a foreign country.

Mr. BARRON. It is a great hardship that a person should be deprived of his vote under these circumstances.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If my hon, friend wishes to move an amendment he may move it. I do not think it is advisable to change the law in this respect.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must again request hon, gentlemen to cease the noise in the chamber. It is utterly impossible to hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to see that the Chairman was looking in the right direction when he was reprimanding the members this time. looked at the place the rowdyism came from.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MULOCK. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not appear to be able this evening to give that proper consideration to this important measure that it deserves, and if they feel disinclined to do so it will be necessary for us, I think, to move that the committee rise and postpone discussion until the House is in a better frame of mind to deal with it. Hon. gentlemen may as well understand that this Bill in all its phases is to be discussed seriously, and if they think that by making noises and rendering it difficult to have it properly discussed they are expediting its passage, they are making a mis-There is no disposition on this side of the take. House to do anything else than to fairly discuss the measure.

On section 2,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is the slight amendment, as I suppose the hon. Secretary of State will call it, that is made in this section?

By the amendment last Mr. CHAPLEAU. year the words, "or does not hold a location ticket on the said reserve," were inserted, and this part of the amendment made last year is to be struck out this year.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then we adopt it last year and strike it out this year.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Why not?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is for the Minister to say why not and why for ?

Mr. DAWSON. As the amendment of last year was made at my suggestion, I may, perhaps, be permitted to make some remarks. My object in proposing that amendment was that the rights of the Indians should be clearly defined. It was intended to define more clearly the tract of land which an Indian should have in the reserve on which he voted. It did not alter the law one bit. So far as I could make out from the authorities I was able to consult, it really did not alter the law. Ermatinger, who I believe is a fairly good authority on this matter, says:

"By the Indian Act, 1880, section 17, no Indian shall be deemed to be lawfully possessed of any land in a reserve, unless he or she has been or shall be, located for the same by the band or council of the band."

Further on he says:

"On the Superintendent General approving of any location aforesaid, he shall issue in triplicate, a ticket granting a location to such Indian, one triplicate of which he shall retain in a book to be kept for the purpose; the other two he shall forward to the local agent—one to be delivered to the Indian in whose favor it was issued, the other to be filed by the agent, who shall also cause the same to be copied into a register of the band."

My object, last year in suggesting this amendment, was to let the Indians understand that they should have their location tickets defining their rights to the land in their possession, before they could have the right to vote, because, I found from experience, that a great many Indians desired to vote on the same lot of land without having a separate tract at all. But I, for my part, have no objection whatever to this being repealed, as it does not alter the Act. The location ticket was just as much required before this amendment was made, as it was after it was made, and when this is repealed, the location ticket will be as much required as ever, unless some other amendment in the Act affecting it is made.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is one feature of this clause which I am not sure was intended by the Minister to be here, but it is one that ought not to pass without the attention of the Committee being drawn to it. The beginning of the clause is:

"No Indian in either of the Provinces of Manitoba or British Columbia, or in the district of Keewatin or the North-West Territories of Canada, shall be entitled to be registered on any list of voters, or to vote."

I can well understand that provision as applied to the ordinary tribal Indians; but it does appear to me that where an Indian is emancipated, resides among white people, pays his taxes, and is subject to the same regulations as any other citizen, he ought to be permitted to vote on precisely the same terms. I have always opposed the attempt to give the wards of the Government votes while they are wards of the Government, but I am not disposed to discriminate against Indians, colored people or whites. Whatever qualification is considered adequate for the one ought to be considered adequate for the other.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I should like to ask a question in connection with this clause. Some of the revising barristers have held that there is a special qualification for the Indian, and only one, Mr. CHAPLEAU.

namely, that he shall have land on which there are improvements to the value of $150. My reading of the Act is that the Indian who possesses that qualification, or any other qualification under the Act, shall be placed on the list.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is exactly what the section says and I do not think any revising officer has ruled the contrary. There is a special provision qualifying an Indian who holds property on the reserve, if he has no other qualification, but if he is a wage-earner or has any other qualification prescribed by the Act, he has the same right as other persons.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not quite understand the position which the hon member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) takes with reference to this amendment. He holds that it makes no difference whether the words proposed to be struck out are struck out or not. I would like to have the opinion of the hon. First Minister or the Minister of Justice on that point. I think the hon. First Minister took that ground last year when discussing this question; but, I think the revising officers have not taken that ground. I know they have not done so in my riding, but there was nothing said, and they went on as they had done before. The revising officers in both Haldimand and Brant, were, I think, guided solely by the consideration whether the Indians had land which they had improved to the extent of $150, and by that consideration solely.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They did under the general Act before it was amended; but under the amended Act, the revising officer of Haldimand held, that without the possession of the location ticket, the Indian could not be put on the list.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is the point I want to have explained, because the hon. member for Algoma says that the provision is the same without these words in the Act. I do not know whether the revising officer in Brant held that that would be the strict interpretation of the law or not, but no objection was made and no attention called to it, and he went on and revised the list as before.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is because it was found almost useless that it was struck out. It has not been taken advantage of, except in some cases, and I do not think it is necessary to reserve that limitation for the qualification of the Indians.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It has this objection, in the minds of many of the Indians, that they are not prepared to have their reserves sub-divided, and leaving the words in the Act would look as if it was the intention to compel them to have something done which they did not want to do. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) says the effect is the same without these words.

Mr. DAWSON. In saying it was the same, I was giving the interpretation given of it by a very good authority, Ermatinger, whose work is here. The Indians, as a rule, have no objection to take location tickets if they could get them; but the enfranchisement system and the granting of location tickets is so complicated, and the Act itself is so complicated, that it is impossible for them to get them. I have not the slightest objection to the amendment in this clause, although there are 12,000 Indians in Algoma and anything affecting them might be a serious matter. But I do not think this will have any effect whatever, and I have not the slightest objection to its being amended as proposed in the Bill before the House.

On section 3,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The only difference is this: There was no provision in case the revising officer was taken suddenly ill and could not ask leave of absence; and we have provided that the Governor in Council may appoint his deputy.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Where the revising barrister is a judge there is no appeal, but where he is not, there is an appeal. Should the deputy who replaces a revising barrister who was a judge, not be a judge, would there be an appeal?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the successor be not a judge, there will be an appeal.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. On referring to section 11, sub-section 6, it will be seen that the deputy revising barrister shall be possessed of all the qualifications, and have during such illness all the powers of a revising officer; and if he is not a judge his decisions are subject to appeal.

On section 4,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E. I.) I would just suggest whether by repealing sub-section 5 of section 11, you are not raising serious doubts as to the power of the revising officer to take off any names at all. We are repealing the third section of the Act passed last Session and substituting a new section. The fourth sub-section of the section we are repealing authorises the revising officer to strike off the names of dead men and of persons who are not qualified under the statute and are objected to. That power is not re-enacted here, and the revising officers—at all events those with whom I deal—unless the words are explicit and plain, will not take a man's name off.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Section 4 provides that the revising officer shall "Prepare two separate supplementary lists, one to be entitled 'names to be added and corrections to be made,' in like form as the original list, and the other to be entitled 'names to be removed' in the following form."

And in that he is bound to remove the names of those who are dead or otherwise disqualified.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman says the revising officer is bound to remove these names, but the Act does not say so. There should be a distinct provision in the Act to that effect.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I understand the point taken by my hon. friend and I will see that the provision is made, because it would be clearer.

Mr. MULOCK. Where would the appeal lie in case of the illness or absence of the county court judge?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. To any judge acting in his place.

Mr. MULOCK. It must be a judge of the county. Would a man acting in his place be a judge of the county?

Mr. TISDALE. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. For this purpose?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It has been held to the contrary.

Mr. BARRON. If the county court judge is ill, to whom is the appeal to be made?

Mr. TISDALE. If the deputy was not a judge, there would be an appeal to the county judge. If the county judge was ill, you would have to wait until he got well.

Mr. MULOCK. How do you show that in the Act?

Mr. TISDALE. If you appoint any one to act in place of the county judge, he has the powers of the county court judge.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman will find that, where one county judge has undertaken to discharge the duties of a judge in another county, it has been held that he is not the judge in that county, and cannot act outside of his district.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As I understand, the point taken is, that when the county judge is also a revising officer, and is ill, he appoints a deputy revising officer, and there is an appeal from the deputy revising officer, which must necessarily be to the judge. The appeal must either be to the judge himself when he recovers, or to the deputy judge while he is ill, or to his successor if he dies.

dies.

Mr. MULOCK. It is clear that the words "county court judge" mean the county court judge appointed permanently for a county. That is evident from chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes. The county judge is not a deputy or any one else, but he is simply the judge who is drawing the salary of $2,400.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The deputy judges derive their jurisdiction from the Ontario statute which provides for the appointment of deputy judges, and also provides that they shall have all the powers of the judges.

Mr. TISDALE. In one of the statutes of Ontario there is a provision for the discharge of the duties of a judge either by a deputy judge or some other official in case of the illness of the judge. You cannot always legislate for cases of sickness, but I know there is a provision for a deputy to take the place of a county judge.

Mr. BARRON. If it is necessary to provide for the contingency of the revising officer being sick, surely it is necessary to provide, in a similar way, for the sickness of the judge to whom the appeal lies.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In the case of the judge's sickness, he is bound to nominate a deputy, and the executive always appoints the deputy.

Mr. MULOCK. Suppose the county judge is unable to discharge these duties, who is to discharge them? The Minister of Justice says that the deputy judge is to discharge them, because powers are given to him by the Ontario Act. But we are now legislating for the whole of this Dominion, as every Province in the Dominion is included in this provision.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have not provided deputy judges, but we have provided for the judge of another county being called in. I am not certain about New Brunswick, but it is so in Nova Scotia. In Manitoba and British Columbia there is a provision for a deputy judge.

Mr. MULOCK. What is necessary to be provided here is this: We are saying by this Act that an appeal shall lie to the county judge. It is clear that under the Dominion Statute, the Act that I have referred to, chapter 138, respecting judges, the term "county judge," as used in the Franchise Act, would not include the judge of another county or a deputy judge. You have got to depend upon some other legislation in order to meet the case. The Minister says that there is local legislation in some of the Provinces, but it is doubtful whether there is in others; so it may be that in some of these Provinces, though there is a provision for the ordinary administration of the law by a deputy, yet under the wording of this Bill those officers would not come within the technical definition of this Act, and be deemed county judges in order to dispose of an appeal under the Act.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There may be something in that. It can be easily remedied by an additional section to the interpretation clause.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would move the clause which the Secretary of State intimated his willingness to accept, and which is as follows:—

He shall enter on the latter of such lists the names of all persons whose names appear on the original list, or who are dead, or who were not, according to the provisions of this Act, entitled to be registered as voters.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Before we pass from section 3, I wish to say that I would like to see some clause introduced into this Act to direct the revising barristers to do the work which they now insist shall be done by the respective parties outside. The revising barrister in my county does not pretend to do anything about the revision of the lists; he waits until we put in declarations on both sides. The legal fraternity went to him almost in a body to remonstrate with him. He said: "Send in your declarations and I will do it." He throws upon us the great responsibility and trouble of putting in over 3,000 declarations in my county alone. I thought the Act was so plain that any reasonable man would accept the directions contained in it, but that appears not to be the case.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Still we hear complaints that in some other districts they are doing too much.

On section 4, clause 4,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In the 12th line, after the word "stated," I wish to add these words: "distinctly in the body of the declaration." In many cases declarations have been made stating that the following names are duly qualified electors, and the declaration is signed and a schedule of names attached. Sometimes this is done in a loose manner. At the end of such declaration an appendix is added, to which the names are easily attached. But no error could arise if the qualification of each elector whose name it is sought to add, was distinctly stated in the body of the declaration.

Mr. BARRON. I must congratulate the Minister for acting upon the suggestion which I believe I made to him a few days ago. I think it is most necessary to make some such amendment as he proposes. Hon. gentlemen will hardly believe, though it came under my own notice, that I found that a declaration in more than one case was made with a schedule attached which purported to contain names to which the declaration referred at the time the declaration was made. But evidence Mr. Mulock.

came to my notice which was satisfactory to show that after the declaration was made by the declarant in all honesty, the person carrying round that declaration actually inserted in the schedule a lot of names purporting to give every one of them a qualification by reason of the declaration which in itself was perfectly honest. So satisfied was I that I brought it to the notice of the revising officer, and it was discovered that the declarant actually swore to names of persons being of age who where not of age, and whose parents came and proved they were not of age, and which names were inserted in the schedule after the declaration was made, and to all appearence before the declaration went before the revising officer, and being apparently honest. There is no amendment more necessary in the interest of justice, and for the purpose of preventing per-

On section 5,

Mr. TISDALE. Why not have an appeal?

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The hon. Minister is providing that if any mistake is made in the declaration, it may be amended by the revising officer at the revision court. We do not want the appeal.

Mr. TISDALE. This clause will provide for any mistake made, but if you are going further than that, you might as well say that the revising officer shall have authority, without any action on the part of any party, to compel us to go to trial on the point.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have received from more than one revising officer the statement that in certain cases an error had been committed in placing a number of names in one polling district that should have appeared in another polling district. The clause suggested provides that this mistake may be corrected. The revising officer shall have no right to remove any names from the preliminary list, but if he sees a mistake has been committed he can give notice calling attention to it, and the revision court has the right to correct it after notice. The next clause dispenses with the printing of the supplementary lists at Ottawa. We have succeeded in getting the printing of these lists done at such a reasonable price that there would be no advantage, compensating for the disadvantage of having the list sent to Ottawa and returned, in having them printed here, and so we shall leave part of the printing to revising officers, but under instruction and according to the rates provided by the Queen's Printer.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will they be printed in their constituencies?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. As much as possible. This work can be done at any printing office, because it it does not require a large quantity of type.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I understood when the Printing Bureau was established the purpose was to print these lists, and thus to save expense to the country. By enacting this clause you duplicate the work. You first give the supplementary lists to be printed in a local printing office, and afterwards these lists are forwarded to the Government bureau here and they are reset. There will, accordingly, be two settings of type to accomplish one purpose. I do not see how we can reconcile this state of affairs with the statement made by the hon-

Secretary of State when the printing bureau was established, that money would be saved to the country by printing the lists at the Government bureau, because now the Government are going to give the work to local offices and reprint these lists in the Government bureau when they are returned.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Even if the supplementary lists were printed here, they would be printed separately from the main lists, and there would be the inconvenience and delay of having them brought here and reset. The only difference was the price at which they could be printed, whether it would not be too costly when done in the different constituencies as compared with the Government Printing Bureau. The difference in price is not such as to compensate for the inconvenience and loss of time in receiving the lists from the revising officer at the Printing Bureau, in sending them back and having them again forwarded to the bureau.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. These supplementary lists are to be printed in the local printing offices. They are to be sent afterwards to the bureau here. They will then be re-set. So the work will be done twice, first in the local printing offices, and afterwards in the Government bureau. The supplementary list is provided by the revising officer. If the copy were sent to the bureau here it would be set up here, and the lists would be sent back for comparison, and the type would not require to be re-set. All you are doing by this clause is to enable the revising officers to dispense some patronage among newspapers which support the Government, because, in any event they are sure to get the work. In order to carry out the promise made by the Secretary of State, that economy would be secured by establishing the printing bureau, the hon. gentleman, in order to be consistent, should insist that the supplementary list be sent down to the bureau and printed, so that the type will not have to be set up twice.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It does not make a great difference. If you are obliged to take the original list and make a difference between the cost of doing that, and of setting up the whole supplementary lists

Mr SOMERVILLE. But then they would have to be added again here, after they are printed. Why not do it here at once?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I say, it will be possible to do a large portion of the work here in the printing office: but to make it a law, that it shall be done in the printing office, has occasioned a great deal of delay and inconvenience, and has forced us to have a large portion of them printed outside, in spite of our good-will.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Then, I am to understand, that the Secretary of State admits, that so far as the printing of the voters' list is concerned, the Printing Bureau has been a failure?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I am to understand that it has not accomplished the work for which it was established. That is the clear statement made by the Secretary of State. He says that it has caused a great deal of inconvenience and that it has been found necessary, even in the past year, to have some of these lists printed outside.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That is only the supplementary lists, which I said would not be more than 10 per cent. of the revision every two years.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. But the Secretary of State must bear in mind that the supplementary lists form a portion of the list as finally revised. And if these names are set up in the Printing Bureau here, it will save the expense of paying the local offices for the same work. After they have been prepared and printed by the revising officer, at the local printing offices, the same work will have to be done here again. What is to be gained by that?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is nothing to be gained if it were not for the inconvenience, the delay, the trouble and the mistakes which occurred of lists being mislaid on the way. If my hon. friend wants me to say that I was mistaken in thinking that the supplementary lists might be more economically printed here, and that it was better for the working of the law, I might say that I am wiser to-day than I was two years ago. My hon. friend is right; if we could print them here it would cost a little less, but not much.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Secretary of State admits then, that so far as the preparation of the voters' list is concerned, the statements he made to the House, that the establishment of the printing bureau would be a saving to the country, were not correct?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They were correct and they are still correct.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How can that be so?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend, who is a printer, knows that if we were obliged to make complete lists everywhere in the country and print them outside of the bureau, we would have to pay 10, 12 or 13 cents per line, whereas, it does not cost us for the main list 3 cents per line.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). By the provision of this section, the hon. gentleman says:

"Immediately after the revising officer has completed and certified such supplementary lists, he shall have the same printed under instructions of and according to the rates to be determined by the Queen's Printer."

Now are we to understand from this that the Secretary of State undertakes to direct the revising officer, at what office the printing shall be done? That, it seems to me, is an important point to consider, because while the Secretary of State has a right, I think, to fix reasonable rate at which it is possible to have the work done, I do not think he has the right to say to the revising officer: you shall have the work done at this, that, or the other The Secretary of State claimed that power under the original Act, and it was resisted in some cases, and he admitted that the revising officer was right, and that his view of the law was not correct. The hon, gentleman admits that he is proposing to make this change as a matter of convenience, so that the work may be done under the immediate supervision of the revising officer, which seems to me necessary to avoid typographical and other mistakes which are likely to occur when the lists are printed at a distance. This is a very large country, and it is impossible for the Secretary of State to know which is the most convenient or efficient office, for Victoria or New Westminster, or other places at a distance from Ottawa. While I think it is well that he should have the power to instruct the revising officer as to how the work shall be done, and at what rates it shall be done, it is not proper that he should instruct the revising officer as to what office the work should be done in, because, being on the ground, the revising officer is the best judge of that. I am anxious to know, and I am sure I am not alone in that respect, whether it is the intention of the Secretary of State to leave to the revising officer the freedom in this respect which he had under the law as it originally

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is the intention of the head of the Department, in providing for this work, to follow the wise advice given by the revising officer; but it is not the intention of the Secretary of State, or of the Government, to leave it absolutely to the will or caprice of the revising officer. He who pays has a right to say who will do the work; the Government pays, and the Government will say it. Moreover, there is a stronger reason than this. Suppose we say that the revising officer may do the work according to his will or caprice, and suppose in some of the counties adjoining Ottawa, he refuses to have the work done in the Printing Bureau, but wants it done in some other office, I want to have the right to tell him that he shall have the work done at the bureau: and that right I shall keep, if the House

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman wishes to say, evidently, that this is regarded as a matter of patronage, and that the Government shall instruct the revising officers where the work is to be done, no matter if it is 4,000 miles away.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is an important fact to have before the Committee, and it goes a long way to take away any merit from the statement made by the hon. the Secretary of State, because the Secretary of State was very positive a year or two ago, that this work could be done very much better and very much cheaper here than it could be done in the various local offices all over the country. The Secretary of State has had the work done here, and now he says it is necessary to supplement this work, by having the supplementary lists printed in these various local offices. The Secretary of State must understand that it is the people of the country who furnish the money, and that it is not his money that is paid; it is the public money of which he is the trustee for this The people may say that the hon. gentleman is now deteriorating the efficiency of his former system of centralising this work, and that it is being done not as a matter of convenience, but as a matter of patronage.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That it is being done to increase the patronage and influence of the Government.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am stating what an ill-natured and suspicious public may say.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I cannot help that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am pointing out to by opponents of the Government, I never said the hon. gentleman how he can help it, and that is that, but I should not be bound to send it there. Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

by leaving the matter to the revising officer, who, if he is competent to discharge his duties as revising officer, is surely competent to judge as to where his list would be best printed. The revising officer is more competent to judge than the Secretary of State, because the Secretary of State is in Ottawa, and he cannot be everywhere, though he were a bird, and that being the case the Secretary of State ought to admit that a man who has necessary education and qualification to prepare the voters' list, is also qualified to say in what office he could have the work most satisfactorily done in his immediate vicinity. That, the Secretary of State denies to the revising officer, and he takes to the Government this, as a matter of patronage, all over the country.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My friend is mistaken, and completely mistaken. It is not a matter of patronage; it is a matter of economy. I have stated before, and I repeat, that all that can be done in the printing office will continue to be done; instructions will be given to that effect to the revising officers; and when my hon. friend supposes that the Government wants to keep a small piece of patronage, and that prices will be paid indiscriminately without any right judgment being exercised, I think I can calm his conscience by telling him that if the Secretary of State does not know, those who advise him know very well what should be done. The prices have been fixed by the Auditor General and the Queen's Printer, and the printers understand that they are not men to give patronage to the detriment of the country.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman says that the Auditor General and the Queen's Printer have fixed the prices. I do not object to that; it may be quite proper, although the prices at Toronto and at Ottawa may be quite different from the prices at Vancouver or Halifax. But the hon, gentleman has not only claimed the right to do that, but he denies to the revising officer the right to say where he shall get the work done at those prices, and to that extent he is assuming patronage. He did not have it under the Bill as it originally stood, but now he claims that he must have it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Are we to understand that if, in the locality where the revising officer resides, there is no printing office where a paper is published supporting the Government, the revising officer is to be instructed to take the list to some outside town to have it printed?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I hope not.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Will the hon. Secretary of State be kind enough to inform the Committee what is the price that has been fixed by the Queen's Printer to be paid for printing these lists?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We have fixed 3 cents per name per line, and I propose to alter the form of one list so as to take away at least one-third of the cost. The interpretation of the Act had not been well understood, the first lists were bulky, and on those we paid 3 cents per name per line: but in this case I expect that 33 per cent. will be taken from the cost. As for giving instructions that the work should not go to papers published by opponents of the Government, I never said that, but I should not be bound to send it there.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I cannot see how the Queen's Printer can be said to have discharged his duties efficiently in the past, because we all know that before the establishment of the bureau, his estimate of the cost was 12½ cents per name, and now, after revising it, he has put it down to 3 cents.

Mr. (HAPLEAU. The printers throughout the country have changed their prices willingly.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Then, it must be acknowledged that when the Queen's Printer fixed 12½ cents, he fixed a very exorbitant price.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No; because the first time the lists were printed, the printers were obliged to keep the type standing for four months, and to have sufficient of that special type in their establishments to keep the whole lists standing. This made the work one which all small country offices could not perform, and added greatly to its cost. The supplementary lists can be printed form by form, and the matter distributed as the work proceeds.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do I understand the hon. Secretary of State to say that if a printing office in the electoral district is willing to do the work for the price agreed upon, in all cases the work shall be done within the electoral district?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I say it will be so, although the Government cannot be bound by a rule of that kind and it cannot be put in a statute. That is exactly the disposition we have. Even if the office were opposed to the Government, if the revising officer suggested it as the cheaper way to do it, the work would be done there.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Why not allow the revising officer to ask for tenders, and if possible get the work done for less?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When we have done it ourselves, we have done it well, and will continue to do so.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I cannot see why competing printing offices should not have a right to tender for this work. Let the Government fix a maximum price to be paid, and let the revising officer ask for tenders in the town where he resides, not to exceed that amount, and I think it possible that the work will be done for a great deal less than the price fixed by the Government.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If there are printers tendering at lower prices, I am perfectly sure the Auditor General and the Queen's Printer will be happy to give them the work; but if they can go under the prices fixed, they are more clever than I think they are.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. They will not have the opportunity if the revising officer is instructed to pay that price.

Mr. BARRON. I must protest against the handing of patronage in this way to whatever printer the Government like. If this arrangement is carried into practice, it may end in one or more revising officers resigning because they are sent to a printing office with whom it might be unpleasant for them to have relations. Therefore, I think it should be left to the revising officer himself to say what printer shall do the work. I certainly think it is a very bad policy for the Government to take into their hands this paltry piece of patronage, when the printer may be one with whom the revising officer has not by any means friendly relations.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The suggestion of my hon. friend from North Brant (Mr. Somerville) has the merit of economy, and that is the principal object which the hon. Secretary of State has, I understand, in this Bill; and does he not think it would be well to embody it in the Bill?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No; I do not think so.

Mr. MULOCK. I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State whether this change which is proposed is the result of the working of the Act, or is it the result of some demand on the part of the printers?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is the suggestion of the Auditor General himself; these prices have been determined by him, with the assistance of the Queen's Printer, at such an economical figure that the work can be done to the best advantage of the Government and the public.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask if it is intended to adopt a uniform tariff for the whole Dominion?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We will examine that question; we cannot pay the same price in Victoria as we pay in Toronto.

Mr. MULOCK. Why not? I do not think the Secretary of State has quite made out a good case. I made a comparison in my riding as to what the printing of the voters' lists costs under his Act and under the municipal system, which made the printing open to competition. The printing of the voters' lists in my riding in 1886, cost five times as much as it did under the municipal system.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Speak of 1889. The form is much simpler.

Mr. MULOCK. I am aware of that, but unless the Government adopt some system under which there will be a public competition, they may be led away by their own weakness and desire to benefit others.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We cannot make another rule. It is intended to print still a large number of those lists at the Printing Bureau when it can be done to accommodate the revising officers.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). They will be printed in the order they come in?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There will be no favoritism as far as dispensing patronage is concerned?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There will be no more favor in that than in the printing of the lists.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Why should there be any necessity for giving any patronage out? Is it because the Printing Bureau is not furnished with material to do the work for the whole Dominion or because it cannot obtain a sufficient number of printers to do the work? We ought to know in what way this Printing Bureau has failed.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have explained three or four times, and am not going to explain again. We spend more money in useless repeated discussions, than in printing the lists.

The question I have e. The information I Mr. SOMERVILLE. asked is a reasonable one. am asking for I do not ask with a view of annoying the Secretary of State at all, but for the purpose of obtaining information. Why is it that the Printing Bureau, which has at its back the whole Dominion and has sufficient funds to purchase all the material necessary to accomplish any purpose, in the way of public work, has failed?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is on account of the difficulty and inconvenience of transferring the lists from different parts of the country. This has been pointed out to us by the revising officers, and we are taking power to do the work at local printing offices where it can conveniently be done. is no question of patronage in this. At the same time, I must say that the work of printing this year 14,000 supplementary lists at the Printing Bureau was rather difficult, even if the establishment had been double, and if we could obtain the men to do it. Those lists which we can print at the Printing Bureau conveniently will be printed there, but I want to have the liberty to print some of them in the locality where the revision takes place.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Then, the contention of the Secretary of State, when he proposed to print these lists at the Printing Bureau, is proved to be incorrect, because the inconvenience of getting this work done at the Government printing office is so great that he proposes to have it done in different parts of the Dominion. That proves that our contention was correct, that the proper way is to have them printed—if they are to be printed at all—in the localities where the revision takes place, that it would be more satisfactory to the public and would be more likely to be a correct list if the printing were done in the place where the list was revised. This was the contention of many members of the House at the time, and that contention is established by what the hon. gentleman has said to-night. I hope that at some future time the hon gentleman may agree to do away with printing these lists here in Ottawa altogether, and may give the patronage to the printers in the different localities in which the lists are revised.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). At the maximum of 3 cents per name, which the hon. gentleman has fixed for outside work, I desire to ask if the bureau could do the work for less money?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not think so.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then, in that case, why do you not have all the lists printed in the different electoral districts? There is no object in having any of them printed in the Government bureau, if there is no economy in doing it there.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I wish my hon. friend would visit the Printing Bureau. All the lists that are printed there represent an economy of three-fourths of the printing, if such printing had to be repeated every year; those lists are kept standing, and the only change, if there were a revision every year, would be about 4 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). An hon. gentleman near me, informs me, that in his constituency, the changes amounted to 40 per cent. in the list.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That may be the case in Mr. CHAPLEAU.

there are great changes made, because workingmen move more frequently than do the residents in agricultural constituencies, but the general proportion is what I have stated.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. If the proportion of changes approaches nearly to 40 per cent., it would be better to have the whole list reset every time, than to have the corrections made—to insert new names in one case, and to strike out other names in another case. Every printer knows that it would be better to reset the whole list, than to make corrections of that kind.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It has been suggested to me, though I am not very strongly in favor of it, that we should add to this the words "to each candidate at the last election who shall have polled the largest number of votes after the candidate elected." I do not see why, when a candidate who does not poll half the number of votes of the successful candidate is punished by law by losing his deposit, he should be entitled by law to receive these documents.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. If that amendment is carried, some people would not get these documents at all. In my county the Government candidate always loses his deposit.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not see why that should be adopted. The unsuccessful candidate to-day might be the successful candidate tomorrow.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the number of copies supplied to a member should be increased. I think at least half a dozen should be supplied for each polling sub-division. Two copies are not nearly enough.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Hon. gentlemen opposite preach economy in one place and extravagance in another.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the price which is fixed for these lists is extravagant. At present. 10 cents is charged for each polling sub-division. These lists do not cost the Government one-fourth of that amount. I believe they do not cost them 2 cents, and why should they charge 10 cents to the public? Do they want to make a profit?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When it comes from his own pocket, my hon. friend (Mr. Somerville) is very economical. I say that 10 cents is not too much to pay for a list containing 250 names.

Mr. SOMERVIILLE. I think the price is extravagant, because it does not cost the Government anything like that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The price fixed in the original Bill was 50 cents for the whole list, and the hon, gentleman will see how wide this charge is compared with what was originally fixed. In my opinion, the list ought not to cost more than one dollar, but under this it will cost more than a Holy Bible.

Mr. BOWELL. You can get that for nothing. Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There should be facilities for obtaining the list in each constituency at a reasonable price, but, if it amounts to $7 or $8 for a constituency, I think that is an extravagant price.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the Secretary of some localities. In cities and towns no doubt State ought to reconsider that proposition. I do not think the Printing Bureau wants to make an income out of the members of the House.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I want to reduce the expenditure.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the Secretary of State might give a little consideration to my suggestion. It is impossible for a member who has to look after the lists, or any one else, properly to attend to it with only two lists. I am not complaining of myself particularly, but I know from experience that more than two supplemental lists for each polling sub-division are absolutely necessary. I hope the Secretary of State will not consider this suggestion as made simply to annoy him; it is a bonâ nide suggestion which I make. I think it is due to each member that he should not be compelled to put his hand into his pocket to pay for additional lists. Somebody has to take an active part to see that the supplemental list is correct. In the more sparsely settled parts of the country a polling subdivision may embrance ten miles or more, and a member cannot work this on only two lists, and in a very limited period of time; it is absolutely necessary for him to purchase a lot of copies from the Department in order to have that list investigated properly.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When we had that beautiful municipal system, to which my hon. friends would like us to return, we had even more trouble. There are twenty municipalities in my county, and I used to pay $3 or $4 to each municipality; that made $60 that I had to pay for copies of the lists. At the present moment you get two copies for nothing.

Mr. MULOCK. In our Province we get twelve for nothing.

Mr. TISDALE. I think the Secretary of State ought to give us at least four copies.

 $\operatorname{Mr.}$ CHAPLEAU. If it will close the discussion I will grant four copies.

Mr. MULOCK. Make it six.

Mr. DENISON. Two is quite sufficient. What is the use of increasing the number?

 ${\rm Mr.}$ MONTAGUE. I think six is not too many ; last year we had eight or ten.

Mr. MASSON. Ten is quite little enough. could never visit my riding with less than ten.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If four is not enough, you can borrow of the various other parties who are entitled to receive them.

On section 5,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We make it obligatory on each postmaster to post up the list and keep it posted.

Mr. MULOCK. If he has to keep it posted all the time no person can take it down to look at it.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What will you do where there is no post office in a polling sub-division? Frequently you will find in some rural sub-divisions that none exist.

On section 7,

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is it understood that all the final lists are to be printed at the Government Printing Bureau here, or will they be printed at outside printing offices?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. At the bureau here; they cannot be otherwise.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would suggest to the Secretary of State that more than one copy should be sent to members of the House of Conumons. I think he should supply us with at least ten copies.

Mr. MULOCK. I think we should get three or four copies at all events.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think you better say two copies instead of one. My hon. friends do not know that a copy of all the lists of the Dominion, costs $400.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You are counting something for the cost of the type setting. It cannot be possible that the printing of a few extra sheets will cost that much more. When you are printing one sheet, as you propose to do now, you have only the cost of the paper and the presswork to add. When you print one copy you can print twenty copies in less than two minutes. I am satisfied the Secretary of State is mistaken as to the cost of extra copies. The paper and presswork could not cost so much as he states.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is 7,000 pages.

Mr. DENISON. The copies will not be wanted every year, and if you are supplied with ten copies they will lie around for three or four years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We appropriate money for purposes that are not at all as necessary as the voters' lists, and we should make a liberal distribution of these lists to the members of the House. I do not say we should have ten copies every year, but certainly it is important that a considerable number should be placed at the disposal of members of the House.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the Committee is willing to incur the expense, we will make it four copies to each member of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

On section 8,

Mr. MULOCK. There should be some provision here for formal notice to be given of the date to which the court is adjourned. How are people who are assembled in the court to know when it may resume its sitting? The people may disperse, and the revising officer may come to the court in the evening and continue the business. We know that at some portions of the day a person may be unable to do work which he may be able to do later on, and some provision ought to be made for giving notice to the public when the court resumes.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is very seldom such a case happens, because the revising officer, although at home, may send a notice to adjourn the court. It is to prevent any claim of illegality for not holding the court that this provision is inserted.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is possible the revising officer may hold his court at some place, perhaps twelve or even twenty miles from the residence of the parties who are interested. In that case, they should not be detained from day to day until the revising officer holds his court. If they go home ten, twenty or thirty miles from the court house, how will they know when the court is going to sit again, or will they be compelled to stay in the place until the revising officer sees fit to hold his court ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Suppose the revising officer should not be at the court, they would remain until the next day.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think that the clause as it stands might be liable to great abuse, and I would suggest that it read :

Whenever from illness or from other casualty a revising officer is unable to hold any sitting at the time appointed therefor, such sitting shall remain adjourned to the following day, or until other provision is made for the holding of such sitting, of which due notice shall be

This would prevent the electors being taken by surprise. If the court were adjourned from day to day in a thinly populated district, the revising officer might hold the court without anybody knowing it.

Amendment negatived.

On section 9,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Must the lists referred to in sub-section 2 be certified to by the revising officer before they are sent out?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes; I want to move an addition to the Bill, applicable to two districts, which are in this position. I speak of the lists for the County of Essex and the lists for the electoral division of New Westminster. In South Essex, Pelee Island, where the revision should have been made, was quarantined on account of a prevailing epidemic, and the officer could not attend to the revision. In New Westminster, the outlying districts could not, for some other uncontrollable reason, be visited by the revising officer. The amendment I propose is, that the revising officers for the respective districts shall make and send to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery supplementary lists for Pelee and Cassiar on or before the 1st July, 1890, and should any election be held in either of said electoral districts before the completion of the revision for Pelee Island or Cassiar, the persons entitled to vote shall be those whose names are now on the last completed revised lists for these districts. The last section

"It shall not be necessary that any revision of the voters' lists prepared in accordance with the provisions of the Franchise Act. shall be proceeded with during the present year, 1890, but the list of voters in force at the time of the passing of the Franchise Act or during the present year shall continue to be in force until the final revision, according to the provisions of the said Act, in the year 1891."

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I suppose the House may accept that as a distinct understanding that the Government have no intention whatever of having any elections.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We have no special interest in forcing an election this year.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister has made such exertions to cheapen the printing of these lists that we certainly thought we would be able to have a revision every year. His proposition now is a confession, that even with the economy in the printing of the lists, the Act is so extravagant that we cannot revise the lists every year; and consequently a good many citizens, who ought to have eral elections may occur before another revision takes place, for it may seem advisable to the Ministry to hold general elections at any time be-tween now and 1891. They might even be forced by circumstances to resign as a Cabinet. Events we do not care to refer to, affecting the lives of members of the Government, might bring about a change of ministry. For all these reasons it is absolutely necessary that the lists should be revised every year, and although what the Minister proposes will no doubt be carried out, it will not be carried out without a vigorous protest from this

Mr. Somerville.

Mr. BRIEN moved that the qualification of voters under paragraph 6 of section 3 be reduced from $300 to $200.

Mr. MULOCK. In my opinion this is a very wise provision. There are many people who may work all the year round and not be able to make Where wages are low, or through sickness or some other cause, a man may not be able to earn $300; yet he is disfranchised through no fault of his own, although he may have been just as industrious as the man who earns $300. The real object of this income qualification is to provide that if a man is industrious, if he is occupied during the year, he shall have the right to vote. It is a difficult thing sometimes for a man to earn $300 all the year round. In the course of my revision I was much struck with that; I came across a large number of cases of worthy men who could not convince the revising officer they had earned $300; and we came to the conclusion, in our revision, that in spite of the Franchise Act, we would take a liberal view and allow a man to be placed on the voters' list, without closely scrutinising his earnings, provided it was shown that he had been industriously employed during the year. Take the case of farm laborers. Even if a farm laborer is employed all the year round, if he is boarded where he works, it depends upon the opinion of the revising officer as to how much he should be allowed for board, whether that man is put on the list or not. Some revising officers, by straining the law, could exclude a vast number of laborers and wage-earners from the voters' list, when the test was $300. There is no desire, I am sure, to exclude that class of people from the voters' list, and this proposition of my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Brien) will meet the case.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think this amendment is a very proper one, and ought to be accepted by the Government. In my own experience I found the same difficulty, that many men, although they were very industrious and ought to have votes, would have been excluded were it not that we took a most liberal view of the circumstances, and of the amount that should be allowed for their board; and it was only by taking such liberal view that we could say they earned $300. If you place the qualification at $250, it will cover all such cases without any straining at all.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I cannot see what ground for objection the Minister can have against this proposition, if it is desired to place on the list those wage earners who are entitled to be placed there. The Government have no right to object on votes at the bye-elections, will be deprived of their account of the sum of $50, when it has been shown franchise. Not only bye-elections but even gentime and again that there is a difficulty is rural sections of the country in placing a great many men on the list whom everybody admits ought to go on. Frequently we have to stretch the point a good deal, and take a liberal view of the case in order to make it appear that the applicant earned his $300 a year. Now, you will either deprive them of their vote, or, perhaps, compel them to take an oath that they do not feel justified in taking, all for the consideration of $50 a year. I hope the Minister will consent to make it $250 a year, then you will enable almost every laborer to be placed on the list. It is hard enough to be a laborer without being deprived of the right to vote.

Amendment negatived and Bill reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.35 a. m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 25th April, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that Government business have precedence on Monday, after Questions put by members, for the remainder of the Session.

Motion agreed to.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ACT.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved third reading of Bill (No. 136) further to amend the Revised Statute, chapter 5, respecting the Electoral Franchise.

Mr. LAURIER. I called the attention of the Minister of Justice yesterday to sub-section 6 of section 3, with regard to voters who qualify themselves upon revenue. The hon. gentleman promised he would look into the matter. Is he ready to give an answer?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I forgot until this moment that I had spoken of looking into it, but I remember that the subject was discussed last Session, and it has been called to my recollection since that the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Grandbois), who spoke to me about it. The difficulty, I think, arose from wage-earners-on railways, for instance—working in different places, and the solution I conceive to be a rigorous application of the law as to the place of actual resi-

Mr. LAURIER. As we are not to have a revision of the list this year, I do not see any pressing necessity to amend the Act. I had, myself, an amendment to suggest, but will defer that till another time. I am not sure that the law calls for an amendment, because a man can only have one domicile, and when he has made an application to be registered in one place, his application to be registered in another should not be received. For instance, if he makes an application at Lévis and then goes to Rivière du Loup, the two applications should not be granted, but a young man who has no house of his own and boards half the week at one place and half the week at another, 124 causes a certain amount of difficulty in settling his case. I imagine that, when he has sworn that he is a resident at one place, he should not be permitted to swear that he is a resident in another place. I understand, however, that the jurisprudence in regard to this matter has not been settled.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is almost impossible to settle this difficulty. The voter should be entitled to register only in the place where he make his application, and in my county the judge refuses to allow the voters to be put on the list if they had made application at any other place. It seems to me that it cannot be made very much clearer than it is, under this clause of the Franchise Act, which provides that the person claiming to be put on the income voters' list shall be registered only at the place where he is at the time of registration, and it is provided that he cannot be registered in two places at once.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. According to one of the amendments adopted yesterday, the revising officer would have no option to remove such a name from

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think last night the Minister said he would give some consideration to the question as to whether an appeal could be had from the decision of a reviser, appointed by the judge in the case of the judge's illness.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is perfectly clear. In the first place, there is a provision, which I read last night, for an appeal from the deputy revising officer to the judge, and the only question raised by the hon member for North York (Mr. Mulock) was, whether the appeal could take place to the deputy judge. I have shown him the clause of the Interpretation Act bearing on that question, and I think he is perfectly satisfied in regard to it.

Mr. WATSON. Under the Act as it stands at present, has the returning officer power to issue more than two certificates to agents in one polling sub-division?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That comes under the Election Act.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would ask the Minister of Justice, whether it is necessary that the whole of a man's income must be earned in Canada?

Mr. BRIEN moved that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions that they have power to amend the same by declaring

Paragraph 6 of section 3 of the Electoral Franchise et is hereby repealed and the following substituted in

Act is hereby repealed and the following substituted in lieu thereof:—
"Is a resident within the electoral district, and derives an income of at least $250 annually from his earnings in money or money's worth, or partly in money and partly in money are worth, or from some profession, calling, office or trade, or from some investment in Canada, and has been a resident of Canada for one year next before his being placed upon the list of voters, or the date of the application for the placing of his name on the list for voters."

Hesaid: This matter has been frequently before the House and has been thoroughly discussed, so I do not desire to delay the House to any great length in discussing it. The only objection I have heard to this amendment is that it interferes with the principle of this Bill. Then, I think, it is not the amendment but the principle of the Bill which is wrong.

There is no party question involved in this. know that the almost universal feeling outside of this House is in favor of this amendment. In my own constituency, there are about 200 votes polled in the Provincial elections which cannot be polled in the Dominion elections, and I have no doubt that is the case in the rest of the Dominion. useless to say that the laboring men as a rule receive $300 a year. There is a large percentage of the laboring class, which is a most deserving class, who are disappointed with this provision of the Bill. At the least calculation, between 40,000 and 50,000 men in this Dominion are disfranchised because the Government will not permit this change; and yet, to judge from the expressions of the supporters of the Government, the principal object in establishing the National Policy was to increase the industries of this country rather than to give an increased value to property. Property qualifications are practically done away with. I hope the Government will agree with this amendment.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am well aware that in my own section of the Province of Ontario an income of $300 a year for an ordinary laboring man is in excess of the income commonly earned by that class of persons. I know places where laborers are hired for $20 a month and board themselves. That is only $240 a year. The ordinary laboring man can very seldom bring his income up to $300 a year, unless he places some fictitious value on some of his perquisites, such as the value of a garden and keeping a cow, or something of that sort. Farmers in Ontario are not in prosperous circumstances. The prices of farm produce are low, and I think the same statement will truthfully apply to the prices of farm labor. The tendency with regard to the price of labor is in the same direction as the tendency with regard to the price of produce. A qualification that was fixed some years ago, as the wages were then, is a qualification that scarcely would be accepted now in view of the remuneration that farm hands receive. If the Government desire to do justice to a large class of worthy, honest and intelligent laboring men, they have got to lower the amount of the qualification from the sum of $300 to the neighborhood of $250, or they will exclude a large class of deserving men. The amendment of the hon, member for Essex (Mr. Brien) asks for a simple act of justice in placing the amount of the qualification at a figure that will enable the class of persons whom it was intended should have a vote, to obtain the franchise.

Mr. MITCHELL. When this Franchise Bill, on which the elections are now carried, was originally introduced, it will be in the recollection of every person that I thought the system was a very cumbersome and a very obtuse one, and I thought it would have been much better for the Government of the day, when they were giving the franchise, nominally to the workingmen, such as farmers' sons, and other classes of workingmen, that they should have adopted the principle of manhood suffrage. I contended that the principle of manhood suffrage would simplify our franchise laws very much, and it would have been more fair and generous to the large classes of laboring people who live in our community. But a different principle was adopted, to my mind a very cumbersome and expensive system was adopted; and Mr. BRIEN.

present time, we have had amendments to that law for the purpose either of explaining it, or extending it, or of placing it before the public in a different light from that in which it was origin-ally presented to this House. Now, I agree with the hon. mover of this amendment, that the object of extending the franchise was not to give the suffrage to property, but to give it to labor. In the county which I represent, there are a large class of laborers employed; perhaps there is in that county not less than 800 or 1,000 men who earn their living by days' labor. I agree with the hon, gentleman who moved this amendment that the limit is fixed just too high to permit the general class of laborers to come within the scope of the Act and be enabled to cast their votes for members of the House of Commons. Now, everyone knows that $20 a month is very good wages for a laboring man, and the man who can manage to secure from one year's end to the other $20 a month, does a great deal better than the average laborer of the community, particularly in the present hard times. If a man has to board himself with the addition of 4 cents a pound added to the pork, which will be the effect of the recent legislation by this Government, and 25 cents a barrel added to flour-

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). And have a dollar a day added to his wages.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not hear what my hou friend says, but it would be much more to his credit if he would get up and advocate the principle that I am advocating now, than to sit on his seat muttering something that we do not understand. Now, I say that this amendment entirely meets my approval. I think we ought to go in the direction of manhood suffrage as fast as we can. If the right hon, gentleman would reconsider his decision about what should be the basis of the franchise, and adopt the simple and inexpensive principle of manhood suffrage, it would remove a great deal of the difficulties under which we labor, and a great deal of the expense which the public have to incur, and which, as the hon. Secretary of State pointed out the other day, he desired to reduce, and it would be in the direction of giving to a large and deserving class of thoughtful and intelligent people the right to vote for men to represent them in Parliament, and I think if we had a little more of that class we would find fewer men sitting behind the right hon, gentleman and voting for an increase upon the food of the people.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If it be true that if there were an alteration in the franchise there would be fewer members sitting on this side of the House and more on that side, the hon. gentleman cannot expect us to vote for this resolution; but I do not believe that would be the case.

Mr. MITCHELL. You are not afraid of the laborers of the country, are you?

that they should have adopted the principle of manhood suffrage. I contended that the principle of manhood suffrage would simplify our franchise laws very much, and it would have been more fair and generous to the large classes of laboring people who live in our community. But a different principle was adopted, to my mind a very cumbersome and expensive system was adopted; and every year since that Act was adopted to the discuss the whole question of the franchise at this period of the Session. It is out of the question, and we must leave the Bill as a whole. Now, we have just got through the settlement of a voters' list, and we know what the franchise is if an election took place to-morrow. It would answer no good purpose, it would waste the time of the House, to go into this whole subject and discuss the question of manhood suffrage and compare, as we ought to do before coming to an intelligent vote on the matter, the franchise in the different Provinces as well as the franchise for the Dominion. I hope this will be resisted, and I would ask all my friends to do so.

Mr. BURNS. The hon, gentleman for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) is seeking to create the impression in this House that the people he represents are of a very poor class. Now, Sir, I have the honor to represent the adjoining county, inhabited by identically the same class of people, engaged in the same employment, and I utterly repudiate the idea that the hon, gentleman is constantly seeking to convey to this House. In point of fact, every man who is worthy of having the right to vote, enjoys that right in the hon, gentleman's county.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is not so.

Mr. BURNS. I have as good a knowledge of that county as the hon. gentleman has, living as he does 700 miles away from that county, and only visiting it, perhaps, once a year; I am in a position to speak with much greater accuracy of the condition of affairs in the hon. gentleman's county than he is, and I assert most unhesitatingly that every man in the county who is fit to enjoy the right of franchise, has it. The hon. gentleman has endeavored to create the impression, or, at all events, he has made the statement, that the average rate of wages in his county is $20 a month. Now, any man who is fit to do a day's work in his county will get at least $1 a day.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does he get $1 a day for all the 300 days in the year?

Mr. BURNS. I say in answer to the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) that the average rate of wages in the hon. gentleman's county is fully $300 a year. There is, perhaps, no more industrious body of men in New Brunswick than the men the hon. gentleman represents, and there is no class of men in New Brunswick that better deserves a better day's wages than the men whom the hon. gentleman represents. It is quite in keeping with the usual tactics of the hon, gentleman in this House, notably on the cornmeal question. In relation to that question he has endeavored to create the impression that the men of his county use commeal very largely as an article of food, therefore he wants the House to understand that they must be a very poor class. He says that the price of pork, which is used by the poor people he represents, is increased 4 cents a pound by the operation of the present tariff. Well, if all the statements made by the hon, gentleman are as accurate as that, then I ask the House what reliance can be placed on them? I rose for the purpose of asserting what I know, and that is, that the right of the franchise is enjoyed by every man in the hon. of fact, they have manhood suffrage. 1241

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I would ask the hon. gentleman if the laborers in his county get $1 a day in cash. It is not a dollar a day in cash, and $300 a year would be the extreme wages, for the men are not employed 313 days in the year, because as a general thing in the greater part of the country, especially in the county which the hon. gentleman represents, the men do not get employment during that number of days. The statement that they get $300 or its equivalent is not the fact.

Mr. EELIS. In the county represented by the hon. member for Gloueester (Mr. Burns), and in all the counties in New Brunswick on the Maine border, the average rate of wages is from $16 to $20 a month. That is the average rate of wages, and these men are not employed the whole season.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is a class of men in the Province from which I come, school teachers holding third-class certificates, who are paid less than $300 a year, and they are altogether excluded by the Franchise Act. Any one who attends the revision court knows also that a very large class of intelligent workingmen, who do receive, when they are employed, $1 a day, are not employed for the 300 working days, and they also are excluded from exercising the franchise. It would be a graceful act for the Government to accept the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rise for the purpose of giving an explanation. The hon, gentleman (Mr. Burns) misrepresented me when he said that the laborers in my county were a poor class. I never said anything of the kind, and, on the contrary, I said they are a first-class lot of laborers, but taking their wages the year round they are very poorly paid. When they are employed in loading ships their labor commands a pretty good price at certain seasons; but I tell the hon, gentleman that when he states that from one year's end to another the average rate is $1.50 per day, he states what is not true, and he is misleading this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I beg the hon, gentleman's pardon. He is going too far in contradicting statements made by an hon, member and discussing what an hon, member said.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the hon, gentleman misrepresented me, I have the right to reply.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman has a right to state exactly what he did say, but he cannot go further and discuss statements made by the hon, member.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. member has said he knew better the wants and necessities of my county than I did. I was born in the county and I was brought up in it; I am not a casual in the county as is the hon. gentleman. He has stated to this House what is not true.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LISTER. As there is evidently an attempt to choke off the hon. gentleman, I move the adjournment of the House.

then I ask the House what reliance can be placed on them? I rose for the purpose of asserting what I know, and that is, that the right of the franchise is enjoyed by every man in the hon. gentleman's county who should enjoy it—in point of fact, they have manhood suffrage.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman has chosen to take on himself to state what is the condition of affairs in my county; he has stated that he knows better about them than I do. I have represented that county for thirty-five years, with the exception of one Parliament, and I have maintained the confidence of the people. I have a thorough knowledge of the wishes of my people, and it is a piece of presumption for the hon. gentleman to say that he knows better than I do in regard to my constituents. Why should he know better? Is it because he built a railway at the public expense, and paid in due bills those who were paid? Is that the reason he knows better about my county than I do? He got a subsidy of $170,000 from the Government to build a railway which cost about $27,000 to run, and which only earned about $14,000. The hon. gentleman had better turn his attention to something which he understands, and not attempt to misrepresent what I

Mr. SPEAKER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. If the hon. gentleman is going to make such references to an hon. member, I must, in fairness to that hon. member, put the question of adjournment, in order that he may have the opportunity to reply.

Mr. MITCHELL. Put the question of adjourn-

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can now proceed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will speak after the hon.

Mr. BURNS. I desire to say-

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has spoken.

Mr. BURNS. I have not spoken to the motion for adjournment.

Mr. HICKEY. I wish to call the attention of the House to one of the arguments used by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Brien). been contended frequently by the Opposition in this House that the rate of taxes on food and other matters of that kind have made the cost of living The hon, gentlevery expensive to the poor man. man, in speaking to this motion the other night, said there was another feature that struck him and that was the change in the value of money, that an income of $250 was worth as much as $300 when the Franchise Act was passed. If that were the case, the arguments of the Opposition in regard to the tariff and the franchise suffer a very severe rebuke from one of their own supporters.

Motion to adjourn negatived.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Speaking to the question directly before the House, I must say that the last speech of the hon, member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) was better than his first speech, because in his second speech he said nothing and in his first speech he said something that will not bear investigation. He told us that under the present Franchise Act every man entitled to a vote had a right to vote under the Act. What does the hon. gentleman mean by such a expression? Does he mean that in this country, where our revenue is raised by indirect taxation, Customs and Excise, in which the young men have to contribute to the revenue and in case of war to go first to the front, while others remain behind, that those young men, because they do not earn $300 a year, are not worthy of giving a vote as free men in a free country? That is his argument. Why should we entail political disabilities on a man who may be unable from special circumstances to earn $300 a year? It it is in the calculation of allowing men to have a Mr. MITCHELL.

is easy to conceive a case in which men, as intelligent as the hon, gentleman and as well able to exercise a vote, might through illness or other cause fail to earn $300 a year, and yet they, forsooth, would not be entitled to vote. This amendment does not refer solely to the class of farm laborers. In towns and cities there are scores of young men, who are as intelligent as the great mass of the electorate, who under this Franchise Act will be unable to exercise the right of free men. I believe in the principle, although all members of this House and all the Provinces of this Dominion have not agreed to it, that in this country for elections of members to this House, where our taxes are contributed by the people indirectly through Customs and Excise, when military duty devolves on our young men, who will discharge it voluntarily if required, it is the right of a young man to vote when he is twentyone years of age because he is a citizen of this country. I support the amendment because it goes in that direction. I support it because I believe that, while it does not go so far as I would go myself, it will yet be of great benefit, because if $50 are struck from the qualification, hundreds and thousands of additional voters will be admitted to exercise the right of the franchise in this Dominion. I hold it is in the interests of the country that the people of that country who ought to vote should have a voice in saying who their representatives will be. Not only in the case of our farm laborers, but in our towns and cities as well, there are many intelligent young men, mechanics and others, who, through the operation of this $300 clause, are prevented from exercising their franchise. It may be, and I believe it is the fact, that intelligent men will be excluded under the $250 qualification; I would go lower than that, but my hon. friend has proposed that amount and I will support the proposition, because it is in the right direction, and because it will give their rights to a great many men, which rights will be withheld from them if you maintain the $300 qualification as at present. I know it to be the case in my own city, and other gentlemen representing cities and towns in this Dominion must themselves know it, and if they would speak candidly they would admit that there are instances, not few or far between, in which intelligent men are debarred from exercising their right of franchise, simply because you maintain the qualification at $300 which my hon. friend now proposes to amend by reducing to $250.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know what wages the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) pays his men, but I know that if he came into our section of the country and attempted to employ men at less than $300 a year, he would get a class of workmen who would not be worth putting on a farm or anywhere else. I have hired men from year to year, and I know that for a great many years past you cannot get suitable men to entrust with your work for less than $300 a year, and as a general rule you have to pay a great deal more. The hon-member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) said you could hire men for $16 per month, but he forgot to say that, in addition to that, you have to give them their board, which would amount to $25 or $26 a When this is taken into consideration, as month.

vote. I think there is hardly a man in Ontario, at all events, who would not come under the present provisions of the Act.

Mr. MULOCK. I extremely regret to hear the reason advanced by the Premier, for calling upon his supporters to vote down this proposition. He told the House that it was a waste of time to consider the interests of the workingmen.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the talk of the Opposition

Mr. MULOCK. He said it was a waste of time to discuss this question in this House. Sir, we have come to a pretty pass, when it is to be considered a waste of time for this House to discuss how they can make the condition of the workingmen better than it is.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Bah!

Mr. MULOCK. Was it a waste of time on the part of the Administration, to discuss how they could increase the cost of food to the workingmen? Was it a waste of time to call upon this House to try to discover new methods whereby they might extract money from the pockets of the workingmen without any due reward? Was it waste of time for this House to spend, as it did a few nights ago, many hours in seeking how they might further tax the necessaries of life to the workingmen? I can understand now the policy of the Government, in the light of the transactions of a few days ago, even in presence of the hon, and garrulous member for Hamilton.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not wonder at even the Secretary of State writhing after such remarks; but, Mr. Speaker, I can understand now that the Government having outraged the rights of the workingman, are now anxious to disfranchise him, so as to prevent him having an opportunity of expressing his opinions at the polls. I can understand hon. members opposite desiring to suppress discussion, and I can understand them, when there are election campaigns in the near future, desiring to tie down the workingmen of this country. We tie down the workingmen of this country. were accustomed to hear at election times, that they, and they only were the friends of the workingmen, but now they have succeeded, by this measure, in disfranchising a large number of them, so as to keep them from doing the Government harm. Do you think, Sir, that the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns), who has told us of the condition of the workingmen in his part of the country, desires to have the workingmen of his constituency entitled to vote? No, Sir. He says that he desires to have certain matters investigated before this House and the country. I will give him an opportunity at the earliest possible moment, and when that opportunity arises, I think we will find excellent reasons for the attitude he has taken upon this question. The hon. gentleman says that the workingman can make his dollar a day all the year round. He evidently wishes to deny to the workingmen a single day's relaxation. In order to be entitled to vote, a dollar a day does not allow the workingmen a fortnight's holiday throughout the whole year. He will not give the workingmen time to die soon. I regret that the $300 to $250.

Government have taken a stand against the workingmen, and that they have declared their policy to be to disfranchise the workingmen in order, if possible, to escape from the wrath to come.

Mr. FREEMAN. Mr. Speaker, we have some amusing scenes in this House, but there is nothing more amusing than when certain gentlemen of the other side of the House get up to plead the cause of the workingmen. It is amusing in the extreme. Tall the workingmen. extreme. Tell the workingmen in any part of this Dominion that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) is their special friend, and see what they will say to you about it. Why, Sir, he is nowhere the friend of the workingmen, except in this House, when he wants to make political capital. Now, Sir, while the hon. gentleman was talking about the workingmen, this thought struck me. A few days ago, I was speaking to a gentleman about the poor men and the workingmen, and he said to me: "Iremember distinctly when a few years ago, from 500 to 700 men stood at the foot of the stairs leading to this building, begging that the Government of the day would give them some employment, by which they could earn bread to fill their hungry stomachs." They were without work, and themselves and their families were without food, and at that time the Reform Government, which the hon. gentleman supports, was in power. Where was he at that time? What was he doing for the poor workingmen at that time? Was he their friend? Did he bring them assistance? No, Sir; the right hon. gentleman who now leads the Government came forward and proved to be the true friend of the workingmen. He took themout of the position they were in at that time, and placed them in the position they are in to-day, in which they can get fair wages to provide bread for themselves and their families, and to place themselves in a position to exercise the franchise—a position in which they would never have been, if the party which the hon. gentleman who last spoke supports had remained in power, and a position which they would cease to occupy if that party should return to power.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I was in hope that the Government would accept the amendment proposed by my hon. friend, because, coming from one of the cities referred to by the hon. gentleman who has spoken, I am able from experience to state how the present provision of the Franchise Act affects a large number of working people. The people who work about the wharves at Halifax--and I suppose the same remark applies to St. John—are paid, not by the week or the month, but by the day; and as they only get their wages for the days on which they work, a great many of them do not earn the $300 necessary to qualify them to vote. The Local Government have so far recognised this condition of affairs that they have reduced the income franchise so that a very large number of the working classes of the city of Halifax are placed on the electoral lists for the Local Legisla-I hope, therefore, that the Dominion Government, who have always tried to persuade the public that they were desirous of adopting the largest and broadest franchise, will not be behind the Local Government in extending to that class of people the right to vote. It will only be doing an act of justice to them if the Government agree to the amendment to reduce the qualification from

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I would like to say a word or two on this subject. Since coming into this Chamber I have heard it stated that men working on farms received $16 a month. That is very true with regard to the summer months of the year; but there have been as good men as you can find in Ontario working during the past winter for from $8 to $10 per month, so that they earn too small an amount to enable them to get the fran-The amendment of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Brien) is in the right direction, and it ought certainly to receive the favorable consideration of the Government. I have been thinking while this discussion has been going on that the Government have at the present time in the city of Ottawa a candidate who claims to be the workingmen's candidate, and he has been telling them what he is going to do for them. I was reminded by a friend of the Government to-day that on the eve of an election the Government became the friends of the workingmen, and set a number of them to work in front of this building to pull out the dandelions, but the moment the election was over and they had voted, their usefulness was gone, and their services were not required by the Government any longer. I hope that the House will accept this amendment, and give a large number of intelligent and deserving men the franchise, in order that they may be able to go to the polls and exercise the right of citizenship at the next election.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Brien:

YEAS:

Messieurs

Landerkin, Laurier, Amyot. Armstrong, Bain (Wentworth), Lister, Barron, Livingston, Borden, Lovitt, Mackenzie, Brien, Campbell, Cartwright (Sir Richard), McIntyre, McMillan (Huron), McMullen, Casgrain. Mills (Bothwell), Charlton, Choquette, Mitchell, Mulock, Corby, Couture, Paterson (Brant), Perry, Platt, Davies, Rinfret, Robertson, Ste. Marie, Smith (Ontario), Dessaint. Doyon, Ellis, Fiset, Gillmor, Somerville, Godbout Sutherland, Trow, Watson, Weldon (St. John), Ğuay, Hale, Innes Jones (Halifax), Welsh .- 51.

AYS:

Messieurs

LaRivière, Laurie (Lieut.-Gen.), Macdonald (Sir John), Archibald (Sir Adams), Barnard, Bell, Bowell, McCulla, McDonald (Victoria), McDougall (Cape Breton), Boyle, Brown, McKay, McKeen, McMillan (Vaudreuil), McNeill, Bryson, Burns, Cameron, Cargill, Carling Madill, Mara, Marshall, Carpenter, Caron (Sir Adolphe), Chapleau, Masson, Montague Cochrane, Cockburn, Patterson (Essex). Mr. Jones (Halifax).

Colby, Coughlin, Curran, Porter. Prior, Riopel, Robillard, Daoust. Roome, Ross, Davin, Shanly, Skinner, Small, Davis, Dawson. Denison, Sproule, Stevenson, Dewdney, Dickey, Dickinson, Taylor. Dupont, Temple, Ferguson (Leeds and Gren.), Thornen, Ferguson (Leeds and Gren.), Thompson (Sir John), Foster, Tisdale, Freeman, Tyrwhitt, Gigault, Vanasse, Wind Grandbois. Ward, Waru, Weldon (Albert), White (Cardwell), White (Renfrew), Guillet. Hesson, Hickey, Wilmot, Wilson (Lennox), Wood (Brockville), Wood (Westmoreland). Hudspeth. Jamieson, Jones (Digby), Kenny, Kirkpatrick Wright.-87. Langevin (Sir Hector),

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon, member for Beauharnois has not voted.

Mr. BERGERON. I am paired with Mr. Langelier of Quebec. I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. FISET. The hon. member for Verchères has not voted.

Mr. GEOFFRION. I am paired with the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins).

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I am paired with the hon member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer). I would have voted against the amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I desire to submit to the House a motion which, I think, ought to meet with its acceptance. It involves the principle that one man ought to have one vote only in an election. I think this is a proposition that will commend itself to the fairness and common sense of the House. In many constituencies in various portions of this Dominion a considerable number of names are on the list, but they are those of people who are not owners of property at all. They are not residents, and perhaps for years before the election have not been in the country, but have taken up their abode beyond the border. The result is that when an election is brought on, these parties are induced to return and record their votes, and there is no means of ascertaining whether they have been improperly brought back or not. It is of the first importance, in order to secure purity of elections and the free expression of popular opinion, that those parties should not be entitled to vote. The hon, gentlemen on the opposite side formerly opposed having the elections on the same day, on the ground that it would interfere with parties who were upon the voters' lists in different constituencies. But those hon. gentlemen have since agreed to the principle of uniformity or simultaneous elections, and it is quite impossible, except when constituencies are lying immediately adjacent to each other, that a party can vote in more than one constituency at a general election. It is most unfair that those persons who have property in adjoining constituencies should have two or more votes, while those possessed of properties in constituencies situated further apart should be denied the right to vote in more than one constituency. It seems to me, therefore, only just and proper that each elector should have but one vote, and that that vote should be recorded in the constituency in which he resides. I shall not detain the House by any discussion, as the proposition is so plain and simple that there can be no difficulty in apprehending it. I move:

That the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee to amend the same, so as to provide that no elector shall vote in any constituency other than the one in which he resides.

Mr. CASEY. Any fair-minded member of the House must see that this provision is absolutely necessary for a fair representation of the people. On the face of it, it is intended to give representation to the citizens of the country and Parliament, and there is no reason why one citizen should have any more voting power than another. Of course it is sometimes contended that, under the system of property qualification, property is represented in this House. That doctrine might have done very well in the good old Tory days in England when property was really represented in Parliament, but it is too late in the day now to put that forward in Canada. Every patriotic Canadian feels it is the people of the country who are represented, and not the acres of land or build-But even under the plea that property should be represented, the present system does not give fair representation. One man may own $100,000 worth of property all situated in one riding, and he only has one vote, while his neighbor may own $1,000 worth of property distributed over five ridings, in the proportion of $200 to each riding, and he has five votes; so that, under this system, neither is property represented in proportion to its value, nor are the citizens represented in proportion to their individual rights. The effect of the present law simply is to give the man who has money to buy votes in several distinet ridings, several times the voting power of the man who has not money enough to buy those votes, or who does not choose to do so. We take every pains to prevent candidates or others from buying the votes of electors. We look upon that as a corrupt act and punish it, and yet the law directly encourages those who have the money to buy votes in different ridings. I claim that the one practice is just as corrupt as the other; I claim that the man who buys land in a riding in which he does not live, for the purpose of obtaining voting power in that riding, is doing just as corrupt an act as the man who gives another money to vote. The one principle is just as destructive of fair representative government as the other. Let us compare the freedom allowed to the owners of property with the severe restrictions imposed upon those who are not owners of property. The latter are compelled to prove residence for a certain time before they can be put on the roll at all, while the former need not be residents at all in the riding or even in the country. They may live in New York all the year round and come here to vote, possibly in utter ignorance of the political issues of the day, and certainly in ignorance of the particular wants of the neighborhood where their property may happen Yet the income voter who is an active, productive, and hardworking citizen of the country, must of necessity prove residence within the riding for a certain time before he can be put on the list, and if he is absent from the riding too long afterwards he is not allowed to vote. The same is true of the farmers' sons and the property owners' sons. These two classes of voters, the income voter and the owners' sons, really comprise a very large portion of the bone and sinew of the country; they are the really intelligent and really productive power of the country. They are all wealth producers, men who have a stake in the country, and are interested in having its affairs properly managed; yet they must be anchored down to one particular residence before they can have a voice in the election of members, while the man who has a few hundred dollars to spare with which to buy property, may live where he likes, and his vote cannot be questioned. I have known men to have been brought from Kansas to vote at an elec-tion in this country—men who had lost all interest in Canadian politics, and who, in all respects, save naturalisation, were citizens of the United States. All their sympathies were there, and the bulk of their property, but a little bit of property in Canada, gave them the right to vote here. Under these circumstances it is clear that justice and ordinary fairness demand that one man should have one rote and no more; and in departing from that principle, you are departing from the principle of representative government entirely.

Mr. BURNS. The principle involved in the amendment is not one which should be adopted in this House. I believe property should be represented. Property has its rights, and those rights should be respected. I rose a few minutes ago, after the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) had made certain statements to the House, for the purpose of refuting those statements, but, because of the strict enforcement of the rules of debate I could not then speak, I take the opportunity now of referring in the briefest possible manner to some of his state-ments. I have not the slightest desire to misrepresent that hon. gentleman. My only desire was to correct the statements he made to this House, statements which are repetitions of many he has heretofore made, statements calculated to lead this House and the country to believe that the constituency that hon. gentleman represents is a very poor one, so poor indeed that the mass of the people there cannot enjoy even the right to vote. I say that I am in a better position than that hon. gentleman to know the condition of affairs and the condition of the men in his county. The hon. gentleman may be excused to a certain extent for the misstatements and misrepresentations he has made from time to time in this House, on account of his absence from that constituency. I, representing a neighboring constituency, know what I am talking about. I am one of the largest employers of labor in that section of New Brunswick, and I assert as a fact, that every man who is of the required age, and is not worthless or a vagrant, can have the right to vote, and has that right under the present franchise. I did not say that the average rate of wages received by the wage-earners in the hon. gentleman's county was $1.50 a day; but I said, and I repeat, that it would be an average of $1 a day, which would give each of them more than the amount required to entitle them to a right to vote. So much in reference to that matter. I now come' to a most unwarranted statement which that hon. gentleman (Mr. Mitchell) has made in reference to the Caraquet Railway, with which I am connected. I say it was unwarranted, unfounded and baseless. The hon, gentleman has imported into this discussion a matter which has no connection with it. He did it as part and parcel of a policy which some hon. gentlemen adopt of decrying that railway, and pretending that I had something to be afraid of, or to be ashamed of, in my connection with it. I have nothing to be afraid of, and nothing to be ashamed of; but, on the contrary, I have every reason to look for commendation in regard to my connection with that railway. despise the threats of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), and I challenge him here to formulate any charges he may have to make as to my connection with the Caraquet Railway Company. If enterprise is a crime, I am a criminal of the deepest dye. I have invested my means in that railway, and, with my means and means obtained elsewhere, a road has been built which is a credit to New Brunswick and a credit to Canada. The amount of subsidy obtained from the Government of New Brunswick and from the Government of Canada has not, as was stated by the hon. gentleman, been sufficient to build that railway. On the contrary, a large amount of other means was required and was put into that road. The hon. gentleman states that the workingmen were paid by what he calls due bills. Perhaps the hon. gentleman has a lively recollection of the days when he did business in New Brunswick, fortunately those days have gone by. I state, and I challenge contradiction, that every single dollar and every single cent earned by a laborer or a contractor on that road was paid in cash every month. It challenge the hon. gentleman to disprove that statement. On the 20th or 21st day of every month, the paymaster of the Caraquet Railway went along the line and paid the laborers in cash. Further than that, the company took a power in dealing with the contractors, which, I am sorry to see, has not been done in other cases, to appropriate money for the payment of the men employed before anything else was paid. I hurl back in the teeth of the hon, gentleman who made the assertion the statement either that the men were not paid or that they were paid in due bills. say that every man was paid in cash. This is of a piece with the usual reckless statements made by that hon. gentleman in this House. I think I may be excused for speaking warmly on this subject. I do not speak often, and I have not laid myself open to the accusations of hon. gentlemen opposite. I have nothing to be afraid of or ashamed of in connection with the Caraquet Railway Company, of which I happen to be the president. From the Dominion, we received a subsidy of $3,200 a mile, and from the Local Legislature, a subsidy of $3,000 a mile, making a total of $6,200 a mile. I ask any man who knows anything of railway building, how far $6,200 a mile will

Mr. LISTER. You bonded the road, did you not?

Mr. BURNS. It has been bonded for less than $8,000 a mile for the purpose of procuring the rails and fastenings. I invested my means in that road, fully believing that my investment would yield Mr. Burns.

but I will reserve my remarks on that question for the motion which my hon. friend for North York (Mr. Mulock) is going to make, when the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity, perhaps, me some return. Unfortunately, because of the large competition by water communication, that has not yet been the case, but we who have invested our means in the road look forward to the time when it will become self-sustaining and will also pay interest on these bonds. Last year the receipts were about double what they were the first year, and we hope that a dividend will in time be given to those who have invested their money in the enterprise. I say again that, if it is a crime to be enterprising, I have been guilty of that crime. I have not misappropriated any funds. I have not put a dollar of the money obtained from the bonds into my pocket, but, on the contrary, I have paid money out of my pocket to aid in the building of the road. Then I ask if I am open to the charges made by the member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), who ought to know better and, I think, does know better. I think he knows that I would not be guilty of any conduct unbecoming a gentleman, a business man or a member of this Assembly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was not in the House when the hon. gentleman commenced to make his remarks. As soon as I heard that he was directing his attention to me I came in. I did not hear the whole of his remarks, but I heard enough to lead me to believe that he stated that I made some misrepresentation in reference to the Caraquet road. Now, Sir, I was not the aggressor in this attack. The hon. gentleman chose to attack me about, my statement in reference to my own county, and I simply defended myself by referring to the wages paid upon the Caraquet Railway, and asked whether they were paid in cash?

Mr. BURNS. I stated they were.

Mr. MITCHELL. I asked you if they were paid in cash, or if they were paid in due bills, and I repeat it now.

Mr. BURNS. The hon. gentleman stated that they were paid in due bills.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the hon, gentleman now states that none of the work done on the Caraquet Railway was paid in due bills, then all I can say is that there is a very erroneous impression in that county about the manner in which the payments were made.

Mr. BURNS. I have stated so.

Mr. MITCHELL. Than I am bound to accept the hon. gentleman's explanation, which is all that I wanted in reference to the Caraquet road. I merely called attention to the charge that he made in reference to the rate of wages in my county, by referring to the wages in his own county, in which he was a large employer of labor on the Caraquet road. Now, the hon. gentleman has chosen to assail me, to attack my standing in this House, and to speak of the knowledge he possesses, in reference to what my county requires, which he says he knows better than I do. Sir, the hon. gentleman has a good deal of assurance, and he has a good deal of assurance to make the reference he did about the Caraquet road. I am not going into that question just now, but I will reserve my remarks on that question for the motion which my hon. friend for North York (Mr. Mulock) is going to make, when the of proving some of the statements he has made with reference to what he has done in the way of payments, and what he has received in the way of benefit from that road. But since he has challenged me on this subject, I will say this: Has any hon. gentleman in the House read the prospectus of that hon. gentleman? The hon. gentleman went to England and tried to raise money upon that road. Will the hon. gentleman say that the statements in that prospectus were true?

Mr. BURNS. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL, Because if he does, I say they were not true, I say they were the grossest exaggeration. He led the British public to believe that it was going to pay a large percentage upon the outlay, that the amount of travel, the business traffic, and everything connected with it, would be Why, Sir, in my opinion something enormous. the statements the hon. gentleman made were a gross fraud upon the public, I have no hesitation in saying it, and perhaps when the matter is investigated, that will be seen to be the case. What are the earnings as returned by the Minister of Railways the other day? I speak from memory, but I think the earnings of the road were stated to be $17,000, and something like $27,000 were the expenses upon the road. He talks of the amount of road already completed. What rolling stock has he got upon the road? There are one or two old second-hand locomotives, very likely bought from the Government, cast-off locomotives of the government, which he bought for half of nothing Government, which he bought for half of nothing. God knows whether he paid anything for them at all—I should not wonder, from the zealous support he gives the Government, that they were thrown in along with the subsidy; at all events, they were bought, very likely, for little over the cost of scrap iron. Now, the hon. gentleman has certainly a great deal of boldness to challenge an investigation into the transactions in relation to the Caraquet road. He claims credit to himself for enterprise in building that road. Sir, I venture to say that every dollar that ever went into that road was public money; he never spent a dollar of his own on that enterprise, except such money as he got from the bondholders through the misrepresentations which he made in the prospectus. Sir, I will not enter into that matter because it will be dealt with elsewhere. But with regard to the condition of things in my own county, I repeat that what I said about the rate of wages paid to workingmen in Northumberland, is true. The hon, gentleman are I missisted the first said the said that the said the said that the sai says I misstated the fact in saying they got $1.50 a day. The hon, gentleman knows as well as I do that in the summer season men can get $1.50 a day, but in the winter time they are idle for half of the season, and the fair average from New Year's to Christmas is about a $1 a day. I do say that $1 a day is the average earning of laborers after you have eliminated the 52 Sundays from the year. We know that $200. know that $300 cannot be earned by the laboring exceptional cases. Sir, the hon. gentleman speaks of the course he has pursued in this House. The course he has pursued in this House has not been any too creditable to him, and when he speaks about my making misrepresentations-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am in order. I say his course has not been any too creditable to him. On two occasions he has distinguished himself, in his own mind, when he attacked me, once two years ago, and again to-night, when he made an unprovoked attack upon me in reference to my statement about my own county. With reference to the Caraquet road, I had not assailed his conduct; I merely made an allegation of what I had heard as to the manner in which the men were paid. When he says that every dollar has been paid—why, Sir, it is not so long since the man who superintended the building of that road entered a suit against him in the courts for a share of the profits of that road, and yet he has the hardihood to get up in this House and say that every man has been paid in connection with it.

Mr. MULOCK. I believe the question before the House is whether an elector shall have more than one vote; I suppose, therefore, it will hardly be in order for me to say anything in reference to the Caraquet Railway. The Bill is a comprehensive one, and many subjects can be, and have been discussed heretofore under that question; but I hardly believe it is comprehensive enough to allow me to put in an amendment in regard to the Caraquet Railway. But, Mr. Speaker, if you rule But, Mr. Speaker, if you rule that it is, I shall be discharging a public duty in discussing that question; if not, I shall reserve my observations on that question until a more fitting occasion. For the information, however, of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns), let me say, that as I intend to bring the matter before the House, I will mention to him the points to which I shall call the attention of the House, in order that he may have an opportunity of answering them. They are not very serious, and I was not aware that so much importance was given to them as appears to be attached to them. Wherein the public are interested, in my judgment, in regard to the Caraquet Railway

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope the hon. gentleman will limit himself to the question now before the House.

Mr. MULOCK. I will. I intend to treat the hon. member with perfect fairness, and I want to tell him exactly what I have in my mind, so that he may be able to answer.

Mr. SPEAKER. Has it any bearing upon the question?

Mr. MULOCK. If he does not wish to have the information now, I do not press it.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Mills (Bothwell):

YEAS: Messieurs

Armstrong,
Bain (Wentworth),
Borden,
Brien,
Campbell,
Cartwright (Sir Richard),
Caser,
Caser,
Chaptlon,
Choquette,
Davies,
Dessaint,

Amyot,

Doyon, Ellis.

Fiset,

Laurier,
Lister,
Livingston,
Lovitt,
Macdonald (Huron),
Mackenzie,
McIntyre,
McMillan (Huron),
McMullen,
Mills (Bothwell), Mitchell,
Mulock,
Paterson (Brant), Perry,
Platt,
Rinfret,

Geoffrion, Robertson,
Gillmor, Ste. Marie,
Godbout, Semple,
Guay, Somerville,
Hale, Sutherland,
Innes, Trow,
Jones (Halifax), Watson,
Kirk, Weldon (St. John).—49.
Landerkin,

NAYS:

Messieurs

Archibald (Sir Adams), Barnard, LaRivière, Laurie (Lieut.-Gen.), Bell, Macdonald (Sir John), Bowell, McCulla. McDonald (Victoria), McDougall (Cape Breton), Boyle, Brown, Burns, Cameron, МсКау, McKeen, McKeen, McNeill, Madill, Cargill, Carling Carpenter, Mara Caron (Sir Adolphe), Marshall, Čhapleau, Masson Montague, Cochrane, Cockburn, Colby, Porter, Prior, Putnam, Corby Coughlin, Riopel, Daly, Daoust, Robillard, Roome, Ross, Davis. Shanly, Dawson, Skinner, Small, Smith (Ontario), Denison. Dewdney, Dickey, Dickinson, Sproule, Stevenson, Taylor, Earle, Ferguson (Leeds and Gren.), Temple, Foster, Thompson (Sir John),
Freeman, Tisdale, Freeman, Gigault, Grandbois, Tyrwhitt, Ward. Weldon (Albert), White (Cardwell), White (Renfrew), Guillet, Hesson, Hickey, Wilmot, Wilson (Lennox), Wood (Brockville), Wood (Westmoreland), Hudspeth, Jamieson, Jones (Digby), Kenny. Kirkpatrick Langevin (Sir Hector), Amendment negatived, and Bill read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY—SUP-PLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. FOSTER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:-

STANLEY OF PRESTON.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, further Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1890; and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act. 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, OTTAWA, 25th April, 1890.

BANKS AND BANKING.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 127) respecting Banks and Banking.—(Mr. Foster.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 52.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to add the words "such notes to be redeemable at the office for the redemp-Mr. Mulock.

tion of Dominion notes in the place where such specie shall be so exchanged."

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Do you always send Dominion notes to the city where they are redeemable?

Mr. FOSTER. At the present time such notes are redeemable at the offices in Toronto, Hamilton, Montreal and St. John; but they are not redeemable in Winnipeg, Charlottetown or Victoria. I propose to make them redeemable at the other three places as well as the four first named, which will be a great convenience to those who get notes in exchange for specie, and it will not be much inconvenience for us, as we have officers at these cities now.

On section 53,

Mr. DALY. Why has the penalty been increased tenfold?

Mr. FOSTER. The reason why the penalty was increased was because the former penalty was Mr. FOSTER. The former penalty for altogether inadequate. over-circulation was $100, up to a certain amount, whether the over-circulation was $5 or more. The penalty has been made much larger, and there is an additional reason now, above the fact that the penalty was too small before, why the penalty should be made larger, and that is, because the circulation of a bank that fails has to be redeemed out of the funds which have been contributed by the several banks; and although over-circulation at any time was a violation of the fundamental agreement of the law by which banks were to issue up to the amount of their unimpaired capital, it becomes still more dangerous when a fund is created out of which the circulation notes of the banks are to be redeemed. As the Committee will see, if the over-issue of a bank amounts to $1,000, the penalty is $1,000, or dollar for dollar up to that amount. From $1,000 to $20,000, the penalty is $1,000, and so on for the amount of excess in the proportion, as is stated here. The grade of the penalty now is just ten times as high as it was before.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I have no objection to the penalties, provided that these penalties are only recoverable by the Attorney General of Canada. I do not think it should be in the hands of any common informer.

Mr. FOSTER. We will discuss that later on.

Mr. COCKBURN. I should not wish to see the penalty reduced in the case of an over-issue of which the bank was cognisant, but there are several banks which have thirty or forty agencies, and it is almost impossible for them to keep exactly within this limit. Perhaps, if the Minister thought proper, some provision should be made with regard to the recovery of this very heavy penalty of dollar per dollar. If, as in the United States, the bank were contained within the one building, and confined to the one office, it would have control of its issue, but it becomes somewhat difficult for banks with thirty or forty agencies to know exactly to the dollar the amount they have really issued. Perhaps this clause might be framed in a more lenient manner. While I have no objection to the penalties, I think there should be some safeguard with regard to the mode of their recovery.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As a matter of fact, I may point out to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Cockburn) that hardly any of our banks do put notes in circulation to any thing like the amount of what they declare to be their unimpaired paid-up capital. Although possibly there may be some question about the penalty, it must be remembered that you are altogether altering the status of bank notes, and a very great temptation is being put in the way of many banks, and especially the smaller banks, to exceed the legal limit. I must say that if ever there was a case made out for putting very heavy penalties on excessive circulation, it is under the provisions of this Act.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The reason I called attention to the order of the procedure was, in such a case as alluded to by my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Cockburn). Of course where the tovernment have control of the penalty, in a case where the bank did not wilfully over-issue, they would find it was unnecessary to enforce it, but where the over-issue was a wilful violation of the law, then the Government would impose the enalty.

Mr. TISDALE. If we passed this section now, the discussion on the other sections may prevent us coming back to consider it. I certainly strongly object to these penalties, unless the regulation of them is placed in the hands of the Government. A Government would, no doubt, treat the banks fairly, if the over-issue was a mistake, and not a wilful violation of the law. If the Government are prepared to say that they will accept the responsibility of taking charge of the enforcement of the penalty, it would meet the objections I have to make. The hon. Minister might as well decide on this question now as later on. I think it is a most reasonable proposition that the Government should take charge of this, because they are the responsible parties to the people in seeing that the banking matters are properly carried out. In such a case the penalties after all, although they are very severe, do not amount to much, because the Government would apply them judiciously, and only where the banks have been guilty of wilful over-circulation would they inflict the penalty.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the temptation is given to common informers, as is done in the case of Customs matters, to watch and wait, it is very possible that some of the employes of a bank might lay a plan, and watch and wait their opportunity until circumstances placed them in a position to either cumstances placed them in a position to either blackmail the bank, or inform upon it. I think it would be very unfortunate to have any such powers placed in the hands of informers. The suggestion made, that the Government should take the matter in hand, is a reasonable one, and probably it will save discussion if the Minister of Finance now states that he will view the subject in this light.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is impossible to say at this stage that we will restrict the procedure in any way, so as to confine it to an officer of the Government to recover the penalties. That remark applies not only to this provision but to the other penal clauses of the Bill likewise. These offences will be always difficult to discover, and sometimes they can only be discovered by the aid of those who are immediately concerned divulging the offence, that the penalty can be enforced. But with regard to the informer endeavoring to blackmail, and with regard to the excessive penalties that are mentioned here, it must be borne in mind that whether the procedure is by one of the officers of the Government, or at the instance of a common informer, we are simply fixing a maximum penalty, and it is in the power of the Government to mitigate the penalty to any sum they please, even though informers receive a share of the penalty.

Mr. MITCHELL. Under any circumstances, the informer ought not to participate in any share of the fine. It is a most pernicious practice, and we have seen the evil effects of it in the Customs laws. I do hope it will not be engrafted in this Bill.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think it is very important, in view of these heavy penalties, that the bank should not be in the hands of a common informer, or even of a dismissed clerk, who may give information which may turn out to be unfounded, after the bank is put to enormous trouble and expense, because these informers are generally worth nothing. In a case like this, where there is fair reason for exacting heavy penalties, I think it should be within the control of the Government to do so. I would ask my hon friend where the Government take power to mitigate the penalties?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In the General Statutes, which says that we may limit or mitigate penalties. We will discuss that when we come to the clause about penalties.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It is very important that we should discuss this matter in connection with the clause now under consideration. There may be a bank clerk who over-issued without the cognisance of the bank, and he may inform on the bank and levy blackmail. I can cite an instance of a late case in a railway company with which I am connected, where we dismissed one of the officers for malfeasance, and he gave information to the Customs that things were smuggled in, though it was without the knowledge of the company, and the railroad was seized. The very same thing might apply to a bank, and the discharged official might put the bank to a great deal of expense and a great deal of litigation. If the bank does wilfully issue beyond its circulation I think they ought to pay the penalty, and I do not say that, under present circumstances, the penalty would be too high; but I do think that this matter should be under the control of the Government, especially, as my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) points out, if the informer is to get a share of the fine.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If a dismissed official gave information that a bank exceeded its circulation, I think it is in the interest of the public that we should avail ourselves of any information in this way. If a bank official made the overissue himself, there would be no penalty exacted at all, or the whole fine would be remitted.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not take objection to the Government getting any information from whatever source they like. That is not the point. What I take exception to is that any one—for instance, a discharged clerk—who may give information of some act which may have been a violation of the law, which he may have committed himself for the very purpose of giving the information, may get a share of the penalty. Let the Government take information from whatever source they like, but do not let the informer get any share of the penalty.

Mr. TISDALE. There are two points that strike me in connection with this matter. First, the shareholders are innocent, and if these excessive penalties are inflicted upon them at the will of an informer, what will the result be? It will be to puuish these innocent parties. The second point is this, and I would like information with regard to it before I am willing to assent to the imposition of such heavy penalties: have there been any cases of over-issues in previous years on the part of any of the banks? If not, I think we should proceed with great caution in making any changes which are not called for. For one, I am not prepared to agree to the proposition unless some such necessity for it is shown. Officers may may make mistakes, and such mistakes are most likely to occur at a time when the customers of a bank call upon it to the utmost extent, as in a difficult financial crisis, and at such a time it may happen that a bank with numerous branches would make a mistake which would render it liable to these penalties.

Mr. McMULLEN. What the hon gentleman has stated is quite true; but in cases in which excessive issues have taken place, as in the case of the Exchange Bank, to reach the guilty party it is necessary, not only to impose a fine, but to make him liable to a criminal prosecution. I quite agree that the innocent shareholders of a bank should be protected as far as the law can protect them, and that a man who exceeds the instructions given him by the directors and shareholders of the bank in the issue of paper, should be punished personally, instead of the stockholders who are not parties to the offence. I think, also, that some check should appear on the face of the bills themselves against an over-issue. I cannot understand why some means of sanctioning the issue by the Government could not have been devised. For instance, suppose a bank's capital is $1,000,000, and it has issued $750,000, leaving unissued one-fourth of the capital stock which is not paid up; I would like to know why the Government could not stamp every note that has been issued, with the words: "Sanctioned by Government," or something to that effect. If that were done, I cannot see how any bank could issue any notes that were not stamped. The Government would not be responsible, but would merely stamp the issue of the bank.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to ask the Minister where the clause is that he states exists in the statute and allows the Government to remit any portion of the fine sued for; I have not been able to find it. That point should be decided before we pass this section. The hon gentleman speaks of a distinction between the bank issuing the notes and the officers issuing them; but the section makes no such distinction. It makes the offence consist in the issue of more than the proper amount of notes, without reference to the person who issues them. The bank is bound to control its officials, and under that section it would be no answer to say that some official had done it. If a share in the penalty Mr. MITCHIELL.

could be sued for by a common informer, there is no power vested in the Government to remit the fine in case the over-issue has been accidental. I do not think the Committee will be prepared to accept this clause, because the penalty is enormous.

Mr. BROWN. I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. The penalties are very excessive, and there seems to be no escape if there has been an unintentional over-issue; there is no provision whatever made for such a case, which may occur in the case of any bank that has a large number of branches. I think, in the first place, the penalty is too large, and, in the second place, there should be some provision with regard to an unintentional over-issue.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The Act relating to fines and forfeitures provides how penalties will be recovered in cases not otherwise provided for, and it would apply to this Act, because I do not think there is any provision in the Bill with regard to that. In that Act I find nothing to show that the Crown has any power to remit the fine; it has only power to say what proportion should go to the Crown and what proportion to the informer; but I take it that the Crown could dispose of its moiety. As has been pointed out, there are cases in which persons would incur the penalty in strict law, but in which it would be unfair to impose it, because in large banks with many branches, sometimes offences have occurred without any intention on the part of the bank.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The penalties provided under the old law, which were very much lighter than those under the present clause—I think only about one-tenth-have proved during the last twenty years, in fact during the whole time we have had our present banking system, effective in keeping down the issue of notes, but, under the present law, it is thought there would be some inducement for the smaller banks to allow an overissue to take place. If that should happen, it would be a very serious matter, because these notes are guaranteed by this guarantee fund, and the managers and directors, who are the guilty ones, should be made to pay the penalties and not the innocent shareholders. These penalties are so excessive that it would be a serious matter to one of the smaller banks, with a capital of $1,000,000 or $1,500,000, to have to pay them. It would be a serious matter for such a bank to have to pay $100,000. I would suggest that we should go back to the old penalties for an over-issue; and that we should further provide that if the over-issue continues for a space of thirty days, then we should impose the highest penalties upon the managers and directors, and also an increased penalty upon the bank. That would prevent any accidental over-issue. If there should be an over-issue, when it comes to the notice of the directors or the manager, they can correct it and bring it down to its proper limits within the thirty days; but if it continues beyond that time, it is manifest that it is the result of design and not of accident.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it would be well if the Minister of Finance would consider together these two clauses, 53 and 55. As I pointed out the other day, in my opening remarks on the second reading, we are altering the entire status of bank notes; we are going to put a tremendous temptation in the way of the smaller banks to greatly extend their issue, and are giving them the means of doing it. I do not know whether the House have paid attention to the fact that all the large banks are enormously below their power of circulation, and a great many of the small banks are constantly close to the limit. stance, in the case of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, with a paid-up capital of $6,000,000, the total circulation is but $2,733,000, on the day for which I have a return. The Bank of British North America, with a paid-up capital of $4,866,000, has a note circulation of $1,224,000, which is one-fourth of what it is entitled to circulate. The Bank of Montreal, which has a paid-up capital of $12,000,-(00) and a reserve fund of $6,000,000, has a note circulation of $5,446,000. Then, when I come to the smaller banks, I find that the Union Bank of (anada, with a paid-up capital of $1,200,000, has a circulation of $923,000. The Merchants Bank of Halifax, with a paid-up capital of $1,100,000, has a note circulation of $1,032,000, almost as large as that of the Bank of British North America, which has five times its paid-up capital. The Bank of Nova Scotia has a little more than its paid-up capital in note circulation. Its paid-up capital amounts to $1,114,000, and its circulation to $1,325,000.

An hon. MEMBER. That is under special arrangement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand that is under special arrangement. But the point is this: the large banks, with great means and resources, circulate very far below their right to circulate, and the small banks, even at the present moment, are close up to the amount the law allows them. And we are going by clause 55 to put the notes of the smaller banks on a par with those of the best, and, consequently, you are going to put, in the hands of the smaller, the power of enormously increasing their circulation, which, under your law, will not only be as good as gold, but better than gold, because, as I understand by your provision, if a bank suspends payment, 6 per cent. will be paid on its notes—a very good rate of interest as matters go. When you are going to give these small banks enormous powers and temptations in times of need, particularly those which, with a small capital, have many agencies, it is right there should be heavy penalties. If I may be permitted to comment on the two clauses together, seeing they are practically together, I will take the opportunity of repeating the caution-which is only a caution-which I gave the House the other day. I have no doubt whatever in my own mind that, in the case of banks falling into the hands of men like those who managed the Exchange Bank, the Maritime Bank, and the Central Bank, all of which have failed within a very few years, as this clause stands, there is an enormous risk entirely unprovided for, of people in such a position availing themselves of this clause to issue an enormous amount of notes in excess of what they are entitled to; and I tell hon. gentlemen they would find no difficulty, as things at present stand in the s stand, in disposing of those notes to partiesprobably at a discount—who would afterwards present them under the terms of the Act. Nor would any penal clause we could devise reach the case; because men prepared to do these things settled according to his suggestions.

would laugh at your penal clause after they had cleared the country with large sums of ready money, which they would obtain under this pro-

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am not able at the moment to put my hand on the penal clause I referred to, but I will find it this evening. I submit this is not a suitable time to consider the question of procedure with regard to penalties. At a later stage of the Bill we come to the chapter on penalties, and I propose we should then review the different provisions of the Bill as regards renalties, and say whether a general rule should be adopted with respect to all the matters or a different rule for each. It is quite clear that these penalties ought to be subject to the control of the Crown as to the remission of a part or the whole in view of the exonerating or extenuating circumstances I am inclined to think at present it would be likewise well to adopt the principle that they should be sued for by the Crown at the instance of a member of the Government, the Minister of Justice or the Receiver General; but that will be settled later on. I submit these penalties cannot be considered excessive unless members are prepared to say that in view of the increased facilities for over-issue and the increased temptation there can be no case imaginable in which so high a penalty ought to be inflicted. If we can imagine a case in which penalties so severe are called for, let us simply establish the maximum, and leave the prerogative to settle all circumstances in extenuation. I agree with the hon. member for Wellington that we should punish criminally the individuals concerned in the over-issue, and have in view a provision to that effect.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). That will be an addition to the penalties.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That will be a penalty on the persons concerned in the over-issue. This will be a penalty on the bank. Notwithstanding I shall propose the imposition of a penalty on the individual, I think it will be likewise necessary to inflict a penalty on the bank, so that if an overissue has occurred to the advantage of the shareholders, by the fault of any particular officer, the bank will have good reason to see that he is punished.

Mr. MITCHELL. As the hon. gentleman refers to the question of penalties in a subsequent stage of the Bill, would it not be well to leave this section to be discussed at the same time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The chapter I refer to is to the sections prescribing the mode in which the penalties will be recovered. Surely there is no occasion to leave over each section which has the penalty provided in it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The weight of these penalties has been objected to, and the latter part of the hon. gentleman's remarks seemed to me to be objectionable, because he said he would provide a penalty for the officer committing the offence and also a penalty for the bank. In that case, it is not the officers who suffer, but the stockholders, and they ought not to suffer when there are no laches on their part.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think, after the remarks of the Minister of Justice, this may be Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think section 78 of the Audit Act deals with this subject sufficiently.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Are you going to make any modification of the penalties?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

Committee rose and reported progress, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

BANKS AND BANKING.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 127) respecting Banks and Banking.

On section 54, Mr. ELLIS. The last clause of that section provides that the payment of any amount due to the Government of Canada, in trust or otherwise, shall be the second charge upon such assets, and the payment of any amount due to the Government of any of the Provinces, in trust or otherwise, shall be the third charge upon such assets. I propose to move an amendment to that. There does not appear to me to be any justice in allowing the Government, which deposits in the banks in the same way as any other depositor, to have a preference over the other depositors. Looking at the bank returns for December, 1889, I find that the Government has deposits in thirty Canadian banks-eight banks in Ontario, the amount being $194,276.54; twelve banks in Quebec, the amount being $3,587,598.85; seven banks in Nova Scotia, with an amount of $623,685.53; two banks in New Brunswick, with an amount of $117,360.92, and one bank in British Columbia, with an amount of $326,201.22. there were thirty banks holding deposits from the Government amounting to $4,848,523.06. Deducting the amount held by the Bank of Montreal, which bears, I presume, a peculiar relation to the Government, there was still an amount of $1,758,976.41 deposited in twenty-nine banks in Canada. If the Government enter into financial operations, hold funds in trust and do business as merchants at banks, they should not have any privilege over any other depositor in a bank. I know that the old idea was that the priority of the Crown should be protected before that of any subject, but there seems to be no ground for that in a country like this, and certainly not in a case of this kind. I do not think there is any precedent for it in England. It is true that the Crown there has a lien on some taxes, but that is different from our enacting that the Government of Canada shall have the first lien and the Provinces the second in these cases. No reason can be assigned for it. The Government itself, as a depositor, is no more than any individual, and we know from experience that, where the Government comes in, in this way, as a preferential creditor, great injury has resulted to other creditors. I think the proposed legislation is different from any which exists within the British Empire, and certainly it does not exist in England itself. I move to strike out all the words in the 48th line after the word "insolvency," and to insert the following :-

"And the Crown shall have no priority as a creditor or otherwise over any other person."

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the proposition the creditors found that the Dominion Government made by the hon. gentleman is a very prudent laid a claim before them for the money that had Mr. Weldon (St. John).

In the first place, if the law remains as it now is, it offers an opportunity for the Government to assist institutions that are becoming financially weak. The institutions will present their claim to the Government for assistance, on the ground that, in case of failure, the amount due the Government will be virtually a first lien after the payment of the paper in circulation. Now, I think this is unfair, because people investing money in banks on deposit, or otherwise, whether bearing interest or not, undoubtedly expect that the Government will protect the public as far as possible. Now, if this clause remains as it is, the Government may assist banking institutions that are getting into a hampered financial condition; they may advance money for the purpose of keeping them afloat, and in the end, if that institution should suspend, the Government is safe next to those who are bill-holders outside. holders outside are protected by the 5 per cent. that has been accumulated, contributed by the banks for the purpose of protecting any suspending institution. The result is that the Government is undoubtedly protected in the next place, because by this clause they claim the right to step in as preferential creditors over all other institutions. I do not think that is fair. I think the people of this country who are controlling money, and willing that it should be utilised in the general commercial transactions of this Dominion, should be placed upon a par with the Government of the country, and if the Government grant assistance to an institution that proves to be the means of carrying it along, and eventually it collapses, and then upon people stepping in and receiving their money in full, if other creditors that have not in their possession information necessary to enable them to take steps to protect themselves, it is undoubtedly an advantage taken over those people. I contend that the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman ought to be adopted, because it is only fair to those that are unaware of the financial embarrassments that may take place in the case of a bank, and the Government will lead those people for whom they ought to legislate. We are legislating for the public interest now, and the interest of all men who are interested in our banking institutions, and in adopting this amendment we shall place them on a par with the Government, so far as their claims would be concerned, if a financial disaster should overtake any of these institutions.

3964

Mr. MITCHELL. I entirely agree with the amendment of the hon. member from the city of St. John (Mr. Ellis), and with the utterances of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. Mc. Mullen). I think it is a most unfair thing for the Government to ask for any preference over the general public, and I think the depositors in a bank should not be placed at a disadvantage with the Government as creditors when the bank gets into difficulty. I recollect not very long ago, when a certain banking institution in the city of Montreal was getting into difficulties, that the general public knew nothing about it, and the Government advanced that bank a certain sum of money: they advanced them a second sum of money, I think—some $50,000 each time. When that bank failed the creditors found that the Dominion Government laid a claim before them for the money that been advanced. Perhaps the Government had no right whatever to make those advances, but, at all events, they did it, and the people found to their surprise that the Government put in a claim for preference over the ordinary creditors of the bank to the assets, claiming that they should be paid before the general creditors of the bank received It is well known that the bank any money. It is well known that the bank to which I refer was the Exchange Bank of Now, there was but one outcry throughout the whole city of Montreal in regard to the action of the Government. Everybody looked upon it as an unfair position for the Government to assume in reference to the creditors of that bank. The Government are supposed to be legislating for the better regulation of the financial institutions of this country, and they ought not to place themselves in a position to take what is evidently an unfair advantage in claiming a preference over the general public. I believe the right of the Government to have the first claim upon the assets of that bank was contested; I do not know what the result was, but I believe the Government never got the money. Whether they have made any efforts to collect it I am not prepared to say, but I understand the Government never got the money-of course, I speak under correction. I have nothing official to warrant me in saying so, but from all that I can learn outside, and from my knowledge of current events in relation to Government affairs, I believe they have not received a dollar of that money, but I believe that there was an opposition made to the bank going into liquidation. Now, I hold that kind of thing should be put a stop to. In this case it was an ordinary advance or loan to an institution that came to the Government and asked for their assistance. Some people were frank enough to say that there was some political influence at work when that loan was obtained. I am not prepared to say it was so, but there was one thing a little singular, and that was that the people connected with that bank, the leading men on the board, the president and the leading directors, and the men who had the largest investment in that corporation, were friends of the Administration, and perhaps if they had not been friends of the Administration, they would not have received that money. Now, for one, I do not want to see a repetition of that kind of thing. In this legislation the public should receive that protection to which they are entitled, and if the Government choose to make an advance of money to an institution and become creditors, they should only become ordinary creditors, and if any disaster happens to that institution they should only rank the same as general creditors of the bank. That is the position in which I desire to see this legislation completed. I think it would be very unfair, it would be unjust, it would be allowing the Government to assume the exercise of a power, not the exercise of a right, which this House possesses, and we should not endeavor to place upon the Statute-books of our land a law which will give them preference over all individuals who might be depositors in that institu-We know that the Government have means of information which the general public do not possess. They can protect themselves when the general public cannot protect themselves; therefore I hold that it is profess for them to seek prefore, I hold that it is unfair for them to seek preference over the general public on the faith of the bank's assets being fairly divided, if any disaster allows the Provinces any such right?

should occur. It is unfair that the Government should be able, as in the case of the Exchange Bank, to set up a claim for preference over the general public. If that was the law, it ought to be altered, and if it was not the law, I think it would be a source of regret if it should be made the law now.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I hope the Committee will consider very carefully indeed before they adopt this amendment, and I hope the hon. gentleman who has moved it, and those who have advocated it, will think carefully before they press it. In the first place, the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) stated that the legislation asked for here was without a precedent. I beg to say that, so far from that being so the clause which the hon. gentleman has now presented to the Committee is without a precedent in British legislation. clause which is proposed by the Minister of Finance, excepting in one or two particulars to which I will call attention, is at present the common law in force all through the British Empire and is the law of Canada to-day. The hon gentleman may ask me, why, under these circumstances, we seek to put it on the face of the Bill? For two reasons. First, because we are endeavoring to adopt an Act with respect to banks and banking, which will embody as much of the common law was well as of the statute law as we can conveniently embody in a Bill of this kind; second, in order that the public shall know what the law is with respect to the rights of the Government, what the rule is that prevails with respect to the prerogative of the Crown in relation to its debtors. It is better that it should be here patent to everybody who deals with banks, patent to every one who takes the trouble to examine the banking laws, than that it should be searched for in obscure decisions in the various courts in the country. Another reason why we desire to put it here is, that by the decision which has been arrived at on this subject it would seem that the law is not equal in the different Provinces of Canada on this subject now. We have undoubtedly a preferential lien in the Provinces where the common law of England prevails. The impression exists that with respect to the Province of Quebec our lien is not quite so extensive as in the other Provinces. Under these circumstances it is desirable, first, to declare what the law is and then to make that law uniform as to all the Provinces in Canada, because it is perfectly obvious that if our right in the Province of Ontario is less than it is in the Province of Quebec, in regard to our preference on the assets of a bank, we cannot, in fairness or justice, enforce against a bank in Ontario a greater privilege than we have in relation to a bank in the Province of Quebec. Another reason why we should put it here is, that there are conflicting claims under a system of government like ours, questions of conflict between the Crown in its right in relation to the Dominion Government and the Crown in its right in relation to the Provinces. We have, therefore, provided, to remove any doubt on the subject, that the Crown's right in relation to the Provinces shall be second to the right of the Crown in relation to the Dominion.

Mr. ELLIS. Do you think the common law

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think so. That is apparently settled by one consideration, whether the Provincial Government is entitled to exercise any of the prerogatives of the Crown; and I think that a Provincial Government is entitled to exercise the prerogatives of the Crown in relation to all those matters which are within its exclusive jurisdiction. It seems to me that the Queen is vested with the Government of a Province just as much as she is with the Government of Canada, only limited in extent as to those matters which are within Provincial control. The reason why the Province may fairly rank second in the preference, is explained when I state the general principle on which it is fair and just, irrespective of the question of existing prerogatives, that the Crown should have a lien.
The Dominion Government, to drop for a moment the expression "the Crown" and the use of the term "prerogative," is obliged, in carrying on the affairs of the country, to have resort to the banks and to have moneys in all the banks of the country. We are collecting revenue in Canada under the authority of this Parliament over a very wide extent of country, by a large army of officers of Customs and Inland Revenue, from penalty collecting officers, from magistrates who collect penalties due to us, from agents collecting moneys to be applied to the Crown, and the only hands we have for the receipt of this revenue or any moneys payable to the Crown are the banks wherever they are established. It is impossible that Customs officers, and Inland Revenue officers, and the officers of the Department of Justice, and the officers of the other Departments, who are collecting officers, can have vaults of their own in which to store the money. We must resort to the banks, not only for the convenience of making deposits but for transmission, and to that extent necessarily the Government is involuntarily creditor of all those institutions—these banks which are the creatures of this Parliament and this Government. We are not in a position of ordinary depositors, we are not in the position of persons who select custodians for their moneys; perforce we are obliged to avail ourselves of these monetary institutions; and the same privilege should be given to the Crown in regard to its moneys as is given to the Crown in regard to the discharge of the duties by its officers, for the very analogous reason that the Crown being obliged to discharge its functions of government by a great army of officers throughout the country, the Crown is relieved of responsibility for the negligence of its officers. It is impossible in the selection of such a number of officers throughout the country that the Crown can be responsible in damages for the negligence of every one of them. It is impossible in the selection of such a great number of officers that we can have the exact knowledge and supervision of every one of them that a private individual may have over persons whom he selects as his servants; and, further, the selection of those persons and the entrusting of them with functions is all done for the benefit of the public, for the carrying on of the Government of the country, and in relation to those officers there is the analogous principle that the Crown is not responsible for their neglect. And as we are obliged to resort to the banks, and as we are obliged to put our money there for safe-keeping and for purposes of transmission, it is undesirable that while Sir John Thompson.

it is there we should have no lien or security, and it is fair we should have that lien and security on these institutions which are created by the act of this Parliament and by the act of this Parliament Banking institutions are not at all in this regard in the same position as private debtors of the Crown, to whom we might lend money or make ourselves indebted; yet even in regard to them the Crown has the prerogative right of first preference, pursuant to the common law prevailing all over the Empire. Then the hon gentleman spoke of the impropriety of adopting any principle or maintaining any principle by which the Government could do wrong; but surely for the sake of arriving at a sound principle we should distinguish between the Government as merely a political body and the Government as representing the public. It is the Government, as representing the public, that has to deal with these institutions; it is the money of the public which has to be deposited in these institutions; it is the money of the public that is made a preferential lien, and if the Government as a political organisation does wrong, as it would indoubtedly do wrong by merely lending money to support a weak institution-

Mr. MITCHELL. As they have done.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know. There are many facts in the history of this country of which I am not aware, and a great many statements of facts in regard to history I find controverted so often that I am not able to state a positive opinion in regard to them.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the hon, gentleman venture to controvert the statement made by me, that the Government loaned money to the Exchange Bank.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. To controvert it? No. I venture to say that the hon. gentleman's statement is freely controverted, as are all political statements made, so that it is not necessary I should say anything in regard to it in discussing a principle like that I am considering. I do not desire to assert, I do not desire to deny; I do not know anything in regard to the subject.

Mr. MITCHELL. You know nothing about it?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was not a member of the Government, or a member of this Parliament at the time; I had very little knowledge of federal public affairs when that transaction took place; and beyond a casual mention of it now and then, such as the hon. gentleman has made, I know nothing of the circumstance whatever.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then we will enquire from the Finance Minister.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Whether the facts are so or not, let us discuss and settle the principle on the question of abstract right. If the Government is reprehensible at any time for the way it discharges its duty, it is subject to the censure of this House in regard to that duty, as to the discharge of all its duties; but do not let this House, for the mere-sake of attacking individual members of the Government, whoever may be the occupants of the Treasury benches, when for the time being they do wrong for which wrong-doing they are always amenable to public opinion and to the opinion of this House, do not let us sacrifice important public interests or jeopardise the moneys of the public and the public rights we wish to conserve, for it is the public rights we wish to conserve and not the mere grasping of any kind of patronage in regard to means by which we can assist our friends or assist the banks.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). With regard to the principle embodied in this section, I think it is very important, in view of recent events, that the law should be declared by Parliament, with regard to this priority, in whatever way it may be so declared. As the hon. Minister is well aware, this matter has been the subject of recent discussion in the courts, and a great diversity of opinion existed as to the relative position of the Dominion Government, the Provincial Government and the note holders, with regard to their priority. I must say that, so far as the decision of the court was concerned, the question is left in great confusion, and unless this Parliament deals with it, there will be, no doubt, considerable trouble. There is no question at all but that, as the Minister of Justice says, by the common law of the land, the prerogative of the Crown gave the priority over the other creditors. That prerogative originated from the principle put forward by the Minister of Justice that this was public money, and that the bank was the depository of the revenue and taxes collected, which were placed there for safe-keeping. By reason of the prerogative of the Crown, that money being placed, perhaps, somewhat different from other deposits, and being money used for the public benefit, priority was given. The Banking Act contains a clause, which is the first portion of the 54th section, making the notes the first charge on the assets of the bank. The question came up first with regard to the prerogative of the Crown between the Dominion and the Local Governments, but there was a difference of opinion among the judges, as my friend is aware, and in fact from the peculiar position in which the courts were placed with the two cases that came before them lately, there is really no binding decision with regard to that particular point. It is very important, now that we are discussing this Bill, that that point should be definitely settled. The decision of the courts has been understood to be with regard to the prerogative of the Crown, that it extended to the Dominion Government and to the Provincial Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. What case was that?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The case of the Maritime Bank. But, as I said before, there was a difficulty with regard to the priority of the Crown over note holders, and also a very important point with regard to the money held by the Crown in trust.

Mr. MITCHELL. How was it in the Exchange Bank?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I will refer directly to that and to the peculiar position of that bank, and the position in which the Crown was placed, as I understand by the law of Quebec. These difficulties have arisen as to priority between the Dominion Government, the Provincial Governments, and the note holders, and I think it is very important that the point should be settled now. When we come to deal with the question, and to make it a statutory one, and not relying on the principle of the common law, we have, I think, a right to discuss the matter with a view to see whether the Crown in all cases should have priority. My own opinion with regard to the revenue of the country, and to the moneys collected for the country, is, that the common law right should prevail. Although the hon. Minister puts forward the assertion that the Government are not able to choose a bank, yet, after all, the Government can stand in the same position as other individuals and have the same option as trustees have, and to a certain extent they ought to run the risk that other persons who have trust moneys are obliged to run. My view is, that where the Dominion Government is the guardian of public money, and where that money is placed in banks for the purpose of safe-keeping, that the prerogative of the Crown and the priority should still prevail. But the Crown have also become creditors of banks in other ways, and that is a much more important point, and one in which, I think, their right to exercise the prerogative is very questionable. My hon, friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has referred to the case of the Exchange Bank. As is well known, that was a case in which moneys were advanced by the Government by way of loan. The money that the Exchange Bank owed the Government was not money that had been placed by the Crown in the vaults of the Exchange Bank, as the hon. Minister stated the ordinary revenues of the country were. It consisted actually of loans made to the bank, the same as an individual or any other bank might have loaned money to that institution. In reference to such deposits, I think the Crown, in justice to the other depositors, should not stand in any more favorable position than any other creditor. There is no doubt that in this case the decision eventually was against the Dominion, upon the peculiar law of Quebec, but I think I am correct in stating that in the case of the Prince Edward Island Bank the decision was in favor of the Crown, even to the extent of priority on money loaned. If the Crown chooses to come forward in the character of a lender, even with the intention of assisting the bank, it should not, in my opinion, have any priority. I know that upon the course taken by the Government in advancing money to that bank, there was considerable animadversion on the propriety of their doing so, but, be that as it may, I will not discuss that question now. I think there is a broad distinction in regard to the priority of the Crown, for moneys collected for the public revenues, and for the money which they choose to loan to a bank for the purpose of obtaining interest; because we know that in some instances Provincial Governments have made deposits with banks the same as an ordinary depositor receiving interest, and the Dominion Government have loaned money to institutions for the purpose of assisting them. I hold that a broad distinction ought to be made between money so loaned and the money deposited as the revenue of the country, and I do not think, applying the principle upon which the prerogative of the Crown is founded, that it is at all applicable to cases of that kind. It seems to me that in such cases the Crown should stand in the position of an ordinary creditor and come in, pari passu, with other creditors in regard to this particular money. I think the first clause of this section, that the note holders shall have first claim, is quite right. In view of the circulation of the Dominion, the guarantee fund, and other circumstances, I think it is quite right that that point should be clearly defined, and that the note holders shall have the first lien upon the assets.

Mr. ELLIS. Does that come in before the priority of the Crown?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Yes.That is one of the difficulties that occurred in the late case I have referred to, and there was a difference of opinion among the judges of the Supreme Court as to whether the Crown had the priority, or the note holders. In the case of the Maritime Bank, the question was discussed in the courts of New Brunswick, and in the Supreme Court here, and, after a long deliberation, there was a great diversity of opinion. Some judges held that the note holders should have the first lien, whilst others held that the Crown should have the first That point should be clearly and definitely settled, and so far as the position taken by the Government in this Bill, in regard to this matter, is concerned, I have no doubt that the principle that the note holders shall have the first lien will be assented to by the House generally. That, my hon. friend must see, is to a certain extent an invasion of the prerogative, because there is no doubt that the general opinion is that the Crown would have priority, and I do not think the priority of the Crown should remain as to the notes. Then, there is no doubt that at times the Government are given moneys in trust for specific purposes, which they are obliged to deposit somewhere, and in that case, I think, the same priority should prevail. But in cases where the Government chooses to become a voluntary creditor of the banks, advancing money to them in the same way as any other institution or an individual might do, I think the prerogative of the Crown should not apply. Any Government that puts itself in the position of a lender should stand in the same position as any

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The effect of this section will be largely to reduce the security which the ordinary depositor has for his deposits in the The proposition contained in the first part of the section, that the note holder shall have a prior lien for the payment of his note, is one which, I think, will receive the general assent of the Committee. The objection is confined to the latter part of the section, which assumes to declare what the common law right of the Crown is in those Provinces where the common law prevails, so far as the Crown is represented by the Dominion. I am free to admit that if Parliament comes to the conclusion that the right of the Crown should prevail over the right of the ordinary citizen, that right should be extended to the Province of Quebec, and should exist there in the same manner as it exists in other Provinces where the common law prevails. It would be monstrous that one law should prevail in the Province of Quebec with regard to Crown debts and a different law in the Province of Ontario. If the Committee are of opinion that the claims of the Crown should take priority over the claims of individuals, I think that should be the rule in all the Provinces. But that is the main question upon which the hon. Minister of Justice argues, and there is no doubt that his contention at first sight is a very plausible Mr. Weldon (St. John).

one, that inasmuch as the Crown is compelled as a matter of necessity to employ agents or officers in the different Provinces to collect the revenues of the country, and to make use of the banks for the purpose of depositing those revenues, they should not be placed in the same position as an ordinary creditor. There is something on the face of that; but we must remember that there is a large class of people doing business in the country who are essentially as much bound to make use of the banks as the Government: they cannot help themselves. The average man doing business, the trustee who has large sums of money in his care, municipal and other corporations, must make use of the bank safes for the deposit of their funds; they are, to that extent, in the same position as the Government. The effect of this provision will be that in the case of disaster, when the note holders, the Dominion Government and the Provincial Governments are paid, the ordinary creditor of the banks will, perhaps, be left without any assets at all. I remember the case of the Bank of Prince Edward Island, which has been spoken of. There was no reasonable doubt that the prerogative of the Crown gave the Crown a priority over other creditors, but what was the fact? Even though the Government did not press their claim, hundreds of people were ruined; but if the Government had insisted on its strictly legal right, the ordinary creditor could not have got anything at all. We must not be carried away by such a large term as the prerogative of the Crown. The prerogative of the Crown arose centuries ago, and I doubt the propriety of applying it to the circumstances that exist in the nineteenth century. I cannot see why a trustee who deposits $100,000 in a bank on the same day as the Government, should, when the assets are divided, be required to stand to one side until the Government claim is satisfied. So far as the revenues received by the Government are concerned, a distinction might be made; but I see so many difficulties dividing the rights of the Crown quoad deposits from its rights quoad the moneys received for revenue, that I am disposed to accept the broad proposition of the hon. member for St. John who declares that the Crown in its commercial dealings, that is, in its deposits in the banks, shall stand in the same position as the average depositor. Our duty is to so guard the privileges which we grant to the banks that any body who does business with them shall be absolutely safe, so far as legal checks and guards can make him safe; after that, we ought to leave those who deal with the banks on the same level; and it seems to me that even-handed justice will be dealt to all parties if we ignore what is called the prerogative of the Crown, which is really unjust priority over the subject. Then, when you come to the case of the Provinces, the argument which the hon. Minister of Justice urged with regard to the Dominion, cannot be urged with regard to them at all. They have not agents in discrete tant parts of the country collecting revenues. If they choose to select a bank in which to deposit small or large sums, they are not in a different position from the merchant or lawyer or capitalist who deposits his money there, and in the division of the assets they ought to stand on the same footing. In view of the facts of which I have a personal knowledge with regard to the Bank of Prince Edward Island, I cannot think that the acceptance of my hon. friend's resolution would be anything but doing fair and even-handed justice.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to say a word in reply to the insinuation thrown out by the hon. Minister of Justice. He said he had often heard of rumors in this House that appeared to have very little foundation in them. He said that with regard to a statement which I had made with reference to the Exchange Bank. The statement I made was not a positive statement—I said as much-that the Government were defeated in their attempt to enforce their claim as a prior claim against the general creditors. In place of the hon, gentleman throwing out the insinuation he did towards me, it would have been much more in keeping with his high position if he had informed himself on the matter, and then had at once asserted that the statement made by me was wrong, or had admitted the fact. Now there is a great deal said about the prerogative. I agree more with the hon. member for Queen's than with the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon). The hon, member for St. John in one view rather sides with the Minister in the position he takes with regard to the prerogative. What is this preroga-tive? The hon. Minister pointed out that he stood in a dual position—as a representative of the Government and a representative of the people. Sir, he stands in this position: that he is a member of a representative body to make just and equitable laws for the administration of the affairs of the The question is not whether such a state of things exists in England or elsewhere. The question is, what will suit the interests of Canada? What will give the depositors in the banks confidence that they will be fairly dealt with, in the case of an accident to a bank in which they have deposited any money? What is there about the sacred prerogative which is spoken of? Does the hon. member for St. John think because it is a prerogative that there is anything very sacred about it?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). To protect the revenues of the country.

Mr. MITCHELL. We want to protect the individuals of the country—the people who, confident that the legislation secures them, put their moneys in the banks; and we do not want the Government to have preference over these individuals. The Government have information and means of knowledge that individuals have not, and should take care, when they put money in the banks, that they put it in solvent banks. At all events they have their officers to look after that; and I hold there ought to be no preference. Talk about the sacredness of the prerogative. Why, by this very section they have abandoned the sacredness of the prerogative. They say:

"The payment of the notes issued or re-issued by the bank and intended for circulation, and when in circulation, together with any interest paid or payable thereon, as hereinafter provided, shall be the first charge upon the assets of the bank in case of its insolvency; and the payment of any amount due to the Government of Canada, in trust or otherwise, shall be the second charge upon such assets."

Where is the respect paid to the prerogative in that section? They have abandoned the right of the Crown and the first preference, which the hon. member for St. John holds so sacred and the hon. Minis1251 ter seems to hold so sacred. I admit, as the hon. gentleman stated, that when the Government have to collect revenue all over the country, they have to use the facilities the banks afford them. not individuals to do so? Have not people who have the control of moneys for other parties to do so? What argument is there that the Government should take precedence over individuals, trustees or merchants, or any class of people who have to use these same vehicles for the deposit and transmission of money just as the Government has? There is no reason in the world for it. There is nothing to be said about the prerogative; it is abandoned by the first section of the Act, and if abandoned in one case should not be retained in the other. Is it just that the Government, because they have the power of the majority behind them, should legislate in such a way as to do injustice to the people doing business throughout the country? Why should the Government ask to be placed in a better position than the people of the country? It seems to be an outrageous proposition and one we should not sanction.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. With respect to the hon, gentleman's personal observations against myself, I am a little astonished at the warmth of them. I made no observations whatever by way of insinuation against the hon, gentleman.

Mr. MITCHELL. You said something about rumors found to be untrue.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I never said anything of rumors. I said there were many facts with regard to the history of this country that I was not aware of—statements of facts which were so completely controverted that it was unnecessary for me to consider, in a discussion of this kind, whether they were reliable or not.

Mr. MITCHELL. And which were found to be untrue.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am not objecting in the least that the hon. gentleman should apply that qualification to his remarks, although I did not; I do not at all object that he should apply it now to the observations he made. I made no insinuations; I am a little above doing that. If I thought that the discussion about the Merchants' Bank was pertinent, it would have been shorter and plainer to have said that I placed no stress or reliance on any statements of the hon. gentleman when made for the purpose of attacking the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. You are coming out in your true colors.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will come out just as often as I please, and without any regard to the hon. gentleman's disposition to bully me or anybody else here. With regard to what the hon. gentleman has just said with reference to the sacredness of the prerogative, I made no allusion, I used no such words with reference to the prerogative. I was answering the statement of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis), who said that the legislation we proposed had no parallel in the history of the British Empire, and I was endeavoring to show that it is the common law principle which prevails all through the Empire and which exists to-day for the benefit of the public and for the purpose of carrying on the Government of the country and securing the revenue of the country. Is it not vain to talk about the necessity of private individuals trusting the banks of a country? They trust them for their own accommodation, for their own business and profit.

Mr. MITCHELL. Just as the Government does. Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Government trust the banks for the purpose of carrying on the business of the country, and for the purpose of collecting and storing the revenues of the country. The distinction which the hon, the senior member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) made would not be applicable in practice, and would not cure the evils which he admits may arise. He proposes, that in view of the necessity we are under, to use the banks for the collection of revenue, and for its safe-keeping and transmission, we shall have a lien in respect of such revenue, but that in respect of moneys not derived from mere revenue, we shall not have a lien. But, I submit to his judgment, the Government stand in precisely the same relation, with regard to large sums and large classes of moneys of that description, as it does in relation to the revenue. How often does it happen that, for the purpose of carrying on a public work, we have to take large sums as security from the contrac-How often does it happen that, in pursuance of the legislation of this Parliament in relation to insurance companies and other organisations, we have to take the deposits of large sums. In the case of the Maritime Bank, the sum of forty or fifty thousand dollars was placed on deposit with the Government?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The court held there was no prerogative for that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. But I say that for governmental purposes, and I mean purely for the purpose of carrying on public affairs of the country, it is just as necessary that we should trust that money to the banks as that we should trust the Customs revenue collected in Victoria or Charlottetown. We cannot store it otherwise. liament has declared that a company, before it enters on business, must deposit a sum of money with We have no place to store it, and must place it on deposit in a bank. Is that the case of a loan of money to a bank, in respect of which we ought to stand as a private creditor? Surely not. will the hon. gentleman's distinction lead to? It will lead to this: that moneys of that description, collected in different parts of the Dominion from Customs and Excise and other sources of the revenue, and transmitted to Ottawa, must be deposited in the bank in which the Government principally does business: they must be deposited in the Bank of Montreal. We are not able to keep them out of the bank; we must put them there for safe-keeping; and in respect of all those we are to have no lien. Or if, on account of the accumulation of moneys in one of the banks, we deem it safer in the public interest that they should be distributed amongst several, although held by the Government as the proceeds of revenue, we are not to have any preference for them and are liable to loss from the disturbances which may happen to the bank in the ordinary course of business.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). My hon. friend has not entered into the position I took at all. I say there are three modes in which moneys can be placed by a Government in a bank. First, moneys collected Sir John Thompson.

from the ordinary sources of revenues of the country and placed there for safe keeping; second, the moneys the Government receive, under parliamentary authority, in trust, such as those my hon. friend has alluded to. With regard to those, I said there might be reason why the prerogative of the Crown should be extended to them. But there was another mode of dealing with the banks which my hon. friend has not answered. It is not the moneys they are obliged to deposit, but it is when the Government become a lender and put money on deposit, either with or without interest, in a bank for some purpose connected with the bank. I say that, when they do that, they stand in precisely the same position as if one bank went to another bank and applied for assistance to carry If the Government lend that them through. money to the banks they should be placed in the same position as any other creditor. Why should the Government stand in a different position to any other creditor? Suppose that a bank applied for a loan to another bank in Ottawa or elsewhere, and applied also to the Government, and both were willing to lend the money, the one could lend the money with perfect security, knowing that they would get their money back with interest, while the other would have to come in with the other creditors. When the Government undertakes to become a lender of money, and, I may say, a competitor with the banks, the Government stand in the same position as ordinary lenders. I am familiar with the case of the Maritime Bank. There was a decision of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick which was sustained by the Supreme Court of Canada on the appeal. The result of the judge of the court of first instance would have been that all the funds, after payment of the notes of the bank, would have been away, and nothing would have been left for the depositors. I admit that it is very hard, but there is the law as to the money received by the Government by parliamentary authority. There may be some force in preserving that authority, but, if you take the case of the Exchange Bank and some other banks, you will see that there is no reason why this provision should be continued.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not intend to argue this question from the legal standpoint at all, but there are two or three points which I should like to make, partly by way of reiteration of suggestions which have already been thrown out. In the first place, I cannot see the distinction which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) makes in regard to the position of the public moneys. He says that, firstly, there is the revenue, secondly, the trust, and thirdly, the loans. It seems to me that all that the Government derives in this way starts in as revenue. It is a case of money collected in outlying parts of the country, which, whether it be in the way of Customs, Excise, or other revenues, still it starts in the way of revenue. The only thing which is not revenue appears to me to be those sums which are put into the hands of the Government and which are obliged to be put in the hands of the Government by companies and contractors who have to make deposits; but that is something which they are forced to do by the law, and that is different altogether from revenue, because it goes back into the hands of the contracWhat else is there besides that which is not a mat-

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The difference arises from the fact that there is no priority in those cases.

Mr. FOSTER. If, in reference to deposits made by trustees, my hon. friend is willing that the first lien should be given to the Government, how does he make the distinction between the money so collected and that collected from the outlying parts of the country by the different officers, and stored by them in the vaults where alone the Government can store money for safety, in the different banks of the country? That is not a loan. A loan is made by the Government, say in the British market, and, if the Government does not use the whole amount derived from that loan, and deposits a portion of it in the banks where alone it can be properly kept, that is another matter. However, that is a loan which the revenues of the country afterwards must meet, and, if the Government are conceded a priority of claims on account of revenue and on account of trust funds, they should also be conceded a priority in regard to all these moneys. I do not know what my hon, friend means by loans or by advances to banks. Certainly nothing of that kind has taken place, as far as I know, during my con-nection with this Government. Nothing in the way of advances to banks has taken place in the same way in which a loan company or a bank would make an advance to other banks or companies. Would my hon. friend propose that the money of the people, collected from the individuals of the country, when that money is placed where alone the Government can place it, should be so placed that there should be no priority for the people from whom it was obtained? He admits that there should be a priority or a lien for the revenues when they are first collected. Government has no choice of banks. The Government has its officers in different parts of the Dominion, and they have to make their returns to the banks which are nearest to them, for the purposes of safety. That is considered a better plan than that they should keep the money, where they probably have not the vaults properly protected, and necessarily in the collection of the revenue, the different banks of the country which have bran-ches in every part of the Dominion must have a portion of the Government funds in their hands. We speak of them as Government funds, and refer to them as belonging to the Crown, but they are really the funds of the people, and are used for the benefit of the people. Whenever there is a clash of interest between individuals and the Government, it is natural that sympathy should side with the individual, but I think that in this matter the people as a whole ought to be considered first, and I do not think there is any injustice done to the people individually by this provision. Suppose that a portion of this revenue is lost, and that the people have no priority of claim, then the people have to make up the loss. We then have to draw upon the individuals of the country, and when we have a priority for the people collectively, in regard to their own money and their own funds, we have in reality this priority for the protection of the individuals who make up the body politic.

The Government is not quite in the same position the interest of the depositors. The Government is extremely anxious to borrow money; looking at the

as a private trustee who may or may not use the trust confided to him. The Government must receive the revenue and store it and place it in safe-keeping, and it stands in quite a different position from an ordinary trustee. A person who takes the obligation upon himself, takes it voluntarily; he may take it or he may not, just as he pleases. The Government must collect the revenue and must store it, and it is responsible to the people for its safe-keeping.

Mr. MULOCK. I think this proposed legislation is of a retrograde character and is to be deprecated. assuming, as I do, for the sake of argument, that the Finance Minister desires to promote the public interest. Still, I think he may make a mistake, and that he is doing so in this case, in declaring that the Government shall have a first lien upon all the assets. In this way the Government is, in the first place, casting doubt upon the solvency of the banks. If the banks are absolutely solvent it would be wholly unnecessary for the Government to stipulate that they should have a mortgage. Let us see what this legislation involves. The Government shall have a first lien, after payment of the bill holders, upon all the assets of the bank, not merely upon the money paid into the bank by the shareholders, who are only a class of contributors towards the assets, but upon the money contributed by the creditors of the bank, the ordinary depositors. You ask, then, that the Government shall have a lien, in respect of its deposits, upon the deposits of the subject; that a subject, for example, who may make a deposit with the Government, and which the Government may deposit in a bank-that in respect of that money the subject shall have a first lien upon the assets of the bank, through the trustee. the Government, whilst the other depositor who takes the money straight into the bank, is to be a security and endorser for the Government depositor. Now you have set yourselves up as a Government Savings Bank; you have $40,000,000 of the people's money in the savings banks which you have voluntarily accepted from the people as a deposit. It is a voluntary transaction from beginning to end. We will say, for argument's sake, that there are $40,000,-000 on deposit with the banks, deposited by the people themselves directly. The Government take their forty millions of deposit, or whatever they may have on hand-we will say, for the sake of illustration, that the whole $40,000,000 was a voluntary transaction on the part of both parties-and they deposit their money with the banks, and that moment the $40,000,000 placed there by the individuals directly become mortgaged to the Government for the money which the Government deposited. Now, that is simply the Government competing with the banks for the deposit business of the country. My hon, friend from Norfolk seems to disapprove of that.

Mr. TISDALE. Don't the banks want the deposit? They are mighty glad to get it.

Mr. MULOCK. The banks do not want to take the deposits, I presume, and have the Government take all the gilt-edge off from them. If the Government choose to set themselves up as a bank, why should they have any preference over any other banks? They are not engaging in this savings bank business out of pure regard for the interest of the depositors. The Government is exstate of the finances of this country, we can understand why the Government is anxious to obtain deposits. Now, if we put this legislation through they can say to the country: Put your deposits with the Dominion Government and those deposits will have a first lien upon all the assets of the bank wherever they may be placed, in fact the private depositors' money is going to be security for the public depositor. This is a most inequitable principle, it is against the general trend of the age. The Minister of Justice seems to defend this on the ground that it is part of the tradi-tion of the common law. We are engaging as a Parliament every day, by legislation, in infringing upon the common law, because the common law has failed to meet the requirements of the age. Whenever the common law requires to be varied, Parliament interferes, as we are doing every day, to make the change. The hon. gentleman says it ought not to be done in this case. The mere fact that there was some common law prerogative can in no way prevent the people from changing the common law.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not contend that.

Mr. MULOCK. I understood the hon, gentleman to argue in favor of this proposition because it had the support of the common law.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That gives it some sanction

Mr. MULOCK. Many changes have been made in the institutions of the country by the wisdom of the people to meet the changed circumstances of the age. The Minister and the Government defend the proposition on the ground of necessity. is apparently the only defensible ground, the only strong ground, the Government can take, that necessity justifies this course. Now, I fail to see wherein there is any necessity for this on the part of the Government to utilise the banks, that is not in like manner a necessity under like circumstances, for the individual. It is true that the Government is a corporation, and to that extent no one person is individually charged with the custody of money, but the same argument applies to every great corporation. Take the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with its ramifications throughout this continent. I presume that company is obliged to deposit its money wherever there happens to be banks. It must either deposit in the Government banks, or the ordinary banks, or in strong boxes of its own purchase. In either case deposits are made with some institution that has set itself up as qualified to take charge of valuable securities. I think all public and private moneys finds their way into the strong rooms of the banks for the purpose of safety, or on some other pretence. Now you are going against priorities, the age. The trend of the age is against priorities, Now you are going against the trend of the trend of the age is equality. It is good, equitable doctrine, equality is equity, and you are retrograding in this present instance, not only against the principle of the age, but, I submit, against the best interests of this country, and if you ask to have a claim above all others, it ought not to be a claim in respect of which you are competitors with the banks. If you want to have a special lien in respect of the revenues derived by taxation, that is one thing, but to have a special lien in respect of your own business wherein you are bank, loses all his earthly possessions?

Mr. Mulock.

competitors with ordinary trustees, is a totally different thing. The Government are engaged in various classes of business, from which they are deriving a revenue. You are common carriers, you have the Intercolonial Railway, with its rami. fications, from which you derive a revenue; you have your tolls from public works, and then you have the result of your taxation. Then when you set yourselves up as banks you are invading and curtailing various walks of life, and, therefore, so far as anything outside the ordinary collection of revenue is concerned, there is no justification for asking for a privilege different from that which the ordinary subject would have. I, therefore, strongly disapprove of the legislation asked for, and I think the Finance Minister would consult the interests of the country by abandoning this clause as one calculated to impair the credit of the banks, and to operate most injuriously towards private interests.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think there is a fallacy in the argument that has been addressed to the Committee by the Minister of Justice and by the Finance Minister. Both hon, gentlemen have referred to the prior rights of the Crown, and they seem to think that because, as a matter of convenience, the Government find it necessary to use the banks for the collection of revenue, and for the purpose of making deposits of money that may be in the hands of the Government for various purposes, and for future use, therefore, the Government ought, acting on behalf of the public, to have a priority of claim upon the moneys of the bank for the payment of any claim the Government may possess. It seems to me that those hon. gentlemen have, in a great measure, overlooked the very fact that we are engaged at this moment in discussing the incorporation of banks. For what purpose are they incorporated? Is it for the purpose of establishing institutions for the convenience of the State alone, for the deposit of public moneys, for the convenience of the Government, and for the safe-keeping of those moneys? Not at all. We are incorporating banks for the general benefit of individual members of the community. They are to be created to meet the wants of modern society. It is true that, in this country, the Government find it convenient to use these banks for the purpose of making safe deposits of money that merely come into the hands of their officers. But there are thousands of people engaged in business in various parts of the country who find it equally necessary, for their own security and safety and for the protection of their own interests, that they should daily use the banks for the same reasons of convenience and safety that the Government find it necessary to use them. We are considering now what may be the prerogatives of the Crown in this matter, but we are here for the purpose of legislating for the people, and if there is any ancient prerogative right which society has outgrown, it is our duty to adopt more rational rules than previously prevailed. The Government, having de-posited their money in these banks for safe-keeping, should stand in exactly the same position as any other parties. I should like to know who feels the loss the most? The public at large, or the individual who, perhaps, in losing his deposit in the what purpose do insurance organisations exist? For the very purpose of distributing over a very large portion of the community losses which would be irreparable if they fell wholly on individuals whose interests they personally affect. Looking at the matter from an equitable standpoint, that of the interests of society, for that 18 what we are considering, the distribution of the loss over the entire depositors, the Government among the number, would cause the loss to be much less felt than if it were borne wholly by individuals who were made to suffer? Why should it not be so? Why should the Government, if they have a deposit of $500,000 in the bank, not share in the loss that may fall upon the individual depositors? I know of no reason. I know of no principle on which the ancient rule to which the hon. Minister of Justice has referred can be upheld. If the State suffers loss, the inconvenience is felt less when you distribute the loss than when it is confined to private individuals. "The safety of the State is the supreme law, maxim of the law, but the question of the safety of the State from pecuniary loss is not a question of the safety of the State; and there is no reason why the State should not share in losses sustained with other individuals who may be depositors. Certainly the larger number of persons over whom the loss is distributed the less it is felt; and so far as the Government are concerned, and they are simply trustees of the public in this matter, it is better that they should lose than that individual depositors should lose, for you distribute a large portion of the loss over the entire community, and it is not felt any more than a slight depreciation in the value of property is felt. When the rule to which the hon. Minister of Justice has referred, regarding the prior rights of the Crown, came into existence, it was when real property was the principal part of the wealth of a nation. It is wholly opposed to the modern conditions of society, and it seems to me, when we deal with this subject, we should deal with public rights and interests exactly as we deal with the interests of the rest of the community. If the Government choose to use the banks as a matter of convenience for the safe-keeping of the public moneys, then the Government, acting as the trustee of the public, should take their risk just the same as any other portion of the community which find it necessary to use the same institutions for the safety of the money that may come into their hands, whether their own or the money of other parties. When we have this question before us we should not establish any rule of priority in favor of the Crown, but we should place the Government in this respect on an exact footing of equality with private parties, and in doing so the community will feel any loss sustained very much less than if we undertake to concentrate the loss on a small portion of the community.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon gentleman says it would be better on the whole that in any case of loss, the loss should be distributed over the whole of the people of the country rather than among individual depositors. But why should we suffer any loss? We are the representatives of the people, and we are now discussing the best means of preserving the money of the people. It is our bounden duty as representatives of the people to see that their money is stored in such a way as to prevent the possibility of loss, and when we have an opportunity of making arrangements by which the possibility of loss could be obviated, we would be wanting in our duty as representatives of the people if we failed to adopt those means. The hon. gentleman says that ordinary depositors should be placed in exactly the same position as the Government. As has been pointed out by the hon. the Minister of Justice, the two parties stand in an entirely different position. The Government is obliged to store its money in these banks.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has no option; it cannot keep the money in private vaults without special legislation. It is obliged to deposit the money in the banks, and at this moment when we are making arrangements with respect to our monetary institutions, we provide that the Government if they use these banks shall have a lien, so that the people will not suffer any loss, and it seems clear that we should take that lien. If any of the banks do not wish to receive the Government deposit under that liability, they can post up a notice saying that Government deposits will not be received on that footing; and no doubt at the next annual meeting the shareholders would say that the directors had been injuring the standing and prestige of the banks by refusing to take Government deposits. The banks no doubt would infinitely rather run the liability than lose the Government deposits. It is clear to me that if the Government should not press this claim of priority they would befailing in their duty. If there is no such protection the Government must, as a matter of course, refuse to give deposits to a number of small banks, because they must not run the risk, and one of two things must happen: the Government must make, say, the Bank of Montreal or the Canadian Bank of England, the sole depository of the Government funds in order to prevent the chance of loss. They must do so, asking the Bank of Montreal to give the necessary securities, or if the Bank of Montreal should refuse that—if they were unwise enough to refuse to give special securities to the Government, on their being appointed the sole depositary of the Government funds, then the consequence would be that we would be obliged to adopt a sub-treasury system. We would be obliged to say that the Government should be the keeper of its own funds, that it should not distribute money to the various banks, and that it should run no risk of loss of the public funds. I am quite sure that if the option is given to the banks of the country, they will accept the Government funds whether subject to this claim for priority or not. I am sure that every one of the banks will agree to accept the Government deposits and give a preferential claim.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is not a question simply between the Government and the banks. The public at large, for whose benefit these banks are created, have an interest which it is the duty of this House to protect. The right hon. gentleman seems to think that the Government have no interest whatever, nor has the House any obligation resting upon it, to look after the interests of the great mass of the people in their individual capacity. I did not suppose that the Government were here simply to protect the interests of the public collectively. I supposed that the public individually had some interest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is what I have been arguing.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why, Mr. Chairman, the right hon, gentleman ignores the fact that we are creating these banks, not for the purpose principally of providing a safe deposit for Government moneys, but we are creating them in the interests of the commercial classes of this country, and for the purpose of promoting the commercial interests of the people. The right hon, gentleman says the Government could establish a sub-treasury department. Quite so, there is no doubt about that, but if the Government want absolute security, and if the public insist upon that absolute security, they should not obtain it at the expense of the individual depositors in the banks, but by paying for and creating these institutions of which the hon gentleman has spoken. But, Sir, if the right hon, gentleman undertakes to submit such a proposition, he will find that these considerations will present themselves. Has the Government, or has Parliament, a greater interest in assuming the increased burden that would devolve upon it by the establishment of this subtreasury department, or will it on the whole be in the public interest to take the risk with other depositors of the bank, and to rest satisfied with that cheaper system which the various banking institutions of the country afford to the Government. Sir, the Government, the right hon. gentleman, and the public at large, of which he is speaking, have just the same interest as any one individual, and there is no reason why the whole community in its collective capacity should not share in the risk and losses, any more than that a private individual should take that risk and sustain that loss. question is not of more or less, in this matter, but of what is right or wrong, is not a question in which the whole public have a greater interest than any one individual. It does seem to me that if the Government chooses to use the banks, as any other corporation or individual may, for the purpose of depositing their money, they should take exactly the same risk any other individual or corporation takes in making its deposits.

Mr. MITCHELL. In addition to the points taken by my hon. friend, and which I had intended to refer to, there is another contention which the hon. gentleman makes, which does not seem to apply here. He says that if the banks do not want to take these moneys on deposit, let them put a notice up and you will see how soon their stockholders will find fault in them for doing that. It is not a question of the banks refusing to take deposits; the banks are ready enough to take deposits if the terms are satisfactory to them. It is not a question between the banks and the Government about this lien; it is a question between the Government and the general people of the country who make their deposits. The contention made by the gentlemen who are fighting this resolution and supporting the amendment of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), is that the Government should have no priority over the individual depositors in the bank. What right has the Government to any additional protection? They are in ment to any additional protection? They are in Mr. TISDALE. Then he admits that the a position to get information about the position of prerogative has been modified, and I think the Mr. Mills (Rothwell) Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

the banks which the individual stockholders cannot get. The right hon, gentleman says he is protecting the public. There may be a thousand depositors of the laboring classes of this community having deposits in a bank amounting to a hundred dollars each on an average, and the Government may have loaned that bank $200,000 or $300,000. The bank fails. Does my hon. friend contend that it is not a hardship on these thousand depositors belonging to the labor. ing community, that the Government should step in and sweep away all the assets of the bank, by this claim of priority, and leave these thousand laboring people without a dollar of their money? The hon, gentleman wants to secure the funds of the Government at the expense of the funds of the people; that is what my hon. friend desires and that is the way he put his case. I say it is an outrageous thing that this should continue. All this talk of the Ministers about the character of the prerogative of the Crown is a delusion. We have abandoned it in the first clause of the section under discussion, and we have a right, as my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) said, to deal with this question practically, and to suspend the practice whether it prevailed for a century or ten centuries in England or elsewhere. It is our duty to legislate in a direction which suits the circumstances of the trade of the country. As far as I can, I shall try to deal with every legislation that comes before us in this light. We are responsible to the people at large to see that the men who are placed in power with a strong majority behind them, shall not come down to this House and, in ignorance of the rights of the people, or in disregard of the rights of the people, pass legislation which, while it protects the money which comes into the hands of the Government, does so at the expense of the depositors who have placed their money in the banks which have been created by the Legislature of this country.

Mr. TISDALE. One or two things strike me which may be pertinent to this question, and which hon, gentlemen opposite seem not to think of. In the first place, suppose the Government take the course the hon. gentleman suggests, do you not think that a great many more people in the country, both Liberals and Conservatives, will find fault with the Government, and properly so, for removing this safeguard of the public.

Mr. MITCHELL. It does not exist to-day.

Mr. TISDALE. The law already exists, and it has taken the hon. gentleman a long time to find out that it should be remedied. We have not heard of this objection before from them.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is the first opportunity we have had of discussing it.

Mr. TISDALE. There is no reason why the hon, gentleman should not have brought in a Bill to rectify this at any time, if it is such a grave grievance on the depositors. This Bill is not new law. It is quite true that the prerogative can be abolished, and the prerogative has been modified, as the hon. gentleman correctly said, but he finds fault with that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not find fault with that, I would wipe it out altogether.

discussion has been largely misleading, because any one not informed as to the law would gather from the hon. gentleman, that this Bill was making it much harsher on the depositors than the law was before.

Mr. MITCHELL. So it is.

Mr. TISDALE. It is not.

Mr. MITCHELL. I beg your pardon.

Mr. TISDALE. I beg your pardon; it is precisely the same law, except that it is applied to the Province of Quebec in the same way as to the other Provinces. Note holders will have the same security that they had before. The dangerous thing, and I think the reprehensible thing, would be for the Government to remove the safeguards for the money of the public. As I said to-day, I propose to watch carefully any important changes which are proposed in the banking system which has worked so well; but if hon. gentlemen have a desire to consider what ought to be done, and not a desire to attack, I would ask them to look at our provincial laws. We find that, whether for municipal or provincial purposes, the lien for taxes overrides all other claims. No matter how poor a man is, or what goods he has in his house, they can be and must be sacrificed on the street if he does not pay his taxes.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is not a parallel case at all.

Mr. TISDALE. I think it is quite parallel. It does not matter how many liens exist, and whether the persons holding those liens are rich or poor, the lien for taxes overrides them all. Now, this seems to me to be an application of the same principle for the protection of federal funds; it gives the same lien to our revenues after they are collected as is given to provincial or municipal

Mr. MULOCK. Why should a man have a lien on another man's property?

Mr. TISDALE. You may have a chattel mortgage, a lien for rent, or many other liens.

Mr. MULOCK. Why should you give me one depositor's lien over another depositor's money?

Mr. TISDALE. They are public deposits. There is the distinction, and the hon. gentleman knows it very well. I think he is too well informed to say that there is no distinction between the public and the individual The rights of the public are superior to the rights of an individual; that is the idea, I think, of all sensible men. It is a fallacy to say that the public are not more than an individual of the public. If that is not so, we have no right to make such laws as we do. Many laws must be hard on individuals in order to protect the public. The argument, if it means anything, reverses the whole principle of the public being greater than the individual, because you say, in the case of a hundred depositors, that the whole public shall subscribe to prevent the hardship on that hundred. Now, in the discussion of this Bill so far, and in the discussion of other Bills, like the Franchise Bill last night, apart from the views of the parties, the Ministers and their supporters have endeavored to cultivate criticism and advice from the Opposition in order the proper course to take. But I regret to see this departure, this attempt to attack.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No; no.

Mr. TISDALE. Not all; but at least two gentlemen have spoken of the Government coming down and forcing this legislation, as if it were a reprehensible thing. I regret that, because if we want to get these measures threshed out in a proper way, I believe we shall succeed if we are a little temperate and avoid discussions likely to stir up feeling. I think the Government are wise in waiving their security in favor of the note holders, but if it were known after this Bill passed that the safeguards that had existed for the public deposits had been done away with, our action would be challenged by both parties.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman has stated two things, in regard to which he has directly pointed to myself. He asks, what harm has been done in the existing state of things? And he says, if things have been bad in the past, why have you not altered them? In relation to the first question, I have merely to point to the three instances which have been given, of the Exchange Bank, the Maritime Bank, and the Bank of Prince Edward Island, as instances of personal hardships to individuals who had deposits in those banks. In the next place, when the hon. gentleman referred to me as one who had introduced an element of warmth into this debate, he asked me: "Why did you not get this legis-lation altered?" Sir, it was not my business; it was the business of the hon. gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches; but on the first occasion on which I had an opportunity of expressing my opinion on the action of the Government in giving the Exchange Bank a large deposit of public money which has been lost, I did so to-night. If I have shown a little warmth, I have been justified by the remarks of the hon. Minister of Justice. He insinuated that my action was due to political I tell him it was not due to anything of the kind. I have a duty to perform to the country as well as himself, quite irrespective of bullying as he spoke of bullying from this side of the House -from that side of the House. The argument used by the hon. gentleman who last spoke was not a fair or just argument. The people of this country have suffered severely from bank failures, and I know of no right which the Government have for insisting on a preference over other depositors. If the Government had not such a strong majority in this House, they would be more amenable to the moderate criticisms which come from this side of the House, and if hon. gentlemen will throw out insinuations of political motives, they must take the consequences.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) stated that in the Province of Ontario the tax-gatherer could take everything belonging to a man to meet the demand for taxes. I am surprised that he should have made that statement. He does not seem to be aware of the amendments that have taken place in the law, imposing certain limits in regard to the collection of Now, the argument of the hon. member John has not been answered. The hon. for St. John has not been answered. Minister of Finance cannot have considered the to get at the best legislation, and I think that is force of the statement that hon. gentleman made.

He has no objection to the Government having a first lien for the revenues, or for moneys deposited in the banks in trust; but the objection he makes is that when the Government deliberately lend money to an institution, as they did to the Exchange Bank for the purpose of tiding it over financial embarrassment, and, in case a failure takes place, the Government deposits should not be a first lien on the assets of the bank. We contend that if the Government, out of money belonging to the Dominion, lend to an institution deliberately for the purpose of helping it over financial embarrassments, the Government should not rank as a first creditor. They should rank as a first creditor in the case of deposits of revenue and trust funds, but not in the case of advances, because that would be a temptation to the Government to make advances. Those advances might be seriously abused as in the case of the Exchange In that case, the funds lent to the bank Bank. by the Government, in place or being used to help the institution through its financial difficulties, found its way into the pockets of the directors. Other funds may go in the same way in the future; and it is, therefore, right that we should protect the Government against being drawn upon by institutions in a critical position, because these institutions will present their claim for help with a great deal of force. They could say: We are in financial embarrassment, and we ask you under the law, as it stands, to give us the aid we require; you do not run any risk as you will have the first lien on the bank's assets, and we will pay you interest, say at per cent. It is not right that the Government should be subject to such a temptation, and the House should not place in the hands of the Government the opportunity of dealing with public funds in that way. It is right we should protect the revenue of the country; but in cases where the Government exercises its power of dealing with public moneys and hands over trust funds to an institution to tide that institution over financial embarrassment, the Government should not be placed in the position of first creditor.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I confess, after listening to the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), that I could not come to the same conclusion at which he arrived regarding these deposits in the banks. It is true that the Government have a first lien for purposes of revenue, and that, I think, is perfectly reasonable and just, but that they should have the first lien in regard to all deposits in a bank does not seem to me to be quite so equitable. I incline rather to the view of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) that the Government ought, perhaps, properly to have the first claim for deposits of revenue, and, perhaps also, of trust funds, which may have been placed in their hands, and which they are obliged to deposit in the banks for safe-keeping; but I do not incline to the belief that the Government ought to have a first lien for moneys which they have deliberately placed in the custody of the banks, either for the convenience of the banks or the Government itself. And even supposing that the Government does come to this conclusion, and insist upon its right to have the second lien for all moneys deposited in the banks to know why they make the claims of a Province a third claim upon the assets of a bank, unless it be upon the ground of the prerogative of the Crown. If the right of the prerogative is given up, as to some extent it is, in the first part of the section, then, I say, that the Government, if they insist upon their claims being a second lien on the assets of the banks, ought not to extend that to the Provinces of the Dominion, except it be upon the theory of the prerogative of the Crown, because if it be for the purposes of protecting the interests of the people of the Provinces, then they ought to extend it still further, and say that moneys deposited by municipalities in banks ought to be a lien on the assets of a bank, and so on; it might be extended almost indefinitely. But if it be on the ground of prerogative, let the Government say so. Let them say that the prerogative of the Crown, as represented by the Dominion, shall be the first lien after the notes of the bank; and the prerogative of the Crown, as represented by the Provinces, shall be the second lien. That I could understand; but if the claim is that it is in the public interest these reserves are made and these claims on the assets of a bank are set up, the principle ought to be extended somewhat further than it is proposed in this section.

Mr. ELLIS. I think, Mr. Chairman, you will bear me out in saying that I made no reference whatever to the Government, and did not, by implication or in any way whatever, say anything that could be interpreted to mean that I had any feeling against the Government in the proposition I made. I say that because the hon, member for South Norfolk seemed to refer to me—I do not know that he did so—in the remarks he made. I also stated that the principle embodied in this legislation is not embodied, so far as I am aware, in the legislation of the mother country or in that of any of the colonies. While the hon, the Minister of Justice appears to controvert that, he does not really do so, but merely says it is part of the common law. I just point that out, because he has not been able to show to the Committee any legislation of this character. The effect it appears to me of embodying this in the statute law will be to make it harder in the future as against the depositors. It certainly does away with the right, or at any rate impairs the right which now exists in the Province of Quebec, where the law is not the same as it is in the rest of the Dominion. Further than that, in the conflicts which are carried on in the court against the common law, there is always an opportunity of broadening down from precedent to precedent the public right, but where you, by statute, fix a principle, it is almost impossible to overcome that principle unless by legislation itself, even though the injustice may become apparent to the court. With reference to the abstract right, the fact that the Government is only a depositor, the same as any other person, the fact that the Government representing the people is no more than a society composed of a certain number of individuals, and should have no more right in the distribution of the assets of a bank than a corporation or a single individual, is a question I will not enter into, because it has been ably discussed by the hon. member for Bothwell, and his argument has not been controverted. by them, as trustees for the people, I should like I do not see any chance of my motion being carried, Mr. McMullen.

but it seems to me to be founded on justice. Any person who has come in contact with public opinion in the section in which I live, would soon become aware that the feelings of the people, especially since the Maritime Bank failure, is, despite what the First Minister may say, altogether opposed to the proposition of the Government.

Mr. MULOCK. Whilst I entirely disapprove of all these special liens, I would ask the Minister of Finance whether the argument in favor of a special lien by the Dominion Government against ordinary creditors would not apply with equal force in favor of a special lien being given a Provincial Government. Should not the Provincial Government, which has money deposited in a bank, have a lien in its favor as well as the Dominion Govern-

Amendment negatived.

Mr. FOSTER moved to add the following sub-

The amount of any penalties for which the bank may be liable shall not form a charge upon the assets of such bank, in case of its insolvency, until the other liabilities are paid.

He said: We have instituted a system of fines for over-circulation, and I wish to provide that, where a bank fails, these fines are not intended to obtain money for the Government, but are simply to prevent the over-circulation, which we regard as a grave offence.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think that is a very objectionable position. When a banking institution becomes embarrassed, and its existence is a matter of doubt, if it issues more paper than it is authorised to issue, and then comes to grief, the assets of the bank are not impaired, and the fine to which they otherwise would become subject is in this case the last demand upon the resources of the bank. It is a temptation to a banking institution to issue a circulation beyond its necessity, because, if it has no means to meet its liabilities, it will be free under this provision.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY-LUMBER DUTIES.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before you leave the chair, I desire to call your attention to a matter of great importance to one great business interest in this country. The McKinley Tariff, as reported from the Committee of Ways and Means at Washington, reduces the lumber duty to $1.50 per thousand feet, with the proviso that, if any foreign country imposes a duty upon logs, the import duty shall remain the same as the export duty imposed on logs by that country. It will be necessary, in order to obtain the advantage of that provision, for this Government to reduce the duty on logs by 50 cents to meet the reduction which has been made in the duty on lumber in the United States. Of course, the Bill introduced in the House of Representatives at Washington is liable to many changes before it becomes law. It has to pass the House of Representatives, and then it goes to the Finance Committee of the Senate, then it is reported to the Senate, and it is liable to be changed in all these stages, and the changes are as likely to be unfavorstages, and the changes are as likely to be unfavorable to us as favorable. I think the influence of would be $1.35. The disadvantage would be as the export duty on logs that we have imposed has been unfavorable to our interest. Last winter the lumber trade asked the Government to remove that duty, stating that they believed the export duty which we imposed was standing in the way of a favorable change in the duty imposed on lumber in the United States, and I think they were right in that, and that our position would have been better if the request had been accepted. I rise now to suggest to the Government that they should make a proposition to the United States in which they might suggest a concession in view of the further reduction of the Canadian lumber duties, and that would advance the interests of that great business in this country. I think the Government might judiciously make a proposal, and with every prospect of its being accepted by the American Congress, to remove the export duty on logs if the American Government would reduce the duty on lumber to $1. That would not only relieve the lumber trade here by a reduction of $1 a thousand, but I believe it would lead to the more speedy removal of the lumber duty, as a great many people in the United States desire, and it would materially aid the efforts of those who ask for free lumber. The lumber export of this country is, in round numbers, 700,000,000 feet per annum. A reduction of half a dollar or a dollar upon the amount of this lumber, would be a very important matter indeed to the lumber trade. Hitherto, in the matter of coarse grades of lumber, it has been difficult to export it, under present circumstances, with any profit to the trade.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the Minister to the condition of the log export trade as it exists under the duty at $1 per thousand upon pine logs. The duty stood at that rate from 1867 to 1885; itwas changed, I think, to $2 in the spring of 1886. The export duty collected upon pine logs and shingle bolts from 1867 to 1870, was $61,187.19; average rate of duty per annum, $15,296.80. Duty collected from 1871 to 1880, $32,154.26, or an average per annum of $3,215.42. Duty collected from 1881 to 1885, $8,170.40; or an average per annum of $1,634.08. The average per annum for the entire period was $5,342.64. The trade it appears from these figures, was an inconsiderable one, and the export of pine logs was continually decreasing. Now, the advantage of exporting logs to the United States, when the export duty was $1 per thousand, and the American import duty $2 per thousand was apparently $1 per thousand feet, and this advantage produced but a very trifling export; and if the proposition which I think might be made now were made and accepted by the American Government, the advantage of exporting logs to the United States would be, as during the period I referred to, $1 per thousand, for the logs would be free, and the American duty would be $1 per thousand. Now, the actual advantage and disadvantage to the parties exporting logs would be about as follows: A party exporting logs, say from the Georgian Bay to Michigan, would save the duty, which is $1 per thousand. He would save difference of the cost of freight upon sawn lumber as between the Georgian Bay point and the Michigan point to the eastern and western market, which varies from 25 to 50 cents a thousand during the season, and probably averages 35 cents a follows:—The cost of rafting the logs, 25 cents a thousand; cost of towing them, $1 per thousand, and the allowance for risk, which those who are engaged in the trade say is equivalent to 10 per cent. would be about $1 per thousand; making the advantage on the one hand $1.35 per thousand, and the disadvantage on the other hand, adding to the cost of towing the cost of rafting, and the allowance for risk, $2.25 per thousand, leaving a net balance of disadvantage of 90 cents per thousand against towing logs. I do not think we need fear that, under the circumstances, the trade will become a very large one in the export of logs, I think the advantages that would accrue to the lumber interest of Canada would be very great, and that if this could be secured by the Government, and I have every reason to believe it could be secured, it would be universally acceptable to the lumber trade of this country, and the Government would by this means be conferring upon that interest a very great advantage indeed. I make this statement for the purpose of bringing it under the attention of the Government, hoping that it may be pleased to make such an announcement with reference to the matter that it can be acted upon by those at Washington who may desire to get Canadian lumber admitted at a lower rate of duty than that now provided by the McKinley Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We are obliged to the hon, gentleman for bringing up the question and for his suggestion. The hon, gentleman must know, of course, that we have been watching carefully the fiscal legislation in the United States. He states truly that before the measure known as the McKinley Bill gets through the House of Representatives, it may assume various different shapes; it may be altogether changed, and a regular metamorphosis of it may take place in the The hon, gentleman knows that the export duty put on is about equivalent to the import duty that is paid on Canadian lumber now. Therefore it is quite fair, and in talking to the Americans they say it is quite fair, and in reality that proposition has been made from sundry quarters, that if the export duty was taken off, there might be a reduction on the import duties on the lumber to the United States. I think, however, if I am not mistaken, the provision is that there is to be a reduction on lumber, but when lumber comes from any country which imposes an export duty, the export duty will be added to the reduced rate under the new Bill. If that be the case, and if the measure goes through Congress in that way, and with that provision, we can at any time take off the export duty. That would give us the advantage of the reduced import duty imposed by the new tariff. It is hardly worth while discussing the question now. I can assure the hon. gentleman the Government are considering it most carefully, and are watching the different moves in Washington just now, and we hope and believe that they will take such steps as will greatly advance the interests of the country, especially in regard to the lumber trade.

Mr. CHARLTON. With the permission of the House I will refer to one feature of the case that the First Minister has referred to. If the eventuality which he contemplates becomes a fact, if the Bill finally provides that the export duty shall be added to the import duty in addition to the duty Mr. CHARLTON.

In these contingencies are salaries for the printing establishment, which should appear, as they do this year, on the regular cartage in the name of John Donovan. At an ear-added to the import duty in addition to the duty lier period of the Session, attention was drawn now fixed, and if that duty shall be left as it is now, which is $1,50, we will be in a much worse position than the one contemplated, because the export duty would be added to the $1.50, which would still remain on the lumber. I would strongly urge upon the Government that we had better, if possible, put ourselves in a position where we can secure our lumber duty at $1 by the abrogation of the export duty.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is there no officer in the Department of the Secretary of State who could prepare this list without extra expense?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We have a gentleman paid extra for the preparation of that list. Last year the Under Secretary of State who had been in the service for over 50 years, Mr. Powell, was absent on leave, before taking his superannuation, and another officer was obliged to replace him for five months, and we had to have two persons to make that list on account of the absence of Mr. Powell.

Mr. McMULLEN. This calls for some explanation. I have always taken exception to these extra payments for extra services.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. This officer last year was appointed as second class clerk and accountant in the Department, but unfortunately after he had been appointed there was no vote taken to pay him, and he was only paid according to the rates fixed per day for his work. These extra hours were given to him as compensation for the six months during which he had not his increase of salary.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is our duty as an Opposition, to press on the Government the necessity of checking this pernicious system of payment of extra services to civil servants. Last year, there were 481 such cases, but this year there are 600 odd.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I challenge the hon, gentleman to find in my Department during the last six years more than $100 paid for extra work to my officers.

Mr. CHARLTON. What are these contingencies?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Last year $8,000 were voted for my Department. Unfortunately, I was absent when the Estimates were prepared and submitted to the House. By a detailed account I have before me, I find that during the six months the necessary contingencies amounted to $5,025, instead of being $4,000. In these contingencies are salaries for the printing establishment, which should appear, as they do this year, on the regular staff. For instance, there is an item of $1,200 for cartage in the name of John Donovan. At an earlier period of the Session, attention was drawn to an item in the Auditor's Report, that a man with a horse had been allowed $1,200 during the year. That is a mistake. The item of $1,200 is for two teams and an extra man employed. This expenditure now regularly appears on the item connected with the Printing Bureau. Then we have the salary of a man named Barrette who is now on the regular staff; then there is an item of $365 paid to a person named King, whose name should have appeared on the regular staff. The whole expense connected with the charwomen for the printing establishment during the year, $1,500, appears under contingencies, being $750 for the six months. Accordingly, there is an amount of $2,637 for the half year. This amount added to $8,000 voted gives more than a difference of $2,000 on the contingencies, and no less than $4,674 was really for the regular staff and not for temporary work which might appear under the head of contingencies, and half of that sum may be placed to the six months.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is the cause of this expenditure for proof-reading?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The work was done by those who made the compilation; these parties did the work and were paid according to the regular rates.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Minister must know that when copy is furnished to the Printing Bureau, it is the duty of the proof-readers to read it by copy.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The proof-reading done at the bureau is different from that recognised by publishers of books and similar authorities. It must be done by the party who has prepared the work, and it comprises a revision of the proofs after they have been read at the bureau.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Are all the departmental reports read by the parties who have prepared the documents?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes; but they are not paid for the work, because they are officers in the Departments.

Contingencies, Railways and Canals... $1,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is the cause of this extra expenditure?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not extra expenditure, except in a certain sense. The collection of tolls on the canals was formerly under the Department of Inland Revenue, and it has been transferred to the Department of Railways and Canals. It is absurd that two officers should be on duty, one to assist in getting the vessel through the locks and another to collect the tolls. So the whole matter has been transferred to the Department of Railways and Canals in order to cut down the number of servants required in connection with the canals. In order to make the transfer, this expenditure was necessary, for the transfer has only taken place this last year. It is a special warrant to meet the expenditure on stationery, &c., required in transferring the collection of canal revenue to the Inland Revenue.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Could not this work be done by the regular officers?

Mr. FOSTER. We discussed this question a good many times.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You promised to amend this system?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; but we found that the way we had been in the habit of doing it was the most economical. It could not be done during office hours, as the books must be kept there for the regular transaction of business, and it has to be done after office hours. We have either to employ the clerks who know the books, and who understand the methods of the calculation, and who can do the work rapidly and well, or we would have to get in outside help, which would be more expensive and I do not think so satisfactory.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are the hours of work from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. as before?

Mr. FOSTER. From half past nine or ten o'clock.

Mr. CHARLTON. Would it not be well to make a change and let them do a day's work from nine to five? You will find plenty of men willing to do the work on such terms.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid we would lose our officers.

Mr. CHARLTON. You could lose half of them and put more efficient men in their places.

Salary of Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court, Prince Edward Island, from 13th November, 1889, to 30th June, 1890......$378 75

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This requires some explanation.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island is the Judge of the Admiralty Court, and heretofore no salary has been provided.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Why should there be now? He is Admiralty Judge, ex-officio, by virtue of his office.

 Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is just the same as in Nova Scotia.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). A salary has always been allowed in Nova Scotia, but it has never been allowed in Prince Edward Island before. I understand the duties are very light in Prince Edward Island. Has the present Chief Justice had any case before him during this period?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I understand none at all.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He holds his office in precisely the same way as the other judges of the Vice-Admiralty Court. He has not received a salary heretofore, but he has called our attention to the fact, and it seems to me that he has just as good a claim as the other judges. We do not enquire of the other judges the number of cases they have had, and I do not see why we should make that enquiry in this case.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In New Brunswick, this is a special appointment. In Nova Scotia, the Chief Justice acts as Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court; but I am not sure that he does so ex-officio.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The matter stands in this way: that the Chief Justice is, ex-officio, judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court, unless another appointment is made.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There are two observations I would like to make in regard to this vote. The late Chief Justice Palmer filled the position for fifteen or sixteen years. The Chief Justice of the Island was also, ex-officio, judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court. During his term of office he had not anything like the amount of work to perform which is performed at Halifax by the Chief Justice there; but he had a great deal of onerous and responsible work under the Treaty of 1818; a great many cases were heard before him, and he never received anything for those services. the Government have come to the conclusion that the Chief Justice should be paid in his capacity as Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court, something should be done for the family of the late Chief Justice. I am sorry to see the hon, gentleman shake his head, for I think it is a case worthy of consideration. The circumstances are peculiar, and if I had the opportunity of speaking to the hon. Minister privately I think I could show them to be such as would commend themselves to him. The late Chief Justice of Prince Edward Island performed his duties at a lower salary than was paid to any other Chief Justice in the Dominion. He was a very learned and exemplary judge, and was exceedingly prompt in the discharge of his duties, and I think some allowance should be made to his family. I will say no more on that matter, which I mentioned privately to the hon. Minister of Justice, and which I hope he will consider. I also wish to say to the hon. Minister of Justice, and the Government, that if they have come to the conclusion to increase the salaries of the judges of Prince Edward Island, they are only doing what is right, as there are no judges in the Dominion of Canada who are so poorly paid as they are. The Chief Justice only receives $4,000 a year, and the assistant judges only $3,200 a year. Judge Hensley has sat in the Chancery Court in addition to discharging his duties as judge of the Superior Court, and his salary is perfectly absurd in view of the services he performs. I have urged on the Government, time and again, the propriety of increasing the salaries of the judges on the Island. It does not involve increasing the salaries of the judges in the other Provinces, as the salaries of the judges on the Island were, for some reason or other, placed on a lower scale than those in the other Provinces. Mr. Justice Peters has sat on the bench for over forty years. He happens to be a very wealthy man, and he does not care for the salary; but, with regard to Judge Hensley, I am satisfied that his salary is not sufficient for him to live upon and properly support the position salary for the Judge of the Admiralty Court till the he occupies. I do not object to the increase 30th of June. Will the salary then cease or be taken Sir John Thompson.

of the salary of the Chief Justice; but to in. crease his salary and leave the salaries of the as. sistant judges at $3,200 is an unfair proposition; and I do urge the hon. Minister, with all the strength I can command, to consider the claim of these two judges to be placed on a par with the judges of the other Provinces. I have known them to be engaged nearly the whole year round, doing work from day to day in the months of June, July and August, when other judges were having their vacation. Their work is very hard. and their responsibilities are very great. I have no personal interest in the matter, for it is not likely under existing circumstances, that I shall have a chance of occupying the place of any of them; but looking at the question on the broad ground of justice, I hold that these officials are greatly underpaid. They have been, unfortunately, singled out from all the other judges in the Dominion, and their salaries have been placed at a sum far below what is adequate for men in the positions they occupy.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I would like to add one word in support of what the hon, member for Queen's has said. The case is peculiar. The Island is small; but those who have had occasion to read the volume of law reports that comes from Prince Edward Island, have reason to speak very highly and respectfully of the judges there. An increase in their salaries would be, as the hon. gentleman says, a matter of justice; and seeing that it is so small a matter, I think we can afford to be generous to them. I heartily support the hon. gentleman's reasonable request.

Mr. HESSON. I understood the hon. member for Queen's to say that the judges of the Island are paid $3,200 a year. I do not mean to say that that is enough, but I may say that in the county I represent a judge is discharging the duty for 65,000 people for a salary of $2,200. I wish to point out a few of the inequalities that exist in reference to the County Court Judges. The hon. gentleman has spoken about the Superior Court Judges. I do not know anything about them, but I believe they are better paid for the work they do, although it may be more important in one sense, than are the County Court Judges for the work they have to perform. The work of the former may be more important, but they have not such large dealings with the mass of the people as have the latter. There is considerable disparity in the salaries of the County Court Judges. For instance in some counties, which have a population of thirty-five thousand to forty thousand, the County Court Judges get $2,600 a year, while in Perth, which has a population of 65,000, the County Court Judge is only paid $2,200 a year. This is an unfortunate state of affairs. Many of our best men, who have practised a number of years at the bar and would like to be promoted to the bench, cannot afford to give up their practice, as they will then be put on a starvation allowance. This will be seriously felt in our not being able to obtain the class of men whom we would desire to see made County Court Judges. A more liberal salary should be paid them.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This is to provide a to establish any vested right entitling him to a salary for the future ?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). My impression is that before Confederation these judges were paid. Mr. Hensley was Judge of the Admiralty Court of New Brunswick, also Sir William Young, and after Confederation their salaries were continued. When Sir William Ritchie acted as judge, I do not think he received pay, because he acted, ex-officio, as ('hief Justice of the Supreme Court. When the successor of Sir William Young was appointed, the salary was continued. This is something entirely new. I would ask whether the Imperial Bill to abolish these Admiralty Courts has become

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Bill has not yet become law, but I fancy it will. The estimate came down before the Bill came to our knowledge. The Bill is intended to take effect the 1st January next. The scheme proposed was that we should give a salary of $600 a year to the Vice-Admiralty Judge of Prince Edward Island. As to whether this will be a vested right or not, there is in the British statute a provision that the claims of officers holding offices affected by the abolition of a court shall be considered. He would have a right to be considered in relation to his fees if this vote were not passed. In the early legislation, the appointment of the Vice-Admiralty Judge in Nova Scotia came from the Imperial Government. Judge Stewart was the Vice-Admiralty Judge down to the time of his death. It was after Confedera-tion that Chief Justice Young became a Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Judge Stewart died before Confederation.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think Sir William Young was appointed under the present Imperial Statute, which provides that the Chief Justice, exofficio, shall be the judge unless a special appointment is made.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The Government is going to make this appointment, and the court is to be abolished, and the judge will be entitled to superannuation without, perhaps, having tried a single case.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He is not entitled to it as a matter of right. I do not know whether he has performed any duty as Vice-Admiralty Judge

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He could not very well in the winter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He would be entitled to have something by way of compensation; but it is to be understood that no one is necessarily to receive compensation for the performance of the duty for so short a time.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Has the hon. gentleman considered the question of the jurisdiction of the courts with a view to making it more extensive?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is a special provision, and there is no claim established on the part of the judge by voting for this. The other judges are paid by statute, and this does not establish any right in the future, as it is a mere vote.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think it would

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This appears to be simply a proposal to increase the salary of the Chief Justice of Prince Edward Island, and I do not think this is a good practice to follow, particularly if the office is about to be abolished. the Government think the salary of the Chief Justice is not sufficient, would it not be more consistent with the dignity of the office to propose that an increase should be made to his salary? If the Government are simply passing this vote for an increase in connection with his services in regard to the Court of Admiralty, they are giving the increase upon a condition of things which is about to pass away, and which cannot be continued after the office is abolished. If the Government desire to increase the salary of this officer, they should

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I hope the Government will propose an increase to the salary of this judge. I do not think there is any man in this House who will object to the increase of his salary in this form or any other form, but, while it is quite right to increase the salary of the Chief Justice, I appeal to the Government to increase the salaries of the other judges in Prince Edward Island. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) speaks of the salaries paid to County Court Judges, and compares them with the salaries paid in Prince Edward Island. That is a different thing altogether, and I hope the First Minister and the Minister of Justice will see their way to recommend an increase in those salaries. The judges in the other Provinces do no more than the judges in Prince Edward Island, and the expenses of living in the Island are just as great as they are elsewhere. rejoice to learn that the Chief Justice of the Island will, under any circumstances, receive an increase to his salary, but I want the other judges to get an increase also.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman has urged this matter upon me privately as well as publicly. He must be aware that the Government are of the opinion that an increase should be made in the judicial salaries. I do not think that we should distinguish between the judges in one Province and another; but this must be dealt with when we are dealing with the whole subject.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon, member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), must go a good deal deeper than he has gone in regard to this matter. He will have to take a bigger piece of tobacco before he chews it out. The salaries of the judges are not fairly arranged.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They were fixed in your time.

Mr. MITCHELL. State what my opinion was then.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Your opinion was expressed in the resolutions adopted by the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. Our opinion was overruled. Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will not say much about it, but we know that Mr. McMullen, of Pacific scandal fame, said he did not think it was neces-Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think it would sary to pay any attention to the unimportant be very important to extend the jurisdiction. members of the Cabinet, of whom I was one. If the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) wants to get the judicial salaries of his Province placed upon an equality of those of other Provinces, he has got to change the mind of the right hon. gentleman, who believes, that small places produce small men, although they may do just as much work as the judges in the larger Provinces.

Manitoba Penitentiary—to pay the expenses of transfer of convict Maurice Blake to England.............$284 46

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Maurice Blake was a prisoner who had been convicted of manslaughter, and shortly after his conviction he was found to be mad, and was sent to the Kingston Penitentiary for the purpose of treatment. He was afterwards removed to Manitoba under peculiar circumstances. The warden of that prison had been in the service with him, and in consequence of their former companionship in arms, exercised a good deal of influence over him. His condition became less violent, and considering that he had undergone something like ten years of imprisonment, it was deemed proper and merciful to pardon him. He had no relatives in this country. He had come out as a soldier, but he had relatives and friends in Ireland. This sum was an extra allowance for travelling expenses. Under ordinary circumstances, by statute, we pay the discharged convicts' expenses to the place from which they come. Therefore, we paid the expenses of this man home to Ireland. This sum includes the care of the man while he was travelling,

Mr. MITCHELL. I think in this case Mr. Bedson, the warden of the penitentiary, travelled with him, and he had considerable moral control over him. I recollect seeing the party at the Windsor Hotel, and he was practically under no restraint as, owing to Mr. Bedson's influence over him, it was not necessary to keep him in duress.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Bedson accompanied him over to Ireland, because he could not be trusted alone amongst strangers.

Mr. McMULLEN. Did you pay the travelling expenses of Mr. Bedson?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; I explained to the House the other evening that Mr. Bedson went home on three months' leave. While in England he desired to visit some prisons in which he could get information as to prison management and discipline, and I paid his expenses while visiting those prisons, under the authority that he got from the Home Secretary.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Has he made any report of these visits?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No. I expect he will make a report.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to me this man Bedson is a great expense to this country. Every Session of Parliament he figures for an enormous amount of money.

For purchasing in England and distri-buting in Canada two-rowed barley for seed purposes.... $25,000

Mr. CARLING. The amount of barley purchased is 10,000 bushels; it has all arrived and is being distributed. I think about $11,000 have Estimates which will be brought before the House. Mr. MITCHELL.

been paid to the Receiver General, having been received for this barley. I think all the barley will be taken up by the farmers, and paid for at the rate of $4 a bag of 112 lbs. The barley costs $2 per bushel delivered in Montreal.

Mr. CHARLTON. Do you expect the amount received will recoup the money expended ?

Mr. CARLING. Yes; for the cost of the bar. ley. But the Department will defray charges of freight and handling.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Do the Government pay the carriage to the residences of the parties who purchase it?

Mr. CARLING. We deliver it from Montreal to the parties who purchase it.

Mr. TROW. What was the original cost of barley, and what was the cost of transportation to Montreal?

Mr. CARLING. The cost was 60s, a quarter in England, and the freight was about 15 cents a bushel from London to Montreal.

Mr. McMULLEN. What percentage of the barley has been distributed?

Mr. CARLING. I think about two-thirds. All that has been asked for has been sent out, and Professor Saunders informs me that the whole of the consignment will likely be taken by the farmers.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it considered that the class of soil favorable to the growth of two-rowed barley is very much the same as that on which we now raise six-rowed barley—a heavy clay loam?

Mr. CARLING. I think so. We have experimented with two-rowed barley at the Central Farm and experimental stations, and a similar soil to that on which we grow six-rowed barley will grow two-rowed barley. All experiments tried by farmers from seed sent from the Experimental Farms support this statement.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then the experiments of last year has been such as to give encouragement for this year?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Patent Record...... $8,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is the Record printed at the Printing Bureau?

Mr. CARLING. Not now. It is printed by the Burland Lithograph Company at Montreal. The contract expires 1st January next.

Then it is intended to Mr. SOMERVILLE. print it at the Government office?

Mr. CARLING. It is intended to be printed by the Printing Department here.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. If it is the intention of the Secretary of State to have the Record printed at the Government bureau, he must intend to put in a lithographing plant.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the hon. gentleman and his friends are pleased to vote a sufficient amount this year we would be able to do so. If not, we would not.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I wish to know if it is intended to put in a lithographing plant?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That will be shown by the Immigration and immigration expenses$15,000

Mr. CHARLTON. Perhaps the Minister will give some explanation in regard to this item?

Mr. CARLING. This amount is required for the year ending 30th June, 1890. Our immigration vote has been reduced year by year. Last year it was $95,000, and the expenditure for the previous year was $126,000. This amount will bring the vote up to $110,000, or $16,000 less than for the previous year. We have been curtailing our expenditure very largely, but we found a large quantity of printing material was required, as represented by the High Commissioner in England, and items connected with advertising and other expenses bring the amount up to the sum I have stated.

Quarantine......$9,875

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire some explanation in regard to $475, quarantine, Chatham, N.B. I find in the Auditor General's Report an expenditure of $999. In the ordinary Estimates for this year there is an item of $900, being $300 increase. I do not know for what this extra sum can be required.

Mr. CARLING. It is for boat service at Chatham, paid for by the Department as it is required by the quarantine officer.

Mr. MITCHELL. The boat service is already provided. I find in the Auditor General's Report the following:—"J. Macdonald, inspector, one year, 8300; R. Stapleton, steward, oneyear, $300; boat, one, $23; boat hire, $15.25; boatmen, two, $331." The amount cannot, therefore, be required for boat service. In addition to the ordinary item of $900, it is proposed to add $475. I think the hon, gentleman had better enquire into the matter.

Mr. CARLING. This boat service previously had been charged to public health and paid from that vote. It is, however, now proposed to have it charged to the quarantine service, to which it properly belonges. There was no item in the Estimates for boat service last year, and this item was placed in the Estimates to pay for the boat service of 1890-91.

Public Health..... $2,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is the explanation with regard to this?

Mr. CARLING. Last year we voted $15,000, and this year we voted $10,000 in the main Estimates. We find that $2,000 more is required, which will make the total amount $12,000.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How much of this goes to the little monthly journal which we all receive? I think it is called The Health Journal.

Mr. CARLING. That matter was fully discussed here the other night. Dr. Playter has been receiving for a great many years, $1,200 a year for the publication of this journal. I believe it has a large circulation and is well thought of, and its articles are quoted by the different papers throughout the country.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think it is a sheer waste of money. The Health Journal is of no use, I believe, to the medical gentlemen who receive the regular medical journals. This journal is sent to the members of the House, and I do not know to whom it is sent besides. But there is nothing 126 more in it than can be found in the papers every day. Occasionally there is an original article in it, but the journal is made up principally from selections which are to be found in all the weekly and daily journals throughout the country. This expenditure is not in the public interest. It is not for the benefit of public health, and it is for the benefit of no other person than Dr. Playter. If the Government wish to make a pensioner of Dr. Playter, they should do so at once, and not give this money for publishing a journal which is of no benefit to the public, or the medical profession.

Mr. SPROULE. I think when the hon. gentleman says that this journal is of no use whatever, he does not know what he is talking about. He is a journalist himself, and he says there is nothing original in the journal, and that the same information can be found in the daily or weekly papers of the country. In that he is mistaken. There are valuable original articles in the journal, and there are articles culled from other journals equally valuable, but there is not an issue of the medical journal, which does not contain a great deal of valuable information on the subject of health.

Mr. PLATT. I may say that this is about the only portion of the money we expend on health matters which I am willing to support. I think this money is not by any means thrown away, nor do I think The Health Journal useless, as has been stated by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Somerville). He forgets, I think, that most of these extracts which he sees in the ordinary press of the day are invariably taken from that journal, and the regular newspapers have not the opportunity of making such valuable selections as are contained in that journal. A great deal of useful information appears in it; and so long as we are to spend money in connection with health matters, I can see no better way than to educate the people on this subject by such a newspaper as this. willing to support this expenditure, because I think it is very useful.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would like to know where this journal is circulated?

Mr. CARLING. I believe the members of the House, the Senators, the health officers of the country and others receive it, and it has a large circulation besides. I think the hon. gentleman was mistaken about this journal, because I have seen dozens and dozens of letters from medical gentlemen speaking very highly of it and urging its continuance. It was first started, I believe, at the suggestion of a deputation of medical men of this House and it has met with very general approval in this country.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How many numbers of this publication do we get for this $1,200?

Mr. CARLING. We do not expect many numbers, as this is a subsidy to the paper to continue its publication. I have already stated those to whom it is distributed, and I may also say that it is largely circulated throughout the country.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Oh, it is a subsidy.

Mr. McNEILL. I, for one, receive a copy of this Health Journal, and I read it with a very great deal of interest and a great deal of benefit, I think. I believe that it is exceedingly valuable that such a journal should be in circulation in the country, consider it.

has been no application made.

and I would be sorry indeed if the Government should discontinue this grant.

Mr. HESSON. I have heard The Health Journal very highly spoken of, and from the copy which I received to-day, I am glad to see that it has much improved since it was first issued.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I may just mention that I think it published a speech delivered in this House by the hon. member for Prince Edward County (Mr. Platt), I think that probably did it

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the explanation of this?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Thompson was formerly member for Caribou. This $1,000 was voted before but not paid, because there was some difficulty as to the proper person who should receive it. That difficulty has now been got over.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. When was it first voted? Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Ten years ago. When Parliament first voted this, there was a difficulty as to whom it should be paid. It now goes to the niece who is found, and is living in Ottawa.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Where is she found? I would like to know where she lives?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In Ottawa.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I thought the hon. gentleman said it was in California.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. the First Minister will remember that my friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was kept out of his indemnity for a Session because a gentleman came here and occupied a seat that he was not entitled to. The courts decided that he was kept out of his seat improperly and that he had a right to sit here all the Session, but he never was allowed anything for the Session.

Mr. FOSTER. Wait till he dies.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Oh, that is all nonsense; but I think it is unfair that the Government should recognise the claims of one member and not those of another.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I could understand the vote if Mr. Thompson had a wife and family, but it seems to me that there is no precedent for paying this money to his niece ten years after his death.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is it not a fact that when this man died he left a widow?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. She died too.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I believe that is the truth of it—that there were two widows; and they could not decide which was entitled to the money.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) With respect to the hon member for Bothwell, he came here in the middle of the Session by the decree of the court, which held that he had a right to be here the whole Session, and the Government only allowed him for the time he sat here. But in the case of Dr. Jenkins, of Prince Edward Island, who sat here for a week or two when he had no right to sit, and in the case of Mr. Brecken, who informed us that variation of circumstances often Mr. McNeill.

was all the time the legal member. In the case of Dr. Jenkins, or when the court gave Mr. Brecken took his place in the last week of the Session, the Government allowed each of them the whole sessional allowance. I think that was a case of gross injustice, and the hon. Minister should

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I take it there

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think this is a matter in which there should be any application at all; but whatever the rule is, it should be uniformly applied. I do not say that the department acted improperly in my case, but they paid me for the time I was actually here, and not for the full Session, although the court decided that I his seat, and he came in the last week of the Session, he was paid $1,000 for the whole Session. What I claim is that it ought not to be in the discretion of any Minister or any one else to sav that one man should be paid on one principle and another man on another principle; but whatever rule is adopted, it should be uniformly applied. We have another case, the case of the mileage of the hon, member for Shelburne (General Laurie). He has charged mileage from some point in England. I do not say it is an illegal charge, but it seems to me that the House ought to settle whether that is a proper construction of the statute or not, and whether he is entitled to be paid from Timbuctoo or from some point within the Dominion. Whatever rule is adopted, it should be uniformly applied to members on both sides alike.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The same principle should be adopted in all such cases; but the cases vary in their circumstances, and since I have been in Parliament, the course has been that when any case is brought before Parliament in which it is thought the strict rule of the statute respecting the indemnity of members should be varied, Parliament has acted, refusing it in a very few cases, and granting it in others. It is Parliament that grants the exceptional sum; the Government have to do with it; the vote is brought down to Parliament, and if Parliament approves of it, it is granted; I must say that generally Parliament is very liberal. When Mr. Thompson's case was brought up, there were several other cases of hardship or supposed hardship, and votes were asked not only in Mr. Thompson's case, but in the other cases. They were all paid except Mr. Thompson's, because there was a dispute as to who should get it. But now the dispute is ended, and the money is voted.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to know on what ground the hon. Minister can justify this payment to the niece of Mr. Thompson, who never sat in the House that Session, and withhold a similar payment to my hon. friend, who was improperly kept out of his seat by the action of a returning officer?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no recollection of hearing his case brought up before. Now that the hon gentleman has made the suggestion, we will take an opportunity of looking into it, and conferring with the hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. First Minister has govern the cases. It seems to me that the two cases from Prince Edward Island, varied from the case of the hon. member for Bothwell in one sense, that the two who received the sessional allowance belonged to the hon. gentleman's party, and the gentleman who failed to get it belonged to the Opposition; that is the only variation of circumstances I am able to see. If the others were entitled to the full sessional allowance, the hon. member for Bothwell was also entitled to it, and ought to have received it. While on my feet, I wish to enquire as to the claim set up on behalf of Mr. Thompson. I understood the hon. First Minister to inform us that he had two widows. If so, why pass over their claims, and pay the money to the niece?

General LAURIE. The hon, member for Bothwell has referred to my case of travelling expenses again. I spoke in the House before, and explained the course I took when I came here, and I can only repeat it. It was necessary that I should sign a form stating where my residence was in order to draw my travelling expenses. I could not state an untruth; I had to state where my residence was; and I asked the accountant to decide then what travelling expenses I was entitled to. If there was any other course for me to take, I should like to hear what it was. I could not state that I had come from my constituency, because I had not done so; I could only state where I lived.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand the gallant General to state that he now resides in England permanently?

General LAURIE. I have already stated so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has he absolutely changed his residence?

General LAURIE. No; I stated that I proceeded there after the last Session, that I took my family there, and that I am there domiciled for the present.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must ask the Committee to confine itself to this item.

Mr. McMULLEN. We are now discussing the indemnity of Mr. Thompson, which brings up every question of indemnity or mileage to any member of this House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must say to the hon, gentleman that I cannot agree with him there. I have every disposition to allow as much latitude as I can while acting as Chairman; but that is travelling a little too far.

Mr. McMULLEN. On two separate occasions, I have been prevented from offering any remarks with regard to the travelling allowance of the hon. member for Shelburne. He was allowed to-night to offer an explanation, and I think, seeing that my name has been mixed up in it, that I should be allowed to make a remark.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have no disposition to shut off discussion at all. The procedure provides more than one way by which the hon. gentleman can make his remarks. If some hon. member moves that the Committee rise, he can do so. I make this suggestion now in order that the rules may be observed.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I move that the Committee rise.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to say a few words in regard to this matter. It came to be currently reported in the corridors of the House that the hon. member for Shelburne had drawn $630, I think, for mileage. I intended to embrace the first opportunity of bringing the matter before the House, and as a matter of courtesy to the hon. gentleman I sent him a note to that effect, as I considered that when a man is elected for a constituency, that constituency sanctions his drawing mileage thence to Ottawa and return, during his term of service, and that it is unfair and unjust, if he removes to foreign parts, that he should draw mileage to Ottawa from his foreign residence. took the opportunity of dropping the hon. gentleman a note that I intended to bring the question up, and in place of treating me with the courtesy I considered I deserved, he, no doubt under previous arrangement, caught the Speaker's eye, and volunteered his explanation. Afterwards a difficulty arose between him and me with regard to that matter. The hon, gentleman took advantage of the circumstances in which he was placed to draw out of the treasury a sum of money to which he was not entitled. He may possibly, by a strict interpretation of the law, be entitled to it, but according to the spirit of the Act he is not entitled to draw mileage from the city of London to Ottawa: and he will probably be known in Canada in the future as the gallant general-not of the six hundred men-but of the $600 which he charged for travelling expenses. It now devolves upon the Government, under the existing condition of things, to remove all doubt by introducing an amendment to the law, which will prevent the repetition of a gross fraud practised on the revenue of the country.

General LAURIE. I must decline to be drawn into a controversy which will lead to personalities The hon, gentleman may if he chooses apply soubriquets and nicknames to me, and I could, if I chose, retort in a similar manner, but that would be neither parliamentary nor is it necessary. I have given a statement to this House of the way in which I placed the matter before the proper authorities, who, I understood, had the decision as to what I was entitled to draw. I was told, when I first came here, that I must draw mileage from where I reside and not from my constituency. This year I resided in England, and I had to sign a declaration to that effect, which I submitted to the proper authorities for them to decide what, under the circumstances, I should draw. I was told what I was to draw and drew it. I could not do anything else. I certainly could not sign a false statement. As to the statement of the hon. member for Wellington, that I took an unfair advantage of him, I stated to the House that I intended to bring the matter up as soon as I saw the reference in the newspaper, but I was unable to obtain the newspaper the first day, and on the second day, when I obtained it, I brought the matter before the House. I should be glad to see under the circumstances, some other provision of the law made, which would enable a member residing out of Canada to draw mileage from his constituency, which I think would be fair, but whilst the law stands as it is, I am bound to comply with its provisions.

Mr. AMYOT. It is my duty to state a matter of fact, which very probably the hon. and gallant member for Shelburne does not wish me to declare, but which I feel bound, under the circumstances, to make known. Whilst in Europe last summer, I was twice invited by the hon. member for Shelburne to dine with him at his home in London, and on my return to Canada I received, in October or November, a letter from him telling me he thought it would probably be impossible for him to attend the Session, and that he would certainly not come if he could find a pair.

Mr. McMULLEN. There was no difficulty in the case of the hon. gentleman, who no doubt intends to make his home in Canada, and is now but temporarily in London. He could have easily drawn his mileage from Oakville without making a declaration. If he had not broached the question of a declaration, there was no necessity for it whatever, and the clerk would have paid him his usual allowance. But it appears he was anxious to get his mileage all the way from London; and in order to press upon the clerk his claim, he proposed to be paid from London. If the proposition had not been made by himself, he never would have been entitled to the money.

General LAURIE. The facts are not as stated by the hon member for Wellington. He was not present when the conversation between myself and the accountant took place, and I really do not know how he can make the statement he does.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is due to the Committee that the First Minister, or the Minister of Justice, should give an interpretation of the law and state whether it is right and proper that an hon. member should draw mileage from London to Ottawa if he resides in London.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is an important matter, as there is no knowing how many members of the House may be called to visit some dying parent in some distant part of the world or to pay visits to distant relatives, and, under the interpretation of the law in the hon. gentleman's case, be entitled to mileage from those foreign parts. If that is the law, it ought to be changed, and the Government are assuming a serious responsibility if they are going to retain the law in its present shape, which permits frauds of the kind to be perpetrated.

General LAURIE. I must call the hon, gentleman to order. He has no right to apply the word "fraud."

The CHAIRMAN. I must request the hon. gentleman to withdraw the expression.

Mr. McMULLEN. I withdraw the expression simply because it is not parliamentary, otherwise I would not withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the hon, gentleman will look into the procedure, he will find that no hypothetical withdrawal of an unparliamentary expression is a withdrawal, and I must ask him in justice to make a proper withdrawal.

Mr. McMULLEN. I withdraw the word, and the House understands and the country will understand; but I say the Government ought to inform the House of the course they intend to pursue on this point. Should any hon member be called to the Cape of Good Hope during the coming summer, and have to remain in attendance on an aunt or uncle or some particular relation, who is in such a condition of health there that they require to be waited upon, he will be entitled to claim mileage from that country. The Government should introduce an amendment so as to prevent a repetition of that kind of thing. Is it the intention of the Government to make a change in the law?

Mr. Amyot.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon, gentleman will put the question at the proper time, no doubt he will get an answer, but all this discussion is irregular.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then I will take another occasion to put the question. We know that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was unfairly kept out of his seat, and there is no provision made for him during the time that he was unfairly kept out of this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have already said that that will be taken into consideration.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire further to call attention to the fact that another hon. gentleman was unscated and drew two sessional allowances in one Session, and, I have no doubt, two mileages also. I refer to the hon. member for West Northumberland. I think the law should be changed in that regard.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think there must be some mistake in that, or the hon member must have drawn my indemnity. In 1883 I was kept away from the Session in consequence of illness. I was here for four days, and I was paid $32.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I congratulate the Secretary of State on the fact that he was not so guilty as the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie). I should not say guilty, because if it is within the law, I suppose the hon. gentleman had a right to take the money. The Secretary of State I believe was in France at that time.

Mr. CHAPLEAU, I was in California.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. At all events, he did not display the same desire to draw his mileage as the member for Shelburne. He might have drawn his mileage on the same ground, all the way from Paris. He missed an opportunity there, which I do not think he is in the habit of missing.

Mr. MULOCK. If the Minister is going to deal with the question of the hon, member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), I think he should also deal with the question whether a member is compelled to draw his mileage.

Extra French translators between 1st July, 1889, and 15th January, 1890. $1,557 Mr. LAURIER. Who are the translators?

Mr. SPEAKER. I could not give all the names. This is for translation when the ordinary translators had not the time to do the work. I think Mr. McMahon was one. We had a similar item last year, and I then suggested that perhaps we had better have another translator added to the regular staff, but it was thought that perhaps the regular translators could do the work. I suppose the question will come up again as to whether it would not be better to add another permanent officer to the staff. The work has so much increased that it is necessary to have an additional officer.

and have to remain in attendance on an aunt or Mr. MULOCK. I think this item should stand uncle or some particular relation, who is in over until the hon. member for North Simcoe

(Mr. McCarthy) and the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) are here. I would ask the Secretary of State if he has settled the casus belli which arose in regard to the late French transla-tors who left office shortly after the last general election in consequence of some discussion with the member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) and the Secretary of State. I think they claim for services up to the time of their dismissal, and that they were given to understand that their claim would be paid or some fair settlement would be made with them.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If it depends upon me, I would say that no indemnity was due or should be paid to them, I never agreed to any such arrangement, and I say that, if anything is paid, it is unjustly paid.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the Secretary of State say whether, after their dismissal, there was not some arrangement made that they should be paid? Was not one of the Tremblays given to understand that they would be paid?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Not by me.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I know something The hon, member for Montmagny about this. (Mr. Choquette) spoke to me about that claim, and, when I spoke somewhat in the same sense as my hon. friend the Secretary of State has spoken, my hon, friend from Montmagny said there was a misunderstanding, because these translators came to Ottawa before they were notified that their services would not be required, and went to the expense of coming here before they received that notification. As I understand they applied for remuneration, and I told my hon, friend opposite that I would speak to the Speaker and have the matter brought up before the Committee of Internal Economy. From some cause or other that Committee has not met, but we are going to meet Tuesday, I think, and it is arranged with the Speaker that we shall discuss the matter and see whether there is a claim under the circumstances mentioned by my hon. friend.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. It was understood that a certain indemnity would be paid. I may add that the Secretary of State told me, though he did not promise anything himself, that if something had been promised he had no objection that the promise should be fulfilled. I did not bring the matter before the House because I understood that an indemnity of $175 would be paid to each of the translators. Now, however, a misunderstanding seems to have occurred on the part of some members of the Government, and during the recess I was informed that the matter could not be settled. I spoke to the Speaker about it and he said that on account of some misunderstanding the matter could not be settled as it had been promised last year. Under the circumstances I shall accept the promise of the Prime Minister that the question will be considered on Tuesday next. I may say that it was disagreeable for me to bring this matter before the House, and I would not have done so could I have received an assurance from the Secretary of State, or from any member of the Government, that note. the indemnity would be paid.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot go quite so far as the hon. gentleman says, and acknowledge that there was a promise. What I should turn out on examination that the parties came here without any notice that their services would not be required, and that they were here for some time before they got notice of dismissal, I thought is was a fair case for consideration, and that I would bring it before the Committee of Internal Economy.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. As we say in French: Il ne faut pas confondre autour et alentour; there must be no misunderstanding between the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette) and myself. When he spoke to me I told him that I could give no consent, I was opposed to it; but that if an agreement had been entered into between the Prime Minister or the Speaker, and the hon. gentleman, I had nothing to do with it. But I must say that I think there was no claim. I know those gentlemen came here without any reason, as they had understood previously from the newspapers that they were not to be employed, and when they came here they were told that they should not have come. Therefore I think they were not entitled to any indemnity whatever.

Mr. LAURIER. I hope this matter will at last be settled. I do not want to open up old sores, but I must take issue with the Secretary of State. These men came here while they were permanent members of the staff of this House; they came just as the translators come now at the opening of every session. I must say, without desiring to open up the old question, that in my judgment, if they deserved dismissal upon that occasion, there are members of that staff at present who also deserve dismissal, because they are doing the very same thing for which those men were dismissed, that is to say, engaging actively in politics. I do not complain of that at all.

Mr. BOWELL. On your side also.

Mr. LAURIER. No: not one on our side at this moment.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. What the Secretary of correct. He said they State says is perfectly correct. He said they were not entitled to any indemnity but that if an agreement had been made that they should receive an indemnity, that agreement must be carried out. Last session I put a motion on the Order paper about this matter. I saw the Prime Minister himself and he told me that he would try and arrange it with the Speaker, and he told me that if I came to a settlement with the Speaker he would stand by it. I told him that I did see the Speaker and that it was perfectly understood between the Speaker and myself that these men were to receive an indemnity of $175 each. I think the Speaker said that to the hon, member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier). I expected the money would be paid during the recess, but owing to some misunderstanding it has not been paid, and that is the reason why I bring up the question now. I sent a notice to the Prime Minister saying that they were dis-missed only after they arrived here to enter upon their duties.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; I got that

Mr. MULOCK. It would, perhaps, simplify the matter if we had the statement of the Speaker with regard to what has fallen from the lips of the hon. member for Montmagny. The Secretary of told the hon. gentleman was this: That if it State seems to argue that these men should not have come here, on the ground that they received an intimation through the public press that their services would not be required. Surely he does not seriously pretend that information through such a channel as that is to be accepted by persons who are employed by this House as a reason for assuming that the House has come to a decision to dispense with their services? I think I can discover on the part of the First Minister, and, perhaps, of the Secretary of State, a disposition now to overlook the past, and to come to some settlement with these translators.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have no resentment against these men. A complaint had been lodged with the Speaker against these gentlemen during the Session preceding the one when they were dismissed. I say that unless they received a notice to come, they were to understand that they were not to come.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. These gentlemen were engaged by the Hansard Committee. I know they were present in the early part of the Session for a very considerable time.

Mr. MULOCK. Has this express service been established since the Printing Bureau was inaugurated?

Mr. SPEAKER. It was found necessary by the Clerk of the House that we should either increase the number of messengers or establish a service of this kind, and it was doubtful whether a messenger service would have been sufficiently prompt for the work. These expresses are on the way all the time between the House and the Printing Bureau.

Mr. MULOCK. Then, this extra expense is in consequence of the Printing Bureau being placed so far from the House.

Newspapers, additional amount...... $250

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Are these papers for which $250 is asked required for the reading room?

Mr. SPEAKER. For all the different rooms. Additional newspapers have been asked in connection with the reading room. The amount was cut down last year, and this sum is found to be necessary.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. What is the rule with respect to the newspapers sent to the reading room? Is it supposed that every newspaper in the Dominion is at liberty to send a copy to the Senate and Commons reading rooms?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes; we take every newspaper in Canada.

To provide a gratuity to the family of the late J.r. Wilson, Law Clerk of the House of Commons......$1,000

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I do not object to this item. I think, however, some principle should be laid down on which gratuities and compensation should be given. During two Sessions I brought forward the case of a post office railway clerk, who was burnt in the discharge of his duties, and I have been unable to secure more than the usual two months' gratuity.

Mr. Mulock.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon, gentleman will give me the name I will call the attention of the Postmaster General to the case?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). John Campbell was burnt on the Maine Central, in 1889, I think. He had been in the employ of the post office for 14 or 15 years, and was a faithful officer.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This expenditure occurred before Confederation, and we from the Maritime Provinces protest it. What is the meaning of the item?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The meaning of this amount which appears in the Estimates is simply this: Major King was in command of the Welland Field Battery. The Department had no drill shed and no accommodation for the storage and protection of the guns. Major King erected a building, which he placed at the disposal of the Government, in which he stored the Government ammunition. The claim was submitted to me when I first took charge of the Department, and I had the case investigated several times. It was placed in the hands of the deputy adjutant-general of the district. Reports were made to me, and I satisfied myself, after fighting the claim a very long time, that Major King had really incurred this expense for the building, and that it was an expense incurred for the protection of property belonging to the State—the guns which were entrusted to the battery of which he was in command.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). When was the claim put in?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It was in the Department before I came into it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Where was the building erected?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. At Welland.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is the building there yet?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes; if it had not been for this building the Government would have been under the necessity of erecting a building themselves, and it would certainly have cost much more than the amount of money now to be voted.

Mr. MULOCK. How has the property been dealt with since 1883?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We have made other provisions for the protection of the guns.

Mr. MULOCK. What provisions?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Now, there is a shed for the protection of the guns. I cannot tell exactly the date when it was built. Judging from the item which appears in the Estimates, I suppose in 1883, because the claim was made up to that date, and no claim was made subsequent to it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I have no recollection of any such claim being before the Department when I was head of it. It looks very much like a trumped-up claim.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There is no trumping up about it.

M1. JONES (Halifax). Part of the claim belongs to the old Parliament of Canada, and the rest may be right or not. The Minister should be able to tell us when the claim was first put in, and when the drill shed was built by the Government to replace the one belonging to Major King. I am certain this claim was not in the Department in my time. It appears to have been an afterthought, and I should like to look into it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The claim was in the Department before I came in as Minister.

Mr. DENISON. I heard of it years ago, and I was surprised it had not been paid.

Mr. LAURIER. When a claim of this nature is made, all the papers connected with it should be submitted to the House.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Part of this claim belongs to the Government of old Canada.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am inclined to dispute the contention of the hon, gentleman for St. John (Mr. Weldon). We must remember that all the buildings belonging to the old Parliament of Canada for the militia of Canada were handed over to the Dominion, and all the guns belonging to old Canada were also handed over to the Dominion. In this case instead of there being a building to hand over, this building was furnished by Major King, and he ought to be paid for it, it seems to me. This is one of the burdens which goes along with the assets that have been handed over.

Mr. MULOCK. The member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson), I suppose, is interested in the pressing of this claim, but the member for Welland, on a former occasion, presented the claims of the veterans who fought for some of the Provinces which now form the Confederation, and I think I heard the First Minister reply to the application that, although these veterans had done a great deal for the preservation of British institutions in America, yet their claims were against the Provinces and not against Confederation as a whole.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a different question altogether. It is a matter of simple honesty to pay this.

Mr. MULOCK. I presume we have a right to consider it. There is no uniformity in the decision the First Minister arrives at in these matters. But he has said that some reports were against the claim and some in favor of it, and as he has promised to bring down the papers, I would suggest that he should bring them all down, those in favor as well as those against it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The item stands. Canadian Pacific Railway—Construction.. $20,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When will the award be made?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot tell; I do not know.

 $Mr.\,$ MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose we will have to pass another vote then ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very likely. When I say very likely, I do not know.

Intercolonial Ry., St. Charles Branch...$300,000

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This should be $200,000 instead of $300,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will that be the last of it for the St. Charles branch?

Mr. LAURIER. He cannot tell.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot tell.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Could the hon, gentleman state how much has been spent on the St. Charles branch?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The cost of the St. Charles branch, up to 1st March, 1890, was $1,628,392.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Are there some claims still standing?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There will be a possible requirement of some $200,000 more.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. For this $4,000 has already been granted in the main Estimates, and this is the balance.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is there not some claim on the part of the town of Dartmouth for money paid on this branch?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a claim against Dartmouth. A demand has been made against which there have been strong representations, but the Government have not surrendered their claim.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the town of Dartmouth claims that the railway was not constructed according to the proposal which it made when it undertook the guarantee, and that it is not liable to pay this amount.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think there is that claim. The argument of the town is that the road has been of much more advantage to the manufacturers and private business people who use it than to the town as a general accommodation to its population.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I hope under the circumstances the Government do not propose to exact that small amount from Dartmouth, when they are spending millions of money for railways all over the country. This is really a branch of the Intercolonial Railway, and I think it would be unfair for the Government even, if they had a right, to insist on payment for this road, which I think they did at one time volunteer to construct.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That was the only condition on which they agreed to build it, that this money should be paid. It was a solemn agreement.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Times have changed since.

Increased accommodation at Moncton. $20,000

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I am informed that a bonus of $10 per month is paid to the conductors on the express trains from Moncton to Halifax, while last year, or the year before, the salaries of the conductors from Quebec to Campbellton were reduced. They are now paid not by the month, but by the trip. The conductors complained of that, and I am told sent petitions to the Department; and the answer was that the bonus was granted while Sir Charles Tupper was Minister of Railways, and that it was only for conductors from Campbellton to Halifax. I do not think that is fair, because the conductors from Quebec to Campbellton have much more to do; they have to travel during the night and with a great deal of snow, while the conductors from Campbellton to Halifax travel during the day, and have very little snow. I do not see why there should be this discrimination. I was told this by some of the conductors, and I asked them to send me letters, and they refused, saying that if they put their names to letters they would be dismissed. I enquired as to the matter from the superintendent at Quebec, Mr. McDonald, and he told me that he would call the attention of the Minister to the fact.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The question is twofold—first, whether the men from Quebec to Campbellton get too little, or the men from Campbellton to Halifax get too much; and it may be that the proper way to equalise them would be to lower the wages of the latter. But the case as I understand it is this, that the wages of four or five conductors who had been employed on the road from 1872 were raised for long service, and it was understood that as they disappeared their successors would not get the advance.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I know one man who was a conductor for twenty years, and he is not on the same footing as those from Campbellton to Halifax. When the salaries were reduced all the conductors complained, but the Nova Scotia men were given a bonus of $10 a month to shut their mouths, or to please them, perhaps, before election time, and those from Quebec to Campbellton got nothing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are elections in Quebec also. I can only tell the hon. gentleman that there are an infinitude of applications for increases of salary, and wherever there is one application for an increase, there are always two complaints of being left out. If I live, and we get through this Session comfortably, I have promised several of these people to look into the whole question of the service, and I intend to carry that out. I think the service is too expensive. think the staff is pretty large, and it could be simplified very much, and I am going to try to effect that simplification. If I do not know much about railways, I know something of salaries, and how they should be divided.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend has put a question, and I do not think it is answered. His question is whether it is a fact that some of these conductors receive in addition to their salaries a bonus of $10 per month?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are four or five old officers who get $10 a month more than the others.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Why do not the conductors from Quebec get the same? They are older than the others.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will look into the matter and see.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. A lot of complaints have been made, and I made the complaint myself that there is not a single man in the office at Moncton who can understand French, although the railway passes through a great many French districts.

Mr. CHOQUETTE.

People who have claims to make are obliged to make them in English, and when we receive the answers and wish to send them to the claimants, we have to translate those answers into French. There should be an employee there who could use both languages. I am in favor of the dual language. The year before last I sent a petition, signed by people from Cap St. Ignace, about ditches and culverts along the side of the line. That petition I drew up as well as I possibly could and sent it to Moncton, and never heard a word about it after. That was in October. During the session I asked Mr. Schreiber about it, and he telegraphed to Moncton, and the reply he received was that they could not read it, and the petitioners never got an answer.

4016

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that at Moncton, where there is a French population not far off, there ought to be a person who could read letters and answer them in French. The hon. gentleman knows that I am not in favor of the abolition of the French language. It is really an error if there is no person there who can understand both languages.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I have a man in my county who will take the place at once.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend has more than once expressed want of confidence in me, and I must, therefore, have want of confidence in him.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I am quite willing to give the right hon, gentleman a mark of my confidence by sending one of my supporters to his office.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Moncton is not without officers who read, write and speak French perfectly.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Why do they not send an answer to petitions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not suppose any such answer was ever sent.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I sent the petition in October, and during the Session, in February, I came here and found the petition was never read and not sent back to the Department.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was not for that reason.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. They ought to give a reason.

Mr. AMYOT. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that at St. Charles, in Bellechasse, there is a very long high fence on both sides of the Intercolonial and the public highway crosses the same square. It is a most dangerous spot. Last summer there was a man killed, and there were very often people killed there. For many years the people have been sending petitions to have that changed, and they offer the necessary land to put the highway elsewhere in a better position, but for one reason or the other nothing has been done. There are accidents constantly happening there because the fence is covered like a shed, and you cannot hear the whistling of the engine, and very often the engine does not whistle at all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, If the hongentleman will send me a note, I will make immediate enquiries.

Construction of the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway..... $220,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax.) How much of this is for construction and how much for equipment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The appropriation already carried is $300,000; the appropriation now asked for is $220,000. There is an expenditure from the 30th June, 1889, to the 1st March, 1890, for the purchase of 8 first class cars, 8 2nd class cars, 68 box cars, 140 platform cars, 6 conductors cars, and 6 snow ploughs, making a total cost of $223,899.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). How much has been spent on that branch up to the present time?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was expended up to the 30th June, 1889, $1,289,254; from the 30th June to the 1st March, 1890, $296,101; to be voted in the Supplementary Estimates for 1888-89, $223,899; Estimates for the coming year, $30,000—making a total of $1,831,254.

 $\ensuremath{\mathrm{Mr}}.$ $\ensuremath{\mathrm{MULOCK}}.$ Is that the whole expenditure on capital secount ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Then the capital account is closed both for construction and equipment?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. So I understand.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Does that include the award made the other day by the Court of Exchequer?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; it does not. Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will a vote be brought down for that purpose?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The reason why it is not brought down is that it is under consideration whether there will not be an appeal against it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am afraid the Government have got into the position which we apprehended when they enabled the company to bring a suit against the Government. At that time, it was pointed out on this side of the House that such a provision would probably lead to this result. It would appear now that the consequence of that alteration in the Act is that the country is to be saddled with an additional expenditure of $110,000.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There was nothing in the Act prejudicial to the Government. The only alteration was that if a judgment were given against the Government, we should be allowed to retain $150,000 for the payment of the workmen. The only change made was favorable to the Government. What the hon. gentleman predicted was that we would be liable to damages, but this judgment is based on the value of the property taken by the Government.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. When the Act was introduced, we pointed out that the preamble admitted the claim of the parties.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The judgment is given on the value of the expropriation, as to the actual value of the work done and the property taken. The company claimed loss on prospective profits, and that is not taken into consideration at all.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is not this Col. Snow's claim?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is the company's claim. Col. Snow is the engineer.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The recital in that Act admitted the claim, and we predicted that the effect would be that the court would be unable to ignore the fact that there was a claim, and that the only question would be how much of the claim should be admitted. Sir Charles Tupper stated that there was not a shadow of a shade of a claim on the part of the company, but the preamble admitted that there was a claim, and I said at the time that the Government would be estopped from denying that there was a claim, and that, if it went before a court, the only question would be the amount of the claim.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There was never the slightest question as to the company having a claim; on the contrary we paid $150,000 on account of that claim.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That was for the workmen.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes; because we had expropriated the work, and Sir Charles Tupper's view was that that amount was the full amount we should pay for the work done. The question submitted to the court was whether that was or was not sufficient to pay for the property expropriated and the work done, and the court found that the amount should be $250,000, from which there is to be deducted $150,000. There is no admission in the Act that there was any claim.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The fact is that the company could not have brought any claim but for that Act. The company said there was a claim. The Government said the company had no claim, but, in order to allow them to air the claim they thought they had, this Act was passed. The explanation given from the Government side the other day went to bear out my contention, that, but for the introduction of the Bill by the Minister of Finance the company could not have got a cent. We predicted the result at that time which has now come about.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, gentleman is mistaken in his recollection. The $150,000 was secured by a mortgage on the property. There was a dispute about the validity of that nortgage. We endeavored to foreclose the mortgage, and we did forecolose it, and advertised the property for sale. We were endeavoring to make a title under the mortgage, and the object of the Act was to enable us to expropriate instead of going through the process of getting the title under the mortagage which was then in litigation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is a great distinction between the payment of the amount which we make to the workmen, and the payment of the claim which was preferred by Col. Snow, or the county he represented. The one was a claim which Parliament voluntarily acknowledged under which the Crown was under no liability to pay.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Before we foreclosed under the mortgage the property must have been put up for sale, and we would have had to buy it in and possibly to compete with somebody else, in which case we would have had to pay the difference between the $150,000 already paid, and the purchase money. By taking the short cut, which ended all litigation, of expropriating the property, we had to go through the process of ascertaining what the value of the property was over and above the $150,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In expropriating that property you made a declaration on the face of that act which was an acknowledgment of the claim they made, and which reduced the matter to one of assessment of damages.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes; acknowledging your liability.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will show the hon. gentleman the judgment, and there is not from top to bottom of it the slightest allusion to any such

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman may be perfectly right, but there need have been none. The Government was estopped; there might have been no question raised. I remember reading the Act and submitted to the then Finance Minister that he was estopping this Government and he paid no attention to it, and said there was not the shade of a shadow of a claim, and he was willing to refer

Mr. MULOCK. I understand there is an application before the Government to have additional lines built alongside this line on account of its being crooked, that it lengthens the distance between those points and has not served the purpose for which it was intended. Originally when Parliament was asked to go into this scheme the inducement was held out that it would be a short line from point to point, and would be of great service, but when it was in course of construction it was diverted, going around from one town and village to another, and that lengthened the distance. Now there is a movement on foot to have a straight line; I would ask the Frst Minister if he knows anything

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know whether there is a movement or not. There has been no application to the Government in that connection.

Construction and equipment of Cape Breton Railway..... .$150,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). How much of this is for construction?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. An appropriation has already been granted of $700,000 and this supplementary of $150,000 is principally for rolling The hon. gentleman would like to know what the estimated total cost is. The expenditure up to the 30th June was $1,849,223; the expenditure to the 1st of March was $535,765. The estimates yet to come down will probably have $50,-000 more. The total estimated expenditure is $2,-584,993.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have got the Act here to which I referred just now. The Act recites, in the first place, the amount of subsidy, and recites in the second place the voting of a sum of $150,000, and the granting of that sum by Parliament constituted the first charge on the subsidy, and then comes the preamble to which I referred just now, and which committed the Government to the expenditure on this matter, and which settled the question of liability and reduced the question in dispute to one of assessment of damages. The preamble reads as follows:-

Sir John Thompson.

"Whereas the company with whom an agreement was entered into aforesaid, for the construction of the said line of railway, having represented that they had expended a considerable sum of money in prosecuting the said work prior to failure in carrying out the agreement, it is desirable that they should be reimbursed such sum, if any, as they shall establish in court that they are entitled to for the present value of the work done on the said line of railway by the said company."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If any.

Mr. DAVIES. I contended, as a matter of law. that that preamble settled the question of liability entirely and reduced the question simply to one of assessment of damages, and to what amount. You would not contend in the face of that Act that the company were not liable at all. The only question the judge had to determine was what amount, if any, they were to be paid. The question of our liability to pay them was placed beyond doubt by the statute, and the judge, therefore, did not refer to it because he had no reason to do so. question was settled by a statute, and it was a gross imposition upon the people of this country that we should have had to pay that money, and I contended so at the time. And at that time the Finance Minister said it was all a farce, that there was "not the shade of a shadow of a claim," to use his own language, but it turned out there was.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can only say the preamble does not contain the acknowledgment of a claim of a single dollar against the Government, and so far, as the hon. gentleman supposes, from precluding the Government from disputing the liability, it was not so regarded by the counsel of the company nor by the Government. The liability rested on the fact that under that Act we expropriated the works of the company, and it became a simple question of value, and the question of value was whether the $150,000 already paid was enough.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Act does not say the amount of liability; the Act says it is desirable they should be reimbursed such sum, if any, as they shall show they are entitled to, for the present value of the work done. Therefore, the liability of the Government was acknowledged, and the only question for the court was to assess what the present value of the work was.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The liability was not admitted at all, and when we expropriated the property, of course, we had to admit there was a liability, not for any further sum of money, but for the value of the works.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). They could not have proceeded against the Government without that Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If we took possession of their works, but we could have taken possession of their works without that Act, I admit. We tried to foreclose under the mortgage, and there was litigation. Whether we would have succeeded in that was a question.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The judgment was in favor of the Government at that time.

Only as to whether Sir JOHN THOMPSON. an injunction should be granted to prevent the There the matter stood. In order to get possession we expropriated under the Act.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The liability_was admitted; there was something to be paid. I see that during a debate attention was called to this very point.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is a mistake. It was decided the other way.

Grand Narrows Bridge $115,000

 $M_{\rm F}$, JONES (Halifax). Is this the final amount? Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; it will make up the full contract amount.

Mr. WELDON (St. John.) What is the whole cost?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. $515,000.

Railways, Surveys and Inspections.... $15,000

Mr. CASEY. What is the nature of this expenditure?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The inspection is merely on subsidised roads. An engineer is sent to inspect the road for the purpose of ascertaining whether the contract with the Government for its building has been carried out, in order that the subsidy may be paid.

Mr. MULOCK. Will any part of this go towards surveys on the Harvey and Salisbury line?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, No; that is a special item.

Mr. MULOCK. We have paid for that; but this vote is not limited to any particular line or route. No portion, then, will be spent on the Harvey and Salisbury line?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

To provide a special car for His Excellency the Governor General..... $14,300

Mr. CASEY. There have been several Governors General here since Confederation, and there never has been any trouble in obtaining the use of official cars on any of railways when His Excellency desired to make a trip. I do not see any necessity for this expenditure, and I do not understand why the country should purchase a special car for His Excellency the Governor General when he can always obtain the use of a director's car.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has forgotten what took place last Session. The Governor General could not have the continuous use of a car when it might be required for other purposes connected with the railway. Besides, the car he did use was a very old and shabby one, and a disgraceful one to carry the representative of the Sovereign. It was, therefore, thought necessary that a new car specially for his use should be built.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Where is the "Jamaica?"

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was burnt. But His Excellency did not wish to be considered as using this car for nothing, and he very sensibly said that if we would build a decent car he was willing to pay a reasonable amount of interest for it during the time he was here. He is the first Governor General who has so offered. He will pay the 3 per cent. on $14,000, and his successor will pay the same sum, ex necessitate, when he arrives.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Will it be for the Governor General exclusively, and will it be stabled when he is not using it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I do not understand why the Government cannot have the use of it as well.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I moved at a very early period of the Session for a return showing the number of special cars owned by the Government, their original cost and other details, but this return has not been brought down, and I have had a great many applications for it. I should like to have these facts, because they are very useful in election time, the same as the Bridges' car was used some years ago.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The information had not yet been received from Moncton, but it will be brought down shortly.

Mr. CASEY. Is there not an official car belonging to the Government used on the Intercolonial Railway?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes; there is a car to be used by the superintendent or by the Minister if he goes over the railway, but that is wanted for the purposes of the railway. This other car is fitted according to the plan of the Governor General and to suit his taste, and it is as much his own as the hon. gentleman's hat is his own.

Mr. CASEY. How many official cars belonging to the Government are there in connection with the Intercolonial Railway?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is one here and there is one at Moncton.

Mr. CASEY. Are these cars not fitted up in such a mannner as to be suited for the use of the Governor General?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are wanted for other purposes. They are plain business-like cars, and if the hon. gentleman goes down to the station he can see for himself.

Mr. MULOCK. I have no objection to the Minister of Railways having the use of a private car, but when it comes to building a car for the Governor General another question arises. The Minister says that this particular transaction has taken the form of an ordinary investment, and, therefore, that there need be no discussion on the subject. He says that the nature of the investment is that the Governor General is to pay 3 per cent. on the capital invested. Who keeps that car in repair and who insures it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The interest includes repairs as well.

Mr. MULOCK. I disapprove of that. I am willing to have the country provide the working portion of the executive with all facilities for carrying on their business, but as to investing capital for the purchase of a palace car for the Governor General of this country I wholly disapprove of it. I consider it is a misapplication of public money, and it is a transaction that cannot be condemned in too strong language. You know very well, Mr. Chairman, that the cost of maintaining the Governor General and his institution in Canada is making that institution unpopular here.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not believe that.

Mr. MULOCK. The First Minister may not believe it, but I am willing to say that I believe it, and whether the First Minister disapproves of it or not, I may express my opinion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh! yes.

Mr. MULOCK. It is my honest opinion. you desire to have any unpopularity attaching to that office, you will not do anything to make the people dissatisfied with the arrangement. I assure the First Minister that this transaction he is entering into to provide at the public expense a palace car for the Governor General and his family, is a transaction which will not receive the endorsation of the people who have to pay the bill. The Governor General is going to pay 3 per cent. on the capital invested, but the country will have to keep that car in repair. On that growing capital we have only 3 per cent. interest, and that only during the term of office of the present Governor. It would be better if you took the $14,300 you propose to invest in this and throw it into the sea, than to invest it in a matter which is going to be an additional and growing expense. As soon as this Governor General's term of office has expired, you will have a new Governor coming along who has not been a party to the agreement and he will know nothing about it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He will not get the car

Mr. MULOCK. It will be called the Governor General's car, and the new Governor General will walk into it just the same as he will walk into Rideau Hall. He will ask for improvements and titivations, and the bill will be paid, probably out of some general item, and we will know nothing about it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have only got to tell the hon. gentleman that he has forgotten altogether what happened last Session. This is not a new matter. It was stated to the House last year, and it was approved by the House, and there was not one single objection made to it. On the contrary there was very complimentary language used about the offer of the Governor General to take this step rather than to have the charge made that the car was specially used and furnished without his paying any of the cost. That was fully agreed to last Session.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not care who agreed to it. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I tell you the House agreed to it.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not care whether the House agreed to it or not. The House in my judgment made a mistake in agreeing to it. I did not hear the discussion last Session, but whatever decision was come to, I think it is an unjustifiable expenditure of public money. If the Governor General makes a trip through the country he is well paid for it. He gets a large income and in my opinion the Act passed by this legislature to reduce the salary of the Governor General from $50,000 to $25,000 a year, and which was vetoed by the Imperial Government should not have been vetoed.

Mr. HESSON. Where is your loyalty going to now?

Mr. MULOCK. I am considering that we are not justified in this expenditure at all.

Mr. HESSON. That is a fraud.

Mr. MULOCK. What does that gentleman say?

Mr. Mulock.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He says you are a first class fraud.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I trust the hon. gentleman will withdraw that expression.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It was some one over the other side of the House who said that.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. And you voted for the loyalty resolution?

Mr. HESSON. Yes; I did.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Then you must be a first class——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. All right.

Mr. HESSON. I'have nothing to withdraw. I said the hon. gentleman's loyalty resolution coming from him was a fraud.

Mr. MULOCK. Never mind him, Mr. Chairman, it does not matter much what the hon. gentleman says anyhow. I am more consistent in my loyalty than the hon. gentleman is. I want to have the Governor General's office so conducted that it will in no way lose the affections of the people, and if transactions like this take place the public are likely to seek for a change. I think it is my duty as a member of this House to say that this investment will prove wholly illusory. It will not realise the 3 per cent. interest, and as I said before, we would be far better off if we threw this money into the sea in the first instance.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was a pretty close attendant of the proceedings of the House last Session, but, like my hon. friend, I never heard of the proposition made by the First Minister, which he says was introduced, and that the whole House agreed that this car should be built at the expense of the public.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Look at Hansard and you will see it there.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) With respect to the hon. member for North Perth I can only say that if he sanctions extravagant expenditure his loyalty is but little loyalty.

Mr. CASEY. I should rather say, in regard to the interruption of the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson), that according to him loyalty would appear to be a question of dollars and cents, because he appears to think it disloyal to speak of a reduction in the Governor General's salary. I do not think our loyalty depends on the amount of salary we pay to the Governor General. In regard to the car, the hon. Premier says the "Jamaica" was a car he used to borrow from the Canadian Pacific Railway whenever he wanted it. Is it not probable that this Governor General's car will be equally convenient for the head of the Government to borrow at any time.

Mr. DENISON. Why should he not?

Mr. CASEY. Because the Governor General is going to pay interest on the cost of it. Will it be strictly for his own use, and not to be lent to any member of the Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The car belongs to the Governor General, and is strictly to be used by himself.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. But he is to be at liberty to lend it whenever he pleases?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says the Governor General is to pay 3 per cent. on the cost, and 3 per cent. on repairs. But when the car is repaired again, is the next Governor to pay interest on the repairs that will then be made, until the capital value of the car runs up to $30,000 or $40,000 ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We shall have to make an arrangement with the new Governor

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Precisely so. I think it is illusory to suppose that there is to be interest on the repairs.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My hon. friend forgets that if the cost of the car is increased, our loyalty, on the theory of the hon. member for North Perth will be increased also.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the enquiry of the hon. member for Bothwell is not pertinent, because it must be evident to everyone who takes notice of public affairs that the life of this Government is going to be cut short before long, and another Government will have the arrangement of affairs with the new Governor General.

Mr. CASEY. I think the fact is, as we have supposed all along, that the car "Jamaica" having been burned, this is an arrangement to have a new car constructed which will practically be at the disposal of the members of the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have told the hon, gentleman more than once that it is not to be at the disposal of the Government.

Mr. CASEY. I think I have the floor that this is practically to be a new car which will be at the disposal of the hon, gentleman and every other member of the Government whenever the Governor General chooses to lend it. In fact, it will be a car for the use of the Governor General and Council rather than for the personal use of the Governor General, and will therefore admirably replace the burned "Jamaica," although the interest on the repairs will be paid by the Governor General

Mr. MULOCK. Who has the contract for building this car?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think Mr. Crossen, of Cobourg.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 28th April, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock. PRAYERS

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 141) to facilitate the purchase by the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company from his question have reported to me during the Session, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of the and they have been given leave of absence since on branch line of railway between Hull and Aylmer. (Mr. Bryson.)

Bill (No. 123) respecting the Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Bergin.)

Bill (No. 119) for the relief of Hugh Forbes Keefer.—(Mr. Weldon, Albert.) (On a division.)

Bill (No. 120) for the relief of Christiana Filman Glover.—(Mr. McKay.) (On a division.)

WHARVES IN MONTMAGNY COUNTY.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to make the public pay for the use of the wharves in the parish of Berthier and on Crane Island, in the County of Montmagny? If so, who are the persons employed to collect the tolls; and upon whose recommendation were they appointed?

Mr. COLBY. In regard to the wharves at Berthier and Crane Island, in the County of Montmagny, rules and regulations for the use and management of wharves, piers and breakwaters now the property of Canada, together with a tariff of tolls and dues, were approved by Order in Council of the 12th of June, 1889. By Order in Council of the 17th of February last, Mr. Joseph Painchaud was appointed wharfinger at Crane Island, and by Order in Council of the 24th ultimo, Mr. Charles Bouffard was appointed wharfinger of the Government pier at Berthier. The appointment of these gentlemen was made upon the recommendation of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

INSPECTION OF THE MILITARY COLLEGE.

Mr. DENISON asked, Is the rule in force, and acted upon, contained in clause 45 of Regulations for Military College, stating as follows:-"An independent inspection by a Board of Visitors, appointed by the Governor in Council, and reporting to the Minister of Militia, will be made once a year; such Board will not be a permanent body, but will consist of five members, of whom three shall be members of the Militia Staff, not less than two to retire annually;" and if so, when will next inspection take place?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to my hon. friend, I beg to state that the last inspection that was made of the college was on the 18th October, 1881. It has not been deemed necessary since to continue the inspection. Everything connected with the college passes through the hands of the President of the Board, who is also the Adjutant General of the forces. The General officer commanding also makes periodical and minute examinations of the Royal Military College.

ELIE TASSE AND L. D. DUVERNAY.

Mr. CHARLTON asked, Whether Elie Tasse, 1st class clerk, on the staff of the House of Commons, is absent from duty? If so, does he draw pay, and for what length of time has he been absent? Whether L. D. Duvernay, 3rd class clerk, on the staff of the House of Commons, is absent from duty? If so, does he draw pay, and for what length of time has he been absent?

Mr. SPEAKER. I beg to say to the hon. gentleman that the two gentlemen referred to in his question have reported to me during the Session, account of the state of their health. They are still under pay.

THE OUTRAGE ON THE BALTIC.

Mr. McNEILL. I desire to ask my hon. friend the acting Minister of Marine, whether a report has been presented with reference to the outrage upon the boy Hambley, and whether we shall have an opportunity of discussing it during this Session? I do not, of course, wish to discuss it at this moment, but the matter is one of the utmost gravity. There is no doubt that a very horrible outrage was committed which resulted in the death of this boy, and there is no doubt also that Captain Robertson, who was in command of the vessel, after the boy had leaped overboard in his desperation, did not do anything to rescue him. There seems to be no doubt at all that while the vessel was stopped, she was not stopped by the order of Captain Robertson, and that, on the contrary, he, after the vessel had lain there for a short time, steamed away, and the boy was left there to drown in Colpoy's Bay. It was a beautiful summer's night, and nothing prevented any one from rowing along the wake of the vessel-a child could have done it. But no boat was lowered, no effort was made, and the boy was left to drown. I do think that we ought to have some information with regard to this matter, and if a report is made, that we should have an opportunity of discussing it.

Mr. COLBY. This very sad case has been investigated by Lieut. Gordon, R.N.; full testimony has been taken, and his report suspends the certificate of Captain Robertson, as he finds that the captain was not altogether free from blame in the matter. The evidence has just reached the Department, but it has not been examined by the Minister, who is now absent. If the hon. gentleman wants any further information, of course the whole evidence can be laid before the House.

Mr. LAURIER. I am quite sure the hon. gentleman cannot be aware that it is the wish of every member of this House to have the report of that investigation laid upon the Table as early as possible. As we are nearing the close of the Session, the evidence should be placed at once on the Table of the House, so that we may have an opportunity of discussing it.

Mr. DAWSON. I think it is highly desirable, seeing that the matter is under investigation by the Government, and there are different opinions with regard to Captain Robertson's conduct, that no decided opinion should be passed upon it until the report of that investigation has been laid before the House. I believe Captain Robertson is not so culpable as some people suppose, that the matter has been greatly exaggerated, and I think the better way is to defer expressing any decided opinion upon it until we have the result of the investigation.

Mr. BLAKE. I see by the press that the report has been sent in, and that the decision of the tribunal was to suspend the certificate for twelve months. If that fact reached the public by the press in due order, it is simply fitting that the House should be possessed at the earliest moment of the materials upon which that result has been reached.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. COLBY. I suppose that the reason why that result reached the public is, that the judgment was rendered in open court, and was made known to the public at the time it was given. The testimony has just reached the Department, but it has not received the attention of the Minister on account of his absence, and I believe that, under the statute, this judgment of the court is subject to the revision of the Minister.

THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Order for the House in Committee on Bill (No. 116) respecting the Department of the Geological Survey.

Mr. LANDERKIN. On three occasions I have brought the case of the Baltic before the House, and I have given members who desired to discuss the matter an opportunity of discussing it then. I did not wish to go further in the matter after the Government informed me that they had appointed a commission to investigate the case, and to determine what should be done with reference to the conduct of the captain.

Mr. SPEAKER. This question is disposed of, and we have passed to the Orders of the Day.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It may be disposed of so far as others are concerned, but not so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SPEAKER. But the Order of the Day has been called.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend did not hear it, but certainly the Order of the Day was called before he rose. My hon. friend will have an opportunity of speaking on going into Supply.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will probably take an opportunity then.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 116) respecting the Department of the Geological Survey.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. DAWSON. Before the Bill is further proceeded with, I desire to remark, that I understand a number of members who take an interest in the Department of the Geological Survey are absent to-day. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) and the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson) are among those members, and as they have been studying the matter, it is advisable that the Bill be postponed until they are present.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I saw the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) within the last ten minutes, and he told me he was satisfied with the Bill and he had nothing to say with respect to it except words of commendation. With respect to the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Ferguson), I had also a conversation with him, and he, also, is perfectly satisfied with the Bill. Those are the two hongentlemen who have taken greatest interest in the matter.

On clause 4,

Mr. DAWSON. I gave notice some time ago of an amendment to this clause, and I may offer some explanation in regard to it. Clause 3 of the Bill gives the Government full power to make appointments and arrange the Department as it seems fit. The next clause (4) limits the authority of the Government, and gives certain power with respect to appointments to officers of the Department; it provides, indeed, that these appointments shall be entirely under their control. That clause says:

"4. No person shall, after the passing of this Act, be appointed to this Department under class (b) of Schedule A of 'The Civil Service Act,' unless,

"(a.) He is a Science Graduate of either a Canadian or foreign University, or of the Mining School of London, or the Ecole des Mines of Paris, or of some other recognised science school of standing equal to that of the said universities and schools, or a graduate of the Royal Military College, and in each case only after having served a probation of not less than two years in the scientific work of the Department; or unless,

"(b.) He had served a probation of not less than five years in the scientific work of the Department; or unless,

"(c.) He has had experience for the same number of years in similar work elsewhere."

This is very indefinite. There are graduates in different departments of science. This provision does not say that they should be science graduates in geology. Geology is a comparatively new science, and the fact is, that until recently, there could have been no science graduates therein. think it would be bad policy to place it within the power of the officers of the Department to say who should be appointed and who should not; and by this clause we practically exclude the Government. Science graduates in the schools of London and Paris are to be admitted. But are there not science schools in Germany, Russia, and Italy and other European countries, and in the United States, and why should we make a distinction in favor of the two schools mentioned? So long as people possess the necessary qualifications they should be allowed to come from any school whatever. It is further provided that they shall serve a probationary term of five years before they are employed on the survey. Geology, as I have said, is a comparatively new science, and the fathers of it were not science graduates. Going back less than half a century we find Hugh Miller, who was, if not the father, at least one of the most distinguished explorers of the time; he was simply a stone mason, and his name is heard the wide world over wherever true science is honored. But such a man could not, under this Bill, have succeeded in obtairing employment from this Government, although he was a thorough scientist. Another eminent man was the late Sir William Logan. Did he choose graduates from the schools of London and Paris as his assistants? No. He chose men from this country. And whom did he choose? Men many of whom have since become distinguished scientists themselves. Take, for example, Mr. Billings, of the Geological Survey, who has long since departed this life, but who has left works behind him which will live for ever. Was he a science graduate? Certainly not in geology. He was a law student at Ottawa, and during his inspections of the rocks here he was very much struck with the fossils of the lower Silurian deposits, which are so very common here. thoroughly studied them, and he became one of the most distinguished paleontologists in the world. Such a man as Mr. Billings would, however, be completely excluded if you adopt this clause. Then again, Sir, we have another very distinguished geologist, who was a great friend of Hugh Miller. I refer to the Duke of Argyle, father of our former Governor General the Marquis of Lorne. He was discoveries in his researches among the leaf beds of the Island of Mull; his writings on geology are highly interesting. If he were to come to Canada, or if some person like him were to come to Canada or it some person have to serve five years' probation before he could get any employment in the Geological Survey of this country. The present Director of our Geological Survey, had not, I am told, scientific titles from high universities when he took charge of the Geological Survey in Australia, but very much to his credit be it said, he has since become a very distinguished geologist. He did not know so much about it when he was first placed in the high position of a Director of a Geological Survey, but he has studied the science and mastered it, he is a self-taught geologist, and it is very much to his credit that he is so. Now, Sir, I would ask the hon. Minister, have we at the present moment, no persons in the Dominion who take an interest in geology; and who are skilled and practical geologists? The fact is that the study of geology has become very general throughout the Dominion of Canada. The discoveries of valuable minerals in various sections has opened a vast field for geological research throughout the Dominion, and we have in different parts of Canada men who are very well up in As one instance, I might mention Mr. Peter McKellar, who lives at Port William, on the shores of Lake Superior. This gentleman is a very clever geologist, and he has made the subject the study of his life. He has explained the relations of the different groups of rocks in his district the one with the other; the Aminikie with the Kewenian, and both with the Nipigon group. He has explained and investigated the relative ages of the trap overflows and beds of land in his part of the country, and your Geological Survey is indebted to him for much information. He has gone to great pains in posting your officials, and putting them right on the question of the relationship of the one set of rocks to the other. He is a scientific man, although self-taught, and his writings are considered worthy of a place in the records of our Royal Why should a law such as this be en-Society. acted to deprive the country of the services of such a man, and to put it in the power of others who have got into office to keep him out. I say that the whole system as proposed in the fourth clause of the Bill now before us, is wrong. Geology is a new science, and there are new discoveries made in it every day and new theories advanced. It is not so very long ago since we were told that coal could only exist in a certain horizon, that it must belong to the carboniferous period, and that it must have a more recent formation above it and a formation of Devonian age below. But, Sir, quite recently, coal has been discovered where it had no business to be. It has been discovered in very much more recent formations in the Rocky Mountains than it was supposed it could exist in and at Nanaimo, it has been found in a horizon much above where coal was formerly supposed to be, and where, according to the doctrines of the geologists of a generation ago, it had no business to exist. Why, Sir, new discoveries are being made in geology every day. It is not a fixed science as some other sciences are, and the country ought to be glad to avail itself of the researches. and knowledge, and experience of such men as Mr. a distinguished geologist and he made wonderful McKellar. Again, Mr. Richardson was for a long time attached to the Geological Survey, and although he was not a science graduate by any means, he rendered good service to the country. In view of all these facts, I would move:

That the fourth clause of this Bill be expunged.

In my opinion the third clause gives the Government all the power they require, and the effect of this fourth clause, if it is continued in the Bill, will be to give power to the officers who are at present in the Survey to make a monopoly of it and to shut out all others.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am sorry the hon. gentleman has taken exception to this clause, as it is one which was well considered and which was thought would be beneficial in raising the standard of the employés in that very important department. The hon. member (Mr. Dawson) objected to this clause, because it referred only to the Mining School of London and L'Ecole des Mines of Paris, but he forgot to see that it also referred to other recognised science schools of equal standard. Consequently, any student from any of the universities of Russia or of those other places which he mentioned, would be quite eligible for appointment under this clause. When this Bill was first presented in the Senate, a very large deputation waited upon me and raised the very same objections which the hon. member has raised this afternoon. The representations of that deputation resulted in sub-clause c being added to clause 4, by which it was thought the difficulty was got over. No doubt there are some self-educated geologists who are quite capable, and would be most useful servants of the Geological Survey; but it was thought that they ought, at any rate, to have a certain amount of experience before the Government should be asked to appoint Consequently, sub-clause c was added, which provided that when a person should have had the experience for the same number of years in similar works elsewhere, although he was not a science graduate, and had not the qualifications mentioned in sub-clause a, yet he would be eligible for a position in the Department. I think this is as far as we ought to go, and I hope the hon. member will not press his amendment. I am sure the only object he has is to keep up the standard and importance of the Geological Survey, and that really is also the object of presenting this Bill to the House. I think the amendment made in subclause c is really sufficient to carry out the hon. gentleman's wishes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it is intended by sub-sections b and c to meet the suggestions made in the amendment of the hon. member for Algoma, but I very much doubt, whether they are sufficiently comprehensive to accomplish that object. Sub-section c reads:

"He has had experience for the same number of years in similar work elsewhere."

Does that mean engaged in some official work elsewhere, or engaged in the employ of some large company in mining operations? The phrase might be held to mean, similarly employed in some Government Department.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is certainly not the intention. The intention is, that any one found qualified for any-branch of the Department will be eligible. I would, of course, be very glad to make that clear if it is not clear now.

Mr. Dawson.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would suggest, "similar work, official or otherwise, elsewhere."

On section 5,

Mr. DAWSON. I think science graduates might have worded this clause in a somewhat less clumsy form. It says, that the object of the Department shall be:

"To make a full and scientific examination and survey of the geological structure, mineralogy, mines and mining resources of Canada, and of its fauna and flora."

"To make a scientific examination and survey of the fauna and flora" is a rather strange expression.

Mr. DAVIN. If the words ran thus, I think the exigencies of grammar would be met: "and to enquire into and classify its flora and fauna."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not find that the Bill makes any provision for the continuance of the Museum. The hon. gentleman provides by section 11 for repealing the law by which the Museum was created, but he makes no provision in this Bill for its continuance, while he assumes that it is to be continued. The same provision must have been left out of the Revised Statute, which provides for classifying and arranging specimens for exhibition in the Museum, but omits the authority for its existence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is a part of the general system to have a Geological Museum.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The original Bill provided for the formation of the Museum.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; the Museum was in Montreal, and was moved here.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There was a geological collection in Montreal, but not a museum.

Mr. DAVIN I think the objection is met by section 7, which provides, that the Governor in Council may from time to time cause the enlargement of the Museum. How you can cause a museum to be enlarged, if you have not provided for its continuance, I do not know?

Mr. BLAKE. It has been suggested to me that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) ought to move an amendment to provide for an additional gallery for antiquities in this Museum.

Mr. DAVIN. That is provided for. You cannot have geological specimens without having antiqui-

Mr. BLAKE. But these are of brass, not of stone.

On section 5,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There is a very general desire for reports which would have reference to particular counties. The Geological Report is a very full and expensive work, and now when there are so many parties interested in boring for gas and oil, a small condensed report of each locality is much desired.

Mr. DEWDNEY. In 1885, the recommendation was made that the report should be published in parts, and that is now done. There is a very large number of them on hand, and they are sold from 10 to 30 cents.

Mr. BLAKE. The exploration of any one engineer for the season would be confined to some one locality, so that his report would give what the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It would be hard to make a system much more convenient than it is. Thirteen distinct reports have been printed this year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It would be impossible to have printed reports for each county in the Dominion, as the different geological appearances do not run within the boundary of the county. There are separate reports of the different engineers for the year's work, and those reports are always available. Parties can always refer to the general report, and then, if they require more particular information, they can get it on applying to the Geological Department. They can always get the particular report of the engineer who has explored any particular portion of the country.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. number for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) suggests that the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), in violation of the principles of the Liberal party, is proposing to the First Minister that he should gerrymander the report.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I expect to get a strong support from the gerrymander in 1892.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would suggest in clause b of section 5, to add the words at the beginning, "To afford a museum of geology, natural history, and to collect."

Mr. DEWDNEY. I second the hon. gentleman's views with regard to that, because I find natural history has been left out altogether from this Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Act of 1877 provides that the Museum shall be open to the public from ten o'clock till four o'clock in the afternoon, Sundays excepted, and shall be furnished with such books and specimens as are necessary for scientific reference in the object of the survey. This is omitted in the Bill and in the consolidated statute.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The latter portion, with reference to instruments and so forth, is in the Bill. The question of keeping open on Sundays was considered a departmental matter, which it is not necessary to mention.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In this clause it is provided that they are to collect and publish full statistics of the mineral production of Canada and to collect and preserve all available reports of artesian or other wells and of mines and mining works. There is no mention in the latter about publishing.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is the intent. That would be absolutely necessary, and I do not think there is any occasion to provide for it, but I have no objection to doing so. There has been some question raised by the Assistant Directors that this Bill might interfere with their standing, and I, therefore, propose to add the following clause:—

It is provided that nothing in this Act shall be understood to invalidate or interfere with the commissions as Assistant Directors previously issued by Order in Council to the scientific staff.

Amendment agreed to, Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

INDIAN ADVANCEMENT ACT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 132) to amend the Indian Advancement Act.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. LAURIER. This is the section which was suspended. I would have hoped that the hon. gentleman would have seen his way to strike it out altogether. The hon. gentleman is exacting from the Indians what no legislature would dare exact from any municipal council of white men. If, for any cause whatever, an Indian chooses to absent himself from the council, I would have no objection that, after a certain time, he should forfeit his We have a provision of that kind in the Province of Quebec in regard to municipal matters. If any municipal councillor absents himself without reasonable cause for two months, he ipso facto forfeits his seat. But I cannot see why either the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs should have the power to hold a sword over the head of such a man and compel him to act according to the will of the Superintendent General. If we look at the circumstances which caused this section to be drafted, we find that it has reference to the case of the Indians of Caughnawaga, a certain number of whom chose to absent themselves from the meetings of the council because the by-laws they had passed had not been sanctioned by the Superintendent General. It is known that the Indians passed a by-law to appoint a new constable, thereby making a saving of $150 a year, and the Superintendent General, because an agent—

Mr. DEWDNEY. I will agree to the withdrawal of that clause.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I should like the Minister to make an amendment to the fourth section, which requires that the reserves shall be divided into wards. This provision has proved to be a nuisance, and I know that, in my reserve, they have asked to have it done away with. In many places in Ontario, the ordinary municipal councils have ceased to divide the townships into wards.

Mr. LAURIER. At the first blush, I would be disposed to agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague). I cannot see any reason why that should be done in rural constituencies, though there may be a reason for it in cities.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In a small reserve like that in the constituency represented by my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague), that may not seem necessary. But in a reserve like that of South Brant, about ten miles by twelve, a very large township, if it could be made permissive in some way and let the Indians have a determination of that matter, I think it would be desirable.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I referred particularly to the Mississanga Reserve, which is a small reserve. I would be willing to accept the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Haldimand, provided it was made permissive.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

GRANTS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Bill (No. 138) respecting grants of public lands, was read the second time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee. He said:

The object of the Bill is to establish a uniform system with respect to grants of public lands in the North-West Territories, where the Torrens system has been established. In the Province of Ontario, by a statute passed in 1886, real estate, although held in fee, passes to the personal representative of a deceased person. So it is also in Manitoba, where the Torrens system is in force, and also in the North-West Territories, where the same system is likewise in force. The practice, however, has not yet been changed in the Department of the Interior, so far as regards the form of patent, and the form of patent is issued with the usual words of limitation, that is "A. or B. and his heirs." In some few cases which have occurred, perhaps through inadvertence, but as to that I am not able to state positively, patents have been issued to individuals without these words of limitation. It is proposed by the first section of the Bill to provide for these cases, by enacting that the patent shall issue to an individual, and that such will have the effect of conveying an estate in fee simple or an equivalent estate. It often happens that after a patent has been issued, the person to whom it was decided to issue it is dead. Under the circumstances the question has arisen as to how the patent should issue, and we desire, in order that the course may be in perfect harmony with the system adopted in the Provinces, that it should be issued to the executors or administrators as the case may Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. I presume at the present time we have statutory provision for these different dispositions?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes. Provincial legislation accomplishes the same object by giving construction to the words we place in the patent; but we think it is better that these patents should coincide with the Provincial legislation.

Mr. BLAKE. The object of the hon. gentleman is, in effect, to take statutory authority to deal with these matters in accordance with the law of the Province to which the Act applies?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

MARRIAGE WITH A DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 126) to amend an Act concerning marriage with a deceased wife's sister.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. Have the Legislatures of the other colonies, which have passed laws on this subject analogous to ours, embraced this degree of relationship in their Acts?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am unable to say that. My impression is that they specify the remotest degree within which a marriage should take place.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed. Sir John Thompson.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Sidney South Post Office, Custom House, &c$4,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What is supposed to be the entire cost of this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The cost of this building, when completed, will be about $26,000. We will require an additional amount of about $500 more after this vote, to complete the work.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much is the revenue from that place?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The revenue from the post office is $2,738; money orders issued, $53,000; Customs duties, $6,646; other revenues, $1,100.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the total?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. From post office, Custom house and other public sources, about $10,500 altogether.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much is required to complete this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total amount will be $28,522. Up to the 31st December last, the expenditure was $25,656.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that the receipts of the office are only $3,500.

Montreal Post Office—Granolithic pavement, &c., the city authorities contributing one-half the cost of the pavement.....$1,000

 $Mr.\ McMULLEN.$ Is that to be put on both streets.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary..... $13,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is for the boundary wall and the dormitory wing.

Mr. LAURIER. Is it to replace the wooden wall by a stone wall?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, I think so.

Brampton Public Building......$6,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to provide funds for carrying on the works up to the 1st July. The contractor pushed operations more rapidly than was anticipated. After this is expended, about $2,000 will be required to complete it. The total will be $32,095.

Napanee Post Office, Custom House, &c.
—To complete......$5,500

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total amount expended and to be expended, with this vote, is $43,182.

Mr. MULOCK. Why is it that Napanee gets $11,000 more for this class of work than Brampton? The towns are about the same size.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose the reason must be that the chief architect found that the wants to be provided for required a larger building at the one place than at the other.

Mr. MULOCK. That is a mere supposition. We are not inclined to be very particular, but that is a very weak explanation. What was the cost of land in each place?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At Napanee the land cost $3,000 and at Brampton $4,000.

Mr. MULOCK. The cost of the building at Brampton is $28,000 and at Napanee $40,000, a difference of $12,000 in favor of the latter. In this day of equal rights we ought to have an explanation. How comes it that Napanee is so highly favored, since both constituencies have been equally grateful towards the Administration?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The one place does not complain of the other. They both consider they are properly treated.

Mr. McMULLEN. What are the postal receipts of each place?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The postal revenue for Brampton is $5,025 and for Napanee $6,536.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is only $1,000 difference in the postal receipts, while there is $11,000 difference in the cost of the building. I find that for putting down and preparing ground in front of the building at Napanee it cost $893, and that putting down the pavement in front of the post office it cost $1,509.59. I suppose those items put together explain the reason why $11,000 have been virtually squandered there.

Strathroy Post Office, Custom House, &c. $5,000 Mr. CASEY. What will be the total cost? Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The probable cost will be $27,500.

Mr. CASEY. What is the postal revenue? Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Nearly $5,000.

Mr. CASEY. I would like seriously to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the claims of the town of Ridgetown, in my riding. is somewhat a smaller place than Strathroy, but is in the same class of towns. It is not a county town, and neither is Strathroy. Not knowing this estimate was to come up to-day, I did not prepare myself with figures as to the postal and Customs revenue, but I know that last year I found, on looking through the reports, they were both very considerable. Ridgetown is a place of 3,000 inhabitants or so-a good deal larger than Amherstburg or Aylmer, and several other towns where public buildings have been constructed. It is the centre of what may be called the garden of western Ontario, the district it serves in postal and Customs business, comprising a part of the Counties of Elgin and Kent. Its population is very enterprising and progressive, and I would urge on the Minister its claims to be considered in his next estimates for public buildings. I brought up the matter once or twice before, but perhaps did not impress its importance sufficiently on the hon. gentleman's notice. Of course Ridgetown suffers from the disadvantage of being represented by a member of the Opposition, but there is no knowing what effect the hon. gentleman's benevolence and generosity might have on the county. However, I do consider this place has a claim for public buildings in the amount of postal and Customs revenue collected there, and in the population of the town itself and surrounding country, and the enterprise of its people. I hope the hon, gentleman will be able to give this matter his serious consideration.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I certainly will do that.

Departmental Buildings, Ottawa— Increased and improved vault accommodation in Eastern Block for Finance Department....... $45,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government found that the vault there was too small and not safe enough, and, therefore, ordered a new vault, which will be completed probably in three months.

Mr. CASEY. This is a very large sum merely for increasing the vault accommodation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon, gentleman knew what similar accommodation cost at Montreal and Toronto, he would not find this beyond the ordinary.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was the work given by tender?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; and we took care the tenderer was a man accustomed to such work.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who has the contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Some one from Ontario, Messrs. Goldie & Co.

Pembroke Post Office, Custom House, &c.... $4,000

Mr. CASEY. Will the Minister state what is the population of Pembroke, and what are the postal and Customs revenues collected there?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The population in 1881 was 2,820. I suppose it is about 4,000 now.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The population is 4,500, according to the census taken last spring.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The postal revenue is over $4,500; money orders, $4,000; and savings bank deposits, $53,000.

Mr. CASEY. This is another instance of generosity, no doubt well bestowed, on the part of the Government. I would not say a word about it if it were not for the case of Ridgetown, to which I have already called attention. Pembroke seems to correspond to Ridgetown in almost every particular, except the population of the district which it serves. Ridgetown has a very much larger and richer district to be served, with more population, than Pembroke. I hope Ridgetown will be attended to next year.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). A census was taken last year in Pembroke to see whether any additional licenses could be granted, and the population was ascertained to be in the neighborhood of 4,500. The amount derived from the sale of stamps in that vicinity is about $6,000; the amount from Customs is about $25,000, and there is another service to the accommodated in this building, the Inland Revenue service, which collects about $20,000. I do not think any generosity has been displayed in that matter by the Government.

Mr. CASEY. I do not say Pembroke should not have the accommodation, but I say that other places should, and my figures in regard to Ridgetown are based on old returns.

Brandon Post Office, Manitoba..... $10,000

Mr. CASEY. How much has been spent on this post office, and what is the estimate for the future?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount expended up to the 31st December last is $16,919. When the work is completed, it will have cost between $45,000 and $48,000. After this vote is taken, we will have only about $550 to ask. The postal revenue there is $11,099, and the Customs revenue $7,725, making altogether about $19,000.

Mr. CASEY. That is a large sum for a place of the size of Brandon.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is a very growing place.

Mr. CASEY. It has not been growing so very much of late years. I do not think the population can be more than 4,000, and about $30,000 appears to be the amount spent in places of that population in Ontario and Quebec, while about $50,000 is to be expended in Brandon.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon, friend has no idea of what Brandon is now. It is one of the most advanced towns in the North-West Territories and has a population of about 5,000. In two years it will probably have twice that number, and it is surrounded by a very thickly-populated country.

Manitoba Penitentiary..... $4,000

Mr. CASEY. What is that for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for the cottages and outhouses for the chaplain, &c.

Mr. CASEY. Two years ago, I think, there was some difficulty as to the yard for the convicts to work and take exercise in. Is that provided for?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; there is no wall there yet; there is nothing but a fence.

Mr. CASEY. Then the convicts are confined to the building?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; they go out of doors, but, strange to say, there are very few escapes. It involves, of course, a little larger force of guards.

Mr. CASEY. What is the estimated total cost of this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That will cost between $40,000 and $42,000. This will complete the work, with the amounts that were voted in the ordinary Estimates.

Mr. CASEY. Are they now in a position to be

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; they are going on.

Regina-Residence for Lt.-Governor... $12,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to carry on the work of construction, to pay the contractor, and the amount now due, $5,190.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to impress upon the hon. the Minister of Public Works, the importance of pushing forward the jail at Regina. It is going to be a fine building, and has been under construction for some time, but a great deal more money is needed to complete it, and I hope the Minister will see his way to have the works pushed on and the Regina jail completed. Before leaving this topic I may say that I hope that, in the Supplementary

Mr. Casey.

Estimates that are coming down, provision will be made for what is a dire necessity in the North-West, at the present moment, at Medicine Hat, at Maple Creek, and at Moose Jaw, all three of them thriving towns, and all three of them with a considerable population around them. For instance, around Moose Jaw you have got one of the finest farming countries in the world, and a large farming population. Then south of Maple Creek you have got a large ranching country, nearly every ranche having been taken up, and you have cow boys, ranchemen, horse dealers and cattle dealers, constantly in Maple Creek. In Medicine Hat, you have again, the centre of a large farming population, and it is also the end of a railway division. It is an absolute necessity for the proper administration of justice in Medicine Hat, at Maple Creek, and at Moose Jaw, that there should be a court-house and a lock-up. It is not consonant with the dignity of justice that the Judges of the Supreme Court of the North-West Territories should hold their court in—

Mr. CASEY. A school house.

Mr. DAVIN. It is worse than that—they have got to hold their court in a tavern. In the Estimates for 1889 we had a sum for Moosomin, Wolsely, Maple Creek and Medicine Hat. Although these sums have not reappeared in the Estimates that have thus far been brought down, I do hope that the sum I see for similar purposes will be expended in these quarters, and that a further sum will appear in the Supplementary Estimates, so that we shall have structures in those three places I have mentioned that will answer the purpose to which they will be devoted.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I may say to the hon, gentleman that this matter has not escaped the attention of the Government.

Mr. KIRK. Can the Minister give us an idea where this money is to be expended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to cover an over-expenditure, partly up to the first of March of this year, and the balance is in connection with a similar service up to the end of the year.

Quebec-Rivière du Lièvre.....$20,000

Mr. LAURIER. This is a very large sum.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; I think this will complete the work. The total cost will be about $200,000.

Rivière Nicolet......$1,500

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to cover the work of the year.

Harbors and Rivers, Ontario...... $6,469

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will this amount of $4,200 complete the dredging at the River Thames entrance channel?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This amount of $4,200 is to cover the warrant of the Governor General for that amount issued in order to cover the amount expended to open the channel, which had been blocked. In regard to the general work of deepening the entrance, that may involve a large sum or it may be possible to carry it out with a moderate sum. The question is one which will require close study. If a large sum should be needed, it would become necessary to consider whether a still larger expenditure should not be made in order to build piers to scour the channel and prevent bars forming.

Telegraph Lines—Nova Scotia.—To pay the Dominion Telegraph Company for the additional length of line from Canso to Dartmouth, built in 1879-80...

Mr. KIRK. When was that line built?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was built at the time stated. The account remained for a long time in abeyance, the company claiming between $5,000 and $6,000. Finally, this amount was offered to the company, and accepted.

Fisheries $1,945

Mr. KIRK. What did the herring delegation cost! A sum appears in these Estimates for $1,800.

Mr. COLBY. That is the entire cost of the commission. Of that sum only $530 was allowed for remuneration to the two commissioners.

Mr. LAURIER. I should like an explanation of this item under this head of fisheries: "To pay the reward to Charles Adams for procuring in Lake Huron a true specimen of the Salmo Salar.

Mr. COLBY. The officers of the Department were desirous of ascertaining whether a certain quantity of fry which had been deposited in the Saugeen River had been successfully planted, and a reward was offered by the Department for a specimen of salmon that could be identified as being the product of that fry. A small sum of $20 was offered as a reward.

Tidal Observations...... $2,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is this a new item ?

Mr. COLBY. It has been found that there are a great many uncertain and unknown currents on the coast which were dangerous to navigation, and it has been thought necessary that tidal observations should be made in the interest of the safety of life and property.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is this intended to cover political currents?

Mr. COLBY. I do not think so.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Who is this work done by?

Mr. COLBY. Lieutenant Gordon, R.N.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There is a feeling among many people interested in navigation that it would be very desirable, if possible, to obtain information as to the change of the currents along the coast and on the Lower St. Lawrence. know an influential petition was sent to the Government asking for this. It is of course only an experiment, but the vote is a very useful one if the money will be properly expended.

agree to the views of the claimant. There has been a good deal of inter-communication between the claimant and the Department, and a very considerable abatement of the claim has been effected. The original claim on account of the steamer Princess Louise was $8,500, and it has been reduced to $4,100. The matter was submitted to Mr. Croker, the English Lloyds' surveyor, under whose instruction the vessel was built, and the Department settled the claim at somewhat less than he estimated should have been the proper allowance.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman, before he asks us to agree to this vote, should bring down the papers connected with it. This transaction has been standing for seven years, and if Mr. O'Brien had any claim it should have been paid before this. It looks now as if some extra pressure had been put upon the Government to cause them to keep Mr. O'Brien out of a contract on which I understand he suffered loss. I have heard that Mr. O'Brien and his friends had been urging this claim for a long time, and now it would appear successfully. Is this for extra work, or on what account? The hon. Minister should give us more information.

Mr. FOSTER. No doubt the Minister will be able to give all that information. I may say with reference to this claim that the fact of its being in the Estimates now does not prove that any extra pressure was brought to bear on the Government. The claim was before the Department in my time as Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The reason, both in Mr. McLelan's time and in my own why it was not paid was that Mr. O'Brien would not accept the sum offered. I went through the papers very thoroughly, and I offered Mr. O'Brien what I believed was a fair sum, about $8,000, in final settlement of his claim, but he refused to accept it. I believe the sum offered by Mr. McLelan was the same.

Mr. LAURIER. Did you offer that out of good nature only?

Mr. FOSTER. No; it was after a thorough examination of the papers. I think the amount he claimed was $14,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. Minister has not told us what this was for.

Mr. COLBY. It was for extras and for additional outlay on the hull.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I really think the hon. Minister should give us a statement of the claim and a copy of the contract, and let us know what the contractor did and what he did not do, what he asks for extra services, and so on? because, in the very nature of the case, after having stood for such a number of years, the matter would require explanation.

Mr. COLBY. It stood, not because the Government did not recognise that Mr. O'Brien had a claim, but they were not prepared to pay as much To provide for the claim of Jotham O'Brien for extras in connection with the building of the steamers
Princess Louise in 1883, and Lansdoone in 1884, as per O. C.,
9th December, 1889..............$8,844 32
Mr. COLBY. These claims have been pending of it, it will be laid on the Table. If he gives me a memorandum of the particular information he for several years, but the Department could not a memorandum of the particular information he desires on the subject, I will bring it down before concurrence.

Committee rose, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee,)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why do you give this gentleman two years' salary and the rest of the officials only one?

Mr. COLBY. On account of greater length of service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How long has he been in the service?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At least 20 years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the particulars connected with this grant? What is the cost of the buildings, and how many Indian girls are being educated in this institution?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This school was established about two years ago by the Bishop of New Westminster. He has purchased the house and grounds for it, but there is a small piece of ground adjoining the building which he is anxious to add to the site. When I was in British Columbia last summer, I inspected the school, and I saw that it was a very well conducted institution, being carried on under the auspices of the Bishop and Protestant sisters, who came out from England to take charge of it. When I was there fourteen or fifteen girls were in attendance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do we contribute to the annual expenditure?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is the first application. The item is $1,500 towards the assistance of the college and $500 to purchase a small piece of ground adjoining.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you propose to contribute to the annual cost?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; so much per head for a certain number of children.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you propose to bring down in the Supplementary Estimates a further vote for next year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman does not know what proportion the schools will grow to. At present there are four-teen there.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; I do not think the establishment will cover much more than that at resent.

Mr. Colby.

Mr. BLAKE. Has an arrangement been made for an annual grant for pupils?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; this is an application made to me by the bishop for this year, when I was over there.

Mr. BLAKE. Is he an Equal Rights bishop?

Mr. McMULLEN. I think this is one of the objectionable grants we should not allow to pass without protest. This is a denominational school to every intent and purpose. We will possibly next have an application from the Presbyterians for assistance for their schools, and from the Methodists and Catholics for similar assistance. This is putting in the thin end of the wedge. The other denominations will claim grants on the ground that they have an equal right to them as the English Church. This system should not be introduced into the North-West. If any religious denomination wants to establish a school, which is to be a sectarian school, they should establish it out of their own contributions. objection to our assisting non-sectarian schools for the instruction of the Indians in which they can get a general education; but I object decidedly to the system the hon. gentleman is introducing, and shall offer a resolution, when we go into Concurrence, in opposition to this item.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Methodist body have already applied and have had a vote this year for a school in British Columbia. This vote has been pressed upon me by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson), and I received his thanks and those of the people interested, only last Friday. We have also, this year, voted grants towards aiding the industrial school in British Columbia, carried on under the auspices of the Catholic Church. The denominations have already spent a great deal of money for education, and this will be really a small grant annually towards carrying on these institutions.

Mr. O'BRIEN. What the hon. member for North Wellington says just amounts to this, that these Pagan children are not to be educated in Christianity. It is wrong, according to him, to teach these Pagans to become Christians. That is a new version of right and wrong, which is not in accord with any theory ever promulgated in this House before. The Government is perfectly right. The position of these children is altogether different from that of the children of white people. The hon, gentleman's argument might possibly apply to the latter; but in this case, where it is simply a question of leaving these children as Pagans or bringing them up as Christians, the course pursued by the Government is the right one, and has also the advantage of being extremely economical. is a mere perversion of terms, for which nothing but the most extraordinary partisanship can account, for an hon. gentleman to take the stand which the hon, member for North Wellington has taken.

Mr. McMULLEN. I take no such grounds whatever. If the hon, gentleman understood me as taking such grounds, he is mistaken.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I understood you perfectly.

Mr. McMULLEN. I say it is wrong to make denominational grants. If it is necessary to have an institution in that section of the country to educate Indian girls, which will be non-denominational, I have no objection to the Government granting its assistance; but when the school is absolutely denominational, I object to its being given a grant, as we would be then laying down a system which would be pernicious in itself and which should be opposed certainly by my hon.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It never will be.

Mr. McMULLEN. Perhaps it will.

Wages of crew of steam launch, British Columbia, from October, 1889, to June, 1890..... $1.080

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is in order to enable the agent to visit the Indian reserves. Heretofore it was difficult for him to get around as often as he should in canoes, being often delayed for weeks at a time.

Cost of building Kuper Island and Kamloops' Industrial Schools....$17,277

Mr. DEWDNEY. That was commenced about two years ago, Last year some eight thousand or nine thousand dollars were devoted for a building, and it was found, when completed, it cost some 59,000 more, which we are asking for to-day. The institution will accommodate from sixty to eighty pupils. The principal has only just taken charge, and the other officers are not yet appointed. It has only just been finished.

Sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman estimate will be the annual cost of keeping up these two schools?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The annual cost of the Kamloops school will be about $5,000, and the other about the same.

Mr. McMULLEN. What church is this school under the control of?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Kootenay, Kamloops and Kuper Island schools are all under the control of the Roman Catholics. The Indians there are entirely Roman Catholic.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What tribe is that for?

Mr. DEWDNEY. These are Crees. They have had an agent appointed there recently who attends to all the farming, and this is the only other officer there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the interpreter a Half-breed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Maintenance of twenty pupils at $100 each per annum, at the Elkhorn Industrial School.........$2,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister promised, when the principal Estimates were under consideration, to bring down a detailed statement, showing the number of schools, and the amount of money voted for the maintenance of each, and the deno-

I am not at present questioning the propriety of this policy being pursued among the Indians. That is a subject that may very fairly be discussed at some other time. I only now repeat what I said on a former occasion, that, when this system was introduced-and I think it was by the Government of the right hon. gentleman who is now the Prime Minister, and was continued by us—it was understood that no engagements would be entered into which would tie the Government down to the maintenance of these schools permanently, but that the Government would be at liberty to establish secular schools whenever they thought proper, instead of aiding denominational schools among the Indians. But I do not understand the position of the hon. gentleman, who has on more than one occasion maintained that it is wholly at variance with the principles of our Constitution to recognise any connection between Church and State. I think the hon member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), in discussing a certain question here last year, read extracts from the Act secularising the Clergy Reserves in order to show that it was settled that there should be no connection between Church and State in any form. If the doctrines which was laid down by that hon, gentleman and by those who supported him in and out of this House was correct, it is clear that these schools should be left to the maintenance of those who hold the religious views which are taught in these institutions. Schools may be supported among the Indians in the same way as any other schools in the country are supported. I am not saying that this would be the best or the most efficient system to be adopted under present circumstances, but I do say that it is the only one consistent with the views which were maintained by these gentlemen last Session in this House, and which have been maintained by them out of the House between last Session and this. It is, therefore, very important that the Minister should lay before us a full and detailed statement in order that we may know how the principles and the practice of these gentlemen coincide with each other. It would be only fair to the country that this should be done, so that these gentlemen might have an opportunity of either sustaining their views or abandoning the doctrines which they laid down.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I will not now enter into a discussion of the question of the connection of Church and State in the abstract, but the principles involved here are so different from the general principle, that I do not think it is involved. When it is considered that these Indians are Pagans who have to be converted to Christianity, the country has to adopt the best, the simplest, and the most economical mode of converting them. I do not care whether these votes have anything to do with the question of Church and State or not, if they are carrying out the great object of converting Pagans into Christians.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I did not suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. O'Brien) would undertake seriously to maintain that it was a portion of the duty of Government to convert Pagans into Christians. I did not suppose that he would seriously argue that the Great Commission was issued to the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government. I supposed that the instruction to mination to which each of these schools belonged. | go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature was given to clergymen, called to the work, and I expected that the hon. gentleman would say that that applied to upholding the principles of the gospel among the Indians as well as among the white population. I am not sure that there are not as great sinners in the neighborhood of these Parliamentary buildings as there are among the Indians on the plains of the North-West, and the hon. gentleman might find it as necessary to call in the aid of the State to work amongst the white population as amongst the Indian population. If the hon, gentleman is right in the views which he has put forward, and if the vast majority of this House are wrong, if we are in such benighted condition, it seems to me it would not be less meritorious for the hon. gentleman and those who approved of his views to devote a portion of their attention to converting those who are opposed to him and them as well as to the conversion of the Indian children. There was a time when the vast majority of mankind was pagan, but I never heard that there was an appeal made to Cæsar to devote a portion of the public funds to educating the pagans of the Roman Empire in Christianity, and I do not see why the hon. gentleman should contend that it should be done now. I am not saying that this is not the best mode to adopt at the present moment.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That is all I say.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Oh, well, but the hongentleman argued here last year, and appealed to the country, and sought to inflame public passions on the subject, that it was in the public interest that all connection between Church and State should be severed, and that every appropriation in aid of any church enterprise was a violation of the principles of the Constitution.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I may say to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills); as I said the last time the hon. gentleman brought this subject up, that I was not aware that any decision had been arrived at by which a change might be made against the system on which we have been carrying on Indian schools in the North-West Territories and Manitoba. I thought the law was so distinct with regard to it that we had very little discretion in the matter. However, the hon, gentleman asked me to prepare a memorandum, and I have it here in detail, with regard to every Indian school in British Columbia, North-West Territories, Manitoba and the older Provinces. There are in all 223 schools, and I have here the information which he asks showing the financial aid given by the different denominations towards those schools. Besides, they are assisted in many ways which we cannot calculate, in the shape of contributions of clothing, of which immense quantities have been sent to the North-West. By looking over the salaries paid to the school teachers, the hon. member will be convinced that they must receive other support besides that which they receive from this Government. It would take me some time to go over the whole of this return, but if the hon. gentleman wishes I will hand it to him across the floor, or we will agree that it shall be published in the Hansard.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Lay it on the Table.

Mr. Mills (Bothwell).

Mr. McMULLEN. It must be understood that if it is laid on the Table it can be inspected by anybody who desires.

4048

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Let it be published in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I quite agree with the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) in reference to this matter. It was very much desired last year by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) that there should be entire separation between Church and State. In so far as that hon, member went on that occasion, I quite agreed with him, but I could not understand at that time how an affair of another Province in payment of an old debt, should be any connection between Church and State, yet the hon. gentleman could see in that any amount of connection between Church and State. But on this occasion when money is granted to the Church to which the hon. member belongs, he sees no connection at all between Church and State. Apparently the Government in this case have spiked the hon, member's gun, and he has not a single word to say, because it is going to Christianise those Indian children. But, then, again he is willing to allow a grant to be made to the Catholic Church because, at the same time, he gets a grant for his own church, and then, of course, there is no connection between Church and State. He cannot see, his eyes, apparently, are blinded to the fact, that this is a connection between Church and State that we on this side of the House have contended against, although there may be exceptional cases where it may be very desirable that such a thing should be. But the general rule we have always upheld; if my hon. friend sits on this side of the House he must uphold that rule too, he must uphold the entire separation of Church and State; otherwise he will have to go back and sit with his Tory friends on the other side of the House, because we cannot permit him to come here and go there just as it suits his peculiar views. Now, last year when he took this exception I quite agreed with him. I wanted to see the fullest and most pronounced separation between Church and State—I hope the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) will not go out, I would like to hear his views on that question too; I do not want him to give any uncertain sound. I want them all to take their stand along with me, because, ever since I have been in the House, so far as I know, I have always supported this prin-Possibly sometimes some of these ciple. estimates have slipped through that I did not notice, but whenever my attention was called to them, I never gave an uncertain sound. I am sorry to see that the liberal views that the hon-member for Muskoka espoused last year, have all vanished now, and that he is prepared, as he was the other day, to rule in the lower regions with his Tory friends rather than serve with us in Heaven.

Mr. DAVIN. In this case, as it seems to me, there is no such crux as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) would lead us to suppose, and my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), from whom I differed last year, is not in the illogical position that the hon. member for Bothwell thinks he is. My hon. friend from Muskoka can maintain that it is quite improper to have any connection between Church and State, and yet maintain that it is quite right that this Government should take some charge of the religious culture of these Indian children. What are the facts? When we talk of the State we talk of that which is made up of free citizens. These Indians are in the position of children, and the Government is—the State—towards those Indians in loco parentis. It would be quite improper if the Government did not take some cognisance of the religious teaching of these Indians. When, prior to any action on the part of the Government the Catholic Church in one place, the Presbyterian Church in another, the Methodist Church in another, had gone in and converted some of those Indians to Christianity, why, the Government would be wanting in its duty, wanting in its position as guardian of these Indians, if it did not join hands with the various bodies in attending to their religious culture. The fact is that there is no such cruz in this matter; it is a confusion of language, and the eloquence of my hon. friend here (Mr. Landerkin) which is always amusing, and the logic of my hon. friend from Bothwell, which is always irresistible, at the present time are both at fault.

Mr. BLAKE. I find in this return just placed in my hands, that there are 84 Church of England schools, 33 Methodist schools, 80 Roman Catholic schools, and 10 Presbyterian schools throughout the Dominion, which are assisted by Government grants. To all this the advocate for the separation of Church and State sees no objection; but I am sorry to grieve his soul by telling him that there are 16 non-denominational schools which he ought to move should be abolished in face of the equities as applied to the Red population, as compared with the equities as applied to the White population.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The theory that this Government should undertake the religious care of the people of this country, which has been propounded by the hon. member for Assiniboia—

Mr. DAVIN. No. I distinctly said that the Indians are not of the people at all; they are outside the people of this country, they are the wards of the country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I understood the hon. member to say that it was the duty of this Government to take care of the religious culture of the people of this country.

Mr. DAVIN. No.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I believe the Church is the legitimate agency to look after the religious culture of the people of this country. I think it would be lamentable for this Government, or for any one on the floor of this House, to give expression to any idea that would lead the people to believe that the functions that belong to the Church can be arrogated by the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the explanation of this item of $300 for four working oxen for the Sarcee reserve.

Mr. DEWDNEY. These cattle were purchased in 1888-89, but the vouchers were not presented in time fer the accounts to be paid out of the vote; in consequence, I am obliged to ask the money now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How comes it that the price reaches $100 per acre for 3 acres for St. Paul's Industrial School?

Mr. DEWDNEY. An examination was made of the site, and it was found that if three acres in question could be obtained a very large extent of drainage would be obviated. It was high land, and it was found more economical to build the institution on it. After consultation with the Public Works Department and the agent of the Interior Department it was thought desirable to procure it; and we saved money by doing so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of St. Paul's Industrial School?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This amount will complete it; I think the total cost will be between $12,000 and $13,000 The institution is about twelve miles from Winnipeg.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How long have any of these schools been in operation?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Qu'Appelle school has been at work for four years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have any Indians been turned out yet?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, several; and several of these are now working their own farms on the reserve. The other day I received a letter from one of these Indians, a nicely written epistle, referring to some matters of his own. Several girls have also left the institution and gone into domestic service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought the special object of the institution was to train them so that they might afterwards be employed in teaching and educating their own people.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The argument adduced when the subject was brought up was that the girls should be educated as well as the boys, in order that the Indian boys when they left the institutions would be able to marry Indian girls who had been equally well educated.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). A return brought down does not give any further information than financial particulars as to salaries and votes of money. It would be convenient to have a statement submitted containing all the information on this subject.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I will attend to the hon. gentleman's request.

Mr. CHARLTON. How long has this institution at Regina been in operation?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The principal was appointed at the end of last summer, and the school has merely gone into operation?

Mr. CHARLTON. How large a quantity of wood did this individual guard, for which I find an item: "John Russell, guarding wood, &c, on St. Peter's reserve, $442?"

Mr. DEWDNEY. Several thousands of cords of wood were cut on the reserve, on the road allowance on the south side of St. Peter's reserve and on the east side of the river. After it had been piled it was found to be disappearing very rapidly, and it was necessary to employ men to watch it. Two or three prosecutions occurred, and then the thieving stopped. Not only was that timber watched, but also timber on other parts of the reserve. I made special enquiries in regard to this matter, and I found we saved money by having this timber watched, or it would have disappeared altogether.

Mr. DAVIN. There is a point to which I would like to draw the hon. Minister's attention. It is quite right to guard the interests of the reserve, but, as the hon. Minister knows, there are sometimes cases where, in consequence of the Indians, white people suffer. There is at present at Medicine Hat the case of Saunderson, which I brought before Mr. Hayter Reed recently, and I sent to him the full papers, which he no doubt sent to the hon. Minister. I had several cases, before the hon. gentleman became Minister, in regard to these matters; and what I find is, that whenever a white man suffers at the hands of the Indians there is from the Department of Indian Affairs—whether Mr. White is Minister of Indian Affairs, or Mr. Vankoughnet is Deputy Minister, or Mr. Hayter Reed is communicated with—a non possumus always; there is great unwillingness to acknowledge that they should pay for any depredation on the part of the Indians, or any loss whatever suffered in consequence of the Indians. One of the arguments used does not strike me as altogether conclusive, although I admit to some extent the force of it. One of the arguments is, that if we once admit there is a claim, we open a gate through which improper and unjust demands will enter. grant the danger that if we admit claims recklessly we shall have a sufficient number of claims, but I think, in the case of Saunderson, and in one case which happened at Touchwood Hills, there was a prima facie case made out. All I would at present urge on the attention of the Minister is this, that, if I may use a word which has become classical in this House, some modus vivendi might be arrived at, some means whereby we might ensure the repayment of the loss of a white settler, when he really suffered loss, and also guard against unjust claims being presented and prosecuted and made effectual. I do not want at present to press this matter more than merely to call the attention of the Minister to it.

To pay the over-expenditure as per statement attached in passing Robinson Treaty annuities during five years, from 1884 to 1889.... $2,620 76

Mr. DEWDNEY. It appears that a census is taken of the Hurons every five years, and during some years we required a little more money than we voted and some years a little less. In 1884 and 1885 we did not expend all the vote, but in 1886, 1887 and 1889, more Indians came in and we over-expended. The total amount expended was $4,799.76, and the total unexpended, $2,179, leaving this balance of $2,620.76.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it is about time that this little difficulty should be settled between the Governments. My impression is that the Ontario Government is responsible for the annuity. That is my contention, and I think it has been adopted.

 Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You are quite right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know from the Minister of Finance whether these long-pending disputes between Ontario and Quebec are in process of settlement?

Mr. FOSTER. They are in process of settlement. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have heard the statement for the last eight or ten years, that they were going to be settled within a year.

Mr. Dewdner.

Mr. FOSTER. They are in satisfactory process of settlement. The case is being mutually made up for final settlement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What time do you expect to complete it?

Mr. FOSTER. I hope before the 1st July next.

To enable Department to pay certain amounts for medical services (Indians, Nova Scotia) which the appropriation for 1889-90 was insufficient to cover.

Mr. KIRK. Can the Minister tell us who received this money?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I recollect at this moment only the names of two. They are both Drs. Allison, father and son, I think, but they live at different parts of the Province.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). In what county?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Digby.

Mr. KIRK. Could the hon. Minister tell me whether there have been any changes made in the physicians appointed to attend to the Indians in Antigonish and Guysborough?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There are no changes that I know of.

Mr. KIRK. There used to be a physician at Guysborough and one in Antigonish, and I hold in my hand a letter from the Indian agent actually dismissing one of these physicians, and the agent informed the other physician that he could not guarantee any payment for medicine given to the Indians, because the Department comtemplated a change. This was some time in May last, and that is the reason I asked the Minister whether a change had not been made. I will read the letter of the agent, which is as follows:—

"HEATHERTON, 8th May, 1889.

"J. C. MACKINNON, M.D., "Antigonish.

"Dear Sir.—At the request of a large number of the Indians of this district who wished to have Dr. Cameron attend to them in their physical infirmities, I have consented to their wishes, and have this day wrote to Dr. Cameron to attend to the Indians. As it does not make much difference to you, you will, therefore, after this date not attend to the Indians. As I have to refuse them so many things, I did not feel like refusing this request of theirs, as I have no doubt you do not care.

"I am yours truly."

"I am, yours truly,
"W. C. CHISHOLM."

This is the letter to the doctor at Antigonish, who had been attending the Indians for many years. He wrote to the doctor in Guysborough, from whom he received a reply, dated March 31, 1890, as follows:—

"We have a number of Indians here who require medical treatment, and I think it is very unfair that they are deprived of medical aid. I have had to refuse them treatment for some time past, as the Indian agent at Heatherton wrote not to give them anything further. He said he could not guarantee my bill, as the Department at Ottawa contemplated making a change."

M. DEWINEY I think I now heads to ex-

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think I may be able to explain that. My deputy did contemplate making a change, with the object of reducing the medical expenses in both Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. He submitted his proposition to me, and after consulting the gentlemen from that part of the country, I considered that it was not practicable, and I so informed my deputy. Probably that might have been the change intimated to the agent. I may state that we have a good deal of difficulty in regard to medical services in both of those Provinces. The Indians wander about a good deal, and when they are away from home they go to a doctor without having received any order from the agent; so that bills are forwarded to us from medical men in different parts of the Provinces, without any certificate from the agent, and we have to take a round-about way to get the certificate. The medical service in both those Provinces is very unsatisfactory, and I hope to get it on a better footing. With regard to Dr. Cameron—I do not recollect his name—I will enquire into the matter if the hon. gentleman wishes.

Mr. KIRK. I have only this to say with regard to the reduction of expenses, that I am sure the Minister could not contemplate making much reduction in the district I refer to, because the medical officers in that district, which comprises two counties, and in which there are 168 Indians, were confined to $80 a year.

Towards cost of artesian well at Del-

Mr. CHARLTON. How many artesian wells have the Government aided in being sunk in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and to what extent have they been sunk?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There has been very little done in Manitoba. The only work of any magnitude in that respect has been at Deloraine, where a well is now sunk to a depth of something over 1,400 feet, and it is confidently anticipated that the same current of water will be reached there that was reached at Devil's Lake, 60 miles to the south, where a very powerful well, one of the most powerful, I think, on the continent, has been struck. It was visited by Dr. Selwyn last year, and we find that at Deloraine the boring is through exactly similar strata. The borers have reached the stratum next above the gravel from which the water was obtained at Devil's Lake, and we anticipate with great certainty that we shall get a powerful flow of water.

Mr. CHARLTON. How copious is the flow at Devil's Lake?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not know exactly, but the stream which is from a 7-inch pipe, is thrown about 15 feet in the air.

Mr. CHARLTON. That was put down by private enterprise, I believe?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does this come to be required?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the first place, the estimate was rather too moderate last year. In the second place, in consequence of the failure of the crop, there has been an enormous rise in the cost of forage for the whole force. This amount of $30,000 in excess of the original estimate, has been rendered necessary in consequence of the failure of the crops in certain portions of the Territories, particularly in the northern districts, owing to drought. In the fiscal year of 1888-89 oats cost 37 to 38 cents per bushel, while those required for the current fiscal year, 1889-90, cost $1.25 per bushel. At Regina, oats this year cost 54 cents per bushel, against 20 cents last year; and hay has also been scarce and expensive throughout the Territories. Potatoes were a total failure at Battleford, Prince Albert and Edmonton. Despite this rise in prices, the police force has not cost more than in former years. In 1887-88, it cost $862,965; in 1888-89, $829,701; in 1889-90, we voted last Session $723,000 and are now voting $30,000, making a total of $753,426. Thus the expenditure for the fiscal year 1888-89 was $32,364 less than in 1887-88, and the expenditure for the fiscal year 1888-89, even with this additional $30,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that, both in explanation of this item and of the item passed to provide seed grain for the Indians, great distress is laid on this drought. Over what area did that extend?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That extended pretty generally throughout our reserve, but more along the line of railway in the south than in the north. Potatoes, which were put in later than the grain, were put into dry ground, there was not sufficient moisture to start them, and the potato crop especially, and the root crop generally, was a total failure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How far east did it commence?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It commenced west of the western boundary of Manitoba, and extended along the railway, principally south of the railway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. South of the railway covers what used to be described as the arid belt, and, I am afraid, only too truly. This is not the first, nor the second, nor the third time in which we have had droughts prevailing over great portions of the Territories, east and west, along the Canadian Pacific Railway in that region.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the character of the small arms with which the Mounted Police are armed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You will find all that in the report. There are a great many Winchester repeating rifles, which are found to be very efficient.

Mr. CHARLTON. Have precautions been taken to prevent the Indians from obtaining these improved arms? It has been found in the United States that the Indian warriors obtained the best class of arms and ammunition, and the Indian wars cost the United States Government many millions of dollars. If our Government are not alive to the importance of this matter, it may result in great trouble to ourselves in the future.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it is possible to prevent traders crossing the line at all points and bringing in arms. I will, however, remind the hon. gentleman that, when I made the proposition some time ago, and asked for a vote of money in order to get a supply of fowling pieces, so as to induce the Indians to exchange and give them a sum of money, there was a great deal of laughter on the other side.

ern districts, owing to drought. In the fiscal year | Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How far did of 1888-89 oats cost 37 to 38 cents per bushel, while the projected exchange with the Indians work?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it was successful.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the number of Mounted Police?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. One thousand men.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the hon. gentleman anticipate being able to reduce that number?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot understand, when we have a railway from one end of the country to the other, why it is necessary to have a thousand men there at a cost of a million dollars a year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, there is a railway running from opposite Dover right through Europe, and I do not think that decreases the number of police in Russia or Germany or any of the countries on the continent of Europe, and we have a country to look after as large as any of them and a little larger. The one thousand men here are doing the work it takes twenty thousand men to do in the United States.

Mr. McMULLEN. What number of arrests were there last year, and convictions? What particular work have they done?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would recommend my hon friend to read this little volume, which is the yearly report, and he will find all he wants there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman read it himself? I think he confessed last year to not having read it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not read it last year, but I did this year.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the hon. gentleman were disposed to be economical, he might fairly hold out some hope for this House and the country that, at no very distant day, he would be able to reduce that enormous expenditure on the Mounted Police. The people are paying a million dollars a year to support the Mounted Police, and a million a year to feed the Indians. The hon, gentleman told us, some years ago, that we were going to have a mine of wealth in that country, that we were going to have some $60,000,000 out of it by the year 1890. In place of that we are spending enormous sums there and getting nothing back. We are burying money there. I suppose the hon. gentleman anticipates a return at some future day, but it will be long after he has ceased to sit here and many others of us I am afraid, judging by the way it is being administered now, what with Indian reserves, donations to church schools, and all that sort of thing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon, gentleman says we are spending a million dollars a year upon the Indians, and that that is a very great extravagance. If he would suggest a mode of decreasing that expenditure, we would be very glad to carry it out. Perhaps the hon, gentleman has read Dean Swift's suggestions as to the best means of reducing the expenses of the people in Ireland. He suggested that, by judicious training, the people might eat one another up, and so the expense would be saved. As long as the Indians are in the North-West we cannot allow them to starve.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do not give us ancient history; give us something modern.

4056

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) has been making modern suggestions, and I am giving him ancient illustrations. As to the thousand men in the Mounted Police, I say that is a very moderate force for that country. I believe we will have to increase that number. I believe there will be a great body of miners coming in from the United States. hon. gentleman is not ignorant, I hope, of the large mineral resources which are being developed in the North-West and in British Columbia, not to speak of Ontario and the eastern part of Canada. I believe there will be a large influx of population there, and perhaps it will be an unruly population. Of course those people will be a great source of wealth, but the law must be maintained, and we must not have scenes in that country such as we read of in Bret Harte's works and elsewhere, as having occurred in California during the mining craze. I cannot hold out any hope of reducing the Mounted Police force, at all events for some time to come.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. DAVIN. I desire, Sir-

Mr. MITCHELL. I think I have the floor.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has the floor.

Mr. DAVIN. For once I have repressed the irrepressible. I am sick——

Mr. MITCHELL. I know you are.

Mr. DAVIN. I am sick of hearing such remarks as have fallen from the hon. member from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) in reference to the North-West. He comes here to tell us in doleful tones that we are spending a million of dollars a year on the Mounted Police, and spending a large amount of money on the Indians. The right hon. gentleman who leads the Government, has properly stated that that country has been taken from the Indians and that we cannot allow them to starve, and, at the same time, that there is a necessity for keeping up the Mounted Police force. When the hon, gentleman speaks of getting nothing from the North-West, let him talk to the merchants in his own part of the country; let him talk to the merchants in Wellington or in any part of western Canada; let him talk to the merchants in Toronto -as I talked to them no longer ago than Saturday last—and they will tell him, that among their best customers now are the people of the North-West. We are paying taxes, we are consuming goods on which we pay taxes which help to support the country, and it is an unstatesmanlike view to take this position, which I have known taken by children -I have known children sow seed in a flower pot and expect it to germinate in a few hours, and that is the position taken by the hon. gentleman. The North-West is a country possessing vast wealth. You must not only look to the present and to what is tangibly before you, which is a very large matter even now, but you must look to the country as it will be in the future, which will repay a hundredfold all you are expending upon it to-day.

We have heard such state-Mr. McMULLEN. ments from better authorities than the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). Years ago we heard statements from the Government benches as to the enormous wealth we were going to receive from that North-West. We have to express the regret that we are compelled to expend the enormous amount of money which we have to expend there. The right hon, gentleman asks me if I have read Dean Swift. I did read Dean Swift years ago, but of recent years I have been studying the political history of Sir John A. Macdonald, more particularly in regard to the North-West, and I say that the money he expends there is enormously extravagant, and is a great drain upon the people of this country. I am sure that that country could be administered far more economically if another Government were in power. If the hon. gentleman desires me to suggest, as he says, the way to reduce the expenditure in that country, I would suggest that he should cut off his inspectors of ranching lands, his inspectors of colonisation companies, his inspectors of timber limits, and other persons of that kind. Let him cut off the enormous expenses now incurred for supplies for the Indians. Not 40 per cent. of the amount expended for the Indians goes to them. About 60 per cent. goes to the officials of the hon. gentleman. If the right hon. gentleman would study economy, he might easily reduce the expenditure; but that is a thing he never gave any attention to, at all events politically.

Mr. MITCHELL. I only desired to say that I thought it extremely hard on my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) to have to take the course he has done to night. He occupied the time of the House for two or three days in endeavoring to get justice done to the North-West and to regulate the Mounted Police, and I confess I am a little amazed now that he should quietly and tamely submit to swallow everything he said, to swallow all the charges he brought against Colonel Herchmer, that he should trample under foot all the positions he then took, and should renounce that independence which many of us thought would place him in the foremost ranks of the members of this House. But we find that he has had to swallow all that, as we have found other members have had to do in this House, and that he has had to come back under the crack of the party whip. That is what my hon. friend from Assiniboia has To-night he had an opportunity of showing whether his independence was simulated or real, and I am afraid he has shown that it was simu-An hon, gentleman on the other side of the House said to me: "What will you do with Davin now you have got him?"—that was just after his independent speech. I said: "I do not know whether we have got him."

Mr. DAVIN. It is sure you have not got him. Mr. MITCHELL. He is a man I admire very much. I admire his ability and his eloquence, but Davin has not any staying powers about him. That is what is the matter with Davin.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the entire cost of that expedition?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is the entire cost as far larger claim was submitted by the Government of British Columbia, and when Mr. Robson was here a year ago, this was gone into, and this was the compromise arrived at. I think their claim was nearly double this amount, but this was the arrangement arrived at. A Governor General's warrant was obtained for the amount, but the Auditor General thought it would be better that the amount should appear in the Estimates, and it is there for the purpose of being paid through British Columbia. It has not been paid yet, but will be when this vote is passed.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman give us some explanation with regard to the gross amount paid out in this connection?

Mr. LANDERLIN. In the absence of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) don't you think, Mr. Chairman, this item should stand? He will probably be able to give explanations better than any one else. He will be able to tell us the full amount that has been expended by the country in this suit.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total amount expended on this up to date?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The total amount paid, including this vote, is $14,152.67.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am informed that, in addition to this large expenditure which has been inflicted upon us in this matter, this company have actually entered a suit in the Exchequer Court for the purpose of recovering a very large sum of money from the Dominion of Canada, by reason of having been induced to make arrangements and expend moneys for the purpose of carrying on works on the land which was granted to them. Is the Minister of Justice aware that that is the case?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is the case.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the amount they claim?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I stated to the House, last Session, in answer, I think, to the hon. gentleman himself, the amount of their claim, which I do not remember at present. The claim was reported on by myself, and I gave an assurance to the House that it would not be paid without the House being consulted. The claim, in consequence of my report, was not paid, and it is in controversy

I think the hon, member for Mr. MITCHELL. South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is really a little too persistent. It is a very delicate subject that he is trenching upon just now. After the election of Saturday last in which the Equal Rights party have shown such a tremendous strength, a strength that appalls the whole of us-perhaps the right hon. gentleman not less than some of the rest of us—I think my hon friend is, perhaps, pressing the Government a little unfairly, I do not think, if the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) adheres to his present course, this thing is likely to occur again. He may be condoned for the past, but I do not think he will get many more briefs of that kind. I think that after as this Government is concerned. A very much the demonstration of Saturday last, which showed that the Equal Rights party, that have been so much laughed at, have proved themselves to be a factor in the elections of this country, my hon. friend might let this thing quietly rest.

Mr. LAURIER. Notwithstanding the suggestion of my hon. friend, I would like to get a little more information. The Minister of Justice told us there was a claim. How much is it? In the neighborhood of $100,000, I suppose.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is a general claim for damages. The claim is still in controversy.

Mr. LAURIER. What stage has it reached

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The greater part of the evidence, I think, has been taken, and it now stands for hearing, I think. It is before the Exchequer Court.

Mr. McMULLEN. What lawyers are acting on behalf of the Dominion?

We have Mr. Hogg, Sir JOHN THOMPSON. our regular agent, and Mr. Christopher Robinson.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Will the Minister of Justice kindly inform us who are the members of the St. Catharines Milling Company?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know.

Mr. LANDERKIN. To whom are the payments made?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The lawyers get it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Ferguson is the solicitor of the company, and, I think, the payments have been made to him.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to say to the Minister of Justice that there appears to be a mistake in the return brought down by the Government, in 1889, with reference to the fees paid on account of this company. According to the returns brought down the fees paid at that time amounted to $16,152.67.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that was an estimate of the whole sum.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No; that is the return. I will read the order of the House:

"Return to an Order of the House of Commons dated

"Return to an Order of the House of Commons dated the 8th February, 1889, for a return showing: "1st. The full amount of legal and other expenses paid in connection with the suit 'The St. Catharines Milling and Lumbering Company vs. The Queen,' from the com-mencement of the suit up to the first of January, 1889. "2nd. The party or parties to whom paid, and date of payment."

I understand the Minister to say that there was $14,152 paid, whereas the returns give $16,152.67.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There was a vote last Session, which I do not remember. I think it is included in that.

Mr. LANDERKIN. But that is only to the beginning of last Session.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I know an amount had been paid before that. I think that included the money that we voted last Session.

Mr. McMULLEN. Were there ever any dues collected from the St. Catharines Milling and Lumbering Company on the timber they cut?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think there was some collected, I do not recollect the amount. They had some timber cut, I know.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman does not know whether those dues had been paid here or over to the Ontario Government, or if the Ontario Government claimed them?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think not. been no negotiations so far with reference to that matter with the Ontario Government. Everything is in abeyance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have the Ontario Government put in any claims for dam.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Not that I know of.

Amount required to pay the cost of the suit of the Eau Clair and Bow River Lumber Company vs. The Queen....$1,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this?

Mr. DEWDNEY. A suit has been brought in the Exchequer Court against both this Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Canadian Pacific Railway Company, after a lease had been granted, considered they had a right to cut timber, and they did cut timber on this limit; and there has been a claim pending during the last year or two. A suit has now been entered for $50,000.

Mr. LAURIER. For what is this money required?

Mr. DEWDNEY. To carry on the suit.

Mr. LAURIER. In a case of this nature, when the Government are asking money to carry on a suit, the papers should be laid before the House. It is only an act of simple justice that no grant should be asked, or vote passed, until full particulars are supplied.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The particulars are detailed in a paper which I hold in my hand, and which I will read.

Mr. LAURIER. Lay it on the Table. In the meantime, let the item stand.

Mr. CHARLTON. What success has been met with in collecting amounts due for seed grain?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In some parts of the country the efforts have been satisfactory, and in others not so. I do not exactly recollect the figures, but the returns have been more satisfactory with respect to the late issues of seed grain than with respect to those of former years.

Mr. CHARLTON. About how much has been advanced altogether in furnishing seed grain?

Mr. DEWDNEY. During the last twelve years about $140,000, of which we have received in repayment between $40,000 and $50,000.

Mr. BLAKE. I presume the present supplies of seed grain are purchased in the North-West out of the 640,000,000 bushels, which form the annual crop of that country.

What is the system of distri-Mr. MULOCK. buting seed grain?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Applications are made for the grain to the party who is authorised to issue

it. In this case the party is Mr. McKay, manager of the Experimental Farm. The seed is delivered at the most central points of the districts from which applications have been received. Applications are received, and a lien is taken on the homestead for the value of the grain advanced.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the granting of a loan of seed grain depend at all upon the character of the applicant?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It does.

Mr. MULOCK. What are the principles which govern the agent in refusing or granting an application?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The agricultural societies, which know the position of every settler, make representations, and these grants are made on the recommendations of the agricultural societies, or of the president or secretary.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that the invariable rule?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; wherever there is an agricultural society. That was the rule this year.

Mr. MULOCK. Was it the rule in 1886?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am not sure; I do not think so. I had nothing to do with the matter then.

Mr. MULOCK. It was stated, perhaps incorrectly, and, therefore, I do not in the slightest degree corroborate or endorse the statement, that prior to the elections in the North-West applications for seed grain were made through prospective candidates for Parliament. I should like to know whether the present members are to have a hand in the granting of these applications? I should like to know if the granting of these applications is to depend entirely on business principles, or if political influence is to be a factor in the transaction?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Only on business principles. I do not think a member from the North-West has been consulted by his constituents in a single instance. The action taken by the members is in bringing pressure to bear on the Government in the interest of their district obtaining seed grain.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose the security is ample, if the Government chose to force the claim? What is the rate of interest charged on these advances?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The rate is 6 per cent.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose it is not intended to specially favor the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) by placing special patronage in his hands?

Mr. DAVIN. In regard to seed grain that has been distributed this year, all I can say is this, that if I had to express my feelings about it my sentiments would be that my constituency had been treated badly; but I have no doubt it was purely accidental that parts of my district which required seed grain have not got it. In fact we did not at first think that Western Assiniboia needed much grain, and one portion of it, Moose Jaw, boldly stated that none was needed, and around Regina they have not needed any; but some has been required at Maple Creek, and I believe they have received a quantity. I am also glad to know that some has been supplied to Dunmore. So far as I am governed I have found that the whole matter of distribution has been placed entirely in the hands of Angus McKay, and the grain is to be distributed according to certain rules laid down, and in fact my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) may possess his soul in peace. I have had very little to do with the matter, and the amount that has been distributed in my district is, I believe, infinitesimal.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not believe that it is otherwise than germane to the occasion to enquire whether, after favoring the giving of seed grain to the settlers in the Territories, the hon. gentleman is also going to give them the benefit of the ballot?

Mr. DAVIN. If the hon member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), when the Territories Act comes down from the Senate in a few days, will propose a clause in favor of the ballot, I will support it.

Mr. MULOCK. Will you vote for it?

Mr. DAVIN. Yes; I will vote for it.

Mr. BLAKE. I am afraid I will lose the motion then.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the hon. Minister say that the amount advanced to these people for seed grain is recorded against the land?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are there any parties who have received grain more than once?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The instructions given to Mr. McKay this year were to issue no seed grain to parties who had already received some, and who had a lien on their property. He found when he looked into the matter, that there were some who had already received seed grain who were just as much in want of it as those who did not receive any at all. On representation to me, I authorised him to give a small amount of seed grain to some who had received it before.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then, in some cases, there are two seed grain encumbrances on the locations of these people. Are there more than two in any case?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Have all the amounts borrowed by the Province of Manitoba in regard to seed grain, been paid, or what percentage has been paid?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is quite a large amount that has not been paid off. I find that about $140,000 worth of grain has been distributed, out of which we have received back between $40,000 and $50,000. The largest amounts that have not been paid are for the advances made in the early days of Manitoba.

Mr. MULOCK. At what price do you sell this grain?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The settlers receive it at the cost price. This year they only had to pay the actual cost of the purchase, as the Canadian Pacific Railway transported it free of charge.

Mr. McMULLEN. Where was this grain purchased?

more. So far as I am concerned, I have found bushel of it. He purchased the wheat at different points in the Territories, and he purchased the oats in the neighborhood of Toronto. I think he paid 40 or 50 cents a bushel for the oats, and it had to be extra clean for the purpose of seed.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many bushels of wheat were purchased, and at what price?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There have been $31,500 for seed grain; 12,000 bushels oats, and the balance was expended for first class hard red Fyfe wheat, extra clean, at 85 cents a bushel.

Mr. BLAKE. Could the hon. gentleman say what acreage in wheat and what acreage in oats, he has provided for in this way? Or can he tell us the usual rate per bushel to the acre?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think about 2 bushels to the acre of oats, and about the same for wheat. If it is sown by the drill it takes a little less than if it is sown broadcast.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Can the Minister say over what extent of country it was distributed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. From the western boundary of Manitoba as far as Medicine Hat, an extent of about 400 miles east and west; and a small portion was distributed in the neighborhood of Prince Albert.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suppose it was distributed on account of the failure of crops the previous year?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; because some localities were much more seriously injured than others, and in some districts the crops were destroyed more by gophers than by drought.

Mr. BLAKE. Has any concerted action been taken by municipal or local organisations with reference to the destruction of these gophers?

Mr. DEWDNEY. For a year or two the municipality offered a small bonus of a cent a tail, but it amounted to so much that it got beyond their means. This year the Legislative Assembly voted $1,000 for the purchase of strychnine to poison them.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand it was stated, that when the tails were taken off, the gophers were allowed out to breed again.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That was stated.

Mr. CHARLTON. They do not retail.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I shall ask an appropriation later, for the purchase of traps to destroy the gophers. The settlers pretend that the Government land unoccupied, affords breeding grounds for these gophers, and while they might destroy them in their own fields, they cannot get rid of them on the Government lands. I think the traps would be better than the strychnine; or at all events they would be safer.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it not a fact that these gophers have been increasing rapidly?

Mr. DEWDNEY. During the dry seasons of the last two or three years, they have increased rapidly. The wet seasons seem to drown them in their holes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman state what quantity of grain was distributed, and among how many settlers?
Mr. DEWDNEY.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The return has not yet reached me, but the largest amount given to one man, I hear, was sixteeen bushels.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Have the settlers re. cently arrived in the country, or are they old settlers?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They have been a year and over in the country.

Mr. BLAKE. They are all persons who have raised—or tried, at any rate, to raise—one crop?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

How were the oats pur-Mr. McMULLEN. chased? Was a tender asked?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No. We were pressed for time, and Mr. McKay went around and got samples. They were extra good oats, and they were bought at the lowest price at which they could be obtained.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the Minister if any farmers have succeeded in raising crops in the vicinity of Medicine Hat, or within 200 miles to the eastward?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Oh, yes; excellent crops. The best barley which is grown in the whole of the Territories was grown within a mile or two of Medicine Hat last year. It was superior to the sample of barley sent from England to the Minister of Agriculture to be distributed this year; and some of the finest wheat fields I have seen in the country have been in the neighborhood of Medicine Hat. The fact is that even the driest soil in the country, when ploughed, affords a kind of reservoir to hold the moisture, and the country improves every year that it is cultivated.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When I was in Medicine Hat, I did not see any vegetation more than a foot high. I understood that the soil was good, but that the rainfall was not sufficient, and I am asking for information, whether several dry seasons do not succeed each other in succession, and whether a crop is not the exception rather than the rule?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman did not go very far north or south of the railway. land along the rivers is drier than it is a few miles back. Although it has a dry appearance, if the rain comes at the proper time, it is all right.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand, however, that there have been three unusually dry seasons there lately, and that we may expect a cycle of damper seasons. For instance, I was told by a friend of mine who not long ago visited the thriving settlement of Moosomin, where a lake, which I have seen marked on the plans and maps as Moosomin Lake, existed no longer, that during the last three years it had dried up. Therefore, it is to be supposed there has been an unusual drought, and that the country will be better in the future.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think that is very likely, because I have seen roads made by Half-breed carts crossing lakes in which there was several feet of water, but which to-day are thoroughly dry.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see the hon. First Minister looking very earnestly at me, and I will bring to his recollection the fact that when reciting the history of the evils that befell the people of this country at the time the hon, member for East York was in power, he stated that they had first the Colorado potato bug, and then the weevil in the wheat, which he attributed to the reign of my hon. friend. I would like to ask him to what he attributes the enormous swarm of gophers in the North-West?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It shows that the country is a splendid country for the development of animal life, and it will be so when we have a sufficient number of two-legged animals called men up there.

Mr. McNEILL. I may say to my hon. friend from North Wellington that we have some reason to believe that the gophers were starved in Dakota, and went over to our North-West.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister of the Interior has stated that 20,000 bushels of oats were bought at 45 cents a bushel. I know a little about the price of oats, because I sat in the train with a man a week or two ago who was coming to the Toronto market to sell 100,000 bushels of oats, at 35 cents a bushel, half of which he had selected for seed. In the town where I live the highest price oats have reached is 30 cents, and it is surprising to me if the hon. gentleman was in such a spirit that he had to run for these oats to the first man he could find. I would like to know the name of the party from whom they were bought, and the particular kind they are.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I shall be glad to bring down the return as soon as it reaches me; but I may say that if ever a country was cursed Ontario was cursed with the kind of oats that were sent out in 1886. They were half mustard seed; and I was determined that the oats I got this year should be perfectly clean seed, even if they should be a little more expensive; but at the same time that we were making enquiries about oats, Sir John Lister-Kaye was here making enquiries for 20 carloads of oats which he was to take to the North-West, part for feed and part for seed. That was some six weeks or two months before we bought our seed; and if I am not mistaken he paid nearly as much as we did, although we went to far greater trouble in making a selection. If we have the seed grain Mr. McKay says we have we have got

Mr. BLAKE. I observe the statement made that Sir John Lister-Kaye, in connection with the company, is likely to cease.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That does not hurt the oats.

Mr. BLAKE. The oats might have hurt him.

Mr. DEWDNEY. From the correspondence I have had with him, he is in this position: that, if he has now severed his connection as manager of the company, he has taken the management of a company far more extensive; and if he does not carry out the programme he has in view with regard to a scheme of colonisation, he will return as manager of the company.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) If the hon gentleman wants to get the best seed oats growing in British North America he has only to come to Prince Edward Island. I can substantiate my statement by referring to exhibitions to which oats were sent, both in this and the old country, and they were found superior to all others.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am exceedingly sorry the Minister of the Interior should have cast the reflection he did upon the farmers of Ontario, when he said he had to use a great deal of care in selecting oats so as to avoid mustard, and that a large amount of the seed got from Ontario in past years was full of mustard. I have travelled a good deal in Ontario, and so has the hon. gentleman, and there is very little mustard to be seen there. It is unfair for the hon. gentleman to cast such a reflection upon the Ontario farmer. I do not know in my section, of one field where there is mustard among the oats. The hon, gentleman has no right to decry our country in the public prints by telling the people who are about to emigrate from the old world and come to Ontario, not to come because it is full of must. Every Canadian knows that must is a hard thing to get in Ontario. In justice to our country the hon. gentleman ought to retract that statement.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I travelled through Ontario a little last summer, and while I did pass through some sections where we saw no mustard, I passed through others where I saw none thicker.

Expenses of Government in the North-West Territories:—To pay for the construction of a bridge across Sturgeon River, Edmonton, North-West Territories. $5,000

Mr. CHARLTON. What is about the length of this bridge.

Mr. DEDWNEY. About one-eighth of a mile. Some six or seven years ago the North-West Government bought the bridge across the Sturgeon river at Battleford. It had been built by the church authorities as a toll bridge, and as the settlement increased on the north side of the river the Government bought it. It gradually fell into bad repair, and last summer settlers were unable to bring any heavy loads across. Application was made for a new bridge. A strong appeal was made early in the winter for relief for some distressed people in that neighborhood, especially among the halfbreed families, who were very destitute. I recommended to my colleagues that we should agree to build this bridge in order to give work to people who were anxious to work and had no means of sustenance. An offer was made to build the bridge for $5,000, which I knew was very cheap, and the Government sent our timber inspector, Mr. Addison, to superintend the bridge and to see that work was given to these destitute people.

Mr. BLAKE. I received a letter from that quarter about this matter, representing some of the hon. gentleman's benevolent operations not to have turned out exactly as he desired. The statement is made in this letter that the bridge was not worth what it cost, that it was built on what is called a store pay, and that the supplies given in lieu of wages were charged for at very extravagant prices, and that the transaction involved an enormous profit for the contractors, through the price being so extravagant, and the wages being paid in kind at unduly exorbitant rates. Would the hon. gentleman state whether the contract was ordered by competition, or what steps were taken in the matter?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The position was urgent, and there was not time to call for tenders. An offer was made by Mr. McKenna and Mr. Brousseau, the one a half-breed and the other the gentleman who had charge of that bridge. I knew them both to be capable and straight-forward, and considered if we could get a substantial bridge built for $5,000 that would be very cheap. Consequently, I recommended that the offer of these gentlemen, which was also pressed upon us by people who lived in the neighborhood, should be accepted. Our officer reported it as excellent work.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps, as this transaction has been very exceptional, no tenders having been asked for and the work having to be done in a great hurry, the hon. gentleman will lay on the Table the contract and all the correspondence and reports, so that we may look at them before concurrence.

Mr. CHARLTON. What kind of timber will there be in the bridge?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The timber up there is principally spruce and pine. The bridge is on piles. A heavy pile driver had to be brought up from the railway. It is a bridge about 500 feet long with a 16-feet span.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would be glad if the hon. Minister of the Interior would inform us, as nearly as he can, what percentage of lands west of Regina, along the Canadian Pacific Railway up to Medicine Hat, the company propose to accept, and what percentage they intend to reject?

Mr. DEWDNEY. About this time last year, I think the hon. gentleman asked for the same information. At that time the Canadian Pacific Railway had selected some 8,400,000 acres. They had intimated their intention of selecting that amount, and last year I asked for a vote for the purpose of employing one of our chief officers with a small staff to go over and inspect the lands, some of which the Canadian Pacific Railway had indicated they would not accept. We have had a full and complete return in regard to that, and since that time the Canadian Pacific Railway have selected more lands in the belt, making up nearly 10,000,000 acres. They admit now something over 9,000,000 acres, and they expect before the inspection is concluded to select the rest.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is from the base of the Rocky Mountains to the old western boundary of Manitoba.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It includes more than that. It includes their reserve to the south in Manitoba and along the railway belt proper from Winnipeg to within 30 or 40 miles of the summit of the Rocky Mountains.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does that mean in reference to Southern Manitoba?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The reason for the extension of the limit south in Manitoba was that, when they commenced the construction of the road, so much land had been granted within 20 miles of the railway that there was virtually nothing there, and therefore the land from which they could choose was extended to the southern boundary.

Mr. DEWDNEY.

Mr. BLAKE. What we want to know is what is the difference between what they take and the total amount they could take in the railway belt.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think there are about 12,000,000 acres in the railway belt proper.

Mr. BLAKE. So there will be 2,000,000 acres more?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think so.

Mr. LAURIER. This is a very important item. I understood from the statement of the Minister, that there has been a report made already. If there has been a report, I think the House would be very much interested in having that report, and seeing what progress has been made, and how the matter stands.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I shall be very glad to bring all the information down with the plans.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the company have selected all the lands in the railway belt, where is the tract which the Government bought from the company at $1.50 an acre, amounting to over $6,000,000?

As the hon, gentleman is Mr. DEWDNEY. aware, the amount of land to which the company were entitled was 25,000,000 acres. Of that, 6,000,000 or more were taken back, leaving about 18,000,000 acres for the company to select from. There have been some negotiations with the Canadian Pacific Railway as to the retention of the land which should revert to the Government, and the negotiations are, I think, very near completion: and I believe a very satisfactory arrangement will be arrived at, satisfactory in this regard, that we shall be able to come to an agreement in the near future and settle the whole question of the railway lands, and throw open any portions of those lands which are now locked up.

Mr. BLAKE. There is, or there used to be, a very large block reserved to the north in the Saskatchewan district for them to make a selection out of. Is it in reference to that area that the hon. gentleman means arrangements are being made?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; there are some 19,000,000 acres in that northern block, in the best part of the Territories.

Mr. CHARLTON. Then the hon. gentleman does not expect to take any land back of the 10,000,000 which have been selected in the railway belt?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not think we shall take any of that land in the railway belt proper.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hongentleman did not answer the question which I asked, as to how much of the land from the western boundary of Manitoba as at present constituted up to Medicine Hat, the company had agreed to accept and how much they propose to return in that tract.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Unless I had the plan before me, I could hardly state that definitely. There is a very small portion which they have not selected—certainly not over 500,000 acres.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hongentleman be able to lay on the Table the plan of which he speaks?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Certainly, I will do that. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps you could do it to-morrow?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It will be the original, which I will have to take away again, but I think I could do that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman will place the original on the Table, we could obtain an idea of this matter.

Relief of distress among Half-breeds in the North-West Territories..... $1,000

Mr. LAURIER. What is the explanation of this?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Relief was asked for some Half-breeds who had left the Cumberland district on the Saskatchewan, and had moved up towards Prince Albert. Most of these were Half-breeds who had left the treaties some time before, and they followed some Indians who were going up to Fort à la Corne. They were in a state of destitution, and this is to recoup the amount of the assistance which was given to them by the police.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman says that these Half-breeds were in a state of destitution. I understand that destitution has been prevalent amongst the Half-breeds in more districts than one. I am not quarrelling with the hon. gentleman for this vote; it may be all right, but I would enquire if there were any petitions from these Half-breeds, and if they were supported by missionaries or agents or other parties?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot recollect at the moment from whom the applications came, excepting that I know they were recommended by Superintendent Perry, a superintendent of the Mounted Police, and by Mr. Macdowall, who was then in the north, before he came down, and there may have been others.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall)?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. How is this distribution to be

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Mounted Police were instructed to issue it from their stores. That was the only way we could get supplies to them.

To pay for 25 copies of Taschereau's Work on Criminal Laws for Library exchanges, $10......$250

Mr. CHAPLEAU. This is the second edition of Judge Taschereau's work on criminal law, and I must say that this book is found not only useful but necessary for the Library. It was bought two years ago and delivered, and this vote should have been in last year's estimates. I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite that it is a most valuable contribution to the legal literature of the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is supposed to be the judge of these books that are bought?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In this case I, myself, gave the order, as it was a work on criminal law.

Mr. LAURIER. I may remind my hon. friend that there is a standing rule of the Library which authorises the Library Committee to purchase valuable books published in the country for ex-1284 testimony to what has been said by the Secretary of State that the book is a very valuable one. It

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There was an order that these books should be bought by the Librarian.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In the future the Librarian will buy such books as these, but these were bought before the order was passed that such books should be bought by the Librarian.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman does not suppose, surely, that the Library Committee are to buy these exchanges out of the ordinnary vote given to them. The matter was brought up in the Library Committee the other day, and it was referred to a special committee to examine into the question. We understood that these books had to be purchased heretofore by the executive, and after examining into the matter we thought we would let it rest where it was. did not think that out of the grants to the Library for ordinary purposes, we could appropriate money for exchanges.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The result will be, in the future, that the Government will be less able than in the past to encourage literature of this country by purchasing works even on scientific questions, because the Librarian will have to buy them, or they will not be bought at all.

Mr. DAVIN. As a member of the Library Committee, I must endorse what the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) says. Our grant at present is barely sufficient to meet the wants of the Library. If the Library Committee is to buy works for exchanges, we have no objection to assume the responsibility, but the House will have to give us a larger grant, we cannot make bricks without straw. That is an Egyptian task.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The question is: Who is to select these books for exchanges? It may be proper to leave it to the Library Committee because they would be advised by the Librarian. The matter came up the other day, in a meeting of the Library Committee, with reference to a work that has been highly spoken of by hon. gentlemen, that is, Mr. Kingsford's History of Canada. I am not in a position to give a personal opinion about it, because I have only glanced at it, but we were not in a position to contribute anything towards purchasing that book, because we had no I extremely regret that, because, from all that I can hear, the book deserves encouragement at the hands of this House, and we have been in the habit of purchasing a large number of books from year to year, written by native Canadians. I should like to have some expression of opinion on that matter from this Committee, because the Library Committee were in the unfor-tunate position of having been obliged to refuse the offer made by the author of the book.

Mr. SCRIVER. I think there is something indefinite in regard to this matter. I understand, that an Order in Council was passed several years ago directing that for the future the Library Committee should provide for these exchanges.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Only some months ago.

Mr. SCRIVER. I may have misunderstood the Librarian, but I understood him to say it was a changes with foreign libraries. I can add my year or two ago. In support of what my colleagues on the Library Committee have said, I may say, that if this Order in Council is enforced, the Committee must have a larger grant than we have had heretofore, because we spend more than sufficient to provide for the yearly additions that the Librarian considers necessary for the Library.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think the members of the Library Committee will not object to this.

Mr. SCRIVER. I certainly am not disposed to object.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the subject ought to receive very careful consideration, because the appropriation for the purpose of exchanges ought to depend upon what we receive from abroad, and our appropriation should be made in some degree adequate to fairly meet what we receive. It has been stated again and again by the former Librarian and by the present Librarian that we receive works of very considerable value from abroad, and that there were not amongst our own official publications anything that could be regarded as an adequate return for what we got. If that be so, then I think some little attention should be given to such works as that of Mr. Kingsford and this of Judge Taschereau. But the whole subject ought to depend upon what we get from abroad, and it should be carefully considered by the Library Committee.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I may state that there are two more books which will probably be submitted to the Government, and which will come before the House for an appropriation, I mean the book of Dr. Bourinot, and another book by Judge Burbidge. I have heard Mr. Kingsford's book mentioned, but I am not so well acquainted with it as with the others. I understand these books mentioned are costly, and as we shall require 30 or 40 copies, and the Library Committee have not sufficient funds to purchase them, the House will have to grant a vote for that purpose. I think the Order in Council was passed chiefly to control the purchase of ordinary current literature.

Mr. BARRON. If possible, this work of Mr. Kingsford should be purchased. I have read the first volume, and I certainly think it is a very excellent literary effort, besides being a most excellent history, written on the line of Parkman's history of Canada. As to recognising literary talent, I think the time has come when some recognition should be made of a gentleman who has certainly developed most wonderful literary talent, I refer to Mr. Lampman, whose literary attainments have been recognised among the very foremost literary people in the United States. As one who knew him as a boy, and attended school with him, I am glad to be able to testify to this work, and I hope the Government will try and recognise Canadian talent at the right time; and the sooner, rather sooner than later, the hon the First Minister is able to place Mr. Lampman in some position where he will be able to develop that wonderful literary talent given to him, not only to his own advantage but to the advantage of Canada, the better, so that the world may see that we recognise talent, as is done in other countries.

Mr. DAVIN. I quite see the difficulty that led the Government to transfer this duty to the Library Committee. The difficulty is palpable, Mr. Scriver.

namely, the pressure that is put on a Minister of the Crown to buy books that are, as the Secretary of State indicates, really not books of that permanent character which should be bought by the Government. I am not sure, however, that the tribunal before which a book is now brought, namely, the Committee of which I am a member, is the most perfect tribunal for deciding as to whether a book should or should not be purchased at the public expense. But I will say this, and I believe I express the opinion of the Committee when I say that if we get the funds we are quite willing to undertake the duty, and to do it to the best of our ability. In regard to this book of Mr. Kingsford, I have read the first volume, and I must say that I regard the book as one that ought to be encouraged. However, I found when others and myself brought it before the Committee that a distinguished member of the Committee rose and spoke from the most stringent standpoint of supply and demand, as though you could apply the doctrine of supply and demand to literature in a country like this. If literature in a new country like Canada is to be encouraged, it will have to receive some encouragement from the Government. I found some hon, gentleman thought, and I have heard the opinion expressed in this House by hon. gentlemen who are not members of the Committee, that this history did not take the view—because I will not use the language they used—of certain events they would take. If you are going to say you will have nothing to do with patronising a history that will not satisfy everybody, where will you be? The one question which we must ask in regard to any literary work is this, is it of genuine literary value? If you are to say that a history must please everybody as to its opinions, who is satisfied with Macaulay, who is satisfied with Froude? Mr. Goldwin Smith will tell you—and I am not misrepresenting him because he has written it again and again—that Froude is a fabricator from beginning to end. Others will tell you that Macaulay is utterly unreliable, that he is a Whig the whole time, that when he paints the Tories he does so in the darkest hues, while when he pictures the Whigs he does so in bright colors and presents most charming features. I am very glad this subject has been brought up, because I may say that it would be a disgrace to Canada if a work so large in conception, so admirably executed, so universally recognised that the caustic Saturday Review, forgetting, when it took up that volume, its natural tendency to condemn, declared it was a most valuable contribution to historical knowledge, it would be a disgrace to Canada, I say, if such a work were not purchased for purposes of exchange and with a view to its encouragement. Under these circumstances, I am very glad the subject has been raised, and I hope the result will be that before this Parliament rises we will be placed in such a pecuniary position as to be able to buy some of these volumes. I may say in regard to Lampman: that I have read Lampman's works. The fact is he is a genuine poet. His song is not the mere echo of high poetic culture, he has a genuine note of his own; he has a genuine inspiration of his own; and so far as we can encourage him we ought to encourage him in the interests of Canada, because you may be sure of this, that the life-blood of a people is its literature, that the lifeblood of a people is the genius that is put into

There is the life-blood from which statesmen, and merchants, and lawyers, and others draw their nutriment, and that is the centre and source of all the power.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not think I am prepared to say like my hon. friend that literature is the lifeblood of the people; but I am prepared to say that there are no people without literature; and if we have the ambition to form a nation, as we have, we cannot choose a better mode of promoting a national sentiment among us than by fostering, as much as possible, native literature and native talent. I do not know, however, how we can do it by the very inadequate measures we have taken so far. The most we have done has been to purchase books of our authors, and sometimes we have purchased several volumes. This, however, is not doing very much. But so long as we are not prepared to do something more in the way of grants, we cannot adopt any other policy other than that we have pursued thus far. The librarians are authorised to select one or two copies of all works published in Canada. The Government may also consider the propriety of selecting a few copies, twenty-five or fifty, of the more valuable works for the purpose of distribution abroad. The distribution of such a work as Mr. Kingsford's, if it were distributed for example to foreign libraries, would certainly increase public interest in Canadian history, because, although I have not read the whole work, I have read one or two portions, and the work has impressed me as one of more than ordinary value. So it is in regard to the poems of Mr. Lampnian. If such volumes were purchased for exchange and circulation in foreign libraries, they could not but have the effect of recommending Canada, and of showing that we are a civilised nation if nothing else. I would go much further, though, perhaps, this is not the proper time to say so; and I would be disposed to favor a liberal expenditure for a proper encouragement not only of literature but of art, and of everything that would develop a national sentiment among us.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When this conversation commenced across the floor, I was of the opinion that the Government were asking a sum to purchase books for the coming year. I am given to understand I am wrong in that.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. With regard to the first three items the works have been purchased.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was on the Sub-Committee appointed by the Library Committee, and we found that in December, 1888, an Order in Council was passed, providing that thereafter books of that description were to be purchased by the Library Committee. That we thought was a very good Order in Council, and I hope it is going to be carried out. There is one exception to be taken to it. The Library Committee is the proper tribunal to select the books. I think that the amount given to the Library Committee ought to be slightly increased. I would like to know whether these books were purchased before the Order in Council was passed?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. With the exception of the Débats Parlementaires de Québec, these books were all purchased before the Order in Council. If the duty of making the choice of books is transerred mittee, or to the librarians themselves, I will certainly not complain of it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It seems to me ridiculous that we should pay $8 a copy for forty copies of the Quebec Debates.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We were obliged to pay it. It is the current price and that is what the Quebec Government pay themselves.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I find that the report of the sub-Committee on the Library concludes by stating that the sub-Committee is of opinion that the grant for the Library is not large enough to justify the purchase of books of current native literature, and that money should be applied to purchase books for exchanges of a similar character to the exchanges we get from other countries. I hope that the Order in Council will be adhered to and that the Government will vote a reasonable sum for the Library Committee to carry it out.

The Committee rose and reported progress.

BANKS AND BANKING.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 127) respecting Banks and Banking.

(In the Committee.)

On section 55,

Mr. FOSTER. In that clause and in the three clauses succeeding, there are some provisions which it would be much better to leave out. I propose that after the word "mentioned," in the twentyfirst line, and down to the word "thereafter," inclusive, in the twenty-fifth line be omitted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. gentleman proposes now to do, is to reduce this from an unlimited liability to the amount of 13 per cent. on the whole circulation?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman considered the point to which I called his attention more than once, as to the possible risk which may be incurred? I have myself considered the fact, that there will be penalties provided, as was stated by the hon. Minister of Justice, but I fail to see that they will guard against the particular danger to which I called attention.

Mr. FOSTER. The attention of the Government has been given, both before and since my hon. friend's observations, to what he thinks the added risk in this matter. I am inclined to think that the added risk will not be probably so great as my hon. friend has thought. We must bear in mind that under the law as it now stands the notes are a first lien on the assets of the bank and on the stock double liability of the stockholders; and that was certainly-arguing from this standpoint-a temptation to an over-issue. I grant that the provisions of the guarantee fund add to the inducement, if any existed before; but I do not think it adds so greatly as to make it a matter of first rate importance. To guard against that, however, we propose to have a clause preventing the pledging, assigning or hypothecation of the notes of a bank, under heavy penalties, and also making any transaction based upon that illegal. Then, you have to from the Secretary of State to the Library Com- take into account the supervision which we have in the returns which the banks are required to make, with additions in the line of greater detail. Another factor in the scheme as brought down to the House, and as it will be worked, will be found in the careful and active co-operation of the banks with each other, as being now far more interested in the good management of each other and of the whole as contributors to a common guarantee fund.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Committee will observe that I am not of opinion that in the ordinary working of the banks much risk will arise. The case to which I allude is no doubt an exceptional case. It is a case of distinct fraud, arising when a bank has got into a thoroughly bad condition, such as has not infrequently taken place in the history of banks, notably in the case of two or three banks to which I called the attention of the hon, gentleman the other day. There such a risk will arise, for the parties managing the banks may commit acts, as I think they did in the case of at least two of those banks, which would bring them within the purview of the penal law. In such cases men are not likely to be deterred, if there is a reasonable chance of escape with a large amount of the plunder, by any penalties you may impose. No doubt, the particular clause to which the hon. gentleman alludes, rendering hypothecation penal, will go some way, but it will not go the whole way. We are doing a thing now which has never been done before in the history of banking, so far as I know; we are giving to the notes of the smallest and least well managed banks, to the extent of about $2,000,000, precisely the same security as the notes of the best managed banks pos-The system pursued in the United States is wholly different from ours. There, as the hon. gentleman knows, the banks are obliged to deposit Government securities for all the notes they issue. With us, and the same is the case in all other countries which have a bank circulation similar to ours, there has been no security hitherto, except the assets of the banks, and the public knowing that, it has been impossible for the banks to issue too many notes. But you have altered that entirely. This is a totally new experiment. As I said, having called the attention of the House and the Government to it, and having expressed my own opinion, I am not particularly concerned further, except that it appears to me that if such a fraud were committed, your whole guarantee fund, during a period of five or ten years, might be destroyed by a single over-issue, and in that case the supposed guarantee for our note circulation might prove worthless. As the clause first existed, the danger was greater, but the security for the note holder was also greater. I have my doubts, under the circumstances, whether the guarantee proposed is worth the alteration we are making in the basis for the security of the notes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It appears to me that whatever danger may be apprehended from the view taken by my hon. friend, might be minimised, if not altogether obviated, by the action of the Government, if they would be disposed to adopt a more stringent course. The banks having come forward to guarantee the circulation and to assist the Government in framing a measure which will be satisfactory to the country, as I think this measure will be, now that they have eliminated one or two the Treasury Board all their unissued notes and a statement of their circulation. The Treasury Board should be custodians of the bank notes, the banks should apply to them whenever they require circulation, the notes should be issued to the banks by the Treasury Board when required, and when the banks desired to destroy any of the old notes not fit for circulation, they should be destroyed by an officer of the bank in the presence of a person appointed by the Treasury Board for that purpose. Government would then be able to keep an account exactly, from month to month, of the position of the banks with regard to their issue. It would be a strong check on the banks if they were disposed to exceed their issue, because the Government would have full knowledge of the position of the banks from month to month. If the banks wanted notes, they would apply to the Government and the Government would give the amount required, which would be entered to the debit of their circulation, and in that way the Government would from time to time be perfectly aware of the exact position. If the Minister would introduce a clause to this effect, it would very materially assist the banks and offer additional security to the banks, because, look at it as we may, there is a contingent possibility of danger from the system being abused by those banks which might be disposed to make an over-issue under fraudulent circumstances. A system of the kind I propose could be very easily worked, the Government would then have the matter under their own control and the banks would have additional security in knowing that the Government were exercising this control over the issue of notes. Mr. FOSTER. I suppose what my hon. friend desires is to avoid the danger of over-circulation, and he proposes to do this by giving the Government control over the issue of notes to each bank, so that each bank's issue will be limited to the maximum circulation allowed it by law. I see the point my hon friend suggests, and it is certainly worth looking into, taking care that the Government does not assume too much responsibility. Mr. JONES (Halifax). They would only be the custodians of the notes, which they would distribute to the banks according as they would be applied for, making it a penal offence for any one to print, engrave or import a note. The Government would they eliminate another, as I hope they will, that is the one with reference to lapsed balances, I congratulate the Government on having adopted the best means of arriving at a conclusion, which is no doubt based on a very correct principle, and which I think will work satisfactorily.

Mr. Foster.

But I think they might go a little further, and I venture to offer a suggestion which I think would minimise the risk my hon. friend refers to. The Government should put the printing of notes by any person in this country on the same ground as counterfeit money, with the same penalties, and prevent notes being introduced into the country at all or manufactured in the country except on the condition that they go directly into the hands of the Treasury Board; and when this act goes into operation, all the banks affected should return to be assuming no responsibility.

Mr. FOSTER. I will think it over. I propose clauses to which exception was taken, and after to add to sub-section 4 the following:-

And the Minister of Finance and Receiver General shall, with respect to all notes paid out of said fund, have the same rights as any other holder of the notes of the bank.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the effect of that?

Mr. FOSTER. To enable the Minister of Finance to rank with the other creditors in regard to the assets of the bank.

On sub-section 7.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to the question whether it is or is not desirable to fix a period within which notes may be presented for redemption by the holders of-what do you call it? -the bank circulation redemption fund. If that is not done, you may have claims at a very long date. I think it would be well to fix some reasonable time within which the holders of these notes should present their claims on this fund.

Mr. FOSTER. Would it not be a pretty good limit when the interest ceases?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not necessarily. I am speaking from some knowledge of this matter. I know of notes of suspended banks that have been held for a long time, and sometimes in considerable quantities, and I think it would be for the public advantage, under the somewhat extraordinary provisions you are now adopting, that some limit of time should be adopted in regard to this circulation. I am not at all referring to the claims against the bank assets.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I quite agree with my hon, friend. I know that in the case of the Commercial Bank of New Brunswick, which suspended in 1867 or 1868, they got an Act passed some years afterwards by this Parliament providing that, by giving a year's notice in regard to all notes called in, they should not be compelled to pay them. Although a period of about eleven years had elapsed from the time of the suspension of the bank, I know that four or five years afterwards notes came into my hands to be presented, and on application to the gentleman who wound up the affairs of the bank, he informed me that notes had come in about sixteen years after the bank suspended.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the provisions of the Winding-Up Act are sufficient for this purpose. Under that Act, the court may fix a date, and after that date the assets are to be distributed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is the case in the Winding-Up Act. The judge may make an order that the final assets remaining shall be distributed unless the claims are presented before a certain day, and if they do not come in, no assets are distri-buted afterwards. But I cannot see any great necessity for this, because the notes in the hands of the parties who hold them do not bear any interest.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The assets might be distributed and the notes come in afterwards.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The funds ought not to be liable after the assets are distributed.

Mr. FOSTER. To this clause I wish to add: Nothing herein contained shall be construed to impose any liability on the Government of Canada or on the upon to an unlimited extent.

Minister of Finance and Receiver General, beyond the amount available from time to time out of the said fund.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is not one day's notice rather a short time? The holder cannot possibly get the notice if he lives any distance away.

Mr. WELDON (St. John.) The notes of a bank get scattered round a good deal. Suppose a Nova Scotia Bank has a large quantity of notes in Vanconver.

Mr. FOSTER. We will give six days' notice.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland.) It occurs to me that another question might arise with regard to the practical operation of the principle adopted by the establishment of this fund. In the case of the failure of two or three banks the same year, would the notes be paid indiscriminately as they were presented? If you take from the amount of circulation which each of the banks of the country are authorised to have under this Act, the circulation of any two or three of the larger banks, you would exhaust the fund, and considerably more. Would the banks which have first failed be paid in full, and the others not receive any?

Mr. COCKBURN. I think we might put in a clause with reference to suspended banks. appears to me that the banks which are guaranteeing this fund have a certain interest in it, since they are taxed to support it. I would suggest that in the event of the suspension of a bank and a liability thereby attaching to the guarantee fund then the banks contributing to this fund shall nominate a representative to co-operate with the directors in providing for the speedy redemption of the notes, and he shall be clothed with such powers as the Treasury Board shall designate.

On sub-section 8.

Mr. FOSTER. After the word "shall" put in the words "after the amount of such excess has been made good as aforesaid." To the end of that I wish to add this sub-section:

The Minister of Finance and the Receiver General may permit any bank to make good its share of such excess, by payments of 1 per cent. per annum of the annual average circulation of its notes, such circulation to be ascertained as the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General shall decide.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The understanding of the House was that in no case should more than 13 per cent. in ten years of the average circulation be exacted from the banks, 5 per cent. in two years and I per cent. for each of the remaining years. This statement was repeatedly made by the Minister of Finance across the floor.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the intention of this

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. wording of the clause leaves it in doubt.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We thought it better to leave a little elasticity in case of emergency.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If so, it is quite conceivable that cases of emergency might arise, when 50 instead of 13 per cent. might be required.

Mr. COCKBURN. And the banks would not know when they might be called upon.

Mr. TISDALE. The banks might be called

Mr. FOSTER. If the Committee will permit, I will let the clause stand for the present. I now propose a new clause, as follows:

The bank shall not pledge, assign or hypothecate its notes. No advance or loan made on the security of the notes of a bank shall be recoverable from the bank or its assets. Every person who being the president, vice-president, director, principal partner, en commandite, general manager, manager, cashier, or other officer of the bank, pledges, assigns or hypothecates, or authorises or is concerned in the pledge, assignment or hypothecation of the notes of the bank, and every person who accepts, receives or takes, or authorises or is concerned in the acceptance or receipt or taking of such notes as a pledge, assignment or hypothecation, shall be liable to a fine of not less than $400 and not more than $2,000, or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Suppose a bank manager, instead of issuing notes in the ordinary fashion, was to issue a larger quantity of notes for the purpose of buying exchange-which is not quite the same thing as putting them into circulation in the ordinary way-does the Minister of Justice hold that such a transaction would come within the scope of this clause?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; I do not think This is to meet the distinct offence of hypothecating.

Mr. HALL. I understand the clause to read that notes hypothecated shall not be charged against the banks.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is that advances or loans made on such security shall not be recov-

Mr. HALL. But the notes will be valid against the bank.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. question put by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall), it is quite clear that once the notes get out of the hands of the party to whom they were hypothecated, there must be a claim on the circulation fund and assets of the bank. It would not be possible to distinguish between one set of notes and another.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The question raised by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) is one deserving of consideration.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Would not the last portion of clause 56 be a hardship upon the banks? The Government may designate any number of places and put the banks to inconvenience, which would fall more heavily on the smaller banks, as they would have to make arrangements for agencies at any place designated, while the larger banks would have agencies established there already? I think it would be better to confine it to the places already mentioned in the section.

Mr. FOSTER. This power would be in the hands of the Treasury Board, and I do not think it would be liable to be abused. It would be well for us to have the power of opening up other agencies, if deemed necessary. As some of the Provinces are very large, it might be considered that more than one agency should be opened up.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Even in Ontario, it occurs to me in Toronto it would be quite suffi-

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If in the Province of Quebec we designate Montreal, it might be necessary also to designate Quebec. In Ontario, which every bank take the notes of every other bank. Mr. TISDALE.

is extending so rapidly, it might also be necessary to name another place than Toronto for redemption.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). To banks like the Bank of Montreal and the Bank of British North America, it would make very little difference, as they have agencies established all over the country, but to smaller banks like those of the lower Provinces, the provision might cause a good deal of difficulty.

Mr. DESJARDINS. It would seem to me that the difficulty could be got over by arranging with the bank which would have branches in all these

Mr. COCKBURN. It would be better, I think, to provide that the bank "shall make arrangements," instead of as the Bill says, "establish agencies."

Mr. FOSTER. It is the same thing.

Mr. COCKBURN. Establishing an agency is one thing, and making an arrangement for the redemption of your notes is another. The smaller banks could make arrangements to take up their notes with the other banks. If they had to establish agencies it would be a somewhat difficult thing.

Mr. KENNY. I do not think there will be any difficulty in this. Banks in the Maritime Provinces have now made arrangements for the redemption of their notes all over the Dominion, and the notes of most of the banks of the Maritime Provinces are redeemed at par in Victoria, B.C. I think we may safely leave the matter to the Treasury Board.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me there is some little confusion between clauses 56 and 57. I do not quite see, at the outset, how clause 57 comports with the provisions in clause 56.

Mr. FOSTER. Clause 57 is payment on account; it is the same as in the old Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the two appear to contradict each other.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think it works out in this way. The bank is obliged at every place to receive its own notes in payment at par; and, under the section, arrangements are to be made, at certain designated places, for the redemption.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I am very much inclined to think with my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) that a provision stating that the banks should make arrangements for the redemption of their notes at different places, should be inserted instead of the requirements that they should establish agencies.

On section 57,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It has been suggested to me that a provision should be inserted in this clause that it should not be lawful for any bank or branch of a bank to charge a discount on the notes of any other bank. Some of the banks may refuse to take the notes of the smaller banks except at a discount, and I can see no possible harm in providing that it shall not be lawful for them to do

Mr. FOSTER. I will let section 54 stand for the time being. I think the proposal of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) would make Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Nobody asks that they should be compelled to take them. I propose that if they take them they must not take them at a discount.

Mr. TISDALE. I think the proposal would defeat the object the hon, gentleman has in view. In the Province of Ontario, you cannot compel the branches of the different banks to take the notes on a gold basis, because they arrange to do that at their head offices.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman misunderstands my suggestion. The whole scheme of this Bill is to make all bank notes redeemable at par in any part of the Dominion. If Toronto is the only place in Ontario where the notes of the banks of the Maritime Provinces are taken at par, outside of Toronto they will not be taken at par. The larger banks may still refuse to take the notes of the smaller banks except at a discount, and the result will be that one of the cardinal objects you have in view will not be carried out.

Mr. TISDALE. At present all Ontario money is taken at par in Quebec by any bank, although the bills have to be sent to Toronto to be redeemed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think the scheme proposed by the hon, member for Queen's would work unless he combines with it a provision that the banks must take the notes. His object is to make the notes current everywhere at their face value. As the hon member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) says, that is secured by arrangements being made for their redemption at headquarters in each Province. But even suppose it is not secured, the hon. gentleman's proposal will not secure it any better. For instance, if I go to Port Arthur with $500 of the notes of the Bank of Nova Scotia in my pocket, and present them to the agency of the Bank of Montreal there, assuming that the arrangement for their redemption is made at Toronto, and that the branch at Port Arthur cannot take them at par, what could they say? They would decline; they would say: "If it were not for the provisions of that section, we would cash them at one-half per cent. discount, but we are not allowed to cash them at a discount, and you must get them cashed by a broker on the street." It seems to me that the proposal would not improve our provision.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The practical result, then, will be that the notes will not circulate at all except at a discount.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; I am assuming that the hon. gentleman's own argument is correct, namely, that the arrangement made at the head office of the Province is not sufficient to secure the payment of the notes of the smaller banks at par. Experience will show that suitable arrangements have been made in the different Provinces, and the result is that the notes are as a rule circulated at par.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I am obliged to adopt the view of the hon. the Minister of Justice in opposition to that of my hon. friend, for if we adopted the amendment proposed we should have to compel the banks to take the notes.

On section 57,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In this section you declare expressly that the banks shall not be bound to redeem notes.

Mr. FOSTER. Its own notes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Quite so. I do not see in that case how you can compel them to pay in specie or in Dominion notes at these other points.

Mr. TISDALE. We have to be careful and not impose burdens on the banks, not necessary to accomplish the object we have in view. By redeeming at par, I understand that the bills of one bank may be replaced by those of another, so as to make them a circulating medium; but if you want gold, which rarely happens, you go to the head office of the bank.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the payment at par?

Mr. TISDALE. The idea may not be expressed, but does not the hon. gentleman agree in the view that it will be sufficient to meet the difficulty by making the notes of one Province redeemable in the bills of another Province?

Mr. COCKBURN. Put in the word "circulation at par" and you have it all right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think so.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The practical result will be that the banks in one Province will give their bills in exchange for those of the banks in other Provinces.

Section allowed to stand.

On sub-section 2,

Mr. AMYOT. I beg to move that we add to this sub-section what we insert in the incorporation of railways and other private companies:

And each bank shall be deemed to have a legal domicile at every place wherein it has an agency, branch or office.

Suppose parties have a difficulty with a bank in the city where it has not its chief office, they cannot serve an action excepting at the head office. If the difficulty arises at Three Rivers, they will have to bring suit at Montreal.

Mr. MULOCK. The Local Legislatures can establish what shall be good service.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You do not make more than one domicile to a railway company.

Mr. AMYOT. Most decidedly, legal domicile for the service of actions. Suppose there is a bank which has its head office in Montreal and a branch office in Quebec. I have a difficulty with it in Quebec. Under this section I would have to take my suit to Montreal.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That is provided to a large extent by provincial legislation. The Bank of Montreal does business in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and it can be sued in either Province on a contract made there. If you choose to make a legal domicile wherever it has an office, a bank doing business in Halifax might be sued in British Columbia and vice versa.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would ask the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), whether he would like to make more than one domicile in one Province?

Mr. AMYOT. Certainly; but I would not change the place where the action could be proceeded with.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It seems to me to be open to this inconvenience, that a company would be liable to be served wherever it had a clerk carrying on a small branch business, and I think it would be better to have the company served at its chief place of business in the Province.

Mr. MULOCK. The Provincial Legislatures can settle the procedure in this matter.

Mr. AMYOT. We have the power here to settle the procedure in this matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not for a moment doubt that we have the power, but the Provincial Legislatures regulate the procedure.

Mr. MULOCK. Neither do I deny that we have the power, but in regard to the service of all corporations, the simplest way would be to leave the Provincial Legislatures to provide for it.

Resolutions reported.

INSTRUCTIONS TO CUSTOMS' COL-LECTORS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would like to ask the Minister of Finance when he will give us that explanation with regard to the tariff respecting the different classes of pork?

Mr. FOSTER. Just as soon as the Bill is ready I shall take it up. It is being printed now.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There is one thing more. I have heard complaints that the collectors at the different ports still exact duties under the original tariff. I have a great many letters from Halifax about it. They say that the Tariff Bill having finally passed there appears to be no good reason why the duties could not be collected under the rates which are finally agreed to. For instance, the collectors are still collecting duty on both liquors and packages under rates entirely different from the rates of the revised tariff. If the collectors were advised to act under the tariff as finally passed, all the difficulty would be avoided.

Mr. BOWELL. Instructions have been given just in the line which the hon. gentleman has suggested, that is, to accept duties upon the amended resolutions, and not upon the resolutions as they were first introduced, nor upon the old tariff. Of course, the moment the resolutions were introduced they took effect, and instructions were given to accept all entries under the new resolutions, subject to amendment. As soon as the liquor resolutions were changed, instructions were also given to act under these, and not under the resolutions as first introduced.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.45 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 29th April, 1890.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock. Prayers.

SUPPLY—THE POWER OF DISALLOW-ANCE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. AMYOT.

Mr. BLAKE. Pursuant to the notice which I gave some days ago, I rise to move in amendment:

To leave out all the words after "That" and insert the following:—"it is expedient to provide means whereby, on solemn occasions touching the exercise of the power of disallowance, or of the appellate power as to educational legislation, important questions of law or fact may be referred by the Executive to a high judicial tribunal for hearing and consideration, in such mode that the authorities and parties interested may be represented and that a reasoned opinion may be obtained for the information of the Executive."

At this stage of the Session I shall endeavor to comprise within the briefest possible limits those observations which I have to make in support of this proposition. I would say that recent, current, and imminent events have combined to convince me that it is important in the public interest that this motion should receive attention during this Session, else I should not have propounded it at this time. I propound it, as its language implies, and as, I think, you will observe before I sit down, in no hostile spirit towards the Administration; and its form is one which is not necessarily hostile, but which I have adopted on this occasion, not with any view of precluding an amendment, but because it is the only available method by which I can now hope to bring the matter under your consideration at all. Now, Sir, the federal constitution of Canada specially demands our attention to the legality of its legislative Acts. We have within our borders seven Provincial Legislatures, one Territorial Assembly and this Parliament, all and each with limited powers, all and each hedged in by limitations—with reference to the Provincial Legislatures and the Parliament, as between these two, and with reference to both the Provincial Legislatures and the Parliament, as between them both and the reserved powers of the Imperial Parliament-with limited powers, I say, any excess, or attempted excess of which in legislation is absolutely void. Our several constitutions are partly unwritten and undefined; they are also largely, perhaps, I may say, mainly, written and defined. And so it has happened that we have fallen into the use of the word constitutional in two very different senses: one, the only sense in which it is used in the mother country, whose constitution, being the growth of customs, precedents, practices and principles, and not being a written instrument, unalterable by the Parliament, Parliament being itself supreme-whose constitution, I say, is a thing elastic, plastic, changing, of the spirit, not of the letter; and so, when we speak, in the English sense, of an Act being constitutional or unconstitutional, we refer to its spirit, we refer to the question whether it is in accord with, or in violation of, the spirit of the constitution. But we have another sense in which we use the word in a sense peculiar to ourselves, or at any rate, distinct from its use in the mother country; we use it also to express an Act in excess of our legal powers, In the first class of cases, however obnoxious may be the Act that we condemn, it is nevertheless indisputably valid; in the second class of cases, however useful we may consider the Act we are discussing, it is null and void. The first class of cases depends on political considera-tions entirely outside the judicial domain, which is quite unfitted for their disposition; the second class depends upon legal considerations fitted for the judicial domain, and which ought, as far as may be, to be kept within it. Yet, Sir, no Legislature or Executive can, any more than any private individual, act at all without considering, and in a sense deciding for itself, the legality of its acts, and so in some sort, entering upon the judicial department. But not upon the domain of the judicial power; because our opinion that our acts are valid does not make them so; their validity depends upon the decision of the judicial authority, and upon that alone. Now, Sir, the general notion that the executive, the legislative and the judicial departments of government ought to be, so far as practicable, separate and apart, is one held by many of the most eminent constitutionalists as a fundamental principle. There can be no doubt that the absolute union of these departments is neither more nor less than absolute despotism. Unite in one hand, I care not whether it be the hand of an autocrat or the hand of a Council, the power of legislation, the power of adjudication, and the power of administration, and you make the most absolute despot that is conceivable. The separation, therefore, of these departments, the degree to which, without over-weakening or over-complicating the action of the machine, you can separate them, marks the degree to which, in this aspect of a constitutional system, you have attained perfection. I do not say that they can be absolutely and always separated. It is not so. Now, my object is to apply these general views, which I have briefly stated, to one important class of public transactions so far as may be found practicable; and that class of public transactions is divided, as you will see by my notice, into two subject matters, in which the Dominion Executive, itself a political body, has a constitutional duty, the discharge of which involves the interpretation of statutes, and thus the solution of strictly legal questions; and in which also this Parliament, which has the right to advise, to condemn or to approve, has, or may have, duties of its own. I by no means propose to withdraw from the Executive its duty; my object is to aid it in the efficient execution of its duty. make no attempt at this time to discuss the propriety of these constitutional provisions, or, in any general sense, the executive, the parliamentary or the party action which has tended more or less, to elucidate the generally accepted or the generally opposing views upon these subjects. My only wish is, without discussing how far these provisions are wise, taking them as they are, to facilitate the better working of them. The first of the two classes to which I allude is that in which the proposal comes before the Executive, to disallow an Act of a Provincial Legislature on the ground that that Act is ultra vires. If it be so, the Act is void; and I think I may say, that it is now generally agreed that void Acts should not be disallowed, but should be left to the action of the courts. is, nevertheless, and I think with sound reason, contended, that circumstances of great general inconvenience or prejudice from a Dominion standpoint, and involving difficulty, delay, or the impossibility of a resort to law, may justify the policy of disallowance, even in cases in which the Act is ultra vires, and therefore void. In that view there would arise two questions, the question of policy, and the question of legality; because the question of legality leaves untouched the question of policy, which is, "even if the Act be void, shall it be disallowed or no?" The other class to which my motion alludes, is that of the Educational appeal, which arises under section 93 of the Constitutional Act, and under the analogous provision of the Manitoba Constitutional Act. Under these clauses a limited power to make Educational laws is granted to a Province, provided, amongst other things, that nothing therein contained shall prejudicially affect any right, or privilege, with respect to denominational schools which any of the Provinces had by law, or, in the case of Manitoba, by practice, at the Union. There is another class of restrictions, which I do not in terms touch here, but to which, in cases in which an appeal is raised upon them, my observations would equally apply. This limitation upon the power of a Province is made more effectual by a special provision, giving an appeal to the Dominion Executive from any Act or decision of the Provincial Legislature or Authorities affecting any right or privilege of the Pro-testant or Roman Catholic minority in relation to education; and whereby also, in case of the nonexecution by the Province of the decision of the Executive, this Parliament may make remedial laws for the purpose of effectuating that decision. Those members who have long been here will well remember the New Brunswick school case, which was agitated for many years; in the course of which agitation I have hoped that some political aspects of that and of analogous questions were finally settled -settled, at all events, for the bulk of the party with which I act, and for the humble individual who is now addressing you. I regard it as settled, for myself at any rate, first of all, that, as a question of policy, there shall be no disallowance of Educational legislation, for the mere reason that, in the opinion of this Parliament, some other or different policy than that which the Province has thought fit to adopt would be a better policy. I hold it to be settled, in the second place, that no Address to the Crown shall be passed by this Parliament asking for a change of the Constitutional Act as affecting any Province, at any rate against the will of that Province, in this particular. And I hold it to be settled, thirdly; indeed it follows obviously from these two propositions, that the only questions which can practically arise within our domain are such as may be raised, by way of appeal, under section 93 and the analogous section of the Manitoba Act. The events which took place in connection with the New Brunswick school case afford, to myself at all events, a strong proof of the expediency of what I now propose. Let me enforce the three propositions which I have stated by a brief reference to the votes upon that occasion. In part those votes were taken when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, in part they were taken when the Liberal party were in power. The first stage in the transaction occurred when hon, gentlemen opposite were in power; and in May, 1872, I voted with the majority of the House against a motion to regret that the New Brunswick school law had not been disallowed by the Government to which I was opposed; although I was, and expressed myself, of the opinion that some of the changes which had been made by that Provincial law were harsh changes. At the same time, I seconded a motion, which fortunately also prevailed:

"That this House deems it expedient that the opinion of the law officers in England, and if possible of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, should be obtained as to the right of the New Brunswick Legislature to make such changes in the school law as deprived Roman Catholics of the privileges which they enjoyed at the Union, in respect of religious education in the common schools, with a view of ascertaining whether the case comes within the terms of sub-section 4 of section 93 of the British North America Act of 1867, which authorised the Parliament of Canada to enact remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions respecting education in the said Act."

At that time, I need hardly remind the House, there was no Supreme Court in existence. advice of the law officers was obtained, and it was, as it had been on prior, and as I am afraid, if I may judge by a notice on the paper, it has been on subsequent occasions, not perhaps very satisfying; and there was no mode of approach apparently to the Judicial Committee. In the end we had to get up a suit in some way or other, about some assessment or other, in order to obtain, by a clumsy and expensive process, a judicial decision, not reached for some years afterwards, of the question involved and stated in the motion which I have just read. The second stage of those proceedings arose in 1875, when the present Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Costigan), whom I regret not to see here, being then in opposition, gave notice of a motion for an Address to the Crown praying for an alteration in the Constitutional Act as it affected the Province of New Brunswick in this regard. Upon that notice being given, I put upon the Votes and Proceedings notice of an amendment, which I take leave to read as expressing the views I then entertained, and still entertain on that aspect of the question. This was my notice:

" That prior to the Union, New Brunswick had sole and exclusive control over its educational system.

"That under the Union Act, as construed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, such control was reserved to, and has ever since been retained by New was reserved to, and has sort that Brunswick.

"That New Brunswick has not signified any willingness that the Union Act should be amended in this particular.

"That any encroachment made against the will of New Brunswick, on the powers so reserved, would by diminishing the security now enjoyed by each Province for the maintenance of its provincial rights, tend to subvert the constitution.

"That whatever may be the opinions of members of this House on the educational policy of any Province, this House deems it inexpedient to address the Crown in favor of any amendment which would, against the will of the encroach on the powers reserved to it in re-Province, spect to education.

When the motion of the present Minister of Inland Revenue ultimately came on, my hon. friend from the East Riding of York (Mr. Mackenzie), then First Minister, moved the following amendment:

"That in the opinion of this House, legislation by the Parliament of the United Kingdom, encroaching on any powers reserved to any one of the Provinces by the British North America Act, 1867, would be an infraction of the Provincial Constitution, and that it would be inexpedient and fraught with danger to the autonomy of each of the Provinces, for this House to invite such legislation."

This amendment, for which I voted, was carried, with the addition of an amendment inviting the friendly intervention of the Imperial authorities with the Government of New Brunswick for some change by their own voluntary action; the opinion of the House continuing to be as it had been in the previous Parliament, that the legislation which was the subject of agitation was in some particulars harsh, and might better have been otherwise; but that this was a question for the Province freely to decide. I have, I think, proved my case. Mr. BLAKE.

Now, Sir, in the exercise of this power of disallowance by the Government, political questions will, or at any rate may, probably, always arise. Questions of policy may present themselves, that is questions of expediency, of convenience, of the public interest, of the spirit of the constitution or of the form of legislation. All these are clearly, exclusively for the executive and legislative, that is for the political departments of the Government. But it is equally clear, that when in order to determine your course you must find whether a particular act is ultra or intra vires, you are discharging a legal and a judicial function. What do you do? You proceed to interpret the Constitutional Act, and to declare its meaning; you proceed to interpret the Provincial Act under consideration and to declare its meaning; you proceed to compare the two statutes so interpreted and declared; and you proceed, finally, to conclude whether or not the law conflicts with, or transcends the powers which are conferred upon the Legislature which passed it. Nothing that can be conceived partakes more exclusively of the character of a legal and judicial operation than what I have just now described. Again, when you act on the appellate Educational clauses; as, for example, in the case of Manitoba, the very case which is now in a sense pending, as to whether recent legislation be within the limits of the rights of the Provincial Legislature, and whether any relief is due under the appellate clause to those who claim it, you have a legal question, or rather, in this case, a mixed question of law and of fact; which circumstance it was that induced me to insert the word "fact" in my motion, conscious as I was that it was only on the rarest occasions that any references of that description would be necessary. Yet it seemed to me that, in this particular instance, I was constrained to provide for an emergency which may arise. Now, what is the process to be gone through in order to reach a conclusion? The first involves that very question of fact, or rather a mixed question of law and fact. You have to find whether any class of the population had by law or practice, at the time of the Union, any, and, if so, what right or privilege with respect to denominational schools. Secondly, if so, you have to find whether that right or privilege has been affected, and how it has been affected, by the legislation complained of; and thirdly, if so, you have to find what legislative action is required to redress the wrong. The first two questions at any rate are legal and not at all political. Now, I aver that in the decision of all legal questions, it is important that the political executive should not, more than can be avoided, arrogate to itself judicial powers; and that when, in the discharge of its political duties, it is called upon to deal with legal questions, it ought have the power in cases of solemnity and importance, where it may be thought expedient so to do, to call in aid the judicial department in order to arrive at a correct solution. decision that an Act is ultra vires, and its consequent disallowance by the Executive are incidents peculiar in practice to ourselves. They do not exist in the great example of the Republic to the south of It is a most delicate function, and its exercise involves most serious ulterior consequences. question is by the decision of the Executive finally decided, and the Act is obliterated and annulled. The question whether it was or was not valid is so removed from judicial cognisance for ever. thus by repeated exercises of the power of disallowance, in respect to repeated provincial legislation, the Province may practically be deprived of that which all the time may be a real right ;-a right claimed, which may be a right justly claimed. Thus, one of two limited Governments, of which it may be said in a general sense that the sphere of the jurisdiction of the one is limited by the sphere of the jurisdiction of the other; -one of these two limited Governments, may practically decide the extent of the limits, of what in a sense, is its rival Government. That is a very delicate position. It is a little like the position which a great many very good and wise persons contemplate with grave alarm, as to the pretensions of one church to decide what are the limits of power, as between Church and State,—to decide for itself these limits and thus, if that power be admitted, to arrogate such rights as it pleases to itself. A decision under such circumstances is almost necessarily a suspected decision. a sense in which it is the decision of a party in his own cause. And therefore, for that reason only, if for no other, it should be fortified as far as possible by neutral, dignified and judicial aid. So, in the case of an Educational appeal, analogous results at any rate, may ensue; because here also the decision would bar judicial action, and produce coercive legislation, imposing that decision on the Province; and would thus, according to the opinion of the Dominion Executive and Parliament, and to that alone, end the question. Now, do I say that in all cases the Executive should refer? I do not say so; my motion does not say so; my opinion is not so. I have referred—using language for this purpose which is recorded in the constitutions of some of the most respected States of the Republic-to solemn occasions and to important questions; but my motion is framed in this regard in what I conceive to be the spirit of the British and of our own constitution. It is elastic; it leaves a responsibility to the Executive to decide on the action to be taken in the particular case; it deals with the case as exceptional. My own opinion is, that whenever, in opposition to the continued view of a Provincial Executive and Legislature, it is contemplated by the Dominion Executive to disallow a Provincial Act because it is ultra vires, there ought to be a reference; and also that there ought to be a reference in certain cases where the condition of public opinion renders expedient a solution of legal problems, dissociated from those elements of passion and expediency which are, rightly or wrongly, too often attributed to the action of political bodies. And again, I for my part would recommend such a reference in all cases of Educational appeal cases which necessarily evoke the feelings to which I have alluded, and to one of which, I am frank to say, my present motion is mainly due. Our present powers, Sir, are wholly inadequate for the effectual execution of the project in hand. There is no certainty-there is in ordinary cases rather an improbability-of our being able to reach the Judicial Committee; and as to all the three possible appeals or references, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the Supreme Court, and the Imperial law officers, the machinery is extremely defective. There is no provision for the representation of the reasoned opinion of the tribunal. Now, even where under special provisions on our own Statute-book, the first of these three requisites did exist—as in the case of the Liquor License Act, where we made a special provision for a reference to the Supreme Court, and for the appearance of and argument by opposing parties; as in the case of the Manitoba Railway crossings matter, where under a general law the Railway Committee of the Privy Council referred an important constitutional question to the Supreme Court, with provision, the law allowed, for the argument by opposing parties—even in these cases, which come nearest to that degree of perfection to which I desire to attain, the results were not satisfactory; why? Because the remaining requisite did not exist, in such form, at any rate, that it was used. There was no reasoned opinion; no grounds were stated by the tribunal for the conclusion which it shortly gave in reply to the Executive. The hon. First Minister will recollect expressing his own dissatisfaction with the opinion of the Supreme Court in the liquor license case, on that very ground, and he will remember that that circumstance involved a prolongation of the struggle and further proceedings; until in the end, the question was deemed settled by an argument and a reasoned judgment of the Judicial Committee which had earlier occurred; and by an unreasoned opinion of the same tribunal on appeal from the Supreme Court. I say, the lack of this last requisite deprived those proceedings of their chief value; they obliged us to resort to other methods; they left only as their result the disposition of an isolated case, with no general application, and of no permanent use. It was as if some Delphic oracle had spoken. We could not tell, beyond the limited disposition of the case in hand, what was actually meant, and not always even that. For my own part, I attach little comparative importance to judicial solutions, reached without argument, and announced without reasons. This, Sir, is only com-The experience of mankind has mon sense. established, as the essential ingredients for the attainment of justice between man and man, the opposing arguments of the parties before a tribunal, and the reasoned judgment of that tribunal upon the arguments so addressed to it. The acutest minds are but too apt to err unless so aided in the formation of their judgment, and so checked in the announcement of it. Which of us, I ask, would submit, in any important case of his own, to such a method of reaching a conclusion? And how can we expect that the community at large will submit to such a method in the public cause? Let the opposing views be stated, presented and sifted in public, and in the presence of the parties; so the best materials for consideration will be obtained. Let the conclusions themselves be reasoned out; so will the judgment itself be best tested and sifted, and its soundness ascertained. It may be said that these views, applicable to private causes and to the ordinary transactions of mankind, have less application or none to constitutional questions. I should deny, on reason, any such view; and I refer, in the contrary sense, to a quotation from Bryce's recent book upon the American Constitution, which shows, what one would have expected, that if there be a distinction, different interests; there is no provision for the ascertainment of facts; there is no provision for the to this class of cases. Speaking of the illustrious exponent of the United States constitution, Chief Justice Marshall, that author says:

"Chief Justice Marshall's work of building up and working out the constitution was accomplished not so much by the decisions he gave as by the judgments in which he expounded the principles of these decisions, judgments which, for their philosophical breadth, the luminous exactness of their reasoning, and the fine political sense which pervades them, have never been surpassed and rarely equalled by the most famous jurists of modern Europe or of ancient Rome. Marshall did not forget the duty of a judge to decide nothing more than the suit before him requires, but he was wont to set for the grounds of his decision in such a way as to show how they would fail to be applied in cases not yet arisen."

A noble function, which I wish we could see applied in Canada! Now, for want of this, as I have said, our occasional efforts to obtain light have resulted less satisfactorily than I could wish -sometimes in clumsy, slow, expensive, and but slightly fruitful proceedings; sometimes in absolute failure; and always with loss, for the want of the adequate provision to which I invite the attention of the House. I, myself, have objected on former occasions to the reference of unargued, abstract questions for an unreasoned opinion. I think it is objectionable. It is better than nothing in some cases; in some cases, I would adopt it if the only resort. I have advised it before, and would advise it again. But, as a rule, I still adhere to that view; and because I adhere to it, I propose a more excellent way. But though some theoretical objections may still remain to the guarded plan which I propose, the main objections are most unquestionably removed by the adoption of these precautions. The balance of advantage is decidedly one way, and that is all that in human affairs we can expect to attain. Now, Sir, our present law provides a power to the Executive to make such a reference; and such a reference may, at this day, be made without any of these precautions, while it cannot be made with them. My proposal, therefore, involves a check and a limitation, as well as an added power. With reference to the theoretical objections to which I have alluded, and which have been pressed very much in the United States—where, however, there is this cardinal difference, that they are not at all called upon to deal with this question of disallowance or of appeal-with reference to the theoretical objections there raised on the question as there presented, Mr. Bryce, in the work to which I have alluded, points out the corresponding disadvantages, even there, of the absence of some such provisions. They are:

"To settle at once and forever a disputed point of constitutional law, would often be a gain both to private citizens and to the organs of the Government. Under the present system, there is no certainty when, if ever, such a point will be settled. Nobody may care to incur the expense and trouble of taking it before the court; and a suit which raises it may be compromised or dropped. When such a question, after, perhaps, the lapse of years, comes before the Supreme Court and is determined, the determination may be different from what the legal profession has expected, may alter that which has been believed to be the law, may shake or overthrow private interests based on views now declared to be erroneous."

But, Sir, besides the great positive gain of obtaining the best guidance, there are other, and in my opinion, not unimportant gains besides. Ours is a popular government; and when burning questions arise inflaming the public mind, when agitation is rife as to the political action of the Executive or the Legislature—which action is to be based on Mr. Blake.

legal questions, obviously beyond the grasp of the people at large; -when the people are on such questions divided by cries of creed and race; then I maintain that a great public good is attainable by the submission of such legal questions to legal tribunals, with all the customary securities for a sound judgment; and whose decisions—passionless and dignified, accepted by each of us as binding in our own affairs, involving fortune, freedom, honor, life itself-are most likely to be accepted by us all in questions of public concern. The great Bill for Local Government in Ireland, introduced by Mr. Gladstone in 1886, and which, despite its defects-and I am amongst those who have always thought they were very serious—is, considering the conditions of its preparation, one of the most wonderful productions of its kind, made provision for the establishment of this principle of reference in this class of cases. It arranged for a reference, either by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland at his option, or the English Secretary of State at his, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of all questions of ultra vires arising on legislative Bills and Acts of the Irish Legislature, and it provided that the decision should be final. The Legislature of Ontario has passed two general statutes, providing, in the one case, for the institution of declaratory actions—actions for judicial declarations upon such subjects; and in the other, for a reference to the courts of such questions; and in each case with those securities which I am anxious we should provide for ourselves. The hon. the Minister of Justice is at this moment availing himself of the earlier of those Acts, for the purpose of testing before the law courts, a very important constitutional question as to the extent of the Executive power. Several States of the Union have, in their constitutions, taken the power of reference, without these securities. We ourselves, as I have pointed out, have taken the power generally, without these securities. We took it specially in the Liquor License Act, with a portion of these securities; we took it generally in the railway cases, with a portion of these securities. Thus, it is beyond our power to urge any longer the theoretical objection; while by the proposal which I advance, we can minimise those objections, and at the same time advance the practical utility of the procedure. If you grant me a definite issue, a full argument, and a reasoned judgment, in my view the objections almost vanish, while the advantages enormously increase. But, my proposal is by no means radical or revolutionary, compulsory or general. It is but an enabling proposition; it but empowers the Executive to obtain -by a procedure replete with the essential requisites for the production of a sound opinion-the views on legal questions of legal authorities. leaving to the Executive, so aided, the responsibility of final action. I have an absolute confidence that, if my proposal should be declined, the first persons to regret that decision will be hon. gentlemen opposite. My opinion is, that this is a proposal eminently helpful to the Executive of the country at this time; but it is eminently helpful to them, because it is eminently helpful to the good government of this country; and it is in this spirit that I move the amendment which I now submit to the judgment of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the first place, I accept in the fullest sense, the assurance of my hon. friend that his motion has not been laid before the House in any spirit of hostility to the Administration of the day. On the contrary, I am grateful to the hon. gentleman for having brought forward this subject in the very careful resolution he has prepared, and still more, for the able speech in which he has enforced the various paragraphs and the main object of that resolution. is gratifying to know that we have now in the House of Commons of Canada an hon. gentleman who is able to give his time and talents to bringing before the representatives of the people important questions of this kind. When I first read the hon, gentleman's resolution hastily, it occurred to me, as, I dare say, it occurred to many hon. gentlemen who hear me now, that it was an advance towards the American system, and proposed to transfer the responsibility of the Ministry of the day to a judicial tribunal; but on scanning the resolution in its carefully prepared terms, that impression was dissipated, and I saw that the principal object of the resolution, as I read it, is that the questions submitted by the Executive to the judicial tribunal should be enforced, sustained and presented to Parliament, to the public and to the Crown by the fact of this legal decision having been given. As the hon, gentleman has stated, when a question is submitted by the Crown to the courts, the simple answer "yes" or "no" is most It is a pronunciamento of the unsatisfactory. court without giving any reason for the decision on the decision which has been given. The proposition in this resolution that the courts could be required by the Executive to hear counsel, to take evidence in questions where facts form a portion of the subject to be decided, the fact that it is provided that the courts can and must give reasons for their answer, is sufficient, in my opinion, whether there was or was not any other excellence in the resolution to warrant this House to adopt it. I am strongly of the opinion that this resolution should meet with the favorable consideration of the House. The only objection really that I see to it is the fear that, the power being so emphatically given to the Crown to insist upon reasons being given the Parliament of Canada, and especially the House of Commons, may continually pressed and urged to refer Bills, whether passed by the Dominion Parliament or the Provincial Legislatures, to the judicial tribunal. We may have very unimportant questions which we would be urged by certain interests to refer to the court. However, the Government of the day must have force enough to resist any such pressure. That is an evil which is comparatively unimportant when you consider the great advantages of the adoption of this resolution, the principle of it being that power is to be given to the Executive—an enabling power, as the hon. gentleman has truly said—to submit any important question to the court, and specially on these two points—the question of disallowance, and the question which may—and I am afraid will—assume large proportions—the educational question. Whenever the question of disallowance is raised on important matters and the reasons alleged for disallowance are that the Act itself was ultra vires, that is, that it was beyond the competence of the Legislature which passed it, I coincide with my hon friend in believing that the Crown should have the power of submitting such a question to the courts, and give the opportunity to the authority — be it legislative or executive, which has passed the statute, to appear before such tribunals, and that all parties interested, or that the court should think were interested, should have the opportunity of being heard. Of course my hon, friend (Mr. Blake), in his resolution, has guarded against the supposition that such a decision is binding on the Executive. It is expressly stated—and that is one of the instances which shows that this resolution has been most carefully prepared—that such a decision is only for the information of the Government. The Executive is not relieved from any responsibility because of any answer being given by the tribunal. If the Executive were to be relieved of any such responsibility, I should consider that a fatal blot in the proposition of my hon. friend. believe in responsible government. I believe in the responsibility of the Executive. But the answer of the tribunal will be simply for the information of the Government. The Government may dissent from that decision, and it may be their duty to do so if they differ from the conclusion to which the court has come. There is another point in regard to which the court must be guarded in the measure which will be introduced-not this Session but I hope next Session—based on this resolution, and that is, that the answer, whatever it may be, should be considered in the nature of a judgment so far as to allow of an appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. With these remarks, I will only say further, that I thank the hon. gentleman for having brought this resolution before the House, as I concur with it generally, though holding the right with a free hand to frame the measure which will have to be brought down to Parliament in accordance with it. I do not think there can be any doubt as to the meaning of the motion of my hon, friend. I think it is so explicit in its terms that no questions can arise as to what its meaning is, and, if there were any doubts as to its meaningthere were none in my own mind-those doubts would be removed by the lucid speech of my hon. friend. That speech is of record in Hansard, and will throw a clear light on the objects and the aims of my hon. friend (Mr. Blake) in introducing the resolution.

Amendment of Mr. Blake agreed to.

SUPPLY—SAWDUST IN RIVERS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House immediately resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. EISENHAUER. Mr. Speaker,---

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon, gentleman will wait until the second motion is made that I leave the Chair.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the Speaker do now leave the Chair.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I have a matter to bring before the House, which is of great importance to my county—I refer to the prohibition of the throwing of sawdust into the LaHave River. The mill owners on that river were so threatened and fined that they finally decided to close down, in consequence of which hundreds of people are deprived of the means of earning a livelihood and are drifting away to the United States for want of employment. There are thousands of logs laying in booms which will soon become useless unless they are cut. The trade of the town of Bridgewater is being crippled for the want of the circulation of a large amount of money which heretofore arose from the proceeds of some fifteen or twenty millions of lumber cut in the mills on the LaHave River and exported. The proprietors of these mills are fully convinced that the enforcement of this Sawdust Act by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was for political reasons, on account of the mill owners being Liberal in politics. They believe they are being persecuted on account of their politics from the fact that other mills in the adjoining counties are allowed to operate unmolested, being neither threatened or fined. In fact all over the Dominion very few fines have been imposed, and nearly everywhere else the mills are allowed to run all the season, especially so on the Ottawa River. the Minister persists in the course he has adopted for the last two years, the trade of the thriving town of Bridgewater will be crippled, and the effects generally in that section of the country will be very serious indeed. Seeing that the Bill introduced by the Minister, proposing to treat all mills alike and giving the Government no discretion, has been dropped, I would suggest that henceforth all mills be treated alike under the present law, and that those mills on the LaHave River should be allowed to operate until a different law is enacted. I have here a report from Mr. Rogers, who has been inspector of fisheries in Nova Scotia for a number of years, and in whom the Government had full confidence while he was in their I will read some portion of that report: employ.

"Question.—Of course, sir, you have read the defence of Minister Tupper, published some time ago, justifying the enforcement of the Sawdust Law on the LaHave River. Would you have any objection to giving your views to the public?"

"Mr. Rogers.—None whatever. The public have, I presume, a right to know all that I have learned while in their service, especially since my efforts in that direction, while a responsible officer of the Fisheries Department, failed to make such information available to the public. "Question.—You are a supporter of the present Government, are you not?"

"Question.—You are a supporter of the present Government, are you not?
"Mr. Rogers.—Yes, and have been ever since 1867, and while in office I was often imprudently active even while the Liberals were in power, as is well known.
"Question.—What have you to say to an extract from a report made by you in 1879, and published by Minister Tupper, wherein you admit that the navigation of the LaHave was being injured, and the Davisons also admitted it?

Tupper, wherein you admit that the navigation of the LaHave was being injured, and the Davisons also admitted it?

"Mr. Rogers.—I have to say, among other things, just this, that a more dishonest and untruthful handling of so important a public matter, I have seldom ever witnessed. Mr. Tupper had before him all the reports, which I had previously made upon the subject, the dates of which I had given in my report on the Sawdust Question, yet he dishonestly and designedly leaves out my last full report, which would have fully explained the matter to the public. If you wish I will give you the substance of my last report dated 14th May, 1881. It is here in my letter-book.

"REPORT.

"BRIDGEWATER, 14th May, 1881.

"To W. F. WHITCHER, Esq.

"Sir.—I yesterday took two men and a boat and carefully examined this river at low water with a pole and found it as free from sawdust in the channel (and it is nearly all channel for a mile below the bridge) as it was a century ago, and it always will be so no matter how much sawdust is thrown into it. Below the point just where the ship Scotia grounded four years ago, of which I then informed you, there is still considerable sawdust but no more than there was then. I found by testing with a role at every ten feet or so across the channel testing with a pole at every ten feet or so across the channel | Mr. EISENHAUER.

(which I did at five or six different points where the sawdust is found, and at two-thirds ebb tide and in the shallowest water) that there was from twelve to fifteen feet, and this is where the most sawdust is found.

"The captain of the tug, who is continually towing vessels up and down the river, still assures me (and in politics he is a friend of Mr. Kaulbach's) that the harbor is not filling up nor does he believe it ever will. He says the channel is something narrower at the point referred to but not shallower. Mr. Gow, of the bank here, who is one of the strong men financially of the place, to whom the Hon. Mr. Owen referred me as being a good person to accompany me in the exploration, respectfully declined, saying that he most unhesitatingly accepted the statement of the captain of the tug as being correct, and considered any further trouble unnecessary. I may add that Mr. Gow was not only one of the most respected men in the Province, but was as much interested in preserving the harany further trouble unnecessary. (I may add that Mr. Gow was not only one of the most respected men in the Province, but was as much interested in preserving the harbor as any man, being himself a ship-builder, and he was also a supporter of Mr. Kaulbach's.

"I have conversed with all Mr. Kaulbach's leading supporters here; and while some of them believed the channel was filling up, not one man in the community has taken the trouble to examine the river, except myself; yet some of the most untruthful statements are made by interested parties, and retailed to Mr. Veith, who is simple enough to send it to your office for fact.

"Mr. Veith did not attempt to examine the river for himself, as is well known, but in this case made himself (though paid by the public) a retailer of other men's falsehoods and ignorance, as I will demonstrate later. And yet, such fustian as this was printed at public expense and quoted by the Minister as true, while my truthful reports—reports made by a responsible officer of the Department, who not only knew from long experience what he was talking about, but who did not mislead the Department in any matter—were suppressed or misrepresented.

mislead the Department in any matter—were suppressed or misrepresented.

"At the time I wrote the letter in 1879, from which the Minister quotes, there had been much talk upon the subject. Mr. Kaulbach and his friends were blaming me. And though the captain of the tug assured me then, that the deposit of sawdust on which the Scotia touched at low water, had been there for years, and, in his opinion, would increase no more; and that had not the stern of the vessel swung in a little too far through careless steering, she would not have touched at all; still I insisted upon it that Mr. Davison should keep his sawdust out, and I did so not because of my personalviews but to silence public steering, sne would not have touched at all; still Insisted upon it that Mr. Davison should keep his sawdust out, and I did so not because of my personalviews but to silence public clamor, and to quiet the feeling at Ottawa that I was favoring the Davisons—a feeling created by Mr. Kaulbach's falsehoods, as I will explain further on. Mr. Davison promised to do his best, and I gave him six months to prepare. He went to the United States and Canada to get information on the subject. On his return he bought a large steam boiler and with it erected a furnace to burn his sawdust; but it was not a success. Meanwhile we found that the view of the captain of the tug as expressed from the first tallied not only with my own, but was fully substantiated by subsequent experiences and facts as set out in my last report as above. Why Veith's falsehoods and ignorance were published at public expense, and since Mr. Whitcher's time are quoted by the Department, I will fully explain further on; also why my report was suppressed by Minister Tupper, last winter. And when I come to that, matters are likely to grow interesting, I fancy, as several public men are likely to get their feelings hurt, before I get through.

"Reporter.—'What is your idea of Mr. S. Wilmot's grow interesting, I fancy, as several public men are likely to get their feelings hurt, before I get through.

"Reporter.—'What is your idea of Mr. S. Wilmot's report, referred to by the Minister, particularly in regard to that other mill driven by water power, and whose sawdust was so easily disposed of?

"Mr. Rogers—'Well, as to that matter I scarcely have the patience to explain it. The matter is so fully understood by everybody in that neighborhood that one wonders that any man of even ordinary intelligence should publish such nonsense. I was there with Mr. Benjamin when the mill was first projected, and a dozen times since, more or less, and had it not been that nature had provided a basin into which to deposit the sawdust, the mill would never have been built. There was no stream of water there. The mill was located upon dry land like a steam mill, and the water brought from a distant lake by a wooden sluice much of the distance. It was then carried down over a bank some fifty feet high in an iron tube. Thus a small wheel of some eighteen to twenty inches over (perhaps two feet), under a fifty-foot head, drove the machinery, which took some fifty men to attend. And, as is well known by all practical mill men, the stream running from such a wheel would create a very small brook, and the whole concern, practically, so far as disposing of the sawdust was concerned, was in a position of a steam mill. The machinery for concentrating the sawdust and passing it by spouts into horse earts, was built with the mill, and was estimated in the cost of the enterprise before starting to build. The mill was located in a large cove on the side of the estuary, and when the tide is out the flats become bare over several hundred acres. Every square foot of the cove was needed for booming the logs. Had they put their sawdust into the water, it would have cost as much as to put it where they did, besides destroying the whole enterprise, as not one pound of it would move, because there was no current, converting in a few years their whole booming water into acres of sawdust.

ing in a few years their whole booming water into acres of sawdust.

"To compare the sawmills built on dams and over rivers, such as exist on the LaHave River, and to intimate that the sawdust can be as readily disposed of as in the other, is what one might expect from men like S. Wilmot, Lieut, Gordon, or C. H. Tupper. To put these matters in such hands is like putting razors in the hands of children; aye, worse, for the children would only cut themselves, but in this case other and more honest people are getting cut, and the industrial interests of a whole section of country is being paralysed. The reason why this public outrage is being enforced upon the La Have River, I will make as plain as the nose on your face.

Have Kiver, I will make as plane as the face.

"The Minister seems to feel the deepest sympathy for the poor coast fishermen about the mouth of the La Have, and is determined to compel the mill men on that river to cease their fish-destroying business—though hundreds of poor mill men are thereby thrown out of employment. But his bowels of compassion cease their function when he goes only a few miles away. Into the Medway and Liverpool he allows the sawdust to run unhindered, destroying the fish and bringing starvation to a much larger number of poor fishermen, about the mouths of those rivers, which he allows to be cursed with Conservative (hence, of course, harmless) sawdust."

I wrote to the Minister last year, but he gave me no reasons why this distinction was made, no reasons why the mills in Queen's and other counties were allowed to run while the sawdust was allowed to go into the rivers. It is evident that the channel of the river is not seriously interfered with, and pilots and others employed on the river state this to be the fact. I will read a report from the captain of a steamer plying on that river. It is as follows :-

"BRIDGEWATER, 22nd Nov., 1888.

"C. H. DAVIDSON, Bridgewater.

"C. H. DAVIDSON, Bridgewater.

"Sir.—I am in receipt of yours of the 20th instant. You wish me to inform you by letter how the depth of water in the channel of the LaHave compares now with the time I first took charge of the tugboat; also if I can or cannot now bring as large vessels to the wharves as I could years ago? In reply, I may say that I have been towing on the LaHave every season since 1878, and have noticed but little variation in the depth of the channel during that time, and I find no more difficulty in bringing large vessels to, or taking them from the wharves now, than I did when I first took charge of the tugboat. I took the barque Montreal from the wharf this season, drawing over 172 feet, the greatest draught I have taken down the channel since I have had charge of the tugboat.

"Yours truly,"

"Yours truly,

I think it is the hounder duty of the Covernment.

I think it is the bounden duty of the Government to ascertain whether there is any serious hindrance to navigation. I know the river very well myself, and, if my statement is worth anything, there is no hindrance to navigation on that river on account of sawdust. It is true, that sometimes sawdust may be found where the bottom is uneven, particularly in the summer season when the current is slack. Some of the mill owners have a considerable number of logs in their booms on LaHave River, but they will not start their mills, and, in fact, they say they will allow the logs to rot rather than be subjected to heavy penalties, when the law is not enforced generally. I hold that mill owners, on the different rivers of the country, should be all treated alike. I am aware that political friends of the Government have considerable weight with them, and that it is easy to write to parties calling upon them to make reports that certain mills are injuring the fish, or are causing hindrances to navigation. It is most unfair to single out one county, as my county has been singled out, for the enforcement of the Act respecting sawdust, while in adjoining counties the mills have been running ever since 1888. A gentleman who was here the other day, and who is a mill owner in Halifax county, said he would not stop operations, and he did not expect to be fined. It is most unfair to cripple the lumbering industry in certain parts of the country by which hundreds of people obtain their living, and if this policy is continued, it will lead our people to go to the United States and get employment there, and the town of Bidgewater will be ruined if this law is carried with a high hand. There has been a good deal of controversy between the hon, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the mill owners at LaHave. stated that they have shown a spirit of defiance. But any member of this House, if he considered he was being persecuted for his politics, would resent it, and on that score, therefore, the mill owners are not much to blame. It is a very serious matter that the Department and the Government should have enforced the law in certain sections of the country while they have allowed other sections in the Dominion to go free.

Mr. COLBY. I regret that the hon. gentleman was somewhat inaudible, and I was able to catch but very little of what he stated. I think it would have been well if the hon. gentleman had been good enough to have communicated tome, as representing the Minister in his absence, his intention to bring up this subject to-day, for it would have led me to make some enquiries into the subject to which he has referred. I am in a blissful state of ignorance in regard to the details of the Department which for the moment I represent in the absence of the Minister, unless my attention has been specially called to a subject, and it has not been called to the circumstances mentioned by the hon. gentleman in such a way that I have felt called upon to give the matter my special examination. The law regulating the sawdust question in navigable streams permits the exemption of certain streams by Order in Council. Whether in this instance the Order in Council has been sought for, whether the attention of the Government has been directed to this case or not, I am entirely unaware, and if I am unable to give the hon. gentleman any explanation or any defence of the position of the Government, I hope he will not consider it is from any discourtesy to him, but simply that I was not aware of his intention to bring the matter before the House to-day. I can hardly suppose that whether the stream be a navigable stream, when the action of the Governor in Council would be required to suspend the operation of the law, or an unnavigable stream, when an exception might be given by an order of the Minister, I cannot suppose that in either case any decision would be arrived at upon any other than fair and public grounds. course streams differ very much. Some streams, owing to the rapidity of the current, might wash away sawdust so that it would not seriously impede navigation, while in others, owing to the sluggishness of the current, there might be considerable accumulation of deposits which would seriously injure navigation. I can only suppose, in the absence of any special knowledge of the facts, that the Minister, if he has taken any action whatever in the case, has been guided, as is the usage of the Department, by the reports of his responsible officers. I do not state that to be the fact, because I do not know, but I assume it to be the case that if the Minister's attention has been expressly called to the case to which the hon. gentleman has referred, he has been guided by the reports of the officers who are responsible to the Department for the correctness of their opinions. I regret I am notable to give information or explanation on the subject, because, unfortunately, I have not any to give.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I waited a considerable time in the hope that the hon. the Minister of Marine would return to the city, but it is now so near the end of the Session I felt obliged to bring the matter forward. I understand it is doubtful whether the Minister will return before the close of the Session.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Hon. gentlemen who have taken an interest in this subject will remember that on several occasions when it has been before Parliament, I have gone to a very considerable length in supporting the Administration for the time being in endeavoring to provide such regulations as would appear to be necessary for the protection of the fishing interests of the country in this regard. During the time the Mackenzie Government was in power, we imposed rather severe regulations on the country in this respect. On one occasion, I was called upon by a large mill owner in my own county, who remonstrated in most indignant terms against the Act then put in force. I listened to him for some time, and then I said it was a serious matter no doubt. He assured me that the Government would be ousted in consequence of this interference with the right of the mill owners. I told him it would be a very unfortunate matter for the country if the Government were ousted. But no doubt the people could get another Government, probably not such a good one, but if they allowed the fish in the streams to be destroyed, no Government for a very long time could devise or carry on means to bring back the fish to our rivers. I mention this to show that I have always, to a certain extent, sympathised with the efforts which have been made to preserve our fisheries along the coast, and that I have cheerfully listened to any representations which have been made with reference to the injury said to be caused by the sawdust and other mill débris finding its way into the stream. On several occasions, when this matter has been discussed, I have listened to the explanations given by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who I regret very much is not in his place to-day, because I am fully aware that the acting Minister cannot be quite so familiar with all these details, although a gentleman of his very great capacity should be able in a short time to manage the details of a small question like this. I was rather surprised that the hon. the President of the Council, having been so long in charge of the Department this Session, did not remember that there is a Bill on our fyle from the Department which he represents, purporting to deal with the Government insisted they should comply with, the question this Session. I supposed the hon. while other mill owners in the Province have been Mr. Colby.

gentleman would have made himself acquainted with the nature of that Bill, and the effect it was going to have on the question just now before the House. The hon, gentleman is doubtless aware that the House has been placed in possession of a very exhaustive report from Mr. Sandford Fleming, on this question, with reference to the Ottawa River, and the hon. gentleman, if he has read the report, is also aware that Mr. Fleming's recommendations went very far to carry out the idea which Mr. Rogers, the late fishery inspector of Nova Scotia, imparted to the Government in a communication, which, as my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) says, was suppressed, and was not placed among the official representations from the officers of the Department. These two considerations taken together would lead one, not very familiar with the question, to suppose that the public opinion and the public anxiety with regard to the obstructions of the rivers, have not been well founded. But, Sir, the difficulty to my mind has been, and I confess it still exists, that the Government, in taking these powers to themselves, have not, so far as I have been made aware, exercised them judiciously. I am well aware, that in my own Province of Nova Scotia, there are mill owners who have purposely set the Government regulations at open defiance, and these are gentlemen who have been friends and supporters of the Administration who have not shut down their mills. I know that in the Counties of Queen's, Shelburne, Annapolis and Digby, there are men who have relied upon the influence they and their friends had with the Administration, to continue to operate their mills, whereas, only quite recently, as has been mentioned by the hon. gentleman here, has permission been given to any proprietor to operate his mill. I do not say it was an improper regulation at all. But, on the contrary, I hope and believe that the Government, in doing this, have investigated the matter and were satisfied that in the public interest they were doing what is right. But what I do complain of is that while many of these mill owners throughout the Province of Nova Scotia have been allowed to set the Government regulations at open defiance, another party like the large firm to which my hon. friend (Mr. Eisenhauer)makes particular reference, the firm of the Messrs. Davison, the largest and most important milling establishment in Nova Scotia, and I might say, without any disrespect to the others, not only the largest but the most influential and most wealthy, employing more men than many of the other establishments put together-I complain that this firm, from the fact it would appear of disagreeing with the Government, having been opponents of the Government for a long time, having been drawn into a controversy with the Government, respecting the position of their mills, and the position of the LaHave River which they claimed to be an exceptional one, and which fact has been borne out, apparently, by the report of Mr. Rogers, and by the report of the captain and by the report of other people familiar with the river, with which I do not pretend to be familiar, have not only been hampered, but that they have been closed up for sometime, for refusing to go to the expense which the Government insisted they should comply with, allowed to go scot free. That is what I complain of, and that is a very serious charge. I am informed, on what I believe to be the most creditable and reliable authority, that in the counties of Shelburne and Annapolis, friends of the Administration have been running their mills and allowing their sawdust and débris to run into the stream. I am not going to argue now on the main question as to whether it is right or wrong to allow the saw-dust to go into the streams. That is a question which I confess is a very difficult one to deal with, and I confess that it would take a very considerable proof to relieve my mind of the conviction which I have long entertained, that sawdust and débris in a stream must be dangerous to the fisheries. appear to be contradicted in this belief by evidence of a professional character which I am disposed to pay considerable deference to, such as it is. At all events I merely rise now for the purpose of protesting against the Government carrying out this law as they have been doing, in the interests of their own friends, and subjecting such a large, and important, and influential firm as the Messrs. Davison on LaHave River, to the restrictions of which they have complained, and on which their complaint is well founded. I do think that the Government should look into this matter, and not allow the controversy which has taken place between that firm and the Minister of Marine, to any longer interfere with their giving the same privileges to the Messrs. Davison, which they have accorded to other people in the Province of Nova Scotia. On that ground, I most heartily sustain the view taken by the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) reserving, as I said, my opinion as to the expediency of the question on other grounds. So long as that law is allowed to be placed in operation at all, all should be treated alike and the opponents of the Administration, who are working in the public interest, should not have their operations interfered with by local political jealousies or animosities. The law should be made applicable to friends and enemies of the Government in the same spirit, and all should feel that they are governed by the same law, and are alike entitled to the protection which it affords.

Mr. KENNY. My hon, friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) and my hon. colleague (Mr. Jones), in referring to this question, which is a very important one to the Province of Nova Scotia, have carefully, and, I think, very wisely, refrained from expressing any opinion as to the effects of sawdust on fish life. The duty devolves on the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to see, as far as lies in his power, that no injury is done to our river fisheries. It is also his duty to see that the navigation of our rivers is not obstructed with refuse from the sawmills. My hon. friend from Lunenburg confined his remarks, chiefly, I think, to the seeming injustice which is done to his constituents living on the banks of the LaHave River, the largest and most important river in the Province of Nova Scotia. I do not think there is a firm in the Province connected with the important interest of lumbering who have shown more enterprise or more ability, or who have been more useful in the locality in which they have conducted their business, than the Messrs. Davison on the LaHave River. Whatever the politics of those gentlemen may be 1291 to my views-still it is a simple matter of justice to them that, as their name has been mentioned by hon. gentlemen opposite, I should here express my opinion as to their usefulness in the great industry in which they are engaged in that locality. So far as I know—and I have some slight knowledge of the LaHave River, from the fact that vessels in which I am interested occasionally visit that river to load lumber—I do not believe that any very great injury has been done to the navigation of the river by the sawdust which has been thrown into it. I cannot express any opinion as to the effect of the sawdust on the fisheries of the river; but to-day the fisheries of the river are comparatively insignificant; the people mainly depend on the lumber industry. My hon. colleague has referred to a Bill which is now before the House by which it is contemplated that the Minister of Marine shall be deprived of the very unenviable authority which he can now exercise of granting special privileges in one river and refusing them in another. I think my hon. colleague has gone a little beyond the mark when he has insinuated that the reason why these privileges have not been afforded to the Messrs. Davison is the fact that they happen to be political opponents of the present Government. If my hon. colleague will appeal to the representative of the County of Lunenburg, I think that hon. gentleman will tell him that the Messrs. Davison are to-day conducting their lumbering operations in other rivers in the Province of Nova Scotia, where, as far as my information goes, they have not been obstructed in the management of their business. If I am misinformed, I should like to be corrected. I understood that they were conducting operations on the Port Medway River and also on the Nictaux River. On that point I do not pretend to speak positively; but the industry in which the Messrs. Davison are engaged is a very important and very valuable one to the locality in which it is conducted, and I can only repeat what I said before, that, to the best of my knowledge, so far no great injury has resulted to the navigation of that river.

Mr. EISENHAUER. The hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) has stated that the Messrs. Davison operate mills in other counties. That is true. They have mills in the County of Kings, where they have been allowed to operate them. If they were not, the distinction would be too marked.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not rise to speak on the sawdust question, but I wish to contradict a statement which has been made with regard to the part of the country to which I belong. We have in that neighborhood four large mills, three of which belong to strong supporters of the Government, and one to an opponent of the Government: and yet the Government have fined all the parties for putting sawdust into the river. I may say that the river has been practically almost ruined by sawdust. It was once full of fish; but that is a very small matter. But the fact is that the hon. Minister has enforced the law against all parties, irrespective of their politics. I dare say he has done so very reluctantly, because one of the owners of these sawmills was my predecessor in this House and a friend of the Minister; yet he was one of the —I believe on political questions they are opposed first men fined. So that there is no foundation for the insinuation that has been made that the hon. Minister puts the law in force only against his political opponents.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I know that great complaints have been made in the Province of New Brunswick, of the manner in which these Orders in Council have been enforced. Last year I brought the matter to the attention of the Minister in regard to a gentleman who had mills on a river that was not used for navigation at all. The prohibition was rigidly enforced against him, and he was compelled to stop his mills. He was a strong opponent of the Government. At the same time other parties in other counties, and in that same county, were allowed to throw sawdust into the As to the effect of sawdust in the rivers, I am not prepared to speak. The edgings, I believe, are very injurious, but as to the sawdust, there are really very great doubts. This regula-tion, carried to the fullest extent, would very seri-ously affect what is perhaps the most important industry we have in the Province, that is, the lumber industry, which produces the staple article of exportation.

General LAURIE. I wish to eall attention to a statement made by the hon, senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), that the law is broken in Shelburne County, and that its infraction is connived at, because those who break it are supporters of the Government. I have no doubt, my hon. friend refers to the remark in this sawdust report, so-called, in which it is stated a large amount of sawdust has been dumped into the Clyde River, which is in Shelburne County. I wish to say, that one of the mills on that river was burnt down two years ago, so that certainly no sawdust from that mill at present goes into that river. The owner of the other mill on the river is a strong opponent of the Government, and if he is allowed to do this, it is not because it is winked at on account of his supporting the Government.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is much to be regretted that this discussion should take place in the absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, because I know he has given close attention to the subject, and has examined all the evidence bearing on it to be procured both in Canada and the United States, and if he were here to present his views, not only the House, but the hon. member for Halifax as well, would be completely relieved from the suspicion that, in endeavoring to enforce the law as he has done in Nova Scotia, and in Ontario as well, he has been actuated by any party considerations whatever. In the very case referred to by the hon. member for Halifax, that of a gentleman from Halifax who visited Ottawa some time ago, and gave my hon. friend to understand that he had obtained permission for the exemption of his mill from the law, I enquired of the Department-having heard a similar statement by the member for Lunenburg -and I understand that is not the case, that no such permission was given by the Department. That gentleman produced, however, at the Department a permit from the late Sir Albert Smith, given when he was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and that permit had been allowed to continue. The action of the Department was simply that in view of the permission granted first, as to how mill owners can keep out the saw-by the late Sir Albert Smith, the officers of the dust and carry on their lumber business, and next, Mr. STEVENSON.

Department have been called on to report, I am quite aware, from my conversations with the Minister himself, that, so far as the operations of the Messrs. Davison Bros. are concerned, the law was applied as leniently as possible. The Messrs. Davison are, and always have been, so far as I know, active opponents of the Government, but they have never done anything that I know of to induce exceptional treatment, they being men of the highest respectability both in business relations and otherwise. With one active member of the firm I had the pleasure of sitting for a while in the House of Assembly, and I am sure that no member of this Government would, on account of that gentleman's politics, or the politics of his associates, make any distinction in the treatment of him, and that given to others. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has a mass of evidence in the line in which the hon. member for Halifax indicated that his own opinion tended, namely, in the direction of the injury done by the refuse sawdust being permitted to be thrown into the streams; and, as regards the LaHave River, where Messrs. Davison Bros. do business, it has been well established, that the fish have been nearly all exterminated there by means of the sawdust, and it is because that is so that it can now be said that the lumber interest is the greater of the The navigation of the river, which ought to be most serviceable for all the purposes of commerce in that county, has been seriously affected by the quantity of sawdust thrown into the stream. It is true that the operation of the penal provisions concerning sawdust is unequal. It has been the policy of this Parliament that they should be unequal, and that all rivers should not come within the penal provisions of the Act, for the obvious reason that streams vary a great deal in character. Some streams are very rapid, and the sawdust is carried away by the current, so that it is of very little prejudice to navigation or to the fish. Others, on the contrary, are slow, and more likely to suffer from the accumulations of sawdust. There are cases of streams in the County of Queen's in which there is only water to operate the mills during a very few months of the year, and in which fish life is almost impossible and navigation is out of the question, so that the injury by saw-dust is practically nil. Still it may be a very grave question whether it would not be better, in order to inspire public confidence, that the law should be applied without exception in all cases. As soon as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries can present the result of his investigation, I am confident the House will be under no suspicion that he has been over-zealous in enforcing this provision or actuated by any desire to make any invidious distinction.

Mr. MITCHELL. I regret very much that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not here to deal with this question. The course which he is inclined to pursue, judging by the legislation he has introduced, is one that commends itself to my judgment as being the proper one. The Minister of Justice has correctly stated that there are conditions and circumstances of mills and rivers which call for different treatment; and the ques tions that come up in relation to this matter are, first, as to how mill owners can keep out the saw-as to the effect of the sawdust upon the rivers. I admit that it is difficult to work these little onehorse sawmills which exist on many of the smaller rivers, and keep the sawdust from falling into the water. But the Government, I think, should not fail to carry out their policy in reference to the larger rivers. Take, for instance, the River Ottawa. Everybody knows that sawdust dumped into a river both destroys the fish and impedes navigation. For twenty-five years we have had a law making it a punishable offence to put sawdust into the rivers, and I must say for the mill owners in my county that they have fairly tried to comply with the law and have largely met the difficulty of car-rying it out. Where there are steam saw rying it out. mills of course these mills can burn their own sawdust, but I find the Ottawa one of the great arteries of the country, on which are many large mills, suffers most from this evil. Fortunes are being made by the mill owners on that river. In a recent case, that of a gentleman who occupied a position in this House as a representative of the city of Ottawa, and who died the other day, I find by the papers that he left behind him a fortune of $1,250,000 earned on this river. Is it right that these wealthy mill owners should be permitted to go on from year to year and block up one of the greatest rivers of this country, 700 to 800 miles long? You go down in the summer season and you will find hundreds of acres on the flats near the Grenville Canal covered with sawdust. An explosion took place opposite this city last winter, which, if any people had been crossing the ice at the time, would, no doubt, have resulted in loss of life. We have had a report made by Mr. Sandford Fleming on this subject, but, though it is not altogether in favor of stopping the practie of putting sawdust into the Ottawa River, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has proposed this Bill. I entirely agree with the policy of the Minister of Marine on this subject, and think a stop should be put to this practice. I regret that it is not carried out everywhere. In the river it is not carried out everywhere. In the river which runs through my county, they do not put sawdust into the river; they burn it. But here, at the Chaudière mills, they dump the sawdust into the river. When I was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, we endeavored to put a stop to that practice, but it was very difficult. I do not reflect upon the present Minister of Marine, but I am sorry that he was not here to push through the Bill which he placed on the files of the House, because I believe it would be beneficial to the country. It might be a little expensive to the lumber-men, but it would prevent the great Ottawa River from being obstructed as it is to-day. We have spent millions of dollars to make our rivers nav gable, and yet we allow these wealthy mill owners to throw their sawdust into the rivers and obstruct the navigation.

Mr. GILLMOR. I am sorry to differ with my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). I have had some experience in regard to sawdust, and I cannot understand how sawdust can interfere with the navigation of any river. Slabs and edgings and things of that kind may interfere with the navigation but not sawdust. I have read Mr. Fleming's report in regard to the Ottawa River, and I am satisfied that it is correct. I have had sawdust has never interfered in any degree with the navigation of a river, and it is my opinion that it has never interfered with the fish. All the kinds of fish that were in the rivers with which I am acquainted, as far back as tradition can point out, are there now. It is an impression which has gone abroad, and which is very reasonable, that the fish take the sawdust into their gills in breathing, and that it kills the fish. I have never heard of dead fish in the rivers to which I refer or of fish being driven out of rivers which they previously frequented in consequence of sawdust. We must look at the great interest of lumbering and we must consider that, even if the fish in these rivers were less in quantity, they are not fish for commercial purposes, while the lumbering business is one of the greatest industries we have in Canada. Even if the sawdust did interfere with the sport of certain gentlemen, even if it interfered, as one hon. gentleman has stated, with salmon, trout and smelts, still we must consider the great lumbering interests. It is beyond my comprehension how sawdust can interfere with the navigation of any river, though slabs will. Some of the sawdust may gather into eddies or in deep water, but it never stops in the channel of the stream and never interferes with vessels going out or coming in. I can hardly think the Government would make any preference in the enforcement of this law. As to the river which flows through the county which I represent, the State of Maine has given great attention to the fishery question and the border river be-tween New Brunswick and the State of Maine has never been interfered with either by Maine or by Canada in regard to sawdust, though the State of Maine has been careful to keep bark and edgings and slabs out of the river, because they will sink. This is a matter of serious consideration. impossible to so arrange the mills on the Ottawa River that they will keep the sawdust out. They would have to be taken down and reconstructed. In regard to steam mills, sawdust makes a good fuel, but in regard to water mills it is impossible to utilise the sawdust unless the mills are reconstructed entirely.

Mr. LAURIER. It appears difficult to resist the conclusion that an invidious distinction is made, I will not say between friend and foe, but between river and river in the application of this law, and, in view of the very harsh treatment applied to the mill owners on the LaHave River and the very lenient consideration which has been given to the mill owners on the Ottawa River, one is compelled to ask what is the reason for this difference in treatment? What is the reason that the law is applied with the greatest severity on the one hand, and with the greatest leniency on the other? Now, strong evidence has been presented to show that on the LaHave River sawdust, perhaps because the current is strong, does not at all affect navigation. On the Ottawa River, on the contrary, we have had complaints for years about the interference of navigation by sawdust thrown into the river from times almost im-memorial. I do not want to be more severe than I can help, but certainly it is impossible to resist the conclusion that if there is not unjust discrimination made between the two cases, then the law 45 years' experience in this matter, and I say that manner. The Minister of Justice stated a moment ago, that perhaps it would be better that the Minister of Marine should be relieved from the power which he now has, of granting permits to avoid the law. Perhaps it would be better, because I have no doubt that this must be a constant source of trouble to him on account of parties to be relieved from the enforcement of the law. For my part, I do not the law. For my part, I do not think that it is very difficult to carry out the law as it is to-day. In the West, all the sawmills are supplied with furnaces to burn up the refuse of the mill. I have asked lumbermen why this could not be done on the Ottawa River, and I understand that it could only be done by constructing the mills altogether differently, and that would involve a very serious expense and trouble. If the power of making the distinction which the Minister now possesses were removed, or if the law were to be amended so as to provide that in future all mills should be compelled to dispose of their refuse, then there would be uniform legislation, and this source of irritation would be removed. My hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) said that a one-horse sawmill should not be obliged to dispose of its sawdust; but we must remember that this applies not to small streams only, but to navigable rivers on which you will find large mills, and it would not be hard to compel them to dispose of their refuse in some other way than by throwing it into the river.

Mr. McNEILL. I am afraid that if the proposition of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition were to be adopted, and if the provisions of the law were only to be applied to mills hereafter built on navigable rivers, in a few years we would not have any fish to protect, because I think the mills at present in operation would put an end to the fish if they are allowed to be poisoned by sawdust. For it is well known that sawdust is a poison to fish. I do hope that this House will endeavor in every possible way to strengthen the hands of the Minister of Marine in his attempt to protect the fishing interests of this country. The protect the fishing interests of this country. fishing industry is a very great industry, and there is no doubt whatever that it has suffered very much already from the cause we are now discussing. My hon. friend who spoke a moment ago seems to suppose that sawdust does not interfere with navigation, and I must say I am rather surprised at his state-When sawdust has fallen into the water, no doubt a large part of it will float at first, but in a very short time it becomes waterlogged, and then it becomes as effectual in interfering with navigation as sand itself. No doubt where the stream runs strongly it will keep a channel for itself to a certain extent, and so it would do in the very centre of the stream in the case of sand. But you will find that an accumulation of sawdust takes place on the banks of the stream, and that by increase that accumulation draws closer and closer to the centre of the stream, until at last the navigation of the river is closed altogether. Sawdust which has been thrown into the rivers in my own constituency, I know has caused a great deal of damage; it has been a source of the greatest injury to the fishing industry there. It is not only confined to rivers, but it extends as far as the lakes, because a certain quantity of it is carried down the Mr. LAURIER.

industry there. My hon, friend who spoke a moment ago says that there are as many fish in his part of the country as ever; if that be the case he is very much to be congratulated, but I am sorry to say that is not the fact throughout the Dominion.

Mr. IVES. I think there should be some distinction made between navigable and non-navigable streams, and possibly when you come to deal with non-navigable streams, a distinction should be made between those that are largely used lumbermen and those which are not to any great extent used by lumbermen. The comparative importance of the lumber interest and the fishing industry should be considered by the Government in any action they may take in reference to any particular stream or river. If, for instance, the river is unimportant as a breeding ground for fish, if the total value of fish taken in a particular stream amounts to little or nothing; and if, on the other hand, very large lumbering interests have centred upon that river, it would be madness, it would be suicidal to the interests of the country, for the Government to apply a cast-iron rule to such streams as that. Take, for example, the St. Francis River and its tributaries, in the Eastern Townships. That river is of little or no value as a ground for breeding fish. I do not suppose, that if the market value of all the fish taken in the St. Francis River and its tributaries were added up, it would amount to $500 a year. On the other hand, from Brompton Falls, near Sherbrooke, I am not aware what the extent of the lumber interest may be below that point, but I know at Pierreville there is a large manufacturing establishment on the river; but from Brompton Falls upwards on the St. Francis River and its tributaries, I am perfectly safe in saying there are a hundred millions of lumber manufactured every year. Now, that hundred millions of lumber involves an average of, we will say, $6 a thousand in wages to the men who cut the logs in the winter, to the men who drive them to the mill in the spring, and to the men who manufacture the sawn lumber in the summer. That means a large amount of money paid out as wages in the course of every year. When you compare the importance of that industry with the insignificant value of all the fish that are taken, or could be taken, out of that river, it becomes perfectly manifest that it would be absurd for the Government to enforce a law prohibiting the putting of sawdust into that stream or its tributaries. I am quite prepared to admit that in the case of navigable waters other interests come in, which must be considered in their relative importance compared with the lumbering interests. I think the matter should be regulated in respect to the importance of the interests affected, and no cast-iron rule can be applied to any stream whether navigable or non navigable.

Mr. BLAKE. I agree with a good deal of what has been said by the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Ives). I think some confusion exists as to the matter, because it has been apparently considered that a proceeding which is based on the one statute is to be dependent in part on the provisions of another statute. The truth is, the proposed legislation which has been discussed, and which would relieve the hon, the Minister from the invidious distinction with which he is rivers into the lakes and interferes with the fishing at present invested by making the rule cast iron, is legislation which, as I understand it, would apply only to one set of difficulties, namely, to the difficulties arising from navigation. But the Fishery Act is another statute, with another set of prohibitions, and it also reserves its own exemption power to the Minister; and, therefore, the proceedings in this case, as I understood them, having been taken only under the Act with respect to navigable rivers, it is beside the question to attempt to discuss whether these proceedings are justifiable under the Fishery Act, or upon the ground, for instance, of injury to the fisheries. I call the attention of the Minister to the fact that so long as it is attempted to justify the enforcement of these prohibitions by reference to the fishing interests the proposed legislation as to navigation will be of no consequence, because the Act, which it is proposed to amend, does not authorise any prohibition what-ever in consequence of the fishing interests. It deals solely with the interests of navigation; it is the other statute that deals with the prohibition as to the fishing interests, and that statute must be dealt with in order to alter, if it is thought desirable to alter, its provisions as to exemption. a great deal of good sense in what the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Ives) said in respect to the relative importance of the conflicting interests. I happen to know Mr. Davison, who is an old friend of mine, and early in this Session I was put in possession of the papers in this case, and I expected I would have had an opportunity of dealing with it when the Bill of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was brought up. Since that time my recollection of the facts has somewhat faded away, and I am not able to speak as clearly as I had hoped to speak, on this unexpected occasion. So far as I can remember, whether the diminution in the quantity of fish was due to the sawdust or no, it seems to me to be ridiculous to compare for an instant the existing condition of the fishing interests on the LaHave and the existing condition of the lumbering interests on that river; for the lumbering interests as regards the mill owners, the employés, and the public are of such importance that the action of the law on the ground of the relatively insignificant fishing interests should not prevail. I agree with the hon member (Mr. Ives) that, as regards navigable rivers, the interests of navigation are of much higher importance and require much more careful consideration. I read the evidence on this subject also. There was no doubt some evidence that sawdust had accumulated in some parts of the river. There was no doubt evidence that the channel had been to some extent narrowed, I should judge; but I did not find, taking the whole evidence, that the navigation of the River LaHave such as it is, and such as I should judge it is likely to be, is being at this time substantially impeded, for the uses to which it is put, by the condition of affairs which had been produced by the sawdust; nor did I find from the evidence that there had been, of late years at all events, any great impairment of the condition. It is perfectly obvious that the effect of sawdust will depend very much on the character of the stream. As the hon. Minister of Justice has said, if we deal with rapidly running rivers, having a great descent and without sinuosities, no doubt the sawdust will get away. If, however, the river is somewhat points on which the sawdust will be deposited, for I cannot agree with the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), that the sawdust keeps floating all the time; but there may be considerable deposits of sawdust in these bays and deep spots, and yet the average depth of the river may be maintained. There is, of course, no object, for purposes of navigation, in having deep holes in a river. The depth of the channel of a river is its depth at its shallowest point. So if the sawdust simply fills up the holes and leave the navigable channel free, of course no damage is done to navigation. The general impression I drew from the evidence was this, and I state it after the speeches delivered by the two Ministers, that there was no great public interest imperilled by the continuance at the present time of the state of things which has been continuing for some time, while it would appear that very serious inconvenience would result, even if the destruction of the entire lumbering business would not result, from a severe course being taken in this regard. All I ask now is, that as we have not had an opportunity of fully discussing this question, which we had reason to expect would be given to us by the Government Bill on the paper standing in the name of the Minister of Marine, which, we understand, will not now be proceeded with, there shall be given a very careful reconsideration of the condition of affairs with respect to these rivers on which the hon, the Minister is at present enforcing the prohibition; and that unless it be made upon that reconsideration absolutely plain that such an important interest as the navigation interest is about to be seriously interfered with by the continuation of the system, a stay of these vigorous proceedings should take place in the instance which has given rise to this discussion.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. While the hon, gentleman is quite correct as to the effect of the operation of the Bill to which he refers, that is Bill (No. 47) respecting the protection of navigable waters, the next Bill (No. 85) to amend the Fisheries Act, chapter 95 of the Revised Statutes, takes away the discretion.

Mr. KIRK. This is a question which affects a great many rivers in the Province of Nova Scotia, and it is not confined to the River LaHave in the County of Lunenburg. The regulations of the Government cause very much annoyance to different interests in the country. The arguments advanced in favor of keeping sawdust out of the rivers are not altogether convincing. I do not believe there is much force in the argument that sawdust kills fish. I have lived alongside of a stream ever since I was a boy, and on that stream sawmills had been running long before I was born, and yet I have never seen fish floating dead on the surface of the water killed by sawdust getting into their gills. We have a report by Rogers, late fishery inspector for Nova Scotia, who held the position of inspector for twenty years, and who devoted much attention to this subject. He does not hold to the opinion that sawdust kills fish, and in a special report which he called a sawdust report, which report the Minister of Marine and Fisheries refused to publish I am told, because Mr. Rogers' Sluggish, and particularly when it is a tidal river view did not agree with the Minister's view of the with deep bays and eddies, there are abundant question, but which report Mr. Rogers found means of publishing and placing in the hands of the people—in that report he claims that sawdust does not kill fish, and he supports his opinion by the opinion of authorities in other countries. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has stated with respect to the killing of fish in LaHave River, that the lumber interest was of greater importance than the fishing interest. I believe he is correct in that regard, but the hon. Minister of Justice, in answer to him, said that it was the lumbering industry which destroyed the fishing industry, and that the former industry is of greater importance to the people now than the fisheries. It must be remembered that the LaHave is not the only river in which the fish has fallen off; for if you examine the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, you will find that the quantity of fish has fallen off in every river in the Province of Nova Scotia. I wish I could agree with the hon, member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) that fish are as plentiful in Nova Scotia to-day as they were twenty years ago. I know to the contrary, I know that in not a single stream in the Province of Nova Scotia are fish as plentiful as they were years ago, and that applies to streams in which there never was any sawdust at all. We must look for some other reason for the decline of fishing, therefore, than to attribute the cause to the sawdust. There has been a falling off in rivers in which there never was any sawdust, as well as in rivers along which sawmills are in operation. In reference to the injury done to navigation, I may say, that I believe there are certain narrow rivers and harbors in which the sawdust may interfere with navigation, and for that reason, it would perhaps be the duty of the Government to interfere. I cannot believe that sawdust is killing fish. We know that it does not lie where the current is running rapidly, and so far as the eastern section of the Province of Nova Scotia is concerned our streams are all rapid, and the sawdust does not lie in them, unless it is carried down, as the hon. member for West Durham has said, and thrown into pools and flats. But fish do not spawn in pools or in still They spawn in streams where the current is rapid and on the shoals, and, therefore, the sawdust cannot injure the fish in the spawning grounds. So far as Nova Scotia is concerned, I cannot see that the sawdust injures the fish, but I do believe, that to enforce the regulation of the Government and to require that the mill owners should keep the dust out of the rivers will be a greater injury to the people of Nova Scotia, because of its hampering and crippling the lumber industry, than will be any injury that can be done to the fishing industry by the sawdust.

Mr. BURNS. The hon. gentleman has a very mistaken idea as to the particular places in rivers in which fish spawn. As a rule, and I speak from observation, the fish spawn in places where the water is not very rapid, and where sawdust is apt to be deposited. From observation of the rivers in my own county, which is, perhaps, one of the most important fishing counties in Canada, I have noticed that where sawdust has been deposited it has been that where sawdust has been deposited it has been that where sawdust has been deposited it has been taken precaution to prevent the sawdust falling into the rivers, but in former years, when the same consideration was not given to the matter, or the Mr. Kirk.

fisheries regarded in the same important light as now, and especially in the days of the old-fashioned mills, sawdust and slabs and edgings were all put into the river, with the result as I have stated, that these rivers were almost entirely depleted of Of late years, the steam saw mills burn all the sawdust, and the owners of water mills cart the sawdust out into piles and there let it re-main, or they mix it up with the edgings and slabs and burn it during the winter season. It must be patent to those who give the subject consideration, that very great detriment indeed accrues to the fisheries by the deposits of sawdust in the rivers, and I think the Department should be encouraged in every way to prevent such a practice continuing. There are no doubt cases in which the enforcement of the law on this matter would be an extreme hardship and would cause very serious loss to the mill owners, and these are cases which deserve the serious consideration of the Government. But, as a general principle, the Government and the Department should be encouraged and sustained as fully as possible in their desire to prevent the destruction of our fisheries, and the obstacles which arise to navigation by the deposit of sawdust. I rose for the purpose of taking exception to the statement of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Kirk). I have observed very particularly, indeed, for some years, the localities in which fish spawn, and I assert that fish do not spawn where the water is rapid enough to take away the sawdust. It is true that they do not spawn in entirely still water, but they do spawn in water which is not rapid enough to prevent the sawdust from dropping to the bottom and remaining there.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). There seems to be a great deal of difference of opinion amongst these gentlemen who understand something about the propagation of fish as to whether the deposit of sawdust in streams prejudicially affects the fish or whether it does not. There is also a great deal of difference of opinion in regard to the Ottawa River, as to whether the deposit of sawdust in that river interferes with the navigation or not, as is evidenced by the conflicting reports we have on that question. Now, as I understand the law, it does not affect only these mills which are situated upon these navigable streams, for it provides "that no sawdust shall be allowed to be placed in the water of any stream, any portion of which is navigable, or into any stream that falls into a navigable river," so that, practically, all saw mills that are situated upon streams in any part of this country which fall into navigable rivers, or if any portion of the rivers upon which they are situated are navigable, they are prohibited from putting sawdust into the stream. I take it that this prohibits all mill owners, except those exempted by an Order in Council, from allowing sawdust to run into the waters of the rivers that may be adjoining their mills, or of any stream, no matter what its character may be, unless it is an inland lake which has no outlet. I do not agree with these gentlemen who contend that the Government ought to be at liberty to exempt any particular locality from the provisions of this law. If the law for the prevention of putting mill rubbish and sawdust into the streams is one that ought to be on in all cases, and that the Government should not lave it in their power to exempt any particular locality from the operations of the law. But, at the same time, Sir, I think that the Government, before amending the law in regard to a great industry like the lumber industry, ought to obtain the fullest possible information respecting the interests that are affected by the throwing of saw-dust or rubbish into the streams. I think that between now and the next Session the Government ought to use every means in their power to determine, both as regards fishing and navigation. But I am strongly of opinion that the Government ought not to reserve to themselves the right to say what particular locality shall be exempted from the law.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is just one thing I wish to say. The hon member for Guysborough makes one statement with regard to the propagation of fish, and my hon. friend from Gloucester makes another.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman has already spoken, and if he is going to discriminate between two opinions, another discussion will probably arise, and I see that the House is anxious to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think your Honor is exceedingly strict in this case. I do not want to resort to any side means of getting my ideas before the House, so I will yield.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think we ought to make some allowance for a great party in this House, and permit at least more than one speech from that party. With regard to a remark of the hon number for Gloucester (Mr. Burns), that fish do not spawn in waters which flow with sufficient rapidity to carry away sawdust, I think the hon. gentleman is not well acquainted with the habits of the trout and the salmon, which always spawn in rapidly-flowing waters.

Mr. DAWSON. I have had a good deal of experience with regard to both fishing and lumbering, and there can be no doubt that sawdust does kill fishing, whether it kills the fish or not. There are many streams running into Lake Huron in which trout were once very abundant, and where you could catch them with a fly as rapidly as you chose; but the moment a sawmill makes its appearance on a river, the trout disappear. The sawdust frightens them away, disgusts them, they do not like it. There is no necessity for throwing the sawdust into the water at all; it is very easy to provide means for destroying it by burning or otherwise. I fancy there are some fish like the pike, which burrow in mud a great deal, which do not mind sawdust very much; but the finer kinds of fish, like the trout and the salmon, are certainly driven away by it.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To pay Alphonse Desjardins for forty copies "Débats Parlementaires de Québec," for 1888 and 1889, at $8.... $640

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We ought to have some history of this country, an official report of their explanation of this. When the Order in Council debates, and I do not think $320 is a large sum of was passed in 1888, referring the purchase of books to the Library Committee, and that Committee determined what exchanges we should purchase, it was agreed these Parliamentary Reports should not be purchased; and it was stated by Mr. DeCelles that the parliamentary reports of the Province of Quebec had been discontinued, that there were none published for the year 1889, and that, under any circumstances, they would not be purchased. I have two objections to this item. In the first place, I do not believe that forty copies of the Parliamentary Reports of the Province of Quebec in French, are required for this library at all. They are not a proper work to be bought for exchanges. And, in the second place, $8 is largely in excess of the price. We only pay $6 for our Hansard for the year.

Mr. DESJARDINS. What does it cost to the country ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I cannot tell what it costs. I know what is charged per volume. We are charged $6 for the whole Hansard for the Session, whether one, two or three volumes; and we are asked to pay $8 a volume for the Parliamentary Reports of Quebec—a price, I am told, in excess of what they can be purchased for; and the number is altogether disproportionate to what we require. Why has the Order in Council been disregarded?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The gentleman who has published the Débats Parlementaires de Québec has been very enterprising and has done praise-worthy work. In the years 1885, 1886 and 1887 this House voted to purchase forty volumes each year, without any objection being made. Last year by inadvertence a vote was not taken, I being absent, but the books were sent as usual. The price of the book is exactly what it can be published for. The hon, gentleman says, forty copies of this book published in French are not of use to this Parliament, but twenty-five copies are given to the library and are used as exchanges. They are sent to other legislative bodies as usual, with the official publications. The other volumes are distributed among the different Departments. If the Minister in any Department does not care to have them, he can leave the volume in the library to be given to some of the officers in the House who might need them. I can tell the hon. gentleman this is no speculation. My hon. friend says the Order in Council should apply to that. It should not apply. The Order in Council was not passed in 1888, but in 1889, and was not intended to apply to such books, and the Library Committee and the Librarian have not said these reports should be discontinued. They must be in the library, but if the House thinks proper we might next year limit the number to twenty-five. I will not object to that, but forty copies is the usual number. It is not a great generosity on the part of the Government if forty copies are taken. I am only sorry that the other Legislatures do not publish reports of their debates. The chairman of the Hansard Committee asks how much our own publication costs. I could not exactly state the figure, but it does not compare favorably with the price we pay for the publication of the reports of the Quebec debates. It would be desirable to have from every Legislature, for the future money for this Parliament to vote every year to secure that publication.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The reason the objection is taken this year is that, under the Order in Council passed by the Government and forwarded to the Library Committee, we took the matter into consideration and left it to a sub-committee. That sub-committee did not deem it necessary to purchase forty copies of this work. They reported against it, and I am told the Legislature of Quebec have abolished the official report altogether. Why should we pay for the official reports of the Quebec debates, and not pay for the same reports of the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and the other Provinces.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They have none.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) They have all official reports. We should not be asked to pass this vote when the library reported against taking the work, and when that official report has been abolished by the Quebec Legislature.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Some copies of it have been bought by the Quebec Legislature at the same price we pay, but the Quebec Legislature has not given a fixed amount, as they used to do under the previous Government, for the publication of those debates.

Mr. ELLIS. The hon, the Secretary of State must admit, that it is utterly ridiculous to buy forty copies of these debates for the use of our library. Five copies would answer every purpose. If you want the reports of the Province of New Brunswick, you cannot even get one copy. You cannot imagine five members of Parliament wanting at the same time to look over those debates. You cannot imagine five members of Parliament seeking at the same time to look through those books.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We do not want five copies here, but we want those copies to exchange with other Legislatures.

Mr. ELLIS. It is not for us here to make that exchange. This is not our publication, but a publication of the Quebec Legislature.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If it is true that the Legislature of Quebec has decided to discontinue the publication of these reports, I do not see why we should pass this vote for next year.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They have not decided to discontinue the report, but they will only buy a few copies, as we do.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). As far as the Quebec Government are concerned, these reports are abolished. Of course the publisher may go on printing these reports, but it is certain he will not unless he receives what he was getting from the Legislature. Last year he received either $4,000 or $6,000. If the Quebec Government only take a dozen copies from him, he cannot go on, and I think the hon, gentleman, if he refers to the discussions in the Quebec Legislature this year, will see that it has been agreed to be perfectly impossible for the publisher to go on with that work unless the ordinary amount was voted. That has not been voted. It is quite possible that a few copies will be bought if the work is published, but that will be in the same way as any private publi-cations are bought and is not intended to secure the publication of the report, as the previous vote was intended.

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is last year's report that we are paying for and not this year's report.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the Government intend to carry out their own Order in Council, they should leave it to the Library Committee to purchase what is necessary for the purpose of exchange.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I agree with my hon friend that in the future we should not be put to the trouble of purchasing these books but that it should be left to the Library Committee.

Towards aiding in publication of seventh volume of "Le Dictionnaire Généalogique des familles Canadiennes". $1,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In the main Estimates of this year, page 73, I find a vote of $1,000 for aiding in the publication of this work, and I find the same vote of $1,000 in the three years 1888-89, 1889-90, and now there is this other one for 1890-91.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are two volumes in one year, and this is the last.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then we have voted $3,000 altogether for this work, and I should like to know why we should vote it. It is not a book of such great importance that we should be called upon to vote such a large sum of money for it.

Mr. AMYOT. This is not an annual publication.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is an annual vote.

Mr. AMYOT. This is the last volume of a most important series of works in reference to the history of all the French Canadian families, and it has an intimate connection with the early history of the country. I am surprised that my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) should try to deprive us of almost the only chance we have of tracing the history of French Canadian families. If this referred to the history of the families in Prince Edward Island, the hon. gentleman would not discourage the publication.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the approaching extermination of the French race by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), I think it is only right that we should have this record of the history of the French families.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It will serve instead of a large series of tombstones.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There is another book containing some French Canadian history for which we have voted a considerable sum of money.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What is it?

Mr. LANDERKIN. This is a book on Military Affairs for which we have paid $500, and I think it gives some very valuable history. I understand that we have pail the $500, not for what the book contains, but for the preface. This book contains the life history of a very eminent French gentleman who sits in this House. I believe the preface was put in after the book was issued. When the book was issued it was found that it did not sell, and this preface was put in afterwards, and we paid $500 for it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. What is the title?

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is "Military Law." The following is the preface :-

"To the Honorable Sir Adolphe P. Caron."

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I should like to ask, which is the book and which is the item.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This is in connection with the genealogy of the French families. I do not know what your genealogy is. I do not know why the Secretary of State should object to this.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I only wished the hon. gentleman to state what connection this book has with the item in the Estimates.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This book is dedicated-"To the Honorable Sir Adolphe P. Caron, K.C.M.G., Minister of Militia and Defence, this volume is (by special permission) respectfully dedicated as a small token of appreciation for the energy, zeal and ability displayed in the performance of the responsible duties of his high position during the most critical and eventful period that has ever occurred in the history of the Dominion of Canada, by his very obedient servant, The Author."

An hon. MEMBER. Who is the author?

Mr. LANDERKIN. His name is Macpherson.

An hon. MEMBER. Then he is not a Frenchman?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I was about to show how important this book is, for which we paid $500. I find that one of the questions in the book is:

"How is a private soldier in a state of drunkenness to be confined?

The answer is:

"He is to be confined alone, and in the prisoners' room or in a guardroom cell until sober, and not in the guardroom itself, where he may often be provoked to an act of violence and insubordination. He is to be deprived of his boots, except when the weather is too cold, and is to be visited at least every two hours by a non-commissioned officer of the guard and an escort in order that his condition may be ascertained.

"Q. What time should elapse before he is brought before an officer for investigation?—A. Twenty-four hours should usually elapse before the investigation, so as to ensure his being perfectly sober"

Now, I think when we have paid $500 for this book and this preface, I hope the hon. member for Queen's will withdraw his opposition to having the history of the French families brought down in this genealogy. It would be very unfortunate if we could not afford to pay $1,000 for a history of all the French families, when we have paid $500 for a brief history of an era in the life of the Minister of Militia.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon. friend, 1 believe, has received that book without having to pay anything for it. I am surprised that the only feature about that book which struck him, is the identical one which he has been reading to the House -that is, to provide for those who have to be put into the cell, and to divest of their boots those who are unable to do so themselves. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. gentleman, who does take some interest in militia matters, knew more about them, he might know that these are the Queen's Regulations which have been transferred into a book which is recognised as being a very valuable contribution to our literature on militia matters in this country. I repeat again that the hon. gentleman has just selected, possibly, that passage in the book that might apply to him personally if he were in the service.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not know that it would apply to the Minister of Militia at all; and if it is in the Queen's Regulations I do not know why we should pay $500 to have it in this book also.

Additional for plant for Government Printing Bureau $8,000

Mr. CHARLTON. What additional plant is required for this Printing Bureau?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I suppose those who are acquainted with the business of printing will understand that a large printing establishment costing about $250,000 will require, during the year, some additional plant. I could not say exactly what will be required in detail, but I know that type and other plant will be needed.

Classification of old records...... $1,000

Mr. CHARLTON. What is this for?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The present clerk of the Privy Council, Mr. McGee, has been The present employed for some time in classifying the records of the old Province of Canada. The records are exceedingly valuable and interesting, as the hon. gentleman will see if he will look into the Privy Council Office. They have been stored away for years and have almost become mouldy. Mr. Mc-Gee, who is an enthusiast in that kind of thing, has devoted himself to it, and in fact had to have some assistance for the purpose of classifying them as a series of historical records.

To pay cost of appeal to Privy Council in case of Attorney General of British Columbia vs. Attorney General of Canada, in the matter of the title to precious metals in the matter of the columns. precious metals in the railway belt. $5,400

Mr. CHARLTON. What are the particulars with regard to this appeal?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman will recollect that, although the lands in the railway belt in British Columbia were transferred to Canada, the Provincial Government contended that they should administer the mines in that A case was then submitted to the Supreme Court, I think, and a decision was given in favor of British Columbia. It was subsequently appealed to the Privy Council in England, and, as the hon. gentleman may recollect, the precious metals were given to the Province. This is to pay the expense of that suit.

Amount required to pay Customs share (one-half) of cost of repairs and maintenance of Government steam yacht Cruiser during the season of 1889.....

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs whether it is the intention of the Government to continue the service of the Cruiser. I quite agree with the policy of the Government in placing a vessel there, and I think it was, perhaps, a favorable opportunity of obtaining a vessel which was taken advantage of when the Cruiser was purchased, but I think experience has shown that she is not qualified at all for the service she ought to render. I think it would be advisable for the Government to find some waters in which she can be more serviceable than she ever can be in the Georgian Bay. Butapart from that altogether, I would like to take this opportunity of impressing upon the Government the great advantage it would be to the public service to have on Lake Huron, and especially in the waters of the Georgian Bay, a vessel of capacity, size and power such as is really required for the service that might be rendered there in the interest of the public. Now, the Cruiser cannot follow a fishing boat in rough water; she cannot aid the Customs work except under favorable conditions; she cannot go out into the open water in anything like a gale of wind. What the Government ought to have in these waters is a vessel of sufficient size and power to go out in any weather, under any conditions, and she would be of great service to the marine in rendering assistance to vessels in distress. There is no vessel there now capable of rendering such service. She could be employed also in laying down the buoys and beacons which will be necessary after the new survey is completed, because the present system is altogether inadequate. Buoys, such as could be employed on that coast, cannot be laid down unless by a vessel peculiarly fitted for the purpose. Larger buoys and those that are proper for the purpose cannot be laid down unless by a vessel of power enough and capacity enough to carry machinery proper for doing it. I would like the Minister of Marine to take this subject into consideration, and see whether he cannot find means of putting upon these lakes, at the earliest possible period a vessel such as would answer the various services that would be required. I will not take up the time of the House now in discussing the various services which such a vessel might render; they will easily suggest themselves to any one who is conversant with those waters. I hope the matter will be taken into account, and it can be done now under favorable circumstances, because in Owen Sound there are men and material and all the plant requisite for building a vessel such as is required.

ment from the service......

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is not Mr. Dyke in the employment of the Government as immigration agent at Liverpool?

Mr. BOWELL. He is immigration agent stationed at Liverpool. This item of $500 is for services rendered the Customs Department during the last four or five years. Very often when intricate questions as to values arise and it is necessary to obtain information, we employ Mr. Dyke to do the work. We send him to distant parts of England and sometimes to Scotland, and after his investigation he reports to the Customs Department. This is a very small remuneration for the services he has rendered during the last four or five years, as those services have been of very great value to the Department and have added largely to the revenue. They have been the means of preventing undervaluations and other attempts to enter Mr. O'Brien.

the permission of the late Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Pope) before I employed Mr. Dyke, and at that time the Minister said he was the best man I could secure for the service. I can assure the Committee that Mr. Dyke has done his work well. and that this is the very small remuneration for the services he has rendered.

articles below the actual market value. I obtained

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). We notice Mr. Dyke's name frequently in the Auditor General's Report. He is paid a liberal salary and receives $4 a day for living allowance, and draws altogether over $4,000 a year. Yet when some work is performed by him for the Minister of Customs, it is proposed to pay him a gratuity of $500. It is a vicious principle. Mr. Dyke has been well paid for all the services he has performed, and it is not just that this vote should be asked from the Committee.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is this case of Doyle in accordance with the regular custom of the Depart-

Mr. BOWELL. This is an old servant of the Customs Department, who has been employed since Confederation, at a salary of $100 a year. His office has been abolished, but he is not entitled to superaunuation. We, therefore, propose to give him a gratuity of $100. Mr. Robichau has been sub-collector for twenty-seven years at Meteghan, in Digby County, and his age is eighty-four years. He could not be superannuated. The port is increasing in importance and greater revenue is being received every year, and under the circumstances we propose to give him this gratuity. I may say here in regard to the remarks of the hon member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), with respect to the Cruiser that his remarks are too well founded, and the question is now under the consideration of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, whether she will be put in service this year.

Mr. WALDIE. I consider the vessel is entirely My business frequently leads me to Georgian Bay, and I entirely endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), as to the uselessness of this vessel, and the sooner she is withdrawn the better it will be for the public.

To pay Patrick Cullen, messenger and caretaker, Montreal Inland Revenue Office, an additional sum of $200 for services during current year......$200

Mr. CHARLTON. Why is this increase pro-

Mr. BOWELL. He is messenger at the Inland Revenue building in Montreal, and the Minister proposes to give him $200 for taking care of the building.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why is his salary increased?

Mr. BOWELL. The explanation given to me is that this amount is given for extra services rendered by this messenger for taking care of the building, thus avoiding the necessity of employing another man.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The Minister has not given full explanation with respect to the extra services. We should have a detailed statement as to what this man is doing, and for what reason he is to receive an extra salary.

Mr. BOWELL. I have already stated several times that it is on account of extra services performed as caretaker.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). We should have reasons given why the increase is asked for extra services. We are not told what his salary was before. We are voting away a certain amount here without any information. We are entitled to that information, and the Minister should give it to us before we pass this vote.

Culling Timber—Further amount required $11,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me this is a very unreasonable demand, and it ought to be fully explained.

Mr. FOSTER. This has been already explained in the House. Last year there was a very large reduction made in the item for culling timber, consequent upon certain proposed changes that the Minister had intended to carry out. When the Estimates were brought down there were $10,000 less than there should have been, on account of a clerical error. But as it was late in the Session that the error was discovered, it was not thought best to go into Committee of the Whole again, and bring down the extra sum. There is a very large saving, as the hon. gentleman knows, in the whole expenditure of that Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not so sure about that,

Mr. CHARLTON. Can the Minister inform us what the receipts for culling timber are, and what is the annual deficiency in this branch of the service?

Mr. FOSTER. The expenditure the year before last, was $48,000, and the receipts $28,861. The expenditure now is about $30,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are the fees as great as before?

Mr. FOSTER. The fees, I think, will be fully as great and the deficiency will be reduced about $18,000.

To pay holders of Dominion licenses (Liquor License Act, 1883), the cost of prosecution and fines incurred for violation of the Provincial Act......$3,547 16

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What is the total cost of this legislation to us? I think we ought to have some information as to how this money came to be paid and to whom it was paid.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is strange that the Minister of Finance should ask us to vote some thousands of dollars for fines inflicted on parties for a violation of the law.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman has not the detailed information, the item should stand.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin.) Perhaps you might send for the leader of the Equal Rights party, and he will probably be able to give the Government some information about this.

Mr. FOSTER. We will allow the item to stand.

Mr. DEWDNEY. A large portion of this is required to defray the expenses of the suit which received?

is entered by Mr. Charles Magee of Ottawa, as representative of the Sparks estate, claiming a parcel of land on either side of the canal. The claim is a very old one.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How old is it?

Mr. DEWDNEY. About thirty or forty years, I think. The nature of the claim, as far as I recollect, is that when the land was transferred by the Sparks estate, for the purposes of the canal, it is contended by the Sparks estate, I believe, that the portion within 200 feet that was not required for canal purposes would revert to the estate.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Has the Crown been in possession of the ground for forty years?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This vote includes law costs, commission and sale of land; I would like to know what portion of it is devoted for each purpose.

Mr. BLAKE. I think I know something about the claim. The claim arose out of the stipulation of the original cession, which was partly statutory, of this land along the canal by which it was alleged to be on the condition that there should be no buildings erected on it, and that it should be for the use of the canal only, and there is an allegation that there has been a forfeiture of the allegation by the erection of buildings. I think those buildings were erected by squatters. It would be important to know how much of this is for law costs, and how much for commission on sale of lands, and who is the seller of the lands and what is the rate of commission?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is estimated by the Department of Justice that $1,500 will be required to pay the costs of this suit, which is still in progress. The remainder will be required to pay expenses in connection with the sale of the Ordnance land. A sale of the Logan farm was made in Montreal last year, and $1,000 was required to pay for the survey. Then, there is required $700 to pay the commission of the auctioneer, and for advertising and printing.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there not a question as to the deposit on the Logan farm, which the auctioneer retained.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, there is $7,000 or $8,000 which we were unable to recover from the auctioneer after the sale. As soon as I found that there was any difficulty, I placed the matter in the hands of the Department of Justice, who pressed it, and we now hold security which I think is satisfactory.

Mr. BLAKE. What are we giving commission for if the auctioneer retains the $7,000 or $8,000?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He is obliged to return the proceeds, and we pay the commission out of the proceeds. The hon. gentleman is correct in saying that it is a portion of the Sparks estate that is in dispute, but he is not correct in stating that it was because of the squatters' but that the condition was supposed to have been broken.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the claim, however, extends to a portion that surrounds the bywash as well as to the other portion.

Mr. CHARLTON. What was the acreage of the Logan farm which was sold, and the price received?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There were 80 or 90 lots; I do not know the acreage. The portion that was sold realised $55,240. There still remain unsold 25 or 30 lots. There was some difficulty about a squatter, who has now removed.

Mr. CHARLTON. It seems to me that $1,000 for surveying 55 lots or so is a very excessive charge.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I said there were about 80 or 90 lots. I do not think the charge is excessive. I went over the ground and examined it before the survey was made when the blocks were laid out and staked. I thought it necessary that the lots should also be surveyed and staked before the sale took place, and I ordered that to be done.

Prince Edward Island Railway—Further amount required...... $40,000

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) What is that for?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The appropriation of last year for the repairs of the road was $205,000. Å vote of $250,000 was recommended by the Department, but it was cut down by the economical Minister of Finance and it has been found that in order to complete the repairs and to provide for the working expenses for this year up to the 30th of June, $40,000 will be required.

Mr. MITCHELL. You call the Minister of Finance of last year economical?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. MITCHELL. Looking at the amount of the Estimates I would not call him economical.

Mr. CHARLTON. Will the hon. Minister inform us how much the Prince Edward Island Railway lacks of paying expenses?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I had the information here the other day. I cannot now give it from memory.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) All I can say is that it costs very much less per mile than the Intercolonial. That is not giving it a very good certificate, perhaps, but I remember making up the estimate last year, and showing that its running expenses were very much less per mile than those of any other Government railway.

Mr. MITCHELL. If it is not run more economically than the Intercolonial Railway, perhaps it is run more with a view to politics. there is no politics on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does any portion of the Government railway system pay expenses?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. CHARLTON. Could not the Government succeed in getting rid of these assets, and so avoid this drain every year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; if the hongentleman will be a purchaser.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think a purchaser could be found.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend the Secretary of State tried to get a purchaser some years ago; but the arrangement was not carried out, and I am afraid if it had been, it would not have reduced

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) must remember that the policy of the Government according to a statement made by a very important member of the Government before the last election, so far from parting with these Government railways in the Maritime Provinces, was to increase them by the purchase of the properties of private corporations, in order as Sir Charles Tupper said in a telegram which I read to the House, that they might both be run with greater economy and with greater advantage to the public service. It is true, that policy has not yet been effected; but we have no doubt whatever that although Sir Charles is no longer there, his spirit still prevails, and that within a reasonable time, before the next election, the telegram will again materialise.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has made a reference to a telegram which Sir Charles Tupper sent to me during the last election campaign. that an opportunity has not been afforded me earlier in the Session, although I have watched with great assiduity for several weeks for it, of calling the attention of the House and the country to the matter to which the hon. member for West Durham has referred. Now, although this may be not the proper time, I am strongly tempted to refer to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do not spare him.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I had hoped and waited for several weeks, when the Intercolonial estimates were before the House, to have the opportunity of making the statement which I desire to make with reference to this matter before The last time the Estithe end of the Session. mates for the Intercolonial Railway were under consideration, they were run through in a few minutes, while, by a mere accident, I was in the Library, and now, I would like very much to be allowed fifteen or twenty minutes in which to put before the House my views.

Mr. MITCHELL. Take an hour.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). To come to the subject, I regret to say that I have not the facts and figures on hand which I had prepared for the opportunity when it came, but the outlines of my scheme are in my mind, and I will take this opportunity of calling the attention of the Government and the House and, through the Hansard, of the country, to the importance of the scheme to which the hon. member for West Durham just now referred. In the Session of 1887 the hon. member for West Durham read in this House a telegram from Sir Charles Tupper, in which he sent word to me that he proposed to put before his colleagues a scheme for the consolidation of the branch railways of the Intercolonial with the trunk line. I desire to say that in my canvass in Albert County, I pressed the scheme with all the vigor I could. put it before the electors as a scheme which I would do all in my power to further, if elected, and as a scheme which I believed to be in the interest of Albert County, of New Brunswick, of the Maritime Provinces, and of the Dominion of Canada. I will take occasion here and now to briefly outline my reasons for putting that scheme before my own people, and for commending it to this Parliament. There are in this country some 13,000 miles of railway. There are, speaking in the rough but with approximate accuracy, rather more than 5,000 miles of railway operated by one great corporation, the Canadian Pacific Railway; there are almost 4,000 miles of railway operated by another corporation, known as the Grand Trunk. There are some 2,000 miles of railway in that section of the Lower Provinces for which the Intercolonial is the great common carrier, a part of which is owned and operated by the Government, and a part by a large number of petty companies, the latter part being local branches of the Inter-colonial. The point I would like to put before this House and the country-and I regret I have not the material at hand, the authorities and the exact facts, to make my statement more completeis this: That if the Intercolonial undertakes the duty of being the common carrier for the Lower Provinces, it should discharge that duty fully and entirely, in the same way in which the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway have undertaken to discharge the same duty for the Upper Provinces. The most notable fact which has come before any member of the Railway Committee in those four years, during which I have had the privilege of a seat in the Committee, is this: That all through these western Provinces these two great railway corporations, by the leasing of these branch roads, by getting these branch roads, which were crippled with debts and paying high rates of interest, under their control and assuming their obligations, were enabled to refund their debts, were enabled to borrow money and to convert their bonds into bonds bearing a lower rate of interest, and thus have been enabled to give stability and efficiency to the service, and have aided the establishment and development of mills and other industries in those sections to an extent beyond what could have been expected under the former system. I ask, not as a matter of favor, not as an electioneering dodge to please the people of Albert County, not to corrupt the Lower Provinces, but I ask on the ground of policy, which the Grand Trunk Railway and the Cana-dian Pacific Railway have found to be good policy, that the Intercolonial Railway should rise to a sense of its duty and give our people the same stability and certainty of service, give to those men who open quarries and establish and develop industries in the outlying districts those facilities and rates on the branch roads which the corresponding class of people have in the west. Hon. gentlemen may say that these branch roads are at present barely paying running expenses, and that I am asking the Government to buy them in at high figures. I do not ask anything of the kind; I am asking for no scheme which would oblige the Government to purchase these roads at figures beyond their value. The Government are in a position to determine the commercial value of these roads. The Government are in a position to ascertain their working powers, their running expenses, and whether there is not any margin for profit; and all I ask is that, in cases where the branch roads are willing to sell, the Government should buy those roads at their commercial value and make them a part of the Intercolonial system. Look at the position of the branches of the Intercolonial, and see what an incomplete policy the Government have pursued in this matter. Commencing at the boundary river between Quebec and New Brunswick, the Restigouche, and going down to the terminus of the Intercolonial, you will find sixteen or seventeen branch railways which are feeders of the Intercolonial, but are owned and operated by private companies. Some of them are very short and small, earning not more than working expenses; two or three of them are not earning working expenses, and two or three others are making a reasonable profit and paying reasonable dividends. You cannot expect that these railway lines, which are under fifteen or sixteen boards of management, should be run on as good a system, should be as efficient and yield as good returns as if they were all under one management. The Government have already, in dealing with this Intercolonial system, taken a step in this direction in purchasing the Rivière du Loup section of the Grand Trunk Railway, thus extending the Intercolonial to Lévis opposite Quebec, and besides the Government has built, in the way of extensions or branches, an additional 700 miles of railway, so that in round numbers the Intercolonial system, when the Island Railway and the Cape Breton Railway are run in connection with it, will embrace some 1,400 miles, the Government of Canada will be operating 1,400 miles of railway. It is just as proper and right that these branches I refer to should be taken in at a reasonable figure as that the 700 miles of branches already purchased should have been taken in. I do not complain of the fact that the Government should own a branch in one county and not in another, but I claim that where the Government can, without being plundered, without playing into the hands of any company, without paying heavy prices, buy a road, and where the people are willing to sell, they should purchase such a road and operate it, and thus combine the fifteen or sixteen managements which now exist into one. The advantages of this would be obvious. On many of these branches the Government would be possessed of engines of a lighter character for which they are substituting every year heavier engines, but the lighter engines could be used on these branches. They have cars which are not exactly fitted for the spick-and-span style of the main line, but which are used on the branch lines. They can use these and lower the rate on these branch lines and develop a travel which they do not get now. If they were to buy these branches and cut down the rates on them, they could re-coup themselves by the amount of the limestone or the freestone or the plaster which they would carry down on the main line to the sea-board. They might lose something in the local freight rates, but they would gradually develop the carriage of these heavy articles and so would recoup themselves on the paying part of the trunk line of the Intercolonial Railway. I make these statements in brief as the grounds on which we ask for this action in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. We ask that the Intercolonial Railway should do what the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway have done for the sections of country through which they move. If the Intercolonial Railway cannot see its way to do that, we ask the Government to step down and out and to give place to a com-mercial company which can do this justice to a people who are not satisfied with the present state of things. If the Government would give their attention to these branch roads and would pay less attention to the through trade and to the development of the flour trade from the west, and the coal trade from the east, I believe they could very soon wipe off the deficit. I was never more in earnest than when I pressed for In the County of Albert, this question is today of much greater consequence than it was at the time of my election. At that time the two roads in that county were encumbered with bonds, but now they have been relieved from that encumbrance. This Administration will have to undertake this duty in the future if they do not now, and any Administration which undertakes to operate and control the Intercolonial Railway systems, will have to follow the example which has been given by the railways west of the St. John River, which have been consolidated, and we ask that the same system should be pursued with regard to the railways east of the St. John River, that those railways—except, perhaps, Mr. Gibson's road, from Fredericton to the Miramichi—shall be bound together in the same way, that one management shall be substituted for many, that one company or one Government shall be substituted for many companies, and we are convinced that the results will be that the net earnings of the whole will be more favorable than they have hitherto been.

Mr. BLAKE. Proposals of this kind have accomplished certain ends on former occasions. There was a former occasion when this subject was brought forward, not on the suggestion of a simple candidate for a county, no matter how important he might be, but on the formal representation of the most important man in the Ministry next to the Prime Minister. It was on the 11th of February, 1887, that Sir Charles Tupper telegraphed to the present hon. member, then the candidate actively canvassing for Albert (Mr. Weldon), as follows:—

"I intend to submit to my colleagues a proposal to consolidate the branch railways with main line, by which greater economy in administration will be effected, and much greater utility to the country secured."

Think of it! The Minister who had been in charge of the Department of Railways for a long time, and who was then, I think, Minister of Finance, and who therefore had a long experience in the two Departments which most specially fitted him to deal with a matter of this kind-his experience in the Department of Railways having given him a knowledge of the requirements of the railways of the country, and his knowledge of the Finance Department having instructed him in regard to the attention to be paid to the finances of the country-that Minister, with all that experience, and with all that influence, had come—it is true at a late period, it is true at a critical period, it is true at a period which perhaps did not fit him for calm consideration of all the fiscal and economical questions which were involved, at a period when his judgment might perhaps, to a certain extent, be obscured by other and political considerations had come-to this conclusion, that the consolidation of the branch railways with the main line of the Intercolonial would at once effect greater economy in the administration of the whole and much greater utility to the country; and he had also come to the conclusion that it was his duty to submit to his colleagues a proposition to accomplish that result. He obtained from the people that measure of power which he desired the Administration to secure-Mr. Weldon (Albert).

whether by these or similar devices it is not material now to consider—but he came to this Parliament backed by my hon. friends opposite, many of whom, no doubt, received telegrams, the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) amongst them. I cannot doubt that Sir Charles Tupper submitted that proposal to the Government. I cannot doubt that the member for Albert pressed upon him to press upon them that the proposal should be carried out. I cannot doubt that Sir Charles Tupper did all he could—and who could do more?—to bring about the redemption of the promise which flad so successfully redeemed the County of Albert.

4128

Mr. WELDON (Albert). He had not time enough.

Mr. BLAKE. He had not time enough! He left his office and the country, and the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) tells us that for four years he has been laboring in that field which Sir Charles Tupper deserted.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). Three years.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, for three years. I recommend the hon. member for Albert, who now for the first time brings this matter before Parliament, to continue laboring, with the assurance that it will not be until the time, or about the time shortly preceding the general election, that he may expect to reap a harvest as the result of his labors. I do not suppose that he will be now contented; I hardly expect that the electors of Albert will next time be contented with another telegram, but this time he may possibly hope to get an Order in Council providing for a future consolidation of these railways to be effected if the next elections go right.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). The hon member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) is an older politician than I am, and has much more experience, and he speaks with that sarcasm—I will not say he speaks so sneeringly, but he speaks in that manner which appears to lack the candor and to lack the sweet reasonableness which I think is more becoming a public man, in regard to my statements. I believe frankly in the wisdom of the policy I have advocated. I believe that this Government, it it continues to operate the Intercolonial Railway, must adopt that policy, and that it must do so soon. I shall take occasion early in the next Session, if I have an opportunity of getting the ear of the House, to make a much more careful and reasoned statement than I have been able to make to-night, because, though I had made certain notes on this subject, they were put away in my desk some two weeks ago. But I will make this statement, that I never was more in earnest in my life than I am to-night in pressing this matter upon the Government. I believe it is a measure of justice to the Lower Provinces, and I am speaking particularly of those counties which lie away from the line of the Intercolonial Railway. We see all along the Intercolonial Railway towns and cities rapidly springing up, but we do not see a corresponding growth in the counties that lie a little away. The reason is that the branch railways are not discharging their duty as we hoped. In our own county the question has been for many years one of acute interest, and if the Intercolonial Railway will not do its duty in the matter, then we will do our best to bring pressure to bear upon the Government to abandon their control, and give or sell the Intercolonial Railway to a company who will run it on business principles. In the judgment of some of us who have given a good deal of study and attention to Intercolonial Railway statistics, there is no need of a deficit, and we believe that all the while a deficit is due to ignoring the local trade, to an over-straining for what may be called, in the large sense of the word, the political aims of the road-not in a bad sense of the word, but in the large sense of the word, that is, to bind the Eastern Provinces to the far West, and develop the country between the two sections. We sympathise with those aims, but we do not want the whole pressure of that service to fall upon our own section of the country. We know very well that when the Intercolonial Railway was built it was partly in order to get the help of an Imperial subsidy in guaranteeing the money for the road, and partly to comply with Imperial interests, and partly, no doubt, to please the people in Quebec and northern New Brunswick, that the natural and commercial route was not taken, a route which, after getting away from Halifax, would cut through the Isthmus of Chignecto and make a bee line to the upper waters of the St. John. We did not take that route and in consequence we have operated the road at a great loss. That road was built, and that route was taken, mainly from considerations of defence, and you must bear your own share of its maintenance, gentlemen of the Middle Provinces and of the West. It was not our asking, it was not our doing, it was largely Imperial interests which drew that railway away round the Bay of Chaleurs. The Intercolonial Railway is a losing enterprise at present, as I am pointing out, and, having given this matter a great deal of attention, and taken the best opportunities to talk with railway men, I think it my duty to point out that the real remedy seems to me to lie in the development of this branch traffic. I know that, in the county which I represent, the people are unwilling to open quarries from the danger of these railways being closed in the winter and spring, in which case the lumbermen and quarrymen could not fill their contracts. That disaster could not happen if the Government were operating the roads. Therefore, capitalists are unwilling to invest their money in the development of the resources of Albert county, of which I speak by way of example.

Mr. WELDON (St. John.) My hon. friend from Albert speaks of the railway being relieved of its bonds. On the first railway there was a pretty heavy mortgage, I think, some $600,000 of bonds, that were sold in England. If I could lay my hand upon the prospectus that was used we would find that some remarkable statements were made at that time. The bonds were sold in England and five years' interest paid, and afterwards no interest was paid. I think after the hon. member became a member of Parliament a grant of $15,000 was given to that railway as a loan, and a mortgage was taken upon it and remains on the records of Albert county to-day as a specimen of Government assistance to railways. My hon. friend says that the railway is relieved of its bonds. It is relieved of its bonds in this way, that the unfortunate English bondholders were obliged to buy the road in. I find in the Public Accounts that we are credited with having rendered assistance to that road to the extent of something like $14,800. With regard to the other road it is just in the same position, that is, it is in the hands of a receiver. I am sorry to say that the mode in which these bonds have been sold does not do credit to our railway companies on the other side of the water. I may say that the parish of Elgin, in the county of my hear friend, voted very unanimously towards assisting that railway, and after they voted the money they did not want to pay the interest, and it required the persuasion of the Supreme Court to compel them to do so. It has been rumored that my hon. friend has held out hopes to them that they will get rid of that $15,000. That may be so, and that may be one of the objects which has inspired my hon. friend to open up this great scheme, which he put forward for the purpose of embracing all these railroads which, I am sorry to say, judging from the returns we had the other day of the Caraquet Railway, leave us on the wrong side of the balance sheet.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I wish to correct my hon. friend. The loan of $15,000 to the Albert Railway was given some time before I became a member of this House. The money was almost all spent before I was elected. I made no promise and I held out no hope of getting a similar loan of $15,000, or of any amount to relieve the Elgin ratepayers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have straved away a good deal from the question before the Chair. I certainly do not at all object to my hon. friend behind me taking this opportunity to bring up the scheme which he has mentioned, and which, as I understand, involves the acquisition by the Government and attaching to the Intercolonial Railway various branches of railway which are now connected with it, but are not a portion of it. I am not able, of course, to judge at once of the feasibility of the scheme. Of course, if all these branches were worked together with the main line as one line, there would be considerable economy as a matter of course. Whether it would increase the revenues and diminish the expense materially, so as to show a better balance sheet on the right side, I am not able to say. I must say that I have a great deal of doubt about it. However, this is a matter that ought to be fully considered, and the proposition made by my hon. friend is worthy of all consideration. He says, he thinks, that if the Intercolonial Railway, with its extensions and branches, were transferred to a railway company, it could be run on commercial principles, that it would be of great benefit to the country through which it passes, and it would also relieve the Government of the incubus of managing a great rail-

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What would the Government have to pay in order to induce a company to take it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That I am unable to say; but I think that if Nova Scotia and New Brunswick should, in some way that we could consider as expressing the voice of the two Provinces, declare they would be willing that such an arrangement should be made, I do not think the Dominion Parliament would object. I consider the building of the Intercolonial Railway was one of the conditions of the Union, it was the bond, the link uniting the three Provinces together, Old Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick; and I have stated before in my place that, in my own individual opinion, it would be contrary to the spirit of the Union if this link between the Provinces were handed over to a commercial company, a railway company, liable to all the exigencies of a private enterprise, and one which might utterly fail to perform its duty in maintaining the link between the three Provinces. But if Nova Scotia and New Brunswick by the votes of their Legislatures, or in any other way which the Parliament of Canada could accept as a genuine expression of the opinion of the two Provinces, said it would be willing that the change should be made, I am quite sure the Parliament of Canada would accept it. But I am afraid it would be very much like the case of the Prince Edward Island Railway. When, also for the purpose of securing a union of that Province to the Dominion, the Government undertook to compete the Island Railway and place it in good running order, and it was proposed to make a present of the road to the Island, the offer was gracefully declined. I am afraid Nova Scotia and New Brunswick would take the same position in regard to the Intercolonial. Let me go back to the question before the Chair, and express the hope that without much further discussion this grant of $40,000 additional to finish repairs up to 30th June, will be granted.

Mr. MITCHELL. There has been a good deal said about the Intercolonial Railway and what should be done with it, and a good many of those who claim to speak on behalf of the interests of the country have endeavored to put forward this scheme, which they think would perhaps serve the interests of the road. I have listened to what the First Minister has said, and correctly said, as to the object for which the Intercolonial was built. It was not built as a commercial undertaking; it was built as a means of communication between the Maritime Provinces and the old Province of Canada. I can well remember when the constitution was framed for submission to the British Parliament that the present First Minister desired not to put this railway into the contract, and he urged that the construction of a railway should not form part of the constitution. But gentlemen who represented the Maritime Provinces on that occasion insisted that a clause should be inserted in the British North America Act, providing that the railway should be built and maintained by the Dominion of Canada as a means of communication, for all time, between the two extremes of the Dominion as it existed at that day. Without that road we would not have come into Confederation. Without that railway our constitution would have been a paper constitution, for there would have been no communication without going through a foreign country. We insisted on our point, and we gained it. The proposal submitted by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) of taking in all the bankrupt roads in the Maritime Provinces and adding them as an incubus to the Intercolonial could not, if carried out, fail to make the condition of that road ten times worse than it is to-day. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) can give us an account of some of those roads. I will not refer to some others, because my reference might be considered of a personal nature in view of our discussion the other night, but I may refer to them when the matter comes up on a motion to be submitted by the hon.

Sir John A. Macdonald.

member for North York (Mr. Mulock). many of those roads are of the same complexion. I desire to say in regard to the Intercolonial that that road should run and sustain itself, and it would sustain itself if properly managed. If the political barnacles which are attached to it, and which have used the road to carry constituencies, were wiped off, if the road was economically managed, if unnecessary employés were struck off the pay-roll, and if the railway was managed on business principles, I am satisfied it could be made to pay, and I trust the First Minister, who is now Minister of Railways, will give a little more attention to it, with a view to endeavoring to make it pay. The First Minister spoke of what this Parliament might possibly do if the Legislatures of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick would agree to have the Intercolonial Railway sold, and run by a private corporation for personal and private interests. I trust the time will never arrive when the Legislatures of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick will consent to any such arrangement. would be a violation of the engagement under which we came into Confederation, and I am satisfied they will never consent to any such arrangement. The hon. Secretary of State will recollect that two or three years ago one of his friends made a proposition of this kind, and the moment the matter was brought before this House and exposed the bubble burst, and the hon. gentleman himself on that occasion stated that the object for which the railway was constructed was for the purpose of enabling the Maritime Provinces to unite with Canada and secure not only a paper union but a commercial and practical union by giving us means of communication from Halifax to the centres of trade and commerce in old Canada. I would deprecate the idea of placing that road in private hands. It would be a breach of the agreement made in 1866-67, and it would create a feeling of want of confidence in the stability of the Union if we departed from the arrangement by which this road forms a part of the constitution of this country, and by which it must be maintained by the Dominion for all time. Let me say a word or two about branch roads. I am willing to do anything reasonable to promote the prosperity of the Maritime Provinces, as well as of the Dominion of Canada at large. But it will not be in the interest of either Canada or of the Provinces that this Government should deliberately undertake to buy up these branch roads which are earning almost nothing, such a road as was spoken of the other day, a road which earned $14,000, while the cost of running was $27,000. We do not want such roads tacked on the Intercolonial. Was that the reason why Sir Charles Tupper telegraphed not to close anything until a certain gentleman came out here, and was it the inducement that made those gentlemen who hold bonds in the roads offer to transfer them to the Government for the issuing rate of the bonds? I am afraid there is a scheme abroad for the next general election in regard to this matter. I think I can see looming up something of the same kind as produced the letter or telegram sent to the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) by Sir Charles Tupper. I think I can see a magnificent scheme by which all the bankrupt roads in the Maritime Provinces and in other Provinces | vinces may be induced, if they succeeded in returning the Administration of the day, to unite into a grand consolidated scheme such as has been sub-mitted to this House, the object being to buy up the constituencies. I deprecate anything of this kind, and I will stand up in my place and oppose it in every possible way. For the last two Sessions I have brought under the notice of the Minister of Railways, not the Premier but his predecessors, the fact that in my county the Government have a branch road, fifteen or sixteen miles in length, called the Derby branch. There is a road which runs down from Fredericton to Blackville, and then on to Chatham. There was a hiatus of about nine miles, for which road the Government gave a subsidy of $3,200 a mile. They gave the contract to a very good friend of mine, Mr. Snowball, a gentleman from whom I received a good deal of support at the last general election. He took the contract for the construction of that road and he built, along with Mr. Gibson, the road from Fredericton to Newcastle, and this hiatus between the Derby branch and Blackville. He took the contract, received a subsidy, built the road, and got his money, and now going on three years that road has been unused, and not a locomotive has been run over it or the least traffic done. It is a disgrace that the Government of the country should have placed themselves in a position to allow that state of things to exist. It is a scandal in the county from which I come that the public money should be appropriated for the construction of a railroad to connect two important links and that after the road is constructed, the Government have so conducted the matter, that there has not been a locomotive run over it for three years. I called the attention of the right hon. gentleman to this matter last year and the year before. I now call his attention to it again, and I say that it is the duty of the Government to take some steps, either by purchasing or leasing this nine miles of road, or by compelling those people who have received Government money to run the road, to see that this road is operated, and that the $28,000 of public money which has been spent on these nine miles should not be spent in vain. I hope the right hon. gentleman will see to that matter at once.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I wish to say a word in connection with the remarks of my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. Mitchell) and I shall recall to his memory something that happened two years ago. This is the second or third time in this Parliantent that my hon. friend has connected my name with a scheme to purchase the Intercolonial Railway. When he did this two years ago, it is true that it was in the small hours of the morning, when perhaps less importance might he attached to some statements made in this House, than if they were uttered in the early part of the sitting. I then told the hon, gentleman that his statement was not correct. He had then stated that at a conference or at a meeting held at the office of the High Commissioner at London, a scheme had been propounded and discussed for the sale of the Intercolonial Railway. I told him that his statement was wrong, and that he had even mistaken his own recollection of a private and confidential conversation that he had at the Windsor Hotel in Montreal, with regard to the railway, and the discussion which he imagined had taken place at the office of the High Commissioner in London. I told him that there was nothing correct in his statement, so far as I was concerned, or so far as the High Commissioner was concerned, or so far as the Minister of Customs was concerned, whose name, I think, he mixed up with my name, and the name of the High Commissioner. I told him that there had not been the slightest mention made about the Intercolonial Railway at the meeting which had taken place at the office of the High Commissioner in London, and that the discussion was about some matters connected with duties to be imposed on steel rails, and the establishment in Canada of a large iron manufacture by French engineers and capitalists. I take this opportunity also to tell the hon gentleman that, perhaps, he is mistaken when he states, on his authority as one of those who were a party to the negotiations for the Confederation of the Dominion, that the absolute condition was then, and should always remain, that the Intercolonial Railway should be worked by the Government whether at a loss or not, for all time to come. I do not think any one will support the hon, gentleman in that pretension. It was a condition of the Union that there should be a railway connecting the Maritime Provinces with the old Province of Canada to afford facilities for commercial communication, and that this railway should be built by the Dominion Government. I do not think there has been, and I do not think there should be a condition involving the necessity when that communication has been established, and when it is an accomplished fact, for the Government to maintain, no matter at what cost, that line of railway. We have now the Short Line, built at a heavy cost, connecting these Provinces with the Lower Provinces. We might be called upon to subsidise another railway, besides the Intercolonial and the Short Line, to connect the Maritime Provinces with Old Canada, but I do not think my hon. friend is right in saying that it is an absolute condition for the main-tenance of Confederation, that the Intercolonial Railway should be maintained as a Government railway when commercial communication between the Maritime Provinces and Western Canada is established in a manner that cannot for the future be disurbed. I say that one of the conditions of Confederation was, that there should be a communication between the Maritime Provinces and Canada, but now this communication having been established, I do not think it is an absolute necessity that the Government should work the Intercolonial Railway as a Government property. I do not express that opinion in so far as I am a member of the Government. I have no right to do it and I do not want to do it, but I do not want it to be said in this Parliament, that it is an absolute necessity for the Government to maintain the Intercolonial Railway at a cost which might be, in the future, ruinous to the country.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. Secretary of State has made one of the most mixed up statements I have ever heard in my life. You cannot make head or tail of it. He mixed up something I said about the Minister of Customs, and some steel rails, and an interview with the High Commissioner in London. There is some truth in that, I have no doubt. I made the statement in this House, and he said the discussion was only about steel rails. My information was that the discussion between the Secretary of State and the gentlemen who were promoting this scheme for the purchase of the Intercolonial Railway, was of something much more extensive in its character. My hon. friend has had a good deal to do with the transfer of railways. When he was Minister at Quebec, we know that the transfer of a very important railway called the "North Shore Railway" was made, and it was a transfer which inured to the benefit of certain individuals and not to the benefit of the Province at large. Two years ago, when I brought up this question, I had the proof of what I stated in the book before me. I had the circular and prospectus which was issued by the friends of the Secretary of State, one of whom is out of the country, and the other, unfortunately, is dead. I have not the book at hand now, and I do not know that I can produce it, as I did on that occasion; but I then read the statement in which the scheme for the purchase of the Intercolonial Railway was made, and my hon. friend knows that for months they had gentlemen stationed at different points along the line of the Intercolonial Railway, to ascertain the earnings of the Government road, the traffic on the road, and the probability of a financial return coming He knows that they had made a proposition to the Government, and if it had not been for my discovery of it, the matter would not have been ventilated in this House. I told my hon. friend that he was encouraging and favoring that scheme.

Mr. WALDIE. It might be a good thing.

Mr. MITCHELL. It might be a good thing if the running of the road brings the country into debt; and, perhaps, it might be a good thing for individuals.

Mr. WALDIE. It might be well to sell the road.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; if you had a share in it you would like to sell it. When my hon. friend the Secretary of State states that there is no obligation on the part of the Government of Canada to maintain that road, I say there is an obligation. The Maritime Provinces were induced to come into the Confederation by the understanding that a railway was to be built and maintained between the Provinces. Do you mean to say that the mere construction of the road is a compliance in spirit as well as in letter with such an arrangement, which had the force of a treaty, between these Provinces? No, Sir; the Government of Canada bound themselves to build the road and practically to maintain it. My hon. friend asks: Have the Government to maintain that road by sacrifices through all time? Let them economise in the management and working of that road, and they will not require to make sacrifices. The road could be run without costing this country much money, if any. But I do not care what it costs, the Government are bound by their agreement under the British North America Act to maintain that road, and any attempt to pass it out of the hands of the Government, so that it may be run for commercial advantages, irrespective of the facilities which it might afford to the Maritime Provinces, is something that cannot be thought of for a moment. The hon, gentleman says that since that road has Mr. MITCHELL.

been built another means of communication has been opened up between the centres of trade and commerce in old Canada and the Maritime Provinces. How has that been done? By running the line through a foreign country, depending on the bonding system of that country, which may be repealed at any time. Does the hon. gentleman contend that that is a compliance with the terms of the treaty under which the British North America Act was passed?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon, friend did not oppose the building of the Short Line.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not oppose it, and I do not oppose it now. They can have the Short Line if they like, but if my hon friend supposes that I shall accept the Short Line as a compensation for the Intercolonial, he is very much mistaken. While I am willing to give the people of St. John and Halifax the facilities of a shorter route—there is no dog-in-the-manger about me-we have the Intercolonial, and this Parliament cannot take it away: I defy this Parliament to take it from us. When that railway was built, it was not as a commercial transaction. It was built in compliance with the treaty, and it was built as a military road to carry, for all time, with safety and facility, British troops and British materials, in case any difficulty arose with our friends on the other side of the border. There is no other way by which British troops or military stores can be transported across this continent; and my hon. friend is mistaken if he imagines that a road running through a foreign country, will give the facilities and protection which the British Government demanded when they gave the securities they did. I do not wish to discuss this question, which is not a live issue; but I wish to inform my hon. friends that when they want to make it a live issue, when they want to allow this road to be stolen, for that is what it will amount to, they will be very much mistaken, if they expect to do it quietly.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I congratulate the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) on adopting the views that we on this side of the House have always advocated since he has had a seat in this House. On more than one occasion, I have called the attention of the House to the extravagant expenditure and mismanagement of the Intercolonial Railway. I have no doubt my hon. friend had then as much knowledge of those things as he possesses to-night; but I do not remember him ever supporting me in the position I took. the hon. gentleman has stated, and stated truly enough, that if the road were properly managed and were separated from political and other influences, which tend to increase its expenses and not its receipts, it would be a paying road. But the hon, gentleman has no doubt taken that line to-night in order to impress on the House the desirability of the country acquiring a piece of road, in which I do not say he is personally interested, but in which he was politically interested at an early and very important time in his political history. The House has been informed to-night, as it has been on previous occasions, that but for the telegram which the hon. gentleman received from the hon. Minister of Railways during the time he was running for Albert County, we should not probably have his presence in the House to-night. The House is perhaps aware that the influence the hon. gentleman exercised in his locality and through the various parts of the Province of New Brunswick increased the usefulness of the telegram which he received from such a prominent member of the Administration as Sir Charles Tupper. That telegram, indicating the poliev of the Government as tending to absorb those unprofitable branches, and to relieve the different counties of the assessments placed upon them and the stockholders from the unfortunate position they occupied, had a most salutary effect in securing their support; and the hon. gentleman, after having sat here for some years, has at last spoken out. I do not blame him if he was misled, but I think he was a willing victim, and does not perhaps deserve very much sympathy from those of us who have understood the question from its very inception. But, Sir, the hon. Minister of Railways, and others who have referred to the Intercolonial Railway, point out that it has involved a very heavy expenditure on the country. That, unfortunately, is quite true, and I have no doubt that it has largely occurred, as the hon. member for Albert stated to-night, through the incompetency of the people who have been placed in charge of it, and through the general mismanagement of the road. The question of the assumption of the Intercolonial Railway by the Provinces need not, I think, go much further than this discussion tonight. The people of the Maritime Provinces have no more idea of assuming the responsibility connected with the running of the Intercolonial Railway than the people of Ontario have of assuming the responsibility and debt connected with the canal system of the country. We know that about $50,000,000 have been expended on the canals of the West, the same amount has been expended on the Intercolonial Railway; and the hon. First Minister, in an interview, lately indicated the intention of the Government to expend $14,000,0000 or $15,000,000 more to increase the depth of the western canals. I do not intend to express an opinion on that subject more than this, that when hon. gentlemen from the West are continually pointing to the Intercolonial Railway as a burden on the taxpayers of this country, they will do well to look to the canal system, in which the working expenses exceed the receipts by $500,000 a year. With regard to the Intercolonial Railway, I may say this, that the chances of their ever becoming a very profitable inves tinent has been very much interfered with by the policy which the Government have pursued in building the Short Line. I pointed out on another occasion that the Government could have adopted no course better calculated to destroy the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway than by giving the large subsidies which they have granted to the so-called Short Line. Hon. gentlemen are aware that the subsidy to the Short Line amounted somewhere in the neighborhood of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000; and when the road was completed it only shortened the line to Halifax by 90 miles. If the Intercolonial Railway had been properly managed from the commencement, and if the speed had been obtained which could be obtained on a road equipped as that is, and if the Government had heeded the warnings raised on this side on more than one occasion that the public were not satisfied with the rate of speed over that and Montreal in about twenty-nine hours instead of forty hours, which has been the time made ever since the road has been under the management of the present Administration, the country would not have been so willing to incur such a heavy expense as was incurred in building the Short Line. When that Short Line was undertaken, we were told that it was going to affect a much greater saving so far as Halifax is concerned, and as I stated before, that saving amounted to about 90 miles. Under these circumstances I am sorry to have to apprehend that the probable future of the Intercolonial Railway is not very promising. We cannot imagine that with the competition now going on from the Short Line, both for freight from St. John and passenger traffic all through during the season, the receipts of the Intercolonial will amount to as much as they have amounted to in the past; and if it should unfortunately happen that such should be the case, and that this country should be burdened with a heavier deficit on the working of the Intercolonial than has hitherto been the case, we must put it down to the policy which the Government have pursued with reference to the Short Line, which is a policy rather in the interest of some people, very nearly connected with the Government, than in the general interests of the country; and the Government may well understand from the commencement, that the people of the Maritime Provinces never had, or never will have, the idea of assuming the responsibility of working the Intercolonial Railway. That belongs to the country, and be the deficiency large or small, it will have to be worked and controlled by the Government. I hope, that after the warning and the rebuke they have at last received from their own side, they will now take some heed, and will look into the practical working of the Intercolonial. The expenses can be very largely reduced. They will require to be reduced, looking at the competition which already exists with the Short Line. I again state, most emphatically, that the Government might as well disabuse their minds of the idea, if they entertain it—and the hon. the Secretary of State has given us to understand tonight that it is his opinion—that the Maritime Provinces are going to take upon themselves that burden, and at once recognise the fact, whether the amount be large or small, it will have to be borne by the Dominion.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I wish to say a few words in reply to the hon. member for Northumberland. He said I was wrong in stating that the articles of Confederation did not imply the absolute necessity for the Government of maintaining, at all times, as a Government property, the railway connecting the upper Provinces with Halifax. I might quote for my hon. friend, although he knows it, being one of the fathers of Confederation, Article 45 of the Act of Confederation, which says:—

"It shall be the duty of the Government to give effect to that agreement and to provide for the commencement, within six months after the union, of the railway connecting the River St. Lawrence with the city of Halifax and Nova Scotia, and for the construction thereof without intermission."

tained on a road equipped as that is, and if the Government had heeded the warnings raised on this side on more than one occasion that the public taken place in the office of the High Commissioner were not satisfied with the rate of speed over that in London. I must apologise for my shortcomings road, and had made the time between Halifax in this respect. I stated that, when the hon gentleman said I was connected with any project concocted in the office of the High Commissioner in London concerning the sale of the railway, he had made an incorrect statement; he pretended to divulge a scheme which he had taken from a confidential communication of a friend of his-he may have been a friend of mine-but he misunderstood the facts or mis-stated them to the House. In the second place, the hon, gentleman has taken the opportunity of saying that the sale of the North Shore Railway by the Government of Quebec, which was made when I was the First Minister there, was a transaction for the benefit and profit of certain individuals. I need not tell my hon. friend that I repudiate and deny the charge, and challenge him to prove what he says. If the hon, gentleman would read a report which has been published under the authority of the present Premier of Quebec, the Hon. Mr. Mercier, he would find in the evidence taken by the commission, which was appointed to investigate the sale of the North Shore Railway, the statement made by Mr. Duncan McIntyre that the sale of that road was the best financial transaction which could have been made at the time for the Province, and one of which the Government and people of Quebec had not cause to repent.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. the Secretary of State says that my allegation is not correct that the Government were bound to build the Intercolonial and to maintain it, and he read the section of the British North America Act to prove his assertions. Why, the very section he read shows that, in order to give effect and permanence to the arrangement or treaty which was made at that time, the Government were bound, within six months, to begin the construction of the road. They did not do so, and in that violated the treaty. But, in order to give effect to the arrangement, what was necessary? Did the arrangement mean that the Government were to begin the road and then drop it? No; they were to build the railway, and, to give effect to the treaty, they were also bound to run it. The fair inference, the fair logical construction of the agreement, is that the Government are bound to run the road, and it would be a breach of contract if they did not. My hon friend states another thing. He says I have used confidential communications which I obtained from a friend of his, and perhaps a friend of mine, in the Windsor Hotel, as to what took place in London. There was nothing confidential about it. The gentleman in question furnished me with a confidential published book which they intended to put forward to the world as their prospectus, and I had his permission to use the statement in this House, and I did use The third statement he makes is that I was wrong in mentioning his name in connection with the sale of the North Shore Railway when he was Premier of the Province of Quebec. He says that Mr. Duncan McIntyre made a report in his favor under a commission from Mr. Mercier, the present Premier of the Province of Quebec. What does he mean by that? Mr. McIntyre thought it was a good transaction. What has that to do with it? Does not everybody know that $1,000,000 was cleared by Mr. Senecal and his associates, and it is generally believed in the Province of Quebec ment by Government for the Canadian Pacific Mr. Chapleau.

that some other people were interested in that. The less my hon, friend says about it the better. The people of the Province of Quebec believe that they have lost $1,000,000 by the transaction which was countenanced by the hon, gentleman when he was Premier, through his friend, Mr. Senecal, and his associates, and I believe it. I dare say, if the hon. gentleman wants the proof, that we can get

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I desire to say that what my hon. friend has just stated is utterly and essentially unfounded and untrue. I desire to be par-liamentary in what I say. It is untrue in this manner: The transaction has been declared by men who are not my friends politically, to have been a good financial arrangement for the Province of Quebec, and, when my friend says that the sale of the North Shore Railway, which was a transaction between the North Shore Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway-that is, between two private companies—was made to the detriment of this country, to the extent of $1,000,000, he should know, as he does know, that I was not at all favorable to such a bargain. My hon friend should know, and he does know, though he does not say so, that I had personally been in favor of a transaction which would make the North Shore Railway the joint property of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, a transaction which would have secured to Quebec the free access of the trains and traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway and would not have entailed the disbursement of a dollar from this Dominion or from anybody else. The hon. gentleman knows that, and he should not repeat what may have been written in his paper, but which is essentially contrary to the truth.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend is attempting to put words in my mouth which I never uttered. He states that I spoke of a sale of the North Shore Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I never mentioned the Canadian Pacific Railway in this transaction. I say, that the sale of the North Shore Railway to Mr. Senecal and his associates by the Government of which my hon. friend was the head, was made for $1,000,000 less than Mr. Senecal sold it for a very short time afterwards, and I say that the interests of the Province of The trans-Quebec were sacrificed to that extent. action in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway is another thing, and I do not charge my hon. friend with that; but I repeat that the general impression is, that the transaction between the Government of Quebec, when he was the leader of it, resulted in Mr. Senecal and his associates receiving $1,000,000 more than they paid for it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; I do.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. To whom did the North Shore Railway Company sell, if not to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

Mr. MITCHELL. The Government of which my hon. friend was a member did not sell to the Canadian Pacific Railway. They sold to Mr. Senecal and his associates, and the latter sold to the Grand Trunk, and it was taken over under arrangeRailway Company. That is where the $1,000,000 came in, and I should like my hon. friend to tell us how the profit was divided.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not intend to satisfy the curiosity of the hon. gentleman on that point.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is just as well you do not.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The sale of the North Shore Railway has been characterised as the best financial and political operation-

Mr. MITCHELL. For some individuals, no doubt.

Mr. CHAPLEAU,—as the best financial and political operation for the interests of the Province of Quebec; and, when my hon. friend says he did not know that the North Shore Railway was sold to the Canadian Pacific Railway, he must be again mistaken, as he has been in all his statements.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones) has expressed my views so well in regard to the Intercolonial Railway that I shall not prolong the debate by repeating them. I rise simply to repeat a question which has been put before during this Session, but which is of growing importance in view of the early return to their homes of members from north eastern Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, whether the Minister of Railways has made any arrangement for a connection at Truro with the Pictou branch. The Intercolonial express arrives at Truro at noon, and the Halifax express leaves for Pictou at ten o'clock in the morning. The result is that we have to remain at Truro twenty-two hours. I want to know if the hon, gentleman can remedy that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it can be remedied.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). Mr. Chairman-

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) asked permission of the House, and received that permission to go beyond the item which was under discussion. I think, however, the discussion has now gone far enough, and I will ask members of the Committee now to confine themselves to the item.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I suppose we are obliged to bow to the decision of the Chair.

Some hen. MEMBERS.

It appears to be Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. the wish of the Committee that the hon, gentleman should proceed.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I do not wish to trespass upon the time of the House to any extent, but I would like to make a remark or two. would not speak at all, were it not that I feel that some of the observations which were made by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, in the course of this debate, were calculated to leave a wrong impression upon the minds of the members of the House, and I think they should not be passed unnoticed. In the first place, I would say that I think the hon member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) presented a fair argument to this House, and one which has not been answered, and which no attempt has been made to answer. The hon. gentleman laid down a principle which every of this House will recognise as a correct commercial principle, namely, that trunk lines more cheaply and with better advantage to themselves, and to the sections of country which are served by these branch lines, than they can be operated by separate companies under entirely different managements. That was the principle which the hon. gentleman laid down, and he illustrated it by cases of great railway corporations in the West, and showed that they, on commercial principles, were acquiring branch lines that were connected with them; and he only asks that this same principle should be adopted in the management of the Intercolonial Railway. Now, as I say, no attempt has been made to answer that argument. Hon. gentlemen on the other side, on the contrary, have attempted to insinuate that the present Government and the members from the Maritime Provinces, in their railway policy, had been influenced solely by political considerations. That I most emphatically deny, and I charge hon. gentlemen opposite to prove those assertions. I think, that especially from the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), who, I am sorry to see, has left the House, that charge came with very bad grace. We all know that one of the branches of the Intercolonial Railway was built in the county which he represents, and at his urgent request, and we also know that he was then in Opposition. That hon, gentleman surely ought to be willing that the policy pursued in his county should be extended to other counties in the Maritime Provinces as well. The remarks which the leader of the Government made when speaking upon the question, were to the effect that doubts existed in his mind, as to whether the acquisition of those branch lines would improve the position of the Intercolonial Railway. I understood that position to be assented to by the hon. member for West Durham. Whether they are correct in those assumptions, I am not prepared to say. I am willing to admit, that a Government road cannot be managed as cheaply, or as economically, or on as sound business principles, as a road managed by a private corporation. But, if we do admit that the Intercolonial Railway is prevented from acquiring branch lines in the Maritime Provinces, and thus conferring a general benefit upon the people and upon the trade of those Provinces, because it is a Government railway, it does become a very serious question for the people consider whether the management and control of that road should not be transferred to a private company. The argument which the hon. gentleman from Northumberland used in opposition to this view of the case, that we were bound by the Act of Confederation to maintain this as a Government road, has already been answered by the Secretary of State. Lthink this point, too, should be borne in mind in considering that branch of the subject. Every one knows that at the time of Confederation the Intercolonial Railway, connecting the Upper and Lower Provinces, could not be a paying investment, that no private corporation would undertake to build and operate that road, or would undertake to operate it after it was built; that it was operated during the first few years after its construction at a great loss; the loss, if I remember correctly, without looking at the figures, was in the neighborhood of half or three-quarters of a million dollars. But can operate branch lines connected with them since then things have entirely changed, and I believe that that road in the hands of a private corporation could be profitably operated to-day, and that the principle which the hon, member for Albert has advocated would make it a still more profitable investment for a private company than it would be under present circumstances. That hon, gentleman also referred to the necessity of maintaining it as a military road. I quite admit that in the case of the transfer of this road to a company, it would be necessary for the Government to take such measures as would secure the maintenance and the continued operation of that road, and would also provide for its use in case of necessity as a military road. The other remarks which I thought were calculated to leave a very erroneous impression upon the minds of the House, were remarks which fell from the hon. member from St. John (Mr. Weldon). He endorsed the statement of the hon, member for Northumberland, that these branch lines in the Maritime Provinces were losing concerns - I think that was the term used. Now, it is a fact, I believe, that in the past the operation of very many of these roads has been unprofitable, but that has resulted from the fact that they were badly managed. It has been, unfortunately, the case with very many of the railroads in the Maritime Provinces, that they have fallen into the hands and under the control of mere speculators, that they have not been managed on business principles. I am not prepared to say that when these roads were originally constructed they could have been profitably managed, but I believe the condition of things has changed to-day, and from my knowledge of the cost of management and of the traffic on the branch lines in the Province of New Brunswick, with perhaps one or two unimportant exceptions, the great majority of them would of profit, if managed on fair business principles. I think, therefore, that the proposition which the hon. member for Albert has presented to the House is one which is well worthy of consideration.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I can quite understand that my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) would naturally support the view adopted by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), because the hon. member for Westmoreland, as the House is well aware, occupies the position of being a large owner in one of these branch lines, and doubtless the policy which he is advocating tonight may place him in the position of approaching the Government with a view of absorbing that branch also. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but it is well known that this House has been called upon last year for $60,000 and this year for $110,000, to build a railway to Cape Tormentine in the interest of the hon. gentleman's road, for which no public advantage to the Maritime Provinces will accrue. It was stated by the hon. members from Prince Edward Island, and it is well known to every hon. member from that part of the country, that, except the interest of his own road, it will serve no public interest at all. The trade and traffic from Prince Edward Island, as far as Halifax is concerned, will naturally come to Pictou; and the trade and traffic, so far as New Brunswick and the West is concerned, will naturally go to Shediac; but the hon, gentleman, influence as a member of Parliament to aid and Mr. Wood (Westmoreland).

with the influence which he possessed with the Government last year, as I say, induced them to appropriate $60,000 and $110,000 this year to add to the value of this road and to the expenditure of money not in the public interest, but in the interest of the small branch in which the hongentleman is a large owner. Therefore, I say it is natural the hon. gentleman should sympathise with the views of the hon. gentleman for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood).

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). The hon. gentleman has pursued a course that is characteristic of the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones). Instead of addressing himself to the question before the Committee, or attempting to address himself to the arguments which have been addressed to the Committee on the subject under consideration, he has attempted to insinuate political motives.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Are they true?

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). No; they are not true; I will answer that before I sit down. The hon, gentleman has taken occasion to refer to the road with which I am connected. I challenge him or any other hon. member to show it has not been managed on strictly business principles from the start. I challenge him to show that the road has not been of advantage to the section of country through which it passes, and I can state too, from the knowledge I have of the operating of that road, that it not only pays its expenses and its maintenance in good order, but it also gives a fair return for the money invested in it. With respect to the application for the construction of a wharf at Cape Tormentine, I can assure the hon. gentleman that he is entirely mistaken in supposing that the expenditure was due to any political influence I may have had with the Government of the day. I will remind the hon. gentleman that in 1883 the question of communication with Prince Edward Island was brought up in this House, not by me, but by hon. members representing the Island; that, in compliance with the request of those hon. gentlemen, a Committee of this House was appointed to enquire into the whole question of communication with Prince Edward Island, and the hon. gentleman, if he will turn to the reports for 1883, will find the report of that Committee in relation to that subject; and it was in pursuance of the recommendations in the report of that Committee that the Government of that day made this appropriation for the construction of a wharf at Cape Tormentine, and that they expended a considerable sum in the extension and repair of the wharf on the opposite side of the straits, at Cape Traverse, and also granted a subsidy towards the construction of the road from Sackville to Cape Tormentine.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman inform us whether he is a large proprietor in the road which derives benefit from this expenditure, because my recollection is that the hon, gentleman who has just addressed the Committee, and who has so much resented the remarks of the hon. gentleman for Halifax (Mr. Jones), is a man largely personally concerned in the road which derives benefit from that expenditure? He is here in his place in Parliament, and using his know.

assist in obtaining a subsidy for a road of which he is a large proprietor.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I have no hesitation in informing the hon. member for Sonth Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) that I have a large share in the road to which he refers. That road only received the same subsidy from this Parliament which other branch lines received in New Brunswick and all other Provinces of the Dominion. I have never used any undue influence with the Government in any way to obtain that subsidy, and I do not know what the hon. gentleman intends to insinuate by the remarks he has

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I insinuate nothing.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I do not know what is the object of the hon. gentleman's remarks. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will tell you in a moment. Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I shall be glad to Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My opinion is that an hon. gentleman who is largely interested in a road, for which road the Government, of which he is a supporter, has given a large subsidy, is, of all men in the world, least qualified to raise any objection to such a statement as was made by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Jones); and he is, in my opinion, unfit to exercise an independent vote on any such question or to offer independent advice on any such question, or to give independent votes or advice on any questions coming before this Parliament.

Mr. KENNY. It is exceedingly to be regretted that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) did not apply the doctrine which he has just laid down when he noticed that the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has not hesitated to urge the granting of a subsidy to a line of steamers of which he is the agent at the port of Halifax. The senior member for Halifax, ever since I have had the honor of having a seat in this House, has not hesitated to demand from the Government a subsidy for the line of steamers of which he is agent in the city of Halifax.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Untrue.

Mr. KENNY. I appeal to the House if the hon. gentleman this session—and the record on Hansard will show it distinctly—has not advocated that a subsidy should be given to the Dominion Line of steamers. The hon, gentleman is agent in Halifax for the Dominion Line of steamers. As regards the railway through Westmoreland, to which the senior member for Halifax has referred in a manner which has shocked the propriety and sense of decorum of this House, I have some knowledge of that road.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Are you a shareholder?

Mr. KENNY. I think that railway will be an exceedingly useful one, and great merit is due to the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) for the interest he has taken in securing so important a public work for the county which he so well represents. To show the confidence which the people of Westmoreland have in that road, I may say that saying every bond) was taken by the people of Westmoreland. The question of the acquisition of railways by the Intercolonial, that is to say, the railways that are in connection with it, has been under discussion in this debate. I will take advantage of this opportunity to say to the hon. Minister of Railways that when the question of railway acquisition comes forcibly under his consideration I hope he will remember that in the Province of Nova Scotia we have a system of railways extending from Halifax to Yarmouth, known as the Windsor and Annapolis and Western Counties, and which it would be in the interests of the Province that they should be acquired by the Dominion. It is very fashionable in this House to charge the administration of the Intercolonial with great extravagance; and I heard some such remark dropped by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), when he referred to the associations of the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) early in his political history with railway matters. Has the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) forgotten that in 1878, when he appealed to his constituents, one of his great claims was that he had succeeded in securing an expenditure of $720,000 in Halifax for Intercolonial Railway purposes? I find no fault with that expenditure; I think it was proper and legitimate; but I do say that it is exceedingly unbecoming in that hon, gentleman to stand here and attribute motives to, and make insinuations against, hon. gentlemen who take interest in railway expenditures in their own counties. One trouble with the Intercolonial and one cause of its deficit is the fact that the Intercolonial has no close connection with the traffic west of Chaudiere. the Intercolonial had closer, more intimate and better connections with the great trunk lines of Canada which are located at points where the trade originates, I believe, it would advance the interest of the Intercolonial to have such connection. There is a project, it is a matter of public notoriety, and I may be permitted to refer to it here, for the extension of the Temiscouata Railway from Edmundston to Moncton, and for the extension of the Grand Trunk system to the Maritime Provinces, which would be secured in this manner, and it would, I believe, divert to the Intercolonial and to the Maritime Provinces a large amount of freight which now passes over the American connections of the Grand Trunk and finds its outlet either in Portland or Boston. believe, therefore, that it would be in the public interest, in the interests of our interprovincial trade, and in the interests of our export and import trade, if the Grand Trunk Railway system could be extended to the Maritime Provinces. And from what I have heard, I believe that can best be accomplished by the extension of the road from Edmundston to Moncton.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). My hon. colleague (Mr. Kenny) is certainly very ungrateful. The House will remember that on a quite recent occasion, that hon, gentleman brought to the notice of this House the very unsatisfactory manner in which the English mail service was carried out. He read a most pathetic account of the sufferings of the people who were on board of several of the steamers, and of the long passages which the steamers were making, and when I came to the rescue of my hon. every bond of the company (I think I am correct in | friend, and complained that the Government had not completed arrangements for giving us a faster and better mail service across the Atlantic, the hon, gentleman now tells me that I did this because my firm was agent for the Dominion Line.

Mr. KENNY. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I said the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) ought to have reproved the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) for having referred to it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman cannot escape on any such line as that. The insinuation was, that I was using my public position here, as he has used his on many occasions—that I was using my public position in the interest of a company in which I was interested. He was endeavoring to place me in the same position that the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) has been placed in to-night, of having used his position here to obtain large monetary considerations for the benefit of a railroad in which he has been compelled to admit he was largely concerned. I may say to my hon. colleague — and no one knows better than he does—that, so far as my interest in the Dominion Line is concerned, I have not one farthing directly or indirectly connected with it, and not only that, but the Dominion Line have no contract and never had a contract with the Government. The contract for carrying the mails is with the Allan Line; and the Dominion Line are working under the Allan Line, and by an arrangement with them. The hon. gentleman knows very well that that is the arrangement, and he knows that there never has been any contract between the Dominion Line and the Government. It will be seen therefore how far my hon. colleague had to travel to bring any charge of indiscretion against me. He says I shocked the moral sensibilities of that side of the House. God preserve us! I have not heard language on this side of the House that would shock the moral sensibilities of many hon. gentle-men on that side of the House, my hon. colleague included. After all the exhibitions we have had of corruption and undue influence by hon. members on that side of the House, which have been made the subject of parliamentary enquiry, during this last couple of weeks-why, Sir, if the hon. gentleman's political digestion can stand that, he can stand anything that will come from this side of the House. But, Sir, I only mean to say that, when the hon. gentleman seeks to put me in the position which the hon member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) occupies, I think the House will readily recognise the fact that there is no comparison at all. I am not interested, as my hon. friend in front of me (Sir Richard Cartwright) has repeatedly shown the hon. gentleman is interested, coming here year after year, and obtaining a large subsidy to benefit his own property, to add value to his property, and not in any way to improve or to extend the communication between Prince Edward Island and the rest of Canada. The hon. gentleman hardly occupies the position which is so frequently used by courtesy, at least, of an independent member of this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon. the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), that there is no comparison between himself and the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood), and I congratulate the hon. member for Westmoreland on that fact. I seldom have heard Mr. Jones (Halifax).

during my parliamentary experience a more unwarrantable, a more unjustifiable and uncalled for attack, than has been made on my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) by the hon. member who has just sat down (Mr. Jones), and the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). The hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), in a very calm and parliamentary mood, expressed his views as to the best mode of managing the Intercolonial Railway. Nobody could object to that. Everybody listened to the hon. gentleman, as he is always listened to, with pleasure and instruction. He gave his views calmly, and although I did not agree with him altogether, I listened with that respect which every hon. member has a right to receive when he talks common sense, and addresses himself to this House or to a Committee of the House, in parliamentary language. Then my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) arose, and in calm, deliberate, par-liamentary tones, he sustained the views that had been taken by the hon member for Albert (Mr. Weldon). Nobody could object to that. The hon member for Westmoreland argued his point, and whether his arguments were right or wrong he expressed himself in parliamentary language. His statements have got to be taken for what they are worth, and his statements in this House are always considered to be well worth listening to. He is a man of high standing and of high character, respected, I believe, in the Province from which he comes, and respected by all who know him. But instead of answering these arguments, instead of discussing the statements he made, instead of pointing out wherein he was wrong-if the hon. gentleman thought he was wrong-the hon. member, the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), rises in his place and says: You have no right to talk here; you own a railroad, and by your influence you have got grants made, to your own advantage. That is the statement which the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) made, utterly ignoring the arguments of my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) and not even discussing them in any way, but he makes a violent personal attack on the hon, member for Westmoreland. That conduct is unparliamentary; it is more than unparliamentary, and it deserves stronger language than I can use within the walls of Parliament.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Go on.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; I will not commit the fault the hon. gentleman has committed in this instance. Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the fact? As has been pointed out, this communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland viâ Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine, was pressed upon this House a long time ago by a Committee of the House. It was pointed out to be the safest, the shortest and the best means of carrying on winter communication between the Island and the mainland. It was urged upon this House by the Committee. It was urged upon this House by the members from Prince Edward Island that, in justice to that Province, there should be a railway running to Cape Traverse from the main Prince Edward Island line, and that there should be a steamer plying across that short distance to Cape Tormentine. The fact that my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) was enterprising enough to put money into railways—and God knows they are not profitable enterprises in this country—is made a matter of reproach to him. The hon. gentleman says that he, by his influence, got certain grants made. It was got by the influence of its being the right route, the most convenient and the safest mode of communication.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Ask the members for Prince Edward Island; ask those members who pressed it on this House who were here at the time, and they will tell you that this project was carried out without reference to politics, that they were all pressing on the Government and on Parliament, as a matter of justice to Prince Edward Island, that it should have that communication; and now my hon. friend behind me is insulted by being told that because the Parliament had listened to a report of a committee, and to the expression of opinion to the members from Prince Edward Island, he, forsooth, had corruptly and improperly exercised influence in carrying out this project. Leave it to the electors of Prince Edward Island, whether they think that is an improper expenditure of money, whether they think that is not a mere matter of justice to Prince Edward Island; leave it to them, and you will find how completely and utterly they will condemn the censure, the language and the reproaches of the hon. gentleman. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) followed in the same strain. I regret that he did so. I do not regard what the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) says, because his uniform system of detraction and abuse of every man to whom he is opposed renders his censure just as harmless as his praise would be contemptible. But the hon. member for South Oxford stands on a higher plane, from his ability if from nothing else, and I regret extremely that he should follow in the degraded track and style of the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones).

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is often very difficult to know whether we are to take the hon, gentleman seriously or not. Generally speaking, I have found that when he assumes this attitude of indignant virtue, which does not sit so well upon him as some of the other roles he is fond of playing, it is because the hon. gentleman is con-scious that the facts laid before the House at any particular time are not easy to explain, and thereupon he at once devotes himself to an attack on any one who brings these ugly facts to light. I take issue with the hon. gentleman as to whether the language used by myself or my hon. friend was unwarranted or not. I tell the hon. gentleman that in all his long experience he has done nothing, in my opinion, so calculated to demoralise this House, and individual members of this House, so calculated to undermine the right regard which members of Parliament ought to hold for the place they occupy, as by the introduction of this most pernicious system of granting railway subsidies indiscriminately to railroads in which large numbers of members of Parliament are personally interested. From the first that system was a corrupt, mischievous and pernicious one, calculated in the highest possible degree to undermine the independence of members of Parliament; and when I put the question to the hon. member for Westmoreland, as to whether he was or was not largely interested in a road to which the Government of which he is a supporter and of which the hon, gentleman is the chief, had granted large subsidies, I did that, not with a special design to annoy the hon. member for Westmoreland, but because on this and on all other occasions I mean to call the attention of the House and the country to the position in which members of Parliament are placed when large sums of money from the public chest are given to roads of which they are large proprietors; and I repeat to the right hon. First Minister that no system can be devised more contrary to all principles of sound government than to allow members of Parliament, under cover of the law, to become in this way pensioners of the Government. We have had many notable instances of this in this House. I do not design to protract this discussion, and I will not enumerate those instances, but if the hon gentlemen wants them, I can give him plenty of examples which have been highly scandalous to the honor and credit of members of Parliament, and to the Parliament of Canada, which has permitted these things to exist.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I have this to say to the hon. First Minister, who has shown considerable warmth in this discussion, and it is generally well understood that when the hon. gentleman exhibits that warmth he feels that he and his Government have been struck pretty hard, and have been exposed in transactions which they cannot defend on public grounds. The right hon. gentleman is the last man in this country from whom any one should receive instruction. The hon. gentleman's age should entitle him to different treatment, I admit; but when he looks back on his political life and to what he has been connected with—the hon, gentleman may smile—no doubt he would like to forget those transactions-and then ventures to lecture an hon. member of this House, it is, to use the old saying, a case of Satan rebuking sin. The hon. gentleman knew nothing of what he was talking about, and he showed it in his explanations. He said this was a winter route, which is just one of the things it is not. It cannot be used in the winter time at all. It was only intended to accommodate the people of Prince Edward Island during the summer months. When the hon, gentleman undertakes to speak on a subject, he should be better qualified, from experience and from information, than he has shown himself to be to-night. As to anything the hon. gentleman says about myself, I treat it with the contempt it deserves.

To pay widow of late W. B. Forbes, superintendent, arrears of travelling expenses from 1st July, 1873, to 1st October, 1879.................$1,250

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is an item which requires some explanation. In the first place, the amount is considerable, and in the next place the practice of paying arrears running over a period of six years is in itself a very questionable proceeding, unless there is some strong ground for it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It stands thus, and I think the hon, gentleman will see that the widow has a fair claim to this money. On the 8th of February, 1870, an Order in Council was passed allowing the late superintendent $200 per annum for travelling expenses, in addition to his regular

This allowance was paid to the end of 1873, when the payment was dropped. In that year his salary was raised, but the Order in Council sanctioning the increase in his salary did not refer to travelling expenses, and was not intended to affect the allowance, the non-payment of which rendered the increase altogether nugatory. Nearly all the canal superintendents received this allow-In 1879 it was resumed, and this vote is to cover the time during which the allowance was not paid.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are we to understand that no claim was preferred during the long period from 1879 to 1890? Here is a claim which has elapsed for eleven years. It is very clear that this gentleman was singularly negligent in pressing this claim, or the Government have been negligent in granting it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The allowance was the same in 1879, and it was paid from 1879 to Mr. Forbes until he died.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did he make any claim before?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That I cannot say. It was stopped in 1873, for what reason I do not know. There would be no claim, I take it, until January of that year. Why it was not made I cannot tell; but this claim was presented by the family of Mr. Forbes, and it is quite clear that by some error or by some refusal of the claim it was not paid; but in my opinion it was an honest

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We should have some explanation as to why the claim was not preferred before.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The man died a year ago, and we do not know.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In ordinary business, if such a claim were not preferred during ten years, the presumption would be that there was good reason for not preferring it; and if it was preferred and refused by the hon, gentleman's predecessor, we ought to know the reason.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was stopped in 1873—why, I do not know. The hon. gentleman may remember, as he was in the Government at the time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In 1879 the claim was pressed by Mr. Forbes, who was, for all I know a political opponent of the Government of which the hon. gentleman was a member. I do not know anything about it, but at any rate we did not get it and did not press it. At all events, in 1879, he claimed and got his allowance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If he thought he had a right, then he must have applied before. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He may have done so, but I do not know. I will make enquiries.

Mr. MULOCK. It seems to me that when Mr. Forbes made his claim in 1879, if he thought he was entitled to be paid the same amount for the six years preceding, he would have asked for those arrears; and not having asked for them, it must salary given this man at the time the payment of the extras was discontinued? I understood the right hon. gentleman to say that up to 1873 Forbes received a certain salary with an allowance for travelling expenses, and that in 1873 his salary was increased and the travelling expenses discontinued, the increase being intended to take the place of the extras which had been previously allowed.

Sir John A. Macdonald.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; the increase was made to put him on a par with other officers holding similar positions, without reference to any allowance for travelling expenses.

Mr. MULOCK. The circumstances under which that increase was made should be made known to the Committee, and all the papers in connection with it should be brought down.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will make enquiries about them.

To additional pay to persons permanently employed in the public service, and remuneration to any other persons for services rendered for, or in connection with, passing vessels through the canals between Lake Erie and Montreal, from midnight on Saturdays to 6 a.m. Sundays, and from 9 p.m. Sundays to midnight.

4152

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The men are employed on the canals for six days in the week. In order to prevent stagnation of trade and the diversion of trade on the Welland Canal to the Erie Canal, it was provided that the canal should be opened from midnight on Saturday till six in the morning, so as to allow the crew and any passengers on a vessel to go on shore to church if they liked, and the canal was closed from six o'clock on Sunday morning until nine o'clock on Sunday night. This was a new engagement and we had to get other men to do the work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that the first time that arrangement was put in force?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was paid out of the general vote for contingencies, and it was thought better to have it passed by Parliament in this shape.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I believe representations have been made to the Government urging them not to allow Sunday traffic on that canal, and it is a question whether we should appropriate this large sum of $10,000 for the purpose of enabling men to work on the Sabbath day. The laboring men there should have an opportunity to devote the Sabbath to their religious duties instead of our encouraging a larger amount of traffic on that day. I believe the Government did endeavor, after receiving representations, to prevent vessels from doing business through the canal on Sundays except in case of urgency, but now they propose to vote $10,000 to encourage that Sunday business. Is it not in the interests of morality, of keeping the Sabbath day holy, and of decorum, to allow the men to refrain from doing unnecessary work on the Sunday?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think my hon. friend will see that the question whether the canals should be closed altogether on the Sunday is one be taken for granted that he did not consider he thing, and the payment of any men who are employed was entitled to them. What was the increase of when the canals are open is another thing. If the hon, gentleman thinks that the canals should be closed on Sunday and the whole traffic paralysed along the line of our lakes and rivers, that should be brought up and discussed as a separate question. At present, the instructions of the Government are that the canals shall be closed from 6 o'clock in the morning till 9 o'clock at night. The whole of the Sunday which includes the hours for divine service is kept for the crews of those vessels. This matter was discussed in the House very thoroughly on more than one occasion, but I am quite satisfied that, if you do not desire to render our whole canal system infinitely less able than it is now, and less able to compete with the railway and canal system of the United States, you must not interrupt the flow of the waters through the canals or the lakes. The crews are on board the vessels on Sunday when they are crossing Lake Superior, Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, and yet, because there is a little cut through the land at the Welland Canal, they are to be stopped. I think, if we discussed this matter on its merits, I should have the support of my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson), but at present I would suggest that he should let the item pass.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think there was some remonstrance sent from St. Catharines against the opening of the canal on Sunday. Are those people satisfied now?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not heard anything on the subject for nine months.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not like the argument of the First Minister that because the Americans break the Sabbath we should do so also in order to compete with them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Suppose we had Jews for workingmen we might avoid the difficulty.

Post Office Department..... $26,461 20

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is here a sum of $200 to enable the Postmaster General to increase Mr. Sydenham Howe's salary to $600 a year. What is the position occupied by this gentleman? I think he was auditor or something of that kind in the post office at Halifax at a pretty good salary, and he cannot be supposed to occupy the position of a junior clerk.

Mr. HAGGART. He was formerly a civil service clerk at $600. He was superannuated, I think, at $200, and this is to enable us to employ him at the rate he was previously receiving.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My impression was that he occupied a much more responsible position. I thought he occupied the position of deputy receiver general or something of that kind at Halifax, and got a considerable pension when his office was closed. He is a son of the late Joseph Howe, is he not?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Referring to the Auditor General's Report, I see that his superannuation allowance was $1,215, so that he must have been occupying, as I thought, an important position. He could not possibly have that superannuation allowance unless he had occupied a post with a salary of about $2,400. I daresay Mr. Howe is a good officer, but I can hardly understand how he can be placed in the position of a clerk at $400 or $600 a year in the Post Office Inspector's office.

Mr. HAGGART. I think this is to make up the amount to the salary he was receiving before he was superannuated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So I presume, but what office does he fill, because he can hardly receive this amount for a simple clerkship?

Mr. HAGGART. It is the first time I have heard the gentleman's name, and I have not the list here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is of some importance in reference to the employment of superannuated officers, and I should be glad to have the information.

Mr. HAGGART. I will bring it down to-morrow.

Amount required to pay Canadian Pacific Railway Company for mail service between Vancouver and Victoria....

$4,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does that mean?

Mr. HAGGART. There are two amounts that had lapsed. The contractors had not sent in their account for the last year, but they have done the work.

Amount required to pay Canadian Pacific Railway Company for mail service on main line..... $20,261 20

Mr. WATSON. I would like to call the attention of the Postmaster General to a matter which interests a large portion of the constituency which I represent. I mentioned the matter to him the other day, and I suppose he has looked into it-I refer to carrying the mails on the Manitoba and North-Western Railway. The people along the Manitoba and North-Western Railway from Portage la Prairie for some 225 miles, are actually delayed two days in getting their mail under the present arrangement. The mail service is contracted for over the Manitoba and North-Western from Portage la Prairie to different points along that line. At present, under the existing arrangement, the Manitoba and North-Western are running triweekly trains to Winnipeg, a train leaving Winnipeg at 11.15, and the Canadian Pacific Railway, which carries the mail to Portage la Prairie to be distributed at that point, leaves Winnipeg at 1.20; the result is that the Manitoba and North-Western only running three trains a week, the people along that line of railway have to wait two or three days. For instance, Saturday's mail is not dispatched until the following Tuesday. I hope the Minister will make some arrangements with the railway for carrying the mails from Winnipeg for the Manitoba and North-Western people instead of from Portage la Prairie. At present the people as far west as Calgary receive the mail as early as they do on the Manitoba and North-Western, a few miles from Portage la Prairie. These circumstances have only to be mentioned to the House to convince hon members that an injustice is being done to these people. I know the change in running arrangement was made recently, but I do not think this House would refuse spending a sum of money which is sufficient to compensate the Manitoba and North-Western people for carrying their mails

Mr. HAGGART. In reference to the subject which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, I have been in communication with the railroad company. As he states, the Manitoba and North-Western run a train at present into Winnipeg which starts an hour before the Canadian Pacific Railway train leaves for Portage la Prairie, and as a consequence if the mails went by the Canadian Pacific Railway and thence by the Manitoba and North-Western they would be delayed 23 hours. But you must remember that the cost of paying an extra train from Winnipeg to Portage la Prairie amounts to $1,800 a year, or a great deal more than we derive altogether in postage all along the line of the Manitoba and North-Western Railway. However, the Post Office Department are making arrangements by which the postal matter will be carried on the train mentioned.

Mr. DEWDNEY. When the item was up in the main Estimates for this work it was late at night and the item passed without any comment. The amount asked for in the main Estimates is $95,000. At that time I found upon enquiry that we should really require $125,000 to meet our engagements and carry out the surveys proposed until the end of the next financial year. The operations of the surveyors depend a great deal upon the seasons and the time at which they are able to set out in the spring and the time at which they are obliged to cease in the autumn. Last year our surveyors were out very late, which added considerably to the expense. I have asked for this money in order that we might have an amount over the estimates voted last year to meet our expenditure to the 30th June. Next year we propose to carry out and continue our system of making surveys and sub-division surveys in the railway belt in British Columbia, which we estimate will cost In Manitoba and the North-West town-$16,000. ship outlines will take $35,000, and sub-division contracts and examination and correction of surveys will take $10,200. Then I propose to send up to the James' Bay region, and to run a line from the Lake Temiscamingue to James' Bay. It is uncertain where that will strike. It is found necessary on account of the negotiations now going on with reference to the boundaries between Ontario and Quebec, and at the same time it is necessary to get some information in regard to James' Bay, the head office estimates that about $21,000 will be required; printers, $3,900; miscellaneous expenses, $5,400.

Mr. WATSON. In what part of Manitoba are these surveys carried on?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I propose to send two parties into the Lake Dauphin district, where settlement is going on. I think we have only two or three townships which have been sub-divided, and I want to send two parties there immediately in order to avoid conflicts.

Mr. WATSON. I am glad to hear the Minister state that he is going to send surveyors to the Lake Dauphin district, because there is a great demand for land at the present time, and people are coming in there every day. Unless the surveyors go there very soon people will squat on lands and there will be trouble.

Mr. WATSON.

Amount required to cover unprovided items for 1888-89, as per Auditor General's Report, page D—64.......$555,609 86

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In what special sub-divisions of the service did the hon. gentleman's estimates fall short? I observe that the total estimate has not been exceeded, but it is evident that $104,000 have been over-expended in certain particular branches.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have a statement prepared, which I forgot to bring with me. I think it is in reference to an over-expenditure on the Indian consolidated fund, which has been going on during the last ten or twelve years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are we to understand that the $104,000 unprovided did not occur during last year, but is the accumulation of a number of years?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The accumulation for a number of years.

Mr. MULOCK. If this is the case, it represents an improper state of affairs, for it means that large sums have been spent without parliamentary authority.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I thought the statement I made at the time was correct, but I find I was mistaken

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the Minister bring down the details?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The memorandum which I have to communicate to the House is as follows:—From 1862 to 1883 Major King provided a suitable building for a battery at Port Robinson. The Government and the county council voted some moneys in 1872 for the erection of the necessary shed and store room, but nothing further was done. Major King, besides this, paid rent to a farmer of Thorold for storage of powder, fuses, &c., as he had no magazine at his disposal.

The claim is $100 per annum from 1862 to 1883, inclusive, making about $2,200. Deputy Adjutant General says the claim is a just one. The memorandum goes on further to give an examination of items 8, 9 and 11 of the account rendered. In 1864, Major King received from the Government two cases of arms, and the freight was unpaid, amount, $2.36. In 1886, he received four nine-pounder guns, complete; the teaming from Thorold station to Port Robinson cost $60. The same year he received a carload of ammunition; the freight and teaming, which was unpaid, amounted to $53 and $4; total $71.36. The Deputy Adjutant General considers these items as being correct. Items 10, 12 and 15; In 1886, he received four cases of arms, freight unpaid, $1.70. Same year he received three barrels of ammunition, freight unpaid, $2.25. In 1872, he spent $6.10 repairing harness for the battery of which he was in command. In 1876, he received four gun carriages, the teaming of which cost $6, and the same year he had to pay the teaming for four nine-pounder guns, with carriages and a large quantity of ammunition from Port Robinson to Thorold, which cost $15. The Deputy Adjutant General says: I have seen the shipping bill and receipts which are evidently bond fide. Then, there were 37 days' pension, at $400 per annum, from the 1st July, 1885, to the 7th August, 1885, the day of the death of Major King. He lost his leg during the Fenian troubles, and he was receiving a pension from the Government, and this amount was due when he died.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know under what possible circumstances a rent amounting to $100 could have been allowed to accumulate for 22 years; Did Major King never make any application from 1862 to 1883 for the rent of these buildings? Was no agreement entered into with him?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There was no agreement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a most unusual thing that rent should be allowed to accumulate for nearly a quarter of a century, and for seven years after the building seems to have been used. It is a very dubious sort of claim.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is ridiculous.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is not so absurd or ridiculous as the hon. gentleman seems to say it is. The case arose in this way: The Government and the city council provided for the building of a shed. Major King was in command of the Welland Battery, and pending the time that this shed was being built the guns were stored away in a shed which the Major provided.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did he make any claim?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. He made no claim because at that period it was supposed that the Government was going to provide for the storage of the Government guns. Major King met with some losses, the circumstances of which I cannot be quite sure of, and when he died the amount for the rent of the shed during that period of years was sent to the Department.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Did he put in a claim during his lifetime?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The claim, I believe, was sent in the Department before he died. I was wrong in stating the other day that I thought the claim had been put in before I took charge of the Department. I find from the statement placed in my hands it was in 1882 that the claim was made.

Mr. MITCHELL. What claim?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. He put in a claim for $100 per annum for the period of time the shed had been used,

Mr. MITCHELL. Has it taken you 18 years to find out the facts of this case, Mr. Minister?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It did not take mc 18 years, for I was not there.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thought you said the claim was put in 1872?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I read the statement to the hon. gentleman which was placed in my hands.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is that all you know about it?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think that is quite sufficient.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think it is sufficient, and we ought to have more information.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not think the hon. gentleman could ask for any more information.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think he can.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have stated that from 1862 to 1883, Major King provided suitable buildings for the battery at Port Robinson.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you know anything about it except what you read from that paper?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No. How could I know anything more about it than from the reports of my officers? I have not been there to examine whether the shed is up or not, or whether the guns were stored there, and I have to accept the reports of the Adjutant General and the officers of my Department.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think those reports ought to be laid on the Table.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am prepared to do so.

Mr. MITCHELL. Wait a moment, I am doing the talking now, if you please. I think the reports ought to be laid on the Table to enable us to get some information. A claim that has not been settled for 22 years we ought to enquire about it. Is this the Major King who ran against W. J. Thompson, in 1872?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Perhaps your neighbor beside you knows; he is an Ontario man. Is he the man who lost his leg?

An hon, MEMBER. Yes. It is the same man in whose favor you made a speech up there.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I made a remark that this claim was absurd, and it seems to have appeared to the Minister of Militia as being a very ridiculous statement. I have listened to what the Minister of Militia has read and I cannot come to any other conclusion. If Major King, 22 years ago, paid money for the old Provinces of Canada, or the old Province of Ontario, and did not send in his bill to the old Province, or to the old Parliament of Canada, I fail to see on what possible ground the present Dominion of Canada can be asked to liquidate that bill. I, for one, most strenuously object to pay these old claims which have been lost sight of for twenty or thirty years. It is ridiculous and absurd that this Parliament should be asked to pay some old claims which were in abeyance, which were not pressed, and which do not appear to have been rendered to the Provinces of Canada before they came into Confederation. On what ground, legal or moral, should we pay this claim? We are not responsible for it, and we must have strong grounds, at this day, before we should consent to paying a claim which has been standing for twenty-two years without being pressed. If I understand the hon, gentleman, some claim was rendered in 1872, but it was not recognised by the Department, and if he wants to override the decision of the Department at that time, I think he has to give stronger reasons than the mere opinion of the Deputy Adjutant General that the claim seems to be good. I want to know the grounds on which he arrives at that conclusion. I, for one, most strenuously and determinedly object to pay a claim which existed before this Confederation came into existence, and which was ignored and rejected by the Department until it comes up again in the year 1890, without any reasons being given why it should be paid. I say Parliament has no right to grant such a claim, and there is not a constituency in the Dominion but will laugh at us if we grant it without some legal or moral grounds being given why we should do so.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman will remember that this matter came up on Friday night late, when I was asked to produce the reports, and I said I would. It was impossible for me to have the reports prepared for to-night, but I had a synopsis prepared. The hon. gentleman's argument is perfectly correct, that a claim which originated previous to Confederation might possibly require a great deal of explanation before Parliament should be asked to entertain it; but the hon. gentleman must remember that the fact of its having originated previous to Confederation does not change the question in so far as the liability of Canada is concerned.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Yes; it does.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If the hon, gentleman permits me to continue my argument, he may get up afterwards, and if he succeeds in convincing me, I shall be quite ready to admit it. was going to say was that after Confederation the whole militia force, the different buildings belonging to the different Provinces, and everything connected with the militia force, were handed over to the Government of Canada. No doubt the use of this shed avoided the necessity for the Government to expend money for the erection of a building for the purpose of securing and pro-tecting the property of the Government in the shape of guns and ammunition. The hon. gentleman knows that when we have to store our powder, and other stores which are required in artillery practice, they must be stored in a place where they will be perfectly secure. gentleman sees from the receipts, which the Deputy Adjutant General says are correct, that this amount of money has been paid to this farmer.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) How much?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I tell the hon. gentleman that I will produce all the statements which I have in the Department; I have nothing to hide.

Mr. MITCHELL. Did he pay after he was dead?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman is so clever that he should be able to answer that question himself; no one but himself could answer such a question, and I leave him to answer it. I have given all the information I have. I have Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

reports made to this Department, and the item was put in the Estimates because it was one that ought to be paid.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have asked the hon. Minister a very civil question, and he has answered me in a manner which outside of the House I would call impertinent. In the House I cannot say that: but I have to say that when a Minister brings in a claim so extraordinary as one for 22 years' rent for a building, the owner of which has been dead for years, I think he should have a more civil manner of answering the question I asked. I have been told that this man has been dead since 1883, and yet the hon. Minister asks us to pay rent which this man is said to have paid some farmer seven years after he was dead. The whole matter is so fishy, and the hon. gentleman is so unable to give a satisfactory explanation of it, that I think he ought at least, if he cannot give information, to keep a civil tongue in his head when proper questions are asked.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The hon. gentleman has not stated the amount paid by Mr. King to the farmer. The hon. gentleman must see that he is opening a door through which an enormous number of claims will come in. The Dominion of Canada, if it is going to assume the liabilities of the old Provinces of Canada, will have to assume debarred claims of the Provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. is no limit to these claims; if you go back twentytwo years, you may go back fifty years. I, for one, will never consent to vote this money unless I have some further information and some more convincing reasons for doing so; I think it would be an injustice. Why, you will have them pouring in upon you from all sides. We must not be asked to vote money without having the evidence before us, as well as the conclusion of the Adjutant General. If the claim is a just one, I would not stand in the way, except as regards the part before Confederation, and as regards that, whether the claim be good or not, we ought not to pay it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the objection taken by the member for Queen's is perfectly correct. In 1866, when in London the conference was fixing the terms of Confederation, each of the Maritime Provinces produced a statement of its assets and its liabilities, and the old Province of Canada in general terms produced the gross amount. We gave details, but the Province of old Cannada, from that day to this, has never shown her assets in detail, or given the details to show how the balance given was arrived at. Here is a case in which the very question arises whether these old debts of old Canada are to be paid by the Maritime Provinces. I object to the principle of paying these bills in this way, and I object to this claim on another principle. I do not think we should accept it on the simple statement of one of the officers of the Militia Department, which we know is not a very economically managed Depart-The Adjutant General makes a report, and that is all the information the Minister can give us, and when asked for details is rather inclined to give a sharp reply but no information. We have suffered enough by old Canada; we were misled and deceived in relation to its assets and liabilities. We gave the particulars of our assets and liabilities, but never got theirs. I am speaking stated that I am prepared to lay on the Table the in the presence of at least one gentleman who was at the conference, and who knows what I state to be true.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who are the representatives of this estate?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The papers I am going to bring down will show that. The claim was sent in in the name of the estate, and I cannot tell now who are the representatives.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who made the application for the claim?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It was made by the estate.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who made it, the dead man?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The dead man, speaking through a living man, but through whom I do not know.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It appears to me that you do not know anything about it.

Mr. FOSTER. We will let this item stand.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to another claim that was submitted to him some time ago. I refer to the claim of the captain of the 24th Battalion of Kent. He rented a building to store the arms and equipment of his company, for which he agreed to pay the sum of $40 a year. He made a claim on the Department which I think ought to be admitted. I think the Minister ought to pay some attention to this claim, more especially when he is considering claims twenty-four years old. Has the hon. gentleman come to any decision about this claim, for storing these arms and clothing during the past two years?'

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The matter was brought up last Session, and I explained to the hon, gentleman that the captain received the grant of money which is allowed by Parliament for the storing of these arms and clothing, and we could not very well pay him the second time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Parliament is supposed to provide a place to keep these arms and clothing, and the allowance to the captain is simply for taking care of them and not for furnishing a place to keep them in. The Militia Department is certainly expected to provide some suitable place in which to store these arms. It would be impossible to suppose that a captain could provide a place to keep them on the small allowance of $40. Other officers receive $40 in places where they have a good drill shed and armory, and where there is none the Government should provide one.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This case gives me a great deal of hope. I brought up some years ago the claims of volunteers, some of whom lived in Hanover and some in Durham, who contracted a fever while they were at drill. Up to this time, the Minister of Militia has not paid the expenses they incurred during their illness, but now I have great hopes that he will take up their case, though it is about 8 or 10 years old, and will see that they are paid. There is no doubt about the justice of their claims, and I think the only reason why payment has been refused is that I have not supported the Minister of Militia. I think I have given him a generous support to-night. I have looked into his pedigree, and I will look into it a little more if he does not do justice to these volunteers.

Mr. MULOCK. If we are asked to pay this claim because it is a bond fide debt, I think the Minister should lay on the Table the correspondence on which the report is based as well as the report. The hon, gentleman might also inform the House what number of batteries were sheltered during these 22 years, so that we may have some idea whether $100 a year is adequate or inadequate for this service. In the country $100 a year will obtain considerable shed accommodation. I have a little suspicion that this claim is pressed on account of the public services rendered by the late Major King, and I would sympathise to some extent with that, knowing the value of the services which he rendered. In regard to the attitude of some hon. gentlemen, that, because part of this claim originated before Confederation, it should not be recognised now, there may be a great deal of force in that argument, but we would be in a very peculiar position if we were to repudiate a just claim against a Province which ceased to preserve its identity at Confederation when it became part of the Dominion. No particular Province would pay an amount of this kind, and it must be either repudiated altogether or paid by the Dom-

Mr. MITCHELL. It will be recollected by some hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches that there was an official notice given to the Dominion Government by the Government of Ontario—I am speaking under correction—that they would not pay any of these old claims unless they were first submitted to and approved by the Ontario Government.

To pay the depositors in the Savings Bank the amount appropriated by the assistant postmaster at Kingston $3,253 47

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. going to object to the Government making good the defalcations of this officer, but I would call attention to the extraordinary state of thing which has prevailed for many years in this post office at Kingston. I called the attention of the late Postmaster General to the very extraordinary circumstances connected with the robberies committed by the assistant postmaster at Kingston, Mr. William Shannon, and to the fact that, though this man was caught red-handed by the Government inspector, he was given twenty-four hours in order to allow him to depart from Kingston. No punishment was inflicted upon him, though it was proved that he had committed several robberies, and I believe forgeries. At any rate, it was proved that he had opened letters and had taken money from them, and innocent junior officers had been suspected of having committed those offences. That should have called the attention of the Government to the state of affairs in Kingston, and yet the very next year the man who was selected to replace Shannon is found to have committed a great number of frauds reaching back for a series of years, involving robberies and forgeries, and, when he is brought up for trial, he receives a sentence of only two years in the penitentiary. He fared a little worse than his predecessor in office, who got off scot free with the knowledge and connivance of the Government officials. seems to me that the conduct of the Government in dealing with Mr. William Shannon and in allowing such a small punishment to be inflicted upon Mr. Burns who succeeded him, and for whose malfeasance, I presume, this vote is asked, requires some explanation. If I am rightly informed, several officers of the Postmaster General's Department, many of them young men under 21 years of age, have been convicted and sentenced to 5 years or 7 years, or perhaps 14 years in the penitentiary, I will not be certain about the time; but, at all events, they have been sentenced to long terms for offences which appear to me to have been infinitely less serious offences than those committed by Mr. Burns. The case of Mr. Shannon has already been discussed in this House, and in that case no punishment whatever was inflicted on the offender. considered that that reflected gravely on the whole administration of justice and on the administration of the Postmaster General of the day. In the case of Mr. Burns, I am not prepared to say that the Postmaster General or the Post Office authorities neglected their duties. do say that the attention of the House ought to be called to the fact, that so very trifling a sentence as two years was inflicted on a high official proved guilty of having committed such offences as I have described, while junior officers found guilty of opening individual letters, were sentenced to terms of punishment three and four times as great. I can conceive of nothing which is more calculated to debauch the service than to see such a difference in the punishments awarded for offences of an inferior degree of criminality to those which are awarded for offences of the very highest kind. I think the attention of the House ought to be called to the circumstances connected with the defalcation for which we are asked to provide. not know whether the Postmaster General knows the facts of his own knowledge.

Mr. HAGGART. I know the whole facts as reported to me. With reference to the punishments inflicted on the parties who have been found guilty of any crime, as this man Burns was, of robbing the post office, the Government of the Dominion have nothing whatever to do. All we did was to lay a charge, and he was prosecuted by the County Attorney in Kingston, an official of the Ontario Government, who sees that the law is administered in the Province, and he was tried before the Police Magistrate appointed by the Ontario Government, who awarded the punishment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it was the County Judge.

Mr. HAGGART. The Dominion Government are in no way responsible for the punishment. All the Post Office Department did, when the facts came to their knowledge, was to communicate them at once to the officers of the Ontario Government and see that the offenders were arrested and tried for their crime. As to the distinction between the punishment, one case was before the Police Magistrate in Ottawa, I think, where two young men convicted of robbing the mails were sentenced to five years, whereas in Kingston the Police Magistrate sentenced the offender to two years. There was no effort made by the Postmaster General to have the sentences lessened or increased.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not allege the Postmaster General in this case was responsible; the hon. gentleman's predecessor was, in my opinion, gravely derelict in duty in allowing the man Shannon to escape, or in not punishing the officers who permitted him to escape. But this case stands on a different footing. I believe the Postmaster General is in error in thinking that it was the Police Magistrate who sentenced him; my recollection is that it was the County Judge. If I am correctly informed this man committed a great number of offences; I fancy he must have committed forgeries by the score. What I am informed he did was deliberately to falsify the accounts of illiterate depositors falsify having deposits in the Post Office Savings Bank, that he did this for a series of years, that he picked out the illiterate depositors and availed himself of his position to make false entries in the books and false reports—the Postmaster General can correct me if I am overstating the case—in other words, he committed a whole series of offences of the gravest possible character. Now, it is quite possible that he was tried for only one.

Sir Richard Cartwright.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He was tried and convicted on several indictments. There are several convictions yet against him, but he was sentenced on only one conviction, and he is liable still to be sentenced on the others.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want to add to the man's punishment, but it does appear to me there is something seriously amiss—whether it comes under the purview of the Minister of Justice or not, except in the way of exercising the pardoning power-it appears to me there is something seriously amiss when we find a man of mature years—this was a man of 40—occupying a high position in the Kingston post office, and who was proved to have carried on the worst possible crimes in appropriating the money of these poor people for many years; and that this man should have been sentenced to but two years, while very young men who had given way to temptation, and were pilfering, money from letters, were sentenced for periods nearly three times as great. It appears to me that is contrary to all justice and morality, and is calculated to do great damage to the public at large. Whether the fault lies with the Police Magistrate here, or the Police Magistrate in Kingston, or with the Ontario Government, or in any other quarter, I am not prepared to say; but I am prepared to say that it is a scandal, in my judgment, that the greater criminal should escape with so very much lighter sentence than the younger and lesser criminals. I think it is a thing that the Minister of Justice might well take cognisance of.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E.I.) Of course we are not in a position to say anything with respect to a judgment passed by the Police Magistrate or the Superior Court judge on a conviction rendered before them. But I would like to know why it was that the other convictions were obtained and no sentence pronounced?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have no charge of the case at all. If in these cases there is a crime committed, and a case goes to trial, we generally ask some counsel to attend on behalf of the Department and assist the County Crown Attorney, unless the accused pleads guilty. I think myself it would be better that the severer sentence should be pronounced at once, instead of waiting for judgment on the other convictions.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Although I am as well disposed as any man to respect the decisions of judges, we must remember that we in the House of Commons are entitled to review even the proceedings of judges in certain respects; and with all respect to the legal profession, I must maintain my right. My attention has been called at various times to the extraordinary difference in sentences inflicted by different judges. I find that one judge will sentence for three years where another will sentence for 14 years, and the punishment depends on the temper and views of the particular judge very often much more than on the guilt of the prisoner. Of course, I am not prepared to speak of all cases, but I think the Minister will find in this case I am quite correct, and that the criminals who might well have been let off with lesser sentences have received far heavier sentences than were inflicted in this particular case. I am not going to interfere with the prerogative of the Crown; I am not going to say that it is necessary to reduce the sentences that have been inflicted on these people, but I think there is a very great anomaly and injury inflicted when cases like these come injury inflicted when cases like these come up. These three persons are now serving terms in Kingston Penitentiary together, and I must say it appears to me that the case of the man Burns is vastly more aggravated than the cases of those young men to whom the Postmaster General alluded, and who, I believe, only committed one or two offences running over a very short period, whereas this offence runs over many years. They got five years, and Burns got two years.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think the hon. member distinctly heard my remarks. not at all finding fault with what the hon. gentleman said by way of criticism of the sentences in these cases. On the contrary, I said it would have been better in the grosser cases of that kind that a severer sentence should have been pronounced on the first conviction, or else that several consecutive sentences should have been pronounced, and if there were any mitigating circumstances they should have been left to the executive, because of the public impression produced when a severe sentence is pronounced in a very aggravated case like The cases of the young men are those of postal clerks detected in robbery. They were only convicted on one offence; but, generally speaking, it is found that they have been carrying on the practice for a long time and only have been detected in a comparatively trifling case. The law fixes in such case a minimum of 5 years imprisonment, and that is why the sentence was 5 years in their case; and I have been unable of late years to recommend a mitigation in any case where postal clerks have been guilty of robbery, because the offence has become very prevalent, notwithstanding the severity of sentences. In regard to the disparity of sentences in general: that strikes the public mind everywhere, but in this country no more than in others. We have a very great number of these cases to review in my Department. I think on an average about 1,500 applications per year are made for executive elemency, and in such applications any disparity of the sentences has always been observed, and in many cases when long sentences appear to have been inflicted for trifling offences an impression has been made on the public mind that some sentences are too severe. generally been found that these are by no means the first offences against the law. 1311

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I wish to guard myself against a misapprehension that I am opposed to the view that a member of Parliament has a right to discuss in this House any sentence passed by any judge in the land. I must distinctly disavow any such intention. I believe that every member has a right to call for the evidence and to discuss before Parliament any sentence which may have been pronounced, but I was only guarding myself against expressing an opinion on a collateral matter when I had not the evidence before me.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I desire to bring before the Postmaster General an occurrence of two years ago. A letter was sent by the Bank of Commerce to a lady, containing a large sum of money, and the money was extracted from the letter. After a delay of six or eight months, restitution was made by the Postmaster at Palmerston, but a balance of from $20 to $30 was kept back. I should like to hear an explanation from the Postmaster General.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know any of the circumstances of the case. The Government in no case refunds money lost in the mails, but if it is through the fault of an officer, such officer is made to recoup the amount, but if the money has been feloniously abstracted, the party will be arrested. I do not understand why any portion of the money should have been kept back.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the rule in regard to taking security from postmasters who receive public moneys?

Mr. HAGGART. A very small amount is taken as security; in Burns' case it was only $400.

Mr. MULOCK. No doubt the Postmaster General is simply following the example of his predecessors, but he will be open to criticism if he does not obtain greater security.

Harbors and Rivers—General repairs and improvements $7,000

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will any of this amount be expended in removing the bar at the river Thames? Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to finish the work of the year the work of the year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is a very important matter and it is important inasmuch as the contract was commenced last year and only half completed. It only requires about $4,000 more to complete the work. Vessels are now moving in that river and it is impossible to get them in or out without shifting the cargo. Might I ask if it is the intention of the Minister to go on with the work, as he stated he intended, to a deputation a short time ago? I suppose we may expect a sum in the supplementary Estimates providing for that work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say yes or no. The Estimates will be down in a very short time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You promised the deputation that you would go on with the work.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I stated to the deputation that I would examine the matter and then lay the whole thing before my colleagues. If my colleagues are not willing to go on with the work, then, I cannot help it.

Compensation to M. M. Peloquin and Phaneuf for the loss of their barge at Nicolet, &c......

4168

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It appears to me that if the Government give the idea that they are responsible for the loss of property where navigation is obstructed, they are establishing a dangerous precedent. It is difficult to say what claims may arise from it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The work was under construction and there was a buoy put to indicate the obstruction, but it appears the water rose above the buoy, and, as it was a dark night when this barge came along, she was wrecked. This was the only means of living for these poor men. Their claim was for $1,200 and the matter was referred to the Minister of Justice, who said that in a strictly legal sense they could not recover, but as it was a question of equity, the House might grant a sum if it were laid before Parliament.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who drove in the piles there that caused the obstruction?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was the contractor, but he had taken the necessary precaution.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not object to the amount, but it appears to me you are establishing a very dangerous principle.

Mr. MULOCK. Do you not require a contractor to give security that he will not construct his work in such a way as would endanger property or life?

Sir HEČTOR LANGEVIN. That has never been done. It is the first time an accident of this kind has occurred.

Mr. MULOCK. You have been fortunate so far, but this suggests the propriety for doing something to make the contractor cautious. Today, you have got your experience at a very small cost, but to-morrow it may be some large vessel which would be lost, and the owner may urge his claim here and may argue that the Government accepted the responsibility.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will take a note of that.

Amount required to supplement that voted by the British Association for the advancement of science for the purpose of making an investigation into the physical character, languages, and industrial and social condition of the North-West tribes of the Dominion of Canada, and especially the tribes and bands of British Columbia.

Mr. FOSTER. This is one of the little things in which we encourage research into past records. We gave $750 last year to this society in furtherance of this object. This year they made a demand for $1,000, and we came to the conclusion to give them $500 for the researches they are to carry on this year, and then to stop the grant.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I am glad to hear the latter part of the statement.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What was the amount we carried the other evening?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It was a small item of $250 which we expended two years ago; but the debate took place on this item. I promised to bring down a return, and in looking over the papers to-day I found that I had more information than I thought

Mr. Jones (Halifax).

I had. It is being copied, and I will lay it on the Table when it is finished.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I know nothing that will do more harm to the country than the knowledge of this fact, that we have been obliged to spend $31,000 to purchase seed grain for the North-West. The general impression is that that country is our granary, from which we are going to get our food supply; that it is very fertile; that while there is failure of crops in Dakota, there is none in our Territories. That is accepted as true in the Province I come from. I must say that on seeing the Government taking $31,000 to purchase seed grain for the North-West, my faith in the country has been very much shaken.

Resolutions reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.12 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 30th April, 1890.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. MULOCK moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 145) to amend the Militia Act. He said: The object of the Bill is to repeal section 37 of the Militia Act, which is as follows:—

"There shall be appointed an officer who holds the rank of colonel, or superior thereto, in Her Majesty's regular army, who shall be charged under the orders of Her Majesty with the military command and discipline of the militia, and who, while he holds such appointment, shall have the rank of Major-General in the militia, and shall be paid at the rate of $4,000 per annum in full of all pay and allowances."

The Bill which I ask permission to introduce proposes that this section shall be amended by making eligible to the position of officer commanding Her Majesty's forces in Canada, any person holding the rank of lieutenant-colonel in the active militia in Canada, or superior rank, as well as those made eligible under the clause in question. I find that this section did not originate in 1886; but, tracing it back, it appears that it is substantially a continuation of the principle embodied in the Militia Act passed in the first Session after Confederation. I have not before me the Act to which I now refer, but it provided that the officer commanding the forces in Canada must be a person who has been educated to the military profession, and holds the rank at least of a field officer in Her Majesty's regular army. That is the idea we find embodied in the Militia Act of 1867. That was about twenty-three years ago. At that time there may have been very good reasons for that provision in the Act, and I am not finding fault with what has taken place; but I desire to suggest to the House whether the time has not arrived when we can emancipate Canadian officers to the extent of placing them on an equal footing with their fellow comrades in arms in the regular army.

changes have taken place in the management of our force, and I trust they have been favorable to its development and efficiency. While at the time of Confederation we expended about $750,000 a year on the force, the expenditure has been increased until to-day it amounts to $1,250,000; so it may be said that since Confederation we have expended in promoting the efficiency of the force about A portion of that money may have $20,000,000. been expended in pure maintenance, whereby perhaps no very great improvement has been effected in the service, but a large portion has been expended in establishing permanent corps and schools for military education. For example, we have the military college at Kingston, maintained at an expenditure of about $60,000 a year; we have various permanent corps, such as the cavalry schools in Quebec, Batteries "A," "B" and "C," mounted infantry, and we have other schools of a permanent character which I trust have made their impression on the military men of the country; and we have, therefore, to-day a class of men in connection with the active militia of Canada infinitely better qualified to perform the duties attaching to the office in question than there wereat the time of the passage of the Act, the spirit of which I desire to have changed. There are many reasons, apart from these I have referred to, which would justify this House in at least making Canadian officers eligible for the position. It is not an encouraging thing to the men of our force, who choose to make sacrifices, personal and pecuniary, for the good of the country, that they should find upon the Statute-books a law declaring that under no circumstances can they attain to the highest position in the force. I am not contending for nativism alone, I am contending for the freedom for the people of Canada to be allowed a fair field and no favor, no discrimination, and no disqualification. If I sought for a precedent or justification for this, I might, perhaps, evoke the principle of the National Policy and ask to have it applied in a spirit so as to give protection to native ability. However, Sir, on this question I am in favor of free trade, and I am only asking to have the Canadian officers put upon the same plane, no higher and no lower, than those of the regular army. I believe—and I express this opinion with very great deference to those who may, perhaps, know better-that for very many reasons, the office in question can be much better filled were the incumbent one who has grown up with our system, who is familiar with the spirit of the country, and who knows the requirements of our people, than by a person from the British Army, which we all respect, but who, perhaps, is unfamiliar with the spirit of the Canadian people. I say, that for this and for other reasons, I conceive that the public service might be promoted by declaring that the highest military gift in the hands of the Governor General might be placed within the reach of those who choose to take an interest in holding together and building up the system of citizen soldiery that we are endeavoring to establish in this country. As a rule, the commander in question will have nothing to do with carrying on military operations in the full sense of the word. He may have to do with the suppression of an internal disturbance, and acting as a sort of police officer with the aid of the force, but I trust it will be long before he will be called on to discharge more serious duties. I, therefore, would urge upon the Government the propriety of their yielding—perhaps not this Session, but at an early date—to the principle involved in this Bill. They may not see fit to take charge of this Bill, and put it upon the Government Orders; but, if they do, I will cheerfully assent. If they prefer that it shall stand over until another Session, so that there may be full opportunity both within and without the House, to have the principle considered, well and good; but, at all events, I take the liberty now of asking the House to allow me to present this Bill, trusting that it will receive a favorable reception, and ultimately become law.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The question which the hon. gentleman has just submitted to the House, by the Bill which he wishes to introduce, is one of very great importance, and I am quite sure, as I understood from his speech, that he did not expect that such an important question could be dealt with at this late period of the Session. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it is a question which must receive the attention of the Government between this period and the meeting of Parliament again, next Session.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am delighted to hear the assent which is given by the Minister of Militia to the proposition of my hon. friend from York (Mr. I think it is one of the stains upon the Statute-book of this country, that while our militiamen devote their time and money to an organisation for the defence of the country, it should be required such a slur should be placed upon them as to maintain a law which provides that not one of them is fit for the position of commander of our forces. When I look on my left hand, and on my right hand, and in front of me, I see gallant colonels abounding in this House. In the Chair of this House, presiding over its deliberations, I find a gentleman who occupies the distinguished position of one in command of Her Majesty's regi-While approving of the Bill, and trusting ments. that the hon. Minister will take the matter in charge next Session, I hope that he will take good care that that part of the law which prevents any man having a seat in this House, who enjoys the emoluments of office, except in certain cases, will not apply to any one who may be chosen to occupy the position of commander of our forces. I see delight beaming in the face of my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) at this suggestion, for he may be a candidate for the office. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you will be a candidate for the office, and I am quite certain that Colonel Amyot will be a candidate for the position of Commander-in-Chief; but, at all events, I would much rather see one of ourselves in command, than that we should have to go abroad to import a man for the position, and that a law should be on our Statute-books providing that none of our militia officers are fit for the office. It is time that we should depend more on ourselves in this country and go less abroad for assistance and advice.

Mr. BLAKE. Although the Bill is not disposed of, it is not, perhaps, wholly remote to enquire, when the report of the Committee in reference to the present Commander of the Forces, will be printed, so that we can deal with that question?

Mr. DAVIN. Speaking for the North-West, I consider that the principle contained in the Bill of my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock), will meet with acceptance. I have not seen the Bill, but as I understand it, it will not be exclusive of British officers. It will merely be, as my friend from York (Mr. Mulock) says, a fair field for all, and no favor. We have certainly come to a period of development in Canada, military and otherwise, when any position short of that of Governor General, should be opened to all Canadians.

Mr. MITCHELL. We will come to that soon.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I do not know anything about that. I have much pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in supporting the spirit of my hon. friend's remark, and I congratulate the Minister of Militia on practically——

Mr. MITCHELL. Accepting the Bill.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not know whether he has accepted it or not, but I congratulate him on the spirit in which he has received the proposition.

Mr. LISTER. Germane to this, is the question as to the printing of the report of the committee, in reference to the conduct of General Middleton in the North-West. That investigation closed some days ago, and the report of the committee was presented to this House by the chairman. structions were given that the proceedings and the report should be printed at once for the use of hon. members in this House, so as to aid them in determining such steps as they might consider proper, but I may say to the Government that the report is not yet before the House; and I say, furthermore, that if this House closes without considering that report as it ought to do, it will be most discreditable to the Government and to the House generally. I desire to press upon the Government the necessity of urging upon the proper Department the propriety of having these proceedings brought down at once, so that the matter may be considered by the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SEIZURE OF TOBACCO.

Mr. DAVIN asked, Whether the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue has instructed any person. or persons, to proceed to the North-West to seize all tobacco not in stamped boxes? Whether, as a fact, such tobacco has not all paid the requisite duty? To what points in the North-West such persons have been sent; if sent they have been?

Mr. BOWELL. A preventive officer of the Inland Revenue Department was instructed to proceed to the North-West, with a view to determine what truth there was in certain reports which reached the Department that spirits were being illicitly manufactured there. As an officer of the Revenue he would doubtless seize any tobacco of foreign manufacture smuggled into the Dominion. Inasmuch as it is only in compliance with Inland Revenue regulations as to stamping and preserving the identity of original packages that the fact of tobacco having paid duty can be satisfactorily established, it is quite possible that some inconvenience may arise to those who, without fraudulent intent, have ignored the requirements of the law. No report having been received from the officer, it is impossible to state what points he has visited or may visit. The main object of his visit, however, is the prevention of illicit distillation reported to be prevalent.

Mr. Davin.

RIVER McKINACK WORKS.

Mr. STE. MARIE asked, 1st. How many days did Mr. Léandre Hould work, in 1889, as foreman of works, River McKinack? 2nd. How many days work were performed by the day laborers at that work? 3rd. How much was paid for the board of men employed thereat? 4th. What has been the total cost of the work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the first question of the hon. member, 45 days; 2nd, 174 days; 3rd, 35 cents per day: 4th, $513.

TWO-ROWED BARLEY.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron) asked, Whether the Government has, through Professor Saunders, made any arrangements with farmers to grow two-rowed barley, with the understanding that the Government will purchase the crop when grown? If arrangements have been made, did the Government furnish the seed or did the farmers pay for it? If so, how many acres are arranged for? Is there any arrangement as to price? If so, what price is to be paid? Will the Government purchase two-rowed barley from any other parties who bought their seed from the Government?

Mr. CARLING. The director of the experimental farms made arrangements with George E. Lewis, of Winona, to grow four acres of Carter's "Prize Prolific" barley; with C. P. Carpenter, of Winona, three acres; with John Weir, of West Flamboro', five acres; or twelve acres in all. The agreement with each of these farmers was to supply them with sufficient seed, without charge, and to take the crop, delivered at nearest railway station, at 75 cents per bushel of 48 pounds, they to have the privilege of retaining one-fourth of the crop, if they so desire, for their own use. These farmers have agreed to thoroughly prepare their land for this crop, and to carefully handle and thresh the grain, so as to keep the seed pure and clean. This arrangement has been made with the object of ensuring a sufficient supply for the distribution next year through the mail, in 3-lb. bags, to farmers in different parts of the Dominion. district referred to was chosen for this purpose for the reason that some of the finest samples grown by farmers from last year's distribution were produced in that locality, and because it is well known that the climate there is favorable for the growth of good barley. It is not proposed to make any further arrangements of this sort, as it is believed that the crop from twelve acres, supplemented by the barley which will be grown on the experimental farms, will afford an ample supply for the purpose named.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. First Minister when it is the Government's intention to bring down the subsidies for railroads. One of the railroads talked of as likely to get a subsidy is one of great interest to my constituents, running from Edmundston to Moncton. I am centantly receiving letters of enquiry about it, and I would like to know whether it is likely to receive a subsidy or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot answer that question. When the Estimates are brought down, they will speak for themselves. We will bring them down early next week.

SUPPLY-JESUITS' ESTATES ACT.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before you leave the Chair, Sir. I wish to place in your hands a motion of which I gave notice a few days ago, with a few slight variations in the verbiage, with reference to submitting the Jesuits' Estates Act to the Supreme Court of Canada. It may be claimed that this question ought to be allowed to rest; and perhaps, if I had consulted my own wishes and feelings in the matter, I should not have moved on this occasion. However, it will be remembered that last Session I attempted to make this motion. It is not necessary to refer to the circumstances connected with that attempt; but I was assailed during the summer by the organ of the Government with the charge of insincerity, that paper making the assertion that I had not designed to make the motion. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) also appeared in the press with a characteristic letter, stating that I could have made the motion before, and did not intend to make it. I think it is proper the motion should be made, because I believe the Government, in the course they have taken in referring this matter to the law officers of the Crown, and in the manner the reference was made, did not take a step calculated to allay the public excitement which exists, but gave reason for an intensification of the feeling of dissatisfaction. The reference made to Sir Richard Webster and Sir Edward Clark was upon the statement of the case, which may fairly and properly be termed an ex parte statement; and the opinion of the law officers was not, so far as I am able to see, given upon a full possession of the facts. I do not find in this return the Bill itself. I do find the memorandum of the Minister of Justice discusses the provisions and terms of the Bill, but the Bill itself, so far as I am able to see, was not in the hands of the law officers of the Crown. schedule of the papers submitted shows that the principal matter is a memorandum of the hon. the Minister of Justice, certain petitions from the Evangelical Alliance and from other sources, and the answer of His Excellency the Governor General to the delegation which waited upon him at Quebec. We have an opinion given by the law officers of the Crown, but that opinion is expressly based, by the terms of their finding, upon the memorandum of the hon. Minister of Justice. It does not seem that any other evidence was furnished or any other authority consulted in the matter. The case rests, then, merely upon this memorandum and upon the petitions forwarded to the Imperial authorities, these petitions having reference, not to the question of constitutionality, except incidentally, but to the question of the propriety of disallowance. There is no reference to any of the old English statutes, except in a general sense, save in one of these petitions from certain citizens of Quebec, which does refer to the 1st Elizabeth, chapter 1. This reference cannot be termed a This reference cannot be termed a vestigation. No evidence was furjudicial investigation. nished, there was no trial, there was no argu-the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, but ment, and no counsel was heard. fact, at least so it seems to me, as a layman, simply an opinion given by two law officers, not sitting in their capacity as a court, but as individuals, based upon the statement of the defendant's attorney, and on that alone. This, I do not think, Sir, can be considered a fair and proper reference by the Government. We have in our Statute-books a provision for cases of this kind. We have in the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, Revised Statutes 135, section 7, this provi-

"The Governor General in Council may refer to the Supreme Court for hearing or consideration any matter which he thinks fit to refer to the court, and the court shall thereupon hear or consider the same and certify their opinion thereon to the Governor in Council, provided that any judge or judges of the court who differ from the opinion of the majority may, in like manner, certify as to their opinion or opinions to the Governor in Council."

Here is the proper constitutional method of arriving at a decision upon such cases, the mode is provided by our own laws, and to ignore the Supreme Court in this matter by having recourse to the law officers of the Crown was most derogatory to the dignity of the Supreme Court. The step taken by the Governor General, for whose action the Ministers are responsible, was, I submit, an improper one, taken in disregard of the functions of the court.

The memorandum of the Minister of Justice proceeds, in the first place, to meet the objections raised; and the first objection is that the statute endows from the public funds of the Province a religious organisation and creates inequalities among religious denominations. This objection is met-ably met, of course—in the memorandum of the hon. Minister. The second objection is that the statute recognises the right of the Pope to claim that his consent was necessary to empower the Provincial Legislature to dispose of part of the public domain. The third objection is that the statute diverts assets from the educational purposes to which by law they had been devoted. And the fourth objection is that the sanction of the Province of Ontario, which was necessary to the disposition made by the statute of the estates in question, was not obtained. In the statement made in the memorandum meeting these objections and attempting to set them aside, is one with reference to the claim that the Provinces may make a union of Church and State. It is asserted that they may, and that they may endow religious bodies, and may do so unequally. The memorandum next proceeds to assert that it is impossible to test the validity of such legislation. The memorandum then proceeds to state that the Act merely restores to a society a portion of the property of which it was deprived without compensation. The next point is that the Pope only acted as umpire for two claimants, to conduct the negotiations for both, and strives to explain away the character of the interference of a foreign power. Again, it attempts to explain and set aside the force of that phrase used in the Bill: "Binding only so far as ratified by the Pope," by saying that the recognition of the right of the Pope to decide in a matter of public domain, does not form any necesary part of the statute; and the hon. Minister, in conclusion, says that the Government have been asked to test the validity of the Act in the courts and especially before declined to recommend an appropriation for such a purpose as they did not feel called upon to enter into litigation; that they considered the authority to pass the Act was clear, and that, furthermore, in contesting the Act they would be defying the opinion of the House. This is tantamount to taking the position that if this House agrees upon the character of an Act, or if the responsible officers of His Excellency agree as to the character of an Act, then there is no necessity for any reference. If the House, forsooth, are satisfied, and if the Ministers are satisfied that there is no cause for reference, then no reference should be made. I venture to say there are not in this House twenty gentlemen who have that reputation as jurists which would enable them to give an opinion on a constitutional measure that the country would unhesitatingly accept. There are not twenty men in this House who would be considered eligible to seats upon the bench of the Supreme Court, and in the Ministry themselves there are very few. I see the Minister of Customs, I see the Minister of Public Works, I see the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of Militia. I do not see the Minister of Inland Revenue in his place, and I must say I do not suppose any one would claim that any one of these gentlemen is a jurist of a character so high as to render it proper to trust to him the decision of a nice constitutional question. There are probably not more than one-third of the Ministers of the Crown in whose opinion on a matter of this kind the country would have any confidence whatever; and yet the conclusion arrived at in this memorandum is that, as the House has pronounced upon this question of constitutionality, and as the Ministers are satisfied, there is no necessity, for sooth, for any reference. The memorandum further says that the Government do not hold the view that the Jesuits should have been denied corporate rights. Well, that is a question upon which there is great difference of opinion. That is one of the questions involved in this case. It is a question which ought to be settled by the highest judicial tribunals of the country, and is not one, in my opinion, in which the Government are warranted in saying that their opinion should govern. In fact, the memorandum can scarcely be considered as other than a special plea. It is the plea of the Government in this matter justifying their course. It is made with consummate ability, but it is not by any means all of the statements and arguments that ought to have been before the court upon which devolved the duty of deciding in this matter. opinion of the law officers is, in fact, an ex parte decision, made upon the statement of the counsel for the defendant, without due precautions having been taken to place in the hands of these law officers all the circumstances and facts bearing upon the case. The deliverance of the law officers of the Crown was exactly what might have been expected from the character of the memorandum. I have read the memorandum over very carefully, and I fail to see how any different opinion could be arrived at from the premises as laid down by the Minister of The reply was, that in their opinion the Act was constitutional, that it was intra vires of the Legislature of Quebec, that His Excellency was not warranted to interfere in the matter, and that the Act should be allowed to become law.

The obvious deductions to be drawn from this memorandum and return are, that this refer the British North America Act, and for the ence was made without the Ministry having desired to make it. Although they are responsible for the reference, although it is quite constitutional and legal that it should be attri-buted to the advisers of the Crown, yet my inference is, that His Excellency the Governor General was not satisfied in regard to the matter in view of the agitation which had arisen, and that, knowing it was such a delicate matter, he desired to be fortified in his view and in the view taken by the Ministers, and I believe it was at his request that the reference was made to the law officers. It is needless to say that this memorandum is on all fours with the speech made by the hon. Minister of Justice in the House, with the speech of the Governor General to the delegation which waited upon him in Quebec, and with the answer of the hon. Minister of Justice to Mr. Graham. The law officers of the Crown were evidently averse to interference with this matter. They did not want to meddle with They took the position that it was a subject which the Dominion authorities should deal with themselves, and, acting upon the positions which had been taken, upon the statements which had been made, and upon the memorandum of the hon. Minister of Justice, they arrived at the decision to which I have already referred. So far as the petitions presented to those hon. gentlemen were concerned, the question of constitutionality was not referred to except incidentally. The demand for disallowance and the demand for reference were both denied. It is well known that a great deal of excitement existed in the country on this subject, not only when the House took action in the matter, but during the spring and summer before His Excellency answered the deputation which waited upon him in August. It was the opinion of many people that this Bill infringed upon the Queen's prerogative, and in an unconstitutional manner. In the minds of thousands of people, the Bill was considered to be undoubtedly unconstitutional, and the general belief was that the proper tribunal to which it should have been referred was the Supreme Court of this country; that it should not have been referred and acted upon in a clandestine manner, if I may be allowed to say so, by the law officers of the Crown, but that everything appertaining to it should have been open and public, and that those who had objections to urge should have had opportunities to urge those objections before the court adjudicating upon the question.

Mr. CHARLTON.

I am unable to see why the Government should have been averse to this reference. I would have supposed that they would have been anxious to fortify their position by a reference to the highest tribunal in Canada, and it appears to me that there is something singular in the hesitation of the Government to submit this case to the Supreme Court of Canada. As to the action of the members of the Government in refusing disallowance, they certainly were not debarred by any considerations as to their want of power in the premises. They had repeatedly disallowed the Acts of Provincial Legislatures. They had taken the position, which was undoubtedly a constitutional position, that they had the right to disallow Provincial measures. It cannot be doubted that that right exists for the Imperial Government under the 56th section of Dominion Government under the 90th section of the British North America Act. There can be no question as to the power of the Govern-ment to exercise that function of disallowance, Governthough of course they are responsible to the people for its proper exercise. In the debates in this House and in the course of reasoning by which opinions were arrived at in this House, there was some difference of opinion as to the motives on which members acted. Of course, members on the Conservative side had no doubt as to the right of the Government to disallow the Act, because they had repeatedly sustained the Government in the exercise of that power in regard to Provincial Acts; but unquestionably the case was different in regard to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who then sustained the Government. They took the ground that the power of disallowance of Provincial Acts had been used by this Government unjustly, and that it should not be used except where the general interests were involved or in cases of unconstitutionality. At any rate the Government, after having refused to disallow this Act, were not justified in refusing to test its constitutionality before the proper tribunal. I might dilate at length on the reasons which led to the introduction of this power of disallowance into the articles of Confederation, but it is not necessary. The Government, having refused to exercise this power in this instance, took refuge behind the principle of Provincial rights which has been asserted on this side of the House. Having disallowed the Rivers and Streams Bill of Ontario and the Manitoba Railway legislation, and then, having arrived at the consideration of an Act which certain influences pressed them not to disallow, they took refuge behind this principle of Provincial rights, and they now stand where their opponents stood before.

The claim that expense would follow this reference is set at rest by the fact that the expenses were tendered to the Government by Mr. Graham of Montreal. I have in my hand the Toronto Empire, in which the answer of the Minister of Justice to Mr. Graham is published. It was dated on the 10th July and published in August.
The first thing given in this is a minute of the Privy Council:

Privy Council:

"The Committee of the Privy Council have had under consideration the petition of Mr. Hugh Graham, of the city of Montreal, requesting Your Ecellency to refer to the Supreme Court of Canada for hearing and consideration, an enquiry as to the constitutionality of the Acts of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec, intituled, respectively: An Act to incorporate the Society of Jesus' 50 Vic., chap. 38) and 'An Act respecting the settlement of the Jesuits' Estates' (51 Vic., chap. 13).

"The Minister of Justice, to whom the said petition was referred, has submitted a report thereon, dated 10th day of July, 1889, stating that, for the reasons therein set forth, the request of the petitioner is not one that can properly be complied with, and recommends that the petitioner be so informed, and that the certified cheque on the Bank of Montreal, payable to the order of the Deputy Minister of Finance, for the sum of $5,000, deposited by Mr. Graham as an evidence of his willingness to bear the necessary costs of the Government in the matter of such reference, be returned to him.

"The Committee concur in the said report and the recommendations therein contained, and submit the same for Your Excellency's approval, and they advise that the substance thereof to the petitioner."

Then follows the letter of the Minister of Justice,

Then follows the letter of the Minister of Justice, to Mr. Graham, and one of the positions taken be inappropriate in connection with the disin this letter by the Minister of Justice is that cussion of this question, indeed I think it is neces-

Mr. Graham had applied to the wrong party for redress, that he ought to have gone to the Attorney General of his own Province. He says:

"The petitioner has, furthermore, an opportunity of calling on the Attorney General of his Province to take legal proceedings."

Well, Sir, I do not think that gentleman's chance to get redress from the Attorney General of the Province that had passed the Act, was a very great one. It was recommending Mr. Graham to resort to an expedient in which he was foredoomed to failure, in which he, as well as the Minister of Justice knew that the result would be failure. The Minister of Justice further says:

"The provision which confers that power on Your Excellency was undoubtedly intended to enable the Governor General to obtain an opinion from the Supreme Court of Canada in relation to some order which his Government might be called on to make, or in relation to some action which his officers might be called on to door to the conference of the conferenc some action which his officers might be called on to adopt. For the guidance of Your Excellency, or of your officers, the provision may be a valuable one, but, used as a means the provision may be a valuable one, but, used as a means of solving legal problems in which the Governor of Canada has no direct concern, however much they may interest or excite the public mind, as the petitioners seem to propose or used to compel an adjudication on private rights and interests, it would be perverted, the undersigned humbly submits, into an arbitrary and inquisitorial power anticipating and interfacing with the arbitrary power, anticipating and interfering with the ordinary course of justice."

And again the Minister informs Mr. Graham that:

"The Act respecting the settlement of the Jesuits' Estates was assented to by the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec, on the 12th day of July, 1888, was transmitted to the Secretary of State of Canada on the 6th day of August, 1888, and on the 19th day of January, 1889, the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec was notified that it would be left to its operation."

Why this step, Mr. Speaker? Parliament was to meet in a few days, yet, on the 19th January, in anticipation of the meeting of Parliament, while the excitement in the country with regard to this matter was rising higher and higher, the Government took the step of announcing to the public that this Bill would be allowed to take its course. In the conclusion of his letter to Mr. Graham, the Minister of Justice says:

"The undersigned would remind Your Excellency that as regards the Act for the settlement of the Jesuits' Estates, a resolution in favor of disallowing the same was presented to the House of Commons of Canada during the last Session of Parliament, and was, after a thorough discussion, negatived by an overwhelming majority. The will of the House of Commons that the Act should be left to its operation in the usual way, as being probably within the powers of the Legislature which passed it, was thereby unequivocally expressed. The attempt to attack the Act in the courts, by the use of Your Excellency's power to seek advice from the Supreme Court of Canada, would not, in the opinion of the undersigned, be consistent with the deference which should be shown to that branch of Parliament, and would not be justifiable on the ground that the doubts which had then been asserted continued to be expressed by some who do not acquiesce in the conclusion The undersigned would remind Your Excellency that pressed by some who do not acquiesce in the conclusion then arrived at."

Sir, this position is not a tenable one. We can never have a case where there has been a decided expression of opinion of this House as to its constitutionality, in which that fact would not close the door to a legal decision, if that position is a correct one. Not only was there no reason for submitting the Jesuits' Estates Bill, if the position is correct, but there can be no reason, in the future, for submitting any Bill upon which this House has in an emphatic manner given a decision.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may, perhaps, not be inappropriate in connection with the dissary, to make a brief enquiry as to the basis of the popular belief in the unconstitutionality of this Bill. Was that belief a baseless one? Was there no foundation for that belief, or was there some tangible reason for entertaining that opinion? In the memorandum of the Minister of Justice in reference to this matter, on page 25, I find that he says

"It is contended by those who sustain this view, that, in consequence of the early English statutes against the Jesuits, it is impossible for a Colonial Legislature to give Jesuits, it is impossible for a Colonial Legislature to give members of that society corporate rights, or even to recognise their presence in the country. This view is not held by His Excellency's advisers. Considering the large powers of self-government which have been conferred from time to time on the various colonies. Canada included, and especially considering the powers given by the British North America Act of 1867, it is believed by His Excellency's Government that it is clearly within the power of any one of the Legislatures to pass statutes on such a subject, even though they may conflict with the early statutes relating to religion or in any way connected with religion."

Now, in this extract the inference that the Minister of Justice would lead us to draw, in my opinion, is that the statutes referred to were ancient ones, were very early statutes, and the inference I would draw would be that they dated as far back, perhaps, as Richard II or Henry VIII. But the truth is that the statute upon which objection to the incorporation Act is based, is a statute of comparatively recent date, as late as the year 1829. With reference to the power of a Provincial Legislature to override Dominion statutes, as a layman, I can hardly reconcile that position with the 129th section of the British North America Act, which is as follows :-

"Except as otherwise provided by this Act, all laws in force in Canada, Nova Scotia or New Brunswick at the Union, and all courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and all legal commissioners, powers and anthorities, and all legal commissioners, powers and anthorities, and all officers, judicial, administrative and ministerial, existing therein at the Union, shall continue in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, respectively, as if the Union had not been made; subject, nevertheless (except with respect to such as are enacted by or exist under Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain or of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland), to be repealed, abolished or altered by the Parlia Ireland), to be repealed, abolished or altered by the Parliament of Canada, or by the Legislature of the respective Provinces, according to the authority of the Parliament or of that Legislature under this Act."

"Subject to be repealed except as regards Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain or of Great Britain and Ireland." I cannot reconcile with the terms of that clause the assertion of the Minister of Justice, that the Legislatures of the Provinces can override Imperial enactments by their own legislation.

Now, as I consider it necessary to lay down the premises on which I proceed, I will read some of the sections of the Catholic Emancipation Act of 1829, relating to the question under discussion. find in the 28th section of that Act, chapter 7, 10 George IV, the following :-

"And, whereas Jesuits, and members of other religious orders, communities or societies of the Church of Rome, bound by monastic or religious vows, are resident within the United Kingdom; and it it expedient to make provision for the gradual suppression and final prohibition of the gradual suppression and final prohibition of the same therein-

It goes on to make provisions-I do not know as it is necessary for me to read them; I will have them incorporated in the Hansard if the Minister will

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I hope the hon. gentleman will read everything he wants to have published in the Hausard.

Mr. Charlton.

Mr. CHARLTON. I will have great pleasure in doing so, but I desired to save the time of the House.—

"be it therefore enacted that every Jesuit, and every member of any other religious order, community, or society of the Church of Rome, bound by monastic or religious vows, who at the time of the commencement of this Act shall be within the United Kingdom, shall within six calendar months after the commencement of this Act, deliver to the clerk of the peace of the county or place where such persons shall reside, or to his deputy, a notice or statement, in the form and containing the particulars required to be set forth in the schedule to this Act annexed; which notice or statement such clerk of the peace or his deputy shall preserve and register amongst the records of such county or place, without any fee, and shall forthwith transmit a copy of such notice or statement to the Chief Secretary of the Lord Lieutenant, or other Chief Governor or Governors of Ireland, if such persons shall reside in Ireland, or if in Great Britain to one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State; and in case any person shall offend in the premises, he shall forfeit and pay to His Majesty, for every calendar month during which he shall remain in the United Kingdom without having delivered such notice or statement as hereinbefore required, the sum of fifty nounds." statement as hereinbefore required, the sum of fifty pounds."

Section 29 says:

"And be it further enacted, that if any Jesuit, or memhand be intriner enacted, that it any desire, of member of any such religious order, community or society, as aforesaid, shall, after the commencement of this Act, come into this realm, he shall be deemed and taken to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be sentenced and ordered to be banished from the United Kingdom for the term of his natural life."

Section 30 savs:

"Provided always, and be it further enacted, that in ase any natural-born subject of this realm being at the time of the commencement of said Act or other member of any such religious order, community or society as aforesaid, shall, at the time of the commencement of this aforesaid, shall, at the time of the commencement of this Act, be out of the realm, it shall be lawful for such person to return or to come into this realm, and upon such return or coming into the realm he is thereby required within the space of six calendar months after his first returning or coming into the United Kingdom, to deliver such notice or statement to the clerk of the peace of the county or place where he shall reside, or his deputy, for the purpose of being so registered, and transmitted as hereinbefore directed; and in case any such person shall neglect or refuse to do so he shall for such offence forfeit and nay to His Majesty for every calendar month during and pay to His Majesty for every calendar month during which he shall remain in the United Kingdom without having delivered such notice or statement, the sum of fifty pounds."

Section 31 says:

" Provided also, and be it further enacted, that, not withstanding any time hereinbefore contained, it shall be lawful for any one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State being such a Protestant by a license in writing signed by him, to grant permission to any Jesuit. or member of any religious order or society as aforesaid, to come into the United Kingdom and to remain therein for such period as the said Secretary of State shall think proper, not exceeding in any case the space of six calendar worths a ward is shall be a key before the state of the Management of proper, not exceeding in any case the space of six calendar months; and it shall also be lawful for any of His Marjesty's principal Secretaries of State to revoke any license so granted before the expiration mentioned therein if he shall so think fit; if any such person to whom such license shall have been granted shall not depart from the United Kingdom within twenty days of the expiration of the time mentioned in such license, or if such license shall have been revoked, then within twenty days after notice of such revocation shall have been given to him, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, and being thereof lawfully conviced, shall be sentenced to be banished from the United Kingdom from the term of his natural life."

Section 33 says:

"And be it further enacted, that in case any Jesuit, And be it further enacted, that in case any Jesus, or member of any such religious order, community or society aforesaid, shall, after the commencement of this Act, within any part of the United Kingdom, admit any person to become a regular ecclesiastic, or brother, or member of any such religious order, community or society, or to be adding or consenting thereto, or shall administer, or cause to be administered, or be assisting in the administering, or taking any oath, vow, or engagement purporting or intending to bind the person taking the same to the rules, ordinances or ceremonies of such religious order, community or society; every person offending in the premises, in England or Ireland, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor."

Section 34 says:

"And be it further enacted, that in case any person shall, after the commencement of this Act, within any part of this United Kingdom, be admitted, or become a Jesuit, or brother, or member of any such other religious order. community or society as aforesaid, such person shall be deemed and taken to be guilty of misdemeanor, and being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be sentenced and ordered to be banished from the United Kingdom for the term of his natural life, and in Scotland shall be punished by fine and imprisonment."

These provisions of 10 George IV, chapter 7, give at least a color to the assertion that this society was under the ban of Imperial law; and if it was under the ban of Imperial law, and if under section 129 of the British North America Act a Provincial Legislature is expressly debarred from repealing Imperial laws, then it may be submitted that this society was incapable of incorporation within any part of the British realm; and whether this is so or not, it is at least a contention that requires thorough judicial investigation, and if the Government wish to allay the excitement in regard to this matter, it requires the decision of the highest court of the Dominion. It requires a decision arrived at after a fair and full judicial investigation, not a decision arrived at as was the decision of the law officers of the Crown, on a statement prepared by the Minister of Justice without any other evidence, and that statement prepared evidently with the intention of justifying the act of the Government in its refusal to disallow the Act and its decision not to submit the case to the Supreme Court. It may be asserted that this law is obsolete and is not in operation. But this very law was referred to in 1875 in a debate in the English House of Commons on 10th July of that year, by Mr. Disraeli, then Prime Minister, who expressly declaredthat the law was not obsolete, but that its provisions were reserving powers in the hands of the Government to be exercised at any time they might care to exercise them. Certainly this matter has a bearing, and a very important bearing on the question of the Jesuits' Estates Bill. Was this Act mentioned in the reference made to the law officers of the Crown? A general reference was made to the ancient English statutes, but there was nothing to govern or guide the law officers in their examination with respect to this law, there was nothing to lead them to consider that the law referred to was less than two or three centuries old. Nothing was said to them about the provisions contained in the Catholic Emancipation Act. It should have been expressly referred to in any case submitted to a tribunal that was to adjudicate on this case.

Then, in the second place, with respect to the provisions of the Bill itself. It has been held that the preamble to this Bill contained allusions to a foreign potentate that were not consonant with the requirements of English law, but were, on the contrary, in direct conflict with its express provisions. visions. But the Minister of Justice tells us that the preamble of a Bill is a matter of no consequence whatever, although during this Session he did attribute importance to the preamble of the Bill which dealt with the dual language in the North-West. I find in the memorandum this reference to the preamble of the Bill, on page 16:

"It will be seen, therefore, that the only portions of the many matters which are set out in the preamble to this statute, which are ratified, and which, therefore, form any material part of the statute, are the arrangements entered into between the Premier and the Very Rev. Father Turgeon. These arrangements are contained in the letter of the First Minister of Quebec, dated 1st May, 1888, the letter of Father Turgeon, dated the 8th of the same month, and the letter of the First Minister, dated the same day, and the legal documents which followed in order to give effect to the settlement. All other matters which are referred to in the preamble to this matters which are referred to in the preamble to this statute are extraneous and irrelevant.

Let us see what is said in the letter of the Premier of 1st May, and the letter following that of the Premier. On 1st May, 1888, Premier Mercier addressed a letter to the Rev. Father Turgeon, of which the following are some extracts. He wrote:

"Before entering into negotiations with you respecting these estates, the Government desires you to bear in mind:

"I. That you must deposit with a notary the original of the aforesaid letter from the Sacred College, with two solemn declarations made according to law, and identifying the signatures of the Prefect and Secretary of the said College, which are at the end of the said document." That is to say, he was to satisfy the Government that he was the accredited agent of His Holiness, and of the College of the Propaganda, and he was to enter into negotiations with the Premier of Quebec, as the ambassador of His Holiness the Pope, and the representative of the College. The letter further contains the following language:

"That you will grant to the Government of the Province of Quebec a full, complete and perpetual concession of all the property which may have belonged in Canada, under whatever title, to the Fathers of the old Society, and that you will renounce to all rights generally whatsoever upon such property and the revenues therefrom in favor of our Province, the whole, as well in the name of the old Order of Jesuits, and of your present corporation, as in the name of the Pope, of the Sacred College of the Propaganda and of the Roman Catholic Church in general:

"That any agreement made between you and the Government of the Province will be binding only in so far as it shall be ratified by the Pope and the Legislature of this Province;

"That the amount of the compensation fixed shall remain in the possession of the Government of the Province as a special deposit until the Pope has ratified the said settlement and made known his wishes respecting the distribution of such amount in this country."

The reply of the Rev. Father Turgeon contains the following :-

"Any agreement made between the Government of this Province and the Jesuit Fathers will be binding only is so far as it shall have been ratified by the Pope and the Legislature of this Province.

"The amount of the compensation fixed shall remain in the possession of the Government of the Province as a special deposit until the Pope has ratified the said settlement and made known his wishes respecting the distribution of such amount in this country."

Now, the hon. Minister in his memorandum expressly says: that although there is much irrelevant matter in the correspondence which does not pertain to the Bill, yet that these two letters do, and these are the two letters that contain the most objectionable features of the Bill. The Bill provides:

"1. That the aforesaid arrangements (those I have referred to and many others), entered into between the Premier and the Very Reverend Father Turgeon, are hereby ratified, and the Lieutenant Governor in Council is authorised to carry them out according to their form and tenor.

"2. The Lieutenant Governor in Council is authorised to pay, out of any public money at his disposal, the sum of four hundred thousand dollars, in the manner and under the conditions mentioned in the documents above cited, and to make any deed that he may deem necessary for the full and entire execution of such agreement."

Now Sir, this Act, with these documents that I have read-which the hon. gentleman's memorandum says do constitute part of the Bill, if other portions of it do not—these documents first of all open negotiations with His Holiness, then they accept authority from His Holiness, then they submit legislation to His Holiness for ratification, and then they place money at the disposal of His Holi-If all these things are not a recognition of the Pope in civil matters, then I am unable to draw a just conclusion with regard to the case. I am sorry to occupy the time of the House, but I wish to show upon what grounds I based my opinion, that this Bill is contrary to the provisions of the English statutes. I wish to draw attention first of all, to the old law of pramunire passed in the reign of Richard II, in 1392.

Mr. DAVIN. Why not go back a little earlier? Mr. CHARLTON. That is as far as it is necessary to go back, and the hon. gentleman will find that these provisions are re-enacted in a law passed so late as the tenth year of the reign of Queen Victoria, by which they are specially declared to be continued in force. Therefore, in order to find the law of the land, it will be necessary to go back to the origin of pramunire. Blackstone gives the following definition of pramunire:

"Introducing a foreign power into the land and creating imperium in imperio by paying that obedience to papal process which constitutionally belonged to the King alone."

There were provisions made with regard to this matter in the reign of Edward III, in the reign of Henry IV, and in the reign of Richard II, this law of pramunire was placed on the statutes. It will be necessary, I suppose, for me to read these provisions, because I wish them to appear in the record. I want to quote them to show upon what authority the prevailing opinion is in regard to the constitutionality of this Bill is based.

Some hon. MEMBERS.

Mr. CHARLTON. I will be glad to dispense. Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

Mr. CHARLTON. Chapter 5 of Richard II, in the 16th year of his reign, provides:

the 16th year of his reign, provides:

"And also it is said. and a common clamor is made, that the said Bishop of Rome hath ordained and purposed to translate some prelates of the same realm, some out of the realm, and some from one bishopric into another within the same realm, without the King's assent and knowledge, and without the assent of the prelates, which so shall be translated, which prelates be much profitable and necessary to our said Lord the King, and to all his realm; by which translations (if they should be suffered) the statutes of the realm should be defeated and made void and his said Liege Sages of his Council, without his assent, and against his will, carried away and gotten out of the realm, and the substance and treasure of the realm shall be carried away, and so the realm destitute as well of council as of substance, to the final destruction of the same realm; and so the Crown of England, which hath been so free at all times, that it hath been in no earthly subjection, but immediately subject to God in all things touching the Regalty of the same Crown, and to none other, touching the Regalty of the same Crown, and to none other, should be submitted to the Pope, and the laws and statutes of the realm by him defeated and avoided at his will, in perpetual destruction of the sovereignty of the King our Lord, his Crown, his Regalty, and of all his realm, which God defend.

realm, which God defend.

"And moreover, the Commons aforesaid say, that the said things so attempted be clearly against the King's Grown and his Regalty, used and approved of the time of all his progenitors; when wherefore they all the Liege Commons of the same realm will stand with our said Lord the King, and his said Crown, and his Regalty, in the cases aforesaid, and in all other cases attempted against him his Comm and his Regalty in all points to live and him, his Crown, and his Regalty in all points, to live and

And the concluding part of this law says:

Mr. CHARLTON.

"Whereupon our said Lord the King, by the assent aforesaid, and at the request of his said Commons, hath ordained and established, that if any purchase or pursue, or cause to be purchased or pursued in the Court of Rome, or elsewhere, by any such translations, processes, and sentences of excommunication, bulls, instruments, or any other things whatsoever which touch the King, against him, his Crown, and his Regalty, or his realm, as is aforesaid, and they which bring within the realm or them receive, or make thereof notification, or any other execution whatsoever within the same realm or without, that they, their notaries, procurators, maintainers, abettors, fautors, and counsellors, shall be put out of the King's protection, and their lands and tenements, goods and chattels, forfeit to our Lord the King; and that they be attached by their bodies, if they may be found, and brought before the King, and his council, there to answer to the cases aforesaid, or that process be made against them by premunire facias, in manner as it is ordained in other Statutes of Provisors, and other which do sue in any other court in derogation of the Regalty of our Lord the King." the King.

Now, Sir, the provisions in this statute were emphasised and enlarged in the reign of Henry VIII, and I will spare the House by not inflicting these extracts upon them, but if any hon gentlemen wish to consult them, I will give the data by which they can do so: Act for the Restraint of Appeals, 24 Henry VIII (1532), volume 2, page 167, chapter 12, sections 2 and 4. Act concerning Peter pence and dispensations, 25 Henry VIII (1533), volume 2, pages 183 and 4, chapter 21, section 3. In these several statutes, the provisions of the law of Richard II are made more stringent. These Acts were repealed in the reign of Philip and Mary, but as soon as Queen Elizabeth came to the Throne of England, among the very first legislation in her reign was the re-affirming of the provisions of these various statutes, and I shall trouble the House with some extracts from the law under Queen Elizabeth. Chapter 1, of 1 Elizabeth, from the 3rd to the 13th sections, re-enacts the laws that were annulled in the reign of Philip and Mary. This statute contains the following provisions:-

"And to the intent that all usurped and foreign power and authority, spiritual and temporal, may forever be clearly extinguished and never to be used or obeyed within this realm, or any other Your Majesty's dominions or countries; may it please Your Highness that it may be further enacted by the authority aforesaid that no foreign prince, person, prelate, state or potentate, spiritual or temporal, shall, at any time after the last day of this session of Parliament, use, enjoy or exercise any manner of power, jurisdiction, superiority, authority, pre-eminence or privilege, spiritual or ecclesiastical, within this realm, or within any other Your Majesty's dominions or countries that now be, or hereafter shall be, but from thenceforth the same shall be clearly abolished out of this realm, and all other Your Highness' dominions for ever."

In 13 Elizabeth, chapter 2, we find the following provisions:-

"Wherein the Parliament holden at Westminster in the fifth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lady the Queen's Majesty that now is, by one act and statute then and there made, intituled an Act for the Assurance of the Queen's Majesty's royal power over all states and subjects within our Highness' Dominions, it is among other things very well ordained and provided for the abolishing of the surped power and jurisdiction of the Bishop of Rome and of the See of Rome, heretofore unlawfully claimed and usurped within the realm and other the dominions of the Queen's Majesty belonging, that no person or persons shall hold or stand with, to set forth, maintain, defend or extol the same surpped power, or attribute any manner of jurisdiction, authority or pre-eminence to the same, to be had or used within this realm or any of the said dominions, upon pain to incur the danger, penalties and for feitures ordained and provided by the Statute of Provision and Premunire, made in the sixteenth year of the reign of King Richard II as by the same Act more at large it doth and may appear: And yet nevertheless divers seditious and very ill-disposed people, without the respect of their duty to Almighty God, or of the faith and allegiance which they ought to bear and have to our said sovereign Lady the Queen, and without all fear and regard had to the said good law and statute, or the pains therein limited, but minding as it should seem very seditiously and unnaturally, not only to bring this realm and Imperial Crown thereof (being in very deed of itself most free), into the thraldom and subjection of that foreign usurped and unlawful jurisdiction, pre-eminence and authority claimed by the said See of Rome; but also to estrange and alienate the minds and hearts of sundry of Her Majesty's subjects from their dutiful obedience, and to raise and stir sedition and rebellion within this realm, to the disturbance of the most happy peace thereof; Her Majesty's subjects from their dutiful obedience, and to raise and stir sedition and rebellion within this realm, to the disturbance of the most happy peace thereof; have lately procured and obtained to themselves from the said Bishop of Rome and his said See, divers bulls and writings, the effect whereof hath been and is to absolve and reconcile all those that will be contented to forsake their due obedience to our Most Gracious Sovereign Lady, the Queen's Majesty, and to yield and subject themselves to the said feigned, unlawful and usurped authority; and by color of the said bulls and writings, the said wicked persons very secretly and most seditionsly, in such parts of this realm where the people for want of good instruction are most weak, simple and ignorant, and thereby farthest from the good understanding of their duties towards God and the Queen's Majesty, have, by their lewd and subtil practices and persuasions, so far forth wrought, that sundry simple and ignorant persons have been contented to be reconciled to the said usurped authority of the See of Rome, and to take absolution at the hands of the said naughty and subtil practicers, whereby hath grown great disobedience and boldness in many, not only to withdraw and absent themselves from all divine service, now most godly set forth and used within this realm, but also have thought themselves discharged of and from all obedience, duty and allegiance to Her Majesty, whereby most wicked and unnatural rebellion hath ensued, and to the further danger of this realm, is hereafter very like to be renewed if the ungodly and wicked attempts in that behalf be not by severity of laws in time restrained and bridled. "For remedy and redress whereof, and to prevent the bridled.

"For remedy and redress whereof, and to prevent the great mischiefs and inconveniences that thereby may ensue, be it enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, with the assent of the Lords, spiritual and temporal, and the Commons, in this prevent Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same: That if any person or persons, after the 1st day of July next coming, shall use or put in use in any place within this realm, or in any the Queen's dominions, any such bull, writing or instrument, written or printed, of absolution or reconciliation, at any time heretofore obtained and gotten, or at any time hereafter to be obtained or gotten, from the said Bishop of Rome or any of his successors, or from any other person or persons authorised or claiming authority by or from the said Bishop of Rome, his predecessors or successors, or See of Rome; or if any person or persons, after the said first day of July, shall take upon him or them, by color of any such bull, writing, instrument, or authority to absolve or reconcile any person or persons, or to grant or promise For remedy and redress whereof, and to prevent the first day of July, shall take upon him or them, by color of any such bull, writing, instrument, or authority to absolve or reconcile any person or persons, or to grant or promise to any person or persons within this realm, or any other the Queen's Majesty's dominions, any such absolution or reconciliation, by any speech, preaching, teaching or writing, or any other open deed; or if any person or persons within this realm, or any the Queen's dominions after the said first day of July, shall willingly receive and take any such absolution or reconciliation:

Or else if any person or persons have obtained or gotten since the last day of the Parliament holden in the first year of the Queen's Majesty's reign, or after the first day of July, shall obtain or get from the said Bishop of Rome, or any his successors, or See of Rome, any manner of bull, writing or instrument, written or printed containing anything, matter or cause whatsoever; or shall publish or by any ways or means put in use any such bull, writing or instrument, that then all and every such act or acts, offence and offences shall be deemed and adjudged by the authority of this Act to be high treason; and the offender and offenders therein, their procurers, abettors and counsellors to the fact and committing the said offence or offences, shall be deemed and adjudged high traitors to the Queen and the realm, and being thereof lawfully indicted and attainted according to the course of the laws of this realm, shall suffer pains of death, and also lose and forfeit all their lands, tenements, hereditaments, goods and chattels, as in case of high treason by the laws of this realm ought to be lost and forfeited. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid that all and every aiders, comforters or maintainers of any the said offender or offenders, after the committing of any the every aiders, comforters or maintainers of any the said offender or offenders, after the committing of any the said acts or offences to the intent to set forth, uphold or allow the doing or execution of the said usurped power, jurisdiction or authority, touching or concerning the premises, or any part thereof, shall incur the pains and penalties contained in the Statute of Præmunire made in the sixteenth year of the reign of King Richard II."

I might strengthen this position by many other quotations from the English law with regard to this matter. Suffice it to say that what was the law beyond all question in the days of Queen Elizabeth, in the days of Henry VIII, in the days of Richard II, has been the law ever since then. All these provisions have been expressly given force to by a statute passed in the reign of Queen Victoria; and this is important, as showing that these are not obsolete or lapsed laws, but laws still in force, and expressly declared to be in force in all respects, except in regard to the penalties attached to these offences. In 9 and 10 Victoria, chapter 59, we find the following :-

chapter 59, we find the following:—

"Also, so much of an Act passed in the first year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, initiuled an Act to restore to the Crown an ancient jurisdiction over the estate, ecclesiastical and spiritual, and abolishing all foreign powers repugnant to the same, and of an Act of the Parliament of Ireland passed in the second year of the same Queen's reign, intituled an Act restoring to the Crown the same ancient jurisdiction of the State, ecclesiastical and spiritual, and abolishing all foreign power repugnant to the same, as makes it punishable to affirm, hold, stand with, set forth, maintain, or defend, as therein is mentioned, the authority, pre-eminence, power or jurisdiction, spiritual or ecclesiastical, of any foreign prince, prelate, person, State or potentate theretofore claimed, used or usurped within this realm or any dominion or country being within or under the power, dominion or obeisance of Her Highness, or to put in use or execute anything for the extolling, advancement, setting forth, maintenance, or defence of any such pretended or usurped jurisdiction, power, pre-eminence and authority, or any part thereof, or to abet, aid, procure, or counsel any person so offending: Provided always, and be it declared, that nothing in this enactment contained shall authorise or render it lawful for any persons to affirm, hold, stand with, set forth, maintain, or defend any such foreign power, pre-eminence, jurisdiction or authority, nor shall the same extend further than to the repeal of the particular penalties and punishments therein referred to, but in all other respects the law shall continue the same as if this enactment had not been made: Provided further, that if any person in holy orders, according to the rites and ceremonies of the United Church of England and Ireland, shall affirm, hold, stand with, set forth, maintain or defend any such foreign power, pre-eminence, jurisdiction or authority, such person shall be incapable of holding any ecclesiastical promotion, and if in

This, then, gives power and efficacy to, and reaffirms the provisions of the old laws which I have quoted.

Now, Sir, it is held, and I think justly held, that the laws from which I have quoted are directly contrary to the provisions of the Jesuits' Estates Act; that that Act in itself is a recognition of the Pope; that in itself it accepts authority from him in submitting legislation to him for approval, and in appropriating money for his disposal; and that, in recognising his authority in civil matters, it is an infringement and violation in express terms of these statutes which I have quoted. In addition to this, aside from the question of the infringement of the Queen's prerogative by the Jesuits' Estates. Act in the manner I have described, the general impression on the part of those opposed to that Act is that it is unconstitutional, inasmuch as it reverses, in part at least, Imperial legislation in regard to the confiscation of the Jesuits' Estates. It is held, moreover, that the Act is unconstitutional, in that it breaks a trust-creates amalfeasance in trust funds which were placed in the hands of the Quebec Government for a specific purpose. And to summarise the objections on the ground of unconstitutionality, it is held to be unconstitutional; because the Emancipation Act of 1829 placed the Jesuit organisation outside the protection of the Imperial law, which makes it an illegal society; because it recognises a foreign potentate, in contravention of the express terms and provisions of the English law, dating from the year 1392 to 9th and 10th Victoria; because it reverses an Imperial Act of confiscation; because it is a malfeasance of a trust fund. It is not for me to argue at this time whether these objections are sound or unsound. I recapitulate them to show what the state of public sentiment was, and what were the objections raised to the Bill, and to emphasise the objections made in the House of Commons against the course of the Government in not submitting the Bill, under the circumstances, to a proper tribunal, in order to obtain an authoritative decision as to The reference made, the its constitutionality. manner and the circumstances in which it was made, all increase the popular distrust; and the Government, in my opinion, did not discharge its duty in the course it followed. If this was not a case for reference to the Supreme Court, pray what could be such a case? If this was not solemn enough to justify the Government invoking the intervention of the Supreme Court and submitting the case to them for decision, it is difficult to conceive a case whith would warrant such a reference.

In the answer of His Excellency the Governor General, to the delegation which waited upon him at Quebec, the first position he took was this:

at Queoec, the first position he cook was cans.

"I believe, and am confirmed in my belief by the best authority whom I can consult, that the Act was intra vives of the Quebec Legislature. Here my power of interference is limited. The Act does not appear to do more than to seek to restore to a certain society, not in kind, but in money, a portion of the property of which that society was in years gone by deprived without compensation; and it provides to give in compensation therefor, the money of the Province which had become possessed of the property, and was profiting by it."

Now the voice was the voice of Jacob, but the

Now, the voice was the voice of Jacob, but the hand was that of Esau. While it is the Governor General who ostensibly speaks, there is a marvellous similarity between the language of His Excellency and the speech of the Minister of Justice, the memorandum of the Minister of Justice, and the letter of my hon. friend to Mr. Graham. The similarity is so striking that the Governor General must at least have consulted the Minister of Justice with regard to the terms and phraseology of his reply to the delegation. In the second place, His Excellency says:

"But, as a matter of fact, I do not find any evidence that in this Dominion and in this nineteenth century the Jesuits have been less law-abiding or less loyal than others.

Well, His Excellency perhaps had not searched very diligently for the evidence that bore upon the character of this organisation during the nineteenth century, and was hardly warranted in making that assertion, that there was no evidence procurable that this organisation was less law-abiding, less desirable than others. It may be the case with regard to the organisation in Canada, against which I have nothing to say, but as regards the whole broad question of the status of the society and its antecedents and its history in the nineteenth Mr. CHARLTON.

society expelled from France in 1804? Why was it expelled from Naples in 1810? from Belgium in 1818? from Russia in 1820? from Spain in 1826? from France in 1845? from Bravaria in 1848? from Switzerland in 1848? from the Papal States in 1848? from the Austrian Empire in 1848 ? from Gallicia in 1848? from Sardinia in 1848? from Sicily in 1848? from the Italian States in 1859? and from Switzerland in 1860? The attitude of these powers to wards the order is utterly at variance with the conclusions arrived at by His Excellency. Why should so high an authority as Blackstone speak of the black intrigues of the Jesuits, and of their being the enemies of society? His Excellency was hardly warranted in making use of so sweeping a commendation of this order. Then His Excellancy goes on to say:

"It appears to me that the legal state of that society was settled by the Incorporation Act of 1887, to which little or no objection was taken. I cannot see anything unconstitutional in that respect in the payment of the money in question to a society duly incorporated by law." Well, it was with regard to the legal status of that society, under the Incorporation Act of 1887, that we want the opinion of a judicial tribunal. That is one of the most important questions connected with the case -- as to the legal status of the society under the Incorporation Act, as to whether it has any legal status, as to whether that Act is constitutional or not, coming into conflict as it does with the Catholic Emancipation Act of 1829, as to whether it has any legal right to a position in the Statute-books of any Province of the British Empire. His Excellency proceeds to say:

"Then it has been said: Why not facilitate a reference to the Supreme Court or the Privy Council? I believe that my advisers have a perfectly good answer, that having no doubt of the correctness of their view they have a good reason for not doing so."

I have to dwell on that feature of the case. I consider it is a very insufficient reason that, because the advisers of Her Majesty in Canada, that because the majority of this House-the majority of whom are not jurists—hold the opinion that this Act is all right, it should not be referred to a court. If the functions of the courts are worth anything, they are not to decide whether the majority of this House must be taken as an absolute authority, but whether that majority is right in its opinion. The action of the House or of the Government in the matter does not make the Act constitutional, or it would not have been necessary to have a reference at all. His Excellency then states:

"I earnestly call upon all the best friends of the Dominion as far as possible, while holding their own opinions, to be tolerant of those of others; and like our great neighbor, to live and let live, that we may in time come to feel that we have the one object of promoting the prosperity and welfare of the Dominion, and the maintenance of loyalty and devotion to the Sovereign."

These sentiments any person can echo-the preservation of the peace, the promoting of the welfare of the people, the adoption of measures to promote the peace and welfare of the people of the country—to these every person in Canada can say "Amen." But the question is, what measures are calculated to produce these results? Is the refusal of the Government to test the constitutionality of the law, when a large section of the people demand it, a step calculated to promote the century I think His Excellency was singularly at harmony and welfare of the country? No, Sir. fault. If his statement be true, why was that His Excellency referred to our neighbors to the south. Is this the source from which we may draw examples to justify us in not referring this question to the courts? Have they no tribunal for the settlement of constitutional questions? Is it the case there that when the majority of Congress and the members of the executive have pronounced an Act constitutional, that there is no reference to the Supreme Court? Such is not the case. The constitutional reference of a case can be reached there, but here we are debarred from a constitutional reference by the action of the Government, and the courts of justice are closed to us, and in that the action of the Government is not calculated to promote the well-being and the welfare of the people. Those who wish for a constitutional reference feel that they have been outraged; they feel that the reference should have been made; they feel that the reference has been refused without cause; and for that reason this agitation has been kept alive. If the Government had referred that case to the Supreme Court, whatever the decision of that court might have been, the people would have acquiesced and the excitement that agitated the people would have passed

I have detained the House longer than I intended, in consequence of reading these extracts. useless to conceal the fact that there is a feeling of uneasiness existing in this country—a feeling which is to be lamented, but a feeling which it is the duty of the Government to take every proper precaution and proper means to remove. There is a feeling that there is an imperium in imperio in this country. It is well known that the papal power is not exclusively a spiritual power. It does not strictly adhere to the principle of the statement made by the Messiah that His kingdom was not of this world. This power seeks not only a spiritual kingdom-and in regard to its spiritual functions, no man desires to interfere with it, no man has any business to interfere with it—but it seeks for a kingdom on this earth as well. It seeks, in the opinion of many people, to exercise civil functions, and that feeling creates uneasiness. The aims of the hierarchy are suspected. It is supposed to be the desire of the hierarchy to seek this power, and that supposition creates what may, perhaps, be called prejudice, but what, at all events, is a feeling of uneasiness. The Church attempts to be dominant and to make the State subordinate. This belief, which finds place in the minds of hundreds and thousands and scores of thousands of people in this country is one that should not be disregarded by the Government; they should recognise the existence of this feeling and should seek to avoid inflaming and arousing these passions which are so much to be deprecated. The Province of Quebec, notwithstanding the fact that the inhabitants of that Province are so fine a race, notwithstanding the fact that that Province gives us so many valuable public men, and amongst them so courtly and eloquent a gentleman as the hon. member who leads the Opposition in this House, still has a system including tithes, the Fabrique assessments, the exemptions of the vast property belonging to the church from taxation, the power of the priesthood, and the denominational school system, which do not secure the approbation of people outside of that Province, and there is a features and confine them to the district in which they are now found. The people who entertain the opinions to which I have referred, imagined that in past years they could detect a design to nationalise this system. They look at the incor-poration of the duallanguage in the North-West Bill and the incorporation of the separate school clause in the same Bill, and many of them argue that if separate schools are established in the North-West, that should be done by the Local and not by the Dominion Government, that this Government have no right to assume that separate schools form part of the national system, and that they have no right to establish them in territories or provinces which do not possess provincial autonomy. I think that is a sound principle. At all events, it is evident that ecclesiastical and civil tyranny are mutually productive of each other. There is a feeling of unrest, and it is very easy to arouse a feeling of alarm in the country. With all these circumstances, with the fact that there is an influence in this country that can be managed and made use of, the political influence of which can be handed over to any party with this fact staring us in the face, there is a feeling abroad which the Government should recognise, and it should endeavor to placate that feeling by referring any law of this kind to a high judicial tribunal to decide as to its constitutionality. What did the First Minister say in reference to this question when it was before the House a little over a year ago? He said:

"No Government can be formed in Canada, either by myself, or by the hon. member who moves this resolution (Mr. O'Brien), or by my hon. friend who sits opposite (Mr. Laurier), having in view the disallowance of such a measure."

Here is an explicit declaration that the disallowance of this measure would lead to the destruction of any Government, and that for that reason he did not disallow that measure. The inference the country draws is that the hon. gentleman did not dare to refer that measure to the proper tribunal, and that he recognised that he could not disallow it without incurring political destruction, he felt that he could not refer it without political destruction, except in the clandestine way in which he did refer it. I have no doubt that the right hon, gentleman and the Minister of Justice, and their colleagues would have been glad to refer that measure to the Supreme Court; I have no doubt that it was the natural solution of the difficulty which occur-red to their minds, and I have no doubt that it was this influence to which the right hon. gentleman referred which prevented the reference of that Bill. I believe that, while the leader of the Government might have been disposed to refer the Bill, the power which is higher than he, the power which he has recognised in this matter, objected to that reference and protested against it, and, therefore, he did not refer it. That is the inference which I draw. The refusal to refer this Bill to the Supreme Court was, I think, improper and unjust. This is a matter of the greatest importance. If we provide that any matter may be referred to the Supreme Court for hearing and decision, if we provide the machinery for such a reference, and if the Government refuses to avail itself of that machinery, but goes with an ex parte statement, and gets a statement from legal gentlemen simply on the application of the desire on the part of the public to localise these defendant's attorney, without any chance being given for the other side to be heard, I maintain that the Government has not done its duty and that the reference is simply a mockery.

There has been room for a wide difference of opinion as to the position members took in this House upon the question of disallowance. I may have stultified my former record in favor of provincial rights, in the vote I took upon that question. had no doubt that the measure was one that should be disallowed, I had no doubt of the power of the Government to disallow it, consequently I voted against the Government for not disallowing it. I do not suppose that there was a member on the opposite side of the House supporting the Government who had any doubt of the power of the Government to disallow that Act, who had any doubt of the right of the Government to disallow that Act if it chose do do so. Every one of those hon, gentlemen who stood up and voted for the Government in its refusal to disallow the Act, endorsed the principle of refusal per se, not having been governed by any scruples as regards the right of the Government to make the disallowance. On this side, probably, the case was different. It is quite presumable that many members, governed by their scruples in regard to the question of provincial rights and provincial autonomy, voted with the Government who really did not approve of that Bill. But whether this is so or not, whether I was right or wrong in the position I took as a Liberal member of this House, and whether the Liberal members who voted for that motion were right or wrong, there can be no question, at least, in my mind, that after the Government had refused to disallow the Bill they should not have refused a reference of that Bill to the Supreme Court of Canada. The refusal, practically, closes the gates of justice, it causes distrust. should have had this matter probed to the bottom. There is no reason why it should not have been referred to the Supreme Court there to be tried after all the circumstances, and all the facts, and all the statutes that pertain to the case, had been laid before that court, and where a decision could have been secured which would have commanded the confidence of the country and would have set the excitement at rest. This has not been done, and I claim that in failing to do this, the Government have failed to discharge the functions that properly devolved upon them, they have trifled with the excitement that exists in the country, they have taken a course calculated to prolong and intensify that excitement, when the proper course would have allayed it at once. Taking this view of the case, I beg to move:

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—"regard being had to the fact that the competency of the Legislative Assembly of Quebec to pass the Act 51-52 Victoria, chapter 15, intituled: "An Act respecting the settlement of the Jesuits Estates," was called in question, and that belief in the unconstitutionality of the said Act was entertained in many sections; and in view of the feeling of dissatisfaction excited thereby, and generally the disturbed state of the public mind on the subject thereof:

"And further, having regard to the fact that His Excellency obtained the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown in England, as to the course which His Excellency should pursue regarding the said Act:

"This House is of the opinion that the question of the constitutionality of the said Act should have been submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada, in pursuance of the powers conferred by the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, when the question could have been definitely determined by such Court."

Mr. CHARLTON.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In following the remarks that have just been addressed to the House by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), I shall be unable to deal with a part of the case, to which he gave a great deal of comment, not out of any discourtesy to him, but because I think in the allusions he made to that part of the case, he was going very far afield, indeed, of the argument which he might fairly present to the House, in pressing the resolution which is now in I do not propose to follow, to any vour hands. extent, the observations which the hon. gentleman has made, by way of attack upon the Jesuit society or upon that larger organisation professing the Roman Catholic faith in this country, or with respect to the status and condition of the people who profess that faith in the Province of Quebec. I shall trust to the indulgence of the House to relieve me from any observations on these branches of the question, if, indeed, they are branches of the question at all, with a single exception. The hon. gentleman professed to the House this afternoon a very strong faith in the power and existing force of a great many early enactments on the subject of religion; I would commend to the hon. gentleman an observation of the most eminent writer on criminal law of modern times, when he comes to revise the speech which he has just delivered to this House, when he comes to circulate it, as I have no doubt he intends to do, throughout this country, for the purpose of creating, or continuing, an agitation in this country on this subject—I would commend to him an observation which is made by Sir Fitzjames Stephen, in his History of the Criminal Law, second volume, page 426, when, after recapitulating the tyrannical, arbi trary and oppressive legislation of early times, and the tyrannical, arbitrary and oppressive coercion of religious opinion in early times, he winds up with an observation which, perhaps, would not be pertinent except for the hon. gentleman's profession of belief that all this legislation is in force now and should be applied now; I would commend that observation to the hon. gentleman's careful consideration before he circulates the pamphlet containing his speech, because he might find that the old sword was a two-edged one. Sir Fitzjames Stephen says :

"Pages might be filled with further illustrations, but these are enough. I may observe, in general, that all opinions except those which were regarded as strictly correct, were pretty impartially punished. It was as dangerous to believe too much as not to believe enough to be a Roman Catholic priest as to be a publisher of fanatical pamphlets."

Now, Sir, the hon, gentleman set out with an observation which challenged a statement made in some parts of this country since last Session with regard to the consistency which he showed last Session in endeavoring to get a reference of this statute to the Supreme Court of Canada, for an opinion as to its validity. I have not been one of his accusers in that regard. I have been pretty extensively criticised in various parts of this country, but I think I may say that I have not opened my mouth upon this question since I addressed the House upon it last Session. But since the hon. gentleman has challenged criticism of his conduct in that regard, and since he has desired this House to judge whether he was consistent in his endeavor to obtain a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, let me ask the hon. gentleman-accepting all he has ever said on the platform and in Parliament with respect to the impossibility of getting the ear of the House for his proposed motion with respect to a reference to the Supreme Court, how he accounts for his consistency, when he has sat in this House, during this Session for fifteen weeks, and has never proposed that the statute shall be referred for the consideration of the Supreme Court of Canada, but now proposes, instead of such resolution, a motion of want of confidence in the Government in that regard. The hon. gentleman should ponder on that point, and give an answer to that question before this debate concludes, if he can. The only possible answer he can give is, that the Act has passed into operation, that the question of allowance or disallowance has been passed upon, and that it is too late to make a reference now. The same answer would have met the hon, gentleman if he had proposed the resolution, when he states he would willingly have proposed it, last Session, because in January the Act had been announced as being free from any possibility of disallowance, that answer had been communicated to his Honor the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Quebec, and the Act had practically gone into force and operation for all time to come, unless it shall please the Legislature of Quebec to repeal or amend it. So the hon. gentleman this Session, for the last fifteen weeks, was in as good a position to test the House on this question, if he pleased to do so, as at any time last Session. I listened with a great deal of care to the hon, gentleman in his references to the memorandum which I prepared for His Excellency the Governor General with respect to this Act, because his resolution contained the rather singular statement that that was an incomplete statement of the objections to the Act.

Mr. CHARLTON. No. The resolution does not contain that statement.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It says:

"But were merely to express an opinion, founded upon the incomplete statement made."

Mr. CHARLTON. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to state that I have varied the language of the resolution somewhat, and if he takes the resolution I have submitted he will not find that statement.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I took the resolution as placed on the Notice paper, and I found it indicated that the statement I had made to His Excellency was incomplete. If the memorandum which I had the honor to prepare for His Excellency was not incomplete, upon what grounds will it be challenged as a fair statement of the case? If that statement is an incomplete statement, as the hon. gentleman's motion asserted, I hope he will explain to the House, at some stage of this debate, why he has erased those words from the motion he has put into your hands, Mr. Speaker, and why it is he does not ask the House now, as he proposed to do the other day when he placed his motion on the paper, to pronounce that an incom-plete statement, although he has addressed an argument to the House occupying one hour for the purpose of showing that it was an incomplete statement. In what respect was it contended, that the memorandum was not a full and fair statement of the case? The hon, gentleman said that I had prepared a misleading statement, and that there was no evidence that the Bill on which the opinion was given was before the law officers of the Crown. Let me state what the memorandum itself was, and why it was prepared. In the ordinary course of the duty of the Minister of Justice, he is called upon to give His Excellency his opinion on every Act passed, as to whether it is suitable to receive His Excellency's sanction or not; and, in consequence of the agitation which had arisen in this country with respect to that question, knowing His Excellency might desire to report on the question to the Colonial Office, or knowing he night be called on for a report, considering the intensity with which the debate raged in this House for a number of days, it was only proper that I should put into His Excellency's hands a statement of the reasons by which the Government sought to justify their action on this question. The hon, gentleman asks this House to come to the conclusion, that the two first law officers in the United Kingdom who are charged with the duty of advising Her Majesty with respect to all colonial questions, the men holding the rank of Attorney General and Solicitor General, absolutely pronounced an opinion on an Act they never saw and under a misguiding statement from me with respect to an Act which was not before them. The hon, gentleman flatters the credulity of the public of Canada too much if he is confident they will accept such a contention. The hon, gentleman stated there was a clandestine reference to the law officers, and he stated that my references to the early English legislation were misleading, because, forsooth, they might indicate to the Crown officers, who, he supposes, apparently, to be entirely ignorant of the English law and legislation, that I was referring to legislation as early as Richard II. If I imposed on them so as to lead them to suppose that my reference was going back as far as Richard II, it was an imposition which the hon. gentleman made on the House today when he read more than one statute of that period as a reason for inducing the House to believe, not only that my statement was incomplete, but that the Crown officers of England were wrong in the opinion they formed on this question. The hon. gentleman stated, and it was about the only statement which the hon. gentleman could make with respect to the incompleteness of my memorandum, that I had omitted all reference to the statute of 10 George IV, in which the Jesuits are legislated against in stringent terms. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman to state in what respect that statute was pertinent to the argument I presented to His Excellency. I shall be glad to allow the hon, gentleman to interrupt me to answer, if he thinks it convenient to do so, in what respect that statute had the slightest reference to the position of the Jesuits in Canada; and if the hon. gentleman does not avail himself of the opportunity I hold out to him now, I must assume that the interpretation I have put on the argument he made on that subject is correct. I must assume that the hon. gentleman led, and intended to lead, the House to believe that the statute of 10 George IV, not being very ancient legislation, governed the whole subject, settled this question, pronounced penalties against any Jesuits throughout the Empire. He is not aware, I suppose, at this moment although he placed a notice on the paper challenging the completeness of my statement, and has occupied the House for an hour in arguing that my statement was incomplete—that that statute has no more force in this country than it has in the United States, and that it never applied to this country. The hon. gentleman must have been misled by the words "the realm," supposing those words are equivalent to "the Empire, and he does not know, although he has spoken for upwards of an hour for the purpose of showing that my statement is wrong, that the statute was confined to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and that the words "the realm" cover the United Kingdom alone, and do not even cover the Channel Islands. If the hon, gentleman has made such a mistake in the argument he has addressed to this House, and it must have been a mere mistake, the House will hardly come to the conclusion that he is qualified to pronounce an opinion as to whether Sir Richard Webster and Sir Edward Clarke have made a mistake or not. I think the House, after listening to the early statutes and to Blackstone, and to everybody else who has ever written on this subject, will come to the conclusion that perhaps Sir Richard Webster and Sir Edward Clarke were right after all in their opinion. I desire to make another observation before I refer to the general question in regard to the reference of an Act like this, in justice to another as well as in justice to myself. The hon, gentleman made allusion to the speech which His Excellency delivered on receiving certain delegates who visited him in the city of Quebec and presented a remonstrance with respect to this Act going into force. The hon. gentleman made what I thought was a rather unhandsome reference to that speech, in which he stated, that the voice was the voice of Jacob, but the hand was the hand of Esau. His Excellency was Jacob, in the hon. gentleman's mind, and I was Esau. There was a close similarity, he said, between the language of my memorandum and the language in which His Excellency addressed those delegates. I cannot claim credit for having inspired the reply of His Excellency the Governor General, notwithstanding that the hon gentleman had attributed that honor to me. I have no desire to disclaim it, I have no desire in the least to avoid any share of responsibility which falls upon me with respect to it. But in justice to him whom I have to advise, and in fairness to those with whom I am associated, and in answer to the calumnies which have been circulated throughout this country for twelve months upon that subject, I will say now, that I prepared that memorandum and submitted it to His Excellency before he left Ottawa, before he went to the city of Quebec, before His Excellency was requested to receive the delegates, and before he knew that they were coming to wait on him, but that I never exchanged a word in writing or speech with His Excellency on the subject afterwards, and I did not know what reply His Excellency was going to make, or what reply he had made, until I read it in the newspapers after-Now, Mr. Speaker, let me call the attention of the House to what the constitutional posi-tion is which the hon. member (Mr. Charlton) takes with regard to this question, and I admit that the question is one of great importance. It is one of great importance, not merely in regard to the Pro-Sir John Thompson.

vincial Act in question, but in regard to the practice which is to be followed when all similar questions arise. The hon, gentleman has asked that the Government shall be censured for not having made a reference under section 37 of the Supreme Court Act, which provides:

"The Governor in Council may refer to the Supreme Court, for hearing or consideration, any matter which he thinks fit to refer, and the court shall thereupon hear and consider the same, and certify their opinion thereon to the Governor in Council."

Let me call the attention of the House for a moment to what, plainly, is the purport, scope, and meaning of the Act. It is an enactment precisely similar to the statute which exists in Great Britain, enabling Her Majesty to seek the advice of the Judicial Committee of Her Privy Council, and it is framed in exactly the same words. Therefore we can obtain considerable instruction as to what use ought to be made of a provision of that kind, if we observe what use has been made of it in the mother country, where, not only questions arise as frequently as they do in this country, with regard to the validity of Acts of subordinate Legislatures, but where the legislation of the whole Empire has to be reviewed and revised. The object of this enactment plainly is to assist His Excellency in the discharge of his executive duties, and to assist his executive counsellors of the Government in the discharge of their executive duties, by advising them as to the course they should pursue. It would be inconsistent with the whole structure of our judicial framework, extending as it does to so many distant parts of the country, to suppose that it was ever intended to be a means of settling private litigation or of making private enquiries, or of even making enquiries to satisfy public interest and public curiosity. His Excellency is given, there, a means of resorting to the highest court in the country, for the purpose of instructing his advisers and himself, as to the things they should do, the orders which they should make, the authority which they should confer upon their officers, and the instructions which they should give to their officers from time to time. I said a moment ago that it would be instructive to refer to the use which is made of the English enactment. There are seven reported cases in Great Britain since that statute was passed in the reign of William IV. Let us see what they were. Every one of them is a case in which Her Majesty desired to be advised as to some act which she was called upon to perform. Out of the seven instances which are reported, one was a case in which Her Majesty desired to be advised as to whether it was proper that certain penalties should be remitted, it having been claimed that these penalties had been illegally imposed. One was a case in which Her Majesty had been asked to restore the precedence of certain judges. One was a case in which Her Majesty desired to be advised as to the revision of certain regulations made by a colonial court. One was in regard to a peti-tion in which Her Majesty had been prayed to remove a colonial judge for misconduct, and one was a case in which Her Majesty had been asked to order that an advocate should be allowed to practice at the bar in the Court of Jersey, where the number of practitioners was supposed to be limited by regulation. In regard to the last case, there was an observation made by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which throws some light upon the views they take of the functions that devolve upon them under this enactment:

"With regard to our jurisdiction as well as to the argument of the inconvenience arising from a limited bar, we must observe that this petition is not referred to us as a legislative body, having legislative authority, or to advise the Crown in acting its legislative capacity, but as members of the Judicial Committee of the Council, possessing only power to advise the Crown judicially." Now, Sir, what were the functions of His Excellency the Governor General in regard to this statute? I pass by for a moment the important circumstance, that when we were asked to make the reference, all power had passed—all right, at any rate, had passed from His Excellency's hands, even to disallow the Act. But if we were to regard the case for a moment, as a matter of referring to the Supreme Court the question of whether His Excellency should disallow an Act or not, that was a measure of a purely legislative character, and in that regard, under the present state of the law, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has declared that it is not one of their functions to advise the Royal Authority, with regard to legislative Acts, and that they had merely to advise the Crown in matters in which the Crown acts judicially. I might refer also to the Canadian cases which have arisen under that statute. We have had four or five references to the Supreme Court of Canada, and every one of them has been in the line which I have stated. One of them was made under the Canada Temperance Act. It came within the general principle which I am describing. It was incumbent upon His Excellency to decide whether he should instruct his officers of Inland Revenue to enforce the Act, notwithstanding the contention which had been made with regard to its validity, and every step with regard to the enforcement of that Act involved a question of administrative action, on which it was important that His Excellency should be advised. In another case the question was submitted to the court, as to the liability of the Dominion Government to provide for the maintenance of prisoners in certain cases. In another, there was a reference as to the validity of a statute of British Columbia, in relation to the judges living in districts and exercising their jurisdiction in districts, and in that case it was all important for His Excellency to know before he commissioned a judge, whether he commissioned him for the Province at large, or for residence in a particular district of the Province. The validity of the Act having been assailed, it was necessary for His Excellency to be sure of its validity, and to have as definite a decision upon that point as the courts could give, in order that the validity of His Excellency's own acts, in commissioning the judges, should not be brought in question and confusion ensue. was a reference also under the Liquor License Act of 1883. That was made under a special enactment, and it was made for the reasons which I have referred to before: that His Excellency's Government had to put the Act in force, had to instruct its officers to collect the penalties, had to take proceedings before the magistrates to recover those penalties; and before proceeding with those measures, it was deemed proper that His Excellency should be advised as to the validity of the Act. There was another refer- $132\frac{1}{2}$ ence under the Railway Act. That reference was made under a special provision of the statute, and in that case the Railway Committee of the Privy Council desired to be advised as to their authority to make a particular order. These are the references which have been made in Canada so far, and every one of them concerned an administrative act which His Excellency was called on to perform; not one of them concerned the simple question which arose after this matter passed out of His Excellency's hands, relating merely to private interests, or to public curiosity regarding a legal There was likewise a decision by one problem. of my distinguished predecessors in office as to the way in which that Act should be applied; and I may cite that, not only on account of the high authority which it gives me for the course I advised, but also because the particular circumstances in which his report was made furnish a fair illustration of the oppression which would result from references being made in the way the hon. member for North Norfolk contends they ought to be made. In January, 1877, the Provincial Government of New Brunswick called the attention of the Government of Canada to the fact that certain statutes of that Province had been passed—some of them were in force, and one was about to come into force—to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in that Province, and respecting the licensing of houses for that purpose; stating that the House of Assembly was of opinion that the validity of those Acts should be determined by the Supreme Court of Canada, under the Supreme Court Act. The report made by the then Minister of Justice, the present hon member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) on that subject, on the 29th of January, was this:

"It may be laid down, as a general rule, that the power of reference to the Supreme Court by the Governor General in Council should not be exercised in matters which may, in the ordinary course of things, be brought judicially before that tribunal.

"The opinion of the Supreme Court on such a reference would be given without the advantage of hearing argument. Such a disposition of an important and difficult question could hardly be regarded as satisfactory by the parties, while it would be unfair to the judges, who might, in the event of the question coming judicially before them, be embarrassed by their previous action.

"On the whole I recommend that the Lieutenant Governor should be informed that, with every desire to meet the views of his Government, it is thought, for the reasons I have assigned, to be inexpedient to make the proposed

I have assigned, to be inexpedient to make the proposed reference."

And the proposed reference was accordingly not made, and very properly not made. The Provincial Government desired that that question should be tested by the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada. If that opinion were conclusive, then, in the event of the same question arising on any subsequent legislation, a suitor in a Provincial court, when bringing his suit, calling his witnesses, and desiring to have his counsel heard, would find himself precluded by the opinion of the Supreme Court, pronounced at the request of the Government of Canada, and in a case in which, perhaps, no parties having an actual interest had been heard before the court at all, and in which no evidence had been taken. Now, Sir, upon that subject, and for the purpose of showing that the Supreme Court Act was never intended to be used as a means of referring questions which are not simply for the consideration of the executive, but con-cern private rights or private litigation, or moot questions of law, I might refer to another very high authority, the much-despised-by the hon. member for North Norfolk-authority of the law officers of the Crown. In this case the Attorney General for the time being was the present Lord Selborne. The question was an ecclesiastical question, as to whether Bishop Colenso should be prosecuted for heresy, and the difficulty was pressed upon the consideration of the law officers, that there was perhaps no other method of having the rights of the Crown and the right of the accused person defined than by a reference to the Judicial Committee. The opinion is:

"It has been suggested that the Crown, as visitor, or as supreme in causes ecclesiastical, or by virtue, and in exercise, of some other supposed power, may be able, either by commissioners specially appointed, or by means of the Privy Council, to hear and determine the points raised against Dr. Colenso.

"We are unable to find the slightest ground on which "We are unable to find the slightest ground on which this suggestion can be supported.

"The Crown is supreme over all causes ecclesiastical in the same, and in no other sense, and to no greater extent than the Crown is supreme over causes temporal—that is, by law, and by means of the various established courts of law.

"The submission of the Clergy Act (25 Henry VIII, chapter 19) gave no such power to the Crown. Section 4 of that Act made it lawful for the parties grieved by any decision of an ecclesiastical judge in England to appeal to the King in Chancery, for which Court of Appeal the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is now substituted. This is an appellate, and not an original jurisdiction.

"The High Commission Court, established by 1 Elizabeth, chap. 1, is abolished by 16 Charles I, chap. 11, and the revival of the High Commission Court or any similar court is especially provided against by 13 Charles II, the revival of the High Commission Court or any similar court is especially provided against by 13 Charles II, chap. 12.

"With reference to the authorities referred to, intermediate in date between 1 Elizabeth, chap. 1, and 16 Charles I, chap. 11, it is hardly necessary to observe that they state the law as it was in force under the former of these statutes, and which ceased to be in force on the passing of the latter.

"No argument in favor of the power of the Crown can be derived from 3 and 4 William IV, chap. 41, sec. 4, by which it is enacted that it shall be lawful for His Majesty to refer to the Judicial Committee for hearing or consideration, any such other matters as His Majesty shall think fit; and such Committee shall thereupon hear and consider the same, and shall advise His Majesty thereon in manner aforesaid.

"To make this section applicable to the judicial determination of an ecclesiastical matter, would be, in effect, to restore the High Commission Court. The section is to be taken as referring to questions not of judicial cognisance on which the Crown may desire to be solemnly advised by persons conversant with the law.

"The only remaining consideration is whether the merits of the case can be raised on a scire fracias to revoke the letters patent granted to the Bishop of Natal.

"This manner of raising the question between the Bishop of Natal and his opponents was suggested by the Master of the Rolls in the case of the Bishop of Natal vs. Gladstone.

"The only grounds on which the letters patent would Master of the Rolls in the case of the Bishop of Natal vs. Gladstone.

"The only grounds on which the letters patent would be revoked by such a proceeding is, in our opinion, that the letters were ab initio void, as having issued improvidently. This would leave the merits untouched.

"Indeed, if the view taken in the Bishop of Natal vs. Green as to the status of the colonies be correct, the letters patent might possibly be held valid.

"We are, therefore, of opinion that no means at present exist for trying before any tribunal competent to decide the question. whether or no Dr. Colenso, the present Bishop of Natal, has advocated doctrinal opinion not in accordance with the doctrines held by the Church of England; and, assuming the present Bishop of Natal to have been guilty of an ecclesiastical offence, no steps can be taken to bring him, as such Bishop, before any tribunal."

The hon. gentleman will say, I suppose, with regard to that question—a question vitally affecting the position of the Church of England through-reference too, that the Crown officers decided on the special plea of the defendant's attorney, and that Her Majesty's Government ought to have been left to fortify themselves by a reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Let me say, with regard to all that mass of cobwebs and sophistry about special pleas and clandestine references, that the Crown has been advised in this matter as the Crown has been accustomed to be advised on questions of the kind for the last two or three centuries; and the Crown has been advised by men of great distinction in their profession, by men of very high rank, whom the Sovereigns of England have been accustomed to rely upon for more than two centuries in the administration of the affairs of the Colonies of Great Britain. I fail to understand, from the argument the hon. gentleman has presented this afternoon, or from the irrelevant, absurd and obsolete enactments which he has dug out of the back shelves of the Library, anything which would lead us to believe that the men who have pronounced their opinion upon this question are less worthy to advise Her Majesty than those who have advised Her Majesty and her predecessors so well that the exercise of the sovereign power has made the British Empire the illustrious Empire it is. Let me ask upon what points His Excellency could have desired to be advised in this question? The Act was passed by the Legislature of the Province of Quebec on the 12th July; the decision with regard to disallowance was made on the 19th January, 1889; and it was made by no means out of the usual course. I have examined the dates at which Provincial legislation, submitted to the Minister of Justice, has been decided upon from time to time. In a large number of cases, the intervals between the passage of the Acts and their ratification or disallowance were longer than in the present instance, but in twenty or thirty cases the reports of the Minister of Justice were made in shorter periods than that which elapsed between the passage of this Act and the announcement that it would not be disallowed here. The decision was not made out of the usual course, again, because it was made in response to the request of the Lieutenant Governor of the Province, who stated that, for urgent reasons pressed upon his Government, Government desired to be advised at the earliest moment of the view His Excellency the Governor General took upon the question of the validity of that Act, as to whether it would be disallowed or Therefore, between the 12th of July and the 19th of January, moved by the urgent requesta request with which we have never failed to comply, when made by a Provincial Government—we decided that the Act was sound and ought not to be disallowed. Although there were at that time three petitions asking for its disallowance, not one suggested a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. Not one of the petitions which were subsequently presented and laid before this House last Session requested a reference to any court or tribunal whatever; and of the petitions which were before us, when we announced that the Act would not be disallowed, not one suggested a legal objection as arising at all. They only suggested that it should be disallowed upon the general ground of the impolitic character of the legislaout the Empire—that that was a clandestine tion, and not one suggested a question of law Sir John Thompson.

4200

upon which the advice of the Supreme Court of Canada could possibly have been asked. I will not repeat to any extent the discussion which took place last year, in which it was shown that this question of validity was not raised in the Provincial Legislature and that there were no petitions questioning its validity there. The interpretations we put upon the Act were those put upon it by the men who were responsible for passing it. We had the declaration of the head of the Quebec Government of the construction he put upon it, and as to the sense in which he offered it to the House. I need not refer to all that, but the hon. gentleman asks that we be censured for not having made a reference to the Supreme Court before we made the announcement with regard to disallowance, although no man in the country suggested a legal question which could be referred to the Supreme Court, and although not one of the petitions against the Act suggested that it should be so referred. Having announced our opinion that the Act ought not to be disallowed, let me ask in what position we were, as regards disallowance, then?

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In continuing my remarks, I wish for a moment to go back, for the purpose of making good and enlarging a little on one or two points I have already taken. The hon. gentleman who moved the resolution found fault with my statement that certain legislation, upon which he has relied to sustain the views he put forward, was obsolete. He contended that the statute of 10 George IV, which he read to the House at some length, so far from being obsolete, was, fifteen years ago, declared by high constitutional authority to be of the character of an effective statute, placing certain powers in the hands of the Crown, which the Crown might desire to use on a convenient opportunity. In order to show that the statement I have made, notwith-standing the high authority to which the hon. gentleman referred, is borne out by a higher authority, I refer the hon. gentleman to the author, whose name I mentioned a few moments ago, and who makes this observation with respect to the statute of George IV, on which the hon. gentleman has placed so much reliance. After citing at length the provisions of the Catholic Emancipation Act, which is the Act of George IV referred to, and after citing at large the restrictions against the Jesuits coming into the country, he observed:

"These provisions have never been modified, and I believe have been treated ever since they were passed as an absolutely dead letter."

Now, I want to make a few observations to the House in illustration of the position I took as to this matter having practically passed out of the hands of the Executive of Canada when the decision was given as to whether the Act should be disallowed or not. Whatever may be said with regard to the power still remaining with the Governor General as regards a provincial statute after he has announced that an Act should be left to its operation, it would be absolutely unconstitutional, absolutely contrary to the practice which has prevailed both in the mother country and in the colonies, and absolutely restrictive of Provincial rights, that, after making that solemn declaration, in response to the request of the Lieutenant Governor of the Province, that Act should subsequently be disallowed. It is no new case, Sir, at all, that when Provincial legislation is adopted, requiring large expenditure of money, requiring the borrowing of money, requiring the construction of public works, the decision of His Excellency is applied for, to be given immediately before these enterprises are undertaken; but, if the principle is to be established, on the sanction of any majority in this House, or of any considerable proportion of this House, that, when once the announcement has been made that disallowance will not take place, it is still open to the Executive to disallow, then not a single statute of a Province-whether, as I have said in the memorandum, for the construction of a railway or any other public work, whether for the borrowing or payment of any money-can possibly be made effective, even after the solemn announcement of the Governor General that the Act will be left to its operation, until a year has passed by, and the power has absolutely gone of disallowing a Provincial statute. That view, I am confident, will be sustained by this House, and by the opinion of any one who gives the subject an impartial consideration. Therefore, I stand with confidence upon the view that, when once the announcement has been made that disallowance cannot and will not take place, that decision is as absolutely beyond recall, and the statute as fully in operation as if more than a year had elapsed from the date it was assented to by the Provincial authority. I want, however, in this connection, for the purpose of showing how little reason there was to make this reference, to show this House what the principal ground was upon which it was contended that this Act was ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature. I have read carefully through the debate which took place in this House last winter. I did so before I prepared the memorandum which has been challenged. I selected from the speeches made in that debate every point which was taken-whether I thought it worthy of argument or not-so that every argument on that particular question, whether it was made by layman or by lawyer, might be placed before His Excellency. The principal point which was urged last Session, and was especially urged by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), was that the statute incorporating the Society of Jesuits in the Province of Quebec was ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature, and that, therefore, the grant subsequently made to them was of no avail, because it was made to a corporation which did not properly exist under the Act of 1887. I think hon, members will find that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) was very guarded in putting before the House any statement that the Act of 1889 was altra vires of the Legislature which passed it, but his declaration was that the Act of 1887 which incorporated the Order and established the body to which the grant was to be paid, was, to use his own words, not worth the paper it was written on. There could not have been any reference of the Act of 1887 to the Supreme Court. No objection had taken to that statute or to its constitutionality of 1887 to the Supreme Court or any other tribunal, and, in addition to that, the time had passed when it was possible to exercise the power of disallowance before this question was brought up. statute of 1887 had become law as far as it was intra vires of the Province of Quebec, it was beyond our reach, and we were never asked to refer to any court any question whatever in regard to it. As I pointed out before, as far as any constitutional question was concerned, that Act of 1887 was the same as an Act passed in regard to the same body eighteen years before, the validity of which has never been questioned. Therefore we had to consider that, of the Acts that we were asked to refer for the consideration of the Supreme Court, the principal Act had gone into force two years before, and was practically a copy of an Act passed eighteen years before and which had been on the Statute-book unchallenged during that time. As I have already stated, the provision for the reference of statutes to the courts is the same as that passed in England in the reign of William IV, under which Her Majesty can refer any statute to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council for their opinion. pointed out that, after sixty years of the operation of this provision, it has only been applied in seven instances. I called attention to the fact that the limited exercise of the power which is vested in Her Majesty in Council would be significant in regard to the proper use of the like provision in this country. I pointed out that only seven times had that power been acted upon, and that in every case it was in regard to a matter which Her Majesty had to consider as to Her own acts. I would ask the House if it is not significant that, during sixty years, while the Crown has been governing colonial dependencies almost all over the world, in nearly every one of which there has been a Legislature, and each of which has sent annually a volume of statutes in regard to which Her Majesty has had the right of disallowance—is it not significant, that, while thousands and tens of thousand of colonial statutes have gone to England and have been brought under the attention of Her Majesty's advisers as to whether disallowance should be exercised or not, not one of these have been referred in the way proposed here? power of disallowance has been exercised. number of statutes of British North America alone which have been disallowed number upwards of 100; but, notwithstanding the multitude of colonial statutes which had to be considered as to whether they should be disallowed or not, notwithstanding the fact that more than 100 statutes have been disallowed of the British North American Provinces, is it not significant, that with this provision allowing Her Majesty to refer questions to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, not one single case has been submitted to that Committee by Her Majesty in regard to disallowance? That great prerogative of disallowance under which Her Majesty can control a free Legislature in any one of her colonies, was in every case exercised on the responsibility of her advisers, and in no one case did Her Majesty or her advisers seek refuge, by going before a judicial tribunal, from the responsibility which rested upon them in regard to its exercise. not rely for that statement or for the principle involved, simply upon the reported decisions. I thought that, while these seven cases appeared on Sir John Thompson.

"Sir,—I have submitted to the Lord President of the Council your letter of the 9th instant, transmitting a copy of a dispatch from the Governor General of Canada, with enclosures, respecting an Act passed by the Provincial the record as the only cases referred to the Judicial Committee, there might be some others. and I have had the records of the Privy Council searched in order to see whether there might not be one instance amongst the thousands of Colonial statutes of a reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and this is the result:

"In reply to your letter of the 20th January last, I have the honor to inform you that, in the year 1856 a Colonial Bill, which was reserved for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure thereon"—

That is an entirely different matter. That is a case in which Her Majesty is asked to do something relating to her legislative functions.

"was, upon a representation of one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, specially referred by Her Majesty's Order in Council to the Judicial Committee, to report their opinion upon the question whether Her Majesty might lawfully assent thereto. But I am unable to find any case in which a Colonial Bill has been referred to the Judicial Committee on the question of disallowance, and it is to the latter rather than the former case that your letter would appear to point."

We have, then, the significant fact that, with that power possessed by Her Majesty, it has never been used to refer a question of disallowance to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and yet, in this colony, where we have Legislatures which are not really subordinate to our authority, but which are supreme in regard to the subjects assigned to them, it is asked that we should be censured because, in regard to one of the statutes which they passed, we have not made a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada; and although the Act which we were asked to refer had long gone out of our view, because the decision as to disallowance Now, in that had been already pronounced. connection, let me recall to the House the language in which the hon. member, in making his motion, criticised the opinions of the law officers of the Crown, criticised the character of this application to them as clandestine, as an opinion given upon the brief of the defendants' attorney. Why, with regard to that great multitude of colonial statutes as to whether they should be allowed or disallowed, and as to a great multitude of questions with regard to colonial administration irrespective of allowance or disallowance of colonial statutes, it was upon the opinion of just such men as have pronounced on this question, the law officers of England, that Her Majesty has been advised; and it has been reserved to this late day for any colonial authority whatever, and I might almost say for any member of a colonial Legislature to impugn the respect which is due to the high authority of the law officers who advise the Crown with regard to colonial questions. In addition to the letter which I have just read as to the search which has been made for any precedents in the office of the Privy Council in England, let me refer to the letter of the registrar of that tribunal, with regard to the New Brunswick question, the letter of Mr. Reeve, dated from the Privy Council Office in England, 13th December, 1872. There cil Office in England, 13th December, 1872. was a request that the validity of the New Brunswick Act with regard to separate schools should be referred for the opinion of that Committee, and the answer which was made by the registrar, was this:

Legislature of New Brunswick, with reference to Common Schools, and requesting to know whether the opinion of the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on this question han properly be obtained.

"It appears to his Lordship that as the power of confirming or disallowing Provincial Acts is vested by the statute in the Governor General of the Dominion of Canada acting under advice of his constitutional adviser, there is nothing in this case which gives to Her Majesty in Council any jurisdiction over this question: though it is conceivable that the effect and validity of this Act may at some future time be brought before Her Majesty on an appeal from the Canadian Courts of Majesty, on an appeal from the Canadian Courts of Justice.

"This being the fact, His Lordship is of opinion that Her Majesty cannot, with propriety, be advised to refer to a Committee of Council in England a question which Her Majesty in Council has at present no authority to determine, and on which the opinion of the Privy Council would not be binding on the parties in the Dominion of Canada."

Now, there is a distinction between that precedent The hon, member has challenged us here for not referring to our own court a question as to the validity of an Act which at one time we could have disallowed, and the statement in the letter in question is that Her Majesty could not refer that Act to Her Privy Council for an opinion inasmuch as the question of disallowance was one for the Governor General and not for Her Majesty. That, however, does not go to the essence of the question, because when the question of disallowance was over, as it was on the 19th of January last, the demand was that we should refer an abstract question of law with regard to the validity of an existing Act, and if it were proper that we should refer that abstract question of law for decision, in order to satisfy public interest and public concern as to its validity, to our Supreme Court, it was equally proper that the reference should have been made in that New Brunswick case to Her Majesty's Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to settle the abstract question of law which arose there, irrespective of the question of disallowance. Now I come to the point which is indicated in a report of the hon. member for West Durham, which I referred to before dinner, the point that a reference ought never to be made when another remedy can be found. That hardly needs to be sustained by argument in a deliberative assembly. The principle was established too long ago in the mother country to need argument now. The principle that the settlement of disputes by litigation should be left to the ordinary tribunals of the country, to the ordinary courts of justice of the country, is as old in the mother country as constitutional liberty itself and the love of self-government. There existed in England two tribunals which for a long time exercised the jurisdiction which the member for Norfolk thinks we should have exercised herethe Star Chamber, having criminal jurisdiction, and the Court of High Commission, having jurisdiction over ecclesiastical offences. They were not the valuable works of a reformer like the hon. member for Norfolk, they were the works of aristocrats and Tories of the old school, who lived and ruled in the reigns of the Tudors and the Stuarts. But, Sir, one of the most valuable reforms which were accomplished long ago in England, was the complete overturning of those tribunals in order that justice might be administered in the ordinary courts at the option of the suitor, in the court of his choice, to go from the lowest court to the highest, by the steps which are pointed out by the established laws of the country. Not only were those tribunals overturned, but there is legislation absolutely prohibiting any attempt to erect them again by the Crown or anybody else. These were tribunals into which, at the instance of the Crown, at the instance of the Government, and for the purpose oftentimes of escaping political responsibility, litigants were brought, and when they were overturned, and when legislation was adopted preventing their restoration at any time as absolutely unconstitutional, it was in order that the people of the country might have recourse to the established tribunals and the established course of procedure of the country, to litigate their rights in the tribunals of their own choice, where their counsel could be heard, where their testimony could be produced, and where the investigation that took place could be aided by the ordinary procedure of the law. The hon member for Norfolk has expressed a preference for this high tribunal of the Supreme Court for this very singular reason, among others, as he stated it in his resolution:

" If the matter had been referred to the Supreme Court the question, after the submission of evidence and full argument by counsel on both sides, could have been definitely determined by such court."

The hon, member has made again such a fundamental mistake that I think we must gravely doubt his authority to criticise the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, because he is not aware that there is no provision on the Statute-book by which one tittle of evidence can be taken when such a reference is to be made to the courts, the fact being that under the present system the question would be decided there absolutely without evidence, and according to the practice of the court, without reasons being given for the decision. I have only to point out now what other remedies existed as indicating the reasons why this power should not be exercised. I am not driven to do that except to satisfy the condition contained in the dispatch of my predecessor, the hon. member for West Durham, because in the report of those distinguished authorities whom I read from before dinner, headed by Lord Selborne, then Sir Roundell Palmer, the Crown is advised against a reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in a case in which, the report goes on to say, there is absolutely no other remedy. But for the purpose of satisfying the rule laid down by the hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), let me point out to the House that there were methods by which that question could be decided in the ordinary courts of law. In the first place, it was open to any person who had a special interest, and when I say a special interest I merely mean to distinguish between the interest which the ordinary citizen takes in current events and that which a man takes in his property or rights—it was open to any person who had any interest or any right in regard to property or moneys concerned to bring the question before the courts of justice; and it is a remarkable fact that at that very time when application was being made to us, there was a suit pending in the courts of the Province in which this Act was passed, in which that very defence of the unconstitutionality of the Act of incorporation was set up, and was then being tried and determined. I may be told that that suit was one commenced at the instance of the Society of Jesus itself, and that the fate of that suit might depend on the disposition of that society to go forward with it. That would not affect the principle. I might answer that objection by saying that the suit has gone forward, that the point has been decided by the ordinary tribunals of that Province. But all that is apart from the question. If that suit were to fail, other suits might be brought from time to time, and we had to consider in that regard, not only that the remedy existed, by which the question could be brought before the tribunals of the country, but that we would be, to a certain extent, forestalling the decision of that and any other suit by seeking in this irregular method a decision from the highest court of appeal in the country, before which that question would subsequently come in the ordinary course of justice. There was actually, however, another and a very plain remedy for those who desired this question to be tested in the courts. The Code of the Province of Quebec provides that it shall be the absolute duty of the Attorney General of the Province, when any persons are improperly exercising the functions of a corporation, to take proceedings in the courts by which their right to exercise those functions as a corporation will be tested. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), constantly pressed with that fact this afternoon, made an attempt to answer it. He said it would have been vain to go to the Attorney General of the Province and ask him to litigate that question. I say no, because we have no right to assume that under the high command which says it shall be his duty to do so, he would refuse to do it. A second time I say no, because the request was never made; and it is unfair to any officer of the Crown to say that he would not do his duty until, at all events, he was called upon to do it. But I say no the third time, for the reason that, in the suit brought at the instance of the Society of Jesus, the Attorney General of the Province has intervened, and has submitted himself and his Government to the judgment of the courts of the Province, and ultimately to this very tribunal, the Supreme Court of Canada, for the purpose of having that question of validity of this Act tested, and the House will remember in that connection the bearing of the Act of incorporation upon the Act for the settlement of the estates. The Act for the settlement of the estates would fail entirely if the Incorporation Act were invalid, because the former Act provided that the money should be paid to the corporation, and if it were decided there was no corporation to re-ceive it, the grant must fail. We have, therefore, a clear case in which there was not only an existing remedy in the ordinary course of justice by which this question could be raised, but we had the remedy actually being applied at the time this application was made to us. In saying all this with respect to the inadvisability of a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada under the provisions of that statute, excepting of such questions as his Excellency may desire to be advised upon for his own action, let me call attention to the fact that this was not by any means the case of an application for a reference to that court of an appeal under the provisions of the British North America Act, by which a minority, believing that an injustice has been done them, claims that remedial legisla-stated as regards Canadian authorities and prece-Sir John Thompson.

tion should take place or a remedial order should be made. Upon that question, which is entirely distinct from this, it might have been said that His Excellency and his advisers had duties to perform in relation to giving or withholding remedial orders, and with respect to functions which should devolve upon this Parliament in case the remedial orders were disobeyed. To put it a little more plainly. In the provisions of the British North America Act, which provide that Provincial Legislatures shall have the exclusive right to legislate with respect to education, there is a limitation of their powers with respect to the rights of the minorities secured by law at the time of the Union; and there is this provision as to the rights of minorities accruing after the Union, that if those are invaded, there may be an appeal to the Governor in Council from the Provincial authority, and the Governor in Council may in such a case make remedial orders, and if those orders are not obeyed, this Parliament will then have power to deal with the subject of education quoad those orders and quoad those grievances. An application was made, in point of fact, by the religious minority in Quebec, claiming that the rights of the minority had been invaded. That question was dealt with upon a different principle. were never asked to refer that question, we never heard that appeal, we never refused to make a reference, we never refused to hear the appeal. The petitioners presented their appeal, and it having been referred to myself, I recommended that a day should be appointed on which the appeal should be heard; and it is quite possible that if the claimants had established anything like a case for the interference of the Governor in Council on the ground that the rights of the Protestant minority of Quebec had been infringed, a reference of the question as to whether it was an interference or not might have been made to the Supreme Court of Canada. But before the day came which was appointed for the hearing of the appeal, the appellants withdrew the appeal, and they withdrew it on account of the statement made by the Premier of Quebec that the redress they desired would be conceded without any appeal being made. Therefore, so far as that question is concerned, it is not only distinct, but it must be dealt with on different principles, and we are in no way responsible for not having made a reference with respect to that appeal, or not having given any redress with respect to it. The point has likewise been mentioned by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), which I shall only mention in passing, that this whole question of allowance and disallowance of the statute, after His Excellency had announced his decision on 19th January last, was discussed and debated at great length in this House. On the division of this question 188 members declared that the Government ought not to be directed to disallow that Act, as against 13 who voted on the other side, and notwithstanding the observations of the hon. member for North North folk (Mr. Charlton) I do contend that, disallowance being out of the question, to have referred this question to the courts of the country would have been to attempt to thwart the will of this House and to attempt to reverse the decision which this House had arrived at with respect to the question of disallowance. The practice being what I have dents, the practice being what I have stated with respect to the mother country, it may be asked of us why it was necessary, under these circumstances, that we should seek advice in the mother country and should submit to the law officers of the Crown questions with respect to disallowance, and with respect to a reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. It is necessary on that point that I should be perfectly frank. I never had, since the day I took the responsibility of reporting upon that statute to His Excellency in such a sense that when my report was approved the announcement was made that the Act would not be disallowed, the slightest doubt as to the propriety of that report and as to its soundness in point of law. I was not able to advise, nor did any of my colleagues desire I should advise, that my opinion should be reviewed on that question, and, the discussion which took place in this House, as well as the decision arrived at, would have removed any doubt on the subject, I think, even if a doubt had In this instance, however, a existed before. somewhat extraordinary course, although I do not find fault with it for a moment, was adopted by persons throughout the country who desired the Act to be disallowed, notwithstanding the announcement of His Excellency, that disallowance would not take place. The procedure which was adopted justifies, I think, the statement which I have made with regard to its being extraordinary, although in using that word I am very far from finding any fault with those who, rightly or wrongly, were under the impression that I was swayed by my own private opinions in tendering the advice which His Excellency had acted upon. While I feel that that impression was unjust to me, I was only too glad when His Excellency was disposed to receive the deputation and to give them his answer upon the question. When His Excellency subsequently took the course, not by our advice and not by our request, but for the purpose of removing, if it could be removed, the false impression which existed in this country, with regard to that Act, and with regard to his having made a mistake in his decision concerning it—when he took the course of requesting the Colonial Office to ascertain the opinion of the law officers of the Crown upon the constitutionality of the Act and likewise upon the propriety of making a reference of that question to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; we expressed no opinion against such a course, the fullest extent any response We accept to responsibility which ought constitutionally to devolve upon us with regard to what His Excellency did, but we are not to be accused of inconsistency in having declined to make a reference to our court. are not to be accused of any want of respect to that court, because having decided that a reference ought not be made, His Excellency thought proper for very wise reasons indeed, to ask that the Secretary of State for the Colonies should consult those officers whom Her Majesty in Council is accustomed to consult with regard to such matters. Having done that, and having submitted the two questions: first, whether the legislation was intravires of the Provincial Parliament, and secondly, whether there was any question to refer to Her Majesty's Judicial Committee upon that point. I think that the answer received was one that was willing to be convinced, or who was willing to be satisfied; and that the persons who are influenced by the feelings which the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has described as being more resentful and more dissatisfied than ever with that legislation, in consequence of the opinion of Her Ma-jesty's advisers in regard to it, are persons who are dissatisfied and not convinced, because they are unwilling to be otherwise, and because the opinion was against them. I fancy that we should have heard very little from them, with regard to the propriety of our course, or with regard to the force and value of that opinion, if the opinion had been otherwise than it was.

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot say, Mr. Speaker, that it was any source of gratification to me to learn that such a motion was to be made as that which is now attracting the attention of the House, nor am I certain, that any good results will flow from a renewal of the discussion upon the Jesuit question. In the observations I am about to make, although as hon. members will perceive, I am obliged to differ from some of the views which have just been expressed by the hon. Minister of Justice; and I dare say also, to differ from some of the views of gentlemen with whom I usually act; I do not desire to say a single word, in a sense which might aggravate any feeling of bitterness which may exist throughout this country with reference to this subject. I have felt from the beginning, that the question should be treated by those on either side who take opposing views, in a spirit, which I am sorry to say has not animated a great many of those who have acted on the lines of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). I have felt that it was a question which was pregnant with grave and important issues, and I do not deny in the slightest degree, the right, and even the duty, of those who feel as this gentleman did, to raise and to agitate it; I believe, however, that it should have been raised and agitated in a different tone and in a different spirit from that which many of them have evinced, if any good results were to ensue; nay, rather, if great calamities were to be averted. The questions which are immediately before us do not, I think, justify any severe motion of censure on the Government, nor do I think the motion of the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is to be considered as such a motion of censure, but rather as an expression of opinion adverse to the view which the Government adopted in this matter. Although I do not think the circumstances would justify a severe motion of censure, yet there are questions of high consequence involved, upon which there well may be differences of opinion, both upon an important constitutional point which the hon. Minister of Justice has advanced to-night—as he advanced it before in some of the State papers which he has produced upon this subject-and also upon a point which is certainly disputable, but I think, also, of greater practical importance. That is the question of political expediency, in the high and proper sense of that term, the question of policy, which is at issue between the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) on the one hand, and the Administration on the other. Now with reference to the constitutional point. I am unable for my part to accede to the full convincing and satisfactory to every one who was extent, to the argument made by the hon. Minister of Justice, as to the effect of the action of the Executive during the currency of the twelve months within which the power of disallowance may be exercised, or to his view that this power cannot, after a declaration of a contrary opinion, be exercised during the twelve months with reference to a Provincial statute. The hon. Minister of Justice does not indeed deny that what he calls the bare power of disallowance continues. It would, I think, be absolutely impossible to affirm that that power had been blotted out. The law gives the power to the Executive to disallow at any time within twelve months from the receipt of the authentic announcement of the statute, and the power is therefore exercisible, at any period short of the expiry of the twelvemonths. There is no power whatever to allow The Provincial statute derives its force a statute. and vitality from the assent of the Lieutenant Governor of the Province. It is, if in the power of the Province, valid, operative and living from the hour of that assent, and it requires no other allowance in order to give it operation. There is no right in the Executive of Canada to assume to allow it at all. The right of the Executive of Canada is purely of a destructive order: it can destroy, but it cannot give validity; it can obliterate by exercising the power of disallow-ance, but it cannot vitalise by its approval. If that be so, and if the Constitutional Act awards to the Executive an authority to exercise their power up to the expiration of the twelve months, no prior expression of opinion on the part of he Executive, however positive, as to the validty of the Act, as to its expediency, as to its being such as ought not be disallowed, can absolutely take away all right and authority to disallow within the twelve months which the law and the constitution give. Sir, suppose during a meeting of Parliament, while the people's representatives are here assembled, the twelve months not having yet expired, that a motion is placed in your hands, Mr. Speaker, or on the Notice paper, for an Address to His Excellency paying him to disallow a particular local statute; and suppose that during the debate, or before the notice is reached, the Executive, anticipating the period of or the termination of the debate, should exercise their right to pass an Order in Council declaring that in their opinion the Act ought to be left to its operation; could such a course as that thwart, annul or affect the power of Parliament to express its opinion by Address, requesting His Excellency to exercise his power to disallow? Why, the very circumstance that there are twelve months within which this power can be exercised, and that there must be, according to the law, a session of Parliament within twelve months, secures always to this Parliament its right, if it chooses, to intervene effectively in these matters. The Parliament of the country has a power not merely to approve and to condemn, but it has also a more important power with reference to every political and executive act—it has a power to An approval may be gratifying to some, a condemnation may be gratifying to others, but neither the approval nor the condemnation of an accomplished act serves any purpose save that of criticism. The power of advice is the great power of Parliament, a power to be exercised with reserve, but to be maintained in efficiency; and to preserve effectively that power, it is necessary that domain of Parliament to advise within the twelve months, no matter what the Executive may do, whatever action in the opinion of Parliament, the interest of the country requires. It is of little use for Parliament to say to Ministers, who have decided that they think an Act ought to be allowed: "Gentlemen, we think you are wrong; we condemn you; we censure you. Are we to be told that if the twelve months still remain unexpired, we may condemn the Administration, forsooth, but the Act must remain operative; that we cannot make our advice effective; that we cannot take a step which will cause that to be done which the great council of the country decides in the interest of the country ought to be done? The power of Parliament itself would be thwarted by the proposition of the hon. Minister of Justice. I admit that there may be cases in which a great local convenience may be demonstrated to exist in favor of an earlier expression of opinion on the part of the executive as to the character of a local act; there may be such cases of public convenience as distinguished from party convenience. I have known a good many curious things to happen in connection with this question of disallowance. I have known a case in which, from motives of party convenience, a Lieutenant Governor held back a Provincial Act for monthsaye, I believe for years—just in order that its fate might be left in doubt, it being inconvenient for the Federal Executive at the moment to deal with it as it intended ultimately to deal with it. I have known, on the other hand, a case—I was myself an actor, I may say a victim, in it—in which while a motion was on the Order paper for an address to His Excellency, for strong reasons assigned, praying that he would not exercise the power of disallowance with reference to a Provincial statute, that motion being, for some little time, delayed by the exigency of other business, a day or two before it was reached, the Executive acted and disallowed the statute; and when I rose, instead of making my motion, I had to say: "This motion has been anticipated by the Executive doing in the interval, between the time the notice was placed on the paper and the time when it could come on, the act which I proposed we should pray His Excellency should not be done; and, therefore, I have no motion to make." So I say we have seen strange tricks played with reference to the exercise and non-exercise of this power of disallowance, for the purpose of party conveni-But I admit that public, as distinct from party convenience, may indicate that early action is important; and where it does; and when the Executive takes the responsibility of coming to a conclusion in advance of the expiration of the time, I admit that the utility of coming to such a conclusion would be greatly weakened if it were understood that after all the conclusion meant just nothing at all-if it were understood that the exercise of the power of the Executive after that time, within the twelve months, should be absolutely free, should be deemed proper, otherwise than under very exceptional circumstances. But I hold that the hand of the Executive is not so absolutely bound, but that the occurrence of some exceptional circumstances, the development of some new state of facts, the creation of some new description of policy, a change of the administration, perwe should deem that it has not passed beyond the chance, with all its effect upon the politics of the country, should entitle the Executive, under special circumstances, to execute the duty and power of disallowance for which the constitution gives twelve months, at any time within that period. The power remains. In this particular case, Sir, the decision was reached at a very early time, absolutely and relatively. The hon, gentleman has said, that in looking over the records of the past twenty-three years, he finds some twenty cases in which the power was exercised earlier. As compared with the total number of cases in which the decision of the Executive has been reached, twenty cases are almost an infinitesimal proportion. In this case, I think it would have been wiser to have deferred the decision. I agree that that is a question on which opinions may differ. But my own opinion was, as it is now, that it would have been wiser to have deferred, at any rate not to have anticipated it. The first mutterings of the storm were even then audible; the Lodges were even then moving; some petitions had been sent in; other petitions were circulating; the public ferment had commenced and was increasing; and Parliament was about assembling; when the action was taken. It was possibly taken in the hope that such decisive action, as it is now stated to be, would quell the incipient agitation; that the Government supporters, at any rate, throughout the country, would no longer, seeing the matter was decided, press their objecseeing the matter was decided, press their objections; and that many people would say, to quote a homely proverb, "it is no use crying over spilt milk." If that were the idea, it turned out to be a very mistaken idea, because it was not the conception of the people at large that within the period of twelve months the decision was find or fatal. It was their conthis decision was final or fatal. It was their conception that circumstances might still be brought forward which would render it proper for the Executive to take, and at any rate for Parliament to advise, that action which the Executive had, so far, thought fit not to take. I thought, then, and I think now, that it would have been the wiser course to have waited, and to have allowed the subject to be ventilated more fully and freely before taking action. The ventilation has taken place, notwithstanding the action; and it has taken placeall the more violently for the attempted repression; and in a way and at a time which have greatly complicated the difficulties of the country. So much with reference to that point, and to the various positions which appear to be taken by the hon. Minister of Justice upon it. Without attempting a criticism in detail of those papers of his, to which I have referred, I may point out one blemish in the hon. gentleman's statement, which, I think, he himself will concede exists, in that part in which he is adverting to this point, and is accumulating objections which he conceives to exist to the proposition that the right of disallowance may be exercised after the announcement that the Act is thought unobjectionable. He says, that on that assumption even the Supply Bill of a Province could not be safely acted on until the expiration of the year, by which time the supplies would have lapsed. The hon. Minister of Justice forgot for the moment that the effect of disallowance is only to annul the Act from the time of the disallowance, and not from an hour earlier, and that whatever may have been done under the Act up to that time is well done. He forgot that moneys can be by a Provincial Legislature is and will be felt to be paid under a Supply Bill with perfect safety up to the hour of disallowance, and that there is not the slightest difficulty in acting upon a Supply Bill, even although in every case the Administration of the Dominion were to determine that they would never pronounce upon a local Act until the expiration of the twelve months, and were then to disallow the Supply Bill; and I will prove the case to you. In an early year in the Province of Ontario, a Supply Bill was passed which contained one objectionable provision, involving the payment of a permanent extra allowance to the judges of the Superior Court of Ontario, of some thousands in all. The hon. the Minister of Justice of that day, the present First Minister, decided that that provision was so objectionable that it must go. The then Attorney General of Ontario, a tolerably firm, not to say an obstinate man, as the First Minister knows, decided that it should not go by his consent. What did the Minister of Justice of that day do? He stayed his hand; he allowed all the supplies to be paid; he waited until after the lapse of the twelve months, of which the Minister of Justice of this day speaks; and when all the supplies had been paid, the Act remaining valid all that time, then he disallowed it. And that clause which contained the provision for the payment of judges in future years, went with the rest of the Act. But the payments were all made, and well made; and the trifling inconvenience which the Minister of Justice of this day suggests would arise, is found by practical experience to have no existence what-The hon, gentleman suggested that we are to suppose the case of an Act authorising the borrowing of money. I say if there is an Act authorising the borrowing of money, and if money is borrowed under that Act, and if, after that borrowing has taken place, the Act is disallowed, what The First had been done under it remains valid. Minister shakes his head, but it is perfectly plain I am right. Suppose a Provincial Act, authorising a loan, suppose the bonds of the Province given for it and the money received, will anybody seriously contend that the act of the Minister of Justice and the Privy Council of the Dominion, occurring later, annulling this Act, would render the loan void?

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It would destroy the security.

Mr. BLAKE. No; the security is in existence; it is made; it has passed; it is issued; and $\hat{\mathbf{I}}$ denythat the disallowance of the Act would destroy the security. I admit, however, that if there be an Act authorising the construction of public works, of which, as in almost all cases, only a part can be accomplished within the time, the disallowance of the Act would theoretically cause inconvenience, as people might be averse to undertake such contracts, not being quite sure whether they would be allowed to finish the work. But such inconveniences are more theoretical than practical; for, in the vast bulk of cases in which there is provincial legislation, there never is any question, or risk, or doubt, about dis-allowance at all. It is only in view of exceptional cases that the doubt and difficulty-the shadow of doubt-as to disallowance at all exists. In the great and increasing bulk of cases, and I hope and trust the number and proportion will swell more and more as the years go by, an Act, when passed at once as sound and free from attack by the act of the Executive of the Dominion as if the twelve Therefore, I maintain that months had elapsed. the power of disallowance remains; and may, if the good of this country requires that it should be exercised, be exercised at any time within the period of twelve months, and that no premature determination of the Executive, as to what they think is right or politic, can absolutely divest them or their successors, or the Parliament of the country from the obligation and the power to do right, until the period given by the statute for action has expired. These conditions, I conceive, existed on the present occasion, and it was quite competent to this Parliament to review the decision of the Executive, and to come to a conclusion, one way or the other, as to whether this Act should or should not be disallowed, notwithstanding the Order in Council. I aver that this Parliament retains within the twelve months that power, even after the Executive has acted; but I agree that it is a power to be exercised only under exceptional circumstances. As to the principles upon which the power of disallowance should be exercised, with reference to statutes which are ultra vires, on the ground that they are ultra vires, I stated my views only the other day, and I pointed out that, although the cases might be rare, cases there were in which it was agreed that ultra vires Acts might properly be disallowed on that ground, and I have thought always that this statute came within that category. and that, if ultra vires, it should have been disallowed. I do not enter on the constitutional objections which have been taken to the statute in times past, and which have, to some extent, been repeated to-day by my hon. friend from North Nor-Indeed, after his frank folk (Mr. Charlton). statement, perhaps not highly complimentary to this Chamber, that there were not to be found in it twenty men who could decide reasonably well whether the statute was constitutional or not, I came to the conclusion that it would be of very little use to argue this question, and I came to this other conclusion, I must admit, that whatever else my hon. friend might have established, or failed in establishing, he had satisfactorily proved this at any rate, that he was not one of the twenty. I say that I do not enter into these constitutional objections, of which one was the question whether the Act offended against the 93rd section of the British North America Act—an objection which I thought not well founded, and which, if any weight-attached to it at any time, has been, as the hon. Minister of Justice has said, solved. I thought, and still think, that the other objections were equally unfounded. If I had thought differently, I certainly would have voted differently from the way in which I voted last Session; but, thinking as I did, and as I do, that the Act was intra vires of the Legislature, I would, under like circumstances, repeat the vote I gave last Session. I gave that vote in the belief that it was a sound vote in defence of the Canadian constitution, and in defence of Provincial rights and liberties, a vote which in my opinion was eminently safe and beneficial for all the Provinces, and especially safe and beneficial for, however unpopular it might be amongst, my own fellow-countrymen of the Province of Ontario. But, while this was and is my opinion, I also thought, before that Session closed, that there ought to have been, under the circumstances, an were less satisfactory than they might have Mr. BLAKE.

effort made to refer to judicial authorities the decision of these legal points. I did not believe it was well that we should, in the conditions of this question as they existed during that Session, and as they became more obviously apparent as the Session went on, assume to conclude this question finally by our own judgments. I referred the other dayand, I admit, with reference, with obvious reference, to those very conditions—to that state of public opinion and to those agitations which, in my judg. ment, would render it highly proper and expedient to refer legal questions of this kind to a judicial tribunal. Those conditions, I believed then, and I believe now, existed in this case. As I stated the other day, it is not necessarily decisive against such a reference that the Executive or the Parliament, or both, should be of the opinion that the law is intra vires, and that they should even have decided, that pending the reference, they will treat it as intra vires. That state of things does not at all necessarily preclude you from adopting the view that it might be wise, and politic, and expedient, and in the public interest to obtain a judicial solution of the legal question. I think that is very obvious; and I conceive that it is not necessary now to do more than to refer to certain precedents which have occurred. In the New Brunswick school question, what was the course pursued? The Executive decided that the New Brunswick school law was intra vires of the New Brunswick Legislature. This Parliament decided, by a very large majority, that it was intra vires of that Legislature. In that case, then, you found the Executive and the Parliament both declaring that it was intra vires, and both declining to exercise the power of disallowance; but at the same time, you found the Legislature deciding, and the Executive concurring, in the decision to obtain the view of high judicial authorities as to whether that Act was intra vires or ultra vires. I read, the other day, the views expressed by hon. gentlemen opposite, then in office, though the decision was arrived at under a motion of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie), as to the propriety of referring that question to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council or the law officers. At that time, I need hardly say there was no Supreme Court. Then, again, in the case of the Liquor License Act, there was an Act passed by this Parliament under the auspices of gentlemen opposite. The Executive believed it to be a legal Act; the House believed it to be a legal Act; and expressed that view by large majorities. House supported the Executive in the view that it was a wise and beneficial as well as valid Act. the Executive promoted at the instance of the House a measure to refer that Act, which was believed both by the Executive and the House to be legal, to ${ m the}\,{ m judicial}\,{ m authority}\,{ m to}\,{ m ascertain}\,{ m whether}\,{ m it}\,{ m was}\,{
m legal}$ So I prove by these two cases, by the practice and the views of hon. gentlemen opposite, that it does not follow that, because the Executive believes the law to be intravires, and the House, following the lead of the Executive, believes it to be intra vires, and because both act meanwhile on that view, you are precluded, if the public interest in any view requires it, from seeking further light, either to settle the question or to quiet public apprehensions. No doubt the machinery at that time provided was inadequate and the results been, but even then, as in the case of last Session, the machinery might have been improved. and, even though the machinery was unimproved, it was better than nothing, and good results for the immediate questions were obtained in the public interests-excellent practical results in the New Brunswick school case and also in the liquor license case. If such a decision had been obtained in this matter, I believe it would have been generally accepted, and an agitating question in some of its most agitating elements would have been so far settled. Therefore I deem it by no means inconsistent with my expression, if not by voice yet by vote last Session, contemporaneously with the expression of other hon. gentlemen which was concurred in by me, that this Act was intra vires of the Legislature which passed it, to say that I thought, as I did think, that we held ourselves free, if the circumstances of the case required it, to seek and obtain that further light to which I have referred. And so holding, it was, further, my view, last Session, that it was our public duty, as far as possible, to elimimate from this controversy the legal questions, and to provide for their disposition in some way by legal authorities; and it was my opinion that, as in the New Brunswick school case, and I may add the Liquor License case, the Government might well, at the instance of the Legislature, assent to and promote legislation or parliamentary provision which would have secured that result. Under these circumstances, having been unable, owing to circumstances, to take part in the debate, and having been obliged to leave my place here, it became more and more clear to my mind that a great public good would flow from the adoption of that course by this Parliament; and in the hope that it might be done at the instance of the Executive of the day, and having regard to the special circumstances of the case, I thought that I was not unduly taking a liberty when, during last Session, I made a communication to a leading gentleman on the other side of the House, and to a leading gentleman on this side of the House. On the 26th April, 1889, I took the liberty of telegraphing to a leading gentleman opposite in these terms:

I telegraphed to a leading gentleman on this side of the House, and wrote to him later on the same day as follows:—

"It has for some time been pressing itself more and more upon my mind that some of those who are engaged in the fomentation of the present agitation are taking an undue advantage by their plan of presenting, as a main element of the discussion, their views of the legal questions on the validity of this legislation. They inflame the public mind in various ways; and they invite that tribunal so highly inflamed, and at the same time so imperfectly informed on the legal issues, to adopt their opinions on the latter, and to reach conclusions on the whole subject largely based on these opinions. In the case of the New Brunswick School Act we recognised the strong feeling and the deep interest of a substantial minority of the population as a reason for governmental and parliamentary action towards obtaining an authoritative settlement of the legal question. In the case of the Temperance Act we did the same thing, and there are other precedents. I think we might now act with great public advantage on the same lines. Had the complainants invited such action by a motion, I, for one, would have supported it. They have now had every opportunity to invite it; it has become plain that they do not intend to do so. But their inaction does not disentitle us to act so as to afford relief to the public anxiety they are creating: nor does it relieve us of our responsibility. There is a special reason for early and unusual action in the shortness of the time now remaining before the term for possible disallowance; though this is not a governing consideration. The aim should be to get the decision, upon argument, of the Judicial Committee. I know there are difficulties; but I think, that the representations of the Government, based upon parliamentary action, may over-rule them. At any rate the effort will be useful. Should it fail, there remain the Supreme Court and the Imperial Law Officers. I cannot see any harm that can result from an honest attempt to procure a speedy solution of the legal questions; I see great harm to result from the continuance of the situation with these questions unsolved. There is no impropriety in our calling for an authoritative solution, even though we have opinions of our own. The Government acted on this view in the New Brunswick School case. Assuming the sincerity of all the agitators (and I believe many of them to be sincere) they will all be glad that this question should be put in a train for easy and rapid solution; though some of them may be sorry that they did not propose the plan, and may accordingly deery it. My only object is to contribute, if in the least degree I can, towards the settlement of questions, whose agitation, in the temper and spirit now shown in many quarters, seem to me most lamentable. There are difficulties, great enough in our future, difficulties which we must meet, not shirk. But they demand treatment in a very different spirit from that now frequently evinced, if a fortunate solution is to be reached. For the moment, it seems to me, the best we can do for our country is to grapple with that part of the present problem, capable of not apprehend that the great body of the Roman Catholies, remembering how we acted in the case of

That was the view which I took leave to state in the only way which was open to me at that time, a view, I may add, which I have ever since entertained, and which I believe subsequent events have rendered more clearly evident to be the true one. Now, the Minister of Justice has adverted to a specialty attending the application which was made by a private individual, I think Graham by name, for a reference to the Supreme Court, a specialty in respect of which I conceive that the Minister of Justice was entitled to speak-that it was a proposition to refer the question to the Supreme Court after the period for disallowance had expired. I consider that the point of time may make a very serious difference between an earlier and a later proposition. There are also some other observations made by the Minister of Justice with reference to that particular proposition from which I do not propose to dissent. I do not understand this motion to be, it certainly does not read as being, based upon the question of Mr. Graham's application; it is a general statement as to what, in the opinion of this House, the Government should have done. In my opinion, as you will have just learned by what I have read, they should have done even more than what this motion calls for. I think, as a question of political expediency in the true sense of that term, as a question of policy, it would have been well to invite the House to take action in the way of seconding, and facilitating, and effectuating the reference, in the way, as I put it last Session, of making parliamentary provision for such reference. Having failed to do that, the next best thing, in my opinion, was to have referred it to the Supreme Court, and in referring it to the Supreme Court, in the circumstances in which the country was placed, and for the purpose of obtaining further light within the period remaining for disallowance, I believe they would have done well, though I think they would have done done well, though I think they not still better to have adopted the parliamentary course to which I have referred. The hon. gentleman has adverted to a report of mine upon an application from New Brunswick with reference to a local Act, in which the proposition was from the authorities of New Brunswick, that we should use this particular power to obtain an opinion from the Supreme Court as to the validity of that Act, not at all with reference to the question of disallowance, nor for any purpose of the Federal Executive at all, but in order to obtain a short and easy cut to a decision, by the appellate court, of a question perfectly easy of solution in the ordinary way. So far from the cases being parallel in any respect, they differ in almost every respect. I have stated the character and object of that New Brunswick application. But as to this case now in hand, I have pointed out to you that during last Session, and after last Session, the reference of which I speak might have been made by the Executive, of its own motion, or at the instance of Parliament, for the purpose to which I have referred, for the purpose of enlightening them as to the course they should take. And as to the possibilities of there being an easy and rapid mode of obtaining a judicial decision on the case in hand, the Minister of Justice confined his observations, as far as I could gather his argument, to the question of the validity of the Jesuits' Incorporation Act and did not touch the other questions which are suggested. He said that as to that Act there was a method; that the Attorney General of the Province of Quebec might have been called on to deal with that question, and that the Society of Jesus itself in a libel suit, while it did not raise the question as to its incorporation, was yet resisted by the defendant who did raise it. By this time I believe, within a day or two, we have had the first decision of a single judge in the court of first instance on some preliminary stage of the trial of that case; and the decision is in favor of the incorporation; but the end is not yet; and after all that has been done, and all the time which has elapsed, the other questions which have been raised, be their weight what you please, remain untouched by that decision and incapable, so far as I can see, by any easy process certainly, and not by any process at all that I am aware of, of being ever touched. There are several classes of cases in which provincial legislation may be ultra vires, and in which it is difficult or impossible to prescribe a mode by which the question can be tried in the courts, and I believe some of these questions are of that description. Then the hon. Minister of Justice says, that the application to the law officers of the Crown has been improperly criticised. I think the phrase which the hon member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) used was not justified by anything I have heard; I do not understand very well the relevancy of the phrase clandestine on which the hon. Minister animadverted. I suppose all that was really meant was, that there should have been a public announcement of the fact that this reference was being made, which, I agree, would probably have been better. I think it would have been better not to have made any mystery about it; but if the word clandestine is applied in any invidious sense, I am not disposed to concur in that application. But, I want to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the ground upon which the Minister of Justice himself says, that it was well and wisely done to get that legal advice of the law officers, to which he attaches such high importance, on this question. What was that ground? It was the state of public feeling, and it was on that account that it was thought important to fortify the Executive by an opinion. I agree. But, I argue, also, that this very condition existed during the Session, and it existed after the Session, and that its existence is the justification for the proposition that the public interests required the Executive itself to act, to act early, and to act by a reference which I think would have been more proper and more valuable than the reference which was made to the law I do not well understand the attitude officers. which the hon. gentleman assumed upon two points in this connection: first, with respect to this same application to the law officers; second, with respect to the reply of His Excellency to the deputation which he met. I am quite aware that the Governor General of Canada occupies a sort of double position, and that there are certain conceivable cases in which it may be alleged, perhaps, that he is acting as an Imperial officer, and that his advisers, the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, have no responsibility for such acts. It may be so. I decline to enter into a definition of those occasions. I hold it to be the duty of any representative of the Canadian people to narrow to the utmost possible extent the classes of cases to which the principles of responsible government shall not be held to apply, and I will only add that I perceive no circumstances whatever existing in this instance which should induce us to abandon for one moment the fullest application of the principles of responsible government to the action to which I refer. I am not condemning the action. I only say that it is an action in respect of which the Ministers cannot constitutionally shelter themselves under any suggestion that they are otherwise than absolutely and fully responsible for it, and we speak of it as their action, because we insist it must be advised by them. So with respect to the address of His Excellency in reply to the deputation. I maintain that no formal words, such as those used by the hon. Minister, "of course I assume all the responsibility that constitutionally devolves upon me, answer the exigencies of the occasion. There is a real responsibility, there is more than the formal and technical responsibility implied by the hon. gentleman, and hon. gentlemen opposite would have been deserting their duty, if they had done otherwise than advise His Excellency as to the answer which he should give to that deputation, and they are deserting their duty to-day if they ask us to treat that answer in every word and letter of it as anything else than an answer given under their advice. It is not necessary to trace at this day, the development of the principle of British Constitutional Government. Take the accounts of what happened in the course of the reign of the last William; take the interviews that took place even with peers; take the answers to addresses on much more innocent and less important questions on which the monarch expressed with some freedom his opinion, and you see that even at that stage of the development of the principles of responsible and constitutional government, the First Minister of the day felt bound to remonstrate with the sovereign, and point out to him that he must have power to advise, and that without his advice such observations must not be made. The First Minister felt that he was responsible. So I say that this answer, which I am not for the moment criticising, is, in no formal or technical sense, but must be taken to have been really and substantially givenunder the advice of the Ministers of the Crown. This action then has been taken under that advice, and so taken, this action, which recognises on the part of Ministers the existence of that condition of public opinion to which I have adverted, it recognises the importance and propriety of taking notice of that condition of public opinion, and of fortifying the Executive by the assistance of dispassionate aid and advice as to the legal question. The hon gentleman says the law officers have been treated by the hon member for North Norfolk with some degree of disparagement. The law officers are law officers, and it will not be pretended that they are always of the same calibre. I am afraid that I would fall under the condemnation of the Minister of Justice, and that he would treat me as a very old offender, as one whom he would subject to the severer penalties to which habitual offenders are regularly exposed, in this regard. Not that I deny for an instant the uprightness, the honor and the transcendent ability of many, of almost all those who have filled the high positions of Attorney General and Solicitor General of England. As a rule they win that position by force of merit and they hold it by force of merit, and those who hold first places at the English bar, and who fight their battles in the face of day with the most eminent advocates in that country and in the halls of Parliament as well, must be, as a rule, men of great weight and mark. But what I say is this, that these are busy men as well; and that it is not their regular business to act judicially at all; that they are political personages; that their opinions expressed on these occasions are not entitled to the same weight as the opinions of judges; and I add that such has been the experience of the hon. gentleman opposite when it suited him to seek the advice of the law officers, and that has not been very seldom. I could go over a long bead roll of cases, if it were not pretty late in the Session and in the evening, in which the right hon. gentleman found it convenient to shunt off a difficult question by sending over to the law officers and getting their opinion, and some of those opinions have been placarded as great authorities when it suited him to do so, while other opinions were obtained from time to time to which he paid less regard and gave less prominence. I say that of the three possible sources to which we might apply, the law officers are unquestionably the third. I hold that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and the Supreme Court both stand in rank of suitability for that purpose higher than the law officers. That is enough for me. I do not condemn the application to the law officers, but I maintain it would have been more expedient and more in the interests of the country to have applied to the Supreme Court. Now, the Minister of Justice has declared that these views are in fact old High Tory views, and I suppose that was rather based once again upon the idea complying with Mr. Graham's application. hon. gentleman brought into the arena the court of high commission and the old ecclesiastical courts, and he told us of these extraordinary tribunals, with inquisitorial powers created by the supposed prerogative of the Crown in earlier and more evil days, denounced for years, found to be productive of great abuses, in the end wiped away from the institutions of the land by an indignant Parliament, which prohibited their re-erection by prerogative—though, of course, that Parliament which had annulled them, could of itself have reerected them. The hon gentleman told us that those who supported this motion were advocating the doing something of the same sort, as the erection of these courts. What was the mischief of these courts? It was their coercive jurisdiction. They were unusual tribunals, out of the ordinary course of the law, by which the subject was to be vexed and aggravated, by which he was to be harassed in person and in estate, and that was the main objection to them. But the proposal which is made to-day is of another character. The hon. gentleman objected to this proposal at one time just because it was not coercive. He said the decision does not bind and you cannot make it binding, and, therefore, you should not get it at all; so that first of all he objects because it does not bind, and then he says it is like the court of high commission which was bad, because it did bind. No, Sir, the object in this case was not to vex and aggravate the subject. The object was, I think, a worthy object; it was to relieve the apprehension of the subject, by the opinion of an authoritative tribunal upon a legal question; upon which I quite agree a great majority of this House took a different view from that of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). We, of the majority, thought, as I believe we think still, that the objections which were taken to this Act were objections which would not be found to weigh in the balance. We thought they were objections which would not be maintained in the courts. But some of us at any rate—of whom I have shown you that I was one-thought, even during last Session, that the circumstances of the case were such, that we ought not to set up our judgments as absolutely conclusive upon this question; but that we might well resort to higher, to purer, to calmer, and to clearer light for a decision, which if given in the way we expected it would be given, would settle the question, so far as the agitators and those whom they were seeking to agitate were concerned; and which, if given in the other way, would furnish a just foundation for the exercise of that power of disallowance for which those agitators called.

Mr. Blake.

the third. I hold that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and the Supreme Court both stand in rank of suitability for that purpose higher than the law officers. That is enough for me. I do not condemn the application to the law officers, but I maintain it would have been more expedient and more in the interests of the country to have applied to the Supreme Court. Now, the Minister of Justice has declared that these views are in fact old High Tory views, and I suppose that was rather based once again upon the idea that was rather based once again upon the idea that was rather based once again upon the idea that was rather based once again upon the idea that was rather based once again upon the idea that was rather based once again upon the idea that was rather based once again upon the idea that was rather based once again upon the idea that was rather based once again upon the idea that was rather based once again upon the idea that was rather based once again upon the idea that was rather based once again upon the idea that was rather based once again upon the idea that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and the Supreme Court both at the political questions arising in Canada, that the duties cast upon the men who are every student of the political questions arising in this Parliament, and with leading public opinion—the opinion of both parties in this country—are, in many grave respects, as difficult opinion—the opinion of both parties in this Parliament, and with leading public opinion—the opinion of both parties in this Parliament, and with leading public opinion—the opinion of both parties in this Parliament, and with leading public opinion—the opinion of both parties in this Parliament, and with the administration of public affairs in this Parliament, and with the administration of public affairs in this Parliament, and with the administration of public affairs in this Parliament, and with the administration of public affairs in this Parliament, and with the administration of public affai time that we have maintained our colonial connection with the mother country. The very difficulties which arise to-night, in the matter which we are discussing, and which yesterday we had to deal with, in the matter in which the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) took the lead, and in the grave matters which we discussed last year, and in matters not so grave that we have been called upon to discuss during almost every Parliament in our twenty odd years of existencethese difficulties, in the last analysis, are found to grow out of this fact: that here we are, with alimited experience, undertaking to work out a system of Federal Government, and at the same time endeavoring to make this system work smoothly with the maintenance of our connection with the mother country. Out of this colonial connection grows the fact, that we have conferred upon the Executive of this Parliament the very singular power, the very grave and enormous legal power, of destroying our Provincial legislation. This is, no doubt, due to the fact that, whereas, before Confederation, Bills from the different Provinces-from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick for example—were revised, and could be destroyed by the Queen; after Confederation it was provided that such Bills should come up before His Excellency the Governor General, who stood in this country in the place of the Queen. Therefore, this power of disallowance, which has caused us so much difficulty—and which in the opinion of many of us is so necessary notwithstanding—is a power incident to our colonial connection. have, it is true, four systems of Federal Government in operation; one younger than our own, and two older than ours. We have one in Switzerland, from which, unhappily, we are not able to learn much, because of the great disparity between our system and that system. But we have one of long standing, right beside us, which every member of this House, in every day's reading of his paper is able in some degree to study. But when we look at the condition of affairs in the United States, unhappily we are not able to call to our aid their experience, for the very reason that there the Federal authorities have not the power of disallowance, and that they never had any such power. It is a curious historical fact that, in the formation of the constitution of the United States, a strong move was made, by some of the leading members of the then federalist party, to have this power of dis-allowance given to the President, the head of the Executive of the United States, but this proposition was over-ridden. Therefore, we have not the great advantage of the long experience of that country, in knowing how to deal with these questions, and we have to work them out for ourselves. I come to dwell upon the points of conflict, which are not many I think, and not very grave, between the Minister of Justice and the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), I may take occasion to glance at the conflict fought out years ago bearing upon this very question of disallowance, and the duty of the Executive in the matter, in which the hon. member for West Durham bore such a conspicuous and successful part. I refer to the controversy between Lord Carnarvon, then the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). when the question arose as to whether the exercise of the power of disallowance was to rest in the hands of the Governor General, as an Imperial officer, or whether it was to rest in the Mr. Weldon (Albert).

hands of the Governor General as the head of the Canadian Executive; that is to say, whether the acts of the Governor General were to be on the responsibility of the Government of the day or not. Those who have read that memorable controversy, -and I take it for granted that most members of the House have read it-will remember that the English Minister took the ground that the Governor General could act independently of his Ministers, and that the hon member took the ground and supported this largely by the text of the constitution, and by, I think, unanswerable arguments besides, that the Governor General must exercise that power in conformity with his Council. Some of us, last year, regretted, perhaps, that the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) got the best of it in that memorable struggle. Some of us may have thought, last year, that it would be a happy relief out of the very difficult question we were called upon to meet, and some of us may think so to-night, when we have this question before us. Some of us may have a still stronger opinion; when we hear, almost knocking at our doors, unfortunately, other and more troublesome and more dangerous questions coming from the Provinces, that the power of disallowance might better have been held to rest with the Imperial officers.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I do not say that is my opinion, but I say there are some who may maintain that opinion, and look to it as a means of relief from these difficult constitutional problems. But the practice is settled, and we have taken our position; all parties here following the rule that the Government must take the responsibility on themselves for dealing with the matter. I said a moment ago that the points of conflict between the hon. member for West Durham and the hon. Minister of Justice were not many, and were not very grave. more important, as I followed the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, seemed to be these: He dissented from the opinion of the hon. Minister of Justice that very much weight was to be given to the fact that, in the month of January, 1889, the Minister of Justice had reported that this Quebec Act, which we have discussed so much, was, in his opinion, intra vires. It was explained by the hon. member for West Durham that the constitution threw upon the Ministerno such duty as that of allowing an Act, which is of course very true. It was explained by him that a Provincial Act, the moment it receives the assent of the Lieutenant Governor, is an operative law, and remains so until it is disallowed; and until such disallowance is proclaimed in the Gazette of the Province, the effect of such disallowance is equivalent to the repeal of the Act by the Local Legislature itself. 1 did not understand the hon. Minister of Justice to say anything contradictory of that contention, or materially different from it; but I did understand him to say that there could be no question that, under the British North America Act, the power of disallowance lay with the Ministry to act at any time within twelve months, and the reasons the hon. Minister gave, seemed to me to be strong reasons why it was desirable that the Minister should, at a reasonably early time, make up his mind what course he should advise his colleagues in the Government to take. On that question of policy, not of law, there seemed to be a sharp difference of opinion between the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. member for West Durham. As I understand, the hon. member for West Durham thinks it impolitic to act at a very early day. His mind seems to incline to the opinion that it is better to wait until the twelve months are pretty well run out, from the time the Secretary of State has received the Act from the Lieutenant Governor, before the Ministry make up their minds what course to take. Now, it must occur, not only to the lawyers, but to the laymen of the House, that it is desirable, for many reasons, that, at as early a period as possible, the Ministry should make up their minds whether they will disallow the Act or not. For twelve months the Act is law, and into what uncertainty must the public mind be thrown by the danger that the head of the Act may be at any time knocked off? Who would invest money, or take any steps, if they were uncertain that the very law under which they were proceeding might not in four or five months be destroyed? I think public considerations of that kind would suggest that the Ministry should make up its mind at a comparatively early day. The point was also taken by the hon. member for West Durham, and it was the principal reason he gave in favor of withholding action until the twelve months are pretty well up, that Parliament might intervene, and might have something to say. I do not understand the hon. Minister of Justice in any sense to call in question the power of Parliament. It is one of the facts of our constitution, whether it is one of the theories or not, that the Ministry of the day is but a Committees of Parliament; they are recognised to be the simple servants of Parliament, who must obey its mandate; and if Parliament in April of last year had given a clear mandate in conflict with the opinion of the hon. Minister of Justice, to be sure the hon. Minister and his colleagues would have had no course but to give effect to that mandate, or else to give up the seals of office. The hon. member supposes the case of Parliament having decreed the Act to be invalid. The answer is that if Parliament had given that decree, the Ministry must respect it or go out of office. But the Ministry understood the speeches and the vote of last year to indicate that the Act was a valid Act. I had the pleasure of hearing the whole or a part of every speech which was delivered in that debate by those lawyers who by common consent have taken a leading position in the House in respect to this class of questions, and if my memory is right, with the exception of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), I did not hear one of those hon. gentlemen express a confident opinion that the Jesuits' Estates Act of the Province of Quebec was ultra vires of that Province. The hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) himself, if I followed his argument aright, rested his conclusions very much more largely on the question of policy than on the question of law. Now, there is one point more, and only one, to which I wish to call the attention of the House. hon. member for West Durham has contrasted the action of the Ministry in the case of the New Brunswick School Act of 1872 and in the case of the McCarthy Act, so-called, of 1883, with their action in this matter. He said that in 1872 the Executive, which was then led by the present Brunswick School Act was intra vires of the Legislature of New Brunswick-they had no doubt about it; that this Parliament also declared that that Act was intra vires-it had no doubt about it; and the Executive distinctly declined to disallow the Act, but advised its reference to high authorities, the law officers of the Crown or possibly the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, there being at that time no Supreme Court of Canada. The Liquor License Act of 1883 was also declared by the Executive and by Parliament to be, in their opinion, constitutional; but Parliament, in the same way, asked for a reference of that Act. These two cases may be sharply distinguished from the present case. In 1872 Parliament gave a distinct mandate that the Act in question should be referred; and in 1883 Parliament asked for a reference: but I did not understand that Parliament, in 1889, asked for a reference of the Jesuits' Estates Act to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The law officers of the Crown occupy a different position in relation to the Government; they are called upon to advise the Government, and there are innumerable instances of references to them. Although the hon, member for West Durham read a telegram and a letter to-night, in which he himself, having been necessarily absent from his place in the House, had expressed the view that Parliament should have taken the same course with regard to the question before it last year, it is to be regretted that the hon. gentleman was not here to impress upon the House, with his accustomed ability and energy, his own views, which might have induced Parliament to have taken the course which he then advised.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman knows that I was not in a position to speak if I had been here.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I did not know the hon, gentleman was disabled.

Mr. BLAKE. It is so, at any rate.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I can only say, in making that remark, that I am conscious of the very great assistance which the hon. gentleman has given this year, on two or three very grave questions, and I feel this—although he may not thank me for this compliment—that that hon. gentleman has contributed, to a degree that few men in this country have contributed, to the wise and admirable interpretation of our constitution.

Mr. TROW. I would just put a question to the hon. member for North Norfolk. It seems to me remarkable at this stage of the Session, after we have been sitting here nearly four months, that he should bring up this question which he seems to consider of vital importance. I would ask him the reason for this delay.

vince. The hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) himself, if I followed his argumentaright, rested his conclusions very much more largely on the question of policy than on the question of law. Now, there is one point more, and only one, to which I wish to call the attention of the House. The hon, member for West Durham has contrasted the action of the Ministry in the case of the New Brunswick School Act of 1872 and in the case of the McCarthy Act, so-called, of 1883, with their respect. I may say at once that I do not rise with action in this matter. He said that in 1872 the Executive, which was then led by the present leader of the Government, held that the New do not presume to speak on this occasion in the official capacity I hold in this House. Last year, when the disallowance resolution was brought before the House, it was not made, on either side, a party question, but every hon. member was allowed full liberty to vote upon it according to his best light and judgment, and on the present occasion I see no reason to depart from the course then adopted. I may say, however, that I deeply regret this motion has been brought up at all. I do not see that any good can be effected by it, and I believe this is the view taken by my hon. friend himself, because, if I understood him properly he said if it had not been for the taunts cast at him by a portion of the press, he would, on the whole, have preferred to leave it alone. As to the reasons which induced my hon. friend to take the course he has taken I have nothing to say; but looking at the case from the point of view of the public, it seems to me that no good can be effected at all by bringing up this question again on the floor of Parliament. We have all to form our own opinion upon this matter; and although I have listened carefully to the arguments in favor of blaming the Government for not having it referred to the courts, I can see no reason at all for agreeing in that opinion in any way. I cannot censure the Government upon the present occasion, though I have no spare love for them, and it would be rather a pleasure for me to censure them than otherwise. What is the reason adduced by my hon. friend for censuring the Government? He did not allege any dereliction of duty on the part of the Government. He did not show that they violated any obligation resting upon them; but, in his view, and that is his only reason for blaming the Government, the reference of the question to the courts would have pacified a por-tion of public opinion. That may be true. We all know there was a portion of public opinion excited throughout this country; but we must take this fact into consideration, that if the reference to the courts would have quieted a portion of public opinion, it might have inflamed another portion. What is reason for one is not reason for the other. My hon. friend stated the reasons why the portion of public opinion to which he belongs is more or less incensed upon this question, and in support of them he referred to the old acts of persecution, which at one time disgraced the statutes of most European nations, the mother land included; and he showed that the odium to which this law has been subjected, which was passed by the Legislature of Quebec in 1888, is largely due the feeling that still exists in regard to the Jesuit order. The same thing which inflamed public opinion in one part of the Confederation would have undoubtedly produced the opposite effect in another part; and, on the whole, since it is admitted that the Province of Quebec acted within its own powers in passing that law, it seems to me the sooner the agitation ceases the better it will be for Confederation at large. If the Supreme Court were clothed with the powers suggested by my hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake) yesterday, and which may be in a future day embodied in an Act of Parliament, I would not say that the reference would not have been effective, and that it would not have been wise perhaps to say to the Province of Quebec: Relinquish your rights and a part of your pretensions; do something for the common good, and let us, if possible, quiet this agitation which has arisen. But the Supreme Court is not clothed with such power, and if it were not possible to compel the Quebec Government to be a party to referring the case to the Supreme Court, what would such a reference amount to? It would not, if the Quebec Government refused to be a party to it, satisfy anybody. It seems to me the answer given by the hon. the Minister of Justice is conclusive upon this ground, that, at this moment, if there is any man in Canada who wants to test the constitutionality of the Act incorporating the Jesuits, the courts are open to him. The Attorney General can act of his own motion, but my hon. friend, who moved this motion, had forgotten that not only can the Attorney General act of his own motion, but he can be compelled to act.

Mr. LAURIER.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He can be forced to act.

Mr. LAURIER. He can be forced to act. The law provides:

"It is the duty of Her Majesty's Attorney General for Lower Canada to prosecute, in Her Majesty's name, such violations of the law whenever he has good reason to believe that such facts can be established by proof, in every case of public general interest; but he is not bound to do so in any other case, unless sufficient security is given to indemnify the Government against all costs to be incurred upon such proceedings."

So that anybody can force the Attorney General to move in the matter, on giving security for the costs. The courts of the Province are open to him. and the Supreme Court, and possibly also the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. To me, this argument is conclusive, but it seems to me the Government have, in a measure, invited the action of my hon. friend. The reference to the law officers of the Crown, in my judgment, was an ill-timed movement, because it must have struck the Government that any such reference, in which the contentions of those who opposed the Act could not be heard, could not be satisfactory at all, and by making the reference, the Government created the impression that they were not sure of their own ground. At all events, whether they acted wisely or unwisely on that occasion, is not the question at this moment, and for my part, I cannot do otherwise than vote against the motion of my hon. friend.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not intend to occupy the time of the House at any length, but there is an aspect of this question to which, with great diffidence, I would crave the attention of honmembers. The hon member for North Norfolk has given us a reason why he has once again wantonly thrown this apple of discord on the table of the House, and his reason is the taunts of people outside these doors. Why, is it to be supposed, for one moment, that any hon member, in the exercise of his duties in this House, is to listen to every gobe mouche outside these doors, and direct his course according to what some gabbler may say at a street corner? In considering this resolution, I hold it is impossible to take the view of the hon member for West Durham, that it is a very innocuous resolution which hardly amounts to a censure on the Government. He seemed to think that it was a very mild affair, but to my mind, looking at the wording of the resolution, there is over it the taint of hypocrisy, and, if my hon. friend the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) did not carry on his brow the stamp of ingenuousness, I could not fail to conclude that he also was tainted with hypocrisy. He tells us that the reason why he brought forward this resolution is the dissatisfaction which has been excited in the public mind. Who has caused the dissatisfaction in the public mind, and in what manner has it been created? It is a bad thing to have the public mind excited, especially if it is excited on the basis of senseless passions, but it is still worse when the stimulants applied to the public mind are ignorant and perhaps malicious. I will call the attention of the House for a moment to the position taken by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). He appeared before us to-day as an historian. He quoted a pamphlet written by Mr. Hughes, and asked us why were the Jesuits expelled from France in 1804, from Naples in 1810, from Belgium in 1818, from Russia in 1820, from Spain in 1826, from France in 1845, from Bavaria in 1848, from Naples in 1848, from the Papal States in 1848, from the Austrian Empire in 1848, from Gallicia in 1848, from Sicily in 1848, from Paraguay in 1848, from the Italian States in 1859, and from Sicily in 1860? Nothing is more instructive than to bring the illumination of history to on the events of the present time. I remember that Lord Bolingbroke says that if a man desires to be a fruitful statesman, he should give his days and nights to the study of history. The great Arnold of Rugby says that a man who aspires to guide the destinies of his country, or even to be useful in her councils, should be a careful student of history; and, reading the other day some statements in regard to Bismarck—that great man, one of the greatest men who ever appeared on the stage of time—I learned that his favorite study was history. Thus we need not be surprised that an hon. gentleman like my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton), who aims at high position, who aspires to put his hand upon the rudder, and, perhaps, to guide the Ship of State, appears, also, in the light of an historian. But those great men, my Lord Bolingbroke and Dr. Arnold, say that the way to make history useful is to find out the crises in history which would correspond with the crisis in your own country, and that you must note the measures which were successful at a given time and under given circumstances, and, if the circumstances in your own country are alike, you have a lesson by which to be guided. But how does the hon. gentleman deal out history to us? He flings barren dates to us. I might ask him a few questions about his dates. Does he know—and I will pause for a reply-does he know the circumstances existing at the time in any one of these countries from which the Jesuits were expelled? I will ask the attention of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), if he can tear himself away from the dulcet tones of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron). He has mentioned to us the cases of about a dozen countries whence the Jesuits were expelled. Does he know the conditions under which they were expelled? Does he know whether, where there was an insurrection, it was the insurrectionary Government or the Government which the people rose against that expelled them? Has he examined the question? Does he know anything about it? I have no objection to sit down for a moment if the hon. member will tell us the circumstances.

1331

Mr. CHARLTON. Will the hon, gentleman be kind enough to explain to us the circumstances under which they were expelled? I venture to say that the hon, gentleman knows nothing about the matter himself.

Mr. DAVIN. That is no answer. I did not being forward these cases. I may be a very ignorant person, and I would be willing to learn from a superior man such as my hon. friend; but I will go over the circumstances, and I will say that it is very extraordinary that, in many of these cases set out in this pramphlet—the Jesuits were expelled for meddling with such tyrants as have rarely existed in the history of mankind.

Mr. CHARLTON. What particular cases?

Mr. DAVIN. I think the hon. gentleman might keep quiet after he has declined to give the House the information I asked for; but with the sufferance of the House, I will go over the cases referred to by him for his information, and it may not be uninteresting. He says the Jesuits were expelled from France in 1804. By whom were they expelled? Does the hon. gentleman know? They were expelled by Napoleon, who had destroyed the liberties of France and who was at that time the Apollyon of Europe. A year before Napoleon had wantonly declared war against England, and, if the Jesuits were his enemies and were expelled by him, with whom were they associated? They were associated with some of the best men the world ever saw; they were associated with the Connaught Rangers, who came from the North of Ireland; they were associated with the sons and the fathers of Orangemen who went into battle to the tune of the "Protestant Boys." So, if the Jesuits were expelled from France, they were in company with those whom my hon. friend, in his zeal for Protestantism, in his desire to destroy everything which is not in accord with his own cult, has associated himself with, and therefore he should not be angry with the Jesuits. In 1810, the Jesuits were expelled from Naples. Does the hon, gentleman know who expelled the Jesuits from Naples? They were expelled by an usurper. They were expelled by Murat, and it was very natural, if they were Neapolitans, that they, and many others with them, should show themselves hostile to the Government and for reasons which, if the hon. gentleman enquired into the circumstances, he might approve. Again he tells us they were expelled from Naples in 1848. But who was on the throne at that time? It was Ferdinand, a tyrant so base and so cruel that even misfortunes could not soften his disposition. Does the hon. gentleman know, in his zeal against the Jesuits, that he is drawing himself shoulder to shoulder with King Bomba? I think henceforth we must call him the King Bomba of this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The King Bombast.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman shows us that he has an epic knowledge of history, and therefore he must be aware that the state of the people in the prisons of Naples at that time wrung tears from all Europe. In that very year he butchered his own people in the streets of Naples, and that city, surrounded by all that is beautiful in sky, and sea, and air—to the use language of an historian of Italy—he made a very earthly hell by his crimes against liberty and toleration, aye, and against Protestants as well as Jesuits. In 1820, who ruled in Russia?—because in 1820 the Jesuits were expelled from Russia. I think they must have done something dreadfully wrong. Had Alexander I good reasons for sending the nobles and burghers into exile in Siberia? If the Jesuits were expelled in 1820 from Russia, they were expelled in the company of the noblest men that ever Russia produced. Then the hon. gentleman comes to Spain, in 1826. My hon. friend's soul is stirred that the Jesuits were expelled from Spain in 1826. The fact that they were expelled proves, of course, that Ferdinand VII had good reason to expel them. They must have done something very wrong. The despotism of Ferdinand VII became a by-word. Liberals were executed for the profession of Liberalism, so that my hon. friend, if he had been there, would have had the glory of martyrdom. He is a large souled Liberal, though I sometimes think when I hear him argue, that I could find a very small hazel nut in which his soul would find infinite room to wobble. The Bible was proscribed by Ferdinand VII—my hon. friend professes to love the Bible-so that if the Jesuits were proscribed they were proscribed in company with the Bible. To read it was dangerous, to preach it was death, and the Jesuits were happy in being only expelled and not slaughtered. Then take the Papal States. It is a curious thing, it shows what charming inconsistencies there are in human nature—the fact that the Papal States expelled the Jesuits seems a terrible thing against that body. The bare mention of the Pope in this Bill, although in a way which has often led me to say to Orangemen who have spoken to me about it, that if Mercier had entrapped me into the position in which he has entrapped the Pope in the extraordinary introduction to this Bill, I would have excommunicated him for all time to come; because he has got the Pope into this Bill not even with the dignity of an arbiter; he is brought in as a mere seal, to secure Mr. Mercier against any afterclap, and in effect to enable him to secure that the bargain in his Bill would close up the mouths of certain parties, namely, the Jesuits, forever, as far as this property was concerned--well, the mere mention of the Pope's name in this way has quite excited the hon. gentlemen. My hon. friend sees red at the sight of the word "Pope." Pope disagrees with him. I notice that he is not at best a very ruddy gentleman, but if the word "Pope" is frequently mentioned in this House, I notice that a greener pallor spreads across that brow.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There is one over your brow now. How does it agree with the Minister of Customs?

Mr. DAVIN. There is no pallor across your brow. Your face is red by nature, not unassisted by art. In 1848 there was an insurrection, and the Pope fled. The Jesuits did not like this. What sort of men would they be if they did like it? They are members of his church. Do you suppose they would be worthy the name of men at all if they had not felt disappointed, and angry, and ready to be aggressive, because the Pope had to fly? That they were expelled would not necessarily imply much discredit on their

Mr. DAVIN.

Then as to the Austrian Empire in 1848. In March of that year there was an insurrection in Vienna, and, if I remember rightly, in Milan. in Venice and Sardinia. In the summer the Emperor fled to Inspruck, and the Archduke John took charge. Will the hon. gentleman tell me now, whether the Jesuits were expelled by the Government of the Empire, or by the Archduke John, or by the insurrectionary Government that was ultimately set up? Because, Sir, if the hon. gentleman has come here to-day and taken from a pamphlet these dates and flung them down on the Table and asked men who are representing Canada to draw the ignorant inference that he drew from them, that because the Jesuits were expelled by these tyrannical Governments they must have done something dreadfully wrong—if he has done that he is not worthy of attention at any future time in this Parliament. Now, he speaks of Gallicia. In 1848, the Jesuits were expelled from Gallicia. Well, I have a right to know which Gallicia. Will the hon, gentleman tell me which Gallicia? He is like one of the dumb dogs of Jupiter that cannot bark. There is a Gallicia in Spain, and there is a Gallicia in Poland. We will suppose, because it is much more likely, that he means Gallicia in Poland. Who expelled them? There was only one power that could expel them, in 1848, from Poland, and that was the most tyrannical emperor that ever sat on the throne of St. Petersburg, the tyrant Nicholas. I wish he had not borne that name. In Sardinia, in 1848, again they were expelled. Now, why were they expelled from Sardinia in 1848? They might not have been very desirable guests; but where is the analogy between their condition and ours? That was a critical time for Sardinia. Cavour, one of the greatest journalists and statesmen of Europe, had just started the Revival newspaper. The King had just granted a constitution and definitely espoused the cause of Italian regeneration against Austria, and that great work was commenced which, some years afterwards, was to receive a glorious consummation, when, with the sword for his talisman and liberty for his spell-word, Garibaldi was to chase, by the mere magic of his name, everything that darkened the prospects of Italy. Now, what analogy was there between that revolutionary state of things and a constitutional country such as ours, with liberty safe-guarded, such a country, I believe, for freedom as does not exist anywhere else in the world? What analogy is there between disturbed states like those, and a country like this? Yet the hon, gentleman comes here and flings down his barren dates. Now, in 1860, again, Garibaldi expelled the Jesuits from Sicily, and why did he expel them? He had made himself dictator; he defeated the royal troops at Calatafimi; he stormed Palermo; he won Melazzo; gave Sicily a new constitution, and in such a state of things the expulsion of the Jesuits may have been a necessity. It might be necessary under certain circumstances, even to expel the Knights of Labor; it might be necessary to expel any body of men in certain critical circumstances of the state, who were likely to menace the object that statesmen, having charge of it, have in view. But what analogy can there be between such a state tion of member of Parliament to go through the country and, without ever enquiring into the circumstances in which these expulsions took place, to hold them up to ignorant mobs, ignorant multitudes and ignorant men-good hearted men, noble men in their way, but still not having sufficient time to test these things. He goes and reads out that they were expelled here, they were expelled there, they were expelled elsewhere, and he leads people to infer that they are a danger to every state, whereas in many cases they were expelled by despotic governments. We know very well that in the history of the world there have been men who would exercise tyrannical power themselves, but would not allow any one else to be tyrannical to the people; and the Jesuits, as the history of Europe shows, have at times interfered on the side of popular liberty against the tyrannical conduct of tyrannical men. I am not justifying the manner in all cases of their interference; but as a fact they have so interfered. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton), I hope, does not mean to deceive the people, but I say that if he is aware of the misrepresentation, he is guilty of a very great crime and very great misdemeanor. I will ask the House to bear with me a few moments, because the hon. gentleman questioned the character of the Jesuits Act. The hon. gentleman is a Protestant, and I am a Protestant, and if the hon. gentleman has a right, or thinks he has a right, to sympathise with the men who are most alarmed by the cry of Jesuit, it must be remembered that I am an Irish Protestant, and hon. gentlemen well know that Irishmen feel strongly on most subjects, and especially on religion. If I had been in Mr. Mercier's place I would have been glad to have made the arrangement he effected. It was a good arrangement. Here was a property on which a cloud was cast which reduced its salable value by 50 per cent.. I know they had no right to cast a cloud upon it. What did Mr. Mercier say? I will read his words, because they have not been read by the hon. gentleman from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and have not been read by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), but I will read them to-night, and I say I have reason in the interests of the people of Canada to complain that when this Act has been flaunted in the popular face, those parts of it that would have shown its true character have been kept back and only those parts thrust forward that were calculated to inflame passions. We will suppose I meet an Orangeman in my constituency, who approaches me and says: "Well, we did not think you would do that." "What have I done?" I reply. "Voted for that Jesuit Bill," he says. "Have you read the Act," I ask. He replies "No." I then say: "If you would like to read it, sit down and we will read it together." I then point out the various points and show that a cloud had been cast on that property, as Mr. Mercier says in his letter dated Rome, 17th February, 1888. I start out by saying that the Jesuits had no right whatever to that property. But here were eminent persons capable of casting a cloud on its title so as to affect it as a marketable commodity; the Province wants to sell it, and to remove that cloud. Now, what would a practical man do, under the circumstances, but ask himself how to get rid of that cloud? He would not balance metaphysical niceties as to right or wrong, and say the church has no real right to so act; he would not even care about building up an idea as to moral right as Mr. Mercier and others have done; but he would endeavor to make the best bargain possible in the interests of the Province. Mr. Mercier did so, and he said to the church: "Take off this cloud and I will give you $400,000." The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has stated on platform after platform, and has stated in this House, and my hon. and learned friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), than whom there is no one in Canada of whom I have a higher opinion, has stated-and I do not know how it has happened that he has failed to see the matter as I see it—that the Pope was brought into the transaction as a sovereign. That is one of the charges brought against the Act. Here is what Cardinal Simeoni says:

"The Pope allows the Government to retain the proceeds of the sale of the Jesuits' Estates as a special deposit to be disposed of hereafter with the sanction of the Holy See."

There is the condition. What would happen if he were a sovereign prince? As a sovereign prince he is ex ci termin sovereign and controls. He, however, lays down what he wants to be done. Look at Mr. Mercier's answer:

"In the matter of the Jesuits' Estates, the Government respectfully object to the condition imposed in the letter of Your Eminence of the first of March instant, and cannot expect to succeed in the settlement of this delicate question unless permission is given to sell the property upon the conditions and in accordance with the exact terms of my letter of the seventeenth of February last."

Why could he not expect to succeed? Because, as he makes plain in his letters and plain in the Act, the sovereign power was Her Majesty and the Legislature of the Province. Nothing could be more peremptory than the language of Mr. Mercier. Is that language you would address to a sovereign prince? No. What happens? Does the Pope say then: I will wave my crosier over you and you will disappear? Does he put them under a ban and send them into nothingness? Does he inflict pains and penalties as a sovereign prince might do? Not at all. He at once comes to Mr. Mercier's terms. We read:

"The Pope allows the Government to retain the proceeds of the sale of the Jesuits' estate as a special deposit to be disposed of hereafter with the sanction of the Holy See."

Some orators have made a point with respect to the words "the sanction of the Holy See." But that language is necessary, because if the property was not disposed of with that sanction, how would Mr. Mercier know that further claims would not be set up and the cloud again raised over the property lowering its salable value fifty per cent.? In the letter addressed to the reverend gentleman who was authorised to deal with him, Mr. Mercier says:

"That in consenting to treat with you respecting this property the Government does not recognise any civil obligation."

Could anything be more distinct? He goes on to say in paragraph 7:

"That any agreement made between you and the Government of the Province will be binding, only in so far as it shall be ratified by the Pope and the Legislature of this Province."

His object is clear, to make certain that the cloud should be finally taken off. Further, in paragraph 8, it is stated:

"That the amount of the compensation fixed shall remain in the possession of the Government of the Province as a special deposit, until the Pope has ratified the said settlement and made known his wishes respecting the distribution of such amount in this country."

And in paragraph 9:

"Finally that the statute ratifying such agreement shall contain a clause enacting that when such settlement is arrived at the Protestant minority will receive a grant in proportion to its population in favor of its educational works."

Mr. Mercier deals with a sovereign prince, who is at the head of an infallible church, who believes all Protestants to be heretics, and yet one of the conditions he lays down to this sovereign prince is that a certain sum shall be given to support the Protestants, the assistance of whom, of course, must be exceedingly wrong! The answer of the Rev. Mr. Turgeon emphasises this point. He says in regard to clause 9:

"As this clause does not touch the question in which I am interested to treat with the Government I wish you would dispense with my replying thereto."

Could anything more emphasise the almost highhanded manner in which Mr. Mercier dealt with this question. The Rev. Mr. Turgeon claims that two million dollars are due to the Jesuits; but Mr. Mercier disposes of that at once, and he says in effect, in his letter of the 4th June, 1888: If you don't take the $400,000 you will get nothing. Then, when we come to the Act what do we read?

"Whereas it is expedient to put an end to the uneasiness which exists in this Province, in connection with the question of the Jesuits' Estates, by settling it in a definite manner: Therefore Her Majesty, by and with advice and consent of the Legislature of Quebec, enacts as follows:—"

It is not the Pope whose name is brought in, but "Her Majesty by and with the affice and consent of the Legislature of Quebec, enacts," and in the sixth section of the Bill we read:

"The Lieutenant Governor in Council hereby is authorised to dispose, in the manner he deems most advantageous to the Province, of the whole of the property, movable and immovable, interests and rights, generally whatsoever of the Province upon the said property known as the Jesuits' Estates."

I have no doubt that Mr. Mercier will find this a good bargain for the Province, and I have no doubt that the payment of that $400,000 will be found very advantageous to take away that cloud which rested on the property, and which, however groundlessly cast upon it, would have lowered its salable value by a ruinous percentage. As I used to say to some persons who discussed this question with me, in my part of the country: Suppose you had 160 acres of valuable land, and that there was a squatter on it, and the squatter thought he had some rights, although he really might have none, but he could give you some trouble, would you not give him $50 to get him out quietly. They always understood that argument at once. I have not spoken to a single man in this way, Orangeman or other, who did not feel that the manner in which the gentlemen on the other side have presented this question throughout the country was deceptive and misleading, and I will say that it seems to me almost wicked. One of the reasons for which the hon. gentleman condemns the Jesuits is, that they being professed ecclesiastics aim at some political power. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman himself stands selfconvicted of the most sinister offence that is rightly or wrongly attributed to the Jesuit body. He makes in this Parliament a speech which admittedly could have no practical, no political end whatever; which will be scattered broadcast throughout the country, and which is capable of arousing the passions of the people. For what purpose does he do so? It is for the purpose of gaining political influence, for the purpose of gaining power, and to swell his own importance. What is that, and to swell his own importance. What is that, Sir, but playing a Jesuitical part? It is more than playing a Jesuitical part, because so far as my reading goes, I have never found a single case in history, where in so barefaced a manner, men openly declared that they were playing a part for an unworthy end, and not even assuming the appearance of virtue, whether they had it or not. Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) referred in his speech to "Him whose Kingdom was not of this world." I believe, Sir, the hon. gentleman is a professed follower of Him whose Kingdom was not of this world. I believe he is a professed follower of Him who has left us teachings which so far as my reading goes-and it runs in a sort of way I suppose, over five or six literatures—there is nothing, in this wide world, that has been written from the birth of time, to compare with these writings. And what, Sir, is the cardinal doctrine of it all? It is charity; love to your neighbor, pity for mankind, kindness, making people love each other, and you loving your brother. That is the doctrine which runs through the teachings of Him whose Kingdom was not of this world. But here is a gentleman who makes professions which I would not presume to make, and yet, Sir, though he makes these professions, I would cut my right hand off, before I would take part in an agitation as he has done, so calculated to set man against man, and to raise up among our people, malignant, malicious, foolish, damaging and dangerous passions.

Mr. DAVIN.

4236

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not intend to delay the House more than for a few minutes at this late peried of the Session and at this late hour of the evening, in dealing with a question which was so fully discussed last year, and which has been discussed in the press from that time until Parliament has met again this season. I must say at the outset, that I have no doubt whatever in my mind, of the propriety of the vote I gave last year, and I do not propose this evening to give a vote that will cast any doubt upon the position I then took. In my opinion, the conclusion arrived at by the vast majority of the House last year, was a proper conclusion. It was a conclusion warranted by the law, and by the facts, and I am not prepared in the smallest degree to retire from the position I then took. That being the case, I will support the position taken by the leader of the Opposition. I do not feel that there was any necessity for a reference to the Supreme Court under the circumstances, and I do not feel disposed to vote for a motion censuring the Government for, or expressing any regret because an Act was not done which in my opinion was altogether an Act of supererogation. Now, Sir, the honmember for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), in the motion which he put upon the Notice paper, and which is somewhat different from the one he has moved this afternoon, as a reason for the course which he asked the House to take last year, and which he now wishes the House to express regret for not having taken, declares that it was desirable to obtain from the Supreme Court after an argument a judgment upon the subject. Now, Mr. Speaker, the action which the House took a day or two ago, shows that no such thing could have been accomplished, and that we were quite unable to obtain from the Supreme Court a judgment upon this case, and that if the Supreme Court were appealed to, it would have had to give its opinion without assigning any reason for arriving at the conclusion at which it arrived, and it would have been in no respect a judgment that would have been binding upon anybody, after that opinion had been expressed. There are, as the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) says, three bodies which might have been consulted, namely, the Supreme Court, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and the law officers of the Crown. Now, the law officers of the Crown were consulted, and in their opinion they entirely concurred with the views entertained by the majority of this House. I know no reason for attaching more importance to an opinion of the Supreme Court, given without argument and without a case being presented, than to the opinion expressed by the law officers of the Crown. They are all eminent gentlemen. There is no doubt that their judgment is more advantageous to have than their opinion, but in the Act under which the hon. gentleman asks a reference to the Supreme Court, he would have merely got a bald opinion which would have been in no way more satisfactory than the opinion expressed by the law officers of the Crown. So that I am not disposed to censure the Administration, because of the three tribunals they have consulted the one which was most likely to give an opinion with the greatest expedition instead of some other one that would, perhaps, have refused to give an opinion at all. There is in my opinion no reason for supposing that if the Bill had been sent to the Secretary of State for the opinion of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, that they would have done anything different from what they did in December, 1872. On that occasion, referring to the fact that the question of the New Brunswick School Law might come before them as a court of appeal, they said:

"This being the fact, His Lordship is of opinion that Her Majesty cannot with propriety be advised to refer to a Committee of Council in England a question which Her Majesty in Council has at present no authority to determine, and on which the opinion of the Privy Council would not be binding on the parties in the Dominion of Canada."

Nobody would have been bound by that opinion if it had been obtained, or by the opinion of the Supreme Court if it had been obtained, any more than they are bound by the opinion of the law officers of the Crown. And that being the case, it does seem to me that it would have been a wholly unnecessary proceeding and one which would not have in the smallest degree changed the opinion of any one on the question at the present time. Therefore, I say again, I am not prepared to cast doubt on the conclusion at which I came in my own mind and at which the vast majority of this House came, by reflecting on the course that has been taken. The hon gentleman who has made the motion has after all attached very great importance to the question itself. In discussing it he has referred, as he did last year, to the statute of Roman Catholic Emancipation to show the disabling provisions of that statute. The hon. gentleman seemed altogether to overlook the fact that the disabilities created by that statute extended not simply to the Jesuits, but to every community of the Roman Catholic Church; the Jesuits do not stand in a different position with regard to it from any other community. Then, I do not understand what particular object the hon. gentleman had in view in referring to those disabilities. The penal laws of England have never been recognised as extending to the colonies, except in cases where there was an established church. The penal laws against the Roman Catholic and various Protestant dissenting bodies were in the supposed interest of the established church, and where there was no established church, as Lord Mansfield said, the penal laws could not apply; and so it has been held over and over again; and there has been no special legislation imposing these disabilities. The hon, gentleman said that the Jesuits had no right or interest in these estates. That is a wholly erroneous statement. The Jesuits were an incorporated body, incorporated by a statute of the King of France one hundred years before the conquest. When the King of England acceded to the territories on this continent, he acceded to them by conquest limited by the articles of capitulation; and those articles of capitulation conceded to the various religious communities in this country, the Jesuits among the number, the estates which they possessed. The House and the country, I believe, have been misled by an erroneous opinion given by Solicitor General Wedderburn, which was quoted by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) last year, and by every speaker in the House who voted for the disallowance of the Act. That opinion contained the statement that those articles of capitulation were only temporary, and had force only until the treaty was agreed upon between England and France; and that, as no provision was made regarding those various religious communities in that treaty, it was open to the Crown to do as it pleased with those estates. That opinion, however, was not shared in by the Attorney-General at the time, Lord Thurlow, who held that the king had acquired only the interest which had previously been held by the Crown of France, and that the various interests in the country were secured by the articles of capitulation against the conqueror. This difference of opinion has led to a great deal of confusion. The question came before the Court of King's Bench in England in the case of Campbell vs. Hall, and was very elaborately argued on four separate occasions by eminent counsel; and the decision of Lord Mansfield was that the articles of capitulation were as permanent in their nature and as binding on the Crown as the articles of the treaty itself. It is also laid down in the judgment that the Crown could not acquire private property except during the progress of the war; and if the Crown did not succeed to the property as an act of war and during the continuance of the war, it could not succeed to it at all. In that judgment Lord Mansfield said that the moment the conquest was completed, the parties who were before aliens and enemies became subjects of the new sovereign, and were entitled to the same protection of life and property as if they had been born subjects of His Majesty. And so, under that rule, the King of England became the sovereign of Canada, and his rights as a conqueror were limited not only by the superior authority of Parliament, but by the articles of capitulation into which the King had through his officers entered. That rule is recognised by the Judicial Committee in the case of Cameron vs. Kyte, and in two other cases it was recognised by the Secretary of State. When the Secretary of State was framing the charter of Government for the Island of Mauritius, which was a conquest, he consulted the law officers of the Crown with reference to the provisions of that charter, asking them to examine it to see whether there were any provisions in it inconsistent with the articles of capitulation. The same rule is laid down, and the same advice sought, in the case of the charter of government for the colony of Berbice. So you have in the opinions expressed by the law officers of the Crown, by the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, and by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, that the articles of capitulation by which a Government enters into possession of a conquered territory are as permanent and binding on it as the provisions of the treaty itself. Then all we have to do is to consider what the rights of the Jesuits were under the articles of capitulation. Now, the Crown could not succeed by right of conquest. That was impossible. The articles of capitulation, after the conquest, show what the rights of the various parties were. That being the case, the only way that the Crown could pretend to succeed to these properties was by escheat. Crown issued instructions to the Governor that no new members were to be permitted to be added to the Order of the Jesuits. I maintain that the Crown, having lost its rights as a conqueror, and having only those rights which belong to it as a part of the Imperial Parliament, could no more issue such a mandate to the Jesuit body in Canada than it could issue to the Presbyterian church or to the Methodist church, an order that they should not ordain a new elder or deacon. It was in the power of Parliament to say, by Act of Parliament, that these estates should be taken away, but it could not be done otherwise. But the Jesuit body of Canada submitted to the action of the Crown, the last Jesuit expired, and the estates went into the possession of the Crown, but as I understand, however, by the law of Quebec the Crown could not succeed, because, under the Customs of Paris, the Crown had recognised so much of the canon law as related to church property, and church property escheats not to the Crown, but to the bishop of the diocese within which the property is situated. How did the Crown protect its assumed rights? The hon. member for North Norfolk asks why the Jesuit Order or the Catholic Church did not interfere and obtain possession by Junioral process of this property. Why? Because the Legislature of Quebec, by a declaratory Act, made this the property of the Crown, and so the rights of either the church or the community are that time forward simply moral rights. The not interfere and obtain possession by judicial from that time forward simply moral rights. The legal right had disappeared. If the Legislature of Ontario choose to-morrow to declare that all the property on Sparks street should be vested in the Crown, the property holders could not maintain their rights in the courts, if that Act were allowed to go into operation. An Act was passed in 1832 declaring these estates to be the property Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

of the Crown. Was it in the power of the church to set up against such a legislative proceeding the rights they previously had, and which were taken from them without any compensation? They did the only thing in their power, and that was to resist any attempt of the Crown to dispose of these properties, by making protest whenever the attempt was made, and that resistance was successful and the Legislature of Quebec was compelled to come to an understanding with the ecclesiastical bodies which made claim to this property. was only in that way they could obtain free control and dispose of this property to advantage in the market. That is their business not ours. I say if there is anything in the jurisdiction of a Provincial Government which can be held beyond all question to be under the absolute control of the Local Legislatures it is what they should do with their own money. They may make a wise or an unwise use of it, that is their business, and the Government are responsible to the Local Legislature for that, and ultimately to the electorate of the Province. That is no reason why we should in-The hon. member said the Government should have disallowed this Act on grounds of public policy. Well, as I understand English practice and our system of responsible government, the Government of this Dominion can have no policy on a question over which they can have no jurisdiction. There must be either legislative authority or administrative authority. If you can show that any Act of a Local Legislature interferes with the legislative authority of the Dominion, you may pronounce it ultra vires; if you can show that it interferes with any administrative right of this Dominion, so that the Dominion Government cannot efficiently carry out the policy it has a right to adopt, you can disallow the Act as interfering with the paramount authority of the Dominion. But I know of no other ground. If the measure is unwise and improper, that is a question for the Local Legislature to decide, and with which we have nothing to do. Why should the Local Government appeal to the country and adopt a public policy if the Government of this Dominion interfere with them at any moment and frustrate that policy, by undertaking to disallow their Acts? Of course the power of disallowance is, in form of law, unlimited, but by the conventions of the constitution it is clearly a limited power; it has to be carried out and exercised in accordance with those well-understood principles which will leave the Local Governments free to adopt that policy which they consider best in the interest of the Province. If that be so, it is clear that the hon. gentleman is asking this House to take a course wholly at variance with the interests of the We have maintained the principle of Provinces. local self-government in the Provinces, not because we were upholding local sovereignty as against the sovereignty of the Dominion, but because we say that in the sphere of exclusive jurisdiction assigned to it the Local Legislature is as sovereign as is the Imperial Parliament itself, and so the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have decided. Let me take a case here. Many of us were of opinion that the appropriation of public moneys to the Province of Nova Scotia, beyond the sum fixed by the constitution was an unconstitutional proceeding. There was no doubt in my mind upon that, but the law officers of the Crown were of the opinion that we had the power; and upon what theory can that opinion be upheld? Upon this, that being a sovereign legislature we could do what we pleased with our own money; we could apply it to any legislative purpose we pleased or give it away if we thought proper; and the Local Legislature, being sovereign in its own jurisdiction, having control of its own funds, can apply those funds as it sees proper, and to rule otherwise would be wholly inconsistent with the doctrine laid down in the case of the Queen against Hodge. I am not going to detain the House at this late hour by going over the question, which has been pretty well threshed before, but I see no reason for expressing any regret with regard to this matter. I believe I am right, I believe the majority are right in the conclusion it came to last year, and I am prepared to thresh this question out before the proper tribunal, and that is on the public platform before the people of this country.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I intend to say but a few words on this question, and I would not trouble the House at all only that I do not care to give a silent vote on the proposition of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). I think that the question which was put to that hon. gentleman by the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) was a very pertinent one. The hon gentleman had the opportunity last year, although he declared subsequently, after the prorogation of Parliament, upon more than one occasion, that he was prevented from submitting a resolution he had prepared, declaring it expedient that the Jesuits' Estates Act should be submitted to the Supreme Court or the Privy Council for their opinion. I say he had the opportunity of presenting that to the House last Session if he had chosen to avail himself of it.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to correct the hon. gentleman in this matter. I submitted to the First Minister of the Crown a copy of a motion which I proposed to make. That motion was put in the hon gentleman's hands on the 28th April, and I attempted to move it on the 30th April. I had received from the Speaker the assurance that an opportunity would be given me to make a motion when the House next went into Committee of Supply, but I was prevented from making that motion. It is upon the records of the House, and it now appears from the speech of the hon, member for West Durham, that two days before I put that motion in the hands of the First Minister, he had received a letter from the hon. member from West Durham suggesting that this very course should be taken. I had proposed to make this motion earlier, and for reasons which it is not proper to explain here, but which led me to believe the Government intended to take this course, I deferred making the motion. I attempted to move it in good faith, but I was juggled out of the opportunity to move it, as the First Minister knows. Here is the motion, a copy of which I put in the hands of the First Minister:

"That, in view of doubts which have been expressed by many leading constitutional authorities as to the constitutionality of the Act of the Legislature of Quebec, entitled An Act respecting the settlement of the Jesuits' Estates, this House is of opinion that the Government of Canada should without delay obtain the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or other competent courts of jurisdiction, as to the constitutionality of the said Act."

The hon. gentleman was aware two days before that I intended to make that motion. As a matter of courtesy, I put a copy of the motion in his hand, which gave him that opportunity to arrange to defeat my purpose, and yet I have been accused in the country, as to night I have been accused by the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White), of not acting honestly in the matter.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). It is not quite proper that the hon. gentleman, when he rises to make an explanation, should make a speech in regard to the subject. What I alleged was that there was an opportunity after the one to which the hon. gentleman alludes for him to present the motion he has read to the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. That is not so.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I am aware that the hon, gentleman has, during the recess, made the same statement that he has to-night with the view of damaging the Government. I have no right to call in question the mode the hon. gentleman chooses to adopt in bringing this motion before the House, but he must take all the consequences of the course he has chosen to adopt. He has chosen to propose this resolution as an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply and, having done so, he must, of course, expect that those of us who usually act with the Government will not be disposed to vote for that motion as we might have done if it had been presented to the House in a different form. Those who are laymen, like myself, and are desirous to bring an intelligent judgment to bear on questions in regard to which-as I confess in my own case--we are unacquainted with the subtleties of constitutional law, must listen to the arguments of the legal luminaries on both sides in regard to such questions as that which was submitted to Parliament last Session. I then listened to all the arguments on the question which was brought up by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), and, with all deference to the legal attainments of my friend the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and those who argued with him, I confess that I thought the balance of the argument was in favor of the constitutionality of the Jesuits' Estates Act. I was brought to that conclusion reluctantly. I would have been better pleased to have been able to come to a different conclusion, but I deemed it right to give effect to the judgment I arrived at after hearing the arguments on both sides of the question. Notwithstanding that I was forced to the conclusion that the Act was constitutional, I thought, and I gave expression to the opinion on a subsequent occasion, that it would have been well if a legal opinion had been obtained as to its constitutionality from some tribunal outside of this House. I stated that on the occasion when the petition presented to the Government by Mr. Hugh Graham was discussed. I agree, however, with the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), that there is no reason why the expression of opinion by the law officers of the Crown as to the constitutionality of the Act should not have as much weight and as great a tendency to allay the excitement which has prevailed in certain portions of the community as a deliverance of the Supreme Court. Taking all these things into consideration and believing that no good would be accomplished by passing this resolution now—I do not attribute any improper motives to my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton); we know his zeal in promoting the cause which he, in common with some other gentlemen have undertaken to promote, and I know his desire, and a laudable desire it is from his point of view, to embarrass the Government—believing that no good object can be accomplished by passing this resolution, I shall therefore have to vote against it.

Mr. CASEY. One must regret that this matter should be again pressed upon our attention and must also regret the manner in which it has been discussed by the hon. gentleman who has brought it before the House. Instead of merely discussing the question whether the constitutionality of this Act should be referred to the Supreme Court or not, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) discussed at great length the merits of the Jesuits' Estates Act itself and the question whether it should have been disallowed or not. In fact, he re-opened the question we decided last year. I do not think the questions as to the merits of the Act or its constitutionality are matters for discussion just now. It is an ex post facto discussion which can do no good. It can only tend to maintain the agitation which has taken such a form in this country as to seriously endanger the relations between the two great races which inhabit it. However, when this question is forced upon our notice, we have to decide what action shall be taken thereupon. In the first place, I cannot avoid calling attention to the inconsistency of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), or any other member of the fraternity who call themselves "the noble Thirteen," in moving or suggesting any reference to the Supreme Court or to any other tribunal in regard to this question. A year ago, these gentlemen urged upon the House in the strongest possible language that, without going outside of the walls of this chamber, we should decide that this Act should be disallowed. Immediately after, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) proposed to move a resolution similar to the present one, and now, after all possibility of disallowance is passed, he brings it up again. In the first place he supported a resolution that the Act should be disallowed without reference to any body for a legal opinion on its constitutionality. Now he proposes the motion which he had not a chance of moving last year, that it should, before being either allowed or disallowed, have been referred to the Supreme Court for an opinion upon its constitutionality. I do not think that arguments in favor of this resolution, coming from a gentleman who has shown himself so inconsistent in regard to this matter, can have great weight. Still, I cannot say that there are no arguments in favor of this resolution, or that it should not be considered on its merits, and I propose to consider the question upon its own merits apart from the inconsistency of the hon, gentleman who moved it. But I cannot proceed to do so without expressing on this first opportunity I have had to do so before the House, my total disapprobation and reprobation, in fact-if that be not an unparliamentary word-of the manner in which what is called the Equal Rights agitation has been carried on throughout Ontario. I would not be speaking honestly or conscientiously if I did not do so. I have not the Mr. WHITE (Renfrew).

slightest sympathy with the statements made by the promoters of this agitation in regard to our Catholic fellow-citizens, whether they be of French or Enclish speaking nationalities. I would not have it supposed for a moment that I believe this country is at present suffering under ecclesiastical tyranny, or that there is any real reason for imagining that the Roman Catholic Church or any other church has usurped the power to control the Government of this country, or the members of this Legislature. I specially protest against the assumption so freely made by the gentlemen composing the noble Thirteen, and by none more freely or more offensively than by the hon. gentleman who proposed this resolution, that those who differed from him on that vote of last Session were not actuated by honest motives. I say that the noble 188 have just as much right to be proud of their vote on that question, just as much right to claim that they acted honestly and in accordance with their convictions, as the noble Thirteen. I do not admit that the fact of those gentlemen being in a small minority gives them any right to claim superior morality or superior patriotism to those possessed by the other members of this House. Now, on the other hand, I may say, and it may as well be said here, and perhaps better here than elsewhere, that there has been too much of that sort of influence in this agitation which, if it had been exerted by clergymen of the Catholic Church, would have been denounced by many Protestant people of Ontario as Jesuit-When a Protestant speaks of Jesuitism in the bad and derogatory sense, he means to imply that the clergyman whom he denounces as Jesuitical, has used his clerical position, his ecclesiastical influence and the influence of the church to which he belongs, to compel members of his church to vote in accordance with his views, that he has used his influence for political purposes. Now, I say that any clergymen, no matter to what Protestant denomination he belongs who uses clerical influence, uses pulpit influence, uses the strong influence arising from his ecclesiastical position, to induce, or compel, or overinfluence members of his flock to change their votes on any question, is guilty of Jesuitism in the same sense in which it is attributed by Protestants to members of the Society of Jesus. I have as much objection to being dictated to by a Protestant Jesuit as by one who belongs to the regular order of We cannot forget that this Canada of that name. ours is not in any exclusive sense a Protestant country; it is not in any exclusive sense even an English We have no state religion, we have country. two state languages, we have a very large body of people speaking one of those languages, and a still larger body professing the same religion as those who speak the French language. We cannot attempt to legislate for this country as if it were in any exclusive sense a Protestant or an English speaking country. Many people seem to wish that we should do so. They wish that the French people and the Catholic religion were excluded from our borders. Whether they like that or not, they cannot help it; they must put up with the condition of affairs that exists, and they must try to live in peace and harmony, so far as possible, with their fellow-citizens of a different race and religion. It is only on those conditions that the continued existence of this Canadian nation, as we may not now properly call it, can be maintained, and I assert strongly that any agitation like the present, which proceeds virtually on lines of race and religion, can only tend to the destruction of Confederation, and to the impossibility of continuing properly to govern the country. The gentlemen who call themselves the party of Equal Rights have, so far as I can ascertain, no distinct programme of what they would do if they obtained office in this country. During the recent election in this city I have asked several gentlemen what they would do if they had an Equal Rights Government in power to-morrow, and none of them could tell me anything more than that they would abolish the dual language in the North-West Territories, and the separate schools in Manitoba. Now, I consider these two items are hardly sufficient to form a programme for a great party; they are not even a couple of planks for a platform, because the changes proposed are so small in their practical working, even if they were carried out, as not properly to constitute even a couple of planks in the platform of a great party. I do not consider that there is any party in this country opposed to Equal Rights. I believe we are all, on general principles, willing and anxious to secure the equal rights of all members of the community, and when a party arises calling itself more particularly the party of Equal Rights, I think they should show us something more substantial than those two little items before they ask us to support them on the basis of the platform they offer to us. Although they have no definite programme, still, with their vague expressions of patriotism, their vague harangues, dictated by uneasiness in regard to French aggression, their vague assertions of something either having happened or about to happen, they have certainly obtained, for the time being, a very considerable following in many quarters. I have reason to hope, knowing the intelligence of the average Ontario elector, that when the matter is fully sifted, when it is found there is really no necessity for the creation of any revolutionary party of this kind, for its real object can hardly be attained without revolution, the following of that party will be smaller. Still we must recognise the fact that it exists just now, and on what it grows and feeds. In regard to this agitation and the manner in which it has been carried on, I do not feel that my prejudices, if you like, against that party and its management have anything to do with the opinion I am called upon to pronounce on the matter before the House to-night. The hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) objected that this was an amendment on going into Committee of Supply, and therefore members on the Government side of the House cannot freely express their opinions in regard to it by their vote because it was a vote of want of confidence in the Government. If the motion is not by its terms an expression of want of confidence, it is not so because of the fact that it is moved as an amendment on going into Committee of Supply, because within the last 24 hours an amendment moved by a leading member of the Opposition (Mr. Blake) on going into Supply was accepted by the leader of the Government and by this House, including the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White). Early in this Session an amendment on going into Supply, moved by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), which, in its terms, might be implied as censure on the past conduct of the Government, was similarly accepted by the Government. objection being put aside, we have to ask whether this motion has something that can commend itself to the opinion of the House by its own essence, and I may say at once that it does commend itself to my judgment. It expresses an opinion with respect to the procedure in regard to the Jesuits' Estates Act, which I think is the method that should have been followed. The motion does not involve any consideration of the merits of the Act, it does not involve any expression of opinion as to whether the Act should have been disallowed or not. If it stated on its face that the Act should have been disallowed without reference, I would not vote for it. I quite agree with the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and I would not do anything against my own opinion or the opinion of the House as delivered last year in regard to the question of disallowance; but I do not see that the vote I intend to give in favor of this amendment can possibly be sointerpreted. I have always believed, with many members on this side of the House, that no Act of a Provincial Legislature should be disallowed by this Government until an opinion had been obtained from the Supreme Court or some high tribunal as to its constitutionality. We were forced to consider the question of the constitutionality of that Act last Session without information from any legal tribunal. We considered it, and we came to a conclusion which, so far as I yet know seems to have been the correct one. I make no apology for my vote of last Session; but I am free to say that the Government should, before that matter was brought before the House and before they had given any assurance to the Government of Quebec as to what their action would be, have taken steps to secure a reference to some higher tribunal, and have come before the House backed by that opinion. have no doubt whatever that the decision would have been in accordance with that arrived at by the House; but whether that was so or not, we should only exercise the right of disallowance of such an Act after having obtained the opinion of a legal tribunal that it was an unconstitutional This question is essentially a legal one. This House, although containing many of the ablest lawyers in the country, is not composed entirely of members of the legal profession, and there are many who can only listen and wonder when questions of constitutional law are discussed across the floor. To ask the House to decide a purely legal and constitutional question is to ask it to carry a burden that should not be placed on its shoulders. We have the Supreme Court for the express purpose of deciding such questions. It was one of the principal reasons for the creation of that court, and it should take its share of the work, although, as the hon. gentleman for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has very strongly argued, the expression of that opinion would not relieve the Government of an iota of their responsibility. I do not think this case should be made a special one, I am sorry we have had to discuss it as if it were different from other cases, for in my opinion all such cases should be referred to the Supreme Court Yesterday we adopted the before action is taken. motion of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) to the effect that cases of importance should be submitted to our highest judicial tribunal, and a decision given after full argument. I think that covered nearly all the ground. might have been satisfied with that declaration, but when I am called upon to-day to vote for a resolution which is strictly in accordance with the resolution which the House adopted yesterday, I do not see how I can go back on my opinion so lately given, and I do not see how other hon. members can so soon depart from the opinion they gave on that occasion. The hon member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), with whose general opinions on this subject I quite agree, has urged that in this case any opinion of the Supreme Court would not have carried more weight than the opinion of the law officers of the Crown. The ground on which he argued the proposition was, that there was no provision for hearing argument before the Supreme court, and an ex parte decision without argument would have no more weight than the other opinion to which I referred. That statement, so far as it goes, is quite correct. I have no doubt an ex parte decision by the Supreme Court would not have much weight. But it must be remembered that if the Government had not so hastily pledged themselves not to use the power of disallowance, they had the whole of last Session in which they could have obtained power and made arrangements for having an argument on this question before the Supreme Court. There might have been an arrangement made just as is suggested in the present motion, that a decision might be given after hearing argument on both sides. The Government had agreed this year to take that course in future. Why was it not taken last year? They could easily have passed a Bill through the House to have arguments heard before the Supreme Court; the reference might have been made, and judgment given. The objection of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) falls to the ground, for the reason that, although there was at the time the Government gave the assurance to Mr. Mercier, no provisions for having argument before the Supreme Court, the Government had it in their power to have made that provision, and to have had an argument and reference and decision. That was the time the reference should have been made. I do not see that anything would have been gained by having a reference when the time for disallowance was about to expire, when the delegation met the Governor General in Quebec. There were no means of obtaining a satisfactory reference then, and I believe the Government could hardly be expected, after having given their assurance to Mr. Mercier, that they would not exercise the power of disallowance, to adopt a course which might imply they would have to break that promise. But before the House met, arrangements should have been made for the reference, and after the House met, measures should have been taken to secure arguments on the reference and the judicial decision. That, in brief, is my position on the matter. There is another point in connection with this reference to which I would call the special attention of the House and it is, that I believe by such a reference and the decision obtained thereon, we would almost have entirely avoided the agitation which has since taken place. If the gentlemen who have been agitating since disallowance was refused, had had an opportunity of presenting their arguments before a legal tribunal, and had failed to convince Mr. CASEY.

that tribunal that they were right, they might possibly be satisfied themselves that there was no constitutional grounds for disallowance, or if they were not, the vast majority of the people would have been satisfied. The Government would have been in a stronger position, the members on this side of the House who voted with the Government would have been in a stronger position, and the country would have been saved from a vast deal of useless and annoying agitation since that time. For all these reasons I believe that the Government should have made that reference, and I shall vote for the motion expressing regret that they have not done so.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). One word in regard to this question before it goes to a vote, just to show the position in which the matter stood in the case of the New Brunswick School Act. The only tribunals that we could then refer to were to the law officers of the Crown and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The latter having declined to take cognisance of the case, the law officers of the Crown gave an opinion. Afterwards when the persons who opposed the school law were dissatisfied with the opinion presented, a memorial was then presented to the law officers of the Crown, and they maintained their former opinion stating that the law was constitutional. Although that was a legal opinion, and fortified as it was after a second hearing, yet the parties were not satisfied, and we set to work in the courts, and had the matter fairly fought out before the courts of New Brunswick, and afterwards by the Privy Council which finally decided it. It seems to me that this is the principle which we should adopt in this case. My own idea was that the Government should have rested on the decision of the House last winter, and not have taken the responsibility of consulting the law officers of the Crown. I believe, however, that the Government had a right to consult them. My view of the case is, that if we had gone to the Supreme Court and got a certificate of their opinion, it would not have had any more weight throughout the country than the opinion of the law officers of the Crown had, because as the law stands we could not get the reasons of the judges for their decision. Therefore, it seems to me that it would be useless for us to have made the reference. I am satisfied, as I was statisfied last year, that this law is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature, and I shall vote against the motion.

Mr. FISHER. I desire to say but a few words on the vote which I intend to give in favor of this motion. I have no doubt or hesitation at all in regard to the Jesuits' Estates Act. I have no desire to reconsider the vote which I gave last year on the motion of my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). I gave that vote after full consideration and due deliberation. I am not a lawyer, but I have carefully studied the question which came before the House on that occasion. I took care to consult those of legal capacity and knowledge in whom I had full confidence, and I fully satisfied myself as to the fact that that Act was quite intra vires of the Legislature of Quebec. On that occasion, and since that occasion, I have taken upon myself to carefully study and read that Act. I have read and re-read it, section by section, and word by word, and studied it, so that I think I might almost say that I know it by heart. I have not been able to find in that Act any of these objections which are laid against it by the gentlemen who have carried on the agitation under the name of the Equal Rights Association. I have not been able to find in that Act any derogation of the Queen's Majesty. I have not been able to find any exaltation of a foreign potentate either in the Province of Quebec or in the Dominion of Canada, and I cannot in any way see how that Act is contrary to the constitution of this country. therefore, have no hesitation to-night, as on other occasions I had no hesitation, in stating that I believe that it was quite within the right of the Province of Quebec to legislate as it did, and that this Government could not have been justified in disallowing that Act. Believing so at that time, and believing so still, I have no desire to re-consider the decision which I gave last Session on the motion of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). But, Sir, at the end of that Session the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) undertook to move a motion, something in the terms of the present one, and at that time I stated to him that I was prepared to support that motion, not because I had any doubt with regard to the Jesuits' Estates Act, but because I believed that by the reference of that question to some such tribunal as the Supreme Court, or some tribunal as would put beyond question the validity of the Act, the groundwork and the substratum of the agitation would be removed, and to a large extent, at all events, the excuses for the appeals to passions, which have been made by the agitators on this question, would have fallen flat before the people of the country. I believe, Sir, that had such a course been taken the deplorable agitation we have had going on since that time would not have been able to take hold of the people in the way it has taken hold of them. I believe it would have been wise and expedient in the interests of the country to have had such a reference made, and I regret that it was not made. In this view, and this view alone, I feel I ought to support the motion of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). view of the expressions I have given utterance to, in my own county and elsewhere in this Dominion, upon the question of the Jesuits' Estates Act, I thought it was necessary I should make this statement so that the vote which I intend to give should not be misunderstood, or should not be supposed as indicating a change of opinion on my part with reference to this question.

Mr. MULOCK. Mr. Speaker, it has been stated by hon. members in the course of this discussion, that when the question of the Jesuits' Estates Act was before the House last Session, no prominent legal authority with the exception of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), had questioned the validity of the Act. Now, Sir, I would venture to say that that statement is entirely erroneous. The hon. gentleman will remember that the question, first of all, received its great impetus in the country by reason of the legal opinions advanced through legal journals in the city of Toronto. Subsequently, when the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) introduced the matter into this House, he did so by a resolution in favor of disallowance, based upon one ground only, namely, that the Act was ultravires. It was contended in the course of the argument to-night to a certain degree that the question of ultra vires was abandoned in this House. That the House may see that that was not so, I will just refer to the motion of the hon. member for Muskoka. After reciting, in the first clause, that the House regards the power of disallowance as a prerogative essential to the national existence, and after asserting in the second clause that this great power should be fearlessly exercised for the protection of the rights of the minority and for guarding the fundamental principles of the constitution, the resolution proceeds to the particular subject-matter in hand as follows:—

"That in the opinion of this House, the passage by the Legislature of the Province of Quebec, of the Act entitled 'An Act respecting the settlement of the Jesuits' Estates,' is beyond the power of the Legislature."

The reasons for that proposition follow, and then the resolution proceeds to say:

"And this House therefore prays that His Excellency will be graciously pleased to disallow the Act." Thus you see that the issue presented to this House last Session was that the Act in question was ultra vires of the Province of Quebec, and on that ground should be disallowed. The question thus became a pure question of law, which the House was asked to decide, and upon that decision it might be contended that the Government would be bound to act in either disallowing or allowing the Act. When the case came before the House in that form, it was manifest to any one who listened to the discussion, that no less suitable tribunal to determine that question could very well be found than was the House of Commons; and for that matter, probably the same statement might be made to-day. It is not necessary for me to point out in how many respects this House falls far short of being a judicial tribunal for dealing with matters, controversial and otherwise, involved in a religious discussion. That being the case, when I had the privilege of addressing the House on the subject, I urged on the Administration the importance of obtaining at the earliest possible moment a legal decision that would give satisfaction to the public in ample time to enable the Government afterwards to exercise their constitutional power to disallow the Act or otherwise. It has been contended here to-night that because the Government did, on the 19th day of January express an opinion in regard to the Act, they were never afterwards free to do so-that, in fact, although the constitution provides that until twelve months have elapsed the Act may be disallowed, yet, having expressed an opinion, the Executive are not free afterwards to express a different view. Looking at the spirit of our constitution, and bearing in mind that within twelve months the House must be called together, I attach great importance to that period. During those twelve months, should the Executive refuse to carry out the will of the House as expressed with regard to the power of disallowance, the House has a remedy in its own hands in dismissing those Ministers, and putting in power another Committee of the House that would carry out its will. Therefore, the period of twelve months named in the constitution has great significance. To apply these remarks to the state of affairs that existed in March last, we find that the time for the Government to act under the constitution had not expired. They still had until the following August in which to disallow or not to disallow the Act. It was premature, therefore, to pass the motion proposed by the hon. member for Muskoka. It was due to the Administration, that when the question arose as it did, that the House should advise the Administration as to the course they should pursue, and that the Administration, after hearing the discussion, should take such a course as would meet the requirements of the case. Both during the discussion on the motion, and subsequently, during the Session, I pressed on the Administration publicly from my place in this House the desira-bility of their obtaining such a legal decision as would meet the requirements of the case and satisfy the public. Well, Sir, I am pleased to know that the Government did to some extent endeavor to comply with the demand of the people. The hon Minister of Justice to-night argued that the decision of the House was the final decision upon the question of law-that 188 members of this House affirmed the validity of the Act, and that for the Administration afterwards to have applied to the courts would have been a slight on the decision of this House. Well, Sir, if that is the case, why did they apply to the law officers of the Crown for an opinion after this House had decided? If it would have been a slight on the House to have applied to the Supreme Court, it was equally a The Government knew full well, when they were applying to them for an opinion, that it was no slight on the House? They knew that they were doing to a very limited extent a good thing for the country, and I regret that in selecting a tribunal, they did not select one of our own creating. Not that I have the slightest doubt of the soundness of the advice given by the law officers of the Crown; but it would have been satisfactory to our people if the case had been submitted in such a manner as would have enabled them to hear arguments, and to have had a mode of appeal to the Privy Council. Therefore, I think the Administration erred in the selection of the tribunal. I would have favored the course that has been indicated to-night, namely a reference in the first place to the Supreme Court of Canada. On this present motion, I find myself to a certain extent embarrassed by reason of the manner in which the case has been discussed by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. I do not feel inclined to endorse all the arguments of my hon. friend from North Norfolk in introducing this motion, and much less many of his arguments on former occasions. Nevertheless I feel that it is necessary to deal with the motion stripped of the argument, and I do not think that in voting for it, as I intend to do, I can be taken as endorsing everything the hon. gentleman said. I advance my own reasons for voting for that I think it is the right direction, but there is one thing about it of which I think the House can reasonably complain, and that is its being brought up as a vote of want of confidence in the Administration. I do not think a question of this kind, if there is any other mode of settling it, should be settled at the point of the I feel more anxious for both the harmony and welfare of this country than the triumph of party, and I would gladly concede to the Government all the kudos they can obtain from this or any other measure, provided it can be so Mr. Mulock.

made as to promote the best interest of the country. I think the Government might have freed the members of this House to a certain extent, in which case they might have obtained a more candid expression of opinion. Yesterday the First Minister, in his most gracious way, accepted the proposition made by the hon. member for West Durham, which is very largely in the direction of the one at present under discussion, the only difference being that in the former an abstract principle is proposed which will govern our future conduct, whereas the latter has reference to an actual case. I, therefore, think the Administration might very fairly have given this House some undertaking in regard to procedure, which would have made it possible for the House to have come to a decision which would prevent trouble. The Government ought to have taken all reasonable means to allay public passion, and in failing in this duty they have done considerable injury to the minority in the Province of Ontario and, for that matter, in the Dominion of Canada. They have put them in an unenviable position, making them to some extent the object of attack at the hands of their fellow-citizens. No doubt that is unintentional, and I do not myself feel inclined to make any further observations on that point except to say that however unintentionally it was, it was an unfortunate act on the part of the Administration. It seems to me the Government having originally taken the bit in their teeth and come to a certain conclusion, rightly or wrongly, intend to stand by it instead of taking, as the First Minister has done frequently a sharp curve as the exigencies of the case demanded.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Charlton:

YEAS:

Messieurs

Bain (Wentworth), Barron, Blake, Rowman. Brien, Campbell, Cartwright (Sir Richard), Casey, Charlton, Fisher, Innes, Lang, Livingston, Macdonald (Huron), McCarthy, McCulla,

McMillan (Huron), McMullen, McNeill, Mulock, O'Brien, Paterson (Brant), Platt, Rowand, Scriver, Somerville, Sutherland, Tyrwhitt, Waldie, Wallace, Wilson (Elgin).—32.

NAYS:

Messieurs

Amyot, Audet, Bain (Soulanges), Béchard, Bergeron, Boisvert. Borden, Bourassa, Bowell. Boyle, Brown, Bryson. Burns, Cameron, Cargill, Carling Carpenter, Caron (Sir Adolphe), Choquette,

Jones, Jones (Digby), Jones (Halifax), Kenny, Kirk, Kirkpatrick, Labrosse, Labrosse, Landerkin, Langelier (Montmorency), Langelier (Quebec), Langevin (Sir Hector), La Rivière, Laurier, Laurier, Lavregne, Lister Lister, Lovitt. Macdonald (Sir John), McDonald (Victoria), McDougald (Pictou), McDougall (Cape Breton), McIntyre, McKay, McKeen, McMillan (Vaudreuil), Cimon Cochrane, Colby, Meigs, Mills (Annapolis), Mills (Bothwell), Corby, Costigan Coughlin Montague, Montplaisir,

Neveu,
Patterson (Essex), Coulombe, Curran. Daly, Davies, Davin, Perry, Davis, Dawson Porter Desaulniers. Purcell, Putnam, Rinfret. Desjardins, Dessaint, Dickey, Robillard. Roome, Dickinson, Ross, Rykert Doyon, Dupont, Dupont, Rykert, Earle, Ste. Marie,
Edgar, Skinner,
Eisenhauer, Small,
Ferguson (Leeds and Gren.), Sproule,
Ferguson (Welland),
Ferguson (Welland),
Fiset, Temple,
Flynn,
Festor Tisdale Flynn, Foster, Freeman, Tisdale, Turcot, Vanasse, Gauthier, Ward, Weldon (Albert), Weldon (St. John). Geoffrion. Gigault, Gillmor Welsh, White (Cardwell), Godbont Grandbois, Guay, Guillet White (Renfrew), Wilmot, Wilson (Lennox), Wood (Brockville), Wood (Westmoreland), Wright.—130. Haggart, Hickey, Holton, Jamieson.

Amendment negatived, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee).

Territorial Accounts...... $10,100

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This vote is required for payment of militia service in connection with the rebellion in the North-West. The payments from the 1st of July, 1889, up to the present, have been made under Governor General's warrant, by Order in Council of 19th November, 1889. The expenditure from the 1st of July, 1889, to the 30th of April, 1890, amounts to $9,504.44. I have put upon the table a detailed statement of the different sums paid under the vote just submitted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This appears to be chiefly made up by payments to the York and Simcoe Battalions.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The amount required for professional services at Medicine Hat amounts to $209. Then there is a payment to the Simcoe Battalion of $1,556.65. That is the kit-allowance. That matter was discussed fully in Parliament, and the Government decided to pay the kit-allowance. There is another amount for kit-allowance to the York-Simcoe Battalion of $383. Then there is an amount paid to O'Connor as an advance in the case of Ross vs. the Queen. Most of these amounts have been paid under judgments which have been obtained. Some of them were refused by the Crown, but were subsequently paid under a decision of the Court of Exchequer. John Ross was awarded by the Court of Exchequer for teaming $2,665. Thomas Kitching was awarded the difference between his contract and the market price, $510. R. C. McDonald was paid a balance of $323.

Mr. MULOCK. The amount per man paid to the York-Simcoe Battalion was $8.15, was it not?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the interest should be paid to these men. The other men were paid in 1885 and, when the hon. members for South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt) and Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) were away at the front, I looked after their interests. I was informed by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt) that some of these men who were in needy circumstances had disposed of their claims in a rather improvident manner.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I told the hon. gentleman that at Humboldt there was a pair of shoes issued to each man at $2.50, which usually forms a part of the kit, and it was arranged that these boots should go against the interest. That was explained to the men, and they were perfectly satisfied.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose it would be bootless for me to press the matter further, after that statement.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see here an item of $100 to pay J. A. Gemmill, Barrister, Ottawa, administrator of the estate of the late Francis J. Dickens, balance due on claim for compensation for losses during the North-West Rebellion. What were the losses in this case?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This must be for law costs.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why is it put down in the amount to be voted for losses?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Because the case was lost.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This is going it blind with a vengeance.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Not as far as the Department of Militia is concerned.

Mr. McMULLEN. At any rate Mr. Gemmill will see it.

Mr. FOSTER. The explanation is not here, because I think it comes under the Mounted Police, but I will call the attention of the Premier to it, and I hope the Committee will allow the item to pass.

Mr. MULOCK. The item ought to stand.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have understood during this Session that the Government would give the explanation or allow the item to stand. It does not matter as to the amount involved, but it is the question of principle. We kept the Minister of Agriculture up for a whole night and until one o'clock the next day because he had not the High Commissioner's report, and it would be unfair to him to allow this to pass when it has been laid down that, unless we get an explanation, the item should stand.

Mr. FOSTER. That has not been laid down as a rule from which there has been no departure. The other evening when the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was leading the House, four items were allowed to pass on my assurance that the information would be brought down, and I think the hon. gentleman should follow so illustrious an example.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am sorry that the hon. member for South Oxford allowed them to pass, but I was not in the House at the time.

Mr. MULOCK. When my constituents ask me what that $100 was paid for, I shall not be able to tell them.

Mr. FOSTER. You shall have the information.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is to pay any penalties imposed upon holders of licenses under the Dominion Act. The Dominion license was not issued to any applicant unless the applicant had been unable to obtain a local license, or had tendered his money and been refused. The most of these cases occurred in Ontario, a few in Nova Scotia and none in Quebec.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do they require local licenses under the Dominion Act?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; we took that ground.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that you issue licenses in Prince Edward Island where there was no local license required, and, of course, the same principle would apply if there was no local license.

Mr. McMULLEN. If a Dominion license were issued to a hotel keeper and a local license also, and he paid fees for both, would the Government refund the Dominion license fees?

Mr. COSTIGAN. In all cases we refunded the $15, but no damages have been refunded. A party having a local license would not be prosecuted by the local authorities. But there were a good many cases where parties failed to get a provincial license, and on evidence that they had tried in good faith to do so, having tendered the money, a Dominion license was issued to them. In many cases proceedings were taken against them by the provincial authorities and they were fined.

Mr. McMULLEN. In case of a fine does the Minister propose to pay not only the sum that was paid for the fine, but to recoup them for the amount of damages they received from having failed to get a license?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Only the amount of the penalty and costs.

Mr. McMULLEN. There was a case in my section where a man got a license under the Act to which the hon. gentleman refers. He sold liquor to an unfortunate man who, while going home in his waggon, fell out of it and broke his neck. Now, he got his liquor from a man who had no right to sell, because his license was not valid. I want to know whether his widow has not an action of damages against the Government for taking the life of her husband, because the Government issued a license they should not have issued?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think this sum should be paid to the widow. I think it would be a better way to expend it. If those parties refused to take a provincial license they might have expected they would be fined, and they should not have the money refunded.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is not in cases where parties refused to take a Provincial license, because if they had refused to take a Provincial license in Ontario they could not have got a Dominion license. That was a condition.

Mr. McMullen.

Mr. McMULLEN. In this case the man refused to take a Provincial license because he had the most unbounded confidence in the license law of this Government.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If he was refused a license from the local authorities we would have granted him a Dominion license. He must have applied to the Commissioner under the Dominion Act, and must have shown that he had applied for local license and had either failed to obtain it, or had tendered the money and been refused.

Mr. McMULLEN. He did make an application for a local license. Under the local Act only a certain number of licenses could be granted in a village or a town. This number of licenses had been granted and he could not receive a local license. Then he made application to the Dominion Government and got a license. He sold liquor under this pretended Dominion license by which one poor man lost his life. The question is what are you going to do with his widow.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Marry her.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not believe she would accept the hon. Minister.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No; she has had enough of that kind of a husband.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask the Minister why he required an applicant for license under this Act to have a different license under the Provincial Act, when the reason assigned in passing the Dominion Act was that the Provinces had no power to issue licenses?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The reason was that in passing the license law it was never intended to be a revenue law, and we made the fees only nominal. It was made a condition in the Act that the Provinces should be in a position to receive a local revenue.

Mr. WATSON. Were all the fees collected by the inspectors paid into the Government, or were they retained in many instances by the collectors?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Government receive a very small proportion of the fees. The fees were nominal.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much was the fee?

Mr. COSTIGAN. $15 was the whole fee. It was granted to the commissioners who kept the accounts and transacted the business, and it was never intended that this branch should be more than self-sustaining. Ten dollars were charged on the application being made, and $5 on the license being granted, and these fees were considered sufficient to defray the running expenses.

Mr. WATSON. What portion was the license inspector supposed to receive for his services?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The salaries were fixed by the Commissioners under law, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. They were fixed on a scale according to the importance of the district.

Mr. WATSON. Is it not a fact that, although salaries were paid by the Government to the inspectors, they collected from every unfortunate a fee of $15 and put it in their pockets?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is no foundation for such a statement.

Mr. WATSON. How much of the $15 was paid the Government?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There was a licensing board of three commissioners generally and the secretary, and they had to employ a constable or bailiff, keep the accounts and pay the running expenses. No receipts were derived by the Government in any way except in Montreal and Toronto, at all events in very few cases.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How much does this Act cost altogether?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The principal vote was for $150,000, and there have been one or two votes taken since.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). In the village of Spring-field, in the county of Elgin, a man took out a license issued by the Dominion Government. The inspector for the Local Government had him summoned before a magistrate and fined. He has since been making application for compensation on that account. Has this case been taken into consideration, and is it the intention of the Government to pay the man the amount of the fine together with the costs?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I adopted all possible means to ascertain the particulars of all cases. Circulars were sent out to the agents of the Department, and particulars of claims obtained. This circular was sent out about two years ago.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Were licenses issued to others than those who had applied for provincial

Mr. COSTIGAN. They were applied to parties who had applied for licenses which had either been issued or refused.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I know licenses were granted to hotel-keepers in St. Thomas, who had taken out licenses by local authorities. The Government treated him with indifference, and they never hardly paid any attention to his communication. He felt aggrieved because being a strong Conservative, and believing that Conservatives could do no wrong, and believing the statement of the First Minister to be correct, he took out a

Mr. FOSTER. Cut it short.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). My hon. friend says "cut it short," but I merely tell him what my friend said to me, and what I believe to be true. How am I going to know if this gentleman is going to obtain justice, if you are unable to tell the name of a single individual who will get a refund out of this vote? We ought to have the names, and unless we get them we have no guarantee that this money will not be given to favorites of the Government, who are not entitled to it at all. doubt the Minister of Finance would like to have the discussion cut short, because he does not wish to give any information, but we should have the information before the vote is passed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The difficulty I see is, that this vote is not to refund the fees that were paid in, but as it says:

"To pay holders of Dominion licenses, the costs of prosecutions and fines incurred for violations of the Provincial Act."

The hon. Minister of Finance must admit that it vote some thousands of dollars to pay for fines which have been incurred for violations of Provincial Acts. We are bound to suppose that the penalties were imposed justly, and it is a strange thing to be asked to compensate for fines justly inflicted. There ought to be a good deal of reason given why this should be done. If I understood the distinction drawn by the Minister of Inland Revenue, it was that this was only to pay to individuals who were fined, and who had applied for a license and had been refused.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understood the rule of the Department was, that no one was to have a Dominion license issued to him unless he had a permit from the Local Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Unless he had applied for it, and tendered the money, and it had either been refused or granted.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But then, when they did not get it, under what right had they to sell, if the Act, according to the Minister, did not seem to contemplate that a man could sell who held only a Dominion license alone?

Mr. COSTIGAN. He could do that. condition was put in, as I understand it, so as not to conflict with the provincial authorities, and to show that we did not want to take the revenue from them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). When they had not paid a fee to the Province, were they entitled to sell under this $15 license while others had to pay provincial license as well?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly, if the Local Government would not accept the fee.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think the Minister's explanation is hardly satisfactory. They did not recognise that the licenses issued by the Province were legal, and they treated him with indifference, whether the man had a local license or not. fore it could not have been for protecting the revenues of the Province.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It is true, too. It mad no difference to the Government whether the man had a local license or not. Whether they made application for the license or not, if they made application for the Dominion license they received it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I know that it is so. I know as a matter of fact that this man who was fined had not made an application, as I understood him, for a local license. You gave licenses whether a man was considered not fit to keep an hotel or not, or whether the license had expired. You took the fee from him, and where was the revenue to come from for the municipalities?

Mr. FOSTER. The explanation of the Minister of Inland Revenue was full and satisfactory. was simply this. The fees that were paid by the persons to whom the Dominion license was issued was not a license fee for the sale of liquor in the proper sense of the term. is a peculiar thing for the Commons of Canada to was a fee of $10 so as to provide that the application was bond fide. Then, if the applicant received a license, there was a fee of $5 charged for its issue. Both of these fees were to cover a sort of current expense, and were not considered to be sufficient for the sale of liquor for the year. While the Provincial Government issued a license at a fee of $150 or $300, or whatever it was, this arrangement was made so as not to take revenue from the Province, and not to give a revenue to the Dominion. The Dominion license fees went into the hands of a body which was organised under the law, consisting of commissioners, and the eommissioners appointed their inspectors who regulated the matter. These fees were accounted for to the commissioners and the commissioners arranged the salaries of the inspectors. My hon. friend says that that was done purposely, so as not to take the revenue for the sale of liquor away from the other Provinces. The Province of Ontario said: We have a right to issue licenses and we alone, and this arrangement my colleague speaks about was made so that there might be, if possible, no conflict between the two. The same party would sell with the authorisation of the Provincial and with the authorisation of the Dominion Legislature, so that, having the two he could not be prosecuted in either the one case or the other for selling without a proper license. But my hon. friend says that if it had been a condition of the law that the Provincial Government, by refusing a license to every applicant under the Dominion License Act, could have prevented selling, it might have rendered nugatory every application made under the Dominion law.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But there is the difficulty of selling under the $15 license and ignoring the Province.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole law might be that, because it was assuming that the Dominion had that right.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister of Finance is a little confused as to what the arrangement was. When the Dominion license was issued $10 was paid for the application and $5 for the license, and the party applying had to comply with the provisions imposed by the municipality in which he lived, with regard to the amount it required, not the amount the Province required. Each city fixes the amount of the license in that city.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, and each township fixes the price charged by the township for a license, whether Provincial or Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. I believe the hon. gentleman is right in that, the Legislature only fixing the maximum and the minimum.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I cannot understand how it could be expected that some would have been paying $200 and some only $15 for a license.

Mr. COCHRANE. They had to come under the by-laws of the municipalities.

Mr. LAURIER. I think the matter stands thus. In 1883, the Dominion assumed that the Provinces, which, up to that time, licensed the liquor trade, had no right to do so, and passed a Mr. Foster.

law under which license commissioners were appointed and licenses issued. But at the same time, I know in the Province of Quebec, and perhaps in the Province of Ontario also, the Local Legislature assumed that for the purpose of creating a revenue they could levy a fee for the license of selling liquor; that is to say, they could not be deprived of their power of obtaining revenue from this source. But it turned out afterwards that the law passed by this Parliament was beyond its powers, and parties who sold under that law were fined; and now, I understand, the object of this item is to enable the Government to reimburse those parties who were fined under the Dominion law

Mr. LANDERKIN. If we could only find out to whom this money is to be paid, it would be satisfactory. I think that could be easily discovered by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, and he ought to be prepared to give the House a statement of them before asking us to vote this money.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I want to satisfy the hon. Minister of Finance that I was right. I stated that it mattered little whether a license was issued by the Local Government or not, because the Dominion Government ignored that altogether. If a hotel-keeper paid to the municipality the amount exacted, this Government paid no attention at all to the provincial license, and did not attempt in any way to protect the revenues of the Province.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The non. Minister says that he pays this money to parties who applied for provincial licenses and were refused. How do they furnish proof of that?

Mr. COSTIGAN. When the inspectors collected any fees they were obliged to forward their accounts to the Department of Inland Revenue, where a strict record was kept of them. When I was obliged to ascertain who the claimants were, I placed myself in communication with the collectors of each Inland Revenue District throughout the country, asking them to ascertain the number of persons in their district who had paid penalties for having sold under the Dominion License Act. All that will have to be looked into before payments can be made. If this money were voted, my Department would be in a position to deal with the question. In the first place, we would have to take evidence to satisfy ourselves that each applicant belonged to that class intended by Parliament to be recouped, that he had a Dominion license, as to the amount of the fine imposed, and as to the fact that he had endeavored to get a provincial license and had been refused.

Mr. McMULLEN. To bring this question to a point, I wish to ask the hon. Minister how he comes to the conclusion that there is this record?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will bring down a statement in a couple of days showing the amounts claimed and the names as far as I can give them.

Resolutions reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 1.45 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 1st May, 1890.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CALGARY AND EDMONTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (for Sir John A. MACDONALD) moved:

That the House resolve itself, to-morrow, into a Committee to consider the following resolution:—
Resolved, That it is expedient, in order to enable the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company to construct a railway from the town of Calgary to some point on the North Saskatchewan River at or near Edmonton, to enter into a contract with such company for the transport of men, supplies, materials, and mails for twenty years, and to pay for such services during the said term, eighty thousand dollars per annum, such payment to be computed from the date of the completion of the said railway.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adoption of the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 6) relating to Bills of Exchange, Cheques and Promissory Notes.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There are several amendments, some of them important and some unimportant. I will explain them, and ask the. House to consider them separately. On page 6, line 24, begins a substantial amendment, but one that, I think, will not change the policy of the House with regard to the class of notes and bills to which the clause refers. It relates to the accept-The Bill as it ance payable at a particular place. left this House, provided in effect, that an acceptance payable at a particular place was a qualified acceptance, but the Bill went on to provide that, notwithstanding that, it should not be deemed qualified acceptance words unless the added "payable there not elsewere \mathbf{and} where," or some equivalent words. The change proposed by the Senate is in effect that that shall not be a qualified acceptance, but a further provision that we shall come to presently, provides that presentment shall be made at any place designated. The same result is, I think, arrived at, because it is provided by the Act that other parties to the bill shall not be discharged by reason of a qualified acceptance being taken, and this class of acceptances is taken out from the category of qualified acceptances. The meaning may be a little plainer, when I read the exact words of the amendment at page 6, line 84. It reads now thus .

"An acceptance is either (a) general, or (b) qualified: a general acceptance assents without qualification to the order of the drawer; a qualified acceptance in express terms yaries the effect of the bill as drawn:

"2. In particular, an acceptance is qualified which is—"(a) Conditional, that is to say, which makes payment by the acceptor dependent on the fulfilment of a condition therein stated."

Now it is proposed to add, after the word "stated," the words:

"But the acceptance to pay at a particular specified place is not conditional or qualified." On the same page, at line 26, the Senate proposes to leave out these words: "Local, that is to say, an acceptance to pay at a particular specified place, an acceptance to pay at a particular place is a general acceptance unless it expressly states that the bill is to be paid there only and not elsewhere."

That is to be left out, and the same object is to be accomplished by the provision that a bill payable at a particular place is not to be considered a qualified acceptance. The two amendments are for the complete accomplishment of that purpose. We come now to the provision on page 8, with respect to forged instruments. There was a good deal of discussion in this House as to the propriety of adopting a new provision to the effect that the forgery of an endorsement on a bill of exchange should not affect the bank. That proposition did not meet with the approval of this House, and was not pressed. The Senate, however, propose a change in the bill in that direction. They propose to add to section 24, as it passed this House, the following provision :-

"And provided also, that if a cheque, payable to order, is paid by the drawer upon a forged endorsement out of the funds of the drawer, or is so paid and charged to his account, the drawer shall have no right of action against the drawee for the recovery back of the amount so paid, or no defence to any claim made by the drawee for the amount so paid, as the case may be, unless he gives notice in writing of such forgery to the drawee within one year from the date at which he has received notice of such payment, by the delivery to him of such cheque, of any book or statement containing an entry of such payment, or otherwise; and in case of failure by the drawer to give such notice within the said period, such cheque shall be held to have been paid in due course as respects every other party thereto or named therein who has not previously instituted proceedings for the protection of his rights."

The effect of this addition is that if a forged cheque payable to order is paid upon a forged endorsement, there shall be a special period of limitation, namely, one year after the payment has been brought to the notice of the drawer by a return of the cheque or by an entry which comes to his notice in the bank book. On page 9 there is an unimportant amendment in the line 26, to make the section begin with "and" instead of "but." In the same section on line 25 the word "and" is changed to the word "but." In the same section there is an equally unimportant change; after the word "bill," the words "or note" are inserted. In line 43 there is an addition, after the word "right," of the words, "and without such words thereon, such instrument and any renewal thereof shall be void, except in the hands of the holder in due course without such notice of consideration." In section 32, with respect to the negotiation of bills, there is an amendment to sub-section 2, simply leaving out the words, "if he thinks fit." The next change is in section 42. The section reads

"When a bill is duly presented for acceptance and is not accepted on the day of presentment or the next following day, not being a legal holiday or a non-juridical day, the person presenting it must treat it as dishonored by non-acceptance."

The amendment provides that a change shall be made to two days instead of one, so that when a bill is duly presented for acceptance and not accepted within two days thereafter, the person presenting it must treat it as dishonored by nonacceptance. The next change is in section 45, subsection 7. It is quite unimportant, simply adding the words "or acceptance" where the place of payment specified in the bill is any city, town, or village. The next amendment is in section 47. The section reads:

1341

"A bill is dishonored by non-payment:—(a), when it is duly presented for payment and payment is refused and cannot be obtained; or (b), when presentment is excused, and the bill is overdue and unpaid."

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, when a bill is dishonored by non-payment, an immediate right of recourse against the drawer and endorsers accrues to the holder."

The amendment is simply to add the word "acceptor" after the word "drawer," so that it will read: "An immediate right of recourse against the drawer or acceptor or endorsers accrues to the holder." The next change is in section 49. Sub-section 4 of that section reads:

Sub-section 4 of that section reads:

"Notice or protest or dishonor of any bill payable in Canada, shall, notwithstanding anything in this section contained, be sufficiently given if it is addressed in due time to any party to such bill entitled to such notice, at his customary address or place of residence, or at the place at which such bill is dated, unless such party has, under his signature, designated another place; and in such latter case, such notice shall be sufficiently given, if addressed to him in due time at such place, and such notice shall be sufficient although the address of such party is other than either of such above mentioned places; and such notice shall be deemed to have been duly served and given over all purposes, if it be deposited in the post office at any time during the day on which such protest or presentment has been made, or on the next following juridical or business day."

It is proposed to add "with the postage paid

It is proposed to add "with the postage paid thereon." At the end of the same section there is another amendment. Sub-section 5 reads thus:

"Where a notice of dishonor is duly addressed and posted, the sender is deemed to have given due notice of dishonor, notwithstanding any miscarriage by the post office.

After the word "posted" insert the words "as above provided," so as to mean posted with the postage thereon. In the 51st section there is a slight amendment. It reads thus:

"Where an inland bill has been dishonored it may, if the holder thinks fit, be noted and protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, as the case may be, but it shall not, except in the Province of Quebec, be necessary to note or protest any such bill in order to preserve re-course against the drawer or endorser."

It is proposed to insert the words "subject to the provisions of this Act with respect to the notice of dishonor," the impression being, though perhaps not generally prevalent, that the exemption from protest might imply the exemption from notice of dishonor, and to make that point clear this amendment is proposed. In the same clause there is another amendment. Proceeding with the section. we find it reads:

"But it shall not, except in the Province of Quebec, be necessary to note except in the Frovince of Quocec, be necessary to note or protest any such bill in order to preserve the recourse against the drawer or endorser; but in the case of a bill drawn on any person in the Province of Quebec, or payable or accepted in any place therein, in default of protest for non-payment and of notice thereof, the parties liable on the bill, other than the acceptor, are discharged."

It is proposed to insert words which will make the amendment read thus:

"In the case of a bill drawn on any person in the Province of Quebec, or payable or accepted in any place therein, if dishonored or protested for non-payment, as the case may be, the default of notice thereof——"

There is an amendment again in the same section to sub-section a, which reads thus:

"When a bill is presented through the post office, and returned by post dishonored, it may be protested at the place to which it is returned, and on the day of its return, if received during business hours."

Sir John Thompson.

After the word "return," insert "not later than the day of return or the next juridical day," which will make it read:

"When a bill is presented and dishonored, it may be protested at the place to which it is returned, not later than the day it is returned or the next juridical day." There is an amendment in sub-section b. The subsection reads:

"When a bill, drawn payable at the place of business or residence of some person other than the drawee, has been dishonored by non-acceptance, it must be protested for non-payment at the place where it is expressed to be payable, or at a place in Canada, situated not more than five miles therefrom."

It is proposed to leave out the whole of the sub. section b, which provides that when a bill, drawn payable at the place of business or residence of some person other than the drawee, has been dishonored for non-acceptance, it must be protested for non-acceptance at the place where it is expressed to be payable, and no further presentment for payment to, or demand on, the drawee is necessarv. That was the subject of some discussion when the Bill was passed before the House, as to the necessity of presentment for non-payment again after the bill had been dishonored by non-acceptance, and it is proposed to remove doubt by striking out the sub-section. There was in former times the practice, not only of presenting for nonacceptance, but likewise of holding the bill till maturity and presenting it for non-payment, and the section seems to have been adopted with a view to that earlier practice. Now it is proposed to leave the matter simply optional. If the holder pleases, he can retain the bill until maturity, and protest again; but the section as it was might be ambiguous as to whether it was not imposing the necessity for so doing, and it is proposed to strike it out altogether. In section 51, sub-section 9, protest is dispensed with in circumstances which would dispense with the notice of dishonor. The delay in noting or protesting is excused when the delay is caused by circumstances beyond the control of the holder and not imputable to his fault, misconduct, or negligence. It is proposed to insert a provision that no clerk or teller shall act as a notary in protesting any note payable at the bank, or any branch of the bank, in which he is employed. The amendment proposed to section 52, provides that presentation for payment is not necessary in order to render the acceptor liable. It is also proposed to insert a provision, which was suggested in this House but not adopted, that, if any suit or action is instituted before presentation, the costs thereof shall be in the discretion of the court. In section 56, it is proposed to add the words "and is subject to all the provisions of this Act in reference to endorsers." It is proposed to add a sub-section to section 71, as follows :-

"If a bill or note, presented for acceptance, or payable out of Canada, is protested for non-acceptance or for non-payment, a notarial copy of the protest and of the notice of dishonor, and a notarial certificate of the service of such notice, shall be received in all courts as prama facie evidence of such protest, notice and service."

In section 86, it is proposed to substitute for the latter portion of the clause, the following:-

"Where a promissory note is made payable at a parti-cular place, it must be presented at that particular place in order to made the maker liable. In any other case presentment for payment is not necessary to make him liable, but the maker is not discharged by the omission to present it on the day it matures. But if any suit or action is instituted, the costs shall be in the discretion of the court, if no place of payment is specified in the body of the note."

The next amendment is to sub-section 4 of section 88, which now reads:

"Where a foreign note is dishonored, protest thereof, except in the Province of Quebec, is unnecessary."

It is proposed to make the sub-section read:

"Where a foreign note is dishonored, the protest there of is unnecessary except for the preservation of the liability of endorsers."

The next amendment is to sub-section 2 of section 90, in which it is proposed to insert the word "duly" before the word "sealed." That is in the case of a corporation. There is a verbal amendment to section 93. It is proposed to omit altogether section 96 which provides that the rules of the common law of England, save in so far as they are inconsistent with the express provisions of this Act, shall continue to apply to bills of exchange, promissory notes and cheques. I understand, from reading the debates in which that amendment was suggested, that the section was understood to be unnecessary, and possibly leading to some uncertainty as to what should be considered, in this country, the common law of England, and whether we were not, in one sense of the use of that term, including too much of the statute law, and in another and more restricted sense, in which we use the term common law, were leaving out statutory provisions altogether. I do not understand that there is any provision in the statute of Anne which is not expressly embodied here; but the omission of the clause will leave the matter as it stands now, to be determined by the rules of the common law. In the first schedule there is an amendment, which is merely verbal, and is made to correct an error. The schedule was copied from the English Act and it included the words "a householder in said district," because the English Act provides for householders making a protest in cases where a notary public or a justice of the peace is not available. We have restricted the right of protesting in the absence of a notary to a justice of the peace; therefore, it is not necessary to say anything about a householder.

Mr. EDGAR. I suppose the Minister of Justice has no idea of pressing those amendments to-day, because they are neither immaterial or short, and unless we have an opportunity of seeing them in the speech of the Minister as it will appear tomorrow in Hansard, it will be perfectly useless to attempt to discuss them, and unless they are printed in the Votes and Proceedings as well.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will not proceed to-day against the wish of any member of the House. It was well, I thought, to move it, in order to bring these to the notice of the House, but I will wait till the Hansard report of my explanations is published, and acquiesce in any further publication that is thought desirable.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think it is very desirable they should be published in the Votes and Proceedings, or in the separate form, otherwise we never would understand them.

Mr. MITCHELL. I quite agree with the suggestion. With all the attention that we were disposed to give the Minister's explanations, and no doubt they were very full and explicit, it was utterly impossible to follow them, and more particularly owing to the number of alterations in the original Bill, and I think it will be necessary to see them in the Votes and Proceedings.

Motion agreed to.

INTEREST ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 140) to amend chapter 127 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, entitled "An Act respecting Interest." He said: I will explain the Bill shortly, but I will not ask the House to go into Committee until the hon, senior member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) is in his place, because he has some amendments that he wishes to propose. There is a provision in the statute relating to interest, which was adopted, I think, some eight years ago, to the effect that when a mortgage is payable at a longer period than five years, the mortgagor may redeem at any time after the five years by paying all amounts due upon the mortgage. The operation of that section has led to considerable inconvenience in the case of parties applying for loans for long periods. Railway companies, for instance, desiring to make loans payable in 20 years, have been met with the objection that in Canada the law is such that the mortgage may be paid off at the end of five years; and lenders, of course, have found a material objection, that, inasmuch as the rate of interest may have fallen at the end of five years, they should be compelled to take payment of principal and interest then due in anticipation of the time contemplated in the contract. For that reason, and to meet that inconvenience, a number of those companies themselves have requested that the Act shall not apply to mortgages made by companies, and I shall acquiesce in that proposal. Other provisions of the Act are simply to repeal certain provisions in the Interest Act against usurious transactions. These were retained for a time after the repeal of the usury clauses, in order to meet outstanding cases, and it seems obvious now that they are no longer useful, and it is well to obliterate them. The amendment which I understand the member for St. John intends to propose, is that certain other provisions of a like kind, applicable to his Province, shall be repealed.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

GAS INSPECTION.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 137) to amend the Gas Inspection Act, chapter 101 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman explain the object of this Bill?

Mr. COSTIGAN. When the Bill was introduced I gave my explanations. The first change made was in order to bring natural gas under the operation of the law. The next was to provide for an increased revenue, by increasing the number of times the meters should be examined and returns made. Another section was to amend the law, so as to remove doubts as to connecting gas manufacturing establishments with the testing houses, whenever such are established in any such locality where gas is manufactured. The House will remember, that when the Estimates with respect to gas inspection were under consideration, I then stated that I would introduce amendments to increase the revenue, so as to decrease the deficit that stood against this branch of the service, on the ground that it would be more equitable to cause the financial burdens in this connection to be borne by the cities and towns, rather than by the rural population that receive little benefit from the Act. The method I suggested for the purpose of increasing the revenue was, as I stated, to introduce a section to make the inspection of meters more frequent, the same fee being retained, we securing by this means an increased revenue of about 30 per cent. Representations have, however, been made to me by interested parties, if you will, by the representatives of the gas companies in different parts of the country. They called my attention to a very important fact. They said that, while you are desirous of increasing the revenue from gas inspection, you are at the same time adding to our burdens by causing an unnecessarily frequent inspection of meters. On reference to our own reports of the inspection of meters I had to acknowledge the force of the argument, because a five years' term is a pretty satisfactory term of inspection, and there is a very small percentage of imperfect gas meters proved by our inspection returns within the term of five I, therefore, propose to increase the revenue in another way, and instead of changing the law with regard to the inspection of meters, I propose to simply add a cortain percentage to the fees all round, which will give from 10 to 12 per cent. increased revenue. Another matter brought to my attention was that while the gas companies had to compete with petroleum used for illuminating purposes and with the electric light, which is coming into general use, they were under no restriction of this kind, and it was only fair that a portion of the revenue should be obtained from the electric light companies, and that they should also be brought under the operation of the Act.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is the deficit annually?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The receipts average only about one-half the expenditure. The increase in the expenditure is due to the fact that within the last two years we had established gas inspection offices at eight or ten towns and cities where such offices had not been previously established. deficit, I may say, must reach about $20,000 a year. I retain in the Bill a clause which will bring natural gas under the operation of the Act. The question of bringing the electric light under its operation I defer, until the necessity for doing so is shown in Parliament or in the press, and the subject may be considered before next year.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I understand a strong representation was made with respect to this Bill by the gas companies, who object to the increased expense thrown on them in frequently removing The deficit in this branch of the Department has generally arisen partly from the fact that the hon. gentleman has been filling his office with many additional clerks and adding so largely to their salaries year by year, and now the Minister finds himself compelled to obtain more revenue from the gas companies, With the present overflowing Dominion treasury, I submit this deficit is a small affair on account of which we ask this

Mr. COSTIGAN.

It will cause great annoyance and inconvenience to the gas companies, which will place the increased cost on their consumers, and this dissatisfaction will be created. Each year the hon. gentleman appears to seek an additional amount of revenue, and this is a branch of the public service in which the salaries and expenses have more steadily increased than in any other. Under all these circumstances it is advisable that the Bill should be left over, especially in view of the late stage of the Session, and the fact that the gas companies strongly object to it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will ask the House to allow me to drop the clause respecting an increased tax on the gas companies. The hon, member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has raised the question, that if it has become necessary to increase the revenue of this branch of this Department it is due to extravagance in employing unnecessary clerks. In reply I may say that no additional clerk has been appointed in the inside Department, I think, since that branch was first organised. As regards the outside staff the increase has been considerable. The inspection of gas has become necessary wherever it is manufactured, and gas inspection districts have to be established. I de not desire to draw a comparison between the policy of the present Government and the policy of the past Government. The former Government appointed inspectors, and I do not say they did wrong, but they paid them salaries ranging from $1,000 to $1,400. For many years there was not much done, but for the whole eight years that I have been in office, I have not appointed more than two men to be gas inspectors in all the vacancies that occurred purely as gas inspectors. I have always acted, as I have explained on the Estimates, on the most economical system; that if a gas company was started, for instance, in the town of Brockville, we would make the Inland Revenue officer or the Customs officer discharge the duties of gas inspector, and give him $100 for the increased work instead of making a special appointment. The hon, gentleman will, therefore, see that it is unjust to me to say that the necessity for increased taxes has grown out of the extravagance of the Department.

Mr. LISTER. What clauses of the Bill do you propose to strike out?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Clauses 16 and 19 will have to be dropped.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then, as I understand it, the hon. gentleman is simply going to alter the Bill he has submitted to this House, in relation to the verification and stamping of gas meters, and that he proposes to change the three years, mentioned in the Bill, and leave the law as it originally stood, namely, five years.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

That matter, of course, must Mr. MITCHELL. be settled by experience, and the hon. Minister will know from his officers what is required in that particular, better than perhaps the general public would know. As I understood the Minister, he went on to say that he is deficient in revenue, and the object of the changes he proposed by this Bill was for the purpose of getting additional revenue to make up the deficiency, but in consequence a small affair on account of which we ask this of representations made by interested parties—I House to change the whole system of gas inspection. think these were the words he used—he had determined to alter that, and to let the law remain as at present, in relation to gas companies and the inspection of gas and the period of examination of the meters.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understood also that he proposed to make up the deficiency by additional

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not the whole deficiency.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, in the first place, I want to say, about the gas company of the city I know something about, that the inspection and supervision held by the Department over the gas company of the city of Montreal was very lax indeed. Some time ago, during a period of from ten days to a fortnight, everyone throughout the whole city was complaining of the poisonous and inferior character of the gas there. I presume the same thing exists in Ottawa and elsewhere, and if the presidents of these gas companies are to come here and make representations, and that the legislation is to be altered upon their representations, I do not think it is a sound basis to go on. It is well known that there are no investments in this country which have paid as these gas companies have paid, and it is also known that there are no closer corporations in Canada. It is almost impossible to get up any competition to them, and when competition is attempted, any amount of money, it is alleged, is provided to defeat the necessary legislation, as was experienced in Quebec some Sessions ago, when competition was attempted to be got up to the gas company of the city of Montreal. I am prepared to support any reasonable measure which the hon. Minister submits to this House for the purpose of getting a strict investigation into the character and quality of the gas supplied to the cities, and I know of no instance to which he can better direct himself, for the promotion of public health, than he can in investigating and keeping proper supervision over the gas supplies of this Dominion.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That is not the object of the Bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. The object of the Bill, as I understand it, is to raise additional fees to make up the deficiency which the cost of supervision has involved as a charge on the country. I think the hon. gentleman would do well to direct this legislation to secure a better and more efficient supply of gas, whether or not he increases the revenue that is necessary to make up the deficiency. The hon. gentleman stated that he thought of having an inspector of petroleum lamps and electric light.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That was brought under my notice, and the deputation asked why it was not done.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is no doubt that a deputation composed of the presidents of the different gas companies would recommend that, but they are about the most dangerous persons you could have to advise you in relation to it. There has been no demand that I ever heard of on the part of the public for the inspection of electric lights.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is what I told them.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad the Minister takes that view. With regard to the petroleum lamps, I do not see what other inspection is wanted than an inspection of the standard of oil to be used. There is no doubt that these presidents of gas companies, possessing the monopoly that they do, with their stock watered in some cases to the extent of two or three hundred per cent., and with immense dividends and large rests, should make these representations. But what the Government, and what this Parliament should look at in the interest of the people, is, how the best gas can be supplied for the lowest price. I think it would be well if the Minister would adopt the suggestion of the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), and let this Bill stand over until next year. The hon. gentleman could then revise the whole gas inspection system, with a view of securing a better quality of gas at a cheaper rate, if it were possible. With regard to inspection of electric light, nobody has asked for it. It is well known that the insurance companies countenance and support people in putting electric lights in their establishments, as a greater security against fire. There certainly is no necessity for inspection of electric lights, and in reference to petroleum oil lights, I do not see how we can get better security than at present, in fixing the inflammable standard of the oil.

Mr. LISTER. Is it the intention of the Government to appoint inspectors in every town and city in which there is a gas company?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; we are doing that by degrees.

Mr. LISTER. I think it would be well for the Minister to take into consideration the suggestion of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). I believe that those interested in the gas companies throughout the country consider that the Bill in its present shape is imperfect, and that it is, in consequence, unsatisfactory. I believe the Minister should adopt the suggestion of the hon. member, and at the next Session of Parliament bring in a Bill dealing with the whole question. So far as the statement of the hon. member for Northumberland is concerned, that the gas companies of this country are receiving immense dividends, that may apply to the city of Montreal and the city of Toronto; but in the smaller cities and towns throughout the Province of Ontario the gas companies are not successful and are not paying large dividends. In my own knowledge, some of them have paid only one or two small dividends in four or five years, and so far as these small companies are concerned, I do not think that legislation which has the effect of increasing the cost of working them, should be passed by this House. It is satisfactory to hear that the hon. gentleman proposes to eliminate some sections from the Bill which would have involved a very large increase in cost to the companies without any corresponding advantage. If it is the intention of the Government to increase the fees payable to the Department for the purpose of covering the increased expenditure, the expense must fall ultimately on the consumers of gas. So far as the smaller companies are concerned, I think he would be meeting their wishes if he would postpone his legislation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. With reference to what the hon member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) said, I think there is very little difference between

When I stated that I had changed my mind as to the mode of getting additional fees, it was for this reason: I at first thought, after consulting the Department, that the best way to get the increased revenue would be to shorten the term of inspection, and to have more frequent inspections; but these gentlemen, who, though interested, were entitled to have their views listened to with respect, represented that a more frequent inspection, besides increasing the revenue, would impose additional expense upon them. That was a fair argument, and was presented so strongly that I agreed to abandon that provision for the present, and ask the House simply to leave the terms of inspection the same as before. The hon gentleman said that I should deal more broadly with the question, as what the consumer wanted was pure gas. These gentlemen first objected to the manner in which I wanted to increase the revenue, and then to the stringency of section 6, which imposes a penalty for furnishing impure gas. In that case I said I would stand by the consumer. They also objected to the last section, which provides power to regulate the pressure. They said the pressure in one place is not the same as in another. For instance, the pressure in Quebec will not be the same as the pressure in a level city like Montreal; we have to regulate the pressure according to the locality. So that I am doing in this Bill just what the hon. gentleman said I ought to do.

Mr. MITCHELL. I quite approve of the hon. gentleman endeavoring to secure as pure gas on as economical terms as possible for those who consume it; but I do not see, that increasing the fee and lessening the number of inspections is going to accomplish anything but getting a little more mone for the Department, which I do not think is sufficiently important to justify legislation this Session. That is the only point on which we differ; but I think that if some comprehensive scheme were devised for getting us purer gas, it would be a benefit to the public.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the change in the new section from the old?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It makes the penalty arbitrary for furnishing impure gas, for every day the company furnishes it.

Mr. BROWN. I am informed by gas company managers that in the very best managed companies in the world, there will be now and then traces of sulphuretted hydrogen in the gas. There ought to be a distinction made between cases where the traces of sulphuretted hydrogen are very light, and those cases to which the hon. member for Northumberland referred. The hon. member for Northumberland is entitled to a great deal of credit for drawing the attention of the House to this matter, but there ought to be a distinction made between really bad gas, and that in which there are only, by accident, occasionally traces of sulphuretted hydrogen.

Mr. RLAKE. They ought to be allowed to plead—it is only a little one.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there any provision for recovering the penalty for bad gas?

Mr. Costigan.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is in the general law and in the Gas Act itself.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Privy Council Office...... $11,100

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the object of making an appropriation for further Civil Service examinations, when 3,000 persons have passed the examination, for whom no places can be found? It would be better to discontinue these examinations, or hold them only once every two or three years.

Mr. FOSTER. They were formerly held twice a year, and are now held but once a year. The law requires that they shall be held once a year, and an appropriation must be had to pay the salaries authorised by the Act. There are a number of persons who have passed the examinations and have not yet places, but at the same time, it would be scarcely fair to debar future applicants from having their chance of becoming eligible for situations in the service.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). With 3,000 persons unprovided for, not much wrong can be so done, by refusing to allow others to swell the number. It would be more proper to suspend this Act for some time, than the operation of the Franchise Act, as the Government have done with regard to the revising of the voters' list.

Mr. COOK. I think this is an absolute injury to the people who are fitting themselves for the Civil Service examination. There is a chance of about one out of 500 obtaining a situation, and a great many of these parties fit themselves for the position of civil servants, and they are relying upon that as a vocation for life. In this way their hopes will be entirely destroyed. I think the law should be repealed altogether. I should like to know, while I am on my feet, whether the gentlemen who have recently come from England and other parts of the world and have received appointments in the Civil Service, have passed the examination?

Mr. FOSTER. What parties does the hongentleman refer to?

Mr. COOK. To those who were sent out by the High Commissioner.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will give us the names, we may be able to get the information.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not suppose that one in 500 of those who go up for Civil Service examinations, does so in order to get a position in the Civil Service, but the fact of passing that examination gives them a certain standing when they seek for other employment.

Expenses in connection with Patent Record $10,000

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Is this vote to be continued for the printing of the Patent Record, or is it hereafter to be printed in the Printing Bureau?

Mr. FOSTER. As far as I understand from the explanations already given in the House by the Minister of Agriculture, there is a contract running now, but after the expiration of that contract, the Patent Record will be printed by the Printing Bureau.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). How long has that contract to run?

Mr. FOSTER. I think a little over a year.

Salary of the Deputy Speaker $2,000

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to add, that this shall be paid at the end of the Session. The Auditor General thinks that the Deputy Speaker would have to be paid by the month unless such a provision is inserted.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What would be the effect of this if there was a second Session held in the same year?

Mr. FOSTER. That would remain in the hands of the House.

Royal Military College $77,000

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me that the cost of the Royal Military College is increasing very rapidly. It used to be $40,000 or $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The explanation is this: Formerly all fees received went into the Department, and the money was disbursed by the Department. We have adopted the principle, which is, of course, the correct one, that all fees shall go into the hands of the Receiver General and all payments should be made by cheque, so that while the amount to be voted is a larger amount the fees now go into the revenue. There is really no increase.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There is a decrease, in fact. We charge now $100 additional to the cadets. As the Minister of Finance has explained, the difference is caused by another mode of bookkeeping.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I would like to call the attention of the Government to the great and immediate necessity that exists for a proper hospital in connection with that institution, the Royal Military College. You have got there 100 young men from all parts of Canada, and there is no attention whatever paid to them, or to their comfort, or to the restoration to health in case of illness. The place now used for a hospital was never intended for that purpose. It is down stairs in the cellar, with large steam pipes passing through it, where the temperature is never below eighty. It is in a dreadful state, and if an epidemic broke out and any loss of life occurred, the Government would be held responsible. I speak of this because I know that the parents of the young men who have been ill there, are very much alarmed about it. It is a matter which, I think, the Government and the Minister of Militia should take into immediate consideration, and prepare some place where, in case of illness, these young men could be taken care of and their lives saved.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Of course, I fully agree with what the hon gentleman has stated as to the necessity of a hospital, but I think the most important thing to be looked after is giving dormitory accommodation. My hon friend knows how inadequate that accommodation is, and I think we could make some arrangement with the City Hospital to receive our patients in case of need. I would prefer, if it can be done, that the first expenditure we incur on the Royal Military College, should be for the purpose of giving more dormitory accommodation.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would ask the Minister if the returns moved for in the early part of the Session relating to the examination of cadets in that college, who had obtained commissions, have been brought down?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am under the impression they were brought down some time ago, but I will ascertain, and if they have not been brought down, I will send them over to the hongentleman.

Government Printing Bureau, including Electric Light Plant........... $32,000

Mr. MULOCK. Does this item of $32,000 complete the expenditure on Printing Bureau building construction account?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the amounts in the Estimates and the Supplementary Estimates this year will complete the account.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I again call the attention of the Government to the expenditure on Major Hill Park. Is it the intention of the Government to continue to expend large sums on that park? I fail to understand the ground on which we are called upon to vote money to maintain a park for the people of Ottawa.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount charged in connection with the park was reduced last year and again this year. In Supply I stated that we have given a contract for the maintenance covering the year ending list July next, and tenders will be called for the following year. This park is merely an appendage of the Parliamentary grounds, and the sum expended is not a large one. The amount is being reduced every year, and I suppose after this year only an expenditure for maintaining the grounds, without any outlay for improvements, will only be necessary.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Can the Government resume possession and ownership of the park?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It belongs to the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Has the Government possession now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much was the contract for keeping the park in order last year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $4,500.

Harbors and Rivers, Ontario...... $125,500

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Early in the Session I obtained an order of the House for copies of the report respecting Port Stanley Harbor, but up to the present time it has not been brought down. I have enquired from the Government on several occasions, and they have promised to bring it down in a few days, but I have not yet seen it. I took the precaution to enquire at the Department to-day, but I have not received the report. The Minister will remember that a deputation waited on him and pointed out the serious condition of this harbor, and how its improvement was necessary for railway and other interests. He, has, however, treated those representations with apparent indifference, regardless of the condition of the harbor, the inability of vessels to come there, and The hon. the lack of proper facilities for trade. gentleman may have some object in not bringing down the report, if so, what that object is I do not know. I now ask him again, whether he intends to have that report this Session, or whether I will have it next Session, if not this Session?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am glad the hon. gentleman did not say I had any sinister motive in not giving him the papers, because I have not. I made a recommendation to the Privy Council, and the report had to be before the Council. The the report had to be before the Council. minute in Council had to be sent to His Excellency the Governor General to be signed, and as soon as that comes back, I will be able to give him the decision which we have come to, and then the papers may be brought down.

Mr. COOK. Some time ago a deputation from the town of Midland, waited upon the Minister in reference to this work, and I find the following in the Midland Free Press, of 3rd April :-

"Our deputation returned from Ottawa Saturday. They saw the Minister of Public Works in reference to changes in plans of esplanade, and the Minister of Marine about lighthouses. It was intimated to them that they were rather late, the Supplementary Estimates have been brought down. If the dredge is at Penetang this summer we will get it, otherwise it is doubtful if the dredging will be done this summer. The deputation did all in their power, and if nothing comes out of their trip to Ottawa this year, there may later on. Instead of there being enough money to our credit to make the change, there is only some $500 of the esplanade grant unexpended."

The Minister evidently forgot to tell them that there were other Supplementary Estimates to come down. I would like to know if only $300 remains unexpended, as the newspaper states?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The local authorities voted $11,000 and the Government voted a certain sum of money, and now these $6,000 are to We expended complete the works undertaken. partly the money voted by Parliament, and the money subscribed by the local authorities, which had been deposited in my name as Minister of Public When the deputation came down, they wanted some change in the contract work. thought we could not make any change, that would require a larger sum of money than was intended in the first instance; but after looking into the matter well, I saw that we could accede to a portion of what they asked without exceeding the grant, and some of the gentlemen on the deputation seemed to be satisfied at this. My intention has always been to make that work as good as possible, but if the required changes entail a larger expenditure, I shall have to obtain the consent of my colleagues, and then come to Parliament for an additional amount. These $6,000 which are now voted, with the balance which remains in the hands of the Department, will complete the works which have been undertaken. The hon. gentleman may rest assured that the dredging will go on with the remainder of the work as required.

For three lines of steamers running between the ports of Halifax and St. John, or either, and the West Indies and South America..... $85,000 from Mr. Wood, of Halifax, for the line between Halifax and St. John and the West Indies. He offered to run a steamer of 700 tons, built at Glasgow, of a speed of twelve knots an hour, making ten trips in the year, for $2,000 per trip. The Government seem to have ignored that tender and to have given the contract to the line in which the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) is interested, for $4,000 per month. The hon. gentleman stated, when this matter was before the House on a previous occasion, that that payment was per trip, but I find by the return that it is per month. On what principle the hon. Minister of Finance made that contract for just double the amount of Mr. Wood's tender, I cannot understand. On its face, it requires some explanation, for it appears to be unjustifiable.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I see by the return Mr. Wilson (Elgin).

My hon. friend will see that Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Wood, in the first place, proposed to have only one vessel, and that of 700 tons, and making but ten trips in the year; and it is impossible, with a vessel of that size, and with only ten trips, to perform that service satisfactorily. The minimum capacity which we wished the vessels for that route to have was 1,000 tons; and subsequent events have shown the objection to Mr. Wood's tender on that ground to have been a well-considered objec-So far two trips have been made, and the vessel is now preparing to make her third trip, and the amount of freight offering has been more than the larger vessel could carry. The hon. gentleman will see by the return that Messrs. Pickford & Black also tendered for a 700-ton vessel, which I did not accept, largely because of the smallness of the vessel, although there were other objections also. When you take into account that Mr. Wood had no vessel and proposed to build one, and that a small vessel, and proposed to make only ten trips per year, I think the Government were justified in taking the larger vessel and the greater number of trips.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the answer_of the hon. gentleman is hardly satisfactory. The successful company were in precisely the same condition as Mr. Wood. They had not a vessel of their own, but they were proposing to have one The Government stated themselves that this was in the nature of an experiment, and if they had taken a smaller vessel of greater speed, and at half the rate, they would have been able to ascertain whether or not the undertaking would justify the subsidy; but they took the larger vessel, and the moment the crop is over that vessel will be obliged to come back with ballast. I venture to say that the vessel has never been half full on the return trip, although I dare say she has all the freight she can carry on the outward trip, because she carries it at half the usual rate, in consequence of the vessel being too large for the route. If the Government had taken a smaller vessel and worked up a business in time at a lower rate, it would have been a much more defensible policy than the one they have pursued.

I see, according to the paper Mr. ELLIS. brought down, that the contract is not executed. Is it according to the author, Mr. Van Wart, and how much a month is it?

Mr. FOSTER. The contract is according to the brought down that the Government had a tender offer, and the amount to be paid is $4,100 per round trip. The contract has been executed, and was returned to me the other day.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I have waited in the hope that the acting Minister of Marine would be present before these Estimates were finally concurred in, because he promised to give us some information with regard to the vote of $8,844.32 to Mr. Jotham O'Brien. The acting Minister of Marine said this amount was recommended by the inspector for the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I have looked through the returns which have been brought down, and I am unable to find among them any document from Mr. Cocker recommending any payment on this account. His report refers only to the building of the vessel, saying that the work was well done; but there is no official statement from him that Mr. Jotham O'Brien was entitled to this money. I have since learned, that after this transaction was closed, Mr. Jotham O'Brien moved to the United States, but that his services being required in the County of Cumberland in the last election, the High Commissioner promised him, that if he came back and assisted at the election, his claim, which had been refused up to that time, would be entertained; and that is the reasan, I suppose, why this vote is in the Estimates to-day.

BANKS AND BANKING.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 127) respecting Banks and Banking.

(In the Committee.)

On section 66,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), before leaving, asked me to have the words "which has accrued and become payable" in this section struck out. He objects to them on the ground that an advance may be made to a party who holds stock, knowing that there is a lien upon it, and that they may deprive him of his rights.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. These words are an addition; they are not in the law as it stands, and I do not think they are necessary.

Mr. BLAKE. It does not appear to me that this is an advantageous addition. I do not think there is any use of inserting words which can very easily be evaded, and the practical effect of which will be to introduce a system of evasion. Under the present law, although a bank is not entitled to advance on the security of its stock, if it does advance upon other security, it obtains a certain statutory lien—at any rate, it has the right to say that the stock shall not be parted with until the debt is paid. The proposal now is to say that that right shall not accrue until the debt has become due. The practical result of that will be just this, that you will have a fictitious system of loaning; you will have a due bill or a sight draft or a demand note representing the loan, and a demand made at once, and a debt becoming due at once, but left lying until the time comes when it is understood tacitly that the borrower shall settle it. The clause can be overcome by that easy and simple process, so that all you are doing is to promote a fictitious set of transactions.

Mr. COCKBURN. I believe the hon. member for West Durham has stated the point very clearly. I may only add the other possibility, namely, that it would be quite possible for a bank to make an engagement under those circumstances that as soon as the borrower began to sell any shares, the debt should become due, so that it is really impossible to meet a provision of this kind.

Mr. FOSTER. We will allow that clause to stand.

On section 67,

Mr. FOSTER. That section will stand.

On section 69.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I wish to call the attention of the Minister to this section. It is true that it is the present law, but it opens the door to great abuses. It speaks of additional security, and this is what has been done to my knowledge: A note has been discounted on the endorsation of a party, who is entirely irresponsible, but the real security of the bank—although it is supposed to be only an additional security—is a mortgage or the transfer of a timber limit. I know of some banks which have been holding timber limits for a number of years, and those limits were obtained as additional security. Really, the only security at all was the timber limit or the mortgage itself. Some provision should be made to prevent such an abuse.

On section 70,

Mr. FOSTER. In the 52nd line, after the word "by," I propose to add these words:

"A mortgagee or other encumbrancer, having priority over a mortgage or other encumbrance held by a bank or offered for sale by it."

On section 74,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). If that is the present law, it has given rise to the greatest difficulties as to its construction. A decision was given by the Court of Appeals in Ontario, which was reversed by the Supreme Court, in its interpretation of the clause which corresponded to this one.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the question the hon. gentleman refers to had better come up on the next clause. I suppose it is the question of banks being allowed to loan money on warehouse receipts.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The case I refer to was from Toronto, where the Court of Appeals decided that it was not a legal warehouse receipt, and the Supreme Court decided the other way. I know there is a strong opinion in the Province of Quebec that the decision of the Court of Appeals of Ontario was the right one.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman desires to apply this to all the clauses referring to warehouse receipts?

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Yes.

note representing the loan, and a demand made at once, and a debt becoming due at once, but left irrespective of the question which he proposes to lying until the time comes when it is understood tacitly that the borrower shall settle it. The clause right to the hon gentleman to come back to them.

and make his suggestions at a future time. We have already passed a number of sections to which we intend again to call the attention of the Committee.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I am not raising the question as to the authority of Parliament to deal with this matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That was the question raised in the case of Smith.

Mr. BLAKE. That was one of the questions. There was also a question raised as to whether it was a good warehouse receipt, because it was given by the owner himself.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, gentleman said that his remarks would apply to all the warehouse receipt clauses. In view of the decision in the Smith case, this clause might stand.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not suppose that the hon. gentleman proposes that we should even formally pass the very important clauses which add to the lien power of banks. I think we had better let them stand instead of passing them and coming back to them again.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was referring to the request of the member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier), to allow that clause to stand.

On section 75,

Mr. BLAKE. I think that clause demands some exposition.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will state briefly the change which is proposed, and, in order to do that, I must refer to the previous legislation on the subject of warehouse receipts. That legislation is, I think, based on bailment. The warehouseman is supposed to have custody of the goods of another party, and to give a receipt indicating that he holds those goods for delivery to another person. In the legislation which has hitherto been adopted in regard to banking, that has been made much wider. Producers of nearly all kinds have been allowed to give such securities on goods which were in their own possession without their being transferred to the possession of any warehouseman. fact, the words in the statute have been so wide in their application that almost any person in business could give such a security on goods in his, own possession. That was originally restricted to certain classes of manufactures, but one class of manufacturers after another applied to Parliament for like permission, and it came to be a mere question as to what classes of manufacturers or producers this privilege should be given to without regard to actual warehous-I think it is very undesirable that this provision should be widened as it has been, and this Bill proposes to observe two principles. One of these principles is, that a warehouseman having actual possession of the goods of another party, may issue a warehouse receipt, and that upon that the bank may make advances. So far as that is concerned, we adhere to the primary principle on which these warehouse receipts are based, and I think it is a perfectly safe principle to act upon, and one that would not interfere with the principles of chattel mortgages, because there is an actual change of possession. We propose, however, in view of the convenience which these warehouse receipts have afforded to the manufacturing classes in Sir John Thompson.

the country, and to commercial men generally, not to confine it exclusively to the case of mere warehousemen holding property of other persons, as that would make a very radical change in the present law. We propose, on the contrary, that there shall be a second principle introduced, namely, that a manufacturer or producer of any article of merchandise or commerce, may give a like security upon his own goods, without their actually going into the possession of a warehouseman. The advantages of allowing this are demonstrated by past experience. The experience has been that, in aid of the manufacturers and producers of the country, advances to an enormous amount in the aggregate have been made by the banks, with safety and with great convenience to the producers themselves, by enabling the means to be procured for carrying their stock until it is ready for the market, until it has gone through all the changes in the course of manufacture which makes the product ready for sale. I think experience has also developed that this practice has not led to inconvenience to the public as regards those frauds, to prevent which the chattel mortgage system, in force in all the Provinces, was designed. The principal abuse which the chattel mortgages are intended to prevent, is the securing of past debts upon merchandise or movable property by secret transfers; and to prevent that, as well as to prevent the acquisition of credit upon goods which are really pledged to other persons, it is provided by the chattel mortgage system that such transfer or conveyance of personal property shall only be by an instrument which becomes notorious by registration. To insist upon the application of that rule to the goods in course of manufacture, in view of the past practice with regard to these ware-house receipts, and the latitude heretofore allowed, would be a very severe restriction; it is one which would absolutely prevent advances being made, because the public, and especially the business community, have come to regard chattel mortgages and bills of sale as indicating a state of embarrassment; and in a mere loan or advance to carry the goods which are in course of manufacture until their manufacture is complete, the system of advancing upon chattel mortgages, could not be applied in the very class of cases in which warehouse receipts, in regard to manufacturers and producers, have been applied under the present banking law. We think that danger and that inconvenience will be very largely removed by this circumstance, that the system can only be applied in relation to an advance upon goods, and cannot be used in relation to a past debt. When we come to apply that principle to banking institutions, managed as they are, as we all know, upon methodical principles, and with books kept in such a way that the transaction as regards the advance, is susceptible of clear and ready proof, the danger of the security being taken for other than the actual advance, is practically reduced to a cipher. Furthermore, we have come to the conclusion that it would exceedingly disturb business to overthrow the present system, and that it would be well to make the restrictions which we now propose, namely, restricting the securing by the owner to the simple case of advance to a producer, or a manufacturer, in a wholesale way. The danger of abuse in that regard is very slight indeed, the more so as the principle that has grown up of making this advance to manufacturers and producers, is so well recognised and understood in the business community, that it is generally recognised that goods in course of manufacture are liable to have a lien like this upon them. These are the principal changes that are made in the warehouse receipt clauses.

Mr. BARRON. I do not know that I ought to question the statements of the Minister when he speaks as to what the law has been in relation to warehouse receipts, but I do not understand the law to have been that anybody heretofore could have simply given a warehouse receipt on being the owner of the goods. I understand the law in the past has passed through three different periods. At first, only a bailee of goods could give a warehouse receipt; then it became law that a warehouseman could give a warehouse receipt on his own goods, but he had to be a warehouseman, and I understand that up to this period it has been the law that we could only get a man to give a warehouse receipt upon his own goods, provided he was a warehouseman. Now, this law proposes to extend it to such an extent that anybody, provided he comes within the category of the persons or characters spoken of in this Act, can give a warehouse Now, I think this receipt upon his own goods. rather a dangerous innovation, because it is enabling a person to give a secret conveyance upon his own goods which will be a most dangerous thing to the community at large. I would refer the Minister to the statement of Chancellor Boyd in the case of Banks vs. Robinson, when speaking upon the principle involved in giving secret conveyances upon goods as security for advances. We have had a law in the Province of Ontario relating to conditional sales, which law enabled a manufacturer to dispose of his manufactured goods, retaining in himself the property in those goods; in other words, a manufacturer was able to sell a manufac-tured article, deliver it over to the possession of the vendee, and retain in himself the property in those goods, enabling the vendee thereof, to all intents and purposes, to appear as the owner, and giving him a fictitious credit. It is that state of things that induced Chancellor Boyd to express the opinion I have mentioned—I am not able to give the text of his language from memory—but it is that state of things that induced him to characterise the evil as being a very vicious one. It seems to me that the system is about being in-But if it is necestroduced here by this section. sarry, and I am not prepared to say it is not necessary, in the interests of the banks, then I say it should go a little further, so as to point out clearly and plainly what is meant by the term wholesale producer. I observe by the section that any person who is a "wholesale manufacturer or producer of any goods, wares or merchandise," and so forth. The words "goods, wares and merchandise," in the interpretation clause, include agricultural produce and other articles of commerce. Hence I say that a farmer apparently comes within this clause. I do not object by any means to the farmers coming within this clause; but if it is so intended, or if the section is to be made as wide as it is being made, it should be made as clear as possible that the farmer does come within it beyond dispute. I see no reason why a farmer, having a quantity of grain in his barn, should not be able to go to a bank and pledge it as security for a temporary advance.

Mr. COCKBURN. He is not a wholesale man. Mr. BARRON. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would define the meaning of the word "wholesale." A farmer certainly comes within the section, by reason of the fact that goods, wares and merchandise include agricultural produce. Then the question is as to what is a wholesale manufacturer or producer. It is difficult to say. One man produces agricultural products on a large scale, while another does so on a small scale.

Mr. BLAKE. For instance, Sir John Lister-Kave.

Mr. BARRON. Yes; but if the right is only to be given to Sir John Lister-Kaye, or such gentlemen, to obtain loans of money from banks on the security of grain in their barns, we are making very invidious distinctions. I complain that the section is too wide, and that it should be somewhat limited for the reason I have stated, that it will create a general feeling of distrust, when it is known that any one with whom you do business may have all the time his goods pledged to the banks, when he appears to be the owner of them to all intents and purposes, and thereby he is given an artificial and fictitious standing in the community. If the clause has to be as wide as this is, then in the interests of the farmers it should be made perfectly clear, that they are included, and they can go to the banks and get the same advantage as others. If it is not altered in the direction I have indicated, I shall move an amendment on the third reading, so as to make it plain that farmers are included.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is true, that by the interpretation clause of the present law, the term warehouse receipt is so defined as to only apply to one who is engaged in carrying on the warehousing business, and not to a person who is giving a pledge on his own goods. Section 54 enumerates certain persons who may give such securities. That provision was not in the original Act, but it was introduced in consequence of the restricted interpretation which the courts very naturally placed on the interpretation clause as to what the warehouse receipt was. There can be no question that the wording is sufficiently wide to permit owners, even although not engaged in the business of warehousing, to give warehouse receipts for their own goods.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Whence does the hon. gentleman think he has power to legislate on this subject? Is it under the provisions respecting banking, or those respecting trade and commerce?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think they are banking provisions, inasmuch as we are permitting the banks to loan on this kind of securities, and stating what their right shall be in that regard.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I call the Minister's attention to the fact that we are not merely giving the banks the capacity to enter into engagements of this sort, but we are stating how rights and properties shall be acquired other than the stocks of a bank, that is to say, property outside of the bank. We are stating what may be the security, and how it may be secured. These sections seem to be altogether outside of the provisions respecting trade or commerce, or banking.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Of course I can only state my own impression on the subject, but I think it seems to have been decided in the affirmative by the highest court.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Under the present law, as I understand it, persons can give warehouse receipts when they are themselves the owners of the goods, with this restriction, that they must be ostensibly occupied in the business of warehousemen. Under the present law not all owners have this privilege, but certain owners who are enumerated. The proposed change in the law is to do away with this restriction as to the classes of persons enumerated, and it is proposed that they shall not be required to be persons engaged in the warehousing business, or the persons enumerated in section 64 of the present law. That is an important alteration in the law as it has existed up to the present moment. I do not say it is a bad change, but I would like to have it made clear upon that point.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not read section 74 as the hon, gentleman does. I understand his view to be that section 74 confines the right to give a warehouse receipt to a person who is engaged in the business of warehousing, although he may give a receipt for his own goods. I think that is not the interpretation, because the persons are enumerated who can give a warehouse receipt, and some of them are persons not engaged in the ostensible business of warehousing, such as a keeper of a yard, wharf or warehouse, millers and so on. It enables these persons to give a lien upon their own goods, and the hon, gentleman will see from the enumeration that takes place in section 74, that some of them are persons who cannot be engaged in the business of warehousing, such as masters of vessels. It was distinctly intended to widen the class of persons who could give liens on their goods bevond warehousemen.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There is one point I would like to be clear on in reference to this clause, which I think is a new one. I would like the legal gentlemen of the House to determine whether it does not enable the banks to become, at any time, prior creditors, by putting them in a position better than other creditors. They may take, as I understand it, a warehouse receipt upon all the goods in the possession of a manufacturer, or wholesale dealer, and it gives the bank an absolute right and priority. That will be done, as I understand, without any notice whatever being given to the public, and its effect will be as legally binding as a chattel mortgage, although in the case of a chattel mortgage the public are notified of it, and the person soliciting credit is known to have given that mortgage by everyone, which of course puts the person from whom credit is solicited on his guard. I wish to ask the Minister particularly to explain: Could the banks, under this, take a warehouse receipt which would in effect transfer the whole of the property that a manufacturer might have into their hands, and, for their safety, shutting out all other credit-

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is so.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Well, is not that a point to be considered? Section 76 says:

"The banks shall not acquire or hold any warehouse receipt or bill of lading or security under the preceding section, to secure the payment of any bill, note or debt, Mr. Mills (Bothwell).

unless such bill, note or debt, is negotiated or contracted at the time of the acquisition thereof by the bank."

The Minister laid great stress upon this when stating that it would not be the recovery of a bank debt, but it would be simply transferring the property at that time. But the clause goes on to sav:

"Or upon the promise that such warehouse receipt or bill of lading, or security, would be given to the bank." Well, under that, could not a bank, in dealing with any one, say: I make you this advance, but you will give me a warehouse receipt at any time I "Oh, yes," the customer may say, and want it. the transaction may run along. His credit is good and the public, meanwhile, supply him with raw material for his manufactures. By and bye, if he should become embarrassed, under the provisions of this Bill, could not a warehouse receipt be given, not only to include the last loan he had with the bank, but also to cover all other loans, and thus the bank would become the absolute possessor of all he has, to the exclusion of other creditors who may have supplied him with goods, in total ignorance of his position with the bank? He could not be in that position without the public knowing it if he had given a chattel mortgage, because notice would be given. I am not a lawyer, but I mention this point as a suggestion to gentlemen of legal knowledge in the House, and I would like to have it discussed by the legal gentlemen present, so that we may know what the effects of this clause will be, in the way of giving banks a preference over other creditors who may have been deceived in selling goods to these persons whose property was in the hands of the bank.

Mr. HALL. What would be the effect if there is to be no change of possession and no registration, of giving notice to the public? What would be the effect of a chattel mortgage given to a manufacturer and to a bank at the same time? How is the question of priority to be determined?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The warehouse receipt will take priority over any subsequent lien, whether by chattel mortgage or otherwise. It is simply a question of which was given first, and that is a matter that must depend upon proof. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) is quite right in stating that this enables the wholesale manufacturer to give a lien without the notoriety that a chattel mortgage has. I think, however, that it does not permit such a transaction as the hongentleman has described, with regard to a vague promise that the debtor would give some warehouse receipt at some future time.

Mr. BARRON. That was the case in the Merchants' Bank and Smith.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is sometime since I read that case, but I do not think it was such a promise as the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) has described.

Mr. BARRON. The understanding was, that when the coal was received the warehouse receipt should be given.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It applies only to the case of an advance and warehouse receipt given simultaneously, or to the case which was decided by the Supreme Court of Canada; that in which there was a promise that when certain goods arrived, and came into possession of the debtor, the debtor would give a warehouse receipt upon those goods. It would not cover the case of a vague promise, which the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) stated, namely, the case of a man obtaining an advance, and saying: If I get into difficulties I will give you a warehouse receipt upon all the goods I may have at that time. In the case I have referred to there was a distinct promise to give a warehouse receipt upon certain goods. That is the only instance that is saved from the general rule, as regards the necessity for the advance and the receipt being given at the same time.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If I were quite satisfied of the jurisdiction of this Parliament to legislate in this direction I would be in a better position to The grave question which discuss the details. appears to me to deserve attention at the hands of the Minister is, whether we have the power to pass the Act at all. It is perfectly clear to my mind, that it practically repeals the Bills of Sale Act, as we have it in the Maritime Provinces. This section enables a person in possession of goods to give a lien upon them which is void under the local law, and which, but for the intervention of the Dominion statute, would not be operative at all to transfer the goods. Under our law—and I think it is the same in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia-if a person in possession of goods wants to give a lien upon them to another person he must give a bill of sale, and that bill of sale must be registered in order to give public notice. We are now practically attempting to repeal that law. understand that the Minister seeks to defend it under the principle laid down in the decision of the Merchants' Bank and Smith. While it is possible it might be defended on the principle of that decision, I cannot, myself, say that I fully appreciate or understand that decision. know that leading judges of the court decided the case on side issues, and I must say that I cannot accept the decision unreservedly. Perhaps it may be through my not thoroughly understanding the reasons given by the judges; but I notice that one or two of the judges expressly refrained from passing an opinion on the constitutionality of the clause which they were called on to pass an opinion upon—evaded the question, in point of fact. I am very strongly of opinion that our right to pass this section is subject to very grave doubts. It is not confined to wholesale producers or manufacturers of goods; the second sub-section extends to almost everybody engaged in trade-in the Maritime Provinces at any rate—and it practically amounts to a repeal of the Bills of Sale Act in force in those Provinces. It may be that we have the power, but I am strongly of the opinion that we cannot have it under the power to legislate on banking. So far as I can see, it is not a necessary incident of banking; and unless my hon. friend the Minister of Justice can bring it under the head of trade and commerce, which I think he will have difficulty in doing, I fear it will not be possible to sustain the constitutionality of this clause. If we had the power, I should not cavil at the exercise of it, or the manner in which it is exercised. I merely enter my dissent from the assumption, which might be inferred from my remaining silent, that I assented to the position that we have power to pass this clause.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). Under this clause a dishonest producer or manufacturer might go to a bank and get an advance, giving a secret conveyance of his goods as collateral, and the next day he might go to his neighbor and get a further advance from him, giving him a chattel mortgage; but under the clause the bank would have the advantage, and the private lender might lose his money. I think that when a conveyance is made; public notice should be given of it to everybody, otherwise a dishonest person might carry out a transaction of that kind, which would certainly be very injurious to the public at large?

Mr. BLAKE. I would like to know from the hon. Minister of Justice precisely in what regard he considers that this clause restricts the powers which are found to exist under the present law, and whether there is any particular, and if so, what, in which he thinks the clause extends the powers that exist under the present law?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will answer that with pleasure. But I want first to allude to what my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) has said in relation to the chattel mortgage system. If the hon, gentleman will read the sections again, I think he will find that they do not conflict with the chattel mortgage system or the bill of sale system, as it is called in the lower Provinces, because they simply refer to the warehouse receipt given by the bailee, and that would be effectual, I submit, notwithstanding any bill of sale by the owner of the goods. Because the warehouse receipt is given by the bailee, the bailee is estopped, as between him and the person making the advance, from disputing the title to the property, whether the title is affected by any conveyance of his own or by a conveyance or want of title in the owner of the goods. So that, when a bank makes an advance to the person keeping the warehouse, the latter acknowledging that he holds so much property, the bank has recourse against him, no matter how many bills of sale there may be, either by the warehouse keeper or by the real owner of the goods. That would be so, even under our bills of sale or chattel mortgage system. As to the two questions of the hon. member for West Durham-first, in what particular this restricts the present system-I contend, that it restricts the system which has been set up under section 54 of the present Act, because my view of that section is, that it allows the owner of the goods himself to give a warehouse receipt upon his goods, even though he be not engaged in the business of a warehouseman; and includes almost all large producers in this country. It widens the present law, by enlarging one class of persons who can give warehouse receipts upon their own goods, extending that right to all wholesale manufacturers and producers. I am laying aside for the present moment, any criticisms upon the appropriateness of those words, or as to whether more convenient words may be suggested.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do you not admit wholesale purchasers, too?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; we require that these goods should be in the possession of the bailee. We restrict the clause by limiting the right to the wholesale manufacturer or producer, while section 54 extended, for instance, to carriers, or to keepers of yards or sheds or wharves. enlarge it in so far as wholesale manufacturers and producers are concerned, by extending it to the whole of that class; and I think there is safety in doing that on account of the practice which has grown up of making these advances to persons of that class, it being generally understood in the business community—I speak subject to correction, and on the information of those acquainted with the operation of this clause, especially in the larger Provinces—that those persons are known to be likely to have obtained advances on warehouse receipts for the purpose of carrying forward their products from the time they enter into their manufacture until the products are finished and ready for the market. And as I have already said, experience has shown that transactions of this kind are subject to very little danger and risk.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon, gentleman explain this clause by giving us a few examples of what he means by the "wholesale producer" as distinct from the "wholesale manufacturer?"

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was not intended, by the use of those two words, to make any distinction between the two classes. There are classes of manufacturers, as popularly understood, to whom the term "manufacturer" might not strictly apply. There is the case of the distiller or the brewer. No doubt, the product of their industry is a manufacture in the legal sense of the term. The term "manufacture" of whiskey or ale or porter would probably be correct in a legal sense: but, as popularly understood, the term "manufacture" is rather applied to products which do not so entirely change the substance and appearance of the articles from which they are made as do distilled or malt liquors. No one could misunderstand the use of the term "manufacturer" as applied to a person who makes boots and shoes by wholesale, or produces cotton goods. The term is generally understood as applying to products of that description, but not as applying to the products of the distillery or brewery.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would it apply to the miner? He would be a producer.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think not.

Mr. BLAKE. The section reads: "a wholesale manufacturer or producer of any goods, wares and merchandise." On turning back to the interpretation clause, I find that:

"The expression goods, wares and merchandise, includes, in addition to the things usually understood thereby, timber, deals, boards, stays, sawlogs, and other lumber, petroleum, crude oil, and all agricultural produce and other articles of commerce."

We have thus the wholesale manufacturer or producer of agricultural products, as well as of other things; and, therefore, the section seems to me to include the whole farming community, unless the term "wholesale" is to except the whole farming community; or if it is partly to except and partly to include, I would like the line of demarcation drawn.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I do not propose to discuss the question as to whether this warehouse receipt is going to cut out the chattel mortgages given subsequent to it. I think that is a very nice question, and I would not advise any bank to lend Sir John Thompson.

upon the security of such goods without also taking a chattel mortgage and registering it, and giving notice of such security having been taken. pose rather to address a few words to urge the necessity of making this Banking Act more popular among our farming community than it is, by giving the farmer some interest in banking and some way of getting accommodation from the banks. At the present time they believe they are shut out altogether from benefiting by the Act, that they have nothing to do with the banks, that if they want to get any advance on their goods, they must go to the shaving shop and pay 10 or 12 per cent. discount to the shaver, who then takes their notes and discounts them at the bank. There is a great feeling among the farming community against the banks on this account. I think, when a bank is allowed to discount the paper of the manufacturer and to take security upon what he manufactures, it should be allowed to do the same with regard to the farmer. The farmer should be put in just as good a position with regard to the banks as any manufacturer, even any small manufacturer who makes any petty goods in our cities and towns. Such a manufacturer can go to the banks and get a discount on the security of a warehouse receipt, under this clause, on placing those goods as a pledge for the loan, but the farmer cannot do that unless he is a wholesale producer. What does that mean? Is a wholesale farmer a man who has half a dozen farms, or half a dozen acres, or fifty acres? Where are we to draw the line? A farmer has a farm of fifty acres; he has the product of those fifty acres; he goes to a bank and asks for a discount of a few hundred dollars, offering security on his products. Can he get the advance on giving this security? Or must be give some additional security, which the manufacturer is not bound to give? It should be made clear that this Act enables a farmer to go to a bank, and to give as security for a loan the products of his farm. The clause should be amended so as to distinctly provide for that. It seems to me that if we were just to transpose these terms in the clause, by making it read that a bank may lend money to any person engaged in business as a producer or a wholesale manufacturer of any goods, wares and merchandise, that would include the farmer. Then the farmer would have the right to go to a bank, and say, I will pledge my goods, wares and merchandise-since these terms include agricultural products—as security for the loan I get. If such a transposition were made, this clause would render the Banking Act much more popular.

Mr. BLAKE. The object I had in view in asking my question was to obtain the opinion of the Administration as to the meaning of the clause, as it now stands. I am strongly impressed with the view that the clause, in its present shape, accomplishes the object desired by the hon. member for Frontenac. Whether it be laudable or advantageous to the farming community and the country, or not, may be more disputable, but it accomplishes the object. I am not versed in these things, but I suppose that the wholesale manufacturer is the person who manufactures for sale in bulk to those who sell in retail to others. He is the person whose goods reach the ultimate consumer, not directly but through an intermediary distributor. That I understand to be the wholesale manufacturer. wholesale producer the same interpretation will apply. He is the man who produces articles which he does not, as a rule, proceed himself to retail directly to the ultimate consumers, but which, in whole or part, he disposes of in bulk to some intermediary, who is the vehicle of transmission to the ultimate consumer. Every farmer, or almost every farmer in the country, is a wholesale producer under that definition. His cattle and grain may go to England, or the States, or to the towns of Canada; his products may go through half a dozen hands in bulk before they reach the man who eats them. Therefore it is, I ask what was intended by this clause? What is the line of demarcation? If in the term "wholesale producer" you include the producer of agricultural products, what farmer does the clause include, and what farmer does it exclude ? It may exclude the small market gardener, who, having "three acres and a cow," proceeds daily through the streets of the city near where he lives, and peddles his goods from door to door, and so, himself producing, reaches himself with his produce the ultimate customer; but, even as to him, if he goes into a market town and sells those very articles to a huckster, or another vendor, who is the intermediary between the producer and the consumer, I do not know on what principle you can call even a small market gardener other than a wholesale producer. So it seems to me that practically, although with, perhaps, great profit to the legal fraternity as to determining the exact line of demarcation, and with the prospect of many interesting law-suits before the question shall be determined definitely and substantially, the whole farming community are to be the recipients of those countless blessings which the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) would ask this House to shower on their heads. At present we should first know what it is proposed to us to do, and then we can discuss the question on its merits.

Mr. COCKBURN. I think, in our new born zeal for the farmers, we should not lose sight of the interests of the banks. At present there is no difficulty in regard to the farmer ranking as a wholesale producer, because there is no trouble in arranging with the banks, if he is prepared to export cattle or other produce.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The farmer does not export cattle. It is the dealer who buys the cattle from the farmer.

Mr. COCKBURN. My hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) proposes that the farmer should be placed in the same position as the wholesale producer. The difference is that the products of the farmer are, as a rule, so perishable that I should be sorry to invest in them as security.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Do you not invest in wheat and in cheese?

Mr. COCKBURN. Advances are made regularly on wheat and cheese.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. But not to the farmer directly.

Mr. COCKBURN. These advances are generally made on the security of the farmer, and it is upon the knowledge which the banks have of his standing. I trust that any amendment made in our zeal for the farmer, will not cause us to fall into trouble.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There are two questions involved in this matter. One is as to the right of Parliament to pass any legislation on this subject, and the next is as to how far we ought to go if Parliament had the right to legislate. I say nothing at present in regard to the second question, but I failed to obtain from the Minister of Justice what his opinion was in regard to the constitutionality of this provision. In the Provinces of whose statute law I have any knowledge, it is provided that any one in possession of personal property and desiring to secure to another a lien upon that property, must do so by registered bill of sale, to protect it against executive creditors or subsequently registered bills of sale. Secret bills of sale are discountenanced. I believe that is the same provision in Ontario. We are now asked to adopt an Act declaring that a man may remain in possession of property of which he is the ostensible owner, and may give secretly a lien on that property to a bank without notice, and that is to operate not only against the man who gives the lien—which may be an equitable and a legal thing to do—but that it shall be operative against outsiders, against execution creditors and others. I press upon the Minister of Justice the necessity that he should give an opinion upon this subject. Suppose a man has 100,000 bushels of grain, and he gives the bank a lien of $10,000, or $20,000, or $30,000, and at the same time he gives a bill of sale to an innocent party who advances the money believing the farmer to be the owner of the grain, does the hon. gentleman believe that this Parliament can legislate on a question of that kind, and override the local legislation declaring that such a lien must be registered, so that the public may have knowledge of it?

Mr. SPROULE. I think there was a good deal of force in the observations of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick). The farmers to-day find that they are outside of the banking institutions because, though a farmer may own fifty or 100 head of cattle, he cannot get anything on them from the banks, though, if he sells them, the buyer, who may not have a dollar's worth of property, can raise money upon them. If a farmer gets any money from a bank, it is not upon his stock or his property, but upon a good endorsed note. hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn), says we should take care that we should not go too far in this direction. There is not much danger of that when the banks have so many representatives in this House looking after their interests. Though the farmer may have his horses, and his cattle, and his grain, he cannot get a dollar from the banks on that security; but, if his stock passes into the hands of some one else worth nothing, the purchaser can get what he wants from the banks on the same security. The result of this is that private banks are starting up all over the country, and are doing the business which the chartered banks should do. course, they charge a much higher rate of interest, because they give accommodation to the farmer in cases of stringency when he could not get it from a regular bank. If the interpretation is to be put upon the law which was given by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), I think it would be a fortunate thing. I think it would do away with the difficulty which has caused these private banks to be established. This subject has been discussed by the Granges and the Farmers' Institutes, and at other meetings of the agricultural class, and, although they have been unable to devise means for meeting the difficulty, they have agreed that there is a great necessity for the estab-lishment of farmers' banks if they can be pro-perly worked out. I believe that the farmers give the best security. They have their farm, though there may be a mortgage upon it. They have their wheat and their cattle. The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) says that their security is so perishable that they cannot raise money on it. Is it less perishable when it goes into the merchant's hands than when it is in the hands of the farmer? But, while the exporter can raise money upon it, the farmer cannot. The farmer is a much more established man than many other traders, because he has his land and his money is invested in it, and he is not travelling around all the time, and, therefore, his security is better than many of those securities which are taken by the banks to-day. I agree with every word which has fallen from the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) on this subject.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I do not see why any distinction should be made between the farmer and any other producer, or why the farmer should be put at a disadvantage. Surely you have just as good security in lending money to the farmer on his grain and cattle, or anything else he may have, as you have in loaning it to the manufacturer or the producer of anything else. I really think that it is an injustice to the farmers of the country that they should not be allowed to get money when they have property to represent it, equally as others who are in business throughout the country. I hope if anything further is required in this clause to enable the banks to do what is, I believe, only fair towards the farmers as compared with others, it will be introduced and embodied in

Mr. BLAKE. Once again, I repeat the suggestion that our discussion would be confined in much more practicable limits if we could learn first whether it is the intention of the Administration to propose to us by the clause, that which the hon. member for Montreal (Sir Donald Smith) has just advocated, and which the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) and the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) think so desirable, namely, that the farmer should be in a position in which he can, by a security note of this description, unregistered, grant to a bank security for advances upon articles which he produces.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was not the intention in framing this clause, to make it apply to farmers. As I indicated to the hon, member a few moments ago, the view we took was that the words "manufacturer and producer" were to be taken almost as equivalent expressions. If the sense of the House is decidedly in favor of including the farmer in this clause, we will agree to it, but that was not the intention when the clause was drafted.

Mr. BLAKE. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether in view of the suggestions I have made that the interpretation clause expressly includes agricultural products, and that you thus find the phrase Mr. SPROULE.

ducts "-whether he does not think that almost all persons who come under the denomination of farmers are embraced within this provision at this moment?

Mr. DALY. I have been waiting to hear the remarks of the Minister of Justice as to what interpretation he places upon the words "manufacturer and producer "in clause 75. I came to the same conclusion as the member for West Durham, upon reading the clause, that, literally interpreted, the words would include farmers. According to the interpretation clause, the words "goods, wares and merchandise" include agricultural produce, and if the farmer is not a wholesale producer of agricultural produce, who is? Particularly in the Province from which I come they are certainly wholesale producers of oats, wheat and barley. Now, I have personal knowledge of the fact that at this time of the year, in our Province, farmers are compelled to borrow sums of money of from $100 to $150; they are not able to go to the banks, and they have to go to men who have money to lend upon chattel mortgage security, and pay 12, 15 or 24 per cent., besides the cost of the chattel mortgage; whereas, if this clause could be extended so as to include the farmers, they would be able to go to the bank and get their money at 10 per cent., which is the outside figure which has been charged by any banks in lending money in the Province of Manitoba. I have discussed this matter with some friends of mine in the House, and had written out an amendment some days ago which I submitted to the Minister of Finance, but I have not yet heard what his views on the matter The amendment I prepared is as follows:-

That clause 75 be amended by adding the following as sub-section 3: "A bank may also lend money to any person engaged in the business of farming, upon the security of goods, chattels and movable property of such person, which he may have upon his farm at the time of making such advance. making such advance.

The words in this amendment are as like those contained in sub-section 2 as possible. The Minister of Justice having announced that the section does not include farmers, I beg to move this amendment.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. member for West Durham asked me a question as to the meaning of this, in view of the interpretation clause. I think it is susceptible of the construction he put upon it, in consequence of the use of the words "goods, wares and merchandise," and I think that the sense of the clause should be more clearly expressed, enlarging it so as to make it plain that farmers are included, or in a contrary sense. hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) desired me to state on what grounds this Parliament could claim jurisdiction over the subject-matter. I cannot do better than refer him to the decision pronounced upon that subject, and I think the reasoning in that case of the judges who took the view that this legislation was within the powers of this Parliament, was that it relates to banking. I am not at all disposed to say this could not be sustained on other grounds also. In view of the fact that the Act has been upon the Statute-book so long, that commercial usage has availed itself of this provision, and that it has been decided that these provisions are intra vires of this Parliament, we ought to satisfy ourselves by listening deferentially to to be "wholesale producer of agricultural pro- the protest of the hon, gentleman, without being called upon to reason upon the theory as to whether this is within our powers or not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to know if the hon, gentlemen himself assents to the conclusion arrived at in that case ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes; I think so.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the decision which is referred to is based, as far as that subject is expressly dealt with, upon the article of jurisdiction to which the hon, gentleman has alluded, namely, banking; and it is founded upon an expression used in the case of Cushing vs. Dupuy, which is there cited, and to which we had reference the other evening. think that some force is certainly due to the consideration which the Minister of Justice has addressed to us, namely, that for a great many years. ever since Confederation, more or less, we have assumed this power, and the assumption has been accepted to a very large extent in the practical execution of the business of the country, by the banks and by the public at large. But when we are called upon to deal with enlargements of the proposition, when we are called upon to go a great deal further, as it is now claimed we have been, perhaps, unconsciously called upon to go, and as we are in fact clearly, by the proposition now before you, called upon consciously to go, it is perhaps well to direct attention to the alarming consequences to which, stretched to the extent to which they are proposed to be stretched, that proposition extends; because, you will see that if it is to apply to the case of the farmer, it may be very proper and equally within our power to apply it, so far as banking purposes are concerned, to the case of every person who owns any tangible thing whatever. And it is being proposed to be extended, and it is, in the judgment of the Minister of Justice and of my own, whatever the latter may be worth, by this clause now extended to certainly very much the largest single class, and to a class probably equal to one-half of the whole of the community at this moment. And, therefore, you have it, I do not mean to say, with respect to all the goods belonging to that class, but with respect to the goods they produce, that the general principles of law in all the Provinces, so far as I know, principles founded upon a fundamental proposition as to public convenience, in which the masses of the community are interested, with respect to the degree of credit which is attached to the visible possession of personal properties and to the securities which are required to avoid mistaken credit being extended, are to be wholly departed from. I agree in the general principle which the hen. Minister of Justice has stated, in defining what was understood to be the intention of this clause. I can quite well understand that under the general interpretation of the term there may be very great difficulties, twofold in their character, in carrying out in practice, as applied to manufactures, the general principle of non-recognition of a claim on or of conditional ownership in property not in the visible possession of the claimant. The first difficulty is the constant mutation of the object, the log being transferred into lumber, the fleece being turned into cloth; and so forth; and lumber, cloth and so forth being constantly sold to the public, and replaced by the manufacturer; well understand and appreciate as sound the proposition that, so long as you are able by your definition to point the attention of the general public to this fact, that the law declares that in the case of certain persons the visible ownership of the stock in trade does not give you the slightest security that he really owns that stock; that it may be all the property of a bank, and may be mortgaged for more than it is worth; and that you, therefore, are not entitled to give him credit on his visible possession of it; you may in that way get rid of, or minimise at all events, the inconvenience which is generally felt throughout those portions of the world which adopt our principle of jurisprudence to arise from the recognition of the principle of ownership, conditionally or otherwise, apart from the visible possession or notoriety of claim. But if you are going to adopt a provision so extensive as that now suggested, you must consider what the convenience of the farmer is, and it is in the light of his convenience as a class that you must consider it; and you must also consider the enormous change you are going to make in the Provincial regulations with respect to the ownership of property. It is not to a small class or for particular circumstances, but, substantially, to a very large proportion of the persons and with respect to a very large proportion of the property owned throughout the whole of Canada to which the new principle is to apply, not indeed the principle that the farmer shall not be able to secure a loan from anyone upon his property—it would be monstrous to say he should not—but the principle that the farmer shall be deprived of the credit and facility for obtaining money and supplies which exist under the present law. Because no man, after your proposed change takes place, can tell whether a farmer really owns one bushel of the grain in his barn or any of the cattle in his stable. They cannot go anywhere to find out this information; they cannot go to any place where there is a register of the chattel mortgage, and they cannot ascertain anything about it; but there may be a note in some bank, which we will not call a "shaving" shop, which is said to be the farmer's present resource, which note really represents the goods. That is one aspect of the case. The other aspect of the case is that it is proposed to effect, not merely a partial innovation, to a limited extent and for defined reasons, upon the ordinary law as to personal property, but it is proposed practically to revolutionise that law; and then you come neces-sarily to the consideration as to how far it was really intended, under the constitutional power, to legislate on "banking," that you should thus interfere with the right of the Provinces to regulate the disposition of personalty and indeed of real property as well. I know no reason, none in the world, why, if this power does exist, you might not apply it to the land. I do not know why you cannot say by another sub-section that by a note of hand or by a verbal promise made by a farmer to a bank, a mortgage may be made on his land. The legislative rights of the Provinces cover property and civil rights. The same words embrace both, and you may as well, so far as the jurisdictional question is concerned, provide for an oral charge upon lands by the farmer or the owner in favor of a bank or and the second difficulty is the difficulty of credit for a parol charge or a charge by an intrument not to which the hon, gentleman adverted. I can under seal and not registered. So this opens a very large question, and it is sufficient to say that while I would acquiesce in the view of the hon. gentleman, reserving my personal opinion as to this question—while I would acquiesce in the view that he might not unfairly call on this Parliament to re-enact substantially those provisions which have been assumed to be the law of the land, in regard to which there is some color of support, at all events of judicial authority, yet when the Minister of Justice calls upon us to make a change so extensive as the change which now appears to be clearly involved in the amendment, we are bound to consider the whole question, seeing that we are further invading the Provincial power, however strong the position of the Province may be, by the proposed application to these new conditions of the propositions we are invited to accept. With respect to the question of the farmer's advantage to be obtained by this extension, I suppose that the great bulk of the representatives of this House are representatives of rural districts or of districts in which the farming community forms a great majority. suppose they have at heart the interests of those classes of their constituents, and no suggestion to do them a real benefit could possibly meet with anything else than the most respectful attention and the most earnest desire to give it effect. question whether you can provide cheap money and easy money for the farmer is a question which has puzzled so-called theorists and speculators upon You have had financial questions for a long time. the proposition of the land bank, the proposition for farmers' banks, the proposition for a national currency based upon the land, or an irredeemable currency, you have had numerous proposals to help the farming community to cheap and easy money; but the conditions upon which cheap and easy money are to be obtained are absolutely opposed to the principles which, in regard to the production and manufacture of goods, are found to be sustained by this House and by this country at the present day. It is the law of supply and demand and of free competition, which is the vital and effectual law in this regard. The moment the farmer can show that he can give the same prospect of a return, with the same rapidity, with the same advantage, with the same security that other competitors for the stock of available money can give, he will get all the money he wants; and to the extent to which he cannot show that he will never get it; and if this Parliament sit from now to Christmas, it will never be able to give it to him.

 $135\frac{1}{3}$

Mr. SPROULE. Yes; it has been done in Germany.

Mr. BLAKE. How?

Mr. SPROULE. There are farmers' banks there.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not talking of farmers' banks. The hon. gentleman says he knows about it—and he knows about everything—but he told us himself that the farmers have been considering the question of farmers' banks for a long time, and that they have not been able to find the way of working them; nor has the hon. gentleman done so. I advise him to go to Germany and find out.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon, gentleman may have as much time at his disposal to go there and find out as I have.

Mr. Blake.

Mr. BLAKE. I will try and find out the next time I am there. In the meantime, as we have not the information from Germany, and as the condition of German farmers, and the condition of Ger. man operatives, and the condition of German society, and the condition of German manufacturers. and the condition of German politics at this moment, is not the most favorable in this world, we had, perhaps, better not attempt to find light from Germany, for the purposes of this debate at all events, and proceed to consider what else we can do. The present proposal is not to find the money in Germany or to adopt the plan of Germany; but it is to establish it by arranging-although I do not think that would be the effect of the hon. gentleman's amendment—that the farmer may be able by this cheap and easy process to pledge his property to the bank. I think that the hon. gentleman's amendment, which simply says that the farmer may obtain money upon the security of his property, is an amendment which does not alter the position of He can now obtain money the farmer one whit. upon the security of his property if he only finds any one who will lend it to him. There is no objection at present to his giving a chattel mortgage or to his giving security, according to the Provincial law, to private lenders. The question is what the advantage or detriment to him may be, if the provision be introduced which permits him to give a security note to a bank, instead of a chattel mortgage to a private lender, which security note puts him, as an agricultural producer, in the same position as the producer of other produce, or the manufacturer of other goods. The position of manufacturer of other goods. the farmer then will be just this: By his giving a security note, that is to say, without divulging to the rest of the world that he is giving a mortgage-he will be able to secure the bank for the advance. That is all that can be proposed in this regard, and the question we have to consider is, would this be to the advantage of the great mass of the farmers, who, I am happy to believe, do not want to borrow upon personal security, but who do want to be able to retain and use that security in their ordinary transactions which is due to the realisation of the fact by those with whom they deal, that they are the owners of certain property, upon which general credit they are supplied with goods and given money. The general basis of credit which the farming community enjoy at present would be destroyed by this proposal, and any advantage which it may give them will be counterbalanced, far more than counterbalanced by this loss. My own opinion is that the mass of the farming community would be seriously damnified by this proposal. I believe there would arise a degree of uncertainty with regard to the ordinary basis of credit, in reference to the whole farming community of the country which would be most calamitous, and that instead of helping the farmer, we would do him a serious injury. I do not think it makes much difference to the banks at all, for it is not so much a banking question; but as far as the interest of the farmer is concerned, I believe he is better off as he is now, than he would be if this amendment were introduced into the clause.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman, at the present moment at any rate, and, until further consideration, I cannot agree that by simply enlarging the class of persons to whom this principle is to be applied, we violate, to any extent, the rule of the construction of the British North America Act, which was laid down in the Smith case.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear. I agree.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I thought the hon. gentleman differed from that. I agree, however, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken, will agree with me in the view that this, being a subject open to concurrent legislation—and in saying "concurrent legislation," I am assuming to be correct the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada as to our powers-we have the system established in all the Provinces of chattel mortgage; the necessity for notoriety, in regard to chattel mortgages, and the effect which is put upon the change of possession of property in relation to credit. We have, as concerns a limited number of persons, a restriction by this Parliament upon that general principle. I do agree, most decidedly, that it is unwise for us to invade the principles and the rules of procedure, and the rules of business, established by Provincial legislation, further than we are called upon to go in legislating, according to the line which has been followed since the Banking Act itself was established. I think that we can follow out the principle of this clause, in so far as to make it applicable to all classes of manufacturers of produce, and that in doing that, even if to some extent we are widening the definition of the persons to whom the present clause applies, we are still acting clearly within the principle of the clause. I agree thus far with the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), that we would be widely increasing our invasion of Provincial practice, and of Provincial legislation, with regard to liens, and invading it to a very material extent, indeed, by adopting the amendment which my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Daly) proposes. Now, let me call the attention of the Committee to what the hon. gentleman's resolution is. It says:

"That the bank may also lend money to any person engaged in the business of farming, upon security."

Before I read what the security is, let me refer to the reasons given why advances should be made to farmers. We are told that it is reasonable that the products which are intended for market; the grain stored in the barn, the hay, the apples, the fruits of any kind, should be the subject of advances by the bank, but the resolution of my hon. friend goes much further than this. It says:

"That the bank may also lend money to any person engaged in the business of farming, upon the security of the goods and chattels and movable property of such persons which he may have upon the farm at the time of making such advance."

Therefore, that amendment goes far beyond the products of the farm which are intended for the market, and it authorises a lien upon the agricultural implements, and upon the chattels on the farmer's premises; altogether introducing a new principle, and one which, I think, it is doubtful, both as a matter of policy and as a matter of law, we ought to adopt. There is another reason why, irrespective of the wide extent of my hon. friend's amendment—and this objection applies to all the remarks which have been made in favor of including the farmers within the classes of persons who may give warehouse receipts upon their property there is this reason against the change; that by the provisions of this Act, we are only allowing two classes of persons to give warehouse receipts. The one class of persons are the the keepers, the custodians of the property of others. If the farmer has his grain or his fruit ready for the market, he can now, under the provisions of this Bill, even though this clause may not be applied to him at all, put his property into the hands of the warehouse man and raise a loan upon the warehouse receipt which he obtains. The only other class of persons to whom we propose to give the power to issue securities on their own property, are the manufacturers who are carrying goods, wares, and merchandise to the point of completion; as, for instance, the boot and shoe manufacturer who takes the leather and the hides into his warehouse, or into his factory, and carries them forward to the time when the boots and shoes are completed and ready for the market. This is done in order to enable them to carry on the process of manufacture. And so of the cotton manufacturer, who takes into his factory the raw cotton, and manipulates it until the finished product is turned out and ready for the market. The same principle is not applicable to the farmer, because it is only proposed, so far as he is concerned, that we shall apply this system to his product in its finished state when it is ready for the market. So that, on the principle on which the warehouse system is based and on the principle on which it is restricted for the purpose of enabling manufacturers to carry on their manufactures to completion, it seems to me the argument fails to be applicable to the farming class. I am unable, therefore—and I think I express the view of my colleagues-to concur in the amendment proposed by my hon. friend. Coming to the question of the manner in which we shall restrict the section admitting, as the hon. member for West Durham has said, that it is capable of a construction that would make it applicable to the farmer-I think we should strike out the words "or producer, so as to make it apply to the manufacturer alone. It may be possible that a better form of words could be devised; but I am now discussing the question of principle; and, so far as the principle is concerned, it was not intended that this section should apply to the farmer; and I think it would be unsound, from the farmer's point of view, the banker's point of view, the Provincial point of view, and the warehouse receipt point of view, that we should extend it to that class or to any other class than the simple warehouseman and the manufacturer. We must remember that in extending it even to the manufacturer, we are departing from the original principle on which the warehouse receipt was based, namely, the principle of bailment, the man who gives the warehouse receipt being supposed to be the custodian of property, and giving a receipt which will bind him; and in the operation of that principle of bailment, Provincial legislation, as regards notoriety of the lien, or possession of the goods, is amply satisfied if there has been a deposit of the goods in the hands of another person, who himself gives the receipt on which he is responsible, and by which he is estopped. We have widened that principle to make it apply to the manufacturer; and if I am right in my view of section 54, we went beyond the manufacturer, and allowed certain classes who are not manufacturers, but not including so large a class as farmers, to give warehouse receipts in respect of their own goods. We do not extend the right to so large a class to whom, as the hon. member for West Durham has said, it would be a doubtful benefit; but whether detrimental to the farmer or not, it would decidedly be detrimental to the business principles of a community, who have been accustomed, in so plain and ordinary a business as farming, to look to the products as the property of the producer, unless the bills of sale register, or the chattel mortgage register shows that there has been a change of title.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If I understand the argument of the hon. member for West Durham aright, it is that the attempt by this House to legislate on what he calls the security notes is an infringement on Provincial rights; that it is a clear infringement of the civil right in property for us to legislate that any security on the class of goods mentioned should be a prior lien, unless there was a change of possession, or unless we complied with the Provincial laws in regard to registration; and he showed that the matter was liable to great frauds. On that point, I think there is a great deal in what he says. I stated, in my previous remarks, that I thought there should be some additional security taken by any bank lending on such a class of securities; but, after showing that these security notes were so much worthless paper, the hon. member for West Durham proceeds to state that the farmer, by giving this worthless security, is endangering his own credit.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not say that the security notes were so much worthless paper.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The hon. gentleman said it was an infringement of civil rights, and that in order to become a security, there must be a registration or a visible change of the property.

Mr. BLAKE. What I pointed out was that it was highly questionable, in my present judgment, whether we had the power to so interfere with the Provincial laws on this subject; but discussing the policy with respect to the farmer, I assumed, both in his case and in the case of the manufacturer, that the security note would be valid, because, if void, it would make no difference.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. First, it was highly doubtful whether it was worth anything; and, in the second place, it was injuring the credit of the farmer. If it injures the credit of the farmer, it injures the credit of the manufacturer, and, therefore, the clause is altogether objectionable. The clause, originally, was confined to warehousemen who had the property of others committed to their care, and who could properly give a warehouse receipt; but now it is proposed to extend it to manufacturers of goods.

Mr. BLAKE. It is already extended.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The manufacturers and producers of goods have a right to give a warehouse receipt, and if they do. I do not see why the farmer, who is a producer, should not give the same receipt and get advances of the security of Sir John Thompson.

the goods he manufactures. I think perhaps the amendment of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) goes a little too far in proposing that the farmer shall have the right to give a security on his machinery or movable effects. There is no proposal here that the manufacturer shall give a security on his machinery, but only on the goods he manufactures. A warehouseman, who is simply a bailee of other persons' property, can go to a bank, and say: "I have so much property in my care, and I will give you my receipt for it, and I shall be liable to penalties if I dispose of it," that is one class of security. But if you give a security on the goods manufactured by a manufacturer, I do not see why you should not give a farmer an equal right to go to a bank and say: "I have a thousand bushels of grain in my barn, I want an advance on it, and I will give you a security note for it."

Mr. LANDERKIN. Can he not do that now?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No; he cannot.

Mr. BLAKE. Fortunately for him.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I do not think it is fortunate for him. The consequence is that if before he can sell his grain, while waiting for a rise, or for some other reason, he wants to get an advance, he cannot get it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Why?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Because he cannot give that as a security. He has to get an endorser, and go to a shaver outside before he can get an advance.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If you go to a bank, do you not have to get an endorser?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No; I would have to give a chattel mortgage. But the farmer cannot, as this manufacturer can, go to a bank and say: I will give you the security on this 1,000 bushels of grain; but he must go to a note shaver and pay him a large discount. Whereas, if he could go to an incorporated bank and get money at a fair rate, on giving security as the manufacturer does, it would be a great advantage to him. At all events, if this advantage is not given to the farmers, I do not see why it should be given to the manufacturers. If it is good for one class of the community, it is good for the other. I would suggest to the hon. member for Selkirk that in his amendment he should ask simply the transposition of these terms, so as to make the clause read: "any person engaged in business as a producer or wholesale manufacturer of any goods, wares, or merchandise.

Mr. BLAKE. That would do it.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If the sentence were so transposed, that would test the sense of the House on the question whether or not this class of secured notes should extend to the farmers as well as to the manufacturers; it would not create the objection pointed out by the hon. the Minister of Justice, that it would give the farmer the right to give security upon his machinery.

Mr. BLAKE. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that the amendment he suggests would be the way to put the farmers in just the position in which he proposes to place them. Let me give a practical illustration of the difficulties of the situation and of the difference between the two classes to which he refers. The manufacturer who gives a security note is, of course, in constant relations, perhaps too constant relations for the comfort of both, with his banker; and the banker, if he knows his business, keeps a pretty close eye upon the customer whose security note he has, and there must be always a good deal of trust and confidence in the business. The banker has confidence that the manufacturer, who is constantly disposing of his goods, will, notwithstanding this, keep in stock, on the whole, the security of manufactured stuff which is represented by the secured note. That is the position of the manufacturer, and that is the way in which the thing is worked. Then the banker if he knows his business, knows whether the manufacturer is keeping two banking accounts; and if the manufacturer clandestinely keeps a second account with another bank, he generally comes to grief, to the loss of one or both. There again you have the trust, the confidence, the watchfulness and vigilance which it is possible to apply to that class of cases. But these conditions do not apply to the farmer. He resides a little way, let us say, out of Kingston, where there are several banks, or a little way out of Toronto, where there are a great many banks. He may or may not have come into town, and at one of the fifteen or twenty banking offices may or may not have obtained a discount by giving his security note upon his grain or cattle. Who is to tell whether he has done so or not? How are you to know at any time whether he really owns the grain or cattle which he offers as security, or whether, if he wants to sell, they are his to sell. A degree of uncertainty necessarily exists in his case which does not exist in the other; and in order to enable the borrowing farmer, who has not credit enough in his own locality, to borrow without giving a chattel mortgage, every farmer in the country is to have the assumed title to his property placed in doubt and the facilities for the sale and disposal of his property considerably impeded.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Does a grain dealer buying grain go to a registry office to see whether a chattel mortgage is registered against it?

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No more would he go to a bank to see whether there was a secured note against it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The difficulty I have observed in the past has been that the borrowing powers of the farmers exceed their real requirements, and the consequence is that many a farmer has been enabled to borrow, not only from the banks, but to run accounts with merchants and others beyond what he really requires. That is where the difficulty arises. The hon. member for Selkirk says that the farmers in his county cannot get a dollar on credit at the bank. He is not saying very much for the stability or reputation of the farmers there; in the part of the country I come from the farmers are regarded as the best security, and the banks are willing to discount their notes.

An hon. MEMBER. What about all the farm mortgages?

Mr. LANDERKIN. That is the result of the National Policy. The farmers are regarded by the banks as the most safe and solvent people to deal with, and the banks are quite willing to give them sents an agricultural constituency, and knows the money; and how it is in Selkirk and in Frontenac those farmers cannot get money I do not understrand.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. They can get money. It is for your farmers I am speaking.

Mr. LANDERKIN. My farmers can get more credit than is good for them. That is the difficulty. If their credit were abridged it would be very much better for them. Instead of encouraging them to put out lines of credit, it would be very much better to bring them down to the grangers' platforms, or a cash basis. The grangers have done a great deal of good in inculcating the principle of cash payments in farmers' transactions. There are very few farmers where I come from who require to borrow money, and if they do they can get money from the banks at cheaper rates than can business men, because their security is infinitely better. There is no class of men whose characters and reputations are as good as the farmers, and no class of men can get money as cheaply.

An hon. MEMBER. I thought they were all bankrupt.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They are apparently bankrupt in Frontenac and Selkirk.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for South Grey has given a convincing reply to the number of speeches he has made in this House during the Session, in which he proved, to his own satisfaction, that the farmers of this country were in a deplorable condition. Now he says they are the very best security in the country. I believe he is right, and I have always held that view. I wish to refer to some observations that were made by the hon. member for West Durham. I understood him to say that a farmer could get money upon a chattel mortgage from a bank. Perhaps I misunderstood him

Mr. BLAKE. I did not say that.

Mr. SPROULE. I have only to say with regard to the arguments of the hon. member for West Durham, whether valuable or otherwise I am unable to say, that while there is no doubt that his legal knowledge and high standing enables him at any time to give valuable information upon this or any other subject, I would like him to understand that while I hold the position I occupy in this House, I have the same right as he, though not possessed of as high legal attainments or great common sense, of expressing my views on any subject which may engage the attention of Parliament. There is too much disposition on the part of hon. gentlemen to sneer at common members when they attempt to say a word on behalf of the farmer. There is too much of that kind of thing, and I do not think it becomes the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), or any other hon. member of this House. The hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) spoke of the impossibility of establishing banks which farmers could take advantage of in the manner which I had referred to, and I then stated that I understood, from reading political economists, that they had been established in Germany and had been successfully worked in other parts of the world, and that I thought it was not unreasonable to suppose that we could establish them here. Should that be sneered at? Every hon. member here who repredifficulty the farmers have to contend with, will appreciate my statement, that if such a law could be placed on the Statute-book here, and if the farmers could take advantage of it, it should be done. I do not think it is in very good taste for the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), or any other hon. member, to refer in such a sneering manner to a suggestion coming from a common member of this House.

Mr. BLAKE. I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) that I did not make any observations on his remarks with any sneering intent. I may say that I do not know of any common member of this House, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that, so far from regarding him as a common member. I regard him as a most uncommon member.

Mr. SPROULE. Any one who heard the hon. gentleman's remarks, and the warmth he displayed in delivering could come to no other conclusion than that they were made in a sneering spirit.

Mr. BARRON. The suggestion made by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirpatrick) was one which I intended to make later in the Session. My opinion has been somewhat shaken by this discussion. I can see that, if it is known to the world that a farmer can go to the bank and obtain a certificate on the grain in his barn, it will create a doubt as to whether any farmer is or is not encumbered by these certificates. I, therefore, think it is open to grave doubts whether the amendment which I proposed to suggest, and in which some hon, gentlemen opposite agreed with me, should be adopted. But, if the law is made as it is proposed to be by this Bill, there is no reason why we should not transpose the words as suggested by some hon, gentleman. The Minister of Justice says we are widening the law.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In regard to one class.

Mr. BARRON. Quite so. Therefore everyone dealing with that particular class runs more or less danger. In the Province of Ontario we have had experience of the evils resulting from this class of legislation. It was the law that any manufacturer could sell an article recaining in himself the title, and, if his vendee sold that article to any one else, the latter would find that the property remained in the hands of the original vendor. I think it important to read to the House an extract from a judgment of Chancellor Boyd in the case of Banks and Robinson, which shows the danger of this kind of legislation, which puts it in the power of certain persons to commit a fraud. Chancellor Boyd says:

"Better to safeguard commercial morality, it would be expedient to make provision for giving publicity by registration to dealings such as this. The effect of the transaction (though it may not be contrary to the law) is to protect the credit of a trader who is yet heavily weighed with undisclosed obligations. Grave suspicions must always arise in the minds of creditors whose claims are superseded by some instrument of peculiar character, produced at a period of crisis, by which all the assets of their debtor are secured to a mere relative."

I say that this Bill, widening the law, as the Minister of Justice admits it does, gives the chance to certain persons of going to the bank, depositing their receipts, giving themselves a fictitious standing in the community, and doing a great deal of injury, particularly to those who have to do business with them.

Mr. SPROULE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have very great hesitation in interfering in a question so purely legal as this, but it does occur to me that the gentlemen who speak more particularly on the part of the farmers would do well to consider whether, as business is carried on in our country districts, they would not be creating a weapon of oppression on the farmers by passing this provi-We know that it is the custom for country merchants to give large credits to the farmers, and in times of distress you will generally find that the farmers are largely indebted to the merchants. It occurs to me, that if such an amendment as this is pressed, the merchants will insist upon the farmers signing notes, and, if that were done, and if these notes were placed in the hands of the banks, and if this lien was attached to these notes, the latter condition of the farmer would be much worse than the first. I believe that would be the case in many districts in Ontario-I do not speak for other Provinces-and, if I have followed this discussion correctly, the practical effect of bringing the farmers under this clause might be enormously to multiply the chattel mortgages or securities equivalent to chattel mortgages, and I do not think that is what any advocate of the farmers' interests would desire.

Mr. DESJARDINS. From what I understood of the clause, I thought it would be desirable to enact it in order to help the wholesale manufacturers to manufacture their goods or to assist a shipper of those goods when he wants to expedite his merchandise; but, if you extend that further, I think you are legislating in a dangerous direction which will not produce the benefit expected, especially if you extend it to the farming class. I do not think the farmers would benefit in any way by having the privilege of mortgaging their grain or their goods by that process. They are very well known where they live. The banks which are willing to loan them money when they are in good standing, will not go to the trouble of securing their notes upon the goods the farmers have in their hands, because if the banks will not trust them for the money they desire to use until they can realise upon their grain, they will not be likely to take a mortgage on that grain, because they will not put a man there to watch it, as they would have to do in every district where they made loans. So I do not think the farmers would obtain any benefit from this proposed law. The opportunity you would give them of mortgaging their goods in that way would be to their detriment rather than to their advantage; and I do not think the banks would be willing to engage in that business at all.

Mr. COCHRANE. As a farmer I am not able to decide a question where lawyers disagree; but it does seem to me a strange doctrine that if I want to get a loan on a thousand bushels of wheat I must take it to a storehouse and get a warehouse receipt before I can get a loan at the bank. I cannot see why my thousand bushels of wheat is not as good security for the bank in my barn, as it would be in the storehouse. I am aware of the fact that I can draw my thousand bushels of wheat to the storehouse, and other farmers can do the same thing, and we can get our receipts, and the man who purchases the wheat can go to the bank and raise the money to pay for our wheat.

I cannot see why the farmer should not be in the same position as the manufacturer. We are told here that the banker keeps close watch of the manufacturer to whom he makes an advance. I understand it, many manufacturers in this country are carrying on their business altogether on capital furnished by the banks, and the banks are partly keeping the manufacturer up all the way through. It is only at certain times in the year that the farmer wants any advantage from the bank. I can conceive that it is just at that season of the year when as one hon. gentleman says, we are getting into difficulty with the merchants, that we want the very relief the amendment proposes to give us. For instance, I am owing a merchant, and I have a thousand bushels of wheat to dispose of. The merchant comes around and presses me for the payment of that account. Well, if I cannot raise money on my wheat in the barn and get an advance, according to the doctrine laid down to-night, I must draw my wheat away to some storehouse and get a storehouse receipt before I can get an advance from the bank for the grain that I had in my barn. Now, at present I cannot get an advance when the grain is in my barn to pay the merchant who may be hard up, but, according to the amendment that has been offered, I could get an advance on that wheat and thus be able to tide over the difficulty, and at the same time benefit from any advance in the price of wheat which might take place. Now, why should I not be in the same position as anybody else who wants to get money from the bank? It would help me to pay my debt, and at the same time it would relieve me of the necessity of paying some lawyer for drawing out a chattel mortgage. I cannot conceive why a farmer, if he is able to give a security, should not be in the same position as a manufacturer or anybody

Mr. WATSON. Like some other farmers in the House, I am at some difficulty to know where I am located on a question on which the lawyers themselves cannot agree. Having some knowledge of the requirements of the farmers I can speak as to what would be in their interest, at least. Now, I conceive that there are some difficulties in the way of accepting the whole amendment moved by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly); that is, when you take in agricultural implements, because in many instances it is very hard to find out, even in Manitoba to-day, as the hon. gentleman knows, who is the actual owner of those implements. In many cases the implements do not belong to the farmer, who is usually paying a very high interest on the notes, which they call out there cast-iron notes, and the implements are actually the property of the manufacturer until the notes are entirely paid. I agree with the suggestion of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) that the farmers should be placed in the same position as any other grain dealer. Take the case of a farmer, as suggested by one hon gentleman, who has 5,000 bushels of wheat in his granary, or on his farm. Why should he not be able to go to the bank and borrow money on that grain, the same as the warehouseman after that grain passes out of his hands? The difficulty we have in the West is the fact that a great number of farmers want a small amount of money for a short time, and under the present system they have got to have an endorser. When the bank wants security it will take a farmer, in our country, as quickly as any other man, that is, if he has a lot of chattels and a lot of loose property, or more than 160 acres of land; be-cause in Manitoba they have an exemption law, which exempts 160 acres of land, three horses and certain other articles, which cannot be touched for any debt, unless the man sees fit to encumber those articles by a chattel mortgage. That being the case, if a farmer wants money he has got to get an endorser, and he goes to his neighbor, who is another farmer, but the bank hesitates to advance the money if these farmers have only 160 acres of land each, because, under the exemption law, the bank cannot recover from the endorser, because he is the possessor of only 160 acres of land, and the bank cannot touch that for debt. The great trouble is that the farmers, when they want a loan for four or five months, borrow money at this season of the year for the purpose of tiding them over until after the harvest. They may want $200 or $300, and they cannot acquire that except by mortgaging their farm or going to a loan company, and the loan company will not loan money for a less period than five or seven years. Any man who has a farm can borrow money on his farm by mortgage; but there is a difficulty in giving too great facilities for borrowing money, as has been suggested by some hon. gentlemen here. When a farmer wants to borrow money and has to pay $10, or $15, or even $25 for the purpose of making out that mortgage, although he may only want one or two hundred dollars at the time, he will say to himself that inasmuch as he has to go to the expense of paying a solicitor to make the mortgage, he may as well borrow $500, and the result is that the farmer will borrow more money than he requires, and he is thereby tempted to engage in risky speculations. That being the case, I say the farmer ought to be enabled to go to a bank, and give such security as may be satisfactory to that bank for a short loan from three to six months, for the exact amount which he requires. Under the present system he has to go to those shaving shops, as they have been well termed, where he has got to pay 12, 15, 20 and I have known as high as 25 per cent. for money, and any person knows that no man can engage in business and pay that percentage on money for several months. I think the farmer should be put in the same condition as the manufacturer or producer. He is a producer, and why should he not beable to raise money on that produce, the same as a manufacturer on his goods? The hon. member for West Durham suggests that the manufacturer who sells to retailers is the only person, according to the Interpretation Act, who is able to take advantage of this clause. In what position would that place some of our manufacturing industries? Take for example manufacturers of agricultural implements, who are some of the largest manufacturers in Canada to-day. They manufacture their goods and sell them to the farmers direct. According to the interpretation of this clause given by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), such a manufacturer, employing a thousand men, would not be able to take advantage of this provision if he sells his goods direct to the farmers. From the position taken by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House it is apparently not the intention to accept this amendment, and if it is not adopted I have a proposition to make which should be accepted, and that is, that the banks also may loan money to any person engaged in farming on real estate security. doubt some hon. gentlemen interested in loan companies may object to this provision, but if this were inserted it would entirely fill the bill as regards Manitoba and the North-West Territories, because there we have a different land because there we have a different faint title system to that prevailing in other por-tions of the Dominion, namely, the Torrens system. A farmer should be able to go to a bank with his Torrens' certificate, which forms the title to his land, and state that he wished to borrow one, two or three hundred dollars for six months, and he would hand in his certificate for security. This certificate would be deposited in the vaults of the bank, and be perfect security for the loan. A loan could thus be obtained without any unnecessary expense to the farmer. If the farmer is not able to do so with the bank, he is sometimes obliged to give a chattel mortgage on some of his stock, and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) could probably give the House some particulars in regard to the cost of a mortgage, but I know a great expense is involved. If farmers are allowed to borrow money under the system I propose, they could obtain it in Manitoba at 8 per cent., which is the regular rate of discount to merchants in that Province. I hope the Minister of Justice, if he does not see fit to adopt the amendment of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), will be willing to adopt the amendment J suggest. I can see a great difficulty in a farmer being allowed to chattel-mortgage his implements, because it is difficult to find out who is the real owner, because they do not pass from the manufacturer until the last dollar has been paid on them.

Mr. DALY. In reply to the hon, member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) I may say some of the farmers in our part of the country are not only in a position so that they do not require to borrow money from the bank, but they are in a position to lend money themselves. But neither a farmer in Grey nor elsewhere can go to a bank and obtain a loan unless he gives a security in the shape of an endorser. We want to prevent farmers being compelled to go to banks and give such security, because a farmer feels under an obligation to oblige his neighbor when in turn he is asked to endorse. I draw attention to clause 65, which says that banks shall not make either direct or indirect advances on security, mortgage or hypothecation of any land, tenement or movable property, or upon the security of any goods, wares or merchandise. The Act prevents the banks making loans on goods, wares and merchandise, and I have moved my amendment so that the farmer can go to the bank and give as security his chattels the same as the producer and manufacturer can secure advances on his own goods. With respect to the difficulty as to the security, I will strike out the words "and chattels and movable property." As to the difficulty with respect to banks and as to granting a loan on products of the farm, on securities not registered and as to which the general public might be ignorant, I will add to the clause the following: Mr. WATSON.

may be given under this section the bank shall take a chattel mortgage on his goods." So that, notice will be given to any persons dealing with a farmer that the bank in addition to the security under the clause itself, has a chattel mortgage on these goods.

4308

Mr. WALDIE. The discusson has taken a wide range, but it has not dealt with the question from a business point of view. The banks are the creation of this Parliament and are specially privileged, and they are surrounded with restrictions in regard to their dealings with the public. We discussed a few nights ago the desirability of banks having ample reserves to meet their circulation, and the liabilities which the banks were under to their creditors in regard to deposits which might be called for. To-night we are discussing a proposition to permit banks to lend moneys for a period of time that would absolutely lock up their assets in unavailable securities and make their assets unavailable to meet the demands of depositors and the circulation. These two matters must be considered together. You must consider that, if you permit the banks to loan money on mortgage of real estate, their assets would become locked up, and the availability of the security for converting securities into gold to meet a demand that might be made on its circulation and deposits, would not exist. I take it that the extension of the warehouse business has been the outcome of the necessities of the country. Within the last twenty or thirty years, the manufacturing industries of the country have largely increased, and it has become a necessity that the larger manufacturer should have banking accommodation. It was found inconvenient for them to transfer their raw material, or the products of their ware-house into the hands of a bailee, and the wisdom of Parliament, four or five years ago, extended to a number of manufacturers and producers, the right to borrow and to give security upon their material and their manufactured goods. For instance, the lumberman has been enabled to give security to the banks upon saw-logs when produced, and to continue that security until it was in the shape of lumber in the mill-yard. The cotton manufacturers are able to arrange a credit with the banks and to import their cotton—consigned to the banks, perhaps—the banks allowing it to go into the hands of the mill owners to be manufactured into cloth, and the cloth still held as security for the loan. I do think it would be unwise for this Parliament to restrain the banks in their modes of accepting that security, which the necessities of the country has created. I am quite sure that the banks do not object to the farmers borrowing money or to Parliament allowing them to borrow money from the banks, by giving any kind of security; but if the farmer gives security to the bank, he, of course, weakens his security to any other person from whom he receives credit. It is undesirable that the assets of the banks, which should be kept easily available, should be locked up in real estate. As to the rights of the Provinces to pass legislation on this question, 1 have no hesitation in accepting the doctrine that if this Parliament has a right to constitute a bank and to give it certain privileges, it has also a right to extend these privileges, so that the functions it "provided that in addition to the security that has created may be used in the public good and for the welfare of the country. Parliament has created the banks for the purposes of promoting trade and commerce, and I think it should give them every facility for transacting the business of the country. The fact is that the Provincial Legislatures by permitting lieus to be retained on manufacturers' goods, have to a large extent done away with the registration of chattel security. I think we might move in the same direction, that security may be given by manufacturers and by wholesale dealers upon their products in their own hands.

Mr. MITCHELL. This debate has taken a very wide range, and, I suppose, very few of us imagined, when we came to consider, that this celebrated section would have taken up so much of the time of the House. There are two sides to this question. We may pass whatever legislation we like in relation to giving banks the power to loan money to farmers, but my impression is that the great difficulty will be for the farmers to get that loan from the banks. After the elaborate and full discussion we have had upon this particular section, I think that the Minister of Finance, now that he thoroughly understands the sentiments of the Committee, if he does understand them, would do well to pass this section over, with a view of amending the clauses so as to meet the expressions of opinion he has heard to-night.

Mr. FQSTER. It would be very difficult to meet them all.

Mr. MITCHELL. It will be difficult to meet them all, but I think it will be more difficult to meet the views of the bankers, if the object is to get them to make advances, to any extent, to the farmers of the country on the security of their chattels. It is contrary to the policy of well managed banking institutions in this country to make advances on fixed property. I presume that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice, in preparing this section and its sub-sections, had in view the facilitating of trade and commerce, and the giving of facilities to men who are largely engaged in manufacturing, to get the necessary advances to enable them to carry on their business during the process of manufacture. There have been a great many questions of grave importance raised as to the value of that security when it was given; questions arising out of property under civil rights, the jurisdiction of the Provinces as against the jurisdiction of this Parliament, and I do think that the manner in which the subject has been discussed to-night, and the light thrown upon it by the legal gentlemen who have spoken, should induce the Government to consider what has been said on the subject, with a view to amending this clause for the purpose of meeting the object they have in view. The next question is the security that has to be given. I think that the legislation in some of the Provinces in this Dominion, in reference to the methods of giving security upon chattels, is very important, and I think the Minister of Justice would do well to pass over this section for the present, in order to see if he cannot frame it in such a way as to meet the views of all parties interested in this matter.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It seems to me that a great a general clause which would be confined in its many hon, gentlemen are of opinion that all we have got to do is to empower the banks to lend money to farmers on warehouse receipts on their pressure year after year on behalf of particular own grain, and then the farmers will get all the money they want. If this power were granted to the banks, I do not believe that one farmer out of twenty-five would be able to take advantage of it.

Mr. MITCHELL. One, out of the twenty-five hundred.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Perhaps not one out of twenty-five hundred. No wise, shrewd, sensible banker would advance money upon a warehouse receipt to a farmer, or to anybody else who lives ten or twelve miles away from his place of business and where he cannot have the grain under I know from my own experience supervision. that a shrewd banker will not lend money to a farmer or anybody else upon a warehouse receipt, unless he can send a clerk or somebody else to watch that the grain is not taken away. To suppose that a banker is going to lend money to any farmer who can produce a warehouse or a supposed warehouse receipt for 800 or 1,000 bushels of grain in his own barn, is to my mind perfect nonsense. A farmer or any one else can get all the money he wants in this country if he has the security or the credit necessary; and I think a great deal of the discussion on this clause is useless. We should take great care, as the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Waldie) said, to see that the funds of the banks are not locked up in unavailable assets. We charter these banks for the convenience of the public, and authorise them to receive deposits from people all over the country; and we should see that they are not allowed to lock up their funds in unavailable assets, so that when a crisis comes or the depositors want their money, it will not be forthcoming. To allow bankers to lend money on warehouse receipts to those engaged in handling the great products of the country, or in the manufacturing industries of the country, is a wise and legitimate provision; but I think it should not be extended any further; and even if it is extended, I think it will not be used, for a wise banker will not lend money on a security which it will cost him perhaps as much as he lends to look after.

Mr. FOSTER. We have had a pretty thorough and long discussion on the section at which we have stuck, and my hon friend opposite has suggested that it would probably be as well to allow the section to stand, in order to see whether one could not be framed that would meet the views of the House. I scarcely think, with the diversity of opinion which has been manifested here to-night, that we should be able to frame a clause which would meet the views of the whole House; and, therefore, I think it would be well to clear the air by taking a vote on the amendments which are proposed to section 75. In preparing this section, the idea that was prominent was this: in the first place, that the regular warehouse receipt, which for a certain number of years was the principal security on which money was advanced, should be allowed to remain; but year by year there came to be an extension of that principle, and during the last two years and this year amendments have been pressed with the view of widening the application of the clause. The idea, therefore, was to frame a general clause which would be confined in its application to manufacturers, but which at the same classes of manufacturers; and so the phrase "wholesale producer or manufacturer" was placed in the section. No doubt it is indefinite. I must say that my own preconceived opinion against allowing these facilities for obtaining advances on the goods or chattels on farms, has been greatly strengthened by the discussion which has taken place here to-night; and, without going into the merits of the question, so far as I am concerned, I would rather not see the clause widened to include that kind of security. I think it would be well to take the sense of the House to-night on the amendments, and after these are disposed of, if the sense of the House is against them, as I hope it will be, the clause as it stands in the Bill will be amended so as to restrict it somewhat, and make it more definite.

Amendment negatived.

M. WATSON. I beg leave to move:

That banks may also lend money to any person engaged in farming on real estate security.

I do not know how this would affect other portions of Canada, but in Manitoba and the North-West it would be a great benefit. If it is thought desirable—and I would like the opinion of the hon. Minister of Justice on this,—I am willing that this should be confined to lands under the Torrens system. Where a farmer can produce his whole title to the banker, and has sufficient security for a loan for a short date, the bank should be allowed to accept that security.

Mr. HALL. I rise to a question of order. We have passed section 65 which expressly prohibits banks advancing money on mortgages.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I shall have to rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. WATSON. I do not propose that the money should be lent on mortgage.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. In the absence of my hon. friend for North Renfrew (Mr. White) I would call the attention of the Committee to one class of security, which is a very valuable one, and the owners of which require large advances from the banks from time to time; I refer to licenses to cut timber. In the absence of my hon. friend I would move that the following be added as sub-section 4:—

The bank may also lend money to any wholesale manufacturer or producer of timber, logs or lumber upon the security of licenses and rights to cut trees, logs and lumber.

These licenses are very valuable securities. The owners have to pay large bonuses for them, and require large advances to work them. It is very desirable, therefore, that the banks should have authority to take them as security, and I hope the Committee will adopt this amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think this amendment proper to the section we are considering.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The section we are considering deals with the power to lend on warehouse receipts and pledges of that character, pledges which, under this Bill, are to be of the nature of warehouse receipts, by fiction or otherwise; and I think the amendment the hon. gentleman proposes raises a substantive question and cannot be taken as an amendment to this section.

Mr. Foster.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If the opinion of the Committee is that it should be adopted, it might be put in as a separate clause.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. With regard to section 75, now that we have settled the principles on which that section should proceed, I would ask that it be allowed to stand for the purpose of making with care any amendment to remove any uncertainty.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I move as a substantive clause the amendment I have just proposed—75a.

Mr. MITCHELL. I can see no harm in giving the banks the power to lend on that security if they think proper. It would be a question entirely for the gentlemen who manage those institutions to decide whether they thought the securities sufficient or not.

Mr. FOSTER. There are two sides to this question. One is with regard to those who desire the advance, and the other with regard to the banks, and the general principle involved as to what security the banks should lend upon. The security of a timber limit license, or a right to cut timber, is rather incorporeal security. It is a long way from the material which is to be in a marketable state. The right to cut on a timber limit license is possessed only for a single year, though it may be renewed. There are always certain conditions to be complied with, even if the licenses are renewable, and it may be a fine point for the power which grants the license to decide whether or not there is sufficient cause to revoke it or refuse to renew it. It is rather a shadowy kind of security to make an advance on.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon, gentleman will recollect that the Province from which he and I come has granted licenses for a term of ten years. In the Province of Quebec, some of the most valuable properties of the country have been comprised in those timber limits; and, while it is true the owners have to pay a yearly rental, I have never known an instance of a license having been taken away where the yearly rent is paid. Experience has shown us that these timber limits are very valuable; and if the banks choose to lend money on timber licenses, that is a matter for them to decide, even if the security be rather uncertain.

Mr. FOSTER. You might take away all limitations.

Mr. MITCHELL. No; this is a matter in which the banks should be left to exercise their discretion. I would not limit their power to lend, when, by lending, they facilitate trade and commerce by giving facilities for lumber operations, and on what is considered in the Ottawa district very good security.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose that, under clause 69, it would be possible for a bank, on the same condition and under the same circumstances under which it may use this interest in real estate to take as an additional security, the security of a timber limit; but I apprehend what the hon. gentleman wants is that the banks should be permitted to lend upon the security of timber limits directly and at once. That would be practically adopting, perhaps in the most objectionable form, the principle of land banks. Our banks are not based on the principle of land banks. That is not the principle of our present banking system. It is not to lend upon real security, or upon future, unrealised values. You do not allow a bank to lend upon the security of the most highly productive fee simple of valuable real estate, producing great rents. You allow it to take a mortgage, under certain circumstances, as additional security for its contract in ordinary business. You may do the same thing in reference to timber limits. If you introduce the principle of lending directly, on the security of a timber limit, why not allow the banks to lend directly on the fee simple of a warehouse, on the real property of any person, and you at once establish the principle of a land bank, contrary to that on which our banking system is based.

Mr. WALDIE. The fact heretofore is that the security was given on the logs, and unless the license to cut timber was clearly transferred with the logs, the property did not go together, and it has been held necessary for the banks to hold the license or the right to cut timber so as to continue their right in the lumber. It has been the common practice of the banks to make advances to manufacturers of lumber, who have purchased the right to cut lumber.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend misunderstood me if he supposes I am objecting to that. I understand it is perfectly legitimate, that a bank which makes an advance to a manufacturer for the purpose of enabling him to cut his timber, should take as an additional security, even now, the security of real estate. The hon. member for Frontenac however wants something more, but what definitely I do not know; but I assume it is this, that instead of making the transaction a legitimate banking transaction, which is an advance to a person in the course of his business, and on his general credit for the doing of work and upon the prospect of a bond fide mercantile operation, you are going authorise an advance upon the security of his chattel interest, whatever it may be in real estate. That is not the principle of the present Act. principle of the present Act is that you make it upon the personal security, and, with reference to the mercantile operation, having the right under certain circumstances to take as an additional security, a charge on real estate. But I am bound to say that this Bill seems to contemplate the statutory recognition of that which is new in law, though I fear not in practice, the loaning directly and primarily on chattels, instead of restricting the basis of loans as does the present law. This is a questionable extension.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I understand that timber limits require a great deal of capital to work them. The owner generally goes to a bank to obtain that capital, and it is for the security of the bank not only to have the security of the timber cut, but the security of the license.

Mr. BLAKE. So they have. I am told that half the limits in this country are in the hands of the banks.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It should be expressed that the banks have authority to lend upon such securities. It is similar to lending upon real estate. It requires capital to develop and work these limits, and the security should not only be upon the product but the bank should have the right to go on cutting in case anything happened to the owner.

Mr. MITCHELL. Suppose a man owns a valuable timber limit and cuts $10,000 worth of timber. Surely the bank can advance money upon the cut timber. If he goes to them and wants $10,000 more, why should he not be allowed to give them the security of the timber which is yet to be cut. It is for the banks to consider whether they will advance that amount, but it cannot do any harm to pass the motion.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think my amendment was out of order, if the amendment voted on was in order.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to the hon. gentleman's motion being put as a substantive motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I probably acted rather hastily in ruling that out of order, because I was under a misapprehension. It is now moved by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson):

That the bank may also lend money to any person engaged in farming upon real estate security.

Mr. WATSON. It might be well, if the Minister of Justice should think so, to add a provision that it should be according to the Torrens system, which certainly is much better security than that proposed by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) in regard to the timber limits.

Amendment negatived.

On section 76,

Mr. BARRON. It occurs to me that it is rather dangerous to give the bank power to lend money upon a warehouse receipt which is promised to be given at some future time.

Mr. BLAKE. Would it not be well to make it a written promise?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think that suggestion should be adopted, as it would save a great deal of litigation.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would suggest that we should insert the words "written agreement" instead of the word "promise."

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it is due to the legal profession to say that there is a vast amount of philanthropy and patriotism on their part in endeavoring to make it so that we cannot have any litigation.

Mr. DALY. I think the provisions of this clause should be extended. It reads now that every one is guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to imprisonment, who wilfully makes any false statement in any warehouse receipt, bill of lading or security. Cases have arisen where, after the warehouse receipt had been given to a bank, and a short time had elapsed between the giving of the receipt and the falling due of the note, the person who had given the receipt had cleaned out the warehouse completely, and when the bank went to look for the security, the grain was entirely gone. It seems to me this clause should go further and meet such cases as these. I would suggest that it be amended by adding after the word "security" the words:

Or in relation thereto as to the quantity, quality or value or otherwise of the goods, wares or merchandise covered by any warehouse receipts, bill of lading or security, after the same has been delivered to the banks.

That omission has occurred to me, and I had copied the exact phraseology of the criminal law about the conversion of goods that had been pledged. It may be better to adopt the precise phraseology.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no objection to adopting that clause. The Larceny Act covers the case. We are providing for cases in which there is no warehouse receipts and a certain security, and we want to extend the provisions so as to cover the security.

Mr. DALY. I will withdraw my amendment in favor of the amendment of the member for Sherbrooke.

Mr. BLAKE. It rather strikes me as if the man would be liable, if he did not deliver possession to the bank of the goods, no matter for what reason they were not delivered. Suppose, for instance, they were burned up.

Mr. HALL. The non. delivery must be wilful

Mr. BLAKE. The Act says "if he does not deliver to the bank possession thereof;" the word "wilful" does not appear.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The section as the hon. member has stated, is just adapted from the Larceny Act, and we can remove any difficulty by adding these words "or wilfully withholds from the bank possession thereof."

On section 77,

Mr. CASEY. Does not this clause involve the purchaser of manufactured goods in some doubt as to whether he can really get the goods delivered to him? If the bank has a lien on the goods manufactured from certain raw material, is not the purchaser of the finished article at some risk in buying any goods exposed for sale?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is incident to the system of warehouse receipts, and to the principle of allowing the manufacturer to pledge them without change of possession, or notoriety of the instruments itself. We have discussed that at great length, and have concluded that we ought not to prevent that lien being so created.

Mr. CASEY. Suppose a manufacturer bought certain raw material, we will say Australian wool, of which he made a fabric known as tweeds; suppose somebody else bought those tweeds, and that the manufacturer of tweeds from the Australian wool had obtained an advance from a bank and had failed to satisfy the claims of the bank, would not the merchant who had bought those tweeds, have to lose what he had bought from the manufacturer?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. Is that a fair proposition that an innocent third party not knowing of the transaction with the bank is to lose what he bought and supposed was his own, because the manufacturer has failed in his obligation to the bank?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think it is open to that danger, but we cannot have the principle of having these liens without providing that the lien shall be absolute. The hon, gentleman puts the case of the manufactured article being sold to an innocent purchaser who then will lose the money.

Mr. Daly.

Shall the purchaser lose the money or shall the loss fall on the bank? If the loss falls on the bank it has the warehouse receipt or security which is its equivalent. This clause is involved in the principle already settled by allowing these securities at all.

The Minister is right in saying Mr. CASEY. that the principle is involved in what has already been done, but then if he looks at the consequences of what has been done already, he will have reason to change his mind as to the judiciousness of that action. It is an outrageous proposition that an innocent third party purchasing from a manufacturer has to lose the goods, because that manufacturer has not paid certain obligations to the bank which advanced money for the purpose of his manufacturing the goods. It introduces absolute uncertainty into all commercial transactions, and this policy of allowing wholesale merchants to give warehouse receipts on raw material to banks from which they obtain advances, thus giving a permanent lien on that raw material, no matter into what form it may afterwards be manufactured, is a false and pernicious policy.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not quite understand that the Committee has gone so far as the Minister of Justice has stated. I understand that section 75, to enable banks to loan money to wholesale manufacturers of goods, has been allowed to stand, and this section should also be allowed to Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is true that section 75 was allowed to stand, but that course was followed in order to more carefully consider the wording of the clause to carry out the principle arrived at by the Committee.

Mr. CASEY. Section 75 having been allowed to stand, and the Committee having taken no action on it, the present section, which depends on it, must be allowed to stand also. I urge on the attention of the Committee the risk to which the ordinary purchaser is exposed by the adoption of these sections. Take a wholesale manufacturer of agricultural implements. The people buy implements every year, and they have no means of knowing whether the reaper or mower they purchase is pledged in advance to a bank under the operations of these two sections or not.

On section 80,

Mr. MITCHELL. There is very great objection to be taken to this section. I think that the moiety system of penalties should not be introduced into this Bill and that the prosecution should be by an officer of the Government, and not by public informers. It should be the duty of the department of the Government which takes charge of the financial affairs of this country, to conduct the necessary prosecutions. I know as a matter of fact that there are a class of men in the city of Montreal, so-called professional men, who make a livelihood by taking up unintentional violations of the law, and bringing actions. We had an action brought against The Herald two or three years ago because we published the notice of a change of a proprietorship in only one office, instead of in two distincts places. That action was brought by one of these legal scavengers who make a living out of accidental omissions which take place.

This section although new in Mr. FOSTER.

this Act is law at the present time.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. This section provides for penalties "for any violation of the sections numbered 65 to 79, inclusive;" but, when I refer to section 68, section 69 and section 70, I find that there is nothing at all in these by which a bank could incur a penalty.

Mr. FOSTER. It only refers to these clauses which have the penalty attached.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. Then that should be stated, instead of the way it is at present in the section.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps it would be better.

Mr. WALDIE. If the moiety system of penalties is in the criminal law let it remain there, but it should not be introduced into an Act of this kind to encourage discharged employees to turn informers.

Mr. DALY. I agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) that no action should be taken for the recovery of these penalties by a common informer, and that the Crown should take necessary action. Without taking up the time of the House I beg to move:

That all the words after "dollars," on the fourth line of section 80, be struck out.

Mr. CASEY. It seems to me that there is a very unequal dealing in this clause, with the banks as compared with their customers. Sub-section 3, of section 73, says:

"E veryone is guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, who wilfully makes any false statement in any warehouse receipt, bill of lading or security, as aforesaid."

False statements on the part of the customers of the bank are made a misdemeanor, and the man who makes them is liable to imprisonment, while on the other hand, if the bank violates its obligations towards its customers, it is only liable to a fine not exceeding $500. There is no provision that any official of a bank, who may be responsible for any such violation, is to be subject to criminal procedure. A bank official might make any false statements he chooses to his customers, without incurring any personal penalty, and without bringing the bank under any other penalty than a fine of $500. I think there is a great inconsistency between the penalties provided in the two cases. There should, be a criminal liability attached to an official of the bank who violates this Act as well as to the customers. I would like to know from the Minister of Justice whether such criminal liability exists under the common law or any other statute? If it does exist, I think it should be incorporated in this Act.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Such a penalty exists under the common law, and section 100 of this Act provides:

"Every person committing an offence declared to be against this Act shall be liable, on conviction thereof, to a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, or both, in the discretion of the court before which such conviction is held."

I would say, with regard to the suggestion made by the hon member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), with reference to the penalties, that we can review them better and consider the mode of procedure better when we come to discuss the four or five clauses of the Bill which refer to convictions and penalties. I therefore would acquiesce in striking out the words after "dollars."

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister has pointed out that there is a liability of a fine or imprisonment in the case of any person violating any section of this Act, which of course would include a bank official. In the case of any person who makes a false statement in a warehouse receipt, there is imprisonment without the option of a fine, while in the case of the bank official there is the option of either a fine or imprisonment. We know that there are many bank officials who may make errors involving great loss to the bank, from whom you could not possibly collect $1,000 under any circumstances, and, therefore, the fine would be an illusory remedy. I think if there is no option in the case of the customer of the bank, there should be none in the case of the bank official, and the bank itself should be liable to a much higher penalty than $500.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Section 81, I understand, is a repetition of the old clause. Is it necessary to fix the maximum rate of interest at 7 per cent., beyond which it must not go under any circumstances?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a high enough rate, is it not?

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Many considerations enter into that question. I know that in the Maritime Provinces the banks sometimes charge more than 7 per cent., and very properly so. I do not believe in the principle of limiting the rate to 7 per cent. at all. Make it 8 per cent.

Mr. CASEY. I do not agree with my hon. friend; I do not think we should make it 8 per cent. or any other rate. I say that this section introduces a principle which we have time and again rejected in this House, namely, the principle of limiting the rate of interest. The rate of interest should not be regulated by any legislation of ours, and it cannot be. Whatever you put in an Act here, the man who louds more will cot the rate of the results of the rate of the results of the rate of lends money will get the rate of interest for which he is willing to lend, and I am quite satisfied that whether this section passes or not, the banks will get the current rates of interest for their money. Any attempt to limit the rate of interest is contrary to all sound principles of finance. The current rate of interest obtainable for money is regulated by the demand for capital, just as truly as the price of a bushel of wheat is regulated by the demand and supply in the country, and it is as impossible by any legislation of this House to regulate the rate of interest payable to a bank by a borrower as it is to regulate the price of wheat. In introducing this clause, the Government are going back to the old laws with regard to usury, and they are introducing a contradiction of terms in the clause itself. We have penalties for everything else in the Act, but it is here specified that the banks shall not be liable to any penalty for doing that which this clause says they shall not be allowed to do. If a breach of the other clauses involves a penalty, I do not see why it should not be the same in regard to this clause.

Mr. COCKBURN. I think we need not trouble ourselves with regard to the old statutes on usury. You cannot fix the value of money by legislation any more than you can fix the value of other commodities. Leave it to free trade, to the free laws of supply and demand; the only rule to take it simply to omit that clause with reference to usury. I would move in amendment that the following words be struck out :

Not exceeding seven per cent. per annum, and may receive and take in advance any such rates, but no higher rate of interest will be recovered by the banks.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think it is perfectly absurd for us at this time of day to attempt to pass a usury law. Anybody who has any knowledge of business knows that money is like every other commodity, a creature of supply and demand, and that what you can get for it depends altogether on the demand. The Bank of England charges for discount one day $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, and the next week 5, 6 or 7 per cent., and it is absurd to say you can put an arbitrary value on money by limiting the rate to 7 per cent. We are ignoring the common law recognised by all intelligent men to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. Why have we a legal interest to-day?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We have none.

Mr. SPROULE. We have. In transactions between two individuals, in which the rate of interest is not stipulated, the law allows only 6

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But there is no attempt to interfere with the contract made between the parties. The parties can contract to pay any rate of interest, and that contract is binding; but if there is no contract, the law allows 6 per cent. for the charge.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We are not applying any new principle whatever. This section has been in force for a long time. It was adopted, after full consideration of the subject, as a proper limitation which ought to be put upon the rate of interest chargeable by the bank, and so far from the circumstances having changed since in favor of increasing the rate, the value of money has fallen, and the rate of interest is far lower to-day than it was when that legislation was passed. We propose to adhere to the provisions in the present law on that subject.

Mr. CASEY. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that there has been a similar provision in the Banking Act for some time past?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. It has been violated then, as I know from experience, for I have had to pay 8 per cent. to the banks. Whether this restriction be a new principle or not in our banking, it is utterly unsound and utterly false in political economy. It has been ineffective in the past, because the banks, like any other lender of money, will secure, when they make a loan, exactly what interest that loan is worth. They will simply refuse to lend unless they get the current rate of interest. I do not see why antiquated usury laws, which were found many years ago to be useless and ineffective, should now be re-enacted by a clause in the general Banking Act. I have not heard from the other side any argument why this law should be re-enacted. The ment why this law should be re-enacted. hon. the Minister of Justice says that the rate of money has fallen since the rate of 7 per cent. was fixed by the present Banking Act. But the hon. gentleman must be aware that the rate of interest prosperity strike the country, and the oppor-construction of the line I have received no personal Mr. Cockburn.

tunities for investing become more productive, the rate will again go up. The hon. gentleman cannot tell when the rise will occur. A wave of prosperity may strike Canada notwithstanding the circumstances which at present militate against any such probability. I hope it will be dis-tinctly understood by the country that the Minister of Justice has committed himself to the proposition that the Government should dictate what rate of interest should be chargable, that they should interfere with the freedom of contract between the banks and their customers, and say what capital shall be worth for the purposes of investment. The hon. the Minister of Justice told us that capital is not worth more than 7 per cent. invested in Canada. That is one of the most damaging things said about the country for a long time, and the hon. gentleman must take the responsibility for it.

Amendment negatived.

Resolutions reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.15 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 2nd May, 1890.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock. PRAYERS.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to make a statement to the House. My attention has been called to a statement in the Toronto Globe, in reference to the proceedings of Parliament the other evening, which is so much at variance with the truth that I feel it my duty to refer to it. I will not read the whole statement, but in it occurs the following:

"It happens that Mr. Wood is the chief owner of the Albert and Cape Tormentine Railway, which was built for private purposes almost entirely out of the public chest to the tune of $118,000 by the Dominion and a further sum by the Province. One of the main objects for constructing this line was to reach some mills owned partly by Mr. Wood. Not only this, but last year the Government granted $50,000 and this year $110,000 for a pier at Cape Tormentine not required in the public interest, in fact quite useless to anyone but Mr. Wood and his railway and his mills."

I desire to say, in reference to the statement regarding Mr. Wood's mills, that I own no mill, nor have I any interest in any mill anywhere along this line of railway. I may further say that I have no private property along that line, and I have no private or personal interest to be served in any way by the construction of that line. With regard to the statement that it was built almost entirely out of moneys received from the public chest, I may say that any one who knows anything of the construction of the road, knows that the subsidies granted were entirely inadequate to meet the cost of its construction—that, in addition to the subsidies, a large amount of private capital has been or private profit whatever. On the contrary, besides the money I have put into the railway, I have devoted, for some years, a considerable portion of my time to attending to the construction and operation of this railway, and for these services I have never asked nor received, nor do I expect ever to receive, a single dollar. With regard to the statement that the pier at Cape Tormentine is not required in the public interest, and is, in fact, quite useless to any one but Mr. Wood and his railway and his mills, as I have stated in the House before, these grants were made, not at my instance, but at the instance of the members representing Prince Edward Island, and after a committee of this House had made a report in favor of those appropriations. I might add that this is not a new enterprise, but that the company which constructed the railway was incorporated in 1874; and long before I was a member of Parliament the subject was discussed here, and my predecessor in the representation of Westmoreland County advocated the construction of this line and this pier, and promised that the Government of which he was a member would provide for their construction. I desire to say that I have nothing whatever to regret in regard to my connection with this road, and that I feel that I should have neglected my duty as a citizen, and should have been very remiss in my duty as a public man, if I had not done everything in my power to secure its construction.

BOUNTY ON PIG IRON

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide by law that a bounty of two dollars per ton be paid on all pig iron manufactured in Canada from Canadian ore between the first day of July, 1892, and the thirtieth day of June, 1897, inclusive.

He said: This is simply an extension of the policy adopted by the House in 1883, and which prevails at present in Canada. In 1883, a bounty of $1.50 per ton was granted for three years from that date, and it was provided that the bounty should be $1 from 1886 to 1889, at which time it should cease. In 1886 the bounty was made $1.50, until 1889, and $1 from 1889 to 1892. It is now proposed to make this bounty $2 per ton from 1892 to 1897. During the last ten years Canada has imported an average of 200,000 tons of iron yearly, There and the demand is constantly increasing. are great natural facilities for manufacturing iron in this country. The ore is found in large quantities, well distributed over the various sections of the country, and in many instances in close proximity to the flux, and the fuel necessary for its reduction and manufacture. It may be asked, why it is necessary to stimulate the production by artificial assistance if we have such natural facilities? A glance at the history of iron production the world over will answer this question, and show that it has been found impossible to induce in any country a large development in the iron industry without such assistance. From 1760 to 1830 large inducements were given for the production of iron in England, and these were not withdrawn until the process of development was well advanced, and England had become the iron producing necessary in Belgium, Germany and other continental countries. In the United States so large has been the development of the iron industry through the means of high tariffrates, that the output has grown to be second greatest in the world, and their manufacturers there are now in some measure entering into competition with England. Canada must learn the lesson taught by all other countries and profit by it. At present there is in Canada a duty of $4 per ton upon pig iron, and the additional bounty proposed would make the inducement $6 per ton. Under this encouragement, I believe, it will be found possible to interest additional capital, and cause a large increase in the production of iron from our rich ores. can done the secondary benefits will be very important. The production of iron gives a large amount of employment to labor, more than is given by any other great industry. The mining of the ore, the transport to the furnaces, and all the operations necessary to a reduction of the ores; the mining and preparation of limestone for flux purposes, and the raising or production of the immense quantities of coal necessary for the work, call for labor at every turn, as well skilled as unskilled. No less than 80 per cent. of the cost of pig iron is paid in wages, and at least 90 per cent. of the cost of malleable iron. Although the proposed increased bounty will not take effect until 1892, it will encourage the production quite as effectually as if it took effect to-morrow, as it will require eighteen months or two years to provide the requisite furnaces. The advantage of the bounty system over the tariff is that the amount given will not have to be paid upon the whole consumption of iron in the country, but only upon that which is manufactured. Since 1883 bounty has been paid on 160,000 to 170,000 tons, but the number of furnaces has not been sufficient to produce what is needed for the demands of the country, nor has it as yet given us the greater advantage of inducing competition by the multiplication of other industries. A very large capital is necessary in the construction and operation of the necessary furnaces, and the competition with such iron producing countries as Great Britain and the United States, is very strong. There they have the advantages of years of experience and of consequent skill, they have wide markets and immense produc-tion which reduces the cost of the manufactured article, and if we wish to induce capital to take hold of our rich iron resources and develop them in the face of such competition, we must be prepared to offer an adequate inducement. I believe the proposed bounty, in addition to the duty, will prove an adequate inducement, and that with its aid we may look for a distinct advance in the development of what should be one of the most important industries of this country.

A glance at the history of iron production the world over will answer this question, and show that it has been found impossible to induce in any country a large development in the iron industry without such assistance. From 1760 to 1830 large inducements were given for the production of iron in England, and these were not withdrawn until the process of development was well advanced, and England had become the iron producing country of the world. This had also been found by the agricultural portion of this Dominion, it is one of the particular class of articles to which, more than others, the attention of the Government is called by the accredited representatives of the agricultural industry, with the view of reducing the duties; and it is that particular article of all others, by adding to the cost of which the hon. gentleman will increase the cost of an enormous variety of articles, that he selected to-day for an added bounty, and for a bounty which will stretch over a number of years and thereby tie the hands of the successors of this Parliament. When we recollect that, on the average of years, pig iron can be produced at ten or eleven dollars per ton-I do not know what the exact price is at the moment, as it has gone up considerably, and is subject to a good many fluctuations—no human being can pretend there ought to be such encouragement granted to its manufacture outside the enormous duty of $4 per ton now imposed; yet, notwithstanding that, we have the hon. gentleman proposing here to add to that duty a bounty of $2 per ton to all who may produce iron in this There is just this advantage in the procountry. position, that, to a certain extent, it enables the people to see more clearly than in other cases how much the exchequer has been plundered, because plundered it is, and how much the people are being impoverished by this policy. The hon. being impoverished by this policy. The hon. gentleman did not state what is supposed to be the average production per man per year, or what number of tons are usually produced per year, in countries where this manufacture is carried on with proper capital and appliances and on a proper scale. Perhaps he does not know. Has he obtained that information, or tried to obtain it?

Mr. FOSTER. Go on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because I should be very glad to have him state it to the House. He ought to have obtained the information, as it is an essential element in discussing the question. I would like to have a reply.

Mr. FOSTER. Go on with the discussion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman does not choose to give the House a statement of the amounts, and I shall reserve my remarks in that connection until some one better informed or more candid than himself chooses to give the statement. The only possible merit of this bounty is that to a certain extent we can see the cost; and in this connection I will take the opportunity, which I intended to take at another time, of calling the attention of the House, as I have done more than once before, to the excessive danger in the practice now pursued by the Government of substituting specific duties for ad valorem duties, particularly on the article of iron. I have here handed to me a statement in detail of the effects of a certain recent change in the tariff, by which the duty on an article very largely used in this country and of immense importance as well in a sanitary point of view,—the article of wrought iron tubing—has been dealt with by the Government; and I give that as an illustration of the exorbitant taxation, which, under the hon. gentle-man's system, is now being levied on articles of iron. As everybody knows, there is no one thing which it is more desirable, in a general way, should be cheaper in this country than iron tubing. The proposed to extend the principle and to make the

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

House will recollect that recently the hon. $gentleman\ proposed----$

An hon. MEMBER. That is left as it was.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am told the hon, gentleman has left that as it was. I was not in the House when he made the alteration, but I will use, as an illustration, the duties as they now are, in order to show the enormous weight of the duties which the hon. gentleman is levying on iron. I find that the duty on iron tubing, even as it now stands, ranges from 613 to 621 per cent. In some few cases, it fell to 58, owing to the fact that it is still, in some degree, a specific duty, and is affected by the rise or fall in the value of the goods. But the fact that at this present moment, an immense number of articles of iron are taxed 60, 70, 80 and 90 per cent. in some cases, under the hon. gentleman's tariff, is of itself the best reply in the opinion of everybody who regards the real welfare of the mass of the people, to this proposition, that a further bounty be added to the tax which already exists. Now, it is possible that the hon, gentleman may succeed, by this unhealthy stimulus, in developing a considerable production of pig iron; and if he does, we may be saddled, for all we can tell, with an annual charge of $200,000 or $300,000 for the whole period from 1892 to 1897 during which he proposes to impose this duty. Were the manufactures to assume any proportion worth while, any proportions that could be regarded as conferring an important benefit upon this country, a production of 400,000 or 500,000 tons would be nothing very remarkable, and then we will find ourselves taxed, by this mischievous policy, with a bounty of from $800,000 to $900,000 a year, for which we would receive no benefits commensurate with one-tenth of the expenditure. Now, our market for iron is a limited market, as the hon. gentleman well knows. He does not dare to pretend there is the remotest chance of our exporting iron. We must be confined, at present at any rate, to one limited market; and if the hon. gentleman has chosen to study the subject carefully, he will know it is scarcely possible for us, even if our advantages were greater than they are, with that limited market, to manufacture in such a way that we can produce as cheaply as the great country of the United States, with its continually increasing market, now amounting to sixty-five millions, and probably soon amounting to seventy-five millions, or eighty millions, or as Great Britain, which has not only its own market, but that of the whole world. resolution, as stated, provides for the bounty of $2 per ton on pig iron manufactured in Canada from Canadian ore between 1st July, 1892, and 30th June, 1897, inclusive. This is not the initiation of a new policy, but the extension of the policy which was adopted in 1883, and which obtains in this country now. In 1883, a bounty of $1.50 per ton was granted on pig iron for three years from that date, and it was provided that the bounty should be $1 per ton for three years, after the expiration of the first three years. In 1886, when the first term expired, a Bill was introduced and became law which kept the bounty up to $1.50for the three years from 1886 to 1889, and then graduated it at $1 per ton for the three years following, which would expire in 1892. It is now amount of the bounty 50 cents a ton greater from the 1st July, 1892, at which time the duty payable under the present law will have lapsed. I suppose no one doubts that there are two elements in the country which are peculiarly favorable to the manufacture of iron. One is the very large consumption which takes place in this country, and which is increasing year by year. I am speaking roughly, but I think, during the last ten or twelve years, we have imported about 200,000 tons of the rougher kinds of iron and steel per year, and this consumption is constantly increasing, and will naturally increase with the increase of population and the widening of the enter-prise and the business of the country. The other element is this, which I think is apparent to all: that in Canada we have large and varied deposits of the raw material, the iron ore, scattered all over the country, in almost every section of it, and that in connection with it we have the fuel and the flux in close proximity to the ore itself, so that, in certain portions of the country there are many advantages for the development of the iron industry, and probably in all parts of the country there are as good average facilities as can be found in any other great country in the world. It may be asked why, if we have a large and increasing demand, and if we have the raw material of varied and good quality and in large quantities, it is necessary to stimulate the production of iron by adding to the duty at present imposed on the importation of pig iron a bounty for the special encouragement of the manufacture of wrought iron from the ore? I think a glance at the history of the development of iron industries in the world will show that it was found impossible in the past in any great country to induce a large growth of the manufacture of iron without giving an artificial and a lengthened stimulus to it. In Great Britain, from 1760 to 1830, there were in this way large inducements held out for the manufacture of iron, and that was when the competition was not so varied or so strong as it is now to an almost infinite degree—if I may be allowed to use that term. The same is true as to the development of the iron industry in the continental countries of Europe, and we have close at hand a pertinent example in the United States of America, which commenced its iron industry with artificial inducements and has followed up that policy with such success that it is now the second country in the world in the production of iron, and its total output is creeping up close to the total output in Great Britain, where the capital is so large and the experience has been so long and so varied. Therefore, though we have already a duty of $4 a ton upon pig iron, we propose to give a bounty of $2 a ton, which will amount to an inducement of $6 per ton to the manufacturers here; and that, if I am not mistaken, is about the equivalent of the American duty. Besides the general advantage of producing what is necessary for the consumption of the country, there is a large incidental advantage derived in producing iron from the ore in this country, inasmuch as it is a very wide and constant employer of labor—skilled labor, labor partially skilled, and labor not skilledin the mining of the ores, in the production of the coal necessary and of the flux which is necessary, and in all the laborious processes by which the raw material is transformed into the manufactured article. It is stated that at least 80 per cent. of the cost of production of pig iron goes for wages, and that at least 90 per cent. of the cost of malleable iron goes for wages. That shows the malleable iron goes for wages. large proportion of the expenditure which goes large proportion of the bor in the country. This into the employment of labor in the country. bounty is to take effect in 1892, and will consequently have the effect of aiding as effectually as if its payment commenced to-morrow, in the starting and developing of new industries. In consequence of the immense amount of capital required, it takes a year or eighteen months or two years to make the necessary preparations for the starting of furnaces and getting into a position for the manufacture of iron. I do not think it is necessary to make any lengthened explanation, especially in view of the fact that this is not a new policy, and has been discussed in the House on two or three other occasions. One beneficial effect of a bounty is that, in this case, if we pay $6 a ton duty upon pig iron, it will have to be paid upon the whole product, whether produced in the country or not, while in the case of a bounty there is no payment until the production of the iron, and then only upon the iron actually produced in the country. The bounty has been paid since 1883. From that time we have had produced in pig 160,000 or 170,000 tons upon which the bounty has been paid. If the hon, gentleman merely desires to encourage trade, if he really desires to promote the manufacture of iron in this country, the way to do that is to open our markets, at any rate, to the people of this continent. Were that done, I have no doubt that important iron manufactures would spring up in Canada which would be self-sustaining, which would need no bounty, which would inflict no penalty whatever on the consuming population of this country. The only way to foster any important production of iron in Canada, is to follow the policy of my hon. friend on this side, obtain access to large markets, and you will find that at once capital will flow in, that the millions which the hon. gentleman's leader promised us would have some chance of entering Canada, and he would have some chance of seeing iron manufactories created in Canada of which the country might be proud, which would contribute towards its wealth, and which would not be made the means of pillaging the resources of the people. This is one mode, and another mode of cheapening the production of iron would be to cheapen the cost of living in this country, to enable our artisans to live more cheaply than they do now, to make it a more valuable factor in economy than it is now, and in that way we would have a fair chance of holding our own in competition with the iron which we are at present obliged to import from elsewhere. Sir, I must, for my part, protest on every ground against this proposition. I protest against it because at this present moment iron is exorbitantly taxed, because iron in being a raw material absolutely essential in many manufactures and treble essential, I may say, to the great agricultural class. We have already placed upon it heavier taxes than exist in any other country I know of, except, possibly, in the United States, where the advantage of the large market does operate to some extent to produce that wholesome competition which we might produce to a reasonable degree, but which competition, I tell the hon. gentleman, we have no sort of hope of producing here. This is merely a concession to certain favored individuals, or certain favored corporations, to be paid for, in all human probability, by contributions to election funds, just as we know that other combines are in the habit of earning the gratitude of hon. gentlemen opposite. For these reasons, and because I object in the highest degree to tying up the hands of succeeding Parliaments and to inflicting upon the people of this country liabilities which may possibly amount to many hundreds of thousands of dollars before the period arrives which is fixed by this resolution—for those reasons I object to the proposition of the hon. gentleman, and will feel it my duty to offer all the opposition in my power to its becoming law.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I desire to add my protest to that which has been so ably and forcibly made by my hon. friend, against the new tax which the hon. gentleman seeks to impose upon the people of this country. The history of this duty on pig iron is rather a curious one, and when I listened to the speech of the Finance Minister, I thought I could recall similar predictions which were made when this system was first introduced. Sir, this country has had the advantage of a ten years' experience of the payment of these bounties, and we ought to be able, at least, after that experience, to form some fair judgment as to whether they are beneficial or not. When these bounties were first imposed upon the people, when the Finance Minister first induced the Parliament of this country to consent to the imposition of these duties and to grant these large bounties for the establishment of these petty industries, he did it on the ground that the granting of this bounty would be productive of an enormous increase in the production of pig iron. He told us we had one or two struggling industries already in Canada, notably of Londonderry, Nova Scotia, and the and that if his proposition was accepted by the House-and the proposition made, be it remembered, was limited in its amount, and limited in the period of time during which it was to remain in operation he had no doubt, that at the end of that time iron industries would be so well established that they would need no further aid. The first statement made by the then Finance Minister was, that whereas the production of pig iron up to that time had been about 20,000 tons per year, the granting of a bounty of $1.50 or $2 a ton, as the scale was provided in the resolution, would have the effect of doubling that increase in one year, that an enormous number of men would be employed, that capital was already waiting to flow into the country for the development of those iron industries, and that prosperity would follow on the introduc-tion of this capital. Sir, I hold in my hand the speech made by Sir Leonard Tilley, then Finance Minister, when he introduced that resolution, so far back as the year 1883, in which he said:

"During the last year we imported altogether about 63,431 tons, and it is expected that during the next year, from July, 1883, to July, 1884, there will probably be 40,000 manufactured."

And he went on to show that under the fostering influence of this bounty the result would be, with the natural advantages which we possess—and the hon. gentleman himself has redescribed them to-day in almost the same terms—that before the ten years expired we would be able to produce in this country nearly all the pig iron that was required to be used in the country. Now, Sir, it is interesting to note how far these predictions have been verified. How do we stand to-day? Have the results justified the imposition of the tax? Have any of the predictions made by the hon. member been fulfilled? Has the country been benefited in any way by the enormous sums we have paid out from year to year in the shape of bounties to these pig iron industries? I say we have not. I say the figures show exactly the opposite; I say that although you have been paying out year after year tens of thousand of dollars in the shape of bounty to these industries, to-day the production is not greater than it was ten years ago. I say, in face of these facts it behooves Parliament to pause, not only in continuing the existing system, but in doing what the hon. gentleman asks us to do, in largely increasing the bounties which he proposes to pay, and in largely increasing the taxes which the people will have to pay. Now, Sir, in 1887, when the Finance Minister revised his Budget, he told us there was one great fault in the then system of taxation; he told us there was one article which, in some way or another, had been omitted, and that if we put a heavy duty upon that article the result would be largely to benefit the people of this country. I read his speech the other day, and it was most amusing to remember the proposition which he made, and by which he induced this House to consent to the enormous increase which we then made to the duties upon iron. He told us, in the first place, that the result would be if we increased the duties to the extent that he asked us to increase them upon iron, to sweep away the balance of trade which had been for many years against this country. Well, that was a great thing, if we could only do that. I will quote the hon. gentleman's words:

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

"There is also one table---"

Referring to a series of tables which he placed in the hands of hon. gentlemen in this House.—

the hands of hon. gentlemen in this House.—

"There is also one table showing the balance of trade, and how much is accounted for by the importation of iron and steel and the manufacture thereof. You have only to look at this in order to see that the balance of trade against Canada is largely and at once accounted for. If you subtract the amount of imports paid by Canada for iron to sustain the iron industries of other countries, you will find that it is nearly equal to the amount by which our imports have exceeded our exports, and, if you want to balance the trade of the country, if you want to have no outgoing beyond the incoming of the country, cut the Gordian knot, put this iron industry upon the same footing and foundation that you have put all the other industries of Canada, and you will sweep away, to a large extent, the balance of trade which stands recorded against Canada up to the present time."

This was the promise, that was the prediction made

This was the promise, that was the prediction made by the Finance Minister, that was one of the strongest reasons he used to urge this country to double, and treble, and quadruple the duties which were then placed upon the importation of iron to this country; and the House, in a weak moment, unfortunately yielded to the persuasive voice of the then Finance Minister, and what has been the result? Let me ask the Finance Minister to-day how does the balance of trade stand so far as Canada is concerned? Has the increase of taxes upon iron swept away that balance of trade? The hon. gentleman knows that the prediction stands to-day unfulfilled, that there has not been that result which the hon. gentleman was satisfied would take place, and the balance of trade against Canada to-day is larger than it was before the period when we had cheap iron, resulting from the imposition small duties. Well, Sir, what else? Why, there was no section of this country that was not going to become rich and prosperous. The hon. gentleman told us that the iron industry of Londonderry was to be developed to an extent unparalleled in the world's history, because, he said, we possessed in this country all the materials necessary for the manufacture of iron, and if we had a national spirit we would not go abroad and import iron. He continued:

"If that be the case, what is to prevent the policy of the ship that carries the ore from Weller's Bay, Kingston and Cobourg, across to the United States ports, bringing back a cargo of the anthracite coal which is within one hundred miles from the point of shipment? There is nothing to prevent it but one thing, and that is the duty upon the anthracite coal; and what I propose to ask this House to do, in adopting the policy of vitalising this great industry for Canada, is to take the duty off anthracite coal and make it free."

He was not going to wait one, two or three years for capital to flow in, because he told us capital was at that moment waiting to come in, and would come in the moment the tariff was passed. He further said:

"The moment that is done we shall have blast furnaces at Cobourg, Weller's Bay and Kingston, at all events, served by anthracite coal, making that description of anthracite iron which is so highly valued by gentlemen connected with foundries. The distance between Weller's Bay and Charlotte, in the United States, is about sixty miles, and from Rochester to the anthracite mines is 150 miles; and, I think, when I give those distances and give what is accomplished every day in the United States, where coal and iron are 1,000 miles apart, I shall have settled the problem that nothing will be easier than to establish blast furnaces in the Province of Quebec and the Province of Ontario, by which you can not only manufacture the ore by the use of anthracite coal."

We were not only going to have the balance of trade rectified, but we were to have blast furnaces established; we were not only to have blast furnaces developed in Londonderry, where they had been established, but we were to have furnaces established at Cobourg, Weller's Bay and Kingston. In a weak moment this House yielded to the hon. gentleman who addressed such an argument. now ask, where are the blast furnaces which the Finance Minister promised? Echo answers: They have not been established. The hon. gentleman who predicted that blast furnaces would be established at these three or four places in Ontario and Quebec has failed to fulfil his prediction, as he failed with respect to the balance of trade. But the hon. gentleman did not stop there. Having captivated the members from Nova Scotia with respect to the development of the Londonderry mines, and having captivated the members from Ontario and Quebec, the hon. gentleman turned round and said:

"Now, Sir, you may ask me what about the great North-West. Well, Sir, it is well known that you have in the North-West the most boundless supply of coal that is to be found in any part of this Dominion. One of the great advantages we have over the prairie country to the south of us, is the unlimited supply of fuel furnished by nature in the form of lignite coal. And you have not only 50,000 square miles of this lignite coal in the great North-West, to furnish enormous quantities of fuel for generations to come, but you have in Big Island, in Lake Winnipeg, a valuable deposit of iron ore, and any quantity of timber to make charcoal to convert it into iron. All it requires is the adoption of this policy in order to establish at an early day industries for the manufacture of iron in the North-West as well as in the other portions of the country."

Where are the industries that were to be established in the North-West? The policy was adopted, and, as I shall show presently, millions of money—I use the words advisedly—have been taken out of the pockets of the people to carry out that policy, in the shape of additional taxation on iron. But the hon, gentleman was too big a man to confine his vision to the Provinces of Nova Scotia, Ontario, Quebec and the North-West Territories. How about the great Province of British Columbia, he said. The Rocky Mountains even would not stop him. Said the hon, gentleman:

"And what more? Across the Rocky Mountains; need I tell you that in British Columbia you have one of the most magnificent deposits of iron ore—on Taxada Island, 30 miles long and 5 miles wide—that is to be found in any place in the world, rich in the highest degree in iron; and that you have the Nanaimo coal fields to furnish fuel to put blast furnaces in operation at an early day, lying within thirty miles of Taxada Island. I say, that with the prospect of opening up trade with Australia, with China and Japan, although I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, I believe that at no distant day you will have in the Province of British Columbia an iron industry built up which will compare favorably with that of any other industry in this country."

I ask the hon. members from British Columbia, how many blast furnaces they have in that Province? Where are the iron industries that were to be built up in that country? The hon, gentleman's predictions and prophecies with respect to British Columbia, as with respect to every other matter, have not been fulfilled. Every promise he made with respect to the future prosperity of the iron industry has tailed to be fulfilled, as I will show by statistics. But the hon. gentleman said: What are we going to do? We have placed a bounty on pig iron, and we now propose to raise the duty to $4 per ton on imported iron; and when that is done we will produce in this country all the pig iron we require. The hon, gentleman then went into a per capita calculation to show how much pig iron was used in this country, that no similar number of people in any country in the world used so much iron as do the people of Canada; and he asked us, what would be the results if all these brilliant prophesies were fulfilled, if we had an increased number of blast furnaces at Londonderry, if we had new blast furnaces established at Cobourg, Weller's Bay and Kingston, and if we had iron industries opened in the North-West and wonderful iron industries in British Columbia? We would then make all the iron we require in the Dominion, and an era of prosperity would follow the like of which was The hon. gentleman said: never seen.

"Now, Sir, the result is that by the adoption of this policy you will give permanent employment to an army of men, numbering at least 20,000, increasing our population from 80,000 to 100,000 soults, and affording the means of supporting them in comfort and prosperity. I say, Sir, that if there is anything in the National Policy, if we have not been all wrong from the very start, if the history of Canada shows that this National Policy has achieved for Canada what we said it would achieve—and I have given the most abundant and irrefragible evidence on that point—if there is any question on which there ought not to be any doubt in the mind of any hon, gentleman, it is that the application of the same sound policy which we have found so admirable and successful in relation to all other industries, will have the same result in regard to the great iron industry of this country."

Let me ask the hon. gentleman where are the twenty thousand artisans, workers in iron, representing a population of 100,000, who were to come into this country? I bring the hon. gentleman face to face with his statements, and I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to tell the House one single particular in which any of the predictions and promises of the Finance Minister have been fulfilled, promises and predictions which induced this House to vote the imposition of taxation upon the people of this country which reaches no less than a million dollars per annum. There never was a case in the history of Canada where the representatives of the people were so deceived and so deluded, as they were in regard to raising the duties upon imported iron, which duties the hon. gentleman imposed and carried in 1887. Let us look at the facts. The quantity of pig iron produced in 1887 was 39,728 tons, on which a bounty was paid of $59,576. In 1888, when this industry was going to be developed so rapidly the quantity produced was 22,310 tons, on which a bounty was paid of $33,314. In 1889, the last year for which I have the figures, the quantity produced was 24,822 tons. is the magnificent result which has followed the granting of these enormous bounties to this special industry. I ask any hon, gentleman whose mind is open to argument, if he can, in the face of these figures, testify an adhesion to this system. Why, Sir, we were told some years ago that we were not going to import any more pig iron, and that we were going to manufacture it all in this country. We were told that pig iron was, more than any other article, a product of labor, and that 20,000 horny-handed sons of toil were to come with their families here, to add to the wealth of We were told, as I have said, that we were not to import any more pig iron; but what are the facts? We imported, in 1887, 45,295 tons of pig iron, and instead of reducing the importation we imported, in 1889, 73,844 tons. that with the imposition of an increased duty we have imported more pig iron from abroad, and we have manufactured less pig iron in this country from 39,728 tons in 1887 to 24,822 tons in 1889. This is the result of the policy of the Government. Now, Sir, what do we pay in the shape of increased duty? I find that in 1886, the year before the hon. gentleman made his statement, we imported $8,000,400 worth of iron, on which we paid a duty of $1,720,656, or 21½ per cent. increase. The new system came into operation in the year 1887. Of course it had not full play that year and the increased duty was very little. However, we imported to the value of $9,746,667, on which we paid a duty of $2,168,392, or an increased duty in that year of only $121,591, consequent, as I have said, on account of the new tariff not coming into operation until late in that year. When we come to the years 1888 and 1889, when the new tariff was in full operation, and when it bore full fruition, we find that in 1888, we imported $8,757,204 worth, on which we paid a duty of $2,632,151, or an increase over the duties which were in force before the new tariff was brought into operation, of $836,-925 in one year. The total, that the people of this country paid out of their pockets in increased duty, which went directly into the treasury, was $836,925 in that year, while the offsets on the other side of the account were nil. In 1889, we imported $9,680,967 worth, on which we paid a duty of $2,950,890, or an increased duty under the tariff, of 1887, of $966,293. So, Sir, we find that, under the increased duties, the duty which was paid on iron for these three years amounted to $7,751,433, and the increased duties we paid as a result of the hon. gentleman's policy, directly into the treasury, amounted to $1,924,809, or in round figures, $2,000,000. These are the results of the Government's policy with regard to pig iron, and the hon. the Finance Minister, with these results staring him in the face, and at the end of ten years from the time Sir Leonard Tilley stated that we would not require to continue this bounty at all. repeats the same old story which Sir Leonard Tilley repeated in 1883, and asks the House not to base their conclusions on the actual facts as we find them in the records of the country, but upon haphazard predictions which the hon. Finance Minister now makes, as to what is to take place in the future. This policy is, in my opinion, a hateful policy, a troublesome policy, and a bad policy from beginning to end. I join my protest against it, to the able and forcible protest which the hon. mem-ber from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has made just now. If I have misstated or overstated in any sense or way the professions or predictions which the hon. the Finance Ministers of 1883 and 1887 made, I think it would be in order for the present Finance Minister to rise and state in what regard I have misstated or overstated. state whether any of these predictions have been fulfilled. Let him tell us where are the new blast furnaces that were to be established in the country? Where are the millions of capital which we were told were ready to pour into this country, if the House would only consent to an increase of this duty? Where are the blast furnaces which were to be established not only in Nova Scotia, but in Quebec, the North-West Territories and British Columbia? Where are the 20,000 people with their families which were to come here to increase the population of the country and to enrich its material wealth? I repeat, Sir, that everyone of these predictions has been falsified, and to-day the House is asked to stultify itself again, to ignore the facts as they are to be found in the records, and to vote blindly for the continuance of a policy which has been productive of nothing but evil in the past.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

I have a little information Mr. CHARLTON. collected by the Mining Commission of Ontario, which was charged among other duties, with that of making an investigation as to the cost of producing iron, which may have some bearing on the question, and be of some service in this discussion. The conclusion that I arrived at, with regard to the production of iron in Canada, was, that it was not owing to a lack of a favorable opportunity for making good dividends, nor to our incapacity to produce iron under the existing state of things, that we were not large producers of that metal in this country, but that it was rather owing to a lack of enterprise on the part of our business men, that the present state of things existed. From data the present state of things existed. procured by the Commission, some of which have been furnished by metallurgists and others by ironmasters, or the managers of furnaces, it appears that the cost of producing charcoal iron in Ontario would be $13.60 per long ton, the figures of ten estimates ranging from $9.08 for a hot-blast furnace of sixty tons daily capacity, to $18.50 for one of five tons capacity. The highest price given as to the cost of producing charcoal iron in Ontario, was $18.50. While this was the case, we imported charcoal iron for the manufacture of malleable castings at a cost ranging from $26 to $38 per long ton, according to quality, including duty, freight and so forth. Now, Sir, some of the information in detail, which the Ontario Mining Commission acquired, might perhaps with propriety be given to the House. I will give some of these estimates, with the details of production, to show that it is not a wild calculation, not a mere guess, but that they are conclusions arrived at from actual data, furnished by experts and persons skilled in the business. Surely, with the wide margin for profit, which is shown in the figures I have given, it was not a lack of the advantages offered, to induce people to go into the business which did not secure their taking hold of this business, but rather a lack of enterprise on the part of owners of iron mines and the possessors of capital. The items of cost at the Marmora furnace, given by Mr. Bentley, the manager, to Mr. Macfarlane, are based on the daily run of five tons: two tons of ore at $2 per ton, and 160 bushels of charcoal at 6 cents pe. bushel, to produce one ton of pig iron, labor $2.10, and other expenses $2.80 per ton—making the aggregate cost $18.50. The items of cost given at the Madoc furnace were as follows :-

Ore	$3 00
Fuel	3 00
Flux	0.30
Labor	3 10
Wear and tear	1 00
General expenses	1 60
· · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
Total cost per ton	812 00

In July, 1883, Mr. William H. Merritt, of Toronto, mining engineer, made an estimate of the cost of producing iron at Kinmount for Messrs. Parry & Mills, after a careful survey of the region and an examination of their works at that time in course of erection. The furnace was fifty feet high, nine and a-half feet diameter at the bosh, and it was computed that its daily output of pig iron would range from twenty to thirty tons. Without going into the details of the calculation made by Mr. Merritt, I may say that the cost is summarised as follows:—

2½ tons of ore at $3.06½	$6 89 7 20 3 00 0 50 0 50
Total cost per ton	18 09

A report on certain iron ores in Lanark county, made in November, 1883, by Mr. John Birkinbine, of Philadelphia, secretary of the United States Association of Charcoal Iron Workers, and editor of their journal, was put in evidence by Mr. W. H. Wylie, of Carleton Place. Mr. Birkinbine is recognised as one of the highest authorities in the United States connected with the business of manufacturing iron, especially charcoal iron. This report was made to Messrs. Wylie and Hall after an examination of properties in the Townships of Darling and Lavant, with a view to the suitability of the locality for the establishment of a charcoal smelting furnace, and it embraced estimates of the cost of making pig iron from the ore. The ores examined were of the class of rich magnetites, those analysed showing about 66 per cent. of metallic iron; but in making his estimates Mr. Birkinbine calculated on an average of 55 per cent.

ores, and the cost of mining at $1.60 per ton. As wood is abundant and cheap, he stated:

"You need have no fear as to fuel supply, and the character of the timber growth will make charcoal of the best quality. In many parts of the United States, where wood is by no means as plentiful nor of as good quality as in Lanark and adjacent counties, charcoal is made in meilers in the woods and delivered to iron works at 6 cents per bushel. When kilns are used, a lower price still is often obtained; and if retorts are employed, a further reduction in cost is possible, even if the gaseous products are not utilised. To illustrate: Our iron works have a battery of kilns located in woods very similar to that adjacent to locations examined, and a responsible party contracted to cut the wood, haul it to kilns, carbonise it, and deliver the charcoal in cars at 4 cents per bushel."

In making his estimate, however, Mr. Birkinbine put the cost at 5 cents per bushel of 20 lbs., which he considered would be ample for a number of years; and allowing for a possible refractory character of ore and contingencies of operation, an average consumption of 110 bushels for each ton of pig iron, which is about 15 bushels per ton greater than what is required by the charcoal furnaces of Michigan. To produce one ton of iron, with a modern plant and appliances, it was estimated would cost as follows:—

1'8 tons of 55 per cent. ore at furnace 0'3 tons of flux		0 5 2 0	60 45 50 50 80
Total cost per ton	$1	2	85

Mr. Birkinbine then proceeded to estimate that the cost of an establishment sufficient for an output of 60 tons per day would be $200,000, and that to pay a dividend of 10 per cent. on the capital invested, it would be necessary to have a margin of $2.25 per ton, in addition to the $12.85 of cost, which would make the sum to be realised from the iron produced in these furnances, to yield a dividend, $15.10 per long ton. If it costs at the lowest rate $26 per ton to import that class of iron, surely there is sufficient inducement to attract people to the industry with a margin of $10 more, and a profit of 10 per cent. Mr. Ledyard stated in his evidence that he had received an estimate from Mr. J. B. Withrow, a furnace builder of Pittsburg, Pa., for the manufacture of charcoal pig iron at the old Belmont mine at an actual cost of less than $10 per ton. It will be borne in mind that all these estimates are per long ton of 2,240 lbs. He estimated the necessary capital at $150,000, the plant of which would include a Clapp-Griffiths converter capable of producing steel at $14 per ton, charcoal being reckoned at 6 cents per bushel.

"We would deliver the ore at Toronto," Mr. Ledyard said, "supposing the company to own the mines, at $2.25 per ton—$1.50 to mine it, and 75 cents for freight. If the furnace proprietors did not own the mines, then 50 cents per ton would be a fair royalty. In Chicago good Bessemer ore is $5.25 to $5.75; they use Connelsyille coke, and I think it could be delivered here a little cheaper if there were no duty. With the fuel as cheap and the ore at half price, we should stand a good chance if we had the same market."

The several estimates of cost of production are presented in the evidence of Mr. J. C. Pusey, himself a practical ironmaker—the proposed furnace to be located in the township of Snowdon, in Haliburton, and to use ores taken from mines owned by Mr. Pusey's company. The first of these estimates was made in 1881 by Messrs. Taws & Hartman, of Philadelphia, for a cold blast furnace of 100 tons capacity per week, in which it was proposed to use ores of the Howland, Imperial and New York mines, equal parts of each, giving a mixture of 59 per cent. iron. Their estimate of the cost of a ton of iron is as follows:—

4,000 lbs. ore at $1 per ton	$1	80
bushel	8	40
177 lbs. limestone		10 50
Repairs and taxes	1	00
Cost of one ton of iron	£ 13	80

Their estimate of the cost of the furnace, 40 feet high and 8 feet bosh, with hoist, tackle, casthouse, blowing engine and pipes complete, was $36,000, and of 20 charcoal kilns $10,000, each cord of wood to cost $1.30 at the kilns and to produce 45 bushels of charcoal. The second estimate was prepared by Mr. J. B. Withrow of Pittsburg, in 1884, and agrees with the one given by that gentleman to Mr. Ledyard. It was for a hot-blast furnace of 60 tons daily capacity, and was based on prices of material and analyses of ores of the Howland and Imperial mines furnished by Mr. Pusey. Following are the details:—

2 tons ore (Howland and Imperial).	$2 33
80 bushels charcoal, at 5c.	4 00 0 25
Labor	2 00
Salaries and incidental expenses	0 50
Cost of one ton of iron	$9.08

The third estimate was prepared by Mr. Pusey himself for a hot blast furnace of thirty tons daily capacity, to be erected at the Imperial Mine, and to use equal quantities of Howland and Imperial ores. The ore of the latter mine, Mr. Pusey stated, is too poor to ship, and he, therefore, proposes to utilise it on the ground. The figures are:

5,600 lbs. ore$	2	31
200 lbs. limestone	0	15
1,800 lbs. (100 bushels) charcoal, at 51 cents per bushel	5	50
Labor	2	50
Repairs, taxes, &c	ī	00
-	_
Cost of one ton of iron$1	11	46

The evidence of Mr. Shortiss, of Toronto, supplies an estimate of the cost of producing iron at Snowdown, given in 1885 by Mr. McCorquodale, superintendent of the Jackson Iron Company's furnace in Delta County, Michigan. It is based on the use of 55 per cent. ore and hardwood charcoal, and is as follows:—

2 tons of ore at $2.50	- 0	25
Cost of one ton of iron	11	92

William Rattle, of Cleveland, Ohio, a mining engineer and analytical chemist, gave evidence before the commission at Kingston, and stated that he had been intimately connected with the smelting of iron since 1872. In his opinion, the ores of the Kingston district are as easy to smelt as those of the Lake Superior district; he favors Connellsville coke for fuel, which could be laid down at Kingston at $5.50 per ton. I ask the Minister's particular Mr. CHARLTON.

attention to this estimate, for it is an estimate of the production of iron by the use of coke, not of charcoal. Mr. Rattle's estimate of the cost of producing a ton of pig iron, as extracted from his evidence, is as follows:—

Ore	$4.00
Coke	5 50
Flux	0 25
Labor	1 00
Wear and tear, and interest	0 50
Cost of a ton of iron

Now, Sir, iron will cost at present in Glasgow $12 per long ton. The duty amounts to $4 per short ton or $4.40 for long ton, and the freight is $1, making the cost $17.40 per long ton, laid down at Kingston; and against this we have the estimate I have just read, which gives the cost of iron produced by the use of coke at that same point $11.25 per long ton, or over $5 per ton profit to the parties who will embark in that business at Kingston, if my hon. friend would only give them free coke. Mr. E. C. Garlick, of Cleveland, mining engineer and metallurgist, whose report on the Henderson steel process is given in the appendix, has furnished the writer with an estimate on the making of charcoal iron, based on five years' experience in Ohio, which places the cost at $14.30 per ton. Following are his figures:—

2 tons 50 p. c. ore at $1.50	$3	00
Roasting ore at 374	0	75
130 bushels of charcoal at 6 cents	7	80
Limestone	0	50
Labor	1	50
Repairs and incidentals	Ö	50
Management	0	25
Cost of a ton of pig tron	$14	30

The following estimate is extracted from the statement of Mr. Gerhauser, secretary and treasurer of the Detroit Union Iron Company, which appears at the end of the section, and is for the long ton of pig iron:

f ton specular ore at $5.28. ton hematite ore at $4.48. ton magnetic ore at $4.96. 87 bush. charcoal at 7½ cents. Limestone Labor.	3 00 1 65 6 52 0 06
Cost of a ton of iron	$16 12

A record of the Iron Mountain Furnace at Ironton, Wisconsin, as given by the manager to the Journal of Charcoal Iron Workers Association of the United States in 1883, gives these details of a run of sixty-nine and one quarter days. The total make in that period was 739_4^8 (2,268 lbs.), the ore yielding 53.6 per cent. The following are the items of cost per ton:

1 '86 tons at $2.00 87'6 bush, charcoal at 6½ cents	5 70 0 25 2 25
Oil and shop	0 08
Cost of iron per ton	$12 00

There can be no doubt that the advantages for producing charcoal iron in Ontario are at least equal to the advantages of producing the article at Ironton, Wisconsin. I will not trouble the House further with these calculations than to recapitulate and summarise the evidence given by these various parties, which makes the average cost of producing charcoal iron $13.60 per long ton, the highest cost being $18.50 in a furnace producing but five tons per day, and the lowest cost being $9.08 per ton. The president and secretary of the Mining Commission visited various points in the United States, among others Birmingham, Alabama; and we find that in Birmingham, Alabama, all that was claimed as being the cost of producing a long ton of pig iron at furnaces there was from $8.50 to $9 per ton; and from the information which we procured from parties familiar with the situation of the mines in Nova Scotia and the natural advantages offered there, we arrived at the conclusion that, with the same enterprise, with the same skill, with the same investment of capital in Nova Scotia, iron could be produced as cheaply there as at any other point in the world—Birmingham, Pennsylvania, or any place else; and I have no doubt that with equal skill and enterprise to that used in the production of iron in the United States, iron can be produced in Nova Scotia for an actual cost of $9 to $10 per ton. If that be the case, if the highest cost of producing charcoal iron in Ontario is $18.50 per ton; if iron can be produced at Kingston, with coke imported from Connellsville, Pennsylvania, at less than $12 per ton; if it costs $17 to $18 per ton to lay pig iron down in Ontario, and $36 to $38 to import into Ontario, charcoal iron for malleable castings, it strikes me that what we want is, not more protection or iron bounty, but enterprising men who will avail themselves of the opportunities offered by the existing state of things to go into an industry, which, we are told, will yield a profit of 10 per cent. on the capital invested, by placing the iron on the market at $5 and $6 per ton under the market price. I am convinced that bounties are not necessary; that the margins for profit are already large enough; that we can produce charcoal iron in Ontario, as cheap as it can be produced anywhere else, and, that being the case, we ought to supply ourselves with the entire amount of charcoal iron required. If it were not for our lack of enterprise, we could sell a large amount of iron from Ontario, in the American market at a handsome profit under free trade relations. There is no question but that the facilities for producing coal and iron in Nova Scotia, where the ore, coal and flux are all in juxtaposition to each other, are such, that it is one of the cheapest points on the globe for producing iron. Even Birmingham, Alabama, with all its celebrated advantages, is not as favorably situated, because there the ore has to be brought from one side of the valley, a distance, in some some cases, of fifteen or twenty miles, the coal from the other side an equal distance, and the flux has also to be brought a considerable distance to the furnaces; yet, notwithstanding these disadvantages, the actual cost of production does not exceed $9 per ton. I think the hon. Finance Minister, in place of asking the passage of a resolution to give an extra bounty of $2 per short ton, had better take measures to lay before the people the actual advantages we possess, and our capabilities, to show them that it is merely lack of enterprise which prevents us from producing iron, at least to the extent of supplying our own requirements.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). I am not surprised at the opposition of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to this resolution, because development of Canadian industries by protective methods, as also does the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies). The hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who has just spoken, has offered the strongest argument to prove that iron can be successfully manufactured in the Dominion, while the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has argued from the opposite point of view. I leave these gentlemen to settle their differences among themselves. If we follow closely the argument of the hon, member for North Norfolk, we find it is an argument to prove that there is scarcely any country under the sun better adapted for the manufacture of iron than the Dominion.

An hon. MEMBER. Why do you not manufacture it?

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). If that be the case, and it is largely the case, no evil results can accrue from the protection now proposed, as the competition on the part of those engaged in that industry will, in the course of time, settle the question of low prices, as it has done in other countries where the same system has been pursued. The resolution before the House involves no new policy on the part of the Administration. This system of granting a bounty for the manufacture of granting a bounty for the manufacture of iron in Canada was first introduced in 1883, and was afterwards renewed in 1886. the measure of protection now sought for that industry is very little greater than the protection afforded in 1887 after the duties now in force were imposed by the Government of the day. The object of this protection is to stimulate the manufacture of crude and finished iron from Canadian ores for the supply of the home market. That object might be attainable in two ways, either by protective duties on imports, or by a bounty being granted on domestic production to supplement the duty. The bounty is a species of protection in another form and is equivalent in its effect to a Customs duty of the same amount on the manufactured article, but it is designed to promote manufacture without increasing the price of the product to the consumer, at all events during the product to the consumer, at all events during the early stages of development. It is not necessary now to discuss the abstract question of protection. It is the policy of the Government-accepted and ratified by the people, and should be applied to the iron industry as to others, because the manufacture of iron should be one of our great national industries, seeing that we possess in our land all the natural elements for the successful manufacture of iron, grouped together in various portions of our Dominion. While this is the indisputable fact, we are actually importing into this country iron and steel and manufactures thereof to the value of over $12,000,000 annually, being last year over 11 per cent. of the total imports of all kinds of goods. This while all the raw materials for manufacture lie literally beneath our feet. Of all industrial employments none afford greater sources of wealth than the iron and steel industry in all the various branches. Labor is the prime source of national wealth, and it is our true policy as a people, and necessary for our industrial independence, to promote means whereby Canadian labor may be employed on diversified industries, native to our soil, within our own borders. There he has invariably opposed every measure for the is no national industry in iron possible without production from the ore. The foundations must be well and truly laid on this basis, or the superstructure will not be enduring. There are many reasons why the iron industry is not developed. It is because the iron industry has not been given the degree of protection found necessary in other lands The United States, our great neighin our times. bors, have protected this industry for a generation, and their iron manufacture is now outstripping that of Great Britain in many branches. At one time the duty that they imposed was $9 per ton, and the statistics of 1887 of the American Iron and Steel Association will show the development made in that industry:

"For many years this country has been second only to Great Britain in the production of pig iron. In 1886 we surpassed that country, for the first time, in the production of steel of all kinds, producing 197,832 gross tons more than our great rival. In 1887 this leadership was main-

"The production of steel by all processes in Great Britain and in the United States in 1887 was as follows, in gross tons :-

Ingots.	Great Britain	United States
Bessemer steel (Clapp-Griffiths' included) Open-hearth steel. Crucible steel. Other steel	2,089,403	Gross Tons. 2,936,033 322,069 75,376 5,593
Total		3,339,071 6,417,148

While the iron industry to which we are pointed by our friends on the other side has made such strides in the United States, what is the condition there as to that industry needing a continued measure of protection? The Ways and Means Committee of Congress this year makes this statement:

"These duties, it is believed, cannot be lowered without detriment to existing industries. Of pig fron it may be said that it is in no sense a raw material. It is a product of the highest skill, requiring in its manufacture large and expensive plants, the capital invested in which (in the United States) to-day more than equals that which is invested in any other branch of the iron or steel industries.

"To reduce materially the duty on pig iron and on scrap iron and scrap steel which are substitutes for pig iron would annually bring into our ports many ship loads of these products to take the place of pig iron which loads of these produces to take the place of pig iron which could be produced at home, and it would correspondingly reduce the demand for coal and iron ore. This is a result which is surely not to be desired. * * * "Pig iron is to-day the leading manufacturing industry south of the Potomac and Ohio rivers. It has been the most potent of all influences in the industrial rehabilitation of the south."

This is the official delaration of the position to-day, and, if it is found that the duty of $6 per ton in the United States cannot be lowered or dispensed with safely, how do hon. gentlemen opposite expect that any great iron industry will be established in this country without similar protection, especially in the initial stages? While we have great tacilities for obtaining the raw material in

