Let me remind the minister that this measure will do nothing for the permanent poor, the functionally illiterate, the number of whom is far too large in the Canadian population in this century. These people need a basic education before they can become eligible for technical and vocational training and they are certainly not in a position to be retrained for employment. There is a great deal to be done in this regard in order to make the measure before us completely successful and worth while.

I am a bit concerned about the educational aspects and the rather narrow interpretation of the vocational concept which I suspect will be embodied in the bill following this resolution, because for some people the only road to success is one which begins with the regular school system. Quite a number of unemployed Canadians would like to proceed with formal education, which in a sense is vocational because it leads to those occupations they wish to pursue. I hope the minister will give some consideration in this regard for the benefit of those individuals who would want to obtain their retraining in this way.

I believe that the minister and the government should pay very careful attention to the brief on adult education presented to them a while ago. I believe that much of what will happen through the bill to come before us will ultimately be seen as a very short-term approach and that a great deal of thought needs to go into the various excursions of the federal government into the field of education. We seem to be able to sell the people of this country on the idea of federal participation in technical and vocational training if we keep it absolutely and purely vocational. Yet if we read the opinions of people who are talking about the long-term needs of education in a developed country, I think we should be aware that much more than a short-term technical and vocational training program will be necessary for many of our people.

I suggest that many of the people who take retraining courses will still find themselves trapped within occupations that themselves are going to disappear very shortly or are not those they would really like to have, but because funds are available the temptation will be to accept what may well be less than their potential would require.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would urge very strongly that once the sum of money to be paid to people who take retraining programs is set it should not be played around with. I am concerned about the suggestion in the minister's reference yesterday that if a person lived at home he might not be paid as much as someone who lived away from home. A previous speaker referred to the high rate of attrition in any sort of retraining program. People drop out because they have too many problems in association with the retraining. I do not think the department always understands the tremendous handicap that any adult who has not been in school or a retraining institution of any kind faces when he goes back to school for the first time after many years. There are tremendous frustrations within the process of retraining itself. If at the same time he has to worry about problems at home, it becomes too much altogether and he gives up after a while.

I imagine that many wives have found they have had to go to work during periods when the husband has been unemployed. If the husband then enters upon a retraining program, certainly no working wife can afford to quit her job which represents the only security they have at the moment until the husband has not only finished his course but has found a gainful occupation. If we force the husband to be retrained away from home because it may be more valuable financially to him, if we set up this kind of problem and give him this additional worry, I think we will have done the entire concept of a retraining program a great disservice.

I submit that the minister will find that if he includes clauses like this in the structure of grants for the program he will have raised far more problems than he will have solved, and what seems a rather niggling approach to save a very small amount of money will seriously jeopardize the results he would like to obtain from a most worth-while program.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to heap praises on the minister, although I should. But from the reception this resolution has received in the house I think he should know it is still not too late to be a reform Liberal and that it is quite popular to be a reform Liberal. This, indeed, is a reform measure.

Mr. Herridge: You mean a socialist in a hurry.

Mr. Otto: It is a reform measure in that the minister recognizes that the present vocational training program is not working but the need for training is there. I think he has carefully analysed the reason it is not working and has had the audacity and nerve to take one of the ills involving the amount of money received and rectify it. It would have been very easy, of course, to have raised the amount from $35 to $45 but this would not have been the answer. To raise the potential amount to $95 is daring; it represents reform, and I think it is going to be workable.

The second annual review of the Economic Council of Canada points out at page 182 some of the reasons why the vocational training program is not working. I do not think the whole report is infallible. I believe there are many things in it that are wrong, but in this connection I think it is quite right. In the report it is stated that there is a lack of adequate knowledge among the general public in regard to the general courses available, and so on. I do not think this is entirely correct. I think there is a fairly adequate general knowledge but the program was not advertised and publicized enough. The report also states that workers were not informed or counselled adequately. But, most important, it states that "inadequate training allowances appear to be acting as a brake on the programs", which is correct.

The report also mentions this factor:

> Because many authorities are involved, the responsibility for the initiation of programs is often not clear. Consequently, programs that are needed do not get implemented.

By and large what the report says is that the vocational training program is not working. There is a presumption by all the people who write such reports with regard to how a person gets to know about vocational training and how he undertakes it. But in my practice, and I have come across many such cases, the normal way is that a person finds himself unemployed; his job has disappeared or he just cannot make enough money at the job and so he is out of work. When this happens he does not immediately try to find out what vocational training is available, although he has an idea and he might investigate it. But as soon as he goes to the vocational training school and sees the blackboards, the teachers and all the formal parts of education he becomes rather apprehensive. So he tries to get along for a while by taking lesser paying jobs but still maintaining the standard of living he has enjoyed previously. By this time he has used up his savings and decides he is going to take a course. He might decide that since he has a grade 11 or grade 12 education he will study to be a mechanical draftsman or a technical draftsman, for whom there is a great demand.

He informs his family and his kids immediately go all over the neighbourhood and tell the other kids, "My dad is going to be an architect" or "My dad is going to be an engineer." By this time the man is worried about the whole business, because he might not pass the course and he might not make it. If you add on top of all this apprehension the monetary consideration of how he is going to stay alive and feed his family until the course is finished and he gets a job, the problem becomes, as the previous speaker said, almost insurmountable and therefore the course is not for him. Ordinarily this is what really happens. The legislation to follow this resolution will remove that apprehension. I do not believe the minister thinks it is going to make the whole vocational training program 100 per cent effective, but it will certainly improve the whole atmosphere of vocational retraining.

With regard to unemployment insurance benefits being used up, I do not believe this is a large consideration. Unemployment insurance benefits are not that much and they really have no meaning. I should like to see the minister face that problem next and raise unemployment insurance benefits to realistic figures. I believe he has that in mind. The report to which I have referred, the second annual review of the Economic Council of Canada, recommends at page 171, that there should be closer co-operation between business, labour and the educational system, along with improved counselling of students regarding future manpower needs and the most effective ways of meeting those needs. You will notice mention is made of government, labour and management.

I put it to the minister that in this instance we do involve the federal government, the provincial governments and the individual, but we fail to involve the most important group and that is management. The ordinary working man or tradesman, after 10 or 12 years in a shop, becomes involved with the people who are there as supervisors, the union labour group. It would be much better if some provision could be made by which he could take retraining while he is still involved with this group instead of being cut off separately as an individual who has to try to make it on his own with all these apprehensions and all these fears.

I recommend to the minister that he consider whether a payment of up to $80 or $90 could be made directly to the employer who in turn could add to that. After all, the employer is going to get the benefit of the man's retraining. If this were done, the workmen's pay would not be so drastically reduced. In addition management, labour and government would be involved in one project concerning one person's future.

There are difficulties with this scheme, of course. However, we must remember that automation is one of the greatest worries of labour, management and government today. This may be one method by which a start could be made toward the solution of the problems facing us as a result of automation. Provision could be made under which the employer, if he so desired, might continue to keep the workman on his payroll and at the same time get the benefit of the money the government would pay. I presume the employer would still have to contribute money of his own but I do not believe he would mind doing that. He would have the benefit of that person's training within his own organization in the future.

Labour unions could also be involved in this scheme with the result that—and this is most important—the workman would still be within the organization to which he has contributed for 10 or 15 years and which he recognizes as his group. He would derive a lot more encouragement to continue his retraining and thus achieve one of the purposes of this resolution.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, may I make it clear at the outset that I welcome the resolution presented to us by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I commend him for introducing such a worth-while piece of legislation as that which will follow the resolution. In a moment I should like to enter a couple of caveats with regard to the program upon which he has embarked, but perhaps I might be permitted to do from the opposition benches what his own colleagues on the government side did not do and say a few words about the appointment of the minister. I think there may be many people disillusioned with the members of this parliament. However, I believe we have a large number of good members and there is a lot of talent among the new members. I say to the minister in this house, as I have told him privately outside, that he has made a splendid contribution in the cabinet and in the house. He is to be congratulated for his refreshing point of view and his candour. One hopes that he will spread it to his colleagues and will not suffer from a malaise emanating from them. The minister has broken away from the gate and is one of the leaders of the new talent in this chamber.

One of the attractive aspects of the resolution is the provision for the training of those who were self-employed but who were having difficulty in such primary industries as farming, fishing or logging. I can look about my own constituency of Halifax, and other areas of the maritimes for that matter, and see that this is a real step toward breaking the bonds of rural poverty. People have been caught in these primary industries without being able to make a go of it on their own and yet they really are fastened to their fishing communities or their small farms because there is no alternative. As I say, this measure should remove the bondage that is associated with rural poverty and I commend the minister for that aspect of it.

I should like to make two points, sir, with regard to what I call safeguards because, after all, we are dealing with public money. While we have no idea yet what amounts of money are likely to be involved, nonetheless it is incumbent upon us to see that the program is properly set up and properly administered if it is to have the support of the people of Canada. Therefore I suggest these points to the minister.

The minister has referred to training for the unemployed. I believe that any program drawn up should take into account the background of these loggers, fishermen or farmers in order to ascertain whether the training could not be directed along lines which would take advantage of the experience they have had. In this way they would be able to carry on their occupations more adequately. I think this should be the first stage. I realize it is not possible in the case of a fisherman who may be so inadequate in fishing that he has to be retrained as a welder, for example, or a carpenter. However, there should be some recognition by the minister of the past experience of a person who is to be trained under this program.

The other caveat I would utter with regard to the program is the danger that we may have some who will want to continue their education for long periods of time simply to derive the income permissible under the proposed legislation. In short, if we are not careful we might cultivate a sort of perpetual freshman continuously unemployed and undergoing training. I realize that probably these points are dealt with or will be dealt with in the legislation to be put before us, but I thought it proper to utter them at this time.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Chairman, one of the difficulties in being so far down the roster of speakers is that most of one's thoughts have already been expressed by other members when one's turn is reached, so I will be brief.

I join with the hon. member for Halifax in his eulogy of the minister. It seems to me an incredible oversight on our part not to have drawn this fact to the attention of the house. Perhaps we felt it so self-evident that it did not need to be drawn to the attention of the house. We are equally proud of his achievements, particularly as a freshman minister, which must be infinitely more difficult than just being a freshman member.

The resolution before us is to my mind one of the more interesting and exciting resolutions we have seen in the house this session. It seems there is almost the possibility that we are moving into a sort of age of enlightenment when it comes to industrial relations. If the initiative is being taken by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, more power to him. Too often in the past human considerations have been missing in a general assessment of the problems in an age of technology and it is imperative that this dimension be introduced into our thinking. I think Mr. Justice Freedman made an important contribution along this line and I hope that both his principles and philosophy are reflected in future government legislation no matter which party happens to be in power, as well as in the attitude of management.

It has been my experience, albeit brief, that the major and paramount preoccupation of industrial workers is concern for job security. At the same time industry is in the grip of technological innovation. If this country and its industry are to compete in world markets, and it is imperative that we do so, then in turn we must watch very closely the level of productivity. We must capitalize on technological developments, and recognize the necessity for constantly automating the processes of production. However, job security and technological innovation are mutually contradictory. Job security is an almost impossible goal, or would appear to be, in an age of wide ranging change. There is no possibility of changing the need for technological innovation; it is a fact of life, and automation is a by-product of this innovation.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, some way must be found by which we can provide for job security without jeopardizing the need for a high level of productivity and technological innovation. It seems to me that the fundamental link, the key to the reconciliation to this apparent dilemma, lies in training and in retraining. But in my view this in turn will never be accomplished unless the whole status of training, our attitudes here and the attitudes of the public to training are in turn completely changed and upgraded.

Traditionally training has been something which has been done in response to chronic unemployment. When a person becomes unemployed the solution has been to train him. However, training should be far more a part of the continuing process of adaptation which is a necessary part of the technological era in which we live. So training, instead of simply being something we do to assist unemployed workers, must be something we do to prevent unemployment and to enable workers to adapt to the new processes and new skills which they will be required to have.

It is this dimension, Mr. Chairman, of the resolution which to my mind is so important. There often seems to be a sort of reluctance to take preventive steps. Too often we deal with problems after the fact. For example, we deal with unemployment when unemployment arises. We are now dealing with the prospect of unemployment prior to it taking place and we are trying to pre-empt it or to prevent such an occurrence.

I think the hon. member for York East made a point into which I hope the minister will look carefully. He developed it at some length and I wish only to reiterate it. I refer to the need to bring training programs right on to the factory or shopfloor. It seems to me that far too much use is made of the approach whereby a man is taken out of his job location and put into something which passes for a school in order to train him to go back to a machine or to facilities which bear very little relationship to the equipment he learned about at the school itself.

When I was fortunate enough to work in England with a Canadian subsidiary, which is an interesting reversal, the company for which I worked felt it incumbent upon them—they employed 5,000 to 6,000 workers—to provide apprenticeship training programs right in the factory itself even though they recognized from the beginning that they would never use all these people. Nevertheless it was an obligation the company assumed on their part for the good of the country.

I think that a great deal more could be done to provide training programs within factories on the shop floor in co-operation with the management of the particular industry involved. In the same light it is important that the industry involved must be prepared to disclose its long-term plans. Too often now a man is laid off without any forewarning, whereas quite frequently management has known well in advance that it will be automating a certain process and that personnel will be laid off and will therefore need retraining. Industry must be far more forthright than it has been up to now with regard to its long-term plans, and it can certainly do this without jeopardizing its competitive position in the market.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the first dimension under this resolution which I think is important, and I hope that within this dimension of training as a response to a continuing process of adaptation we will in some way discover how to work with the industries in order to get training programs out of the classroom and on to the shop floor.

The other dimension under this resolution which I think is important is the concept that payment for training must relate to payment for work and is not relative to what welfare payments might be or unemployment insurance payments. Training is an alternative to work. It is a preparation for further work, and this concept inherent in the resolution is to my mind one of the most important and enlightened concepts I have encountered in my short term in this house.

However—and I will close on this note—one of the members opposite suggested that it was the responsibility of the minister to keep the people aware of this program; and I think that there he suggested only a half-truth. It is his responsibility and the responsibility of his department, but far more it is the responsibility of members of parliament. A good member of parliament has close and direct communication with the trade unions in his riding as well as with management and each of us in this house, it seems to me, has a compelling responsibility to make those people who are involved aware of the resolution which is being presented and the bill to follow and tell them how they can participate. It is too easy to say that it is simply the responsibility of the government to go about the country enlightening people as to what this program contains. It is equally the responsibility of members of parliament to do that job, and this applies not only to the resolution before us now but to a whole series of resolutions. I hope that hon. members who have expressed themselves so clearly in favour of this resolution will, when this measure becomes law, be just as enthusiastic about proselytizing the public and making them aware of its provisions.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, members of all parties have, as one might expect, greeted this resolution and the speech the minister made when introducing it with almost unanimous accord. As far as they go the proposals are excellent. It has been apparent for a long time from speeches made across the country and briefs presented to government by labour organizations and economists that our manpower training program has serious defects.

The Canadian Labour Congress and its affiliated unions made representations to the government about the fact that allowances paid to workers who were in theory being encouraged to avail themselves of retraining programs simply failed to provide the funds necessary to enable them to live in any kind of decency and to provide for their families. Similarly, the provision that money paid to them during training should be deducted from unemployment insurance benefits led to a situation where many workers either declined to take training programs or else failed to complete their courses. There is no means of knowing how many people failed to complete their training simply because they could not afford to continue their courses but it must have been a large number. However, hon. members can certainly greet the present program with enthusiasm even though some of us may feel it is coming several years too late.

As usual, however, instead of dealing with all the implications of this complex problem we are concerning ourselves with only two of the more important aspects. The Canadian Labour Congress, in its statement of economic policy approved at its convention in April of this year, listed a number of points which were considered to be important in regard to the question of manpower. I wish to put them on record, Mr. Chairman, because it will become obvious as I read them that we are dealing in this resolution with only two of a number of problems. Basic programs should, the congress says, include:

1. A continuing, up-to-date research program to carry out analysis and forecasting of changes in the labour market.

2. A nation-wide network of adult training centres to retrain men and women for new jobs requiring higher or different skills.

3. A massive program of technical-vocational training for adolescents and pre-employment youth to prepare them for the kind of labour market they will face on leaving school.

4. A program of financial and other assistance to workers and their families who wish to move to other parts of the country in the pursuit of employment.

5. A program of financial assistance to maintain workers during retraining or during a transition period between jobs.

6. A first-rate placement service.

7. A program for the recruitment of immigrant workers, related to the Canadian labour market situation, and for their integration into the labour market.

8. An education program to inform employers, workers and youth of the changes occurring in the labour market and the benefits to be derived from manpower programs.

The hon. member for Peterborough suggested that this last item was a job which members of parliament could do. I disagree with him completely. There are members of parliament who have close connections with trade unions. There are members who have intimate relations with employers in their areas. But there are very few who have close connections with all sections in their constituencies and who have the time or the facilities to do the job of information servicing which requires to be done. It is obvious it is the government which must do this job.

One of the severest criticisms of the national employment service on the part of both employers and employees is that they do not know what services are available from N.E.S. and that that organization in turn does not know either what the employers need or what opportunities are available. I believe that the government must not only set up a manpower program but go out and inform employers and employees alike of what the government manpower service has to offer.

A manpower training program is bound to be a failure if the government does not establish a research organization to keep in close touch with employers and employees and study employment trends as they develop. Its staff, including highly skilled sociologists, economists and statisticians, must keep in touch with the Department of Industry as well as with individual industrial organizations so that it is in a position to know what employers are likely to need in the way of manpower in the period of one to five years ahead. Unless this is done the manpower program which the government is announcing through this resolution will be to a large extent wasted.

The program now provides for the payment of up to $90 per week to workers who are being trained.

Under this provision workers can afford to take the training without losing money and without their families being put in a position in which they are not able to meet their basic financial needs. But along with this program of training grants the government must reconsider and change its policy with regard to moving allowances. The program we now have for making loans to workers is simply not good enough.

I trust, as a result of the manpower training program which the government has initiated and the training grants which the minister announced, that a large number of workers will take this opportunity to acquire new and necessary skills. But it will be of little use to an unemployed coal miner on Cape Breton Island if after taking such a course the cost of moving himself, his family and furniture to another job runs to $1,000 or $2,000. A loan of $2,000 repayable in two years at 6 per cent interest is a substantial debt for any worker who has been unemployed.

I suggest that in addition to the government's present proposal it change the system of making loans to workers to a system of making grants so that if there is no work in their own areas they can move to areas where there are jobs. Such a program has been in effect in most of the countries of western and northern Europe for many years. It has been proposed in this country on a number of occasions by labour unions. It has proven itself worth while in countries much smaller than ours, countries in which it is much cheaper to move to a new job than in a country like Canada which stretches for thousands of miles from coast to coast.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

I suggest that the government give serious consideration to paying the cost of moving workers to new jobs. It should also give serious consideration to emphasizing the necessity for on-the-job training. It should stress to industry and unions the necessity for such training and should participate financially itself.

The largest union in Canada, the United Steelworkers of America, conducted a survey of plants it had organized and with which it had contracts to see what these plants were doing in the way of on-the-job training, and what it found is indeed a sad commentary on what is being done in this country. A report submitted by Mr. Michael Fenwick of the United Steelworkers to a conference sponsored by the Canadian Labour Congress in Ottawa last year, at which the minister also spoke, stated:

> Of the 488 plants, mines and mills under union agreement in 113 communities in the five provinces, 450 returned completed survey forms. Only 1,404 of the 97,604 workers in these industries were receiving any training. Four of five plants and mines covered by the survey do not train any apprentices. More than two-thirds do not provide any on-the-job training to prevent workers from becoming obsolete and unemployed.

Farther on he reported:

> The survey showed that the basic steel, fabricating, aluminum and mining companies under contract to the union had only 505 apprentices. Another 899 workers were receiving on-the-job training. Metal mining is one industry which is experiencing a shortage of skilled men. Its response to this shortage is to seek experienced mine workmen from Europe and other foreign labour markets rather than train Canadians.

Canadian industry, which is faced with a tremendous shortage of skilled workers and is going through an unprecedented period of prosperity and profits, needs to be convinced that it has a social responsibility to play its part in the training of skilled workers. The government ought to take a lead in convening joint industry and labour conferences across the country at which the necessity for on-the-job training would be emphasized.

I realize there are constitutional difficulties. I realize that education is a provincial responsibility, but I do not believe any provincial government would refuse to co-operate with the federal government and with the department of manpower when it is established in urging upon industry and labour that they should play an aggressive part in helping Canada get the skilled and trained manpower which is required.

I want to close by quoting a couple of paragraphs from a report made by Mr. Larry Sefton, director of district No. 6 of the United Steelworkers of America, on May 13, 1965, to a national policy conference. In respect of this particular problem he said:

> To wait for customers to come into the government store is a gesture of futile optimism. The government must send its experts into the field. It must pass the laws needed to provide for a periodic inventory of our manpower resources. It must chart a master statisitcal inventory which will provide finger-tip data as a basis for well planned action.
> Above all, it must develop a positive philosophy of investment in manpower which will guarantee the full use of the skills and productivity potential of Canadian workers.
> Vigorous training and upgrading programs must also be included in any effective handling of manpower policies. And provisions must be made to pay displaced workers a living wage so that they can remain in the consumer market as long as thev are unemployed.

With the exception of what is mentioned in the last sentence, none of the things which Mr. Sefton listed as required is yet being done or has yet been publicly proposed by the government.

I conclude by again commending the minister and the government for the beginning made by introducing this resolution which is the first step toward implementation of the basic requirements of a meaningful manpower policy. Before this session ends I hope the minister will also deal with the problems he has not yet dealt with but which are of as much importance as the two he outlined in his speech the other day. If he does not, then, as so often happens in this country, we will have solved two problems having to do with manpower and created six or eight other problems just as serious as the ones we have solved.

[Translation]

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Chairman, I shall only take a few minutes to congratulate the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) on the action he has taken and which shows his interest for the labour class.

This measure is very important, in my opinion. The people who will benefit from this retraining program will no doubt be better citizens because they will earn higher salaries and enjoy a higher standard of living.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Because people have not had the opportunity to have technical training in their youth, there is no reason why they should be forced to continue their lives in this fashion. With the great amount of technical development taking place in our country today, including automation, it is essential that those who have the ability to learn be given the opportunity to do so. I feel it is important that not only our youth but also those of an older age who need the training and have the desire should have the opportunity to better themselves.

[Translation]

I think it is also important to point out, Mr. Chairman, that the federal government will reimburse the provinces in a proportion of 90 per cent in addition to the $35 a week allowance up to a total of $90 a week.

[English]

We all know this resolution will not solve all our unemployment problems but there is no doubt it is a major step forward. I do not believe the recipients of the retraining allowances will care very much whether the minister is known as a new-wave Liberal or by any other name. The important thing to them no doubt will be the fact that there will be adequate allowances available for those who qualify.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I want to seize this opportunity to support the resolution. In my opinion, what the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) proposes today is intended to improve the technical and vocational training program for the unemployed and for persons displaced by technological changes in industry and the services.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this measure comes after an act passed and applied some years ago. An improvement of the said act was needed and it is timely because it is wanted by all our people.

I am of the opinion that up to now the present act providing for the training of workers, unemployed and persons displaced by the new industrial processes did not yield the expected results.

Industrial development is essential but the only sound economic system is the one which will produce and distribute the maximum amount of goods and services with a minimum amount of work and effort. The objective of any modern democratic government is to bring machinery under control and to free humanity, but at the present time, it is the machines which are reducing humanity to slavery because of a fundamentally wrong financial system.

One must not blame industry or private enterprise for wanting to improve their services and to cut down production costs, because all Canadians will benefit from such measures. But since our financial system has not recognized that, the government must face crises and problems of widespread unemployment, poverty and destitution.

The government has just realized that our labour force is ill-prepared to face such a development in our industries and it declares itself ready to cope with the crisis which has been existing for a few years already, by making more attractive the training methods of displaced workers and the unemployed.

However, in spite of all the combined goodwill of governments, employers and trainees, I doubt that we will achieve full employment because our industries produce at an increasingly rapid pace with a decreasing number of people.

I remember that just a few years ago, an oil refinery survived a strike which lasted quite a long time, without any decrease in its production. That is to say that the industry in question, with only a few directors, was able to maintain its production. There is more to be done than simply train our workers; we must assure them of adequate purchasing power so that they may enjoy a standard of living proportionate to the wealth of our country; as our country develops, our workers must be more secure.

The effect of this resolution will be to allow some workers to acquire a better knowledge of the requirements of modern industry and business.

I hope that the bill which will follow this resolution will contain such provisions so as to allow the people having attended those courses to find a job without prejudice to those already on the spot. To that effect, we will have to create new jobs by transforming our raw materials, here, in Canada, for the benefit of our fellow citizens.

The minister undoubtedly has details to give to the committee on the number of unemployed and displaced persons who will be eligible under that improved program because I see that up to now it has not been a real success.

He will probably give us also details on the cost of such a program, as as he sees it. It remains to be seen how far the provinces will want to go with regard to that program because it is a joint program and Quebec has already made known, I believe, its desire to avoid such programs.

The minister will want to tell us no doubt how far the negotiations with the province of Quebec have gone because I think that the latter is the one most affected by employment problems for well-known reasons.

What the worker is looking for, Mr. Chairman, is the assurance that the value of his work capital will be recognized and I am pleased to tell the minister that I support this resolution, hoping that it will bring more welfare and dignity to disadvantaged Canadian workers.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock, the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business in accordance with standing order 15(3).

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), Grain—Prince Rupert, B.C., increase in elevator capacity; the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), Canadian National Railways—allegedly unilingual manual for signalling courses; the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), United Nations—proposed jurisdiction over high seas and outer space.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions for papers and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I believe there is an agreement as to priority of procedure on these bills. My understanding is that item No. 6 on the order paper standing in the name of the hon. member for High Park is to be taken first, to be followed by item No. 13 standing in my name, to be followed by item No. 1.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, that is my understanding too, and because of the peculiarities of the situation in respect of the first two bills to be called this is an agreeable course of action to follow.

Mr. Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent for the proposal that we call No. 6, No. 13 and No. 1 as they appear on the order paper, in that order?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE TRUSTEE BOARD OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN CANADA

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-20, respecting the trustee board of the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I think that at this time, especially because this bill is being proceeded with by unanimous consent, the sponsor should give some explanation.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, the trustee board of the Presbyterian Church in Canada was incorporated by chapter 64, Statutes of Canada, 1939, for the purpose of acquiring, taking and holding and dealing with real and personal property of the church.

There has been only one amendment which is found in the Statutes of Canada, 1962-63, chapter 23. It widened the field of investment to include investments in which a Canadian insurance company might invest and granted power to establish plans for gratuities, pensions, superannuation, etc., for ministers or former ministers of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. Section 23 was also added clarifying the refernces in the act to the board of administration or the administrative council.

At the present time the trustee board consists of seven members, being the number established under the act of incorporation. Because of the increasing work of the board it is desired to make provision for enlarging the number of members to a maximum of 15 and, until otherwise determined by the general assembly of the church the board shall consist of nine members.

While not legally obligated to do so, it has been the practice to appoint the chairman of the administrative council and the treasurer of the church to the board. Because of the nature of their offices it is desired to make these appointments mandatory. However, it is possible that the office of the treasurer of the church might at some future time become a permanent paid position or, alternatively, might cease to exist under that name. In either of these two events it is desired to appoint the person holding the position of chairman of the finance committee of the administrative council, by whatever name the position is called, to the board in place of the treasurer. Here again such an appointment would only be effective if that position was not a paid position.

At the present time the board invests separately all trusts and funds under its administration. Because of the substantial increase in income which can be obtained by so doing, it is desired to consolidate those of the church's investments which it is not prohibited from consolidating by the terms of the instruments creating them.

Because of the experience, knowledge and facilities available to them but not readily available to the board, it is also desired to give the board power to employ professional advisers to assist in making these investments. The board would of course at all times retain an overriding control over the activities of such professional advisers.

Because of the amendments proposed with respect to the membership and tenure of office of the board it is desired to substitute a new section for the old section 21 in order to bring the language of that section into line with the amendments. In addition, as the general assembly has recently approved a new code of regulations it is felt that reference to these should be made in the present amendments.

As the general assembly meets once a year only, and as there often arise decisions relating to the trustee board's work requiring implementation between meetings of the general assembly, it is considered essential that the general assembly be authorized to delegate its power of approval to the administrative council or to the executive thereof. The general assembly will have the power to revoke any such delegation at any time. Those are the proposed amendments, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we agreed to proceed with this bill first because there is some urgency to pass it. I point out, however, that there may be an obstacle in that our rules provide that following second reading of a bill it is automatically referred to one of the committees of the house, in this case I believe, to the miscellaneous private bills committee. We are all aware of the difficulties confronting the functioning of committees at this time because of the lack of rooms, equipment and staff. Even though the house may now give second reading to this bill it will require some time to consider it in committee and return it to the house, where it will again be considered before third reading. These facts should be taken into consideration by the sponsor of the bill.

This bill is similar to another which was dealt with a couple of months ago relating to Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated. They are similar because they deal generally with religious bodies, and I must say that I have similar views about them. I simply do not believe that it is correct for parliament to be concerning itself with the internal operations of the Presbyterian Church or, for that matter, any other church in Canada.

Today we are being asked as a group of politicians to pass judgment upon the worthiness and value of the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church and its considered opinion that there should be a certain number of appointed or elected officers. We are being asked to make a determination whether it is correct for the Presbyterian Church to deal in a certain manner with its moneys. I submit, first, that it should not be the function of politicians to make these decisions and, second, I do not think we are competent to do so in any event.

Some years ago the decision was made that there should be a separation of church and state but in a sense we are now in a very slight way putting church and state back together. I am quite sure that if the Presbyterian Church in Canada met to consider the rules by which Parliament would operate we would become rather incensed about it, even though they might do a much better job than we have. I am sure we would object to an outside body making determinations about who should be our officers or the manner in which we should function. Yet this is what is being asked of us now in so far as the internal functions of the Presbyterian Church of Canada are concerned. I for one do not particularly want to make that decision because I do not think it is any of my business and I do not think it is the business of any other person in parliament or any other part of parliament to make decisions of this nature.

This leads me to another point. I would appreciate it very much, and I am sure others would, if the Presbyterian Church would find some other way of having its internal affairs dealt with so that they will be masters in their own house and do not have to ask the parliament of Canada to endorse their legitimate requirements for their own housekeeping purposes.

Let us look at the explanatory notes of the bill. One of the principal points contained within the bill is "to enable the general assembly to fix the membership of the trustee board at from seven to 15 members, with the membership fixed at nine until the general assembly otherwise determines." As laudable as that objective might be, as desirable as it might be to have the trustee board increased in number, I submit it does not devolve upon me to make that determination or even to be asked to make it.

But unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this is the way the system works. The act incorporating the Trustee Board of the Presbyterian Church in Canada initially came into being, if I understand correctly, in 1939 by way of a private bill piloted through the parliament of Canada. Because this system was followed at that time the only way in which changes can now be made is by the system and process of private bills.

I wish to take this opportunity to depart a little from the intimate point relating to the bill concerning the Presbyterian Church in Canada to speak in a little broader context. I wish to heavens the government of Canada, which is the body that has control over the order paper and has the authority to deal properly and effectively with the progress of public bills if it wants to do so, would heed the request I am now making not only on my own behalf but on behalf of a great many members of the house. It is that some general law should be passed permitting the incorporation of groups such as this in a more private way than by the parliament of Canada.

In the province of British Columbia, for instance, we have a Societies Act. That act allows organizations and groups to organize themselves in somewhat the same way as a limited liability company. They simply go through the process of filling out an application form and presenting it to the appropriate government body. Upon the application being approved they receive letters of incorporation in respect of the name by which the society or group wishes to be known. I believe this system should exist here. If the government would do that I am sure it would not find any objection in the house to permitting the incorporation of such groups and allowing their internal affairs to be dealt with by these people themselves.

As I said earlier, I am simply not interested in politicians deciding whether it is correct that the trustee board of the Presbyterian Church in Canada should be fixed at between seven and 15 members. If it is the determination of the Presbyterian Church, or whatever group within that church structure has the authority to make these determinations, that a trustee board of 15 is the correct number, then let it make that decision and put it into effect itself without asking politicians to interfere in the matter.

The same principle holds true with respect to another provision of the bill which seeks to make mandatory what has heretofore apparently been a practice. I refer to the provision that the chairman of the administrative council and the treasurer of the church shall be appointed to the board. As the explanatory note says, this has been the practice. If it has been the practice and the Presbyterian Church in Canada, the trustee board or whatever group has the authority within the church organization to make this decision, considers that the chairman of the administrative council and the treasurer should be appointed to the board, why should we concern ourselves about giving it the stamp of political approval?

Apparently the church has decided that the chairman of the administrative council and the treasurer shall be appointed to the board. Why should we have to give our approval when it is based on, first, disinterest, second, ignorance and, third, a reluctance on the part of politicians to become involved in this way in the internal functions of a private organization such as the church?

This bill also concerns itself with investments. As the sponsor of the bill said, because of the substantial income that might be derived from different sorts of investments they ask politicians to approve their consolidating such investments of the church as may be consolidated under the terms of the instruments creating them so that a greater income may be derived therefrom.

Authorization is also sought for the church to employ professional advisers to assist it in the making of its investments. Again I say I have no interest and I do not believe I should have any interest as a politician in whether or not the Presbyterian Church in Canada should invest its money in a certain way or whether or not it should have authority to employ professional advisers. Why should it not have this authority? Why cannot the church make these decisions internally within the bounds of the church structure itself?

Some years ago I was a member of the miscellaneous private bills committee. At that time, when I first became a member of parliament, I had no idea what was involved in being a member of the private bills committee. One of the first things I discovered was that we were concerning ourselves with divorcing people who lived in Quebec and Newfoundland. The committee was concerning itself also with a variety of other things such as the bill currently before us. At the first opportunity I arranged within my party to get off that committee because I simply did not believe it was the business of a member of parliament in Ottawa to concern himself with whether or not people should be divorced or whether or not a church organization should have a certain structure.

I do not want anyone to draw unkind parallels between the two subjects I have mentioned. I simply mention them because they are facts of parliamentary life. Apart from these remarks I have nothing to comment upon so far as the bill itself is concerned. Let me reiterate what I have said by asking informally through you, Mr. Speaker, if the sponsor of the bill will use his good offices as a member sitting on the government side to communicate with whoever in the government has charge of this matter, presumably the house leader, to indicate that parliament should not be considering such subjects as these? Perhaps he could express with clarity to the minister concerned the thought that if the government will introduce a measure relating to such religious organizations which will simply permit them to become incorporated in a private way by application to whatever body is considered necessary so that politicians will no longer have to concern themselves with the internal functioning of private organizations, we could pass it in a few minutes. I am speaking, of course, for this party. The bill could be discussed before introduction with the representatives of all parties in order to ensure that it meets with the wishes of the religious bodies and parliament.

If such a thought can be conveyed to the government house leader, the Prime Minister or whoever is in charge, then parliament will be better off because politicians will not have to give the stamp of approval to religious bodies who seek to become incorporated or have their internal powers altered from time to time. It will not be necessary for these bodies to go through the process of coming to parliament in order to have that done. I see you rising, Mr. Speaker, which indicates that my time has expired. I thank you for your courtesy in listening. Someone has just asked me to have a quorum called. I do not know whether we should do that, so I leave it in your hands.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of Bill No. S-20. With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), I would say that perhaps his ideas are good but we cannot blame the Presbyterian Church in Canada for this situation. It is a statutory regulation that a body of the nature of a church—

Mr. Howard: Will my friend permit a question?

Mr. Thompson: —is required to come to parliament if it is to have national incorporation.

Mr. Howard: Will the hon. member for Red Deer permit a question? Am I correct in understanding that the hon. member's interpretation of my remarks was to the effect that they were critical of the Presbyterian Church for this action? If that is the way he interpreted them, he is entirely wrong.

Mr. Thompson: If my friend would be patient, he might have an answer to his question. I think we must understand that the church has no other way but to meet the requirements of the statute and seek such legislation. I agree with the hon. member for Skeena that it really is a redundant procedure because the purpose could be accomplished just as well through the office of the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh). National incorporation could be effected through this office for this as well as other similar types of organizations. I say this because I have a particular interest in the matter. While I am not a member of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, the denomination of which I am a member will have to introduce legislation within the next few months to meet the statutory conditions necessary for recognition as a national body. The statutory change referred to is something which must be brought about by the government or brought about by a change in the regulations of the department directly concerned.

I believe that this legislation is necessary if the Presbyterian Church is to carry on its normal activities. I suggest, therefore, that it should have our support. I also suggest that by unanimous consent it might be possible to proceed directly to third reading of the bill. The explanations which have been given are obvious and it is not really necessary to refer the bill to the standing committee which deals with this type of legislation.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this evening we may be able to complete the necessary action by the house on this bill in order that it may meet the need, which we understand is somewhat urgent, of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to say anything, but I think the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) has raised another problem he should consider. If his church wants to bring forward a bill this year we will have to hold another session in order for it to be introduced because the time for introducing bills this session has expired.

The fact that there are so many representations made by different denominations to this house raises the point whether or not we should look at the matter raised by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) in connection with an alternative way of bringing forward legislation to incorporate bodies on a national basis in some other manner. I do not think anyone here would disagree that a matter of this nature will not be handled in the manner legislation is normally handled. This body is not directly under the control of the parliament of Canada except as to incorporation. The church is obviously incorporated through its national organization.

If hon. members are not willing to consider ways and means for finding a much fairer way to handle these matters, then we will not make much progress by the way we handle them at the moment. The present method has long since outworn its usefulness and some change should be made.

We are not opposed to the bill receiving immediate attention, Mr. Speaker. I am of the opinion that there is no reason for the bill to go to the miscellaneous private bills committee and therefore I, on behalf of my colleagues, would be agreeable to waiving the standing order which makes provision for sending the bill to that committee. I do not think anyone here wishes to ask any questions about the internal organization of the church. We will leave that up to them. What we are concerned about is the church having to come here and be dealt with in this manner. I really see no reason that the bill should go before the committee. If the sponsor of the bill wishes to ask for the waiver of that procedure and the relevant standing order, I will support that request. In return I would ask for the co-operation of the hon. member, who has a number of similar bills coming forward for consideration, and ask him to consider the problem raised by the hon. member for Skeena.

The hon. member for Skeena has made the point on a number of previous occasions that we should eliminate the necessity for these bills going through the present procedure. We should find a better method for the incorporation of religious organizations than that used at the present time.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I am very gratified indeed at the remarks made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). If I have the unanimous consent of the house, I should like to move that the house resolve itself into committee of the whole to deal with the bill clause by clause in order to remove it from the order paper. In that connection may I say to the hon. member for Skeena and to the other two who have spoken that I am very much impressed with their arguments. Many years ago I was a member of the miscellaneous private bills committee and I know exactly how I felt about dealing with divorces and so on in which I really had no personal interest. I will take up the suggestion with the house leader and also with the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), and will add my words and arguments to what has been said.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the house resolve itself into committee of the whole to deal with the bill clause by clause.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May I refer hon. members to standing order 94 (2) which reads:

After the second reading of a bill, and before its consideration by the committee to which it is referred, the applicant shall in every case pay the cost of printing the act in the statutes, and a fee of five hundred dollars.

I understand that by unanimous consent the house will now go into committee of the whole but I assume that this paragraph of the standing order has been taken care of.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): That is the case, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 3 inclusive agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

THE PACIFIC COAST FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Thursday, May 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford for the second reading of Bill No. S-6, respecting The Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I think we are in a rather peculiar procedural position here, which is why I rise before the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford). The motion for second reading was moved the other day by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) on behalf of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard but I understand this does not alter the rule that if and when the sponsor of the bill speaks, as I hope he will, he will close the debate. I did not want that event to occur at this moment because of the reason, if for no other, that we would then have about 20 minutes at our disposal and would arrive at the point where we would be considering the next bill on the order paper which relates to the General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada.

This would mean that the house would have about 15 minutes at the outside for the consideration of that matter, whereupon the bill would drop to the bottom of the order paper which would injure the position of the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) and that of the parliamentary agent and they would probably not be the best of friends. We do not want that to happen because these matters should be dealt with in a more orderly way than they were last Thursday when an unfortunate event took place which we are now trying to correct. This is why I wished to make the remarks I have. The other reason was so that I might carry on where I left off on Thursday last.

Private Bills

Mr. Olson: Could I ask the hon. member for Skeena a question? Does he agree that we could resolve the problem raised respecting the time limit were we to pass both item 13 and item 1 now?

Mr. Howard: There would still be a problem because that would bring up item 2 which concerns Bill No. S-11. We would be in the same position no matter what we did. I suggest that a better way would be to call it seven o'clock upon the passage of the bill now before us, which would give some extra time for government business. Frankly, I do not think parliament should be spending its time trying to determine whether or not the Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company should be dealt with as it wishes to be dealt with, whether there should be a change in name and an authorization with regard to the capital structure. Incidentally this is a subject upon which I have some views; this is something which the Minister of Finance would, I believe, be well advised to take into consideration.

With the increase in the number of such companies seeking to alter their capital structure and increasing their insurance business and with more and more of these companies coming under the control of United States parent corporations, it seems evident that an ever-increasing amount of Canadian money is being drawn out of Canada and used by the parent companies, as the cycle continues, to invest in greater ownership of Canadian industry. I have a general objection to this sort of thing as well as a particular objection to the bill before us in that I believe it is injurious to the economic well-being of Canada and to the prospects of economic control over our own affairs. In this regard I believe we would be far better off if the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon) were still minister of finance because we might have seen a stronger determination on the part of the Canadian government to protect Canadians from encroachments upon their pocketbooks by foreign-dominated companies.

I do not know how this matter can best be dealt with. It may be unfair to single out the Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company and to try to incorporate in the bill before us some of the concepts advanced by the hon. member for Davenport in relation to Canadian ownership and the like. One way of approach would be—

[Mr. Howard.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Mr. Howard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had forgotten the exact length of time I had taken the other day.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, we did not have the benefit of hearing the sponsor of the bill explain its purpose on second reading and for this reason I have some questions to ask with respect to this measure which he could perhaps answer when he closes the debate. I have been looking at the bill and I gather we are dealing with a long-established firm. Reference has been made here to acts of parliament going back to the year 1908. Amending bills were brought in in 1920 and 1926. One of the purposes, I note, is to bring about a change in the name of this company. One is naturally curious to know why an old established firm which has been operating under its present name since 1908 should desire at this point in its history to change its name. I can readily understand the feature of the bill which would give to what is described as a new company a name in the French language. We have seen a rush of bills in this house recently some of which had no other purpose than to provide for the legal use of the name of the companies concerned in the other of the two languages of Canada. Generally speaking, these bills have met with approval in all quarters.

In this case we are dealing with a proposal to change the English name of a well established company and this does raise a question in my mind. I do not know what particular virtue may attach to the name "Century Insurance Company" as opposed to the existing name unless it is to indicate to us and to the customers that this is a very old and long-established concern even though it may not qualify for some time, at least technically, for the designation "Century".

I am concerned lest this proposal for a change in name may be the forerunner of a rash of similar applications. I recall we were once asked to approve a change of name proposed by a finance company. The company wished to change its name to "Beneficial Finance Company". I seriously questioned the advisability of permitting such a change because, as I said at the time, I thought the proposed new name was misleading. It did not spell out that the primary purpose of the bill was to be beneficial to the particular finance company rather than, as may have been implied, to the customers. So, as I say, this kind of proposal raises questions in my mind.

I remember suggesting a number of names that might be used by finance companies. I do not recall this with the idea that insurance companies should adopt the same type of names, but I remember suggesting "Salubrious Finance Company", and there are any number of synonyms and related terms to be found within the richness and variety of the English language. I am not suggesting there is necessarily that kind of implication in this change of name by the Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company, but it is a matter upon which the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, who is sponsoring the bill, might have a word to say before he closes the debate.

I note that there is another proposal which provides for an increase in the capitalization of the company. I would be interested in knowing the reason for this and I hope that the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, in view of what transpired when the bill was originally introduced for second reading, will take time to enlighten hon. members on the points I have raised.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I would remind hon. members that if the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, may I first express my real appreciation for the courtesy of hon. members in making the arrangement by unanimous consent at the beginning of private members' hour to allow this bill to come forward in the way it has. I, the parliamentary agent, and the members of the company appreciate very much the courtesy of the house in this regard.

In closing the debate, having been unable to open it, I should like to say a few words about the bill and to answer the questions raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). As he stated, the purpose of the bill is to change the name of the Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company to The Century Insurance Company of Canada and, in French, La Compagnie d'Assurance Century du Canada, and to provide for an increase in the capitalization of the company from $1 million to $2 million.

The Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company was originally incorporated as a provincial company under the laws of B.C. in 1890. In 1908 it applied to parliament and received federal incorporation. Since 1928 it has belonged to what is well known in the industry as The Century Group of insurance companies, which has its head office in England.

The head office of the Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company is located in Vancouver, B.C., and it presently carries on business in every province of Canada except P.E.I. and writes contracts of insurance in the United Kingdom and the United States.

Dealing with the reason for the change of name, the Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company, which is part of the Century group, is owned by the Century Insurance Trust Company of England, which again is owned by the Friends Provident and Century Life office. This is the Century group of companies which operates in Vancouver, and the reason for the change of name of the Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company to the Century Insurance Company of Canada is a matter of internal reorganization by which the company, under the new name, will emphasize the Century Insurance Company name. It will become the central company in the Canadian operations so that it will be the Canadian company, under the name "Century", which will be the principal company in the Century group of companies.

In answer to the question posed by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, the increase in capitalization from $1 million to $2 million is simply for the purpose of providing funds for further expansion within the group, and it is not proposed that any shares authorized by the increase in capitalization will be sold to the public. The change of name and the increase in capitalization really arise from internal reorganization.

In conclusion I would like to say that I agree with the remarks made by hon. members on the other side that it is a waste of parliament's time to have bills such as this, seeking changes in name and capitalization, come before it because members of parliament are far too busy considering other things. I completely endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) that the government and the house leaders of all parties should get together to discover some easier way to deal with these private bills.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hour appointed for the consideration of private members business having expired, the house will resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

PROVISION FOR ALLOWANCES TO PERSONS BEING TRAINED

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Marchand—Mr. Rinfret in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting allowances to persons being trained under technical and vocational training programs, and to authorize the entering into agreements with the provinces in connection therewith; and to provide further for certain changes incidental thereto in connection with the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my support for the principle, spirit and purpose of this resolution. One of my reasons is that I have always been opposed to the waste of human and natural resources, and this measure will do something to overcome that defect in our society so far as human resources are concerned. I want to congratulate the minister on introducing it. He has a most disarming manner. From reports I get from places he has visited and people he has spoken to I have no hesitation in saying that if there is any one man in the cabinet who will do a great deal to bring about national unity in Canada it is the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

This measure provides for government action, I trust planned action, to meet the growing need for trained people in our rapidly changing society. We are living in a different type of society than we did even ten years ago. This type of program, urging the federal government to take the initiative with respect to certain types of training legislation, has been urged by members of this group and our predecessors for more than 20 years.

I remember C.C.F. private members' resolutions urging the federal government to take action along these lines, not only with respect to university education but vocational training, coming before the house and being supported by members of C.C.F. group.

[Mr. Basford.]

Mr. Starr: Would the hon. member permit a question, because from my reading of the resolution his remarks are leading me astray? I am getting the impression from him that this is a new program which is being introduced. Actually this is a program that has been in existence a long while except that the allowances for the persons being trained are being increased. Does the hon. member realize that?

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: I quite realize that. This measure is an improvement on the former measure to make it economically possible for those who wish to take advantage of these programs to do so. When listening to the minister I was very pleased to hear the figures he mentioned. I am very pleased for another reason. I cannot recall the name of the paper, but I recall reading recently a report which mentioned that the Department of Citizenship and Immigration is carrying on a program of recruitment of United States labour from the states to the south of British Columbia. The report mentioned some figures. I do not know exactly what is being done, but I thought the figures were quite large; several hundreds of persons were mentioned, as being induced to come to Canada.

I am going to be like Lord Nelson and put the telescope to my blind eye. I say this because of a whispered interjection from the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Howard: I said there were only 16 members in the house.

Mr. Cowan: There should be more to hear Bert.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I see members coming in.

I am very pleased to see this program being made effective in practice, especially when I read reports such as this. I am referring again to the projects being undertaken in my own constituency where the chairman of B.C. Hydro promised, when appearing before the external affairs committee, that no United States citizens would be employed on this project until they had been resident in Canada for 60 days. I know that at the present time they are coming in and going to work immediately. I do not blame them. I do not know whether they are coming in as landed immigrants or on what basis. I know the minister has some knowledge of this situation. Soon after this measure is put through the house I trust there will be little need to recruit skilled labour from the United States.

This legislation being something like the ARDA program, is in the nature of an experiment. We know it will have a practical and immediate effect, but it also is one of those measures the effect of which we have to learn, and in respect of that learning we must look for amendments and improvements. I should like to ask the minister two or three questions before I sit down. I should ask him what is being undertaken by his department or his officials in the way of a study of this program, with a view to future amendments or improvements. What is being done to include a study by other groups within the framework of this legislation; that is, what is being done to secure the co-operation of the labour organizations, industry, all the universities, all the farmers organizations, and also the individuals? In my experience I have found that frequently some humble individual has an idea which is well worth paying attention to and giving consideration to.

Also I should like to know what steps are being taken to bring this measure to the attention of those who may be in a position to take advantage of it. I am wondering what sort of publicity there is in this respect, because I think it is very necessary that those who wish this assistance be well informed. I am wondering what type of publicity the minister has in mind. I suggest it should be on as wide as possible a scale and that it be not only through the labour organizations but also through other community organizations which would be interested in co-operating with the minister and his officials in giving this legislation more publicity.

Also I should like to know what co-ordination there will be with other legislation, which has been adopted by the house in recent years, so that this legislation will be part of a national plan to provide and maintain full employment so far as that is possible, and to promote satisfactory production of those things which are required to meet our national needs, foreign markets, and overseas responsibilities.

I do not intend to take any more of the time of the house at this moment, Mr. Chairman, but I should like the minister to answer those questions when he rises to speak, so that we may have some idea of what he has in mind with regard to the promotion of this legislation and so that the people generally can work with him. There are many people who are concerned with and interested in these things. I find that a lot of younger people are interested in legislation adopted in this house, regardless of the fact that there are those who go around the country belittling the progress parliament has made this session. During the last week or two I have been very pleased to see that we have gone along at a very satisfactory rate. I trust that the past unpleasant experiences we have had will soon be forgotten; they simply are a result of the weaknesses of human nature, from which we all suffer.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, this is indicative of the stupidity of trying to do two or three things at once. We try to have supper and do business at the same time. There are only 17 members in the house at the moment, counting yourself, Mr. Chairman, and we require 20 for a quorum. I do not see how we can carry on our business in this way.

An hon. Member: There are more now.

The Deputy Chairman: I thank the hon. member for reminding the Chair and hon. members that there should be 20 members present to make up a quorum. I am not very apt at mathematics, but I do know that sometimes there is subtraction and sometimes multiplication in respect of the number of members; there are fluctuations. I now see a quorum.

Mr. Howard: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I am sure you now see a quorum. Some members have come in. I just wished to point this out to you and to the other members. I think it is an asinine way to do business.

The Deputy Chairman: I thank the hon. member for his observations. We will now proceed with the business of the house.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say about the objection of the hon. member for Skeena, other than that it has been understood that if by chance we happen to be behind the curtain we are considered to be in the house. I consider this to be a serious matter, because I suppose many members may be in the house on that basis. I feel that too often we are ready to downgrade this institution one way or another, whether it is done here by ourselves or by other persons on the outside who interpret what goes on here. I think we should be cognizant of those who are in the confines of this chamber. I do not expect to leave and I will do all in my power to maintain the quorum.

Vocational and Technical Training

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I rise to take part in the discussion on the resolution, but would like to preface my remarks by a statement with regard to the comments just made by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce and the hon. member for Skeena. As most of you are aware, I am a non-smoker. I have made the suggestion in the House of Commons before that we should allow smoking, because if we did we would have a larger attendance. I agree with the hon. member for Grey-Bruce that those behind the curtains should be counted as part of the quorum. I am speaking objectively on the matter because it does not interest me whether hon. members are behind the curtains or not; the fact is that I abstain from smoking.

I wish to comment on this resolution now before the committee, and the angle that caught my eye is that part which suggests that it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting allowances to persons being trained under technical and vocational training programs. We should pass this resolution and the bill which will follow, but I think the field being offered assistance for retraining should be widened.

In this regard I should like to draw the minister's attention to the introduction in the province of Ontario of a new type of nursing education now known as the Quo Vadis School of Nursing. This school has recently been developed and operates on a system of training graduate and registered nurses, accepting students between the ages of 30 and 50. Practically all these students are married, and some are widowed. They have reached the stage in life where they have had as many children as they and their husbands intend to raise. By the time these wives or widows have reached age 36 or 37 the children are all in school and they are left alone at home during the day.

It would be impossible to maintain the hospitals in the Dominion of Canada if it were not for the presence of married women who have been willing to return to the nursing profession. I am sure there can be no argument with the flat statement that 60 per cent of the nurses on the floors of Canadian hospitals today are married women.

No one interested in hospital work in the Dominion of Canada does not thank God for the willingness of these trained nurses who return to hospitals, even though they may be married and have children. Most of them have to make arrangements for the care of their children while they are working, and in fact one hospital in Toronto, which requires a fair sized nursing staff, operates a nursery in the hospital to look after the children of the nurses who work there during the day.

I draw attention to nursing schools deliberately because of the underlying basis upon which some of these schools are operating. The one to which I have referred has the wholehearted support of the Ontario Department of Health because it operates on the basis of training married women from approximately nine o'clock in the morning to 4.30 in the afternoon from Monday to Friday. In view of the fact that many of them have families to look after, these hours are ideal because they can return home in time to prepare the evening meal, and can be at home on Saturdays and Sundays.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I should like to ask the hon. member whether he realizes that the question of training nurses does not come under the provisions of this resolution.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I am asking the minister whether he will make arrangements enabling the training of nurses to become part of this program. I developed this idea in my remarks recorded in Hansard on November 18, 1963 when we were discussing the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, which was introduced by the previous administration. At that time I said that under the vocational training provisions in the province of Ontario courses for registered nursing assistants were being offered at the Beal Technical School in London, and at the Weston Collegiate and Vocational Institute, which is in the riding of York Humber, under the auspices of the Department of Education of the province of Ontario.

More and more of our registered nurses are being trained under provisions of the Department of Education rather than the Department of Health. I stand here at this time asking the minister whether he will broaden the scope of this assistance provision to include the retraining of housewives. I read with close attention the remarks of the minister yesterday when he introduced this resolution, and I found it interesting, when you consider that I am talking about the retraining of housewives as registered nurses, that his remarks were heavily related to unemployed people who need retraining. I do not think there is any man in the house, or lady for that matter, who is going to suggest that housewives are unemployed. However, if we are willing to spend money to retrain unemployed individuals in order that they can change their occupations or, as the minister said in one of his statements, so they can change their status in the labour market, surely we should be willing to consider assistance to housewives who are willing to pursue a nursing career, even though they may be 36, 37 or even 50 years of age.

At the present time the Quo Vadis School of Nursing limits its enrolment to 40 students a year, I believe. This school has been in existence for two years and has an application list for enrolment in the neighbourhood of 200. To the amazement of this school's administration, these applications come from all parts of Canada. I think I can speak knowingly in this regard when I say that the Ontario Department of Health felt that the applications would be received largely from metropolitan Toronto, in order that the students would be able to return to their homes after the day's class. I should have believed this to be true. But when the Quo Vadis School of Nursing received widespread publicity, applications came in from as far away as Vancouver from girls who were willing to look after their own board and room, because they wanted to change their occupations from stenographers and computer operators, even though they had reached age 35, 36 or over. These girls were willing, as I have said, to look after their own living expenses for a two or three-year period. This course to which I have referred is a two-year course, the third year being a paid internship year. The Quo Vadis School of Nursing is now in its second year of operation and will be graduating its first class of nurses this spring.

I should like to ask the minister whether he will seriously consider enlarging the scope of this training program to take in nursing education so that housewives can train at institutions such as I have mentioned—Beal Technical School, Weston Collegiate and Vocational Institute and Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, where the Department of Education is supporting a three-year graduate nurse course.

The shortage of trained nurses in Canada has been a problem for many years. Many people oppose the suggestion that nurses should be trained under the auspices of the Department of Education because they believe they should be trained under the auspices of the Department of Health. Why is it women are trained for all other fields under the Department of Education, except the nursing career which is under the Department of Health. If the departments of education of ten provinces can train doctors, optometrists and physicians of every hue and colour, why can they not train nurses?

If the training of nurses is kept exclusively under the jurisdiction of departments of health this will mean added expenses to medicare and hospital services insurance plans throughout the country. We should transfer to the Department of Education the program under which nurses are trained through grants from the Department of Health, in order to properly relate the cost of educating these people. We should not keep these costs associated with the Department of Health, because the costs of that department are inflated at the present time by these costs.

The remarks of the minister last night were very appropriate and he is to be commended in this regard. However, if you study them you will have to admit that if we are willing to retrain a welder, for example, as a body builder in the automotive industry, we should be willing to train housewives as nurses, those who are anxious to pursue that as a new career.

We need, and must have, an increased number of nurses in order to staff the ever-increasing number of hospitals required because of the increase in population due to births and immigration, and the medicare plan which will be on a national basis very, very shortly.

When the student loans program was first introduced by the previous minister of finance, I rose at that time and pointed out that the loans would be available to young people going to universities, colleges and schools, and asked the then minister if he would not make these loans available to children who would be going to hospital schools of nursing. Hon. Walter Gordon said that very evening that it would be done, because a girl going to a hospital school of nursing was entitled to as much assistance as a young lady who was going to college to be a teacher, artist or sculptress. I sincerely hope, and really believe, that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration who will soon, we understand, have under his control the portfolio of manpower, will give favourable consideration to this request that we give allowances, through the medium of the provinces, to those housewives who are willing to enrol in such a school as Quo Vadis.

I believe the Quo Vadis school idea will spread right across the nation. We should give these women assistance in retraining in order that we will be able to meet the demand for nurses from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak for only a few minutes on the proposals that have been advanced in the resolution now before us. I should say at the outset that it would be very easy to embark upon a fairly long discourse about the rapidly changing technological skills that are required in most vocations at the present time, and some of the problems that people encounter when they find their skills have become, as it were, obsolete. However, I am not going to do that because I think the minister and several other speakers have already covered some of this ground adequately.

I was interested in the minister's statement when he introduced this measure, and I am not completely clear as to the distinction between the $35 per week, to which he referred at one point as a basic allowance, and the $55 per week that would be added to, I presume, and be part and parcel of the unemployment insurance benefits. I am not clear whether this is available to those people who are eligible for unemployment insurance benefit and who also participate in this vocational and technical training program. Therefore, whether the minister does it when he closes the debate on this particular stage or when he introduces the bill, I think we need a somewhat expanded explanation of these two areas of payment and under what circumstances they will be available.

I think we have come quite a long way over the past seven or eight years with respect to providing technical and vocational training in Canada. Certainly it is not very long ago that many of the provinces, in co-operation with the federal government program, spent huge amounts of money in building technical and vocational training schools. The next logical step, I think, is embodied in the proposal now before us, and therefore we in this party wish to give support in principle to what is happening.

The last few words in the resolution state that there will be certain changes incidental to this program in connection with the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and I hope the minister will give us a somewhat more complete explanation of the relationship between unemployment insurance benefits and the allowances to be paid to trainees under this bill. Perhaps he would like to do it when the bill is before us, following passage of this resolution; but whenever he chooses to do it, I think this point needs further explanation.

As I read what the minister said when he introduced the resolution, it seems to me that some extra allowances will be paid; that seems to be clear. I am pleased that there is an incentive approach to this training rather than perhaps what could have been introduced by way of penalties in unemployment insurance benefit for those who did not take advantage of the technical and vocational training facilities that are available. As I said, Mr. Chairman, I wish to be brief. Perhaps the minister intended to cover this area, but I simply want to encourage him to do it either when he closes this debate or introduces the bill.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, just before the minister replies I have a brief inquiry, rather than a statement, to put to him. I pursued this subject two or three weeks ago on the orders of the day, and it seems to me that the resolution brought forward by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration provides the opportunity to inquire directly once again whether the matter I raised at that time is to be dealt with under this proposed amendment.

Members of the committee may recall that I was concerned that teacher training generally be included under the vocational and technical retraining program. Up to the present moment the assistance for teacher trainees has been restricted to those teachers who will be directly involved in instructional work in technical and vocational institutes, on the premise, I presume, that this is an area that can be justified for Ottawa's participation under the constitutional situation with respect to educational responsibility. However, it seems to me that if we are to achieve the very desirable end outlined by the minister in his initial statement on this matter, in a world of work that is changing rapidly due to increased technology, automation and all the other phenomena of our modern industrial civilization, and if we are to adequately provide increased training, the necessity for teachers of all kinds is basic.

We know that one of the critical problems in the field of education at the moment is the chronic shortage of qualified teachers. Just last week we had the Canadian Teachers' Federation meeting in the city of Ottawa. I understand that at that meeting the point I am raising at the moment came under discussion. The purpose of the meeting was to deal with the problem of teacher training, standardization and certification. That group felt that because of the increased demands being placed on our limited teacher resources, if they could be brought under this general program it would be a tremendous boost in helping to fill the gap. Now I think it applies more perhaps to women trainees than it does to men. I know, because I have run up against situations in which we have found difficulty in bringing such potential trainees under the act. I refer to married women who have high school training, have been married for a number of years, have become widows left with small children or have been deserted by their husbands.

This is a social problem with some magnitude in Canada. Some of them are trying to carry on with widows' allowance, or whatever welfare allowances are available under our welfare program. In view of the subsidies paid under the vocational and technical program, they have endeavoured to be admitted to teacher training colleges, but have found under the regulations as they exist at the moment they cannot receive the necessary support.

If they are going directly into teaching and technical schools, they can receive that support. If they are going to engage in teaching activities generally, then they cannot. There is a specific regulation which creates the barrier. At the present time I understand the President of the United States has, as one of his pet objectives before Congress, the establishment of a national teacher corps on the premise, again, that if we are going to gear up our training facilities to the demands of a technological society we have to create very quickly a whole new group of qualified teachers.

Perhaps the minister has already taken care of this deficiency. If he has, I can desist from my comments at this stage. If he has not taken care of this particular oversight, I am sure he will agree that if teacher training under this program is limited to one specific category of teachers for technical schools, it is quite inadequate. Any retraining program which is to deal with problems of unemployment or retraining, as is the purpose of the proposed legislation, of course will require people who can provide the basic skills to prepare the retrainees, so that they might go to the specialized training categories of the various vocational and technical programs. Until this matter has been attended to I do not believe we can have a proper program, because it is a part of the program that is urgently required.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): There is a matter I should like to raise which is of tremendous importance to a great many women across this country, and to our whole society in general. When we consider that about one third of the working force in Canada are women, and that about one third of the women who are gainfully employed are married women, I think we will have to come to grips with providing facilities to look after the children of these married women who are employed outside the home. In Canada we are a long way behind in the provision of facilities. I do not want to attempt to go into such matters as shortened work days or other matters of that kind.

I should like, under this resolution, to discuss the need for doing something about nursery schools under the subsidized vocational training program. I believe that in Canada we are exceedingly short of nursery schools in practically every place you like to look. I have talked about this matter with a great many people over some period of years now. I know that women with young children who go out to work have to leave the children in very unfit places, or make sketchy arrangements for their care. This is true of both young children of nursery school age and older ones.

I want to talk now about nursery school training for these schools, which we should have. I think there are two groups of people whom we should be training. The first would be the young girls who are leaving high school, perhaps grade 10 even and certainly grade 11. I feel there should be some vocational training course open to them whereby they can take training to become helpers in nursery schools. I should like to have an explanation from the minister as to why it would not be feasible. If we can pay young boys who are training to be plumbers or electricians during their period of apprenticeship, then I do not see why it would not be feasible to have such a course for young girls leaving high school. They could take this training as nursery school helpers and be available for the nursery schools which we need so badly across this country. There are a number of reasons why this should be done.

For one thing, we have complaints from a great many sources these days that young girls are growing up without any preparation for marriage, running a home or looking after their own families. I cannot think of anything which would be better—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Cameron, High Park): Order.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): What is the matter with this?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Cameron, High Park): The resolution the hon. lady is discussing concerns allowances to persons being trained under the technical and vocational training programs. I think perhaps, with deference, the hon. lady will admit that she is wandering from the subject.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I am not wandering far from the subject, with all due deference. Over here, we had a member speaking about the need for training married women in nursing courses because we are short of nurses. We are abysmally short of nursery schools, and this matter should have been mentioned years ago under vocational training. I am exactly dead on the subject.

If we are going to have any vocational training in this country we should be training young girls to become helpers in these nursery schools. I am suggesting we try to train them on the same basis, and make available to them the apprenticeship system which we make available to young fellows who embark on careers suitable to them. This is only half of the picture, Mr. Chairman. I believe, with deference, that this other half is equally relevant because you cannot have nursery schools without supervisors for them. As a matter of fact, I think one reason this subject is not considered relevant is the long time that has elapsed since we have had subjects of this kind discussed which are so relevant to the women of this country. We have discussed them at times in the house, but not nearly often enough. When these subjects are mentioned, therefore, one tends to think they are not relevant. However, they are tremendously relevant to vocational training.

There should be vocational training for older women who could act as supervisors for nursery schools, which are long overdue in this country. I know there is some desire to have university courses, which exist now, adapted for the training of supervisors for these nursery schools. This would be ideal. However, I believe that married women whose families have grown up could take training under a subsidized vocational training program to learn to become supervisors in nursery schools. I know there is some nursery school training now for supervisory personnel. Many of the older women do not have these tremendously high academic standards, but their qualities as homemakers and mothers fit them for this work.

I should definitely like to urge this course at this time, when we are observing rising economic pressures on married women who go out to work. In order to keep homes in this country intact, instead of seeing them disintegrate through crime, delinquency and neglect, during our consideration of a manpower policy and the subsidization of vocational training I should like to see provision made for courses at nursery schools both for supervisory personnel and nursery school helpers.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, I should like first to thank the house for its sympathetic reaction to the introduction of this resolution, and for the kind words some members addressed to me.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, I have no illusions. I am well aware that, at other times, the circumstances will be less favourable. I shall make up a reserve of good will in order to take the subsequent blows more easily.

There is one thing that I should like to explain differently at this time. Mr. Chairman, the special feature of the resolution now before the house and of the bill to follow, is not so much the amount of allowances to be paid to the unemployed or jobless,—even though I am quite satisfied with the suggested increase, but what is important and fundamental—if I went back a few months I would say revolutionary—is this new concept included in the resolution, that vocational training and retraining in Canada be part and parcel of the life of the worker. In other words, the person going back to training for reasons known to everyone, the person returning to school will no longer be considered lowered human being; on the contrary, going back to training will be accepted as normal in the life of a worker and because it is normal, he is provided with a salary enabling him to maintain his standard of living while studying.

In my opinion, this concept puts into concrete form all these great theories and eloquent speeches often made on the evolution of technology, changes and new conditions in industry. These innovations must give rise to new concepts and new measures.

Such are the ones before us. It is not only a matter of money; it is above all and essentially a concept which leads us to accept the fact that fast developments in industry must not be at the expense of the workers and prejudicial to men.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Marchand: The hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes mentioned that we should have stipulated $1.25 instead of $1 by way of basic allowance. According to what he said this would have been more in accordance with the minimum wage standards of Canada. I think that we have to take into account the supplement which in most cases will be paid, and which in some cases would amount to $90 per week, which is much more than $1.25 per hour. So I do not think we are in conflict with the minimum wage provisions laid down by the federal government.

The hon. member for Waterloo South said that we should consider the situation of the poorer provinces which, as a matter of fact, supply the richer provinces with skilled workers, and for which they pay. I think the hon. member will agree that this program which is under study is not so expensive for the provinces because the federal government will pay the first $25 per week and will pay 90 per cent of the additional allowances made to the workers.

This means, Mr. Chairman, that the cost to the provinces will be about 5 per cent; so I do not see, in view of the smallness of the amount, how we could find a formula which would be just for everyone. We have to take into account the number of students who will profit from the program and find a way to reimburse the provinces. I do not think it is worth while developing this point now, but we may be in a position to discuss it in further detail when the bill is before the house.

Some hon. members mentioned we should publicize this program a great deal, and I entirely agree. If we want the program to be efficient, then I think we must give it much publicity so that workers and institutions know that the program exists and that profit can be had from it.

The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke mentioned it was unfortunate that this plan applies only to those covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act. I think he would find a reading of my speech made yesterday worth while. I made it clear in the speech that it is not restricted to those covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act. As a matter of fact, the self-employed in the fisheries industry and the logging industry—

Mr. Johnston: That was not at all the intention of my remarks. I was suggesting that the Unemployment Insurance Act should have wider coverage than it has.

Mr. Marchand: Then I must have misunderstood the hon. member.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) expressed the fear that it would be easy, in view of the substantial allowances, to create permanent students, that is inasmuch as the weekly allowance is quite high, some workers might flit from one course to another and thus remain permanent students at $80 and $90 a week.

I feel that such a danger does not exist. The only people who will be eligible for those allowances are those who will be asked to take courses by the National Employment Service or the new manpower service. Therefore, to be sure, not everyone will be able to contact our service and ask to take a course. Only those who will be out of work or under-employed will be eligible and the slightest abuse will be quickly detected. I do not think that we are faced there with a real danger.

A lot has been said also about training in plants, that is on-the-job training. There is a special program for training in plants; it may not be as generous as the one we are talking about today. The federal government pays up to 50 per cent of the cost; I think it even goes as far as 75 per cent—I will correct the figures if I am wrong—that is to say we reimburse the provinces up to 75 per cent of the training costs.

Is there room for improvement? There is no doubt about it. However, I feel that we cannot, as a first experiment, include in that new program all the others, or the nine or ten existing programs for vocational training and retraining.

Several members said that we should put the schools of nursing on the same footing. I think that the Quo Vadis school of nursing, which was mentioned is an extremely valuable school, and I think that it can get a grant through the Department of National Health and Welfare, something we cannot do through a system of vocational teaching. I was asked to give that matter some consideration, and I certainly will.

The same thing applies to children's nurseries which constitute a fundamental problem in our modern industrial world. We are all happy to see that women are taking part in the country's prosperity. Two million of them are working. Although we welcome their contribution, we must solve the problem that their employment creates in families, cities and industries. However, we must use a method different from the one we are considering. Nothing would prevent us from using one of the programs already in force. As soon as possible, I should like to have a closer look at it.

I am sure that we cannot extend to students the allowances provided here. They are intended not for students, but for the unemployed or the underemployed. If we offered $90, $80 or even $50 a week to students wanting to go to technical schools, you would see the students drop their studies and go to technical or vocational training schools. That is certainly not the purpose of the act. Perhaps when students are paid a salary—as some of us hope—the fact of granting those amounts will not be an artificial lure. But for the time being, this proposal is restricted to workers who have a family, who are adults and who must keep up a certain standard of living.

Mention has also been made, I believe the member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) brought it up, of the problem with regard to teachers. Indeed, he is right; all these retraining and vocational training programs will lead to a shortage of teachers. There is program 7, but it is rather limited in scope. That is another problem we will have to review in a new perspective.

As I will doubtless have the opportunity, when the bill is introduced in the house of taking up some of the objections raised this afternoon, I should now like to thank the house once more for the kind welcome it gave this worthwhile resolution. I trust the act will not differ from the resolution too much and that, all in all, we will have taken an important step toward what I believe the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) called safeguarding our human capital, surely the most important capital in an industrialized society. Even from an economic point of view, that capital is the most valuable; it must be protected, improved constantly, not only so that our people might earn a decent living but also that we might compete against other developed countries on a strictly commercial basis.

I believe the house feels, so far, that we are taking a step forward. It is not the first step; the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) mentioned that he had already gone forward in that direction. That is true. This is merely another step in that direction. And so, we will gradually work our way toward our common goal: a better and more prosperous society.

• (7:50 p.m.)

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Marchand thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-186, respecting allowances to persons being trained under technical and vocational training programs.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

1. Postal Services including Canada's share of the upkeep of the International Bureaux at Berne and Montevideo, $252,804,000.

Mr. Foy: I think the Postmaster General is about to get to his feet. We would certainly appreciate a statement from him, and I would defer to him.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Chairman, the first time, I asked the house to pass my estimates, only a few weeks ago, I did not have to speak and I thought that this would happen again today; but if the house is earnestly waiting to hear me, I am ready to deliver a speech.

Mr. Chairman, it is customary when opening the debate on the estimates for the current fiscal year, to review the financial position of the department during the previous year.

However, I trust hon. members will understand that the last fiscal year having just come to an end, available figures for a complete year are for the 1964-65 fiscal year.

Before introducing the 1966-67 estimates of the Post Office Department, I should like to spend a few minutes reviewing the 1965-66 activities and stressing the unswerving policy and steadfast aims which are a trade mark of the Post Office Department. Where trends in recent years indicate growing needs for the department in 1966-67, I will quote figures and point out what they may bring about for the future each in its own field.

When my colleague, the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), was postmaster general, he supported the recommendation of the Glassco Commission for the adoption by my department of a more suitable accounting system to identify all the accounts receivable by the department and all its financial charges, in order to get a clearer picture of the department's financial position.

I repeat, the figures for a full year now available are for the 1964-65 fiscal year. I shall use them to show the situation in the Department, with all amounts and accounts duly apportioned. During the 1964-65 fiscal year, the Post Office Department was provided with services from the other departments totalling $35.8 million. If this sum is added to the other operational expenses, which amounted to $243.8 million, the total expenditures come to $279.6 million. On the other hand, revenue totals $269 million, that is $263.7 million in revenue from all operations and $4.3 million in free services provided to the other departments and parliament.

These figures, Mr. Chairman, show that the Post Office Department, while assuming the cost of the services it receives from the other departments, was able to cover part of it up to $24.3 million and to finish the year with a net total deficit of only $11.5 million. However, if we take into account retroactive salary increases, the 1964-65 deficit would come to $17.7 million as compared to $32.4 million in 1963-64.

This improvement in the general situation of the department is due to a $28.3 million increase in the 1964-65 revenue while expenditures for the same period only increased by $2.3 million. This increase in revenue was caused on the one hand by greater postal traffic and, on the other hand, by a raise in rates.

For instance, in order to establish a more equitable relation between charges and costs in some services, an increase became necessary for householder mail matter rates and for class mail rates as well as for charges on C.O.D. parcels. Those rate changes went in force on April 1, 1964. On July 15, 1964, the air mail rate for the United States was also increased.

Another increase went into force on January 1 of this year, this time in international rates. That will result in an increase in revenue which will be apparent in the 1965-66 figures but expenditures will also increase since the new rates are precisely aimed at meeting the increased transportation and mail handling costs which are occurring in the international service.

Another rate change occurred this year when a zone system was established for international parcel post. There are now three rates, called zone rates, for countries other than the United States and their possessions, where 230 different rates previously applied. Such a simplified rate structure is a great improvement for the mail room attendants in business concerns in Canada as well as for the postal workers who handle international parcel post.

It is interesting to note here, the strong tendency in Canada to use air mail facilities for correspondence and business dealings with foreign countries. Our figures forecast an increase of nearly 15.2 per cent in all classes of international air mail for 1965, as compared with an increase of approximately 4 per cent in all classes of surface mail. Such a trend doubtless indicates that fast communications have now become a habit. It also indicates that the Post Office Department must constantly improve its methods in order to keep up with technical progress and development.

In January 1965, were started throughout the postal service, cyclical surveys of mail traffic as a first step in the implementation of a new cost ascertainment program.

Next July, we shall have data covering a whole year on this subject. The cost report will show the receipts and expenditures of every class of mail matter and service on an annual basis. A projection of figures already obtained indicates that a 4 per cent increase in mail traffic can be expected for 1965-66. In terms of items handled, this represents an increase of 200 million over 1964-65, for a total of 4.8 billion. Roughly, this represents approximately 240 mail items per year and per person, men, women and children, in Canada.

• (8:00 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, the annual increase in the mail volume naturally leads to increased activities in all fields at the Post Office Department. For instance, as at March 31 of this year, the number of daily home deliveries by carrier had reached 3.5 million, apart from service to 16,372 other families, through group mail boxes. The 10,251 jobs of mail carriers at the Post Office Department on March 31, 1966, represented an increase of 753 from the previous fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, in order to take into account constant evolution, we amended one of the conditions for delivery by carriers, to the effect that any town which offers 2,000 delivery points can now claim home delivery service, while previously it had to have at least 2,500 points to serve. As the needs of each locality are determined and recruitment and training of carriers is done, we carry on with our program providing for the extension of this service.

Since January, 1966, carrier delivery was initiated at St. Bruno and Montmagny, in Quebec; at Strathroy, Bowmanville and Paris, in Ontario; at Cranbrook, in British Columbia. Thus, 14,122 more homes are served by mail carriers. In addition, due to the rapid multiplication of big buildings in the heart of cities, 44,696 other homes enjoyed carrier service. Therefore, 3,564,572 delivery points are now visited daily. In order to give this service, the number of carriers in the employ of the Post Office Department was brought up to 10,340, an increase of 253 jobs to date. And there will be several other extensions of carrier service before the end of the current fiscal year.

[English]

Mr. Chairman, 1965-66 was a period of growth and expansion in the Post Office Department. It also was a period fraught with difficulty. All hon. members know last year there was a work stoppage by employees which affected adversely the communications system of our whole country. This action by the employees last summer points up the need for proper collective bargaining procedures. These needed procedures will be provided by this government through legislation. It is only right that procedures be established so that civil servants, like employees in industry, can sit down with their employer to discuss and bargain on matters pertaining to their terms of employment.

The inquiry into the working conditions in the Post Office Department, which is being conducted by Judge Montpetit, is progressing and a final report is expected for tabling within the next few months. For the benefit of hon. members, I may state that I wish the report had been tabled prior to the introduction of the estimates so that they would have been able to see into the depths of the operation in the Canada Post Office. The report when tabled, I am sure, will do much to clear the channels of communication between the employee branch locals and their national executive, and between the various levels of management.

Better communication will help to dispel the mistrust and the misunderstanding which has manifested itself between the employees and management. Officers of the department and myself have been meeting with the representatives of the associations. Changes are being discussed and are being readied for implementation; they are the result of consultation and agreement. As an example, the examination procedure has been modified and is ready for adoption. The method of measuring the work of letter carriers is advancing. To help with this study, the systems used in the United States, England and Japan have been reviewed. Safety committees, comprised of representatives of the employee associations and management will be established in the larger post offices, and a safety officer will be added to the headquarters establishment. He will be responsible for the preparation, promotion and administration of the safety programs in the department.

Through the co-operation of the Department of National Health and Welfare, preliminary steps have been taken toward the establishment of a civil service health unit in the Montreal Post Office. Expansion of this project will be possible only as trained personnel are available. The work being done now by the department, in consultation with the associations, by the time the report of Judge Montpetit is tabled will eliminate many of the troubled areas, and solutions to remaining problems will be well on their way to being worked out.

Mr. Chairman, 1965-66 was an active year for the Post Office Department and, as I have said previously, this fiscal year shows postal operations and business expanding with the economic and population growth of our country. In the department, programs previously conceived are reaching maturity and new programs and new concepts are being readied for study and implementation.

With these few remarks, I would ask hon. members earnestly to consider the amounts represented by the estimates which we consider necessary to provide our country with continued and effective postal service.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I also should like to compliment the minister and thank him for his very able progress report on the activities of the Post Office Department for last year. The activities in that department act as a pretty fair barometer of the development of the country. Certainly it was evident from his remarks that the costs of services in this country are rising.

The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek wished to take part in this discussion tonight, but unfortunately has been called out of the house. He mentioned to me an item or two about which he is concerned. He is concerned particularly about the curtailment of the service given to the public in rural areas since the minimum wage law became effective last year.

Since the $1.25 minimum hourly wage rate became effective, in many areas, particularly in the country, the post offices have been working on restricted hours, rather than pay the overtime. I have discussed this matter as it applies in my own area, but I am bringing it to the attention of the minister now to point out that while it is a bone of contention in my area, it is also out through the western part of the country. It seems to me, if the government is prepared to pay a minimum wage, the general public should not be penalized because the Post Office Department will not grant an increase in salary sufficient to keep the wickets open in the post offices for the required time. There is one other matter in respect of the area I represent which I should like to draw to the attention of the minister. A few new public buildings have been built in our area. A beautiful building with air conditioning was built on a nicely treed lot, but 12 miles up the river we have the new post office building in the town of Dresden in an area where there are no trees close by: It is sitting in the glaring sun. Provision has been made for the installation of an air conditioner, associated with the heating unit, but to date the work has not been completed. I can assure the minister that in this area air conditioning is almost a must, if we are to get efficient work from the staff. I hope he will take this matter under consideration. I have already discussed this with the Minister of Public Works, who agrees with me that something should be done. In closing I should like again to compliment the minister on the good report he has given us this evening. However, there is one other matter I should like to bring to his attention. This concerns the rural mail routes and is something which only people in the rural areas are aware of. In many instances I feel the department is bound a little too much to the lowest tender concept. In our area I have seen occasions where we have had a little trouble in respect of the lowest tender, because sometimes the tenderer is not in a position to back up his tender with the service he should be providing. I believe this is an area where great care must be taken, but I also feel it is an area which should be examined a little, because service to the public sometimes is more important than acceptance of the lowest tender.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I want to thank the hon. member for bringing my points to the attention of the Postmaster General.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, I have two reasons for being especially interested in the subject of our post office and its operations. As a member of the New Democratic Party, I am particularly pleased with the Post Office Department because it represents a good example of public enterprise. In the second place, as a former mail carrier, I have a special feeling for the dedicated staff of the post office at all levels. Their efforts, often unrewarded, render a daily public service to this country.

A colleague of mine intends later to enlarge upon and make reference to the postal employee situation, so I will not touch upon that subject now, except to say that I very much welcomed the statement of the Postmaster General that collective bargaining is being established. This I am sure will help the situation.

I suppose the postal service is the federal activity which affects beneficially the largest number of Canadians. We see by the latest report, which the minister has given us, that something over four billion pieces of mail are processed annually. The minister has indicated that about $269 million is taken in and that about $279 million is spent in the operation of this service. Of course postal operations also include activities in addition to the handling of mail. Postal services include the sale of unemployment insurance stamps, collection of government annuities payments, the distribution of income tax forms and civil service employment forms.

The post office has been given consideration, or subsidy in the form of accommodation—that is buildings—to a rough value of $20 million per year. On the other hand it carries free mail and subsidizes other federal agencies to the extent of about $4 million in the form of free or frank mail.

As the minister has indicated, these last items are now being brought into a more clear cost accountancy relationship. On that point I thought it was encouraging that this is being done in line with the recommendations of the Auditor General which appear in his most recent report, from which I should like to quote briefly. He said:

> In 1964 the department engaged a firm of consultants to examine its cost ascertainment procedures with a view to establishing accurate costs with respect to the various classes of mail. The procedures recommended by the consultants were put into effect only in January 1965 and no figures are available to indicate the loss in handling second class mail for the year 1964-65. The loss in 1963-64 had been estimated at $35 million which included $1.5 million attributable to a special second class rate on newspapers and magazines mailed by the public. This rate was discontinued effective April 1, 1964.

I quoted that statement to indicate that some progress is being made, as the minister suggested, in following up the common sense recommendations of the Glassco commission and the Auditor General.

Having said that, I should like to take this opportunity to say I was very pleased to note that the minister did not say what his predecessor said a year or two ago, that he advocated an increase of 25 per cent in local first class mail delivery rates—from four to five cents. In our view such an increase is unwarranted. I do not know whether it is still under consideration, but I hope it is not. In the event that it is, I should like to put forward some of the arguments which we think are strongly against this increase.

In support of the proposal by the previous minister to increase the local mailing rate to five cents he said that it would bring all our local postage to the five cent rate and would increase revenues and help solve the problem relating to the drawing of boundaries for the distribution of local mail. His contention was, and I think there was some truth behind it, that it is hard for the post office to charge some people different rates; that is, four or five cents, in the same municipality. However, instead of charging all these local residents four cents, he proposed to charge them all five cents. I think very few Canadians would agree with that proposition.

[Mr. Mather.]

In the first place, as to revenue, on ordinary first class mail—that is letters mailed in the ordinary way by ordinary Canadians—a profit is obtained. Why increase that part of the service charge? To do that, as I will try to show, means to burden unjustly one set of postal users with the cost of subsidizing another set of users.

As to the boundary drawing problem referred to by the former minister, I think that if the present minister will come with me to my constituency and talk to the people in Surrey, Delta or Langley he will find many of them who will advise him how to settle that problem very quickly. They all want a universal four cent lower mainland British Columbia rate.

I have said that first class letter mail is handled profitably and that second class mail, notably magazines and newspapers, is carried at a loss. This has been the situation for many years, and it has been argued for years that this should not be the case. I think that something like $35 million per year is lost in the carrying of second class mail.

The most recent figures I have indicate that first class mail service showed a profit of 1.827 cents per piece handled. In respect of second class mail there was, on transient class, a loss of almost ten cents per piece, and on publications there was a loss of over four cents. It is true, therefore, that non-business mail—ordinary letters—are subsidizing the losses on business periodical mail.

A former postmaster general had this comment to make on the subject. Unfortunately he made it just before he became postmaster general, rather than after. He said:

> We should not load the one class of mail with the costs of another class of mail, but we should rather bring them out into the open and pay from general revenues any special costs in the operation of a department.

He said, as I say now, that if an increase in the rate of first class mail is still being considered it ought not to be. I was encouraged by the statement made a month or two ago by the present minister in this regard. He said as recorded in Hansard for February 17, 1966 at page 1427:

> When preferential rates were approved for newspapers over 20 years ago, one of the reasons for it was, I think, that newspapers were perhaps the only public medium of information at that time. That is why a preferential rate was established. But I do not think that reason stands today. However, there may be others.

At any rate, I was encouraged by that statement of the minister.

There is another aspect I should like to refer to. We must face the fact that on second class mail posted in the United States and delivered in Canada we lose as high as $2,800,000 per year, and that on United States second class mail posted in Canada for delivery in Canada we lose in excess of $1 million per year. There is another aspect of this relationship which I should like to touch upon briefly.

It is estimated that Canadian imported printing runs to a value of over $300 million per year, and that 85 per cent originates in the United States. There is no other comparison in the world which could show such a relationship as exists between the United States and Canada in regard to our importation of printed material. There is no other comparison in the world for this relationship between two countries. We in this country absorb 35 times more printed imports per capita than does the United States. To quote the Graphic Arts Industries Bulletin, a Canadian publication:

Year after year the huge daily flow of printed imports is represented by incoming second and third class mail from the United States, delivered without any remuneration by our Canadian Post Office. All postal revenue on this goes to Washington because the Universal Postal Convention compels us to carry U.S. mail without compensation. And since the flow from Canada to the U.S.A. is not even comparable, our country loses every day.

I think these are some of the points that should be taken into consideration in the operation of the post office. I am encouraged to think that some of them are being taken into consideration, and hope to see some action on them to bring about a healthier position for the postal service. In closing I wish to reiterate that our party is opposed to any increase in the postal rates in respect of the ordinary letter writer sending first class, local mail. We are opposed to these people paying more than they do today, when what they now pay is more than enough to carry their letters. The real hole, in our opinion, through which the flood of deficit comes into the operations of the post office is the arrangement which permits the entry, at our cost, of millions of dollars worth of U.S. printed products. I am told, for example, that our post office loss on Time and Reader's Digest has in the past been as high as $1,400,000 a year. It might very well be asked, why should Canadians, many of whom never read these publications, be burdened with extra postage to help promote their distribution in Canada? Why should the public sector of the postal business, the ordinary letter writer, pay more and be called on—we hope this will not happen—to pay still more to subsidize that private sector?

We cannot see that this is either fair or wise, and we oppose it. We propose, instead of increasing the charges to the ordinary mail users across Canada, that regulations permitting the duty-free entry of any package not over $1 in value, which stimulates direct mail from the United States, be abolished and we would urge that this country seek earnestly and strenuously an adjustment with the United States to overcome the existing inequities in the postal convention under which our post office and its Canadian customers labour.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, my first words on this item are to congratulate all the employees of that department whose work is almost above reproach and gives quick results which leave far behind those of all other departments of the Canadian government.

Before the advent of radio, television and telephone, the work of the Post Office employees represented a service indispensable to the moral and cultural life of the Canadian villages very remote from each other.

Thus, at that time the situation was the same as it is today, that is to say it is practically always impossible to determine the material value of the services given by those workers.

The minister has just given us a very glowing picture. If we look only at that side of it, it is all to the department's credit. But there is another side which shows a record performance. If there had been a contest between the departments of the Canadian government as to what department could work most efficiently for the longest time with the most poorly paid staff, I am sure that the Post Office Department would have won the trophy.

I will take only a few minutes to point out the lot of postal contractors in rural ridings.

When we see workers, in all parts of Canada, joining together within labour unions to get better wages and working conditions, we cannot but conclude that the method of individual tenders for contracts is out of date. When a contract is up for renewal, it sometimes happens that some prankster tenders against the regular contractor who has been doing his work faithfully for years. Under the circumstances, the latter is forced to keep on working at miserly wages because in order to keep his job, he must submit the lowest tender.

That old custom is, in my opinion, the reason why some contractors get only $5.50 for four hours of work a day. The same work brought them $2.50 in 1939.

In my riding I know an honest contractor who has been working for the Post Office Department since 1936. He serves 53 families every day and, as his only reward, he gets $625 a year, or 4 cents a day per family.

If the beggars who roam the countryside filed an income tax return, I am sure that they would admit to more than 4 cents per family called on. Not only are our beggars better paid, but they work only when it suits them. They are not forced to walk in the rain or on cold days, nor at the same time in the same ranges, every day of the week. They can change scenery by moving to another parish, another county and even another province.

Nowadays, $625 a year is ridiculous. One dollar per hour for someone who has to use his own car to do his work, is pure nonsense.

There is no need to be an accountant to notice the difference between the minister's salary and this employee's, since, as I said previously, the remuneration of the mail carrier concerned is $625 only. It is only fair that I specify for the information of all Canadians, and especially my constituents, the Postmaster General's salary. As can be seen on page 365 of the estimates for the fiscal year 1966-67, it is as follows:

Yearly salary:	$15,000
Motor car allowance:	$ 2,000

And we add to that: $6,000 as emoluments of a member of parliament and $12,000 as salary, for a total of $35,000. This amount of $35,000 represents the employment of 55 contractors at $625 a year; 55 persons, two hours daily, represent 110 hours; 110 hours per day represent 660 hours a week.

I leave it up to the minister to make the computation for one month and for one year, so that he may realize the real gap in that department.

[Mr. Godin.]

I am asking the minister personally to inquire among the mail contractors and to carry out the salary adjustments required. I am sure that when the question of equitable treatment for this category of workers disseminated across Canada is raised, the minister will be in a position to rely on the approval of the whole house. As for the carrier service given by the department in certain cities in Canada, I feel I must advise that the cities of Portneuf constituency have already sent to the department their requests on this matter, so that the citizens may be more adequately served.

The minister advised them that such service was not possible for the time being, since there were not 2,000 families within the boundaries of such cities.

If the figure of 2,000 families was set for cities like Montreal or Ottawa, it is clear that such a minimum makes sense, because such cities are built vertically and it becomes easy to find 2,000 families within a rather small area. But when it is realized how our cities in the rural constituencies are spread out, since in most cases, the lots are much larger than the houses and that the houses themselves are mostly one-story, seldom two-story, the result is that an area of four square miles often represents only 1,500 families.

Then, families living one and a half miles from the post office have to cover that distance to get to the mail and this is often impossible for a mother who is busy at home with her young children. The same is true in the case of older persons. For the one whose work compels him to travel in another direction, trips to the post office also become costly.

This is why, I believe that the department should review its position and reduce from 2,000 to 1,000 the minimum number of families required for the establishment of a mail delivery service. By solving this problem, the minister would kill two birds with one stone: In addition to doing justice by improving those services, he would contribute to create employment for those who are out of work in those towns and who are still in quest of the definition of prosperity given and repeated by His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of parliament.

• (8:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about this department. Before I do so, I want to compliment the minister upon his report and upon the fine way in which he has carried on as head of the postal department. I have been pleased to note that some members have discussed the same subject with which I should like to deal, the plight of the rural mail carrier. I believe this is one of the weaknesses of the federal postal department. I want to compliment the hon. member for Lambton-Kent and the hon. member for Portneuf upon the information they have provided, with which I heartily agree.

We know, of course, that the rural mail carrier acquires his position by contract. Once he receives his contract he does not have an opportunity of getting an increase for a two-year period. This business of contracts was all right for the horse and buggy days. It was all right until the provincial and federal governments started putting up taxes so often that the poor mail carrier believed the taxes were being increased every month. This fact influences the rural mail carrier greatly, when he is attempting to make a proper contract that will permit him to support his wife and family, and do his work. This work is extremely necessary to the federal government. I should like to give one illustration concerning a mail carrier who has been doing this work for the federal government for close to 40 years. He asked for an increase to the extent of the large sum of $50—not $50 a month but $50 a year. In fairness to the federal government, I must say they gave him that $50 increase. However, before the little man could put one red cent of that increase into his pocket, the provincial government decided to raise their taxes. Overnight his $50 was wiped out and he was back where he started.

I think, Mr. Chairman, the position of rural mail carriers should be worth so much money to the government. I do not believe these people should be hired by contract. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent mentioned that the contracts did not always go to the lowest bidder. However, even if a contract goes to the lowest bidder, that does not mean he is always the best man for the job. I believe that the time when rural mail carriers should be hired by contract is long past. I suggest to the Post Office Department they should take another look at the matter. These men should he paid a straight salary, the same as the urban mail carriers receive. They are just as important as or more important than the urban mail carriers, who have good sidewalks. The urban carrier may have some rain or snow, but there are few days when he cannot get to his job. On the other hand, the rural mail carrier not only has the weather to contend with, but he has to contend with roads.

I imagine that the Postmaster General, in days gone by, has ridden with the rural mail carrier. I have done so, and I would not take his job if they gave me twice the money, especially during the spring when the roads are in the worst condition. However, the mail has to be delivered. I have just received a letter from one of these carriers, as no doubt other hon. members have. This chap says that as a result of the large increase in the cost of living over the last two years, he has had to request an increase. He has to furnish a car or a truck, gas, and work six days a week. As he says, these carriers are not entitled to have an increase for a two year period. I just wanted to bring this to the attention of the Postmaster General because I feel he is a man who will look after the interests of the ordinary people. I sincerely feel that his department should take another look at the situation and at least pay a living wage to these mail carriers, because that is not being done at the moment.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I first want to offer my congratulations to our new Postmaster General. It is said that we always get a good job from a new broom and I am sure, after listening to his able opening remarks tonight, that we can expect action in the Post Office Department. I for one think we need some action in that department. I feel that for too long the post office has looked upon itself as a crown corporation which is supposed to end up, shall we say, in the blue. Our post office was designed to give service to the public. Their main function should not be to balance their books.

By and large, the people who work for the Post Office Department are amongst the finest civil servants we have in Canada. A great many of them have worked long years for miserable wages. They have not had bargaining rights. I am not one who pushes for bargaining rights for these people. I feel that our appreciation of the wonderful service the Post Office Department always renders should make us keep their working conditions so far ahead of their demands that they will be scratching their heads trying to decide the new working conditions they should request. In fact, if we did our job as legislators in a democratic state, particularly where money matters are concerned, the need for over-emphasizing unionism would be quite unnecessary.

We know that the postal employees of Canada found it necessary to strike, and people are always arguing whether or not a strike can be legal. In my opinion a strike is never legal. I believe a strike which is justified should have never been made necessary in the first place; a strike which is not justified is unlawful and a travesty of democratic rights. I say again that it is up to us—and the lead, of course, must come from the Postmaster General himself—to see that his great department is given a square deal.

With regard to the design of post offices, we can be penny wise and pound foolish when we resort to minimal designs. Canada is a young and flourishing country, and if we are to build post offices at all, then, like mounted police barracks, they should be a showcase. They should be of the finest both as to architecture and as to utility. Every citizen in Canada uses the services of a post office. Some of the small, square brick buildings which fly our flag out front make me shudder. It is very poor economy to build one of these miserable little boxes, because ten years from now they will be entirely out of date. They have never been beautiful and in many cases they are not even useful.

I also do not think that the staff and the people using these buildings are consulted enough as to design. We are inclined to go to architects, and architects are not always right. Sometimes they have futuristic ideas, and I am sure sacrifice usefulness of a building to their own particular conception of what is new, fine and beautiful. I have spoken to the staffs of several post offices in my own district. They are miserable little places.

I beg the Postmaster General to take a personal interest in the designing of post offices and to consult the staffs who have to use them, wherever possible doing away with the idea of minimal standards. I would rather see five post offices beautifully built than ten which will never be useful and are certainly not beautiful.

The same thing can be said for the design of stamps, Mr. Chairman. The original cost of designing a postage stamp is very small indeed, when you consider the fact that a minimum of 18 million copies of most stamps is run off. I would prefer that the artists be Canadians, of course, in every case. I do not think there is a more universal advertisement for Canada than beautiful postage stamps. In 1930 we put out a 50-cent stamp which used as its motif the Bluenose. This stamp has been rated at more than one international competition as the most beautiful stamp in the world, and I do not see why a return to that standard could not be made.

In this direction Switzerland is away ahead of us, and a great many nations with much less wealth and prestige in the world shame us in the general design of their stamps. Again, I think our young and active Postmaster General could take an interest in this matter. I might point out that right here in Ottawa are two very fine organizations he could consult. I sometimes think it best to go outside the department if the designs of stamps are not up to the old standard; and I can assure the Postmaster General that they are not.

I would suggest to the minister that experts in all phases of philately are to be found in the Recreational Association of the Civil Service. Then there is the Ottawa Philatelic Society, one of the oldest philatelic societies in the world, with experts on Canadian stamps as members. These people would be glad to give the Postmaster General the benefit of their intimate knowledge of this subject.

While on the subject of postage stamps I should like to suggest that in the very near future we might give our native people a shot in the arm by putting out a set of stamps in their honour, such as a different stamp for each tribe of our native people, including the Eskimos. Perhaps we could issue them in the order in which the treaties were signed, or something of that nature, in order to cover Canada from coast to coast. I am sure the design would be very appealing, especially now that our native people are taking their proper place as honoured and fully-participating citizens both in their country and ours.

Talking time is somewhat restricted on this matter, Mr. Chairman, and I do not want to take up any more time of the committee. However, I should just like to make this point. There are 265 federal members of parliament. I would suggest that the Postmaster General would break new ground if he were to use them on every occasion when matters arise concerning the post office department. This department has perhaps suffered over the years, I think, from partisanship; but for the general good of the public and the provision of better postal service I think a lot could be done if the Postmaster General were to consult us on local matters.

For example, about seven years ago I knew a post office would be needed in my home town, so I got in touch with the Post Office Department and suggested that, as they would be building within the next few years, it might be a good idea to buy some land, which they did. The land for which they paid $4,000 has not yet been built on, but you could not buy the same land today for less than twice that amount. I suggest that this type of co-operation with hon. members of this house is available to the Postmaster General in 265 constituencies in Canada. Therefore I should just like to ask the Postmaster General to break new ground and to take advantage of people who are willing to co-operate with him to the greatest extent.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I am anxious to comment on the post office estimates as they have been presented to the house for the year 1966-67. I have spoken each time that the post office estimates have been brought forward in the past four years, but more particularly I wish to speak tonight about the estimates of the Post Office Department because of the strike which was forced on the Canadian public last summer.

In making these remarks I wish to state that I was entirely on the side of the striking employees and could find no fault in the action they took. There are upwards of 20 members of parliament in the Toronto area. When the strike started in Toronto I went down and spoke to the strikers, telling them I would bring some matters to the attention of the House of Commons at the first opportunity. Two other Liberal members from Toronto also expressed support for the strikers in the city. However, I will not mention their names, because I cannot see them in the house tonight and I have not asked their permission.

I wish to state flatly that those men and women who found it necessary to go out on what some called a wildcat strike last July had every justification for their actions. I mentioned that many of them were forced to live under circumstances which were a discredit to the Canadian government. I say this because they were government employees. I have listened intently to the presentation by the Postmaster General of the figures for the past two years. He made reference to the estimates which are to be found in the blue book. In the year ending March 31, 1966, the Post Office Department showed a deficit of $11 millions. I congratulated the then Postmaster General when I spoke on July 17, 1964, and I congratulate the present Postmaster General, the hon. member for Longueuil, as I speak tonight, on the fact that they are now taking cognizance of the valuable services rendered to the Post Office Department by other departments of government.

For many years the Post Office Department was subsidized by other government departments, such as the Department of Public Works, which owned many of the post offices in which postal services are enjoyed by the general public, but for which the Post Office Department pays no rent. The Glassco report drew attention to the self-evident injustice of such a situation, and since then the Postmaster General has made an obeisance in recognition of the fact that services were indeed being rendered by other departments. Having taken cognizance of those services they point out that the total over-all deficit for the last year of operation was $11 millions.

Mr. Chairman, there are two ways of arriving at this deficit. One is by including among the expenditures of the department sums which do not need to be included in the post office estimates. Second, it is possible to arrive at a deficit if you do not charge enough for the services which are rendered. Then, if there is a deficit, you can tell the employees: We cannot afford to pay you what you require in order to live in a decent way, and we have the figures to prove it.

If hon. members will turn to the blue book for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967, they will find on page 365 a paragraph setting out the various approximate values of major services not included in the estimates of the department. They include contributions to the superannuation account by the Department of Finance, $9,438,700; contributions to the Canada Pension Plan account from the same department, $2,856,500; employees' surgical-medical insurance premiums, by the Department of Finance, $1,137,000. Take these three items alone and they will come to a total of approximately $13 millions. Include them in the post office figures and you can come up with a deficit of $11 million and tell the employees: We cannot raise your pay because we have an $11 million deficit.

I declared in July, 1964, and I repeat tonight, that we need not have a funded superannuation account or funded pension plan in order to pay pensions to the employees of the Post Office Department. When an organization such as the government of Canada has power to tax, it can pay superannuation out of current account and it can pay pensions out of current account. This is a bookkeeping entry, and set out in the blue book it can create an apparent deficit where none exists. The figures can then be used as an excuse for telling employees that their pay cannot be raised, thus forcing them to strike.

Another way of strengthening the statement that the department cannot afford to pay its employees proper wages is by failing to charge enough for the services which are being rendered. I regret to say, after reading my remarks made on July 17, 1964, when I was commenting on those post office estimates—that is, a little more than 22 months ago—I know of no single suggestion of mine which was advanced at that time which the Post Office Department has accepted. This is some kind of tribute, I suppose. The department not only paid no attention to any particular suggestion, it ignored the entire group. I hope that a little more attention will be paid to the suggestions I made in July, 1964, now that the cabinet has had a strike on their hands and the Canadian public has been greatly inconvenienced as a result.

This wildcat strike, in certain areas, particularly in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, would not have been necessary had there been sufficient revenue coming into the post office to cover the cost of increases in the remuneration of its employees.

I drew attention to some of the unfair practices which prevailed in the setting of postage rates two years ago. But when I spoke in July, 1964, I did not make any mention of the fact that no zone rate is imposed in this country, except in the case of parcel post. If a magazine is printed in New York city and sent to a subscriber in San Francisco it may cross eight postal zones in the United States, and the advertising content of the publication pays an increased postage rate depending on the distance which the magazine or newspaper travels. This is nothing but a fair imposition, and this practice should be adopted in Canada.

A zone rate of postage has been advocated in respect of periodicals in Canada for more than 40 years, to my personal knowledge. Why should a publisher of a magazine in Toronto, be able to mail his publication to Victoria at a rate which is exactly the same as he would pay were he mailing it to Oakville, six miles away? Why should a publisher in Montreal be able to send his periodical to a city in Alberta at the same price he would pay to send it to Lachute?

The government controls the Canadian National Railways. If a customer ships anything by freight on the C.N.R. he pays according to the mileage traversed. If he sends anything by express he pays according to the mileage. If he sends a telegram through the C.N.R. system he pays in accordance with the distance the telegram goes. When a passenger travels on a plane belonging to Air Canada, which is a crown corporation, he pays according to the distance he flies. If he is shipping anything by air freight or air express, again he pays in accordance with the distance his goods are to be moved. People using the telephone system pay according to the distance over which they call. If hon. members are going through certain of our provinces where a government telephone service is in operation they will find that the provincial governments have rates which vary according to the distance called.

It is an established fact that the further you travel the more you pay—the further you ship, the more you pay—except in the postal service of Canada. If you want to mail something from Toronto to Vancouver the cost is the same as if you mailed the same thing from Toronto to Newmarket.

Why cannot we introduce a zone postal system and increase the revenues from second class mail to the point at which we shall not need to tell post office employees that they cannot be given the money to which they are entitled because there is no money in the till?

I am not opposed to collective bargaining in the slightest. I have favoured collective bargaining all my life because I think that owners have an advantage over employees because they are better established financially. But simply to state that it is intended to allow employees to take part in collective bargaining is begging the question, because if the employer can point to an $11 million deficit he can tell the collective bargaining agents: "I cannot pay you any more money because I have not got it. True enough, you have a collective bargaining agency and I am happy to deal with you as a collective bargaining agency, but I have not got any money to pay you."

The government is in a position to get that money. I heartily endorse the comments of the member for New Westminster. I have a high regard for him not only as a man and a gentleman but as a working, practical newspaperman whom I have known in the publishing business for many years. I endorse the comments he made tonight with regard to periodicals which come into this country, which we take all around this nation and do not get a cent of remuneration for. Then we wind up saying to our postal workers that we have not any money to give them.

In 1964 I spent considerable time referring to these periodicals published in the United States, France, Great Britain and Denmark, which are sent to subscribers in Canada. The nation where the publication is mailed retains 100 per cent of the postal revenue received, but when that periodical crosses the Canadian border the Canadian taxpayer hauls it any distance necessary for nothing. The rough idea is that for every subscription to a Danish newspaper or magazine that comes into Canada there is a Canadian periodical going to Denmark.

Figure it out for yourself, Mr. Chairman. With 20 million people in Canada and the population of Denmark somewhere around the 4 million mark, what likelihood is there going to be of a counterweight between Canadian periodicals going to Denmark and Danish publications coming here? But we have this international convention which we are always told cannot be altered for three or four years, because the convention only meets every five years.

I personally know that for 30 years publishers in Canada have demanded of Canadian governments—the Mackenzie King administration, the Bennett administration, the St. Laurent administration, the Diefenbaker administration and the present administration: In the name of heaven let the Canadian taxpayer have some relief. Let the Canadian taxpayers be compensated by these publishers in foreign lands who send periodicals into this nation and, once they reach our border, we have to carry them without cost to the points where the subscribers reside.

How we can expect the post office employees to put up any longer than 1966-67 with that kind of thing is beyond my comprehension. The post office employees are looking into the revenues of this department. They are not satisfied, as they used to be in the past, to be told, "There is a deficit, and therefore no money for you." The post office is rendering a valuable service and should be gathering a revenue from the users of that service that will compensate for the service performed.

I have here in my hand the official Canada Postal Guide giving postal rates, and I wish to deal with a subject on which I spent some time in 1964, 22 months ago, but about which nothing has been done since. I ask why do we carry—> —weeklies, fortnightlies and monthlies published in any place having a population of not more than 10,000, to the extent of a free circulation of 2,500 copies to regular subscribers and news dealers within 40 miles of the place of publication free?

This refers particularly to what are known as small country weeklies, and if we are going to carry them free how can we be expected to increase the remuneration of the employees of the department? Because we cannot increase the remuneration of the employees we have a strike, and people start to scream that the post office workers strike should not be allowed, because their work is vital and necessary. It is vital and necessary, but they should be compensated properly for the vital work they are performing.

I said in 1964, and I repeat again tonight, that if a small merchant in a small town, where there is a small weekly, wants to send something by mail to someone on a rural route he has to pay to send it, be it toothpaste, tobacco, or whatever it is that the customer has telephoned for, but if the local newspaper publisher is favoured with a subscription from a farmer on the same route he does not have to pay because 2,500 copies of his paper are carried free within 40 miles radius of the place of publication.

Surely the small weeklies are strong enough financially to pay for the services rendered to them by the Post Office Department? I wonder how well hon. members know the ownership of these small weeklies. Many hon. members think of them as something turned out by the local printer, who is having a struggle to make ends meet. Have they ever stopped to realize the number of small town weeklies owned by multimillionnaires and by multimillion-dollar publishing houses?

There have been three little weekly papers sold in central Ontario since Christmas time. The owners of those three papers today are multimillionaires, but the Post Office Department is carrying 2,500 copies of their papers free of charge on the outdated basis that the local publisher cannot afford to pay the ordinary rate. In point of fact some of these owners I am speaking about can more afford to pay the proper rate than the Post Office Department can afford to carry their newspapers for free. I cannot imagine a single publisher of a small weekly in Canada today, in 1966, writing an editorial endeavouring to justify free service on 2,500 copies of his publication, particularly when we are faced with postal employees walking out on a wildcat strike for higher wages.

The hon. member for Norfolk and the hon. member for Portneuf referred to the compensation that is paid to couriers on the rural routes. That has been a crying shame for years. It is unfortunate that these routes are put out on a tender basis. The people who tender to become rural route couriers today have to figure out every possible means of submitting the lowest price if they want to get and hold a contract. They take their family car and write its capital cost off against family pleasure in order to quote the lowest rate possible.

In many cases they are part-time employees in other fields of endeavour, and they tender to become rural couriers at the lowest rate in order to add up three or four sources of income to make a living wage. Surely the Post Office Department knows what it costs to operate courier cars per mile over the kinds of roads that prevail in the areas served, and over the kind of ground they have to traverse, be it gumbo, macadam, straight gravel or whatever it is.

Surely the Post Office Department knows what would be fair compensation for these courier routes, and should engage men or women to carry the mails on them at a living wage, and not on a competitive tender basis.

I often think, and I am sure many hon. members who saw the cartoon, must also think of the aviators in the air force flying at something like 600 miles an hour in one of the modern planes, with the pilot saying to the navigator, "It gives you a great sense of safety and satisfaction to know that every part in this plane was purchased at the lowest possible tender price."

If we would only pay according to the service that is given to us—I am speaking now of the rural route couriers who give faithful, dependable service—instead of asking them to cut prices and corners, we would not have the couriers continually protesting about the unsatisfactory remuneration they receive. I am certain that no small weekly newspaper editor is going to try to justify free service for his publication, knowing that the rural route couriers operating out of his local post office are not getting a satisfactory wage because of the expenses incurred in delivering his newspaper free on rural routes. Dealing with the rates charged by the post office, I remember the former hon. member for Port Arthur, Douglas Fisher, making several speeches in the house regarding the unfair rates in the department, but no attention was paid to his comments, any more than is paid to mine. But of course these rates give the grounds on which it is possible to tell the post office employees. "We have not got the money. Therefore we cannot pay you the increased wage you think you are entitled to"—and which the Canadian public would support, if the employees were able to make a nation-wide presentation of the facts to the Canadian public. Why in the name of heaven should a Canadian periodical that is printed once a week have to pay three cents a pound to be carried across this nation, whereas a monthly publication can get the same service with a charge of 1¾ cents a pound?

[Mr. Cowan.]

Is any man in this House of Commons able to justify today the fact that the Toronto Star Weekly or papers of that nature published in Canada have to pay three cents a pound while publications such as Reader's Digest which is a great Canadian periodical, owned by people in Pleasantville, New York, pass through the mail at 1¾ cents a pound? That magazine is bloodsucking the Canadian publishing industry in an advertising way, in addition to contributing to the post office deficit to the point that we tell the postal employees we cannot pay them any more money.

The rates which are being charged on commercial paper have been exposed more than once. I know of no justification for a special rate being paid by the biggest industries in this country, known as a special commercial paper rate. Two years ago when I spoke on this matter I received a letter from the Postmaster General pointing out that the special rate granted on commercial paper, such as monthly invoices, was quite proper because there was a government act to cover it. I have heard in the past of government acts, and there are some of them on the statute books now, which cannot be justified by the facts of life.

Simply a reference to a government act does not make an unfair rate a fair rate, particularly when you have the protests of the employees to the effect that they are being asked to work for wages that are unjustifiable in their view, and which would be unjustifiable in the view of the public if the Canadian public knew the situation. I would not be speaking at all tonight were I not provoked by the fact that the postal employees are not being paid according to the services they are rendering but according to the revenue of the Post Office Department, and that revenue is not properly calculated.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, may I clarify one thing. There is no relationship between the profit or deficit of the department and increases in salaries of postal employees. Salaries are based on duties performed. Right now these salaries are being looked at by Treasury Board and the pay research bureau in an effort to establish classifications for these people. With collective bargaining there will be a much better opportunity for the postal employees to bargain through strength against strength, and this will balance the bargaining in respect of increases. I repeat again that there is no relationship at all between the profits or deficits of the department and increases in pay of the employees.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, that is the best defence one can make for carrying periodicals free of charge in the postal service, I suppose; but I still argue that if the Post Office Department was being compensated for the service it renders to the people who make use of that service, namely the big publishers and small publishers of the country, the revenue would be there with which to compensate the employees, according to the services they render. I do not believe the compensation for a postal employee should be based on what a lighthouse keeper on the Atlantic coast receives, or on what a railwayman does on the line between Edmonton and Prince George. I think they should be compensated for the work they do according to the service they are rendering, and this service should be paid for by the people who are making use of it. It is largely the publishers who create the big deficits in the Post Office Department today.

I have advocated before that these papers which come in from across the border should pay according to the service rendered. This can be calculated in the same way we calculate the payments in respect of the parcel post rate across the country. I do wish that the rate charged for daily newpapers, weekly newspapers, monthly and semi-monthly publications were based on the service rendered to the publishers, and not on some hypothetical figure somebody has dreamed up as being what the publishers would be willing to pay. Why should the millionaires who publish the agricultural papers in Canada which go out on the rural routes be granted a cheap rate, while the couriers there are complaining about their wages. These papers are published by the McConnells of Montreal and Siftons of Winnipeg. The publishers should pay according to the service rendered. When they do, then the department will be able to pay the postal employees a just and proper wage. I only hope that in the study he is making Judge Montpetit will look into the revenue side of the Post Office Department, as well as the operations of the department. In my opinion the operations of the department are well nigh perfect. There is no more loyal body of employees in the Canadian civil service than there is in the Post Office Department. I know whereof I speak because I dealt with them personally for a period of more than 30 years. The Post Office Department can be proud of the service rendered by its employees—the many thousands —under very trying circumstances and without proper compensation.

Mr. Madill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few personal observations concerning mail carriers in the rural areas. My remarks will be brief and I hope constructive.

I should like to recommend that the department make an annual review of all rural mail contracts if during the fiscal year the cost of living and the cost of operating an automobile in the transport of mail have increased. We all are aware of the increase in the cost of automobile insurance, the cost of gasoline, the cost of maintenance of a car, and the initial purchase price of an automobile. Regardless of the amount of dedicated service a mail courier may have given, his mail contract automatically is put up for public tender every four years. If a lower tender is submitted, invariably the contract is given to the lowest bidder. This does not provide any incentive to those who wish to give good service. This means that a rural mail carrier is a little timid when he submits his contract for renewal. He is almost afraid to ask for a raise, in case he loses the contract. The only other method he has is that if his contract has been renewed for two years he can apply for an increase. This is the only assurance he has that he might get an increase over the four-year period.

In essence it is necessary to acquire a raise in this way in order to avoid losing a contract. Quite often I see older cars being used and I wonder whether they would pass an inspection in respect of highway safety. They use these cars simply because for financial reasons they cannot afford to drive better cars. I do not think this is any asset to the Post Office Department. The department should issue a plate which has on it "rural mail carrier" and make it mandatory that all mail carriers have it on their car when they are transporting mail. This would identify the carrier to the rural public using the highways and byways, and would be a safety factor, because the pepole would realize that this car would be stopping at mail boxes.

There are no fringe benefits attached to rural mail carrier positions. They have no pensions and little security under present conditions. They must subsidize their income from other sources because their income from the carrying of mail is not sufficient to support themselves and their families.

Another recommendation I think has merit is that they be provided with some kind of uniform which they could wear during their postal services. They would be in this way easily identified and would have some prestige in the eyes of the public.

I trust the minister and his department will give full consideration to my recommendations, and I hope that some of them will be accepted and put into being.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I never thought I would be here, after listening to the remarks of the hon. member for York-Humber, in a position to agree with what he said. However unbelievable it may be, that has happened tonight and I find myself in agreement with him. He said that he supported the work stoppage or strike carried out by the postal workers of Canada last year. I also was in agreement with that strike and I am amazed that there has only been one in recent years, because the conditions under which they work and live are deplorable.

The minister said in an interjection while the hon. member for York-Humber was speaking that once collective bargaining was established postal workers like other government employees will have the right to negotiate in respect of work conditions and pay. That may be true, but it is also true that there is now a commission headed by Mr. Justice Montpetit making an inquiry into the grievances of postal employees. We must all accept our share of the responsibility for these poor conditions, and I do not think that the government or the parliament of Canada can be proud of the fact it required a work stoppage to force the appointment of a commission to look into postal workers' conditions.

The conditions under which postal workers have been forced to work for many years, their wages, hours of work and holidays are almost unbelievable. These employees, as well as others in government service, have not had the right of collective bargaining, which means that they had not been able to sit down with the government to talk over their grievances, or bring their desires to the attention of public officials. I find it hard to understand how past postmasters general, and the present Postmaster General, with whom I have had some very satisfactory dealings, have not been aware of the kind of conditions that exist. Indeed it is hard to believe that these people were only able to force the government to appoint a commission of inquiry by striking.

I have a memorandum in my hand presented to Mr. Justice Montpetit by the Ottawa local of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, a copy of which I am sure has reached the hands of the Postmaster General. I should like to read the first two paragraphs of this memorandum which appear below the heading "health and welfare", and the subheading "building conditions". They read as follows:

> We firmly believe that if proper hygienic conditions prevailed in the Ottawa post office, there would be a marked decrease in sick leave, and that personnel would have a greater incentive to perform their duties. A higher morale would exist. This in itself would be to the advantage of the department, thus causing production to increase and contribute to a better service to the general public.
> It is a disgusting fact that standards in the Ottawa office are in a deplorable state. Lunch rooms are inadequate and some are cluttered with lockers, storage cabinets, etc. Garbage receptacles are not properly maintained or cleaned. Proximity of washrooms to the lunchrooms in some instances is certainly not conducive to pleasant or hygenic meals.

I could continue to read from this memorandum, but surely those two paragraphs are sufficient to indicate the situation that exists right here in Ottawa. The minister could easily look into these conditions by taking a five minute walk from this building, and I find it hard to believe that these conditions could exist here in the capital city.

No private industry in the province of Ontario could expect its workers to tolerate these conditions and I am sure that the health authorities here in Ottawa and the Department of Labour in the province of Ontario would close down such an operation within 24 hours of the discovery of such conditions.

It seems to me that the Postmaster General does not have to wait for the report of Mr. Justice Montpetit to do something about this situation. He could and should act now. The situation which exists even now is deplorable and would not be tolerated by any other department. We have been and are living in a condition of relatively full employment. Employees in both government and private industry know that they can change their jobs, and in some cases take advantage of this situation by not giving a fair day's work. I have talked with members of parliament who are not satisfied that their secretaries do a reasonable day's work. I do not know of any other place where an employer who is dissatisfied with his employee can fine his employee $5 per day because of a mistake he has made or because of dissatisfaction with his work.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): The situation will change under the new act.

Mr. Orlikow: That may well be true, but the point is that these conditions have existed for many years. It is not good enough to say that after Mr. Justice Montpetit makes his report the situation will change.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): New legislation will make a difference.

Mr. Orlikow: The point is that new legislation is not needed to correct the situation. This kind of system was instituted unilaterally by a previous government. You do not need new legislation; the Postmaster General could issue a directive tomorrow that this kind of thing stop tomorrow, and it would stop.

• (9:40 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Do it now.

Mr. Orlikow: "Do it now" is a very good slogan, and I suggest to the Postmaster General that he adopt that slogan and do it now—not later, because there never was any justification for this kind of disciplinary action, and it certainly cannot be justified in 1966.

One of the reasons for the strike was the salary paid to postal workers. I am not concerned whether the strike was legal or illegal, because if there ever was a justifiable stoppage, it was the stoppage of the postal workers. Let us all admit the fact that year after year they had come to whichever government was in power, cap in hand, pleading for the most minimal changes, which pleas were ignored repeatedly by government. It was not until the stoppage that they got action.

I submit that the salary paid to postal workers has been, and is still, totally inadequate. In this day and age, for a married man to have to live on the wages which are still being paid to postal workers is a disgrace. I submit that the postal workers are entitled now to a very substantial increase in pay. The minister will say, and rightly so, that as soon as the collective bargaining legislation is passed, this matter will be negotiated. I say that we have to face the record, look at the facts and admit what we have done.

One of the complaints of the postal workers is that, while the government of Canada has passed a labour standards act which says that for all employees who come under federal jurisdiction there shall be a five-day, 40 hour week, and that those who work more than 40 hours in a five-day week shall be paid time and a half for overtime, postal workers are today working five and a half or six days a week, with no extra pay. I understand that letter carriers are required to deliver the letters on their route and receive no overtime pay regardless of the length of time it takes to deliver this mail. I understand that letter carriers work without any official starting time, without a coffee break, without a lunch period; and regardless of how long it takes to deliver their mail, they receive no overtime pay. Again, this question may be negotiated. But I say that a good employer does not need to have this kind of thing negotiated; a good employer would see that all workers were paid for the work they did.

There is one other matter with which I wish to deal, Mr. Chairman, before I sit down. This refers to the question of the appeal board. I speak about this matter specifically because of one particular case which I discussed with the present minister. It was the case of a postal employee in my own constituency. I shall not go into the details of what he did. Suffice it to say that the postal officials in Winnipeg dismissed him. He appealed the case, as he had a right to do, and an appeal board was set up. A three-man board went to Winnipeg, and the secretary of the Postal Workers Union went to Winnipeg to represent this man. The appeal board heard the case and brought down a report to the effect that, while what the employee had done was not proper, dismissal was too severe a penalty. The Civil Service Commission, or the post office—I am still not sure which one is responsible, because each blames the other—after a good deal of study ignored completely the recommendation of the appeal board, as under the present rules they have the right to do, and the man was dismissed.

I do not know how any organization, whether it be government or private employer, can have a good, healthy relationship with its employees if, having established procedures for appeal, it ignores the unanimous recommendation of an appeal board. Again, Mr. Chairman, I am sure this kind of matter will be straightened out following the passage of the collective bargaining legislation and negotiation between the postal workers and the government. But unless the government indicates that they are prepared to be a good deal more understanding of the problems of individual workers, and postal workers in particular, I think we will have a continuation of the difficulties we had last year.

I wish to deal with one more matter and then intend to sit down. I hope that this Postmaster General will have a fresh look at the whole question of surveillance of postal employees. I have some idea, although I have not the detailed knowledge of the Postmaster General and his deputy, of the problems which arise as a result of the possibility that there may be theft, as may be the case in any large group of employees who handle money and valuables. At the same time I think it is very disheartening, and this is putting it mildly—I am searching for a word and cannot find it—and a terrible thing for the morale of postal workers, or indeed any workers, to know that no matter what they are doing and where they are, whether they are at work, in the lunchroom or in the washroom, somebody—Big Brother—will be looking down on them.

Not many of us would like to live under those conditions. It may be that some surveillance is necessary. If it is necessary, this kind of thing should be worked out with the employees organizations. I think the employees organizations are just as interested as the government and the Postmaster General to see that the workers do the job they are supposed to do. As far as I can find out, the method being used was instituted completely unilaterally by government, with no consultation. I have looked into this matter fairly extensively, and not one of the postal workers union executive officers has agreed that they were ever consulted. They say they were told the government was instituting the system of surveillance which is now in operation but none of them agreed that they ever approved of this method.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

It seems to me that if this system is necessary—and I am doubtful that it is—it should be revised after the most careful and frank discussion with the representatives of the employees. I hope we will never have a repetition of the stoppages which occurred in the postal service last year, but we will unless there is a tremendous change in the thinking and approach of not just the Postmaster General—because postmasters general come and go, and in recent years they have been coming and going very quickly—but there has to be a complete revision in the thinking of the top officials of the Post Office Department. Unless there is, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that we can have the kind of service from postal employees to which the people of this country are entitled.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I believe I should say a few words in answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North because I was very much involved in the postal strike or the discontinuance of work last summer. First of all, I should like to say that I believe in the three years this government has been in power, considering the three bills which are now before us, it has done more with respect to collective bargaining in the civil service than any government in Canada's history. I believe these three bills provide collective bargaining, with the choice to the civil service organization of the right to strike or the right to compulsory arbitration binding on both the government and the civil service The new public service employment act and amendments to the Financial Administration Act have created an entirely new environment in which the civil service of Canada can work.

I regret, as everyone regrets, the stoppage of work by postal employees last summer. This grew out of a system that developed in Canada whereby the conditions of employment and ultimately the wages of civil servants in Canada were determined arbitrarily. It was a wrong system whereby you had arbitration by the Civil Service Commission before you had consultation between the employers and employees. I suggest that the new acts which are presently before this parliament will entirely correct this situation. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North will look at this new legislation carefully he will find there is provision whereby the conditions of employment of people throughout the whole civil service of Canada will be governed, not department by department, but in another way through the collective bargaining process. I think this is a great step forward. It is one of the most progressive steps that has ever been taken in employee-employer relations in Canada.

My hon. friend has spoken about the difficulties that the employees in the Post Office Department have had. I sympathize with their difficulties, and I sympathized with them during the last work stoppage last year. I think this government acted completely responsibly, based on the system within which the government had to operate as a result of legislation passed by this parliament. In three brief years we have taken the steps necessary to correct this situation. I think the Postmaster General has reacted toward the postal employees very sympathetically. However, the real protection for the postal employees and for all civil servants, lies in the legislation which is presently before this house, the collective bargaining legislation, the public service employment act and the Financial Administration Act.

I think the difficulties which were raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North will be taken care of by this legislation. It seems to me that when he gets up and starts crying at this point, when the government has introduced legislation to correct these difficulties, it is like somebody standing up now and saying that some government did something which was improper back in 1918 or 1916. I believe this government has taken every responsible step toward correcting the inequities and improprieties in dealing with the civil service in Canada. We have introduced these measures on a completely impartial basis. The bills can be considered and amended impartially by all the members of the house. When they pass this House of Commons we will have the best civil service legislation, and the employees of the government of Canada will have become public servants and will be in a position second to none in the world.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister permit a question? Do I understand from what he has said that he thinks the government that is in power should not criticize the mistakes of previous governments?

Mr. Benson: No, all I was saying was that the hon. member for Winnipeg North is not a member of the government in power. I do not mind people criticizing what has happened in the past in the public service in Canada. All I am saying is that since this government was elected in 1963, by the appointment of the Heeney Commission and the introduction of these three pieces of legislation we now have before parliament, it has taken a step which will provide legislation and rights for civil servants in Canada which are second to none anywhere in the world.

Mr. Barnett: May I ask the minister one question? In asking it, may I make it clear I am not quarrelling with the presentation the minister made about the bills that are shortly to come before us. Assuming those bills are going to be approved by this house, and the process of collective bargaining becomes effective, would he not agree that from an employer's point of view the processes of collective bargaining might be a lot easier if some of the grosser inequities of the past to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North referred were removed before the bargaining process began?

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a question before you answer that one?

Mr. Benson: Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Churchill: I want to stop the course of this inquiry. Are we not on post office estimates?

Mr. Benson: With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to answer this particular question.

Mr. Starr: If this fight is going to be carried on between the government and the N.D.P. when we are trying to co-operate, then we will have to reconsider our position. We have time being taken up by argument between the government and the N.D.P. and we cannot keep on co-operating if this situation exists. I would hope that this would stop so that we can go on with the business before us. Otherwise, we will have to have an allocation of time so that we get our proper share of time based on the number of members we have in this house.

Under the circumstances, I call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Barnett: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Starr: Ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Barnett: As a member in this house, I object to—

Mr. Starr: You can object all you like.

Mr. Barnett: —somebody questioning my right as a member to speak on matters that are under discussion, namely the estimates of the Post Office Department.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Barnett: I should like the minister to answer because I consider that to be a bona fide question.

Mr. Howard: You will never get to be leader that way.

Mr. McIlraith: Notwithstanding the irritations of the last few moments, I wonder if we could not agree not to see the clock for a few minutes in order to finish the estimates of this department, because there is a good program of work for tomorrow.

Mr. Churchill: We are not considering the estimates of the department, we are talking about three bills that are not before the house.

Mr. McIlraith: I qualified my appeal to the house by saying, notwithstanding the irritations to progress in the last few minutes, will hon. members consider trying to clear up this department tonight, because there is a great deal of work for tomorrow. Perhaps we could get directly to the Post Office Department and it would take a very few minutes.

Mr. Starr: If we are prepared to pass the estimates of this department in the next 20 minutes, we will carry on.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Starr.]

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be brief.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, if we are to carry on I should like the minister to be given the opportunity of answering the question he was about to answer when he was interrupted by the hon. member for Ontario.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Moose Mountain.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to make a few remarks on the estimates of the Postmaster General now under review. Before continuing—

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: No, it is ten o'clock.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, would you allow the hon. member for Moose Mountain, whom you recognized as having the floor, to continue?

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I wish to point out that it is ten o'clock.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I am asking whether the hon. member would still co-operate for a few minutes, in case we could finish this evening.

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) has been speaking long enough.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I would ask the hon. member to co-operate.

Mr. Gauthier: He has spoken for ten minutes.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): If he does not wish to co-operate with him, I would ask the hon. member to be kind enough to co-operate with me.

[English]

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, before continuing with my remarks I should like to associate myself with other hon. members who have expressed their appreciation of the comprehensive review given by the Postmaster General of the work of his department. I should also like to express the hope that he has a reasonably long tenure of office in this department. I am thinking, of course, of the recent succession of ministers who have held the office, which I feel has not contributed very much to the efficiency of the Post Office Department or helped the morale of the very capable civil servants who work under the minister. It has also given concern to the public of Canada at large.

Previous to the present government's taking office, when the government which was headed by the Leader of the Opposition was in office, we took under consideration changing the trend which had developed in the provision of postal premises, particularly those in western Canada. Up to that time large sums of money were allocated to the large urban centres of Canada much to the detriment of the smaller areas in the west which, even if they only had small populations, were contributing to the tax structure of the country and felt they had been neglected.

We reversed the trend which had existed over the last number of years and, under the leadership of Hon. Howard Green, former minister of public works, working in conjunction with the then postmaster general, Mr. Hamilton, and the hon. member for Ontario as minister of labour, we established an extensive program of post office construction under the winter works program, especially in these rural areas. These ranged in cost from a nominal $18,000 to $25,000, which was not too heavy a drain on the federal coffers but provided a long awaited and much needed improvement to our postal facilities, particularly in the west.

As far as I can determine at the present time, this worth-while program has been retarded or reduced in our part of the country by the present government. The indications are that only seven post offices will be constructed in Saskatchewan this year, if I have the figures aright. This is a far cry from the program originally in existence for a number of years, and it is not good enough. We have between 1,100 and 1,200 cities, towns and villages in the province of Saskatchewan, so looking at it on a proportionate basis seven post offices in this fiscal year is not sufficient.

In the period 1958 to 1963 post offices were constructed at points in my particular area such as Frobisher, Redvers, Fillmore, Carlyle and Maryfield, which are typical rural points. They have greatly appreciated the benefit of these new postal premises, which have certainly enhanced the postal services to the public in these areas. Estevan, the only city in my area of Saskatchewan, is very appreciative of the postal delivery service which was recently established under the present administration. I, as member of parliament, and officials from that area had received many representations for several years before a survey was made.

New postal premises should now be constructed at such places as Torquay and Creelman, to name only two in my riding. Many requests have been made by representative citizen bodies in these towns for the construction of crown buildings to provide better postal services there. May I suggest that the Postmaster General reconsider the applications from these areas and make provision in this fiscal year for the construction of the required post offices, even though he may need to include corresponding amounts in supplementary estimates.

Mr. Herridge: First, I should like to congratulate the minister on his appointment. He is a young man with a bright future, and we are all looking forward to the benefits we can expect from his administration during the months ahead. I also wish to pay tribute to the staff in Ottawa and the post office staffs throughout the country, particularly to the mail carriers who deliver the rural mail and do this monotonous work day after day, often unrecognized by the people they serve. I am glad to note that this socialized branch of government is performing good service throughout the country. It is a model for the extension of this principle into other departments.

I wonder whether the minister or any of his officials has given any thought to the question of the postal department becoming a crown corporation. There are some countries where the post office is run as a crown corporation. If consideration has been given to this matter I would be interested to know what the result of these studies has been with respect to the efficiency of a crown corporation, compared with a department of government.

I wish to say a few words about post office employees. It is obvious that last year the employees had to take drastic action to bring their complaints to the attention of the government and of the public generally. I listened with great interest to the remarks made by the Minister of National Revenue and I was very pleased to hear of his hopes with respect to the legislation to be introduced. We all know that the situation of the postal employees needs to be considerably improved. We hope that by the passing of the legislation providing for collective bargaining, their salaries will be increased and their working conditions made easier.

In this connection I wish to put in a word for the postmasters of small offices. Only two or three months ago my attention was called to the salaries paid to the postmaster in an isolated district in my riding. I forget the exact amount but I thought at the time it was an extremely small salary to be paid for the work which had to be done—not exactly the volume, but the hours during which the work required attention. I trust that when the position of the employees generally is being considered similar consideration will be given to postmasters, especially those in smaller post offices where there is no opportunity to earn the revenue which is earned in some of the larger offices.

A word with respect to the design of buildings. The hon. member for Athabasca referred to this subject. I have always been interested in building design. In recent years the Post Office Department has had a program for building post offices in smaller communities, and I suggest further consideration be given to the design of these post offices. They should be designed to meet the environment in which they are being built. If built on the prairies, I can well understand the California bungalow type with a flat roof; but in mountainous country a different type of design is more suitable if it is to be in harmony with the surrounding buildings. When travelling across Canada all post offices one enters in small communities should not be identical one with the other.

Also, further consideration should be given to the installation of air conditioning in climates where it is required, particularly on account of the lint which I understand comes from the handling of mail bags.

I am a bit of a stickler so far as protocol and courtesy are concerned, and there is a great lack of both in our modern society. I believe many of our ills would be overcome if our people were trained to have good manners, but we are living in a world where good manners are almost obsolete. People push by you without saying pardon, and they even occupy your desk in this house and you have to stand beside them for ten minutes in order to take your seat.

I am referring to the matter of flying the flag. It is becoming quite prevalent in many of the small buildings of the Department of Public Works that the flag is raised, stays up over night, and remains flying until it is tattered, at which time they send for a new one. I suggest that the minister would be well advised to issue instructions that the flag be raised at sunrise and lowered at sundown, which is the custom in our country.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): They are not my buildings.

Mr. Herridge: The minister rather laughs at my suggestion, but I suggest there should be a certain amount of self-discipline within a department with respect to our flag. I was not one who voted for it, but it is our flag. I respect it, and I suggest that such a direction be sent out to the janitors of all post offices in Canada.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): They are public works employees.

Mr. Herridge: Then I suggest that the Minister of Public Works be tipped off.

Consideration should also be given to the scale of remuneration paid to rural mail route operators. I know in some cases where contracts, because they are difficult to perform, are fairly reasonably remunerated. But in other cases where there is considerable bidding, contractors have undertaken jobs which they cannot afford to perform. There are one or two in my riding and they deserve consideration.

The public should be informed of what a rural route contractor has undertaken to do and where he is supposed to deliver the mail. On occasions, in heavy snowstorms a contractor passes by mail boxes because he cannot get his vehicle close to them. The public along a mail route should understand what a contractor has undertaken to do. Post office patrons should be informed of the type of mailbox they should build to suit the convenience of the department and contractor.

I have known a case where a man put his mail box up in a tree, and in such an instance it is quite unfair to ask the contractor to drive some distance off to the side of the road to put mail in the box. The swing-type box is more convenient. Mail boxes should be standardized. One sees all sorts of boxes along the routes.

An hon. Member: In Kootenay West?

Mr. Herridge: I have seen some strange things happen with the Post Office Department in Kootenay West. In one small office, which is not in operation now, the postmaster used to put in his own day at the office. Then he used to hang the bag for registered mail and the bag for ordinary mail on the post office door. The bus would come along about four hours later and pick them up. Over a period of many years this went on, but nobody stole the mail because they were all so honest in the part of the country I represent. However, that is not carried on at the present time because now we have more of a floating population.

I should like to say a word about stamps. I think the stamps issued by the Post Office Department have improved throughout the years, although we still are somewhat behind Indonesia, Switzerland, and countries of that sort. I think we should continue still to do our best to keep up with some of the underdeveloped countries in Asia.

In respect of the services provided by the department in larger and smaller centres, I suggest that it might be a good idea to have some of the senior officials within the district —say for instance in British Columbia the district superintendent or senior inspector —make a point of addressing organizations such as service clubs, labour bodies or other groups concerning the work and services being undertaken by the Post Office Department. I think by doing this we would add to the understanding by the public of the work done and the services provided by the department. I have been told that in other departments the senior officials are rather reluctant to do this, because they are almost afraid of stepping into the field of policy. I think the minister who now is searching for new ideas might draw up a set of guide lines on subjects which might be covered by senior officials when they address organizations such as Rotary clubs and the like.

I am not quite clear as to what is the function of the international bureau. I see there is an item in the estimates in respect of this. Would the minister explain what Canada's relationship is to this bureau and what it undertakes. I was going to say something about air transportation, but I see time is passing and my friends to my rear are waiting impatiently hoping I will get through as soon as possible, because they wish to take part in the ten o'clock show, which probably will not get started until 10.30. I should like the minister to explain why more second class mail cannot be carried at present by air. I am not speaking of periodicals. Why cannot more second class mail be carried by air than is being carried at the present time?

In conclusion I should like to suggest that the minister take advantage of the wealth of wisdom and ideas which are found in the ordinary member of parliament in this house when he visits a particular area, because quite often the member is closer to the problem than is the inspector who may be sent in from some outside point. However, we stand very firmly against any form of patronage and we know the minister agrees with us in this regard.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. Starr: I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Howard: What a nasty man, Mike. You get worse every day.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege in view of the remarks just made by an hon. member of this house, whose party has taken up most of the time we have been considering these estimates. In view of his remarks and the fact that some of our members want to speak we should now call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. member who wishes to speak could meet with me some time tomorrow and I could then give answers to some of his specific questions in relation to my department.

Mr. Barnett: I did not quite follow what the Postmaster General said.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I suggested that perhaps the hon. member who wanted to speak could meet with me some time tomorrow and make his requests in respect of my department so that these estimates could be passed tonight.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have been in this house long enough to know better than accept that sort of beguiling request from a minister, particularly when I am referring to matters of policy.

Mr. Starr: Let us call it ten o'clock.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I have accepted many suggestions made by other hon. members on other occasions.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we propose to continue the consideration of estimates, commencing with those of the Post Office Department, to be followed by those of the Departments of Industry, Defence Production, and Citizenship and Immigration, then the estimates of the Privy Council and Legislation. Tuesday we will begin by considering the second reading of the bill in respect of the organization of government departments, to be followed by resolutions and bills, of which there are four, relating to employment in the public service.

Perhaps I should add, if I may have the indulgence of the house, that there will be a problem arising regarding our consideration of estimates in that there is for the first time by the standing orders a limitation on the total time allocated. It seems that if there is to be a fair apportionment of the time allotted among the members of all parties, there will have to be some procedure worked out.

My purpose in mentioning this, Mr. Speaker, is to give hon. members an opportunity to think about how we can achieve this proper apportionment so that some members will not have more time at the expense of others. The time limitation is related to the total time allowed and not to specific items.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

GRAIN—PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.,—INCREASE IN ELEVATOR CAPACITY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this matter of the extension of grain elevator facilities in Prince Rupert, as I have done on many occasions in the past. On one of the earlier occasions the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) made some reference to what he called the distribution of a poison pen letter in western Canada, someone was kind enough to send me a copy of that letter and I should like to quote from it briefly. In part it states:

> From the year 1962 until the present time, Hon. Alvin Hamilton, in his role as spokesman for western agriculture, has been keenly aware of the need for improved elevator space and has pressed for this needed construction with initiative and persistence.

That letter was circulated by the Conservative party and I should like to inform this house that it is not a true statement. When the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was the minister of agriculture he wrote a letter to the Prince Rupert chamber of commerce in which he flatly refused to extend grain elevator facilities in the city of Prince Rupert. That letter was written in 1963. So I wish that the Conservatives, when they distributed this information, had taken the trouble to learn the facts.

The National Farm Union presented a brief to the government not long ago and in that brief expressed their regret that the government was not going to proceed with the extension of the grain elevator at Prince Rupert. I submit that their concern over the matter of grain movement is one which others of us should also be concerned about. The Prince Rupert grain elevator, by the designation of officials in the Department of Agriculture and the Board of Grain Commissioners, has been rated as the second most efficient grain elevator in the country.

In a report dated April 12, 1962, in which it was urged that the elevator be extended, the general manager of the Canadian Government Elevators stated that a far more efficient operation could be carried out at Prince Rupert than is possible with the present 1¼ million bushels capacity, if the grain elevator were extended. At that time we had an average cargo shipment out of Rupert of some 500,000 or 550,000 bushels on each ship. We have had shipments even larger than that to move. Unfortunately, with the limited working capacity of the elevator being 850,000 bushels, it is just not possible to have two cargoes of grain available at the same time; as a consequence there is delay in the shipment of grain through the port of Prince Rupert. This has required, of course, the Canadian Wheat Board to place strict control upon the movement of grain into Rupert because they do not want cars sitting up on the track, unloaded, waiting for the grain to be screened and stored ready for shipment.

There is another serious problem in Rupert because of the limited facilities, and this involves the cleaning of grain. The report of the general manager of Canadian Government Elevators deals with this matter by pointing out that it caused some delay in the loading of ships at the port and as a consequence they had to employ casual labour and overtime workers to a far greater extent than would otherwise have been necessary. In his report he intimated that in the year 1961-62 a saving of approximately $75,000 in overtime and casual payrolls could have been realized had the additional space been available.

The Conservative government when in office refused to deal with this matter, even though extended facilities were recommended by Canadian Government Elevators. The Liberal government has now taken the course of refusing to proceed with the elevator because of what it classifies as inordinately high bids on the cost of the elevator, while at the same time they are prepared to pour millions of dollars into increased construction projects such as the centre of the performing arts and Expo '67.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that before this situation deteriorates to an even worse state than it has, the government should take some definitive action and proceed with the construction of this elevator at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for again bringing this matter forward. I also thank him for the tribute he paid to the facility at Prince Rupert. I have had the opportunity of visiting Prince Rupert and seeing this very excellent handling facility in operation. It is well known, of course, that it is a very efficient operation and has handled nine times its capacity within the season. I think that is probably a record for this type of elevator. I would remind the hon. member that the government has not suggested cancellation of this extension. As was indicated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) the extension of facilities in Prince Rupert was simply deferred and should be proceeded with at a later date.

• (10:30 p.m.)

Mr. Howard: Will the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I regret to inform the hon. member that the period of time allotted to him to put his question has elapsed. There is another period of time during which the minister or his representative can reply. I do not believe that questions can be asked of the parliamentary secretary at this time?

Mr. Howard: Because of time?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): These are the rules which govern our procedure at ten o'clock.

Mr. Howard: I will ask him tomorrow.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—REQUEST FOR TEXTBOOKS IN FRENCH LANGUAGE

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, further to the question I put to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) concerning bilingualism at the C.N.R., which the Chair ruled out of order, I now want to ask the minister, or his representative, if he is aware that at the C.N.R. bilingualism is trampled under foot.

The best proof I can give of this, is the letter, dated May 11, 1966, from the president of the C.N.R. signed by R. T. Vaughan.

I had written to him about Mr. Blackburn who complained about having failed his signalling examination because he was a French-Canadian unilingual. Mr. Vaughan wrote the following letter in reply, barely two days ago.

He answered me:

> Some time ago, you have exchanged correspondence with Mr. Gordon about Mr. Jean Marc Blackburn. The latter was complaining that he had been fired by the C.N.R. because he was not sufficiently conversant with the English language.

I swear to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the same requirements were applied to all English speaking people who are unilingual in the civil service, only about 18 per cent of the personnel would remain throughout Canada.

Is that total bilingualism such as was preached all through the election campaign by the Liberal party? One set of laws for French speaking Canadians, another for English speaking Canadians; one law for the rich, another for the poor. Such, too, is the reason for all our differences since 1867, to save the remains of confederation the meaning of which a certain English speaking group has to this day failed to grasp fully.

French Canadians are required to study with English text books in order to survive and if a voice is raised in protest, the other group seems shocked and asks: What do those French Canadians want?

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

We are constantly treated with contempt and when we refuse to knuckle under any longer, obstacles are raised to the advancement of our people.

For instance, on the Saguenay-Lake St. John train that plies between Dolbeau and Chicoutimi, we have been asking the government for four years now, to have French speaking personnel on a train serving a population about 98 per cent French speaking. I take that train every Friday and on numerous occasions, I have noted that the employees spoke only English and I even had to act as interpreter on the train because the employees were unilingual.

Well, believe it or not, that is taking place on trains which serve a population which is 98 per cent French Canadian.

I would like to see the reaction of those good westerners if anyone ever tried to put on their trains a French Canadian who did not speak a single word of English. And some people talk about the province of Quebec being revolutionary minded.

Who knows but that the makers of that revolution are some English speaking people who have never understood and still do not want to understand anything about the discrimination which we are facing today.

Mr. Vaughan says very candidly in his letter that the examiner, Mr. Bissonnette, is perfectly bilingual, whereas all the books used for the courses are in English only.

They put handcuffs on us and say: Be happy, at least your jailer speaks your language.

If that is what the government calls cooperative federalism, you may be sure that we will fight it to the death.

Mr. Vaughan also says in his letter that Mr. Tardif wrote in French to Mr. Blackburn to inform him that his services were no longer required for signalling.

Well, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to telling a French Canadian: step aside and make room for someone else, then another French Canadian is used to do the work.

At least, Mr. Vaughan is sincere when he writes me:

With regard to the signalling courses, I must tell you that they are the same throughout the network and that the manuals are in English only.

And Mr. Vaughan concludes:

Therefore, we would have to translate not only the courses, but also the changes resulting from technological progress.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

What is the government waiting for to do something? Another centennial? For a hundred years, we have been told: "it is necessary", "it would be better"; promises are made from one election to the next, but nothing is ever done. And what reason is given for that? Listen to Mr. Vaughan himself:

Because of the high cost of such an undertaking and also because of the lack of competent translators, we are unable to do it for the time being.

Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, a vice president of the Canadian National Railways who dares to write those lines about the high cost of the translation work, when the president of the C.N.R. is paid $75,000 a year, over and above a special train that is provided to him for his travelling. When I think, Mr. Speaker, that they come and speak about the cost of translation. Well, in all that, the vice-president brings forward the argument of the high cost of translation as concerns respect for confederation. And what is more—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I regret, but I have to interrupt the hon. member, because the time alloted to him has now expired.

[English]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have been assured in the discussions with the officials of the Canadian National Railways that the gentleman referred to in this letter was not dismissed because he was unable to speak English, but rather that he simply did not qualify for the position. He was offered an alternative position which he has accepted.

The signalling courses given by the C.N.R. are conducted along the same lines as similar engineering courses offered by l'École Polytechnique in Montreal. The course is given in both English and French, using however, an English language manual. As is the case at many educational institutions in Quebec, while the text of the manual is in English, instruction is given in French.

This is not to say that the technical manuals are not available in French from the C.N.R. or that the company is not progressing in its bilingualism policy. Only today the company issued a press release, and if the hon. member will permit me I should like to quote from the release.

Canadian National is intensifying its efforts in developing a comprehensive and practical business and technical railway terminology in the French language adapted to North American conditions . . .

The company's translation bureau will be expanded with the addition of a terminology section and which hereafter will be known as "Linguistic Services". Its function will be to gather material and to make it easily available to the employees and to the customers of the railway.

• (10:40 p.m.)

"The lack of an adequate and easily accessible French language railway terminology adapted to North American realities is becoming a serious handicap especially when long range goals are considered", said Mr. Gordon.

"We have encountered this problem in our extensive customer and community relations and the need is felt daily in such vital activities as employee training, and employee communications. Consequently the objective of linguistic services will be to facilitate and encourage the use of French as well as English as a working language for both oral and written communications within the Canadian National system."

Linguistic services will report to the vice president and secretary of the company, Mr. R. T. Vaughan and will be headed by Frederic Phaneuf until now special assistant to the vice president St. Lawrence region.

Mr. Phaneuf is well known in public relations and translation circles and is currently president of the Society of Translators and Interpreters of Canada.

The decision to create a Canadian National linguistic service arises from a recommendation of Canadian National permanent committee on bilingualism which is under the chairmanship of Mr. Maurice Archer, vice president research and development. Canadian National linguistic sections will work in close conjunction with similar organizations in the federal government, in the Quebec provincial government and in other provinces, where established, as well as in private industry.

UNITED NATIONS—PROPOSED JURISDICTION OVER HIGH SEAS AND OUTER SPACE

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Before orders of the day were called today I addressed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs asking him whether the government had under consideration a proposal which had been advanced that the United Nations be given ownership and jurisdiction over the high seas and outer space. Mr. Speaker ruled that this question was more suitable for the order paper, but since I felt it involved a matter of great national and international importance it seemed to me we should know as soon as possible whether our government had this matter under consideration and learn, if possible, what its views are.

The organization which made the report to which I referred is the commission of the United Nations Association of the United States of America. In its 17th annual report, this commission, which has been set up to promote the establishment of peace, put forward in some detail a proposal to extend the jurisdiction of the United Nations in this area. The report states that in the commission's view the United Nations should declare the title of the international community to the high seas and outer space, for six reasons.

The reasons given are as follows: to avoid conflicts between nations over these areas, to keep their resources from being wasted, to prevent their military use, to head off their contamination, to make sure all nations could benefit from their resources, and to provide the United Nations with an independent source of income. The final point refers to the resources of the high seas and I suppose at some future date outer space could be used to help provide the United Nations with an independent source of income.

This report, which was signed by 70 members, including scholars, writers, editors, union leaders and business executives, all members of the United Nations Association in the United States, has, in my view, pinpointed matters of grave concern not only to Canadians but to all the peoples of the world, and matters which are relevant to the internal problems of this country.

I make particular reference to questions related to the resources of the high seas, with which I, and other hon. members have become much involved from the viewpoint of the future of the fishing resources of Canada. The house will recall there was much discussion in this connection when the bill to extend the territorial seas and fishing zones of our country was introduced.

I think that the fact that this proposal is put forward by a responsible body in the United States, expressing a viewpoint in many ways contradictory to that which is held by the United States, particularly in relation to the fisheries negotiations currently taking place in Seattle, makes it a matter worthy of immediate consideration by this house and we should have some statement from the government on its views.

Not only are our own resources involved but also what is known as the cornerstone of our foreign policy, namely support for the United Nations. Certainly this idea is related to our involvement with the costs and maintenance of the various UN peace keeping forces.

This commission has suggested that if the United Nations could derive revenues, what we in Canada would call royalties, from leasing resources of the high seas, those funds could be used by the Secretary General for the maintenance of a peace keeping force enlisted directly with the United Nations. It is suggested that a force of some 2,000 men would be appropriate for this purpose, immediately available under the direction of the Secretary General of the United Nations for dispatch to trouble spots, until such time as contingents from member nations could be gathered and sent to aid it.

This proposal is one which should be of great interest not only to hon. members but to Canadians generally. It is also one that should be brought forward for formal study by the General Assembly of the United Nations, as is suggested by this commission.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are grateful to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) for having raised this interesting question. Twice in the course of his remarks he has stated that this proposal was put forward by a responsible body. It is important that no one be misled.

To this date the government has examined only the press accounts, but it has been clearly ascertained from these newspaper stories that the commission making this recommendation is an entirely private body, part of the United Nations Association of the United States of America, and not a committee of the United Nations organization.

It is hoped that eventually we shall be able to give careful consideration to its suggestions when we see a first-hand account of its annual report which we have yet to receive. We have noted, however, that as mentioned by the hon. member one of these suggestions is United Nations ownership of both the high seas and outer space. While it is true that the General Assembly has passed resolutions treating outer space in much the same manner as the high seas, for instance in declaring that it was not subject to national appropriation, a proposal that ownership of outer space and the high seas should be vested in the United Nations obviously would have far reaching legal implications and consequently would require very thorough study.

FISHERIES

B.C. SALMON—REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as the salmon discussions in Seattle concluded yesterday, I wish to make a brief statement in order to inform the house as to the results of the deliberations.

While some progress has been made in the discussions in Seattle in recent days through clarification of points at issue, I regret to say that we have not, in our opinion, moved substantially toward an acceptable solution of our problem. Canada has always believed the seaward net fishing limits should be used as a tool to minimize the catching by one country of salmon bound for the rivers of the other. It is to that end that we have presented at meetings held in Washington last fall, in Ottawa in February and in the last three days at Seattle proposals for the inward adjustment of the limits both in Alaska and in British Columbia.

We were prepared to accept further curtailment of Canadian fisheries in the interests of better management and of equity. We believe that the over-all effect of the Canadian proposal made at these meetings would be advantageous to both countries through better management resulting from Canada and the United States each harvesting their own stocks separately.

The new line we proposed for the Alaska area was comparable to the line established along the B.C. coast in 1957. As the United States representatives have refused to accept our proposal, we have no alternative but to state that we reserve the right to extend Canadian fisheries seaward where appropriate to correct the inequitable situation which exists under present conditions. It is with regret that we feel compelled to take such a position, as we would have preferred the course we have presented, that is the inward adjustment of seaward fishing limits to minimize the interception by one country of salmon bound for the other. We still believe that in the long run such an adjustment would have been beneficial to both countries.

I must add, however, that we have agreed at this meeting to initiate a research program designed to give more information on the movements and intermingling of the stock harvested in Alaskan and Canadian rivers. Such research, we hope, will assist in arriving in the future at solutions to the problems now arising from interception by one country of salmon bound to the other. While we recognize that the problems we have been discussing were complex and difficult, we still believe that discussions must be resumed in the near future on broader aspects of the subjects we have been raising at these particular meetings.

At the same time I wish to make clear that the Canadian government has no intention of authorizing salmon net fishing on the high seas.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for giving us in advance a copy of the statement he has just made. We are not surprised by the attitude taken by the United States government in view of their lack of co-operation at the meetings last fall in Washington, and in view of a public statement made by a certain powerful U.S. senator.

Just last week the fisheries committee passed a resolution which we hoped would strengthen the hand of the Canadian negotiators. It is very discouraging to note the attitude taken toward the principle that the country where the salmon originate has a certain right to them. If the United States will not grant this right to us, what inducement will there be to the Canadian people to continue the rehabilitation of our own species?

I am encouraged by the minister's statement that the Canadian government reserves the right to extend Canadian fisheries seaward where considered advisable. I hope these are not mere words. For many years the United States government has threatened to retaliate, in the event of such a step, by closing our market for fish in the United States. This is a specious argument, because there is a world shortage of fish. If the United States were to cut off our imports they would be cutting off their nose to spite their face. I hope the Canadian government will show courage in this respect.

I am pleased there is to be further research with regard to the origin of the salmon. I notice that the minister did not say the Americans denied they were catching our salmon. There is ample proof that they are. Whether further research will do anything more to convince them, I cannot say. I hope the Canadian government will take a firm and bold stand on this matter. The people of Canada and of British Columbia will demand it.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): We regret that the minister should have been forced into the position of having to make a statement such as the one to which the house has just listened. The United States has a history of destroying natural resources in the process of their exploiting. They destroyed the salmon runs on the Columbia river by building dams all over the place, and now they are seeking to exploit and destroy salmon runs in Canadian territory by the use of fish traps. Wanton destruction of Alaskan salmon runs was carried out by the United States, and now they seek to do the same sort of thing here by refusing to negotiate as far as homebound Canadian salmon are concerned.

It is indicative of their attitude that a two-faced policy is followed in this respect on the part of the United States authorities. On the one hand the Alaska government has spoken most belligerently to the Japanese fishermen, ordering them to keep out of the Bristol bay area and cease fishing for what they call red salmon homebound for Alaskan waters, on the ground that prior right rests with the United States. On the other hand an entirely different view is taken in discussions with Canada when the same principle is involved. There has been concern about the surf line or net fishing limit ever since 1957, when the United States refused to carry out the principle of an understanding which had been reached at that time and extended its net salmon fishing limits three miles outward into the ocean while we kept ours close to shore.

There is unanimity of opinion in Canada in the fishing industry, in the unions, in government circles, certainly in parliament and in the fisheries committee upon this question. The feeling is unanimous that the United States surf line in Alaskan waters should be drawn in so as to ensure that American fishermen are not catching and exploiting our homebound salmon. This has been happening to such an extent that in some Alaskan waters between 60 and 70 per cent of the total catch consists of Canadian salmon coming home to spawn. Exploitation of this sort can lead to nothing less than the destruction of the resource.

We very much regret that the discussions in Seattle have broken down. I do not think we can dignify what took place by the name

"negotiations" because it is obvious that the United States government did not want to negotiate anything, as is indicated by its arrogant and domineering attitude at these meetings and its refusal to modify this position.

• (11:20 a.m.)

This leaves us with no alternative, I submit, but to carry out the earlier pronouncements of the Canadian government, which means there is no agreement about net fishing limits. Consequently we have to either eliminate those limits or move them seaward so Canadian fishermen can engage in the same sort of practice, regrettable as it might be, to give our fishermen the opportunity to catch as many of these United States or Alaskan bound salmon as they can. Perhaps this sort of regrettable action will force the United States into a reasonable position, where they will sit down to discuss and negotiate this particular question fairly.

May I say one more word. If we are going to engage in additional research, I suggest to the minister that he use the services of the Canadian navy in conducting that research.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): In the absence of the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson), who is on the committee, I should like to say that we also regret very much that the minister, who is very conscientious and hard working in this business of preserving the fishing industry, had to make this particular statement. I have reason to say this, because I have had problems in connection with fishing and lumbering in my constituency, and I must say that the co-operation I have had from the minister has been very good indeed.

Many salmon have their birth place in the Cariboo constituency, as in Skeena. We realize that a great deal of work is being done in this particular area by the Canadian fisheries department to preserve these fish. Unfortunately it seems that we are not getting a fair deal in connection with the catching of the fish we are raising in Canada. I hope the minister will be able to carry out the program he has suggested, and that we will be able to negotiate with the United States to get a working arrangement under which the maximum amount of fish can be produced in British Columbia and caught by our own fishermen.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN DEPORTATION OF YUGOSLAVIA SAILORS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. It has to do with two Croatian youths, Ante Ivancev and Slavko Smoljan, both 22 years of age, who escaped from their ship and have been ordered deported from Canada to Yugoslavia. Has the minister received representations in this connection? These two young men, to use the words of the letter to the minister, are consumed with a burning desire to escape the chains of communism and enjoy the fruits of freedom. Will the minister under all the circumstances, these young men being of good reputation, continue the policy that has been followed in the past, namely that no one except a criminal or communist agent shall be forced against his will to return to communism when he desires freedom within our country?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): These two young men, Mr. Speaker, were supposed to be deported on the 19th. They were not deported because representations were made to me and I wanted to review the cases. These cases will be reviewed as soon as we have the decision from the immigration court of appeal on two other similar cases. For the time being the matter is pending and we are reviewing the cases.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I appreciate the fact that the cases are being reviewed. Would the minister say whether there is going to be a change in the practice of the past under which those who have sought freedom in our country from communist dictatorship shall not be forced to return, if they are men of good reputation? This policy has applied to people of all racial origins who live behind the iron curtain.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I do not exactly know what policies were followed in the past, but probably the right hon. gentleman is aware that last year more than 900 people jumped ship in Canada. A certain number of them were Yugoslavian sailors. Therefore I think we have to be careful to see that if these men are interested in coming to Canada the channel they use is not that of jumping ship. We have to apply the regulations.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, we have no evidence at this stage that men who are deported to Yugoslavia—and a few of them have been deported—are persecuted. The Department of External Affairs has mentioned to us that there is no such persecution as at this moment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—RECOGNITION BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question with reference to the visit of Mr. Arthur J. Goldberg, United States ambassador to the United Nations, who visited Ottawa this week.

May I ask the Prime Minister whether either he or the Secretary of State for External Affairs told Mr. Goldberg that the Canadian government would have been disposed to recognize the government of mainland China long ago had it not been for United States resistance and the possibility that such a move would have damaged Canada-U.S. relations?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned I gave Mr. Goldberg no such indication that that was the reason behind the policy we have adopted in this matter. Our policy has been based on a number of factors, and that kind of gloss on our talks, Mr. Speaker, is quite unwarranted.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. Does that answer of the Prime Minister mean that press reports to this effect are completely without foundation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is out of order.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—PROTESTS AGAINST IMPORTS OF EGGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, I should like to put my question to his parliamentary secretary.

Could the parliamentary secretary of the Minister of Agriculture tell us whether the minister has examined the telegram sent by the president of the Catholic Farmers Union, Mr. Sorel, telling him of his concern about strange importation of eggs into Canada and whether it is his intention to take steps to protect Canadian egg producers?

Mr. Speaker: I find it rather difficult to decide whether this question is really urgent. May I suggest that the member for Chapleau place his question on the order paper?

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to discuss this question at ten o'clock, at the first opportunity.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the house leader, or in his absence the Prime Minister, whether it would be possible for the government to bring forward the resolution regarding the Canada Assistance Plan. Because this plan is being injected into provincial election campaigns, I think all members of the house and the public should be able—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making a speech instead of asking a question, and that is entirely out of order.

Mr. Johnston: Then may I ask whether this plan will be brought forward rapidly.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we should like to get it before the house just as quickly as possible.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has received any word as to how the negotiations in the dispute in Montreal are getting on, and whether the Prime Minister has received a report on these negotiations from His Honour Judge Lippe.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask the Acting Minister of Labour to deal with that question.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Acting Minister of Labour): I have discussed this question this morning with the officers of the Department of Labour. Judge Lippe has been in almost continuous discussion with the parties since his appointment 48 hours ago. Because he is bending every effort to settle this question, the main expectation now is that both parties will support him in his serious efforts to obtain a settlement of this dispute.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will these negotiations continue, without any breaks, until a settlement is reached?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would expect that Judge Lippe would want to press ahead with his efforts at mediation. Although I can give no assurance that the discussions will continue unbroken, I am sure that is the objective of the department and of Judge Lippe.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—HEARINGS ON PROPOSED TOLL INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which is of national importance and urgency. Will the minister assure the house that before any added tolls are charged on the St. Lawrence waterway, the matter will be brought to this house for discussion?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you would permit me once again to point out that under the law made by this parliament the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority has a responsibility to recommend tolls to the government. Before that recommendation is made, the authority is going to hold public hearings with respect to some suggestions as to tolls which it has already made public. Until the public hearings have been held and the seaway authority has made its recommendations to the government, the matter is not before the government. As soon as it is before the government it will be given the promptest consideration.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a question arising out of the previous question. The minister knows, of course, that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority announced that it would propose a 10 per cent increase in tolls. That was announced some weeks ago, I believe around April 20.

Have representations been received from the wheat pools in western Canada against any such increase which, according to Mr. Gibbings, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, would mean that the western farmers would have to pay 1¼ cents per bushel more than today?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the minister received representations from the western pools as to the effect this will have, if the increase is allowed?

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe there have been some representations made to me, sir. As I do not believe that someone belonging to a court of appeal should seek to pass judgment before the original court has had its hearings, I have suggested that people concerned should make their representations at the public hearings.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to have had a clearer answer.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. In view of the statement this morning that before any increase was permitted there would be public hearings, and in view of the question asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, would the minister inform us whether those hearings have been held with respect to the 10 per cent increase?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman, I think, can read as well as I can. Public hearings have been announced, and they will be held. After they are held the seaway authority, by reason of its duty under a law passed by this parliament, will make its recommendations to the government. Until that time the government, under the law made by parliament, has no function in this matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We should like to have you as an ally instead of against us.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the government has received the recommendations of the seaway authority, and before it makes its final decision as to whether to accept those recommendations, will there be an opportunity to discuss this matter in the House of Commons?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very unwise for any minister to answer hypothetical questions. We have responsible government in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The process of responsible government, in the technical sense of that term, will be followed in this matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the technical sense.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this change in the toll structure could be authorized by order in council, would the minister answer the question put to him by the hon. member for Kindersley?

Mr. Pickersgill: The answer is no.

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Welland): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the extreme importance to the St. Lawrence seaway operations and to the city of Welland of the proposed Welland canal by-pass, can the minister state if the government has made any decision with regard to the building of the proposed by-pass?

Mr. Pickersgill: The answer, sir, is yes. A favourable decision was made yesterday. The government intends to authorize the seaway authority to proceed.

I wonder, sir, if on a question of privilege I might say that in response to the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) I may have misled the house. I did not mean to say anything in reply to him except that I was not prepared at this moment to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Kindersley, because it was a hypothetical question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a new definition for "no".

An hon. Member: On the question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I rule that there is no question of privilege.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR BILINGUAL TELEPHONE OPERATORS

[Mr. Douglas.]

Would he personally intervene and see to it that the House of Commons telephone operators are bilingual, so that we do not have to wait five or ten minutes to obtain the services of a French speaking telephone operator?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the representation of the hon. member will be noted by the responsible party, that is by the person who is responsible for this state of affairs.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Prime Minister himself to intervene. This change has been sought for several months now, and nothing has been done yet.

Mr. Speaker: As I have said, the representations of the hon. member have been noted and I do not feel that the question is of such urgency as to be in order at this stage.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN MONEY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest this question is argumentative.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF CANADIAN FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence and ask him if the government has taken a decision to remove from France in this calendar year all or part of Canada's contribution to the NATO forces. If so, have arrangements been made for other bases to accommodate the Canadian squadrons that are in France?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Here is your chance.

Mr. Hellyer: There is a terrible temptation to say something, Mr. Speaker. However, no decision has actually been taken yet.

[Later:]

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the unilateral decision taken by the leader of France, in which he has decreed that all the forces of NATO countries be invited to move out of France, I should like to ask the minister whether it is the intention of this government to remain within the NATO alliance; and will we retain our forces in Europe?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated already that Canada joined with the 14 other countries in NATO to reaffirm its belief in the alliance and in the NATO organization. The extent of our participation in Europe is a matter which naturally is being considered by the government and will be the subject of some negotiation and consultation in the NATO council. But let there be no misunderstanding; Canada, along with the 14, adheres to NATO and regards the reasons for its existence as being of vital interest to this country as well as to the other members of the alliance.

Mr. Russell H. MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Are the reports correct to the effect that West Germany has offered Canada locations for its NATO bases?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The matter of the relocation of Canadian forces now occupying two bases in France, as my hon. friend the Minister of National Defence has indicated, has not yet been settled. This likewise will be a matter involving decisions of the government of Canada and negotiation with the country where Canada proposes to relocate.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask the minister whether the bases which presently are established in France will be maintained on the continent, and will they be maintained as separate entities or integrated with other establishments?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, the whole question still is subject to negotiation. I would not want any conclusions to be taken from the answers to any of the questions which have been asked today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

EFFECT OF U.K. STRIKE ON CANADIAN EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister in a position to advise the house of the adverse effects, if any, on Canadian export trade as a result of the present maritime strike in the United Kingdom?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we know that it would be of considerable consequence were the strike to continue for very long. We are doing a number of detailed analyses. If the strike continues I should be glad to report to the house on this question at a later date.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED EXCHANGE OF MILITARY OBSERVERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I hope I will get the answer from the correct "Paul".

Has the United States government indicated to the Canadian government that in an effort to establish better relations between the eastern powers of the Warsaw pact and the western powers, that part of a bridge mentioned by Secretary MacNamara when he was recently in Canada, should be the exchange of military observers between Warsaw pact nations and NATO nations? Has this proposal been put to any of the NATO governments and, if so, what has been the reaction to it?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There has been no proposal put to us along those lines by the U.S. government, and I am sure there will not be.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put his question?

CANADA PENSION PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the government giving consideration to the injustice being perpetrated upon employers under the Canada Pension Plan where, in certain instances, employers do not receive refunds in the same way as employees?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is argumentative.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I wish to reword my question and ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether consideration is being given to allowing the employer the same advantages as the employee with respect to refunds in certain instances under the Canada Pension Plan.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this aspect of the Canada Pension Plan is under the administration of the Department of National Revenue, and possibly the question should be directed to the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Starr: Well, this is a new switch, so I will ask the Minister of National Revenue.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this is no new switch. I have been asked this question several times before and, as I have stated before, we are examining all means of dealing with this problem but to this point we have not arrived at a satisfactory solution. When a solution is arrived at it will require changes in the legislation in order to bring it into effect.

[Mr. Choquette.]

Mr. Starr: As a supplementary question, if a solution is arrived at and changes are made, will they be made retroactive to the beginning of the plan?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest the question is becoming hypothetical.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

YUKON—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, in view of the fact that the house will not be sitting until next Tuesday, whether he has arrived at a decision with respect to the appointment of a replacement commissioner for the Yukon and, if so, would he make an announcement to the house?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

TELEVISION

QUEBEC—USE OF TELEPHONE COMPANY FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State.

Has she considered the offer of Northern Quebec Telephone Company Limited to bring television service, through its microwave network, to the population of Chibougamau-Chapais, from Rouyn or Lake St. John.

Can the Secretary of State now say whether she has accepted that offer?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Laprise: I ask permission to debate it at ten o'clock.

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED ASSEMBLY PLANT FOR RUSSIAN MADE AUTOMOBILES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Can he tell the house whether he is aware that a project for assembling Russian made cars is now materializing in Canada, and whether those plans are in line with his department's policy?

[English]

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I take this question as notice.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: That question is of a very general nature and should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss it after ten o'clock.

[English]

TRADE

POSSIBLE SALE OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would he report to the house on whether there have been serious negotiations between Japan and Canada in reference to the purchase of crude petroleum products from Alberta, which will promote a new pipe line from that area to the west coast?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is the same type of question as the one on which I have just ruled. Because it is of a very general nature it should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe I can make is specific, Mr. Speaker. Have there been negotiations between Japan and Canada with reference to petroleum products?

Mr. Speaker: The question may be more specific but the subject matter is still of a general nature.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—REPORT OF INQUIRY RESPECTING MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a specific question for the Minister of Transport in the hope that he will not evade it as he did yesterday. It is based on the Thompson commission report. Does the government agree with the finding of the Thompson commission that the overhaul and maintenance base of Air Canada at Winnipeg should be discontinued so far as jet aircraft are concerned?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the maintenance base at Winnipeg has never serviced jet aircraft; therefore that could not be discontinued.

Mr. Churchill: As a supplementary question may I ask the minister, in view of the recommendation of the Thompson commission that the overhaul and maintenance base at Winnipeg be not used for jet aircraft owned by Air Canada, what steps will the government take in order to fulfil another recommendation of the Thompson commission:

> A policy of decentralization of some Canadian government administrative or operational activities might enable the transfer to Winnipeg of a number of operations and activities which would have a significant beneficial effect on the Winnipeg economy and help fill the void without at the same time placing any economic burden on Canada at large?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will recognize that this question is argumentative. It is of the same type as questions asked yesterday which the minister answered, though perhaps not to the satisfaction of the hon. members who placed the questions, and I suggest that it should not be asked at this time.

Mr. Churchill: May I suggest to you, sir, that far from it being argumentative I based the question on the commission report. It is of urgent and important interest to the city of Winnipeg and the province of Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the arguments being put forth by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, but he will recall that a number of similar questions were asked yesterday by hon. members relative to the report, and a general answer was made to all those questions by the minister, an answer which I suggest applies today as it did yesterday.

Mr. Churchill: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the general answer made by the minister yesterday was:

> —which is a document of 175 pages, without appendices, and I think it would be terribly presumptuous on my part to attempt to summarize it.

He did not answer my question at all. He has now read the report.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is out of order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre want to submit a different question?

Mr. Knowles: It is a different question but in the same field, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Transport make a statement to the house at an early date concerning the government's attitude toward the Thompson report recommendations?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to make such a statement either in the house or before the committee on transport, whenever my estimates are before them. In the meantime I think it would be desirable for the government to give some consideration to the recommendations before giving hasty answers to hasty questions.

[Later:]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether in the course of his planning for the air force in the future he will keep in mind the availability of the overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg and the skilled personnel who might be very helpful in performing tasks on behalf of the air force in years to come.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, these considerations are always kept in mind. As my hon. friend knows, however, the actual supply of maintenance facilities for the air force is a subject for negotiation by my colleague the Minister of Defence Production.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Defence Production who is also concerned with regional development. Will he take note of the question I asked earlier of the Minister of National Defence?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I will take note of the suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACTIVITIES IN CANADA OF U.S. INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): This is not a hasty question, Mr. Speaker, because it was first asked on May 3 and no answer was given at that time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

It has to do with the question of whether Canadians shall be subject to F.B.I. investigation in Canada. I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has made it clear to the United States that policemen from south of the border cannot investigate in Canada alleged wrongs committed by individuals in Canada under the military laws of the United States. Has that been made clear, or what is the present position regarding this question?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It has been made clear, Mr. Speaker, and I am advised that there are no such interventions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Speaker, have no cases been brought to the attention of the minister in this regard?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said there have been no cases brought to my attention of the C.I.A. intervening in Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked about the F.B.I., not the C.I.A. Let us get our alphabet correct.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I beg my right hon. friend's pardon. I thought he was asking me a question about the case of the Esthonian who has brought suit in the United States against the C.I.A. He had asked me that question previously and I had not yet replied to him. My present reply was with regard to that question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, I see.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With regard to the question he asked me now, I will give that careful consideration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

FISHERIES

SALMON—PROPOSED EXTENSION OF NET FISHING LIMITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries arising out of a statement he made earlier today. Could he inform the house whether the government intends to exercise the right which it reserved to extend the net fishing limits seaward prior to the commencement of the coming salmon fishing season, if there is no change in the current United States position before that time?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make a definite commitment at this time. The Canadian delegation has not yet returned to Ottawa. I wish to discuss this problem with my deputy minister before making any further commitment.

AGRICULTURE

MANITOBA—REPORTED DISEASE IN CATTLE HERDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture. Has he received any communication which would indicate a rather severe outbreak of disease among cattle herds in Manitoba? If so, is there any possibility that action will be taken by the department?

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any communication. I will check with the minister's office.

TRANSPORT

APPEARANCE BEFORE COMMITTEE OF C.N.R. AND AIR CANADA OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, who nearly answered this question on two or three occasions. Does the minister know when the officials of the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada will be available for appearances before the committee on transport and communications? I ask this question now that the hard working committee is back from its unique trip out west, rested and ready to do more business.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you will permit me to stretch the rules a little and say how pleased I am, and how pleased I think members in all parts of the house should be, at what I judge to have been the excellent reception given to the committee on transport and communications all through its hearings in western Canada. These hearings were carried out in an admirable way and are a great credit, I believe, to this parliament.

With regard to the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada, I may say that almost every day I am asked by the heads of those companies when they can appear before the committee. Both seem eager to appear.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUEBEC—R.O.T.P. SERVICE BY STUDENT PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Following the numerous requests received from the various students associations in Canada about the Nelson case, does the Department of National Defence intend to revise its position and grant a one-year exemption to the president of the "Union générale des étudiants du Québec"?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member's question is similar to the one which was ruled out of order last Monday.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say this. The Nelson case has become urgent, because he must report to the air force on June 6 and the department must give an answer before that date, otherwise that will become an accomplished and irreversible fact.

Since there are barely two weeks left and the U.G.E.Q. is waiting to find out if the president's resignation should be accepted, I think that the Minister of National Defence should give an answer. I feel that the case has become urgent and that the minister should do something, or at least answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister is willing to answer, I will not object.

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): A reply to the telegram is going out today, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence.

If a reply or a telegram is to be sent today, can the minister inform us whether he intends to grant one year's postponement to the student Nelson?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the question raised by the hon. member is so urgent since he has received an answer. The minister told him that action would be taken and, under the circumstances, I believe the hon. member should be satisfied.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite satisfied, because I realize once again that parliament will be the last to be advised of government action while the public will be informed before us and I wonder whether the minister could say, yes or no, whether a postponement will be granted to the student Nelson? Why should we not be informed about this?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to send a copy of the telegram to my hon. friend this afternoon.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLIANCE BY HUTTERITE FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Do Hutterite farmers have to comply with the Canada Pension Plan?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for a legal opinion and an interpretation of the law. The question is not acceptable.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, may I paraphrase another question on the same subject. Will Hutterite farmers have to take out social security numbers?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the issuance of a social security number is not something which comes under my department. This comes under the Minister of Labour. I will be glad, however, to look into the matter raised by the hon. member and speak to him about it.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister tell us whether Hutterite farmers, as individuals, now are paying income tax?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is not urgent and, if it is acceptable, it should be placed on the order paper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESERVATION OF TAPE RECORDING OF FATAL EXPLOSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the history of the House of Commons. Perhaps I should direct it to the minister responsible for the Public Archives, or possibly Your Honour will give me a direction. Is it a fact that in connection with the sound system in this house a tape is made of our proceedings? If so, without lifting the ban against any current use of this tape, would it not be a good idea in the interests of history that the tape of what happened here on Wednesday, including the sound of the explosion that took place, be preserved and put away in the Public Archives, or kept in some appropriate way?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre knows that he cannot ask questions of the Chair; he also knows that he took up this matter with me. I am pleased to advise him that the suggestion he made has been acted upon, and that the tape in question is being preserved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PAYMENT FOR WORK ON VICTORIA DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Labour whether he has any answer now to the question I raised yesterday in respect of the actions of the British Columbia maritime employers association in seeking to deny to members of the longshoremen's union the right to enjoy Victoria Day at proper rates of pay, as provided for under the Canada Labour Code.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I did not have an opportunity to discuss this matter with the officers of the department this morning, but I assure my hon. friend that an answer will be given on Tuesday.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that Monday is the day in question, will the minister find out whether some intervention can be made today by the Department of Labour?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will do that.

FISHERIES

SALMON—CONSIDERATION BY U.S.-CANADA INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I know that sometimes there is a certain hazard involved in directing questions to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but I will take a chance in any event.

Mr. Knowles: One of the hazards is not that you will get an answer.

Mr. Howard: In view of the fact that there have been meetings this week, with another today in Washington of the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group, will the minister contact his counterpart in the United States, the Secretary of State there, and ask him whether it might be possible to raise the subject matter of the statement which the Minister of Fisheries made on motions, in order that these problems between the United States and Canada in respect of salmon fishing on the west coast may be discussed?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we would all agree that it would be a good thing for the Canadian delegation—which is a delegation of this house, not a government delegation—to raise this matter. My hon. friend says it is hazardous to ask me a question. I should have thought it was always fruitful to ask me questions.

Mr. Howard: I should like to ask a supplementary question. In this instance the answer I received does not bear out the latter remarks of the minister. I asked him whether he would contact his counterpart in the United States, and he has not answered that question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thought my hon. friend was asking me to mention this question to the Canadian delegation who are now discussing Canadian-American problems in the United States. In respect of that part of the question relating to my counterpart, I can assure my hon. friend that this question has already been discussed with him.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question period has now expired.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAOUETTE—REPLY OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY RESPECTING C.N.R.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The period allotted for the orders of the day is now expired.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday evening my colleague from Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) was discussing signalling courses of the C.N.R. and the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport gave the following answer:

> The signalling courses given by the C.N.R. are conducted along the same lines as similar engineering courses offered by l'École polytechnique in Montreal. The course is given in both English and French using, however, an English language manual.

My question of privilege is as follows: How can a French course be given with English manuals? I would like to see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) give special attention to statements—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Caouette: —such as that one.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret but I cannot accept the suggestion of the hon. member that this is really a question of privilege.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

1. Postal services including Canada's share of the upkeep of the international bureaux at Berne and Montevideo, $252,804,000.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, when we reached the termination of the discussion of the estimates of the department last night I was on my feet addressing a few remarks to the Postmaster General in connection with this years' estimates and the policies of his department. In spite of the fact that I have always found the present Postmaster General a very co-operative member of the government in respect of problems I have raised with him, I could not see my way clear to accept his suggestion that the matter I want to raise be dealt with between us in his office.

I have had a rather lengthy correspondence with the minister, extending from some time last December until March of this year, as a result of which I feel that this is a matter which can only be pursued further by airing it in public on the floor of this house. Were it not for that fact I might have been inclined to agree to his suggestion and not refer to this matter at this time.

There is one other matter which I intended to raise, but in my desire to co-operate with the hon. member for Ontario I shall refrain from doing so, except to say that it is a hardy perennial type of problem. I have discussed this on many occasions with postmasters general, and if the present minister cares to look back at past years' considerations of these estimates he will find that I have been concerned about the fact that while we have been boasting that we were the first in the world to establish an all-up mail service for faster delivery by air, this policy has been somewhat restricted by its application to main line carriers. Arrangements have apparently still not been worked out to make possible air distribution of mail to many smaller communities where lines are running. As I have pointed out, in one particular case mail that could be delivered in ten minutes by plane requires three weeks for delivery and the return reply.

The particular matter I should like to raise at this time arises from a situation which I have been wrestling with most of the time since I became a member of this house.

It is a situation in which a great many Canadians find themselves because of the nature of our country and the type of industrial development taking place. As a result many people are robbed of what I consider to be their basic right to public delivery of mail by the post office. I am referring to those who are required in the course of earning their living to go to places where living facilities are provided entirely by private companies.

I have had an exchange of correspondence with the minister on this topic in recent months with respect to one particular place. Perhaps I might refer to a letter which the minister addressed to me on January 13 of this year in which he said in part:

> I should like to stress that the establishment of post offices in company towns such as Benson Lake where the town is under the complete jurisdiction of the company is dependent on the willingness of the company to provide the necessary accommodation for postal purposes and the necessary staff to operate a post office.

The minister went on to explain that the Post Office Department does not directly operate the post offices in smaller communities but that the postmasters are responsible for the provision of accommodation.

> In this particular case we would certainly consider the appointment of someone other than the company if they were able to meet the requirements. However, inquiries and discussions with representatives of the company reveal that no one was willing to assume charge of a post office at that point.

[Mr. Barnett.]

I replied to that letter and expressed my disagreement with the position being taken by the Postmaster General. In a letter to the minister dated February 28 I said in part:

> I must reiterate my position that Canadian law should be such that official jurisdiction of the post office should extend to the point of delivery to individual Canadians wherever residential quarters of any permanence are established even though these may be owned and operated by a single private firm.

In reply I had a letter from the minister dated March 21 in which he said:

> I have noted your remark that Canadian law should be such that official jurisdiction of the Post Office Department should extend to the point of delivery to individual Canadian citizens wherever residential quarters of any permanence are established.
> In this regard I should like to quote Part 2 (b) of the Post Office Act—

The reference is to the section which defines "delivery". So far as I am concerned the minister missed the whole point I was making. He gave no indication whether he or the government would be prepared to consider making a change in the existing law, and while I thank the minister for drawing my attention to that particular section of the legislation I would point out that the Post Office Act is a public document a copy of which I have in my office. His reply of March 21 is certainly no answer to the question I had in mind, whether he or the government would consider correcting what I believe to be a basic injustice to individual Canadian citizens.

I do not intend to take the time of the committee by giving detailed examples of the kind of abuses of the right of individuals to receipt of mail which have occurred to my own knowledge. In this parliament, however, there appears to be an increasing and welcome concern about the rights and freedoms of Canadian citizens. I am not talking about survey crews of half a dozen men who move across the country, camp in tents and do not stay in one spot for longer than two or three days. I am contending that if there is a permanent logging or mining camp where living quarters are provided by the employer, Canadian law should be framed in such a way that it would no longer be up to the operators of the residential community concerned to decide at their own sweet pleasure whether they should enable those living in that community to have the benefit of a proper postal service. This is the issue and I feel we should have an answer from the hon. gentleman on this question.

I can refer to one section of the Post Office Act which the minister did not mention in his letter, section 8, where it is stated that the postmaster shall have the sole and exclusive privilege of collecting, conveying and delivering letters within Canada. I would argue that this should not only be his exclusive privilege but also his exclusive responsibility. I shall not enter now upon a discussion of what one hon. member some years ago called the bootlegging of mail in Canada but I am concerned, as I say, with the abuses which have been taking place in this area involving the right of Canadians to have their mail safely delivered.

I will give just one example. A number of years ago arrangements were made for the delivery of certain parcels to workers in areas where there were no liquor vending stores. The normal arrangement was to carry in the mail from the post office to the community concerned. But the whole arrangement was invalidated when the company concerned refused to carry this particular type of mail to the men living in the community, a logging camp.

An hon. Member: Cut off the booze.

Mr. Barnett: I said at the time that should an individual employee abuse his right recourse was available to the company but that it was improper and contrary to our concept of justice that any private organization should be able to deny to a citizen his normal right to receive mail addressed to him.

Mr. Douglas: Or to interfere with Her Majesty's mail.

Mr. Barnett: I am not sure whether legally or technically the company could be considered as having done that. The company told its employees: If you want to go 60 miles down the logging railroad to the post office, you can pick it up yourselves. But the men were entirely dependent on company transport in any case. I presented the argument but could not get agreement from the government at the time that there was technically any interference with the mail.

• (12:20 p.m.)

At this point I should like to remind the Postmaster General of the discussion we had in this house the other day led by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who painted a glowing picture of the possibilities for the future development of the far north. He described in some detail the resource possibilities of that area. I suggest to the Postmaster General that if this kind of development is going to take place much of it will come about through the establishment of the type of communities about which I am concerned.

This problem is not confined to one particular constituency or area of Canada but is one which will be of concern to members in every quarter of this house. If the present Post Office Act does not allow the Postmaster General, in the kind of situation I am describing where people are residing, to require a post office to be established and someone to operate it under his jurisdiction, then the act should be changed. Appropriate legislation should be introduced without further delay to rectify what in my view is a very longstanding problem and legitimate grievance on the part of many Canadians who go forth to do the hard work of producing the wealth which enables us to enjoy the standard of living that we have been able to achieve.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to delay the passage of these estimates but there are matters which I feel I should bring to the attention of the minister. I congratulate him upon his appointment to the portfolio of Postmaster General. Although I have quite a number of new post offices in my constituency, there is a need for more. The areas that need post offices are mostly areas in which private homes or buildings are rented by the Post Office Department and the service provided by these offices is not of the type the people would like. Under these circumstances we cannot blame the operators of these offices for not giving the service the people would like to have. It is for this reason I should like to see more new post offices erected in my area.

Another complaint I have received concerns the mail truck contractors. They are faced with increased expenses compared with the time when they entered into their contracts. The price of trucks is higher than it was then and operating expenses have increased as well. I believe these contracts should be reviewed more often than they are now. Many people who entered into these contracts could be earning better wages if they had accepted other types of employment. I emphasize the point strongly that these contracts should be reviewed more often and consideration should be given to the fact that the cost of living as well as the cost of their equipment is going up.

There is one more matter I should like to bring to the attention of the Postmaster

General. I refer to the fact that the telephones have been removed from some of the larger post offices. This causes hardship not only for the post office officials but for the people living in the country, particularly in the wintertime when it is often difficult to get to town. The telephones which have been removed should be reinstalled and telephones should be installed in those places which have not had them.

These are the essential matters I should like to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General. As I said at the outset, I cannot complain too much about the department's lack of consideration of the need for post offices in my area. There may be other areas with priority. However, I believe there should be new post offices erected to replace the buildings that have been rented in order to provide service for the people.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, I intend to speak for only a minute or two. I should like to raise two problems with the Postmaster General. I may say that to date I am batting .667 with him and I hope I will finish the session that way. One of the problems concerning post offices in my area involves the Department of Public Works. I understand this department is building the small post offices in that area. I would ask the minister to advise the post office officials not to take over these new buildings until they are completed. The fact is that the Post Office Department has rushed into the new building before the general contractor has completed his job; possibly some of the mechanical trades have not completed their work. Once the department occupies the new building the subcontractors or the suppliers of subcontractors are often faced with having to wait six to eight months and in some cases up to a year before being paid by the contractor. I think we could avoid this situation and help these people by not accepting post offices until they are formally taken over by the Department of Public Works. In one case I know that an amount of $12,000 is owing to a supplier by the subcontractor who has been paid a fair amount of his money. However, he is not in a rush to complete the job and this has put the supplier in an awkward position.

The other problem I should like to raise with the minister relates to the small mail contract amounting to $800 or $900. Some of these contracts were made before changes were made by Canadian National which transports the mail in the first place. About 60 per cent of the time the trains are late, and I do not mean by 10 or 15 minutes but two or three hours late. These contract mail carriers now have to spend the major part of the day waiting at the railway station for the train to arrive. They are losing other income by so doing. I have written to the minister concerning the problem and this is the third of my batting average where I have not been successful. I ask him again to reconsider these cases so these people will receive consideration for the time spent waiting for trains.

• (12:30 p.m.)

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to talk more than 30 minutes on the estimates of the Post Office Department.

I would like to say how much I appreciate the co-operation I have received so far from the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté). He has been friendly, conciliating and he has accepted several of the suggestions made to him. I thank him very sincerely.

However, and quite rightly, that does not prevent us from having our little problems, because quite often the settlement of a problem creates new ones. Consequently, one must not be surprised to see problems arise in various ridings.

Last year, I made strong representations to the minister about the post office in Rouyn. I understand that the matter concerns mostly the Department of Public Works, but the Post Office Department is also concerned, because I am sure that if the Postmaster General requested the building of a new post office in Rouyn, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) would not take long to accede to his request.

As I have said already, I am wondering what architect is responsible for the eyesore we have in Rouyn. I secured pictures of it, which I showed the minister, and I feel that one must be blind not to see how dreadful such a building is, when there are such nice post offices in Noranda, Malartic, Cadillac and Val d'Or.

And yet, the city of Rouyn, the metropolis of the northwest of the province, has a post office which, as we say so well in French, is not fit to be looked at.

It is probably not an architect who prepared the plans, but an official of the Public Works Department who tried to play a trick on the Postmaster General by giving us such a building. In any case, once again I call the minister's attention to that matter.

There is another thing I want to point out to him. It is the postal service in Val d'Or.

Last week, while I was in Val d'Or, I met the municipal authorities who told me about the slowness of the letter delivery service from Montreal or Ottawa. It seems that it takes two, three and even four days for letters to reach Val d'Or. There is undoubtedly something wrong with mail transportation or letter delivery.

I know that departmental officials will examine my remarks, and there is surely room for improvement within the department. As a matter of fact, there is no reason why the mail from Montreal or Ottawa and addressed to Val d'Or should not be delivered the same day, when the distance between Ottawa and Val d'Or is covered in five hours, and between Montreal and Val d'Or, in seven or even six hours. In my opinion, there is no reason whatsoever for a letter mailed in the morning not to be delivered in Val d'Or the next morning.

Therefore, I urge the minister to ask his responsible officials in the postal service to inquire carefully into the delivery service provided to Val d'Or at present.

Mr. Chairman, those are the few remarks I wanted to make, and before resuming my seat, I repeat what I said at the beginning. I find the Postmaster General very understanding and co-operative with members of the house. Besides, he proved it by putting an end to political partisanship in order to provide efficient service to the population as a whole.

Mr. Gauthier: Is he bilingual?

Mr. Caouette: In addition, Mr. Chairman, he is bilingual.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it is in my capacity as member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche that I wish to say a few words about the estimates of the Post Office Department.

I must say first that I am pleased to join with the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), which is a rare occurrence. I also wish to congratulate the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) on the manner in which he performs his duties and, as the member for Villeneuve so rightly said, he is an understanding man.

I should like, therefore, to call his attention to a problem and ask his help on behalf of Shawinigan South a municipality of 15,000 inhabitants, in the riding of Saint-Maurice-Laflèche.

The good people of Shawinigan South do not have adequate mail service for their operations. There are a few post offices in grocery stores, but what is really needed for the numerous businessmen of Shawinigan South and the rest of the population, is a building where essential postal services would be provided, specially post office boxes, an adequate parcel post service open during lunch hour. In fact, several complaints have come to me from voters in Shawinigan South who cannot obtain proper service during lunch hour, because the two or three small post offices located in grocery or drug stores are not giving adequate service during lunch hour and, many times, people have to go to Shawinigan proper, that is three miles from Shawinigan South, to get normal postal service.

Many times in past years, I have made representations on this matter without results. That is why I am raising the question in the house today, because postal service is most important for the citizens of Shawinigan South. In fact, to obtain proper postal service, they have to cross the Shawinigan bridge, the two bridges on the St. Maurice river and finally get to the city of Shawinigan. I feel these people are entitled to adequate postal service, and this could be achieved by opening a sub-office in Shawinigan South. True, there is one already in the northern section, in St. Mark parish, but I suggest that the Postmaster General should ask for the necessary funds to establish a sub-office in the city of Shawinigan South, where the people have already made representations to that effect.

Once again, I congratulate the Postmaster General and and I urge him to keep up the good work in his job.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks to make concerning the representations made by employees of the Post Office Department as a result of which a commission headed by Mr. Justice Montpetit was set up. From what the Postmaster General said yesterday he led me to believe that the Minister of National Revenue had indicated that once the collective bargaining bill has been passed possibly all these matters will be subject to bargaining. I should like some assurance from the minister that the questions Mr. Justice Montpetit is considering at the moment will be dealt with after the government has received his recommendations and not brushed aside or designated as matters for collective bargaining. I think legitimate problems have arisen in the past or are in existence now which should be rectified prior to any collective bargaining legislation.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member that most of the recommendations which will come from the Montpetit commission will be taken care of right away unless they deal with salaries or matters like that which can be dealt with more easily when collective bargaining is brought in. So far as working conditions are concerned, I can tell the hon. member that a few months ago some changes were made and as soon as we get the final report we will do our best to get everything settled as fast as possible.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: That concludes the estimates of the Post Office Department. We will now proceed with the estimates of the Department of Industry, to be found at page 178 of the blue book.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $6,795,400.

• (12:40 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Shall item 1 carry?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I think the members of this committee would like to hear from the Minister of Industry exactly what his department has done and what it intends to do under the estimates provided for the department at this time. I refer particularly, of course, to industry. Is industry in fact using the minister's department to the extent that would warrant these expenditures and the organization of this department? Is industry using it to a greater extent than the branch that existed for many years in the Department of Trade and Commerce? It is obvious that there has been a tremendous expansion in the Department of Industry and in its personnel compared with the facilities previously existing.

What puzzles me or raises some doubt in my mind is whether the activities of the department justify the expenditures involved here. I have talked to people in industry. They do not seem to know exactly how this department can help them. They want to know if the department is prepared to act in a consultative capacity? Is it there to give advice? If so, on what basis and in what areas? As I understand it, the branch formerly existing under the Department of Trade and Commerce was set up for such purposes and was able to give industry much advice. I should like the minister to go into some detail to give us some idea about the points I have raised so as to clear the air and do away with the doubts existing in the minds of many people in industry regarding this department.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, although it has been some time since I have made a formal statement in the house on the operations of the Department of Industry I have the impression from the large number of questions I receive, both in the house and through correspondence, that members keep in close touch with the department's activities. I find this gratifying. The work we are doing is, I think, important to promoting this country's economic development and therefore of direct interest to all Canadians.

The formulation of a sound philosophy of operation deserves top priority in establishing any new department or agency of government. Some of the questions that have been put to me in the house and elsewhere indicate a very live interest in how we are going about the tasks which parliament has entrusted to the Department of Industry.

The department was established in recognition of the pressing need for Canada to attain an efficient expansion of our manufacturing industries. This is widely recognized as a necessary condition of sound economic growth, adequate employment opportunities for our rapidly growing labour force and an increase in our standard of living. It is not sufficient merely to expand our industries.

Mr. Starr: May I interrupt the minister to ask him a question? Does that also include the rapid rise in the cost of living? Is that question also of importance to this department?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, one of the functions of the department is to increase productivity in Canada. With his knowledge of economics the hon. member for Ontario will recognize that this is one of the most effective ways of controlling undue rises in the cost of living.

Mr. Starr: How is it being done? Could the minister explain that?

Mr. Drury: If the hon. gentleman would let me proceed, perhaps I could answer his question.

Mr. Starr: I hope the minister will answer it.

Mr. Drury: The hon. member asked a question and I proceeded to answer it. Before I had full opportunity to answer he asked another question. As I say, it is not merely sufficient to enlarge our industries or cause industries to grow. We must at the same time ensure that industrial efficiency improves. This of course means that we must place a high premium on improving productivity which is defined as output per man. Indeed, increased output per man is the only basis for improving our competitive position and for ensuring an increasing standard of living. To the extent that we achieve an improvement in productivity we will also be able to achieve our other economic goals such as stable prices and a viable balance of payments.

Government action can have a significant influence on the efficiency and rate at which the secondary manufacturing sector of the economy develops. The aim of the Department of Industry is to ensure that this influence is positive and helpful.

There are, of course, many factors which influence productivity. These include the quantity and quality of technology applied in industry, the level of education and skills of the labour force, the competence and imagination of our managers and entrepreneurs, the availability of capital, the environment of laws and regulations established by government, and the conditions governing access to foreign markets. The influence exerted by each of these factors on the growth of productivity varies between one sector of industry and another. The estimates now before you reflect a variety of programs to meet some of the more pressing problems of industrial development in Canada. Additional programs are being formulated and these will be proposed for your consideration during the coming year.

I should like to say a few words about the range of activities in which the department is engaged. First, we are developing a series of programs which will be helpful to industry generally in achieving efficient expansion. These include our activities to stimulate technological advance and improvement in our industrial design capability. Second, we have introduced a number of special programs to assist in solving problems unique to specific industry sectors. Examples are the automotive program, assistance to shipbuilding and our efforts to help the furniture industry. Third, the department tries to ensure that policies and programs which are the responsibility of other federal government departments and agencies are formulated so as to provide industry with optimum opportunities for efficient expansion.

These activities can only be carried out effectively if the department attains a detailed and comprehensive knowledge of industry problems and devises good solutions, and if parliament votes the funds necessary to implement them. The task of obtaining a solid base of knowledge occupied a high proportion of our time during the first year or two of operations. This work has now been carried to a point where our efforts can be applied increasingly to the formulation and application of programs. This requires greater resources of money and manpower, and I think you can see this gradual shift in emphasis clearly reflected in the estimates.

One of the major items of expenditure in departmental administration is the cost of wages and salaries. We are a small department in terms of numbers of personnel and we intend to keep it that way. At the same time, I think hon. members will agree that if we are to perform the tasks I have outlined we require an adequate number of highly qualified personnel to do the job.

A second major component of the administrative vote comprises a variety of expenditures related to information, communication and promotion. Industrialists who are aware of the latest developments in materials, equipment, managerial and production techniques, the changes in government regulations, and the market opportunities for their products, are in a better position to operate their businesses efficiently. No one can deny that good sound knowledge of what is going on in industry contributes significantly to effective entrepreneurial decisions, which are in turn a major determinant of business success.

Hon. members will see from our estimates that we attach a good deal of importance to providing the business community with current information on the opportunities available to them for improving their performance. This activity includes co-sponsoring research studies, the publication of reports on a wide range of technological, commercial, financial and market problems, and the sponsorship of technical missions, conferences and seminars to increase knowledge of current practice within similar industries both at home and in other countries.

The department is continuing its efforts to assist Canadian business in improving the design of Canadian products through a variety of education and information projects. Its programs include: scholarships and grants to provide financial assistance to students of industrial design for advanced study in Canada and abroad, and maintenance of the Canadian design index and the register of Canadian which provide data on products of Canadian designers, design and information to industry on designers and design services.

In order to ensure that Canadian businessmen may fully exploit the market opportunities generated by the centennial celebration and Expo '67, the department has undertaken to identify the types and volume of goods required to meet these needs and encourages Canadian businessmen to develop well designed Canadian made products to satisfy this demand. Concurrently, those concerned with planning and construction of centennial and Expo projects are made aware of the hundreds of products now available from Canadian sources which embody current concepts of industrial design.

The department maintains a design centre in Toronto to focus the attention of manufacturers, distributors, buyers and the general public on the need for well designed products. The department and the national design council will establish a second national design centre in Montreal in the near future. The department continues to co-operate with manufaturers' associations and professional groups in co-sponsoring a series of design award programs. Such programs have already been carried out in the field of structural steel and wood products. This year's schedule includes award programs to promote good design in electrical appliances and steel products.

While these projects involve an element of direct cost, their major cost impact is for the salaries and wages of personnel who plan and organize the projects. I believe that the results we have had to date from this activity justify the costs incurred. I am confident that our proposed expenditures for 1966-67 will be no less successful.

There are a number of major program items listed in the estimates. I would like to say a few words in explanation of each of these. In view of the fact that we only recently debated the resolution on the automotive agreement, I will not make specific reference to it here.

[Mr. Drury.]

The area development program has sparked as much interest as any single program administered by my department. Hon. members are aware of the criteria used for designating areas eligible for development benefits and the scale of benefits provided. Accordingly, I would like to confine my comments to a review of the philosophy of the program. My earlier references to productivity were in terms of "output per man". There is another interpretation of the term which is more appropriate to apply in the case of area development. No nation can reach its full potential if it is suffering from high levels of unemployment. Not only do unemployed labour resources mean lost opportunities to increase output but they also involve welfare payments which constitute a further drain on resources that would otherwise be available for production purposes.

The federal government has, of course, a wide range of fiscal and other general measures designed to maintain a high level of national employment. Experience has shown, however, that some parts of the country do not respond adequately to those measures. They continue to suffer from higher levels of unemployment and lower levels of income than the rest of the country. The area development incentives are designed to encourage establishment of new industries or the expansion of existing industries in such areas, thereby supplementing federal full employment policies in a direct way and making them more effective. Since the program is designed to assist in that development of industrial employment opportunities in areas characterized by chronic unemployment and underemployment, the areas designated are those where unemployment is high, the rate of employment growth is low and income levels are well below the national level.

The degree of success achieved to date has been most encouraging. The department has received 450 firm notifications from companies that intend to establish or expand their facilities in designated areas. Our periodic program reviews have indicated that ten of the areas previously designated have reached levels of employment and income which put them outside the designation criteria. They were, therefore, removed from the list eligible for development benefits.

The results of the program are under continuing evaluation to help us refine the criteria for the definition of areas requiring assistance and also to help us formulate supplementary programs which may be required to further our objective of bringing new economic opportunities to those parts of the country most in need of them.

The 1966-67 estimates provide funding for two programs aimed at encouraging increased research and development activity in Canadian industry. Until fairly recently Canada has relied very heavily on imported technology as a stimulus to industrial growth. For a country in its early stage of industrial development, reliance on imported technology is both necessary and desirable. I am sure we will continue to draw heavily on technology from abroad for many years to come. However, in view of increased international competition that has occurred over the past decade, Canadian industry must now begin to carve out a niche for itself in a number of selected areas of technological development. We must do this not only to increase our exports of manufactured goods but also to ensure maintenance of our domestic markets in conditions of freer world trade so much in vogue today.

The newly established program for the advancement of industrial technology P.A.I.T., is designed to promote the application of scientific and technological advances to the development of new products or processes for the commercial market. Essentially P.A.I.T., is a form of development insurance for underwriting selected development projects which involve a significant technical advance and which offer good prospects for commercial exploitation.

The initiative for proposing development projects and the responsibility for their direction rests with industry. All relevant costs of the projects are shared equally by the government and the firm. In the event the project is successful and the results are put to commercial use, the firm is required to repay the government's contribution with interest. Repayment may extend over a period up to ten years. However, if the project is unsuccessful payback is waived. Proprietary rights resulting from the development project are vested in the firm, which is, of course, expected to exploit the results of the project in Canada.

Since the inception of this program some 20 projects have been approved and several times that number are being processed. In view of industry's response so far, I am confident this program will continue to grow and that we will begin to obtain concrete results within the next year or two.

Vote 5 is complementary to the program for advancement of industrial technology. It is administered by the Department of Industry in co-operation with the Department of Defence Production. Vote 5 is designed to sustain a technological capability in Canadian industry by supporting selected defence development projects. Many of these have significant application in the non-defence market.

This program has been in existence for some six years. Because of its defence orientation the bulk of its expenditures have been made in the aerospace and electronics industries. Estimated expenditures for 1966-67 amount to $25 million. Assistance from this vote has permitted development of a considerable number of items of defence equipment which have contributed significantly to Canadian export to the United States and other markets. It provides an important support for our defence production-sharing arrangement and has helped to improve the technological base of our industry generally.

Later this session the house will be asked to approve a third program of research and development assistance for Canadian industry. The program will replace the incentives presently provided under the Income Tax Act.

The present income tax incentives which were introduced in 1962 appear to have been reasonably effective. However, the principle of using taxation to encourage research and development is essentially discriminatory since many small or growing firms are not in a profit-making position and therefore cannot take advantage of the tax incentives. In order to broaden the availability of the general research and development incentive, it will be proposed that you approve a program of statutory grants for which all firms doing research and development can qualify.

The level of benefits under the new program will be broadly equivalent to those now available under the tax incentive program. Twenty five per cent of all capital expenditures related to research and development will be paid by the Department of Industry. A similar grant will apply to all research and development operating expenses incremental to the average of the previous three years. Since the program is scheduled to come into effect this year, I will be proposing legislation for ayour approval later this session.

I have taken up a good deal of the committee's time with these remarks. However, this is the first opportunity the house has had to consider the Department of Industry's estimates separately and I think it is important that we understand the basic approach guiding departmental operation together with the rationale behind its major programs. If there are any points which remain unclear, I shall try my best to clarify them.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I wish I could share the enthusiasm of the minister for his area development program but unfortunately I cannot, and I am sure most of my colleagues from Atlantic Canada share my misgivings. As the minister and members of the house know, we have a very high unemployment rate in Atlantic Canada, a rate over twice the national average. At one point this winter it had reached, I believe, 10.9 per cent. This proves that the measures taken by the minister and the government are simply not enough.

We in Atlantic Canada have made several suggestions with regard to the area development program which I think are worthy of consideration by the minister. They have been developed by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, non-partisan body, I am sure the minister will agree, since it is composed of people from management, labour and other organizations and of all political stripes. The suggestion was set forth in the annual report of the Economic Council of Canada—in this regard the minister has engaged in spirited correspondence with the mayors of Halifax, Dartmouth, Saint John and Fredericton and the warden of the municipality of Halifax county—that there be no exclusion of these metropolitan areas from the area development incentive program as it now exists.

I suggest to the minister, as I suggested by letter previously and as others have done, that this does in fact make economic sense. When there is an area with high unemployment surely, if the act is to accomplish its purpose, the entire area should be treated as a separate economic problem and the benefits and incentives under the act should be generously extended to that area until the unemployment rate has dropped to a level where one can say with some satisfaction that the program is meeting the needs of the people there. So I suggest again to the minister that he and his officials review the request of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council and of the mayors of Halifax, Dartmouth, Saint John and Fredericton, and the warden of the municipality of Halifax county to see whether it would not be possible to extend the act to the entire area of Atlantic Canada until such time as our savage unemployment problem is brought within measurable bounds. I know that the minister and his officials have reviewed this matter but I ask them to do it again.

What we are encountering there is a certain attraction of industry to the area—this I have to admit—but sometimes it is at the expense of the cities which are outside the incentive provisions. I think the minister would agree with me that it does not particularly help the problem when you shift unemployment from one part of a region to another. The purpose should be to attract new industries there and not relocate old industries. Therefore I suggest that the minister and his officials examine the formula to see whether it is possible to include those four cities. The formula itself seems to be a bit freakish, if I may use that expression, in that the city of Moncton, my birthplace, a very bustling city which has grown by leaps and bounds along with some of the other cities in the Maritimes, is not excluded from the act. I believe this is because unemployment in an adjacent large rural area has been a problem for years and this area is considered to be a part of the greater Moncton complex. This brings Moncton within the operation of the act.

It seems to me that this is one of the flukes or freaks which can develop where the criteria are very flexible; yet there is no reason that Saint John, Fredericton, Halifax and Dartmouth should not receive advantages comparable with those of Moncton. If the minister does not accept the idea of bringing Halifax, Saint John, Dartmouth and Fredericton within the act, then I suggest to him an alternative. To my mind it would be a very poor one but at least it would be an improvement over the existing formula. I suggest that he confine the area excluded from the act to the narrowest possible boundaries. I say this because in Halifax county the line is some distance removed from the city of Dartmouth and yet between Dartmouth and the line there are rural areas which because of their connection with the metropolitan areas of Halifax and Dartmouth are not allowed the benefits of the area development incentive program. One cannot see a discernible difference between the economies of the villages in these areas and the salaries paid there and those in the villages a little farther down the coast.

From my discussions with officials of the department and as has been stated by the minister, I understand there is a periodic review of the exact geographical limits of areas under this act. It is my understanding that the Halifax metropolitan area situation is to be investigated again next year. I hope, however, that the minister will look at it in the near future since I believe he has received a communication from the warden of the municipality of Halifax county indicating that there are outside interests which could be induced to set up new businesses in some of the small fishing villages which now do not enjoy the benefits under the Area Development Incentives Act.

Although I am sure he knows, I might tell the minister that this was a rather keen point in the last election campaign. The very principle advocated by my leader, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, was that until employment conditions in Atlantic Canada reached an acceptable level the whole area should be given the benefits of the incentive program which now go only to a part of the area. This achieved considerable response from the peoples, as I think the minister will agree if he looks at the election results in Halifax, Dartmouth, Saint John and Fredericton.

I do not want to be too narrow in my criticism of the minister and the operations of his department as I know he is enthusiastic about what he would like to accomplish and I commend him for that enthusiasm. I am not sure it is a good idea to keep his department small, although maybe it is if he has a well balanced team with esprit de corps who fight hard and are not hampered because of its smallness of size. I beseech the minister to look again at the problem to which I have referred. I know that area development incentives are not the easiest things in the world to come to grips with because what you may do for one area you may undo for another.

I have not entered this debate from a strictly negative and critical point of view but have offered the minister two alternatives which I ask him to pursue in order that a review can be carried out as quickly as possible.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, in listening to the minister I could not help but feel that many of the things he is projecting for his department in his outline of the work it is undertaking are the sort of things on which we can all agree. If there is any argument about what is going on in his department it is that the objectives are not matched by actions.

The minister talks about a sound philosophy. I for one am always pleased to note that a minister is interested in philosophy, whether economic or otherwise, but I sometimes think that his philosophy is in trouble and is suffering from schizophrenia. There seems to be a difficulty in the Department of Industry in that the area development program is supposed to be moving industry into certain areas whereas the department of manpower has a mobility program which is supposed to move people out of areas.

I do not quarrel with the suggestion that perhaps both of these programs are required to some extent but I do suggest that there does not seem to be any relationship between the two with regard to which areas people should move out of and into which areas industry should be moved. This is a very difficult problem to handle but it is the kind of problem that will have to be attacked if we are going to obtain an answer.

Very frequently it appears that the area development program is an attempt at being progressive. It seems that we must do something so the department has decided to do this. There does not seem to be any great thought, planning or understanding of problems behind what is being done by the Department of Industry.

The first time I got to my feet to speak in the House of Commons I directed a question to the Minister of Industry because of a problem which arose in my riding as a result of the area development program. I do not have to go into it in great detail because the minister has had considerable correspondence about it. It affected not only the riding of Waterloo South but the ridings of Waterloo North and Wellington South, and quite a number of speeches have been made in this regard.

Although, as I said, the concept of an area development or designated area program is a good one and is probably required in Canada, the way the Department of Industry has been carrying out the program is absolutely without real economic justification or support. I have submitted to the minister time and time again that the criteria followed for designation have been wrong. We have just heard the hon. member for Halifax who indicated the problems existing in the maritime provinces and the Atlantic region. I think he is quite correct when he says that there does not seem to be any real understanding of what is required in terms of industrial development for the maritimes. That applies not only to the maritimes but to almost every province of Canada.

I should like to quote briefly from the third annual report of the Manitoba economic consultative board which raises this same problem. On page 5 they say:

> We note also the exclusion of Winnipeg and its adjacent area from the industrial development incentives provided by the federal area development agency. This, we believe, is inconsistent with sound regional development strategy since Winnipeg and surrounding area account for most of the industrial employment in the province.

The province of Quebec has made representations in this regard. I should like to refer to one report not mentioned by the hon. member for Halifax which was prepared for the Atlantic provinces research board by Professor Wilson of the University of Glasgow. This report bears out many of the arguments raised by the hon. member.

There is this schizophrenic attitude within the department. It cannot make up its mind whether it is more interested in productivity or charity, or perhaps political porkbarrelling. I do not wish to be unkind and perhaps the use of such an expression is a little on the harsh side, but when one looks at the situation it frequently has that appearance.

There can really be no economic justification in a country like Canada for scattering industry helter-skelter regardless of any analysis of whether it has any basis for economic or long-range existence. I realize that we are trying to correct unemployment but I suggest this is not the way to go about it. What we are doing is saddling municipalities with short-range palliatives they will live to regret because they will have to build up their services to look after industries which cannot survive and will eventually go under.

The Department of Industry in some cases is encouraging industries to move into districts where they have no business being. On the other hand, you have areas of development and potential growth such as Halifax and Dartmouth which present opportunities for development. After all, if you take a look at industry you will find there are other things besides tax incentives which interest them. An industry that understands its problems does not move just because someone gives it a little hand-out. Very frequently that is all we have done. We have rewarded them for doing something they were probably prepared to do in any event.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

I suggest that the proper approach is one of economic feasibility and that when the department undertakes to determine which areas should be designated and which should not the criteria of unemployment and income are really not the proper criteria at all. The proper criteria should be economic potential and long-term survival.

There are some very good measures we could implement to help chronic unemployment areas rather than continue to do what we are now doing. I think it is a cruel hoax in most cases to move new industry into areas in which they do not belong and cannot survive because they have no reason for belonging there in the first place. If these industries remain in these areas they have to be subsidized. Neither of these choices is good, from the point of view of a philosophy based on productivity and making Canada strong economically.

I should like to raise another matter. I have not spoken for very long on the question of designated areas. It is apparent that the committee is in a mood to conclude its consideration of these estimates as quickly as possible and I am prepared to accept such an approach at this time. I should like to consider now the way in which industry in Canada can be helped.

The department is organized according to trades. I have spoken to the heads of various branches within the department and by and large I have been very impressed by the calibre of those in its employ. However, I find they do not have the authority to help industry to any great extent. Their powers are severely limited. It is only natural that in any government organization there will be conflicts, for example, between the Department of Industry which is seeking expansion and the Department of Finance which is trying to apply a tight money policy. Perhaps the excise branch agrees with neither. There are bound to be conflicts.

A businessman goes to the Department of Industry with the assumption that the department will do its best to help him. Frequently the head of a particular grouping in the department will tell him: I will do everything I can but my authority in certain directions is limited; I will go as far as I can but then you will have to talk to someone else. I suggest to the minister that he seriously consider appointing industrial commissioners or industrial ombudsmen for the various departments. They would be people whose purpose it would be to help an industrialist find his way through a great and complex organization, with all the conflicting purposes which exist there.

Such a suggestion has great possibilities in my opinion. The problems encountered by an industralist might involve the excise branch or the Department of Finance. Instead of directing their caller to someone else the officials of the department could take him straight through. The complexity of government will not decrease over the years; it will become greater. This is in the nature of things and it is idle to deplore it. Correspondingly there is a growing need to help those who come to the department for assistance.

The department, seems to me, lacks information. When the minister indicated in his statement all the things his department hopes and intends to do, considerable doubt arose in my mind whether he would ever be able to accomplish even a fraction of those intentions. I say this because he does not seem to have at his disposal information on economic facts sufficient to enable him to act effectively. Research being done in this field is insufficient to produce the information upon which correct decisions can be made. I suggest that instead of congratulating himself on the small size of his staff, on keeping his staff to a small, fighting force, the minister should enlarge his staff particularly in the area of research.

Many of the difficulties connected with the area development program arose because there was insufficient understanding of its implications. When I read reports from various provinces and see how completely they have been ignored, I wonder sometimes whether it is not readers of reports who are needed rather than research staff. But whatever is required in this field should be undertaken in order to ensure that some of the worst features we have seen in the past arising out of decisions made on the basis of inadequate knowledge shall not be repeated in the future.

I hope the government will at some time bring these estimates before the appropriate committee. There does not seem to be any great pressure on the minister to do so on this occasion. I cannot recall the estimates of the department undergoing a thorough scrutiny. Often they have been brought in at the last minute. The minister has asked the committee to get them through quickly and the committee has usually been accommodating in this regard. The department has undertaken a large number of projects and for this reason I believe the time has come for its estimates to be submitted to a fuller scrutiny than is possible now. I hope they will go before a committee next time.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Chairman, I intend to deal briefly with one subject. I hope the relationship between it and the estimates of the Department of Industry will be seen, for I admit it is not absolutely clear.

I listened carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Waterloo South. I was surprised to find him, a member of the New Democratic party, being so critical of the area development program and in particular of the criteria used. I fail to see how any area development program can operate if the criterion of employment levels is not a major one in any determination of which areas should benefit.

The hon. member would like to substitute another criterion, which he calls "economic feasibility", without enlightening us as to exactly what he means by that term and without mentioning specific areas where presumably there has been economic infeasibility. This seems to be a most superficial approach to a program which has done a great deal of good.

As the hon. member must be well aware, there are some areas that do not participate in this program. Peterborough is one such area and I know our industrial commissioner has never been happy about its exclusion. Nevertheless he has never been able to persuade me or even himself that the criteria are wrong. That they are capable of refinement goes without saying. But I do not feel the criticism made by the hon. member was substantial. In my opinion it would be a mistake to separate this program from the employment criterion because employment is the very goal the program was designed to reach.

As to the next allegation that there is a lack of information or administrative confusion in the department, I must simply state for the record that my experience with the department has not been the same as that of the hon. member for Waterloo South. I have had excellent co-operation and so have the people from my area who have come here to inquire how industry can co-operate with the Department of Industry and what facilities are available. In fact, I hope within the next month to be able to set up a meeting at Peterborough for members of the Department of Industry, members of the National Research Council and the business people in Peterborough. At this meeting we will discuss exactly what the department and N.R.C. are able to provide by way of assistance and guidance to my people. I had no problem at all setting up this meeting through the Department of Industry. I have had complete co-operation.

As I have said before it may be that we as members are going to have to take the initiative. There are those who say it is the minister's job to go to Peterborough and tell the people in industry what assistance is available from the government, but it seems to me it is far more my responsibility to be doing this. Perhaps communications can be improved if we as members take some of the responsibility upon ourselves.

In his opening statement the minister discussed what the department had done. I feel that it has not only done a great deal of work but has taken a number of important initiatives, and I do not say this simply because I happen to be on the government side. I think, for instance, that the concern the department has shown for the level and quality of industrial design in this country is most important. I believe this concern is also reflected in the program worked out to assist in research and development in this country, which is most important. The Department of Industry seems to be subjected to a certain amount of criticism, but in any assessment of the department it seems to me careful consideration should be given to inroads made into areas which traditionally have been backwaters in this country.

Industrial design has never been a subject of great pride in this country, except possibly in the engineering field. We have reason for some pride in that area but in other areas we are very weak. In so far as research and development undertaken by Canadian industry are concerned, we are in a very serious position. This subject has been discussed before. Figures released by the Department of Industry show that in the major industrialized countries the following percentages of gross national product have been devoted to research and development: United States, 2.8 per cent; United Kingdom, 6.2 per cent; Sweden, 1.7 per cent; Japan, 1.3 per cent; and well down the list comes Canada with 0.86 per cent. This is a most serious problem.

I believe it should be recognized by members on both sides of the house that the Department of Industry has in fact established programs to encourage and assist industry to get into the field of research and development to a much greater degree. I should like to commend the minister for the work he and his department have done in this field.

Having said that, I should like now to go to a particular problem which might be considered peripheral to the estimates of the Department of Industry. Since the minister is concerned with our manufacturing industry there is one problem I should like to bring to his attention. He will no doubt have to work with the Minister of Trade and Commerce in order to find a solution. However, in so far as he is directly responsible for industry I should like to draw his attention to this problem.

In my area the largest single employer is the Canadian General Electric Company which employs 5,000 to 6,000 people in the Peterborough area. It is in the heavy electrical apparatus business, along with a whole range of other lines. In the immediate past there have been two major contracts for heavy electrical equipment, namely, the Hydro Quebec 735KV transmission project and the British Columbia Peace River project. These are both major Canadian projects. The products involved in the Hydro Quebec project were transformers and circuit breakers. These were items which Canadian General Electric was involved in producing. Total business for suppliers on the Hydro Quebec project amounted to $24,500,000. Of the total business placed Canadian General Electric obtained 50 per cent, Sweden received 23 per cent, 10 per cent went to England, 8 per cent to Switzerland, 7 per cent to Belgium, and 2 per cent to France.

In so far as the Peace River project is concerned the products involved were generators, circuit breakers and transformers. Total business placed in the year 1965 was $24,380,000. Of that total the business placed in Canada amounted to 46 per cent. The business placed overseas was as follows: 15.5 per cent in Japan, 12.7 per cent in England, 10.4 per cent in France, 9 per cent in Switzerland, and 5.5 per cent in Sweden.

I am not suggesting that this division is not perfectly fair. I am not suggesting there is anything intrinsically wrong with the fact that in relation to a major project of this type Canadian business should only get 50 per cent. What I am suggesting is that this situation in Canada is not duplicated abroad. Contracts of this type in England, Sweden, France and Switzerland are not shared 50 per cent by home industry and 50 per cent abroad. I have tried as diligently as I can to get at the root of the matter. I ask the Minister of Industry to look into the situation to ascertain if Canadian industry is competing on the same terms with European industry in their bailiwick as we are allowing them to compete with us in ours.

I am not opposed to what we are doing here but I insist upon the same terms applying to Canadian industry abroad. What gives this question a real urgency is the announcement of the Nelson River project. I have a clipping here from the Hamilton Spectator for March 14 of this year which refers to a story in the Daily Express. The report in the Hamilton Spectator reads as follows:

> The Daily Express yesterday devoted a half page to how Britain can "get away with a cool hundred million quid" from Manitoba's vast Nelson River power project.
> That's three hundred million dollars in Canadian terms—and it's the share of the billion dollar development that Britain's industry hopes to corner for itself.
> In a dispatch from Winnipeg, the Express quotes Gordon Husted, the resident British trade commissioner, as saying: "The plan is foolproof. Given the backing of imagination and enterprise from back home, the cash is there for the taking".

I do not mind the trade commissioner using these rather extravagant terms in talking to his people at home. After all, in some measure his own livelihood probably depends upon his degree of enthusiasm and persuasiveness. I am asking the minister to see that we in Canada compete on the same terms in the British market as apparently the British are able to compete in our market.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaulieu: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to pay tribute, on behalf of my constituents and the citizens of the province of Quebec, to the minister who comes from our area, that of Montreal.

I hope that he will appreciate that none of my remarks is intended for him personally.

For 20 years I studied the situation of industries not only in the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, and the prairies, but also in British Columbia and in the eastern provinces, and I have come to the conclusion that all Canadian provinces now have extremely good statistics.

I will take only one example, the province of Quebec. There was in the cabinet a minister who had been deputy minister of Trade and Industry in the province of Quebec. All investigations and research aimed at finding out whether it was possible to bring in new industries in the underdeveloped areas. We also helped promote the development of new industries in our province.

I was listening a moment ago to the minister saying that there was a scholarship program. I think that the period of scholarships within his department, considering the budget at his dispoasl, is a thing of the past.

To staff the Department of Industry, some of the most brilliant officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce were brought in. I think that there is now in that department technocrats and research workers rather well prepared for the work to be done.

All Canadian provinces are now in a position to provide our federal Department of Industry with the information it needs. In the province of Quebec, they tried to subdivide the province into areas, to direct industries toward underdeveloped places, but this failed to bring about any significant results for the good reason that industry goes wherever it feels is best suitable. People having money to invest would not invest it where it would not be profitable for them.

The province of Quebec, has more than 12,000 industries now and the province of Ontario has about 14,000; this means that 80 per cent of all our country's industries are located in the two large eastern provinces, Ontario and Quebec.

Quite recently, my area was chosen as a designated area. It is unbelievable to see a city like St. Johns, where there are hundreds of industries, chosen as a designated area. It is a prosperous city, so much so that, over the last 15 years, the population has increased from 10,000 to 35,000.

What happened? That is when the Department of Industry must give special attention to the choice of designated areas. Suddenly three or four industries closed their doors for uncontrollable reasons. The owners of one industry were told: You will not get any more contracts unless you move to Montreal. They closed their doors; the industry stayed there. The other industry closed down because exports to the United States stopped. It was not a period of depression. What happened? A powerful industry benefited from the federal legislation when it had the means to cover its costs.

I am happy about what happened, I am happy that the situation has stabilized itself, but I find it extremely dangerous to put at the disposal of large and powerful industries services, grants and income tax exemptions which the government could give to others which need them more.

Here is what happens in the end. A large industry which is not very profitable is closed and another one is opened; nothing is changed, it hurts somewhere else. But all that is paid out of the Canadian taxpayer's money.

I think it is important to study closely each particular case. I think that there are other designated areas, but then it is necessary to get the services of experts, technocrats, men with experience, not only men who do research—not necessarily scientists or economists—but men who know what an industry is, how to create it and settle it somewhere in short men who can make investigations and reports.

New industries are requested. Everyone is for the creation of new industries, but it is necessary to know the market and where these new industries will settle and, then, if there is a domestic or export market for them.

But some industries have been operating in the province of Quebec, in Ontario, in western Canada, everywhere, for the last 50 years, and they are not being helped. It might be wise for the minister to confer with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr Winters) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) with a view to determining whether the time has come to help existing industries to expand. It is all very well to create new industries. I know of certain industries in the province of Quebec to which help should be given, not through cash subsidies but through tax exemptions for certain jobs, or on the purchase of new equipment to keep pace with progress. They might also be granted tax exemptions so that those who hire labour might have the required cash to do the necessary work, instead of always having to resort to bonds issues, all the more so in view of the fact that the market is now at a standstill, not only in Canada but also in the United States.

It is extremely difficult, even for a city like Montreal that needs money to fulfil its obligations with regard to the world fair, to borrow on the American market.

I believe that the Department of Industry would be well advised to call together the representatives of the manufacturers association so as to know their opinion. And it is then, Mr. Chairman, that I deplore the expenses this government has made for some time now regarding the subdivision of departments.

I am delighted with the establishment of the Department of Industry, but its budget is a mere trifle, because there is really something to be done there. On the other hand, there is no proportion between the administrative costs and the budget administered. It costs $5 million to administer a $20 million budget. That is nonsensical. The fact is that the civil servants, if they are qualified of course, do not have enough work, enough responsibilities and the budget is inadequate.

The Department of Trade and Commerce was divided. How can we make sense out of this today in the province of Quebec? I came to Ottawa with industrialists. We went to the Department of Industry, from there we were referred to the Department of Trade and Commerce. We went to the Department of Trade and Commerce and there we were sent back to the Department of Industry, where we were told that our application came under the Department of Labour. At the Department of Labour, we were told that it came under another department.

The same holds true when it comes to an application concerning a post office. When I submit an application to this effect to the Post Office Department, I am told: All right, you are granted the post office. Two days later, the Post Office Department gets in touch with you to advise that you have the post office, but you do not have the land; when you have the land, you will get the post office. Then, they suggest to see another department, where we are told: All right, we will buy the land but before we do that you must get your post office; get the post office first, and then we will buy the land.

Thus we go from one department to the other. I visited at least 10 departments and I suggest that the present subdivisions and the fact that there are two or three officials at the head of a department, as an hon. member pointed out a while ago, makes it impossible to get any decision.

The system is different in our provinces. For instance, in the province of Quebec, where they say there was a lack of organization, there is at least a chief in each department, there is a minister who can take a decision, who can say yes. But here, when you ask a department for something, the answer you get is: This does not come within my purview, but under that of the Department of Labour. Another tells you that it comes under manpower or yet another one, under the Post Office Department. And the latter advises that it comes under the Department of Public Works.

I went to see the Minister of Transport in connection with the St. John airport. There I was told: We will fix that for you, but first you need the approval of the Department of Public Works, otherwise I cannot comply with your request. I asked him: But, nevertheless are you going to repair the runways? He answered: It is not for us to do that, but for the Department of Public Works.

We went to three departments. We went around with aldermen, who found all that really ridiculous. Indeed, the situation created by the present government is ridiculous. We want answers. We want to know about those things.

Arriving at the Department of Industry to discuss an industrial matter, we are told: What industry do you want? After explaining our objective, they say: This comes under the Department of Trade and Commerce. And at the Department of Trade and Commerce, they talk about grants.

That is all everybody says: members have toured departments and we are never able to get a sensible answer. They make us fall from Scylla into Charybdis.

Mr. Choquette: Just like the Union Nationale government.

Mr. Beaulieu: If we had such a government, conditions would improve in Canada. At the present time, I think that the Department of Industry, if given the importance it deserves and the funds it needs, if it is allowed to take decisions, it is as important, I say, as the Department of Labour or the department of manpower.

Workers are now to be relocated. This will create a problem. But if some assistance is granted to industry, it will provide employment. The state can only give temporary employment as for road construction, bridge construction, and this cannot solve permanent conditions.

Industry is the basis and essential factor for the development of our country, for the creation of an environment where our people will be in a position to earn a living adequately.

I find the estimates are too high compared to the expenditures foreseen, because $20 million are provided for and this amount, as shown in the estimates, is made up entirely of grants. Nobody has to work to obtain a grant. Various amounts are shown but on what basis are those people paid for research?

Such is the situation, Mr. Chairman. I think the government should review the organization of these departments, entrust the ministers with responsibilities and draw up proper budgets.

I sincerely believe that not only in the province of Quebec, but in every Canadian province from coast to coast, it would be possible by taking the trouble to maintain industries already established, to extend, modernize and develop them and even set up new industries. But it is not enough to say, as was announced yesterday on television: a new $50 million project in the province of Quebec, close to Ottawa. A few minutes later, somebody asked how many jobs would be provided. Seventy five more workers will get a job. A $50 million grant will be obtained, mind you, to create 75 jobs. Do you find this reasonable?

I am in favour of technocrats, economists and scientists, but departments need more than that. They actually need young men who know what constitutes an industry. We were told that a new industry would be established in Bécancour at a cost of $300 to $700 million. We are now being told that the project is not believed to be workable. Such things give rise to a painful situation. The Minister of Labour is here today—and I am happy to congratulate him on his efforts—but he will realize that a problem has been created for him.

Because of the promises made to them, the farmers sold their farms or gave options on them. They no longer have the right to farm. For the last two years, they have been getting no income from their farms. As a matter of fact, they are running through their capital. They were promised a job and they are told now that no new industries will be established before five or six years to provide them with jobs. They will be destitute, completely ruined and will become unemployed. Such is the present situation, and that is why I say the Minister of Industry has responsibilities.

Such a statement must not be made. We must not create such a situation.

In Montreal, soon, Expo '67 will take place. I tried to convince the minister yesterday that it was not necessary to carry out extensive work in St. Johns. We already have an airport there. All we need is to take immediate steps to modernize it. The municipality of St. Johns is ready to put up half a million dollars for the buildings. It would only cost the federal government $200,000 or $300,000 to expropriate the required properties. Do you know what he answered? My estimates do not provide for such work this year; we shall consider it next year. Well next year Expo '67 will be over and there will be no need for it. Action is needed right away. They just refuse to understand.

But for the province of Quebec, for my area, what matters most at this point, I am sure, is not so much giving money to industries as telling them: Here are the facilities, the reserves, income tax exemptions for two or three years, provided you increase your staff.

When a company tells the Department of Industry: Tomorrow morning, we are hiring 50 new employees; and another says: Tomorrow, we will take on 100 new employees. Then the government would be justified, with the co-operation of the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Industry in telling them: very well, we will give you a 10, 15 or 20 per cent exemption, according to the importance of the industry and the importance it is going to have.

It was not my intention to criticize the minister; compared to the other departments in Ottawa, his is a new one. But it is an important, a most important one. Let it have responsibilities and a budget; let the minister have enough power, I consider him competent in the industrial area and let him have employees, technicians and I suggest that the minister enlist businessmen in addition to economists and researchers.

Then, a plan could be drawn up to be applied, not in 20 years but this year, and next year, for such a program, I hope we can see something more in the budget than what there is now. It would not be a department concerned only with handing out grants, but a department that will be creating jobs, careers, and which will bring relief to industry. Taxes now paralysing the development of existing industries are preventing new industries from getting started here and are a nuisance to small industries to the point where many will fail, because they will have to pay 1.8 per cent or half the contribution under the Canada pension plan.

There are small industries which are barely operating, so much so that the boss hardly earns a living wage. You realize there that you have been creating an impossible situation. Obviously nothing can be done about laws of a general nature and applicable to every one, but we should see to it that such industries do not fold up.

For ten years, while I was minister in Quebec, I was criticized, but we applied a policy of "visits and subsidies" to small industry with less than 100 employees. And do you know that in ten years there has not been a single bankruptcy among the industries we have helped. Some of them have developed since; others have expanded considerably, and one of the industries with which I was associated for 15 years was recently sold for $3,200,000, only because the owner died. Sixteen years ago this man could not borrow $25,000 from the bank. Why was he so successful? Because he was helped, because the department helped him.

I ask the minister this. His department needs not only technicians and research workers, but auditors and engineers who should give industry across Canada the information it requests free of charge. This would be a most essential service. These people would be paid by the Ottawa government and their services would be available to whoever needs them.

There are research centres in large industries which can afford to hire engineers. When a company pays $5 million for research, it does not need help. On the other hand, small business concerns which today operate on a marginal basis need an engineer or a chartered accountant to do research. These concerns should be helped.

Why should the government not make available to these people, at its own expense, qualified men who would submit a report. This would not be unreasonably expensive. In two months a good engineer can tell you if a small industry is economically sound, if it should be maintained or closed.

Auditors will look into a business concern, study production costs and tell the people:

Gentlemen, you are selling below cost, you cannot succeed. Your concern is not competitive. I believe this is a practical policy and that the minister, who is a business man, realizes that if he could set up such a system he would do the provinces and the whole country a great service, including his colleagues heading such departments as labour, trade and commerce, finance and revenue.

We can have a prosperous Canada. We can have prosperous provinces, on one condition: that we organize ourselves scientifically, seriously, and that we put competent people in all the departments and divisions.

• (2:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few brief remarks on the minister's estimates as an unrepentant old socialist trying to look at these questions from a fundamental and traditional socialist point of view. I see the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration looking at me over the top of his glasses. I hope we will assist him in the programs he has undertaken to date by what we say this afternoon and will say later.

I suppose it is correct to say that the Department of Industry is the department of wait and see. That is the general attitude of most hon. members. The department has to prove itself, but I am sure all members of this group wish the minister and his officials every success in all they undertake to try to fill the gaps that have been left in employment, development, markets and research as a result of the monopoly control of our economy by a few large industrial giants.

The minister knows that we in this party are traditionally opposed to monopoly and combine. We have had that plank in our program since our movement was first formed in 1932. We have maintained that position and intend to maintain it. There are two major groups that actually control the Canadian economy. One is the small but powerful Canadian economic elite described by various persons as all those who are involved in Canadian owned corporations which have interlocking directorships. The other is a group of United States firms and foreign businesses which have a tremendous influence on social and economic conditions in Canada.

I am not blaming individuals. These persons have their functions to perform in the society in which we live and they have their duties as directors and officers of corporations. As I say, I am not blaming individuals. I am just bringing to the minister's attention some of the highlights of our program in case he might want to fall back on them in the months ahead.

I wish to quote from "Notes For Speakers 1965" provided to the New Democratic Party, and I hope the minister will read the booklet later. There is a section headed "How Do The Giant Firms Keep Their Supremacy" which reads:

> Someone may well wonder how the dominant corporations in each industry manage to stay on top. In view of the fact that they earn large profits, why doesn't this attract so many new firms into the industry that the share of the dominant firms is sharply reduced?

That is a good question.

> There are a number of ways in which the giants can bar or discourage new firms from entering the industry.
> 1. In some industries enormous amounts of capital are required to establish a new plant and only the existing dominant firms have this kind of capital.
> 2. Some industries require a particular natural resource or type of skill and the available supply of these may be completely controlled by the existing firms. Sometimes this takes the form of "vertical integration" where the large firm controls everything from the raw material supplies to the marketing of the end products.
> 3. Often the existing firm secures a patent on a particular process or product which bars new firms from using this process or producing this product.

I am sure the minister and his officials have had some experience in that regard in looking at Canadian industry as it is today.

> 4. The large existing firms have well established sources of credit to supply them with funds for expansion. Credit is not so readily available to the small firm. The large firms can also float huge issues of stocks and bonds; this is very difficult indeed for a new firm just beginning operations.

I understand the minister's department intends to promote the issuance of credit to sound industries being promoted on a large and small scale.

> 5. The most successful advertising is that which is carried out on a national scale—on television and radio, in national magazines, etc. The large existing firms can afford this; newcomers generally cannot.

I am quite sure the great majority of small industries and businesses could not undertake this sort of advertising on any scale.

> 6. The dominant firms have surplus funds with which to carry out costly research into new methods and products.
> 7. The large corporation can engage the newcomer in a price war. The giant has reserves which will sustain him until the war is over;—

I have seen that happen in the retail business in my own district.

—the newcomer generally does not have such reserves and is driven out of the market. Then the giant restores the price to its former level.

These are only a few of the methods by which the existing dominant corporations maintain their hold on an industry.

How do many of these people acquire their capital? The minister has talked about incentives to promote industry in certain areas. We have provided massive incentives for these monopolies whether they are Canadian owned or United States owned.

I have an article I cut from the Ottawa Journal of May 18. I will read briefly from it because the figures are handy, Possibly I could have located the figures had I searched my files. This is a report of a speech made in the legislature of Ontario by Mr. Kenneth Bryden. He had this to say:

—the plain fact is that "only a very small and declining amount of U.S. investment funds," is associated with U.S. corporate control in Canada.

The went on to illustrate his statement that Americans are buying us out with our own money. He said:

—in 1964 about $764,000,000, or 40 per cent of the total net U.S. financing in Canada, came from the depreciation and depletion reserves of Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. corporations.

The report continues:

He said an additional $644,000,000 came from undistributed profits of these subsidiaries and the remaining $423,000,000 came from stocks and bonds sold outside the U.S.

He said U.S. corporations "are re-investing funds generated in Canada which they have captured in depreciation allowances and undistributed funds."

As a solution to U.S. control Mr. Bryden suggested reform of provincial and federal corporation tax structures to tighten up provisions regarding depreciation and depletion allowances.

This really is a massive form of tax incentive which has provided a great deal of the capital throughout the years for United States controlled subsidiaries in Canada. I wish to draw this to the particular attention of the minister because it seems to me there should be some consideration of the larger investment in Canada of capital obtained in this way.

Before concluding I should like to offer to the minister a few suggestions from our New Democratic Party program. This is the present program; you can rely on it. If the minister would like to have one of these booklets I would be glad to send on over to him later. What would happen, Mr. Chairman, if we should over the months ahead get a convert? We will do our best to see that he has the information.

Mr. Knowles: Maybe his applause means that he is being converted.

Mr. Herridge: I think we have a convert to our objectives but he is running on a different political railroad at this time.

New Democratic investment policy seeks to break monopoly control over Canadian industry and resources.

Modern corporate expansion is financed mainly out of huge corporation reserves.

And in the other ways I have mentioned. This briefly is our program to meet the situation:

The New Democratic government's taxation policy will be a basic part of its planning. It will divert funds from private to public investment, redistribute the national income on a fairer basis and help to regulate the pace of economic activity.

A large part of the accumulated investment funds of private companies must flow into the public treasury, there to be used to realize public economic objectives. This will be accomplished through:

(a) an increase in the corporation tax rate, especially on undistributed profits;

(b) reduction in excessive depreciation and depletion allowances;

(c) limitations on the deductions now allowed for advertising and sales promotion;

(d) a tax on capital gains;

Canada is one of the few countries in the western world which does not have a capital gains tax.

(e) increased succession duties.

The present tax structure will be reformed by such steps as:

(a) reduction in the tax burden on lower income groups;

(b) abolition of the special privileges which now go to the recipients of corporation dividends;

(c) stricter control of expense accounts and similar allowances, to eliminate tax-dodging;

(d) removal of the federal sales tax and special excise tax from the necessities of life.

In addition, I support every effort put forward by the minister and his officials in respect of research in this country. I trust it will be co-ordinated research as a result of co-operation with other governments, universities, and private industry to find things which will be of benefit with regard to processing our natural resources and our marketing opportunities at home and abroad.

I should like to support also those who have spoken about regional planning and who have suggested that it should not be localized or parochial planning. I think it is more effective to lay out the country in regions rather than just in smaller areas where such a program would benefit that area and ignore its relationship to the surrounding region. I am sure that if this program is to be successful there will have to be the closest co-operation between the provincial governments and the agencies interested in this type of work with industry, small industry, small business, and with labour and other groups.

I think there must be an effort to ensure that the public generally understands the purposes and objectives of the department. We should seek in every possible way to secure their co-operation. I am not suggesting for a moment that the things I have mentioned will cure the ills of the capitalist system but they may make life more endurable during the time we have to live on this planet.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, if I may have the indulgence of the committee and the minister for a few moments I should like to pick up where my colleague the hon. member for Halifax left off on the question of the area incentive program. The minister has heard the blessings which have been expressed in respect of this piece of legislation. As the hon. member for Halifax has mentioned, the minister received communications in the form of letters, briefs, and so on from the mayors of the four distinct areas of Halifax, Dartmouth, Saint John, Fredericton and the municipalities or areas immediately surrounding these cities. Latterly he has heard collectively from the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council which represents, as has been suggested, a non-political group. This should carry added weight in reassuring the government of the necessity of moving in some concerted manner to overcome the regional disparities which exist in the Atlantic provinces.

It has been suggested that unemployment figures are the criterion for the area incentive program in the regions in which it is applicable. It is not necessary for me to recite the employment and unemployment figures in British Columbia, the prairie region, Ontario, Quebec and in our region, the maritimes. I think hon. members are very familiar with them. Therefore, suffice it that I draw to your attention one or two facts. On March 19 this year, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, employment stood at 6.821 million and unemployment at 341,000, which means that somewhere in the order of 5 per cent of our national labour force was out of work on that date. In the maritime provinces on March 19 there were 537,000 people at work. On the same date there were 63,000 people out of work. The relationship between these figures is very obvious. In our area 63,000 people out of work represent approximately 12 per cent of our total labour force whereas the national average was only in the order of 5 per cent. I will not draw the more startling comparisons that are obvious in respect of the Ontario, prairie and British Columbia regions.

The necessity of dealing with the problems of industrial development and productivity in the Atlantic region has been brought so forcibly to the attention of the government, civic leaders, economists and everybody concerned that there is very little I can do except reiterate what appears to be a mounting volume of evidence to support two or three very basic propositions. The first of these is the need to approach the problems of the Atlantic region in the spirit that has been voiced so often by the government, the spirit of equal opportunity and equal sharing in our national prosperity. This is not easy to achieve, as pointed out by the Economic Council of Canada and by APEC. Any economist who has studied the relationship of the Maritimes to the rest of Canada has come to the same conclusion in one way or another, and that conclusion is simply that the problems cannot be approached piecemeal but rather must be attacked by one concerted effort.

The minister is very much aware of this but in spite of the pleas and urgings to pursue this course the government has not yet seen fit to do so. We do have the Atlantic provinces development board and the area incentive program, but I suggest to the minister that if he cannot modify, extend or enlarge the regulations under these programs at once to embrace the four areas mentioned, Saint John, Dartmouth, Halifax and Fredericton, which are the growth centres of the Atlantic region and are now outside any special incentive program, the help needed will not be forthcoming.

Because these are the growth centres and the centres to which people from rural areas will be attracted, a great percentage of whom are unemployed, the government must give serious consideration to them. It has been suggested that it is of no avail to locate an industry in a region, district or area where there are not the labour, goods, materials, processes and markets to support it. It has been suggested that experience may well prove that many of these companies located in so-called designated areas are going to remain burdens on the economy for a long time to come simply because they have been misplaced, whereas if they had been placed in growth centres as they have wanted to be traditionally this would have created stability in the over-all area rather than instability. Urban people will not go to rural areas to work but rural people will come into urban areas.

To illustrate further the effect of what is happening in the Atlantic area I should like to point out to hon. members that in 1960, for example, per capita production in the Atlantic provinces stood at $218. The national average in Canada at the same time was very nearly $600—$589 to be exact. That is more than double and it indicates there is something seriously wrong. It also indicates that with government help through a concerted program on the part of the minister we will arrive at a situation where we can bring in new industry, promote stability and broaden the economic base. This will bring about diversification and will create incentives for other industries to expand.

If we are to survive as members of the whole, and I speak of members of Canada as a nation, the Atlantic provinces area must find 20,000 new jobs each year for the next few years. At the end of five years this figure will be closer to 30,000 and, indeed, I hope it will be closer to 40,000. But without some concerted form of over-all approach to the problems of the Atlantic region we are not even going to be able to provide the 20,000 new jobs that will have to be created there. I do not think the necessary approach is an area incentive program but rather a broader based area approach must be taken to solve this problem.

The figure of 20,000 jobs means that we will simply maintain our present growth rate. There are any number of standards by which to measure this. While we are going ahead we are not keeping pace with the gross national product For example, in 1947 Nova Scotia—I single our Nova Scotia because this area is perhaps illustrative of Atlantic region problems—enjoyed, to our dismay, per capita incomes that only reached about 81 per cent of the national average. That was less than 20 years ago. While incomes in 1964 had risen in terms of total dollars, it is significant to note that in comparison with 81 per cent of the national average figure in 1947 we enjoyed only 74.8 per cent. This is indicative of what is happening in the Atlantic region. The failure on the part of the government to approach the problems of the Atlantic region on a broad basis has created this situation. It has been created in spite of our own efforts to keep up by helping to create that atmosphere in which our economic growth could at least keep pace with the national growth.

I have some other figures that are illustrative of what is happening. In 1961 we had 3.65 million families in Canada. Of these families 77 per cent enjoyed, and undoubtedly do now to an even greater degree, annual incomes in excess of $3,000 per year. Taking the figures for the Atlantic provinces, of 86,000 families in Newfoundland 49 per cent, have incomes in excess of $3,000. The national average is 77 per cent. In Prince Edward Island, our smallest province, 55 per cent of the 14,000 families receive $3,000 or more. In the province of Nova Scotia where we have 147,000 families and, thank God, an excellent premier, the figure is 63 per cent. This is still 14 per cent below the national average. In New Brunswick where there are 111,000 families only 61 per cent earn $3,000 or more. Every other province in Canada has at least 68 per cent or more of its families in the $3,000 plus bracket. If one removes the figures for the Atlantic provinces from the national average one finds that 82 per cent of the families of Canada enjoy annual incomes in excess of $3,000.

The same pattern emerges when one considers per capita income. In Ontario the figure is $2,025. In Newfoundland it is $1,009. Listing the provinces in the order in which they stand in the income per capita field we find Ontario leading the way—there is no doubt about that—with British Columbia second, Alberta third, Saskatchewan next—

Mr. Cantelon: Good old Saskatchewan.

Mr. Forrestall: "Good old Saskatchewan"—I would remind the hon. member that had it not been for the Atlantic provinces there would be no Saskatchewan.

Mr. Cantelon: We are out of the have-not area.

Mr. Forrestall: You are. We are still in it. In Saskatchewan the income per capita amounts to $1,749. In my own province of Nova Scotia it is $1,302; in New Brunswick it is $1,167 and in Prince Edward Island, $1,115.

Reciting these figures takes the time of the committee but I simply wish to substantiate the point I am making, that in the absence of an over-all approach to the problems of the Atlantic region we shall never achieve any degree of national parity, any reasonable share in the wealth of this nation.

The vehicles which the federal government can use in its approach to the problems of the Atlantic area are already in existence. There is no need to set up another crown corporation or establish a ministry for the Atlantic region. Industrialization can take place through existing arrangements. I ask the minister whether he is completely confident that nothing can be done to change the area incentive regulations so as to include the principle of growth centres such as Halifax, Dartmouth, Saint John and Fredericton. If this is impossible in terms of other criteria which have been set up I would ask the minister to urge his colleagues to give consideration to the broadening of the base upon which the Atlantic Development Board operates. I urge him to ask his colleagues to consider broadening the scope of its regulations so as to permit the board to make direct capital grants to industry as well as to make settling-in grants for a period up to three years. I suggest that the Atlantic Development Board remains the one real hope among the existing vehicles. There are others which could be overlooked despite their importance. I shall not on this occasion discuss the fields of research and technical development.

What we in the Atlantic provinces need is the industry so that we could do some research for ourselves. We have to get the industry first. While a good job is being done within the present framework of the Atlantic Development Board, this is not enough. There has to be an over-all effort aimed at every area of endeavour, not just those areas which endeavour to supply the service element, by which I mean the development of industrial parks, water and sewage services and so on. These are very necessary and I would be the last to suggest that what the development board has done has not been excellently done and of great value. But it does not go far enough.

Unless we take a fresh look at this situation we are bound to see a repetition of what has been happening in Halifax during the last 12 to 14 months. There is a real possibility of losing a $60 million fisheries based industry. We have already lost a chemical industry based on oil refining. We nearly lost Volvo, Canada, which was brought to this country after great effort involving co-operation between the provincial and the federal governments. It was only by a special effort on the part of the provincial authority that we managed to keep it in Nova Scotia at all.

Many other opportunities have been lost or nearly lost to this area because we are outside the range of special tax incentives. Again I would ask the minister to take a hard look at the whole basis of the regulations governing the Atlantic Development Board should he consider it impossible to revise the criteria applying to the designated areas.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words only on the first item of these estimates. At the outset I should like to tell the Minister of Industry that I realize there has been a certain amount of criticism, some of it valid and some of it possibly not so valid, directed toward the activities of this new department. There have no doubt been problems in recruiting a suitable staff and settling in. This may have prevented the department from taking all the action it might have taken to promote the development of industry in Canada. I also want the minister to know that we in this party give him full support for whatever programs and undertakings his department can initiate to promote and enhance our industrial establishments in Canada.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I think we should direct the attention of the minister to some of the provisions of the designated area program, and perhaps for different reasons than those which have been advanced in the house so far today. I say this because I feel we need to be concerned about the long-range effect of the establishment of industries in these designated areas. I believe that in the course of time it will be shown that some misplaced industries have been set up in these areas because of the incentives available for establishment there. There will be problems, I suggest, for those industries if they are to continue to be competitive with other industries producing the same class of goods and which may be more efficient because of their proximity to raw materials and markets.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is a great burden for any municipality to have an industry which cannot meet the kind of competition it will face in the ordinary course of business after the benefits of the original incentives have lapsed. I suggest we also have a responsibility in the federal administration to see that those economic areas which are strong today remain so. In this way they will be able to assist some of the so-called depressed areas over this period. The only plea I make is that we do not go too far with the designated area program so that we weaken some of the stronger areas and then find ourselves with a lot of misplaced industries. This certainly would undermine our whole economic establishment, particularly when we must be competitive in the international field.

While talking about designated areas, Mr. Chairman, may I say there are some factors involved in the formula establishing designated areas which should be examined. I am not suggesting now that anyone ought to have anticipated all the problems that may arise from time to time. However, it does seem to me that the various factors involved in whether or not an area is going to be designated should be under continuous review. One thing that has shown up is that the level of unemployment in an area seems to be far too heavily weighted at the present time. I say that because in certain communities in southern Alberta, for example, there has been an exodus of unemployed from these areas to places where there are employment opportunities; yet the growth and income level factors meet the requirements for a designated area within the program. I suggest that this is going to encourage, as some members have said, a further concentration of industry in the larger urban areas. Personally I believe that this is not desirable over the long range.

I should like now to deal with another matter affecting southern Alberta. In Medicine Hat constituency an industry was established not very long ago for the processing of potatoes. It ran into some problems in connection with a processing patent. I would have thought this would be a problem in which the Department of Industry would be keenly interested and actively involved in trying to solve it. Without attempting to be unduly critical, I do not believe that the representations made by the industry and the provincial government received the kind of response they should have received from the Department of Industry.

[Mr. Olson.]

There was, for example, some patent litigation over the processing method that had been developed by a branch of the federal government. It seemed to me that these people were left to their own resources to fight these legal problems. On balance, I think if justice were to be done the federal government, particularly the Department of Industry, should have assumed some responsibility with regard to the litigation.

I say that, Mr. Chairman, because this was a good industry. The equipment appeared to be modern and of excellent design. It was located in an area where the potential for the raw material, potatoes, was great. It seemed to me that everything was there. The location was ideal and the industry would have been beneficial not only to the farmers in the area but to the investors in the industry and to Canada. However, it collapsed. It is still not running because while the legal battle is over the delay and the clouded issue hanging over the whole project for so many months have made it difficult to resume operations.

I do not want to be unduly critical of the minister and his department because the department was in the formative stages at the time. However, it seems to me that the federal government should go to the aid of an industry in such a situation because certainly the people who tried to get it going and invested their money could not be blamed for it. I hope arrangements have now been made so that the plant can get into production. I do not know whether that is the case but certainly there has been no activity around the plant yet.

I have referred to this plant as an example of something with which I feel the Department of Industry could have been concerned. I hope that in the future they will be more actively interested in problems of this kind.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, I intend to be brief but it seems to me that because of a lack of action on the part of several departments, not only the Department of Industry, it has become necessary for provincial governments to make direct contact with certain foreign countries to try to promote industrial growth. I am not suggesting that this is wrong, but I suggest that the reason provincial government representatives have had to take this step is that not enough initiative is being taken by the federal government.

For example, British Columbia only a short time ago sent a trade mission to Japan not only for the purpose of promoting trade but also for the purpose of promoting additional industrial establishment in British Columbia. The premier of Alberta is in Japan at the present time and I presume, although I do not know for sure, that discussions will be held there with a view to expanding certain primary industries in Alberta which will be beneficial both to that province and to Japan. Newfoundland has had direct discussions with industrialists in the United Kingdom and Europe.

In matters such as this it should be the prime responsibility of the federal government to carry on negotiations and discussions with foreign countries. Therefore I hope that in the future the Department of Industry will become more active in assisting industries already established in Canada such as the one I have mentioned, and will also do some of the work which the provinces seem to have taken on and which I believe is perhaps a little out of their field, particularly when they are having discussions and conducting negotiations with representatives of foreign countries.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman—

[English]

Mr. Skoreyko: Filibuster.

Mr. Choquette: The hon. member has forgotten the historical debate on the flag; he has lost his memory.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, following the example of several colleagues, including the member for Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Beaulieu), I should like to congratulate the minister on the tremendous work he has done and the unusual vitality he displays in carrying out his objectives. Our friends opposite for whom I have much respect, will appreciate that it is this government who assumes the responsibility of administering the country, that it is the present government who took the initiative of creating this Department of Industry, and I think the absence of such a department was an unfortunate gap which we filled in. Having as head of this department a man of peerless ability, I am convinced that we will easily accomplish great things for Canada as a whole.

And it is an important thing, Mr. Chairman, to work eagerly for the industrial development of our country. It is a fundamental thing that the federal government assume its responsibilities in that field because I am convinced that despite ideological trends spreading in the province of Quebec, the more efforts the federal government will put forth to promote and increase the growth of our economy, multiply jobs, help those who cannot afford to provide for their essential needs, the more we will be able to counterbalance the ideological trends which at one time, may have threatened our Confederation.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the very interesting remarks made a while ago by the member for Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville, I would like to point out in passing the overlapping of "jurisdiction" which, according to him, constitutes an obstacle to efficient administrative decisions.

The member for Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville pointed out especially that to get a post office, it was necessary first of all to have the approval of the Post Office Department, which is quite normal, but that the approval of the Post Office Department did not settle the problem, because it was necessary afterwards to ask the Department of Public Works to find a suitable site and purchase the necessary plot of land.

Well, I am somewhat surprised at the amazement shown by the member for Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville in that connection, because I think it is quite normal that all authorities should co-operate in reaching such a decision.

He may be right when he points out that sometimes the co-operation is not always keen; this may be corrected, but I do not think that one should be surprised at this overlapping of "jurisdiction", which, in my opinion, is quite normal.

Obviously, my good friend from Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville yearns after the Union nationale administration where there was only one "boss" who decided everything. Then, everything worked well when the "boss" said yes or no. The ministers had no "jurisdiction". I understand that he misses this administration but we, who are imbued with democratic spirit, cannot allow such a system.

In the course of his very interesting remarks the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville made earlier, he pointed out some obstacles which crop up when it comes to locating major industries such as, for instance, "la sidérurgie de Bécancour", the steel complex.

I do not think that it is fair to inveigh against the authorities if they cannot put the project into operation overnight.

Heavy industry, such as the steel industry, requires long range planning, and not only studies with a promise to extend their operations, but also continued negotiations which of necessity require a great deal of time.

I share the optimism shown by the premier of Quebec. I am convinced, as he is, that this steel complex will be established in Bécancour, but we must be patient. All the economic effects have to be provided for. They will be tremendous. Thousands of jobs will be created in the area which itself will be transformed to a tremendous and wonderful degree.

It must then be recognized that the policy whereby heavy industries are set up in rural areas jibes perfectly with the electoral commitments of the federal Liberals namely that industries needed to be decentralized and rural areas industrialized. Here is the fundamental problem in rural areas: the young people shy away more and more from the land, from the beautiful occupation of farming; they seek employment in industries.

The young people want to work and to do so they must go into exile. Under the circumstances, if we make an effort, constant and persistent, to industrialize those rural areas, not only will we fight poverty, but we will keep the young people born to rural families where they belong.

That goal is very dear to the party in office. We can then but rejoice to see the efforts which are being made in the province of Quebec toward industrial decentralization.

What is more, how could we not rejoice when the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys—he was here a few moments ago—jointly with the premier of the province of Quebec, Mr. Lesage, have announced the construction of a thermonuclear plant at Bécancour? How then can the people of that region be sceptical about the setting up of a steel complex?

It is obvious that ties link, on the one hand, the steel complex, and on the other, the thermonuclear plant which Atomic Energy of Canada approved with Bécancour was chosen by the provincial authorities of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot but commend all those projects and believe in the importance of those projects which will become a huge source of prosperity for the Bécancour area which is located near the fine constituency which I have the honour to represent and of which I am proud. I wish to take this opportunity to greet the people of Lotbinière who are here in the gallery.

And now, Mr. Chairman, if we want to industrialize rural areas, especially if Bécancour—

• (3:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Why don't you speak to the house instead of to the gallery?

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, when I speak I speak for the people of Canada. My hon. friend should do the same. I speak for the people of my riding. If my hon. friend were to do the same, he would not speak in opposition all the time.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Choquette: With great pleasure.

Mr. Churchill: In his opening remarks there is this sentence, produced through the translation system: "This government has created this minister".

I was not aware that the Liberal government had taken unto itself divine power. Alternatively, if the hon. member is an atheist, does he not still believe in the stork?

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I believe the translation was inaccurate. I said that the present government had created the Department of Industry, because the only people who can create a minister are the Conservatives, since creation consists of making something out of nothing.

Mr. Chairman, I want to go on briefly with my few remarks and urge the present government as strongly as I can to take advantage of the jurisdiction it is now exercising and to take all possible means to really fight poverty in an efficient and concrete way.

I had the opportunity to spend a few days in the United States and I listened to Mr. Schriver giving a lecture on the war on poverty.

It was at that meeting that a dispute—I shall not say a scuffle—occurred between the audience and Mr. Schriver. Indeed, the latter was told: "Stop using big words like sociology, psychology and all sorts of long words that do not solve any problems. What we want is concrete action". I see the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) agrees with me wholeheartedly.

We want concrete action and the best way to achieve that is through the establishment of industries where there are none, particularly in underdeveloped and rural areas, to multiply jobs and prevent the exodus of our country people.

That is what I want to fight for in this house and I am convinced that this philosophy is shared by the minister to whom I want to repeat my congratulations for the fine work he has been doing since he has taken charge of the department.

Mr. Caouette: Would the hon. member for Lotbinière allow me a question?

Mr. Choquette: With pleasure.

Mr. Caouette: Has the minister to whom he has just referred been created out of nothing?

Mr. Choquette: I said that the only ones who can create ministers are the Conservatives, since they succeed in doing something out of nothing. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) is a striking example of what I am saying.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I was not surprised this afternoon to see the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) take the floor again because I must say that, in my humble opinion, he is a very active member, he assumes his responsibilities and makes his electors' views known to the house.

However, even if I do not always follow him right to the end, I must say that he was right to congratulate the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) for trying to promote the country's industrial development and particularly the industrialization of rural areas.

However, he criticized a remark made by the hon. member for Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Beaulieu) and I think that he was a little unfair to him because, in my opinion, in the field of industry, as in many others in Canada, jurisdictions overlap at present.

That is not surprising because in 1867 industrialization was nothing to worry about and the Canadian constitution could not foresee the fantastic program which we are witnessing and into which we are driven, mostly by our giant neighbour, the United States.

In that field, as in many others which we mentioned over the last three months, since the beginning of this session, we say that it is high time to amend the Canadian constitution precisely in order to clearly define our governmental responsibilities, those of the central government and those of the provincial governments.

Departments of Industry are being set up in the provinces. How far can the activities of a provincial department of Industry go? How far can the undertakings of the federal department of Industry extend?

How must the provincial and federal Departments of Industry work together for the common good toward the country's industrial development to get quick and effective results?

The Canadian constitution has us in a strait-jacket and, once again, I take this opportunity to ask the government—and there again it would be taking steps in the right direction as requested a little earlier by the hon. member for Lotbinière—to do something which would enable members of this house, to work within a joint committee with the Senate that would lay the groundwork for a national conference, to clearly define the constitutional reforms.

Mr. Chairman, the longer the task of defining governmental responsibilities is delayed, the more confusion and tension are created between the provincial governments.

When the government introduced in the house the Canada-U.S. automobile agreement, I was greatly pleased to support it since it was an undertaking which had already given very good results.

I had hoped, like many other members, that the government and particularly the Department of Industry, would have given serious consideration to taking quickly steps to reach similar agreements in other areas of industry in Canada.

Obviously, throughout the world, there exists this spirit of economic union, free trade, and I believe Canada should take part in this evolution, this trend toward free trade, through the development of its industries and trade agreements with other countries, including the United States. But we must always take into consideration the views of Canadian citizens and take care that our existing industries do not suffer from general agreements which, on the whole, might be harmful to some parts of our country.

This afternoon I wish to speak briefly on the textile industry. It is not the first time I do so here. I intend to raise it again, for the textile industry is an important one, especially for the province of Quebec. In fact, 20 important Quebec communities depend on that industry. In the riding of Sherbrooke, which I represent in the house, there are 12 textile industries which ensure the livelihood of 40 per cent of the workers, men and women.

That important industry is experiencing increasing unrest and is going through a critical situation, despite the favourable balance-sheets of some concerns. For instance, the Dominion Textile Company has a spinning-mill in Sherbrooke, another one in Magog and a third one in Montmorency; for the past ten years, its financial statements have shown surpluses and, if I remember well, from 1954 to 1964, its profits amounted to $120 million.

Does that mean that the textile industry is flourishing? Far from it, Mr. Chairman. When one considers the situation, one finds that industrials had to show renewed ingenuity to face up to foreign competition. They had to renew their equipment and adapt it for increased production to compete with foreign products. But all that was done at the expense of the working class, and here is why. In the spinning-mills or factories, the weavers have to work in abnormal and inhuman conditions. It has been established, for instance, that the working pace has to be based on the marching time of the British army, which is three miles an hour, to get 100 per cent productivity. In the textile plants in Sherbrooke and elsewhere, at the present time, workers must work at a rate of 125 per cent to get a decent salary of $65 a week —which is not unreasonable. They must run like rabbits, looking after 110, 115 or 120 spinning frames from morning until night, and most of the time they have only five or ten minutes to take a bite at lunch hour. Unlike everybody else, they do not have half an hour or an hour for lunch. That is the situation in the Canadian textile industry.

It is very well to say that our Industry Department is thinking of attracting new industries. That is fine. It is a good thing—and such a stand must be encouraged—for the department, in co-operation with other departments, to consider, as is often rightly mentioned by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), using our raw materials on the spot and processing them in the first stage here, in Canada, particularly to help our production and industrialization and the marketing of our finished products abroad. That is an excellent undertaking but the government should make every effort so that we keep our present industries and that they are not put in a situation which would force them to disappear.

The textile industry is a Canadian industry. This afternoon some hon. members referred to American investments, to foreign investments, saying that our industrial problems are often dependant upon other governments or foreign businessmen.

Well, Canadian capital invested in the textile industry represents about 80 per cent. Therefore, it is very important, Mr. Chairman, that the government make every effort to safeguard and improve the textile situation in Canada, especially in the province of Quebec. Solutions would be numerous. Of course, there is the colossal matter of foreign imports. We get too many foreign textile products. I have asked questions in the house in that respect, but I did not get any answer. I raise the question once again this afternoon.

We are told that those Canadian textile industrialists have opened foreign branches, either in Hong Kong or in Japan, with the profits they made in Canada sweating our labour class, which is forced to work in inhuman conditions. Those industrialists invested those funds in Hong Kong, in Japan or elsewhere, to set up factories, where production costs are much lower, and where Chinese or Japanese people work for 20 cents or 15 cents per hour. Those Canadian industrialists produce textile overseas and import it into Canada, into their own domestic market, thus hurting the Canadian production and slowing down employment within our own industries. Is that correct? In my opinion, it is important that the Department of Industry and the government take an interest in that aspect of the question and lay down standards to prevent Canadian industrialists who wish to invest overseas from using profits made here to import those foreign products, thus harming the Canadian production and the Canadian workers. I think the government should take this question into consideration in order to find out the truth about the facts that were reported to us, and lay down import standards in order to afford greater protection to the Canadian industry.

In fact, Canadian industrialists are still those who make most profits, thanks to very low production costs in Japan; they suffer no inconvenience from this situation; their fortune is ever increasing; they can travel throughout the world and live in luxury.

• (3:20 p.m.)

But the Canadian worker and the Canadian consumer must suffer on account of this policy, if it is exists, and I believe it does, according to my information which is not official.

I feel it is the duty of the Canadian government and the Department of Industry to look into this field, in order to inform the people and set standards accordingly.

Because of certain imports we must accept from foreign countries, some thought should also be given to promoting the textile industry and diversifying its production.

Since Canada does not grow cotton, a material essential to the textile industry, the Department of Industry should consider promoting industrial research in the field of synthetic fibres, or still, in the production of certain synthetic goods, which would enable the textile industry to keep apace and maintain its activities, and especially enable Canadian workers and their families to earn a living in those industries and, with the help of the department of manpower, soon to be created, to become skilled workers in the production of new goods.

Those are the few remarks I wanted to add with regard to the textile industry. I wish to assure the minister that if he has encouraging words for the Canadian people, they will be readily accepted, because over 5,000 weavers are on strike at present in the province of Quebec.

Besides, the problem goes much further than that of relations between labour and management. The problem arises from difficulty within the textile industry which, in order to compete with too many imports, had to step up its production and output. As a result, the profits of the industry were not reduced, but the textile workers were compelled to work in inhuman and unacceptable conditions while getting an inadequate salary.

Such is the alarming situation facing the textile workers and their families who look to the government, not only to the management, for a solution, and expect the government to take a firm position in order to improve the situation.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like the minister to make quite clear how foreign industrialists go about it when they want to come to Canada in order to open a subsidiary or invest capital.

How do they go about it? Do they apply to the Department of Industry or to the Department of Trade and Commerce? Do federal civil servants show them or lure them with industrial and economic advantages in all provinces, or in one particular province?

We need, in the province of Quebec, as well as in the Maritimes, an increasing inflow of new industry. Well, we want to know from the department, when foreign companies or businessmen apply to the federal government, how the economic and industrial image of Canada is presented to them?

For instance, we have 12 textile mills in Sherbrooke. I feel we have too many textile mills and that it is appropriate for the future, to think—and this is also of interest to other Quebec ridings—about keeping what we have, very well, but to think also of diversifying new industries, in different lines and that is the reason why we in Sherbrooke, need industries other than textile precisely to absorb manpower, which is sometimes totally or partially set aside, in order to maintain a high level of employment in Sherbrooke, in my area. And that goes for many other areas of the country.

Consequently, we should like to know how the government, the Departments of Industry or Trade and Commerce proceed to guide new foreign industries when they settle in Canada. I am asking publicly, today. I have often asked in writing. We, in Sherbrooke, are most interested in having new industries, in creating new industries.

We have a hard-working population, an enchanting site, adequate electric power, all necessary hydro-electric power, rivers, and we are close to the American border. We have a promising industrial centre. We are not going to send the Sherbrooke city council or the Sherbrooke member to Europe to meet various departments of industry over there. I am inclined to believe that foreign industrialists must apply to the federal government to find out which would be the best area, the best city in which to open a subsidiary.

I should very much like the minister to reply to this question. So, Mr. Chairman, I close my remarks and hope that the minister, when he speaks, will give detailed answers to these questions.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with some interest to the last few speakers and probably the tenor of my remarks will not be anywhere near that of some of the remarks to which we have listened. Most people in Canada have been very interested in the Department of Industry, because it seemed that it might be like the extension of some of the other federal departments we have had, such as the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and the Department of Fisheries. It seemed a logical development that the Department of Industry carry on in that field the role that the federal government has had in other national fields.

This may be the intention, but in my opinion it certainly has not been brought about. We have about the same industrial development in Canada now that we had five years ago. But in this department directly we have spent now $31 million and, particularly in the segment in which I am interested, I believe very little is being accomplished to give an indication that the money is being well spent.

Let me say at the beginning, Mr. Chairman, that through my dealings with the Department of Industry, it would seem to me they have assembled in this department a very capable group of people, at least in a large segment of that department; but let me hasten to add that in my opinion they really have not started to do anything except in those fields which are similar to the operations of those in the Department of Defence Production who had related roles. I am speaking of the special branches where we have allowed industry to control the branch. One need only look at some of the branches to see where the control lies. When you see the dominance that industries have over those branches you realize that we are not really going to expand in those fields when the people in the department are controlled by industry. Obviously they are not going to be interested in the little people. Obviously they are not going to be interested in new people, and obviously they are not going to be interested in the development of any type of industry in that branch which will hurt the status quo of the people who put them there. I think that is a fact.

I do not intend to go into that role, but I think it is time some of us take a look at the Department of Industry, because I am sure anyone who looks at the department will find it is not doing what we expected it was going to do or what most of the members here may believe it is doing. It may be that some have not given much attention to this particular department because it has not affected their ridings. They should take a look at it, because it has become a little hierarchy of the civil service which will multiply without really going anywhere. I think nothing will result unless something is done in the very near future. As I say, I have met a number of people in this department and they are very capable people. However in my opinion they are not going anywhere.

I should like to talk about the one area in which I am concerned and in respect of which I have some knowledge. I refer to the whole role of the designated area and the part it plays within the department. Before I begin, Mr. Chairman, may I draw to the attention of the house something which happened the other day. Probably it will explain part of the problem as I see it. I have heard several members say that the minister has done a fair job and knows exactly what he is doing. I do not believe this is true, and I think the Prime Minister agrees. I believe this for the simple reason that the Prime Minister represents a riding in northern Ontario just as I do, and has been concerned about the fact that the Department of Industry and the designated area program have not helped northern Ontario one iota. Neither have they helped those who live in the maritimes, and the northern parts of Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Quebec, and the other outlying areas which are not surrounded by the major metropolitan areas of Canada. I am sure these people also will say the program has not been helpful in those areas. The designated areas program has not assisted them in any way.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The Prime Minister came into his own riding several weeks ago and met a delegation there which stated again that they were receiving absolutely no assistance in persuading industry to come into the area. Even more important, they said they were not receiving any help in conducting a survey or inventory of their resources in order that they might know how to exploit these resources and what industries should be located there. The Prime Minister admitted that he did not know the answers and had not been supplied with them. He agreed that a committee of the mayors and reeves of the municipalities should be set up to consider the situation, and he left if up to the mayor of North Bay to get in touch with the other persons who should form this committee.

The Prime Minister promised that this committee could come to Ottawa and sit down with officials here to discuss these economic problems. They have done this and found the ministers of industry and manpower to be very helpful, along with a number of the personnel of these departments. During the discussions it became apparent that these people do not know what resources they have and do not know what assistance they need in developing them, or what may be available to them. They will never know until a survey and inventory have been carried out in the area.

There are a number of difficulties that prevent the attainment of a proper solution to the problem. Let me give one example. The minister of manpower suggested that one of his senior officials should get together with the committee to discuss the problems. It occurred to me that the development agency which is responsible for northern Ontario should also be represented at these discussions in order to avoid having two meetings, one with each department.

On the basis of that idea I telephoned the junior official responsible for the area and suggested that he attend these meetings. I was very surprised to learn later that my stenographer had received a call from this individual stating that he had been refused permission to attend this meeting because he had not been invited. In this country we have to co-operate with various provinces because this is a federal state. If we cannot send somebody from one department to another without a gilt-edged invitation, then I am sure we are damned well never going to be able to get along with the provincial governments.

I do not know what the answer is. Perhaps we should reduce the minister's salary to $1, but I do not think that will provide an answer to the problem. I am sure he does not know what to do about this matter. We said that this program would not work on the basis of the criteria that were laid down; the minister's senior officials told him that it would not work, and it has not worked.

It seems to me that these areas were selected by the Prime Minister and the premiers of the provinces who sat down and picked out a bunch of communities. Some of them meet one criterion and some meet another, while others do not meet any of them. It is interesting to note that the selection is more in keeping with the suggestion of the minister than with the ideas of the people who are working on this problem.

It is also interesting to note that Manitoulin island, located in the riding of the Prime Minister probably felt he should get something out of the selection. I am sure one premier said he wanted Bracebridge and another premier said he wanted something else. I have no objection to that situation, but what the devil does it matter in the long run? I should like to see the entire northern Ontario area designated because we are all in the same boat.

If we can develop new industries in one area or another let us not play one against the other, but take advantage of the situation on a national basis and develop the industry in the area in which it is most likely to succeed economically. Any other method of designating areas is stupid. The minister made a statement the other day which I should like to paraphrase. I cannot quote him verbatim and may even be distorting his words, but it seems to me that what he said described the ripple theory. That is, when you throw a rock into a pool you create ripples which emanate from the centre in ever widening circles. This same theory has worked in respect of large metropolitan areas and the ripples have encompassed surrounding towns.

I can remember when Thornhill was on the edge of Toronto and the farmers in the area used to ship milk by streetcar into the city. When I was hitchhiking in the Toronto area some years ago I remember riding on that streetcar among milk cans, chickens and other farm produce. That area is now in downtown Toronto.

The industrial area has been extending farther out from Toronto each year. It now takes in Thornhill, Bracebridge, Orillia and other towns. In future years I am sure this industrial ripple will encompass Kirkland Lake, Midland, Owen Sound and Parry Sound. It does or will include Sturgeon Falls, but I cannot imagine why, because the only industry they have there is the pulp and paper industry, which is now operating full blast, whereas a few years back it only operated for two or three days each week. I do not understand the story there, but I am not very much concerned. However, under this ripple theory they all fall within the Toronto area which runs out 50, 60 or even 100 miles.

Some day North Bay will come within the circle and it is 250 miles away. Kirkland Lake will come within the circle and it is 300 miles away. Timmins, which is 350 miles away, will eventually come within the circle, as will Moosonee and other places, and eventually we will have more salt-water ports in Ontario.

This will all happen eventually, but I do not think I will live to see it. Nor do I think the minister, this parliament or this program will live to see it. What do we do about the situation? We did not think there was going to be an election last year, but rather that we were going to have a recess. we had the assurance of the minister that somehting would be done about the situation immediately after we returned at the end of the recess. He was reluctant to give us his assurance in that regard, or that is the way it appeared. In any event he said, as reported in Hansard at page 3125 on June 30, 1965:

> I have assured a number of members, and I am glad to assure the house, that the government will table at the opening of the next part of the session the order in council designating the areas and will endeavour at an early date thereafter to refer the order in council to the house committee on industry, research and energy development for discussion.

I do not think there has been any attempt to table this, nor do I think there has been much attempt to discuss it. If the minister wishes to live up to his commitments, we would be happy to have him state that he is going to do that now. We would be pleased if he would also indicate that sessional paper 1981, which sets up the regulation for development incentives that affect designated areas, will also be referred to a committee. Perhaps that would be sufficient to satisfy our requests. If he is not prepared to do that, I am left with only one alternative. I must take the only action that is available to a member of parliament. I will have to beat this thing to death and bore this house and government until something is done. That action is not fair to other members of the house, but it is one of two alternatives available to back-bench members: They can either move a motion to reduce the estimates of a department or, in some way, force a discussion on the matter which will bring about a situation that may not be satisfactory to anyone.

I am not sure which proposition is the least unreasonable or the least unfair; but I believe it is vital that we in Canada find a solution to the problems presented by centralization, and arrest the flow of people from areas dependant on primary products to the major cities, which are centres not of production but of consumption. Not everyone will be interested in this question. Farmers will not be greatly interested. Many of them have not even considered it. I was always interested to hear people in the west say that the C.C.F. government had chased all the people out of Saskatchewan. I think they would find that Saskatchewan is no different from any other agricultural area in this respect. Every time a farmer doubles his acreage something has to be done about the man who was sitting next door before the amalgamation took place. There is bound to be a large displacement of the agricultural population and a search for new types of employment.

Yet, this is, basically, not a physical problem. This is not a difficulty which cannot be solved. It has been faced by France for at least 300 years. Why do not those people of French extraction who are so anxious to protect the provincial autonomy take a look at what has happened in France as a means of decentralizing and maintaining a national industrial development program which would keep people at work in all segments of the country, rather than concentrate them in one or two areas?

This problem has been tackled in England. It is well known to the government. Why will the minister not consider what has been done in England to decentralize industry? Why is the minister not interested in deciding that it would be better for the people of Canada if certain industries were located in one area rather than another? Possibly he does not know what has been happening in other countries; but I think he does. He must therefore have a reason for not giving us the benefit of his views. If he has not studied this question, I can assure him the senior officials of his department have done so. They are well aware of what has happened in other countries and of the difficulties which have arisen with regard to our own arrangements —difficulties which will make them inoperative in most of the areas they are designed to serve.

Some have suggested that the designation of northern Ontario rather than Manitoulin island would not necessarily bring industry into the region. I am not saying that designation is the complete answer. But, should all of northern Ontario be designated, I know of three major companies which would go into that part of the country. Why? Not because they particularly want to move into the area, but for the simple reason that this is where they find their raw material. One of these companies is the E. B. Eddy Company which has been sitting on limits in my area for 60 years. They have now been given three years in which to decide whether they will put up a pulp and paper mill. In default of this, they will lose their present limits. The expenditure involved would be considerable—some $42 million—even for a company as big as E. B. Eddy.

Why should we offer incentives to industry to establish themselves in the suburbs of Toronto where all the necessary services have to be provided at great expense. These companies cannot afford to provide their own transportation or educational systems. The cost falls on the taxpayers as a whole. Meanwhile the rest of Ontario is drained of its population.

I do not know what the answer is, and in trying to find an answer I have been given little co-operation by the federal government. Of course, we are not a unitary state and the federal government cannot make all the decisions. But for years I have been a member of the committee on agriculture, and when the federal government is interested in developing a new pesticide helpful to those engaged in the growing of corn I never hear any objection from the western provinces. Similarly when there are plans for the development of insecticides to protect tobacco crops I do not hear any objections from Ontario. Similarly I do not believe any province would object if the government were to come forward with proposals which really would bring in new industries to areas where they are badly needed.

We know that the present criteria will not work in northern Ontario. There is virtually no unemployment in my riding. Of all the hundreds of students who graduate from high school in Kirkland Lake today, not more than 4 or 5 per cent will be able to work in the area. The great majority of these young people have to go to Toronto or other cities in southern Ontario to find work.

This is not because of the different wage level existing locally as compared with rates in the more populous centres. I am sure there are people working in Ottawa today who are earning 40 cents an hour less than they might be earning in Toronto. Yet they stay in Ottawa. They stay here because it is home to them. It is the same in northern Ontario and in many other areas where the local population is being displaced through lack of employment opportunity. The money is not as important as is the opportunity of getting a job near home. Then again, we do not send a boy to a technical institute or to a high school and then expect him to take a labourer's job digging ditches.

The Department of Labour, or the department of manpower as it is to be known, together with the Department of Industry must find a solution. I do not expect the minister to present his estimates and say: Give me $30 million. I expect him to make some major pronouncement of his intentions about this industrialization program.

Let me tell you, this formula for the designation of areas at which we have arrived is obviously not satisfactory. It was so unsatisfactory there was an arrangement made to make these designations. The designations are not necessarily the best ones, but they are by no means the worst either. I have no disagreement with the areas that were designated. I can honestly say that in most cases they were no worse or no better than the areas alongside.

I have not been in the maritimes for the last two or three years. However, I know that the problems of the northern areas are similar to those of the maritimes. I do know that under the Conservative government an arrangement was made whereby assistance was provided to the maritimes on a regional basis for the development of some industries. I am aware also of the fact that the Atlantic provinces set up a self-help agency in which industry participated. I believe this type of organization could be kept in mind for the development of unequal growth areas in other parts of Canada. It could help to solve this problem which is not unique to northern Ontario or the maritimes.

This problem is common to those areas on the periphery of large centres of consumption. As I have said, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of things I could do. I could, with the assistance of some of my colleagues, hold up the estimates of this department for the next 30 days. I am sure we could do this. I do not believe it is an idle threat. However, I honestly do not believe this is the way to accomplish anything. Hon. members may recall that I did this, and got a commitment from the minister as a result of the pressure, to get the house closed in June of last year. It is more in sorrow than in anger that I say I am surprised the Liberal party, the Prime Minister and the cabinet, have allowed this kind of commitment to be made and not honoured it. I do not believe the government accepted it because of a threat. I believe they accepted it because they thought there had to be some more consideration for this problem.

It does not really fall on me to instigate this consideration. I believe that is the responsibility of the government. I believe too that if the government does not intend to do this, then we are going to have to ask the industrial committee to visit other countries. The committee will come back united and decide it is going to run the government. This could be the answer, I do not know. There do not seem to be any readily available answers.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a question? What did the hon. member mean by visiting other countries and then coming back and running this country that way?

Mr. Peters: I referred earlier to the fact that France, England, Norway and Sweden have developed different types of programs for the decentralization of industry and the distribution of industry rather than allowing people into the industrial centres, wherever they may be. If the committee were to visit Norway, in particular, they would find a very despotic method of deciding where industries should be located. The government makes the decision and if somebody wants to run the industry, that is okay. If nobody wants to do so, then the government puts somebody in to operate it as a crown corporation. The Swedish system is not quite so severe. In England they use the carrot, the stick and two or three different ways. France probably has a much better thought out system for deciding on the distribution of people and industries.

If the committee went to those countries it would probably come back convinced that one of these methods would work, because I believe the members are interested in finding a logical and sensible solution to the problem. The committee would probably recommend legislation containing at least one aspect or a combination of aspects of the controls used in other countries. Then, what is the answer? Do they tell the government what to do? Does the committee force the government to introduce legislation? I am not sure how we do it. I know that this question is important enough to my riding, important enough to every northern riding in every province of this country and to the people in the maritimes, that they are going to have to do something about it. I would strongly urge the minister to stand up and give us some indication of the direction in which he intends to go with this designated program, because it is not working well now.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. This is the fourth speaker from parties other than the Conservative party, which has 96 members in the house.

The Deputy Chairman: I wish to thank the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—

Mr. Churchill: I just draw it to your attention, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: —for reminding the Chair of the allocation of speakers. There is a certain number of speakers on behalf of the various parties, and the parties were allocated certain times. However, since there were no speakers available at certain periods, I have recognized the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Churchill: I have been here all day.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Just a few words, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the estimates of the Department of Industry.

The most fantastic point I find in the department's expenditures which amount to $50,582,400 is the difference between the:

(Fund) to sustain technological capability in Canadian industry by supporting selected defence development programs, on terms and conditions approved by Treasury Board—

A fund which amounts to $25,000,000 and the:

(Fund) to advance the technological capability of Canadian manufacturing industry by supporting selected civil (non-defence) development projects on terms and conditions approved by Treasury Board—

Mr. Chairman, this latter fund amounts to $8,700,000.

Now, the government spends four times less money on technological progress concerning non-military Canadian manufactured products than in the field of military defence.

I think it would be a good thing, for the enlightenment of members of Parliament and of the Canadian people, if the minister were to explain this difference, why he spends four times as much for defence as for non-military matters.

Such expenditures might be warranted if a war or some such thing were in the offering but I do not at the moment foresee any immediate conflict with another country; yet the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) is assigning $25 million for technological development in the field of defence, and only $8,770,000 for technological development concerning non-military matters.

Mr. Chairman, it is worthwhile to see the extent of the personal interest of the Minister of Industry in industrial decentralization and so forth. His estimates do not deal much with this subject. All the members are loudly demanding industrial decentralization—in fact, we heard earlier the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) say that we should put an end to this rural exodus towards the urban centres where there are many industries, and that we should decentralize until industries can be established in all ridings or near the towns which will bring economic expansion to all Canadian ridings.

The member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) said that there are a dozen textile industries in his region. He also mentioned a very interesting point, which is that Canadian industries have established branches or subsidiaries in the Orient, in countries across the Pacific, either Japan or China, where labour is much cheaper than in Canada.

Some Canadian industries even operate in Japan or China, bringing back textile products and competing with themselves. At least, this is what I deduce from the statements made earlier by the member for Sherbrooke, and I am not surprised.

As for electrical appliances, they are manufactured in large quantities by branches in Japan and shipped back to Canada. In the United States, manufacturers compete with themselves by importing products made in Japan or China. The same manufacturers compete with themselves with products made in Canada on the one hand and in Japan on the other.

Is that being very honest with the Canadian industry, the Canadian people, the Canadian government? Is it very honest to allow those industries to do that?

Mr. Chairman, we have other concrete examples. I come from a mining area the Department of Industry knows well. We have copper, gold, iron, zinc and lithium mines, in short all kinds of mines. One of our most important mining companies, the Noranda Mines produces gold, copper and zinc in huge quantities.

Not so long ago, the Noranda Mines officials decided to build a refinery to process the zinc mined in our area. Now, I do not know by what stretch of the imagination this decision was arrived at, but the zinc refinery was built in Valleyfield near Montreal rather than in our immediate vicinity which would have help create hundreds of jobs in our area. Then, in view of the circumstances and of the fact that our climate is severe, in short that we cannot set up in our region all kinds of new industry, the Minister of Industry could have opposed the building of this refinery in Valleyfield and proposed its establishment in our area, since they would have processed on the spot metals found in our part of the country. The federal Minister of Industry and his provincial counterpart did not pay any attention to this matter.

At present, in Malartic, there is talk about closing the gold mines because the grants given by the government are just enough to allow mines to die slowly; indeed, they are disappearing before your very eyes. If we continue to make grants, it is only from a social point of view, that is for the maintenance of families in urban communities, in small towns, as they are called here.

Why is the government not taking steps, for example, to promote the development of new iron ore deposits in our area? There is an immense potential of iron ore deposits in the area of Val d'Or, Malartic and Senneterre, and I realize that it is not the responsibility of the government to develop and operate mines, but if the government, as a result of its foreign trade, found a market as for the Ungava iron, there would be within a year at least a dozen mining companies operating in northwestern Quebec. At that time, the government would prove its good will toward a needy area.

As I have already said, our area has numerous copper mines. Noranda Mines is one of them; in fact, it is probably the largest mining company of its kind in Canada. It produces large quantities of copper which is cast into sheets or bars, then shipped to the Canada Wire Company, in Montreal, a branch of the Noranda company, where copper wire is made along with many other items.

Has the Minister of Industry consulted the management and the shareholders of the Noranda Mine, as he should, to suggest to them the establishment of a subsidiary plant or secondary industries in our area, to process the natural resources right where they are being extracted from the soil of Rouyn, Noranda, Malartic, Senneterre and Témiscamingue where there are bituminous mines?

Mr. Chairman, at the present time Canada would be accomplishing a beneficial gesture toward such areas, which are not designated but which nevertheless need secondary industries. In short, they have a great potential and a promising future.

Instead of spending $25 million to support the technological power of the Canadian defence industries, why could we not earmark this money to develop secondary industries, or else try to educate the officials of some companies as to the possibility and the logic of establishing secondary industries in our area, since we can supply the raw materials?

Do you not believe, Mr. Chairman, that we could also process these raw materials in our area? We could have done so with zinc; we could do it with copper and lithium and have secondary industries there. We have unlimited possibilities in our district, provided the government and the minister would look at them and see what is going on.

Some members of the house were lucky enough to visit my region and to see the operations of beautiful mines such as Val d'Or located close to Noranda. We have splendid mining industries at present, but the ore is mined and nothing is done to create secondary industries which would enable us to process the ore on the spot, in the northwestern part of Quebec. I call the attention of the minister to this point.

I have no further comments, but I want to draw the minister's attention to the following point: I am not asking him nor the government to spend millions of dollars to set up industries. I am asking that they discuss, with company officials, the possibility of creating secondary industries there. In this way, the minister will help the population and respect private enterprise by explaining that it is in its best interest to help an area develop as much as possible.

Mr. Chairman, the estimates of this department may not be very high, since they total only $50 million.

Industry needs much more throughout the country. A few provinces, or one province only, could use up that amount. But the Minister of Industry can help without detriment to anyone by allowing copper to be processed in Noranda instead of Montreal. This seems logical to me. It could be processed in the area of Val d'Or or Malartic, which is disappearing from the Abitibi map, because gold mines have to close down. Hence it is important and urgent that the Minister of Industry should assume the responsibilities which fall on him to help the area to develop, survive and grow, in short be what it used to be in the past, of great importance to the development of Canada and the province of Quebec.

Then, the minister will have helped not only my area but the Canadian economy as a whole. This will bring in more industries; decentralization will be achieved and we will be able to say that the Minister of Industry has played his part in maintaining our small towns, and establishing a more stable economy than that which we now have in the country.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, the importance of the department that we are now discussing I think must be evident, in view of the number of members who have already spoken, and in view of the emphasis they have been placing on one of the functions of this department, which is to provide industrial development elsewhere than in the heavily industrialized sections of Canada.

The Minister of Industry occupies a very important position within the government. With his Departments of Industry and Defence Production, and expenditures of about $80 million with respect to both those departments, he has an opportunity of exerting great influence on the industrial development of Canada.

We are nowadays in this country showing a proper interest in education at all levels, and in technical and vocational training. We are showing a great interest in bringing skilled immigrants into this country. We are intensely concerned with the development of our natural resources. We are equally concerned with the development of our industrial strength. It is in this field that the minister has the opportunity, with his staff in the two departments, to chart the course for Canada for the future. I think that a long-range view certainly is desirable.

I now wish to refer to the Thompson report, which had specifically to do with Air Canada, and with the overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg. What I will say may well overlap into things having to do with the Department of Defence Production. I think the minister will not object. He will be happier to hear one speech rather than two from this side of the house.

I trust you will bear with me, Mr. Chairman. I will link what I have to say directly with the responsibility of the minister, as I see it, and with the opportunity that lies in his hand to play a great part in directing the future of this country. I spoke about that in my preliminary remarks.

I would direct the minister's attention to page 132 of the Thompson Commission report, which repeats a statement made by the Prime Minister of Canada at the Dominion-Provincial Conference held in 1965. I quote, and these are his words:

> I would like first to refer to the economic items on the agenda. The first of these is concerned with regional problems. The federal government is well aware that the course of economic development in the various regions of Canada has been uneven. This has resulted in unequal opportunities for people in different parts of the country . . . Regional inequalities clearly mean that it is not enough to have policies designed to maintain a high rate of growth for Canada taken as a whole. We must also have policies to develop the full potential of all parts of Canada. Historically, regional inequalities have been the main divisive forces in our country and many national policies have therefore been directed toward overcoming such inequality. Changing circumstances require adaptations in the form of such policies but in no way lessen the importance of the objective . . . They must take into account the special needs of the individual regions. If all Canadians are to benefit as they should from economic growth we cannot rely entirely upon such general instruments as fiscal policy, monetary policy, and commercial policy. They have to be supplemented by more selective measures to achieve particular goals.

The Minister of Industry and of Defence Production is the person responsible for getting governmental approval to supplement fiscal policy, monetary policy and commercial policy by more selective measures to achieve particular goals. Indeed the Minister occupies a very challenging position.

One or two years ago I raised objections with regard to splitting up the Department of Trade and Commerce. Now, however, that split is an accomplished fact. It is now up to the minister to produce results. I think perhaps that he has able men on the staff to work with him. My words there apply to general policy. Let us apply the general policy to the particular situation in the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, as outlined by the Thompson report dealing with the overhaul and maintenance base of Air Canada in that city and in that province. I suggest to the minister that he need not read the whole report. The portions I want to deal with are largely to be found from page 119 to 133.

The Minister of Transport has responsibility in this house to report on behalf of Air Canada. He is the one who tabled the report and who gave the evasive replies on it yesterday, and to a certain extent today. I presume the Minister of Transport will say that this is the third report the government has received with regard to Air Canada, and consequently it will accept the suggestion of Air Canada that its operations with regard to overhaul and maintenance be confined to the one base at Dorval and that, over a period of a few years, the other base in the city of Winnipeg will be discontinued. I assume the minister will adopt that attitude, although this morning I had hoped he would take a different view and give us a policy statement.

I am not going to deal in any detail with the Thompson report which has come out against the retention of the overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg. Mr. Thompson had a specific investigation to make. He has now made his finding, and on economic grounds he reaffirms what earlier investigations had pointed out, that it is cheaper to operate the one base at Dorval than to have two, with the second at Winnipeg.

My only regret during the course of this rather long drawn-out controversy over the Winnipeg base is that in 1957 we did not have a distinct statement with regard to Air Canada's position, a statement which we subsequently received in 1962 and to which Mr. Thompson draws attention. It was only from 1962 on that it became clearly evident that it was the intention of the management of Air Canada to shift the base from Winnipeg to Dorval.

When I became apprised of what was going on I considered, and continue to hold the opinion, that the case having been clearly made out that it is uneconomic for Air Canada to support two bases, then the decision rests with the government as a matter of policy, based on the Prime Minister's statement which I have just read with regard to regional development and the economic progress of Canada.

It would be quite unfair to ask Air Canada to operate at a loss because of a decision made by government. If the government makes a decision which would cause that crown corporation to operate at a loss, then the loss should be borne by the people of Canada rather than by the corporation itself. That is the attitude I have taken for several years on this matter.

This is an instance where the government should say to Air Canada, "We would prefer that you would sustain more than one base in this country, but if economic surveys indicate that the maintenance of two bases will result in a loss to your corporation, that loss will be borne by the government of Canada, in other words, by the people generally." That would be in keeping with the policy that has been pursued within this country on a great many matters over the years. The government has undertaken subsidization of railway development, shipbuilding and many other enterprises. Air Canada itself is a government operated crown company. It is owned by the people of Canada. It works for the benefit of the people of Canada. It is not a private enterprise looking for a handout. Therefore it is in a different position from some other enterprises. Nevertheless, in the interests of general development in Canada, generation after generation the government has made it possible for industry to develop.

One field in which we have seen great government activity has been that of railway development and building. Looking to the future the government would be well advised to reconsider the situation with regard to Air Canada and its overhaul and maintenance bases. It should decide as a matter of policy for Canada that the second overhaul and maintenance base should be maintained in the city of Winnipeg.

That base has been there for a long time. By virtue of its existence it has built up a strong force of highly skilled labour. There is also a social aspect which must be taken into account by a government. It could not be taken into account by a commission looking at just the economic aspects, but when it comes to a social aspect this is where a government should play and frequently does play an important part.

The social aspect means the uprooting from the city of Winnipeg of approximately 1,000 highly skilled personnel with their families, and the shifting of those people from western Canada to the city of Montreal. That is uprooting people in a very serious way. We are quite familiar with the mobility of our population, but when there is a major uprooting like this I say the government is obliged to take a second look at the matter.

Let us quite frankly accept the fact that on an economic basis Air Canada cannot support two overhaul bases, but from a government viewpoint the second base in the city of Winnipeg should be maintained. It has been pointed out in various arguments presented to various commissions, and certainly to the Thompson commission, that in case of danger, international warfare or some serious trouble, accident or natural upheaval, a base might be put out of action. I quote from page 119 of the report to that effect:

> In several submissions it was suggested that Air Canada should have not less than two overhaul bases in the event that by reason of war, insurrection, act of God, explosion or other disaster, one was disabled. Any of these contingencies could occur at Winnipeg or at Dorval, but of course the result would be more serious if it occurred at one base and there were no others available.
> The cost of duplicate facilities would be a significant annual insurance premium, which other air lines do not seem to assume.
> Air Canada stated that in the event of a contingency at Dorval recourse could be had, so far as airframes and components were concerned, to the C.P.A. base at Vancouver . . . . Air Canada also filed correspondence and memoranda indicating that there was in existence a North American pool of technical facilities and services for standby services should an air line's overhaul facilities become crippled. There are at least seven facilities in the U.S. where DC-8's, and presumably in due course DC-9's, can be overhauled.
> Air Canada is an informal or associate member of this pool. It does seem to the commission that Air Canada could profit by close liaison with and development of the pool. Beyond that comment the commission has no recommendation to make.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that despite the fact that there may be places elsewhere in the North American continent where assistance could be given in the event of a disaster at the Dorval maintenance base, we should not rely on that. This means we are relying on the United States for assistance in time of trouble. If this is so, there may be no opportunity at all to rely on the United States bases; they themselves would be subjected to the disaster which would follow a missile attack on this continent. As a nation which prides itself on its wealth and its development, I think Canada should stand on its own feet. I would suggest to the government, on the basis of national defence alone if for no other reason, the overhaul and maintenance base in the city of Winnipeg should be continued. If there are additional charges, and I expect there would be, this would be a proper charge against the Departments of National Defence and Defence Production.

We maintain shipbuilding facilities on both coasts of this country.

Mr. Drury: For economic reasons.

Mr. Churchill: Not solely for economic reasons. We do so because it is cheaper to build the ships in eastern Canada than it is on the west coast. I can say that, having sat in on several policy decision matters related thereto. I suggest that our shipbuilding facilities are sustained in this country on both coasts not solely for economic reasons, but also for defence purposes. Similarly I would do the same with regard to maintenance for our aircraft. I think the minister has another way of looking at this. Charged as he is with taking action in what he calls designated areas where unemployment is rife, I think he should take action in advance of unemployment occurring in an effort to prevent trouble arising along that line. Here, through various reports and certainly through this Thompson commission report, he has advance notice that a serious situation is going to develop in the city of Winnipeg with regard to 1,000 skilled personnel, not all of whom will find vacancies existing at the Dorval maintenance base.

I suggest that there is an opportunity here for him to take action before he is called in and asked to designate an area out there because of unemployment conditions. I suggest further that in his plans for the development of industry and the development of skills he should do everything in his power to sustain in the city of Winnipeg this highly skilled labour force. It may be that he would have to direct their activities into other channels or associated activities; but this is what the department exists for. There are hundreds of people in these two departments, industry and defence production, who have minds capable of grasping this problem and of producing half a dozen solutions from which the government may select one. This just takes a little imagination and some vision.

On the basis of his activities as the Minister of Defence Production I think the minister should consider very seriously and at a very early stage what can be done in defence production with that group of skilled personnel in the city of Winnipeg. I do not know with exactitude the plans of the Department of National Defence with regard to the aircraft they will use in the future, but over the last three years they have had innumerable seminars and study groups and they must have some plans along this line of which the Minister of Defence Production must be aware. It seems to me that here is an opportunity, in the field of defence production, to sustain that skilled work force in the city of Winnipeg. I am not suggesting for one minute that the activities of the Department of Defence Production presently being undertaken by Bristol, Standard and Western Aero companies should be diverted to the personnel at the Air Canada base; quite the contrary. In the past the Department of Defence Production quite properly has seen that those companies I have mentioned have had work to do for defence purposes. I quite agree with that.

In our term of office the former minister of defence production, Mr. O'Hurley, was very sympathetic toward the development in western Canada of a pool of skilled labour which would be useful for defence purposes. I suggest that this minister should take a similar attitude in this regard; he should project his plans a few years ahead and see to it that some part of the work in the future for the Royal Canadian Air Force—if it retains that name—will be done in the city of Winnipeg by skilled personnel who already are there available, whose homes are there, and who should be permitted to live in an area of this country in which they have chosen to live and not be plucked out and diverted somewhere else.

In the field of defence production I should like to know from the minister specifically—we might not be able to obtain all the facts today—what is the allocation of money by areas in this country; to what extent is defence production carried on in western Canada, or is it all centred in the industrial area of Canada, as we speak of central Canada. Once we start talking about diversification you will find that westerners and people from the maritime provinces see eye to eye. Although we are sympathetic toward our friends in the central provinces, we do feel that some of the work done here could be done equally well elsewhere. We should have carried out the policy which the Prime Minister enunciated at the dominion-provincial conference and which has been enunciated on other occasions.

To what extent is the minister developing the highly skilled trades out in western Canada and the technological capability in Canadian industry for defence production purposes? We observed what had been done during wartime with regard to having our defence industries pretty well centralized in central Canada. In those days there was a great opportunity to diversify and spread out our defence effort, but it was not done. Now, in this cold war period we are in a continual state of having to spend a billion and a half dollars or perhaps more on defence matters. Year after year this goes on. To what extent are we widening out our basis of production for defence purposes and not having it centralized in one area of Canada?

Those are the considerations that I draw to the minister's attention. It was rather dismaying that we did not, immediately following the Thompson report, the substance of which I presume has been known to the government for some considerable time, receive a statement of policy regarding that particular program. In the fields of the Departments of Industry and Defence Production there is an opportunity now to retain in western Canada the skilled personnel who have done such useful work for the air industry over the past years. Why should these people be displaced and dispersed?

The Thompson report in dealing with the military matter I was talking about states at page 129:

> The total volume of all military aircraft work (including helicopter work), available in Canada was estimated by Mr. Elbert Cheyno of Los Angeles, appearing on behalf of the province of Manitoba, as involving some four million hours of work per year. Inquiries made by the commission indicate that there is likely a somewhat lesser number of work hours than estimated by Mr. Cheyno.

I am not going to quarrel in that regard, but there is a large number of work hours available.

At page 130 the commissioner states:

> An annual workload of some 800,000 hours would be required to maintain a staff of approximately one thousand men at the AC Winnipeg o/h base.

That is the present enrolment there. The report goes on to state:

> To maintain existing workloads at Standard Aero and Bristol and the AC base would mean that approximately one-third of all military aircraft work available in Canada would be done in Winnipeg. Such a transfer of work would require disregard for the operating areas of the aircraft, and their cruising ranges, the proximity of established bases in such areas, and the cost of duplication of specialized skills and equipment.

Standard Aero and Bristol are private enterprise operations in the same field. The report then goes on to state:

> The aircraft industry with its related activities is dynamic and rapidly changing.

That certainly applies with regard to defence matters. I suggest to the minister, and I will conclude before you rise, Mr. Chairman, that in the various fields there is a real opportunity for him to apply in a practical sense an immediate policy for regional development as outlined by the Prime Minister. This is a policy with which I think most Canadians are in agreement.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes that are available to me before five o'clock I should like to deal with one aspect of the minister's estimates as it applies to the constituency I represent, and particularly to the Pembina valley area. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that the minister's department is a very important one. In future years one can envisage how it can play a very important role in the development of industrial areas across Canada.

The hon. member for Lotbinière spoke with some considerable vigour about the virtues of the minister. I do not quarrel with his energy or his ability, but unfortunately in so far as the Red river and Pembina valleys are concerned, a great deal of this energy is expended in running around in circles. We would not be so chagrined if we knew the department was just doing nothing in that area, but what in effect is happening is that the area development program as it applies to the province of Manitoba is creating a situation in which the municipalities, in attempting to locate industry in their areas, find themselves competing against one another.

This competition has been taking place for some considerable time. What the minister's department has done under the area development program is place a very serious obstacle in the way of certain municipalities which are not covered by this program in competing with other areas which are covered.

If one looks up the salary figures for the area of the Pembina valley, which comprises census divisions two and three, he will find that the total average income per family in those two areas is $3,598 and $3,608, respectively. In the Winnipeg census district the average family income is $5,899, and in census division four, which is the area comprising Brandon, the family income figure is $3,794, which is in excess of the incomes of census divisions two and three.

By what criteria is the Brandon area established as a designated area, other than by using national employment services figures? In our opinion the use of those figures as a criterion for designating an area is manifestly wrong because the entire southeastern part of Manitoba falls into the Winnipeg census district.

Because of the fact that the metropolitan Winnipeg area is an area of substantial growth each year—perhaps not as spectacular as some areas in Canada—it is able to accommodate the labour force which lives in the area. Therefore we find that the national employment service figures for the city of Winnipeg and the areas south and east, which are all in the same division, show a relatively low unemployment figure. The fact is, however, that the unemployment figure for the areas outside, particularly in southeastern Manitoba, which really should be considered as an ARDA area, show a much higher rate of unemployment than the city of Winnipeg. These people are being discriminated against by virtue of the criteria applied in establishing designated areas.

I would urge the minister again, and this has been done by the Pembina Valley Development Corporation on many occasions, to give consideration to changing the criteria for the establishment of designated areas. I think income must certainly, in particular areas, be considered as a criterion to be used, rather than using national employment service figures. Rather than basing the criteria on national employment figures they should be based on census divisions, because this is more likely to produce a clearer picture, so far as unemployment in a given area is concerned than national employment figures.

I again urge the minister to give serious consideration to the changing of this criteria so that a more equitable application may be made in the province of Manitoba. The people who comprise the Pembina Valley Development Corporation have worked hard and long to attract industry to that area, and until the minister's program came in they were successful. Now they find that despite all their efforts industry is moving into areas which need assistance much less than the Pembina river valley and southeastern Manitoba.

I do not wish to create the impression that the minister should not apply this area program to other parts of Manitoba, but I think it is wrong to include the southeastern part of Manitoba with the Winnipeg employment service district. If the minister cannot be of any help in assisting the people of this area, then in the name of God let him not hinder them and be an obstacle in the way of development of industry there.

Mr. Knowles: There are times in this house when the constituencies of Winnipeg South Centre and Winnipeg North Centre get confused. This sometimes leads to a bit of humour. But on this occasion the member for Winnipeg North Centre would be quite happy if the speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre were attributed to him.

Mr. Jorgenson: We shall take it as read.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, I commend the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre for making these remarks today.

Mr. Drury: They were out of order.

Mr. Knowles: The Minister of Industry may feel they were out of order, but bearing in mind the responsibility of the department I do not think that was the case. If we are to have a statement soon from the Minister of Transport with regard to the recommendations in the Thompson report, I think it is a good idea that there should be an expression of opinion along the lines we heard today from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

I join with him in saying that I do not criticize Air Canada for making its decisions on an economic basis. But this country is what it is today because of many political and social decisions which have been made in order that it might become a great country from coast to coast. I agree that there are decisions which have to be taken to bring about the decentralization of industry and the parallel development of our country in all of its areas. I therefore hope consideration may yet be given by the government to the government's own objective of decentralization by exploring the possibility of arranging for the maintenance base to be retained at Winnipeg, even if this has to be done at the expense of the people of Canada.

All of us from Manitoba would support such a decision. This may make some members feel that a regional position is being taken. In my view this is the case. I believe we are taking a position which is in the interest of Canada as a whole. As I say, this argument has been well developed by the hon. gentleman on my right, so I need not repeat the speech he has made on behalf of all of us from Manitoba. We are interested in various recommendations contained in the report of the Thompson commission. We think something should be done to develop more polar routes from Winnipeg. An effort should be made to get a direct route to Chicago. We welcome the opening of an air cargo base at Winnipeg. But these things do not provide for the employment in Winnipeg of the skilled personnel who are working there now in connection with the maintenance and overhaul base. This surely comes under the aegis of the minister, namely the development of industry on a parallel basis across the country.

I therefore hope consideration will be given by the entire government, the Minister of Industry, the Minister of Transport and all concerned, to what is involved in this question not only as far as Winnipeg itself is concerned but in relation to the needs and best interests of Canada as a whole. I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre for making it possible for me to say these things within the compass of two or three minutes. He spoke for all of us from Manitoba.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Discussion has ranged out west for a few minutes, and rightly so. I should like to return to the maritimes for a few moments.

I support the remarks made by the two hon. members for Halifax with regard to the exclusion of Dartmouth, Halifax, Saint John and Fredericton from the areas designated under the incentive program. I have had my say on this subject, as the minister knows. I feel it is hopeless to do anything about it now. Perhaps I could take a moment to make a final appeal in the hope that the hon. gentleman will see the light and discontinue this discrimination against these cities in the maritimes.

I think it is significant that another agency, an independent body, the Nova Scotia Voluntary Economic Planning Board, has joined APEX and the Economic Council of Canada in recommending that these cities be included. I challenge the minister to quote any authority which recommends that these cities should not be in the incentive program area. There has been a barrage of criticism for many months in this connection, culminating the other day in the Saint John Times-Globe which had this to say on May 19:

> Denial of the incentives is crippling the centres that could lead these provinces in an economic renaissance. Established industries have moved out of these centres to get the aid; potential new ones have been lost. The cities are being bled in the name of healing, and the whole region is weakened.

I make one final appeal to the minister in the closing hours of Friday as he hopes to wind up his estimates. Let him review his thinking and take better advice. Let his department do something, because the only thing he is accomplishing now is spreading poverty around the maritimes.

[Mr. Knowles.]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): As it is now five o'clock—

Mr. Drury: I wonder whether we might continue for a few minutes, by consent, as we are about to conclude?

Mr. McIntosh: May I call it five o'clock?

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, may I point out that it is five o'clock?

[English]

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to a consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills and public bills.

Mr. Deachman: I wonder if we could call item 65 on today's order paper, Bill No. C-100, to ascertain whether or not there is unanimous agreement to proceed with that bill today?

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement that all bills up to item No. 65 on today's order paper will stand, at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO FACILITATE EXERCISE OF FRANCHISE BY STUDENTS

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-100, to amend the Canada Elections Act (students' franchise).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill No. C-100 is to correct an anomaly in the Canada Elections Act which became apparent in a number of constituencies throughout Canada during the last election. Perhaps I could best explain what happened by referring to a commentary by Edmund Morris, of station CHNS Halifax, made on February 5. This is a summary of events which took place as a result of this peculiarity in the Canada Elections Act. I quote:

> In the November 8 election, many students were disfranchised under provisions of the Canada Elections Act, specifically subsection 9 of section 16. It provides that a person not ordinarily resident in a constituency must be duly registered and in attendance at a recognized educational institution on the day the writ of election is issued in order to qualify as an elector in that constituency. Many universities did not start classes last September until after the issue of the writ, the students were not therefore acually "in attendance", and they were therefore disqualified from voting in the electoral district where they were living where that was other than their home constituency, at the time of the advance polls and on November 8.

Perhaps I might explain what took place in my own constituency in order to clarify the situation. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the writ of election was issued on September 8. At this time enumeration began to take place, and most university students had not yet moved into the university towns or into residence at the universities. However, resident students at universities were in residence at the time of the advance poll and were registered at universities when the election actually took place. According to the elections act, however, they should have been resident, registered and in attendance at university when the writ was issued on September 8. They were thus disqualified from voting in that election.

The University of British Columbia is located in my constituency of Vancouver Quadra. Today there are about 15,000 to 16,000 students at that university. I do not know how many of them are qualified to vote, but I would estimate at least 2,500 to 3,500 of those students are 21 and qualified electors. These young Canadians, although 21 years of age and looking forward to voting for the first time, were not able to cast their ballots in that election.

One of the peculiar situations which arose, and which put even more sting into this situation, was the fact that commonwealth students were able to vote. At the University of British Columbia, we have many students from the West Indies, from Africa, from Hong Kong, from India and Pakistan. Under the provisions which qualify a person from the commonwealth as an elector in Canada they were able to vote because they had established a residence in Canada. Most of these students do not go home during the summertime and, in fact, remain in Canada for several years until they complete their education. Under the elections act, they were qualified electors.

We had a situation where some young man or woman from Kamloops, Nelson or Prince George, who was 21 years of age and born in Canada, would go to the University of British Columbia but be unable to vote, while commonwealth students were qualified to vote if resident in that constituency.

Mr. Lambert: May I ask the hon. member a question? Where was the normal place of residence of these commonwealth students? This is one of the difficulties. The comparison between third or fourth year students from the commonwealth and students within the province, is not acceptable.

Mr. Deachman: I think I shall come to some of these points as I move forward. I recognize this to be one of the difficulties. I do not believe the hon. member, or any other hon. member, wants to find Canadian university students who are of voting age when the election takes place and resident in a university, unable to take part in the election, while commonwealth students at the same university are in a position to cast their ballots. I do not believe he wants to see such a provision remaining on the statute books.

The statute now provides that if these students want to vote they have to go home 300 or 500 miles, cast their ballot and come back. This is not a situation which we, as Canadians, want to see in our universities today. The purpose of Bill No C-100, therefore, is to bring about a simple change in the act which will not allow this to happen again. My solution to the problem, I feel, is a relatively simple one. Under subsections 6 and 7 of section 16 of the Canada Elections Act, ministers and teachers may move into a new constituency at any time in the interval between the date of issuance of the writ and polling day and register as voters. It would appear that the student franchise problem is easily solved if this same privilege that is granted to ministers and teachers were extended to students and they were deemed to be residents of the electoral district in which they have temporary residence at the time of the election.

This situation came to light very forcibly in my own constituency where there are so many students, and I know it came to light also in many other areas of Canada. At that time I began to look around for a solution to this problem. One way I found that the question could be approached was through the Chief Electoral Officer. Under section 58(2) of the Canada Elections Act, you may approach the Chief Electoral Officer, if you have been a candidate, with any amendment or suggestion you have respecting the electoral law. I should just like to quote section 58(2) which reads as follows:

Every candidate at any election and every official agent of any candidate has the right to send to the Chief Electoral Officer in writing any complaint he may have to make with respect to the conduct of the election or of any election officer, and to suggest any such changes or improvements in the law as he may consider desirable—

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, taking advantage of that section on November 23, 1965 I wrote to Mr. Nelson Castonguay a letter, the relevant paragraphs of which are as follows:

> Vancouver Quadra is the seat of the University of British Columbia. An estimated 2,000 U.B.C. students lost their votes in this election under the provision of Paragraph 16(9) of the Canada Elections Act because they were not duly registered and in attendance at university when the election writ was issued on September 8, although most were here when the enumerators called during the week of September 20 to register the voters.
> Unless this section of the act is amended students at U.B.C. and other educational institutions will continue to be in danger of losing their franchise whenever a September election is called.

In accordance with section 58(2), suggestions made in writing to the Chief Electoral Officer must be included in his report to the Speaker of the House of Commons at the conclusion of the election. Therefore the suggestion I made to him, that an amendment be made in the area of section 16(7) dealing with ministers and teachers, is before the Chief Electoral Officer and—

Miss LaMarsh: There is not one.

Mr. Deachman: The Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) has just advised me that there is no Chief Electoral Officer at the moment, but I think this matter will be settled shortly, and I am sure the new electoral officer will have the files before him, with a recommendation from the former Chief Electoral Officer in regard to this matter. In any event, the matter has been put before him, and he is under law compelled to review this question when the matter comes before him.

This is another way in which, in addition to the bill I have presented to the house, an amendment may be brought about to our election laws in order to permit Canadian students 21 years of age and over resident at Canadian universities to exercise their vote. We are in an era when the number of students is increasing very rapidly. These students must never again be disfranchised at an election should they become resident at a university between the issuance of the writ and polling day.

I know that other hon. members in the chamber today who are interested in this problem will want to say something on this matter, but I hope they too will urge that steps be taken, either by the passage of this bill or through amendment of the elections act introduced by the government, to make sure that Canadian students are not again disfranchised in this manner.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, this bill touches on what is, I suppose, the most important right of every Canadian citizen, namely the right to cast his ballot. I certainly support 100 per cent the principle of making sure that every citizen of Canada be given the opportunity to vote. I would also not disfranchise British subjects resident in Canada, particularly if they intend to live here, from exercising their right to vote. However, it seems a strange anomaly that students at university can be deprived of their franchise when resident British subjects at the same university and with the same residential qualifications are able to vote. I think the whole subject of voting in Canada should be reviewed. Students are not the only ones disfranchised through no fault of their own. The Canada Elections Act should be revised in several very important particulars.

For example, I am not at all happy with the treatment given our armed forces. Sometimes when they are transferred from one depot to another at the time of an election either they or their families are put to some considerable trouble and are disfranchised because they do not meet residence qualifications or are unable to qualify to vote at the point where they wish to vote.

Also secrecy of ballots cast needs to be preserved. If we are to change the rules we must ensure that the votes by members of the armed forces cast are indeed secret. I can assure the house, as could any other hon. member who does a little bit of homework, that under the present system whereby our soldiers vote it is easy to ascertain how members of the armed forces have voted.

I should like to see the Canada Elections Act amended, but I am not particularly happy with the present bill before the house. The whole matter of the franchise should come before the appropriate committee who could thrash the matter out. It cannot be done piecemeal. There are many ramifications to the electoral system of Canada which need straightening out, and I think this should all be done at once.

As a way out of this problem I think there is something to be said for adopting the English system of having university representation in parliament. This would get around another problem which arises, which is at what age university students are enfranchised. As has been quite rightly pointed out by the first speaker, students at university age undergoing training should above all others have qualified and informed opinions; and we need the interest of these young people in parliament. We need, let me say, their advice. They are at the very age when they are thinking about the future of their country, and every effort should be made to make sure that they are enfranchised.

I would go further and suggest that we might take a look at enfranchising any student who has reached the stage of intellectual development at which he takes on himself advanced study courses and the added responsibilities entailed in running the country. We might well make some improvements to the whole electoral system whereby these students could bring a more direct influence to bear upon parliament itself, which perhaps could be done through direct representation. It would then be possible to campaign on the university campus itself, and these young people could take an active part in politics without actually going out on the hustings and taking part in an election campaign at a point perhaps 1,000 miles away from their university.

I think that this representation in the British parliament has always worked very well. I realize there has been considerable argument about the distribution of these university seats. It would perhaps be difficult to decide which university should have the representation in parliament. On the other hand, that might be a way where we could elect three, four, or even half a dozen university students to parliament. They have their own student councils. Their methods of choosing a candidate and of carrying on may not be quite similar to our own methods, but I am sure, bearing in mind their educational level, that they should certainly be consulted. I think that it is an interesting and exciting idea to bring young people into public life, as early in life as possible. We may be able to channel more of our young leaders into the public service, where they are so badly needed.

I think we should take a look, before any changes are made, at the system of prepolling, so that students could vote, perhaps in blocs, in university towns, in that way securing direct representation. Fitness to vote should be based on qualifications to vote. If we allow students the right to change their voting place prior to polling day, we should look at the danger that possibly hundreds, or thousands of those students possibly may be encouraged to change their voting place at the whim of the party in power or at the whim of any group in a position to exert pressure.

I am sure that that sort of thing was in the minds of the legislators when they said that your place of residence would have to be based as of the date of issuance of the writ, in order to prevent such unnatural fluctuations of political power which might be brought about by any change in the rules.

Therefore, what I am saying is that we would be hasty in passing any amendment like this without first giving it very careful consideration. I think it would be most unwise to pass a private member's bill in the house after consideration of it for somewhat less than one hour. By all means, we should make sure that every student in Canada has the right to his franchise. However, I think this matter should go before an appropriate committee. We should not rush into hasty legislation in this manner, because it might do more harm than good.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, as we welcome the introduction of Bill C-100, and would like it to come to a vote, I shall be extremely brief in my remarks.

We think that this bill shows a move in the right direction. As the sponsor of the bill has said, it aims at the correction of an anomaly, and at the removal of an oversight existing in the electoral regulations.

In those regulations, through what is an outmoded technicality, we have been debarring a great many young Canadians from doing what we in this house and what their parents would like them to be doing, which is taking an intelligent interest in Canadian political affairs and casting their votes.

We think that this residential qualification regulation which debars students in certain elections from voting is a very artificial regulation, when one thinks of the very good reasons on the other side of the argument for encouraging young Canadians to cast their ballots. In brief, we think this bill is a step in the right direction.

Having said that, may I point out an even worse anomaly regarding voting in federal elections. If it is true, and it is, that many hundreds or perhaps thousands of university students are debarred from voting because of this technicality respecting residence, many many more Canadians are virtually disfranchised because of the present regulations. We have industrial workers in this country in that category. In British Columbia we have thousands of loggers, thousands of fishermen and many others who, in many federal elections, because of having been absent from their homes, either on the fishing grounds, or logging camps, or elsewhere, have in fact lost their votes. Many of these people are forced to leave their homes before the advance poll is taken, which, as we know, is taken but a few days before the actual poll.

It is almost impossible for any such fishermen, loggers or others in that category to cast a vote for or against a candidate in their home ridings. We think this is wrong. While we support and would like to vote for the bill introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman), we want to take this chance to urge the elections committee of this house to take a look at the present elections act with a view to securing, as far as is possible, a vote for the absentee voter in federal elections, and to take care of the situation that exists in British Columbia.

Without more ado, I take my seat in the house, with the assurance that if this measure will come to a vote, we shall support it.

Mr. Hugh Faulkner (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly about this bill, which in principle I support. I had in Peterborough the same experience the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra had in his riding. I remember trying to arrange for students who normally were resident in Peterborough, but who were attending Queen's, or the University of Toronto, or Carleton, or were in the Windsor area, to come back to Peterborough to vote. It was difficult to explain to students who were caught up in a political science class, and who were told by their professors of the importance of the right to vote and of its importance to democratic society, why, on the first occasion they could exercise this franchise, because of some technicality in the law, they were denied the opportunity to do so. For this reason I support the bill presented by my distinguished colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra.

This bill deals with a specific problem in an act which is plagued with anomalies. The hon. member who has just taken his seat cited examples I had not heard mentioned before, probably because the industries affected are not major industries in my area.

[Mr. Mather.]

It has been pointed out before, and should be no surprise to members of this house, that this act is plagued by all sorts of anomalies. I think therefore it is imperative for the totality of the act to be referred to the committee on privileges and elections for discussion.

This bill provides a solution to a particular problem, but other problems are posed by this solution. For instance, this bill does not deal with the question of voting age, and whether it should not be lowered to 18. I have supported the view that the voting age ought to be 18.

Another problem posed by this particular bill deals with the concentration of floating voters that will arise in certain areas. The University of Toronto in itself, if the students were able to co-ordinate their activities, would probably be in a position to determine who their member of parliament was going to be. Realizing that the same applies to McGill, as a graduate of that university I think that would be deplorable. There is the technical problem of a concentration of floating voters in a particular area and their possible influence on an election.

There is one anomaly about which I feel very strongly. I refer to the deplorable situation of persons in hospitals and nursing homes who are not able to get out and vote and who thus lose their franchise. I remember very well during the last two elections visiting hospital patients and how depressed they were that they did not have the opportunity to vote. It is for this reason I suggest that though the principle of the bill is sound, the whole general area needs to be revamped. In my view the bill should be referred to the committee on privileges and elections where the problem could be dealt with in toto and not on a piecemeal basis.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say on behalf of this party that we are in favour of the amendment proposed by Bill C-100. It is correcting a problem that manifested itself last autumn because of the date on which the election was held. Serious injustices resulted because of the date and so we are in favour of taking this small step forward to correct the problem.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have some sympathy for the motive of the sponsor of the bill because I realize that in the last election a number of university students were unable to vote without it costing them great time and expense, because their homes were some distance from the universities they attended. However, I feel the problem was overmagnified, and a great deal more emotion was expressed over it than it really warranted, especially when we consider the number of other people who, for one reason or other, are temporarily disfranchised. Further, in a university city or town there will always be a large proportion of the students over 21 already resident, and therefore not affected by the problem of transferring their temporary residences. Also, the problem only arises during a period of about five or six weeks in the year.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) did not speak about the university summer sessions which are an entirely different kettle of fish. These are usually of six weeks duration, and I would say almost 98 per cent of the students attending them are over 21. Therefore the incidence of application is much greater in their case.

Let us examine what happened on November 8 as a result of the writ being issued on September 8: Some faculties were already in residence. Also, a number of universities co-operated by organizing buses which carried students to their homes at no cost to themselves, and with an arrangement not to hold examinations on the days in question. Generally the problem was coped with by university authorities as best they could.

Of the proportion of students who were affected, now many would have voted in any event? I do not suppose there would be any greater proportion than the proportion of students who were already resident, who had the right to vote, and who cast ballots. In some constituencies this did not amount to more than 60 per cent or 65 per cent—something which is to be regretted, but this is one of the facts of life. I agree there should be no artificial barrier to any person who wishes to exercise his franchise, but I point out that there are other people who must be absent from their home constituencies by reason of work and who cannot vote at the advanced polls. We accept that as a fact of life.

We have not yet established the mail ballot. That may be the answer which the committee on the elections act may recommend, but in this instance we should be careful that we do not create a greater problem than the one which the bill seeks to correct.

The sponsor of the bill and the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) pointed out that in some constituencies at a certain time of the year, particularly if the voting age were lowered to 18, a floating, temporary population of considerable size would be created, something which none of the constituency boundary commissions have taken into account, and these people would have an inordinate bearing on the outcome of elections.

If it is wrong for the armed services to vote en masse in a constituency in which they are stationed, then certainly the same principle applies to a non-permanent resident student. Certainly it would be a lot simpler, from an administrative point of view, if the armed services could vote from wherever they were stationed in Canada. I am not talking about those who are abroad. So there is that particular problem.

As to the other classes of people who may be disfranchised, what about the paraplegics? There are very few polling stations which will accommodate a person who is in a wheelchair. These polling stations are located in schools, in community homes, and what have you. In my own constituency in Edmonton we have a situation which is very good in so far as something like 20 per cent of the polls are concerned. A polling station is established in the new rehabilitation centre where there are ramps built which can accommodate wheelchairs and these facilities which are used in the Callow buses or Volkswagen buses which are provided by the transportation companies for the handling of paraplegic cases. Therefore, the advance poll is set up there, and these persons can vote at this centre, at the advance pool, when you have all the time in the world to handle these particular people who do require more time.

I would say that a much more humanitarian and effective way would be to amend the act to provide that any person who is a paraplegic or any person who by reason of age or infirmity is confined to a wheelchair may vote at any advance poll, and particularly at an advance poll which is capable of handling wheelchairs. This is only one category, and I cite it merely to show that university students are not the only ones who might be adversely affected. In the last election, through a request directed to the chief returning officer of Canada, and through my own returning officer, I was able to arrange to have voluntary patients in a mental hospital vote. It was surprising the number who did avail themselves of the opportunity to get on the voters list by having a certificate from the chief medical superintendent. I held a political meeting there. It was an exercise in therapy for them and a novel experience for me. It was a very intelligent meeting. Persons who are voluntary patients in mental hospitals are not persons who are lacking in mental appreciation. As a matter of fact I would say that the standard there is much higher than it is in many nursing homes where we deal with persons of very advanced years who are suffering from senility and other infirmities.

On the face of it my view is that we should not accept the proposal of the hon. member. There are too many difficulties involved. Remember this: An amendment to the Canada Elections Act applies in every part of the country. If the same standards or conditions apply in all parts of the country, fine; but we know it is a fact of life that the same standards do not apply in all communities. The same thing applies with regard to hospital voting. In the provincial elections in my province, aand in the civic elections, there is voting in the hospitals. If there is a polling station within a hospital, an alert political organization can vote a great number of those people who are ambulatory patients. This depends upon whether they will go into the hospital and find out which patient can get to the polling station. There are ways and means to have them transferred; it is quite simple. In the elections in the province of Alberta we experienced no difficulty in having the patients in all categories in the general hospitals vote. That is all right, depending upon the number of constituencies. The problem is whether you can sort these votes out.

Provided you are satisfied that this will not be used as a means to suborn an election, I am sure it can be done; in other words, if you are satisfied that it will not be used as a means to materially affect the election result by the use of false ballots or by the substitution of ballot boxes. All these opportunities can arise. Every time you open up and handle a ballot box, unfortunately you create an opportunity for certain persons who are unscrupulous enough to try something to affect the honest result of an election. That is another consideration.

I would prefer to see the subject matter of this bill referred to the next committee of this house which may sit to deal with the problems of the Canada Elections Act. There will be an opportunity when we have the report about election expenses and so on. I think this is a related subject. Certainly I would agree that we should not have to amend the Canada Elections Act piecemeal. There are points which I, and undoubtedly others, will raise to show that there are anomalies contained in the act. These should be dealt with at the same time.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member not agree that in a country where increasing numbers of people are travelling and moving about the country because we are becoming that kind of a country, through mobility and so on, and where people are going to universities, that we have to accommodate the voting public. The way to do that is not by putting aside the Canada Elections Act because we find it difficult to accommodate the student and the man who moves from job to job, or the person who travels, because this is the kind of Canada we are going to have to live in.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I will reply to that. There are limitations. I will stand corrected, but I believe that in the province of Saskatchewan where they did have a mail ballot they have had problems because the result could not be declared for three weeks. Surely one of the desired qualities of an election is to get an early result. We know that when the government of Premier Lloyd was eventually voted out of office, the matter hung in abeyance for three weeks while they were collecting and counting the mail ballots.

There are two sides to every question. In this case I do not know that the advantages necessarily are all on the one side.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I should just like to ask the hon. member whether he does not agree that it is also a fact of life that these so-called floating votes made by university students would be nailed down in the constituencies where the universities are located if the writs are issued between October and April?

Mr. Lambert: Yes, but the student has an option. Under the proposed amendment he can vote either at the university or at his home poll. As a matter of fact, he has greater flexibility than the average voter who is pinned down to his own poll.

Mr. Olson: The apprehensions of your program break down.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he agree that the inconvenience of having to wait even two or three weeks while the absentee ballots were counted represents much less of a hardship than disfranchising thousands of workers in construction camps and other people who have to travel around the country?

Mr. Lambert: As I indicated, I think this problem is over emphasized when you consider the realities regarding the number of individuals who actually do not get back to vote and the number who actually avail themselves of the opportunity.

Mr. Cashin: That is a typical Tory attitude.

Mr. Lambert: I think as far as the hon. member from Newfoundland is concerned, a great deal more effort is made in my area to get the people out to vote than is made in his.

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In my constituency one does not have to make the same effort to get the people to vote as in the hon. member's area because the people are genuinely interested as a result of their superior calibre.

Mr. Bigg: Why do you not make a speech?

Mr. Cashin: I will.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, had the hon. member been in his seat when I made my speech he would realize that I agree that the problem is not a simple one. My purpose in rising was to point out some of the problems involved and why the committee on the Canada Elections Act should study all aspects of the situation instead of just sitting down to look at it for three quarters of an hour and then passing the whole thing.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin) would not applaud if he knew I am going to take what he would undoubtedly describe as a typical Tory attitude to the bill now before the house.

I think those things the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has cautioned us about are really quite relevant. Grave difficulties are involved.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Stewart: I must say to those members of the N.D.P. who are exclaiming, that there are some of us in this house who would like to see the business of the country conducted in an orderly way, particularly at election times.

I should like to say in relation to the typical non-Tory attitude taken by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg), when he proposed that new university seats should be authorized under the Canada Elections Act, that this would not be a good change or one that could be regarded as progressive.

University seats had their origin in the Middle Ages when universities were regarded as one of the classes of corporations in law which ought to be represented. The boroughs were another of those classes. I think it is now generally agreed, especially in the universities, that the restoration of a privileged class of voter represented by a special type of seat would not be desirable. I am sure that on reflection the committee on privileges and elections would come to that conclusion.

The hon. member for Edmonton West was insistent that a clarification in the Canada Elections Act concerning one's place of ordinary residence is important. I believe he is absolutely correct. There is no doubt about it that people proposing to vote in an election ought to know whether in law they are qualified; and consequently anything that makes it difficult for them to ascertain whether or not in law they are qualified is undesirable.

Ordinary residence is no mere technicality of the law, to use an expression that came from this side of the house. This is a very important ingredient of the electoral process. I should like to see this problem solved in so far as students are concerned, and in so far as industrial workers and other such persons who have to move around the country are concerned. This a problem that has to be confronted and not one that can be simply dismissed as a mere technicality of the law.

If we look at the bill now before us, sponsored by my hon. friend the member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman), we will see that it comes far short of specifying the regulations which govern qualification. The bill says that a person who, being a student, is duly registered in a university may qualify. What does that mean? Does it mean he is duly registered if he attends one course, perhaps during the evening program at a university? I think there are at least two or three interpretations of that expression that can be made. If we are going to have any law in regard to this important point it has to be perfectly clear what is meant by a student who is registered.

The bill goes on to refer to a recognized educational institution. There might be various criteria by which one could decide what kind of institution should be regarded as a recognized educational institution. In order that the bill should be better, it should set forth the tests defining what is a recognized educational institution.

There is another point in the hon. member's bill which seems somewhat defective. The hon. member talks about a student who is duly registered and in attendance at a recognized educational institution, but he does not go on directly to say that the institution must be in a constituency in which the student is not ordinarily resident. This is implied by a later part of his proposed amendment; but it should be perfectly clear that this would apply only in the case of a student engaged in a full-time program of study at a properly defined university.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to advise the hon. member that the hour for consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, will someone on the government side who is authorized to do so let us know about the business of the house for Tuesday?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the government house leader indicated the business of the house last night as it is reported in Hansard at page 5352. I now confirm what he said then.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock this house stands adjourned until 2.30 o'clock in the afternoon of Tuesday next, pursuant to standing order 2(4).

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in Committee of Supply this day:]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF MEDIATOR

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister indicate whether a report by Mr. Stuart Keate on C.B.C. matters has come to his attention? Some reference has been made today to the effect that this report has been sent to him, to the producers and, I think, one other group. Would the Prime Minister also tell us whether it will be tabled in the house when it is received so that members of the house, having taken an interest in this matter, may have some idea as to the suggestions made by Mr. Keate.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received the report. I telephoned Mr. Keate Sunday to ask when he would be likely to send it, and I was informed that he would be sending it to reach me, he hoped, tomorrow or the next day. I understand from more recent information that it is in the mail and I expect to receive it later this evening or tomorrow morning. As soon as I receive it I will then know what disposition to make of it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in view of the growing and somewhat belated interest on the part of cabinet ministers over the increasing control of the Canadian economy by foreign investors, may I ask the Minister of Finance when he expects to bring down the legislation to set up the Canada Development Corporation.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not yet in a position to forecast the time, but it will be during this session.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the legislation was ready for the last session and notice had been given of it, could I ask the minister what is the reason for the delay?

Mr. Sharp: There are questions of priority; and I have also said publicly that we are restudying the provisions of the legislation to put it in the form best suited to Canada's needs.

BANK ACT

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance when the amendments to the Bank Act will be presented to the house.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question the other day. I have nothing further to add.

Mr. Winkler: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In regard to this question the minister's answer last week was "soon". Will it be this week?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member's question was asked and answered last week.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[Mr. Pearson.]

In view of the rather confused or alarming situation which now exists in South Viet Nam, would the government or the minister have some report to make to the House of Commons about the role which Canada is playing to improve the present situation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, Canada has always thought that the Control Commission should be entrusted with the task of promoting negotiations.

I can assure the hon. member that with the approval of the Secretary General of the United Nations, the President of the United States, the South Vietnamese government and, I hope, with the co-operation of the North Vietnamese government, I trust that those efforts will be successful. In any case, the government is doing all it can, with India and Poland, members of the commission, to find out if the commission can play a part in this matter.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Villeneuve. I should preface my question by saying that I think something must have been lost in translation, because I was not able to hear the answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Will the minister assure me that when I read the English translation of Hansard tomorrow I shall find an answer there to the question which has been asked?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATO—COMMUNICATION RESPECTING MINISTERIAL COUNCIL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister tell us whether there has been communication with the Chancellor of Germany and the Prime Minister of Great Britain with regard to their very important four point program respecting NATO which was announced over the week end, and particularly in relation to the ministerial council which will be meeting in just a week or two?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there have been continuing exchanges with the two government leaders mentioned by my hon. friend, and other NATO governments, on the NATO situation arising out of the initiative taken by President de Gaulle some weeks ago, and this will be a major subject of discussion at the NATO ministerial meeting which will be held shortly.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—HEARINGS ON PROPOSED TOLL INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): On Friday, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport raised a point of privilege during his reply to my question, and you subsequently ruled it out of order. His point of privilege arose in connection with an explanation he gave concerning tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway.

In view of the confusion he left may I now direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that tomorrow is the last day on which submissions can be given to the Board of Transport Commissioners concerning the increase of tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway, and in view of the fact these increases may be granted, will the Prime Minister assure us the house will have a chance to debate these increases in tolls before they are granted?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is the same as that which was asked last week, and cannot be put at this time.

TRADE

MAINLAND CHINA—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the present indications from the United States administration that they are moving toward allowing United States citizens to trade with mainland China, is the government of Canada considering inviting China to set up an unofficial trade office in Canada similar to those which exist in other countries?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I think perhaps that question should be more appropriately directed to my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Hamilton: I so direct it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Churchill: You can't bring in the International Control Commission on this one.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): This question is obviously one that would have to be considered along with the primary question of the relationship between Canada and mainland China. It would have to be considered in the light of our policy about China's admission to the United Nations and the recognition by Canada of the regime in China.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—BASIS OF FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and in his absence I direct it to his parliamentary secretary. I have given notice of this question which is based on the announcement made by the minister. Will the federal government be contributing on the basis of the national average cost or on the basis of the actual cost in each province?

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): May I take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question which is most appropriate to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I expect a definitive answer. In view of the fact that Arnold C. Smith, who is Secretary General of the commonwealth secretariat is reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail of Monday, May 23 as saying in a speech delivered at Queen's University convocation that governing is more and more rooted in the expert adviser rather than the politician, can the minister inform the house if this statement implies that the functions of members of parliament will become of less and less importance in government?

Mr. Speaker: I see a number of things that are wrong with this question, but I may say it appears to be hypothetical.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO THREATENED STRIKE OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Earlier today I sent the Minister of Transport notice of my question, but in his absence I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary and he can take it as notice. Having in mind the threatened strike which may affect Air Canada as a result of the failure of the Canadian Airlines Employees Association and Air Canada management to settle the wage issue, is the minister or his assistant in touch with this situation? Can he make a statement outlining what is involved? It is a national question, I think, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I wish to thank the hon. member for having given notice of this question. The question substantially answers itself, since the matter of wages is involved. However, the hon. member seems to require a more detailed answer, and I can assure him that this will be forthcoming tomorrow.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

CONGRATULATIONS TO SECURITY STAFF ON HANDLING OF VISITORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the government house leader. It is not a question I can place on the order paper; therefore I will put it to the house leader.

In view of the fact that I had the honour to be on Parliament Hill on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, when the security staff handled some 25,000 visitors, 12,000 on the Sunday alone, would the government house leader advise me how I can express my own personal appreciation to the security staff, as well as, I am sure, the appreciation of all members of the house?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

PUBLIC WORKS

OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DEFERRED PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a question to the Minister of Public Works and ask him whether, in view of reported lay-offs in construction in the city of Ottawa and municipalities adjacent thereto, the government will consider restoring some of the deferred public works projects, and in particular the National Museum?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to deal with this question. The representatives of the industry, as appeared in the article in the paper on Saturday, had asked me for an interview and I advised them on Friday that I would be glad to see them. Only a few minutes ago they called and asked if the meeting could be postponed until next week.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I am happy to advise that the figures for the construction industry show that there is less unemployment than last year, but in any event I am following the situation very closely and am going to meet with the men who raised the matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the minister giving consideration to the immediate reinstatement of the National Museum as a public works project, rather than having it deferred?

Mr. McIlraith: We are giving consideration, if necessary, to the reinstatement of any new buildings, but I do not want to single out one building from the others at the moment.

[Later:]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the importance of the National Museum to Canada's centennial celebrations, would the minister, in his discussions this afternoon with representatives of the Ottawa construction industry, not give priority to reinstatement of the museum project?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if this is not essentially the same question asked some moments ago by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

TRADE

CANADA-WEST INDIES—STEPS TO BRING ABOUT IMPROVEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the strong indications that the federal government is ready to back maritime businessmen in their efforts to expand trade between the maritimes and the West Indies, would the Prime Minister indicate the type of specific program he is planning to introduce which will improve Canadian and West Indies trade, and when we may expect legislation to be introduced which will foster more fruitful relations with the Caribbean?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is of very general nature and I do not think it can be asked in this way at this time.

[Later:]

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a further question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister confirm that a July top level meeting will be held between Canada and the West Indies governments? If so, when and where will such meetings be held, and what countries in the West Indies will be invited to participate?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a meeting is to be held in the first week of July. I hope that as soon as the agenda is finally determined as a result of consultation among all the governments concerned, I shall be able to make a statement in the house regarding the conference and the agenda.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In order to strengthen this meeting, will the Prime Minister not say that this is to be a serious meeting, and one that will not result in the criticisms made in Halifax regarding the meeting attended by the trade and commerce—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is argumentative.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I just wanted to point out, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HIDES—REQUEST FOR EXPORT CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the already high prices of shoes and the predicted further increases in the prices of those articles to Canadian consumers, has the minister given any thought to the control of the export of hides?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUEBEC—R.O.T.P. SERVICE BY STUDENT PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. I want to ask the minister why the R.O.T.P. program is so inflexible that it cannot adapt itself to the fact that one of its officers has been elected president of U.G.E.Q. but has been told that he cannot complete his term of office.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is argumentative.

Mr. Fairweather: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

EDUCATION

REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE FOR FEDERAL AID

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Jean Wadds (Grenville-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. As one who has always stressed the need for more planned and organized federal assistance to education, I would ask the minister whether the announcement in Saturday's Ottawa Citizen is correct, that without fanfare a federal office for aid to education has been formed; and what is meant by "thus making facilities and people available when programs require them?"

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member will recognize that she cannot ask whether a press report is correct. Certainly this matter is of very general nature, and the question cannot be asked now.

[Later:]

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): A question for the Secretary of State relating to education, and supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas. Has a federal bureau of investigation been established and, if so, how is it staffed?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): If there is a federal bureau of investigation the Secretary of State has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Enns: I inadvertently used the word "investigation" instead of "education" when I addressed my question to the Secretary of State. My question should have been simply, is there a federal office of education and, if so, how is it staffed?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. It appears we are having difficulty with questions relating to education this afternoon. I do not think the question is of such an urgent character as to be allowed at this time.

Mr. Enns: It is of general interest, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister inform the house whether responsibility for university grants comes under his department or under the Secretary of State.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have just confirmed that my colleague the Secretary of State has accepted the responsibility.

INQUIRY AS TO ABOLITION OF UNIVERSITY FEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made on Friday night in an address by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to the effect that in Canada we are getting closer to the abolition of tuition fees in universities, will the Prime Minister say what steps the government is taking in this direction?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this question is closely related to the one which was asked by the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas, and I would feel very guilty if it were allowed while the other was refused.

Mr. Knowles: If it is related it will also have to be dealt with at ten o'clock.

[Translation]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE OF INFORMATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the publicity and propaganda being made in the province of Quebec at this time to the effect that Ottawa is hurting the development of the province of Quebec and other provinces, and is encroaching upon provincial rights, particularly upon those of the province of Quebec, is it the intention of the Prime Minister and of the government to set up an education board to enlighten the population of Quebec and that of the other provinces and counteract such anti-Canadian, anti-social publicity which is currently going on in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that this is a question of very general interest and that he should have it placed on the order paper.

Mr. Caouette: I shall bring up this question at ten o'clock.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS TO FRANCE AND CHINA RESPECTING NUCLEAR TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Have representations been made to the government of France concerning the forthcoming nuclear tests by that country? Second, were representations made to the government of China concerning its recent tests? I realize how difficult such a representation would be, since we do not recognize that government.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): With regard to the last portion of the question, I have already indicated that the government of Canada had stated that it was regrettable that mainland China had not joined the nuclear test ban treaty, which prohibits tests in three of the environments. The same declaration, to which most nations have committed themselves in the nuclear test ban treaty, would apply, of course, to any other country that engages in tests which we believe should be barred.

RHODESIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CURRENT TALKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister now report to the house on the discussions which have been taking place between officials from Rhodesia and officials from the United Kingdom with regard to the dispute between the two countries?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The exploratory talks in London have concluded and the parties to the discussions have agreed that following a period of further reflection and consultation they may meet in another place.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF FEMALE DEPUTY COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the concern expressed during the week end by the Elizabeth Fry Society over the recent appointment of a male acting superintendent of the Kingston prison for women, will the minister not give consideration to the appointment of a female deputy commissioner within the penitentiary system?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this question should be placed on the order paper.

FISHERIES

B.C. SALMON—REPORTED STATEMENTS RESPECTING HIGH SEAS FISHING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to direct a question to the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador in his capacity as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Fisheries. Perhaps he could take it as notice and have the minister reply on his return. My question is based partly upon the statement the Minister of Fisheries made on Friday last and partly upon a press release from the department itself.

The Minister of Fisheries stated as reported at page 5358 of Hansard:

> At the same time I wish to make clear that the Canadian government has no intention of authorizing salmon net fishing on the high seas.

A press release emanating from Vancouver on the very same day indicated that Canada gave an assurance that unrestricted high seas fishing by Canadian fishermen would not be permitted. Would the minister clear up these contradictions, including the fact that the word "unrestricted" is missing from the minister's statement in the house, which makes all the difference in the world?

Mr. C. R. Granger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): May I take that question as notice.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDUSTRY

BEAVERTON, ONT.—CLOSING OF AUTO PARTS PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria (Ont.)): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in connection with manpower. Would the minister inform the house whether he has received a telegram from a Mr. Benson, international representative of the United Automobile Workers, in respect to the shutdown of Lake Simcoe Industries at Beaverton, Ontario; and if so, what action will be taken to alleviate the serious situation set out in the telegram?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether this is a question of general interest. The hon. member might communicate directly with the minister or, if he thinks the matter is urgent, he might debate it at ten o'clock.

Mr. Scott (Victoria (Ont.)): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONSIDERATION BY MEMBERS OF FURTHER SECURITY MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the discussions which are taking place and press reports which are appearing in connection with added security in parliament. I ask the Prime Minister whether any measures taken in this regard should not first be considered by the members of parliament, because history has shown that a multiplicity of defensive or protective measures is often an incitement to violence. Instead of proceeding to build a lot of security around this place I would think through discussion members could come to a decision which would not place Canadian statesmen or politicians in the position of those in certain other countries, where the measures taken are an invitation to prospective wrongdoers.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I quite agree with what the right hon. gentleman has just said. I should hope that any measures which may be suggested would be discussed with the House of Commons before action is taken. I do not think there is any danger of the kind of precipitate and extravagant action being taken for our security which would interfere with the rights of the Canadian people to attend sittings of the House of Commons and visit the parliament buildings. I am sure any suggestions which might be made would take this into account, and that this matter would be discussed with the house.

HOUSING

HULL, QUE.—REQUEST FOR RELAXATION OF RESTRICTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. Minister of Finance?

Further to letters I have received, and those the Minister of Finance has doubtless received, to the effect that the housing industry in the Hull area has been severely affected by the recent restrictions on credit imposed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, does the minister intend to announce in the near future a change of policy with regard to C.M.H.C. loans or credit?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): The policy of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was set forth fully by my colleague the Minister of Labour. I really have nothing to add to what he said.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Would it be possible for the Minister of Finance to meet the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) so they could agree to let the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation be a little more generous in its dealings with those who need credit?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now putting forth an argument.

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REFUSAL OF B.C. LONGSHOREMEN TO WORK ON VICTORIA DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Yesterday was a holiday, Victoria day, and in the province of British Columbia at six major ports longshoremen did not work, regardless of a court injunction, because they maintained they were not required to work on that day under the labour standards legislation. May I ask whether the minister is conducting an investigation to try to prevent the recurrence of such circumstances?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether this is extremely urgent. I suggest the question be placed upon the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): On Thursday and Friday last I asked questions of the Minister of Labour but unfortunately he was unable to be present. Those questions had to do with the inability of the longshoremen's union at Vancouver to get full benefit from the Canada labour code. I wonder whether the minister is now in a position to answer the questions or make any report on the case I raised last Thursday and Friday.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I understood that an answer was given to the hon. gentleman by my office this morning. A telegram was received last week complaining against resort to the courts to compel people to work on Monday the 23rd which was a holiday. The answer to that telegram was that the Department of Labour does not intervene in disputes of that kind before the courts.

I may say that my department is giving consideration to the fact that such a circumstance has arisen and that a dispute of this nature has ended in the courts. I hope a solution will be found which will prevent a recurrence in the future.

Mr. Douglas: Can the minister assure the house that he will take the necessary steps to see that the employers in question live up to the terms of the Canada labour code?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question cannot be accepted.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour with reference to his statement that consideration would be given to the taking of steps. I should like to ask the minister whether this consideration includes possible amendment to the present labour standards code which might make more easy a possible avoidance of this situation.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I shall take that question as notice.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I always try to abide by your ruling, and I have no wish to take exception to it at the present time, but I really require some instruction from Your Honour. I asked the minister a simple question, whether he will assure the house that steps will be taken to see that certain employers comply with the law of the land. I cannot see why this question is not proper and why the minister cannot give that assurance to the house.

Mr. Speaker: To my mind the question in the way it was asked is not an urgent question. The hon. member is suggesting that certain action should be taken by the minister. I assume he would bear that in mind, but to my mind the question is not an urgent one.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DEPARTMENTS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-178, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, if the right hon. gentleman would not mind, I should like to make the point, having in mind the provisions of the resolution, having in mind the provisions of the statute, and having in mind the provisions of the British North America Act, that there is some doubt as to whether all parts of this bill might be discussed because they are not included in toto in the resolution.

This is a point in respect of which the Minister of Justice indicated there was a legal opinion from the law officers of the crown stating that this is possible. I do not wish to raise the point and deal with it extensively at this time, but so far as I personally am concerned I feel that if we do not raise the point at this time we may be losing our right to take the proper position at a later stage. I should like to make this point now and reserve the right to suggest that parts of the bill may not properly be before us because of the form of the resolution.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I may say I have been assured by our legal advisers that the resolution which has been accepted by the house makes it possible for the house to discuss every section and all items of the bill before it. The reason certain parts of the bill were not included in the resolution is that inclusion of all parts was not necessary because certain changes were made which did not involve financial matters of any kind. Therefore it was not necessary to include them in the resolution, although it would have been quite possible to have done so. For that reason the exclusion of these items from the resolution dealing with Bill C-178 does not in any way prejudice the right of members of this House of Commons to discuss on second reading and subsequently all sections of the bill which is before us.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister say, when he mentions law officers, whether they are the law officers of the Department of Justice; because the opinion I received, which was not from the law officers, was the very reverse.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, the view we received from the law officers was that the resolution in the form which was adopted would not in any way prejudice discussion of all items in the bill. The parts of the bill which were omitted were omitted for the reason that they did not involve any financial consideration and therefore were not required to be mentioned specifically in the resolution.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister assure the house that the advice he received was from the law officers of the Department of Justice or those who are responsible for the formation of the legislation?

Mr. Pearson: I will have to check on that. I was informed that it was the law officers, I believe in the Department of Justice and the Privy Council, but I should like to confirm this information.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, the question in respect of the point of order which intrigues me is that I cannot see why you would not have to mention each department in order to discuss this legislation. In this resolution the Prime Minister is asking that the Department of Forestry and ARDA be made legal. Does there not have to be another resolution, or another statute at least, naming this department?

Mr. Pearson: I have been informed that this is not necessary and that the resolution does adequately cover all the items in the bill which is before us.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, on this point of order may I ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he can assure us that the department or departments embodied in this legislation which were not mentioned in the resolution do not entail any additional expenditure?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, and there are other matters in the bill which were not mentioned in the resolution for the same reason; that is, they do not entail any expenditure of public money by reason of the changes which are recommended in the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, having raised this matter, it was not my intention to ask for a ruling at this time. I simply wished to make certain that my right to discuss this particular aspect of it would be reserved, and that during the course of the discussion on second reading I could raise the point and be entitled to state why I think there may be some doubt as to the position of the government. However, I was not asking Your Honour to make a ruling at this time.

Mr. Speaker: This was my understanding of the point raised by the hon. member for Peace River. I am very grateful that the hon. member is not asking for a ruling at this time.

Mr. Starr: Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, in order to substantiate the point of order which the hon. member for Peace River has in mind, I think we should hear his reasons at this time. If you make a ruling without hearing the arguments it may raise a doubt.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that the hon. member may wish to raise the point of order at a later date, and when he does the matter will be considered; but he is not submitting an argument at this time. I suggest we should allow the right hon. the Prime Minister to continue.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will not be out of order in repeating that although I have been informed by the law officers of the Department of Justice and the Privy Council that it was not necessary, I can understand the doubt which has been raised about the resolution seeming to exclude certain matters which are in the bill. These matters were not included, but I wish to state that there is no restriction on members in respect of discussion of all matters in the bill when we come to a detailed discussion of these items.

In the discussion of the resolution certain points were raised with which perhaps I should deal. There was the question of whether we should not have proceeded with a number of bills rather than one composite bill, each bill dealing with the particular department with which it was concerned. It could have been done that way but, notwithstanding what the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) ventured to suggest, it might take a good deal longer if we had a debate on five or six resolutions, second reading on five or six separate bills and consideration of five or six bills at the committee stage. Be that as it may, the same kind of debate covering the same ground, and I think in less time, is possible when we consider a bill of this kind covering all the departments concerned.

In so far as the point raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) is concerned, which related to amendments to this legislation that may be required, I think it is just as simple and convenient, and perhaps even more so, to make amendments to a composite bill of this kind than to make amendments to four or five separate bills. Be that as it may, it will be possible under legislation dealt with in this way to make the amendments which may be required in the future either by legislation or, as may be the case more often in the future, by action under existing legislation which does not require new legislative measures.

There were certain references made in the previous discussion to the purpose of this bill, at which time I think the purposes were not accurately described in certain respects, particularly as to why we brought in this far reaching change in the executive structure of government. This was simply done for the purpose, as we have said, of making the government more effective and more adaptable to changing circumstances. I think this legislation, if parliament accepts it, will have that effect. It has been suggested that this legislation, if it is accepted by parliament, will add to the number of members of the cabinet and that this might be undesirable because the cabinet is already, in the minds of some people, too large. So far as this particular bill is concerned and the action which is to be taken under it, it will not have that effect and will not mean any enlargement of the membership of the cabinet at the present time.

I am not sure that I agree that the cabinet in its present form is too large. The numbers have been increasing over the years as government business has been increasing and we have now a membership of 26. My own feeling is, and I believe the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) shares this feeling, that as government business continues to increase, and there is no reason to believe that it will not do so in years ahead, it may be necessary to increase the number of ministers to deal with problems which cannot now be dealt with as effectively as they should because the ministers concerned already have too much to do. As the number of ministers for that purpose may increase, and the right hon. gentleman mentioned this, it will perhaps become necessary to introduce a system into our governmental structure by which we will have ministers in the cabinet and ministers who only attend cabinet meetings when subjects of direct responsibility and interest to them are being considered. This is not to suggest an inner cabinet within a cabinet, although that has developed almost automatically in perhaps a not too effective way. There are difficulties inherent to that kind of informal development.

This would mean that the cabinet itself would be smaller and that there would be a number of ministers who would not automatically be members of the cabinet but as Privy Councillors they could be summoned to cabinet meetings when matters of direct interest and importance to their departments were being considered. That is a practice which is now customary at Westminster.

During the May 9 discussion preceding the introduction of the bill the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) suggested that it would be helpful in dealing with this legislation for each of the ministers concerned and affected to take part in the debate and in turn deal with that part of the legislation which directly affects his or her responsibility. It is the government's intention to follow that procedure. The ministers who are concerned with this reorganization will be present to make statements and answer questions in respect of those matters which have been or are now being transferred to their responsibility. It may be that this could be done during second reading, but it may be found that it would be more effective to do it at the committee stage when the bill will be considered section by section, because each section will deal with particular ministerial responsibilities and the appropriate minister could handle that section. That will be for the house to decide.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question regarding the matter he dealt with in the penultimate paragraph of his remarks. I suggested that acceptance of this bill would mean an increase in the number of members of the cabinet. If I understood the Prime Minister correctly, he said a few minutes ago that there would be no increase in the membership of the cabinet at the present time. Do those words indicate that the result of this legislation would be that the number of ministers could increase although that is not the government's intention at the present time?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the number could increase but such an increase is not contemplated by the government in this legislation. Perhaps I will be able to deal with that matter in detail or, if not in detail, at least mention how the cabinet will be organized if and when this legislation is adopted. Perhaps I should mention at once that there is a minister without portfolio who could be transferred to a new department of government if such were established. There are also other ways of dealing with this legislation which would not result in any increase, and I will make this clear as I go on.

In addition to the additional responsibility of ministers which will be discussed in this debate, there are certain general matters arising from the bill itself which are common to a number of departments. These matters relate to government organization generally, and I propose that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) will speak for the government as well as for his department in this regard, because he will be the minister responsible for the Treasury Board as well as for the Department of National Revenue. As the minister of the Treasury Board, in addition to his present functions he will have charge of matters of government organization, and I think this makes it appropriate for him to take charge of general questions as they arise during the course of the debate.

There are certain other aspects of the legislation, however, which I should like to deal with briefly as Prime Minister, and these are the ones relating to the authority of ministers in closely related fields of jurisdiction. While the exposition of the details of particular departmental jurisdiction during the course of this debate will no doubt be of principal interest to members, certain remarks made on May 9 make it clear that in some cases it would be useful for me to say a word or two about where one department's responsibility ends and another begins.

• (3:30 p.m.)

There are two groups which were of particular concern and which may have led to some confusion in the minds of hon. members. The first is the relationship between the Department of Justice, the Department of the Solicitor General and the department of the registrar general. Let me say immediately that of the three the first I have mentioned, the Department of Justice, remains the principal law department of the crown. I hasten to assure the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) on that point. I would go further and say that I entirely share his and other hon. member's great respect for and belief in what the hon. member for Greenwood called—and I quote from his statement the other day—"the fundamentally important function of the Minister of Justice, as the chief law officer of the crown, to give advice on constitutional matters, and to have responsibility for defending the federal rights in the courts." That remains the responsibility of the Minister of Justice. At the same time I would like to underline for hon. members what the hon. member for Greenwood also said that day. The first quotation was from page 4910 of Hansard, and the hon. member also said as reported at page 4911:

—they have been overburdened.

The hon. member was referring to previous ministers of justice. He went on:

They were responsible for advising on all sorts of legal matters. They were responsible for constitutional issues and for law reform. They were responsible to some extent for correctional institutions, and all sorts of other subjects.

Knowing this, and valuing as highly as we do the function of the chief law officer of the crown as counsel and as legislative adviser, we have in this legislation sought to free him, for this fundamentally important function, from certain administrative and operational responsibilities. Certain of these, as was pointed out the other day, will now become the concern of the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell). It is, I believe, entirely in accord with good administrative procedure and good democratic practice that we should make these changes in this way, and in doing so we are here following a course pioneered many years ago in the United Kingdom in the Home Office.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Certain responsibilities which are also of an operational nature will go from the Department of Justice to the new department of the registrar general. I mentioned this in passing the other day. No member of the house conscious of the interplay between law and economics will fail to understand the significance of this new department and the important role it can play in areas such as patents, combines, bankruptcy and corporations, which have been left too long separated, almost in isolation. But in all these matters there is a common link of commercial interest, and legislation dealing with them will therefore have a strong economic foundation; it will contain vital elements of concern to the public interest.

I feel that bringing these matters together under one new department, with a single minister to have responsibility for them, will have effective results which could not be so easily or effectively achieved under the old, haphazard and virtually accidental arrangements by which these matters were split under two or three departments.

In this connection I have asked the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau) to act also as registrar general. During the past few months he has already had responsibility for some of the pieces of legislation which will go now to the new department if this bill secures parliamentary approval. His previous experience as a member of the restrictive trade practices commission, a member of a royal commission looking into patents and copyrights, a civil servant, in private practice, and as a minister will, I believe, be of very great assistance in the formation and conduct of this department.

One of the matters which will have to be considered early in the establishment of the department of the registrar general is to what extent it can further assist and protect the Canadian consumer, which is a matter that was mentioned in the discussion on the resolution, especially by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). The Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Agriculture now have active consumer protection roles within their own departmental areas of responsibility, but there may be other areas in which the federal government can develop consumer protection programs and there may be a real need to co-ordinate what is being done now in a number of departments.

It is the government's intention to ask the Economic Council to look at the field of consumer affairs, along with some of the other functions now to be undertaken by the registrar general under the legislation before us, with a view to providing advice as to the courses of action that seem best suited to meeting the needs of the Canadian people and the Canadian economy in the consumer field.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister say in what particular the question of consumer credit comes within the jurisdiction of the federal parliament, what portion of it is entirely within provincial responsibility and what representations, if any, are being made to the provinces to secure their co-operation in connection with this investigation?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the important matters which will have to be considered, namely, the respective jurisdictions of the provincial and federal governments in the consumer field. It is on this matter as well as others that we are seeking advice from experts, including the Economic Council. It is impossible at this stage to say what the responsibility of the department of the registrar general might be in this field until we get a report in regard to the matters I have just mentioned. Our additional responsibility as a government in this field will be determined after we have examined the matter very carefully, especially in the light of the report which we hope to secure from the Economic Council.

While the division of the responsibilities among ministers is, I believe, made reasonably clear in the terms of the bill, I think I ought to clarify one aspect of the division of responsibilities between the minister of Indian affairs and northern development on the one hand and the minister of energy, mines and resources on the other. In my statement on May 9 I said:

> The resource jurisdiction which has been connected with the development of the north will remain under the minister of northern development.

We all contemplate that at some time in the future we shall have in this country one or more provinces in the north. That situation will come, however, only after there has been substantial growth in population and in resource development. The encouragement of that resource development will be the responsibility of the minister of northern development. In a sense the minister will be acting in that, as in many other respects, as a trustee for provinces of the future.

The minister of energy, mines and resources, on the other hand, will be exercising responsibilities that are essentially, if I may use that word, national in their character. By that I mean he will be responsible for the kind of things that do not relate to any particular province but rather involve elements of jurisdiction that are federal in nature and aspects of policy that affect the country as a whole. I think that this basic concept of division of functions is sound. It should permit the establishment of arrangements that will remove to the greatest extent possible confusion and difficulty as developments and changes take place in this country over the coming years.

One of the questions that had to be considered in this division of responsibility was how best to draw a geographical line for administrative purposes with regard to underwater areas off our coasts, which the federal government has been advised by its law officers come within federal jurisdiction. As hon. members know, some provinces have taken issue with the advice that resources underlying offshore waters are legally a federal responsibility. This is purely a constitutional question and it has been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for an opinion. Until the advice of this court has been received, I naturally do not intend to go into the substance of the argument; indeed, it would be inappropriate and profitless to do so. I may say that until an opinion is given that such resources are not federal the federal government must have administrative arrangements to handle applications for rights to explore the resource possibilities under the waters off our coasts. If the Supreme Court of Canada should decide that these areas and resources are not federal, the jurisdictional problem will be altered and transfer arrangements will have to be made. This of course, can be done.

However, for the present at least the federal government must provide for the administration and proposes to do so. One solution would have been to have the minister of Indian affairs and northern development handle all mineral resource development under federal jurisdiction, whether in the north or on the continental shelf. This would, however, have involved that particular department in things that would relate in no way at all to its northern functions or to other things with which it deals such as Indians, national parks and wildlife. It might, thereby, have introduced a misunderstanding of the character of the division of functions between these two departments.

In working out a division of resource work between the two departments, one possibility would have been to give the minister of northern development responsibility for resource areas on dry land, that is, land above sea level, and the minister of energy, mines and resources responsibility for resource areas under the water. This, Mr. Speaker, was not considered to be practical. In the far north areas of water interlace the many large islands and the thousands of small inslands of the Arctic archipelago, while in Hudson Bay hundreds of tiny islands that are a part of the Northwest Territories speckle immense water areas.

To have the jurisdiction divided between dry land on the one hand and, if I may use the expression, "wet land" on the other might well have created administrative chaos. The best arrangement, after considering a number of possibilities, appeared to be for the minister of Indian affairs and northern development to have administrative responsibility for all continental parts of the two territories and also for the Arctic archipelago, including the underwater areas there in the area of the archipelago. In Hudson Bay, James Bay and Ungava Bay we have exactly the opposite situation to that of the Arctic archipelago. We have an inland sea interspersed with hundreds of small islands. The sensible arrangement there seemed to be to have the minister of energy, mines and resources assume administrative responsibility for these water areas along with the responsibility he will have for the other large areas of the continental shelf. To avoid confusion the minister of energy, mines and resources will handle the administrative work for the islands in Hudson Bay, Hudson Strait and Ungava Bay, as well as for the underwater areas south of a certain line.

In other words, as a purely pragmatic administrative arrangement, the water areas have been placed with the land jurisdiction in the Arctic archipelago where the land is the most extensive and important element, and the land areas have been placed with the water in the Hudson Bay area where the water areas are very much larger than that of the islands. The dividing line, so far as the departments are concerned, will run substantially along the south coast of Southampton and Baffin Islands.

This division is not reflected in the present bill because it has no legal consequences or significance. It is simply a division of federal administrative responsibility between two federal ministers about which I thought I should inform the house. This information has already gone out in the schedule to Order in Council P.C. 1965-2284, which was tabled in the house on January 18, 1966. I do not believe there are any other comments I wish to make at this time. As I have said, particular questions of organization and administration will be dealt with by the ministers concerned, if these are matters which are of concern only to these departments. If the matters are of wider than departmental concern they will be dealt with by the Minister of National Revenue who will be the minister responsible for the Treasury Board.

I was glad to note during the discussion of the resolution many expressions of approval for this measure as well as some very constructive suggestions for possible improvement of the ideas and principles underlying the bill. The comments throughout the country, both at the time when the changes were announced last December and since, have reflected not only an awareness of the problem these changes are designed to meet but in general have given approval to the purposes of the government in legislation of this kind, designed as it is to deal with the changes.

This legislation, if the house accepts it, Mr. Speaker, will contribute to the more efficient operation of government at a time when that is one of the major purposes of parliament, and by contributing to the efficiency of government will enable the country itself, I hope, to deal more effectively with the complex and changing problems of our national life.

As I said in concluding my remarks at the resolution stage, there will undoubtedly be further changes required as conditions change, and they are changing with bewildering rapidity these days. It will be possible to adapt the legislation to these changes in part by action under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act. It may even be necessary in the future to come back to the house for amendments to the bill before us. This measure is to make executive government more efficient, and it is one step in that direction. As other steps seem to be required we will be privileged, I hope, to bring the changes that may be necessary before the house from time to time.

Mr. Hamilton: Will the Prime Minister permit a question at this time dealing with the Privy Council? What arrangements will be made, under the Prime Minister's jurisdiction for the Privy Council, to look after the scientific secretariat? Will that be designated to a minister or will it stay under the Prime Minister?

Mr. Pearson: I am not sure if I understood my hon. friend's question. To what was he referring?

Mr. Hamilton: There is a secretariat that deals with scientific matters and handles reports from the new council on science and the National Research Council. I wonder if they will report to a committee of cabinet and from whom they will get directions in the Privy Council? We have been critical of this because it seemed to by-pass the house. Of whom shall we ask questions in the house? Will the jurisdiction remain with the Prime Minister or will it be given to a new minister?

Mr. Pearson: The proposed science council but not the research council will report to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Starr: I rise on a point of order. The Prime Minister mentioned that the Minister of National Revenue, in his capacity as president of the Treasury Board, would give a more complete picture of this reorganization. I wonder whether the Minister of National Revenue will rise now and augment the picture the Prime Minister gave a moment ago?

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I believe that what the Prime Minister said was that I will deal with questions of a general nature which will arise during the debate. Questions with respect to new departments which are raised by hon. members will be dealt with by the ministers involved either on second reading or at the committee stage. Personaly I believe committee stage will be more appropriate in that questions can be put and answers given, additional questions asked, and so on. Perhaps I should deal with questions of a general nature raised prior to second reading of the bill and its referral to committee of the whole after hon. members on the opposite side have had an opportunity to speak.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question? I do not see anything in the bill relating to this subject, but under the proposed reorganization will the traditional duty of the Minister of Justice to advise on constitutional problems be in any way affected or is this duty being transferred to the President of the Privy Council?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, there will be no change. Indeed, I quoted with approval the remarks of my hon. friend on the resolution stage of the bill on that very point.

Mr. Brewin: I am sorry, I missed that.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, we have listened to a great deal of verbiage from the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) about what this legislation will mean in the reorganization of government departments and how effective this will be. All I can say at the present time is that the change is more an appearance than a result. Because it does not matter how much we try to reorganize or make the departments of government more effective; their effectiveness can only be brought about through the leadership of the government, depending in turn on the ministers who will head the departments and how effective they are in taking a leading role in the policymaking of their departments. Therefore, irrespective of the words I use we will have to wait with bated breath to see the results which are brought about by the changes being made through this legislation. If the performance of the present government since 1963 does not change within the next few years, then I am afraid we are spending a great deal of time on this legislation when the same thing could have been achieved by leadership in the departments which have existed up till now.

What I am concerned about, Mr. Speaker, is the effect that this legislation will have on certain departments of the government and the demoralizing effect it has already had in relation to the proposed new departments and their effectiveness. In some instances this legislation relegates certain departments, which have been doing a good job heretofore, to a very unimportant role. Others are raised in importance, depending on who is the minister designated to head them. I am not going to speak about who the ministers will be; rather, I should like to say a few words about the departments themselves, their significance and their effect upon the people who will staff them.

I should like to say a few words first about the Department of Labour over which I presided as minister for five and a half years. In 1957 the Department of Labour was considered a poor second cousin to all other departments in the administration of government, having under its jurisdiction only the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and a few other minor acts. Over the years, because of our activity in government, this department rose to a very important position and played a very important part in the government of the country, so much so that the personnel of the department felt they had now taken their rightful place in the administration of the country.

The Department of Labour plays a prominent part simply because labour is a very large and important segment of the Canadian population. Because of that the Department of Labour should and must play a significant role in the administration of the country, and it deserves recognition and attention.

When we were the government we built up the department through various programs and the administrative acts which were under the jurisdiction of the department. We activated and stimulated the "Do it Now" program. We activated the training and retraining of the unemployed in the country, which is something the new minister of manpower will be adding to because he has recognized its importance by raising the allowances of those who will be training under the program. We also activated to a tremendous degree training and retraining in industry. This is something which I hope will be continued, though it will be carried on not by the Department of Labour but by the new department of manpower.

We also instituted the municipal winter works incentive program, which is still in effect. Under this program municipalities right across the country can benefit each and every winter. In 1960 we instituted the technical and vocational assistance program, under which a tremendous number of schools were built across the country providing over 300,000 places for students to receive training in trades and skills. All this added to the prestige of the department and the department felt it was playing an important part with tremendous enthusiasm.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the year 1966 this government is dismembering the department. All of the programs instituted since 1957 are being taken away from the department and it is being relegated to a very insignificant role indeed in the affairs of government in this country. The morale of the personnel left in the department is low and all interest has been lost. In 1957 they felt they were second cousins but they now feel they are third cousins to other departments in the government service.

As a result of this reorganization, Mr. Speaker, what is left to the Department of Labour? It still administers the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, under which it provides the services of mediation in disputes in this country. It still administers the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act, a purely administrative measure, and the Government Annuities Act which is now dormant.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, what has the Minister of Labour left for him now? What is the meaning now of the Department of Labour in relation to the tremendous labour force in this country? It has very little meaning. As a matter of fact, since 1963 the ministers of the present government have made no endeavour to bring about an end to any disputes which have occurred in the country during the past three years but have sat on the sidelines relying on mediators, conciliation boards or any other body on which they could lay their hands and throw into disputes, hoping and praying they would be successful. Such was not the case from 1957 till 1963 when there was an active interest on the part of the minister in endeavouring to bring parties together in order to bring an end to disputes instead of relying on somebody else.

Let me take as an example the present strike of longshoremen in Montreal and Trois-Rivières. The government is not moving on this at all. All they are doing is hoping and praying that a judge they have appointed will bring about an end to the strike through conciliation.

I bring up these matters, Mr. Speaker, only because I want to show that in the past three years the ministers have not accepted their administrative responsibilities. That is why I said at the beginning that it does not matter what changes are made through reorganization because the success of such reorganization will depend on leadership.

If the government and its ministers carry on in the same offhanded manner they have adopted until now, none of these proposed changes will mean anything. Reorganization is fine provided you have the leadership to put it into effect. The two ministers who have held the office of Minister of Labour over the past three years have not participated in disputes regardless of the disruption to the economy, regardless of the effects on the economy as the result of strikes, yes, regardless even of the fact that some such disputes have resulted in strife. The ministers have taken the attitude that it is not their business to effect settlements. They would rather use the services of strangers, thereby hoping to bring about settlement of the disputes.

In the Department of Labour we endeavoured to set up in the past a committee which had to do with the bringing about of a better relationship between management, labour and government. This machinery was set up but it has now been dismembered. No effort is being made to use it. We want to know whether the proposed reorganization is going to bring about a better understanding between management, labour and government.

How will consultation between these bodies be possible under this new set-up? Surely the minister of manpower will agree that consultation is not only a major but a very important issue to the three bodies of Canadians I have mentioned. Consultation should be carried out on a continuing basis rather than haphazardly from time to time.

Under this proposal the Department of Labour is broken up and morale is low. There will be a department of manpower headed by a minister who, I must admit, has very great experience in dealing with labour matters. He has a good record of energy and accomplishment in the labour movement. Yet he is given half a department or perhaps less than half a department to deal with labour under the new set-up. Immigration is thrown in as compensation. We are doing away, as a matter of fact, with the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

In the bill setting up the new ministry of manpower it is proposed that the new department will deal with the utilization of manpower resources in Canada as well as employment services and immigration. However, citizenship has gone by the board. There will be no department for that.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Pearson: You should read the bill.

Mr. Starr: Citizenship is going to one department and immigration to another. Both these subjects came under the function of one department. Citizenship and immigration have not changed. Now, however, the minister of manpower has part of the functions of the former Department of Labour but not all of them. He also has only a part of the function to do with immigration.

Surely the question pops into one's mind, is immigration not important enough to warrant the full time attention of a minister? Are immigration criteria to be established purely and solely on the basis of the demands of the labour market? Is that what is intended under this reorganization? Are we going back to the days when immigrants were allowed in according to the demand for labour? Is this what the government has in mind? Surely in immigration other factors have to be considered. Surely the very important humanitarian factors must be considered.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: After all, we are dealing with people. We are not dealing with so many ciphers on the labour market. One is led to believe that the new manpower policy will deal with members of the labour force and with immigrants as ciphers only. The humanitarian aspect of things seems to have gone out of style with this government.

In the application of manpower policies the minister of manpower will not have direct contact with the conciliation services of the Department of Labour. Those are to come under another minister. The minister of manpower will not have the benefit of the many years of experience of those officers left in the Department of Labour who have dealt with problems in the field of labour. After all, the minister of manpower has to do with labour, but that is under a different minister. The minister of manpower, despite all his experience in dealing with labour unions, will find that he is not operating from one side of the fence or the other but that he is walking on the fence. This is very different from his experiences as a union leader.

The minister will also be dealing with management but not in the way he did as a union leader. Yet the officers of the department having experience in these matters are not to be under his jurisdiction but under the Department of Labour. Under these circumstances one can only hope that here will be the most intimate consultation and exchange between himself and the Minister of Labour because in effect they are both administering different parts of the same department.

What bothers and worries some of us is how these divisions are going to be brought about. What sort of liaison will there be between the two departments in dealing with problems that will inevitably come up for decision?

The Minister of Labour is to preside over something that is less than the former Department of Labour. That has been taken away from him. I do not see why matters such as technical and vocational training and on-the-job training were taken away from the jurisdiction of the Department of Labour and put under that of the minister of manpower. One can only hope that the fragmentation of the Department of Labour will not inevitably lead to fragmented policies at a time, particularly in the days ahead, when a positive, consistent manpower policy is an economic necessity. That such a danger exists is recognized both by unions and by management.

I should like to quote from an article that appeared in the Monetary Times of February, 1966:

> Training and retraining schemes quietly launched in the early 60's, are, in the national context, still little more than embryonic, yet their results are already startling.

I bring this to the attention of the government, Mr. Speaker. An injustice is being done to the Department of Labour. These things belong there, and were started there. The programs I refer to have been transferred from the Department of Labour where the personnel had knowledge of them to the department of manpower where the personnel are not familiar with them.

One can only hope that these proposed changes will carry on the effectiveness of the programs I have mentioned, and will ensure the effectiveness of future programs, if there are to be any. Of great importance is the leadership that will be given by the minister in the department. I only hope that the Department of Labour and its personnel will be given some sort of uplift so that the morale of that department, which has sunk to a new low at the present time, will be lifted up again.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), stated generally our view on this legislation during the resolution stage. I merely wish to emphasize one or two points and make some comments, if I may, on the remarks of the Prime Minister, particularly those of today.

First of all may I say that I always like to approach such changes in machinery as this represents by asking the question: why are the changes necessary? Furthermore, and this probably applies equally to all hon. members, including the right hon. gentleman, machinery interests me a great deal less than the policy which the machinery is intended to carry out.

As an amateur student of policital science I would think that the reasons which enforce changes in the government set-up are four. First, there is the immense increase in government functions and responsibilities as well as in government expenditure. I remind myself that only 30 years ago our total budget was in the neighbourhood of half a billion dollars, if I remember correctly. Today I suppose federal government expenditures, budgetary and non-budgetary, are about 23 or 24 times as great. This is the first reason why the machinery we have had heretofore cannot possibly be effective today.

I assume the second reason which has moved the government to think of reorganization derives from the new problems our society faces, problems thrown up by the scientific revolution, by automation and cybernation, and the importance of manpower in such a situation. It seems to me we are approaching an age when we shall need to make fundamental changes in a social ethic which has to a great extent been built up on the idea of work but which may in the future have to be built on the notion of leisure. We have an entire compendium of phrases prising work per se. We admire the person who keeps his nose to the grindstone, though I have always thought this was more a measure of our sadism than of our morality. These new problems make it necessary to have new government machinery.

I suppose the third source of pressure for changes is the new federal-prov ncial relationship. Aside altogether from the conflicts and the difficulties, the fact is that many of the functions which the British North America Act gave to the provinces have gained in importance and impact. The result is that changes in the federal-provincial relationship are necessary. Aside from anything else, one need only mention education, welfare and road construction to understand the tremendous increase in the importance of the provincial part of our federal set-up. Since the provinces are now taking a much greater share in these developments, both in their own jurisdictions and possibly in Canada as a whole, a new situation arises requiring much more co-ordination of policy than was needed some years ago.

Finally, there is a new factor in our lives, one which seems to have developed during the last couple of decades as a result of the tremendous influence of the mass media of information and propaganda. These are being used frighteningly by the huge corporations for the purpose of persuading us to buy what we do not need, to throw away what we really want, and to believe almost anything. In this situation there naturally emerges a broad social pressure for legislation and machinery to protect the consumer, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) pointed out during the earlier debate on this subject.

I wish to emphasize that in this field we are dealing not only with advertising and prices, the more pressing and the more obvious parts of consumer protection, but also with the quality of life in North America, to use a very general phrase. We are dealing with the fact, both in this country and in the country to the south, that the affluence and the habits we are developing are producing respect for the quantity of goods one possesses rather than for the quality of one's life.

All these things create a need for the protection of the consumer. Nor is it necessary to protect him only against falsehood. We need agencies which will help the consumer decide on the kind of choice that will enrich his living rather than merely place him somewhat higher in this status-seeking society.

The first reason for change then is the immense increase in government functions. Then there are the new problems arising from the scientific revolution, the necessary and inevitable new relationship between the federal government and the provinces and, lastly, the increasing need to protect the consumer. These, in summary, are why government reorganization is needed. These are the changes which government reorganization must meet. If the government's plans fail to do so, I submit they are not adequate.

On this basis my first point is to ask the right hon. gentleman why this reorganization does not do precisely what he suggested, at least by implication, it should have done, namely, bring into being two classes of minister, one belonging to the cabinet and having the general responsibility of government and the other a class of junior minister not belonging to the cabinet but having responsibility for the administration of a department. There are many areas in which this could have been done. I say this smilingly, but if the right hon. gentleman had in mind to bring about a reorganization why could he not, for once, have done it in a non-Liberal way, that is to say, why could he not have done the whole job at one time instead of doing only part of it and expressing the hope that later the rest would be accomplished?

Surely it would have made a tremendous improvement in administration if his cabinet were smaller. Surely it would be easier for his ministers to meet much more frequently than is possible now? Surely it would be an advantage if some of his ministers were freed from departmental responsibility so that they could look at the situation in Canada and in the world as a whole without the burdens of departmental detail.

How much better the administration would be if we had a cabinet of that sort, if the ministers were able to leave details to others who could have the job of looking after a department or part of a department or a division, such as housing. I do not say this with acerbity but it seems to me the Prime Minister has not approached making the kind of reorganization which a modern society requires, though there is a great deal of good in the proposal he has placed before us.

The same is true of what the right hon. gentleman said about consumer affairs. If I remember rightly, he said that in addition to what is now contained in the various departments, including the Department of Agriculture, there might be other areas where more action is needed and that there might be need for co-ordination. Surely there is need now for co-ordination. Surely it is obvious there are other areas where there is a need for consumer protection other than that now being afforded by the Department of Agriculture. Surely there is no need for an investigation to see that the way in which the consumer now is exploited by advertising and advertising propaganda is a scandalous distortion of decent commercial behaviour. Surely there does not need to be an inquiry to see that the consumer must be protected against unnecessary rises in prices which are not warranted by any increase in actual cost. We do not need an investigation to establish that. However, if I may again say this smilingly, the right hon. gentleman could not help being a Liberal so he said, in order to make sure that he knows what everybody else knows, that he will ask the Economic Council to study the entire question of consumer affairs.

Government Organization

Some time ago the right hon. gentleman handed the Economic Council a job which some of us thought was to study price increases in this country and what might be done about them. I gather that is not quite what the Economic Council has been asked to do; it has been asked to do something else in the field of pricing. The important thing to note is that we have an Economic Council which has been given the job of making an annual survey normally done by economists, and which has been done exceedingly well by Dr. Deutsch and the members of his council. The same Economic Council has been given the job of looking into some aspects of pricing. I do not know exactly what aspects it now will be asked to look into in the field of consumer affairs generally.

If the Economic Council ever had any vestige of planning, the right hon. gentleman is making sure it will not have any in the future. It will have ad hoc jobs to do such as the economic survey, prices, and consumer affairs and it never will be able to do any planning whatever. If there may be some requirement later, why not now? One hon. member boasted about the fact that the former government had instituted a do-it-now campaign which this government also is carrying out. Why not now?

I urge, Mr. Speaker, that a department of consumer affairs is an essential part of modern living and is the only way in which we can meet the problems of the modern consumer which, as I have said, do not merely involve prices, important though they are. The entire problem concerns the way in which we live, the kinds of things we choose among the many things from which we may choose. It involves clean air to breath or clear unpolluted water or beautified cities. All these are things with regard to which the Canadian citizen as a consumer must have protection. A department of consumer affairs should have various agencies to cover these many fields. A prices review board is, of course, very essential. The right hon. gentleman simply does not meet the needs of the present day when he satisfies himself by saying that he has asked some body which is going to look into something related to the protection of the consumer.

I wish to say a word now about what I consider to be the most important lack in this re-organization. There is no ministry of planning or economic affairs, or whatever you wish to call it. Let me point out to hon. members with the utmost seriousness that this is a lack which this government and this country will regret in the years to come. If you look at the various facets of our economy with which various departments of government deal, at least partially, you see the following picture; and I cannot give you the entire picture because I have not had the time to make the necessary study. You have the whole problem of manpower, placement and training in the hands of the ministry of manpower; you have the whole problem of disputes, harmony in labour-management relations, and the labour standards code in the hands of the Minister of Labour; you have the question of investment planning, which is basic to the economy, in the hands of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Economic Council and the war on poverty are under the Prime Minister. The various research councils, which again are basic to the modern economy and its development, also are directly under the Prime Minister.

With great respect to the right hon. gentleman, it is as obvious as anything can be that he is not in a position to give a direction to any of these agencies since he has to have overall supervision of all agencies of government. Yet these important instruments for an understanding of what is happening which are necessary for planning to meet what is happening, such as the Economic Council, the agencies for the war on poverty, the science council and the research council, are directly under the Prime Minister. I submit that this situation is not encouraging.

Then, if you go to such very important parts of the economic development in Canada as the designated area legislation, that is under the ministry of industry. Then, for some mysterious reason which perhaps is not so mysterious, the Atlantic Development Board comes under the Minister of Transport. I do not know what the Minister of Transport has to do with development of that sort except that the present minister comes from one of the Atlantic provinces; I suppose that explains it.

Mr. Knowles: He represents one of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says that the minister represents one of the Atlantic provinces. That probably is a more accurate political way of describing it. The minister comes from one of the Atlantic provinces but that is a pretty poor reason for giving him something like the Atlantic Development Board. Rural development, which is part of the economic planning, comes under the minister of forestry and rural development. Housing, which is essential to any kind of planning for our consumers is under the Minister of Labour and naturally, of course, the Budget is under the Minister of Finance and other things which will concern expenditures are under the Treasury Board.

I am not objecting to the fact that these various fields are under different ministers or in different ministries, because obviously you cannot have them in one ministry. I do not wish anyone to think I am asking for that. What obviously emerges from this picture of the various fields and ministries is that there is an absolutely urgent need for some ministry whose specific and only job is to co-ordinate these various needs and co-ordinate the various objectives. Only thus can we have a complete picture of what is happening in the various departments and have a complete knowledge not only of the facts but of the policies from which the facts emerge, because often these are more important than the facts themselves.

Unless you have that you have exactly what you have now, a pretty planless situation. Nobody can persuade anybody who knows anything about planning that there is even an approach to planning now in this government and in this country. From the little I know of large corporations in Canada, one does not need to be a democratic socialist like myself to believe in planning. You do not have to be a democratic socialist to embrace this idea. Any large corporation which is well organized will have some department whose job is to co-ordinate the work of all the other departments. There will be a position, possibly that of vice president; there will be a vice president in charge of planning or a vice president in charge of co-ordination or a vice president in charge of expansion. Whatever name he may have, there will be someone responsible for co-ordinating the planning aspects of the various departments and of the whole corporation.

The absence of any recognition of this need in a modern society seems to me to be the greatest possible condemnation of the right hon. gentleman, the Prime Minister, and his advisers and associates. It shows in my opinion a complete lack of appreciation for the kind of co-ordination and machinery which a modern, complicated and difficult society requires.

The same thing is obviously true with regard to the Treasury Board, as suggested in the comments of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas). The right hon. Prime Minister suggested today that it is intended that the president of the Treasury Board—I think that is his title under the bill—will be concerned with the day to day operations of that department. I hope that is true because we require the same thing in this regard as for general planning for the country. We need some central agency which will plan for actual personnel requirements and relate them and other requirements of other departments one to the other.

There are obvious misgivings about the way in which the law departments of the government are to be divided and we have some specific suggestions to make in this regard. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) will deal with that subject.

If I may use this adverb, I think that is all I can "usefully" say. There would be no purpose in merely using up the time of the house to repeat myself. I conclude by summarizing that if this government had, as in my opinion it should have had, an appreciation of the reasons which require government rearrangement and reorganization it would have done a great deal more than this bill proposes both as to the reorganization of the cabinet and the ministers and of the departments themselves. There would have been a definite step toward a department of economic affairs and planning and a department of consumer affairs for the protection of the consumer.

I sit down no more disillusioned than I have been before today because of the fact that when an approach has at last been taken toward the reorganization of our governing machinery the approach in this case, as in every other case, is timid, static, inadequate and barely starts the job of complete reorganization and even that in a halfhearted way.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-178, entitled, an Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, provides for changing the names of certain departments.

The Prime Minister has just stated that no new ministers will be appointed, that it is just a matter of transferring powers from one minister to another, and mostly a change in titles.

We can see, for instance, that the duties of the Solicitor General are listed as follows:

4. The duties, powers and functions of the Solicitor General of Canada extend to and include all matters over which the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, branch or agency of the government of Canada, relating to

(a) reformatories, prisons and penitentiaries;
(b) parole and remissions; and
(c) the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Those will be the responsibilities of the new Solicitor General, once Bill C-178 has been passed.

Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that we have had complaints about our penal institutions and prisons, especially penitentiaries, for several years, to the effect that the prisoners are ill-treated and cannot be trained while in detention, and that they cannot be rehabilitated after they have served their term.

With regard to pardon and release on parole we have also had distressing cases, which have been mentioned in the house, elsewhere, and in the newpapers, such as the Dion case in Quebec.

There are other cases where people have been freed under the provisions of the Parole Act and have returned to crime.

It is understood that more extensive studies in each of these cases should be undertaken beforehand.

I do not intend to dwell on this question. We do not object to the new Solicitor General being given responsibilities to this effect. As members of parliament, we want to have access to information that we might need in cases of release on parole and particularly as concerns the actions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

As for the new department of registrar general, its duties are the following:

8. The duties, powers and functions of the Registrar General of Canada extend to and include all matters over which the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction not by law assigned to any other department, branch or agency of the government of Canada, relating to

(a) combines, mergers, monopolies and restraint of trade;
(b) patents, copyrights and trade marks;
(c) bankruptcy and insolvency; and
(d) corporate affairs.

• (4:40 p.m.)

As regards combines, mergers, monopolies and restraint of trade, we have now, as we had in the past, concrete examples.

In my northern area for instance, there is an I.G.A. company. This I.G.A., which can be found almost anywhere in the province of Quebec, is controlled and dominated by a certain Mr. Loeb, or the Loeb company here in Ottawa. It belongs to Mr. Loeb.

In my area agreements are signed for a year and a half or two years with retailers. Lately, this same Loeb company has been buying out wholesalers—wholesalers are now controlled by the same people who control retailers—and retailers under contract with the Loeb company have to come to terms with wholesalers, who keep another name, but are nevertheless dominated and controlled by the Loeb company that just bought them out.

Now there are hundreds of such cases throughout Canada. But Mr. Loeb seems immune from federal legislation on combines, mergers, monopolies and restraint of trade.

While I was in Rouyn last week I met dealers from Amos, LaSarre, Val d'Or and Rouyn-Noranda. They complained that the Loeb company, or Mr. Loeb, had full control over wholesale as well as retail trade in our area.

The small independent dealer now finds himself in a position where he can no longer operate without resorting to one of the many branches owned by Mr. Loeb, either in Amos or Rouyn; there is complete control.

In that field it would be important, not only after the federal registrar is appointed, but for the present minister, who witnesses such things, to determine whether or not an investigation should be carried out. I suggest that the minister should have an investigation launched immediately as regards those combines and mergers, and particularly those monopolies and restrictive trade practices.

As far as I am concerned, I owe Mr. Loeb nothing and the small independent dealers in my riding do not owe him anything either. But when people have to be under Mr. Loeb's thumb in order to become independent dealers and retailers, generally known as I.G.A., who have to buy their supplies from Mr. Loeb who purchased for instance, the A. Gouin firm in Amos, the Lafortune & Gagné business in Rouyn-Noranda, and who would be ready to buy other firms so as to assume the full control of trade in our area, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, there is more than food for thought here. This matter should not only be considered by the House of Commons but also investigated by the department concerned.

I sincerely believe that the Registrar General, once appointed, will have a lot to do throughout the country with regard to trusts, mergers, combines and restrictive trade practices.

It is the same thing with the Bankruptcy Act. Have we not witnessed, in the last several years, a staggering number of bankruptcies? The bankrupts are accused of having been insolvent before going into business, of having been too weak financially to operate a business. We have been hearing about those matters in the house for several months.

We are now faced with a large number of fraudulent bankruptcies. Some people rob manufacturers or honest people to go into business and then go into bankruptcy after having disposed of the goods they literally stole from manufacturers or workers or people who work honestly to increase the national productivity.

Mr. Speaker, the responsibility of the Registrar General is to see to it that the number of bankruptcies decreases, that insolvency is proven, not after the man is bankrupt but before he goes into business.

And there is also the business of corporations. These are not only Canadian corporations operating in Canada but, as I said to the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) last Friday, there are also Canadian corporations which open subsidiaries in Japan or China to create some competition for themselves here in Canada. There is something abnormal there.

People are allowed to open subsidiaries in Japan or China where labour is 60, 75 and 80 per cent cheaper than in Canada. Then, they ship to Canada the products manufactured in Japan to compete with the Canadian products made by Canadians and controlled and dominated by the same people. The same people are competing against themselves. That is corporation business. The minister and the government should pay attention to such complaints. I am not making them up for parliament, they come from everywhere because it is felt that such competition is dishonest. Strangely enough, that same competition which is called dishonest is created by the same people who operate here in Canada. They go under a different name in China or in Japan, but in Canada the competition is against those people.

Mr. Speaker, let us consider now the department of manpower—whose duties and functions are as follows:

> The duties, powers and functions of the minister of manpower extend to and include all matters over which the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, branch or agency of the government of Canada, relating to
> (a) the development and utilization of manpower resources in Canada;
> (b) employment services; and
> (c) immigration.

Now, in the field of manpower, as concerns the utilization and development of manpower resources in Canada, I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether this matter does not come first under provincial jurisdiction.

Is it not rather to the province—in our case the province of Quebec—to settle the matter of development and utilization of manpower resources with the co-operation of the future minister of manpower (Mr. Marchand). As to the overall picture of the country, we might utilize Quebec manpower, Quebec students for instance, to help pick up the fruit in southwest Ontario. The future minister of manpower must know, through his national unemployment offices, that jobs are offered elsewhere in Canada. Then the minister might be of some use by co-operating with provincial authorities.

In item (b) of his duties, that is employment services, there is again duplication if you want to call it that. There is a provincial employment service, and a national employment service. Would it not be possible to organize that service so that we do not have to pay twice for the same services? Could we not come to an agreement so that the provincial employment services report their labour surplus to a federal central office where the federal authorities could be of some use to the provinces?

We see two bureaucracies. The National Employment Office and the Provincial Employment Office are not in the same building. Each one sees to its own expenditures; each one controls its administration.

Section 13 (c) reads as follows: "immigration". Last night, I was reading Section 92 of the British North America Act, where we can see that the provinces have something to do with immigration, as long as this does not affect legislation passed by the federal parliament; but the provinces have nevertheless a responsibility in the matter of immigration. But we, in the federal parliament, have never in the past recognized this responsibility or this power of the provinces concerning immigration.

The province of Quebec has been forced to take immigrants nobody else wanted. We realized afterwards that these people, after managing to come to Canada and having worked during six, seven or eight months in the province of Quebec, and especially in Rouyn, Val d'Or or Montreal, ran away to Toronto and Ontario where there is more economic growth.

If the authorities had then taken into consideration the cultural rights of the province of Quebec, we would undoubtedly have had immigrants who would have adjusted themselves more easily to the mentality of the province of Quebec. I see the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) in the house; I must tell him that I myself heard officials of the immigration office in Quebec city advise immigrants coming from Hungary and Yugoslavia that it would be preferable to learn English instead of French, if they wanted to earn a living more easily in Canada, and that right in the province of Quebec. The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin) knows that what I say is true.

The best proof of my allegation is that in Noranda, and more especially in Rouyn, where I live, 100 per cent of European immigrants come from Yugoslavia, Hungary, Poland—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Villeneuve, but I think that he is now speaking about immigration policy, while we have before us a bill to define the jurisdiction of the department of manpower and the responsibilities falling on the new minister in the matter of immigration. However, I do not think it is proper, at this time, to discuss the immigration policy of the federal government, even though it is well known that it will be incumbent on the minister of manpower. However, I believe that we should, at this stage, consider the bill before the house.

Mr. Caouette: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. This disturbs me a little, but I was convinced, and I still am, that I am not out of order.

Section 13 (c) concerning the appointment of a minister of manpower reads as follows: "immigration". It seems to me that I have the right to speak about immigration. I am not at all out of order, since the bill itself refers to immigration.

I realize that the immigration policy could be dealt with on another occasion, but nevertheless, we can discuss the present situation in the field of immigration while considering a bill to establish a department of manpower which will look after immigration in addition to manpower, since it is agreed that immigration comes under manpower.

I said that we have Poles, Ukrainians and immigrants of other nationalities in our area where 88 per cent of the people are French Canadians. Those immigrants are compelled to learn English in order to work in our area. They cannot speak a word of French. In fact, very few know any French.

Mr. Speaker, new ministers or incumbents are being appointed without increasing the number of members in the cabinet. In my opinion, it would have been advisable to appoint another minister who might have been called the minister of federal-provincial relations, because we are experiencing some unrest in Canada.

Earlier this afternoon I tried to put a question to the Prime Minister and I asked permission to raise the matter at ten o'clock tonight. A great many people in the province of Quebec are going around making all kinds of statements derogatory to Ottawa. It is high time Ottawa woke up and spoke plainly in order to correct the facts, because the Liberals, especially in the province of Quebec, proclaim that they granted Quebec farmers a price of $4 per hundredweight of industrial milk. Mr. Speaker, this decision was not made in the province of Quebec; Ottawa is paying, but Quebec is now making petty politics out of this matter.

In other fields, the Leader of the Opposition is heard to favour separation in one place and independence in another; elsewhere, he is merely a Canadian. It is impossible to know where he stands. This is what is taking place at present and everybody is wondering where they are heading. A man by the name of Bourgault is campaigning for independence in the province of Quebec at present—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): All members are no doubt interested in provincial politics, but the bill now before the house deals with the creation of four new departments with distinctive jurisdictions. I do not believe members of the house are so interested as all that in the election campaign going on in Quebec, even though they are not indifferent to it. However, we are now considering a bill to define the responsibilities of four new departments.

An hon. Member: Raise the matter at ten o'clock.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but I shall come back to this matter tonight at ten o'clock. At any rate, I should like to call your attention to the fact that I do not wish to meddle in the election campaign now going on in Quebec. I wish to emphasize in this house, however, the need to entrust a department with the responsibility of informing the Canadian people not only in one area, but in the province of Quebec as everywhere else, about the importance of giving responsibilities to Ottawa and what belongs to the federal government, with no discrimination whatsoever.

I said earlier that the present bill does not provide for a new minister for Quebec independence. I heard one of the R.I.N. speakers state in Quebec that all those ministers and departments, in short, all federal laws should be done away with at all costs, that we should withdraw from confederation. The same person said that the withdrawal of Quebec from confederation was not a solution.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I would ask the hon. member for Villeneuve kindly to speak on the bill now before us, bearing on the organization of four departments which are to be organized now and on which the hon. members are asked to express their views.

I quite understand that the other problem is of importance but when we consider the problem of the RIN as regards the independence of Quebec in relation to the four new departments that have to be created, I hardly believe that such a problem can be of much interest to the hon. members, although it may be quite relevant in an election campaign.

Mr. Caouette: I was just coming to the organization of the fourth department, namely, Indian affairs and northern development.

Now, clause 17 reads as follows:

The duties, powers and functions of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

It seems that this is a close equivalent to the Indian Affairs division now operating in the province of Quebec, Northern Quebec—

—extend to and include all matters over which the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, branch or agency of the government of Canada, relating to

(a) Indian affairs;

(b) the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory and their resources and affairs;

(c) Eskimo affairs;

Mr. Speaker, there is in the province of Quebec now, talk of Eskimo affairs. In fact, there is considerable talk about it. We have heard a Minister of Natural Resources of Quebec state that Eskimo affairs came under provincial jurisdiction, and I believe that it would be important at this stage to state that those who would liberate the Indians or the Eskimos from Ottawa are not more significant than those who cry for the independence of French Canadians from the Ottawa government. That is why I maintain that I should at least be entitled to refer to some statements made in Quebec and to say that I am not in agreement with those who claim that independence is not a solution but an instrument. Who among us, for instance, would give a razor to a child two or three years old because it is an instrument? It would surely be a dangerous instrument for him. I believe it is time for the federal government to take its responsibility, not get the jitters, and face the facts as they are.

Let us stop deceiving ourselves by saying empty words. Let us take the facts as they are, let us enlighten the population on their existence. That is why I am of the opinion, as I said earlier, that there should have been added a department of federal-provincial relations to those new departments, not a department which is fearful of facing young people, older people, those who are 18 or 21 and who will have the right to vote this year or next. It does not matter whether of not these young people have the right to vote, but we should explain to them clearly what is in their best interest and let them know the actual facts, in short, where we are going. But in order to know where they are going, we must teach and show them. There are people who will follow anywhere, without knowing where they are going. I have heard quite a few young people say: We do not know where we are going, but we are going anyway. And they go along.

Let us consider the situation. That is why it is important to create a department of federal-provincial relations, and this is getting more and more imperative. The government too must realize and recognize that it is high time for these new departments we are creating to take their responsibilities concerning the provinces.

As for the provinces, let us transfer back to them what belongs to them. Under cover of war, in 1939, 1940 or 1942, Ottawa asked for prerogatives, rights—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the hon. member for Villeneuve wants to put forward an argument from the constitutional point of view to delineate the federal and provincial jurisdictions, but I suggest that he should confine his remarks to the department of Indian affairs and northern development for the moment.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker; I really think I must be hard-headed, as they say.

I shall return to the department of manpower, because I sincerely believe this involves constitutional matters, and because the duties, powers and functions of the minister mentioned in section 13 conflict with the same powers given to the provincial legislatures.

Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I believe we can discuss the practicability of this clause which states the duties, powers and functions of the department of manpower concerning:

—the development and utilization of mapnower in Canada, employment services; and immigration, since all these subjects concern the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I think that from the constitutional point of view, it is about time Ottawa should withdraw from the fields coming under provincial jurisdiction. This was done too often in the past, and it is about to happen again in the future. The province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker, will no longer accept dictates from Ottawa; however, I am sure it will co-operate with Ottawa 100 per cent on matters of general and national interest. Only, there is a right way to act, discuss or negotiate with Quebec just like there is a way to discuss with the other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the province of Quebec is ready for discussion, even if some of elements are prepared to discuss with no one except themselves, being people who have a high opinion of themselves and none at all about others.

Now, to continue the list of heads of new departments, we have also the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Here again, as I mentioned earlier—the new minister will be responsible for:

Eskimo affairs; national parks; national battlefields, historic sites and monuments; and migratory birds and other wild life.

The duties are provided in clause 18 as follows:

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development shall be responsible for

(a) co-ordinating the activities in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory of the several departments, branches and agencies of the Government of Canada;

[Mr. Speaker.]

(b) undertaking, promoting and recommending policies and programs for the further economic and political development of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory; and

(c) fostering, through scientific investigation and technology, knowledge of the Canadian north and of the means of dealing with conditions related to its further development.

As far as my area is concerned, we do not object to the federal government taking the necessary steps so as to authorize the new Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to help as much as possible those coming from the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, but we are concerned about Indian affairs and Eskimo affairs. Eskimos are living in the vicinity of Hudson Bay, in northern Quebec in Ungava. The former Quebec Minister of National Resources stated many times that Eskimo affairs came under Quebec jurisdiction.

Now, the matter has not yet been settled, but it will probably be when a federal-provincial conference is called and several ministers, especially the provincial ministers of natural resources and the minister of Indian affairs and northern development come together. We feel that the federal authorities will then agree that provincial jurisdiction must be respected. The government should act as co-ordinator, as liaison officer among the various Canadion provinces, and induce all Canadians to agree on a policy which will enable the provinces to treat their Eskimos and Indians decently, in accordance with the ways and customs of the provinces concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing else to say about Bill C-178 which, in fact, as stated by the Prime Minister, will not establish new departments, nor increase the number of ministers, but will merely change the titles of the ministers and give them somewhat different responsibilities from those they had up to now.

We are interested in all departments, in general, but more especially in the new department of manpower. We will keep close watch and we are willing to co-operate with it at all times, even during an election campaign, because the department is independent of the minister.

Mr. Speaker, we are ready to support the department of manpower in every possible way, so that it will be efficient and will co-operate with our provincial department while respecting provincial prerogatives and rights. That is where Ottawa can render its best services to the Canadian people as a whole, and more especially to the people of the province of Quebec.

• (5:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, the growth in absolute and relative terms of the involvement of the federal government in our economic and social affairs has been great indeed during the past decade. When the Prime Minister calls Bill C-178 a first step in making the executive of the government more efficient, I think members in all corners of the house will perhaps commend that statement and regard the aims of the bill as laudable.

Our leader stated on May 9 some of the principles that we think are required in the whole reorganization of the administration of our federal government. I will not go over many of the things that were stated at that time. I point out, however, as was stated on that occasion, that administrative improvement is no substitute for policy. When the requirements of a complex and growing society move ahead of policy a vacuum is created. That vacuum of necessity must temporarily be filled by ad hoc regulations. This has happened in almost every department of government during the last two or three years.

As an example may I point to the Department of Transport. We have no regional air policy and as a result many areas of Canada are suffering. The only reason I bring that up, and I hope I am not out of order, is that we must not delude ourselves into thinking that improvements in the administrative structure are a substitute for policy directives which have not been forthcoming recently.

I submit there are a number of glaring deficiencies, in Bill C-178 in tidying up some of the problems that have recently manifested themselves. The Prime Minister suggested that this bill was only one of the first steps in what was envisaged. I think there were serious deficiencies even in his statement because he did not inform the house whether the government had considered the matters I have raised.

For example, I hope that serious consideration has been given to improving the response by the whole government organization to parliamentary directives. The public accounts committee has brought in reports which have been concurred in by the house. Yet we sometimes find that several years later there has been no response by government departments in keeping with such concurrence. Surely when a standing committee of the house makes a report containing several recommendations and that report is concurred in by this house, such recommendations become directives that the government is obliged to carry out.

I am not sure whether the Minister of National Revenue is shaking his head at that suggestion. If the government has become so arrogant that it finds it unnecessary to respond to the directives of the house, then I suggest that parliamentary democracy has degenerated to a great extent in this country. I hope that is not so. I am not on the public accounts committee this session. I do read some of its reports and I talk to some of its members. They are deeply disturbed that such recommendations have been ignored year after year. Without being unduly critical I therefore suggest that the government should have thought of ways and means of bringing about a better response and closer liaison between government departments and parliament so that such directives will not be ignored from session to session and from parliament to parliament.

In many areas I find myself to some degree in agreement with what was said by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I refer to the protection which it is suggested should be extended to consumers in order to protect them from the various abuses that have grown up. I may also say that in certain areas I disagree vigorously with the suggestions put forward by the hon. member for York South. For example, he complained vehemently and almost bitterly that the government had not set up a department of economic and social planning for Canada. If the government as a whole has any purpose at all it must be involved in the planning of our economic and social structure. If the hon. member is disappointed because there is not one department with super authority over all other departments to issue directives respecting planning, then, Mr. Speaker, I hope he remains disappointed for a long time to come.

We do not want, I think, any super authorities in the government structure with power to regulate certain departments and set certain courses. This is the function of cabinet or of such agencies or commissions and so on which have been set up by cabinet to study problems and to make recommendations. There are and have been sufficient commissions set up to study a large number of problems in this country. I think the final responsibility lies with the cabinet and I hope it will remain there. In fact, I hope we never get to the stage when we have a super authority giving directives to other departments. That power must remain with the cabinet which is responsible to parliament.

There is some contradiction in the suggestion by the hon. member for York South. He seems to build his argument on the basis that as modern society develops and becomes more complex it is difficult and perhaps impossible not only for the Prime Minister but even for other ministers to appreciate completely all that is required to cope with this development. Then the hon. member turns around and suggests that a certain department should be created to oversee such development. That, I think, is contradictory.

I am not drawing this parallel for derogatory purposes, but other nations have tried this kind of planning, this kind of centralized control, if you like, and they have failed. This system has not given the people the volume of goods and services necessary to raise standards of living.

This sort of planning fails because other levels in the economic structure object to it. This is one point on which we in this party completely disagree with the hon. member for York South.

There is one area where we feel there is real need for government concern. I have in mind the protection of consumers, and here we are in agreement with the attitude taken by the hon. member. Of the mail coming to me as a member of parliament the proportion concerned with consumer matters, price increases, credit problems and the like is larger than I have ever experienced. I presume this concern is similarly reflected in the mail received by hon. members representing constituencies in all parts of Canada. This being the case, the government should have been keenly aware of the situation and borne it in mind in its plans for reorganization. Nevertheless there is nothing in the bill to indicate that the matter has been even considered. There was little or nothing in the Prime Minister's statement to show that serious consideration was ever given to the introduction of legislation in the interest of consumers.

Whether a department of consumer affairs is necessary, I do not know. In one area, that of combines investigation, the administration has not been satisfactory. Whenever there has been a significant rise in the cost of living there have been complaints in the house that the federal government through its agency has not looked closely enough at the reasons for these price increases in an attempt to find out whether or not they were justified. Looking at company reports we find there have been significant increases in profits recently. I am not against profits. But I am against agreements which remove competition between companies. If this has been going on or if there have been indications of this practice, the federal government should be doing something about it. But there is no indication either in the bill or in the statement which the Prime Minister made that the government has given the subject any attention.

A number of abuses have come to light in connection with consumer credit. I suggest that increasingly every year in all walks of life Canadians are getting into difficulty because of conditional sales and consumer credit. I did not expect that measures to deal with this situation would be set out in the bill, but I did hope that the government would have indicated concern. It is true that a joint committee has been set up with the Senate to inquire into this subject and I suppose that within a short time the committee will be making a report with recommendations to this house and to the other place. This bill does not indicate which department would have the responsibility for implementing any such recommendations. The matter is not one which should be ignored when a new government organization is considered. It is too serious for that; it has assumed crisis proportions.

I shall not continue much longer. One could examine each of the new ministries, criticize some of the transfers and so on. The Prime Minister has told us that this is only the first step, that there will be other changes under the act dealing with the transfer of duties. The leader of our party suggested on May 9 that one important change which could be made would be to appoint two categories of ministers. This has been done in other countries, certainly in the United Kingdom, and I believe the system is effective in dealing with the growing complexities of modern society. Here again we agree with the hon. member for York South.

I would point out that probably the largest department in government today, the Department of Transport, is not to be divided. If there is not to be a division made in the responsibilities now assigned to it, I hope arrangements will at least be made to appoint an associate minister to undertake specific responsibilities in the department just as the Associate Minister of National Defence does in the Department of National Defence.

We all realize that air transport in Canada, both passengers and freight, is growing rapidly. Members from all parties have, I believe, expressed a desire that there should be some division of responsibility to take account of this increase since it is becoming impossible for one minister to be familiar with every aspect of the department as it is now organized. I realize that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) has been working very closely for some time with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) but it seems to me that when we are dealing with a bill intended to carry out government reorganization this is one department where provision should have been made officially at least for an associate minister if not for a clearcut division.

One other difficulty arises in connection with this measure. Schedule A includes a list of the various acts responsibility for which is assigned to the new departments. I suggest there should also be a complete list of acts indicating the departments to which they are assigned. I suppose that by a long process of deduction one could determine which of the acts are left within the purview of departments not superseded but it would be much more convenient to have such a list.

Finally, I simply say again that we do not regard a reorganization of the administrative responsibilities of the government as a substitute for policy. We still need leadership. We still need action by the government to bring in legislation on the basis of well-considered plans to meet the requirements of the future. We hope that in the days ahead there will be amendments to this legislation which will deal with the Department of Transport and, furthermore, which will deal also with some of the matters I have raised respecting consumers and their problems which have manifested themselves in very recent days.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Peace River wish to refer to the point of order he raised earlier today?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Having raised it before, I thought that as a matter of courtesy the debate should proceed to the point that one member of each party would have had the opportunity to speak, but I also thought it would be improper for me not to pursue the point of order I raised earlier. Your Honour may wish to take it under advisement and give your decision at some other time or Your Honour may wish to deal with the matter now.

Quite honestly I feel there is a serious defect in the bill before us and I should like very briefly to put before you the detail of the defect. In my view it is not lawful for us, under the provisions of section 54 of the British North America Act, to adopt this bill which deals with the appropriation of part of the public revenue, because it has not been adequately preceded by the form of resolution which it should have had as a foundation so that this bill would be properly in the custody of this house for discussion. The point raised at the time of consideration of the resolution was that the resolution, which purported to permit the house to deal among other things with the establishment of a department of forestry and rural development and the establishment of a minister of that department, failed to make provision for this and therefore the bill, in my submission, is tainted with illegality and we cannot consider it.

I do not think I need quote the precedents; they are contained in citation 243 and following of Bourinot. I should like to refer Your Honour to Bill C-178 which purports to establish several new cabinet positions and in doing so abolishes in several instances the old positions through repeal of the pertinent sections of other legislation. With regard to the Department of Forestry I should like to point out that clause 26 of Bill C-178 sets out in some detail a number of purported amendments to the Forestry Act. In part there is created a new ministry, a new department and a new minister, the minister of forestry and rural development. At the same time and by the same means there are clauses which repeal the existing provisions of the Forestry Act pursuant to which the minister is established. My simple proposition to Your Honour is that once you have, by the repeal of those sections which created the minister, caused the office to be abolished it is essential to create a new minister and a new department. In doing so, in order to provide for the salaries and payment of costs in respect of the department and in particular in respect of the minister, you must provide through a money bill for these salaries and costs.

This is quite apparent, because if Your Honour will examine clause 35 of Bill C-178 you will see that sections 4 and 5 of the Salaries Act are repealed and the following is substituted therefor; in other words, the position of the Minister of Forestry is repealed and the sections of the Salaries Act which provide for his salary as repealed. In order to establish a new minister we must have legislation to establish a salary for him, and I say that quite plainly this involves an appropriation by this house of a certain sum of money for the salary of this new minister. I suggest that under those conditions it is absolutely necessary that the resolution contain as a vital part thereof a provision that there is to be a minister and there is to be a salary. I will go further than that.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Baldwin: Surely.

Mr. Olson: May I ask whether it is just these words pertaining to the Ministry of Forestry in the resolution to which he objects or are there others?

Mr. Baldwin: I will develop that argument. I will tell the hon. member for Medicine Hat that in my view it is quite possible that the difficulty in this instance probably taints the whole bill with illegality. This is not a picayune technical argument. I believe it is our duty to make sure that legislation which is passed by this house is in the proper form. The powers to be given to the new minister of forestry and rural development are very considerable and contain the right to interfere with individuals and property belonging to individuals. We well might say and officials of the Department of Justice might say at first blush that the bill is proper in its present form and should be passed. But anyone whose rights are affected surely has a right to challenge this legislation, and I think we would be derelict in our duty if we did not bring these matters to the attention of the house and Your Honour so that when this bill leaves this chamber it will be in proper form.

I was about to refer Your Honour to clause 6 on page 7 of the bill. There the new minister of forestry and rural development has given to him certain powers and authorities which by implication at least, and I believe expressly, involve an expenditure of money. The minister may conduct economic studies relating to the forest resources, forest industries and marketing of forest products, make investigations designed to aid the forest industries and woodlot owners of Canada and assist external aid programs relating to forestry. If this section stands by itself as an amendment to the Forestry Act, I suggest that the government, under the terms of section 54 of the British North America Act, would be compelled to precede this bill by a financial resolution. So we have two counts; first, that there is established a new minister who was not in existence before and there is provision for his salary and, second, we have given that minister a power in respect of the expenditure of money which did not exist before. I submit that the resolution which we considered previously was defective, if it is to be used as a foundation for this bill. I think this is very significant.

Let me conclude by saying that six new ministerial positions are being created; yet the government has seen fit in respect of five new ministers with new titles to refer to them in the resolution but not to mention specifically the other new department and minister. In my opinion there is not the slightest distinction to be found between the five new departments and the department of forestry and rural development. If it is essential for the legality of this bill to include five in the resolution, why should it not be just as essential to include the department of forestry and rural development?

If it is correct that under the wording of section 54 of the B.N.A. Act it shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any bill of this kind there is a strong supposition that the whole bill may be tainted with illegality and that this house has no business at this time to adopt it.

I conclude on that note. I think there is a valid complaint in that the government's procedure is defective. I believe that the resolution was defective, and that the bill following cannot properly be placed before us in that it fails to provide a proper foundation for legislation because of the lack of reference to the ministry of forestry and rural development.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the hon. member I should like to state that I have again checked with a member of the Department of Justice and the House of Commons law clerk. I am advised by both sources that the resolution was in proper form and was broad enough to cover the whole bill and the specific point raised by the hon. member. There is no new financial expenditure authorized by the bill in respect of the department of forestry. The minister has the power to operate under existing forestry legislation or under the ARDA legislation. Otherwise he must receive specific authority for expenditure under appropriation acts.

In general the forestry changes relate to a change in the name of the minister. Clause 35 describes the minister's salary as new but there is no increase in the ministerial salary. Only a change in the name of the minister is involved. Therefore I maintain that the resolution is in proper order and that we can proceed with a discussion of this legislation in the terms in which it has been presented to this house.

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask the minister a question? If he is relying on the argument he has just presented, would it not be proper to say that we did not need a resolution because that argument applies to other changes made in other ministerial positions?

Mr. Benson: I do not think that is the case because in other cases new ministries are created rather than there being merely a change of names. The registrar general, for example, involves an entirely new department, as does the appointment of the president of the treasury board. These are entirely new appointments involving new expenditures of money and must, therefore, be included in the resolution.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I must disagree with the Minister of National Revenue because the Solicitor General of Canada is named in the resolution and this does not involve the creation of a new department.

Mr. Benson: On a point of order, this will involve a new department as there has never been a Solicitor General's department.

Mr. Olson: In so far as all of these departments are concerned, by using the argument advanced by the Minister of National Revenue one could interpret the resolution as being merely one to change names, as has been suggested in so far as the Minister of Forestry is concerned. Let me say this so that the hon. member for Peace River will understand the question I asked him. I do not regard this point of order as being picayune or niggling.

I think this is a very serious matter, and when I asked the hon. member for Peace River whether the point he raised was the only point to which he took exception I was seeking information. I think we should be very careful in considering this resolution because I think there could be lengthy and involved discussion about the legality of this legislation if, as the hon. member for Peace River suggested, someone at a future date should challenge the legality of a minister's position. We must concern ourselves about the legality of future functions and actions of ministers under the authority of the proposed legislation.

I do not intend to repeat all or part of the case advanced by the hon. member for Peace River because I think he has examined the situation very carefully. In my view he has put forward a sound case which should be examined again very carefully to make sure that this proposed legislation will stand up in law. It may be that a minor amendment to the resolution is required in order to make certain that this legislation will be legal. If that is the case I hope we can find some simple way of correcting this small yet important omission in order to prevent any difficulty in the future.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be remembered, in view of the fact the minister referred to the law clerk of the House of Commons in this regard, that many private members' bills have been turned down for the very reason which has been brought forward in respect of this legislation.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might correct a misunderstanding. I meant to indicate that I had relied on the opinion of a law officer of the crown and that the law clerk was consulted in order to gain an extra opinion in support of our belief.

Mr. Nasserden: That does not change the fact that a number of private members' bills have been turned down for the same reasons advanced in regard to the legislation now before us. A very minor change would bring the resolution into order and I cannot understand why the government should not propose such a change.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to indicate that I am speaking on the point of order and not on second reading. The aspect of this whole debate that bothers me relates to the fact that the government suggests that since there is no change in the duties of the Minister of Forestry these duties can be transferred under the Transfer of Duties Act from one department to another without involving any additional expenditure of money. It seems to me there was on the order paper at one time an order setting up a department of forestry and rural development and that it was not proceeded with because parliament was prorogued.

In this legislation a department of Indian affairs and northern development is described; yet there is not one single duty listed as being the responsibility of this department which was not formerly the responsibility of another department. Therefore all the duties of the new minister are duties which were listed and performed as responsibilities of a minister of another department. In spite of that fact, why was this department mentioned in the resolution?

The point taken by the hon. member for Peace River, that we should not rush ahead and discuss this bill and put it into law without being sure as to its legality, is a good one. In future the courts of this country, including the Supreme Court of Canada, may decide that we were not competent to deal with this matter because we failed to deal adequately with a money resolution and make it legal. In that event we would all look kind of silly.

I hope that in your consideration of this matter, Mr. Speaker, the two points I have raised will be kept in mind. First, was there a resolution on the order paper in a previous parliament setting up a department of forestry and rural development and, if so, for what reason? The second is the question I have just raised about the department of Indian affairs and northern development. What duties does the new department have that were not included in those of the previous department? Also, if it was necessary to mention the department of Indian affairs and northern development in the resolution, was it not necessary to mention the department of forestry and rural development? Those are the two points I wish to raise.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I just say one thing more to make certain that my points are quite clear. Under clause 26 of the bill we will in effect be repealing those sections of the Forestry Act which created the Minister of Forestry and gave him his title. He ceases to exist when this bill is passed. It is then essential for us to create a new minister with the title of minister of forestry and rural development. It may be that there is a certain similarity in the titles but there is no doubt that there is here a completely additional function. When we create this new minister we must provide for his salary and to provide for his salary I submit that we must have a money resolution.

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think that we must ask ourselves what part of this bill concerns the Department of Forestry.

What we are faced with here is simply a deliberate battle of words about an amendment to the Department of Forestry Act which is neither of a fundamental nor of an essential character.

That is so true that if you refer to clause 26, paragraph 1, it will be obvious that the objective is to change the long title as well as the short title of the department to that of Department of Forestry Development and Research. As far as clause 35 is concerned, it is true that it repeals or seems to repeal sections 4 and 5 of the Salaries Act. But, it must be kept in mind that this legislation does not create any additional department, such as a federal department which entails an expenditure for a possible additional salary, if there is a minister outside that department, and which will also entail the required expenditure for a deputy minister's salary, if this legislation, I repeat, did not create any additional department, but dealt only with the amendment to the Forestry Department Act, clause 35 would not have been included.

Clause 35 is there not to create a salary for a man who is now Minister of Forestry and whose title will change, but only to include that salary in the list which includes the salaries of new ministers.

Consequently, I think that the criterion is this: if the amendment to the Forestry Department Act was not included in this bill and was introduced in the house through a separate bill, there would have been no need, when this bill was introduced, for an amendment through a resolution.

I think that, under the circumstances, even if the procedure is different, we are in fact dealing only with an amendment to the title and possibly to a certain definition of the responsibilities, but without any additional expenditure already provided for by an act of parliament.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: If there are no further contributions to the point of order perhaps the Chair might be given an opportunity to survey the situation and study the very learned arguments advanced by the hon. members. This might be done during the private members' hour. If hon. members are in agreement, we might at this point announce the business for the adjournment debate and then go on to private members' hour.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows:

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

INCOME LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-11, to incorporate Income Life Insurance Company of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill No. S-11 is an act to incorporate Income Life Insurance Company of Canada. For the information of members of the house, this bill is in the standard form. This is a Canadian owned and operated company which was incorporated under the Corporations Act of Ontario by letters patent dated December 9, 1963, with an authorized capital of $10 million. A public underwriting of the shares of this company was completed during the spring of 1964, raising approximately $2,750,000. The company was licensed to carry on business by the province of Ontario in January, 1964, and at the present time is licensed also in the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

The present directors of the company are the persons listed in the bill as petitioners for the new federal company bearing the same name. The head office of the company is at 75 James Street South in the city of Hamilton, province of Ontario, where a full time administrative staff is maintained for the purposes of underwriting claims, accounting, actuarial and other required services. The management and staff of Income Life consist of full time employees each of whom is fully experienced in the insurance field.

The following remarks apply not only to Bill No. S-11 but to the following Bill, No. S-12. I make them now so they need not be made when Bill No. S-12 comes before the house for consideration. The prime purpose of Income Disability and Reinsurance Company of Canada, which is the subject matter of Bill No. S-12, is to underwrite accident and sickness insurance while the prime purpose of Income Life is to underwrite life insurance. The federal acts of incorporation request that each company be empowered to underwrite life, accident and sickness insurance. These two companies, which are incorporated under the Corporations Act of the province of Ontario, operate in conjunction with each other and the requested powers are required to enable each of the companies to be able to reinsure coverages written by the other.

The two companies share office space at head office and have certain sole employees and certain joint employees. They employ in total 62 people on a full time basis. In addition, Income Disability is at the present time represented by 70 agents holding accident and health licences and Income Life is represented by 87 agents holding life licences. It is the intention of Income Life Insurance Company of Canada to release its provincial charter and operate only under the federal charter if the bill is approved by this house. These are the facts as they apply to the Income Life Insurance Company of Canada. There is also the provision of a French name for the company. I shall try to give hon.

members any other information they may desire.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, while the sponsor of the bill was making his introductory remarks I was following the words of the sponsor of the bill in the other place as they appear in the Senate debates for February 9. With one or two exceptions with which I should like to deal Senator McDonald, who was the sponsor of the bill in the other place, said almost exactly the same thing as the sponsor of the bill here. I should like to pose this question to the hon. member now because I followed what he said rather carefully. I took down his words and I believe he said that Income Life Insurance Company was incorporated under the Corporations Act of Canada. I noticed in the remarks of Senator McDonald that he said the company was incorporated under the Corporations Act of Ontario.

Mr. Macaluso: If the hon. member for Skeena will permit, my intention was to say that Income Life Insurance Company of Canada—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Macaluso: The statement is correct, the Corporations Act of Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I point out to the hon. member that if he wishes to ask a question he may do so. However, if the hon. member for Hamilton West makes a speech he closes the debate.

Mr. Howard: We certainly would not want the hon. gentleman to close the debate at this stage. There is one other extremely minor point with which I shall not bother to deal because it is not an inconsistency in itself but merely a difference in the manner of wording as between the sponsor of the bill here and the sponsor in the Senate.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, we are not dealing here with one company but with four companies. Two of these companies are incorporated under the Ontario Corporations Act and two of them are involved in the bill with which we are now dealing and Bill No. S-12. This is a rather unusual situation in that we have to concern ourselves with the intricate operations of these companies. Incidentally, these companies have their offices in the same place and have the same employees, and presumably these employees will be employed by both companies if and when the bill before us passes and if and when Bill No. S-12 is passed.

I do not raise this point by way of criticism, but the uniqueness of the situation makes me wonder why the Senate, when the bill was referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce, did not keep minutes of the proceedings of the committee. This would have enabled the public and members of this house to make some determination as to the correctness or otherwise of passing a bill as unique as this one. I did not look through the various proceedings of the other place to ascertain whether or not such a report existed. I made inquiry of a reliable source and the person, who I am sure would have known of this had it happened, informed me that there were no minutes of proceedings available of what took place in that committee. We are left in the dark. We have before us only the rather brief statement of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) who is sponsoring the bill here.

I submit when these companies desire to petition parliament for incorporation it is not good enough to say simply that a similar company was incorporated in Ontario a couple of years ago and now they want to incorporate another company with the same name presumably in order to do business throughout Canada. At the same time we have an indication there is a connection betweeen Income Life Insurance Company and a company called Income Disability and Reinsurance Company of Canada. This connection is so intimate that the companies share the same office building, have the same employees and simply scratch each other's back in the insurance field. One company is underwriting—this term is not familiar to me and I do not really know what it means from an insurance company's point of view—policies and the other company is perhaps reinsuring the business written by the first company. Perhaps this matter will be cleared up when the sponsor of the bill closes the debate, as he has the right to do at second reading stage. Perhaps he will allay the fears some of us have about the manner in which insurance companies, whether they be life insurance, accident, sickness or any other kind, operate in this nation.

Here is a company which was incorporated in December, 1963, a little more than two years ago and received its licence to carry on business in January, 1964. Public subscription of shares was completed in the spring of 1964 when the company raised exactly $2.75 million. Presumably the company was incorporated under Ontario law because at that time it wanted to operate solely in the province of Ontario. It has extended its activities to the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan and now believes the insurance field is so lucrative, as a result of the connection it has with Income Disability and Reinsurance Company, that it wants to extend its operations to all of Canada. This is the understanding I have of the legal position of the company. If it is incorporated by the parliament of Canada, then presumably it has a charter to do business across the nation. If it is incorporated under the laws of one province, then it only has legal authority to do business in that province unless another province grants it a licence to do business.

On more than one occasion I have referred to the terrific drain of the savings of Canadians through approaches by all insurance companies for one purpose or another. Every time another insurance company comes into existence it has to use its income from premiums or from share capital subscriptions to pay its employees, its agents, its officers, rent, telephone and all the other costs of doing business. As each new company comes into existence, the more insurance that is sold the greater the percentage of the individual's premiums which goes toward not insuring himself or his property or whatever it is he seeks to insure but toward the operation of the particular company with which he is insured and to pay for whatever friendly financial relationships exist between the company with which he is insured and some other company.

I do not know how this works, but surely if there is a degree of friendliness between the company currently seeking incorporation, Income Life Insurance Company of Canada, and the company known as Income Disability and Reinsurance Company of Canada, a friendliness which was disclosed to us by the sponsor of the bill, then presumably there is some transfer of funds back and forth. That may or may not be the case but it is something with which I am concerned and I should like to have the matter cleared up.

As I read the remarks of Senator McDonald, which were the same as those made by the hon. member for Hamilton West, he said that the prime purpose of Income Disability and Reinsurance Company was—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has allowed some laxity in regard to references to debates in the other house but it is the wish of the Chair that this procedure not be carried too far.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to argue the point at this time but it has been the persistent practice in this house to refer to debates in the other place and in committees of the Senate in making arguments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In that case I shall have to read to the hon. member citation 149(b) of Beauchesne which reads as follows:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in Standing Order 35, it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking must not: . . .
> (b) refer to any debate in the Senate—

I might add that, while I do not have at my fingertips at the moment the number of cases where this point has been brought up in the House of Commons in the last two or three years, there have been a number of them. I would ask the hon. member to abide as closely as possible by this regulation.

Mr. Howard: With due respect and deference to Your Honour, I followed your reading of citation 149(b) and, in speaking to the point of order you have raised, if my memory serves me correctly this is the precise reference which has been brought into question on a number of occasions in the past. While the cases have differed one from the other in a descriptive way, I submit it has been held that the following is the case.

Let me refer once again to the citation to which Your Honour referred which says that a member, while speaking, must not:

> (b) refer to any debate in the Senate, but he may refer to the official printed records of the upper house—

I have always understood it to be the case that the upper house to which reference is made in citation 149(b), and the Senate are synonymous. I do not understand the use of two descriptive phrases, but I had understood that reference to the official printed records of the upper house was permissible and that is what I am doing. I am quoting from the official printed record of the debates of the Senate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the difficulty the hon. member is having in reading citation 149 (b). However, I am sure I am correct in saying that when Beauchesne refers to the official printed records of the upper house, or of this house in fact, the official printed records refer to the minutes in the Journals, not to the reports of the debates.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, that simply has not been the ruling of successive Speakers over the years. We were involved in lengthy discussions in the past in which we made references to and quotation from the official printed records of the Senate and its committees. In the conduct of our business in this house when considering private bills such as the one before us now it has regularly been the practice to look at, refer to and quote from the proceedings both of the Senate and its committees in their dealings with matters with which this house also deals. After many years of following one course I submit that to embark now upon another course and to say that it is not permissible to do that which we have been doing for as long as I have been a member is not a correct ruling. I do not want to argue the point with Your Honour or to persist unduly in causing some altercation or disagreement between Your Honour and myself, but I do submit that the practice of the past in this chamber is the one which we should follow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I could come back to my original statement to the hon. member and say that there has been some laxity in this regard. I have allowed him to make such reference today, though I have requested him not to carry it too far. However, in view of what the hon. member has just said perhaps he would want me to get an official ruling on this point. I shall undertake to do that.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as this matter is going to be taken under consideration, might I raise a question which has always been in my mind in connection with your ruling? My understanding has always been that the rules prevented us from making any comment on or reference to a debate which was in progress in the other place. In other words, if we in this chamber were to carry on a running debate with hon. gentlemen in the other place, that understandably would be a contravention of the rules which establish the relationship between the two houses. However, I thought that reference to a debate which had been concluded and was part of the record of the other place, being something which had already transpired, could properly be made in the course of discussing issues and by way of illustration or argument in this chamber.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, before you raised the point of order in connection with what I was doing I had been dealing with the relationship between Income Life Insurance Company of Canada and Income Disability and Reinsurance Company of Canada and statements to the effect that the prime purpose of Income Disability and Reinsurance Company was to underwrite accident and sickness insurance while the prime purpose of Income Life Insurance Company was to underwrite life insurance.

The proposed federal acts of incorporation require that the companies referred to in Bills S-11 and S-12 be empowered to underwrite life, accident and sickness insurance. The two existing companies operate in conjunction with each other. The powers requested are to enable each of the companies to be able to reinsure coverages written by the other.

I wish to pose this question. In the course of one company's reinsuring coverages written by the other, what happens to the insurance charges, premiums and commissions to the agent of the reinsuring company? If these are extracted from anybody they must be extracted eventually from the premium payer, if there is one. There may not be one. This sort of thing may be a straight friendly relationship between one company and the other.

Mr. Macaluso: It is business.

Mr. Howard: I am glad that the hon. member distinguishes between a friendly relationship and a business relationship. This, to me, is a straight business arrangement. No money passes hands. There is no income respecting agents' fees. There is no reflection in the reinsurance premium of staff salaries or salaries paid to the board of directors of the reinsuring company. There is nothing like that. If there is I should like to know about it in as much detail as possible before we proceed to give second reading to either of these bills.

We normally deal with bills incorporating one company. Nobody has disclosed to us the ramifications and interests of other insurance companies. Here we have a direct statement that there is a connection, that one company helps the other by engaging in reinsurance programs. I certainly want a lengthy explanation of that before we proceed to do anything else.

I cannot refer to the debates of the other place in this regard. However, as I read the remarks of the senator who sponsored the bill he did not mention anything about this particular aspect. He just talked about one company being incorporated under provincial law and the other one being incorporated under federal law.

Mr. Macaluso: You should read what it says on page 143 about reinsurance.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps my hon. friend would be kind enough to pose his remark in the form of a question so that I can understand it.

Mr. Macaluso: My hon. friend should read the second column, half way down on page 143, just before the translation where it says:

—the requested powers are required so as to enable each of the companies to be able to reinsure coverages written by the other.

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend has transgressed the rules. He has referred to a debate in the other place. Good heavens! Had the hon. member been listening he would have heard me say that I could not refer to the debates of the other place. I could not refer to the point I have raised even if I wished to. The debates are silent on this matter. The matter I am talking about is the extinguishing of the operation of the so-called provincial company. The debates in the other place do not cover that at all. They do not even mention that situation.

The sponsor of the bill stated that it was the intention of Income Life Insurance Company, incorporated under the Ontario law, to cease operation, relinquish its charter and conduct all its business under a company to be incorporated by Bill No. S-11. This raises an extremely interesting point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was not here when the hon. member introduced his bill and therefore I am not aware whether he read the remarks in the debates of the other place credited to Senator McDonald. I am of the opinion that this is one bill on which there should have been a great deal more detail than has been provided with regard to some other bills which have been recently introduced in this house. We have seen bills recently introduced for church purposes which have gone into extensive detail in 70 or 80 clauses, the effect being to allow the bodies incorporated to engage in a wide diversity of businesses and interests. The purposes of this company have been encompassed in ten sections, two or three of which are stock clauses taken from the form that insurance company bills are advised to follow.

I understand this company is a provincial company already in operation but which wishes to extend its operations into the national field through a federal charter. It will be seen that the provincial company has acquired considerable capital. I presume such capital will be transferred or in some other way brought into the company before us in this bill. As soon as $1,750 is subscribed with Income Life Insurance Company a general meeting can be held and a board of directors can be elected. There is also a provision for a capitalization of $1,736,800, which amount must be subscribed and paid.

I am not sure whether this company will continue operating in the field previously covered by the provincial charter. A large amount of money obviously has to be put up by the provincial company. It obviously will be put up, making this company self-owned. It will be no different except that it will operate under a federal charter as well as under a provincial charter.

A number of things strike me as being odd about this company. One is that incorporation is being sought by two insurance executives and a trust executive. These three men, I presume, are the senior executives of the company proposed to be incorporated. They are also the same individuals who are connected with the second incorporation which is for a company to work in close association with this one.

We are asked to incorporate Income Life Insurance Company of Canada. I do not know whether they are running out of names. There are thousands of these companies established and it may be there are no names left. I wish the sponsor had indicated why this company wants to be called the Income Life Insurance Company. At first glance the name would indicate that this company is going into a new field, that of providing protection for income. Yet nowhere in the bill do I find an indication that the company does intend to offer this type of insurance.

Private Bills

The house should be cautious about allowing a company to use words such as "Income Life" if they do not describe the type of insurance it intends to sell. If this company proposes to engage in the insurance or protection of income the name is be appropriate. If it is to be a life insurance company I doubt whether that is so; in fact, I think it would be altogether inappropriate. Obviously anyone who takes out a life insurance policy is not protecting his income. The only way to collect is by dying and then, of course, he has no income.

It is foolish to allow names to be used when they do not mean what they say. If this company were to be called the Brunning Life Insurance Company it would make sense because it is Mr. Brunning who is asking for incorporation and it would be his company if he could get enough people to join him in raising the $1,750 for incorporation, which might not be difficult.

We have been told that there is a similarity between the two bills, but in the case of the second bill $2,500 has to be raised in connection with incorporation and the appointment of a provisional board of directors. I wish it had been explained to us why a company which indicates it will have a capitalization of at least $1,736,800 is required to have only $1,750 before electing directors. I presume some members of parliament could start a finance company. By the time we had paid the parliamentary fees and other expenses we could have an insurance company of some description at a cost of not much more than $1,000. Then we need only find enough people to subscribe and increase the treasury to the tune of close to $2 million and we would be in operation. This would probably be very easy to do. Once you had a charter for $2,000 it would be easy to get assistance by reinsurance in raising the necessary capitalization.

This sort of thing is not in the interests of the Canadian public or of the individual clients. These insurance companies do not necessarily provide the type of insurance one should expect from their names. They are often general insurance companies. This company says it will be happy to carry out reinsurance. The initial company would be able to issue insurance, the second company would be able to reinsure and the money would be used in a third company, exactly the same money in each case.

I do not know whether this is a bona fide company. It sounds to me a little like a fly-by-night finance corporation which has half a dozen businesses in one office, selling one thing and another, and at the bottom you see it is also a collection agency for the bad debts which may be incurred and when the company goes out of business someone else takes it over. I am not suggesting this company is about to go out of business or anything of that nature but I do not think it is serving any purpose.

This is another role which the government itself must consider, the creation of a new company to preserve this sort of wealth. The $2 million involved here might just as well be added to the capital of one of the existing companies. If it is not to be used for the general good it merely means that this money is drained away from productive use, money which might have been used for national purposes in other fields. We should carefully consider the amount of money which these insurance companies reinvest in the nation. In my opinion they are more interested in second or even third mortgages earning a fantastically high rate of interest than they are in providing life insurance which is only incidental in the accumulation of a large sum to be used perhaps against the same people who put up the money in the first place and made possible the collection of such a large sum.

I believe there is a role for income insurance companies in Canada. Everyone is taking part in a "switcheroo" as the provinces begin to cover sickness and accident by their own insurance policies and those companies which had attached life insurance to such policies are finding that the coverage is no longer desirable or necessary in the eyes of subscribers. Consequently they are changing to new forms of insurance coverage.

For this reason the word "Income" should not be used by this company as part of its title and the sponsor should be prepared to substitute something else. I am opposed to using the word "Income" in this instance because it may be used by other companies; it is a misnomer and will lead to confusion. It amounts to misrepresentation when this type of insurance is not provided.

I suppose it is possible to have income life insurance which would mean that income was protected for life. But this is not what we normally consider life insurance to be. If this is the case, however, the present bill does not meet my requirements because the operation of a project of this kind is not explained. I have read the legislation covering insurance companies in both Britain and Canada. I would suggest that the particular piece of Canadian legislation which was introduced in 1956 and amended in following years does not contain sections which correct the situation we are likely to encounter in connection with the proposal before us. Unless particular provision is made in the bill before us, income insurance is not the type of insurance which this company will provide.

I have looked at the bill and I am aware of the fact that one clause indicates the type of insurance the company wishes to provide and it is not income insurance. To cover his life a person has life insurance and sickness insurance. Income is not one of the things which the company intends to insure. I may be alone in thinking that a company with the name "Income Life Insurance" provides coverage of income for life. I would think that the use of this name is just about as misrepresentative as in the case of companies which have appeared before us and asked to use the name "royal life insurance company". In those cases they wished to use a name which we believe should not be used in that manner because it conveys a certain prerogative of royalty that the company does not have. We always have disallowed this type of misrepresentation and misuse. I think we have another instance here of the same thing.

This raises the matter of amendment and whether or not it would be the desire of the sponsor to suggest an amendment rather than have us suggest it at another stage of the bill. I think consideration should be given in committee to this matter. I really am not one of those who believe that a rose by any other name will smell as sweet. I think, after learning the language, we have decided that roses are roses, and that to call a rose a petunia is not to convey the same meaning, nor does it convey the same smell. For that reason I do not think putting the word "Income" in the name is legitimate. "Income" means a particular thing. In my opinion "income" is not the name of a company; income is not a proper noun in that sense. In the dictionary meaning I would think "income" would be something that you receive on a regular basis for a specific purpose. I realize there can be an argument to the effect that life insurance will provide an income to the dependants and beneficiaries under the policy, but I think it is impossible through life insurance to insure for income. I do not think the sponsor or anyone else could place such a connotation on it.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, income insurance is a new field into which I know some companies have gone. I know that sickness and accident companies sometimes write in an income disability clause; I am aware of that. Term insurance sometimes contains a clause to provide a lifetime income if certain disabilities occur or if a certain circumstance arises. I am aware of the fact that some companies—and in this case there may be some justification for the name—will allow their employees to have the benefit of income life insurance which reallly means that if the company severs its connection with an employee whose services they have obtained with considerable difficulty, they will provide him with a lifetime income. This is provided in the event that the business fails or if for some reason the contract is discontinued. In this instance there is a provision for the individual.

I think the best example of income life insurance is the case of the gentleman who was known throughout the world of radio for saying the words "call for Phillip Morris". I understand that his voice when used for that particular program was covered by an insurance policy which provided him with a lifetime income no matter whether or not he ever worked for that company again or did any other type of work. For his lifetime that slogan and his voice saying "call for Phillip Morris" were insured. This was probably one of the first income for life policies written by an American or any other corporation.

I say it is a very interesting and highly specialized field. Frankly I do not think this company is going into that field. If it is not I would strongly suggest that the house should be prepared to accept an amendment at another stage which would remove the word "Income" from the title of this company. My suggestion would be that the name of the person who wants this company be substituted. The name would then be "Brunning Life Insurance Company of Canada." I presume this could be translated just about as simply as the proposed name; I presume there is no great problem in the change.

I should think that the sponsor of the bill in this place should be prepared to accept that type of amendment and I believe he should consult with his principals about doing so. I would suggest also that the house should give consideration to this point because it involves something which the house should jealously guard, namely, the type of insurance which may be covered.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I realize there has been some discussion in respect of this bill but there are some remarks I should like to make concerning it. As has been pointed out already, in some respects the bill before us is similar to its companion bill, No. S-12, which we still have to consider. There seem to be many points of similarity in these two bills. I notice that in both bills it is proposed that the capital stock of the company, $5 million, be divided into shares of $5 each and that the company in both bills is not to commence business until at least $1,736,800 of its capital stock has been subscribed. In this connection there is one interesting difference. In Bill S-11 it is suggested that before a general meeting for the election of directors can take place there must be $1,750 subscribed and fully paid, whereas in Bill S-12 the amount which has to be subscribed and fully paid before a general meeting for the election of directors can be held is $2,500. Just why Income Disability and Reinsurance Company of Canada has to have that much more money in the kitty before it can hold a directors' meeting I find puzzling in a minor way.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) raised some question about the proposed name of this company which is seeking incorporation through Bill S-11. I agree with his sentiments so far as the use of the word "Income" is concerned. Immediately a question arises in my mind about this name and I think we should have some clarification as to whom the income is for. I am inclined to think it is probably income for directors and shareholders rather than primarily for customers of the company. These points should be given serious consideration.

There have been what I would describe as a rash of bills coming before us for the incorporation of insurance companies. The one now before us asks for a federal charter to change the governing legislation from the provincial to the federal level. One immediately wonders why this is necessary. The provisions of the British North America Act divide jurisdiction in this regard between the federal and provincial governments. As far as I am able to determine there is no direct reference in section 91(2) as to jurisdiction in respect of the establishment of insurance companies.

I can only surmise that jurisdiction in respect of insurance companies is developed in the federal field under section 91(2) of the B.N.A. Act which provides authority for the regulation of trade and commerce. On the other hand, as we all know a great many companies have provincial charters. This may be the result of section 92(13) which places property and civil rights within the jurisdiction of provincial legislatures.

As I understand it, this company could go to each provincial legislature to seek incorporation and authority to operate within the province. Because of that fact I wonder whether or not this bill is in fact an attempt to circumvent the will of the legislature of a province. I know of cases in British Columbia where groups have applied for incorporation but have been turned down. They have then turned to the federal authority for incorporation in order to circumvent that refusal. It appears that one of the issues we must consider in relation to this application is whether or not this is in effect an application to circumvent that part of the jurisdiction for the incorporation of companies which falls within the provincial field.

During discussions on previous occasions in respect of bills of this kind the question has arisen whether or not the time of parliament shoud be occupied in examining the applications of individual companies of this kind or whether or not it would be more appropriate to deal with them through some change in the existing legislation. As long as we have this responsibility it is one which we should accept seriously. We should not lightly agree to the passage of bills which seek to switch jurisdiction from provincial legislatures to the federal government without asking questions of this kind.

I note that the type of insurance coverage this company seeks to provide is not quite as extensive as that referred to in a previous bill, No. S-4. The type of insurance referred to in that bill ran all the way through the alphabet from A to Z. Apparently this company is a little more modest in asking to be allowed to provide coverage for types of insurance from A to C. There are many other matters which one could discuss in the consideration of this bill, but in view of the questions raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming regarding the name let me conclude by suggesting that this company might well be named the "Tweedledum" insurance company and that the company proposed by Bill S-12 might well be named the "Tweedledee" insurance company.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should point out that if the hon. member for Hamilton West speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) for bringing to my attention the error I made in reference to the manner of incorporation. This company was formerly incorporated under authority of letters patent from the province of Ontario. With regard to the questions raised about the name of the company, I am afraid I do not have time to answer them all. I suggest to hon. members that they allow this bill to be sent to the committee so that these questions can be answered properly.

As to the use of the word "Income" in the suggested name, I am sure hon. members will realize that it is difficult to obtain an acceptable name because of the number of applications being made to the authorities for the use of various names. I can assure the hon. member that this name must have met with the approval of the authorities before this bill was allowed to be placed before this house.

Mr. Starr: It is seven o'clock.

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consent of this house to send Bill S-11 to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, at which time I would be prepared to answer all hon. members' questions and at which time the officials of the company will be in attendance to answer questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is it agreed that this bill be given second reading?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pearson for the second reading of Bill No. C-178, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Shortly before six o'clock hon. members on both sides of this house made contributions on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River respecting the matter now before the house. I indicated to hon. members that I would study the arguments raised and that I proposed to read the arguments advanced by hon. members. These proceedings have not reached me in toto yet, and I seek the indulgence of hon. members to allow me sufficient time to consider all the arguments. A number of members have indicated that they wish to make contributions to this debate and I suggest they be allowed to do so now.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, in opening my remarks in this debate on second reading of the government reorganization bill I have a sense of disappointment. I was one of those who, when the announcement was made in December last about the massive reorganization of government, had a wild surge of hope that at long last we would get at some of the difficulties that exist for any government trying to carry on the affairs of this country.

I listened very carefully to the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) today and must say again I am very sorry that each of these departments was not introduced with a separate resolution and a separate bill. We have clear-cut precedents for this approach. In 1953 Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent introduced the bill that set up the department called the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In his speech he outlined precisely, carefully and logically why the department included in its title "national resources".

Successive ministers were able to read that speech, read the bill setting up the department and know precisely where parliament had directed the attention of the minister as to the way in which he should proceed. This precedent was not followed in the bill now before us or in the Prime Minister's speech. The second precedent was more recent, occurring in 1959 when the Department of Forestry was set up. Once again we had the Prime Minister outlining the need for the legislation and one of his ministers took the bill through its various stages in the house. The Minister of Forestry, through that debate and particularly statements of the government of the day, had a clear-cut indication of what was expected from the Department of Forestry.

We now have six new departments before us, five introduced by way of resolution and one some place in limbo. We will have a chance to hear statements from the prospective ministers some time during the committee stage, but there will be no clear-cut statement in one place outlining the duties of these departments; there will be no debate in one place which will provide the new minister and his staff with readily accessible terms of reference for running the department. Therefore at the outset I would express disappointment that this traditional concept was not followed and that therefore we find ourselves in this doubtful situation.

The second reason for my being disappointed, and I might say alarmed, was the speech of the Prime Minister today. As I said, Mr. Speaker, some of us hoped when the announcement of the reorganization was made last December that we were going to see an end to the chaos and confusion that has characterized this government since 1963. We thought there would now be some hard thinking and direction which would enable ministers to make coherent plans of action in order to get at the problems that face this country today, which have been with us for many years and will probably be with us for many years to come.

We expected from our government at least some form of co-ordinated attack on these problems and this, I am afraid to say, is not the case when one considers the Prime Minister's speech. He dealt primarily with two sets of departments, those dealing with justice and the split-up of the Department of Justice into three component parts, and then with Indian affairs and northern development and its responsibilities as opposed to the delineation of responsibilities of energy, mines and resources. Then the Prime Minister mentioned that under the Privy Council we were to have the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) speak for Treasury Board and answer general questions concerning policy, if I understood his statement correctly.

Mr. Benson: Under the Privy Council?

Mr. Hamilton: I will repeat what I understood the Prime Minister to say, that matters relating to Treasury Board and general questions relating to the over-all conduct of government would be answered in the house by the Minister of National Revenue, and I assumed that general matters affecting the government would be those which come under the direction of the Privy Council. At the end of the Prime Minister's speech I asked who was going to speak for the secretariat of the Privy Council dealing with scientific matters. On May 5 in this house I asked the same sort of question of another member of the government. I pointed out to him that the history of science over the last 20 years in Canada affected several departments of government and that naturally the reporting of these matters to the house fell within the responsibility of the Privy Council because several departments were concerned. I pointed out that Prime Ministers were so busy that they did not have time to give the push to the scientific work of all these departments, and consequently it suffered.

As a matter of fact, under the National Research Council Act the council takes its direction from a committee of cabinet which refers items to it for action and decision. If the committee of cabinet does not meet for seven years, as was the case once in the last 20 years, you can see that the National Research Council has to carry out its work without the direction of the committee of cabinet. Then a new government comes in, gets all excited and intends to deal with this question of science and a new impetus is given to this subject. Then when the routine starts, because there is no one at whom the finger of the house can be pointed, the matter drifts off into apathy once again. The Prime Minister's answer today indicated that he would still be charged with reporting to the house on scientific matters, which means a continuation of the situation which has existed in regard to science for the last 20 years. We have been unable to get leadership and direction in this regard.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I was not only disappointed at the way the Prime Minister handled this matter on second reading, but I was frightened because it means that the confusion and chaos of the last three years will not be ended. There is still no leadership; there is still no way of co-ordinating not only the question of the scientific council, and Treasury Board, which matter is now being looked after by the Minister of National Revenue, but there are important matters concerning consumers all across Canada. Members of all parties in the house have expressed concern in this regard. No one can be held responsible in this house, so there is no co-ordination and no direction. I think the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) dealt with this matter earlier in the debate.

It is not just a matter of opposition from the Conservative party. It is the fact that many of us who have sat on the treasury benches, and probably will again, wonder whether any progress is possible unless the key question is met in trying to give some chain of communication down through the departments, and back through the departments to this house. This chain is not strong in one place, and that is the Privy Council. Too many things are gathered in the Privy Council under the theory that everything depends on the Prime Minister, who reports to the house and accepts questions in the house. But because he is a busy man, no one asks the questions and as a result these things suffer. There is no clear-cut channel of communication with regard to science. On May 5 the Minister of Industry said the Privy Council would be appointing a minister to report for science, and it would not necessarily be the Prime Minister. We heard nothing of that today, so you can understand why those of us who have been interested in trying to streamline the operations of government as outlined in this reorganization, say improvement is needed. In our opinion it is a mere shuffling of assorted Grits into assorted portfolios. It looks as though the government simply made up these portfolios in order to find places for people.

Now for the next question. In my remarks at the resolution stage, I pointed out I thought there would be some improvement if groups of ministers could be collected around clear headings. Those dealing with human resources do have occasion to meet often to try to resolve things which are facing their departments. Those dealing with material resources should have an opportunity to meet also. I listed three or four headings around which groups of ministers could be collected, and there should be a place in the Privy Council to bring together these three or four groups of ministers who would be working toward co-ordinated approaches of policy and action. This is the sort of thing we wanted to hear during the discussion of the principle of this bill at second reading stage, but we heard nothing about it.

A classic example of the confusion and chaos which is going to result was given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) when he dealt with the department of Indian affairs and northern development. He defined the boundaries between that department and the so-called new department of energy, mines and resources. The Prime Minister made it clear that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is now to be relegated to a person who is only an acting provisional provincial minister. In the Prime Minister's words, all his duties are in trust for the future provinces. He is therefore relegated from a position of federal minister to one who temporarily carries out the duties of the provincial minister until the northern provinces of the future have assumed responsibility.

When you look at his junior position, and then go on to the next step, which is related to the handling of the division of powers related to the continental shelf, you see how confused the minds of those who drafted this legislation must have been. I cannot quote the Prime Minister's words directly, but I think I can accurately paraphrase them. As I understood him this afternoon he said the continental shelf would be divided roughly north and south on the basis that the minister of Indian affairs and northern development would have responsibility for that part of the continental shelf which was north of a southern boundary formed by the southern boundary of Southampton island and Baffin island. The minister of energy, mines and resources, would have responsibility south of that line. He got mixed up in the phrases, wet lands and dry lands.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is this: One of the most vital issues before this federal state is the question of the continental shelf. First of all, I question the knowledge of the ministers on the treasury benches as to the meaning of the continental shelf. I do not believe there is a single minister in the government who could stand up in this house and define the continental shelf, or this type of statement would not have been put in the Prime Minister's hands today. Normally the continental shelf is a part of the federal responsibility. If anyone looks at the boundary act of Manitoba, the boundary act of Ontario, the boundary act of Quebec, one finds there is no question about who owns the lands underneath Hudson bay, James bay and Hudson strait. It is written in the statute, and even an elementary school child could understand it.

This matter has been put before the courts, and they have been asked to make a decision. When you put a matter before the courts, one assumes that there is one side contending for one argument and another side contending for a different argument. Then you have a hearing before the supreme court. However, there is no one contending for the federal position. It is a joint submission to the courts. This is where the danger lies. This is one of the reasons for saying that the Prime Minister's statement today was frightening. There was a lack of understanding of the whole basis of the federal system.

We give to the provinces complete power over the energy, minerals and resources of each province. The exceptions of course are that agriculture, in part, is a federal responsibility as are fisheries, in part. In order to keep the argument simple, you can say that resources, energy and minerals are within the powers of the provinces. Now we have a situation where the minister of northern development is the provincial minister for the Northwest Territories and part of the continental shelf. He has been relegated to the power of a provincial minister. In addition you have ten provincial governments. Now, you have the federal government on one side of this issue and eleven governments on the other side; but whom has the federal government put in charge of energy, minerals and resources? Have they put a strong, experienced minister in charge who speaks out in private and in public for the right of the federal government to continue to exist? We get a new minister, and so far a weak minister, who is trying to stand up for the federal power. Read the speeches he makes across the country. Are those speeches dealing with the great issues such as how the mighty, industrial power to the south wants access to our energy in increasing amounts, about 1,000 per cent in ten years. They want access to our minerals because by 1980 they will have a 20 per cent deficiency in strategic metals. They want access to all our resources; and what do we hear in the speeches by the minister? We can read the statements from his office, and we see that he is dealing with such subjects as bilingualism and biculturalism. These are all nice subjects, but when it comes to the guts of the problem, where does Canada go? What is the position of the federal government? We hear no statement from the minister.

When we talk about a national power grid, he is going to look into it. When we talk about the fact that Ontario is moving unilaterally to tie up its power grid with Manitoba, he does not know anything about it. You cannot blame us for being frightened, those of us who visualize the maintenance of our national sovereignty, not only from the crushing cultural pressure from the south but from the encroaching financial hold on our resources, energy and secondary industries. I do not believe in acting by negative restrictions. I believe in doing things ourselves, in a system of positive expansionism to match this giant to the south step by step, and then get ahead because we have the resources to do it. One of the keys to give the country bargaining power and to protect the provinces from the encroachment of the United States, since they have no power to deal with the United States, to give us strength and unity when people want to take our resources, energy and minerals in a package deal, would be a strong federal minister. What do we get from the minister? We get a speech about the future of the French-English relationship.

Those things are important, Mr. Speaker. However, I hate to see somebody up on the roof spouting about the relationship of the man and wife in the house below when all the time the furniture is being moved out. It is time the people of Canada, French, English, Dutch, German or any other racial origin, realized that we have all the bargaining power on our side. The high cards are ours. We should use the possibilities that lie in the federal power to give leadership to the provinces to make them realize that, alone, they are like a ship without a rudder, but together they are powerful.

This is why I express my deep concern. The continental shelf is the key to the struggle over the encroaching powers of the provinces upon the federal government, and we have had no indications from the minister that he will be defending the position of the federal government against larcenous hands which reach out to take what belongs to all people of Canada, not just to the people of a single province. This position must be made known.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, the continental shelf north of Hudson bay will come under the jurisdiction of one minister, and that part of it south of that line in Hudson bay will come under the jurisdiction of another minister. In this regard we know where the new minister of northern development stands, because he has stated his position. However, when we look at the islands of the Nastapoka, or the Belcher islands, or Akimiski island, and we realize what these boys are playing with, then this is a very serious matter for the future generations of this country.

I say that the minister in charge of the continental shelf who will deal with the Russians, or the British, or the Japanese, or the Americans, or the French in France —because this is what his responsibilities will entail—must be a federal minister, not a junior minister in charge of one of the regions in the Northwest Territories. The continental shelf is not three miles off our coast, or six miles, or 60 miles, or is not 300 feet or 600 feet deep. The continental shelf goes half way across the Atlantic, half way across the Arctic and half way across the Pacific.

The land underneath those three oceans belongs to the countries which front those oceans. Therefore Canada has potential resources in a great part of the world lying at the bottom of the sea which are just as valuable as any on dry land. That has been agreed upon, through action taken by the government of which I was a member, by the unanimous decision of 105 nations meeting at Geneva in 1958. Those of us who fought for so long as a government to get recognition of claims upon these resources at the bottom of the sea now see the possiblity of them being frittered away, with one minister looking after those resources above a line which has been drawn, those below that line being subjected to another type of policy.

I want to know from the minister who has charge of the area south of Southampton and Baffin islands how tough he is going to be with Premier Roblin of Manitoba, the premier of Ontario and the premier of Quebec. These men will naturally fight for their provinces to acquire everything they want from the federal government; I suppose they would be kicked out of office if they did not do so. But the minister in charge of this land on behalf of the federal government must fight for all people in Canada. The Hudson bay property belongs as much to the people of Newfoundland as to the people of Quebec, Manitoba and Ontario. That is one of the issues I am concerned about, Mr. Speaker. I see an abdication of federal leadership.

I should like to conclude by referring to a matter to which I will have to return on committee stage. In the old act which set up the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, the prime minister of the day, Mr. Louis St. Laurent, in introducing the bill to the house, used the expression that apparently we have been administering the north with a complete absence of minds. He outlined an act which would not only bring the north under the direct public responsibility of one minister, but went on to emphasize that this new minister was to be not only in charge of the north but was going to be in charge of the national resources of Canada. Then he deliberately explained why he chose the expression "national resources" instead of "natural resources". To him natural resources meant only the trees, the energy, the minerals, the natural things. He said that to him Canada was composed of people, human resources, and that he wanted some minister in his government—quoting, in effect, the terms of the act—who would be responsible for formulating plans in co-operation with other governments, other dapartments, private and public agencies, not only for the development and maximum use of our natural resources but also our human resources.

Where has this fundamental and primary purpose of the old resources department gone, Mr. Speaker? Which one of these departments is in charge of it now? It has been said that it was not necessary to bring in a resolution in respect to the department of forestry and development because no money was involved. Here we have taken one of the best means for initiative and leadership by the federal government and thrown it up into the air, having it disappear into the upper atmosphere. Where it has gone no one knows. The power to plan on the part of the federal government for the best use of our natural resources and human resources is now dispersed, and no one knows where it has gone.

I agree with what many people have written, that this is the day of a weak federal government and ten strong provincial governments. Perhaps with a minister of a new provincial government in the north there will be 11 strong provincial governments, all of which are overwhelming this federal government. Therefore I think it behooves us in all parties to remember that our basic job when we come to Ottawa is not to speak for our parishes, our municipalities, or even on occasion for our provinces. Our fundamental job here is to speak for all the people of Canada.

I believe the people of Canada are being sold down the river. Not deliberately; I could not accuse anyone of doing that bad a thing. But I fear that all this confusion and chaos of the last three years has become a way of life with this government. People rush in with ideas which look good, and the government announce them. But no one thinks them through. If someone had really thought through that resolution, Mr. Speaker, there would have been six departments included therein. Somobody boobed, and tremendous efforts have been made to explain away that boob.

With regard to the continental shelf, can you expect a minister who really only has provincial status in the federal government to deal with Russia on such a matter? We must have a strong minister who believes in a strong federal government. We must have a minister who believes in protecting the rights of the provinces within their own jurisdictions. Yet we have not seen any sign in this struggle between these two ministers, one federal and the other provincial, that the strong minister is being put into the federal portfolio; he found himself slid into a provincial status, and I am a little worried about this.

• (7:30 p.m.)

Many people in Canada believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is either the Liberal party or the Conservative party which is the governing party of this country. Many people in the United States believe that it is the Democrats or the Republicans which lays down the legislative basis for the government of that great republic. I think many people feel the same sort of way in France and in the United Kingdom with regard to their political parties. These four great powers of the North Atlantic must all be realizing that really the bid issue in this type of democracy, with governments so involved in the business of running the country, is just how much say the elected representatives do have. We must wonder, in this move toward having the experienced expert running the show, whether there is still not a place for the reasonable common sense of the layman who is elected to parliament. Surely when he becomes parliamentary secretary to a minister or a minister, there must be some little segment of power that he could exert.

After reading what has been happening here this last little while, I realize that we have not won the battle on behalf of the elected representatives, in this particular bill.

In the last speech he made in Canada, I think to the senior civil servants of Ottawa, Viscount Amery pleaded with the senior civil servants to leave some small segment of power to the elected representatives. He said he had carried out five portfolios in the Sir Winston Churchill administration in the United Kingdom. The same thing was happening over there, he said. Civil servants were so able, so sincere and so likable that it was difficult for a minister to go his own way. He said, "I ask that you senior civil servants give your poor minister some head, so that he can use his ordinary common sense".

In this legislation, I think, very few ministers will have the chance of using their common sense. What we are faced with here, I think, is a shuffling of portfolios to meet the needs of personnel available. We have no genuine reorganization, because there is no clearcut philosophy or principle of action apparent in the Prime Minister's statement on this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, looking over Bill C-178, I note that it concerns the organization of the government. That is the avowed purpose. But there is surely an implied or a secondary purpose which should be to insure a greater efficiency of government.

I believe this to be a step in the right direction. After listening to what was said this afternoon, I should not agree with all the criticism uttered. I wonder if some of the criticism was in order. Some ministers were personally taken to account. The question is simply whether the principle of reform is valid. It is good. It is not bad.

I believe that public opinion, parliament and some ministers of experience would have expected a basic, more drastic and revolutionary reform. That was expected by public opinion. It should be remembered that for some months, for some years now, Canadians on the whole have had a strange opinion of parliament and of government. I would not want to discredit parliament, nor cast the blame on Liberals or Conservatives, or on anyone else. Let us say that is the situation.

Canadians tell themselves: The Ottawa government is a heavy, cumbersome machine to operate; it is not very efficient, there is a lot of red tape. Sometimes, people are harsher and comments are more unfavourable.

In order to restore the prestige of the government, it would have been imperative to take the opportunity to carry out a basic, fundamental reform. Something drastic. As for efficiency, a study should have been made on the operation of large companies with thousands of employees and a budget as large as the Canadian budget, where responsibilities are delegated.

I would like to express, very briefly, my own idea as a newcomer, and that of the Canadians with whom I had the opportunity to discuss the reorganization of the government, to keep pace with the needs of the atomic age in which we live in 1966. First and foremost, means shoud have been provided to relieve the Prime Minister. Regardless of his party, his health or his talents, it is impossible for any prime minister to cope with his task.

A trained personnel should then have been provided to relieve him of some responsibilities, to give him time to think, observe, meet people, get to know better the senior officials of the government and consult experts. Provision should have been taken to relieve him from attending all the sittings of the House of Commons, as it is done in other countries. This becomes a tedious task for a prime minister and takes up valuable time which he could devote to the general administration of the country.

The suggestion made by some members of the house concerning the creation of senior and junior ministers, should have been carried out at least in part. I do not maintain that my formula is perfect; I submit it merely as a suggestion. It is a perfectible formula. For the sake of discussion, I will explain it as briefly as possible.

There should be, standing by the Prime Minister, a group of senior ministers, let us say five, six or seven of them—it matters little how many—but senior ministers with perhaps more experience than the others, one of whom, at least, would be Acting Prime Minister on a permanent basis. The Prime Minister would then be replaced not only when he is away for a week or two on a trip by a minister who may not have the required experience to do so. There could then be a permanent, a statutory Acting Prime Minister, and the four or five other ministers could in turn fill this position.

These senior ministers would become so to speak, the board of directors of the government which, naturally, the twenty or so other ministers would join. They would plan the over-all policy in various fields. But these five or more senior ministers would constitute the board of directors, they would meet regularly with the Prime Minister and share his responsibilities.

Each of them could supervise and direct four or five different departments, or even six for that matter, which could be grouped, taking into account the similarity of responsibilities in each department. This would be easy enough to determine, Mr. Speaker. Let us say, for instance, one group of departments dealt specifically with economic matters, another with, let us say, matters of control and administration, others with legal affairs, others with protection and defence, others with matters that might be called external affairs questions.

Finally, all these ministers or departments could be gathered around five or six various themes, and a senior minister could be given the responsibility. That is to say that five or six junior ministers would be responsible to a senior minister. And all those senior ministers would, of course, see to it that the Prime Minister is freed from all these responsibilities.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, let us say the departments that have to do with the Canadian economy would be grouped. Under economy one would find the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Forestry, the Department of Industry, the Department of Manpower and the Department of Fisheries. All those departments seek to condition, to stimulate and to plan the economy of the country. Now, these departments are homogeneous. They have the same responsibilities.

It would be profitable if all these ministers met at a given time to deal more specifically with the economy of Canada. Then, there could be a senior minister in charge of this sector of the Canadian economy responsible to the Prime Minister and the Canadian people.

There could also be, let us say, legal affairs. Under this heading, might be grouped the Departments of Justice, the Registrar General, perhaps the Solicitor General and the Secretary of State. They might possibly be grouped around these things, even though sometimes common characteristics are not so close. As long as there is a similarity, they could perhaps be grouped. This distribution would not necessarily be followed, Mr. Speaker. It could be adjusted, but it is the principle which I wish to point out.

There could also be some matters concerning defence which would make up another group of departments. For example, National Defence, Defence Production, External Affairs which up to a point are related with matters of defence. It is at least a preventive defence in many cases; the Department of Veterans Affairs perhaps. And nobody would object if in those large departments, there were some associate ministers as at present.

Another groups of departments could deal with domestic issues, strictly administrative matters, let say, for example, the Post Office, National Health and Welfare, Transport, Labour and Public Works. Perhaps another special department could be added. The department of federal-provincial relations has been mentioned this afternoon. Those relations bring up urgent problems, problems that must be solved every day and it would be advisable to entrust those matters to a special department or minister.

You understand my point, namely that all those departments should be grouped according to homogeneity and entrusted to an assistant of the prime minister who could be called a senior minister.

This would enable the Prime Minister, and even each minister, to enjoy life like everyone else, to take a breather, to go to bed at night and, from time to time, to go and see their family on Saturday or Sunday. This would already be worthwhile. Otherwise, we will tire out our ministers too fast and it could be presumed that if they are allowed to lead a normal life, perhaps they will also have more time to reflect on general policies, on general planning within their department. Perhaps they will have more time to spend in their departments and meet their assistants, even those of the lower echelons, thus improving administration.

The Prime Minister, the senior ministers and all the other ministers may then have more time to receive visitors. We are living in an era of democracy and, Mr. Chairman, I should like to illustrate this particular point.

During the weekend, an event to which I attach a special significance happened in my riding. A convention of the Knights of Columbus of the province of Quebec was held there. They invited the premier to meet them. It is obvious that the premier could not, in the present circumstances, comply with that request.

I understand that the premier delegated one of his ministers to meet them. It so happened that the minister in question was unable to attend the meeting. He expressed his regrets and the Knights of Columbus of the province of Quebec, an organization of prime importance which probably includes the elite from all parts of the province, were sent as a government representative a charming member of parliament who discharged his duty beautifully, lest not my remarks seem to reflect on him. His performance was first rate, and I wish to congratulate him on his dignity and eloquence.

But the Knights of Columbus expected to meet a minister. Already disappointed at not having met the premier, they did not see any of his ministers either. They returned home feeling frustrated. They feel that, in a way, a minister belongs to them; not only do they enjoy meeting one, but it also gives them the opportunity of hearing him explain the government policies.

In the present situation, Mr. Speaker, it is known that ministers cannot always accept such invitations. They are overworked. I gave this example, Mr. Speaker—while realizing you were about to call me to order—so as to prove my point. For greater efficiency in government, a framework should be devised to lighten the load on the Prime Minister. Assistants could be given to him to share his responsibilities. Each minister should also be freed to concentrate more fully on his own area.

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I read the results of the inquiry ordered by the government at one time into the reorganization of the government for greater efficiency. I was surprised that more insistence was not given to the reorganization of the cabinet.

I repeat what I said a moment ago: I believe that, in the present circumstances, public opinion is convinced that our system of government is obsolete and that we are still running the country according to methods used when people went about on foot, on horseback or in ox-carts, whereas nowadays travelling is by airplane at speeds over 1,000 miles per hour, and telegraph and all sorts of communications are available. Now, I claim that administration methods should be much faster than 100 years ago at the time of confederation or a few centuries ago when parliament as we know it was born in England.

It is absolutely necessary that such basic and fundamental reform, from the cabinet down through the whole administration, and the operations of parliament, be carried out drastically right now.

I think it is important, Mr. Speaker, and that it may not have been sufficiently emphasized. Public opinion is disappointed that this reform in depth, this radical reform has not yet been carried out.

I believe this is urgent—and I make the recommendation to both parties, the party in power and the official opposition party, because the prestige of parliament as a whole is at stake—for Canadians now have such a poor opinion of parliament that it is a reflection on the government.

Those who see the men responsible for government at work here know that this is undeserved, but it is probably the system which is wrong. Now, it is urgent to carry out reorganization in this direction from the psychological point of view, so that the prestige of parliament may be restored and so that public opinion may regain some esteem for its government.

By relieving the pressure on each of the men responsible, you will give them time to lead a normal life, to meet Canadians in all circumstances, to think and meditate a bit more and to consult people who are experts in their fields in order to establish a general planning of the whole administration of Canada, which they have difficulty in doing at this time, unless they work 24 hours a day, seven days a week with no holidays. As things now stand, they must necessarily expedite too many things, which is not a good thing.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to have understood the spirit in which I make these remarks. My intention is not to blame anybody, but to point out to the house as a whole —besides I know that my colleagues have noticed it themselves—that is urgent for some kind of co-operation in a gesture of good will, and all members of the house could support the government, if it should decide, one of these days, to carry out this radical reform on the basis of business principles which must prevail in the year 1966 in which we live, and put aside for a while this sort of conservatism—not in the political sense of the word—which requires us to keep this old system, this old method and these old frameworks which came into existence elsewhere centuries ago and which save for a few months, were put into practice here a century ago.

• (7:50 p.m.)

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I had intended to direct my attention during this debate to the department of manpower but something has happened which has caused me to change the tenor of my remarks. The idea of a department of manpower makes sense to me. The idea that you have within the same department the administration of all which is concerned with recruitment of manpower outside the country, as well as those who are concerned with technical and vocational assistance which has to do with manpower within Canada, and with meeting the manpower demands of the country, also makes sense to me. I had intended to suggest that a system of education should be established within the department of manpower. However, as a result of a newspaper report of Saturday, May 21, I find I have to change my approach. This afternoon in the house some members asked some questions of the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) as to whether an office of education had been formed within her department. This article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on Saturday written by Joan Cohen I should like to quote in order to make more clearly my point. This article has not appeared in other newspapers and I am sure many members of this house are not aware of this latest development, if the article is correct. It states:

> Without fanfare, the federal government has located a home for education within its administration.
> Gearing itself for sharp escalations in its support of post-secondary education, it has acted on a central recommendation of the universities-sponsored Bladen Commission on Financing Higher Education and charged the secretary of state with responsibility for co-ordinating its spending programs.
> It is now looking for a person who, as adviser to State Undersecretary G.G.E. Steele, can tenderly take the reins in a variety of tasks ranging from policy formulation to program administration.
>
> So far, the government has taken only interim action on this massive assistance program called for by the Bladen report, and its temporizing formula for boosting aid has had its critics.
>
> A clearer picture of where the governments are headed should emerge in Victoria next month when a federal-provincial conference gets down to hard-nosed discussion of the commission's findings, such as the estimated doubling—to $1,314,000,000 annually—of university costs by the start of the 1970s.
> Mr. Steele, in an interview this week, was clearly sensitive about the entrance of the word "education" into a department of the federal government. Until now, university grant programs have been administered on a part-time basis by officers in the finance department.
>
> "At the federal level of government, this move will cause regular co-ordinated discussions to take place, as well as close liaison with people in provincial jurisdictions."
> He stressed that responsibility for federal programs will remain in the hands of the authorities now administering them.
> The planning will bring in the National Research Council, the Medical Research Council and the Canada Council. It will involve the manpower programs and administrators in the department of health and welfare of the $500,000,000 health resources fund.

It will enable the government to do its planning in the round—so facilities and people will be available when programs requiring them are launched.

It will be concerned with the whole field of post-secondary training, including the emerging community colleges, the technological colleges.

Mr. Steele indicated there will be a place for bold, if careful, initiatives in dealing with the provinces.

"The problems facing all levels of government are so enormous that they can only be solved by working things out on a national basis and by providing opportunities on a national scale."

Mr. Steele acknowledges that education was assigned to the department as a deliberate decision to round out the functions of the ministry, which is shaping up as the department of cultural affairs. Other recently-established planning bodies, the science secretariat and the poverty-planning secretariat, have been set up within the prime minister's office.

But, the undersecretary urges, don't call it the department of education and cultural affairs. Call it social affairs or better, interior affairs.

The administrator now being sought—with a salary of up to $20,000—should be, Mr. Steele said, "someone who knows the problems of education in Canada, somebody with a sensitivity for federal-provincial relations, and who can organize research," quite possibly a university administrator.

This is quite a large order if they want such a person.

"I hope this position will attract a lot of attention."

I am quite sure it will.

In the new planning section now are two full-time workers, Jean-Marc Hamel, a member of the department previously, and Christopher Gill, formerly on the staff of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, the sponsor of the Bladen report.

The department has been heavily involved in an advisory capacity in planning for the June conference. Mr. Steele says he has no soundings yet on the provinces' preparations, but he hopes they will attend in a mood to deal imaginatively with the job at hand.

"We recognize that there is no area more regarded as a provincial prerogative. We'll keep that before us—while making very sure that in doing so we don't fall behind as a nation."

Mr. Bell (Carleton): One of the best speeches made today.

Mr. Prittie: As I said earlier there were some questions asked this afternoon of the Secretary of State on this subject. The questions were all ruled out of order by the chair. I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) whether it was a fact that the subject of university grants had been transferred from his department to the Secretary of State and, after some consultation with the Secretary of State, he replied in the affirmative. I take it from that that the article substantially is correct. I agree with the idea, but in my view it might have been better had such an office been established within the department of manpower. At the present time this is the department which is spending the greatest amount of money on education. In the estimates for 1966-67 there is an amount of $186 million under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act. It seemed to me that this would be the logical place for it. However, I am pleased there has been a recognition by the federal government of the need to establish such an office and that they have taken the first step.

In the re-organization bill which the government has presented to us I had hoped they would have established an office to administer all its activities in the field of education. Instead of that, according to the article in the Citizen, the new office will be only a co-ordinating one. The various departments which now are involved in education will continue to operate entirely on their own. Just to what extent is the federal government involved in education? I should like to give you a brief review of the present involvement; it really is quite considerable. The provision of schools for Indian and Eskimo children amounts to about $38 million. In the next fiscal year the Department of National Defence is spending for service colleges about $7,800,000, and for the operation of elementary and secondary schools for children of members of the armed forces there is a budget item of about $9,900,000. As I mentioned earlier, under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act $186 million has been budgeted. In the next year the grants to universities will amount to about $100 million. In addition to that I note in the estimates an amount of $9 million for the Canadian student loan fund. A running total of these figures comes to about $351 million.

In addition to that there are other functions of the federal government in the field of education which I have not mentioned and for which I cannot give figures. There is the external aid office of the Department of External Affairs which is involved in recruiting student teachers to send to underdeveloped countries; there are the various grants from the Department of National Health and Welfare to research organizations, and there are a great many grants from the Department of Agriculture, not to mention the work of the National Research Council and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The latter, by the way, it seems to me does most of the statistical work in respect of education in Canada at the present time. However, the more or less direct spending of the federal government amounts to better than $350 million.

It is only an academic question whether the federal government should be involved in education. When you are spending $350 million you are involved. As I said earlier, it would have seemed more sensible to me to bring these functions together under one office, but they have chosen not to do that.

• (8:00 p.m.)

At this point I want to mention briefly the constitutional question of federal involvement in the field of education, and that involvement is in fact taking place and is an aspect of this constitutional question. We are often reminded that section 93 of the B.N.A. Act gives the provinces exclusive control over education. Everybody else in the country has had a turn at interpreting the act and what the Fathers of Confederation probably meant when they drafted it. I should like to take my turn in doing so now.

It seems to me that the fathers of confederation when they referred to education were speaking of childhood education of the kind that existed in 1864 and 1865 which was provided by the village elementary school, and there were not too many of them at that time. I see no reference at all that would make me think they were thinking of universities and other forms of advanced education.

The word "exclusive" does not mean very much because the federal government does quite properly have educational functions. Under the constitution it was given responsibility for Indians and Eskimos, and it operates schools at the present time for Indian and Eskimo children. I have mentioned the Department of National Defence and its educational function.

Technical and vocational assistance which is now taking place is a form of assistance to schools which operate under provincial jurisdiction, admittedly, but this is taking place with the approval of the provinces. If they did not approve I am sure the federal government would withdraw; but there is no great resistance to this assistance which they are receiving.

The question regarding universities is not at all clear, but if you accept my interpretation—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please, I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I should like to ask him whether his remarks can be related to the bill now before us, which in turn relates to the responsibilities of four new ministries.

Mr. Prittie: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We are dealing with a re-organization bill and it is our duty in the opposition to praise or criticize government action. If we criticize we should advocate alternative policies. It is quite in order to suggest what we think should have been included in the bill. Originally I suggested that an office of education should have been provided for under the department of manpower. Apparently one is to be established under the offices of the Secretary of State. I am merely pointing out that I think the government should have gone further in its re-organization of some of the duties which should have been allocated to such an office. Therefore my remarks do relate to government re-organization and the manner in which I think it should take place.

As I was saying, if you accept my interpretation of the definition of education which the Fathers of Confederation had in mind, then you will come to the conclusion that university education is not exclusively under provincial jurisdiction. In any case, with the apparent approval of the provinces the federal government is involved in this field as well. The federal government does carry on various functions in the field of education at the present time. I think an office of education should co-ordinate and plan the present involvement of the federal government, and that it should go one step further. At the present time in Canada there is a great lack of research in the field of education, although some is carried out in universities. Some provinces have separate research organizations and there is in existence the Canadian Council for Research Education, but most of our ideas in this field come from the United States. We are not doing our share, and I believe the office which is being established should give its attention to this particular field. Unless we have an office with the prestige and the funds which only the federal government can give, we are going to lag very far behind the United States and other countries. I should like to mention briefly that in the United States they have such an office of education.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member again, but I really believe he is going beyond the terms of this bill and that he is applying the principle of education and the federal government's responsibility in the field of education in a way that is not relevant. I suggest that he confine his remarks to the re-organization of the four new federal ministries.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on this point of order may I draw attention to a clause of the bill which is so wide that the remarks of my colleague fall squarely within its four corners. I refer to clause 34 which begins on page 11 of the bill and which proposes amendments to the functions of the Department of the Secretary of State. In other words, my hon. friend is perfectly within the terms of the bill in talking about the Department of the Secretary of State. I should like to go further and draw your attention to one of the functions of the Department of the Secretary of State as contained in clause 34(4)(1)(d) at the bottom of page 11, which reads as follows:

(d) the encouragement of the literary, visual and performing arts, learning and culutral activities; and—

Surely if this bill is ascribing to the Department of the Secretary of State responsibilities in the field of learning, my hon. friend is a lot more in order than some other hon. members who have spoken today. I believe Your Honour should take note of that part of the bill before you rule out of order this discussion on learning, which I suggest is synonymous with education.

Mr. Prittie: In any case, Mr. Speaker, I will not take up very much more time as I wish to attend a meeting of the broadcasting committee tonight, which is another form of education in which we are involved at the present time.

The point I was trying to make here is that this office, which is apparently being established within the Department of the Secretary of State to deal with education, should administer the present federal responsibilities in this field and take the initiative in encouraging educational research in Canada.

I do not look upon such action as a threat to provincial autonomy. A great deal of research needs to be done and I envisage such an office as a centre where the results of education research in Canada could be gathered and distributed to provinces. Much can be learned about the technology of learning, teaching methods and many other things which would be useful to the provinces. I suggest this will not be learned in Canada unless a federal agency, which will have prestige and funds, is given stimulation to do this type of research. This could be of great assistance to the provinces. I see no interference at all on the part of a federal office of education in the operation of elementary and secondary schools. The province of Quebec is not the only province which would object to such interference. I believe the federal government will have quite enough to do in giving aid to universities and technical and vocational schools without getting into other fields of education.

Finally I want to say something about the United States. In that country they have a U.S. office of education which operates as a federal agency. I believe the constitutional position in respect of education in the United States is the same as in Canada, education being a matter under state jurisdiction. However as long ago as 100 years, in 1867 to be exact, this office of education was formed. It runs schools, such as Indian schools, for the federal government. It is a centre for research and for stimulating educational research. It also carries out the international functions of education for the federal government, the sort of thing that the external aid office of this country does.

I am very pleased that this first step has been taken. I regret only that while this re-organization was taking place the government did not go further and give this office more functions. Earlier the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) mentioned the fact that ministers of the government did not have very much responsibility because the civil servants were not allowing them to do very much. I would think that in the field in which I have been speaking the reluctance is on the part of the politicians and not the civil servants. I realize that in Canada this question of federal involvement in education has been a touchy, political one. Nevertheless we are involved at least to the extent of $350 million, and we will be involved more in the future. Therefore we should make more successful arrangements to carry out that involvement.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, we have heard some pretty able speeches tonight. I was quite impressed with the speech of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton).

An hon. Member: We hope there is a good one coming up.

Mr. Woolliams: Someone said, "We hope there is a good one coming up." I will try not to disappoint my colleague. We have heard some excellent speeches in this debate. I suppose that on second reading we should be debating the spirit of the bill and I will try to stay within the terms of reference in that regard. I think that in a general way any Prime Minister of this country has great difficulty in forming a cabinet, for two reasons. One is our parliamentary system and the other is that we have always adhered to—or appear to have done, although no one wants to admit it—the three R's. One of these is to choose the right man—that is not always the greatest concern—the man from the right region, and often there is the question of religion. This practice has sort of shaped and framed many of the cabinets of this nation. You have only to read some of our history as outlined by Dawson in his "Government of Canada" to find this to be correct.

If we have a prime minister from one section of the country, we will probably have a minister of justice from another section. So what the Prime Minister and this government have tried to do—I do not say this in a critical way, but more in a philosophical way—is fit the job to the men available. That is what the Prime Minister has done. This bill was introduced as a reorganization measure. This sounds very good and I am sure the people who will read about it in the press will think, "Now they are reorganizing government and this really means reorganization of parliament". But that may be very far from the truth.

First of all I want to deal with the Department of Justice. However, before dealing with one particular item let us consider what the bill is really about. The Department of Justice is now being divided into three departments. It will be carved up something like the Christmas turkey; we will have the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General and the registrar general of Canada. This is the first department to be reorganized. Then you have the department of manpower, which as I see it will take over immigration and combine labour with it. There is some merit in this. Then you have the department of Indian affairs and northern development. This department is being shaped from the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I am somewhat sceptical about this change and will have something to say about it in a few minutes. Then we find that the Minister of Public Works has been given control of and jurisdiction over crown lands. Anyone who has made any study of the Glassco report hopes that if the Minister of Public Works is to have jurisdiction over crown lands he will accept the recommendation of the Glassco report and unload a lot of that land which is not really used by the crown, but has been held at the crown's expense. You will find this in the Glassco report.

Added to the Department of Forestry we have the rural redevelopment program started by a Conservative government. I refer to ARDA. Then last but not least you have the department of energy, mines and resources. I think having a department of energy, mines and resources is probably an excellent idea because resources, when harnessed, are energy for our nation. There may be some merit in this regard. The Prime Minister said these changes are necessary to assist the executive in getting on with the job. If this is true, I am sure that members in every part of the house welcome the changes, because every member of parliament when he has gone back to his riding or has made a speech in somebody else's riding must have learned that the people of Canada think, rightly or wrongly, that nothing has been done by parliament.

Speaking as a member on this side of the house, I think the first thing we should make clear to the people is that it is the government's job to get things done in parliament, and if nothing is being done it is because of the failure of the government to provide leadership. This is a government reorganization bill. This government is selling reorganization to the nation and saying, "When we get these things reorganized, we will get on with the job." If this government had produced certain kinds of legislation, had put them on the order paper and they had remained on the order paper for a considerable length of time, and the reason the legislation was not passed was that the opposition were obstructing it, the opposition would have had to take a good look at itself and find out whether they were actually obstructing the government's program. But the facts are—you can dish it up as you like—that the reorganization under this bill will do nothing in particular to improve this parliament.

This is because we have had no leadership whatsoever; because we have had no legislation of any importance before parliament. Let me hit the nail on the head now. There has been no obstruction by the opposition. This government cannot lay the charge of obstructing against us. This is an old, worn-out piece of salesmanship on the part of this government, because there has not been any legislation placed on the order paper except the controversial matter of the abolition of capital punishment. I am thinking of matters such as amendments to the Bank Act. In reference to the question of reorganization and getting on with the job of government in parliament, today I asked when the new Bank Act would be introduced. What was the answer? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) said, "I answered that question last week." I was away from the house last week and I make no apologies for my sin. However, I thought perhaps I had missed the answer and so I went to my office and looked up the minister's answer. His answer was very intellectual; he said, "We will bring it in soon."

This government knows the reason we are not getting on with the business and important matters such as the Bank Act. It is because they are so super-sensitive about the political trend in this country that they are frightened to bring in important legislation. Therefore they charge the opposition with obstruction. This government is not getting on with the job. I congratulate them on many phases of this reorganization.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate the response from the other side of the house in this regard, and I appreciate their agreeing with me. They are reorganizing the departments, but unless the government shows leadership they can reorganize the departments to death and will still not do anything. You have to get the legislation on the order paper whether it is embarrassing to you or not. You went out and electioneered on these issues. I congratulate you tonight. You are the government. We wanted to be the government. The Canadian people said, "We are not accepting your platform, particularly at this time." Therefore you are the government and it is your responsibility. You have failed in that responsibility.

If parliament is not getting on with the job, the responsibility is on the shoulders of this government. This is the very reason why in my opinion we now have this bill dealing with reorganization; it is to bluff the public in some regard. There are some changes in it that are good. Wherever you go in this nation you hear from the people that the only thing we are discussing in parliament is a commission for this or that matter—the Munsinger case, for example. I come to grips with the subject immediately; this inquiry is being held in another area and the only thing I know about it is what I read in the newspapers and I am not very interested. But the fact is that parliament has not done very much. The fact is that we have had the Speech from the Throne and have dealt with the question of the abolition of capital punishment. Then we had the Budget. But the main things the Liberal party promised to do, and the things waiting to be done, have been neglected and they are trying to hide under the cloak of that old propaganda of the opposition being obstructionists.

Let me say at once that we have not been obstructing in this parliament. I am not speaking about other parliaments or 1963, when the then opposition obstructed us to death. Neither am I speaking about the first Liberal government, when there may have been some obstruction on our part. But the fact is that we are talking about this parliament in 1966, and the onus is on the government to get down to the job and do the business. If the people of this country are fed up in this regard, they are fed up immediately after the election because the government has not done its job. That is the first point I want to make about reorganization.

Mr. Choquette: Perhaps you will be the leader of your party next week.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad to hear that interjection, Mr. Speaker. Certainly if I was, or became leader, I would endeavour to assume the responsibilities of leadership, which the hon. member's party and his leader have failed to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Dinsdale: They are in agreement over there.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, they are getting ready for their caucus on Wednesday. The reorganization of departments as suggested in this bill will not make for efficient government until leadership is given. This government lacks leadership and has lacked leadership for a long time.

There are some changes which would be welcome, and I have welcomed them, such as the placement of energy and mines under the same roof. However, when you analyse the bill carefully, you find it really has no value.

There are two reasons for this, and the first one I have covered. I have referred to the lack of leadership. This government has introduced a controversial issue when they could have been legislating and developing sound economic policies. For example I have given one illustration when I referred to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp).

As I said at the beginning, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has been fitting the job to the man. He studied the three R's very carefully when he did not get the right men for the jobs. We are talking about reorganization, for example; but never in the history of this parliament has the Wheat Board been under the Minister of Finance. I am not taking anything from the minister's intellectual capacity or his intelligence or knowledge so far as the Wheat Board is concerned. After Harry Hays was defeated in Calgary, or perhaps even before he was defeated, since the Wheat Board was not under him, the Prime Minister realized he had to take an eastern Minister of Agriculture, a lawyer, who might not understand anything about the western farm economy. He therefore took a man who had been deputy minister of trade and commerce, a man who knew about the Wheat Board, and said: I will move that job over to him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: They are agreeing with me again; it is wonderful to have the Grits in agreement. It is a great feeling, but I will come to the point. The Wheat Board was placed under the Minister of Finance. In other words, the government has said they are going to reorganize the executive, but all they have really done has been to fit the job to the man.

Now, let us come to the question of the Department of Justice itself. We now have the Department of Justice divided into three. I gather that the Department of Justice is being carved up like a Christmas turkey, but the minister is not here. You have to analyse this situation carefully. The Prime Minister turned to the Solicitor General because, not only was he a very popular lawyer in his community and a likeable member of parliament, but he was good at public relations. The Prime Minister realized he had had nothing but trouble with his ministers of justice. He had to fire one when he did not really want to fire him. Then he got another man who gave him further trouble. It was decided to carve up this department and give the greater part of it to the Solicitor General, a man who was good at public relations, and in this way try to get out of the mess.

Let us not disguise the true merit of this bill. It is not as great as it looks. You are not really reorganizing the executive; but if I may digress for a few moments, there is something else with which you are dealing. I have talked about the three R's. In addition to that, whenever a senator has been brought into the cabinet, there has generally been no more than one. When a prime minister chooses his cabinet, he has to choose from amongst the elected members of his party. The situation in the United States is different. I am glad to see one member here who is always advocating a republic, and I hope he will listen to this. In the United States the President is elected, but he chooses his cabinet from the various walks of life. He can go outside of Congress to choose men of experience in the various fields. He does not seem to be so concerned with the three R's. He gets a man who can do the job. The Prime Minister, however, has had to concern himself with the three R's.

This bill is the direct result of one thing, and that is that the Prime Minister had to fit the job to the man. Let us take a look at what has happened in the Department of Justice. I want to say something now in a very serious vein with regard to the Minister of Justice. His job is one of the most important jobs, in my opinion. Under his department we have the legal officers of the government who advise all the departments of government on the law. The job of Minister of Justice, therefore, is extremely important. He has to administer the law of the land fairly and fearlessly, without discrimination. In order to do that, he must have a respectable administrative police officer. If I never make another point tonight in this speech, I want to make this point. Throughout the years in Canada the R.C.M.P. has been the most respected police group in this country. The force has been built on sound tradition and we have attempted to make certain that the R.C.M.P. and its commissioners were kept out of politics. If the Minister of Justice is going to administer the law, then in order to do that fearlessly, without discrimination, the R.C.M.P. should be under the administration of the Minister of Justice. There has been trouble in that regard.

The Prime Minister, under the guise of the reorganization bill, has transferred the R.C.M.P. from the Minister of Justice, who he said would always be the Attorney General of Canada and always be responsible for the administration of law, and would always be the chief legal officer, to the Solicitor General. I ask you a simple question. How can the Minister of Justice perform his functions with the R.C.M.P. under the jurisdiction of another department? The only way you can have a successful Department of Justice is to have the complete co-ordination and working together of all groups. Now we have the R.C.M.P. under the Solicitor General.

Mr. Bigg: Maybe they asked to go.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps they asked to go, I do not know. Recently the image of the R.C.M.P. has reached a new low. Why has it reached a new low? The commissioner of the R.C.M.P., who had nothing to gain, because he had reached the highest post as a police officer in this country, gave evidence at a certain commission hearing and gave it fearlessly. I suggest he gave the evidence honestly because he was one man who had nothing to gain or lose by telling the truth.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Then along comes the man who is the head man in the House of Commons, the Prime Minister of Canada, and completely contradicts the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. on some of the evidence given to that commission. I am not going to discuss anything but the contradiction itself. We have not heard from the commissioner, he has been silent. We had a new version from the Prime Minister of what he had said. Somebody might suggest he is again suffering from selective amnesia. However, it is not for me to suggest that. When the Prime Minister, the leading officer of this House of Commons, the head of the government, takes the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. and throws him into the ash can, then you have taken a police force which was built on tradition and trust and reduced their image to a very low point. It is high time the members of this government stood up for the R.C.M.P. instead of criticizing them. I know the Solicitor General will do this; I have trust in his integrity. When hon. members criticize in this house, they should check to ascertain the facts. I believe the reason responsibility for the R.C.M.P. was given to the Solicitor General was that the man the Prime Minister had chosen to be Minister of Justice could not have worked with the R.C.M.P. Yet he is still holding that post.

Mr. Régimbal: He will be resigning soon.

Mr. Woolliams: Someone says he will resign soon, but that is up to him.

I think the placing of the National Parole Board and the Canadian Penitentiaries Service under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General is a good idea. Men like George Street, who is head of the National Parole Board, has done a tremendous job. The board has administered paroles according to law to the best of their ability, and done an excellent job not only under the former government but also under this one. I believe that this is one job of which the Minister of Justice could be relieved, because political problems arise to which the parole board chairman is always subject. For example, everybody is subject to human behaviour. A thousand men may be paroled, one of whom goes wrong; yet he is the one the whole country hears about.

The same can be said of the administration of justice in the courts. One hundred cases may be properly administered, yet one which looks a little difficult or is not quite in order is the one which is publicized. The National Parole Board of this country is doing a tremendous job, and I am glad it is coming within the purview of the Solicitor General. I have the feeling that there will be no political interference as long as its administration comes under his department. I could not say the same if it remained where it was.

With regard to the Canadian Penitentiaries Service, I have attended some of the meetings the Solicitor General has attended, and I believe it is a good idea to transfer it to his department. Also we might bring about some reform of our penitentiaries.

One question I have raised over and over again, and which I will repeat, concerns juvenile offenders who are incarcerated in our penitentiaries. Our penitentiaries need reforming; they are outdated and are archaic. They have been dealing with the punitive aspects rather than the rehabilitative aspects, which makes the job of the parole board even more difficult.

However, when we come to look at the new Department of Justice, we find it is being carved up. The combines investigation branch, the litigation branch and the other branches of the department have been split up, which means there will be no co-ordination and that the law will not be properly administered. I see ahead of us something which may also occur in other departments, and that is divisive confusion, to which I referred before when I spoke on this subject. There will be confusion and division. It would have been far better had the Department of Justice, with the exception of the two branches I have mentioned, remained as it was.

With regard to the new duties of the President of the Privy Council, I have this to say, and I say it with the greatest respect to him, there being nothing personal in my remarks. Whether he declined the offer or a change was made at the time, he did not seem to fit into the portfolio of Minister of Justice. He either had a problem with his leader or it was an administrative problem, but whatever the problem was he became President of the Privy Council. Then in order perhaps to satisfy his ego a little he was given one of the minor responsibilities of the Department of Justice. If that is called reorganization of government, then it is not good enough for me, Mr. Speaker.

Then another branch of the department, I think the fourth branch, that which administers our patent law, is to be administered by the registrar general. I am glad to see that taken out of the department. If I can discuss this matter under reorganization of departments, the patent law of this country is a disgrace. Only recently a man in western Canada who had invented a new kind of plough which would crush rocks, roots and similar substances wanted to patent his invention so that it would not fall into the hands of the United States, and in order to do so first had to register it in the patent office in Great Britain and then reregister it in Canada to protect his invention in the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not a patent solicitor but I was advised by the experts in Toronto that it had to be done in that way in order to safeguard the patent. Therefore I suggest to the minister who is taking over responsibility for our patent law that some arrangement should be made, with the United States particularly, so that when patents are registered in Canada they are recognized both in that country and throughout the world. otherwise our office will just be a rubber stamp as far as patents are concerned. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Prime Minister for this reorganization, which has been neglected in the past probably because our ministers of justice have been busy with the administration of the law and their other duties.

When new portfolios are created you also create new departments, which means taking on additional employees. Two years ago—I have not made inquiries since—I asked the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to work out for me the amount of the budget which is devoted to the salaries of civil servants in this country—not that they are overpaid by any means in many of the categories—and I was told that $1.57 billion goes for salaries.

There is a feeling across the nation today that the government are building up large bureaucracies. Whether this has been brought about by the new pension plan or by the reorganization of various departments, appointing new deputy ministers and taking on more staff, it means we have more bureaucrats, which will have to be paid for through more taxes. If efficiency is the result, then in light of our growing population we might say it is good organization. But if it really means that we are fitting the job to the man because the Prime Minister has not got the right man for the job, then this means additional cost to the taxpayers of this nation. I should like to repeat that two years ago—and the figure must be higher today—$1.57 billion of our budget went toward civil servants' salaries. That is a lot of money spent on running the nation.

On top of this, Mr. Speaker, we must remember when talking of reorganization of government that there are ten provincial governments. Therefore we can see how much it is costing to govern this country. If Canada has one problem which is gnawing away at its ribs, it is the problem that as a nation we are over-governed. I regret to say it, but every time I hear speakers in the House of Commons trying to whittle away the powers of the central government which were laid down by the constitution in order to decentralize the nation, it seems to me that this means more bureaucracy, because we are really setting up ten distinct nations.

As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) said, the problems of the nation demand more than having the minister of resources running across the nation making speeches. He made a speech in Calgary, if I may quote this as an illustration, and was supposed to speak about resources. We feel we are sitting, Mr. Speaker, on great pools of oil out there, with large contracts being made with Japan and other nations. Yet this minister devotes two thirds of his speech to the B. and B. Commission. We all know about the B. and B. Commission.

Government Organization

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, may I tell the hon. gentleman that I will send him a copy of the speech I made in Calgary on the subject of petroleum.

Mr. Woolliams: I have already read his speech, Mr. Speaker.

• (8:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege raised by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin), I would ask him to listen to me, to allow me to say just a few words.

This afternoon, you called me to order because I was straying away from—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege or is he raising a point of order?

Mr. Caouette: I am on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member for Villeneuve on a point of order.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, you called me to order at least a dozen times because I was straying away from Bill No. C-178 that is now before us.

I notice the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) does not wander, but he is straying away totally from the subject matter that deals with the act respecting the organization of the government.

I understand that the government is disorganized, Mr. Speaker, but at any rate my point of order is the following: As Your Honour called me to order this afternoon, I think it would be in order to also remind the hon. member for Bow River that he must limit himself to the principle of the bill. It is not that I do not want to hear him, on the contrary I want to hear him, but in due course.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I thank the hon. member for Villeneuve for having enlightened the Chair.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: I am always glad to have little interruptions like this in the middle of one of my speeches. If I post a copy of my speech to the people back home they will realize that I had a good audience, and that the leader of the Ralliement Crèditistes was listening to me.

To go back to what I was talking about before, that subject comes under the minister's jurisdiction. I congratulate the Prime Minister who organized this set-up, for having these resources under one department. I hope that the minister is carrying out his function. I hope he will get on with his job. That was the wish expressed by the people in Calgary. They were members of the Chamber of Commerce. I do not know their politics, but I wondered whether some of them had heard the talk by the minister. We heard a speech, but we did not hear any talk.

If the minister did talk about resources, let me say that we were most impressed. We have very important resources. We hope that the minister's department and other government departments are as interested in promoting the kind of trade and attention that the province of Alberta deserves, and that the premier of that province thinks are warranted. In connection with that, may I say that the premier has just returned from Japan.

Coming back to one last point that I wish to touch on, I still say that this bill is not really a bill to do with reorganization. There was a problem in the cabinet. In order to satisfy the problem the government set up certain jobs, and then it said that certain men probably could do those jobs. In other words, the government said: "We will take certain functions of that department and this department, and give it to somebody else, because another man will probably handle it better than the present man in charge of that department, and there will be fewer political repercussions.

When in the near future we talk about the R.C.M.P., which now comes under the department of the Solicitor General, I hope that the Prime Minister and other members of the cabinet and of his party will stand up and defend that force, because without a police force such as the R.C.M.P., without the tradition that it has built up, we could not administer law properly in this nation.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams). What struck me most was his thundering peroration in which he insisted upon the respect we should show the officers of the R.C.M.P. On that score, Mr. Speaker, I can but share the opinion of the hon. member. On the other hand, I also believe we should bear, not only the R.C.M.P. and its officers, but also the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada and all other judges, equal if not even greater respect.

Mr. Speaker, now that we are studying the clauses of Bill C-178, and after hearing the short but eloquent speech made by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), which I found most interesting, I have come to the following conclusion: an over-all reform is required.

I fully agree. Not only an administrative reform, but also a reform of our parliamentary system. Nothing proves to date that we have the most perfect, the best system in the world. It might be timely to ask ourselves questions and to see what reforms might be brought in.

I know some are anxious to respect traditions; they always plead that argument, dreading what changes are required.

The British system has brought multiple bounties; but, Mr. Speaker, we are living in North America, and we must face the North American realities. In view of those realities, we must be able to adapt our institutions, both governmental and parliamentary.

Since we are dealing with the reorganization of the departments, I would like to make a few remarks and I would be happy if the members of the cabinet and the members of the house studied them very attentively. To pursue the same line of thinking, namely that we are living in a North American environment, I would be very anxious to see the Canadian authorities study the American system and learn from it.

As mentioned a little earlier by the hon. member for Bow River, I think that in the United States the ministers are appointed instead of elected. There is no evidence that that it is not a good system which could be very effective in Canada, Mr. Speaker.

What is the position of our ministers today? They must have three fundamental qualities. First of all, they must be administrators because they are heads of departments and, as such, they must know how to administer. Second, they must be parliamentarians, and then God knows how much precious time they lose here in this house, especially when they must face an opposition which is fundamentally obstructionist.

Mr. Speaker, the ministers must first of all be administrators. Second, they must be parliamentarians, but nothing tells us that a good administrator is also, as a corollary, a good parliamentarian. The contrary is often true; those who have the least to say, who do not have any ability in a parliamentary world, make the best administrators.

Under our system, in Canada, to be head of a department, to be chief administrator or to head a department, one must also be a parliamentarian.

And third, the third quality just as fundamental which the man who is called upon to head a department must also possess is that of being good at election time because whomsoever may be called upon to assume such responsibilities, he must face the electorate, he must get elected; then, he must spend a lot of energy to reach the position for which he would be highly qualified, without having to go through the whole process which constitutes, in several cases, an obstacle which is hard to overcome.

Administrators on one hand, members of parliament, elected men on the other. We have seen in this house ministers of superior calibre who could have played an extraordinary part, rendered immeasurable services to their country, their native land, but precisely they did not have parliamentary ability, they have not been able to devote all their energies, all their talents to the development of our country.

It is for this reason that we must take the situation in serious consideration so that the major reform mentioned by the member for Trois-Rivières be looked into and implemented in the near future because we, of the young generation, are very sceptical about the quality, the merit and the efficiency of our institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that certain reservations can be made to the bill before us; this proves that there are no fanatics on this side of the house, even sitting on the government side. For instance, I read this in Section 13:

> The duties, powers and functions of the Minister of Manpower extend to and include all matters over which the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, branch or agency of the government of Canada, relating to
> (a) the development and utilization of manpower resources in Canada;
> (b) employment services; and
> (c) immigration.

Mr. Speaker, this is where I raise the objection I wanted to put before the house. It is that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) is seen as an assistant to the Minister of Manpower. Immigrants who arrive here are considered as values, tremendous resources that must be placed and utilized. There is a situation to which I take strong exception. I would want a Department of Immigration not established on the basis of manpower utilization, but on the basis of demographic balance, for herein lies a greater threat for Canada and Canadian unity.

There is much talk about separatism in the province of Quebec. Sometimes federal members of parliament have their heads buzzing with the cries of alarm from the province of Quebec. At times, I feel that we, French speaking Canadians, should try to understand the majority. We are very negligent. I hear certain candidates, in the current election campaign in Quebec, speaking of two nations in Canada. There are no two nations in Canada. There are two societies: one English speaking, the other French speaking.

It may be that French Canadians, because of their common language, their culture, their traditions, their religion, form a nation, but the English speaking community is not a nation. When Messrs. Daniel Johnson and Jean-Noël Tremblay refer to two nations, they are mistaken: there are not two nations, but rather two societies.

Why does the English speaking society increase faster than the French speaking one? Because of immigration. It is my duty to say so. Since confederation, federal authorities never thought about immigration in terms of bi-racialism. It is the major grievance of French speaking Canadians. They say: We have been taken in by confederation. They are not entirely right, but there is some truth in what they say. Naturally, immigrants assimilated the English culture. I find very regrettable that our leaders, since confederation, never said: We are going to consider this bi-racialism in Canada.

I find it unfortunate that the federal government could not have cared less; it has been apathetic and indifferent since confederation. It serves the Canadian society badly. A true Canadian government should serve all the regions of Canada, respect the characteristics of every corner of the country. That is why violent complaints are heard in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the independence party is not a danger in the province of Quebec. The theoretical separatist in the province of Quebec is not dangerous. The dangerous ones are the separatists indeed who show themselves—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member for Lotbinière would not wish to stray too far from the principle of the bill.

An hon. Member: Playing politics; that's all he knows.

Mr. Choquette: I am not playing politics. I am giving the facts, and you know it.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Will the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Choquette: Certainly.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member for Lotbinière if he does not think that the situation he is pointing out to the house is due to the fact that the Quebec government is responsible for the lack of French immigrants?

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right in part. Under section—

Mr. Caouette: Absolutely right.

Mr. Choquette: Right in part. If the hon. member wants to hold a public debate in Rouyn-Noranda, I will attend.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Again I shall have to ask the hon. member for Lotbinière to adhere as closely as possible to the principle of the bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I rise on a question of privilege. The member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) has just challenged me to hold a public debate in my riding. Any time he wishes, I am not afraid. I could tackle 24 at a time of the same calibre as the member for Lotbinière. This afternoon—and on this point, I agree with what the member for Lotbinière has just said—while dealing with the same matters, I was called to order a dozen times. I am wondering whether a member is allowed to do tonight what was forbidden another member this afternoon around four or five o'clock. Even though the solutions he suggests may be sound and the facts he is trying to prove to the house may be true, let him stick to Bill C-178. A rule for Peter and another for Paul is quite uncalled for in this parliament.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Villeneuve was well taken and I hope the hon. member for Lotbinière will comply with the ruling of the Chair without having to be called to order ten or 12 times.

Mr. Macaluso: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Choquette: Certainly. With pleasure.

Mr. Winkler: This should be good.

Mr. Macaluso: The hon. member for Lotbinière said he was opposed to immigration being combined with manpower. Will he tell us whether he is opposed to immigration—whether, when he speaks of separatism in Quebec it is because he believes in immigration—

An hon. Member: Take it up tomorrow in caucus, Joe.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, the question of the hon. member is excellent. If I agreed to answer, the hon. member would lead me to another subject and I would be called to order. I am ready to answer him, but my reply would obviously be quite elaborate. Then, you would have to apply the rules.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the hon. member for Lotbinière is well aware of the difference between immigration and the reorganization of the department. I hope the hon. member will use the remainder of his time to discuss the principle of the bill now before the house.

Mr. Macaluso: On a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, with the information you have given, may I be permitted, in accordance with your decisions, to note this: It is that with the proposed reorganization, it is perfectly clear that the department of immigration is eliminated. It is perfectly clear that the department of immigration is becoming a subdivision of the manpower department and that the present thinking, the thinking laid down in this bill, immigration is henceforth connected with manpower and the development of natural resources.

Now, I am opposed to that. I am violently opposed to that, because I maintain that we should have a separate department of immigration. A department of immigration and manpower that does not preclude full co-operation, that does not preclude interdepartmental correlation but I believe that we have a right—and not only the right but the imperative duty to state this—in view of the fact that the population balance is constantly disturbed by immigration. These are not demagogic recriminations, Mr. Speaker. These are facts that have been proven since 1867. The French group is constantly being drowned out and whose fault is it? I am not denouncing anyone, nor making any accusations. I say that, at the time, the concept was such that the country could not be thought of as essentially biethnical.

It was thought: The immigrants are coming, let them go anywhere. The federal government was unconcerned. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) said: There is a weakness. Yes, there is a weakness in the provincial government. Here, I want to congratulate the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau) who was one of the first to go to Quebec and to call the attention of the government to this delicate question, and he did not hesitate to take them to task for having remained inactive, as the hon. member for Trois-Rivières so aptly put it, in the field of immigration and it is at the urging of the President of the Privy Council that consulates were finally opened at Bordeaux and Marseilles, together with immigration offices and for this, I congratulate him.

However, Mr. Speaker, this does not give the results expected by these offices because, first of all, there is in France a certain resistance to the immigration of French citizens.

Therefore, I should like us, first, to have our own separate Department of Immigration. Second, I should like us to hold a national conference on immigration problems, because if the demographic balance continues to be upset, ideological revolutionaries and extremists will rise even more, and we wonder what we will do with those problems in 25 or 30 years, when the two great Quebec parties will solicit votes, one for a stronger Quebec and the other for Quebec first.

It is no longer a question of Canada. It is Quebec first. Twenty years from now, they will say: out with Canada. That is what will happen if nothing is done to correct the situation. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I want a department of immigration separate from the department of manpower.

Second, I suggest a national conference on immigration problems in order, first, to strengthen the French minorities in provinces outside Quebec and, second, to take steps so that all immigrants to this country take an interest in the two cultures.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I was in St. Célestin, in the county of Nicolet. I shall conclude my remarks with this. I was in Saint-Célestin, in the county of Nicolet, where a former Conservative member of parliament is candidate. This is a French Canadian who has left Ottawa. French Canadians are becoming less and less interested in Ottawa. The problem is much more serious than you think. I met there an immigrant who only spoke French. I asked him: Why do you not learn English to be bilingual?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the hon. gentleman is well aware that the remarks he is now making have no relation at all to the principle of the bill which is before us.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Thank you for your remarks; I will conclude with this. Yesterday I met an immigrant who spoke only French. This reminded me that we need a separate department of immigration, not only to strengthen the French minorities outside Quebec but also to initiate all immigrants to this new mentality in the province of Quebec and in Canada, that our country is truly bicultural, bilingual and biethnical and that all immigrants, English speaking people, say: You want to integrate the English culture, but take also some interest in the French language, because there are six million inhabitants here who speak French.

I met yesterday this immigrant who spoke only French. I said: You should take some interest in the English language because there are many English speaking people in Canada. We like the English speaking and we respect English speaking Canadians. We want a truly Canadian Canada where both cultures, both languages and both races have the same rights, the same respect, the same privileges. But we will defeat, crush and repudiate forever this false and heretic doctrine of separatism.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I will not attempt to follow the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) into the turbulent channels into which he has led the debate. I propose to return to the more prosaic subject of the bill which is before the house.

Mr. Choquette: You have always been quiet in this house.

Mr. Brewin: I can assure the hon. member that on another occasion I would be delighted to discuss the topic with him.

Mr. Speaker, in dealing with this particular bill I am reminded of the old story about how an assistant curate was faced at the breakfast table with an egg of dubious quality and when the rector's wife asked him if we was enjoying it he replied it was good in parts. Mr. Speaker, I propose to discuss some of the dubious parts of this legislation, without denying that some parts of it are good and without attempting to give an over-all assessment of the legislation. I also am able to discuss this bill without entering into a discussion of the personalities of the ministers who either now, in the future, or in the immediate past have occupied or are likely to occupy the various ministries involved in the re-organization. I do this because I think the merits or the demerits of the organization may outlast the particular qualities, or lack of qualities if that is possible, of the particular ministers involved.

The test in respect of any re-organization bill surely should be whether it is likely to contribute to the effectiveness of the government in dealing with the urgent tasks which face it. That they are urgent and changing tasks certainly is very clear. I continue to believe that the assignment to the department of the Solicitor General of the jurisdiction relating to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is a very grave mistake. The bill leaves with the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, which is the same individual, full responsibility for the enforcement of law. This responsibility is a broad one which involves working in as close as possible co-operation with the police force which is responsible for law enforcement and for the detection of crime. This problem increases in its difficulty and complexity as one develops a highly organized criminal operation which carries on across both provincial and international boundaries. It seems to me that without an efficient and well trained police force acting in close co-operation with the officials of the crown who are responsible for law enforcement, it would be impossible to deal adequately with this menace, and it certainly is a menace.

One of the most important features of law enforcement at the present time is the ability to co-operate with the departments of justice in other parts of the world, for example in the United States, the provincial law enforcement departments, the attorneys general of the various provinces, and indeed with the municipal law enforcement officers. How can a department, the other functions of which under this particular bill are restricted to such matters as parole, penitentiaries and matters of that nature, be in charge of the extremely delicate and important responsibility of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The whole issue of security is one which falls on the shoulders, I suggest, of the Minister of Justice, and yet the police force which is responsible for reporting on matters of security is put under the jurisdiction, for training, organization and for all matters concerning its welfare and discipline, as a separate government department or a separate minister of the crown, namely the Solicitor General.

My remarks have nothing whatever to do with the present Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) or the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin). It does seem to me to be totally wrong in these days when security is important, and when the battle against organized crime is important, to handicap the efficient dealing with these matters by taking the very force that should be the spearhead of enforcement out of immediate association with the department responsible for law enforcement.

I did not hear all that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) said today, but I believe that he did suggest that this change would make the situation equivalent to the British system where the home secretary has some responsibility for the police, and under which system there are different departments administering justice. I suggest that the situation in Britain is totally different. They have a homogeneous population with very different sorts of problems, different traditions and a different background. I do not know how well that division works there, but I suggest that if it works well that is no reason to assume it will work well here.

There is one other feature of this bill which again suggests a sort of haphazard allocation of functions. As has been suggested, in order to balance the different ministries and to give each minister and his department something, or enough, to do, problems in relation to bankruptcy and insolvency have been assigned to the new department called the department of the registrar general. Again one can discuss this without relation to any other personalities involved.

I do not think the government has yet appreciated what is involved in the battle against bankruptcy frauds. It has overlooked the fact that reputable newspapers have described conditions in the bankruptcy field as being equivalent to twentieth century highway robbery on a grand scale. They have referred to the breaking down of law enforcement and $500 million lost to small businessmen throughout this country, largely through the inefficient administration of bankruptcy laws. Or, they have suggested that a good portion of the $500 million has been lost in that way.

In this house the Minister of Justice told us at one time that there was to be a re-organization of and amendments to the Bankruptcy Act which would permit the government of Canada to take a new and much needed responsibility in the field of investigation of bankruptcy frauds. What sense does it make to do that when the responsibility is to be handed to a department which is totally outside the channels of law enforcement? That department will have to develop a new channel of communication with the provinces or operate through the offices of another department.

If this government is seriously worried about bankruptcies it should not put bankruptcies and insolvencies into an entirely different department which has certain important responsibilities in regard to combines, which in itself is a large subject and ought to encourage activity far beyond what is taking place. That department also has responsibility for patents, copyrights, trade marks and corporate affairs. The new registrar general of Canada will have plenty of responsibility without having partial responsibility for law enforcement.

I give warning to any member of the government who happens to be within earshot of my voice, that at the committee stage of this bill we propose to bring in amendments which, if accepted by the house, will remove these anomalies and dangerous changes which, instead of adding to more effective enforcement of the law, may very well have the effect of frustrating this enforcement in these very important fields. I hope that when that time arrives the house will consider seriously whether this bill requires amendment in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes this evening to discuss Bill C-178 introduced by the right hon. Prime Minister.

During the debate which followed the introduction of the bill, we heard a lot about the reorganization of the Canadian government and related or incidental questions. However, the bill deals with organization and not reorganization. I cannot imagine how something which is not organized could be reorganized.

I think today is the 82nd day of this session and if we consider the work performed and the legislation passed in those 82 days, we realize that not much has been done. Therefore, I believe that if we have not made more progress in those 82 days, it is precisely because of a lack of organization on the part of the government.

I think that the Prime Minister is justified in introducing a bill on the organization of the Canadian government and on related or incidental matters.

Mr. Speaker, as mentioned by previous speakers, we must hope that this bill will give satisfactory results.

I think, as previous speakers, that amendments will be moved when we will consider the bill section after section.

There is one think I should like to mention to the house; I have noticed it myself for a number of years and many people with whom I have talked about it, have mentioned it also; at a given time, when those in charge of departments seem to become acquainted with their department, and take in hand its operation, what do we see? The Prime Minister announces a cabinet shuffle.

[Mr. Brewin.]

What does this mean, what does the Prime Minister try to prove? I understand that, at a certain time, when the incumbent of a department does not have the necessary qualifications to be in charge of some departments, the right hon. Prime Minister then tries to find for him a department where he could test his skill.

But, in my opinion, the ministers in charge of departments are moved too often for them to achieve the expected results. This is why, in my opinion, when the Prime Minister selects the minister for various departments, he should study more closely the qualifications of the candidates for those positions, so that they might stay as long as possible in charge of those various departments, and show there a maximum of efficiency.

I am willing to admit that when the government changes, when the voters decide to change government, well, then, those ministers must change.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, what I want to point out in that connection is that we should find better men, more competent men, to take over as ministers, and especially in the new departments we are planning.

One department is of special interest to me, that of Mines and Technical Surveys. I hope the present minister (Mr. Pepin) will head the new department of energy, mines and resources.

I wish to point out to him that among the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys publications, few are to be found in French. I feel that the French Canadian people are really not favoured in that respect.

Mr. Caouette: That is because the hon. member is English.

Mr. Laprise: I do not blame the hon. minister. A remark has just been made, but please note, Mr. Speaker, that I do not blame the present minister, for he has been in charge of that department for a short while. But I must say that nothing has been done to date to improve publications on Canadian mining. I therefore hope that the hon. minister will take my remarks into consideration and act on them, seeing the present Liberal government claims continually that it wants to do justice to the two main races in Canada today.

Now, in connection with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, I would like to draw the attention of the minister on the fact that the constituency which I represent, that of Chapleau, is very extensive and rich in mining resources of all kinds. I think that the minister knows it, because he has surely received requests and has been in a position to consider them before taking over that department.

He knows that northwestern Quebec has a huge and varied mining potential. I wish to point out more especially the iron deposits which have been discovered recently in the Val d'Or, Miquelon and Cadillac areas.

Surveys were made which indicate that there are at least 6 million tons of iron ore lying there and waiting to be developed. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the minister should look into the matter and have those natural resources developed and turned into production and consumer goods and put to use for Canadians who are asking for them to fill their immeasurable needs.

These iron deposits are close to the roads, railways, communications of all kinds. We have the manpower who would be delighted to work at it. Then I think therefore that in reorganizing this department some consideration should be given this matter.

There is something else I would like to mention. On many occasions especially during this session the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) my colleague for the neighbouring riding has called the attention of the minister to the development of gold mines in the area. Each time, the minister answered that he would defer to the province of Quebec. Then, if the minister has nothing to do with mining operations particularly with regard to gold mines, I am wondering why this is mentioned in paragraph (a), clause 29, of Bill No. 178 on reorganization. And I quote:

(a) energy, mines and minerals, water and other resources;

In my opinion, the minister should at least make suggestions to the province of Quebec on measures meant to assist gold mines, if he cannot act himself, not so much for gold mines as for the miners working there.

Today, mines in operation are bound to close down because they show no profit. Now, it is needless to say that the new projects will not be carried out, that new mines will not be opened, because I believe that in the reorganization of this department they should think about making gold mines profitable, so that the miners working there can find what they expect, namely an income comparable to that found in any other mining industry in northern regions or elsewhere in Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, while we are still considering the reorganization of the department of energy, mines and resources, I see in clause 29 that among the functions of the department, the latter will have to see that—

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that on second reading of a bill, he cannot refer to a particular clause; he can only deal with the principle of the bill.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for calling me to order in the terms you have just explained to me. I always thought that when considering clause 1 of Bill C-178, one could deal with all parts of the bill generally.

Mr. Speaker: I must point out to the hon. member that we are not considering clause 1 of the bill, we are considering a motion for concurrence in second reading of the bill.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, are we discussing Bill C-178 in general or only part of it?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Villeneuve is raising a point of order. I am quite sure he knows as well as I do that we are now considering a motion concerning the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

It is an elementary rule of this house to refrain from referring to particular sections of a bill at this stage.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that since this afternoon every single member has referred to some section or other concerning a department proposed in Bill C-178.

I would not want the member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) to be subject to discrimination any more than other members who spoke on Bill C-178 and who were allowed to say almost anything they wanted on any section of Bill C-178.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot change the standing orders. The hon. member knows the rules as much as I do. I am sure he will want to abide by the rules in the course of his remarks.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, at any rate, I was about to conclude my remarks. When we study the bill section by section, we will then be able to consider in detail the matters we wish to raise. At that time, if we want to make suggestions to the Prime Minister who introduced this resolution and this bill, I think it will be proper for us to tell him what we expect from this government reorganization.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude here my remarks on the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Other hon. members have talked today about immigration, bankruptcies, etc., I wanted to draw attention to the organization of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources so that more consideration would be given to that field of the Canadian economy in order to get the results which the mining operators and the miners are expecting from that organization, from that Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

• (9:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks on Bill No. C-178. I think two things are clear from listening to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) this afternoon, reading the bill and listening to other members who have spoken. One is that the brave words uttered two or three years ago of "exciting the daring and testing the strong" could be paraphrased into "dividing departments and confusing the throng". The one other thing that is quite clear from the remarks of hon. members this afternoon and evening is that they want a change of the cabinet to conform to the practices and pressures of a modern society.

I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was quite correct when he said that members would welcome a change which he said would give effective executive action. However, the problem here, and the great fear amongst many members on this side of the house when they contemplate the changes, is that the bill will not give effective executive action. Instead, the bill is just going to defuse, dissect and divide whatever action we have had thus far. I question the Prime Minister's statement that it is a first step. If this is a first step, Mr. Speaker, then the infant is not going to survive the muddle of misunderstanding and confusion to which this bill gives rise.

[Mr. Speaker.]

In explaining the point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) referred to a shuffle. I believe that is the best thing that could be said about this bill, that it is a shuffle. It is a shuffle from a government looking for some direction to counter the conditions that have been so prevalent these past few years. The members do want a change. I can agree in many respects with the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) on some of those changes.

There are some members who may laugh about the type of change suggested because there is a need for having an effective cabinet, an effective government, trying to organize the business of this house and the business of the country. How can you effectively organize the business of this country when you, in effect, draw and quarter some of the departments we have here today. I am not going to deal with them all because many speakers have already dealt with the departments with which I was going to deal.

In so far as justice is concerned, you have a troika in that department. We all recall what happened in the United Nations when Khrushchev suggested a troika for that organization. This raised problems of the delegation of responsibility, problems of the implementation of policy. I suggest with the greatest respect that these men who are going to be part of the troika administering justice, are not going to increase the efficiency of this department. It is going to be confused by a lack of co-ordination and direction as between the ministers who are going to handle justice problems.

You have already had the problem of agriculture discussed, and that is important in my riding. This situation is particularly close to me because you have the Department of Agriculture and agriculture problems divided among the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). We have again, Mr. Speaker, a divided delegation of power when one minister, with the proper delegation under that minister, could solve many of the problems of the farm.

The third problem has already been ably discussed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) tonight. I refer to the conflicts between the proposed minister of Indians affairs and northern development and the minister of resources and energy. One of the reasons I was prompted to speak tonight, for whatever it is worth, was the Prime Minister's attempt to define the division of responsibility between the minister of resources and the minister of northern development in the north, on the basis of wet land and dry land.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I must say I was somewhat amazed and somewhat surprised at this specious reasoning to justify a government bill which obviously has been drawn by some professional man in an ivory tower and without any knowledge of the realties of life. It is just as specious for the Prime Minister to divide that wide country on the basis of wet land and dry land as it would be for me to divide a cup of tea on the basis of whether one wanted lemon or one wanted it black. It is still a cup of tea and the north is still the north. Whether it is wet land or dry land, the winter is still cold and the problems are the same so far as the Eskimos are concerned. How are you going to solve these problems with more bureaucracy and a further increase in the cabinet without the actual implementation of policy or by having two ministers where one would do? I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is the best example of dereliction, this drifting between dry land and wet land. If anyone else but the Prime Minister had made this statement, Mr. Speaker, he would have been laughed out of the house.

The other matter, also, involves the minister of northern affairs and the minister of energy and concerns this question of water. It is somewhat of a paradox that this question of water in the only area where the federal government has absolute control, that is in the north, is going to be taken out of the hands of the minister of energy and is going to be left with the minister of Indian affairs and northern development. This anomaly and paradox again indicates the expanded number of questions with regard to the present formation of government, and indicates they did not look at cabinet reformation on the basis of policy.

How can you have direction and leadership on policy when you have 26 ministers, as this bill is going to provide? Let us take the country to the south as an example, and this is where I can agree with my republican friend from across the way. I appreciate the special problems of the United States, and their history of republican government. They may think we are confused and muddled up here, but we are going to be more muddled and confused if this bill goes through, and it is realized that the great country to the south has only 12 ministers while we in this country will have 26.

Now, I grant you that they have their republican system and the ministers are not responsible to the legislature. But the fact is that there is this vast space in the United States and they have this fundamental civil rights question. We have a problem between two great races. They have a problem of area, a problem of people, a problem of cities, they have all the problems we have 20 times over, and yet they can rule their country with one half the number of ministers that we have in this country. I think the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) would find a lot of support, and I think a lot of members opposite would give their support, to a compromise between the republican system and the English system across the water, of getting a small inner core of cabinet and a larger outer core who could administer the departments.

When you compare what is proposed in this bill with what is done in the United States, and compare it with any board of directors of a large corporation like General Motors, you find that no company would have more than 26 directors. If they do have 26 directors, then they have an executive committee to do the daily administrative work or carry out policy. You cannot run a company with 26 directors.

The only other point I should like to draw to your attention is that I should like to hear from the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer). I should like him to tell us just how he accepts this bill on government organization when he is the great advocate of integration. He speaks of integrating the services, but they are disintegrating the government. In effect, Mr. Speaker, that is just what they are doing. I should like to hear the Minister of National Defence try to relate this bill to what he is trying to do with the three services which were here long before he was minister and which I suspect are going to be here long after him. There is a basic flaw in his fundamental belief if he can accept this bill because he has told us that in order to have an efficient organization with direction you are supposed to have integration.

However, he is the member of a cabinet that is trying to propound a bill that is going to increase the number of cabinet members. At least, according to the Prime Minister, it is not going to decrease the number of speakers—not speakers, sir, we do not need any more, Mr. Speaker. I think the Prime Minister can take comfort from the number of people who have spoken on this bill, because if he has any problems with the cabinet he will have lots of help from the members who have made suggestions. We are not worried tonight about the personality of the cabinet, we are worrying about the principle of the government reorganization bill. If the Prime Minister is sincere in his new politics, and if it is a time to excite the daring, why have we not got a bill which has a principle behind it rather than the political expediency of trying to make a bill conform to the present members of the cabinet? I think there is unanimity in this house on the necessity for changes in government reorganization, but that is in relation to changes in policy. I suggest that leadership would be shown if a bill came forward on the basis of policy. You do not step forward when you have a shuffle and you are not stepping forward when you have a shuffle such as the Minister of National Revenue mentioned earlier.

The hon. member for York South mentioned four reasons why he believes there should be a cabinet reorganization. This thought carries me back to the analogy with the United States. We have problems with dominion-provincial relations, and this bill is not going to help further those at all. I have suggested in these few remarks that there should be more work on re-organization. I think there is general unanimity about reorganization, but a reorganization on the basis of some plan and policy, rather than leaving the gaping anomalies that we have in this bill and which have been pointed out more effectively by other speakers than I have been able to do.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before I call on the next hon. member to speak I should like to refer to the point of order which was raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). He made the suggestion that the resolution preceding Bill No. C-178, which is now being considered by the house, was insufficient and that there should be a further resolution to precede the bill, or that the existing resolution should be amended to make specific reference to the establishment of the new department of forestry and rural development.

During the last few hours I have had the opportunity to consider the arguments advanced by members on both sides of the house, and I can assure hon. members that it was not an easy decision to reach because the arguments submitted by the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), and, in opposition to these, the suggestions and propositions advanced by members on the treasury benches did not make it easy for the Chair to decide which way to rule.

I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members, as they know, that the rule respecting the introduction of a bill imposing a charge upon public revenues is standing order 61, namely:

> If any motion be made in the house for any public aid or charge upon the people, the consideration and debate thereof may not be presently entered upon, but shall be adjourned till such further day as the house thinks fit to appoint; and then it shall be referred to a committee of the whole house, before any resolution or vote of the house do pass thereupon.

As pointed out by the hon member for Peace River, standing order 61 must be read in light of section 54 of the British north America Act, 1867. This section is important when considering this question at large. It says:

> It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address, or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose—

—and I underline those words—

> —that has not been first recommended to that house by message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address, or bill is proposed.

Hon. members will note that it is the "purpose" of the resolution that is recommended to the house by His Excellency. When asking His Excellency for his recommendation we refer to the purpose of the proposed legislation in the words of the resolution, and his recommendation is given accordingly. There is no written rule nor any established practice with the force of law determining the form, the extent or the limitations applicable to a resolution preceding a bill. Such being the case resort must be had to the meaning of the words of the rule as we find it in our standing orders.

Ordinarily a bill may be introduced without a resolution. The impelling factor requiring a resolution is a provision of the bill imposing a charge on the revenue, but a charge which is new and distinct. It would therefore seem that the resolution meets the requirement of the rule where it, in precise language, points to the fact that the proposed bill contains a provision or provisions that may impose a charge on the revenue.

There is no doubt that a resolution preceding a bill is not designed for the purpose of explaining the contents of the bill in any detail but solely for the purpose of giving notice to the house that the government intends to introduce a measure which involves a tax on the people or a charge on public funds.

Some hon. members have argued that the establishment of the new department of forestry and rural development implies a charge on the treasury. In opposition to this view other members have argued that there is no such charge. It should be stressed that the relevant consideration here is that there should be, to necessitate a prior resolution, a new and distinct charge.

I should like to refer hon. members to May's Parliamentary Practice, seventeenth edition, page 780. At that page, under the heading "Tests to determine whether expenditure involves a 'charge' ", the author says:

A charge must be new and distinct. The question often arises whether a proposal for expenditure or for increased expenditure is not already covered by some general authorization. The test for determining this question in the case of a substantive proposal, i.e., a provision in a bill, as introduced, is a comparison with existing law.

In this instance, in so far as the Department of Forestry is concerned, I cannot convince myself that there is a new and distinct charge separate from what is already authorized by existing legislation. However, even if this interpretation of the new measure were too limited, even if it were erroneous, I believe that the resolution in its general terms covers the whole general subject of the reorganization of departments of government. In other words, there is a resolution pointing to the purpose of the bill before the house.

For these reasons, I suggest to hon. members that the resolution introduced by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) before first reading of this bill satisfies the requirements of the standing orders and of section 54 of the British North America Act.

In the course of his arguments the hon. member for Peace River suggested that extreme caution should be exercised in this matter since the validity of this statute as passed by parliament might be questioned later on in the courts on the ground that the required procedure has not been followed. He suggests, in other words, that the inadequacy of the resolution might invalidate the statute.

May I quote the case of the King v. Irwin as reported in 1926, Vol. 25, Exchequer Court Reports, page 127, at page 128. The headnote is to the following effect:

Held, that when a statute appears on its face to have been duly passed by a competent legislature, the courts must assume that all things have been rightly done in respect of its passage, and cannot entertain any argument that there is a defect of parliamentary procedure lying behind the act.

I thought I should bring this case to the attention of the house, because not only the hon. member for Peace River but I believe other hon. members have referred to the fact that there might be some difficulty later on if a procedural mistake was made in the consideration of this bill.

For all these reasons, and with great respect, I cannot accept the point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few brief remarks on this bill. As I have said before, as a pragmatic socialist I think all of us would agree that there is need for a reorganization of the departments of the government. I think that opinion has been expressed by members on all sides of the house during this debate. I personally have not sufficient information or enough knowledge of all the subjects to say whether the organization proposed by the government is the correct one or is not. I suppose this again can only be proven as the result of experience. If this reorganization does not prove satisfactory, so long as this parliament retains control of the government of this country amendments can be made to this proposed reorganization.

However, I wish to say that I cannot agree with the argument that we can adopt the practice that is customary in Great Britain, which has an inner cabinet and an outer cabinet, or an inner cabinet and ministers. They work under different circumstances there. The country is very much smaller than ours; it has unitary government, with a completely different set of circumstances from those facing this parliament when it comes to the passage of laws and their administration.

Personally I am one of those who care little for humbug, and I run into it a lot nowadays. We all know humbug exists, whether governments admit it or not, whether the present government admits it or whether the former government admitted it. I am not objecting to the number of cabinet ministers, but they have a different function in this country.

We all know that cabinet ministers have to be appointed in a democratic country so that all provinces are represented in the cabinet. Consideration has to be given to other interests, other religions and to other factors in this country. Whether we say so or not, we know that is the way cabinets are appointed in this country, and rightly so in a democracy, where consideration has to be given to the people's opinions, the people's prejudices and the people's wishes.

Mr. McIntosh: May I ask the hon. member a question? May I ask what cabinet minister from Saskatchewan was appointed?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I adopt what you have said on other occasions. That is a theoretical and argumentative question. But I think we can face the fact that a cabinet is appointed in Canada bearing all those factors in mind. No matter whether Liberals or Conservatives form the government, they adopt the same principles in appointing the cabinet in this country. Were we to form a government we should do the same if we were going to reflect the wishes of the people in the provinces, and all their interests.

I do suggest, with the increased, shall I say, complications of government, that ministers should have more opportunity to travel in the country, not just to deal with policy but to study questions of policy, and to consult with their senior civil servants on these questions. In that respect, Mr. Speaker, I think that the government should give some consideration to the training of parliamentary secretaries, so that parliamentary secretaries might at least remove some of the administrative burden now carried by ministers. That sort of thing could be done if there were a determined attempt on the part of the government to build what in effect would be a system of junior ministers, in the form of parliamentary secretaries, who would be paid for their responsibilities, who could be given extra training and extra work in order to relieve the ministers, shall I say, of quite a lot of the burden of day to day administration.

I think all hon. members of the house will agree with me that it is the responsibility of this government to govern in Canada. In connection with that I should like to quote a question that I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs on orders of the day. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, at that time you cut my political cords. I asked this question: "In view of the fact that Arnold C. Smith, who is Secretary General of the Commonwealth Secretariat is reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail on Monday, May 23, as saying in a speech delivered at Queen's University Convocation that: 'Governing, is more and more rooted in the expert adviser, rather than in the politician'"—I will not finish the question, Mr. Speaker. You know, Mr. Speaker, I was honestly taken aback when I read that. This is something that must be fought against in this country. When we admit that the government of this country is rooted in paid civil servants rather than in the Parliament of Canada, we are marching toward an authoritarian form of government.

I have had a little experience in life. I have always been in the habit of dividing people into two groups, the producers, and the other group which chooses to live on other people's human weaknesses and ignorance. I have found, as a result of experience in a good many organizations, that I would rather trust the wisdom and common sense of the average man when any particular question is brought to his attention, no matter whether this is on the municipal, provincial or federal level, than I would the sort of narrow wisdom of experts. Their wisdom is narrow because they are trained in a very narrow and particular field.

In concluding my few remarks, I want to emphasize that whatever we do, whatever our views are in this house—and I think it is only right that those views that are held conscientiously should be respected—we must maintain that this parliament govern Canada, and that the roots of government are not more and more to be found in the senior civil service of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, like all other hon. members I would like to make my contribution and say what I think about the present organization and the various departments concerned.

We have before us Bill C-178, an Act respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto. It says:

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts—

And there follows a series of clauses in which the various functions of various departments, which would operate satisfactorily if the economy were better organized, are more clearly enunciated. Since the economy does not favour them, those departments do not serve their purpose. To do that, Mr. Speaker, and to do it well, what goes well must be left alone and what goes wrong must be corrected. Everything that goes well in those various departments must be left alone and everything that goes wrong must be corrected.

There are many departments where things are not going well. They are going badly in the Department of Justice, the Department of Finance, the Department of National Health and Welfare and in all departments more or less.

To remedy the situation, to improve it, departments and responsibilities are increased, and the officials of those departments are asked to become farmers, workers, financiers, administrators of private property. That is not the way to solve the problem.

Departments must be in a position to operate and set up the necessary regulations and citizens must be able to live and comply with them. When the citizens cannot abide by those regulations, instead of trying to cope with unsatisfactory economic conditions, the departments are asked to become distributors, buyers, economists in every field.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Do hon. members wish to call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the house leader indicate the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Benson: May I have the indulgence of the house, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow we intend to proceed with second reading of this bill, and with the committee stage of the bill. Assuming that we have finished all that tomorrow, we shall proceed with the collective bargaining bill and then to the public service employment act; then to the amendments to the Financial Administration Act. If we finish all that we would proceed with debate on the resolution preceding the omnibus bill to amend the various pension plans in the civil service.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What about Thursday?

Mr. Benson: If we finish all this tomorrow we would hope to find some other business for Thursday.

TORONTO—MONTREAL—DESTINATION OF BUTTER STORED IN SHED

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, the question I should like to raise tonight stems from an article in a well-known farm paper La Terre de Chez Nous. Indeed, the following article which was published on May 11 last goes with comments.

> Fire recently razed some sheds in Montreal harbour. According to an unofficial but most reliable source, one of the sheds contained approximately 3,000 tons of butter imported from Denmark a few days previously, that is 6,000,000 pounds. Yet, no one had heard anything about it before, even though butter imports have been mentioned often enough during the past few months.
> The authorities have the duty to supply exact and up-to-date information in that connection. It would be utterly intolerable if a game of hide and seek were to be played in such cases. Yes or no, has the recent fire in Montreal Harbour destroyed 3,000 tons of Danish butter? Apart from those 3,000 tons, what was the total quantity of butter imported in the past few weeks? How much is it proposed to import in the forthcoming months?
> Are more fires of that kind required to lift the veil of secrecy on recent imports of eggs, which are purported to be the cause of a grave uneasiness on the Quebec market?
> And how can one determine the dire consequences of certain large scale purchases of eggs from other provinces, which are purported to have been made very recently, always in order to bring down the price of eggs in the province of Quebec?
> The hide-and-seek tactics of some dealers in such areas cannot be tolerated. Government authorities have at least the duty to make such information public as it is uncovered. If Quebec products are to be competed against and their prices brought down, by bringing in products from the outside, the responsible parties should be at least decent enough and courageous enough to make it known.
> Things should not come to the point where the only way to find out the truth is through fire . . . in such case, some people are sure to be really burned up.

In view of the fact that this news item about 6,000,000 pounds of butter from Denmark has not been denied, I have tried to find out from the minister what was the destination of that imported butter.

That news worried me because I know that dairy producers have to agitate and fight against incomes that are much too low.

I know that for the last year or two, butter consumption in Canada has exceeded production, about 23 million in 1965, but that does not mean that we cannot produce all the butter we can eat.

I believe, as La Terre de Chez Nous, that dairy producers should be informed of imports and exports of agricultural products.

The government tells us it wants to find a way of raising the income of dairy producers, but if it opens the door to butter imports Canadian producers may suffer.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister or his representative what was the destination of that butter imported from Denmark; how much was imported; does the government intend to import more.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), I should like to give the following explanation. I am sorry I cannot answer all parts of the question put by the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise).

The 6,000,000 pounds of butter—I am told that is the figure—which melted in the harbour of Montreal fire were part of a series of imports authorized over the past nine months by the Department of Trade and Commerce, under the Export and Import Permits Act and with the consent of the Department of Agriculture.

That butter is imported for processing on the spot and immediate or nearly immediate reshipment.

In the case of the six millions pounds of butter in question, they were supposed to be reshipped for June 18, 1966.

Why those imports? Well, it seems that their purpose is not to compete with local industries, but on the contrary, to help the local factories specialized in butter processing.

Because of the situation mentioned by the hon. member it happens that certain processing plants are not sufficiently busy at the present time. That butter is imported to give them work, and the butter is then reshipped.

In the circumstances, three plants in the province of Quebec and one in the province of Ontario are involved. Among the three Quebec plants, there is the co-operative of Granby, the most important.

Where did that butter come from? From Europe. The hon. member mentioned Denmark. I am told also that some of it came from the Netherlands.

Where was it to be exported? To the United States and South America.

[Mr. Laprise.]

I hope this answers most of the questions raised by the hon. member.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—DISMISSAL OF PRODUCER OF COLUMBIA RIVER FILM

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on May 19 I asked the following question:

> I wish to direct a question to the minister who will be acting for the Secretary of State today. In view of the fact that Mr. Tom Conochie, producer of the very interesting Columbia river television film for the C.B.C., has been informed that he will no longer be producer of this film, and in view of the fact that residents of British Columbia consider this a magnificent film and some say that Mr. Tom Conochie can show the Ottawa bunch a thing or two about how to film a river story—

And so on. In view of the circumstances surrounding this further unfortunate incident concerning producers employed by the C.B.C., and in view of my information with regard to the possibility of the cancellation of Wing Commander Tom Conochie's contract, which information has come from persons inside the C.B.C. in Vancouver but not from Mr. Tom Conochie himself, I am concerned about the completion of the work this producer has been doing in British Columbia.

He has had a great deal of experience. He was in charge of this type of work for the present government during the second world war and, since being a producer for the C.B.C., has produced a number of excellent films which have been recognized not only in Canada but also in other countries. Quite recently he undertook to make a film called "Columbia River and Tributaries of Power". This was a 60 minute film documentary of one of the great rivers of the world. It has been shown in British Columbia, but to date has not been shown in Ottawa.

Mr. Pepin: I have seen it.

Mr. Herridge: The minister says he has seen it. I hope that other members of this house will have the opportunity to see it, because it does present a very beautiful part of the district and records a very excellent story in respect of developments in that area at this time.

I hope the minister will use his influence with the Secretary of State to see that members of the house have an opportunity to see this most interesting documentary film. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that this man was well liked by all the people in the Kootenay area. Not only is he a good producer, but also he is bilingual and an artist in several respects. He has a certain common touch which makes him at home with the type of people with whom he is in contact. People are very concerned that this producer's contract may be cancelled and that he will not have an opportunity to conclude his work. Apparently this is quite fairly well known in British Columbia and particularly in the Kootenays.

I am rising this evening to bring the matter to the attention of the parliamentary secretary and ask him to bring it to the attention of the minister, so that he will have an opportunity to obtain the facts and see what can be done to retain the services of this first rate producer who has served the C.B.C. for quite a long period.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State : Mr. Speaker, no member who knows well the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) is surprised at his interest in this film on the Columbia and, consequently, we are putting ourselves in the present atmosphere created by what we are agreed to call the "Seven Days" affair, the not less marked interest in the lot of the producer of this film on the Columbia, Mr. Tom Conochie. That is why it seemed unavoidable, under these circumstances, that the case of Mr. Conochie be not raised.

Being most sensitive to anything dealing with the Columbia river, those who followed the vicissitudes of the signing of the Columbia river treaty, will recall the numerous interventions of the hon member for Kootenay West. It was the intention of the hon. member to intervene as a result of what he calls the firing of the producer of the film on the Columbia river. In this case, as in others of the same kind, it is well to point out, in my opinion, that C.B.C. producers are employed on a contract basis and work regularly under contract with the corporation. In the case of Mr. Conochie, his contract was for 12 months and expired in January, 1966. On that date, that is in January, 1966, the C.B.C. which had signed with this producer a contract containing clauses stipulating that the corporation could, with or without reason, renew or not renew a contract, decided that Mr. Tom Conochie's contract expiring in January was not to be renewed. However, another contract was offered to him, but for a shorter term, that is 14 weeks, and Mr. Conochie turned it down. From January to May 14, 1966, Mr. Conochie worked for the C.B.C. as a producer on a monthly basis.

What has more interest for the hon. member for Kootenay West is the showing of the film on the Columbia river. In July, 1965, the producer, Mr. Conochie, was asked to produce black and white and colour films on the Columbia river for March 1, 1966.

Now, on March 1, 1966, the work was not completed. It is perhaps one of the reasons why the contract was not renewed.

In reply to the question which seems to interest the hon. member for Kootenay West, namely, if the film produced by Mr. Conochie, which he saw himself could be shown to members of this house, I must tell him, after inquiring from the C.B.C., that corporation authorities are making every possible effort to enable members of this house to take advantage of the fine work done by Mr. Tom Conochie in this very interesting film on the Columbia river and which is of great interest to the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.16 p.m.

Question No. 998—Mr. McCleave:

Was Victor Spencer paid for his appearance on "This Hour Has Seven Days" Sunday night, March 6 and, if so, in what amount?

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

The C.B.C. purchased the television rights to the interview with Victor Spencer from Jack Webster Productions Limited of Vancouver. Any fee paid Mr. Spencer for the interview would have been negotiated by Mr. Webster and the corporation has no official knowledge of any such transaction.

C.B.C. INTERVIEW WITH GERDA MUNSINGER

Question No. 1,080—Mr. Allard:

1. How much did the C.B.C. spend in order to obtain and produce a filmed interview in Munich with Mrs. Gerda Munsinger?

2. What was the amount of additional and special costs, either in salaries or travel expenses, that the C.B.C. paid to its regular or special employees, in order to reach this person and to interview her?

3. For what purpose was it decided to authorize these expenditures?

[Translation]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. $5,000 was paid to Mrs. Munsinger's agent and $3,000 was paid to the Toronto Daily Star. The C.B.C. recovered $2,000 through sale of the program material to the N.B.C. network in the United States.

2. The combined cost for transportation, staff expenses, etc., for coverage in Germany was $3,050 for providing coverage on four networks, English and French, radio and television.

3. This had become a news story of the first importance, and a primary consideration was the Canadian people's right and need to be informed in the most direct way possible.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Citizenship and Immigration and Northern Affairs and National Resources as follows:

The Department of Citizenship and Immigration's total cost to date is $45,667.86.

This includes expenditures from a revolving fund loan, Indian affairs branch appropriations, and shared cost expenditures under the Canadian Vocational Training Act.

*C.B.C. RECORD MAKING FACILITIES

Question No. 1,118—Mr. Macaluso:

1. Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation record-making facilities available?

2. If so, could they be made available to the R.C.M.P. band in order to produce records of its performance at Expo '67 as a cultural project?

3. If not, why can such facilities not be made available for such a project?

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): The answer is as follows:

1. The C.B.C. has recording facilities, but not record making facilities in the commercial sense.

2. The corporation's facilities in Montreal could be made available for purposes of recording a broadcast performance by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police band with co-operation of the musicians' union. Reproduction of a broadcast recording for commercial distribution would require co-operation between the musicians' union and a recording company. An agreement between the union and an interested recording company would also be required in the case of a performance not primarily intended for broadcast, in which case C.B.C. participation would not be necessary.

*RECORDING OF R.C.M.P. BAND AT EXPO '67

Question No. 1,139—Mr. Macaluso:

3. Who were these people and for what programs did they receive this amount?

[Translation]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State):

1. $5,000 was paid to Mrs. Munsinger's agent.

2. None.

3. N/A.

[English]

COST OF ANSWERING QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

Question No. 1,167—Mr. Reid:

1. What is the average estimated cost of answering a question on the Order Paper?

2. How many people, on the average, are employed in research involved in answering these questions?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. and 2. Questions on the order paper may generally be placed in various categories depending on whether: (a) information is required from one government department or agency, or (b) information is required from more than one government department or agency, or (c) information is required from all government departments and agencies, or (d) information is required from a crown corporation, or (e) information is required from more than one government department or agency and a crown corporation, or (f) information is required from all government departments, agencies and crown corporations.

In the circumstances, it is not possible to estimate the average cost of answering a question on the order paper or to determine on the average, how many people are employed in research involved in answering these questions. This varies considerably with each question. All departments have an official assigned to deal with parliamentary inquiries and to direct the subject matter of the question to the appropriate division or divisions of the department and/or the crown corporation. In most cases, this is not their only function. On the other hand, answering some questions may involve a large number of people representing many man days of labour. Furthermore, in many cases the information requested is not available at the departmental headquarters in Ottawa and it is necessary to dispatch the request to a regional office or centre in any one or all of the ten provinces, or even to a departmental office located outside of Canada.

Because of these factors, it is virtually impossible to provide any meaningful or accurate statistics as to "average" costs or persons involved.

EXTENSION OF TELEVISION SERVICE, CAPE BRETON ISLAND

Question No. 1,231—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Does the government plan to provide adequate television service to the communities of Pleasant Bay, Red River, Capstick, Bay St. Lawrence, St. Margaret's Village, Dingwall, North Harbour, South Harbour, Sunrise, Big Intervale, Cape North, Aspy Bay, Sugar Loaf, White Point, Smelt Brook and Bay Road Valley in northern Cape Breton island, N.S.?

2. Has the government, through any of its ministers, received representation in this regard and, if so (a) what reply was given (b) what action, if any, is contemplated?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. I am informed by the C.B.C. that the corporation has no immediate plans for a television installation in northern Cape Breton island due to the small population and relatively high cost per capita. However, this and other areas without adequate service will warrant further study after new 1966 census data become available.

2. As far as the Secretary of State is concerned, a letter was received (dated October 31, 1964), from Mr. Walter C. Moore, Red River post office, Inverness county, N.S., regarding television service in the community of Pleasant Bay. The executive assistant, corporate affairs, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, wrote directly to Mr. Moore on November 25, 1964, as follows:

> We are attempting to extend the service as funds and facilities for the purpose are available, by dealing first with those areas where the per capita cost involved enables us to benefit the largest number of people at the lowest cost. In that way the corporation is expending the public funds involved in an economical way.

4. How many tons of concentrated or pelletized taconite are exported annually and to what countries are they exported?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. If by the term "taconite" is meant an iron bearing deposit from which the mined material must be finely ground (under 100 mesh) to free the iron mineral then the principal taconite deposits in Canada are in northern Ontario and Quebec.

2. Accepting the above definition there are four taconite mining operations in Canada, three in Ontario and one in Quebec. Two additional ones are being developed in Ontario for production in 1967-68. The three mines in Ontario are owned and operated by American companies; fifty per cent of the Quebec operation is held by a Canadian company; the two Ontario mines being developed are optioned by Canadian companies. Optionees of the deposits being mined are Bethlehem Steel Company, National Steel Company, Jones and Laughlin Steel Corporation (U.S. companies) and the Steel Company of Canada, Limited. The latter company and Dominion Foundries and Steel, Limited (Can. companies) have optioned the two deposits being developed for production.

3. Each of the facilities in (2) above consists of a mine, a concentrator and a pelletizing plant. Therefore, at present there are four taconite pelletizing plants in Canada operated in conjunction with mines and concentrators of the companies in (2) above. In addition, there are six other operations in Canada that ship iron ore pellets from beneficiating-grade iron ore by-product material and others that ship concentrates; none of the deposits from which these pellets and concentrates are produced are termed taconites.

4. Of taconite pellet production by the companies in (2) above in 1965, amounting to 3 million long tons, 2.1 million tons were exported to the United States.

5. Shipments of pellets from taconites in 1965 to Canadian steel mills were 900,000 tons. Small shipments of concentrate are included in this total.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that other notices of motions be allowed to stand.

HALIFAX, N.S.—DEATH OF WILLIAM SCUDDER

Motion No. 94—Mr. Douglas:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any report covering the investigation into the death of William Scudder while he was employed on ship refit work on H.M.C.S. Provider at Halifax in 1965.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): The hon. member agrees to withdraw the notice of motion.

HEARINGS OF ALBERTA ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION

Motion No. 121—Mr. Woolliams:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all reports, records or documents indicating the places, dates, and times of public hearings held by the electoral boundaries commission for Alberta and the members of the commission and staff attending each hearing; for a copy of the transcript of the proceedings of each hearing; for a return of the record of each hearing if no transcript was made; for the memorandum provided to members of the commission who were absent from any meeting; and for the résumé or other document prepared by the commission or any of its members setting out the reasons for changes made in the electoral boundaries for Alberta.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, with respect to this motion, it has already been explained to the house that the Secretary of State's department is not responsible for any of the hearings which were held by, or for the matters which took place before, the boundaries commissions. I am informed by the chief representation officer that in his opinion there is no way in which the boundaries commissions can be asked to produce such information. In some cases no records of any kind in the form of transcripts and whatnot were kept. It is therefore not within the power of the government to produce for the house the kind of documentation which is requested.

This matter was raised by my hon. friend the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) while the boundaries question was being discussed in the house, and the position was made clear to him at the time. I am afraid my hon. friend did not agree with me, and I understand that he has asked his hon. friend to place this motion on the order paper. However, the government is not in a position to answer the motion even if the house were to make an order for a return. Therefore under the circumstances I would entreat the hon. member who placed the matter on the order paper to withdraw it.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on the point raised by the Secretary of State may I say, as I indicated some weeks ago when discussing this particular problem, that the order is an order of the house. It is conceivable that there is no responsibility on the government with regard to the matter, but the Secretary of State is the only channel through which the house can direct its wishes in this regard.

I am sure every member of this house agrees that no boundaries redistribution commission of any province has been sent off into orbit beyond recall from this house. Therefore, with the greatest respect to the chief redistribution officer, this house is still the master of these matters. If this house makes an order directing the production of these papers, then the boundaries commission must produce the papers.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, then in order to give an opportunity for all members to express themselves on the point, may I ask that the matter be transferred for debate.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It may not be quite a point of order, but I would mention to the minister that it may be a little late getting down to debate.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 47 this motion is transferred for debate.

SEAFARERS INTERNATIONAL UNION

Motion No. 128—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any communication exchanged between the maritime trustees, or other organizations and other persons, and the Minister of Labour or any official of the Department of Labour, with respect to the Seafarers International Union.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I had moved this the other day, and I was just not sure of the procedure by which it could be revived. In commenting about this matter perhaps I should refer to last week's Hansard, where at page 5267 I am reported to have said in response to a statement by the minister, which was just prior to the interruption that took place:

Mr. Speaker, in view of the unique reply of the minister as compared to what he has said—

What I said was:

—in view of the unique reply of the minister as compared with what has been said—

In any event, I have considered the matter very carefully, and I think the only solution is to transfer this matter for debate.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I think I mentioned last week just before the disturbance to which reference has been made occurred, a very similar motion has already been debated in this house. I wonder if this could not be put to a vote at this time.

Mr. Speaker: There is a request that this be transferred. Pursuant to standing order 47 this motion is transferred for debate.

SHAREHOLDINGS OF CABLE TELEVISION COMPANIES

Motion No. 129—Mr. Munro:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of a return showing the shareholdings of all cable television companies at present licensed by the Department of Transport to operate in Canada.

Motion agreed to.

STUDY BY DYNAME CORPORATION OF TOURIST RESORT AREA

Motion No. 130—Mr. Keays:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Minister of Forestry and Dyname Corporation relating to an economic study and a program of development for a tourist resort area at Mount Logan or Mount Albert.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a question with regard to notice of motion for production of papers No. 72, in my name. I have had a private conversation with the Minister of Finance about this motion, but in view of the fact that it has been on the order paper since January 31 I wonder if the minister is now in a position to indicate to the house when the government might be prepared to agree to this motion, and to have the documents tabled.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when this notice of motion for the production of papers first appeared I asked my department to let me see the papers that would be producible. Some of these papers indicated the table of contents or the proposed contents of the report of the Carter royal commission. I therefore asked the hon. member whether he would not allow this matter to stand until the report of the royal commission has been tabled, at which time I should have no objection whatever to the tabling of the papers.

Mr. Knowles: Could the minister indicate when that might be?

Mr. Sharp: My traditional answer is "soon". I understand it will be in two or three weeks' time.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him, in view of the report that the proposal put forward by Judge Lippe in the longshoremen's strike in Montreal has been turned down, the strike having occasioned an economic loss of close to $15 million, what steps is the government going to take and how soon will it take those steps to end this dispute?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think it should be made clear that the suggestion or proposal put forward by the mediator, Judge Lippe, was an interim proposal in the hope that he could get the longshoremen back to work at the beginning of this week. His attempts to accomplish that end have failed. However, the mediator is back in session today with other proposals, which it is hoped will meet with a more favourable response. The other proposal covered an interim settlement only, which would have covered a period of roughly five months, and the unions concerned felt this period was much too short. I believe the parties are now in session, and I am hoping to get a report later today.

Mr. Starr: Since this strike has been prolonged, is the Minister of Labour now getting reports from Judge Lippe at regular intervals as to the progress of the negotiations?

Mr. Nicholson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO LOAN FOR ARCTIC EXPLORATION WORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has he received an application for a loan from a syndicate headed by J. C. Sproule and Associates Limited of Calgary for exploration work in the Canadian Arctic? I wonder whether the minister would be prepared, either now or later, to give the house a statement indicating the amount of money involved and the terms on which such a loan would be made. I am particularly interested in knowing whether the government would acquire some equity interest in the project by way of fixed net royalty should a loan be granted.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt very much that this is a matter of real urgency or that the question should be allowed at this time, although the minister responsible for the matter raised by the hon. member may wish to indicate whether he proposes to make a statement on motions at some later date.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): That is so. We have not yet completed the draft regulations pertaining to this particular exploration grant. When we have done so I expect to make a statement in the house.

Mr. Douglas: Since this would be setting a precedent for other loans in the Canadian Arctic I would appreciate knowing whether the minister contemplates making a statement before the deal is completed or after the loan has been made.

Mr. Laing: I can assure the hon. member it would be before the loan is made.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

HULL, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

For four years the Minister of Public Works, the present one as well as those who came before him, have always told us that they paid much attention to the city of Hull with regard to the construction of federal public buildings.

Is the Minister of Public Works in a position to tell us today whether or not his department is considering the construction of new federal buildings in the city of Hull?

Mr. Speaker: The question is of a very general nature and is not in order right now.

Mr. Caouette: My question deals with the city of Hull. It is a very precise question; it does not concern Canada in general but only the city of Hull.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UGANDA—INQUIRY AS TO SAFETY OF CANADIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates to Uganda where the situation has reached the point of civil war. Can the minister reassure us as to the safety of Canadians there, and does he have any further comments to make on the situation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the hon. member knows, there has been a serious disturbance in Uganda. The situation there has, however, been fully covered by the news media in this country. I cannot add anything at this stage to what has already been reported. There are some 300 Canadians in Uganda. I have no reason to believe that their safety is in any way prejudiced at the moment as a result of this situation. We are following events closely.

RETIREMENT OF CANADIAN MINISTER TO GREECE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether Mr. Barrette, the Canadian ambassador in Athens, has been relieved of his post by order of the minister or of the government.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In answer to this question I would say that about a year ago, on June 8 last, Mr. Barrette informed the undersecretary of state for external affairs of his intention to publish a book in which he would describe certain events in which he took part during his 25 years as member of the legislative assembly, minister and Prime Minister of the province of Quebec. Later he sent his manuscript to the department.

Mr. Barrette was then advised that the publication of his memoirs, which were bound to give rise to controversy, was not compatible with his functions as Canadian ambassador to Greece and would conflict with departmental regulations which prevent any member of the Canadian diplomatic service from publicly expressing an opinion on controversial domestic political questions.

Mr. Barrette replied that he was most anxious to publish the book and consequently, on April 25 last, in all the circumstances he asked to be relieved of his duties. On May 5 I granted his request.

Mr. Churchill: As a supplementary question, do I understand that there are rules and regulations regarding the publication of articles or books by people who are employed as Canadian ambassadors, and do these same rules or regulations apply to ministers of external affairs?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the last part of the question, of course, is quite academic. There are rules with regard to ambassadors and officers of the Department of External Affairs. Mr. Barrette was aware of these rules and has not questioned them.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL ACCIDENT RESEARCH CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I would direct this question to the Minister of Industry since he is in charge of research matters for the government. In view of the record slaughter on our highways over the May 24 week end will the government seriously consider the establishment of a national accident research centre, as recommended in a bipartisan brief presented to the right hon. Prime Minister over 10 months ago?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, we are giving study to this question.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether the revision in the Bank Act will be known as the Walter Sharp formula.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Can she identify the Mr. Gordon whom Premier Thatcher cautioned the Canadian people about last evening in a national television broadcast?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REFUSAL OF B.C. LONGSHOREMEN TO WORK ON VICTORIA DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Labour said he would take as notice the question I asked him arising out of the fact that the longshoremen of B.C. have been under harassment by their employers over the matter of the May 23 holiday as provided in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. I wonder if the minister has an answer for me today.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday and Friday of last week the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam inquired concerning a controversy that developed on the west coast with regard to the employment of longshoremen on May 23, Victoria day, which is specified as a general holiday in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. The complaint arose with regard to the rates of pay which the employees claim are incompatible with the code.

I would reply that I was aware of the controversy because representatives of the international longshoremen's and warehousemen's union had discussed it some time ago in Ottawa with my departmental officials who administer the code. It would appear that so far the union has made only general allegations with regard to alleged violation of the code. Before any interpretation or ruling can be given by the department there would have to be a specific case cited where an employee had not received holiday pay or pay in the proper amount, whether it would be double pay or otherwise.

The hon. member also asked concerning the advisability of an inquiry into this matter under section 35 of the code, and I would say that a formal inquiry would not appear to be necessary at this time. If and when a specific complaint is made it will be dealt with in the usual way and an interpretation and ruling made with respect to the rights of employees under the code.

Coming now to the question asked by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, which was put as a supplementary question yesterday, it does not appear, on the basis of the information we have, that an amendment to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code is needed.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether the Pacific coast dispute was not due to the contention of the employers that the collective bargaining agreement took precedence over the Canada Labour (Standards) Code? Has any ruling been handed down, or is it the minister's intention to have an inquiry into this aspect of the dispute?

Mr. Nicholson: This question was raised by the employers in the Supreme Court of British Columbia before Mr. Justice Ruttan. I have asked for a report as to His Lordship's reasons in the decision he rendered, but I might say I still do not think it will be necessary to hold an inquiry. If the union gives us the facts of a specific case, then in my humble opinion it probably can be dealt with under the act as it stands, but I would like to have Mr. Justice Ruttan's reasons for judgment before making a final statement.

AGRICULTURE

MANITOBA—REPORTED DISEASE IN CATTLE HERDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Springfield asked a question regarding an outbreak of disease among cattle herds in Manitoba, to which I replied that I had not received any comunication but would check with the office of the minister.

There was an outbreak in early April of Salmonellosis affecting some 20 herds. This is not a named or reportable disease under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and regulations. The outbreak was dealt with by the provincial authorities assisted by officials of the health of animals division of the Canadian Department of Agriculture, in their investigations. I am advised that there have been no further cases reported since that time, but our officials are continuing to co-operate with the provincial authorities in further investigation of the cause.

WINTER WORKS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REPORTED FRAUDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the future minister of manpower?

As concerns the question I had asked him some time ago about Notre-Dame-de-la-Guadeloupe, winter works and certain charges of fraud and swindle in this field, the minister had promised to hold an inquiry. Can the minister inform the house as to the results of this inquiry, if completed?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Mégantic knows that the inquiry he has asked for must be handled through the provincial government. The steps have been taken and as soon as I know the results, I will be glad to advise him accordingly.

FARM MACHINERY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING INVESTIGATION REQUEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture, but in view of his absence today and I believe also his absence yesterday, I shall put it to the Prime Minister. In answer to a question which I put some days ago the Minister of Agriculture promised that an inquiry would be set up into the high cost of farm machinery. In view of the report that Massey Harris has shown a 160 per cent increase in its profits, has the government taken a decision to set up that inquiry now?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter is under consideration. I expect to be able to make an announcement, or that the minister will do so, within a day or two.

Inquiries of the Ministry

MANPOWER

USE OF NAME BY PRIVATE ORGANIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Could the minister inform the house whether he has received representations from Man Power Service Ltd. regarding the proposed use of the name "manpower service office" by the department of manpower; and could he indicate whether he is taking steps to ensure that the rights and privileges of this company will not be infringed by government action?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL DELIVERY QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. McLelland (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance in his capacity as reporting for the Canadian Wheat Board. As of today at most delivery points in Saskatchewan there remain only 46 days on which elevators will be open to receive grain from the farmers, and as quotas at the present time range from 5 bushels to 10 bushels per specified acre, can the minister give the house any assurance that the Canadian Wheat Board will try to equalize these quotas in the remaining 46 days as the deliveries for this crop year will be closed off at the end of that period?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly give the hon. member every assurance that the wheat board has that as its objective. I think the hon. member is aware, as I have been, of the remarkable progress that has been made in recent months in the equalization of quotas.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that it is now late May, and that on April 19 he advised the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich that he was not as yet prepared to release Mr. Justice Wood's report on the Canadian pension commission, can he now advise the house about the present status of that report?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Teillet: If I may return to my seat, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Order. You cannot answer from there.

Mr. Teillet: If I may return to my seat I will answer the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, if I may now answer the question asked a moment ago, I should like to repeat the answer I gave to a similar question yesterday at a meeting of the standing committee. It is expected now that this report will be received in about August.

[Later:]

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and arises out of the answer he gave to the hon. member for Halifax a moment ago. In view of the fact that the Wood commission report will not reach his hands until August, will the minister reconsider the answer he gave to a previous question to the effect that he will not introduce any veterans legislation in this house until after he receives that report? It seems to me it will take—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has completed his question.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, my question is this. Will the minister introduce veterans legislation at this session?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to add anything to what I said in answer to the earlier question. If the hon. member will be specific as to what he has in mind perhaps I can give a more definitive answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. minister that the hon. member has been specific, and that when the minister states he cannot reply to the question the matter should end there.

HAMILTON, ONT.—REPORTED SHORTAGE OF HOSPITAL BEDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that there is a critical shortage of beds in veterans' hospitals, which fact was responsible for the death of at least one veteran in Hamilton, and that there are 200 veterans in Hamilton with the same medical condition awaiting admission to Sunnybrook hospital, is the government taking any steps to alleviate this situation?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept, of course, the premise on which the question was based. If the hon. member will supply me with specific details of the case to which he is referring, I will have it looked into.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

LEGISLATION COVERING POSSESSION OF DRUG LSD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but in his absence I should like to direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the reported seizure of a large quantity of the drug LSD in Toronto, is the Prime Minister prepared to announce legislation covering the possession of this dangerous drug?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to discuss this with the minister on his return later this afternoon.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS WITH UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour?

Is it true that tomorrow or the day after tomorrow a meeting of the special committee of the federal cabinet will be held to study the litigation between the C.N.T.U. and the C.L.C. in connection with C.B.C. employees?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that this question is acceptable.

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Labour.

Can he tell us if the Canadian Labour Congress refused to participate in a joint meeting of the C.L.C. and the C.N.T.U. to deal with the current C.B.C. union dispute, which meeting the minister had announced to the house some time ago?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there is no truth in that suggestion. A meeting had been tentatively arranged for Friday morning of this week at the request of the railway brotherhoods. The Canadian Congress of Labour intimated that it would like to participate in any such discussions. I might say that at least one other labour organization, which is not associated with either the C.N.T.U. or C.L.C., has expressed a similar desire. It may be necessary for us to arrange another date, and we are now waiting a decision as to date from the ad hoc committee. I am awaiting the return of the chairman of this committee, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to discuss the date with him.

I might say that I personally was inclined to agree to a short adjournment of the meeting, providing it could be held not later than around the middle of June, but I will have to discuss the date with the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he returns, and proceed with arrangements for the next meeting.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, it may be that interpretation is wanting, but my question to the hon. Minister of Labour deals with the C.B.C. dispute and not the railways.

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, that is the very matter to which I was referring. The railway unions, like any other nation-wide organizations, have an interest in the matter that was dealt with by the national labour relations board and is being considered by the ad hoc committee. The government would like to have all aspects of this matter before it, not just the aspects pertaining to the C.B.C.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF MEDIATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has received a report from Mr. Stuart Keate in respect of the dispute between the C.B.C. and its producers. If so, is the Prime Minister prepared to inform the house as to its contents?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this report was delivered to my office a few minutes before I came into the house. I hope to be able to read it this evening and forward it to the two parties concerned, after which it will be made public.

AIR CANADA

STATEMENT ON THREATENED STRIKE OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. John N. Turner (Member of the Administration): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport undertook to provide an answer to the hon. member for New Westminster regarding a dispute which exists between the Canadian Airline Employees Association and Air Canada. I am advised by Air Canada that at a conciliation board meeting with negotiating committees of the union and Air Canada there was unanimous agreement as to the terms of a new contract, but that to date the membership of the union has failed to accept their recommendation. Officials of the union are understood to be meeting today to determine the position of that group.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REPORTED APPEAL BY UN SECRETARY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have not sent him notice of it, but it is about a subject with which I know he is familiar and will not be embarrassed. Has the minister noted the urgent appeal of the secretary general of the United Nations yesterday at the convention in Atlantic City of the amalgamated clothing workers, urging that both sides in the war in Viet Nam should now scale down military operations and take the initiative in direct negotiation; and will the government give its support to Mr. U Thant's plea?

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did note what the secretary general said yesterday. What he said was precisely the same as what he said the other day in London. The Canadian government's actions with respect to the role of the commission are not inconsistent with this plea.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

PROPOSAL BY ZAMBIA THAT U.K. BE EXPELLED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has sent a message to the prime minister of Zambia advising him that Canada will not support Zambia's proposal to expel Great Britain from the commonwealth?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all I have seen about this proposed action, which it is reported may be taken by President Kaunda, is what I have read in the press. The other day we had an opportunity of exchanging views with his minister of foreign affairs here in Ottawa, and I think the government of Zambia is aware of the views of the Canadian government in this regard.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, how can the government be aware of the situation unless something has been said by the minister? In the interests of maintaining a united commonwealth, and in view of the support we have been giving Zambia recently, should we not take some step to strengthen the commonwealth rather than permit a country like this to suggest the expulsion of the senior member?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with my hon. friend that we should take every step we can to strengthen the commonwealth. As I said, we did have a discussion here the other day with the foreign minister of Zambia. I think my hon. friend will be able to conclude, from what I said before the external affairs committee on this subject, that we are very anxious to see to it that action taken with regard to the problem in Rhodesia is not designed in any way to destroy the unity of the commonwealth, that indispensable organism for international harmony at the present time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LABOUR SAFETY CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can he now tell us when it is intended to bring the proposed Canada labour safety code before the house?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): At a very early date, Mr. Speaker; I would say within the next 15 days, or so.

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. As it was indicated by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys that Dr. Donald had dotted his "i's" and crossed his "t's" over three weeks ago, when does the minister expect to receive the Donald report?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I am expecting it at any time, Mr. Speaker. I am not absolutely sure but I understand Dr. Donald has now completed it and that it is on its way to me.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Finance would be a little more specific, as was suggested by the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon).

Mr. Sharp: I have never been more specific in my life, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN FLAG

REQUEST FOR REGULATIONS RESPECTING QUALITY OF MATERIAL AND COLOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister, notice of which I have sent him. In view of the continuing use in Canada of Canadian flags containing inferior content, both in colour and texture, which results in an undesirable presentation of the flag, can the Prime Minister assure the house that the government will shortly bring in regulations governing the quality of material and colour content in the flag so that some of the embarrasssing emblems now flying can be eliminated?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEGOTIATION WITH FRENCH GOVERNMENT RESPECTING MYSTÈRE AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is to the Minister of Defence Production, Mr. Speaker. The other day I asked the Minister of National Defence a question with regard to the discussions and the stage in which they may be respecting the Mystère aircraft. He was not able to answer the question, saying that this matter lay within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Defence Production. Is that minister in a position to tell us the stage discussions have reached with regard to the acquisition by Canada of some Mystère aircraft?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): A very advanced stage, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In this new lexicon of government replies, what is an "advanced stage"? Is it almost at the hatching stage?

Mr. Drury: Almost at the hatching stage, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed, from Tuesday, May 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pearson for the second reading of Bill No. C-178, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, last night I was saying that the facts are not conformable to the present situation, that the departments cannot discharge their responsibilities, because something is not functioning properly from an economic point of view. They cannot meet the needs of the population.

Mr. Speaker, we now have a certain number of departments and the government wishes to create more. We had 26 departments, and I believe it is intended that we have 30. But all those departments cannot operate properly because something is lacking.

Government legislation and the standing orders of the house—I agree with the other members who have said so—do not conform to facts and realities, they are not adapted to present needs. I say much should be reformed, not especially within the departments but rather in the administration of the house. I am positive that even though we set up about a hundred departments, we could not go far because, as I said, the departments do not have what is needed to work well. It is well known that every department works on the basis of financial means and not on the basis of physical potentials of the country. Instead of assuming our responsibilities, we shift them to other agencies. Besides, departments already existing and those we are now setting up, we institute independent commissions to carry out responsibilities incumbent on us. Responsibilities are devolved upon various commissions which are not responsible to the people. They are responsible to the government, but they carry out their investigation and make reports which last for years and all this time, the people wait, the people have nothing. Members of parliament and the administrators of the country do nothing; no progress is made; things are at a standstill.

We discuss old methods, old financial means and old formulas. We discuss these old formulas without thinking of new ones. If commissions think of new formulas, it takes years before a report is made and when the reports are tabled, for the information of the administrators and members of parliament, three quarters of the latter do not have time to read the bulky reports made by various associations, various economists, various technicians.

Quite often, those reports fail to take into account the needs of the people. They are offered things they have no need for. Hon. members are expected to study those reports. Some are concrete, positive reports and others are useless. Therefore, I ask hon. members and the agencies coming under the house to assume their responsibilities. I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to stop creating commissions and departments here and there, when the existing ones cannot even operate. As a result, we have a number of reports which hon. members do not even have time to study. But the one who is mainly responsible for all that is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). If he does not face reality, none of those departments can operate. Departments cannot operate without money.

When the Minister of Finance restricts credit, investments, why create new departments? We are not even able to finance the existing ones. I do not agree with the Prime Minister about the creation of new departments.

Many other things should also be mentioned. The Minister of Finance does not assume his responsibilities. He allows the people in general to be exploited and parliament itself is exploited by the Minister of Finance. For instance, interest rates are usurious, encroaching, and no one inside the Department of Finance worries about it. Everything appears normal to them. Excessive rates make life very hard, cruel, merciless for Canadians, discourage any initiative from those who work and build. It is not by creating new departments without money that we will put in order our economy which is sold out, in debt, paralysed by a basically false system.

Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice also has huge responsibilities but does not always assume them. That department should expose the reasons for the present evil and punish those who commit crimes. It is good to punish the guilty ones, but the reasons for such crimes are hidden, covered up. They are never brought to light.

Our diabolic system has led a great number of citizens to become dishonest, to commit crimes. But a government in office has never disturbed anyone to put some order in our anti-human, antisocial system. New departments or a parliamentary reform will not give back to the people their rights and prerogatives, if our financial structures are not changed.

A single department would be necessary, Mr. Speaker. I think that if we wanted to establish new departments, one department would be essential, namely the department of consumption. Consumption is insufficient. Production has been created to be distributed, but it is not. It remains in warehouses and stores. Citizens are waiting to have the means to purchase that production. This is why there should be a department to co-operate with the Department of Finance and find the means to distribute that production. The people, on the contrary, are deprived through taxes and funds of all kinds, and inspectors who often have wonderful diplomas and no talent nationalize the taxpayers' money with their socialistic legislation.

What progress has been made up to now? Under the present system, nobody will have to try very hard to provide for his old age. There will be no need to figure out how to spend our money. The government will see to everything in our stead. Citizens will only have to work, that is all. The government will keep their pay and spend it for them. The government will look after us and see to it that our children are educated. In the future, the ministers will replace fathers and mothers in every respect. It will be the planning state, the wage, inheritance and freedom stealing state.

To maintain the present system will lead us shortly to the conscription of salaries by insurance, clans of all kinds, union contributions, arbitration boards and income tax.

Conscription of inheritance by death duties; conscription of savings by the pension plan; conscription of the sick by hospitals; and in the future, conscription of churches by taxes on vestry-boards.

Let the government mind its own business and first of all, let it remove the financial obstacle put by the banking system between goods and families, between shop-windows and kitchens.

Let the government set up a financial system—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I wonder what connection he is trying to establish between the banking and the financial systems which come under the government, when we are considering the reorganization of the government and the various responsibilities to devolve upon each department.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, the reorganization of the government is effected through various departments. The economy of banks, the whole country is controlled by the various departments. Since I am dealing with the Department of Finance, I am speaking about finance. It seems to me I am in order, because the Department of Finance is the major culprit. From it proceeds everything we can do in this respect, everything we can finance and operate. The Minister of Finance is the person responsible. There are many other measures which cannot be applied without the consent of the Minister of Finance. What I am trying to show is the influence which the Minister of Finance should have on the other government departments and the say he should have in the creation of the proposed new departments.

Let the government institute for each citizen a dividend, a discount compensated on prices, instead of the taxes which are bleeding us to pay Caesar.

And all the socialist plans and projects can go to a museum, from where they should never have been taken out.

Everybody will be better off. As for those with diplomas who are looking for a way to do nothing, they will always be able to live on their social dividend, which is precisely free money for those who do nothing, with the difference that each and everyone would receive this free social dividend.

• (3:40 p.m.)

The state's intervention in the economy must regularize and moralize the action of the economic forces without going to the extremes of economic planning by striving to associate professional organizations to that intervention. A good deal of our organic laws have to be redrafted in that respect. A new viewpoint, a new ideal is necessary if we really are to reorganize our economic system. If we really want our various departments to function well, all the responsible heads have to assume their responsibilities, each responsible person must find means to finance a country, its production, its development, its investments, in short the whole Canadian economy, as long as there are workers, builders, physical potentials—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order.

Mr. Latulippe: There is no reason why we should accept as barbaric a system as the one we have now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I thank the hon. member for his argument on economy but I should just like to remind him that we are now considering the sections of the bill which deal with the responsibilities of various departments.

Mr. Latulippe: I had concluded my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-178 now before us provides an opportunity to make a few remarks on the reorganization of the government of Canada.

I have only a few remarks to make. This legislation provides for the establishment of a department of the registrar general, the duties of which will be more particularly to ensure a closer study of combines, monopolies and bankruptcy.

With this in mind, I want to make a few remarks at this stage in order to point out certain things to the man who will be responsible for administering this new department.

Some time ago I had the occasion of forwarding to a friend of mine, who is the manager of a company of pre-mixed concrete the report on restrictive trade practises covering the operations of four pre-mixed concrete companies.

My friend, who heads one of the most flourishing industries of this type in operation in the region of St. Hyacinthe, went through this report with great care, and then sent his remarks to me. In those remarks, that I shall do my best to paraphrase my correspondent said that the way the government deals with the matter of combines is a farce and a tragedy detrimental to our citizens.

In his letter, my friend refers to four companies which agreed to fix the prices of their products.

He says to me: "You see, the commission works unceasingly at gathering evidence against those four small companies which are interested in their work and want to keep afloat, while the same commission pays no attention to large combines."

For instance, he says: "At this time, there are four cement plants in this country: the Miron company, the St. Lawrence Cement Company, the Canada Cement Company and the Quebec cement plant. When we ask them to quote on our cement supplies, each and everyone of them puts in the same price; there is no difference; they agreed to quote identical prices." It is absolutely impossible for those who have to buy such products to get a better price from one given company.

Further, in his letter this citizen of the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot says that the same situation exists among oil refineries: "If you ask for a quotation from British American, Imperial Oil, Fina, or Shell, for asphalt cement, you will get only one price."

Mr. Speaker, I make these remarks in order to bring to the attention of the minister who will be responsible for the administration of this new department the fact that the legislation will have to be applied unilaterally, that is to every company regardless of their business status or importance.

You can understand as I do that some companies which are not as sound financially as others in the field of pre-mixed cement might be subject to very inconvenient effects, which will prevent them from facing up to existing competitors, much less scrupulous and law-abiding.

I should like to add that the incumbent of this new department will certainly have the opportunity to implement a request made to him some time ago by the minister of justice of the province of Quebec, with regard to the setting-up of an inquiry into fraudulent bankruptcies and organized crime.

However, when the department is in operation, the person who asked for that inquiry will certainly not be responsible for the administration of justice in Quebec, since another government will have been elected by the people of that province. It is appropriate, however, to support the request made by Mr. Claude Wagner, because many things could be learned, if such an inquiry were instituted.

I agree with the federal Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) when he states that here, in Ottawa, we do not have only spineless people. I am convinced that the creation of this new department will prove this to those who try to represent everyone connected with parliament in Ottawa as second-class citizens, fearful of responsibilities.

Just like the Minister of Justice, I am somewhat annoyed at people calling us fearful and spineless. According to them, it is always helpful to call on Ottawa to get some money, but they always strive to show that under an unfavorable light.

We have here citizens who come from the province of Quebec and are most anxious to be worthy of the confidence placed in them by the citizens of their own constituency.

The sooner we succeed in eliminating the disparagement—the word must be uttered—being carried on towards representatives of the people in Ottawa, the sooner the common good will be served.

We have responsibilities and obligations, and I think we all want to discharge them for the good of our constituents.

I see in the creation of this new department, an opportunity for another member of my province to be useful, not only to his compatriots and his constituents, but to the citizens of Quebec and Canada as a whole.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the ground with respect to this bill has been pretty well covered in the debate on second reading and I shall not repeat any of the arguments which have been made. However, there is one point that concerns me, and I am glad to have within hearing not only the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson), who I gather is more or less responsible for the legislation, but also the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin). If I may invite their attention to the problem perhaps it may be solved quickly.

As matters now stand, if a person wants to look at the basic law regarding any department of government all he has to do is consult the index to the statutes and he will find there the Department of Justice Act, the Department of Labour Act, the Department of Agriculture Act, the Department of National Health and Welfare Act, and so on.

In the case of the present bill, for reasons which the Prime Minister gave and which carry some weight, several departments are having their basic structure comprised within one bill. It seems to me this will make things a bit confusing in future. I wonder whether the revision of the statutes now in process could cover this point? In other words, what I am asking is in two parts. First, would it be automatic that the commission revising the statutes would take this bill, if we get it through in time, and break it into its component parts so that the general picture I have outlined would still obtain?

Second, if that is not automatic, would there be any impropriety if the minister to whom this commission reports were to make the suggestion to the commission that this be done? I really do not think it is improper because in my own experience I once found an error in the revised statutes and wrote to a minister about it. It was suggested that I pass this information on to the commission.

This matter may be dealt with by a minister rising now in this debate or perhaps it could be dealt with later. I know it is only a small point. Indeed, it is only a technical point, but I suggest it is an important one since the whole purpose of this bill is to make things a bit more efficient. For heaven's sake let us not go in the other direction and find that some of our departmental statutes, which were easily found in the index, have been lost somewhere in an omnibus piece of legislation. I am glad to have the attention of three or four ministers with respect to this point and I would be quite happy to receive an answer from any one of them.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, we would certainly be glad to pass along the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If what he suggests can possibly be done we shall certainly see that it is done.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will be brief. I put on the order paper on May 16 question No. 1,499 with regard to the proposal of the new department of manpower to establish manpower offices across the country. It is this proposal that prompted the question. I think the minister is well aware of the point I have raised. I know that it could just as simply be raised at the committee stage in discussion on the relevant clause, but I want to raise formally the matter inherent in the question I have put.

My question referred to the existence of a national organization of some years standing in 19 communities across the country known as Manpower Services Limited. If the department of manpower opens its manpower offices there will obviously be a great deal of confusion generated as a result of the similarity of names. Whether this was done per incuriam I do not know. I do feel there ought to be some form of negotiation or perhaps change with respect to this name because I do not believe that anybody in government, whether the department is big, medium or small, can afford to trample on the rights of the individual.

This matter affects the fundamental rights of individuals who have had some interest and will continue to have an interest in the name "Manpower Services Limited". To have the government come along and say they are going to open manpower offices for related purposes will cause a great deal of confusion. After all, the services of the department of manpower and the functions of Manpower Services Limited are related to the employment field.

There are a number of other things with regard to this bill that I could discuss relating to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and to other functions. Hon. members generally have canvassed this bill on second reading. May I also point out that, with the greatest of respect, I have found some little difficulty with regard to Mr. Speaker's ruling yesterday concerning the department of forestry and rural development. If it was not necessary for that department to appear in the resolution why was it necessary for the department of Indian affairs and northern development to appear? There is nothing new in that department. It embodies merely a collection of functions that already exist in various places elsewhere.

This is a point to ponder, as is also the fact that a wholesale reorganization could perhaps be effected, by the nomination of merely two or three departments in a resolution. I think there is a difficulty here. The resolution was bad on the face of it and it entrained the Chair unfortunately in a difficult decision about which there can be some doubt.

In this resolution I must say that I think an effort was being made and condoned to do something rather smart. This was perhaps the slick and professional way of doing it. As so often happens, things of this sort fall flat on their faces. It would have been far better to have been overly cautious—perhaps this point is arguable—and to have included the sixth department in the resolution.

With these few remarks I shall resume my seat and continue the discussion clause by clause as the occasion may arise.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak for very long. I rise with two points in mind concerning the department of manpower and possibly also the Solicitor General's department. There may be other points that I should like to bring up at this time since we are discussing the reorganization of the government.

I agree with the reorganization as set out in this bill. Manpower will in future be treated on a more definitive basis. The problems concerning manpower are not unique in my constituency but prevail pretty well across the board. This is probably due to the fact that the former minister of labour could not follow through on all governmental projects. Possibly he did not have the watchful eye over governmental administration that he should have had, which again was due possibly to being overburdened with work.

I refer, for example to the scandalous procedures that have obtained particularly in the winter works program. If there were one man responsible for the labour and another paying for it there might be some chance of abolishing these scandalous procedures. This should have been done some time ago. By subdividing the tasks which ministers now have we might have got better results in places such as Notre Dame de la Guadeloupe where $194,000 has been spent by the municipality without anything to show for it. There is something terribly wrong here. This situation has been in existence for three or four years but apparently nothing can be done except wait for the province to make inquiries.

Yet under the Solicitor General's department we have a force, the R.C.M.P., which is concerned with justice. I say there is injustice here and in spite of the fact that there are provincial and municipal boundaries I still think the R.C.M.P. has the power to look into such procedures as I have mentioned, especially when the federal government is putting up funds derived from Canadian taxpayers. I ask the minister to look into this situation and not to wait until everything has been covered up. A provincial organization in Sherbrooke, trying to find out whether people had been receiving the basic salaries to which they were entitled, got access to the books during the past three or four years and has publicly stated that the situation amounts to a complete mess.

And this is only one case. There are many others across this country where the federal government must rely on action being taken by the provinces. While we are discussing the reorganization of the government we should at least concede that when the federal government is spending money in different parts of the country it should be entitled to find out by means of its own where that money is going. I am not concerned now with provincial funds. They are the responsibility of the province alone. But I do think it is our responsibility to know where federal money is being spent.

If the minister had been given the power I suggest two or three years ago he would have found out by now through his assistants that people were not being paid although their names were on the list in connection with winter works projects. In other cases they received cheques, endorsed them and sent them back although they were not doing any work in connection with the projects. This has been going on for four years.

Let me tell hon. members something about this municipality which might open their eyes. Within a year and a half there have been seven suicidal hangings. There is something wrong there, and if the provincial government does not look into the situation then the R.C.M.P. should. The Criminal Code is involved to the extent that there is fraud. The federal government is concerned because its funds are being spent. I do not see why we should wait for the provincial solicitor general to open an inquiry. I do not even know whether he wants to do so. Mr. Wagner makes a lot of statements but he does not seem to be moving. I do not think he is very interested. In any case, he is engaged in an election at the moment.

Another subject which deserves our attention concerns the committees of this house. We have had a lot of trouble lately with the committees. It is all very well to subdivide the work of cabinet ministers but members of this house are here to do a job too. On many occasions the reports of committees are not even considered in the house despite all the work that has gone into their preparation. This must not be allowed to continue. Are we here only to ask questions and bring in recommendations which very often are not considered at all?

Not everything done south of the border is deserving of blame. Sometimes we must congratulate our neighbours on the way they arrange their affairs. Committee work under the United States' system of government is much more efficient than anything we have here. Committees, properly employed and given wider powers, can be of great help to each and every one of our cabinet ministers. But their reports must be considered and acted upon and the committees must be given the authority necessary to inquire into such cases as the one I have cited. Their reports would be of great help in the preparation of legislation. Committees could recommend changes in legislation and such recommendations should be seriously considered by the government.

I should like to hear one of the hon. gentlemen opposite express an opinion on this matter. In the United States a senator is paid a salary of approximately $30,000. In addition he receives an expense budget of $80,000 to help him get organized. It is true we are paid $18,000 here but that is still far from what they are getting. I was talking to an hon. member of this house who had come back from Washington. He said, "Good God, they know more about Canada there than we do here".

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I must remind the hon. member that we are dealing with the reorganization of departments. His remarks are most interesting but I do not think they are relevant to the bill now under consideration.

[English]

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I humbly submit that each one of these committees is subject to one of the cabinet ministers. We are proposing to subdivide the ministries in order to lessen the work of ministers. If we did not adopt the attitude of the ostrich by hiding our heads in the sand and waiting for someone to kick us in the bottom, we would consider how things are being done in committees of this house.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): There are many things that are in order with which I do not agree. Maybe they are not sensible but we have to follow the rules. Rules are to be followed but sometimes we should put them aside and apply common sense. I agree I may be reaching the very boundary of the subject under discussion but I think I am still within the line. It may be a very thin line but if we stretch it outward a little farther we may help the government solve the country's problems, its own problems and our problems. I should like to conclude on that note and I hope I will have the opportunity to return to it when dealing with specific clauses of the bill.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, when dealing with the subject of reorganization of the government one cannot help realize that three years after this government took office the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has acknowledged the fact that it is unable to cope with the problems facing Canada under the rules and regulations that have been in effect over a long period of time. Many in the house will recall that during the government's first year or two in office it constantly came back to the house with the admonition that it was the rules of the house which prevented the cabinet from giving the country the kind of administration it required. But now, following amendment of the rules on a provisional basis, the Prime Minister comes into the house with a proposal to reorganize the government itself.

I cannot help but feel it would have been much easier for the Prime Minister to reorganize his cabinet by placing in control of the departments of government that have existed for a long time members within his own party who could make the necessary decisions within the framework of those departments. To take departments such as agriculture, justice and labour, divide them into two or three parts and split up their functions does not fulfil the responsibilities of a Prime Minister in this age of advanced automation.

Furthermore, I cannot help but think that a great deal of the problem which has faced us in parliament has stemmed from the organization of the business of the House of Commons. If we as members are given a bill of fare which has been carefully thought out before being presented to us we can do an effective job. Without a carefully thought-out program, to change the rules is futile, and it is also futile to reorganize the departments of government. What we in parliament need more than anything else is leadership from the government benches, leadership that will improve and protect the image of parliament, that will improve the effectiveness of this institution and provide us with proposals into which we can really sink our teeth and come up with something worthwhile for the Canadian people.

The Canada Development Corporation proposal has been before the cabinet for many months. Perhaps it will eventually be introduced here again but in a revised form. In this connection one can think of the Canada Pension plan and other pieces of legislation that were revised, revised and revised before parliament was able to deal with them, with the result that much time was lost. The image of this institution was destroyed and in the interval the enthusiasm of members was lessened.

The hon. member who preceded me referred to the committee structure of the house and said that committee decisions are ignored by the government. This is a fertile field for the reorganization of the business of the house. Committees should be given something worthwhile to do. Members who serve on them should know that their decisions will be acted upon. Committees can take some of the pressure off this chamber and even off cabinet ministers.

Ministers who have been unable to cope with the problems of long-established departments will, I feel, have the same difficulty with the proposed new departments. I take a very dim view of the fact that the Department of Agriculture is going to be split in three, because when we ask questions on agricultural matters in the house one minister will be able to slough them off on another and no one will give us answers. I also take a dim view of the fact that the Department of Labour is being mutilated.

[Mr. Nasserden.]

One serious omission from the proposed reorganization is a proposal to establish a department of urban affairs. Now that Canada is emerging as an industrial nation, urban problems are becoming greater and greater. All across the country people are leaving agricultural employment, going to the cities to look for jobs and trying to become part of new communities. This is a problem that has been increasing for several years but we in the Canadian parliament in 1966 are failing utterly to do anything about the problems of these people not only in metropolitan areas such as Toronto and Montreal but in smaller communities.

Another problem with which we are faced is the multiplicity of parties in this house. I do not know whether the Prime Minister thought last fall that he could do something about that when he called the election or whether he thought he would be able to reorganize the government as a result of the election, but as I look at this legislation I cannot help but think it is an exercise in futility, and unless we get the leadership we need from the treasury benches parliament cannot help but continue to cast the poor image across the country that it casts today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Macaluso: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, you have allowed three members of the opposition to speak and I think it is time a member on this side of the house had the opportunity to participate in the debate. I do not care if you are following a list, sir, but I know there is no list so far as this side is concerned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the hon. member wish to speak?

Mr. Macaluso: I stood up twice for that purpose.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I regret I did not see the hon. member. I hope he will accept my apologies. I recognized the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi but the hon. member will have his turn in due course.

Mr. Macaluso: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and with all due deference to you, I think it has been the rule to proceed in a circuit around the house in calling on members to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hon. member's point of order was well put and I think he has enlightened the Chair, but I have recognized the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I intend to make only a few remarks at this stage. First of all I should like to state that I am sure most hon. members on both sides of the house are going to support the general purport of this bill which is to adapt government techniques to modern times. I hope that this general reorganization of cabinet responsibilities will help us to do one thing, namely, to co-operate with the provinces in order to plan priorities. I know that in many ways this is a difficult thing to do, but when we are giving increased responsibilities to a minister who will represent the Treasury Board in this house I hope that either he or some other designated minister will take it upon himself, with government support, to do everything possible to bring about the improvement in this field which is needed so badly. In 1966 I think we have learned a lesson on both sides of this house, namely, that in a country like Canada we can make no real progress in an economic, social or political sense unless we do everything possible to unite our country and to improve federal-provincial relations.

[Translation]

I am perfectly aware that the government has made some progress in that field and has improved its relations with the provinces, because we note in each corner of the house that it is now impossible in 1966 to make some progress in the social, political or economic fields without endeavouring to improve relations between Ottawa and the provinces.

I do not entirely agree—and I say this without any feeling of partisanship—on the policy laid down by the ministers, but we have made some progress in that field.

[English]

If we are going to do everything we can to improve federal-provincial relations in a modern state like Canada and really adopt our new ministerial procedures to modern times we will have to make a greater effort in a bipartisan way to plan priorities with the provinces. I hope that this governmental reorganization will mean two things basically: First, improved and permanent consultative machinery as between Ottawa and the provinces and, second, the development of an ability under federal direction to plan priorities with the provinces in the social and economic fields.

In general I hope that the reorganization of cabinet responsibilities in a very general way and, in another sense, in a very definite way will restore federal leadership to the position that belongs to it in a country like Canada. Let us face the facts. This is the first nation in the modern western world which has attempted to make a parliamentary system of government work with a federal system of government.

[Translation]

But if we do our best to improve relations between Ottawa and the provinces, if we do our very best in that direction, I am convinced that we will have done great things to consolidate Canadian federalism.

[English]

Those are the few remarks I wanted to make at this time. I believe that the listing of priorities and improving federal-provincial relations are the questions that are foremost in the minds of members in every corner of this house. It is my hope that the reorganization of the cabinet will be at least a first step forward in attaining this goal.

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I do not find that the procedure of allowing six or seven opposition members to speak consecutively is very funny.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please.

Mr. Macaluso: In fact, I think it is discriminatory.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for Hamilton West that he address the Chair and proceed to make his speech in relation to the bill now before the house.

Mr. Macaluso: I will be very happy to do so if hon. members will give me the opportunity. I am particularly interested in the reorganization bill as it relates to the new department of manpower. I hope the minister will return to his seat shortly after taking the telephone call to which he has been summoned.

It is proposed in clause 11(1) of the bill to name the new department the department of manpower. Clause 13 defines the duties, powers and functions of this department with relation to the development and utilization of manpower resources in Canada, employment services and immigration. I have been concerned, as have many other members, because of the fact that the department is not being called manpower and immigration. For many years in this country we have had a Department of Citizenship and Immigration and I know of no country which has been more dependent on immigration.

Recently provincial governments, notably those of Quebec and Ontario, have organized drives to attract skilled workers to Canada. This is taking place because of the great need in this country for skilled immigrants. It is dismaying to find that the new department does not have as part of its name the word "immigration".

I fear that a very heavy load will be placed on the minister in regard to his work in the field of manpower, to say nothing of the duties he will be required to carry out in respect of immigration. I hope that his shoulders are broad and strong. During the short time I have been a member of this house the duties of at least one minister of citizenship and immigration have been onerous. For these reasons I am inclined to believe that there should be two separate departments, one to look after manpower resources and the other to look after immigration.

Manpower and immigration have some associated facets but I fear, as has been expressed privately by members on this side of the house, that the immigration branch in the new department will become more redundant than ever. Perhaps the civil service will assume a greater role in respect of immigration while the minister and his deputy devote their efforts to utilization of manpower resources and employment services.

I certainly hope that the new system of organization will work efficiently but, as I say, there is some basis for the fear that the civil service will take an even stronger part in the operation of the immigration branch. I do not understand how a man on the street is going to be able to get in touch with officials of the immigration branch because I assume it will be listed as a branch of the department of manpower. To whom will individuals direct correspondence and applications? I expect the government will advertise the fact that immigration is a branch of the department of manpower, but I think it might have been easier for all concerned if the name of the new department had been the department of manpower and immigration.

Before we reach consideration of clause 11 of the bill during the committee stage, I seriously hope that the government will propose a change in the name of this department. Canada is a country made up of descendants of immigrants. This fact should be given due consideration. I know the situation will not change because of the policy the government proposes to bring forward.

Those are the points I wanted to bring to the attention of the minister and the government before we reach consideration of clause 11 of the bill, and I hope that consideration will be given to the suggestion I have made regarding the name.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Does he not think it would be appropriate for him to propose an amendment to the bill along the lines he has suggested during its consideration at the committee stage? I can assure the hon. member that some of us would consider such an amendment with a good deal of sympathy.

Mr. Macaluso: That may very well be what I will do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Starr: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 2—Department established.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, clause 2 is the first of the various clauses up to No. 10 which are designed to accomplish the dismemberment of the Department of Justice. At the resolution stage preceding the bill I stated my objections to the emasculation of that historic department. Without repetition, I want to submit again as vigorously as I can that the proposal to divide the department into three separate ministries is a major error which may well have calamitous effects upon the administration of justice in Canada.

This legislation would never have been proposed had it not been for the problems encountered in the portfolio of justice by the hon. gentleman from Papineau. That is self-evident. But such problems as he encountered in that portfolio resulted from a lack of consultation and a lack of co-ordination. This trifurcation of the department must inevitably intensify rather than cure those problems. I put it to the committee that one ministry of justice with an experienced, competent counsel at its head, such as the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand, can administer justice in this country more effectively, more expeditiously and more evenly than three separate departments. I protest this unwarranted truncation, this wholly unjustified wrecking of the great and historic portfolio of justice and I say that the mistakes being made in this chamber this afternoon will soon be apparent even to the Prime Minister and will have to be corrected in the future.

This proposal runs directly counter to the report and recommendations of the Glassco commission. While I do not necessarily worship at the feet of that commission report, I do point out that it very strongly recommended that "the Department of Justice assume responsibility for an integrated legal service embracing all legal staffs of departments and agencies." How could this be achieved without one minister at the head? By its action today the government is foreclosing this important part of the Glassco report.

Personally I do not believe that the office of Solicitor General should be a cabinet portfolio. It should be filled only when there is in this or the other chamber a counsel of unusual distinction who might plead Crown causes in the courts. In the United Kingdom, of course, both the Attorney General and the Solicitor General regularly appear in the courts at trials and on appeals. Recently, for example, the present distinguished Attorney General, Sir Elwyn Jones, prosecuted the sensational murder on the moors case. We who are privileged by his acquaintance know with what distinction a leader of the bar acts as Attorney General in the United Kingdom.

In my view, only when we have a member of this or the other place so qualified and not otherwise engaged in another portfolio should the office of Solicitor General be filled. It was vacant from the year 1935 to the year 1945 when two strong, dynamic men held the portfolio of minister of justice and attorney general, Ernest Lapointe and Louis St. Laurent, and the administration of justice did not noticeably suffer as a result of the vacancy.

It is true that many of our great parliamentarians have been solicitor general without being members of the cabinet since the office was created in the year 1892. I mention Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, Rodolphe Lemieux, Jacques Bureau and Arthur Meighen. Actually it was only the latter's personal parliamentary brilliance which caused the office to be raised to cabinet rank. He was the first solicitor general to attain cabinet rank, and since his incumbency only two, Guthrie and Fauteux, have held the office as a non-cabinet appointment.

This historical excursion is intended merely to emphasize my point that the office has utility only when an especially distinguished counsel may fill it. In what I am saying, of course, I mean no reflection at all upon the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand. I have already expressed to him my feeling of regard and my belief as to the distinction which he might bring to another office. The existence of the office of solicitor general should never be used, I suggest, as an excuse for undermining the status and the authority of the person who must be the senior law officer of the crown, the Minister of Justice.

I realize that the Prime Minister is adamant now in his proposals and doubtless they will carry. Frankly, I hope the many sound and experienced lawyers in the other place, including perhaps the distinguished government leader there, will have another look at this whole proposal. I am morally certain that within five years we shall revert in this country to a single ministry of justice and this excursion into tailoring portfolios to men will be completely abandoned.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Duties of Solicitor General of Canada.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, on second reading of this bill I expressed my views in respect of this clause. Instead of repeating what I said I will now confine myself to moving a simple motion. My motion, of which I have copies here, is to strike out subparagraph (c) of clause 4.

It is a simple amendment. Clause 4 provides as follows:

> The duties, powers and functions of the Solicitor General of Canada extend to and include all matters over which the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, branch or agency of the government of Canada, relating to
> (a) reformatories, prisons and penitentiaries;
> (b) parole and remissions; and
> (c) the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

The effect of the amendment if carried will be to restore control over the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, their administration, training and all matters relating to that organization, to the Department of Justice and the supervision of the Minister of Justice. As I said on second reading, my amendment bears no relation whatever to the personalities of the present Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General.

The point I made before—and I make it again only in case some hon. members were not in the house last night when I dealt with this matter—is that in this era of organized crime, of complicated relationships across provincial and international boundaries, the person who deals with the only police force available in the federal sphere, the force that is responsible for security, should be the first law officer of the crown, namely, the Minister of Justice. To separate the function of controlling, training and dealing with the force from the function of dealing with all these other jurisdictions in the field of the enforcement of law may in the long run lead to conflict between these two departments, to the lack of proper liaison between the police force available, the only federal police force there is, and the administration of the law. In my submission it would be a very grave error, and for that reason I move, seconded by —I am told I do not need a seconder:

• (4:40 p.m.)

That section 4 be amended by striking out subparagraph (c) thereof.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in support of the amendment and to ask members of the committee to take a serious look at it instead of just shouting for this thing to be rammed through by calling for the question to be put before somebody in the government ranks gets up and tells us the reason for this transfer. We have really heard nothing to justify it. Members on this side of the house have tried, apparently unsuccessfully, to point out the dangers inherent, in our view, in this transfer of jurisdiction. I would have hoped that the Minister of Justice would give us the benefit of his views and experience in so far as the proposal the government is now making is concerned. We would have had an opportunity then to hear the reasons behind the proposed transfer of the police. Such reasons might be very intriguing if they were laid before the committee.

My colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood, has outlined briefly the qualms that we feel at what is taking place here. He has tried to emphasize the tremendous need not for decentralization of the police force but for greater and greater co-ordination. I can recall that in 1962 the hon. member for Greenwood and I appeared as counsel for our party before the Ontario royal commission on organized crime. At the outset we thought the commission was embarking on a two-week investigation. However, the more we went into the problems of syndicated crime, international crime, and the extent of its infiltration into Canada, the longer the commission sat and the greater the lessons we learned as a result.

We had the advantage of hearing from Mr. Robert Kennedy, then Attorney General of the United States. He did not appear in person but submitted a very powerful and forceful brief in which he outlined the great problems that had developed in the United States of America in attempting to deal with various types of organized and syndicated crime. The major lesson that ran through this presentation was the danger inherent in an inefficient police administration, the very condition which the government intends to create here.

He pointed out the difficulties in the United States where an entire city apparatus was corrupted by the forces of organized crime. He pointed out that once organized crime gets a toehold it is virtually impossible to wipe it out. Every possible degree of co-ordination is required between our police forces and yet here we seem to be moving in exactly the opposite direction. The other lesson we learned from the royal commission in Ontario was that within Ontario itself one of the big problems in dealing with crime was the lack of co-ordination between police forces in our small towns and cities. This condition extends right across the country.

All of us remember the criticism, perhaps some of it unfair, to which the R.C.M.P. were subjected at the time of the famous Rivard case. Again, this case showed lack of communication, lack of co-ordination and the need to strengthen substantially this type of liaison between the police. However, it seems to us that the government is proposing a fantastic idea in that the Minister of Justice, who is charged with the carrying out of our laws and the preservation of justice throughout the country, is going to be divorced from the training, administration and functioning of the mounted police. How are they going to work together? Are they going to write each other letters, and that sort of thing? How is co-ordination going to take place at a time when all of us are aware that the forces of crime are attempting to extend their influence into Canada? No one is assessing blame for this, but the fact is still undeniable that this is taking place. I do not believe it has really been denied by anybody. The only thing about which we disagree is the means or methods by which to combat it successfully.

Before allowing the section to pass we should like to hear, if we may, from the Minister of Justice and from the Solicitor General how they propose to work. How will the two offices be drawn together in the carrying out of the functions of the Minister of Justice if there is to be a lack of co-ordination with the force by placing the Royal Canadian Mounted Police under this separate jurisdiction? This is a very important matter if we are going to make a serious attempt to deal with organized crime. I am not talking about syndicated crime which is a far more difficult and dangerous problem. In so far as organized crime in Canada is concerned, we can bring in police commission reports to show its existence and the extent of its influence. If you are going to make a serious attempt to deal with organized crime, how are you going to be successful by separating the Minister of Justice from the very agency he needs to investigate, to collect evidence and to carry out this important function?

It seems to me that the step being taken is so serious we cannot and will not allow the clause to pass without some extended comments by the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General telling us why this method has been chosen and what it is hoped to accomplish by it. I hope the members of the government, even though we want the bill to pass and do not intend to hold it up, will not start shouting "question, question", because this is an extremely important and, to us, dangerous step. Before we consent we want to hear at some length the reason for it.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, before referring to the arguments raised by the hon. member for Danforth I wish to acknowledge with gratitude the generous remarks of the hon. member for Carleton. I can assure the committee that I harbour no false hopes in my breast that I could even approach, much less match, the achievements of a former solicitor general, Right Hon. Arthur Meighen.

It is my respectful submission, Mr. Chairman, that the divisions proposed in this bill are both reasonable and necessary. From time to time, my hon. friends across the floor, in a critical sense, have used the phrase, "the trifurcation of the department". This plausible catch-phrase really conceals the realities of the situation. I want to point out the basic fact that the Department of Justice is not really being divided by the allocation of duties. The Department of Justice has dealt, and still will, with the problems relating to legislative draftsmanship, the conduct of government litigation, criminal prosecutions and the preparation of legal opinions for the government and departments of government. These have always been the main functions of the Department of Justice. In other words, the Department of Justice will remain the law firm for the government of Canada.

The various other agencies, such as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the penitentiaries service and the parole board, have from time to time become attached to the Department of Justice. They are, of course, obviously involved in the general area of the Department of Justice but they are removed in function from the department itself. They are, I would remind the house, branches which are for the most part self-administering. They have their own experts and come under the direction of the deputy minister of justice only in a very loose and general way. So that the Department of Justice, if this bill carries, will still remain a department which requires the services of lawyers practising law in the traditional sense.

I must say, Mr. Chairman, that the decisions which have been brought about are ones which we feel the circumstances demand. The war against crime and also the penitentiaries and parole services demand and deserve the attention of a separate and special ministry. I might remind the house of the fact that since the duties were transferred on January 1 to the office of the Solicitor General, steps have been taken to step up the efficiency of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. With respect, Mr. Chairman, I would bring to the attention of the committee that in the year 1955 the total budget for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was $35.6 million. For the current fiscal year, under representations made by the office of the Solicitor General, the figure has risen to a new high of $86.6 million, which is substantially more than double the figure ten years ago.

May I also say that a related reason for the removal of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police from the direction of the Minister of Justice is the fact that there has been an enormous increase in the duties of the Minister of Justice. This has seemed to escape the attention of many members of the house. I would put before you, Mr. Chairman, the fact that the annual statutes of Canada for the year 1956, for example, comprised a relatively slim volume of 400 pages. In 1964 it had grown to more than 800 pages. The same observation is applicable to various statutory orders and regulations of the government of Canada which for the year 1965 filled a volume of almost 2,000 pages. Each of these must be passed upon within the Department of Justice before enactment. In a growing country like Canada, as the legal structure of government becomes more complicated increased demands are made on the Minister of Justice. There is an increased demand for more legal opinions and, of course, there are increasing demands in the field of litigation.

I turn now, Mr. Chairman, to the third reason, and while it has been put forth as a criticism of the bill I advance it in argument in support of the bill. I refer, of course, to the removal of the R.C.M.P. from the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice. Under the new bill there will now be a separation of the investigative functions of the police from the process of prosecution in the courts. It seems to me that to vest the authority for the investigative functions of government in the same person who is going to conduct the criminal process is foreign to the spirit of justice.

Under the proposals set forth in this bill the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will carry out its investigations under the authority of the Solicitor General. But, Mr. Chairman, the decision whether or not the facts disclosed by the investigation merit the commencement of a criminal prosecution will continue to be taken by the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Attorney General. Thus two sets of minds and two sets of responsibilities will be involved. It is my hope and my belief that the efficiency of the criminal law process will be improved as a result.

I believe that the merit in this separation of policemen and prosecutor will commend itself to the judgment of the house. I had the privilege recently of visiting the United Kingdom and made a special point of discussing this problem with officials in the home office. I would point out that the separation of the police and the attorney general has for some time been and continues to be the practice in the United Kingdom. There the home secretary is the minister responsible for the police, but the public enforcement of the criminal law in the courts remains the responsibility of the attorney general.

[Mr. Pennell.]

It may be interesting to note in passing, Mr. Chairman, that only last week the home secretary announced new plans for consolidating the 80,000 policemen in the United Kingdom under the office of the home secretary and not under the office of the attorney general.

It is also interesting to note in reviewing the practice in Great Britain that there has been from time to time a suggestion put forth that they set up a ministry of justice. But on no occasion has anyone suggested, if and when they do set up a ministry of justice, that the responsibility for the police be taken from the home secretary and placed under either the minister of justice or the attorney general. It has always been thought in the United Kingdom that there ought to be an officer other than the attorney general who is responsible for what they call preserving the Queen's peace within the realm, and that in general he should discharge the responsibility for the internal safety of the country, including security. It is on this basis that the home secretary has been responsible for the police since 1829.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that by removing the police from the Department of Justice and placing them, together with the penitentiaries service and the parole board, under the office of the Solicitor General we can set up an office of crime and correction which can work effectively for this country. We live in an age of change and challenge, and it is my respectful submission in closing that this change will enable us to meet the challenge of our times.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the minister for his contribution to the debate and for his helpful explanations. I will read them in Hansard and continue the discussion tomorrow after I have had the opportunity of reading his remarks in detail. He will, of course, appreciate that it is not possible to review them on the spot. We will read them and give them the consideration they no doubt deserve.

Perhaps in the minute remaining the minister could tell me what he is actually going to do when an investigation is ordered. He says that he will conduct investigations under his jurisdiction but that the Minister of Justice will decide whether prosecution will take place. Does the Solicitor General exercise no discretion at all in this matter? Does he just collect the material and send it over to justice? Just how does this work from his point of view?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, may I say that we will continue to operate in the way we have been operating since January 1 of this year whereby the Solicitor General will have responsibility for the administration of the police. They will collect the facts and will report back. Their reports will be delivered to the Department of Justice. If the Department of Justice feels there ought to be further investigation or if they request further information, then further investigation will be carried out under the authority of the Solicitor General in much the same fashion that investigations are carried out in the United Kingdom where 80,000 policemen under the direction of the home secretary work, I might say with respect, very effectively.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock? I have several questions I should like to ask.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. In order for the house to proceed to private members' business it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

CONSUMERS AFFAIRS

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the establishing of a department of consumers affairs.

She said: Mr. Speaker, on May 13 I tried to place the following questions on the order paper:

1. Are producers of basic foods such as milk, bread, eggs, meat, butter and margarine sharing in the margin of profit derived from recent rises in the price of such foods to the consumer?

2. If so, what is the percentage of profit margin going to

(a) the producer,

(b) the wholesaler, and

(c) the retailer in the case of (1) milk; (2) bread; (3) eggs; (4) meat; (5) butter; (6) margarine?

Three days later I received a letter from the Assistant Clerk as follows:

I am returning your proposed question for the order paper, which I have discussed with His Honour the Speaker.

It is Mr. Speaker's view and, as you know, mine that this question in its present form is not acceptable in that it contravenes the rule that a question must relate to the administrative responsibilities of the government, and it is our opinion that your question does not.

I regret the necessity of giving you this opinion.

As matters stand, Mr. Speaker, the consumers of this country at the present time have no department protecting their interests, no minister of the government to speak for them or to answer their questions. As I interpret this reply, there is at the present no one in the government in charge of a department to whom questions can be directed and who could answer them.

Questions about such matters are being asked by Canadian consumers from coast to coast. With the exception of questions relating to war and peace, the matter I now raise is exercising the minds of people from coast to coast more than any other as the cost of living rises. Consumers need protection. It is precisely because these questions cannot be answered, and because no government department exists which can answer them, that I have brought forward this resolution today on behalf of our party.

This is not something new. As a matter of fact, my colleague the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) brought up this question in 1964. My colleague the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) brought it up in 1965, and the Canadian association of consumers has been bringing it up in its own way for the past six years. Today we are being flooded with mail from people across the country who are desperate and want to know what the government is going to do about the cost of living which is getting beyond their incomes. Nothing in this regard is being done by the government front benches.

From a host of other communications I select one dated March 15, 1966, that came to me indirectly from the town of Espanola, Ontario, which happens to be in the riding of the Prime Minister. It reads:

Whereas, the council of the corporation of the town of Espanola is concerned over the seemingly large increase in the price of goods and services over the last six to twelve months, and whereas these price increases will have serious effects upon people living on fixed incomes and hourly wage earners whose union contracts will not be negotiated within the next year or two;

Therefore the council of the corporation of the town of Espanola urgently request that our senior governments create a select committee to investigate the reasons behind the inflationary rise in prices and that this committee be prepared to submit recommendations for controlling inflation and insuring the standard of living in Canada.

That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to all Ontario municipalities, the Canadian Labour Congress and Mayors and Reeves Association for their endorsement and ask that they strongly urge their members of parliament both federal and provincial to support this resolution.

It is signed by the mayor of the town of Espanola. This communication, Mr. Speaker, could be duplicated many, many times across Canada. That is why we are asking at this time that there be created a full department of consumers affairs with a minister in full time charge.

This government has been accused of many colourful sins of commission. However, I believe the majority of the people of Canada are far more concerned with its sins of omission. One of the gravest of those sins has been the failure of the government to devote a single department to the protection of the consumers of this country.

It is becoming increasingly evident that the consumer needs protection. We live in a society where well organized groups of manufacturers, processors and advertisers, driven by the fierce competition of the market, use all the techniques of modern processing, packaging and advertising to sell their wares to the consumer. And the consumer is fair game. Consumers are badly organized and poorly informed, are conned, gulled, deceived and robbed, and there is neither protection nor redress. In fact, conning the consumer has become the avenue to affluence for a great many business concerns today.

I must say that certain things have been done to protect the consumer. Bodies within the government exist for consumers' protection. For instance, the Department of Trade and Commerce has its division of weights and measures. The Department of Agriculture has its branch dealing with consumer information and also its meat inspection section. The Department of Fisheries has its consumer branch and also an information section. The Department of National Health and Welfare has a food and drug directorate. The Department of Justice has its anti-combines legislation. These activities scattered throughout various departments of government, Mr. Speaker, should be brought together and put under one department as we have suggested.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

We want to see the creation of a prices review board and a consumers' bureau where representations and complaints by consumers may be made to one department coming under one minister who, alone among the other ministers heading departments of government, will speak for the consumers of this country. At the moment they have no spokesman.

It is interesting to note in passing that in the United States at this time a New York Democrat is introducing a bill embodying exactly similar concepts to those I have outlined. In the United States government 33 agencies devoted to bits and pieces of consumer protection have grown like an undersized Topsy. The new legislation seeks to place those agencies under one department. In the United States as in Great Britain they are far ahead of Canada in this field. President Johnson has been sending messages to Congress regarding consumer protection and the tightening up of legislation for several years now.

In Great Britain a housewives' charter was introduced earlier this year. Its passage into legislation was interrupted by the recent election over there but it will be proceeded with again. It seeks to protect the consumers. We need a consumers' bill of rights in Canada. If I were to summarize very briefly what I think those rights should be they could be brought under four headings: First, the right to safety and quality; second, the right to truthful information; third, the right to a dollar of stable purchasing power and, fourth, the right to be heard.

I will not say very much about the first right, the right to safety and quality, because in the main I think our government departments are doing fairly well in that regard. Also, information is available from voluntary associations such as the Consumers Association of Canada. We have not too many complaints regarding such things as safe toys for children, inflammable goods and so on. However, we are concerned about the second right.

• (5:10 p.m.)

First, we need more truthful packaging. We have already dealt in this house with the bacon striptease where the manufacturers proved very prudish indeed when it came to letting enough of the bacon be seen for the housewife to tell whether she was buying meat or fat. I believe we have now reached the bikini stage but there is still something to be desired.

An hon. Member: Complete disclosure.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Yes, complete disclosure, as the hon. member suggests. Then we need the size, shape and weight of packages to be clearly indicated. We need truthful labelling. I have had brought to my attention cases in which drugs did not carry labels giving clear information concerning their contents. Elements to which some people have dangerous allergies were not named. This information should be given plainly.

Another thing which has become increasingly obvious is the need for truthful information about the cost of credit. The whole question of consumer credit is one which is full of trouble for consumers. In the United States Senator Paul Douglas is introducing a bill at the present time in an attempt to deal with this problem. He calls attention to the huge toll which is being taken by credit gougers. I wish I had time to quote a few examples. Here is just one. Senator Douglas has put on record the case of a woman who bought a couch for $300 from a solicitor at the door. The buyer paid $12 every two weeks for two years. The total finance charge was $324 or $24 more than the cost of the couch. The finance charge rate, amounting to 107 per cent, was, of course, never mentioned when the couch was sold.

Maybe things are not as bad as that in Canada. But who would dare tell us what the facts are in Canada? They are not available to us through any of our channels of government at the present time.

Some of the consumer associations have urged the necessity for imposing a cooling-off period during which those who have been exposed to high pressure salesmanship practices might have a chance to reflect, a provision whereby a period of time, possibly three days or more, would have to pass before any contract became valid.

Fourth, we need truthful advertising. In this connection I should like to refer to a letter received by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. The writer of the letter ended up paying $1.64 for a box of detergent, the price she usually pays in Richmond where she lives, despite the fact that there was supposed to be a price mark-off of 15 cents. The store, she found, had raised the price to $1.79 and then deducted the 15 cents. She says in her letter:

> To my mind, it's as clear as black and white. The manufacturer offered me a 15¢ reduction on its product. I did not receive it. The store did. I am fed up with these mark-offs, coupons, and crazy, mixed-up price markings and feel something should be done about them. Reductions are not being passed on to the public, if that was the intention to begin with.
> I have discussed the matter with the store and the soap company, and also written a letter to the paper here in Vancouver. This is all I feel is open to me, but I am hoping you can do something about this situation which is happening over and over again.

I am hoping the government will do something about it one of these days because these things are happening repeatedly and by and by the consumers will take measures through organization which will force the government to do under duress what it could and should do now as an enlightened act of policy.

I turn now to a need which is particularly pressing. The consumer has a right to a dollar of stable purchasing power. President Johnson used exactly this term in one of his messages to Congress. His words were:

> The consumer has a right to a dollar of stable purchasing power. I pledge to defend that right with all the ability and determination at my command.

Consumers across this country know that the price index has risen 4 per cent compared with the level in April, 1965, and that the most notable increases affect food, clothing and rent, the rock bottom essentials for families across this country. The consumers want to know why these increases have occurred. Are they justifiable? If so, what can be done for those living on low incomes? If not, what can be done to stop them?

This is why the New Democratic party proposed at this session the establishment of a prices review board as an integral part of a department of consumer affairs. I think the association of consumers has done a fine job in many fields, but I believe that today the stabilization of prices is one of the most important tasks before us. Unless the government is prepared to incorporate such a review board in a department of consumer affairs, everybody will be left unprotected.

We are proposing this price review board, first, to hear and inquire into complaints of unjustifiable price increases. Second, we believe that where price rises are intended, in the case of household necessities, manufacturers and processors should be called before the board to justify these increases, failing which no increases could be made.

We claim too that consumers have the right to be heard. We want a consumer bureau established where people can get information, lay complaints, and initiate action by the government with regard to grievances.

I recognize that this will not be easy. I am aware that jurisdiction is divided between the federal government and the provinces. But I also know that the days when administrations could play football between provinces and the federal government as a means of doing nothing are gone. On a host of issues the urgency of the situation has compelled the federal government to go to the provinces and say: Here is the problem; how are we to share this responsibility and provide what is necessary by way of legislation? This could be done in connection with a department of consumer affairs.

I wish to draw my remarks to a close at this point because I want to leave time for further discussion. One hour is a very limited amount of time available on occasions such as this for discussion of a subject of such magnitude. Consumers are spending each year $29 billion across this country, which is big business. Indeed, instead of asking only for one department of consumer affairs there should be a good deal more activity on the part of the government in connection with this matter.

I recognize that this resolution will go to the bottom of the list. But I urge that for a change it should not be forgotten. The kindest thing would be for the government, as it has done on so many other occasions, to steal this plank from our platform. We would love to have it stolen. If they would bring in a bill on these lines next year they would have our full support.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I feel that all citizens realize the imperative need to protect the Canadian consumer, and government intervention on a federal and provincial level is absolutely necessary to achieve this end. It is a truism that government with its powers and resources to investigate, regulate and advise, with its legitimate concern for the welfare of our people, has enacted legislation to protect them in many spheres such as labour, pensions, transport and medicare. The realm of consumer protection is one which most certainly cannot be ignored and it should be obtaining increasing governmental attention. The quality and price of what we wear, what we eat, what we drink, all our material needs, are of prime concern to the federal government and rightly so.

The intent of the motion before the house is a most laudable one and the mover is to be congratulated for her concern about matters which affect the daily lives of our people.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

However, though not opposing the well-intentioned spirit of the motion may I say that I support the principle advocated but not the means spelled out in the wording of the motion. I do not feel the government—I emphasize "at this time"—is justified in setting up a complete department of consumers' affairs and I oppose the proposal on a number of grounds.

There is a growing tendency to form departments for new areas of interest such as education, and at the present time the government is in the process of creating several new ministries. My opposition to the proposal arises because of my aversion to the compounding of bureaucracy. If a department were created, all the attendant expense of the creation of a new ministry and staff, though initially relatively modest, would follow the alarming habit of ballooning to a much greater degree than originally contemplated.

There is not only the expense involved and the draining of personnel from other departments. I feel there is a real and growing danger of an ever-increasing multiplicity of departments with ever-growing duplication and overlapping which militate against the efficient handling of the problems for which they were created. I submit that another cabinet post with all the necessary related machinery simply does not appear justified under the present circumstances.

Furthermore, the Consumers Association of Canada has done a great deal of good work. Through the imposition of grading systems and its testing procedure and in many other ways it has protected the consumer. With the formation of a federal department the completely detached work of this association might be impaired. One reason it has been so effective stems from the fact that it has operated independently of all external pressures.

The contemporary tendency is to impose ever-widening responsibilities upon government departments which in turn are more susceptible to lobbies and influences from without. There is no assurance that a government portfolio would strengthen the consumer association's very important and valuable program which has contributed so much to the protection and welfare of Canadian citizens.

The argument against a separate department at this time does not mean that I feel no further action in regard to consumers' affairs should be taken. Quite to the contrary. I submit there is a drastic need for a much intensified campaign to protect our consumers, but I submit this can be done within the existing framework of government by strengthening our present consumer protection services, amending legislation such as the Criminal Code or the Income Tax Act as required and implementing new laws and regulations regarding consumer credit.

I would suggest that this could be done by the creation of a bureau in an existing department, such as the Department of National Health and Welfare, which would have jurisdiction over consumers' affairs and be especially empowered to speak on their behalf and co-ordinate the activities of departments such as trade and commerce, agriculture, justice, and health and welfare, which now have services protecting consumers. This idea does not preclude the possibility of ultimately creating a department with its own minister if the problems and complexities of consumer matters warrant it.

Such a bureau would have the responsibility of improving and updating the consumer protection agencies of other departments, providing facilities for research and investigation into consumer protection, providing a current statistical record of consumer information and providing facilities for consumer complaints to be heard and properly and promptly analysed for remedial action.

This agency would have the responsibility of examining present legislation which protects the consumer against abuses and, in addition, could suggest the enactment of new legislation to prevent deceptive and fraudulent business practices. For example, something could be done in regard to truth in packaging legislation, improved testing procedures on products, more rigid laws protecting the consumer against the marketing of goods hazardous to health of life, laws providing that the consumer is to be rightfully informed and protected against fraudulent, deceitful or grossly exaggerated and misleading advertising or labelling.

This agency could delve into the entire question of consumer credit. Evidence shows that the ordinary consumer in most cases has no idea whatsoever as to the interest rate he is paying and there is conclusive evidence that in many instances the consumer is paying an exorbitant interest rate which is concealed through lack of disclosure, hidden bonuses, discounts and special charges.

The whole question of credit for the consumer is of paramount importance and the government quite properly set up a joint committee of the house and Senate on consumer credit. Easy credit without any real indication of harshness of terms and the rate of interest does a real disservice to our citizens and to our country. The economic hardship and domestic dissention caused by the beguiling allure of "Buy now and pay later" cannot be estimated.

The evil is not in the availability of credit but in the degree of access to credit and the lack of appreciation of many people as to the actual eventual cost of the article purchased. This bureau would have the duty of sifting proposed legislation which would have the effect of preserving the rightful place of credit buying but at the same time would correct flagrant abuses now existing.

I feel that the question of consumer protection is very apropos under present circumstances of creeping inflation. Economists differ as to the degree of inflation and methods to combat it but not on the proposition that there are inflationary trends. I suggest that one does not have to be a learned economist to realize that there is some measure of inflation. Any housewife who has to buy the staples of life, bread, milk and vegetables, knows that prices are becoming alarmingly high. I personally, and I am sure other members of the house, have received strong representations in regard to the high cost of living and I submit that the time has come when a commission on prices should be established.

I am not for a moment suggesting that price control should be introduced which, of course, involves wage control, but I strongly contend that a price commission or board set up by the federal government to investigate price increases would be a real safeguard to the consumer and a guardian for our entire economy.

The duty of this commission would be to maintain a rigid scrutiny on the general rise in prices, with particular attention to any drastic upsurge in the price of any particular commodity. Its function would be chiefly that of a watchdog and information obtained could be made available to the government which in turn, if it believed it to be in the national interest, could take the necessary corrective action. This commission would not have the power of enforcement but as a source of information for the government it could be of great value.

This is no novel departure, and a form of such price vigilance is now being practised in the United States of America. It seems to me to be only prudent to have price information available in this period of inflationary trends. It is a precautionary method. It is a preventative measure and not a cure in itself. When this country is threatened with the spectre of inflation, surely any measure to assist in gauging its imminence and thus providing an opportunity for immediate remedial steps is worthy of consideration.

In summary, as I stated at the outset I agree with the motion in principle but at the present time I suggest that a section of an existing department could be utilized to perform the functions that the mover envisages for the new department and over which it might have jurisdiction. In this way the same results could be achieved without the considerable expense and work that the creation of a new department would entail. If after the creation of such a bureau its work warranted a separate department, then the next logical step would be its creation.

The government shares the concern of the entire country and the members of this house in regard to the plight of the consumer who in effect is buyer and producer alike. Augmenting the considerable work done by the joint committee on consumer credit, the establishment of a consumer bureau within an existing department and the creation of a price commission as a sentinel for the Canadian people on constant vigil, guarding against inordinate and dangerous price rises in any segment of our economy, would, I feel, be a wise move in the government's continual concern for the welfare of our people.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, the problem in relation to consumer affairs at this particular time in the history of Canada is, of course, one of the most important that this country faces today and one which concerns everyone here in the house and across the nation. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) should be commended for bringing forward this motion. Personally I feel it is not broad enough to meet the challenge that faces the people of this country today and particularly those who live in urban areas. I do not intend to go over the remarks that have been made by those who have referred to truth in advertising and consumer credit as these problems are recognized by all inside and outside the house as problems in respect of which action should have been taken earlier than it appears might be taken.

Rather than a department of consumer affairs I should like to see the establishment of a department of urban affairs to take care of problems not only in relation to consumer credit or credit as a whole but problems in relation to taxation, housing and recreation in the new urban areas that are emerging across this country. Everyone has heard or read the printed word about urban sprawl. While C.M.H.C. and the National Housing Act provide some leadership in the planning for these new communities there still remains a good deal to be done in regard to planning for the great expansion of urban communities.

I was intrigued by the remarks of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Tolmie) when he referred to creeping inflation. I do not think we have creeping inflation in Canada today but rather galloping inflation. Every time we turn around we see an increase in the cost of living largely brought about by the imposition of taxation by the government in the face of opposition by other parties in this parliament. I am sure the hon. member for Welland was sincere in his remarks.

If the government wants to do something about this situation it should remove the sales tax immediately. This would do a great deal to alleviate the difficult situation in which everyone finds himself because of the high cost of consumer goods. It is interesting to note that today members on the government side of the house refer to inflation. Not long ago they did not like to admit that as a result of the imposition of the sales tax there occurred a tremendous increase in the cost of almost everything that people have to buy during their daily lives.

While I want to congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway on her motion I should like to reiterate the belief that what Canada needs and what this government needs is a department of urban affairs to deal with the much broader aspect of the problems which face people in urban areas.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity of speaking on this motion and perhaps my first words should be an expression of my appreciation to the hon. lady for allowing this motion to stand much longer than she probably wanted in order that I would have such opportunity.

The question of consumer affairs is one that has interested me as a member of the committee on consumer credit. The first bill which I introduced in this house as a private member on the other side was with regard to the unconscionable transactions relief act.

I should like to put forward several observations, first about the remarks of the hon. lady regarding the establishment of a department of consumer affairs and at the same time to refer to a brief which was presented by the Consumers Association of Canada on April 12, 1966.

The hon. lady stated at one stage that there was not one single department devoted to consumer affairs in Canada. She thereafter, in part, denied her own observation by making the point that there were actually a great many different federal departments and laws concerned with consumer matters. She gave a partial enumeration of them and perhaps I can carry on the enumeration. There are the fair trading provisions as well as the monopoly provisions under the Combines Investigation Act. There is a false advertising section under the Criminal Code. There is, of course, a food and drug directorate, to which she made reference. There are Canada grade standards regulations maintained by the Department of Agriculture and, as the hon. lady stated, there is a Weights and Measures Act under the jurisdiction of and exercised by the Department of Trade and Commerce. There is, of course, legislation with regard to consumer lending and, more particularly, interest. I refer to the Interest Act in so far as it does provide protection, and the more comprehensive piece of legislative machinery, the Small Loans Act, both of which are administered by the Minister of Finance through the office of the Superintendent of Insurance.

I should acknowledge at once that there is great appeal to the argument that one should consolidate all these fairly diverse activities under one department, but I submit that while this argument does have appeal it makes more sense to continue to have particular functions carried out by the departments which have the expertise to deal with them. For example, under the Department of National Health and Welfare there is already assembled a body of expertise, comprising a groups of experts for the purpose of advising the government on health security measures. To move at least part of that group to a separate department of consumer affairs could only involve in the long run, duplication of responsibilities in the two departments of government. This would happen in the same way with reference to the Combines Investigation Act if responsibility for it was given to such a department although this perhaps was not suggested by the hon. lady but rather by the consumers association. I would point out that fair trade practices legislation is not just related to consumers but also to other interests in the country such as retailers who may be in competition in the market with individuals who are engaged in unfair trading practices. It is of interest to other manufacturers who may be concerned about monopolistic or combines situations involving their competitors. And it is of general public interest that there be full competition between firms operating in Canada so as to reduce the Canadian cost of manufacturers products, placing them in a competitive position on foreign markets. In other words, there is real merit to making sure that the particular function of expertise should be kept in one place and that the broad area of responsibility should concern itself not just with consumer interests but with all interests at other levels of the economy and with persons other than in their capacity as consumers.

In the same way, with regard to the Canada grade standards regulations which are administered by the Department of Agriculture I think we should bear in mind that while the grade standards regulations do have the effect of benefiting consumers in the availability of better quality products, their initial purpose was not to benefit the consumer but rather to benefit the producer in stimulating the production of better quality products and thus maximizing returns to individual producers. Therefore my first argument against the particular modus which the hon. lady has put forward is that you would be taking from individual government departments at least some of the expert advice they have available and which inevitably they would have to replace. Also, as the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Tolmie) pointed out, what we would really be doing would be duplicating the bureaucracy. I think it is clear on the basis of past experience that problems do arise in this regard. There would be a conflict of jurisdiction as to the particular problem, whether it be a consumer problem or one, for example, concerning fair practices at the manufacturing level.

Proposed Consumers Affairs Department

I would hate to leave the question on a purely negative note and would like to put forward my own proposal with respect to the matter of consumer protection, which differs from that put forward by the hon. lady and the hon. member for Welland. The hon. lady referred in her remarks to some of the difficulty caused by reason of the fact that jurisdiction over the matter of consumer affairs is divided between the two levels of government. I had the opportunity previously to observe, and would like to take the opportunity to say again, that there is no real logic in considering a consumer transaction on the basis of the jurisdiction between the two levels of government in Canada. For example, the hon. lady referred to a cooling off period. I would advance as my opinion that it is unquestionable that the question of a cooling off period on a door-to-door sale is one that falls under the jurisdiction of the provinces. In the same way the question of warranty as to the sound operation of a particular apparatus is clearly a matter for the provincial sale of goods acts and is so dealt with at the present time under their legislation.

If the consumer is buying a piece of hard goods on time, his initial rights and obligations are established under the conditional sales act or perhaps the chattel mortgages act of the particular province, and in either case his rights and obligations are determined by provincial law. One of the most serious problems and one which lawyers in the house will recognize, I am sure, as occurring most often and coming to their attention, is that raised by the exercise of rights in default, what steps must be taken in order to recover the particular piece of hard goods, the refrigerator, car or television set, and what is the obligation of the purchaser after that. This again falls under provincial jurisdiction.

On the other hand, some aspects of this problem—this matter has been referred to—now fall under federal jurisdiction. The question of the obligation to state interest under a contract, as already provided by the federal Interest Act, is a matter within federal jurisdiction and the federal government has with the consent of the provinces—I think we must recognize this—in the past exercised control in respect of small loans to people for essentially consumer uses under the Small Loans Act, which again is federal law.

The suggestion I should like to make is that we should consider the establishment at the federal level of a semi-autonomous body like the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, which would have the responsibility of carrying out at the federal level, and through delegation at the provincial level, surveillance over the field of consumer affairs.

My inspiration in this regard comes, of course, from the consumer council which is now in effect in the United Kingdom and was set up by the British government as a result of the Molony report, that is to say, the final report of the committee on consumer protection which was published in July, 1962. The operation of the consumer council can be best summarized by a brief reference to the annual report for the year 1964-65. I quote from the foreword by the chairman of the council:

> Our aims are twofold: first, better self-protection by consumers through education and information; second, more safeguards for consumers through better codes of practice in industry and commerce or by legislation, where this will be the only effective way to provide protection against unscrupulous salesmen or manufacturers.

A little later the chairman referred to the Molony report as follows:

> The Molony committee, in their report on consumer protection, said that it should be the duty of the council "to secure presentation of the consumer viewpoint at high national levels." We have found increasingly that government departments and others are consulting us on matters affecting consumers. We cannot pretend, of course, to represent the views and attitudes of all the consumers in the country. In some cases, however, we can base our comments on data which we have derived from special inquiries, such as field surveys; in others we present the collective view of a body of people who from various angles are informed about consumer matters and interests. The Molony committee in this context mentioned particularly the monopolies commission and the restrictive practices court.

I am suggesting that it would be possible to establish a federal entity of this kind to which the provincial governments, as a result of arrangements between the federal and provincial governments, could delegate the responsibility for carrying out such provincial legislation as may be related to consumer affairs. There are unquestioned difficulties, which the hon. lady inclined to make light of, in the division of jurisdiction between the two levels of government. But it is also clear that by a proper process of delegation to an entity of this kind, individual provincial governments could give the responsibility to this federal entity for the purpose, first, of carrying out education—that is, education of the buying public on these very important consumer questions—and, second, the purpose of assuring the better carrying out of the objectives of consumer protection whether they be objectives as stated in existing law or statute or general objectives which the consumer council might recommend should be made law either at the federal or provincial level.

The Molony report went to some pains to make it clear that they were not recommending a kind of a consumers' complaints bureau. At page 280 of the Molony report they made this observation:

> What we reject is the idea that a consumer council should be under duty to receive, consider or handle individual complaints or to attempt to adjust them.

Paragraph 855 of the report, briefly stated, indicated the following functions?

> 1. Collecting information about consumer problems.
> 2. Considering what, if any, action is required.
> 3. Promoting that action.

I think it would be very useful for an entity of this kind to have the responsibility of surveying the consumer field generally in Canada and deciding what, if any, protection is necessary for consumers either by changes in the law or through the vehicle of prosecutions or other legal action under existing statutes.

One of the real difficulties involved in many of these consumer problems—and it is not unique to the consumer field; it applies to many other legal questions—is that the mere scale of the problem in the individual case may not justify legal action by the person involved. Therefore even the person who has had a bad deal in the purchase of an electric fan, television set or refrigerator is inclined to take the attitude that he should not throw good money after bad in trying to enforce the warranty and bring to justice the particular unscrupulous salesman or manufacturer who may have been responsible for selling the article.

What a consumer council could do, where practices of a fraudulent nature were disclosed and certainly where there was a pattern of misleading sales practice, would be to take whatever legal action might be involved such as the rescinding of the contract in a number of particular cases. This action, of course, would be brought at the expense of the council in order to establish the kind of practices which would not be enforceable or, conversely, the kind of practices which could result in the contract being upset. In this way the consumer council could take the initiative to have the court declare standards where now so often in these consumer cases the consumer in question decides not to proceed with any particular action.

I have made reference already to the fact that I do not accept the hon. lady's suggestion with regard to the establishment of a separate department. I have suggested that perhaps a more effective way of achieving consumer protection would be a separate entity, a semi-autonomous entity, to which responsibility for enforcement of consumer legislation at the federal level could be given by this parliament and perhaps by delegation by the provincial governments.

I should like to express my approval of one suggestion in the brief of the Consumers Association of Canada. I am referring to page 3 of the brief where reference is made to the establishment of an interdepartmental committee of government departments which are responsible for enforcing various aspects of consumer legislation. For example, I have made reference to the fact in my earlier remarks that no less than six different parts of government are involved with the enforcement of consumer legislation. They are the Departments of Finance, Trade and Commerce, Agriculture, National Health and Welfare and the combines investigation branch which under the bill currently before parliament is to become the responsibility of the Registrar General in the general grouping of business matters under one department.

The sixth, of course, is the Criminal Code, the actual enforcement of which is not the responsibility of the federal government but the responsibility of the provinces. I say it would be very useful that there should be an interdepartmental committee on a continuing basis within the federal government in order that certain practices or patterns of practices which appear may be brought to the attention of the appropriate departments. For example, a problem might involve health and would be referred to the Department of National Health and Welfare, while any weights and measures aspect of the problem should be referred to the Department of Trade and Commerce. Merely because part of the problem came under another department we would not necessarily run the risk of its falling between two stools.

I hope the government will give serious consideration to the establishment of an interdepartmental committee on consumer affairs for the purpose of making sure that the attention of federal departments is directed in this way. I am not suggesting, however, that this is any substitute for the kind of tribunal, if you like, or semi-autonomous organization which could assume its own direction and assume responsibility for having a general regard for consumer affairs.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a general concern in Canada about consumer matters. We in Ontario have just had the benefit of the final report of a select committee of the Ontario legislature on consumer credit. The province of Manitoba over the past three or four years has been giving very close scrutiny to those aspects of its public law which affect consumers and business practices generally. The province of Nova Scotia has already carried out one of these studies and has received a report. This in turn is just a reflection of the concern of the elected representatives, a concern in turn communicated to them by their constituents that there should be a fresh look by government at the problems of consumer matters.

Perhaps I could close on a final, historical note. It is of interest to observe paragraph 892 of the Molony report:

> Consumer protection is no new idea. The intervention by the state to restrain deceitful trading practices and promote honourable standards in commerce has a long history.

The Molony report goes on to quote a twelfth century example. It, therefore, is not a novel proposition we are putting forward. What we are really talking about today is not a general principle, that is, whether there should be intervention by the state to protect individual consumers; we are not here considering whether or not the maxim caveat emptor is now to be replaced with a new philosophy. We have already accepted the philosophy of state intervention to protect consumers. We are really talking about the formal organization to carry out those principles.

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I do want to make a few remarks at this time but I shall be brief. I really want to deal with another aspect of the matter which has not been discussed here. I should like to deal with the health point of view rather than the economics of the situation which seem to have taken the time of most members of the house. I noticed that in the brief presented by the Consumers Association of Canada there is reference to the fact that the main function of such a group would be safeguarding the economic tradition of consumers.

I only have one minute left so I will restrain myself to the discussion of one point, namely, labelling. During the last session of parliament a special committee on food and drugs went into this question, particularly the marking of insecticides, pesticides and drugs. One problem that has cropped up now has been the labelling of foods. We hear a great deal from people who suffer from allergies and who have to be on special diets, such as egg-free diets, gluten-free diets and sugar-free diets for diabetics. A great deal of material is being circulated to the end that such people will receive some assurance that the label on every food product will indicate the content of that product. I believe everyone in this house would agree with that principle.

I am pleased to see that the bakery products business, as the result of a voluntary approach by the food and drug directorate, is now labelling at least 50 per cent of the products now on the market by listing the total ingredients.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hour for private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the highly unusual circumstance of no minister being in the house to announce the business, I wonder which parliamentary secretary—I hope the most attractive one—will be announcing the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to defer to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare but that the business I have to announce is mundane. Yesterday, as recorded at page 5489 of Hansard, the Minister of National Revenue set forth the program of business for today. It is the proposal of the government house leader, I understand, that we should continue this program of business tomorrow.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.
