HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIRST SESSION—TWENTY SEVENTH PARLIAMENT

15 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME V, 1966

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TWENTY EIGHTH DAY OF APRIL, 1966, TO THE TWENTY FIFTH DAY OF MAY, 1966, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

ROGER DUHAMEL, F.R.S.C.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1966

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 28, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. IRVINE—INABILITY TO OBTAIN ELECTORAL COMMISSION REPORTS

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of proceedings in this house. Previous to the opening of parliament I sent in certain questions for the order paper, one of which became question No. 48. It was supposed to have been answered yesterday, but I suggest that what was given was hardly in the nature of a reply.

The question had to do with the cost of advertising in various daily newspapers throughout the country regarding the proposed federal electoral districts. The answer I received to my question is as follows:

> As was stated in reply to question No. 148 on February 2, 1966, pages 585-6 of Hansard, the commissions set up under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act do not report to the government so that the government does not have records giving the information sought in this question. Under section 10 of the act the commissions are not agencies of Her Majesty. Reports of the commissions are made directly to the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, are not the readjustment commissions directly or indirectly employed by this house? Are they not responsible to anyone, or do they just kind of sail off all by themselves and do whatever they wish? Can they squander perhaps millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money and not have to account for it? This seems to me to be very unreasonable.

I think there are many people throughout the country and in this house who want to know exactly how much this program did cost. I would not say it looks as though it was money thrown into an election campaign, because I do not think that would be fair, but some time I would like to move or cause to be moved if it is not my prerogative, that the redistribution commissions be not paid until such time as they have made a proper accounting to the members of this house of exactly how much money was spent and in what manner it was spent. The people of Canada want to know this, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to know it too.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege raised by the hon. gentleman may I say that at least part No. 5 of question 48 is within the knowledge of the government. That part is, what was the total cost for this entire program? These cheques were issued by the comptroller of the treasury, who is in a position, then, to answer the question.

This same matter has been before the house on other occasions in respect of certain questions that I asked. Incorrect and improper answers were first given, and it was necessary for me to ask whether the comptroller of the treasury had issued the cheques. He admitted that he had, and the information was forthcoming. I venture to suggest to the Minister of Finance that the answer to question 48, certainly in so far as it applies to part No. 5, is totally erroneous.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question of privilege just raised by the hon. member for London is substantially the same as that which was raised yesterday in the house by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I have since then considered the matter, as I said yesterday I would.

If I may summarize the problem, the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for London had asked for certain information with respect to commissions set up under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. The answer provided by the Secretary of State in the three cases was generally to the effect that the commissions set up under the act do not report to the government but rather to the House of Commons, and that the government does not have at its disposal the information sought.

The hon. member for Edmonton West took the position that the individual representation commissions are emanations of the house and responsible to the house, and that the only method of communication with the commissions is through the Secretary of State. The hon. member went on to say he realized that the commissions are not responsible to the government, and in the course of his remarks suggested that the Chair take under consideration the question of the possibility of compelling the commissions to answer. I indicated, as I said, that the matter would be studied, and particularly the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West on this point.

In the first instance I should say that the responsibilities of the Speaker with respect to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act are limited. Under section 6 (2), two members of a provincial commission other than the chairman and the representation commissioner are appointed by the Speaker of the House of Commons. As hon. members know, under the act the various commissions send copies of their reports to the representation commissioner, who in turn transmits a copy to the Speaker under section 19 (1) of the act. It is the Speaker's duty thereupon to lay the report before parliament.

The Speaker then has a further obligation under section 20 of the act to receive objections, and on the conclusion of consideration of those objections he must refer the reports, objections and relevant debates of the House of Commons back to the representation commissioner. These various obligations, it seems to me, constitute the responsibilities of the Speaker in these matters, and I am afraid I cannot accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West that I can compel the commissions to answer questions raised in the house affecting the conduct of their responsibilities.

Hon. members will have noted that the Secretary of State, in dealing with question No. 48 in the name of the hon. member for London and questions 202 and 212 in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West, in effect stated that she was not in a position to make replies. Therefore I think we have to assume that the questions have not in fact been answered by the Secretary of State, and she has given certain reasons for adopting this attitude.

That being the case, I do not see how the Chair can compel the minister to answer, and I need only refer the hon. member to citation 181 (3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which is of course well known to the hon. member for Edmonton West and to all hon. members of the house, where it is stated:

> A minister may decline to answer a question without stating the reason for his refusal, and insistence on an answer is out of order, no debate being allowed. A refusal to answer cannot be raised as a question of privilege, nor is it regular to comment upon such refusal. A member can put a question, but has no right to insist upon an answer.

I quite appreciate that in the case of the three written questions the Secretary of State did indeed make a statement, but I do not think in reading that statement it can be regarded as an answer to the questions. It seems to me it merely takes the position that the minister cannot make an answer and, that being so, under the citation I have just quoted I fear I cannot accept the view that the hon. member for Edmonton West has a question of privilege. This applies equally to the hon. member for London.

I must say I have some understanding of and sympathy for the hon. members' position. While I have found that there does not seem to be a question of privilege in the matter raised, it does seem to me that the hon. members may very well have a grievance which they could legitimately raise at the first opportunity, or should they care to do so they might consider the advisability of placing on the order paper a motion for the production of papers, in which case it may be that the Governor in Council would produce the information sought through the Secretary of State, who under the statute is the channel of communication between the representation commissioner and the Governor in Council.

REDISTRIBUTION

ORDER TO BE FOLLOWED IN DEBATE ON OBJECTIONS TO REPORTS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): On Monday last I proposed that the question of allocation of time for the consideration of objections under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act be referred to the business committee.

In accordance with subclause 3 of standing order 15A, the business committee is pleased to report that it is now unnecessary to make any recommendation for such allocation of time.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): In view of what the government house leader has just said, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if he would advise the house as to the sequence that will be followed in considering the objections according to provinces in the next few days.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that. Today we will begin with consideration of the New Brunswick motion, then proceed to the objections concerning the Alberta redistribution and afterward those concerning British Columbia. Tomorrow, whether or not we have completed the British Columbia objections, we will take up the Ontario objections first. When the Ontario objections have been completed we will go on to the objections, if there are any remaining, from British Columbia, followed by the objections relating to the province of Saskatchewan, then Manitoba and finally the remaining objections concerning the province of Quebec.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION IN CURRENT DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister tell the house what has been done in the tranquilization processes he has been called upon to utilize since he received the authority of the broadcasting committee in connection with the dispute between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the producers of "This Hour Has Seven Days"?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have received a copy of the report of the committee of the house dealing with this matter, and have been giving consideration to the suggestion made in that report. I have also received a copy of a telegram sent this morning by the president of the Association of Television Producers and Directors. It is addressed to the Prime Minister, and it informs me that the producers will abide by the expressed will of the parliamentary committee on broadcasting and will suspend their decision—quoting from the telegram—> —to recommend a complete withdrawal of our members services not later than ten p.m. eastern daylight time Sunday, May 1, provided the officers of the corporation suspend their decision in the matter of "Seven Days" posts pending mediation.

I am awaiting, Mr. Speaker, the reaction of the management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to this telegram before I make any decision as to whether the government should intervene and, if so, in what way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Prime Minister say whether he communicated directly with the president of the C.B.C. in this connection and what reaction, if any, he received?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not communicated directly with the president on this matter. I think I will await the president's reaction to this telegram. If I have not heard from him by this afternoon I will get in touch with him.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): A supplementary question. I think it would be helpful if the Prime Minister could explain what he has in mind in using the expression "good offices of the government" in relation to this present dispute. What does the phrase "good offices of the government" mean?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the phrase "good offices" means using your good offices in an effort to be helpful to both sides and bring the dispute to an end.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could we be assured that in the exercise of these good offices any mediator appointed would be chosen from outside either the ministerial ranks or the public service?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if the government decides to intervene at all in this matter—and the government has to be very careful indeed in intervening in the affairs of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—but if it is decided that government intervention will be helpful, I would like to consult with both sides as to the form which that intervention should take.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CURRENT TALKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to ask him whether he or the government are being kept informed of the talks that are taking place in Salisbury, Rhodesia, between the government of the United Kingdom and the rebel government of Rhodesia. Would he also be good enough to inform us whether these talks are confined to the government of the U.K. or whether the commonwealth sanctions committee or the commonwealth general secretary, Arnold Smith, are parties to the conversations now taking place.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before I reply to the question may I direct your attention and that of the members of this house to the fact that the foreign minister of Zambia, Mr. Simon Kapwepwe, is in the Speaker's gallery. May I express on behalf of all of us our pleasure in welcoming him to Canada at this time.

In answer to this question, the government of the United Kingdom sent us a message, prior to the announcement in the British House of Commons yesterday, in the form of a letter directed to the Prime Minister of Canada. We were therefore informed in advance of the announcement made by the British government which has the constitutional power in this matter. The secretary-general of the commonwealth is not a party to these talks.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that Canada has very materially assisted the government of the United Kingdom in dealing with matters concerning Rhodesia, in the transportation of oil to Zambia and the like, is the Canadian government being consulted by the British government with regard to the activities of the British government, or is the Canadian government being only informed of those activities?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in the reply I just made that the British government through its Prime Minister advised the government of Canada, through its Prime Minister, of the informal talks that were taking place. The holding of such talks is of course entirely a matter of British responsibility, since the British government has the exclusive constitutional authority over Rhodesia in respect of the area to be covered by the talks. Naturally all commonwealth countries have an interest in this development. It is on that account that the British government has consulted not only Canada but other commonwealth governments.

Mr. Nesbitt: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I take it from the minister's answer that the Canadian government is not being merely advised of what is going on, but that the minister actually is being consulted by the British government as to the course to be taken.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are continuous consultations in this, as in other matters, between the British government and other commonwealth governments.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask a further supplementary question in connection with the oil air lift in which Canada participated in Africa. Does the termination of this air lift mean that as far as Canada is concerned the reasons for setting it up no longer require it to be carried on?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, that is right. I may say, in the presence of the foreign minister of Zambia with whom members of the government have been having talks, that the foreign minister has indicated the gratitude of his government to Canada for the contribution it made to Zambia with respect to this air lift which ends at the end of this month.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the thanks, but the question was, does the ending of this air lift mean that the problem of Zambia securing the necessary oil no longer continues? That was the question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes. I thought it was clear from the statement that the implication must obviously be that the air lift has served its purpose and is no longer needed because Zambia has the required oil.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Fine. We have the answer for that at last.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Thompson: My question has been asked, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question which hinges on the attitude of the Canadian government toward the situation in Rhodesia. I would ask him when the government intends to take similar action with respect to the government of South Africa where a similar situation prevails.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think the hon. member will recognize that the two situations are not really similar.

INCOME TAX

DISTRIBUTION OF T-4 SLIPS TO QUEBEC RESIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): My question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It has been brought to my attention that a number of civil servants who reside in the province of Quebec but who work in the province of Ontario have not as yet received the final T4 slips they require when making returns to the government of the province of Quebec. Would the minister be good enough to look into this matter and assure the employees concerned that the slips will be provided in time for them to fulfil their obligations within the time prescribed under the law?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): I think this is a matter which falls within the responsibility of the comptroller of the treasury, but I will look into it.

MANITOBA—EXTENSION OF FILING DEADLINE FOR FLOOD VICTIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue and ask whether he would consider postponing the final date for he filing of income tax returns by people living in the Red River valley who, because they were forced to vacate their homes, will not be able to complete the filing of their returns on time.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): I have had inquiries made of the problems certain taxpayers in Manitoba may have in filing their tax returns by the normal date because of the unfortunate flooding of the Red River and its tributaries. I have concluded that relief from late filing penalties should be granted where this is warranted because of the individual circumstances of the taxpayer or his accountants. In these cases no late filing penalties will be applied if the returns are filed by May 31, 1966.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—EFFECT OF INCREASE IN TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It is this. The proposed rate increase on the great lakes will cost about $5 million more in respect of grain shipments, and this sum will come out of the pockets of the farmers. What action does the government intend to take to help western grain producers in this situation?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The two entities concerned, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and the United States corporation, have prepared certain draft recommendations for their governments. Public hearings are to be held before final recommendations are made, and any one who feels that these proposed charges are improper will have an opportunity at the public hearings to make representations. Until the recommendations reach the government, the government has no authority in this matter.

[Later:]

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Macleod regarding the proposed increased rates on the St. Lawrence seaway. Will the minister have an opportunity of appearing before the transport committee to justify this increase?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. member is referring to the president of the seaway authority appearing before the committee. I believe this will depend upon the views of the committee. I am going to see the president of the authority this afternoon, and I will ask for his views.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—BRIDGE AND CAUSEWAY TO LENNOX ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): My question is addressed to the minister of northern affairs. In the light of indications by representatives of the Indian affairs branch last fall that construction would begin within the year on the causeway and bridge linking Lennox Island, an Indian reserve in Prince Edward Island, with the mainland of Prince Edward Island, could the minister inform the house whether such action is contemplated in the very near future?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member place this question on the order paper.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): By reason of the fact that I have already submitted this question to the minister and he has indicated his willingness to answer it, I think I should be allowed to have the answer at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid this consideration is not entirely relevant.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED CO-ORDINATION AUTHORITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): My question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. I wish to ask him whether it is the policy of the government, or whether he intends to recommend to the government, that a single board or commission be set up to look into the question of transport in Canada and carry out the functions of the Board of Transport Commissioners, the Air Transport Board and the Maritime Commission, as he suggested in a speech in Winnipeg yesterday.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I said in Winnipeg that I had not made up my mind and that I wanted to hear more discussion and debate on this matter. I would be very glad to have the hon. member's views on this in writing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question. Could the minister indicate when I might expect a reply to question No. 814 on the order paper, which has to do with his search for a transportation policy? This question has been standing since February.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know what it is about.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, the reply will be ready just as soon as the arithmetic can be done.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Does all this mean we shall not have a railway bill this session?

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope that long before other and even more urgent matters have been dealt with by hon. members, I will have a bill before the house which will commend itself at least to my colleagues in the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

FINANCE

REMOVAL OF TAXES ON AUTOMOBILE PARTS MACHINERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I address my question to the Minister of Finance.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Can the minister advise the house whether, and if so when, he proposes, as outlined in the Globe and Mail yesterday, to remove the 11 per cent sales tax and the 22½ per cent tariff on new machinery used by the car parts manufacturers, so they may more effectively compete with their United States counterparts?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I set out the government's proposals in the course of the budget speech, I have nothing to add until the legislation is brought down.

STORMS

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION AS DISASTER AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): My question is one for the Prime Minister. In view of the extensive property damage caused by wind and water in yesterday's disastrous storm which struck Essex and Kent counties on the north shore of lake Erie, will the right hon. gentleman indicate whether the government will consider this area as a disaster area and respond sympathetically to an application for financial aid?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The members from Essex county have already brought this important matter to my attention. We are giving this serious consideration, but we have not yet heard from the Ontario provincial authorities. This is, of course, a provincial responsibility. No doubt they will get in touch with us if they need federal intervention and assistance.

REDISTRIBUTION

INFORMATION ON EXPENDITURES BY PROVINCIAL COMMISSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Merely for information I would direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the subject upon which Your Honour made a ruling at the opening of the sitting today—question No. 48 in the name of the hon. member for London, and questions 202 and 212 in the name of my hon. friend from Edmonton West.

I ask the Prime Minister this. Will he not, as head of the government, inquire from these commissions concerning the expenditure in question? We are asked to furnish the money and there is no commission in this country which can be so arrogant as to refuse to give this information. These questions were on the order paper for two or three months; then we receive these cavalier answers. I ask the Prime Minister as head of the administration to get this information so that we may know how our money is being spent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As head of the administration I would be very glad to look into this matter immediately.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the hon. members of the house that the Electoral Boundaries Commission is not a government agency and as a result, the government is not in a position to supply this information. I should like to point out, in this connection—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member rises on a point of order because a question was asked by the Leader of the Opposition to which the Prime Minister replied. Accordingly, there is no point of order.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have we the parliamentary secretary teaching the Prime Minister?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the references the minister made at the Canadian Labour Congress convention this week to the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act and the Female Employees Equal Pay Act, can he say whether the changes he suggested will require legislation to be introduced in this house?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Some of them probably will, Mr. Speaker. The matter is under study. When we have a definite announcement to make, which I hope will be in the relatively near future, it will be made known to the house in the resolution. Some of them are likely to involve legislative changes.

Mr. Knowles: Will these changes be made at this session of parliament?

Mr. Nicholson: If we continue to make the progress we have made in the last 48 hours of sitting, that is a reasonable assumption.

EXPO '67

REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO RECORD R.C.M.P. BAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Without wishing to do any kind of a commercial for the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), has the Minister of Labour considered the representations made by that hon. member on Tuesday night last concerning the R.C.M.P. recordings for the centennial year.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): The minister has, and the minister gave a partial answer last week, but we are still working on it.

PENSIONS

RECONCILIATION OF RAILWAY AND CANADA PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Several days ago when I asked him about the problem of reconciling the Canada Pension Plan with the present railways' pension plans he suggested meetings were taking place. Have these meetings concluded, and has there been a satisfactory solution found in respect of the reconciliation of these railroad pension plans with the Canada Pension Plan?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. An announcement was made about ten days ago to the effect that a satisfactory solution had been worked out with the company which was accepted by the employees of the railway concerned.

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS WITH UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Labour about the dispute concerning the negotiating unit at the C.B.C.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Can the minister advise the house on the progress of talks between himself and the departmental committee on the one hand, and the representative of the C.N.T.U. and other organizations on the other hand?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can report only that the first of the meetings which I intimated might be taking place has been held. After the meeting of the Canadian Labour Congress in Winnipeg terminates it is expected that an early convenient date will be arranged for a meeting with the representatives of the railway brotherhood, the C.L.C. and other interested labour organizations in order to hear their representations.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—INQUIRY AS TO PROSECUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice. Some time ago the minister said the question of whether Hal Banks would be recharged and whether extradition proceedings would be taken was under consideration and investigation. In view of the length of time which has elapsed I am wondering whether the minister can report on that matter. He said the documents were tied up in the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it was reported by the Solicitor General that the documents had been released by the supreme court, but that other investigations were being carried out. There has not yet been any decision with regard to whether proceedings will be taken in this case.

CONSIDERATION OF ROYAL COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE ORGANIZED CRIME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister indicated he would be informing the house when replies had been received from the provinces with regard to the setting up of a commission on organized crime. Could he reply now?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Replies are in from all the provinces except one, and I believe that may have come in but if it has I have not yet seen it.

[Mr. Allard.]

My hon. friend will recall that on March 11 the Solicitor General wrote to all provincial attorneys general requesting their views on the subject of the setting up of a royal commission on crime. Nine of the ten provinces, as I have indicated, already have replied. If the tenth, which is Newfoundland, has not replied this morning I am assured the reply will be coming in either this afternoon or tomorrow.

Only the province of Quebec has stated that it definitely is in favour of such a commission. The provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan have expressed the view that a royal commission might be useful, but the remaining six, Alberta, British Columbia, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Prince Edward Island have expressed themselves as doubting the need for a commission, although most of them have indicated they are willing to discuss the matter at the next federal-provincial conference if it is desired to put it on the agenda. In this matter the federal government shares the view of the majority of the provinces.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of the Prime Minister's remarks with regard to the desirability of placing the matter on the agenda for the forthcoming dominion-provincial conference, could he inform the house whether the government will be placing this matter on the agenda?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, in view of the replies we have received and in view of the fact that one or two provinces have suggested it might be considered at the next national meeting or conference, we will be glad to place it on the agenda.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it will be on the agenda of the meeting which the Prime Minister intimated the other day would be held for approximately two days in British Columbia.

Mr. Pearson: The agenda for that meeting has not been decided. We are in communication with the provinces, but as my hon. friend has mentioned it will be a short meeting. There will be another meeting later in the summer or autumn. We may not be able at the meeting in British Columbia to deal with some of the business that we would like to, but the other matters will be on the agenda and will be dealt with at the next meeting.

LABOUR GAZETTE

DELAY IN DELIVERY OF FRENCH EDITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. I used to get the French version of the Canada Labour Gazette three months late. This morning we received the French version only two months late. May I ask the Minister of Labour when we can expect to have it simultaneously with the English version?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): There has been some progress. When the present minister took office the French version was six months late, then it was reduced to three months and it is now only two months. I should like to thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of his question. In all seriousness, I would refer him to page 3 of the latest issue, where it is stated that the target for simultaneous publication is in or about August of this year.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SHORTAGE OF MORTGAGE MONEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which deals with a subject in respect of which he has been answering questions all week, namely the increasing difficulty the housing industry in Canada is confronted with because of the lack of mortgage money. Has his government finished its examination of the problem, and is he in a position to reassure the house that a statement of government policy will be made tomorrow?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Labour indicated, he thought it would be tomorrow or he hoped early next week that we could make a statement. After the consideration we gave this matter again this morning I must say that we will not be ready before the week end, but I can assure my hon. friend that a statement will be made at the latest next Tuesday afternoon.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

VALCARTIER CAMP—STATEMENT AS TO SHANNON EXPROPRIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Associate Minister of National Defence, following his recent pilgrimage to the Shannon area and Valcartier camp, what his view is as to the reaction of the people, whether any decision has been made and what action the government will take.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, some time ago I informed the house that I would make a personal visit to the Valcartier area to consider the representations made by or on behalf of some residents of the community of Shannon, with particular regard to how the expropriation of lands will affect that community. On Tuesday, April 26, 1966 I visited several of the residents of Shannon and inspected the entire new training area by car and by helicopter.

It has always been the intent and policy of our department to do everything possible to respect the rights of those individuals whose property may be affected by the expropriation carried out to meet military requirements. A most careful and definitive study has been made of the requirements, both current and future; and I have decided, having regard to the social and economic effects on the community when weighed against military needs, that a somewhat lesser area will meet current operational training land requirements in an optimum if not a maximum manner.

Accordingly I have issued instructions that as soon as appropriate re-surveys and legal documentation can be prepared and amended notice of expropriation will be registered reducing the land being acquired by eliminating lots 419 to 433 inclusive in range 6; lots 604 to 610 in range 7, and lots 677 and 678 in range 8, all in the municipality of Shannon.

It is intended that fair and reasonable compensation will be paid for all legally recognizable interests, and I am hopeful that those persons affected by this necessary expropriation will in the fullness of time be able to replace their losses by acceptable alternate accommodation and interests. The house can be assured that the officers charged with carrying out the determination of compensation will take into consideration the difficulties which are inevitably generated by a disturbance of this type.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is certainly a step in the right direction. Perhaps I should ask the minister to what extent there has been a reduction in the acreage originally decided upon for expropriation and which, as a consequence of his visit, will now be reduced?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): It will be reduced by about one quarter.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Associate Minister of National Defence. In his answer he referred to a reduction of about a quarter. Does that mean that only one quarter of the land originally intended for expropriation will not now be expropriated and is the department now going to expropriate three quarters the original?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I was referring to one quarter of the Shannon area, Mr. Speaker. The land to be expropriated will be one quarter less than that originally projected.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is to be a 25 per cent reduction.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister although I realize he may refer it to one of his colleagues. In view of the fact that the government has on the order paper a notice of intention to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act, including the making of amendments of a general character, may I ask whether this will include an amendment to increase the pensions of civil servants already retired?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: Will the government reconsider this matter, Mr. Speaker? If I cannot obtain an answer now I guess I shall have to try at ten o'clock.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this matter is being brought to our attention, as my hon. friend knows, not only by him but by those directly concerned, and it is under continuous consideration. There is no intention to change the position at this time.

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

REDISTRIBUTION

CONSIDERATION OF OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: On February 15 last a notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with me in the following terms:

That, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65) and for the reasons hereinafter specified, consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the following provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of New Brunswick, laid before the house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19th, 1966 for the reasons hereinafter specified.

1. The fact of a majority and minority report having been presented by the commission suggests the existence of a difference of opinion in the commission itself which invites discussion by interested members of parliament.

2. In determining the boundaries of some of the electoral districts of the province of New Brunswick, the commission failed to give special emphasis to geographical considerations, including in particular the sparsity, density or relative rate of growth of population of various regions of the province, the accessibility of such regions, or the size or shape thereof, and ignored or overlooked the special problems of transportation and communication when establishing ten electoral districts in the said province.

3. In determining the boundaries of some of the electoral districts of the province of New Brunswick, as indicated by the majority report, the commission failed to give and pay proper attention to the physical, social and economic cohesion of some districts thus created and overlooked the question of unity and community of interest and thereby rendered satisfactory and comprehensive representation a most difficult task.

4. The inconvenience to any member of parliament attempting to maintain contact with constituents spread over some electoral districts would be considerable. The expense of travel might well be considered exorbitant in attempting to maintain such contact.

5. And such other objections that the undersigned members may consider applicable in order to carry out the spirit and terms and conditions of the act in question.

This is objection No. 11 and can be found at page 22 of the pamphlet distributed to hon. members.

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the house to the first item in our objections. It relates to the fact that a majority and a minority report were presented by the commission with respect to the province of New Brunswick electoral boundaries, which suggests the existence of a difference of opinion in the commission itself and invites discussion.

It would appear to me to be the most natural thing in the world for these two reports to be examined carefully, and that is exactly what I have done. I confess that I have examined them with particular reference to the constituency of Victoria-Carleton which I have the honour to represent in parliament and which seems to be especially affected by the variation in the two reports.

May I note also that my hon. friend, the member for Charlotte (Mr. McLean), has signed the objection. His county also is one which is particularly affected.

Before proceeding into the question in some detail I should like to make special reference and pay tribute to the work of the New Brunswick representatives on the commission, Mr. Justice Anglin, Mr. Boudreau and the chief electoral officer for the province, Mr. Lyons. It goes without saying that the representation commissioner, who is an ex-officio member of all commissions, is a man of much general experience and knowledge which was available to every provincial commission.

I appreciate the attention they have given and I pay tribute to them for the way in which they carried out the duties entrusted to them. It is not at all strange that in their report some of the angles from a provincial point of view, and also perhaps from a constituency point of view, may have been overlooked. I shall endeavour to supply some of the local facts in the time at my disposal.

I return now to where I left off in my opening remarks. The relationship between the counties of Victoria and Carleton has existed for over half a century. They have been united for federal representation for that period of time, if not longer, and it is on behalf of the people of these counties and with their interests in mind that I make these remarks today. In general terms may I say that the community of interest which the people of these two counties has is farming and, generally speaking, I believe it is fair to say that these two counties are considered to be part of the potato belt. The farming activity there is specialized to that extent.

We also have in the county of Carleton the largest food processing plant in Canada, I believe, and that processing is confined to a great extent to potatoes. There is also a question involved regarding the fact that these two counties lie along the Saint John river, with traffic up and down the river on both sides and with connecting roads.

Having made those remarks relative to the economic situation, I might also say that in a social way the people of the counties also have much in common. For the reasons I have just mentioned I think it will be understandable to this house that the citizens of Victoria-Carleton prefer the minority rather than the majority report, since the former recommendation if adopted would leave these two counties together and simply add three parishes from the northern part of York county and two parishes from the southern part of Madawaska county, plus the town of St. Leonard, in order to meet the population requirement. I held that opinion at the time the report was made, and I still hold it.

I could not think of any better way to secure the opinion of the people of Victoria and Carleton counties than to consult with the county councils which usually meet in the early part of the year. I consulted these county councils. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it would be difficult to find a more knowledgeable and non-partisan group than the county councils of those two areas. I think they would have knowledge of the views and needs of the people. Therefore I asked the councils of those two counties for some information concerning their views in connection with this matter, and I wish to place on record some of the replies I received.

The first reply was in connection with a resolution passed in the summer of 1965 prior to the minority and majority reports. I think this resolution is of significance because it sets out the view of one county council prior to there being any report to consider. I should like to put on record this certified resolution which was sent to me by the secretary-treasurer of Victoria county:

> The following is a true and exact copy of a resolution passed by the Victoria County Council while in semi-annual session July 6, 1965:
> "That this council disapprove of the proposed electoral district and go on record as favouring a constituency made up of Carleton, and Victoria County, and the parishes of St. Andre and St. Leonard Parent of Madawaska County."

A resolution was passed at the last session of the Victoria county council which I should also like to put on record. It reads as follows:

> Moved by Councillor Hiscock; seconded by Councillor Theriault:
> "That the municipal council of the municipality of Victoria go on record as supporting the minority report of Justice W. A. I. Anglin in the report of the New Brunswick Electoral Boundaries Commission and in particular in support of retaining the expanded proposed constituency of Victoria Carleton which would embrace the potato growing area of the Saint John River Valley." Carried.

I then consulted with various gentlemen in the potato business and want to put on record a letter I received from Mr. Frederick W. Pirie of F. W. Pirie Company Limited in connection with the matter. This letter, dated February 5, 1966, and addressed to me, reads as follows:

As I understand a report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for New Brunswick may come up for consideration in parliament soon, I would like to give you as our representative for the riding of Victoria-Carleton, my views on this matter.

As you know, the potato belt in this province extends from the northern part of York County through Carleton-Victoria counties, and as far north as St. Leonard in Madawaska County. In other words, the minority report which is appendix Y, takes in Victoria County, Carleton County, part of York County and St. Andre and St. Leonard in Madawaska County.

If a change is to be made in the boundary of the Victoria-Carleton riding, I cannot think of a more perfect way to extend the boundaries than has been outlined in appendix Y, because this would put the New Brunswick potato belt, where the problems are unique and different from the other areas in the province, all in one block and one riding.

A representative could cover the area much better, and much more conveniently, and he would be dealing with problems pretty much uniform throughout his riding.

It would be much easier for us to find a good representative who knows a lot about the problems of this potato belt, which most of the people in the riding are engaged in and depend on for livelihood, than it would be to find someone to properly represent the people of this area, or a portion of this area, and also the fishermen from one of the coastal counties such as Charlotte, or some other part of the province where the economy and conditions are different.

Having lived here all my life, and being deeply engaged in potato processing, potato growing and potato exporting, and as president of the Potato Shippers Association, I strongly recommend the above for your consideration.

Then I have a letter from Mr. J. Stewart Brooks, the M.L.A. for Victoria County which I should also like to put on the record. It is addressed to me, is dated January 24, 1966, and reads as follows:

As the question of the boundaries of the federal constituencies will be discussed in the House of Commons in the near future, I feel some facts in regard to the Victoria-Carleton constituency should be brought to the attention of the members.

If I have been correctly informed, the majority report of the committee in New Brunswick was to the effect that Victoria County and the two northern parishes of Carleton County were to be included with Madawaska County as one constituency, and the balance of the area of Carleton County, with a small area of several counties and all of Charlotte County, was to be another constituency.

The minority report of the committee on federal boundaries was, I believe, to the effect that Carleton and Victoria counties remain as such, with the inclusion of the parishes of St. Leonard and St. Andre on the north and a small area of York County on the south.

[Mr. Flemming.]

The minority report would be much more acceptable in my opinion for the simple fact that it would be entirely made up of a farming area, the most centralized potato growing area in eastern Canada and the problems of the constituency would be of equal importance to all residents in the area. The parishes of St. Leonard and St. Andre have requested the provincial government to have the boundaries of Madawaska and Victoria counties changed so that this area would become part of Victoria county as far as local services are concerned; Grand Falls being the centre for hospital and school services and also being the shipping centre for the area.

The majority report of the Electoral Boundaries Committee would have the effect of dividing the farming and potato growing area, with the northern part being included with Madawaska county, which is more of an industrial and lumbering area, where the common interest would not be the same.

The southern portion of the former constituency of Victoria-Carleton would be included with Charlotte county, which as we all know is primarily engaged in fishing and fish processing and would not have the common interest with the centralized farming area.

This certainly would make it more difficult for any member to give the representation to the constituency which the residents would and should expect.

There are certainly many more advantages in the acceptance of the minority report too numerous to mention.

I sincerely hope that in some way the constituency boundaries can be so arranged that the farming area will be one constituency and able to speak with one voice. Any other solution is certainly not in the best interests of the people.

Then I have from Mr. Porter, whose home is in Andover, a letter which reads as follows:

I noticed that the Victoria county council recently unanimously passed a resolution recommending that Anglin's minority report be implemented in the new electoral districts, which would leave Carleton-Victoria plus two Madawaska and three York parishes, as being the potato area of New Brunswick.

I think you will agree this is a much better arrangement than the Carleton-Charlotte anomaly proposed by the majority report.

That is an extract from Mr. Porter's letter; I will not read it in full. I also have a letter from Mr. Cochrane, county councillor of the Plaster Rock district in Victoria county. His letter is dated July 28, 1965, and he says in part that he, along with many others, is greatly disturbed by the new electoral boundaries for federal ridings, all the more so because Victoria will be divorced from Carleton and married to Madawaska, which he considers would be unreasonable because of their economic situation.

Then he says that the member for Madawaska will undoubtedly come from Edmundston and above St. Leonard there is a marked change in attitudes and interests. He says that above this point they look to Quebec city and Montreal for many of their contacts and buy from wholesalers in those cities and ship and sell to those places, whereas below St. Leonard they lean quite strongly toward Fredericton and Saint John. He goes on to say:

Another point is that if Carleton is joined with Charlotte and in another ten years you will probably retire then without doubt the member will quite often come from St. Stephen. At that time we could quite conceivably have for long periods a member in Edmundston and the other one in St. Stephen. This would leave the potato belt of New Brunswick, Carleton, Victoria and southern Madawaska with no one really to take a definite interest in this industry. At county council we agreed and sent Rene Theriault and Jacob Malm to meet with the commission of Edmundston and ask for Victoria, Carleton and Madawaska's southern two parishes to be a riding. This area would have reasonably similar interests, same industries, ship to the same areas, etc. I do not know if you would have the opportunity to express this to the proper people or not—it might seem that you were asking for something for yourself—but I am sure that this is the wish of the people in Victoria, both Conservative and Liberal.

A question might arise in the minds of the commissioners why some of these representations were not made to the commission when it was sitting, particularly when notice of the sitting was given. In that connection I should like to quote from a letter which I have received from the ex-warden of Victoria county which partly explains why no representations were made before the commission. This is a letter from Mr. Jacob Malm, dated January 27, 1966, and it reads in part as follows:

I see some mention of the constituencies boundaries commission report. I see that Mr. Justice W. A. Anglin is submitting a minority report. I was to have attended the hearing at Edmundston, but as I was just recovering from double pneumonia at the time in the Grand Falls Hospital I was unable to attend. I wrote a letter to the commission, explaining the disapproval of a great many residents of Victoria County with the suggested new boundaries which were as follows: that the splitting of Carleton and Victoria is splitting off the main potato growing areas, which is one of the main farming areas in N.B. If Carleton County is linked with Charlotte and Victoria with Madawaska, Charlotte is very apt to represent the lower riding and Madawaska the upper riding, Charlotte being more interested in the fishing industry and Madawaska in the lumbering industry.

The potato farmers of Victoria and Carleton are apt to receive little consideration. If the parishes of St. Andre and St. Leonard of Madawaska County, which are farming communities, were added to Carleton-Victoria, we would have a farming constituency. The county councillors of the parishes of St. Andre and St. Leonard have previously approached the municipal council of Victoria with the suggestion that the county boundary be changed so they would become a part of Victoria County as they found they were looking to the town of Grand Falls for hospital services and it was their nearest business centre. I am enclosing a certified copy of a resolution passed at the July session of the municipal council of Victoria. I hope that the recommendation of Mr. Justice Anglin is given favourable consideration if true representation is being sought.

I should like to refer to the Carleton county attitude, and its appeals. There are not so many of them. The county of Carleton municipal council, in session last January, passed the following resolution:

Moved by Councillor Winslow, seconded by Councillor McIsaac that this council go on record as opposing the majority report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of New Brunswick, specifically covering the constituency comprising the county of Carleton, since it does not contain a community of interest. We further go on record as supporting the minority report since it does contain a community of interest.

Another letter, which is somewhat explanatory and which I should like to read into the record, is dated February 4, 1966, and comes from Mr. E. B. Currie, secretary-treasurer of the municipality of Carleton county. It reads as follows:

The Carleton county municipal council at its annual session held January 25, 1966, discussed at some length the proposed electoral districts.

The council expressed disapproval with the majority report, wherein the county of Carleton is to be joined with the county of Charlotte, as it was felt that these countries do not have a common interest, chiefly agriculture.

Whereas recommendations of the minority report to join the counties of Carleton and Victoria in one electoral district would provide a common interest in the agricultural industry, which is predominant in both counties, the council went on record as favouring the minority report.

I am attaching to this letter a copy of the motion passed by council, and we trust the views of the council may receive favourable consideration before final approval is given to the committee's report.

I should like to quote also from a report appearing in the Hartland Observer which covers, partially at least, the county of Carleton. I will not read at length, but this article appeared in the May 13, 1965 edition of that newspaper. The headline reads, "Protests From Carleton, Victoria On New Voting". Then the following appears in heavy black type:

Canada's first non-political redistribution of electoral boundaries, as far as New Brunswick is concerned, published in detail in every daily and weekly newspaper in the province this week already has met with sharp reaction in the Carleton and Victoria zones.

It is understood that delegations from the northern part of Carleton and all of Victoria County intend to be present at the court house in Fredericton on June 21, at 10 a.m. when the first of a series of sittings will take place to hear representations on the proposed electoral revisions.

I may say that some of us did appear at that meeting. We made certain recommendations to the commission at that time and they were listened to with respect. I believe they were largely adopted. These representations were more concerned with the upper two parishes of Carleton which had been left out in drawing the proposed boundaries than they were with the partnership of Victoria and Carleton.

A few minutes ago I referred to the fact that we have a very large food processing plant in Carleton county. Having mentioned to Mr. McCain, the president of the company, the other day that this matter was likely to come up, I received a telegram from him yesterday which I should like to put on the record. I feel it is a most important document. It is addressed to me and reads as follows:

I support retaining Carleton and Victoria counties together with small parts of Madawaska and York counties as one constituency and feel that the proposed combination of Carleton and Charlotte counties with altogether different problems and widely separated would make it most difficult for any member to effectively represent such a proposed combination.

This telegram is from McCain Foods Limited. I come back now to the objections which were submitted in general terms. As briefly as possible I should like to make a few observations in connection with them. Paragraph 2 on page 22 of the document entitled, "Objections Filed with Mr. Speaker Pursuant To The Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act," in part uses these words: "the accessibility of such regions, or the size or shape thereof, and ignored or overlooked the special problems of transportation and communication when establishing ten electoral districts in the said province."

May I say that if the representative lived in Charlotte county he would have to go through three different constituencies before he could reach Carleton provided the majority report were adopted. The same situation would apply if the representative lived in Carleton, because this is the way the highways run in that province.

I should like now to refer briefly to paragraph 3 of the objections which deals with the matter of physical, social and economic cohesion of some districts. In my opinion, this is an important feature. The fact that people in various communities gather together for various reasons, some social, some recreational and for various other reasons, really should be considered. This brings in the question of community interest which I think is important.

Another matter relative to the minority report is that generally speaking—and I speak in general terms only—the people in the three parishes in the northern part of York county regard the town of Woodstock as their shopping centre, the town to which they go for their doctoring, hospitalization, and to consult a lawyer if they are unfortunate enough to get into trouble.

In the lower part of Madawaska there is the same state of affairs with regard to the town of Grand Falls and the lower two parishes of the county of Madawaska. Therefore I put this forward as another reason for the minority report appealing to me in its proposal with regard to Victoria-Carleton.

I also wish to refer to paragraph 4 of the objections which relates to the inconvenience to any member of parliament. I consider that our time should certainly be at the disposal of our constituents because that is the reason we are here. But there is a limited amount of time available to meet with one's constituents. If you spend too much time on the highway you have that much less time to consult them.

That pretty well takes care of the matters I want to raise, Mr. Speaker, on the objections we have filed. I think it is fair to say that in the southern and western part of the province there is more variation in the boundaries than there is elsewhere. While the odd one elsewhere has some variation, I believe that in broad general terms it is fair to say it is really the southwestern part of the province which is more affected by any variation which can be found in the two reports.

Under the minority report the proposed constituency of Victoria-Carleton would have a population of 52,938, which is not much below that of the proposed Carleton-Charlotte constituency in the majority report.

For the reasons which I have to the best of my ability outlined, in view of the information received from the municipal councils including the resolution they have passed reflecting the interests in a way of that particular part of the province, and bearing in mind that some of the arguments I have put forward would have application to other counties as well, the question which stands out in my mind more than any other is that of community interest. The proposed constituency of Victoria-Carleton, with the extensions made in the minority report, would constitute the so-called potato belt which is a most important segment of the agricultural activities of our two counties. Therefore I hope that when the commissioners re-examine this matter they will see some merit in the arguments we have put forward and adopt pretty much the proposals contained in the minority report of Mr. Justice Anglin.

Mr. A. M. A. McLean (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have before me the two appendices Y and B, and I would certainly endorse appendix Y. Appendix B includes the site of my birthplace in the proposed constituency and naturally I should like to represent it, but we have to think of the economics of the different constituencies. In the constituency of Carleton I would say the main activity is farming and there is some manufacturing which is connected with farming. In Charlotte the main activity is fishing. The present population of Charlotte is 23,285. In the new constituency of Carleton-Charlotte proposed in appendix Y the population would be 56,554.

I do not think that the commissioners have realized the human side of things. For example, let me take a short piece of the coast of Charlotte, to the north of which is Carleton county. Appendix Y takes in a little more territory than appendix B. It takes in part of York, part of Sunbury, part of Queens, part of Saint John and all of Charlotte. Appendix B takes in part of Saint John, part of York, part of Carleton and all of Charlotte. In either case we take in all of Charlotte.

Charlotte includes the towns and villages of Blacks Harbour and Beaver Harbour, Deer Island, Campobello Island and Grand Manan, and the towns of St. Andrews, Lepreau and Musquash. All those places are interested in fishing. I do not think there is any fishing in Carleton county except some salmon and sport fishing.

In Charlotte county we have one of the greatest fisheries in the world, the sardine fishery, which takes in much of the shore extending along the gulf of Maine and the coast of Nova Scotia. Therefore I do not see how any member could efficiently represent Carleton county as well as Charlotte because their economies are entirely different. I would agree with the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming) that the two economies cannot be represented efficiently by one member.

So, Mr. Speaker, in a few words I simply wish to endorse the proposal contained in appendix Y, which I think is the best and most efficient for New Brunswick at large. I hope the commissioners will think the matter over again, look into the human side of the question and adopt appendix Y.

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to enter the debate very briefly to support the position that has been taken by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming), the former premier of New Brunswick, and the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. McLean) in their contention that appendix Y would seem to be a more reasonable basis for representation of the western part of New Brunswick. I had not intended to enter this debate. I had understood that the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton would present his arguments, but during the last few days I have received representations in connection with a part of my constituency which I should like to put on record. What the commissioners were doing from the beginning was to base representation in New Brunswick as far as possible on city units.

Before I proceed I should like to commend Mr. Justice Anglin, Mr. E. M. Lyons, Chief Electoral Officer for the province, and Mr. Boudreau for the exceptionally fine job they did. They worked diligently and conscientiously on the task they had accepted. What they did, of course, is shown in both appendices. In appendix B it was provided first of all that the cities of Saint John and Lancaster would be one constituency. This is No. 8 in appendix B. We have Moncton, Coverdale and Dieppe as a constituency.

The commission based other constituencies on Bathurst, Edmundston and Campbellton. The constituency of York-Sunbury would be centred around the Fredericton-Oromocto-Camp Gagetown complex. One can see the line of reasoning that they followed. I also commend Mr. Justice Anglin's report. It is not too different from the majority report except, as hon. members have just pointed out, that Victoria-Carleton would be retained very much as it is now and Charlotte would have added to it the city of Lancaster and certain other areas of the southwestern part of the province.

The commissioners had this problem. A number of constituencies were of the approximate size they wanted but Charlotte county was smaller in population. It was none the less important but it was smaller in population, as is Kent. It was in these ridings, in Carleton-Victoria, in Royal and in Kent, that major changes had to be made.

I realized from the very beginning that York-Sunbury would have to be reduced in size and area. In the 1961 census we were shown to have a population of just over 75,000 and the average constituency for New Brunswick must have after redistribution a population of approximately 60,000.

Under the British North America Act, New Brunswick may not have less than ten senators and ten members of parliament. We reached that point some time ago. Our population is 600,000 so the mathematics are very simple. Each constituency should have approximately 60,000 people and in York-Sunbury we have 15,000 too many.

Respecting appendix Y, which I favour more than appendix B, my friends who submitted the majority report will forgive me for my disagreement with them. The points raised by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming) and the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. McLean) are valid ones. Between Carleton and Victoria counties there is a community of interest. This is one of the great potato growing areas of Canada. For the most part the population there consists of farmers, and I suggest to the commissioners that is the way the constituency should be left.

In Charlotte county, as the hon. member pointed out, the basic industry is the sardine fishery which is one of the greatest in the world. The fisheries extend along the shore toward Lancaster. With Lancaster it would make a constituency of the appropriate size and with a community of interest.

I would mention another point. In the minority report the city ridings are smaller in size than in the majority report. In order to make myself clear, Saint John constituency would have 5,000 or 6,000 less than it would have if the majority report were adopted. York-Sunbury would also be that way, as would the Moncton constituency. I think that is all to the good because of the movement of people away from rural areas to the city. The city ridings are growing very quickly, a classic example being York-Scarborough, Ontario, which is growing at a fantastic rate. I think that we ought to make these city ridings smaller at this time because by the time there is another redistribution those ridings will again be considerably out of line.

I point out that I expected to lose certain parts of York-Sunbury, and that has been done. In our province we have the parish system and the commissioners followed the parish boundary lines.

North Lake, Canterbury and Southampton are added to Victoria-Carleton to increase its population. I can see the logic of that. The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton has pointed out that these people are closer geographically to Woodstock in Carleton county, and there is a community of interest that exists there.

In the case of McAdam, this parish is added to Charlotte in the minority report. The hon. member for Charlotte will appreciate my regret at losing the McAdam area for obvious reasons, but there is a community of interest between the people in the McAdam area and those of St. Stephen. McAdam is not too far from St. Stephen and the people of McAdam seem to gravitate toward that area. I regret losing the parish of Manners Sutton, of course, but I can see the logic here in the minority report as well as in the majority report.

My major reason for speaking at this particular time is to register my objection to the inclusion of the parishes of Gladstone and Blissville in the Charlotte-Lancaster constituency. These parishes contain the communities of Fredericton Junction, Tracy and Hoyt, and the whole community of interest of that area lies with the Fredericton-Camp Gagetown area. Most of the men in the area who are not employed on farms are employed either in Fredericton or to a great extent in Camp Gagetown, which is the largest military establishment in the commonwealth. The commission members will appreciate this. There is no community of interest between the Gladstone-Blissville area and Charlotte county. As a matter of fact, anyone from Gladstone or Blissville wishing to go to St. Stephen or St. Andrews would have to go to Saint John and then along the shore or via Harvey.

I would, however, suggest to the commissioners that, no matter what decision they may take as a result of the arguments raised today in this chamber, the parishes of Gladstone and Blissville should be left with York-Sunbury for the reasons I have outlined.

I notice also in the majority report that the parish of Petersville has been added to York-Sunbury. There is some basis for this, although I think it would be better to leave it in the constituency of Royal.

Having raised the points I wished, Mr. Speaker, I should like in closing to commend the commissioners again, all three of them, for the very conscientious and painstaking task which they have performed and I would ask them to consider seriously the arguments which have been raised by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, the hon. member for Charlotte and myself.

Mr. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this debate. Personally, I am very happy with the majority report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for New Brunswick, at least with regard to my riding.

However, following remarks made this afternoon, I think it is my duty to make my position clear so that it will be known to my electors through Hansard. Since I am here, in this house, I would not like my silence to be taken as proof that I approve of the objections which have just been made.

I have often implied to my electors, to the people of my riding, that I am very happy with my riding as it is now. Besides, the population showed their regard for me on three occasions, in 1962, 1963 and in November 1965, by re-electing me every time with increased majorities. In short, I have no complaints about my riding as it is now.

However, I fully understand that under the legislation my riding is too heavily populated now—it has over 80,000 inhabitants—to remain as it is. Therefore, the riding must be amended. Since there is no getting out of it, I think that the ideal solution is the one proposed by the commission. Besides, it is the solution which had been carried out on the map submitted by the commissioners and it is the proposal accepted by the majority of the commissioners as a result of hearings in various localities in the province. According to that solution, there would now be two ridings: Restigouche, including the parish of Beresford, and the new riding of Madawaska-Victoria.

With regard to the new riding, the population is quite special and remarkable. The people in the riding of Madawaska and in part of the riding of Victoria are French-speaking. Their ancestors went up the St. John river, crossed the Quebec boundary to settle what is called today the republic of Madawaska. That name of republic comes from the fact that this territory is located on the boundaries of two provinces, Quebec and New Brunswick, and also on the American border.

I know that people who come for the first time to that republic of Madawaska never fail to notice the good humour and hospitality which are found in that beautiful part of the country.

As I said, the republic is not bounded by the limits of Madawaska riding, but juts rather far into the present constituency of Victoria.

That is why I cannot accept that the present constituency of Madawaska be dismembered by removing the parishes of St. Léonard and St. André to incorporate them with another riding. I feel it would be splitting a family asunder because of the economics of the potato.

In short, since it is not my intention to delay discussion, I would be most happy to represent the population of my present riding for a long time to come. But I know it will not be possible under the present legislation, because the population has grown beyond the quotient. If a solution is required, I heartily endorse the one suggested by the majority of the commissioners. I am convinced they are not making a mistake and that their decision will be accepted heartily by a considerable majority of the population of the area.

[English]

Mr. Starr: I rise on a point of order. I should like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of the Associate Minister of National Defence, who I see in his place together with three other members of the government, to the fact that if we are to maintain a quorum during this important debate there is some responsibility on the part of the government to see that its supporters are present in the house. I would urge the minister to endeavour to get a better representation of government members during this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May I remind the hon. member that there is a quorum in the house at the present time.

Some hon. Members: We know that.

Mr. Starr: I was only talking about the government side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Has the house concluded its consideration of objection No. 11 concerning the province of New Brunswick?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The house having considered this objection, it will be my duty pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission, together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house, back to the commission for reconsideration thereof. We shall now proceed with the consideration of the objection concerning the province of Alberta, Objection No. 2, found on pages 2 and 3 of the pamphlet.

Proposed Electoral Districts of the Province of Alberta:

That, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65) and for the reasons hereinafter specified, consideration be given by this House to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Alberta, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966.

The objections to the provisions of the Alberta report are as follows:

1. Throughout Alberta the commission failed to give special emphasis to geographical considerations, the sparsity, density and relative rate of growth of the population, and ignored or overlooked the special problems of communication and transportation when they divided the said province into nineteen (19) new electoral districts.

2. The commission failed to give special consideration and special appreciation to accessibility of one region to another region in many of the rural electoral districts when determining the boundaries of the same.

3. The commission failed to give and pay proper attention to the physical, social or economic cohesion in many of the new electoral districts created and appeared to ignore and did ignore the question of unity or community of interest and thereby rendering adequate representation of the people in parliament a virtually impossible task.

4. The commission erred in law by failing to carry out the terms and conditions of section 13 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

5. The commission failed to take into consideration that the boundaries of the majority of electoral districts of Alberta as they existed prior to redistribution, were in accordance with the spirit of the terms and conditions and the formula in law of the said act in question, and the undersigned members therefore suggest that the commission could have increased the representation of Alberta by two (2) members, by giving each major city; namely Calgary and Edmonton, one (1) more electoral district as the population warrants the same. The balance of electoral districts could have remained the same except for a small adjustment as to population to one or two electoral districts. In this manner, the commission could have avoided the grave errors they made as described in the preceding and subsequent paragraphs.

6. The whole problem with the new electoral districts could have been avoided if the commission had not created the electoral district of Rocky Mountain. This district because of difficulties hereinafter stated, should be abolished. The creation of same put the whole report and map of the electoral districts out of balance and contrary to law.

7. The mistake made by the commission when they set up the electoral district of Rocky Mountain created problems that far outweigh the benefit. These problems created are as follows:

(a) The roads and railways run east and west while accessibility demands north and south travel.

(b) Private air travel is impossible in this mountainous area and no recognized commercial airlines have landing fields.

(c) No consideration was given to the accessibility of one point with another and hundreds of miles of travel will be necessary to go from a southern point of the constituency to a northern point of the constituency. (For example, Blairmore to Whitecourt).

(d) The expense of travel for any member of parliament carrying out his duties and responsibilities or for any candidate electioneering in the area would be exorbitant.

(e) Communication and transportation between points in this electoral district is a physical impossibility.

8. And such other objections that the undersigned members may deem necessary to carry out the spirit and terms and conditions of the act in question.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, like the speakers who have preceded me, I shall try to be brief. This objection is made in accordance with section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act which gives members of Parliament a last opportunity to make representations to the commission. Like hon. members representing New Brunswick and others who have spoken, as one of the spokesmen for my province on the subject of redistribution I appreciate the difficulty the commission faced in arriving at its decision. I appreciate also that the purpose and spirit of the act were that these decisions should be reached by independent commissions rather than by parliament, thereby taking this matter outside the field of politics.

This brings me to the first point I wish to make. If hon. members will turn to pages two and three of the objections filed with Mr. Speaker pursuant to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, they will find that our objection was signed by a number of members. We signed it and there is one objection, but we have all taken the same position as if we had filed independent objections. The spirit and the wording of the objection are such that they will cover both the general and particular arguments referred to by speakers from our province.

I should also like to draw the attention of the commission to the fact that not only has this objection, filed with Mr. Speaker in accordance with the act, been approved by the Conservative members of Parliament but it has been approved by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), the leader of the Social Credit party. Therefore in presenting these arguments we are not doing so on any political basis but rather as representatives from Alberta. I am sure that in its review of the proceedings the commission will note that objection has been taken to the boundaries by all political parties in Alberta.

So there was a general feeling in respect of the objection with which I am now going to deal. I trust that the commission will review the situation. I believe it can be corrected readily to satisfy all political parties, chambers of commerce and the people living in the various areas and engaged in various industries who have certain common interests.

In the case of Alberta, as I said, all political parties have objected strongly to the new boundaries drawn by the commission. The 1961 census showed an increase in population in the province of Alberta. When this increase was taken into consideration, with the changes in population in the remainder of Canada, Alberta became entitled to two additional constituencies. In other words, prior to redistribution there were 17 federal districts and now Alberta is entitled to 19. The increase took place mainly in the two major cities of Edmonton and Calgary.

On the basis of the new population Calgary, even under the decision made by the commission, would get another constituency and so would Edmonton. In accordance with the memorandum and the formula set out in the memorandum there would be approximately 70,000 people in each constituency but with a tolerance of 25 per cent. I mention this at the outset so that it will be appreciated I trust, by the members of the commission when they are reviewing the objections made. These are very serious objections, and we in the province object most strenuously to one particular change which affected the whole concept, the creation of the elongated constituency running north and south known as Rocky Mountain.

As I said, the formula figure would be 70,000 according to the 1961 census and therefore the lowest figure you could have in any one constituency would be approximately 52,500. The constituencies that existed in Alberta prior to redistribution which would have to have additional population are Acadia, Macleod and Vegreville. The other 17 seats outside the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton were just below 70,000 or just above the 52,500 and so are within the formula.

The city of Calgary after the 1961 census had 249,641 people, and I am sure the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) will deal with this because he is the senior member of parliament from Alberta. Edmonton had 281,021 people. If you add one more constituency to Calgary you get an average population of 83,214, and if you add one more constituency to Edmonton you would have 70,254. Therefore both cities have had a considerable growth since 1961, in fact, a terrific growth.

One of the objections which I am sure the hon. member for Calgary North probably will deal with is the fact that in the decision which was made—and it was a difficult decision in the city of Calgary and probably also in Edmonton—allowance was not made for future growth. No consideration was given to this factor by the commission. I say that with great respect for the commission. I appreciate the difficulty they had. In fact the members of the commission are known to me personally, and I know when they read my remarks they will appreciate that I am speaking in a logical way and am not being critical. I am sure my objection and the objections of the various other members will merit the consideration of the commission so that a change will be made which will make up for the deficit in Acadia, Macleod and Vegreville and bring them up to the formula.

With the consent of the house I am going to ask whether I may have placed on Hansard the population figures for each of the constituencies of Alberta according to the 1961 census prior to the redistribution. Before doing so, however, I am going to refer to a few of the constituencies that had populations below the formula. Acadia had 47,724, Macleod had 50,966 and Vegreville, 47,798. In respect of the Calgary ridings, Calgary North had 134,783 according to the 1961 census.

Calgary South had 124,248. When the hon. member for Calgary North speaks I hope he will point out the tremendous increase since 1961.

Then we have the three Edmonton constituencies. Edmonton East had 82,246, Edmonton-Strathcona, 121,124, and Edmonton West 150,257. I am not going to read the other population figures. I wish to emphasize that there are three constituencies below the formula and certain adjustments would have to be made in the bordering constituencies. I think we all are in agreement with this. We have discussed the matter with the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), and his party is in agreement. We appreciate also that adjustments had to be made in the cities of Calgary and Edmonton. I emphasize that there could be one more constituency in each of those two metropolitan areas without interfering with the situation.

I would ask that the 1961 census figures be included in Hansard in respect of all 17 seats. These figures were obtained from the office of Mr. Castonguay and I believe them to be accurate. With the consent of the house I would ask that these figures be made a part of the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the hon. member have unanimous agreement of the house to file these statistics?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May I ask the hon. member whether it is his wish that these figures be printed as a part of his speech now?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Population of present districts according to 1961 census: Acadia, 47,724; Athabaska, 59,184; Battle River-Camrose, 58,655; Bow River, 62,806; Calgary North, 134,783; Calgary South, 124,248; Edmonton East, 82,246; Edmonton-Strathcona, 121,124; Edmonton West, 150,257; Jasper-Edson, 70,088; Lethbridge, 69,175; Macleod, 50,966; Medicine Hat, 63,450; Peace River, 75,811; Red Deer, 63,205; Vegreville, 42,798; Wetaskiwin, 55,424.

Mr. Woolliams: I wish to deal with the changes which have been made. Again, these figures are based on the 1961 census. I should like to emphasize again that the growth of Calgary and Edmonton has been tremendous since the census was taken. Now we have 19 new constituencies. Just before I deal with that let me make one point. In the opinion of the Alberta members who met to consider this matter, including all those who made submissions and others who discussed the matter, and also in the opinion of the hon. member for Red Deer, if constituency No. 17 of schedule A, which is part of the report filed, had not been created the problems with regard to the other constituencies would not have existed.

The worst problem in Alberta relates to the constituency of Rocky Mountain which is No. 17 on the map, Schedule A. This problem is well known to the commission, but I should like to emphasize a few points to illustrate why everyone objects to the formation of this constituency. I appreciate why the commission felt there was a common interest among the people of the new constituency. It will include Banff and Jasper national parks as well as other national parks in Alberta. It is a mountainous area and includes the hard coal mining areas of the Crowsnest Pass, which is now in the riding of Macleod, and the hard coal mining areas at Canmore.

For these reasons the commission may have felt that the people had a common interest, but may I suggest that the disadvantages far outweigh any advantage that may exist in this regard. Let me first deal with the location and interest of the areas and people who live in the national parks. Traditionally the people of Banff national park have had the same interests as the people of the city of Calgary. Their main interest relates to tourism, both in the winter and in the summer. The people of these two areas work hand in hand and that is why Banff has for many years been part of the constituency of Calgary West, at one time represented by a former prime minister.

Jasper national park similarly has a common interest with the city of Edmonton. There is also a common interest in respect of hard coal mining areas. I point out to the commission that they perhaps overlooked one or two things in this regard. When the soft coal mines at Drumheller and East Coulee were shut down because there was no demand for such coal domestically the miners found employment in the Crowsnest Pass area and at Canmore. For that reason there is perhaps a greater common interest between the soft coal mining areas of Drumheller, Canmore and the Crowsnest Pass than with the hard coal mining areas in the north.

The greatest disadvantage resulting from the establishment of this new consituency is a political one. I am sure the members of the commission did not shut their eyes to the political implications. If you wanted to visit the people of the constituency you would have to travel from Calgary to Edmonton and then wind your way over to Edson and Jasper. If you wanted to go from Calgary to Jasper in the wintertime you would have to travel from Calgary to Edmonton and then to Edson because the road from Calgary through Banff to Jasper is often closed during that season.

During an election campaign candidates of all parties would have to make use of television and radio stations in Edmonton, Red Deer, Calgary and Lethbridge. I do not know how many weekly newspapers there are, but someone presented that information to the commission. It would be impossible to campaign effectively and almost impossible from an administrative point of view to work this area. For all these reasons it is our submission that the establishment of this constituency will throw the whole province out of balance.

If that one problem in relation to the proposed constituency of Rocky Mountain were solved there would be few constituency problems in Alberta. I suggest they could all be remedied in a non-political way. The constituencies in Calgary and Edmonton should remain identical except for population. The constituencies of Acadia, Vegreville and Macleod could be adjusted with the adjoining constituencies. A new constituency should be created in Edmonton and in Calgary. This could all be done without disrupting the whole electoral map and would be satisfactory to the people of Alberta.

The newspapers in Alberta have been very critical about the creation of the new constituency of Rocky Mountain and have referred to it by many names. I do not intend to repeat them because, as I pointed out earlier, I want my submission to be factual and logical with the hope that it will merit the consideration of the commission.

At this point I should like to place on record the populations of the new areas based on the 1961 census. This document is dated March 4, 1966. I obtained it from Mr. Castonguay's office. It relates to the population of the new Alberta constituencies after redistribution and is based on figures established by the 1961 census. Redistribution boundary names are used and it includes 19 constituencies.

Before redistribution the constituency of Athabasca had a population of 59,000. After redistribution the population was reduced to 54,000. The constituency of Bow River had a population of 58,655 which was increased after redistribution to 61,555. Those are two examples of the changes.

I suggest the commission has properly applied the formula in reference to population and the tolerance and has endeavoured to increase the population of rural areas. If you analyse the situation you will find that they have used some care in this regard, because not one constituency after redistribution has a population which comes anywhere near the 25 per cent tolerance figure.

It is interesting to note that the commission has said in its report that certain maps were presented to them by one of the commissioners but that they were not used. Apparently they had their own ideas. I believe the creation of a mountainous constituency is the result of a dream that one or two of the commissioners had. So far as beauty is concerned this is a wonderful idea, but from a practical, administrative or political point of view this idea will not work. I might add that all the Alberta members agree in this regard.

I am sure that if the commission takes a second look at the situation and considers our suggestions it will make the necessary changes and adjustments. I should like to refer to one or two other features of the proposed new Rocky Mountain constituency. The main railway lines and roads in Alberta run east and west or at an angle toward the valleys and passes in the mountains. It is almost impossible to travel north and south in the mountainous areas.

I should like to refer to Section 13 of the act. Perhaps when we were legislating we were a little careless in our interpretation, because I am sure members on all sides of the house thought that under this section the commission had a certain duty and responsibility. This may not be clear from the law because one of the members of the commission in Alberta was a very able lawyer and is a very distinguished judge and he apparently did not make this interpretation.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Section 13 of the act says:

(c) the commission may depart from the strict application of rules (a) and (b)—

That is in reference to the formula of 25 per cent up or down.

—in any case where

(i) special geographic considerations, including in particular the sparsity, density or relative rate of growth of population of various regions of the province...appear...necessary or desirable.

Some lawyers have interpreted this to mean —of course, law is not an exact science—that the commission had to take these matters into consideration and this was the reason for their creating Rocky Mountain. Perhaps Mr. Justice Porter, a distinguished jurist, took the opposite view, namely that he could use it as a guide when he ran into these problems. But whatever interpretation was accepted by the commission, our main objection has been that creating this constituency has also created problems with reference to other electoral boundaries.

The creation of these problems is the main reason for raising our objection today and for setting out the eight objections to be found on page 2 of the document distributed to Members of Parliament in reference to this matter. I need not be repetitious in this regard because our objections are very clear. They were not drawn up by one or two members; they were drawn up by all the members who signed the objection. Knowing the commission, I am satisfied that they will review our objections carefully.

In order that the two population tables may be read together, namely, the one covering the 17 constituencies which were made 19 on the basis of the 1961 census, I would ask that the table I have in my hand be made part of Hansard. This table enumerates the 19 constituencies starting with Athabasca and finishing with Wetaskiwin. These constituencies are outlined in schedule A annexed to the report of the commission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I would ask hon. members whether they give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Bow River having printed in Hansard as part of his speech the table to which he has referred.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table referred to above is as follows:]

Population of Alberta Constituencies Before and After Redistribution

(a) These figures are based on the 1961 census.

(b) Redistribution boundary names are used.

	Population Figures
	Before	After
1. Athabasca	59,184	54,336
2. Battle River	58,655	61,553
3. Calgary Centre	—	81,724
4. Calgary North	134,783	82,611
5. Calgary South	124,248	82,671
6. Crowfoot (Acadia)	47,724	59,100
7. Edmonton Centre	—	82,836
8. Edmonton East	82,246	82,727
9. Edmonton Strathcona	121,124	82,145
10. Edmonton West	150,257	82,420
11. Lethbridge	69,175	70,786
12. Medicine Hat	63,450	65,288
13. Palliser (Bow River)	62,806	65,652
14. Peace River	75,811	54,169
15. Pembina (Macleod)	50,966	67,306
16. Red Deer	63,205	68,737
17. Rocky Mountain (Jasper-Edson)	70,088	57,810
18. Vegreville	42,798	65,012
19. Wetaskiwin	55,424	65,061
Total	1,331,944	1,331,944

Mr. Woolliams: The main objection to Rocky Mountain, therefore, is its inaccessibility, and in our opinion the commission failed to take into consideration section 13 (c) of the act in this regard. They may have looked at the geography but they did not consider the accessibility of the area. It is impossible to cover this constituency travelling by road from one area to another. Members of the commission will know that this is a mountainous area and the streams, roads and railways run east and west. Therefore in the former map, in which Rocky Mountain was part of the constituencies of Macleod, Bow River and Red Deer, there was greater accessibility and it was certainly better from an administrative point of view.

There is also the question of people with common interests. Perhaps the commission took the view—I can imagine them doing so—that one member of parliament could represent the parks better than four. I would ask the commission to reconsider this philosophy, because if you want a change in policy with regard to our national parks and have three or four members of parliament, that number of members adds weight to any submission or argument. For example, when dealing with the question of the Olympics the other day the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) supported my submission with reference to the Olympics being a good thing for Banff national park, the city of Calgary, the province of Alberta and Canada as a whole, because it would make Canada known as a winter tourist resort and would attract a great deal of revenue to this nation. I would ask the commission to consider whether three or four members of parliament could not do a better job in this regard.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I would ask them to reconsider their decision on another basis, namely, that diversification of economic activity in a riding adds variety to it. In the constituency of Bow River we have the parks, the hard coal mines of Canmore, the ranches of the foothills, the city people of Calgary and the farmers and soft coal miners of Drumheller. During my years as a member of parliament I have not found it difficult to put the interests of these various sectors before the house or the departments of government. I have been able to represent these various interests properly and obtain for them proper administration at the federal level no matter whether the government was Conservative or Liberal.

To summarize my argument, Mr. Speaker, we ask that constituency No. 17, Rocky Mountain, be eliminated and that the boundaries be restored to their original position, changing and adding to the population of the three constituencies I have mentioned. We ask that Calgary and Edmonton each receive another constituency. We also ask that the commission reconsider Calgary and Edmonton on the grounds that they are probably the two fastest growing cities on the North American continent and they must take into consideration the future growth of these cities if the formula is to be effective until the next census or the one thereafter.

I trust that the commission will consider the remarks I have made this afternoon. I hope they appreciate that I am not being critical in the sense of criticizing their work because I appreciate the difficulty. My submissions have been made on the grounds that I hope they will be helpful to everybody concerned, not only to me as the member of parliament at this time but to all future members representing Alberta. I know at least two members of the commission and am sure they are thoughtful, intelligent and capable men. I trust they will take these submissions into account and make the necessary changes, not only to satisfy the members who speak today but the majority of the people of Alberta.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, when I first saw the proposed redistribution map for the province of Alberta it would be putting it mildly, I think, to say I was astonished. I was astonished because, in the first place, the proposed redistribution creates a large, unwieldy constituency which did not exist before and which I can see no good reason for creating. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) has mentioned some of the disadvantages of the proposed new constituency of Rocky Mountain. I should like to mention some of them also.

To begin with, Mr. Speaker, I believe only one of what have been generally accepted as the principles to be followed in redistribution has actually been followed in this case. I refer to the principle that there shall be a reasonable approach to representation by population in the constituencies. So far as the other considerations are concerned, namely, a community of interest and putting together in one constituency people with a community of interest, ease of communication from one part of the constituency to another, the least disturbance to the traditional pattern, and some attention to growth pattern, none of these, it seems to me, have really been given much consideration.

The hon. member for Bow River referred to chapter 13 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and noted some of the provisions that were put into the act to indicate those matters which should be taken into consideration. I will not take up the time of the house in reading them again. In essence they are the matters I have just mentioned. I should like to stress one in particular, the density or relative rate of growth of population of various regions of the province. In the debate on this bill in the house I presented an argument to the effect that one of the factors which the electoral commissions, which at that time it was proposed to set up and which were subsequently set up, would have to take into consideration would be what the growth had been since 1961 when the census was taken and what the growth potential was in different areas. My understanding was that this principle would be carried out according to the phrase I have just read. However, this does not seem to have been done and I will come back to that later.

The effect of creating this large new constituency of Rocky Mountain, some 450 miles from north to south and over 200 miles from east to west at its widest point, was to push all the other constituencies into an unnatural form. In other words, the creation of that constituency made it impossible to redistribute the constituencies in the province on a reasonable basis, in my opinion at least, one which would have taken into consideration the factors I have just mentioned. As has been indicated by the hon. member for Bow River, redistribution could have been accomplished in accordance with this principle simply by readjusting the boundaries of existing rural constituencies in order to bring those which were below the quota up to the required number and to meet the tolerances proposed in the act. Then two new constituencies could have been created by adding one each to Calgary and Edmonton to raise the total from 17 to 19.

I hope the redistribution commission in Alberta will look at this whole matter very carefully. I hope they will bear in mind what was said in the house at the time the act was passed providing for the setting up of these commissions and that they will pay careful attention to what is being said during this debate. As a result of this consideration, I hope they will recast the electoral map for the province of Alberta to bring it into a more reasonable relationship to the general principles I have outlined and which are actually contained in the act providing for redistribution.

I should like to say something about the situation in the city of Calgary itself. As pointed out by the hon. member for Bow River, the population growth in that city during the past two years has been very rapid. The census figures show it has been the most rapidly growing city in Canada on a percentage basis. At the time of the 1961 census the population was in the neighbourhood of 270,000 and at the present time it is in the neighbourhood of 340,000. This change in population, which had taken place at the time the commissioners went to work, apparently was not taken into consideration.

What was not taken into consideration particularly was the probable growth, in fact, the certain growth which was going to take place. The fact that these things were not taken into consideration in the distribution of seats proposed for Calgary will create one seat, Calgary Centre, which is entirely surrounded by other constituencies in a completely built-up area at the present time. This constituency includes the centre part of the city in which there is a large number of houses, small apartments, rooming houses and things of that kind. These buildings are being taken down every week in order to make room for a vast complex of commercial buildings and structures of that type. In other words, it is a constituency which even at the present time, so far as numbers are concerned, does not bear a proper relationship to the other two constituencies because of the changes which have taken place since 1961. It is a constituency which will steadily grow smaller in population whereas the other constituencies will continue to expand rapidly. On this basis, therefore, you have a redistribution which is designed to perpetuate a disparity in voting power between people, depending on the part of the city in which they live.

In other words, the whole purpose of redistribution, to try to get a fair voting pattern so that there will be reasonable representation by population, is being defeated by this division in the city of Calgary which will mean a greater and greater disparity in voting power as each week and month go by. I feel, therefore, that the division in Calgary was adopted on an incorrect basis. The constituencies in Calgary should be arranged on a basis which would permit each room for growth. Each constituency should take in some of the land on the edges of the city where new houses are being erected every week. Then there would be some chance that the population of these constituencies would remain in equilibrium. Actually a more reasonable and logical way of dividing the city of Calgary would be to divide it into four quarters, northeast, northwest, southeast and southwest, each with some of the adjoining country territory attached to it. You would then have four constituencies which would have a good chance of remaining in approximately the same relationship.

I hope, too, that when the commissioners reconsider this matter one of the first things they will do will be to take into consideration the growth of the city of Calgary since 1962 and the growth that is certain to take place in the future. Then they could set up each of these constituencies on a basis that would provide them with an opportunity to continue to expand in population.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): In taking part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I think I should point out it is of significance that all 17 members from Alberta are speaking with one voice in protesting what has taken place in connection with the redistribution of constituencies in that province. I hope that one result of this will be that the chairman of the National Electoral Commission and the provincial commissioners will make careful note of this fact. The experience of the sitting members for the present constituencies should provide a basis for a very important argument which in my opinion should result in a complete revision of the decisions made by the Alberta commission.

I might just mention in passing, Mr. Speaker, that in the debate setting up the electoral commissions I stated my opinion that it would be more satisfactory if these men could be appointed on a non-political, non-partisan basis. However, as I have studied the results of the Alberta commission's deliberations, as well as those in some of the other provinces, I have come to the conclusion that I was mistaken in this opinion. I believe that no group of political representatives could have committed the errors which have been made in so many of the instances we have before us.

In this regard I was quite impressed by an argument advanced by Senator Jean François Pouliot, which is recorded in the Senate Debates for February 23. Surely Senators should not be too concerned, from the point of view of their own personal welfare, about constituencies and the readjustment of boundaries, so I think this veteran parliamentarian must have been speaking from conviction and without prejudice. He had this to say:

> I would also add that in my view it is a very serious mistake for the House of Commons to abdicate its rights, and for the members of that house not to decide what in fact is their own business, the establishment of county boundaries. I am sure that the representatives of all political parties and groups in that house could come to some arrangement. It has been done for nearly a century, and I feel it should still be possible for them to come to a compromise regarding the establishment of these boundaries.

I believe those are words of wisdom, Mr. Speaker. What is happening now in this debate is evidence that it is possible for those who are directly concerned as members of parliament in the area of politics to come to an agreement which would be to the best advantage of all concerned as we are trying to reach a more equitable distribution of electoral seats in light of population trends.

I suggest there are several basic principles which should be followed in any adjustment of electoral districts. I know these points are not new and have been made before in this debate but I wish to re-emphasize them. First of all, it is imperative that natural boundaries be considered. In many instances natural boundaries are barriers to travel and communication. I would also mention in this regard that I believe that before too long we are going to be faced with having to accept a permanent voters list. When these permanent voters lists are established it would be to the advantage of municipal, provincial and federal government electoral boundaries if they were made conterminous at every possible point. There is no better point where conterminous boundaries can be established than along natural barriers.

I also believe there are natural lines of communication both commercial and social, which must be considered. Certainly population trends are very important. In the allowable quota on either side of the norm which has been fixed it is only reasonable to say that the more rapidly growing areas, such as the urban areas, must be considered so far as future developments are concerned. Otherwise in a very few years we would have a repetition of the situation which now exists in many cases. In this regard I refer to the cities of Calgary and Edmonton.

Perhaps the most important principle of all states that it is essential in a representative democracy that the constituents living within an electoral district have access to their member of parliament and that likewise their member of parliament have access to his constituents. It is only as we can keep that communication open and as free as possible that we can have the desired result in parliament.

In the case of Alberta I believe the commission did not take into consideration these basic points as they should have. Otherwise we would not have the situation we have at the present time which I think is entirely impractical and certainly not desirable.

The whole problem in Alberta has been created because of this new, impractical monstrosity called the constituency of Rocky Mountain. This constituency begins at its southern boundary at the United States border, moves through Waterton national park, through the Crowsnest area up to Banff national park and on through Jasper national park. Then, because they could not find enough people even to come within the desired norm, the commissioners had to move farther north till they came within three townships of the town of Grande Prairie, some 700 miles from the U.S. border. They had to move eastward to take in a town like Whitecourt. As a result we now have an absolutely impossible constituency contrary to every one of these principles I have mentioned.

It is my opinion, and I think my opinion coincides with the opinion of all members of parliament from Alberta, that the problems which we face in other constituencies such as Peace River, Athabasca and Vegreville have arisen because of the situation created by this new constituency, one which is completely unreasonable from whichever direction you might care to look at it.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, to draw to the attention of the house the objections which were stated by those who presented the protest. I mention these several points because I do not know of any more concise way to bring out the objections which I consider important. I quote:

> The mistake made by the commission when they set up the electoral district of Rocky Mountain created problems that far outweigh the benefit. Those problems created are as follows:
> (a) The roads and railways run east and west while accessibility demands north and south travel.
> (c) No consideration was given to the accessibility of one point with another and hundreds of miles of travel will be necessary to go from a southern point of the constituency to a northern point of the constituency.

We are suggesting towns like Blairmore in the Crowsnest Pass, and Whitecourt in the far north.

> (d) The expense of travel for any member of parliament carrying out his duties and responsibilities or for any candidate electioneering in the area would be exorbitant.

The actual adjustments made by the commission—I know they spent hours of their time giving consideration to the problems they attempted to solve before reaching the decision that there would be a Rocky Mountain constituency—do not in a very major way affect the constituency of Red Deer. Basically we have a reasonably large urban centre in the city of Red Deer, growing at about the same pace as the general population increase of the two major cities. With a large rural area surrounding, the urban growth compensates for the slower growth on the rural side.

The adjustments recommended so far as my constituency are concerned were not basically objectionable, but to illustrate the point I have made in regard to Rocky Mountain constituency I would cite one example within my constituency which affects only 400 or 500 people so as to show how completely impractical the whole idea of a Rocky Mountain constituency is. I am thinking of a community known as Strachan, another community known as Ricinus and a very small ranching area west of Sundye. In this area there is a total population of not more than 500 people.

These people are completely cut off from any connection with a town or trading centre. In fact, they have to go as far south as Waterton Lake or as far north as Whitecourt, without having any direct communication with either centre, in order to reach the extremities of this constituency. They are less than ten miles away from the respective market towns of Rocky Mountain House, Caroline or Sundye. Yet they are now separated from them, completely on their own, into an area which involves Banff and Jasper National Parks.

Even more important than this, a very grave error arises out of the fact that three small Indian reserves in this area are completely cut off from all commercial and social connections within the constituency. We are trying to encourage our Indian people to accept their responsibility of using the franchise; yet here we are taking a few hundred people, for the sake of a constituency known as Rocky Mountain, and completely cutting them off from any connection whatever with their normal activities in the community in which these reserves are situated. This is a very serious mistake and one which cannot be condoned. A member of parliament representing this constituency must spend many hours travelling to reach this little area, and so must the people who happen to reside in Banff, Jasper or Waterton parks who wish to get in touch with their member. I use that just as an illustration. To my way of thinking Rocky Mountain constituency is behind the whole problem that we are trying to put forward in this debate.

I should like to give one more example of a glaring mistake made by the commission in not giving consideration to certain matters which I previously mentioned. The town of Three Hills is in the southwest corner of the constituency of Red Deer. In the proposed electoral changes the boundary would go through the centre of the town. That town has less than 2,000 people. It is to be cut in half, so that those in the south side of town are in one constituency and those in the north half in another. I do not think there is any excuse for this because it cleaves the town in half, making it into two political entities. I think that is another proof of the fact that the commission must have listened to some kind of arguments that proposed that the national parks should be in one constituency.

I think that the representation of the people living in the national parks could be much better if the representation were left as it is now with Waterton Park in Lethbridge constituency, Banff Park belonging basically to Bow River and Jasper Park belonging to Jasper-Edson with Red Deer in between. There are alternative ways of suggesting this, of course.

However, I wish to speak in full support of the hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Calgary North in what they have already said. I wish to say also that the two rapidly growing urban areas, the cities of Calgary and Edmonton, each deserve another member. At the present time, on the basis of their populations they could accommodate more than an extra member. That could be done if the extra population left over were to be assigned to such constituencies as Vegreville, Acadia or, if necessary, Macleod. What I mean to say is that the city of Calgary has a large enough population to be deserving of three and a half members on the norm basis of representation.

What we are asking is that an additional member be added to the city of Calgary and an additional member be added to the city of Edmonton. They are entitled to this. With the minor adjustments that are necessary in some of the former constituencies, those adjustments could easily be made.

Again speaking of my own constituency, it is entirely within the normal range and even if it were left as it was it would stay very close to the norm. Therefore the argument that we are presenting, which is concurred in by members of the Conservative party and other parties in the house, is that we should scrap this whole Rocky Mountain constituency altogether and in doing so leave the boundaries of the other constituencies approximately as they were, eliminating the problem that has been created in Peace River and Athabasca.

I submit also that as Alberta is entitled to two more members of parliament one being assigned to the city of Calgary and one to the city of Edmonton. I would think that there would be no objection to such adjustments. Also, I suggest that we ought to be able to work out a more equitable distribution for the remaining constituencies which may not have as large a population as they should have.

In closing I should like to ask the commission, in considering the arguments that have been presented this afternoon, to take cognizance of the principles which have been outlined by myself and others, especially in such a situation as in the town of Three Hills to which I earlier referred, so that adjustments can be made which will not be contentious. That would certainly be an improvement. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the commissioners in Alberta will consider the arguments that are being made and bring about a more desirable situation than exists at present in the recommendations we have before us.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to underline what has been said by other hon. members from Alberta this afternoon about the unanimity of view in respect of certain changes and observations in regard to the report by the Alberta redistribution commission. I heartily concur with the remarks which have been made. I know that hon. members from the province of Alberta who will not have an opportunity to speak share these views.

Before going into the detail of the report perhaps I could touch again on some of the arguments advanced by our colleagues from Alberta. I should like to say in a general way that I find it regrettable that the commission has failed to include in its report any reasons for its recommendations. We get a blanket report devoid of any argument, devoid of any cogent reasoning. The burden is then put upon the populace and upon members of parliament to convince the commissioners that they were wrong. Yet it is the commissioners who are proposing the changes. I say with the greatest respect that it is for the commissioners to justify the changes they propose to make.

The law does not say that a commission can play tick-tack-toe within a province. I am sure that we can all sit down and on the basis of population alone come up with something. However, population alone is not the sole criterion. If it were we could come up with some of the most fantastic and glorious looking divisions. One could take a province and use vertical and horizontal stripes to cover with the appropriate population. This would disregard everything.

I refuse to accept the principle that representative government means the hiving within certain arbitrary boundaries X number of persons and from those persons electing one member of parliament. That is not parliament and it is not representative government. In section 13(c) of the act there are any number of reasons why this is not to be. An analysis of the arguments advanced by hon. members at the time we were discussing redistribution as to why there should be variations indicates that three factors must be taken into account. I am sure there are members on the treasury benches today who are most surprised that certain commissions have ignored or have seemed to ignore elementary principles of demography, elementary principles of geography and, even more important, the quality of representation that those people would receive as a result of the political division in which they will have to live.

It is obvious, and I reiterate what has been said by my three colleagues from Alberta who have spoken before me, that there is a complete absence of community interest as a result of the report. We could go into any number of constituencies and find that. I thoroughly agree with all that has been said in so far as the proposed constituency of Rocky Mountain is concerned.

One could continue the litany of criticism. We already have constituencies in this country in which, by reason of their relative isolation and great size, nomination dates are advanced by a fortnight and other factors are taken into account. Admittedly no greater travelling expenses are allowed to the candidates or to the members. Frankly, this proposal will create another such situation because, as the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) has pointed out, to get into this Rocky Mountain constituency one would have to travel in and out like a stitching machine or a zipper going up the eastern side. This is the great difficulty when trying to deal with a constituency some 25 or 30 miles wide at its southern extremity, some 125 miles at its greatest width, and 700 miles in length.

Take the western extremities from the constituencies of Lethbridge, Macleod and part of Calgary South. In actual fact, it comes within the southerly boundaries of the city of Calgary, Bow River, Red Deer and the bulk of Jasper-Edson. It is conceivable there may even be one row of townships of the constituency of Peace River.

Mr. Thompson: There is.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. Lambert: This is playing tick-tack-toe. I would earnestly pray the commission to review this situation. These remarks have been made before the commission. I appeared before it as one of the first witnesses. The proposal by the commission for a Rocky Mountain constituency was attacked almost unanimously. We could have had a much more intelligent dialogue with the commission had they stated their reasons for rejecting the arguments we put forward. I said that representation is not a mere hiving together of so many thousands of people within certain arbitary political boundaries. As we all realize, the purpose of an election is to give a representative to people, and in order that this representative may be in a position to perform his task effectively there must be access to the people he represents and they in turn must have access to their member. As far as possible he should be able to live in the centre of his constituency, accessible from all its corners. There is not one place in Rocky Mountain where this could be done. The same could be said about the constituency of Athabasca. There is not one road, not one railroad, which goes through the constituency of Athabasca along the main core of the population. There will soon be a road running to a point within 180 miles of the north of that constituency, between the new oil development centre of McMurray and the town of Lac la Biche, but beyond that there is nothing.

There is nothing so ludicrous as the attempt to lump into one area the town of Peace River, the home town of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) which is being taken away from him, and the area not so many miles north of Lloydminster on the Alberta-Saskatchewan boundary. To reach the developing area of Fort Vermilion and High Level, all this area which is developing as a result of the building of the Pine Point railway which is now being placed in the constituency of the hon. member for Athabasca, that hon. member would need to cross the Peace River, go well into the latter constituency, then head north on the Mackenzie highway before re-entering the constituency he represents. It might be a good thing if members of this commission had to travel the boundaries of these constituencies which they have created, and in the depths of winter too. Then we would see where they would get. I am sure something has been lost sight of.

I know that the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt) intends to speak about the problems created by the constituency of Crowfoot. The objections I have been making apply equally well to that constituency. But I will allow the hon. member for Macleod to speak for himself. I support my colleagues from Alberta in advocating the elimination of the proposed riding of Rocky Mountain and the addition merely of a riding to the city of Calgary and to the city of Edmonton. This is easily done within my own constituency. According to the 1961 census I have well over 200 per cent of the quota allowed for one city. So it is a case merely of making a fairly even division within Edmonton West. If necessary, minor adjustments could be made within the city ridings to create a fourth riding, but also to cut off a portion thereof and a portion from the constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona and attach them to the constituency of Vegreville as one of the constituencies judged to be short of population.

I have talked it over with the hon. member for that constituency. This is what could readily be done. Townships 58 to 60 in ranges 20, 21 and 22 could be returned to the constituency of Vegreville and townships 50 to 54 inclusive in ranges 21 and 22 could be added. Also, we could add townships 50 to 60 in range 23. This would bring Vegreville to the eastern boundaries of the city of Edmonton and give between 12,000 and 15,000 additional people to the constituency of Vegreville, bringing it well within the permissible limit of population.

In addition, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Fane) has made it clear that he wants some additional territory added to the eastern portion of his constituency where he finds an Indian reserve divided in two. He would like to be able to deal with the members of the Indian band on that reserve as one unit. They in turn would like to be treated on this basis. Therefore townships 55 to 60 in range 11 north of the North Saskatchewan River should be added to the constituency of Vegreville.

It may seem strange to hon. members that I from Edmonton West should be talking about my relationship with the constituency of Vegreville to the east of the city. But there is a township which, because of the configuration of Edmonton West, goes far to the east of Edmonton East—a township in which my riding is contiguous with that of the hon. member for Vegreville. The constituency of Edmonton West envelopes the city from the north. As I said, it will be simple to pass that most easterly area in both Edmonton West and Edmonton-Strathcona to the hon. member for Vegreville.

The area immediately north of Edmonton East which finds itself Edmonton West could have been added to Edmonton East to give it the potential for growth. But we have to see what the commission has proposed. They divide Edmonton West into roughly two sectors of about 47 per cent. The remaining portion they passed off to Pembina. That too is a representative's nightmare because it envelopes the people in Edmonton South right up to the international airport with people in the Fort Assiniboine area now in the northern extremity of the Jasper-Edson riding.

But what is done with Edmonton West? It is a sort of a straightened out appendix to the east, along the north city boundary of Edmonton, a stretch one mile deep and ten miles long forming a barrier to the growth of Edmonton Centre, a barrier to growth for Edmonton East, and going east of Edmonton East. There is absolutely no community of interest between the people of Belmont and the South Patricia district, which is the easterly extremity of this appendix, nor of those of the Poplar and Turnip Lake area in the centre with the people of the southwesterly end of my riding in Jasper Place and Winterburn.

I do not know what the thinking was; it is more than I can fathom. The area is not particularly big, so far as the member is concerned. It is pretty well urban, with a slight rural fringe, and therefore does not impose any burden on him. It certainly is going to be a lot easier to get around in the urban constituencies than in Rocky Mountain, Athabasca, Pembina and Crowfoot. The disparities have been widened as between urban constituencies and rural constituencies. They have become much more difficult to represent so far as the majority of the proposed rural areas are concerned. Therefore, again I would reiterate that the Rocky Mountain riding should be eliminated and the present boundaries kept other than for minor adjustments in the rural areas, with the exceptions of Vegreville, Macleod and Acadia which require some additions of population but which can easily get them.

In the division of the urban ridings provision must be made for a potential for growth. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr.

Harkness) mentioned Calgary Centre as being a completely hived in constituency where residential premises are being eaten away every day and where for even only a maintenance of their present population or even at best a potential for growth there must be a massive urban renewal for residential purposes in the constituency of Calgary Centre. The same may be said for Edmonton Centre. These are downtown and next to downtown areas, surrounded entirely by other constituencies which possess a monopoly of area for growth.

There are a number of other members from Alberta, Mr. Speaker, who are going to make representations in the same sense. I would earnestly urge upon the commissioners that they review the arguments made before them during the public hearings and that they give very careful consideration to the representations which are being made in a constructive way on this occasion, because it is the type of representation which will be produced by this redistribution upon which depends in great measure the representation which the people shall get.

The people are not mere ciphers or, as someone said, to be herded together like so many sheep in a pen. Regretfully I come to the conclusion that insufficient attention has been paid to these factors and that there has been some sort of obsession with the idea that there shall be so many people and it does not matter how we get them. I could speak also about the anomalies in the proposed constituency of Pembina which stretches south and east of the Saskatchewan River and of the city of Edmonton, with for the first time in its history the riding of Wetaskiwin which lies south of Strathcona and which now is being brought north of the Saskatchewan River, west of Edmonton West to take in an area where the people have no contact whatsoever with the people of Wetaskiwin. It is not that they do not like them, but there is nothing in common. We get the anomaly of little hamlets being divided in two because the proposed boundary line will go down the centre of the only street in the hamlet. This is where I feel you get a kind of unthinking, soulless division.

What about St. Albert where they limited the representation in Edmonton West to the corporate boundaries of the town. All the people living on the outskirts who send their children to attend the schools, who attend the churches and market in St. Albert, who curl there and who use it as their social centre, must go to Pembina to vote, a place where they have little or no contact whatsoever. Therefore I would earnestly entreat the commissioners to give these representations attentive consideration and completely review and revise the redistribution of Alberta along the lines suggested by the overwhelming majority of Alberta members this afternoon.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity of saying of few words about the objections to what has been done in Alberta by the commission under the Electoral Boundaries Redistribution Act. At the outset I should like to say that it is not my intention to register any personal criticism of any individual who served on that commission because that would certainly be unfair. All were doing a job given to them by this parliament and they did it to the best of their ability. If any mistakes have been made I am sure they are traceable to the weaknesses inherent in the act which parliament passed. We here, therefore, are to blame.

I am sure you will realize that I am not satisfied with the results of the redistribution. I should like to touch upon several developments and situations which now exist in respect of the electoral districts in Alberta. The hon. members for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness), Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) and Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) have covered the broad aspects of the act and the manner in which it has been followed in the province of Alberta. There are 17 members in this house from Alberta who agree with the sentiments expressed by those who have already spoken. I should like to touch upon one or two weaknesses of the act which have not already been pointed out.

The act requires that one member of each commission shall be a judge. I think it is unfair to a judge who is accustomed to dealing with judicial matters to be asked to accept a job which by its very nature has political implications, because judges traditionally have been removed from political considerations. The work of these commissions is such that there are bound to be criticisms from members of parliament and others who object to the constituency boundary changes.

I should like to refer to another shortcoming in the terms of this act. Many lawyers, particularly those who are members of parliament, may find themselves reluctant to criticize the work of the commission in relation to the boundaries of the constituencies because of the fact that at some time or another they may appear before the judge who is a member of the commission to plead a legal case. This difficulty can only be overcome by changing the act so that it does not make it mandatory that a judge be a member of the commission.

It was my understanding that there was to be no partisanship in the appointment of members to these commissions; yet it is strange that of the four members of the commission in Alberta three were Liberals and one was a Social Crediter. Perhaps that did not make any difference, and we hope it did not. In any event we did not register a complaint. This situation caused a great deal of criticism throughout Alberta. I suggest that the act should be changed so that such a situation cannot again occur. I do not lay any blame on the commission but rather on the parliament of Canada which passed the act.

Every member from Alberta who has spoken has criticized the proposed establishment of constituency No. 17 which would be known as Rocky Mountain. I have great regard for the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer. He has accurately stated that this situation has created every other constituency boundary problem in the province of Alberta.

In order to create this constituency a huge area has been taken from the west part of Macleod riding, and the constituency extends for a distance of 410 miles. Can anyone imagine a constituency being 410 miles long, embracing three national parks, the Crowsnest Pass area and a multitude of rich industrial and natural resource areas?

I represent Macleod riding which extends from six miles south of Banff to the international border. It includes the Crowsnest Pass area as well as the tremendous grazing areas in the mountains and foothills. These grazing areas are utilized by livestock producers who trail or transport their stock to these pastures in the summer and back out in the fall of the year. In other words, the people living adjacent to these areas are the people who utilize them. Having represented this area for eight years I am aware of the specific problems which these people encounter. We have held many meetings to discuss these problems.

Like the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Gundlock), I must concern myself with problems relating to the Waterton Lakes national park, and this requires a good deal of time. My colleague and I held a meeting at Waterton Lakes which had an attendance of about 400, and this constituency boundary question was raised. The entire assembly voiced objection to the proposed creation of constituency No. 17 by the boundaries commission.

Some of the arguments advanced at that meeting were: How would you choose a candidate to run for any political party when the constituency is 410 miles long? Where would you hold the meeting? Would you hold it in Banff, Waterton Lakes or Jasper? No matter where you held it, everyone would have to come out to the main north-south highway from either Edmonton or Macleod to Calgary and, if it were to be held in Banff, go in from the main north-south highway to that point. The distance to be travelled would be hundreds of miles.

If I know anything about nominating conventions—hon. members in all quarters of the house are familiar with nominating problems—people who were anticipating attending such a convention would hesitate to do so because of the distance to be travelled. In addition, at a nomination convention of this kind you would have a "bulking-in" of people from the immediate vicinity. If it were held at Banff there would perhaps be a sprinkling of people from Waterton Lakes, Crowsnest Pass and Jasper-Edson but the bulk of those attending the convention would be from Banff.

After a candidate had been nominated he would, of course, have to represent the whole constituency if elected to this house. But after appropriations had been made or set aside to run the affairs of the national parks at Banff, Jasper and Waterton Lakes, I am certain that if only one member were representing all three areas each park would blame the others for not having received the lion's share. As it is, the hon. member for Lethbridge and myself represent Waterton Lakes. We do our best to obtain appropriations, public works, swimming pools, roads and all the other things needed for that park. We are proud of the park. We are proud of what we have been able to do for it, and the people in the area are 100 per cent satisfied with the job that has been done. But if Waterton Lakes park is joined with the other two so far as representation is concerned I can assure you there will be discontent on the part of the people in the area. This in itself is an argument against the implementation of the proposal to make Rocky Mountain a constituency.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has dealt with this question and I believe the hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Horner) intends to speak on the subject. Therefore I need not dwell on the matter any longer except to say that I believe the creation of the constituencies of Rocky Mountain and Crowfoot would cause maladjustment of the territory. I do not know the exact population in the Brooks area which is to be taken away from the constituency of Medicine Hat. To enable this to be done, the constituency of Medicine Hat has been extended west to take up a great portion on the eastern side of the constituency of Lethbridge. This makes Medicine Hat a safe Social Credit constituency. Then, in order for the constituency of Lethbridge to have a population conforming with the requirement, the commissioners have moved it west by shaving off the bottom part of Macleod riding. None of this would have been necessary but for the creation of the monstrosity of Rocky Mountain constituency.

I should say a word or two about the riding of Macleod which I represent because it has been mentioned only briefly in passing. A slice has been taken off the west and south sides of the riding and it is estimated that about 60 per cent of the population included in the proposed riding of Crowfoot is from the Macleod riding. This is a rural constituency. There is a tolerance of 25 per cent with regard to population, and approximately 51,000 people live in the riding. All that is needed with regard to the constituency of Macleod is that 1,000, 2,000, 3,000 or 4,000 people be taken from the adjacent northern constituency of Bow River. The Blackfoot reserve north of the Bow River would be nearly sufficient. No other adjustment would be necessary for the constituency of Macleod.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, and in fairness to the electoral boundaries readjustment commission, I have prepared a map which, with the consent of the house, I should like to have passed on to the Alberta commission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the house to file with the Clerk the map to which he has just referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kindt: There is certainly nothing contentious about the map which I wish to be passed on to the Alberta commission. In all fairness to the commission, we wish to be helpful to them and make constructive suggestions. In my speech I have attempted to put forward suggestions that will prove helpful to them and I know all hon. members are trying to do the same. However, as everyone knows, one picture is worth a thousand words and in regard to the riding of Macleod I want to show where an area could be added. This question has been discussed many times. The area that could be added to the riding of Macleod would include the Gleichen Indian reserve and a few adjacent townships. I would ask that this map be passed on to the commission for their information. They would then have it at hand when this question is under consideration.

I understand that a map containing all the constituencies has or will be considered. I like simplifying matters. Slight adjustments could be made to the boundaries of the constituency of Macleod, and these I have indicated. I believe that the amount of adjustment necessary in the riding of Macleod is less than that required in the two constituencies I now propose to mention. The riding of Acadia needs a few more people, as does Vegreville. These are the only adjustments that need to be made except that one more member is to be included in the city of Edmonton and one more for Calgary. Anyone familiar with the figures could make these adjustments and the result would be constituency boundaries in Alberta that would fit the physical conditions as well as being very satisfactory, I should say, to the people who live there.

I do not want to take too long but before closing my remarks I should like to say that Macleod riding was named in honour of Colonel Macleod who was head of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. He gave the name of "Calgary" to the city of Calgary after his home on the Island of Mull off the west coast of Scotland. Why destroy something which honours a great and brave man whose helpful handling of the Indians brought peace and settlement to southern Alberta?

I attended the ceremonies installing the first president of Calgary University the other day and I was pleasantly surprised to learn that this university has taken a sentence in Gaelic and added it to the shield of the new Calgary University. This is a great honour to Colonel Macleod. You can see, Mr. Speaker, that it would be a shame to do away with the constituency of "Macleod" and substitute "Crowfoot". Crowfoot and Macleod were the two men who dealt together to settle the Indian problem. I have nothing against the name Crowfoot. It is one of the names that has gone down in history in connection with the Indians of the area. Above all, the name "Crowfoot" is regarded with the highest respect by the 8,000 Indians in Macleod riding. But why disturb what everyone knows, what everyone honours and appreciates? In short, why do away with the name "Macleod"?

Colonel Macleod led the Royal Northwest Mounted Police into Fort Macleod in 1874 and gave the town its name. The people of that particular area are proud and one can understand why they do not want to give up the name "Macleod". In order to keep them happy and keep everyone happy who knows the tradition and history of the Indians, I hope the commission will take another look at this situation and preserve the name of Macleod riding. If the riding of Rocky Mountain is eliminated, there is no question but that Macleod constituency will fit logically into where it is now.

In conclusion I want to say that I find there are not many of my constituents who would shed any tears if this constituency boundaries adjustment act passed by this parliament were thrown into the ash can. I say that I have nothing against the commission. I think they have tried against odds to do what seemed to them on the surface to be a good job. However, I believe there have been some errors in that they failed to take into consideration the views of the people who know most about the area. For example, I think some of the members of parliament might have been called upon to make suggestions. Meetings might have been held before the boundaries were set instead of after the boundaries were set, and various suggestions might have been made. When this measure was going through parliament I thought that was what would be done. However, I was badly mistaken. I was confronted, like everyone else, with a fait accompli. The maps were placed before us and we were told: Now, boys, come on and criticize. We appeared before the commission at Calgary and others did so at other points. I may say that we had some very fine briefs presented from Macleod riding. The commission listened to them attentively but for some reason, lo and behold, not one change was made as a result of these people giving evidence. There were about ten briefs presented from Macleod riding. I hope that the commission in reviewing the opinions of hon. members will give consideration to what has been said. I can assure them that if they wish to call upon any of the members who have spoken we shall all, since we are all of one opinion, be glad to provide them with any information or help them in any way we can to do the job and get things set up until the next census.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. Before recognizing the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson), I must inform the house of the questions to be raised on the adjournment motion.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays): Northern Affairs—Construction of a replica of the Grande Hermine for Expo '67; the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. MacEwan): Transport—Pictou Landing, N.S.—The state of the dock; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis): The Canadian National— The closing of the Canora service on the Pacific coast.

CONSIDERATION OF OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORTS

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): In speaking briefly in this debate respecting the proposed new boundaries for the province of Alberta I should like to say at the outset that I am satisfied and my political organization is satisfied with the boundaries that have been proposed by the commission. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we were satisfied with the boundaries as they were before they were revised. I want to say that I availed myself of the opportunity to make representations to the commissioners when they held hearings in Lethbridge in mid-November. During the course of those hearings I asked the commissioners to take into consideration a number of minor adjustments that I thought were reasonable.

For example, there was an area that had been cut off by the South Saskatchewan River from its ties with the city of Medicine Hat. I asked that this be included in the riding of Medicine Hat. There was another small town where the boundary cut through the middle of it, half of the main street being in one riding and the other half in another. There were also a number of others. Every reasonable request that was made at those hearings was acquiesced in by the commission, and this is shown in the revised proposal before us today.

Having said that, I agree in part with what hon. members who have spoken have said with respect to constituency No. 17 known as Rocky Mountain. I believe there is some justification for arguing that this constituency could in fact be parts of three or four constituencies immediately to the east of the area now comprising this riding. But I would caution the commission, if I may, Mr. Speaker, that if they take the necessary action to do away with this constituency they must be careful not to put themselves in the position of setting up another constituency somewhere else in Alberta with the same kind of problems as this one so far as communications and so on are concerned.

While I agree in general with the argument that this would be a difficult constituency for a member to represent and for the people of the area to gather together for conventions to select candidates and so on, I do not accept all of the arguments which have been advanced in this regard. For example, I can see the problem of communications being equally as difficult in constituency No. 1 known as Athabasca or equally as difficult in constituency No. 14, known as Peace River. Therefore I do not think it is fair to argue that because no road runs from north to south throughout the proposed Rocky Mountain constituency this by itself is sufficient reason to suggest that these are the wrong type of electoral boundaries to set up.

I say that for this reason. After all, if we do convince the commissioners that they should put one more seat in Calgary and one more seat in Edmonton, making seven seats inside those two cities, we would still have 12 rural ridings or semi-rural ridings with smaller towns and cities in them. These would have to be readjusted to come within the tolerances laid down by the act.

[Mr. Olson.]

The caution I am now expressing is that we do not set up another constituency somewhere along the eastern boundary of Alberta or in the northern or northwestern part of Alberta with the same kind of problems of communication. I am sure the commission is well aware that these sparsely settled areas along the eastern boundary and in the north and west present the same kind of problems if the constituency is extended far enough to include sufficient people to meet the tolerance required.

There is one other point, Mr. Speaker. Roads and railroads are not the only factors to be considered so far as community of interest is concerned. Such things as the area covered by certain television and radio broadcasts and news media are also matters which are involved in the question of community of interest. For example, the television and radio stations in Calgary cover the Banff area. The same is true with regard to Lethbridge and the Waterton park area. This is a matter which has to be considered with respect to the need for a candidate to be able to communicate with those in his constituency during an election campaign, as would a member of parliament when elected to serve these people.

I think that is all I want to say. I agree that if something can be done to readjust the boundaries in Alberta so as to do away with the constituency of Rocky Mountain and create an additional constituency in the cities this might meet the situation. But I would caution the commission to exercise some care in adjusting the borders of the 12 rural and semi-rural constituencies which will be left so that we do not have any other constituencies in some other part of the province winding up with at least as bad, perhaps even worse, problems of communication in the form of roads, television, radio and newspaper media.

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Speaker, I want briefly to register some complaints from the present constituency of Jasper-Edson concerning the proposed redistribution. I was very sorry to hear the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) make the remarks he did because no area in the eastern part of the province is comparable with the Rocky Mountain trench so far as communications and transportation are concerned.

I should like to point out that this idea of a Rocky Mountain constituency, which is the key to the redistribution of the seats in Alberta, is the obsession of the chairman of the commission, who based himself on the premise that all of the national parks should be in one constituency in spite of the fact that the people living in the three national parks make up only 12 per cent of the people in the new riding. In other words, some 57,000 odd will be living in the new riding of Rocky Mountain, only 8,000 of whom live and work in the national parks. So in effect there is discrimination against the other 49,000 people who have been dragged into this tremendously long riding, which is inaccessible within itself, to satisfy the obsession of the chairman of the commission.

He is discriminating primarily against people who are now residing in my constituency and living in major towns in the western section, towns like Hinton, Edson, Whitecourt, Evansburg, Entwistle. The people in these towns will not get proper representation because they will be overshadowed by the dramatic and emotional appeal of the national parks.

I hope that the commission will take into consideration this important fact. It is absurd to set up a constituency based on the community of interest of 12 per cent of its population as is the case here. It would be just absurd to hook up three pulp and paper towns across northern Ontario and say that because these three towns all have pulp and paper industries we will create a constituency stretching around them without any regard for the people living outside the area encompassed by these particular industries.

The commission has taken the constituency of Jasper-Edson and split it into three parts in spite of the fact that at the present time the constituency of Jasper-Edson has well over 70,000 people, which is above the average set for rural constituencies, and also in spite of the fact that the present constituency, being one of the largest in the province of Alberta, still has some community of interest owing to the transportation and communication systems present in the area. Our roads run east and west, not north and south. Our communications run directly from Edmonton to the west and southwest and serve our constituency very well.

There is absolutely no need for the establishment of this new Rocky Mountain trench constituency. It does not serve a good purpose. I hope the commissioners will look seriously at this matter and take a sensible approach to redistribution in the province of Alberta.

In spite of what my hon. friend from Medicine Hat had to say, the creation of Rocky Mountain has upset the constituencies of Peace River and Athabasca and has made the new constituencies of Peace River and Athabasca intolerable in that they do not represent those areas any more. The town of Peace River no longer remains in Peace River; the town of Athabasca no longer remains in Athabasca. I suggest to the commission, as somebody has already suggested before, that they get in theirs cars and drive from Whitecourt in the north down through the mountains, if they can, to Waterton in the south. Rocky Mountain is an absolutely impossible constituency to campaign in and to service. It is impossible to remain in contact with the people in it.

I am convinced that the people who are going to be discriminated against are the people who live in the west end of Jasper-Edson. It is they who have been tacked on to Rocky Mountain to make that constituency big enough to have a large enough population.

I think that the commission will have to look at this seriously because there is discrimination against the majority of the people in this new riding of Rocky Mountain.

Mr. Speaker: The house having considered this objection, it is the Speaker's duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

The next is British Columbia, being objection No. 13, the text of which is to be found at page 24 of the pamphlet.

On February 16 last notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with the Speaker in the following terms:

Proposed Electoral District of Coast-Chilcotin:

That, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of British Columbia, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, for the reasons hereinafter specified.

(1) The commission failed to give full and proper attention to the geographic, social, and economic connections which the people of the Queen Charlotte Islands have with the mainland area of the province contiguous to, and including, the city of Prince Rupert.

(2) The commission failed to give full and proper consideration to population growth trends and failed to exercise fully its authority under Section 13 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act in so far as the relationship of the Queen Charlotte Islands to the mainland area of the province contiguous to and including, the city of Prince Rupert is concerned.

(3) The commission, by seeking to place the Queen Charlotte Islands in Coast-Chilcotin, fails to appreciate that this would demarcate and divorce the Queen Charlotte Islands from the mainland area of Coast-Chilcotin for the reasons that the Queen Charlotte Islands have no direct geographic, social, or economic ties or compatibilities with the other parts of Coast-Chilcotin.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I will be just a few moments on this particular motion because I want to deal only with one part of the proposed constituency of Coast-Chilcotin. I should like to say from the outset that in the first place we agree with the principle of redistributing constituencies by way of the commission process and on a non-political basis. I also want to say at the outset that, first I did not bother and, second, I do not particularly care about the political affiliations, if any, of the members of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for British Columbia.

My concern is with a group of islands called the Queen Charlotte Islands. It is proposed that these islands be removed from the present constituency of Skeena and placed within the proposed constituency of Coast-Chilcotin. The basis of my argument that they should be retained within the riding of Skeena is that the geographic, social and economic ties, connections and compatibilities of the people in the Queen Charlotte Islands are primarily with the coastal area in and surrounding the city of Prince Rupert. Prince Rupert is within the constituency now and it is proposed that it remain so.

The people in the two areas have common problems. They have common relationships through organizations such as chambers of commerce and trade unions with people in the coastal area around Prince Rupert. There are no ties whatever between the Queen Charlotte Islands and the proposed constituency of Coast-Chilcotin. There is no air carrier or air route between the two. There are no common ship or boat connections. There are no radio or television services common to the two areas. There are no papers that are common. In fact, there are none of the things in common which go to establish compatibility between areas. I say that with respect to the Queen Charlotte Islands and the proposed constituency of Coast-Chilcotin.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I took the course of advising the people on the Queen Charlotte Islands of the proposal when it was tabled in the house, and I received in response hundreds of signatures on petitions and forms objecting to the proposal. I have those petitions and forms here. As I understand it, under the law it is not possible to transmit these in a material way to the commission. Therefore I want to place this information on record. There is virtual unanimity of objection by the people of the Queen Charlotte Islands to the proposal that those islands be included in the proposed constituency of Coast-Chilcotin.

Because there is a lack of economic, social or geographic connections it automatically follows—I consider this to be a minor detail but none the less important—that we should look at the difficulties which might confront political organizations, candidates and elected members in getting around the constituency and servicing it after elections. I repeat that there is not the compatability in the geographic, social and economic senses between the Queen Charlotte Islands and the other portions of Coast-Chilcotin which I submit there ought to be. It would be extremely difficult for political organizations, candidates and elected members to be able to service the area proposed properly. That is a minor but none the less important consideration which the commission ought to take into account.

Of course, by law we are not solely concerned with matters of geography and the like but have to look at the population as well. I have done this and I want to place on the record statistical information about the proposed constituencies and the areas within them in order to lead up to an alternative suggestion with respect to the proposed constituency of Coast-Chilcotin. Within the bounds of the law the maximum population permissible in a constituency in British Columbia is 88,538. The minimum population permissible is 53,123. The proposed riding of Coast-Chilcotin would contain a population, based on the last census, of 55,011. Skeena will contain a population of 55,770. With the removal of the Queen Charlotte Islands from the proposed constituency of Coast-Chilcotin we would encounter a shortage in population because as of the last census, I am informed, there was a population of 3,014 on the Queen Charlotte Islands. Subtracting this figure from a population of 55,011 which will be within Coast-Chilcotin we reach a figure of 51,997 which is 1,126 short of the minimum of 53,123. This means we must look at some other area to make up the population figure to come within the prescription of the law.

In this regard I think we should look at the Cariboo area because part of Coast-Chilcotin takes in a section of the Cariboo comprising Williams Lake and an area surrounding it. Williams Lake, it can be argued, is likewise somewhat divorced from other parts of Coast-Chilcotin but I submit it is not so divorced as are the Queen Charlotte Islands because there is at least a road of sorts between Williams Lake and the coastal area of Bella Coola which it is proposed to take from Skeena and put into Coast-Chilcotin. I have no argument about that. On the face of it it makes geographical, economic, social and common sense.

As I say, there is a road connection between Williams Lake and the coastal part of Coast-Chilcotin. There is also between Williams Lake and points south from there in the Littlewood area and they have a certain compatibility, similar interests, the same general economy and social relationship. I suggest that the commission, when it decides to agree with the proposal I am now making and put the Queen Charlotte Islands back into Skeena as is the desire of almost all the people on the islands, should look to another community in the Cariboo area, namely, 100 Mile House and the area comprised, as I understand it, by the census district or subdistrict which takes in 100 Mile House and also the community of Exeter, a station on the railway. I am told that the population of this particular district is 1,320. This, if added to the figure of 51,997 which we get after subtracting the population of the Queen Charlotte Islands, would leave Coast-Chilcotin with a population of 53,317, above the minimum required by law and within the bounds prescribed by the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

Adding a population of 3,014 from the Queen Charlotte Islands to Skeena as proposed would bring the population of Skeena to 58,784, within the bounds prescribed by law. 100 Mile House is currently placed in the constituency of Kamloops-Cariboo according to these proposals. If it were removed from there and placed within the proposed Coast-Chilcotin constituency, Kamloops-Cariboo would be left with a population of 62,581, likewise well within the bounds permitted by law. I submit this is the course the commission should take.

Let me sum up the reasons I advance in support of this contention. First, there are no geographical, cultural, social or economic ties, compatibilities or connections between the Queen Charlotte Islands and any other area in the proposed constituency of Coast-Chilcotin. In the second place, there are certain geographical, social and economic interests and compatibilities in common between 100 Mile House and certain other areas within the proposed constituency of Coast-Chilcotin.

I would also ask the commission to look at the position of an isolated Indian village called Klemtu. I do not have the exact population figure for Klemtu but it is relatively small. If, having done what I suggest they should do with respect to the Queen Charlotte Islands and 100 Mile House, the commission finds it has come within the population figures prescribed by law, I would appreciate it if they would consider the position of Klemtu and see whether this Indian village could be taken out of the proposed riding of Coast-Chilcotin and placed in the constituency of Skeena with the line of demarcation drawn between Coast Chilcotin and Skeena not particularly at the 53rd parallel of latitude but in such a way that it crosses the centre of Millbank Sound. Millbank Sound is a stretch of water open to Hecate Strait and Queen Charlotte Sound and it forms a natural division of the areas to the north and to the south. Klemtu is to the north and would, I think, feel more at home within the constituency of Skeena than within the constituency of Coast-Chilcotin because of Millbank Sound coming between the two areas.

I leave the commission to ponder these words and I ask it sincerely to consider these representations, not my representations particularly because in this instance I am only the voice of those people on the islands who almost unanimously have objected to the proposal as it stands.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, as one of the members who signed the motion presented by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) perhaps I might be permitted to add a few words to what he has said. The proposed Coast-Chilcotin constituency does take in a substantial area of the region which at the present time lies within the boundaries of Comox-Alberni. I am not objecting to the proposal that this particular change should be made. Like the hon. member for Skeena, I feel that the principle established by the act is a sound one and my own view is that the commission in British Columbia had a difficult task to perform because of the geography of our province. Indeed, I feel that one of its most difficult tasks was the development of a constituency, within the tolerances set out by law, in the area embraced by the proposed Coast-Chilcotin constituency.

From the point of view of some future member trying to serve this constituency even with the changes proposed by the hon. member for Skeena, it certainly will be one of the most difficult ridings in Canada to serve. One of the factors involved now is that between the eastern portions of it, the ranching country surrounding Williams Lake and westward into the Chilcotin and the coastal areas, lies the quite formidable mountain barrier of the British Columbia coast range including a large section of some of the highest and most precipitous mountains in British Columbia.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that even without the inclusion of the Queen Charlotte Islands this constituency will be a difficult one for any member to represent. I should like to say simply that I believe the hon. member for Skeena has put forward some quite sound grounds for the changes he has suggested, and I believe they are put forward without any sort of prejudice. I feel sure he has spoken correctly when he has indicated the views held by the residents of the islands who are of course in a rather peculiar position of geographic isolation. I believe that if the redistribution commission in British Columbia will take a further look at the problem in connection with this constituency they can improve upon the work they have done up until this point.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it became known to members of the various parties in British Columbia that individual members from all parties had certain objections they would like to raise in respect of this act. However, it was agreed between members from British Columbia that they would file one objection worded in such a manner that any individual member could use the over-all objection as a basis for argument with regard to his own area. Unfortunately, because of the change in the schedule announced a day previously when we had understood that British Columbia members would be heard on Monday, we learned today that we would be heard today. The hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) was to have spoken with regard to the interior of British Columbia. I believe the arguments he would wish to advance would coincide, for instance, with the ideas of the members for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) and Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). Unfortunately we were not able to get in touch with the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich is now addressing himself to objection No. 13 filed by the hon. member for Skeena, or whether he is at this time referring to the more general objection. If he is not addressing himself to the specific objection to which I referred previously and which we have been discussing, I would point out that this one should be disposed of first.

Mr. Chatterton: I was addressing myself to the general objection.

Mr. Speaker: In that case, as we have done in respect of the others we will make a note that the house has considered this objection.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I understood the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich correctly, he said there had been an agreement among the members from British Columbia that they would file only one motion and that all objections or arguments could be made under that one motion. I should like to point out that this statement is incorrect. There had been some preliminary discussion in an effort to see whether or not we could develop one motion which would be acceptable to all members from British Columbia but that objective did not come to fruition.

Mr. Chatterton: I stand corrected, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: In any event, we now have disposed of objection No. 13. The house having considered objection No. 13, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, it is the Speaker's duty to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

We will now proceed with consideration of objection No. 16, the text of which is to be found at pages 27 to 29 of the pamphlet which has been distributed to members.

Proposed Electoral Districts of the Province of British Columbia:

Resolved that, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65) consideration be given by this house to the matter of certain objections to the following provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of British Columbia, laid before the house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19th, 1966, and to the reasons appearing in the said objections, hereinafter set forth.

The objections to the provisions of the report are as follows:

1. Throughout British Columbia the commission failed to give due regard to special geographic considerations, including the sparsity and density of population of various regions of the province, when they set the boundaries in dividing the province into twenty-three (23) new electoral districts.

2. The commission failed to give proper appreciation and consideration to the accessibility of one region to another region and to the size and shape thereof, in several of the rural electoral districts, when determining the boundaries of the same.

3. The commission failed to take into account, and erred in holding that it could not take into account, population trends as established since the census of 1961; such trends should have been taken into account by virtue of section 13 (c) (i) of the Act, and would have resulted in substantial variations from the boundaries laid down in the Commission's report.

4. The commission failed to give due effect, and erred in not giving due effect, to special community of diversity of interests of the inhabitants of various regions of the province as set forth in section 13 (c) (ii) of the said Act, with the result that areas with a community of interests with each other have been separated as a result of the commissioner's report, and areas formerly included in constituencies or with areas with which they had a community of interests are included in constituencies or with areas with which they have no community of interest.

5. The commission failed, in addition, to give or pay proper attention to the principle of practical feasibility of a representative keeping in physical contact with his constituents and the constituent's ability to make physical contacts with their representative, thereby rendering adequate representation of the people in parliament a virtually impossible task.

6. Examples of the results of the foregoing and of the effects of the report to which particular objection is taken are the following:

(a) The exclusion of the Williams Lake and adjacent area from the interior riding of Kamloops, with which it has a complete community of interest, and its inclusion with a coastal area in a new riding, including the Queen Charlotte Islands, the inland and coastal areas of the new riding having virtually no interests in common, contrary to the expressed wish of the community of Williams Lake.

(b) The virtual merging of the former riding of Okanagan-Revelstoke with the former riding of Kootenay East, with the result that the communities of Vernon and of Fernie are included in one riding, creating an area not only without community of interest, but quite impossible physically to serve properly.

(c) The exclusion of the Merritt-Nicola area from the Kamloops riding, with which it has a historic and complete community of interests, contrary to the expressed wish of the community of Merritt.

(d) The exclusion of Quesnel from the former Cariboo riding and its severance from Prince George, with which it has a community of interests and commerce, and its inclusion with Kamloops, with which it has minimal interests and commerce in common, contrary to the expressed wish of the community of Quesnel.

(e) The exclusion of the Queen Charlotte Islands from the coastal riding of Skeena, with which they have a community of interests, and their inclusion in a new riding containing Williams Lake and a vast interior ranching and dry belt area, with which they have nothing in common.

(f) The creation of a situation whereby the Williams Lake area is excluded from the Kamloops-Cariboo riding, while Quesnel is added in on the north, although it is impossible for the member for the riding to get from the southern area of the constituency to Quesnel in any practical sense without going through about seventy miles of the Williams Lake area, in the new riding of Coast-Chilcotin.

(g) The concomitant situation whereby the member for Coast-Chilcotin, in order to get from the coastal areas of his riding (which themselves extend over some 480 miles) to the Williams Lake and interior area, will, in practice, have to drive or fly another 250 miles from the coast, through three other constituencies, including the Kamloops riding, to get from the one part to the other of his riding.

(h) With respect to distances, it is essential not only that it be practically possible for members to cover their constituencies, it is also a principle to be followed that constituents should be able physically to gain access to the member to discuss business with him. In three constituencies newly-created, the constituent who wishes to go to do business with his M.P., from Powell River to Williams Lake, from Fernie to Vernon, or from Quesnel to Kamloops—or vice versa—will face a return journey in the order of 820 miles, 800 miles, and 540 miles respectively. In other words, given any time at all for the transaction of business itself, a visit to their M.P. for these constituents would involve a two- or three-day undertaking.

(i) The failure of the commission to take into account the relative rate of growth of the areas of Vancouver ordinarily called the West End and Kitsilano since the 1961 census, resulting in the new riding of Vancouver Centre having a presently estimated population well in excess of the applicable limit.

(j) The commission failed to give due effect and weight to the representations made and, in particular, failed to give effect to the quite reasonable representations that if large areas of the former ridings of Vancouver Centre and Vancouver-Burrard were to be combined into a new riding, that the new riding be called Vancouver-Granville.

(k) The subtraction of the municipality of Esquimalt from the Victoria riding separates two areas which have many years of close historical association, as well as a remarkable community of interests. The trend of population growths in B.C. is such that at the next Redistribution there is every likelihood the boundaries will be broadened again and, for the foregoing reasons, the municipality of Esquimalt is the logical area to then be restored once more to the Victoria riding. It would appear to be advantageous from all points of view to leave the municipality of Esquimalt in the Victoria riding as at present, particularly since the population of the total area is within the limits allowed to the commission as was the expressed wish of the reeve and the council of the municipality of Esquimalt.

7. Application of the principles heretofore referred to, and avoidance of the anomalies and inequities herein listed, would have the result that the two proposed ridings of Coast-Chilcotin and Okanagan-Kootenay could not be brought into existence as presently recommended. They should be eliminated from proposals for new ridings in British Columbia and a new set of riding boundaries for B.C. drawn accordingly.

For the foregoing and such other objections and reasons as the undersigned members may deem necessary to carry out the spirit, terms and conditions of the said Act, it is considered essential that the said report be referred back to the commission, pursuant to the said act, together with this statethe said report be referred back to the commission, may revise its report to meet the said objections and draw new riding boundaries along the lines referred to in paragraphs 6 and 7 above.

Mr. Chatterton: In view of what the hon. member has just said, Mr. Speaker, I stand corrected. I was under the impression there was only one objection. In any event the general objection, No. 16, was signed by members of all parties from British Columbia and it was agreed among those members who signed it that the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) would speak with regard to the interior. We were not able to get in touch with the hon. member for Kamloops today and I would ask, therefore, that the presentation of the hon. member for Kamloops stand until tomorrow. After I have made my short presentation I understand the members from Ontario are ready to proceed with their presentations.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding of the suggestion made is that we might hear any hon. members who have a contribution to make at the moment on objection No. 16, stand it thereafter, and then initiate the discussion in respect of Ontario. Is that what the hon. member would like to do?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, if I may interject, it was our intention at least to proceed on this basis, but in view of what has been said by the hon. member may I suggest, if it is agreeable to the house, that we now proceed with Ontario so that we can complete each one and so that there will not be anything left over for further debate?

Mr. Speaker: I would think it would make for a more orderly discussion if we just stand objection No. 16 rather than begin a discussion on it. If it is the unanimous wish of the House, objection No. 16 will stand.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): As an accommodation to the members from British Columbia I am sure those from Ontario would be glad to do so.

Mr. Chatterton: Do I understand that it will stand until tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: It will stand until this one is completed. I cannot say whether it will be tomorrow, Monday or later. My understanding is there will be agreement between the house leaders in respect of when this particular objection will be called again.

We will now proceed with consideration of Objection No. 7, the text of which may be found at page 8 of the pamphlet.

Proposed Electoral Districts of the Province of Ontario:

That, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, being chapter 31 of the Statutes of Canada 1964-65, and for the reasons hereinafter specified, consideration be given by this house to the matter of objections to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario, laid before the house by Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, the 19th day of January, 1966.

The provisions of the report applying generally throughout the province of Ontario are objected to on the ground that they do not conform, in respect of many electoral districts, with the provisions of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, and the reasons for such objections are as follows:—

1. Throughout the province of Ontario, in proposing new boundaries for electoral districts, the commission has almost completely ignored provincial and municipal electoral boundaries, social and economic ties, patterns of trade and communication, local and regional affinities as well as tradition.

2. The commission has proposed establishment of electoral districts having no physical, social or economic cohesion, and no unity or community of interest, thereby rendering the adequate representation of the people in parliament a virtually impossible task.

3. The commission has ignored the rules specified in Section 13(c) of giving attention to special geographic considerations including the sparsity, density or relative rate of growth of population of various regions of the province, the accessibility of such regions or the size or shape thereof.

4. The commission has ignored serious and thoughtful representations made to it by municipal councils, community associations, political representatives and many other persons having special knowledge.

While general objection is taken to the provisions of the report for the foregoing reasons, additional particular individual objections are specified in letters addressed by members of the House of Common representing electoral districts in the province of Ontario to the Speaker of the House of Commons, which letters are annexed hereto as appendix "A" and incorporated herein.

Further detailed and specific proposals for the alteration or amendment of the report of the commission will be made by members of the House of Commons representing electoral districts in Ontario during debate in the House of Commons upon this motion, in order that the spirit, intent and purpose of the Electoral Boundaries Adjustment Act may be carried out equitably and adequately.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a fair and equitable redistribution of Ontario ridings is now a task of immense magnitude, and it has been greatly intensified by the long delay since the 1961 census. To say that I am disappointed with the report now under consideration of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario would be to put it mildly. However, early in my professional career I learned that counsel achieves nothing by telling home truths to the judge. So today, with the greatest of difficulty, I resist the temptation of expressing, with the conviction which I feel, the basic home truths about those whom the parliament has made judge and jury, court of appeal and court of last resort.

One of the problems, sir, of debating redistribution is that it gives the appearance of being self-serving. I do not agree that such is the case at all. I assert that politicians in this chamber can be as objective, as impartial and as independent as any outside tribunal. Certainly my attempt tonight will be to avoid the slightest semblance of partisanship or any political self-serving and to approach the issues objectively and impartially.

Indeed, sir, I believe that if this house were to establish a subcommittee now with His Honour, the Speaker, in his capacity as the member for Stormont, in the chair, and to include the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene), the hon. lady for Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Wadds) and myself, we could finish redistribution of eastern Ontario ridings before midnight tonight and it would be with the unanimous approval of this house and the public and would establish the eastern Ontario ridings on a basis much fairer and more equitable to the electorate—to the electorate, and I want to emphasize that—than the division proposed by the commission.

That may only indicate the extent of my personal disillusionment with the so-called independence and impartiality of the commission when the commission so obviously lacks knowledge of the geography and social and economic life of the province. If the carving up of Ontario ridings as suggested by the commission had ever been attempted by politicians under the old system a howl of gerrymandering would have gone up from coast to coast, the like of which has never been heard.

Most of my life has been spent in political organization which has taken me into every area of the province. There are few villages and townships that I have not visited and I believe I know Ontario, its geography, its economy and its social and community life. It is on the basis of a lifetime experience that I want to make submissions to the commission, with great respect to their integrity but, I say, with equal firmness.

The basic and only purpose of redistribution, Mr. Speaker, is to achieve a genuinely representative House of Commons, to permit the election of men and women to parliament who represent not merely geographic units but represent the cultural, economic and social interests of the people.

Mere arithmetical accuracy and dead mathematical uniformity does not represent a proper redistribution. Nor does it enable the people to be properly represented in this chamber. The mere drawing of lines upon a map whenever a standard number of people can be contained therein is not redistribution but is a cartographer's nightmare.

In my respectful submission, the Ontario commission made its first mistake in not accepting and using sufficiently the latitude allowed by parliament. It has attempted in the first commission redistribution too great a mathematical uniformity in the province of Ontario without using sufficiently the 25 per cent efficiency formula.

My present electoral district of Carleton is, I believe, the most populous combined rural-urban riding in all of Canada, and from my own experience I can state that an urban member of parliament can service his riding with much greater ease than a rural member. Exact numerical equality is not a genuine representation but in fact discrimination against rural areas which are thereby actually under-represented.

May I state to you, sir, certain principles which I submit should be applied by the commission. The first is that the alteration of electoral boundaries from one redistribution to the next should be kept at an absolute minimum. People are creatures of political and other habits, and violent upsets in electoral boundaries should be avoided where possible. Therefore, relative permanence is a proper objective and the division should be on the basis of enabling the electoral districts to accommodate expanding population with a minimum of future alteration of boundaries.

Especially is this imperative if we are to maintain proper political organizations. Regrettably no member of the Ontario Electoral Boundaries Commission ever had any experience in political organization and, with respect, I venture to submit that it has ignored this important fact. This is particularly evident because of the wide departures from provincial boundaries. From Confederation until the present it has been possible in many areas of Ontario to maintain common federal and provincial political organizations, and it will be found that in those areas political interest has been highest.

Under the proposals as they are before us a complete separation of federal and provincial organizations will be necessary, and to this there are likely to be many unsatisfactory by-products—by-products which may not contribute to our unity as a single nation. In my submission this was totally unnecessary under a proper redistribution, and the old tradition might have been maintained.

Stability of political organization is a factor which must not be overlooked if we are to preserve our parliamentary democracy. A parliamentary committee of persons who are experienced in politics and understand the nature of elections would never have permitted this to happen.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I venture to suggest that homogeneity of the ridings, culturally, socially and economically, is a vital factor in electing a genuinely representative House of Commons. The late Mackenzie King expressed this at one time as the need for "compactness".

In speaking on the second reading of the redistribution bill of 1932 this is what Mr. Mackenzie King said on November 25, 1932, as it appears in Hansard at page 1591:

> There is an additional guiding principle that, so far as reasonably can be arranged, there should be an effort at compactness in the shaping of constituencies. That permits of an expression of opinion from a community that is familiar with its own affairs, and in that way helps to give a more accurate representation of the views of the people.

In my submission it is absolutely essential to give priority to community of interest and to balancing of population centres within the geographic unit if redistribution is to be at all fair and equitable to the electorate. Let me illustrate this by a local example. Twelve miles west of these parliament buildings are two new residential communities, slightly over a mile apart, named Kanata and Glencairn. The new Queensway to be constructed next year will make it possible to drive to either of them from these parliament buildings within 15 minutes. Both are exclusively dormitory communities—satellite towns, if you will—of this national capital, with all their ties, economic, social and cultural, here with Ottawa. By 1970 the promoters of Kanata claim it will have a population of 10,000 and Glencairn is expected to reach nearly half that figure. Yet under the proposed redistribution Kanata is to be linked with the towns of Renfrew and Perth, with which it has not the slightest affinity, whereas Glencairn, a completely similar community a mile away, is to be linked with Prescott, Cardinal and Iroquois, with which town and villages it has no association whatever. This illustrates why the members for Ontario signed the notice of objection and set forth the first reason as follows:

> 1. Throughout the province of Ontario, in proposing new boundaries for electoral districts, the commission has almost completely ignored provincial and municipal electoral boundaries, social and economic ties, patterns of trade and communication, local and regional affinities as well as tradition.

Sir, I do urge the members of the Electoral Boundaries Commission earnestly to re-examine their work in the light of that objection. Without hesitation I say that the provincial redistribution, made by the same three commissioners, is much fairer, much more equitable, much more balanced.

In eastern Ontario at least, in the provincial redistribution the commission did take into account social, cultural and economic ties, patterns of trade and communication, local and regional affinities; but in the federal redistribution they have cut right across these factors.

Using the proposed electoral district of Carleton as an illustration, I say that any knowledgeable person realizes that the patterns and ties of the St. Lawrence towns and villages are east and west, with virtually no pull toward the Ottawa river. I have met no elector of Carleton or Grenville-Dundas who does not object to this proposed riding of Grenville-Carleton, and I think they object on sound grounds.

The second objection advanced by the members from Ontario is this:

2. The commission has proposed establishment of electoral districts having no physical, social or economic cohesion, and no unity or community of interest, thereby rendering the adequate representation of the people in parliament a virtually impossible task.

The chopping, the slicing done by the commission creates very many ridings in Ontario without cohesion, without the compactness of which Mr. Mackenzie King spoke, and thereby intensifies very greatly the problem of balanced representation by any member of parliament. Just as an illustration, the present Carleton has been sliced into five new electoral districts without any regard to the interests of the voters in the five sectors.

The third objection reads as follows:

3. The commission has ignored the rules specified in section 13 (c) of giving attention to special geographic considerations including the sparsity, density or relative rate of growth of population of various regions of the province, the accessibility of such regions or the size or shape thereof.

With great respect, I submit the Ontario Electoral Boundaries Commission went completely wrong in its interpretation of section 13 (c). According to the Representation Commissioner, the commission did not examine—and I believe he asserts it was not entitled to examine—actual population growth since the census of June, 1961.

I specifically ask the commission to reconsider its position in this respect. In my view and in the opinion of a considerable number of lawyers to whom I have spoken, the commission has made a grotesque misinterpretation of the amendment made in committee of the whole on November 13, 1964. The whole purpose of the amendment was to prevent before 1971 the fantastic disparities which occurred between 1951 and 1961. The author of the amendment, Mr. Moreau, who was then the member for York-Scarborough, made it clear that he wanted to deal with factual situations subsequent to the census. The sense of the house and the true purport of the amendment, I submit, was expressed by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) who with his usual clarity said at page 10059 of Hansard of November 13, 1964:

I am glad to see this amendment introduced. When I spoke on this bill some months ago in the earlier stage of its consideration I expressed the view that some account should be taken of population growth, that is the growth which had actually taken place since the census on which the redistribution was based.

Mr. Speaker, I pause to repeat those words, "which had actually taken place since the census on which the redistribution was based." The hon. member for Calgary North went on:

There is no doubt in my mind that the absence of such a consideration at the time of the last redistribution in 1952 is one of the main reasons we have such an inequitable position at the present time as far as the suburban areas of our cities are concerned.

It is true that the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made some equivocal comments on the amendment, but even his comments speak only of the use of "official figures" and clearly such official figures are obtainable from the assessment rolls of each municipality.

My submission is that the normal and natural meaning of the amendment to section 13 (c) is as the hon. member for Calgary North stated it. What astounded me is that the two members of the commission—and only two were present for the hearing—who sat in Ottawa allowed me to make a complete submission based upon this interpretation of the section without ever once raising the question that they were proceeding here in Ontario, and elsewhere in Canada, on a wholly different interpretation. Apparently, for some extraordinary reason it was a practice of the commission in Ontario not to ask questions for fear of embarrassing those persons who were making submissions. I have lived a good part of my life in the courts, before administrative tribunals, on the public platform and in this house, and I do not embarrass easily by being asked questions.

It was bad enough to have the hon. member for Renfrew South, the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) and myself make presentations to a commission without any questions at all being asked of us and with only two of the four members of the commission present. Any other administrative tribunal before which I have ever appeared before would have adjourned in order to hear as a full commission serious submissions made by people like the hon. member for Renfrew South; and I hope I can be considered in the same category as a serious person. This was bad enough. But thereafter to be told that you had made your argument on a totally wrong premise, without its being presented to you, I say is worse. I am specifically asking each of the members of that commission to examine his conscience and to deal specifically with the objection on this basis.

Let me illustrate the problem by showing, from population figures taken from the municipal assessment rolls of 1964, the significant changes in four eastern Ontario ridings as proposed, Renfrew-Lanark, Leeds, Stormont-Dundas and Grenville-Carleton. Mr. Speaker, if I may have the unanimous consent of the house I would ask to have placed upon the record a very brief table in this respect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member to have printed in Hansard the table to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

Total and Percentage Changes from 1961 Census to 1964 Estimate in Population of Ridings as Proposed by Electoral Boundaries Commission

	1961	1964	Net Change	Percentage Change
Renfrew-Lanark	55,418	55,671	+ 253	+ 0.46%
Leeds	62,656	60,587	— 2,069	— 3.3 %
Stormont-Dundas	68,233	67,980	— 253	— 0.37%
Grenville-Carleton	63,715	79,694	+15,979	+25.08%

Mr. Bell (Carleton): As will be seen from this table, the proposed riding of Grenville-Carleton increased in population by 25 per cent in just three years, whereas the neighbouring ridings remained virtually stationary. I think it is a matter of common knowledge that since the year 1964, for which I have given figures, there has been little or no change in the populations of Renfrew, Lanark, Leeds or Stormont-Dundas.

• (7:10 p.m.)

On the other hand, there has been an explosive growth in Grenville-Carleton, particularly in the township of Nepean, as the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) very well knows. The best estimate I can make at this time is that the population of Grenville-Carleton as proposed by the commission, as of this date in April, 1966, is 88,000 people, or already in excess of the allowable deviation of 25 per cent from quotient. I put it to the commission in this way: Is it sensible at this time to establish a new electoral district in an area already too populous according to the law passed by parliament?

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

At the present rate of growth, as projected to June, 1967, the next census, it is likely that Grenville-Carleton as proposed by the commission would have a population of at least 120,000. Perhaps it may even reach double the quotient. On the other hand, the neighbouring ridings are likely to remain reasonably stable. Of the Grenville-Carleton population, over 60 per cent would be in one suburban township, Nepean, lying immediately south and west of this city of Ottawa. I urge the commission to look at the facts of life and re-examine the boundaries on the basis of the actual figures of September, 1965, which they may take from the assessment rolls which can now be secured by them.

Now, sir, the final general objection to the Ontario report reads as follows:

> 4. The commission has ignored serious and thoughtful representations made to it by municipal councils, community associations, political representatives and many other persons having special knowledge.

I ask the commission in Ontario to take this very seriously, and to examine, re-assess, and re-appraise these thoughtful representations. I want to say to the commission just exactly what I would say if I were standing face to face with Mr. Justice Richardson and his colleagues. I have never heard so many complaints about the attitude of a public tribunal as I have about the manner in which they conducted their hearings.

Mr. Winkler: Agreed.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am glad to hear that the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) agrees with me. I can truthfully say that each and every day we talk to our colleagues in the house, these complaints are heard from every part of Ontario. I do believe that they have some validity. The commission should seek now, at this late stage, to remove the feelings that they have been arrogant and arbitrary, that they have ignored many of the representations.

I ask the commission to take a very hard look at the brief submitted by Mr. George Inrig, a very highly qualified person whose qualities are not depreciated, at least in my view, by the fact he is the partner of Hon. Leslie M. Frost, a man who probably knows more about Ontario than any other living person. If the members of the commission want to have some appraisal of what they have done, want to have their ears burned, perhaps they should have a little conversation with Hon. Leslie M. Frost.

I mention one further general factor, sir, the difficulty a member of parliament may experience in giving adequate representation to non-cohesive geographical units. As an illustration, I may say the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) has only one county council with which to deal. The next member for Renfrew North will have to deal with three county councils. The present member for Carleton has only one municipal council with which to deal, but the next member for the proposed Grenville-Carleton will have three. This is the way it goes across the province. The already considerable problems of giving adequate representation to one's constituents will be greatly intensified. Perhaps one should look forward to the delights of three wardens' banquets instead of only one. I say, too, that the problems of political organization and election financing have been greatly increased. In my submission, they need not have been.

I am fully aware, sir, of the chain reaction of any amendments that may be made at this time to the commission proposals. It was for this reason I outlined in detail, as will be seen on page 12 of the notice of objections for Ontario, the precise changes which should be made in the existing electoral districts of Carleton, Grenville-Dundas, Renfrew South, Lanark and Stormont. I should like now to put those proposals specifically upon the record:

1. The boundaries of the proposed electoral district of Lanark and Renfrew should be changed as follows:

(a) Eliminate therefrom the townships of Fitzroy, Torbolton, Huntley and March.

(b) Add thereto the town of Smiths Falls and the township of Montague.

2. The boundaries of the proposed electoral district of Leeds should be changed as follows:

(a) Eliminate therefrom the town of Smiths Falls and the township of Montague.

(b) Add thereto the town of Prescott, the village of Cardinal and the townships of Augusta and Edwardsburgh.

3. The name of the last mentioned electoral district should be changed to Leeds and Grenville.

4. The boundaries of the proposed electoral district of Stormont-Dundas should be changed as follows:

(a) Eliminate therefrom the villages of Winchester and Chesterville and the township of Winchester.

(b) Add thereto the village of Iroquois and the township of Matilda.

5. The boundaries of the proposed electoral district of Grenville-Carleton should be changed as follows:

(a) Eliminate therefrom the town of Prescott, the villages of Iroquois and Cardinal and the townships of Augusta, Edwardsburgh and Matilda.

(b) Add thereto the villages of Winchester and Chesterville and the townships of Fitzroy, Torbolton, Huntley, March and Winchester.

6. The name of the last mentioned electoral district should be changed to Carleton-Grenville-Dundas.

7. A much more detailed survey of Ottawa area electoral districts should be undertaken by the commission in order to achieve new boundaries which genuinely represent the policy of the Electoral Boundaries Adjustment Act which assuredly the proposed boundaries do not do.

I want to emphasize, having read that, that if I had to start the eastern Ontario redistribution de novo, this would not be what I would propose. The boundaries that are proposed in this document simply represent a change to make something sensible out of the commission's present proposals without upsetting those proposals over-all. I am aware of, and I sympathize with the views of the people of Dundas county who resent the county being split. If I had my way neither Grenville, Dundas nor Carleton counties would be split in the manner in which they are. Those proposals I have outlined are an attempt to create ridings which do have cohesion, as well as cultural and social affinities, where the boundaries follow trade and economic patterns, and where effect is given to the relative growth in population. The commission already has the detailed population breakdown supplied to it by me for each of the ridings, and comparing the 1961 census with 1964 estimates made by municipal assessors. They can now easily bring this up to date by using the September, 1965, population estimates made by municipal assessors.

At this point, sir, I would ask permission to place on Hansard a table which summarizes precisely the results of these proposals.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that these tables be placed on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): As indicated in the notice of objections, the electoral district I propose would be known as Carleton-Grenville-Dundas.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a basic problem with the riding of Grenville-Carleton as proposed by the commission is that it could have no permanence. As I have submitted, every effort should be made to create a relative permanence from one redistribution to the next. I say to you, it is bad for parliament; it is discouraging to members and to prospective candidates; it destroys public interest; to have revolutionary changes every ten years. Every effort should be made to obviate it.

The proposed Grenville-Carleton riding, for example, has no cohesion, no mutuality of social and economic interest between the St. Lawrence front and the Ottawa valley area. On the St. Lawrence, the patterns of trade run east and west, not north and south. This redistribution runs directly counter to all historical patterns.

I have not dealt with the redistribution of the Ottawa ridings because frankly it is beyond me, as one individual, to complete the necessary research. To prepare statistics for the Ottawa ridings such as I have given the commission, and the summary of which are placed on the record, for Grenville-Carleton would take many days of research in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and in the City of Ottawa assessment department. To do this is the responsibility of the commission staff.

These facts only I mention. In my opinion, the proposed Ottawa-Carleton riding should not cross the Rideau river to include Carleton Heights and Courtland Park, torn from the old Carleton riding. These areas simply have no mutuality of interest with the east bank of the Rideau and will turn out to be political orphans. Properly these communities belong with Nepean.

The figures for the proposed Ottawa Centre take no account of the great loss in population in that electoral district due to the expropriation and razing of LeBreton Flats and part of the Preston street area. In the proposed Ottawa West, no account is taken of the development of some of the largest apartment buildings in Canada, with many thousands of new residents. To equalize the population of Ottawa Centre and Ottawa West, certainly it is not necessary to carry the boundary of Ottawa West eastward as far as Bayswater avenue.

These are matters which I submit the commission has an obligation to re-examine and to report in detail.

Sir, I had the privilege of filing certain objections in relation to the proposed electoral districts of Etobicoke and York West and in metropolitan Toronto generally and to the readjustments in northern Ontario. Other members will be speaking on these subjects. I merely wish to say to the commission that these representations which I filed were based on serious representations made to me by political organizations in these areas, and I hope that the commissioners will give them their earnest consideration.

In conclusion, sir, I hope that the members of the commission will take very seriously the views which have been and will be expressed in this debate. They should know that the great majority of Ontario members of all parties are gravely dissatisfied with the work of the commission. These representations which we are making this evening are not mere politicians' gripes. They are an honest expression of sincere opinions of the people who do know Ontario best, who know its geography, its cultural and social affinities, its economic regions, its trade and communication patterns. It is because we, the members from Ontario, do know our Ontario that we are here representing the people in Ontario in this chamber. I say that our views and opinions publicly expressed in this chamber are entitled to respect and to sincere consideration by the commission to whom we have abdicated this vital function. I ask the representation commissioner to refrain from continuing the cavalier attitude he has displayed and to examine the views which are expressed in this debate with an open and judicial mind.

The commission has an obligation to parliament and to the people to give balanced and detailed study to these representations, and to seek further counsel where necessary. If they do, I am certain that much of the Ontario redistribution cannot stand as now proposed.

None of us here has any vested interest in any particular riding or in any geographic unit. My two and a half year holiday from this house certainly proved that to me. When we who are now in this chamber leave it, others will take our places and try to do a sincere job for their ridings and for Canada. What I want to make certain is that we have a redistribution which will give these members of the future, who succeed us, geographic units and areas which make possible the finest representation of the people of this great nation.

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to commend the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) for the excellent general presentation he has made in relation to the over-all problems of this redistribution. Therefore I propose to speak only of my own area.

It has been my privilege and honour to represent the good riding of Grey North since 1957. This riding embraces an area that has been in the same unit since confederation, a riding that became prominent in the famous by-election of 1945, the results of which were headline news across this nation. I might also say that I have had 14 predecessors since the birth of Canada. Needless to say, each has made a worthy contribution and I pay tribute to them.

I object to the boundaries as set up for the new proposed riding of Grey Simcoe because of the complete disregard for the social, cultural and economic interests of the municipalities that are grouped together. For instance, the townships of Flos and Tiny on the east are closely linked with Penetang and Midland, and they should remain in the same riding as these two towns because they have little in common with Owen Sound on the west. On the other hand, Keppel, Sarawak and Derby townships have everything in common with Owen Sound. In fact, hundreds of people from these townships work in that city; yet the new boundary eliminates these municipalities from that city in their midst and from the riding.

The geographical aspects have certainly been ignored, and from this point of view it would be virtually impossible to have unity or community of interest.

Another important factor that must be considered and which, of course, has developed since the census was taken is the designation of the Georgian bay area. Several new, large factories will be in production this year and others are under construction, so that an immediate population growth is assured. As further evidence of the impending development, which will certainly result in increased population, I would like to read an excerpt from an article in yesterday's Owen Sound Sun-Times which came to my hand today. The heading is "Many industries showing interest in Owen Sound", and the article goes on:

> Negotiations are proceeding with a dozen or more industrial prospects for Owen Sound. Some appear likely to result in plants being located here; others are more remote. Such was the report of industrial commissioner R. C. Taylor to members of Owen Sound civic development committee Tuesday evening.

We in Grey North concur in the riding as set up under provincial redistribution where some recognition was given to several significant features that have apparently been overlooked by the federal planners. I am reluctant to see any severance take place, but I do appreciate the fact that constituencies will necessarily have to be adjusted to bring some semblance of uniformity to the size of the ridings in respect of population. However, Mr. Speaker, there are other important factors which should not be overlooked.

In an area such as I represent, I feel a riding should be built around a traditional trading centre. A city or town, to enjoy this popularity, should be of easy access to the surrounding communities. It would have most of the services that attract people, such as good medical and dental facilities, adequate shopping centres, market accommodation, educational institutions, places of entertainment and culture. In fact, it would be a place where people have traditionally congregated for various reasons over the years.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I propose the peninsula area, with Owen Sound as the focal point of the new riding, the southern boundary to begin at Lake Huron on the west, follow the southern boundary of Saugeen, Elderslie, Sullivan, Holland, Euphrasia and Collingwood townships, and then north to Georgian Bay. The population of this compact area would be within a few hundreds in population of the ill-considered, incoherent proposition for the new riding of Grey-Simcoe.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote an excerpt from a radio broadcast editorial of June 21, 1965, emanating from the only station in our immediate area, CFOS:

• (7:30 p.m.)

The commission's report, made public earlier this week, recommends that parts of Grey county be associated with parts of Simcoe county to form a new federal electoral district to be called Grey-Simcoe. We also are aware that it will not be possible to make boundary decisions which will please everyone. But, at the same time, we suggest further consideration be given to the recommended arrangements for this part of the province. Although we have the highest regard for the people of Simcoe county, we think a combination of Grey and Bruce counties would make a more suitable community. A close association between the people of Grey and Bruce counties has been developed over a span of many years.

[Mr. Noble.]

We believe this association between the people of Grey and Bruce counties is an excellent foundation for the marriage of the two counties for the purposes of representation in both the federal and provincial governments. If a combination of the two counties is regarded by the commission as too large to be properly represented by one member, we suggest that the southern townships in Grey county could be associated with Wellington county and in the case of Bruce, the southern townships could be associated with Huron county.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is abundantly clear to the interested people in our area that adjustments to the proposed plan will necessarily have to be made to save what now appears to be almost a ridiculous situation. Indeed, if the new federal lines are approved for Grey-Simcoe, it will be extremely awkward for any elected representative to serve adequately.

One can only trust that the wisdom which prevailed in the ultimate policies followed by Ontario officials in setting out the perimeter lines will to some extent, form the guide lines which federal authorities will use to establish the final pattern.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I intend to make a very brief contribution to the discussion about the general situation in Ontario. I only do so in fairness to the commission that did this work, and to what parliament has done in delegating this work to the commissioner.

It seemed to me that the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell), after giving himself very good advice namely that it is not wise to insult the judge who is going to hear your case, proceeded in the next breath on a very vigorous, and I thought, sweeping attack upon the commissioner and the work of the commission.

I am not for a moment trying to suggest that individual members here may not have very strong and legitimate reasons for having objections to the proposals that were made. I can quite understand those strong feelings. However, I cannot quite reach the objectivity of the hon. member for Carleton, who said he did not look at these things at all from any sort of partisan point of view. I confess that I do tend to look at these things in the interest of my own situation, my own constituency, and so on. But I for one would not in the least want to hear it suggested that in eastern Ontario the suggested changes proposed by the hon. member for Carleton can be entirely in order, and that the commission would welcome the suggestions that he is making. I know in other parts there will be other, equally sound objections.

I notice the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) in his seat and I would not want to say anything to cut down the force of the objection he proposed to make. Generally speaking, the work carried out by the commission in the Toronto area from which I come, which is comprised of 20 to 25 ridings, has been done in a reasonable and fair manner. I think it only proper to say this, so that when the record of this debate is read it will not be assumed that all of us are in the position so eloquently and vigorously expressed by the hon. member for Carleton, who called the work of the commission one colossal gerrymander. He said if this had been done by the members of this house it would have caused a howl from coast to coast. I may not be quoting him accurately, but I think he used similar picturesque language.

In fairness I want to say to the commissioner that I, and I think I speak for a good number of members in my area, think that a fair and reasonable job was done in that particular area, and we are not anxious to see any substantial changes made, or any wholesale reconstruction of the work of the commission.

Although perfect results may not have been obtained, I for one believe that the principle of having this done by a non-partisan commission is sound. If we had taken the advice of the hon. member for Carleton, this would be thrown back into the arena of politics, and would have resulted in great difficulty.

I want to put on the record my view that the commissioners, perhaps with some exceptions in certain areas, which I think they will correct, have done a reasonable job, and that parliament should be satisfied with its own decision not to throw this into the arena of parliamentary discussion.

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brantford): I should like to add a few words to this debate. I am very glad that both the hon. member for Carleton and the hon. member for Greenwood have expressed the views they have, because I believe each in his own way has given a picture of the situation which the commission should review.

I do not want to speak in any way disrespectfully of the commission, but I was one of the members of parliament who signed an objection to the suggested new boundaries that the commission fixed for the riding of Brantford and for the proposed new riding of Brant.

In doing so I want to make clear that I do not wish to accuse the commission of wrongdoing in this regard. However I believe that some of the general criticisms that were levelled by the hon. member for Carleton were just, and really should be considered by the commission.

Mr. Winkler: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brown: I refer specifically to his appeal that a riding, that a constituency to be represented in the House of Commons, should be based on a cohesive unit socially, culturally, and economically as far as possible. That makes the job of the commission very difficult.

I, for one, know that the Electoral Boundaries Commission had a very difficult task in front of it. But we, coming from this house, also have had a good deal of experience in these matters. I have represented the constituency of Brantford for a number of years in the House of Commons, and I feel that the matters raised by the hon. member for Carleton should be studied. They are very important. I am very glad that he quoted from the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, who gave a lifetime to public service and who had a great deal of experience in this regard.

I feel that a constituency should be a definite cohesive unit. For these reasons I should like to refer to the specific objections which have been raised, not by me, but by the constituents of the various municipalities in the new proposed electoral riding of Brant. Accordingly, I should like to commence by referring to the township of Ancaster, which in the commission's report is to be annexed to form part of the constituency of Brant.

Now Ancaster township goes to the city limits of the city of Hamilton. This means that the new constituency which I or someone else will be representing in this house would extend to the Hamilton city limits. There have been widespread objections in the press and elsewhere from the residents of Ancaster township to the effect that never in history have they had anything in common, any common association, with the people of Brantford. This is regrettable as far as I am concerned. I love my city and I want to say right now that I would love to represent the township of Ancaster in this House of Commons, a beautiful township if there ever was one. I want to make it abundantly clear that I have no political reason for stating this. But I believed the objections of the people as placed before the commission should have been taken into consideration. Certainly the commission did take account of some of the objections filed. The commission did make changes after hearing from numerous bodies whose representatives appeared before it after its findings had been made public.

Ancaster includes not only the township but a great village which is sometimes called the dormitory village of the city of Hamilton. A more historic or beautiful village cannot be found in the province. But the people of this area go to Hamilton for all their shopping. They go there to conduct all their business. They go there to attend the sessions of the courts as well as for every matter affecting their daily lives. They do not like being incorporated in the new proposed riding of Brant. They do not have a common background with Brant economically or politically—I do not know about culturally. Certainly they have always looked to Hamilton as the centre of their activities

I turn, now, to the little township of Oakland. Having added the township of Ancaster to the constituency I represent, the commission took away a very small township, the township of Oakland. Oakland is one of the smallest townships, if not the smallest, in the province of Onatrio. The people of Oakland were much incensed about this action on the part of the commission—so much so that they circulated a petition and filed it with the Speaker of the House of Commons. It is here for everyone to see.

There are just over 700 electors in the township and more than 500 of them signed this petition to the Speaker of the House of Commons saying they did not want to be taken from the proposed constituency of Brant and put into the new constituency of Oxford. This little township forms a wedge, a wedge which is not without historical significance. I feel that if nothing else is done the wishes of the population of Oakland should be respected. As far as the constituency is concerned, it does not make much difference where the 700 people vote but it does make a great deal of difference to the residents. I am informed that nearly 100 per cent of the electorate would have signed the petition but it was circulated in a hurry so as to get it before the house quickly and it did not reach everyone. Still, more than 75 per cent of the people in Oakland did sign it. In these circumstances, as the member of parliament representing this area at the moment, I feel it is only my duty to make whatever representations I can on behalf of these people.

The inhabitants of Oakland reside within six miles of the centre of Brantford. They go to Brantford for all their business. They go into Brantford for meetings—public meetings and meetings of organized groups. They take part in the affairs of Brant county. They go into the courthouse of Brant county—the county courthouse is situated in the middle of the city of Brantford. Now they have to look to the city of Woodstock and I am told by these people that they do not go to Woodstock for anything. They are asked to select a member of parliament to represent them in the House of Commons from an area dominated largely by the great county of Oxford. They feel they will in some way be cast out—that they will no longer enjoy the kind of representation they have had in this house in the past.

I wish to say a word, now, about one other township, a much larger township with over 2,700 qualified electors, which under this redistribution has also been assigned to Oxford. I am speaking of Burford, and the same feeling exists in Burford as exists in Oakland. These people go to Brantford for everything connected with their business. Ever since 1852 when Brant county was set up, a little later than the other counties, the residents of Burford have gone to Brantford on all their business.

Brant county does seem to form a cohesive unit, I must say. The people of Burford feel that separated from the county with which they have always been associated they are not likely to be represented as effectively, as a unit, as they have in the past. I should like the commissioners to take account of this feeling and act accordingly. I believe they will do so because this commission has, on the whole, done a very good job considering the task placed before it. Some of these decisions do affect my constituents.

I have no quarrel with the name which has been selected—the name "Brant". In the absence of that name even the people who at the present time compose the electors of my constituency would feel they had been cut off completely. They feel at home with the great name of Brant, so I shall not complain about that decision. I am not complaining about everything the commission has done. I want to commend the commissioners on having put into my present constituency the township of South Dumfries, a great township. The residents come to Brantford for everything. This brought into the new riding the town of Paris, a beautiful town, and this too was a commendable decision.

This is the way it had been in the first proposed division. In their first proposed set-up of the new constituency the commission had put Paris in Wellington county to be represented in this house. It has been changed. This new change is far better for the people of Paris and far better for the people of South Dumfries. That was done because those people attended before the commission and were able to have the change made, so that they will come in the new riding of Brant where they should be and where they might be expected to be.

I am only going to say in review, Mr. Speaker, that I feel the commission should pay special attention to the four points I have mentioned. I believe on reconsideration and upon looking at the work the commission did in revamping the provincial boundaries, they will see that it is probably better to leave in the new riding of Brant those units which always have been around, and have revolved around, the centre of the city of Brantford over the years. If Ancaster township were taken off and Burford and Oakland put back on along with South Dumfries, as the commission has rightly done, I believe that would be a good constituency, together with Onondaga.

If it cannot be worked out in any other way by the commission and if Ancaster cannot be put any other place, I will be glad to accept it, but I do not want to see Burford and Oakland taken off. In the new proposed constituency I would have the largest constituency in the province of Ontario; I do not object to that. I would be sort of proud to think I represented so many people, provided I was elected.

I feel I have put on record my few objections and I would seriously like to have the commission consider them very carefully, in the hope that perhaps a better drafting can be made of a new constituency there—because there has to be one—we all know that. I should like to put on record one other little point. It has been suggested to me and also suggested unofficially recently to members of the commission that Ancaster township be split at the Shaver's side road, to which I have no objection, and that the village of Ancaster and that part which lies immediately beside the city of Hamilton be incorporated into one of the ridings in Wentworth. Then the rest could quite readily be assimilated into Brant county. But that is a matter I would leave to the discretion of the commission in its wisdom.

I have given my opinion in respect of these proposed changes. I have been fair, I hope, and I wish to make one thing clear: there are no politics whatsoever involved in the remarks I have made. It does not make any difference to me. I am only too glad to represent that whole new area; but it is the people themselves who are dissatisfied, and I think their feelings should be brought forward. Personally it makes no difference to me. The Brantford Expositor had an editorial criticizing all the members who wanted these changes made and said that an independent commission had given its views, and that now they wanted to bring it back into politics. I do not want it brought back into politics. I want a fair, impartial finding made, and I believe the commission will do that, upon considering all the facts and circumstances.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for me to ascertain whether the applause is approbation for my standing to participate in the speeches or because my constituency is disappearing. Unlike the previous speaker, who says he does not mind the great area being added to his constituency, I am one of those who will have nothing left to represent as such.

Mr. Speaker, I think the way we are proceeding now is a wise one, provided the commissioners will pay attention to the words spoken by the members in this house. The reason I bring this forward is simply this, that I do not believe we can justifiably deal with the implications of redistribution without considering the political aspirations and the other points which have been raised in this regard. Therefore, as some hon. members have mentioned, to keep it on an independent basis and in the hands of an independent commission outside the House of Commons, I think it would be only fair that the representations being put forward here on behalf of the different constituencies and provinces be given some attention, so that in the final analysis all the words spoken here in this unusual type of debate would not be redundant.

I would hope that the members of the commissions have sufficient cognizance of the political abilities of the people in the House of Commons to give a fair and sympathetic hearing to the changes which have been requested, and act accordingly. To begin with, let me refer back to a few of the hopes that were set forth at the time the measure was introduced in the House of Commons. I wish to refer to the words of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) who, in speaking on March 10 had this do say, as reported at page 739 of Hansard:

> The second principle was that in doing this we should not abdicate the final responsibility which is imposed upon this parliament, and we would have to find some means of making sure that we did not just turn this matter over to a commission without any final power in parliament at least to object if any palpable and obvious errors seemed by the majority to have been made.

This is in support of my opening remarks, and again I only make the plea that the commissioners heed the words of those who have spoken. At a later time he went on to say:

> We will welcome improvements from any quarter of the house.

This is at page 743 of Hansard. He was quoting at that time from a previous Hansard. I will refer to another objective:

> That such commission in so doing shall consider the distribution of population according to the then latest census of Canada and the public interest and convenience—

I shall have some remarks on that in a few moments.

> —and shall particularly have regard so far as practicable to the boundaries of the counties, municipalities and cities.

I think it has been pointed out by my colleague the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) that in many cases this has not been given proper attention. I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the interests of the public and their convenience, as has been pointed out in my specific petition, has not been given proper consideration. At a previous time in this debate Mr. Moreau, the former member for York-Scarborough was very critical of a contribution I made and referred to my remarks as being associated with rural tyranny so far as constituencies such as his are concerned.

I want it very clearly understood that I do not object to the commission or to redistribution. I do not object to what has happened to my riding. I do object, however, to the method used by the commission as indicated by the proposed map of constituencies in southern Ontario. I must add at this point that my objections are based on an interest for the people of Ontario whom I represent. First, they have not been properly served. Second, the centres of population and natural lines of communication have been disregarded. Third, traditional boundaries have been ignored. Fourth, in consideration of the counties of Grey and Bruce, plus some adjacent territory, they might have been divided into two contiguous constituencies, having similar interests. Therefore, the lines have been improperly drawn. Fifth, there is little or no similarity between the new boundaries and the boundaries being considered for provincial redistribution.

Mr. Speaker, I have been supported in these objections by the words of one of the ministers who spoke prior to the printing of these principal objections. If my words at this time are true, it would seem to me that the commission has a serious responsibility to take another look at the proposed map. None of us has any right to make amendments or do anything but make suggestions. We must therefore depend upon the integrity of the commissioners to deal with the situation accordingly.

The speaker preceding me made some reference to the city of Paris. I have in my hands a copy of The Ayr News dated Thursday, June 24, 1965 in which there is a prediction of what they expect will happen in Paris. Things apparently turned out differently. For the sake of the people of that area I hope things worked out well, because it states here that the people of this particular area do not like to be divided.

It seems, according to some comments that have been made today, that we have become too sophisticated to use words like "gerrymandering" or "hiving". In order to describe what has happened we use the word "redistribution". Perhaps that is an appropriate way of describing the system or method used to eliminate the riding I have the honour to represent. I have often wondered, since the proposed maps were produced, whether it is a mere coincidence that my colleague, the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Noble) and my colleague, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Loney) and myself happen to find ourselves now in one proposed new constituency. It seems to me that the line is very narrow in respect of two cases for anyone to believe that this is a matter of coincidence.

My colleague, the hon. member for Grey North and myself have done a substantial amount of research regarding the constituencies we now represent and which are about to disappear, unless further consideration is given to the proposed changes. When the preliminary maps were drawn the commissioner invited me to view them. That map was exactly as the map now before us. With my knowledge of the political and constituency structure of Ontario I thought the work regarding the southern part of the province was reasonable.

It was my belief then that the lines, running north and south in the heavily populated areas, created the kind of division which would allow necessary flexibility for the future, in view of expanding population. I suggested to the commissioner at that time that the lines in the northern part of southern Ontario should run east and west, and I impressed upon him my reasons for that suggestion. Apparently my words had no effect because the map now before us is exactly the same as the preliminary one I had the opportunity of seeing.

At the present time the population in my constituency is 36,883. This is quite low, but there are constituencies with smaller populations. I pointed out my political philosophic thinking to the commissioner, and in this regard I should like to agree with the remarks of the preceding speaker when he said that he was speaking in the interests of the people of this area. I have always conducted my political life on that basis and will continue to do so in the future.

I suggest that the new lines for my riding and the riding of Grey North, as well as the ridings south and east of this area, be drawn in an east-west direction. This would create a tremendous advantage and provide flexibility for future expansion. By doing so we would create a constituency with a population of 66,967 with a division approximately midway in the counties of Grey and Bruce in an east-west direction. This would include very few townships, towns and villages which are not now included but it would create two constituencies exactly similar, in that they have the same type of people, growth and prospects.

As the hon. member for Grey North pointed out, the proposed constituency would have two centres of population at opposite ends, made up of people with varying interests. The flow of the people in both communities would cross two constituencies, making it very difficult for any representative to do a good job.

In my own constituency one centre of the population is in the southeast corner. Obviously the flow of these people is toward or into the city of Owen Sound. At this particular time a provincial redistribution map is drawn in such a way that it takes this fact into account. That is not so regarding the proposed lines for the federal constituency.

I think the proposed map is unfair in another respect. Since this government has taken office many things have been inequitable. The hon. member for Grey North found it possible to thank the government for establishing part of his constituency as a designated area. Everyone understood that this was the Georgian bay economic area. I should point out that it is the southern area of the constituency that is more in need, but that that area has been left out of the designated area. This kind of thing will happen more often and result in more confusion, particularly if the government is not aware of the existing boundaries.

Again let me emphasize that I am not objecting in any way because a member will have to serve a larger area with a greater population; but let me suggest that members representing urban ridings find their jobs much easier than those representing rural ridings, because government offices and services are always available to them, whereas they are not as assessible in rural areas. A member representing a rural area must perform a greater degree of personal service for his constituents than does a member representing an urban riding. This has been verified by the remarks of hon. members on both sides of the house.

I say that the lines as now drawn will make it very, very difficult for rural members to carry out their responsibilities and are not at all consistent with the best interests of the people. If the best interests of the people had been considered I believe that the lines for the northern, heavily populated areas of southern Ontario would have run east and west, as I have suggested, rather than being in the jumbled pattern that is now before us. I have only to think of the constituency of my hon. friend from Cochrane to realize what a terrible mess can be made in this regard and how completely unreasonable the boundaries of one riding can be. I do not even have to refer to my own constituency to prove this point.

Reference has been made to the words of wisdom contained in the brief presented by Mr. Inrig to the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario. I believe that parts of this brief should be placed on the record of the house for the information of hon. members and the commission, who will then have it before them for their consideration of the suggestions placed before the house. Mr. George F. W. Inrig of Lindsay, Ontario, deserves commendation for the amount of work and effort he put into this brief, which contains many valuable suggestions which I believe could be used by the commission in its subsequent days of consideration. The brief says in part:

> The organization of political parties and the participation of the political party in the democratic process requires a consistent geographical unit within which to function.

This is one of my basic arguments against what has been done with the counties of Grey and Bruce. The brief continues:

> The alteration of electoral district boundaries should be kept at a minimum.

Not only have they not been kept at a minimum but they have been changed so as to cause confusion for political organization, regardless of the party to which a member belongs. The brief then says:

> It is, therefore, desirable that, whenever possible, the alteration of electoral district boundaries should be made only after taking into consideration the community of interest of the residents and the location of the population centres within the geographical unit—

Again, Mr. Speaker, this is the type of objection I have taken and I do not believe the commissioners applied this thinking when considering southwestern Ontario. Mr. Inrig goes on to say:

> Regardless of population, the urban representative can service his constituency with greater ease than the rural representative who must cover wide territories. This is not equality of representation.

Again this is in support of my statement with regard to government services, which are found in urban areas and certainly not in rural areas where the member must himself carry on these services. The brief also states:

> Redistribution, as it has been proposed by this commission, should it occur every 10 years, would mean the end of political organization in this province.

With the population as it is in Canada today, and with the reasonable understanding that I think all of us have, namely that what Canada needs more than anything else is people, I believe that if we have the ability to organize, assimilate, absorb people and create jobs quickly enough, it would not be impossible for us soon to absorb 20 million or 30 million people for the benefit of our economic future. However, I believe that the commission has not been looking into the future. Then the brief says:

> It is not suggested that this redistribution is not necessary, but it is submitted that redistribution of this magnitude occurring every 10 years would be a serious detriment to political organization.

I believe a great many of us would be prepared to agree with that statement. As I said, this is a valuable brief and one which I think agrees with the thinking of most members. I am glad to be able to place these remarks on the record for the consideration of the commission.

On an earlier occasion when I participated in the debate on this matter I was widely criticized by the press. I have here a letter to the Globe and Mail criticizing me for making these remarks because I represent in parliament such a small number of people. As I have said, other constituencies are smaller than mine. I was also criticized for wailing about gerrymandering. I do not think I used the word "gerrymander" at that time but, as I said earlier, I sometimes wonder whether it was a coincidence that this situation has developed. In the lifetime of parliament this situation does not, of course, happen very often. Sometimes I think that had my predecessor still been in office, some other means would possibly have been found to deal with this situation.

We do not put these matters before the commission simply for the sake of argument. My colleague from Grey North used the editorial comment of radio station CFOS to bear out his point. I agree completely with him. Apparently this was the consensus at the time and remains so today. I believe the lines on this map have been poorly drawn with regard to southwestern Ontario. Consideration should be given to their being changed in order that in the future the best type of service may be obtained for constituents by members elected to the house. This service cannot be provided with the boundaries drawn as they are in this map, in which you have people from the tip of the Bruce peninsula coming down to the southeast corner of Grey county. From the central, northern part of Grey county the lines run down almost into the city of Waterloo. There is no community of interest whatsoever there. There is no community of interest on the other side. There is no community of interest for the people in the riding of my colleague from Grey North. The suggestions I have placed on record will make no difference to me politically, as I explained to the commissioner, but surely the advice and suggestions of members of this house deserve consideration by the commission, because they are fair, sensible and equitable.

Mr. Keith Hymmen (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak very briefly on this matter as it affects Ontario ridings. My remarks will be similar to those of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), because I do not wish to go into detail and shall make just two general points. My remarks will have reference to the twin counties of Waterloo North and Waterloo South.

A name has been mentioned in the house this evening, that of one of our great prime ministers, and I would remind hon. members that the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King was born in the riding of Waterloo North and first served as a member of that riding.

The point I wish to make was mentioned earlier by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell). I have no objection to the idea of an independent commission dealing with the question of redistribution, provided that the proper criteria were used by them and arbitrary decisions were not made. The hon. member for Carleton mentioned population growth. I think we all know of the tremendous growth of our urban areas. The growth of population in the two cities in my riding is 4 per cent annually, and their boundaries are not fixed. As the commissioners well know, but for the benefit of hon. members of the house, I would point out that under redistribution the two ridings of Waterloo North and Waterloo South are joined together. Both are in what I consider to be one of the finest counties of Ontario, but the people of the north have a little different background from the people of the south.

Out of the centre of this combination is formed the new urban riding of the city of Kitchener, what I call the hole in the doughnut. With all respect to independent commissions, I may say that since I have been in this place I have found it is impossible to talk to an independent commission. I am wondering whether, in determining this new configuration, the growth potential of this urban municipality was taken into consideration. As I am very well aware, and as our rural neighbours are aware, it is possible that within a few years the city of Kitchener will reach out to the boundaries of the county and the new riding of Waterloo will be cut in half.

When the riding of Waterloo South was joined with Waterloo North to form the new riding of Waterloo, the town of Elmira and a rural area which for years has been associated economically and socially with the twin cities of Kitchener and Waterloo were cut off. I believe that this area will be joined to the riding to the north. In so far as an independent commission is concerned, I can say that if this redistribution had been in the hands of parliamentary committee many members could give a very sympathetic hearing to these many problems. If a job has to be done, then you certainly have to take the ultimate objective into consideration and some things have to be changed.

The other point I wish to make is one that probably affects other Ontario ridings. The federal redistribution took place concurrently with provincial redistribution. I feel that there might have been closer liaison and some different decisions made. When the two ridings of Waterloo were changed to form two new ridings in the area, we found that we had four new ridings, two provincial and two federal. This in itself, causes more confusion. We now have four organizations for the various political parties. Again I say that this job could have been done a little better. I certainly hope that in registering my objection, not a strong objection, the commission will take these matters into consideration.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria (Ont.)): At this point, Mr. Speaker, I do not complain about my riding being too small, but rather I complain about its being too large under the proposed redistribution. I feel that in a democratic state the role of a political party is in the selection, promotion and election of candidates for public office; in assisting the elected representatives in the solicitation, assessment and qualification of opinion and in the discrimination of policy. It is through the means of the political party that peaceful change in government can occur.

In order to be effective, political parties must be highly organized. They cannot operate as loosely knit associations but must be united, disciplined organizations reaching every segment of the community and representing the main interests of society. The establishment of poll, ward and township organizations is tempered, if not destroyed, by the continuous alteration of electoral boundaries. Although it may be true that permanent establishment of electoral boundaries is not possible, alterations should be kept to a minimum.

One factor in political organizations is that the participation of the citizen in political activities is affected by the interest of the individual in and the accessibility of the individual to the major population centre of the geographical unit. In other words, a citizen will be a participant in political organization if he resides within the sphere of the community of interest of the political unit. It is therefore desirable that wherever possible the alteration of electoral district boundaries should be made only after taking into consideration the community of interest of the residents and the location of the population centres within the geographical unit. This is necessary if an effort is to be made to encourage citizens to become involved in political activity.

It is submitted that it is the duty of a citizen in a democratic state to become involved in politics because it is only through an active, interested, informed participating electorate that democratic government can succeed. The elected representative, whether he be a member of the House of Commons or a member of a provincial legislature, not only represents people as individuals within his electoral district but he also represents the geographical unit, the social, cultural, economic and many other interests within his electoral district. It is submitted that it is as important that the elected representative be physically able to represent his geographical unit, as it is that the people within the various geographical units have numerically equal representation.

Although those citizens residing within the heavily populated areas of our nation demand redistribution to establish numerically equal representation, the citizens residing in the less densely populated areas are entitled also to equal representation. We do not mean, in this context, numerical equality but rather equality of service which is dependant upon the ease and accessibility with which the elected representative can communicate with his electorate. The urban resident may believe he is under-represented because there is a greater population in the urban constituency than in the rural constituency. The rural resident may believe he is under-represented because the urban constituency is composed of a dozen city blocks, while the rural constituency is composed of 50 or more townships. Regardless of population, the urban representative can service his constituency with greater ease than the rural representative who must cover wide territories. This is not equality of representation.

[Mr. Scott (Victoria, Ont.).]

It is, therefore, desirable that in establishing the electoral district boundaries, not only should numerical factors be taken into consideration, but geographical factors must be considered to enable the elected representative effectively to represent his constituency and to encourage the citizens to become involved in political activity.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Directing attention to the areas affected by the proposed electoral district of Victoria-Haliburton, it will be seen that the counties of Ontario, Victoria, Haliburton, Peterborough, Hastings, Renfrew and Nipissing are involved. The proposal of the commission is to establish the riding of Victoria-Haliburton, comprising the county of Victoria, the provincial county of Haliburton, three townships from the county of Ontario, eight townships from the county of Peterborough, six townships from the county of Hastings, five townships from the county of Nipissing and three townships from the county of Renfrew.

This proposal removes the township of Brock from the existing electoral district of Victoria and adds 22 new townships to the existing riding. The proposed riding will consist of 60 townships, the town of Lindsay, the villages of Havelock, Fenelon Falls, Bobcaygeon, Beaverton, Woodville, Minden, Haliburton, Omemee, Barrys Bay, and many other smaller hamlets. It can be said that the population centres of the proposed riding will be centred around Lindsay, Havelock and Barrys Bay.

The township of Brock is within the sphere of the community of interest formed by the four northern townships of the county of Ontario, namely Rama, Mara, Thora and Brock. These four townships have been politically connected for a long time with the present electoral district of Victoria. I find that the residents of Brock township have strong social and economic ties with the Lindsay area as well as with the people in the three adjoining townships to the north. Their political affiliations have been for a long time very closely connected with the existing Victoria riding. If they are forced to change their political organization, the result will be that the citizens of the township of Brock will have little interest in participating in political activities. Therefore I suggest that the township of Brock be included in the proposed riding of Victoria-Haliburton.

The proposed riding of Victoria-Haliburton is geographically too large, although it is not numerically large. The electors of this area would be under-represented if one member of parliament were expected to cover this territory. It is acknowledged that there are ridings to the north of this riding which may be geographically larger, but the problem of representing these ridings is not as great, as the population is centred along waterways and rail lines. In the proposed riding of Victoria-Haliburton three major population centres exist, namely Lindsay, which will be the political centre of the riding, Havelock and Barrys Bay. As well, there are other population centres such as Beaverton and Haliburton.

Although the major population centre of the riding, Lindsay, is situated in the southwestern corner of the proposed riding, Barrys Bay is situated in the northeastern corner of the new riding and lies some 100 miles as the crow flies from Lindsay. By road the distance is approximately 140 miles.

A former representative of Victoria riding, Sir Sam Hughes, is reported to have told reporters that if he drove as far south from Lindsay as it was necessary for him to drive north to reach the farthest extent of his riding, he would end up in New York state. The representative of the new riding of Victoria-Halliburton could claim to end up in Lake Erie, if not in Ohio, should he drive as far southwesterly from Lindsay as it will be necessary for him to drive northeasterly to reach the farthest extent of his new riding.

The village of Barrys Bay, and the three townships taken from the county of Renfrew, Burns, Jones and Sherwood, as well as the five townships of the county of Nipissing, that is, Airy, Murchison, Dickens, Sabine and Lyell, have no community of interest with Lindsay nor with the other areas of the Pembroke-Renfrew community. The road system leads to Pembroke and Renfrew. To associate with the other areas of Victoria-Haliburton, the residents of this area would have to pass through either the new riding of Hastings or through the new riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka.

There is absolutely no connection, community of interest, or common bond between this northeastern area and the rest of the proposed riding of Victoria-Haliburton. It is submitted that this area should be united with the ridings to the north or to the east.

By adding the township of Brock, whose political ties have been with the people of Victoria-Haliburton riding, to the proposed riding of Victoria-Haliburton would more than compensate for the population loss of the eight northeastern townships, whose political affiliations have never been with the Victoria-Haliburton constituency.

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take part in this debate for a short period of time. My argument is much narrower than that advanced by other hon. members. I have one contention only which I want to make and to pass through you, Mr. Speaker, back to the commissioners. It is a submission which I think they will entertain and deal with in a kindly manner.

My representation is for the retention of the name of High Park for that substantial part of the riding which has been taken into the new riding of Humber Valley. In this connection may I say that High Park was created a riding in 1924. Since that time there have been 13 general elections, and I have been involved in every one of them, nine times as a candidate and at other times as official agent, returning officer, and so forth. I have also lived in the riding for the better part of my life, so that you can see, Mr. Speaker, it really does mean something to me personally to see the name of High Park retained.

Apropos of that, may I place on the record a representation which I received from a number of persons in the present riding of High Park. It reads as follows:

> At a duly constituted meeting of the special committee to look into the proposed redistribuion of the boundaries of the federal riding of High Park which took place on February 23, 1966; and after a thorough discussion re same it was unanimously resolved:
> Whereas the new redistribution of federal ridings has proposed to incorporate certain sections of the High Park federal riding into the ridings of Davenport, Parkdale and Humber Valley, and thereby eradicating the present riding of High Park;

May I observe, in passing, that I do not agree with what was said by my hon. friend from Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler), because I will still be living in the riding, and if at that particular time I do have any political aspirations I am sure I can find a very comfortable home in any one of the three parts into which my riding has been divided. I am sure the same thing will apply to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

After that interpolation may I resume my reading of this resolution.

And whereas our association deems it in the best interest of the residents in this area to retain the symbolic name of High Park which includes in this area High Park, being synonymous with open spaces for leisure, flowers and gardens, etc., which has greatly enhanced the character and tranquil beauty of our city of Toronto.

• (8:40 p.m.)

And whereas since the re-distribution was based on 1961 population figures it is now obvious due to high rise developments in the High Park area that there shall be a much greater concentrated population therein than was initially anticipated.

And whereas for the reasons above stated the provincial committee on redistribution has found it advisable to retain most of the present provincial boundaries of High Park.

And whereas a greater portion of Humber Valley comprises the old riding of High Park; our committee strongly recommends that the name of High Park be retained as a federal riding constituency for the proposed riding redistribution.

May I say, as a contestant in nine elections, as one who has practised law in that riding for many years, and as one who is very well acquainted with the population of the riding, that I am sure I speak on behalf of all persons in the riding when I say that they want to retain the name of High Park.

At the present time the riding consists of 160 polls. Up until the last election it had 162 polls. Owing to the fact that the east-west subway cut through that riding, there was a considerable diminution of homes, and the returning officer in her wisdom reduced the number of polls.

There are 23 pools in Parkdale which belonged to the riding and which quite legitimately have been added to what is now called the riding of High Park and which has been renamed by the commission "Parkdale".

Fifty eight polls have gone into the riding of Davenport, which is proper and legitimate. The name "Davenport" is the proper name for that riding. I say that because Parkdale was a small community which was built up on the outskirts of York, and then Toronto, and Davenport was another small community which was built up on the outskirts of Toronto, and became part of Toronto but retained that cohesive quality of having been a former municipality.

I had an opportunity of writing to the commission when the first report was filed. I appreciated the position of my hon. friend from Parkdale when he found that his riding was called "High Park". The commission retained the name in that respect.

I was equally surprised when I found what is now Davenport had been called Parkdale, because there was no historic association between Parkdale and Davenport any more than there was between Parkdale and High Park. High park, and I am now speaking of the park, was incorporated in High Park riding during the time of its inception. No harm will be done if it is taken back. It has been put into Parkdale. I am going to suggest to the commission that it be taken back into the riding which I think they should call High Park. There are approximately three voters in that particular park.

Then, the commissioners in their wisdom have included eight polling subdivisions in an area encompassed by a line running westerly along Bloor street south to Humberside avenue and over to Quebec avenue. The commissioners will know what I mean when they refer to their maps.

I am suggesting that they exchange those eight polling subdivisions and take in lieu several polling subdivisions, which would give them a line on Bloor street to the east and west running along the line of the Canadian Pacific tracks and lying east of Pacific avenue. In that way they would be able to retain the division of the population, and the basic numbers that they have arrived at. That appears to be very fair and very reasonable.

High park itself is a great national park, fully the equal of Stanley park in British Columbia, and is one of the great parks in Canada and one of the breathing spots of the citizens of Toronto. To lose such a symbolic name now appears to me to be tragic.

As I mentioned earlier, I had the opportunity of appearing before the commission. I had written to them on behalf of my hon. friend, the member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), suggesting that the name of "High Park" was inappropriate for that riding. I had also written to the commission about the renaming of Davenport as "Parkdale". Unfortunately I made no representations myself at that time about the name of High Park, intending to appear before the commission to express my views. On September 30 I found myself unavoidably otherwise engaged and therefore I was unable to be present. You can imagine my surprise, Mr. Speaker, when I got the final report and found that the name "High Park" had disappeared completely from the map.

While the name "Humber River" is a very important and a very historic name, because the Humber river was the gateway to Georgian bay in the north, the gateway of the Huron Indians, the pathway followed by Brulé, Champlain and others, and is a name that I honour, I am sure that the people who live in the area, and I expect the commissioners are not unmindful of this, would not object to the name of their riding being changed to "High Park-Humber Valley". You will notice that I put High Park first. The name should be High Park. If the people living along the river or near it wish to bring in Humber Valley, we shall be glad and happy to have that added to our name.

That, Mr. Speaker. is my representation. My riding, like Gaul, has been divided into three parts. Having been associated with it in 13 elections I have established many contacts and I have a great many friends. No matter what you do there is bound to be a separation of the community of interest which has been developed over 42 years. But whatever the riding is, the riding of High Park has within its boundaries some of the finest citizens of Canada.

So far as any political aspirations of mine in the future are concerned, I can say that any one of these ridings would be a place I should be honoured to represent. At the present time I want to represent to the best of my ability the people of High Park riding, whom I regard as being among the finest citizens of the Dominion of Canada.

Mrs. Jean Wadds (Grenville-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, as most hon. members of this house, I rise in this debate to speak with mixed feelings. As other hon. members who have mentioned this, I agree that this debate should be as non-political as possible, but only non-political to the extent that political advantage should not be taken of geographic rearranging for specific political purposes. I do think that it should be political, however, for the purpose of maintaining political activity and political enthusiasm in certain parts of the country.

We in Grenville-Dundas have known that with redistribution there would be definite changes in the old riding as it has been constituted for many years. We knew that we had three ways to expand, being on the St. Lawrence river and bordering the United States. We knew that the expansion would go east, north, or west.

Our main interest and concern from the beginning was that the old riding nucleus and base would be used, if possible, for the base of expansion. We felt that the interest and activity in the political world for which Grenville-Dundas has long been famous might thereby extend into an equally enthusiastic and active, if larger, riding, whatever its geographical area might be. We recognized that it was necessary for some of the very large ridings to be made smaller because of the impossibility of properly representing so many constituents. At the same time it was apparent that smaller ridings such as Grenville-Dundas, where everyone knew everyone else, at least by family name, would have to be enlarged. We hoped that a close knowledge of and interest in the political scene would be encouraged within the larger unity. Representations have already been made to the commission regarding the division of the old established county of Dundas. The people there feel very strongly about the separation of two of its townships from two other townships.

Having looked carefully over the population figures of eastern Ontario I believe this complaint could be met if there were a slight rearrangement. It is possible that during this debate some other arrangement might be outlined and that this, too, would prove acceptable. But in looking over the population averages of the eastern Ontario ridings I find these range between roughly 55,000 and 81,000. Glengarry-Prescott, Leeds, Grenville-Carleton and Stormont all have a population in the area of 60,000. If a township such as Cumberland, which is largely rural and which has a population of just over 6,000 were taken from the proposed Ottawa-Carleton riding of more than 74,000, this would still leave the mainly urban Ottawa-Carleton constituency with over 68,000, well within the general average. If Cumberland were added to Glengarry-Prescott instead of Russell and Cambridge, which together have a population slightly over 6,000, this would leave the riding of Glengarry-Prescott almost exactly as it is now, that is, around 62,000. If Russell and Cambridge townships directly adjoining Stormont county on the north were added to Stormont it would leave Stormont with about 64,000, still within the average of the eastern Ontario units.

With Winchester remaining part of Dundas county this would still leave Grenville-Carleton with a little over 74,000, within the general average of the new population figures.

In making these representations I am not speaking for myself. I am representing many people and many families who have taken part in Canadian politics for generations. They wish to be fair, and in all the conversations I have had on the subject they have expressed this wish. I believe it is fair to ask that in the course of this necessary process of redistribution Dundas county should remain unbroken in whatever unit it joins. As I have said, there may be other arrangements which would achieve this end and I am sure that with continued good will and effort there can be compromise among the various opinions expressed during this debate. I trust the commission will take into account the detailed knowledge which most members of parliament have of their ridings and of the relationships involved.

I am sure the interests of Dundas county would be better served if the old Grenville-Dundas riding were used as a basis for future expansion. In this way the splendid and active interest which the area has always taken in politics will continue. It would seem to me that when minor changes can be made on the grounds of a homogeneity of interest this proposal should be given sympathetic consideration. I hope some of the community groupings outlined in this debate will be accepted by the commission. In this way I feel improvements can be made in the good work which has already been done with a difficult and complicated assignment.

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton): I intend to speak in this debate only briefly in order to bring to the attention of the commission some of the problems arising from the changes suggested. The riding I have the honour to represent will be divided, and there will be two ridings in the area. This reflects the changes in population we have seen in southern Ontario, particularly in the Toronto and Hamilton areas, and is an indication of the industrial and residential growth of the region.

One of the main problems arising in connection with redistribution in Ontario is the confusion which arises between the provincial and the federal changes in the distribution of seats. As every member here is aware, this is inevitable unless the number of seats in the Ontario legislature and the number of seats in this place held by representatives from the province of Ontario become equal at some time.

The riding I represent has been divided in half. One of these halves was again divided into two parts, one of which will, virtually, become a riding in its own right; the other will become the riding of Wellington. I should like to refer in this connection to the township of Nassagaweya which did make representations to the electoral commission, though these representations were not reflected in the changes we now see before us. Like other members of this house I feel the commission appears not to have given consideration to the economic and geographical ties which exist in various areas. The town of Burlington which is to be in the new riding of Halton-Wentworth is closely linked with the township I have mentioned, Nassagaweya. The highways run north and south, and directly connect these two towns. The growth of the town of Burlington is toward Nassagaweya township. The people of Nassagaweya have shopped, farmed and grown up in this area and they wish to remain part of this area for all purposes.

As far as population figures are concerned, any change made to bring the township of Nassagaweya into the new riding would not be significant. The population of Burlington is approximately 50,000. Bringing in the township of Nassagaweya would perhaps add 2,500 people and 1,200 or 1,300 voters. I would therefore hope that the electoral boundaries commission would again consider, as it has promised to do in the past, bringing the township of Nassagaweya into this constituency in keeping with its growth, its history and its commercial habits, and keeping it tied closely with the town of Burlington.

Mr. Heber E. Smith (Simcoe North): I am sure it has been said before during this debate that no member has a vested interest in the part of Canada he represents in this house. While speaking tonight I shall try to express the feelings of the people of Simcoe county, as I have gathered them from many discussions since redistribution was first announced.

We knew there had to be redistribution. We knew that changes would have to be made and that some ridings would have to be made larger. But we in Simcoe county did not think this would be done in the way in which it has been done in our part of Canada.

The objections which people in Simcoe county have are that the commission ignored population trends. They have made rural ridings so large that even now, before the ridings come into being, they are over what will be the population maximum in the redistribution which is only five years or perhaps less than five years away.

Most of all, in Simcoe county we feel that the redistribution commission has ignored completely community interest. They have splintered parts of Simcoe county into ridings in which the people have no community of interest whatsoever. In addition to that they have ignored geographical features. All of these are things which, as expressed in the act, should be taken into consideration. They have ignored the geographic section of Georgian bay and have joined together municipalities on the extreme west side of the bay with those on the east side of the bay; and yet they do not seem to have realized there is no connecting transportation link between them. They have ignored ethnic groupings. In the north part of our county we have an ethnic grouping of a township and a town. This is a very long standing grouping, and yet the commission has seen fit in its wisdom to divide these into two ridings.

To be specific, I should like to say something about the shape and size of Simcoe. It is a county bordering on Georgian bay. It is bounded by the waters of Georgian bay on the north and west and then by bodies of water like lake Simcoe and lake Couchiching on the east. Generally speaking the only land connection with the rest of Ontario is to the south. Simcoe county too has an interesting population. For electoral purposes in 1961 it had a population of about 143,000, almost an ideal figure for two rural ridings. As a matter of fact, in a brief presented by the county council of the county of Simcoe in respect of dividing the riding into a south and a north division, it was indicated that a good division could be made with 68,000 in the north riding and some 73,000 population in the south.

The county within these general geographical limits is divided into five community groups. Barrie is the largest community, a city of 24,000, right in the centre of the county. Orillia is another community group in the north, and in addition there are Midland, Penetang and Alliston. There always has been a great deal of county pride and county cohesion. Having regard to the good grouping, the many people in the county and the many officials, elected and otherwise, were astounded to find that instead of dividing Simcoe county into two good sized ridings, what happened was that in the northeast we have one very large riding which has a population of some 83,000 already, before it is formed into an area, and with the rate of growth it will be over the maximum before the change is made.

The remaining part of the riding was splintered into three other counties with which there is no close grouping at all. For example the municipality of Cresswell which borders on Barrie, which is the chief trading centre of the whole county, is now in a riding whose population centre is in the towns of Aurora and Newmarket. Camp Borden is a large military camp about ten miles out of Barrie. The people at Camp Borden divide their community contacts chiefly between Alliston and Barrie, although Barrie being the larger probably has the greatest contact. The personnel of Camp Borden very substantially look to the local members in that area as their members of parliament even though they do not always vote in the riding. Yet we have Camp Borden being put in a riding whose centre is Brampton. I do not know how many miles away it is, but I know that very few of the people who ever are stationed in Camp Borden have anything to do in or any contact with the town of Brampton. Yet Camp Borden and three municipalities now are in that riding. The same obtains in York North with Innisfil and its municipalities.

On the other side of the riding we have the municipalities of Flos, Christian Islands and Tiny which have no connection and not even a direct highway link with Owen Sound, and they now find themselves in the proposed riding of Grey-Simcoe. Perhaps the young men who drew these maps, and who I suspect drew them without looking at anything except the population, think that communication between Christian Islands and Owen Sound can be by war canoe, because it is about 130 miles by road.

These divisions are bad. They are bad not only from the point of view of community interest, but they are going to be bad for representation, because people are best represented in parliament who have a community of interest and who have some cohesion within the groups. We now find ourselves linked in splinters with the county of North York, the county of Peel and the county of Grey, whereas before we had just Dufferin and Simcoe which were one cohesive political entity. It is true this is not a political division. No one speaks of this in terms of party politics, because in any of the areas concerned I do not think there is any very strong party trend one way or the other. However, in these days when we tend to have people who are disinterested in politics generally, sort of tearing them apart in a community sense I suggest is asking for more disinterest on the part of the people.

Perhaps it will be said, how are you going to do it; if you divide Simcoe county into the north and south what is going to happen to the spillover? I say the Electoral Boundaries Commission made a serious mistake, and that they should have given more consideration to the population trend. They should not have just looked at the 1951 and 1961 census and said, there is the trend. They should look at the trend today. In many instances suburban ridings should have been left toward the low end of the population level as required under the act, because the suburban ridings on the edges of cities are the rapidly growing ridings and are the places which will be affected most by the redistribution. There should have been room allowed for expansion in those ridings and room allowed to shift, because they will have to be changed anyway.

It is quite proper for a riding in the centre of a city to have the maximum population allowed because it will not have to be changed during the next redistribution, but a riding such as North York and the new one named Peel South, which will incorporate a part of Simcoe North and Dufferin counties, should have been left at the lower end of the population scale, because by 1971 they will have grown to such an extent they will have to be divided into two ridings. Had they been left with the lowest possible population they could have been changed in 1961 without the massive dislocation that this redistribution is causing. I think this could and should have been done, and I think that the commission acted in a very arbitrary and shortsighted way in only looking at the population figures for 1951 and 1961, without giving consideration to geographic features, ethnic groupings and other matters of interest.

I do not think any great delay would be occasioned if the commission did give these matters serious reconsideration, and I am sure we would end up with many more Canadians vitally interested and concerned with politics at the riding level. I am sure we would also have ridings designed in a better way.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, it is hard for me to approach this subject tonight in an unemotional and logical fashion when I realize that if redistribution is carried forward as presently planned the riding of Kent as such will disappear. I am certain that those many distinguished gentlemen who have had the honour of representing the county of Kent through the years, could they look over my shoulder tonight and see this new map as placed before us, would feel the same way I feel.

I should like to draw the attention of the commission to the fact that the county of Kent is one of the oldest and most historical in upper Canada. This county has a history which extends back to the year 1615 and we have a comprehensive recorded history of the workings of that county from the year 1626.

In order to be absolutely fair in my consideration of the action that is contemplated I did my best to tour completely through this district and ascertain the feelings of the people in this regard. They felt that if something had to be done it ought to be done. I assured them that I felt the same way, and that in order to have our democratic system progress, as we all wish it to do, following the policy of adequate representation, whenever there was an imbalance the necessary steps should be taken to correct it.

In touring this county I ascertained that the citizens are becoming somewhat impatient. Since the year 1867 the county of Kent has sent a representative to the House of Commons in Canada. When redistribution took place in 1903 the county of Kent was divided into East Kent and West Kent. When redistribution took place in 1914 East and Weat Kent were joined together as the county of Kent. From 1914 to 1965 the representative from that county has represented the entire county. Citizens of that area are now faced once again with a division of their favourite county.

Not only are the citizens faced once more with a division of the county, but they are faced with the disappearance of this designation of Kent as a riding in the province of Ontario. They are shocked and cannot understand why these two parts are to be renamed as Lambton-Kent and Essex, or why Kent is not used as the prefix of one or the other. Certainly if the renaming is justifiable, because of the size of the population, or for alphabetical reasons, it is reasonable that the prefix "Kent" should be used in the designation of one of the new ridings. I support the citizens of the county of Kent in that view.

I wish personally to thank the commission for its early compliance with a representation which asked that the town of Tilbury be included as part of the riding which was formerly the county of Kent. The first map proposed placed the town of Tilbury in the Essex riding. Originally the town of Tilbury was located right on the border between the two counties. Representatives of that county have been of the opinion that since they have always been represented by the member for Kent they should continue to be so represented. I am very pleased, as are the citizens, that the new map has been drawn in such a way that Tilbury will once again fall within that part of the county of Kent.

I have always found the citizens of Kent to be reasonable, and accept with very little objection anything that they deem to be for the benefit of this country of ours, even though perhaps objectionable to themselves. However, at this time they fail to understand the necessity for dividing Kent. They feel that the city of Chatham, which lies almost in the centre of the county itself, and is in every respect the capital of that fair county, should have been considered as the focal point of any new riding created in that area. They feel that because of the development and growth of industry and population in that part of southwestern Ontario lying between lake St. Clair and lake Erie, the provisions set out in the present map will have to be changed when a new census is taken.

The people of that area feel very fortunate in that there is a close association between the cities in southern Ontario, including Sarnia, St. Thomas, Chatham and Windsor. In every case, except in respect of the division of the county of Kent, these cities were used as the focal points of the new ridings. The city of Chatham is located on the boundary line of the new riding of Kent-Essex. Just within the borders are located the towns of Tilbury and Kingsville. These are very fast growing towns. Leamington is also in this county, and it has almost reached the status of a city. It can be clearly seen that once a new census is taken consideration will have to be given as to whether or not these boundary lines will have to be changed again.

As I stated earlier my recommendations to the commission are made in as logical a manner as possible, and not on the basis of my disappointment because of the disappearance of the riding. I have tried to point out what I feel are the justifiable changes in that area. It certainly was a shock to the citizens of the county of Kent when they found that the townships of Dover, Chatham, Orford, Howard and Harwich were added to the county of Lambton, with the city of Chatham being left in the riding of Kent-Essex. The townships of Raleigh, Tilbury East, Romney and Wheatley added the three townships in Essex county to form a new riding. Certainly they felt that the riding as it was before redistribution, with about 71,500 registered voters, was almost ideal and that the boundaries would be left as they were.

I think this in itself was the most striking feature in the news of the new map, so far as the citizens of the area were concerned. They felt that since they did comply in nearly every respect with what might be considered the optimum riding, with the boundaries following very closely county lines, lying between two lakes, Lake St. Clair in the northwest and Lake Erie in the south, and having the city of Chatham at its centre, which is the natural focal point for all business and social life in that particular area, and with the ideal number of 71,500 registered voters, redistribution would not touch them in any respect.

However, Mr. Speaker, they are facing this very philosophically. They feel that if it must come, and if it is for the benefit of the country, they will accept it. But they do request that the commission look once again at this very important matter to see whether the ridings could be drawn in such a way in this part of Ontario so as to mean that Chatham could once again be the central point, which logically one would expect it to be, for the riding. The people of the area also ask that the name Kent county be retained. Failing to do this, may I respectfully request that the commission—and I know their task has been an unpopular and difficult one—give every consideration to the representation made on behalf of the citizens of Kent county that the name Kent, which is so dear to the people in the area, and which has served Canada so well in its history in every respect, be retained at least as the prefix of one of the new ridings.

Mr. J. B. Morison (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to enter this debate, but do so for three reasons. The first reason is that the chairman of the commission said, as reported in the Toronto Star of January 20, 1965, that many of the ridings will have to be redrawn in 1972 when the next federal election is scheduled, and the people who do the job in 1972 will have a difficult time of it again. In view of the electoral boundaries of Halton-Wentworth I believe I may be able to offer an alternative solution which will mean that in 1972 these people will not have such a difficult time.

The second reason is that the electoral boundaries fixed for the provincial riding have already been changed after representation in the provincial house, and I believe that if there were factors influencing the change at that time, they should again be emphasized so that a change may be made in the proposed federal riding of Halton-Wentworth.

Third, the people of Ancaster have shown such concern that I should also like to speak on their behalf for just a minute. I might at this point add that the chairman mentioned that about 200 briefs were placed before the commission last June and about 70 of them were purely formal. The municipality of Ancaster admitted that the brief they placed before the commission at that time was of a purely formal nature. At no time did they have any idea that they would not be included in the Hamilton metro area, so on a false assumption they presented a rather formal brief, which they now realize may have been a mistake.

The terms of reference laid down for the Electoral Boundaries Commission were, of course, to limit the population to 70,000, with a 25 per cent tolerance figure, or a total of 87,000 in any one riding. Further, the commission were to take into consideration existing sociological and geographical connections within the various ridings. It is with regard to the sociological relationship that Ancaster has with the rest of the Hamilton metro area that I should like to speak.

Ancaster is an integral part of the county of Wentworth. They share administered services such as health and welfare, the administration of justice, the Hamilton-Wentworth S burban Roads Commission, the Hamilton-Wentworth Planning Area Board, the Mutual Aid Fire Services Association, the joint county library system and the county assessment system commencing January, 1967, to name only a few.

Those who reside in Ancaster township spend much of their daily life within the confines of Hamilton. Most of these people work in Hamilton, do their shopping in Hamilton, read the Hamilton daily papers, listen to the Hamilton radio stations, watch Hamilton television and go to Hamilton for their entertainment. The tradesmen who call on them come from Hamilton. Those who deliver oil, coal, milk and bread are Hamilton tradesmen. I believe that in future the Ancaster area will be included in the Hamilton area as annexation takes place.

Much as they would like to be kept in the Hamilton area as an integral or single unit, these people understand that because of the population figures in the area this is impossible. At the present time the Brantford riding has approximately 77,500 people; Hamilton-Mountain, 79,200; Halton-Wentworth, 73,100; Hamilton West, 79,700; Hamilton-Wentworth, 71,500; and Wellington, 68,600. The population of Ancaster township is approximately 16,500.

If we accept that it cannot as a township be included in any of the ridings I have mentioned, then let us look for an alternate solution that might carry on into the 1972 realignment of electoral boundaries. The alternate, which as I say is a second choice which might be considered, is as follows: First, by drawing a line from the township's northern boundary, southerly along Binkley's road, then along the line between lots 37 and 38 to the Jerseyville road, continuing southerly along Shaver's side road across highways No. 2 and 53 to Butter's road, and continuing southerly along Penny's road and Moffat road to the southwestern boundary of the township.

You will note that this forms an almost perfectly straight line across the township as a continuation of the dividing line between the federal ridings of Wellington and Halton-Wentworth to the north, and almost connecting to the dividing line between the federal ridings of Brantford and Hamilton-Wentworth to the south.

The population in this western portion of the township so created is estimated at approximately 3,400, and this part would remain in the federal riding of Brantford. The population of the Brantford riding would thereby be reduced to approximately 64,500, leaving them room to negotiate for the inclusion of their western area for which they originally asked. The residents of this part of the township do have at least some affinity with the Brantford area. Some of them work near Brantford, shop in Brantford, read the Brantford newspapers and are on Brantford telephone exchanges, and there is no real dissatisfaction with the fact that they have been included in the Brantford riding.

Second, you take a line drawn from Shaver's sideroad along the new highway 403 right-of-way to the eastern boundary of the township of Ancaster at the Hamilton city limits, and you would further divide the township of federal electoral purposes. The population of the southeastern portion so created is estimated at approximately 3,000. This could be added to the federal riding of Hamilton Mountain. The population of Hamilton Mountain would thus be increased to approximately 82,000, which is still well within the 87,000 maximum permitted.

Highway 403, as proposed, makes a natural and logical boundary line. The township does not anticipate much development south of this highway because of the problems involved in providing municipal services once the highway construction is completed. I understand that there have been negotiations or it is expected this will be the first area of Ancaster township expropriated by Hamilton.

The population of the remaining northeastern portion of the township is estimated at approximately 10,000 people. This could be added to the federal riding of Halton-Wentworth. The population of Halton-Wentworth would thus be increased to approximately 83,000, which is also within the 87,000 maximum permitted.

This part of the township includes all of the primary development area, and the problems and the way of life here are very similar to the problems and way of life of the people of Dundas and Burlington, who are already included in the Hamilton-Wentworth riding. Our sociological and geographical ties with those areas, as well as with the city of Hamilton, would be maintained and protected.

The people of Ancaster are now part of a federal riding which is made up of these and other suburban areas. There is no objection or discontent. They will not lose their affinity with the city of Hamilton. They will remain represented by a member of parliament from the Hamilton area which, of course, they feel is of paramount importance.

I believe that the changes proposed by myself, and certainly the changes that have been requested by the residents of the area can be made very easily without affecting any other riding. The only change involved would be a change in the riding boundaries within the township of Ancaster, and this should not cause the commission any undue amount of difficulty. I ask, then, that the commission review the decision to add Ancaster township to Brant county, and that they look with some understanding on the recommendations that I have made, knowing that this work can be done without disturbing the electoral boundaries as laid down for the federal ridings, and also with the idea that if they look at the projected growth in the areas, they will find that in 1972 they have simplified the job for any future commission that may have to undertake this work.

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): In rising to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I do so with a very sad heart. I can certainly say that since the report and the new maps were published by the commission, my heart has been saddened. The commission has seen fit to eliminate and chop up the historic riding of Hastings-Frontenac. I want to remind the house that it was to this great riding our first settlers came to Canada, acquired land and helped to develop this great country. When I first presented the report and map published by the commission, someone said that had a father given his children a map of Canada and a pair of scissors and asked them to cut out a jig-saw puzzle that would be difficult to put together, they could not have done a better job than the commission did.

At the outset, I want to say that I agree with some of the members of the other place who have stated redistribution should have been handled by the senators. This could have been done at very little expense to our taxpayers, and I feel these men were much more competent to handle this duty than were the commissioners.

In so far as redistribution is concerned, Mr. Speaker, it occurs in Canada every ten years following the decennial census. Numerical equality is the basis upon which redistribution is planned. In order to ensure the continuity of political structures, however, the boundaries of electoral districts should be varied as little as is absolutely necessary. Redistribution, as it has been proposed by this commission, should it occur every ten years would mean the end of political organizations in this country. It is submitted that there has never been such a complete redistribution in this country as that which is now proposed, not even in the days of the infamous gerrymandering.

It is not suggested that this redistribution is not necessary, but it is submitted that redistribution of this magnitude occurring every ten years would be a serious detriment to political organizations. It is therefore in the interests of preventing a recurring redistribution of this proportion that the commission should establish electoral boundaries which would enable the newly created electoral districts to accommodate expanding population with a minimum of operation of those boundaries. This commission cannot be expected to foresee the extent of the population increase that will occur in all areas of Ontario within the next quarter of a century. However, the drafting of electoral districts, taking into consideration the trend of the population expansion that has been experienced during the past quarter century, could do a great deal in helping to alleviate the need for substantial redistributions during the next quarter century.

Experience has shown also that population expansion in eastern Ontario, with the exception of certain areas, has been greatest along the north shore of lake Ontario. It is submitted therefore that the electoral districts fronting on lake Ontario should be organized to allow for expected continuing expansion. It is noted also that in the proposed redistribution, the electoral district with the greatest population will be York-Scarborough with a population of some 80,000. The electoral district with the least population will be Thunder Bay with a population of some 53,000. Along the lake front east of metropolitan Toronto the constituencies and their populations are as follows: Ontario riding, 63,432; Oshawa, 79,240; Northumberland-Durham, 62,912; Prince Edward-Hastings, 69,692; Kingston and The Islands, 79,838; Leeds, 62,656.

To the north of these constituencies lie the ridings which reach into the hinterland of Ontario which, with their populations, are: Victoria-Haliburton, 55,055; Hastings, 60,454; Frontenac-Addington, 55,638; Renfrew-Lanark, 55,418. Omitted from this list is Peterborough with a population of 70,422. These ridings along the lakefront should be distributed so that the proposed population will be reduced to nearer the minimum, and the population directed into the ridings to the north. This will enable the expected expansion of population to bring the lakefront electoral districts into numerical equality of representation without the need for boundary alteration.

Under the now proposed redistribution the townships of Belmont and Methuen and the village of Havelock will be included in the constituency of Victoria-Haliburton. Havelock is situated on provincial highway No. 7 east of the city of Peterborough and 52 miles from the town of Lindsay, which is the major population centre for the riding of Victoria-Haliburton.

There is no road connecting Havelock with the rest of the riding other than one to the north, and this road is really not a very good road. To reach Lindsay, the residents of Havelock and the township must travel through the proposed riding of Peterborough. Likewise, the sitting member for Victoria-Haliburton, to reach his constituents in Belmont and Methuen and Havelock, would have to drive right through the riding of Peterborough. Also, the residents of Havelock have no community of interest with Lindsay. They are attracted to Peterborough for economic, social and cultural purposes. It is submitted that the townships of Belmont and Methuen and the village of Havelock should form a part of the proposed riding of Peterborough.

For years now these two townships and the village of Havelock have formed part of Peterborough county. Under the new set-up for the Ontario provincial ridings they will remain part of Peterborough riding. The towns are six miles apart and their churches are served by the same priests or ministers. They have the same schoolboards, the same health units, the same county councils, which I think is very important to consider, Mr. Speaker.

We who made representations in Toronto to the commission and pointed out the necessity for having these two townships of Belmont and Methuen, and Havelock, put into the riding of Peterborough, left the meeting very satisfied that the judge and the commission had concurred in our proposition. We were really astounded when we found out that this was not true.

I should mention here that I hope the commission will really show some interest in these representations. Anybody looking at a map of the area would realize that this is the proper thing to do. What bothers me most is that I learned that the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was cut up, but when the top brass or those in authority made representations it was changed back again. I think that some of the other ridings should also be changed back.

In summarizing, Mr. Speaker, I should just like to make a few points. Democratic government is dependant upon effective political parties. To be effective, political parties require organization. Political organization requires consistent geographical units based on community of interest and population centres. In establishing the electoral district boundaries, not only should numerical factors be taken into consideration; geographical factors must be considered to enable the elected representative effectively to represent his constituency and to encourage the citizens to become involved in political activity in their areas. Reducing the population in those areas in which expansion is expected to be greatest will allow expansion without the need of alteration of electoral boundaries, thereby preventing a disruption of political organization.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address myself for a few minutes to Annex "R" of the resolution we are considering, which relates to redistribution in northern Ontario ridings. In view of the fact that our party has no member at the moment in northern Ontario, I have been asked to make representations in connection with certain parts of that area.

I have to begin by admitting, Mr. Speaker, that the magnitude of the problem facing the commission in this area is a considerable one. The legislation has placed a minimum of 53,150 population for any one riding. It takes a lot of juggling to fit a dozen constituencies into this far-flung area, with its sparse population.

It must also be admitted that the commission met some of the objections to its original plan and has made quite a few changes from the proposition which was published in the Canada Gazette. However, there are still some real anomalies which should be corrected; and I believe there is general agreement that these anomalies need to be corrected.

I should like to mention first the riding of Thunder Bay, which is a monstrosity second only to the proposed riding of Cochrane. The size, shape and diversity of Thunder Bay makes it almost impossible to represent in any real sense. The situation of the community of Dryden is typical of the problem but serious enough to be reconsidered. Sioux Lookout, Dryden and Kenora have a community of interest. Dryden is situated between Sioux Lookout and Kenora. Yet Dryden is in Thunder Bay, in the same riding as White River, some 435 miles to the east, while Sioux Lookout and Kenora are located in the Kenora-Rainy River riding. It seems obvious, Mr. Speaker, that Dryden should be included with the other two communities and that Thunder Bay should be reduced in size and rearranged accordingly.

The second riding I should like to mention is that of Cochrane. I note there is also a presentation in connection with this riding. My remarks are very much along the line of presentations made. The central population area of this riding is Kapuskasing, Hearst and Cochrane. It is assumed that this would be the point of operations for most political parties.

I need hardly go through the difficulties of representing the riding as it is now redrawn. Road and rail do not combine in any reasonable way to provide access from one part to the other. I think the two communities at the south of Wawa and Chapleau are best examples. The community of Wawa is naturally connected with the "Soo", now that the Trans-Canada highway joins it. It has nothing in common with the remainder of the riding of Cochrane, particularly with Kapuskasing. Chapleau is in a similar situation. You have to travel through the Timmins riding back to Kapuskasing for any central connection. Five miles out of the city of Sault Ste. Marie, on lake Superior, you are in the same riding as Moosonee, on James Bay, many hundreds of miles away.

The city of Sault Ste. Marie is the economic, business and social centre of a very large area northerly and southerly along lake Superior, and easterly inland. Yet, we find this rapidly growing city and the adjacent township of Prince formed into a single riding, while immediately to the north the area is in Cochrane, and to the south and east in Algoma.

As I said, Sault Ste. Marie is growing rapidly and the population figures of 1961 are already far outgrown. With its surrounding and supporting area, and its wide sphere of influence in Wawa, White River, Chapleau and Thessalon, it could easily form the nucleus for two federal ridings, either now or at some time in the immediate figure. In any case that part of Cochrane which lies south of a line drawn east and west through Timmins should be detached from Cochrane and included elsewhere.

That, Mr. Speaker, summarizes the presentation I wished to make. I know that hon. members who presently represent these ridings will be speaking in connection with another resolution, and I think that what I have said tonight is not far removed from what they themselves will present.

In connection with the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka which I represent, I am in the happy position of having no objection to the boundaries as presently outlined. I shall be sorry to lose Algonquin park but happy to have the area of Baxter township, which will balance the loss.

One thing that has been overlooked which should be corrected, if anybody reads this comment that I am making, and I sometimes wonder whether it will be read and how much attention will be given to it, is that the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka will include the Georgian Bay Islands National Park. I think that the commission has overlooked the fact that the famous Flower Pot Island at the tip of the Bruce peninsula is part of this park

It should not be included in the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka because including it would disfranchise anyone who now or in the future would reside on this island. The designation of the riding should except Flower Pot Island in the Georgian Bay national Park.

Those are the comments I wish to make. I hope that the commission will look seriously at the objections that have been raised, because if it does we can have much better constituency maps than have been devised at the moment.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, it is no perfunctory duty that I rise to perform in bringing to the attention of the Electoral Boundaries Commission some objections respecting that great metropolitan area of Toronto in which there are 22 ridings, and in which, I am sorry to say, we have no Conservative member to represent the people.

I consider it a great honour and privilege to be asked to make these few remarks, and I can assure you that this is the last time that I or anyone else will have to pinch hit for this great area, in connection with this particular problem of redistribution.

Before I proceed to speak about the metropolitan area of Toronto I should like to make one or two brief remarks about the changes which have occurred in my own riding of Wellington South. First of all, we are happy that the name of Wellington has been retained. We have dropped the word "south" and we are sorry to lose the townships of Erin and Pilkington, as well as Erin village and Elora village. We are also happy that the commission paid attention to the recommendation we made to it, in that we felt that the township of Dumfries would be much better in the riding of Brantford, and this is where it is remaining. I am sure that the people in both ridings will be very satisfied.

The hon. member for Halton mentioned that Nassagaweya township should remain there, and I am sure that the inhabitants would be slightly more at home in the Halton riding because of the Burlington area being their shopping centre. For this reason and others we have no objections to them staying in Halton. I think that we could exchange the people at the north end of Halton, Erin township, because I think they would be happier to stay in Wellington. As the hon. member representing the riding I say that I am sorry to lose the ones we are losing and happy to receive those who are coming into the riding.

My remarks about Toronto, of course, Mr. Speaker, will be brief as I am sure the hon. members of this house would not expect me to be as familiar with the electoral district of metropolitan Toronto as someone who lived in that area. My observations are based on the findings and recommendations from meetings that have been held there by Conservative candidates and Conservative associations in the ridings. There are 22 ridings in this great area of almost 2 million people. I think that the commission has done a reasonably good job in dividing it up into ridings.

With respect to the riding of Scarborough East, the objection is with respect to the westerly boundary of the proposed riding. The area bounded by Ellesmere road, Markham, Lawrence avenue east and McCowans Road should be put into Scarborough East, and an area comparable in size should be put into Scarborough West.

With respect to the Scarborough West riding, the objection is to the easterly and northerly boundaries. In connection with York-Scarborough, the objection of the committee in this area is to the easterly and northerly boundaries of the proposed riding. In York East the objection is to the northerly and westerly boundaries of the proposed riding. The western boundary should follow the Don river boundary as much as possible. In the Greenwood and Broadview ridings the objections are chiefly about the boundary lines.

In Rosedale the objection would seem to be twofold. The first objection is to the southerly boundary of the riding, and specifically to the important waterfront area which, in the committee's view, should be kept in one unit. Second, objection is taken to the name, as they feel Rosedale is only one small residential area in what is otherwise a large riding. They feel that this name should be changed to St. Paul's riding, as there is a considerable historical association with that name in this general area.

Similarly, in Trinity and Davenport the objections are chiefly directed to the boundaries. The same objections apply to Parkdale. The hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) apparently objects to the name. The objection with respect to the Humber-Valley riding is to the northern and western boundaries, for geographic reasons.

I wish I had time to enlarge upon some of these, but time is running out, and I can just mention some of the objections in relation to the various boundaries. In the Etobicoke area the objection is a little more pronounced. Here the committee feels that that portion of the proposed electoral district of Etobicoke which lies east of the Humber river should not be included in Etobicoke, for the following reasons. The first is that the Humber river is a natural boundary which for many years has served as the dividing line between the ridings of York West and York Centre.

The rate of growth of population in the new riding of Etobicoke as well as in the northwest has surged ahead quickly, with the result that it will soon be much larger than it is at present. It would therefore appear that there is no need for territory east of the Humber river to be included in Etobicoke. The area east of the Humber lies outside the municipality of Etobicoke. The result is that these people are not traditionally associated with municipal or other public affairs west of the Humber.

The proposed electoral district to be named Etobicoke should be named York West, and the proposed electoral district of York West should be called Etobicoke. This would make the names of the two ridings similar to those of the geographical or provincial constituencies, avoiding confusion in the minds of voters when federal or provincial elections are held.

In York South, no great objection arises. In Eglinton the objection is to the westerly and northerly boundaries of the proposed riding. The dividing of such a long established community as Eglinton, which has maintained its identity both as ward 9 in the city of Toronto and as a provincial and federal riding for many years, is regretted, and we ask for the reconsideration of this division if possible.

In the case of the other ridings, the objections are chiefly to the boundaries which have been proposed. Generally speaking, I would say the commission has done a reasonably good job. Its task was not easy. Constituencies would have been happier had the commission not disregarded historical factors and municipal divisions. Boundaries should have followed more closely natural divisions such as the Humber river, the Don river and Highway 401, now known as the Macdonald-Cartier Highway.

Wherever possible the commission should take a second look so that municipal, provincial and federal representatives serve the same area. For example the riding of North York should not intrude into the boundary of the metro Toronto system. The electoral district of North York has had a history of over 70 years as a political unit. Bringing it south into metro Toronto will create a clash of interest in the representation of each riding.

I will conclude by saying, as I said at the beginning, that the commission has done reasonably good work in dividing into 22 ridings such a large area containing almost 2 million people. If the commission would like to receive any further suggestions or assistance in this matter I am sure the members of the Conservative party and of the Conservative associations in the great metropolitan area of Toronto would be only too happy to offer suggestions and recommendations.

It has been a pleasure and an honour for me to say these few words in connection with the great city of Toronto as well as on behalf of my own riding of Wellington South and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we will not have a pinch hitter again, but elected members.

Mr. J. E. Madill (Dufferin-Simcoe): I might say at the outset that my riding has been carved up more than most. At present it contains all the county of Dufferin and six townships in the south part of the county of Simcoe. Two thirds of the population is in the Simcoe end of the riding. Its area is about 30 miles by 40 miles and it has been carved into. Four townships have been taken from the county of Dufferin and added to Wellington county, and three of the more heavily populated townships have been taken from Simcoe county and added to York county.

Simcoe county is one of the five largest governing bodies in Canada, with a population of roughly 140,000 people. It is losing its identity. It is called Peel-Dufferin, whereas it should be Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe because it still retains three townships of Simcoe county. It is extended to about 60 miles in length and narrowed to about 18 miles. I see no mention of the town of Brampton whatsoever in the description, and this is one of the towns which has one of the fastest growth rates in the area, having grown since the war from 7,500 to 35,000 people. It is adjacent to the area of metropolitan Toronto, and in the next ten years with the present rate of growth, it could be part of the metropolitan Toronto area. The growth from the metropolitan area is lateral rather than vertical. I cannot see why this part was added to York when it should have been retained. Camp Borden is left in the riding. It has a population I think of 11,000 and actually about two-thirds of its population votes in the riding in which it presently is situated.

Under the normal situation, with a tolerance of 25 per cent, there was adequate population in Dufferin-Simcoe, with 57,000 people, while the new riding is described as having a population of only 55,050. With the depressed area to the north of us, I do not think the growth is expected to be great in the very near future. Within five years I think all these three ridings will have reached the prescribed population, even without the tolerance being used.

There are two things I should mention. I do not understand why we have to extend the area so far south, because there is no relationship whatsoever between the town of Brampton and the city of Barrie, and the riding as it exists now takes in a small portion of Barrie. There are three county councils, those of the county of Peel, the county of Dufferin, and the county of Simcoe. They are going to have three county councils in the future instead of two.

As the hour is getting late and as I know it is the hope that we will finish this, I will conclude with these remarks. I have registered my objection, and I hope the commission will see fit to readjust this particular area more in line with the way it presently stands.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this should be described as a question of privilege. I think the last speaker from this side of the house on this particular subject has spoken. On the other hand, in the light of what the house leader said earlier today, I did give assurance to the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) that he might go to fulfil a very important engagement this evening. Therefore he is not here and he does wish at some stage to make some presentation. I am not asking that this be left open, but perhaps at some stage before this is closed completely it might by unanimous consent be agreed that the hon. member for Simcoe East might speak for perhaps ten minutes.

Mr. McIlraith: That is quite agreeable, Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned. I would ask that we proceed to finish the Ontario motions, however, tonight.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes, indeed; I agree with that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed that we proceed to complete the discussion of the objections in respect of the province of Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am not sure as to the procedure the house wishes to follow. Is it the intention of the house to conclude the discussion on objection No. 7 and then proceed to No. 9?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I understand that the discussion on No. 7 is now completed?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker, subject to what I have said about an opportunity being given to the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) to speak on another occasion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is having some degree of difficulty in deciding what should be done. If we terminate the discussion on objection No. 7 I should like to know the procedure by which we are going to return to it.

Mr. McIlraith: If it will help, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we can leave objection No. 7 open. The suggestion agreed to earlier was that we close the discussion at this point and allow the hon. member for Simcoe East to speak for a period of ten minutes on another occasion when he is in the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house having considered this objection, it will be the duty of Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission, together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house, back to the commission for reconsideration thereof.

The house will now proceed to objection No. 9, the context of which is to be found at page 19 of the pamphlet.

The objection in the form of a motion is as follows:

That, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries commission for the province of Ontario, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, for the reasons hereinafter specified:

(a) It is unnatural and impractical to have Cochrane riding separated by Timmins riding thus dividing the riding into two and having to travel the width of the Timmins riding to reach the other half of Cochrane riding.

(b) The proposed riding would be very difficult to traverse because of circuitous road and railway systems that wind around the perimeter of the riding rather than bisect same as is normal. Because of the difficulty and expense of traversing the area, there is no real rapport or similarity between the two areas (Cochrane riding as it previously existed and the additional area west of the Timmins riding extending to Lake Superior).

(c) In order to accomplish the population requirement, sufficient territory could be included along highway No. 11 south of Cochrane. This would not affect the land geography of the Timmins riding. As the railway follows Highway No. 11, this has been the natural means of population settlement and over the years people along this route have associated together in various organizations such: Northeastern Ontario Municipal Association, Zone 6 of Northeastern Ontario Development Association, James Bay Frontier Association, etc. There has been no connection in any way with the people in the vicinity of Wawa, Lake Superior, etc.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Habel (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, may I first thank the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) for his remarks on the riding I represent. I can assure him that tonight I am not speaking as a Liberal member but as a representative of the people of my riding, Liberals, Conservatives, New Democrats and even Social Crediters.

In fact, some of the documents accompanying the brief to the Redistribution Commission come from Conservatives, New Democrats as well as Liberals.

In June last, I told the commission representations would be made. In North Bay, some time in September 1965, I presented a brief explaining the reasons for the objections. I wish to point out that the Conservative member, Mr. Moore, was there, and that he approved that brief in its entirety.

The first objection is based mainly on lack of communications, or difficult communications. The house may be interested to hear, and I trust the commission will note, that from the Northeast corner of the riding of Cochrane to the southwest corner there is a distance of 480 miles as the crow flies, which is no mean distance, for it is almost half the distance across the province. Before giving my arguments, I should beg leave of the house to place on Hansard a table giving the distances between various points in the riding; I would then not have to read it.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give its unanimous consent that the table referred to by the hon. member be included in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Habel: A little earlier, as a matter of fact, I heard an hon. member say that to get to a certain riding, the candidate or the member will have to cross another riding. In the case of the riding of Cochrane, it is a fact that any member representing it or any candidate there will have to cross the riding of Timmins from east to west on account of the new boundaries. The candidates in the ridings of Timmins will have to invade the southeastern section of the riding of Cochrane and, I wish to add, in passing, that I would see with regret, not so much for myself as for those who will come after me, the disappearance, because of those new boundaries, of the friendship which has always existed in the southeastern corner of the riding of Cochrane.

Communications are so difficult that I am wondering if it would not have been advantageous for the boundaries commission to ask one of its members, for instance, to go through the riding to find out how difficult communications are. Besides, it is impossible to reach the northern section of the riding except by air. With the new boundaries, I think that the candidates will have to buy a helicopter, because otherwise I fail to see any possibility of waging an election campaign in a riding as far-flung as the one I described a little earlier; indeed, it is almost funny to look at the map and see the cuts which have been made and the numerous passages which have been provided to take us to lake Superior.

This means that in the riding of Cochrane the most northerly poll would be at Hudson's Bay and the most southerly at lake Superior. If you look at the map, you will see that, in fact, it is an area which covers half the province of Ontario.

There is also the difference in community needs between the proposed southwestern section and the old riding, as well as the difference in industries. As a matter of fact, in the southwestern section of the riding—and my hon. colleague from Sault Ste. Marie will have the opportunity to talk about it —trade and labour relations and others are directed towards Sault Ste. Marie rather than Cochrane-Kapuskasing.

I must thank the chief whip of the opposition (Mr. Winkler), who also referred tonight to the new proposed boundaries for the riding of Cochrane.

Parliament, where the different political parties are represented, decided through legislation, to withdraw the question of the establishment of boundaries from political interference, but this was done in the hope that the commission appointed for this purpose would consider all disadvantageous aspects and would define the new boundaries on the basis of the population within the new boundaries.

I hope that the commission will, in all fairness, take into account the resolutions which were sent to me by municipalities, chambers of commerce, as well as labour unions, supporting the brief I submitted to the commission on September 7, 1965.

Mr. Speaker, rather than drawing out my speech, I would ask unanimous consent of the house to place on the record the resolutions I received from the municipalities, chambers of commerce and labour unions, namely the resolutions of the town of Cochrane, the Kapuskasing labour council, the municipality of Michipicoten, the corporation of Shackleton and Machin townships, the corporation of the town of Hearst, the corporation of the township of Fauquier, the corporation of the town of Kapuskasing, the Kapuskasing chamber of commerce, the corporation of the town of Smooth Rock Falls, the chamber of commerce of Smooth Rock Falls and the Cochrane chamber of commerce.

If the house gives unanimous consent, I shall refer these documents to whom it may concern so that they be printed in Hansard and this will be my speech.

• (10:20 p.m.)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed by the house that these remarks be printed in Hansard?

Mr. Aiken: Are they to be an appendix to Hansard or does the hon. member ask that they be included in his remarks?

Mr. Habel: I think they should be included in my remarks tonight, otherwise I would read them into the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed that they should be included in the remarks of the hon. member for Cochrane?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The documents referred to above have been deposited with the Clerk for transmission by Mr. Speaker to the representation commissioner.]

Mr. Habel: In the circumstances, I will simply ask the commission to reconsider the brief I submitted on September 7 last, on behalf of the municipalities, the chambers of commerce and other public bodies. It is true that I was alone at the sitting with the Conservative candidate in the riding, but the brief represented the discussions I had held with the various public bodies and I hope that the Electoral Boundaries Commission will accomplish in the design of the new boundaries of Cochrane riding what the provincial commission did concerning the boundaries of the riding for the Ontario legislature.

The commission, made up practically of the same members, recognized the lack of communications in the north of the riding of Cochrane and agreed to retain the boundaries in force before the question of redistribution arose.

I would not ask that much, because I am aware that there are quotas of population that must be added in order to balance the number of voters. But I believe justice would be done toward the population of the riding of Cochrane if the suggestions I submitted to the commission were to be accepted as they were by my hon. friend, the member for Timmins (Mr. Martin) who had also given me assurance of his support on this request.

I must admit that if the new boundaries had to be accepted, it would become just as difficult for the member to contact the population as for the population to contact the member.

Mr. Speaker, the remarks I made tonight do not reflect parochial views, even less my personal interest, because I am not, like some members, haunted by the ambition to remain a member until the age of 85 and I would feel very, very sorry for my successors if they were required to campaign in a riding such as the commission has designed.

I am asking very sincerely and humbly the commission to kindly reconsider the brief and to study the evidence in support thereof. In this way, I feel, the commissioners will realize that the brief gives a true picture of the views of the people it is my privilege to represent in the house, whether they are Conservative, New Democrat, Social Credit and also Liberal sympathizers.

[English]

Mr. G. E. Nixon (Algoma West): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to support my colleague the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) and to present as briefly as I can the objections raised by some considerable number of my constituents with regard to certain proposed changes in the electoral district of Algoma West which it has been my privilege to represent in this house for the past 26 years.

The objection, in brief, is to the cutting off of the township of Michipicoten from Algoma West and annexing it to Cochrane riding. This is most impractical because of the almost insurmountable difficulties in travel and communication between the Michipicoten area and the Cochrane riding.

I think this is plainly shown when we realize that to drive by car from Kapuskasing, the seat of the member in Cochrane riding, to Wawa, whether it be via North Bay to the east or by Nipigon to the west, the distance would be approximately 700 miles either way. To travel by rail, even without considering the inconvenience of delays due to train connections, the distance would be about 300 miles. Compared with the foregoing, between Wawa and Sault Ste. Marie, a distance of approximately 140 miles, there is a daily bus service over the Trans-Canada highway.

The population of Michipicoten township, according to the 1961 census is 4,439. In Wawa, the largest community centre in Michipicoten township, the main source of employment is iron ore mining. It is the site of the Algoma Ore Properties, a subsidiary of the Algoma Steel Company of Sault Ste. Marie. The interests of these people are tied completely with Sault Ste. Marie, and to support this I would like to quote from a representation make by the reeve of Michipicoten township:

> Until highway No. 17 was opened to the north of Lake Superior, we, in this mining area, lived in isolation. Then, as now, our ties were with Sault Ste. Marie. Economically, socially and politically, we are tied with Sault Ste. Marie. We wish to register our objections, in the strongest terms to block this move to return us to isolation—political isolation.

We speak for nearly 5,000 who inhabit this progressive mining community and tourist area. We have no desire to become the backwoods fringe of any constituency.

J. H. Dann
Reeve, Municipality of Michipicoten.

I might add that all political parties in the area are in full support of this resolution.

Also I would like to put on record a resolution passed by the city of Sault Ste. Marie:

Whereas the township of Michipicoten has always had close ties with the city of Sault Ste. Marie, politically, economically—and,

Whereas the township has indicated their desire to remain in the riding of Algoma West,

Therefore, be it resolved that this council endorses their request and so advise our member, Mr. George Nixon, M.P.

G. H. Tolley
City Clerk

I have here another resolution from the Sault Ste. Marie Chamber of Commerce which reads as follows:

That, the Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, and district chamber of commerce supports the township of Michipicoten in its effort to remain in the same federal riding at Sault Ste. Marie,

And further that the chamber of commerce objects to the riding of Cochrane being extended to take in the township of Michipicoten and territories south to the edge of the city of Sault Ste. Marie.

I am sure we all sympathize with the difficult task which the Electoral Boundaries Commission have undertaken in trying to fulfil their objective of proportional representation. However, considering the distinctly different sources of these representations, it must be evident to everyone that the dissatisfaction with the new proposals is widespread and, bearing in mind that the township of Michipicoten in the changed provincial ridings is now included in the riding known as Algoma, I say this is further evidence that the area in question should be retained in the new federal riding of Sault Ste. Marie or in the new Algoma riding.

I fully support the requests as set out in the resolutions I have placed on record tonight and sincerely trust that the commission will give favourable consideration to them. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in northern Ontario we have been concerned with the major fact that many of the outlying areas are finding themselves attached to a riding to which they have no connection. I am well aware that the job which faced the Electoral Boundaries Commission was difficult, and I think in the main that it has done a very good job. I think it is also true that in northern Ontario the commission may have failed to take into consideration the lines of communication which have been established. I particularly agree with the suggestions which have been made by the hon. member for Cochrane, who has a riding now stretching not only from James bay but from Hudson bay to lake Superior. I think everyone will realize that there are sections in this riding which have a much closer affinity with other areas than with the central area of the Cochrane riding.

It is a fact that we have established tolerances. It is a good thing, probably, that at the same time in northern Ontario the ridings have been balanced to within several thousand persons in each of them. I think none of us in northern Ontario will object if the problems which have been raised by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) and the hon. member for Algoma West (Mr. Nixon) are taken into consideration.

I think it is unreasonable that the areas lying on the outskirts of Sault Ste. Marie, and certainly either through radio participation or transportation systems, within the ambit of that centre, which unites them with Sault Ste. Marie, should belong to the far north and be attached to the ridings there.

Our interest in this matter is not a close one. I have had little connection with the people of most of that area, but I am aware of the fact that we have an obligation in northern Ontario to take into consideration the large distances involved in order to provide as good representation as is possible for all the constituents we may have.

I think an exception could be made in northern Ontario, without coming near the limits which have been laid down in the redistribution act, so as to take into consideration matters of transportation. I should like to draw attention to several areas. I would refer to the two towns of Bowden and Nordica west of Cochrane which come into the Timmins area. These are very small communities, which have been within the ambit of the Cochrane riding for a number of years, and which, because of transportation lines, would be connected with the Cochrane riding. Only a few miles to the other side of the riding would be needed to take in these towns.

There are no other towns in that area and there are not likely to be. I therefore suggest the boundary should be shifted to the east to take these towns into the Cochrane riding. I further suggest that at least the town of Foleyet and the other small communities on the Foleyet-Chapleau highway, to reach which the member representing Cochrane would have to leave the northern section of his riding, come through Timmins riding and pass through that riding, should remain in Timmins. Their total population is not more than a few thousand people.

We have an advantage in this area because we all use the same television station in Timmins. It already has five satellites. If this is used as one of the criteria, a great deal of northern Quebec would be included because several of these satellites are situated there. In view of these communications and transportation facilities I suggest a trade should be made of these two communities east of Cochrane in exchange for the Foleyet area, which must obviously be served by Timmins. Because there is a connecting road to Chapleau, I suggest this town, too, should be included in the Timmins riding.

I am sympathetic to the people in Jamestown and I hope an arrangement can be made whereby they can be included in the Algoma riding. If this cannot be done, there might be a readjustment of the northern boundaries of Sault Ste. Marie so as to include all those people who are normally connected with that community. If no other action can be taken, then I would ask that the boundaries of my riding be extended both in the north and in the south to Lake Superior. This would mean that the areas in close proximity to Sault Ste. Marie would be cut off from the Cochrane riding by my riding and would obviously have to be placed in another area. I am not offering very much by suggesting this. It is true I am adding some territory to my riding but as far as I know there are no people living in this region.

The suggestions made with regard to northern Ontario are truly non-partisan. All of us who represent ridings in northern Ontario are concerned about the new areas we are getting, not because we do not want them but because there will be a realignment of the communities in the new areas. This is inevitable. We should have liked things to remain as they were, because over the years people have developed attachments to their ridings. But that is not possible. I welcome the many communities which have been added to Timiskaming and I believe the changes I have recommended, and the changes recommended by the other members from Ontario which I have endorsed, will be in the interest of all. It is my hope they will bring the best representation possible to all who live in the constituencies concerned. As to Cochrane, any concession in northern Ontario will have to be made there, as well as, to some extent, in the Port Arthur area because the area is so vast that service is a difficult proposition at the present time.

In my opinion these suggestions will make some adjustment in the geographical sense rather than really change the population figures, with which I think most members are quite pleased and agree will bring a great deal more stability to the representation which can be provided. As the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) mentioned, I know that the people who have sat on the commission in Ontario have been familiar with the problem as it has developed provincially and will be aware of the areas of which we speak. They may feel, because of this discussion, that some support should be given to the idea of the geographical changes, if only to re-establish the lines of communication which are normal, and in most cases possible only if certain small changes take place.

I certainly recommend these changes to the commission and hope they will give some consideration to them. I hope they also will know, when I make the suggestions in respect of the Timmins riding, that the people there are aware of the fact that in adding on these areas the responsibility is increasing and they are willing to shoulder that responsibility for the purpose of providing better representation for the individuals who are being dislocated in this redistribution.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it the wish of the house that this may conclude objection No. 9 concerning the constituency of Cochrane.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The house having considered this objection, it is the Speaker's duty pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

We will now proceed to objection No. 17, the text of which appears on page 30 of the pamphlet, concerning the electoral constituency of York East. We also have before us Objections Nos. 23 and 24. Are there any comments respecting objections No. 17, 23 and 24? If not, may I ask whether it is the wish of the house that these objections be deemed to have been considered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The house having considered these objections, it is the Speaker's duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): It being ten o'clock, we will now proceed with the agenda in respect of the questions in which hon. members wish to participate.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, would the house leader outline the business proposed for tomorrow, and is he yet in a position to indicate what might be expected for next week.

Hon. George J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow we would proceed with all the remaining motions by way of objection to the redistribution reports, with the exception of those pertaining to the province of Manitoba.

When we complete those tomorrow we will than proceed to item No. 4 on today's order paper, the second reading of Bill C-150, to amend the Research Council Act; then Item 54, the second reading of Bill C-169, to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code. If we conclude those, we will then take Item No. 3, the resolution concerning the automotive products agreement. This would be followed by Item No. 52, the resolution preceding the introduction of a measure to give effect to term 29 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. gentleman is very ambitious.

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to add that assuming we conclude all the redistribution objections except the one relating to Manitoba, we will bring forward a supply motion on Monday, and then continue with the Manitoba objection on Wednesday. If we do not complete the rest, we will announce a different program for Monday and Tuesday.

Perhaps I should add that at the opening of business tomorrow we wish to call Item No. 39, the third reading of Bill C-154 regarding the tax agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—CONSTRUCTION OF REPLICA OF "GRANDE HERMINE" FOR EXPO '67.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is essential that in order to debate the question of the "Grande Hermine" I must first of all establish the fact that Gaspé is the birthplace of Canada.

It is unfortunate that there is such a diversity of opinion amongst our historians as to who discovered Canada. This is possibly due to the evident distortions of history that appear when we read the English and French versions of our Canadian history. How can anyone claim that Cabot, the Venetian navigator, claimed the land for Henry VII of England?

Jacques Cartier, after reaching this side of the Atlantic, stopped in Newfoundland, in Labrador, on the shores of northern Quebec, and then came through the Magdalen Islands up to the Baie de Chaleur finally arriving in the bay of Gaspe on July 24, 1534. He raised a cross 30 feet in height, placed thereon a shield embossed with three fleurs-de-lis and took possession of the land in the name of the King of France. There was no war at that time. I am sure that if the land had been taken in the name of the King of England there would have been a war in 1534, but there is no history of any such war having taken place.

I will not dwell long on this fact. Suffice it to say that historians agree that any crosses which he may have placed elsewhere on this soil were only landmarks and not similar to the one at Gaspe upon which he placed a shield with the fleur-de-lis. Nowhere in history is it related that he took possession at another landing.

Four hundred years later in 1934 the governments of France, the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada commemorated this event by the erection of a 110-ton cross carved out of granite, and by other ceremonies, at Gaspe. Present at that time were the Prime Minister of Canada, Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, Cardinal Villeneuve of Quebec, Sir Roger Keyes, representing England, Mr. Flandin, the minister of public works, representing France, Hon. W. D. Robbins, ambassador from United States in Canada, and Hon. L. A. Taschereau, premier of Quebec.

Mr. Flandin has stated that Cartier took possession of Canada at Gaspe. Mr. Trudel, one of our better known contemporary historians puts forth the argument in the following words:

It is clear from the importance of the ceremony that the cross (at Gaspe) was intended to indicate that a territory was being taken possession of in the name of François 1er.

The greatest proof for acceptance of this historical fact is the precedent of 1934 and it should be accepted as such. Marc Laterreur is also of the same opinion.

Since 1957, and I am sure the files of the Department of Northern Affairs will prove my statement, our Gaspé Historical Society under the chairmanship of L'Abbe Michel Le Moignan and the Historical Sites Commission under the presidency of Wilf M. Carter have endeavoured to obtain recognition of this fact and make of Gaspé an historic site.

A few years later, in 1961 to be exact, the Jubilee branch of the Canadian Legion at Gaspé, under Mr. Albert Cassidy and district chairman G. Lacouver, believed that if Gaspé were declared an historic site the construction of a replica of the Grande Hermine would be symbolic gesture aiding the development of the site and contributing to the economic advantages so desired for that region of our country.

Petitions were signed to this effect, there was correspondence with Richard Holden of McKay and Holden, who had incorporated a private company under the name La Societe de Navigation La Grande Hermine Limitée, Mr. Kniewasser of Expo '67, the present builders of the ship, the Department of Public Works, the Department of Commerce, the Centennial Commission, the Provincial Secretary of Quebec—in fact, with all those who would be interested in contributing to the construction of the replica of the Grande Hermine so that it would be first of all a source of attraction at Expo '67 and eventually find a permanent berth at Gaspé, the birth place of Canada.

To our disappointment we find a press release of March 18 from the minister's office advising us of his decision to have the ship built elsewhere and given a final resting place at Quebec city. After four years we find that the whole plan, which originated in Gaspé, was scuttled and a declaration to the effect that the ship would find a permanent berth at the Cartier-Brebeuf Park, in Quebec, which after all can only commemorate the second voyage of Cartier to the Canadian shores.

The price announced by the minister is not in keeping with correspondence which we now have and which we will speak of on another occasion. It is now found that the ship will have to be dismantled in order to find its berthing place at Quebec and engineers are going to be hired to study the feasibility of dismantling it.

What problems we encounter when we are creating a complete distortion of our Canadian history to give to Quebec city another historical monument. All municipal councils, public bodies, economic councils, Canadian Legion branches and other societies condemn this decision.

An article originating in Quebec city in Le Soleil and written by Odilon Arteau condemns this decision and states categorically that the Grande Hermine should find a haven at Gaspé. If the city of Quebec believes that the haven and final resting place of this ship should be Gaspé, we cannot understand why the department has announced that it will be Quebec city.

I trust that the minister will not be associated with this decision, that it will be rescinded, and above all and most important, that he will recommend that the question of the birthplace of Canada come before the standing committee of the house which deals with matters relating to his department.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, may I refer the minister to a booklet prepared by the Natural Resources Intelligence Service, Department of the Interior, in 1926. This booklet, produced by a department of government, states, when speaking of the Gaspé peninsula:

The peninsula may be said to be, historically, the oldest part of Canada, for it was on its shores near the town of Gaspé that Jacques Cartier, in the year 1534, landed and claimed the country for his sovereign, the King of France.

I have here letters dated 1961 and addressed to the museum of Saint-Malo, France, to architects in France and to Mr. Kniewasser of Expo '67. All these letters claim that the Grande Hermine should be built and berthed at Gaspé. Who has stolen our idea? This is what we would be very interested to know.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): As was announced in a press release from the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources on March 18, 1966, the federal government intends to construct a detailed full scale replica of Jacques Cartier's ship, the Grande Hermine. The ship will be on display at Expo '67, where it will be a prominent feature of the development called La Ronde. There is no doubt, as the minister has been quoted as saying, the Grande Hermine will be a major historical contribution to Expo '67.

After Expo '67, the intention is to move the vessel to Quebec city where it will be established as the focal feature of Cartier-Brebeuf National Historic Park. In planning the interpretation of national historic sites, it is imperative to keep in mind the precise nature of the event to be commemorated. There is no doubt that during the wintering episode in Cartier's second voyage, the outstanding event is the fact that his vessel laid at anchor for an entire season at the confluence of the Lairet and St. Charles rivers. This is the site of Cartier-Brebeuf park.

Cartier-Brebeuf, Mr. Speaker, has a specific connection with Jacques Cartier of greater duration than Gaspé has. He wintered at the site of Cartier-Brebeuf park, and this wintering is the first documented one for any large body of Europeans in mainland Canada.

Mr. Keays: He took the Indians of Gaspé and brought them back the second year.

TRANSPORT—PICTOU LANDING, N.S.—REPORTED UNSAFE CONDITION OF WHARF

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I rise at this time with regard to a question which I put to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) a few days ago concerning a very mundane but important matter in my own constituency, namely the repairs to the wharf at Pictou landing. The condition has worsened since I asked the minister the question, which was ruled out at that time by Mr. Speaker. It was for this reason I raised the matter during this debate.

The company which was exporting pulp from the area, the Henderson Lumber Company, sent a telegram to the minister and various representations have been made by me as member for the area. The reasons I am putting forward for the reconstruction of this wharf are twofold: First, in so far as this economy is concerned, the area is a designated one and the export of pulp from this area is providing work for truckers, stevedores and so on, numbering approximately 100 men. In addition, the Henderson Lumber Company has given out information they have looked at this area as the possible site of a sawmill which would provide further work and further export of lumber.

This wharf is important, too, in that a number of fishermen use it for lobster and other types of fishing. During the last short period of time when the wharf was under temporary and minor repairs commencing last fall, the contract was about half completed when a crane went through the end of the wharf. I think perhaps the old Latin phrase, res ipsa loquitur, the thing speaks for itself, is applicable to this situation. We were shown that these repairs were necessary. I must say that the Minister of Public Works has always been very good and advised me whenever I have made inquiries about work that was to be done.

If I might make a suggestion to the Minister of Public Works, it would be this: The suggestion arises out of something brought forward by his predecessor, a gentleman now in the other place, Senator J. P. Deschatelets, in correspondence with me in the year 1964. At that time consideration was being given to carrying out wharf reconstruction in the Pictou landing area. The minister of that day pointed out to me that this would be considered in the estimates for the operating year, and it would involve shortening the existing structure by some 100 feet.

That is the suggestion I put forward to the minister tonight, that he ask his officials to look into this question and to carry out this reconstruction and, if necessary, to cut off a bit of the wharf—100 feet or whatever is necessary—which was the suggestion of the former minister. I have looked at the wharf and have been making submissions about it for many years, because frankly I do not believe that as the wharf now stands it is necessary. It is a long structure, and for the good of the shipping of pulp, possible lumber shipments and also for the good of the fishermen who use it I hope that the minister will immediately have his officials go to the area and look into the question of its complete reconstruction.

I realize the main estimates for this year have been tabled but I hope that consideration will be given by way of supplementary estimates to carrying out the necessary reconstruction. I suggest it is no longer just a matter of minor repairs but of extensive repairs. As I have pointed out, perhaps this could be done by way of cutting off part of the wharf and working on the balance of it. I was in the area during the Easter recess and minor repairs and dredging were being carried out so that fishermen would have a place to fish from during the lobster season. This was being done all inside the wharf. From the outer or north end it has been getting worse from time to time; the piles are rotten. I submit to the minister, who I know will take it into consideration, that reconstruction of this wharf, a very important link in the east Pictou area, should be proceeded with as quickly as possible.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for drawing this matter to my attention. There is a good deal of uncertainty about the suitability of this large wharf for local requirements. It has been used mainly by a group of inshore fishermen and to a limited extent by exporters of softwood pulpwood.

Over the years the structure has deteriorated to the point that in May, 1965 it was necessary to reduce the load limit by 50 per cent. Early last winter an effort was made to have minor repairs made, mainly to accommodate the fishermen and also the ferry service; but at that time it was found that the wharf was in such a bad state of repair that it had to be closed to vehicular traffic on February 10, 1966. The cost of putting this wharf in good condition is estimated at $200,000.

I assume that the structure was allowed to deteriorate over the years because of the uncertainty about how well it would suit future needs. The requirement of the local fishery could be met better at a considerably lower cost, and this possibility is being explored. However, the kind of structure that would suit the fishermen probably would not be useful for the export of pulpwood. About 7,000 cords of wood have been loaded there annually in recent years. Moreover, so far we have been unable to get any information that promises an increase in the export of this commodity at this location. It would not be reasonable to make a major expenditure to facilitate this export without some assurance that the economic justification of that expenditure would not vanish within a few years.

The Henderson Lumber Company has known about the deterioration of the wharf over the years. It is most regrettable that the company has bought a quantity of wood for shipment during 1966 from this site; however, even if we felt that we could justify the major expenditure to which I have referred, the wharf could not be reconstructed in time for this year's shipment. The structure is being examined to see what can be done to make it suitable for use by the fishermen during this season. The larger question indicated by the hon. member is one that I shall pursue thoroughly.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—DISCONTINUANCE OF STEAMSHIP "CANORA" ON WEST COAST

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I must first of all state correctly the question I asked the Minister of Transport three days ago because there was an error in it at that time. I sent the minister a corrected version yesterday which is as follows:

> In view of the fact that the Canadian National Railways has decided to discontinue operation of the S.S. Canora on the west coast, causing unemployment for approximately 50 men;
> And in view of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway has now decided to operate their own vessel in this service;
> Will the Minister of Transport intercede with the Canadian National Railways to replace the Canora with another vessel, owned by the Company and operated by their present long-term employees?

I should like to indicate that this is a grave situation affecting approximately 50 men and their families.

On April 5 the Canadian Merchant Service Guild, an organization of marine officers, was informed that the Canadian National was going to discontinue the operation of the S.S. Canora, a vessel which has operated from the B.C. mainland to Vancouver Island since 1918. That is 48 years of service. The ship employs approximately 50 men, including 12 officers, many of them with very long continuous service. In fact, the service of the officers averages out to 20.7 years per man.

The guild was invited by the management to attend meetings to discuss the future of employees. They met with courtesy, and spoke of the courteous reception given to them. Members of management made suggestions which included such things as job transfers to other areas, retraining, early and deferred retirements, but made clear that it could give no guarantee to any employee about a position in the service.

The men feel that because of seniority groupings now in effect in the railway system, possible replacement within that system is therefore improbable. They feel that to be forced to retire early, especially in the case of officers, would cost them hundreds of dollars because early retirement would force them to take a lower pension with which they would have to be satisfied for the rest of their lives.

It is not as though there was a reason to discontinue the service. It is not redundant, it is necessary. The Canadian National plans that it will be continued by a commercial carrier. Tenders for the service have now been invited. Second, another company will operate the service and will still make a fair profit. Third, the Canadian Pacific has a very similar operation which has been handled for them by F. M. Yorke & Son Limited, a Vancouver based firm.

Recently the Canadian Pacific has decided to operate this service with its own vessel, which is expected to be ready for operation by approximately May 15, 1966. This is the vessel for which tenders have been called.

It appears that the Canadian National is now going to make the mistake originally made by the Canadian Pacific in the use of a commercial carrier. In this situation I feel that the minister should intercede with the Canadian National and urge upon that body the need to replace the Canora with another vessel owned by the Canadian National and operated by its present long-term employees.

This is a very serious problem and the men are most anxious that the government take action before they are thrown out, and before it is too late to embody their services again within the system.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport made inquiries of the Canadian National Railways. I can sympathize with the position outlined by the hon. member who has just spoken.

The information given to the minister was that the S.S. Canora has been in the island service on the west coast, and that the vessel indeed is 48 years old, as mentioned by the hon. member. However, it cannot be operated in the present service beyond May or June of this year. Therefore in order to continue to provide a service, the company is seeking alternative means of carrying out its obligations. This involves the retirement of the Canora from service.

The minister was also advised by the railway that the railway company considers it uneconomic to make the capital expenditure necessary to buy a new vessel and that in any case it would be impossible to secure one without considerable delay. The employees involved, and who may be displaced, have been notified. Discussions have been held with the general chairman of the union, and everything possible is being done to reassign the personnel displaced to other jobs.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 11.13 p.m.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order:

Mr. Cameron (High Park) (Chairman of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs):

That the first report of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, presented to the house on Tuesday, April 26, 1966, be now concurred in.

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park): I ask that the motion stand.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee the report of which was just asked to be stood. I wonder if you could advise me as to the right of the chairman to stand the report when the committee has asked that it be presented. A very serious situation exists in the committee structure of the house, which appears to be breaking down. It seems to me the only time we can discuss this serious problem is when one of these motions is brought before the house for debate. I wonder if you could advise me how the chairman of the committee can stand the report which the committee has asked him to present.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Perhaps I could be helpful to the hon. member. The fact is that the business coming before the house during the last three days has been under motions. By agreement we decided to take these motions as if they were orders of the day rather than in their regular place. The effect of this decision was to permit a question period. If we had taken the motions in their proper place, under motions, that would have eliminated the question period. It seemed to me that it would be contra- to the wishes of the house to take these 33 motions, postpone them and put the other two motions about which the hon. member has inquired ahead of them in order that those motions should retain their position. It seemed to me to be quite unfair to do that.

I must, I think, properly take some responsibility for suggesting to hon. members who had motions for concurrence before the house that they not proceed with them until we completed the debate on the redistribution motions.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the explanation of the minister has clarified the situation for the hon. member.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): It has not clarified it at all, Mr. Speaker, but I guess the situation will have to stand at the moment.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONFERENCE WITH COMMONWEALTH CARIBBEAN COUNTRIES

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an announcement concerning a conference of commonwealth Caribbean countries and Canada. Following my visit to Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago late last year, it was decided to hold a meeting of officials to make preparations for the holding of a conference at the level of heads of government. This meeting took place at Kingston, Jamaica toward the end of January. The representatives of the various commonwealth Caribbean countries and Canada who attended that meeting agreed to recommend that a conference take place in July, from July 6 to July 8, inclusive.

I had indicated our willingness to have this conference in Canada if it was the wish of the other countries concerned, but I had also made it clear that we would be happy to go to the West Indies if that was preferred. The officials meeting in Kingston agreed to recommend that our offer to hold the conference in Canada be accepted. The officials also made recommendations concerning the agenda. It was agreed that discussions might be held under the following broad headings: trade, development aid, transport and communications, migration, other economic questions, international questions of mutual interest and cultural relations.

I am pleased to report that the Prime Ministers of Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago and British Guiana have expressed concurrence with the recommendations of the preparatory meeting in Kingston, and that informal indications of agreement have been received from the governments of Antigua, Barbados, British Honduras, Dominica, Granada, Montserrat, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent. The conference of heads of government of the commonwealth Caribbean countries and Canada will therefore take place in Ottawa from July 6th to 8th.

This conference, Mr. Speaker, I hope will be the beginning of a process of even closer and more productive consultation and practical co-operation between the commonwealth Caribbean countries and Canada. As such it could well mark a new stage in the special relationship which Canada has traditionally had with the West Indies.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the announcement made by the Prime Minister is in keeping with the course of development through the years. Our relationship with the nations of the commonwealth in the Caribbean has been close, and has become stronger with the passing years. Indeed, when we were in office we brought about a change of attitude in this regard by making provision through parliament for assistance to countries in the Caribbean, ships and the like, so those countries, far separated as they are one from another, would be able to bring about, as we had hoped, a confederation in the West Indies. However, that did not turn out to be the final result. The aid to each of these countries has been separate, one from the other.

What has been suggested over the years is now being carried into effect. This conference will enable the nations of the Caribbean to meet with Canada and together arrive at still closer relationships between our respective nations. Some of these countries have felt that they ought to join the Organization of American States. One or two of them have been strongly pressed by the United States to do so. My own view of the Organization of American States is that we should defer taking any action to join. However, by a meeting such as this we bring these nations together in a common relationship one to another under the crown, thereby assuring the improvement of economic, social and other relationships to bring about that oneness that is so necessary today.

From listening to the Prime Minister I am sure one of the matters which will receive intensive discussion will be that of immigration. During our period of office we removed colour discrimination, in fact or in theory, as one of the elements in immigration by assuring that all immigrants, regardless of their colour or race, would be admissible to Canada because of their skills and for no other reason. That is something that is not well understood in these countries in the Caribbean.

I am sure the discussions that will take place and the counsel that will result therefrom will bring about a feeling of better understanding and a recognition by those countries that Canada's stand in this regard is based not on colour discrimination—because Canada's attitude is that Canada must be colour blind—but on immigration that is founded upon skills and the ability of our immigrants to fit into the national picture.

• (11:20 a.m.)

Mr. Herridge: Well spoken.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our party I should like to welcome the announcement made by the Prime Minister and, indeed, to express our appreciation at the initiative taken by Canada which leads to these discussions.

It has seemed to me for a long time that Canada ought to have taken a much more active part in assisting these poor countries of the western hemisphere to improve their lot and to become more independent economically and more viable socially. I hope the discussions will lead precisely to that kind of result. I hope Canada will increase immensely the assistance it is prepared to give to the countries in the Caribbean, to help them to develop economically and socially.

I share, on behalf of our party, the emphasis which the right hon. Leader of the Opposition placed on the need to remove every remaining vestige of discrimination against the inhabitants of the Caribbean area who may wish to come to Canada. We are very glad at this first step. We hope it will produce useful results for the peoples of those countries.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the statement by the Prime Minister that the relations of Canada with the Caribbean countries are most friendly and that Canada will assist in the economic, social and cultural development of these countries is most pleasing to us.

On the other hand, the Canadian government should not overlook their responsibilities to Canada. We appreciate the fact that meetings will be held between these various Caribbean countries and Canada with a view to studying the possibilities of aid for these countries because our country is in an advantageous geographical position and in possession of considerable wealth. Those countries have resources also. I went to Jamaica a few years ago and I noticed natural resources which cannot be developed without help. That is obvious if you go there.

I am all in favour of helping Jamaica. However, Mr. Speaker, interest-free loans should not be limited to those countries; they should be granted also to our municipalities who need help in Canada and to some of the maritime provinces which would find it advantageous to obtain interest-free loans from the Bank of Canada.

We are in favour of helping those countries but also of helping our municipalities and provinces. I see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) finds that a little funny. He knows that it is logical to help our people at home first and then others. We are granting interest-free loans now, when we have to pay interest on money we borrow, and it seems to me that we cannot go any further in that direction.

We are not against helping those countries, but we should start by helping our municipalities and our provinces.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): As one who is not yet in a position to reminisce on what my party did when it was in power, and this not being the occasion for political speeches or debate, I will just say I am very pleased with this announcement. I think for too long we have paid lip service toward our responsibilities in the West Indies, and I hope this will be a major step forward in our relations with the countries of the West Indies.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand that the hon. member for Hochelaga and possibly the hon. member for Waterloo South would wish the house to return to the presentation of reports. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STEPHENVILLE, NFLD.—CLOSING OF U.S. AIR FORCE BASE

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I have received a number of representations, many of them in the form of telegrams, from residents of Stephenville, Newfoundland, concerning the employment situation which will result later this year from the expected changes at the United States air force base in this community. It has been represented to me that there are approximately 1,000 Canadians now employed at this base and that most of these workers will have their services terminated at the end of June and the remainder at the end of the year.

I wish to inform the house that my department is looking into the facts of the impending situation in Stephenville. We have to take into account the expectations of the provincial government as to alternative sources of employment that can be provided in Stephenville. It is not clear at the present time what the employment situation in Stephenville is likely to be later this year. We are examining carefully all the factors, and we will take what action proves to be appropriate. When a decision is reached after full study, it will be announced in the usual way.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in an effort to be helpful I wish to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of his concern about the employment situation at Stephenville, Newfoundland, and in view of the number of United States citizens who enter Canada as landed immigrants with the intention of working only on certain projects and then returning to the United States, will he consider the job opportunities available in British Columbia when he is looking for employment for individuals who may be unemployed?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, we will consider all job opportunities, even those in British Columbia; there is no doubt about that.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

PROVISION FOR INQUIRIES INTO PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-173, to amend the Combines Investigation Act (increased prices).

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Saltsman: The purpose of this bill is to enable the director of investigation and research appointed under the Combines Investigation Act to cause an inquiry to be made into the increased price in the case of any commodity with the view to determining whether increased wage costs and increased costs of raw materials and other relevant costs warranted the increase which was being imposed upon the public, and to report thereon.

The bill also seeks to carry out the substance of the subamendment moved in the house by the leader of the New Democratic Party on March 21, 1966, which was as follows: "this house further regrets that the government has not established a prices review board—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that under standing order 71 he is permitted only to give a brief explanation. Perhaps he is now going beyond the limits imposed by this standing order.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION IN CURRENT DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Is he in a position today to make a statement in regard to the dispute between the C.B.C. and the promoters or producers of "This Hour Has Seven Days"—I almost thought I might say 14 months.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What has the Prime Minister to say in that regard? Has he been in communication with the president of the C.B.C. and with the representatives of these people, and will early action be taken?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was in touch by telephone with the president of the C.B.C. yesterday afternoon. He phoned me from Montreal after he had received the telegram to which reference was made yesterday. At that time he told me he and his board would be considering that telegram, and he would send me a copy of any message they should send to the parliamentary committee which is dealing with this matter, and which perhaps I may be permitted to say is itself providing good offices in this situation.

As a result, last evening between ten thirty and eleven o'clock I received a message from Mr. Ouimet sending me a copy of the message which he had sent to the chairman of the committee. I believe the committee itself considered this telegram last night. If I may be permitted to quote from the telegram which was sent to the chairman of the committee, a copy of which was sent to me, it was to the effect that he—that is the president of the C.B.C.—would be pleased to meet at any time with the Prime Minister or any other person or persons that I may designate, to discuss the present situation and its resolution.

Before the house met this morning I had an opportunity for a short talk with the chairman and vice chairman of the committee in regard to this message which had been sent to them. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am considering what action I should take in regard to this message and the previous messages I have received, and I am aware that the matter is one of some urgency.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the president of the C.B.C. given any assurance to the Prime Minister that he is prepared to relent in his decision, so that the removal of these two men from this particular program will be postponed until further consideration can be given to the whole matter? Because, as I understand it, the representatives of the producers in Toronto have stated they are prepared to postpone their strike ultimatum date provided the stubborn attitude taken by the president of the C.B.C. is at least diminished for the time being.

Mr. Pearson: Well Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the characterization by the right hon. gentleman of the attitude of the president of the C.B.C. I would point out—

Mr. Diefenbaker: It wasn't diplomatic.

Mr. Pearson: My right hon. friend says it was not diplomatic. That is not quite the same thing as stubborn. I would point out that representatives of the producers, and the hosts in question, have appeared before the parliamentary committee and have had an opportunity to state their case to the committee, whereas the representatives of the corporation have not yet had that opportunity, although it has been provided for.

I hope, in the light of the telegram I received this morning, to discuss this matter further with the president of the C.B.C. I shall get in touch with him as soon as I can this morning to see if I can arrange to meet him without delay. In our discussion last evening the question which has been raised by the right hon. gentleman about attitudes in this matter did not arise.

Mr. Diefenbaker: For the benefit of hon. members, will the Prime Minister read the telegram to which he has made reference?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a telegram to the chairman of the committee, a copy of which was sent to me. I do not know if I would be in contempt of the committee if I put it on the record, but I would be very glad to do so if there were not that difficulty. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you can advise me on this.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If there were unanimous agreement in the house possibly we could take a chance on being contemptuous of the committee and hear the telegram to which the right hon. gentleman has just referred. Is there agreement to the reading of this telegram?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pearson: I have already given the gist of the telegram. It reads as follows:

> The following wire was sent this evening to Mr. Pelletier:
> "Re your telegram regarding Prime Minister's kind offer of government's good offices I will be pleased to meet at any time with the Prime Minister or with any other person or persons he may designate to discuss the present situation and its resolution."
> J. A. Ouimet,
> President C.B.C.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): As a supplementary question, in view of the telegram which the Prime Minister has just read and the earlier telegram received from the producers' association, and in view of the fact that the Toronto producers' association has to make up its mind on what to do Sunday night, two days from today, would the right hon. gentleman consider the immediate appointment of someone to act as mediator, someone outside the public service who could start working immediately to resolve the particular problem arising out of "Seven Days", which is the only thing that can solve the situation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Royal.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary was put by the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): May I ask the Prime Minister a related question—

Mr. Lewis: Is the Prime Minister going to answer mine?

Mr. Pearson: I shall be glad to give consideration to that.

Mr. Coates: Can the Prime Minister inform the house when the cabinet committee, which he heads, studying the Fowler report on broadcasting might be prepared to announce their decision on this report which, if done earlier, might have eliminated some of these problems?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member says this is a related question. It does not seem to me to have that character of urgency that would require an answer now, but if the right hon. Prime Minister wishes to answer the question the Chair will permit it.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, of course it is not in order for me to refer to deliberations of cabinet committees, but I can say this committee has been meeting continuously and giving urgent consideration to the matter. It has been receiving the views of many people and organizations, and is hoping to be in a position to make a report to the cabinet shortly.

Mr. Fairweather: As a supplementary question, is it in the contemplation of the Prime Minister that no appointment of a mediator will be made until the deliberations of this special committee on broadcasting have been completed?

Mr. Pearson: Not necessarily, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker I want to get back to the problem facing the C.B.C., if the Prime Minister does not mind one more question. I am concerned about the urgency of this matter and the fact that there is a deadline involved, and am hoping the government will see fit not to postpone the committee meetings but to appoint a mediator before the week end.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am also aware, of course, of the urgency of this matter and realize that anything I can do in this regard should be done immediately.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, coming back to the question asked by the hon. member for Royal, is the Prime Minister giving consideration to the appointment of a mediator? Is the cabinet looking into that matter at the moment, and under what circumstances and with what powers would this appointment be made?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not feel I can answer that question until a decision has been made whether it would be helpful for the government to intervene in that particular way. Before I made that decision I would wish to see the president of the corporation and representatives of the other side of the dispute. I hope to do that very, very soon.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CURRENT TALKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister of Great Britain has stated that he will keep the commonwealth informed regarding negotiations with Rhodesia, and in view of the reports this morning that seven Africans have been killed in riots north of Salisbury and that student demonstrators were found armed with Chinese weapons and were led by terrorists who had been trained in terrorism in Red China, could some information be given to the house on this state of affairs?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government was again in consultation yesterday with the government of Britain. The Prime Minister of Canada has spoken to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. These matters are being closely followed.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is difficult for the Chair to determine whether this type of question is of the urgent and national importance which would warrant an immediate answer from the minister concerned. The hon. member may wish to enlighten the Chair in this respect, but unless that kind of an explanation is provided the Chair cannot judge that there is immediate national urgency.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, with all respect for your decision, this is a very important matter. I was called to a meeting of hatchery operators on Wednesday of this week, at which time they brought this very serious matter to my attention.

Mr. Speaker: A question has to be something more than important and serious in order to be acceptable. There is apparently some general interest in this matter, so if there is no objection and the minister wishes to reply he will be allowed to do so.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact that the question asked by the hon. member for Red Deer regarding the type of weapons used by the Chinese at some place or other, was allowed, I think a question in reference to an important matter pertaining to Canadian citizens trying to make a living in one way or another is of more importance and should also be allowed.

Soem hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has advanced a very interesting and powerful argument, and I will accept it.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question, and inasmuch as I agree that the problems of farmers in Canada are more important than that of the arms used by the Chinese, perhaps I should state that all vaccines have to be approved by the Department of Agriculture before they can be admitted to Canada. The vaccine to which the hon. member referred is now being checked. We hope that checking procedure will be completed by next week, at which time an answer can be given.

REQUEST FOR EXPANSION OF R.O.P. HOG TESTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not wish to add to the difficulties of Your Honour, but a ruling was made in respect of a question I directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Since then another question of a similar nature has been allowed, and I should like to request that my question to the minister be now answered.

Mr. Speaker: It seems the only difference in the questions is that one related to chickens and the other to hogs. Having allowed an answer to the question regarding chickens perhaps we should allow an answer in respect of hogs.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my memory is better in respect of chickens than it is in respect of hogs. Would the hon. member kindly repeat his question?

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I asked whether the minister had received a request for an expansion in the R.O.P. testing of hogs and, if so, what decision has been reached.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker I cannot recall having received such a request, but I will undertake to look into the situation and give the hon. member an answer in this regard.

IMMIGRATION

APPLICATIONS FOR ADMISSION BY THOSE WITH VISITORS' VISAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can he advise the house when and how he proposes to dispose of the applications from about 13,000 people who are now in Canada on visitors' visas?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I believe I answered that question last week. As the hon. member knows, we have to process about 13,000 or more applications. When we make a decision we must be prepared the following day to process the applications. I hope to be in a position to make a statement in this regard within a few weeks.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

STATEMENT BY COMMISSIONER RESPECTING REQUEST BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I would prefer not to ask it but I do so because I feel it affects the privileges of every member of this house. Does the Prime Minister wish to make any statement to the house about the evidence of the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to the effect that in November of 1964 the Prime Minister inquired whether R.C.M.P. files indicated any wrongdoing on the part of any member of parliament in the preceding ten years? Does the Prime Minister wish to make any statement to the house?

Mr. Speaker: I have very serious doubts as to the acceptability of that question. It refers to a statement made in connection with a judicial inquiry, and it seems to me it is not the type of question which should be asked at this time. I realize the matter is of very serious importance, but I am rather inclined not to accept it at this time.

[Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West).]

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to amend the question and ask the Prime Minister whether he did in fact request the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. to make available to him files or information relating to the wrongdoing of hon. members of this house?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair cannot accept the second question for the same reason the first question was ruled out of order.

[Later:]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask whether he has received from the R.C.M.P. any files indicating wrongdoing involving any member of parliament in the past ten years.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question, again, is the same type as those that have been asked by other hon. members and cannot be accepted by the Chair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What have we got; a police state?

INDUSTRY

BEAVERTON, ONT.—CLOSING OF AUTO PARTS PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Industry. Is he aware that Lake Simcoe Industries at Beaverton, Ontario has become a casualty of the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement on auto parts, and that it will be discontinuing production operations, with the result that approximately 220 employees will be laid off?

Mr. Speaker: That question is out of order and cannot be accepted in the form in which it has been asked.

AUTO PARTS—REPORTED STUDY OF CANADIAN MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry arising out of a news report of this morning to the effect that the federal Department of Industry is launching a study in Canada of the auto replacement parts market, and as part of that study questionnaires will be sent to the industries involved in order that the department can expand its knowledge on this subject. Has the minister given consideration to sending the same questionnaire to the trade unions involved in the automobile parts industry in order to obtain the benefit of their information and research on this subject?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is of a very general nature and it does not seem to me that it should be allowed at this time.

STORMS

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION AS DISASTER AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the recent emergency situation in Manitoba resulting from flooding of the Red river, and the more recent widespread havoc created by a violent storm on lake Erie, can the Prime Minister indicate what plans the government has for the establishment of a national disaster fund which would make funds available on short notice when such emergencies occur anywhere in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is another question of very general nature. The hon. member has referred to the possibility of the establishment of a fund to deal with emergency situations which might occur in the future. Under those circumstances the question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question and ask it in a different way. Will the Prime Minister indicate whether the federal government has received requests to assist in areas where damage has been done as a result of the recent storm on lake Erie? If so, what are the intentions of the government in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter was brought to our attention yesterday by an hon. member, as well as by letters from members representing the area concerned. As my hon. friend knows, in respect of matters of this kind any approach for assistance should come through the provincial government, as was the case with the Manitoba floods. We have received no such request from the government of Ontario.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the frequent disasters and requests to the federal government to assist in co-operation with the provinces or organizations concerned, would the Prime Minister give consideration to the bill introduced by the member for Kootenay West that asked for the establishment of a national disaster fund?

Mr. Pearson: I have already given consideration to the desirability and possibility of some kind of disaster legislation which would cover a situation of this kind. This could only be brought about in co-operation and by agreement with the provinces. Perhaps this is a matter that should be discussed with the provinces.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SEAFARERS INTERNATIONAL UNION—APPLICATION TO REJOIN CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask whether, in view of the decision yesterday at the convention of the Canadian Labour Congress by a three to one vote to take steps to re-admit the Seafarers International Union as an affiliate of that body, the minister would now be prepared to take steps to have the Maritime Transportation Unions Trustees Act repealed. If the answer is in the affirmative, would he consider doing this by adopting a bill of which I hope to give notice of introduction later today?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my attention has been drawn to the discussion and vote held yesterday. If my understanding is correct the C.L.C. did not vote to re-admit the S.I.U.; the vote gave the executive of the congress power, after further investigation, to admit them. Until I have a further report I would rather not say anything now.

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE

REQUEST FOR INCREASE TO $100 PER MONTH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. What answer has the government given to a recent request from the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation for an across the board increase in the old age security pension to $100 a month?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that this is not a proper question. The hon. member is asking what answer has been given to an inquiry made of the right hon. Prime Minister. The question cannot be accepted in that form. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson).

Mr Knowles: I will ask it again in another way.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which is relevant to the one asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. When can we expect that item No. 45, with regard to the Canada Assistance Plan, will be brought into the house for discussion?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It is certainly on the priority list, and the house leader will be indicating next week, after we have finished redistribution and after discussing the matter with the other house leaders, how we should proceed in connection with legislation now on the order paper and some important legislation to be put on the order paper.

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of his statement yesterday regarding his decision with respect to the crime probe, does the Prime Minister have any information for the house about the setting up of a royal commission on security?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not in addition to what I have already said in the house, namely that we are considering the terms of reference and the personnel of the commission. I think it should be a commission of three. I hope to be able to make an announcement as soon as these two points are cleared up.

AIR CANADA

ESTABLISHMENT OF DIRECT ROUTE BETWEEN NORTH AMERICA AND RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Transport? Would the minister advise the house whether it is true that Air Canada has decided to establish the first direct airline between Russia and North America?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think this question is so urgent that it can be accepted at this time.

[English]

APPLICATION TO SERVE LIQUOR ON FLIGHTS OVER ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport whether he is aware of the application made by Canada's national air line to the government of Ontario for a licence to serve liquor in the air. I would ask whether the safety officials of his department have given consideration to the matter or made representations to the province of Ontario.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would have to look into the precise status of this matter before it would be wise for me to make a statement.

INCOME TAX

IMPLEMENTATION OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED KINGDOM

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-154, to implement an agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on certain classes of income and to implement a supplementary income tax agreement between Canada and Sweden.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

REDISTRIBUTION

CONSIDERATION OF OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I understand there is agreement among hon. members to consider at this time objection No. 18, the text of which may be found at pages 31 to 33 of the pamphlet distributed to hon. members.

On February 17 last a notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with me in the following terms:

Proposed Electoral Districts of the Province of Quebec:

That, in accordance with section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (statutes of Canada 1964-65, chapter 31), this house should consider the matter of the objections to the provisions of the report of the electoral boundaries commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by the Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, for the reasons hereinafter given with regard to the provisions concerning the province of Quebec as a whole and with regard to certain particular cases:

(1) The commission, throughout the province of Quebec, has given no thought to geographic considerations, to the size of the regions, nor to the density and the relative and possible rate of growth of the population. The commission has ignored or avoided the problems of communication and transport when it divided the province into 74 new electoral districts.

(2) Apparently, the commission was much more concerned with numerical balance than with demographic, geographic and historical facts. Consequently, it has isolated some zones that should have been joined together for the common good of certain areas, both in urban and rural counties.

(3) That the commission has not given sufficient thought to the physical, social and economic cohesion required with regard to several electoral districts that it has established. The commission seems to have or actually has ignored the unity or community of interests and has thus rendered practically impossible an adequate representation in parliament.

In so doing, the commission has not complied with the provisions of section 13 (c) (ii) of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

(4) That the commission has erred in law in not complying with the provisions of section 13 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Bill C-72) as adopted by the House of Commons on November 16, 1964.

(5) The commission should have referred to the debates in the House of Commons at the time the bill establishing the commission was introduced especially to page 741 of Hansard for March 10, 1964, where the honourable Mr. Pickersgill said in substance that members of the commission should have all necessary knowledge with regard to the region, that is geographic, historical and topographical knowledge, and all necessary information. Apparently, the commission did not have such information or knowledge and has neither heard the representations made to it nor taken them into account, and in particular:

(1) With regard to the county formerly called St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville, the commission has removed 6 parishes from the county of Iberville; they are all 10 miles distant from the town of St. Jean. The commission has added others which are located at more than 40 miles from the town of St. Jean, which is the chief town of that county. Several civic organizations have put forward their representations in this connection, but the commission has disregarded them completely.

(2) The commission, by striking out in the province of Quebec the counties with composite names, has created in certain areas an impression of abandonment among the taxpayers concerned. In particular, the county of Nicolet-Yamaska, entirely revised by the new redistribution, is embraced by the counties of Richelieu, Drummond and Lotbinière. The commission should have kept a name more true to history by calling the new riding of Richelieu "Richelieu-Nicolet" or "Nicolet-Richelieu".

(3) Concurrently, the county of Charlevoix should have been called Charlevoix-Saguenay, since so many municipalities of the former riding of Saguenay are included within the boundaries proposed by the commission.

In the case of Montreal-Ste-Marie, not only has the commission totally disregarded the representations made during the public hearing held in Montreal on August 31, 1965, but it has also ignored the written representations forwarded afterwards to the chairman of the commission, responsible for the province of Quebec, and which confirmed the objections raised during that hearing. In so doing, the commission has brought isolation to a rather large sector of the population of that county. In this specific case, the commissioners as a whole have truly shown that they did not know anything about the geographical realities of an important sector of the county of Montreal. They have, furthermore, in the revised map which they tabled in the house, aggravated the illogical situation which they had previously created in their preliminary report. The commission should not have divided into sections the former county of St. Mary by an imaginary boundary, while a railway track served the purpose of a natural boundary for the eastern boundary of that county.

The commission did not know and obviously still does not know that a block of houses is hemmed in between the boundaries it has proposed and the new county of Hochelaga by a railway track, a viaduct and playgrounds, which keep this portion of the population at a distance of about three quarters of a mile from the county to which it is supposed to belong. The commission acted while being unacquainted with the facts and the geographical and physical situation, contrary to section 13 of the act, in particular to paragraph 3 (sub-paragraph i). In addition, the commission did not take into account the population increase anticipated for that county, since the Habitat 67 project to be erected on the Expo site is included within the boundaries proposed for the riding of St. Mary and will result in an increase of 2,000 inhabitants in that county, without mentioning the difficulties in communication which will be created when one thinks that this part will be more easily accessible by the southern shore of the St. Lawrence river or by the MacKay pier, situated in the western part of the city of Montreal.

Furthermore, the commission has reconnected in the map proposed the part of the Lafontaine park, which should have been kept in the riding of Lafontaine for obvious historical reasons. By extending the new boundaries of the riding of St. Mary toward the north, the commission has obviously shown its ignorance of the practical and geographical aspects of that zone.

The commission should revise the proposed boundaries and replace them as follows: the riding of Montreal-Ste-Marie would be bounded on the south by the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, on the east by the railway track of Canadian Pacific Railway, on the north by Rachel street up to Papineau, and on the west by Papineau street toward the south up to Sherbrooke, then towards the west on Sherbrooke up to Amherst and toward the south up to the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I was listening yesterday to hon. members speaking on redistribution in Ontario, and not on objection No. 18. The same thing is happening for the whole country. It is happening for Quebec too naturally. It is because these questions of redistribution are rather ticklish for all members. We regret the loss of a little part of our riding. We cannot object to having something added to the riding we are currently representing. In short, we are witnessing some remarkable fancy skating.

This morning I met representatives of municipalities such as Lucerne, Deschênes, Aylmer, not far from the riding of Hull. The reason is that they prefer remaining in the framework and the boundaries of the present Gatineau riding rather than being added to Hull.

From the geographical standpoint, I feel the city of Hull is poorly divided as an electoral constituency. In fact, the northeast part of the city is in Gatineau riding, while the area generally known as "old Hull" is included in the constituency of Hull, comprising the municipalities of Gatineau Point and Gatineau as far as Buckingham. It is quite natural for the city of Hull to be located in the same riding. So much for the neighbouring areas.

In our area, according to the proposed redistribution, three constituencies will be established instead of two: Villeneuve, Témiscamingue, Abitibi.

The riding of Villeneuve which I now represent is mainly a mining constituency. All the mining towns are included in Villeneuve constituency.

According to the redistribution, the riding is split in two with the eastern part of the city remaining in Villeneuve, while adding the municipality of Senneterre along with farming or lumber municipalities and maintaining, as mining area, Val d'Or, Malartic, Cadillac.

On the other hand, the mining municipality of Rouyn-Noranda, metropolis of northeastern Quebec, is added to the constituency of Témiscamingue. The riding of Témiscamingue will run from the city of Témiscamingue to Rouyn-Noranda. The north, that is Chapleau, will be called Abitibi.

As to the names of the constituencies, we have no objections. But when we were invited by the chairman of the commission, I think it is the redistribution commissioner, to take a look at the new boundaries and to study them, we accepted. We made representations that were not heeded.

For instance, in the constituency of my colleague, the member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), small municipalities which should normally be in the same riding, are being separated. Representations were made but not heeded in the least. For this reason, on January 19, 1966, the representation commissioner advised you and I quote:

> I must tell you that I no longer have the physical resistance required to fulfil all these functions and tasks.

The commissioner was right, at the time. If he realized that he did not possess the physical resistance—and you are aware that physical health reflects on the mental state—I believe that before presenting these boundaries, he should have given his place to someone physically capable of continuing the consideration of these electoral boundaries.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the representation commissioner led the various commissions and committees by the nose —with a ring through the nose being pulled. We have been unable to meet those people. When we had the opportunity to meet the commissioner himself, he took due note of our comments. He was good at taking notes but he failed to heed our suggestions.

That is why we are faced with a paradoxical situation; 158 federal members have signed petitions to complain about and object to the proposed redistribution. Mr. Speaker. 158 members of all political parties represented in the house out of a total number of 265, this is a handsome majority. Even though 158 members object to the new boundaries, their objections are still being ignored. We are allowed to discuss the matter, but we are pretty sure that the boundaries will be established as proposed at present.

We heard in the other place, Senator Pouliot protesting vehemently against the new redistribution and making much of the fact that 158 members had objected to the new boundaries. Senator Pouliot suggested that a parliamentary committee should be established to look further into this matter of distribution rather than accept it as submitted at present.

Mr. Speaker, as far as the redistribution in the province of Quebec is concerned, no member would object to part of a riding being added to his own for fear of losing votes. This is elementary. But it creates a good impression to object to losing votes; it means that the voters lost are being missed. There are ridings throughout the province of Quebec. We lose a federal riding: we shall have 74 ridings instead of 75.

I find that in Montreal, ridings are added, while the number of rural constituencies is reduced. The chief electoral officer or representation commissioner should have considered that in Montreal, a riding of 50,000 or 75,000 voters is quite normal.

It is normal; people live in huge buildings, all within a few blocks. It is easy then to meet 50,000 people, whereas in a rural riding it is not the same thing.

In a riding like Drummond-Arthabaska, one must cover quite a lot of ground to meet 50,000 people. In my riding, 50,000 people are spread over a distance of 125 miles, whereas in Montreal half a square mile is enough to meet that many.

The representation commissioner should also have taken into account the fact that, in the city of Montreal, 45 to 50 per cent of the electors go to the trouble of voting. Is it very important, in that case, to create more urban ridings? On the other hand, in rural ridings, 75, 80, 85, 90 per cent of the people vote. There have been by-elections in two Montreal ridings, namely Laurier and Saint-Denis. The results show that 42 and 43 per cent of the people voted whereas almost 60 per cent did not. Those people are not interested in going out to vote. Why give them additional ridings? It seems illogical to me.

Let us have rural ridings and let us keep them because the people in them go out to vote, they take an interest in politics, they know what is going on in politics. In the city of Montreal, quite often, if you ask someone who is the Minister of Justice in Ottawa, he does not even know. If you ask at what level the coming elections will be held, what election campaign is under way, some might say that it is a federal election. They do not even know that the election is provincial. No one is interested in municipal, federal, provincial elections. The hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier) knows that, because it is the same thing in his riding; people do not know what is going on and do not want to know.

Mr. Speaker, the representation commissioner did his work badly. I said that the first time we had a chance to speak of redistribution, when he stated himself that he was physically incapable of discharging his duties. It is not enough to say it, he must do something about it.

With regard to the members of those provincial committees responsible for setting the boundaries, some of them, in the province of Quebec did not know anything about federal redistribution. Would it not have been fairer to have the work done by a parliamentary committee made up of people interested in federal redistribution? Moreover, hon. members could have been consulted. When a riding is broken up, divided or taken apart, the matter should at least be discussed with the member.

I think that there was a redistribution in 1947. At that time, the members had been asked to attend a round table conference and to discuss the matter with the representation commissioner. When a parish had to be transferred to another county, we talked the matter over. Everything went fine, without any animosity or bitterness. Of course, it was in 1947, that is 19 years ago.

[English]

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, a photograph has just been taken in this chamber. I would suggest that every effort be made to determine who the person was who took it so as to help the officers of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The matter is being looked after by the security forces of the House of Commons.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I thought that the hon. member wanted to take my picture. I was wrong. It would have been the greatest souvenir of his life. Maybe he wanted to get into the picture, but he is too far away.

Mr. Speaker, the commissioner knows that the members do not accept these new boundaries. Why have the views expressed by the members who appeared before that commission and who have been consulted not been taken into consideration? They were told: Oh, yes, yes, we make notes. Finally, when the electoral map was presented, it was still the same thing, the same boundaries.

Mr. Speaker, I hold the representation commissioner responsible for that situation. In the past, people were satisfied, and the commissioner must have realized it. But now 158 members, Liberals, Conservatives, members of the New Democratic Party and some of my own group, two independents—the whole party—have objected to certain aspects of those boundaries.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take any more of the time of the house today. But I do say that I give my whole-hearted support to the remarks made by Senator Jean-François Pouliot, namely that irresponsible people had dealt with the boundaries concerning the new federal constituencies. I endorse what he said in the other place.

The whole question should be brought back before parliament, where we should initiate a parliamentary committee, on which members and even senators could sit, so as to do justice to the counties as a whole and to the members who have complained.

Mr. Speaker, I placed a bill on the order paper of the house, that is Bill No. C-143. I would have liked this bill to be passed before consideration of the redistribution. We did not request the unanimous consent of the house in this regard, so that the redistribution will undoubtedly have been implemented when the bill comes before the house. Bill No. C-143 will then be useless.

This bill pointed out the importance of creating a parliamentary committee to consider the new distribution and to establish fairer, more sensible and more logical boundaries than those proposed in the present report on redistribution.

Under these circumstances, we could have told the commissioner to take a rest, because he no longer has the physical capabilities to perform this job. Then, we could have retained the services of a qualified commissioner, who could have dialogued with the members who will be losing their ridings tomorrow or will be two to represent a county, like for my county. Once redistribution is accepted, there will be the member for Villeneuve and the member for Témiscamingue and Chapleau county will no longer exist.

In the ridings of Hull and Gatineau too, there will be changes.

Mr. Caron: There will be two members for the same city.

Mr. Caouette: Two members for the same city, probably. After the election there will nevertheless be two members in the same city.

For all these reasons, I believe I must call the attention of the house to the importance of setting up a parliamentary committee to recheck the distribution and to endeavour to give satisfaction, not only to members who are here, but to those of tomorrow, and mainly to the people of those constituencies.

Speaking of my riding, people are not satisfied with the separation of Val d'Or, Rouyn, Noranda and Malartic from Rouyn-Noranda. Though the chief electoral officer says geography requires such changes, it does not change the total number of votes. From the geographical point of view, the population of the constituencies of Chapleau and Villeneuve was well within the requirements of the Election Act when introduced and passed last year. They simply wanted to carve out of these ridings Ladysmith, Quyon and Campbell's Bay, which will be added to Gatineau.

Mr. Caron: That becomes Pontiac riding.

Mr. Caouette: In the north, Chapleau county is chopped up. Magic tricks are performed with these ridings. It is incredible. An acrobat member might succeed, but some parishes have to be jumped over to reach the end of the riding. The people who have determined those boundaries have probably never seen the area.

Mr. Speaker, for all these reasons, I feel the house should, at the earliest possible moment, approve the principle of a new parliamentary committee to study the electoral map and to proceed in such a way as to give justice to the people involved.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention to raise any complaints over the new boundaries proposed for the constituency of St. Hyacinthe. The municipalities that are being added to the new Saint-Hyacinthe riding are most interesting, their populations are most pleasant. I look forward with great pleasure to the opportunity of meeting the inhabitants of these new municipalities and to discuss their problems with them.

My constituents, however, would be greatly disappointed if I were to fail to call attention to the dissatisfaction they have expressed to me upon learning they were being removed from the present constituency of St. Hyacinthe.

The commission has apparently adopted the policy of removing hyphenated names. On this point, I cannot agree entirely, because I do not see any inconvenience in designating a federal riding by the two names of the provincial counties which make up the constituency, since it is one method of identification for the people who make up the federal riding. There are no municipalities where people failed to express to me their dissatisfaction on learning that they were being removed from my riding to be transferred to another constituency. Representations were made by political associations, others by municipal councils and it seems that members of the commission were not at all interested in the opinions expressed to them by people who heretofore made up the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot.

As an example, I cite the case of the municipality of St. Simon de Bagot, which is part of the St. Hyacinthe district and which has contacts on economic, financial and educational matters, with St. Hyacinthe. This municipality, and many others located within a short distance of St. Hyacinthe, find themselves transferred to a neighbouring constituency. If my memory serves me, it is to the constituency of Drummond.

It seems, Mr. Speaker—it not only seems, it is a fact—that to set the proposed boundaries, all thoughts of regionalism have been eliminated precisely at a time when municipalities join together to preserve and promote regionalism, as well as the local usages and customs of the inhabitants of these constituencies.

All the factors involved in the grouping of municipalities have been totally ignored. To my mind, a major error is being committed.

The same procedure as in the past should have been followed, by adding to certain ridings which did not have the required quota of population, the necessary number of voters, some municipalities neighbouring on the present boundaries of the existing ridings. Thus, regionalism, the significance of economic rural and cultural centres which already exist among our people, would have been respected.

As for the constituency I represent here, there are approximately 60,000 residents within its present boundaries.

The first thing the commission should have done would have been to include the whole provincial riding of Bagot in the new constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe. Thus, a population of 65,000 or 66,000 would have been obtained.

My good friend, the member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Pilon), would not have been deprived of voters and supporters whom he is surely very sorry to lose. On the other hand, my good friend for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) would not consider with as much apprehension the inclusion of long-standing Conservative strongholds which will surely give him trouble in the next election.

Mr. Pepin: It might have been true at one time, but they have already changed.

Mr. Ricard: Unanimous consent would have been given to a very efficient method of effecting a new redistribution.

As I said earlier, the representations made have been ignored.

I have here copies of the representations made to the commission by the Progressive-Conservative Association of the Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot riding. Other representations were also made by the municipality of Saint-Hugues and by various other municipalities, but I do not have them here. All stated, however, that the commission had completely overlooked the fact that St. Hyacinthe has long been considered as the natural centre of the area where the municipalities being transferred to another riding have always transacted their business, whether economic, financial or educational.

• (12:30 p.m.)

For instance, the St. Hyacinthe regional school district comprises all the ridings and municipalities in Bagot county. It would certainly disappoint them very much if, sooner or later, they were to belong to another riding.

I have here copies of a newspaper, Le Saint-Laurent of Rivière du Loup, in which the writer, Senator Jean-François Pouliot, expresses well the opinions and impressions to which the revised electoral boundaries have given rise.

I shall only mention the titles, Mr. Speaker, to show you how strong the reaction was.

In the July 29 issue, the writer in question entitled his article:

The madness of the new wave.

In his article he says, and I quote:

A revision of electoral districts is merely a readjustment of the boundaries of electoral districts so that these might be more equitably represented in the Canadian Parliament.

He finds fault with the way redistribution has been planned.

His second article, published in the August 12 issue of the same paper, was entitled:

The rage to destroy everything.

In his article he endeavours to justify what has been recognized till now, that is, the ridings now recommended.

His August 19 article was entitled:

Quebec disfigured by the Langlois Commission.

All this, Mr. Speaker, to say that surely the right thing was not done, that is to say that the true picture of the province of Quebec was not taken into consideration and that the new ridings will cause such transformations as will create much confusion among the people.

I deplore the fact that I will lose a good number of my electors who in the past have always shown me great consideration. I am not speaking from a political point of view, as the smile of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin) would indicate. Never in my dealings with my electors, have I allowed their political affiliations to influence me, for I feel that I am here to fulfil my duty as a member of parliament, and in that role I do not think of the person I am speaking to as Liberal, Conservative, Creditiste or other. I merely want to help.

It is with a deep regret that I will leave these people for my relations with them have always been excellent in the past. I am grieved that, in the near future, these relations will be brought to an end.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I feel the commission should think it over and consider the objections brought forward in this house, which, for the most part, have not been made in a partisan way but simply to meet more adequately the wishes and needs of the population.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I will try to keep my remarks as general as possible.

The house is not without knowing that I was supposed to talk on objection No. 3. But since the matter seems to have been solved because it has been deferred to the commission concerned, I would like to make a slight digression, to thank my colleague from Quebec East (Mr. Duquet) who was kind enough to substitute for me and justify my opposition.

I must add that I had a very good excuse because last Wednesday I was visiting the ridings of metropolitan Toronto, where I saw for myself that my colleagues from Toronto enjoy certain advantages of which we are a little envious.

I would even add another digression, Mr. Speaker, at the risk of surprising some of my colleagues. The delegation which visited metropolitan Toronto and of which I was a member was made to feel warmly welcome. We were overwhelmed by the hospitality extended to us and will remember it for a long time to come. I wish to thank the citizens of Toronto. We rediscovered Toronto, we saw a new side of it.

And now, coming back to redistribution, my remarks will be of a general character. I have been listening for several days to everything that has been said on that subject.

What strikes me, as a newcomer, is precisely that the protests are coming from all quarters. Reference was also made to the bitter protests of the hon. senator whose name was mentioned a little earlier; his stand does not surprise those who have followed his career, but they are perhaps too harsh, under the circumstances, even if there is some truth in what he says.

I also listened with much attention and read with interest objections from all those who are against the new redistribution. I think just the same that it is a little impressive to see over 150 members and several distinguished people, who have had experience in elections, protesting against that redistribution.

That is precisely what must make the house take notice and find a compromise which might be satisfactory.

Of course, any redistribution is painful, it never goes without hurt; everyone knows it and has always known it.

In spite of all, I think that until now objections have been very constructive. None of the members protested simply because his party had been disadvantaged or his chances of being elected had been endangered.

However, some criteria have been forgotten. From all I have heard and seen, it seems to me that not enough consideration was given to what I would call regional homogeneity. Up to a certain point, efforts were made to divide what the Creator had united because there are regional areas which live together and whose needs are similar. I do not find it logical to cut into such a whole.

As an illustration of my assertion, I shall refer to my riding which I know best. Some parishes have been taken away whose people seem resigned to go to the riding of Berthier. Some 3,000 of my electors have been taken away from me to be given to the hon. member for Berthier, which is not so bad if one considers the fact that most of them did not object. But Trois-Rivières-Ouest, which is part of greater Trois-Rivières, was removed from the constituency.

The people from Trois-Rivières-Ouest work in Trois-Rivières and go there every day to do their shopping.

Those people will be far removed from their member—I do not know how many miles—and for their business of the riding they will have to go as far as Saint-Michel-des-Saints.

I have been trying to find a semblance of logic in that, but without success. Besides, the municipal council of Trois-Rivières raised an objection and I think that the commission should listen to such an objection.

• (12:40 p.m.)

If I consider redistribution from a personal and selfish viewpoint, I am perfectly satisfied. The riding of Trois-Rivières, to which Cap-de-la-Madeleine will be added, will certainly be the finest, whatever my colleagues may say.

Cap-de-la-Madeleine is a city of miracles. In my case, politically speaking I am interested in miracles and I am inclined to thank the commission for what it has done for me.

As a member, I understand the sensible and logical representations which come from those who will be removed from that riding. I emphasize the case of Trois-Rivières-Ouest and I would have liked to make similar representations for the five or six other municipalities. One has to make the best of it. There is no use objecting indefinitely. If I kept Trois-Rivières-Ouest, I would have 3,000 more electors. The member for Trois-Rivières could absorb 3,000 more electors. First, as far as I am concerned, there would not be no problem of distance. Those people live one, two or three miles away from the office of the member for Trois-Rivières and of those who will come after me. Therefore, it is quite natural to leave them as they are. That is my first point. Once again, it seems that the natural entity of groups which have a natural homogeneity was not taken into account.

Another point, even at the risk of being repetitious, names were mentioned in those objections but I should like to insist at least on the retention of our name. My county is called Three Rivers in English but there is no such thing. A federal act was passed, in 1953, to the effect that my riding must be called Trois-Rivières. It was sanctioned by a provincial statute in 1937. Those who are interested in legal texts may consult Statute I, George VI, chapter 106, section 1, as far as the provincial act is concerned. For the federal act, it dates from the time the Election Act was passed in 1952.

I ask my hon. colleagues not to consider as fanatism my insistence for the retention of the name of my riding and of my city. I thank the hon. members who were kind enough to accede to my request. However, again yesterday, it was called Three Rivers in Hansard.

It is also important for several other ridings to give names having a meaning and evoking something.

I am coming to the conclusion of my remarks. I would like to propose a solution which might be satisfactory.

Approximately 150 members made representations in 27 different objections. I noted that several of these objections are not very serious. I do not want to throw discredit on them but they do not seem to raise serious objections. In many cases, they only deal with details. When it has to do with a name, it is easy to bring a solution. Some members made representations while they seemed ready to resign themselves. They do so for conscience's sake, because some of their voters protested to them. They do not seem to insist too much. They seem ready to accept the recommendations for the readjustment of boundaries.

The commission could perhaps yield to these objections which are not too serious, for instance in the case of a name or of minor changes of boundaries.

Some members do not insist too strongly on winning their point; they are willing to yield after having made their representations; they are resigned to the settlement of the case. Only a few ridings would remain to be revised in each province.

With the unanimous consent of the house, an advisory committee of claims could be set up, made up of members of all political parties and the independents, as well as a few senators having a greater experience of elections. I think the Electoral Boundaries Commission would be happy to benefit from the suggestions of this joint committee of revision, which would seek to find solutions to the most serious cases.

Some cases are so illogical that they seem almost incredible. My hon. colleague for Champlain (Mr. Matte) gives away the best part of his constituency; in fact, he loses Cap-de-la-Madeleine with 57 municipalities spread over a very large territory. It is almost inhuman to impose such a thing upon an hon. member.

Again I say that from an egoistic point of view, I am satisfied because I find this sensible and logical, but I support the request of the municipal council of Trois-Rivières-Ouest, which wants to remain in the constituency of Trois-Rivières.

The house should appoint a joint committee, comprising all members of the house and which would act in an advisory capacity to solve the most serious cases, particularly in view of the fact that we are told this state of affairs must be reviewed in 1972. Those periods are too short. We should try and find final solutions which could be used for 25 to 30 years.

Mr. R.-E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, the few remarks I have to contribute to the debate will be short and precise.

In the last two days we have heard, from all parts of this house, echoes of disappointment caused by redistribution in a great many ridings of each province. To raise the commission's spirit, I shall say immediately, at the very beginning of my remarks, that the people of Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes accept, in principle, the recommendations of the commission dealing with the geographical limits of the riding. The main reason for this satisfaction, naturally, is the fact that nothing was taken away from us, that we are left with all the assets which are ours, with all the variety and diversity of interests which is our characteristic and, what is more, because the most attractive flower of Terrebonne, namely St. Sauveur-des-Monts and the municipality of the parish of St. Sauveur, was added to our garden.

Farming and handicraft centers, quaint touristic and holiday resorts, drawing hundreds of thousands of visitors, St. Sauveur Village and St. Sauveur parish will give Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes new reasons for pride and all the citizens of this constituency welcome them most cordially.

I wish to extend my condolences to the member for Terrebonne over his loss which becomes our gain, but we are confident we may provide the added population with the same effective and dignified representation it experienced under Messrs. Cadieux, Nantel, Chapleau and Masson.

Besides, we are happy to call on the citizens of St. Sauveur to share our pride and our history, take their place at the discussion table and have their say in community matters.

The constituency of Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes is particularly proud of its history,

Mr. Speaker, and its sole objection to the recommendations of the commission bears precisely on one point: the citizens protest unanimously and strongly against the proposed cancellation of the words "Deux-Montagnes" to reduce the name to "Argenteuil" only. By one stroke of the pen the commission deletes a name which fills very remarkable pages of our history and traditions, local, provincial, and federal as well.

Our request is very simple. We wish to keep intact the name of the county, that is "Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes", and this request being simple and easy to grant, we urge the commission kindly to take it into account.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, taking part in this discussion on the objections for submsision to the Electrical Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec, I should like first to endorse the earlier remarks of the member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) when he said that an electoral redistribution is always a painful operation.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the commission, that this operation is all the more painful when a member of this house sees his riding completely removed from the electoral map. Since we started discussing this legislation, I made every effort, with the support of my party, to have a tolerance of 33⅓ per cent accepted, so that we might keep our constituencies.

Since we were unable to obtain a 33⅓ per cent tolerance for Nicolet-Yamaska, where the population numbers 46,000, the commission was compelled to work with a tolerance of 15, 20 and 25 per cent. Subsequently, we, on this side of the house, used every possible means to ask parliament to appoint a representative of each of the main political parties on the commission in order to advise the commissioners on the procedure to be followed in effecting the new redistribution.

When I heard earlier the member for Trois-Rivières suggest setting up a board of review made up of representatives of political parties, I remembered that after a discussion of many weeks, unfortunately our suggestion was not accepted. I realize today with much regret that there is no possibility of maintaining the constituency of Nicolet-Yamaska which is well known throughout the province and the country.

Further, the people of the electoral district of Nicolet-Yamaska find that their riding is being split up among the three following ridings: Lotbinière, Richelieu and Drummond.

Mr. Pepin: They are lucky.

Mr. Vincent: The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys says they are lucky people. This is not what I have been told repeatedly for a year and specially so, since we have had the second report from the commission.

When you work in a riding, when you have come to share the same way of life, you want to keep your identity. I believe the voters of Nicolet-Yamaska wanted, in any way possible, to keep their identity, their name, the name of their constituency and, also, their own federal member of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, since there is no possibility, as far as I can see, of doing anything whatsoever to keep the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska, I am going to try a final appeal to the commission. In saying a final appeal, I believe a number of persons will realize in a few days the meaning of it. Here it is: A great part of the riding of Nicolet—including the city of Nicolet—runs toward the county of Richelieu. We know that the name of Nicolet applies to a diocese, a river, a city and that it is also a historical name giving—to the people hearing or naming it—the exact location of the place where the Nicolet area is located in the province of Quebec.

We were told that hyphenated names were to be avoided, as far as possible, in the case of electoral constituencies. As we can see in the report of the commission, in some provinces other than Quebec, hyphenated names have been kept. I should like here to tell the commission for the province of Quebec that I have no objection to the name of Richelieu, but I should like the new riding to be called Richelieu-Nicolet or Nicolet-Richelieu. I am sure my colleagues in the house will support me in this, as will the hon. Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys who represents a beautiful county included in the diocese of Nicolet. I am sure he, too, will want to keep the name of Nicolet on the federal map. I also sincerely believe that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) who will represent the riding of Richelieu until the next federal election will not object to adding the name of Nicolet to that of Richelieu, to make up the riding of Nicolet-Richelieu or Richelieu-Nicolet.

If the members of the commission study this important matter properly, they will find that the people of my county hope the new riding now called Richelieu will be named Richelieu-Nicolet or Nicolet-Richelieu.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to make this suggestion in my region and I had the support of everyone, some even saying that if the riding could not be called Richelieu-Nicolet—and I do not think the commission will object to the name—it should be called the riding of Lac Saint-Pierre, a name much more representative of our region.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I repeat again that it is hard for a member of the house who took an important part in the politics of his riding, particularly in three consecutive elections, and who knows almost everyone there by their name, to see his riding swallowed up by three different counties in the space of a few days. It is very painful.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude on this note, thinking earnestly that the commission will at least study the proposal which I am making.

Further, I almost urge the commission to keep the name of Nicolet for this new constituency called Richelieu.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Are there any other members who want to take part in the discussion of objection No. 18? This objection having been considered by the house, it is the Speaker's duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission together with a copy of objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

The house will now proceed with consideration of objection No. 27. On February 18, 1966, Mr. Speaker was presented with a notice of objection followed by a motion in the following terms:

Proposed Electoral Districts of the Province of Quebec:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (chapter 31, statutes of Canada 1964-65), consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the electoral boundaries commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, for the reasons hereinafter specified.

That the commission in revising the boundaries of all the electoral districts of the province of Quebec has not taken into sufficient account the social and economic factors as well as the community interests affecting the people of the province of Quebec. Furthermore, the commission has not taken into consideration the sparsity, density or relative growth of the population of the various regions of the province, the accessibility, size or shape thereof, as is provided for by section 13 (c) (i) and (ii) of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (13 Eliz. II, Chap. 31)

That the commission reconsider the boundaries of all the electoral districts of the province of Quebec, taking into account the said social and economic factors as well as the community interests and the relative rate of growth of the population.

That the boundaries of all the electoral districts of the province of Quebec be revised, consideration being given to the above-mentioned factors, as provided for by section 13 (c) (i) and (ii) of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (13 Eliz. II, chap. 31)

• (1:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, when the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act was passed I think all hon. members without exception supported its principles and aims. Very serious objections were raised in the debate before the act was passed and these objections were largely overcome because the government included section 13. This section contains the following words which made the whole thing palatable to a majority of members of the house. I will read the opening paragraph of section 13:

In preparing its report each commission for a province shall be governed by the following rules:

I will skip paragraphs (a) and (b) and go to (c):

the commission may depart from the strict application of rules (a) and (b) in any case where

(i) special geographic considerations, including in particular the sparsity, density or relative rate of growth of population of various regions of the province, the accessibility of such regions or the size or shape thereof, appear to the commission to render such a departure necessary or desirable, or

(ii) any special community or diversity of interests of the inhabitants of various regions of the province appears to the commission to render such a departure necessary or desirable—

I think it is fair to state that it was the understanding of all members of the house that the commissions for the various provinces would apply these rules, that they would sent people out to the various constituencies to find out what these communities of interest were, that they would hold public hearings to find out what geographic factors and community of interest factors existed and would then act upon what they had found out through investigation by their own officials and at public hearings.

What has been the result in most of the provinces and with most of the commissions involved? I would submit that in at least five provinces the commissions have not done what I feel they were morally obliged to do under the terms of section 13 (c) of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. The commission for the province of Quebec did not, to my knowledge, send out representatives or officials to investigate local community of interest factors. In most instances, because of the method by which notice was given, communities, municipal councils and so on did not have time to make formal objection to the commission and consequently with the exception of a few areas objections were not legally made to the commission.

A great many people appeared at the hearings and were ruled out of order by the commissioner. He was entitled to do this under the terms of the act. But if a little more leniency had been shown, I submit he would at least have been following the intent of the act, which the House of Commons certainly directed the commission to do when it passed the act.

In my part of the country—and I am using this area simply as an example—under the present constituency limits there are five constituencies squeezed in between the St. Lawrence river, the American border and the Richelieu river. These five constituencies are in a geographic triangle and each of them has a population which with one exception is very close to the 70,000 average established as a standard for the province of Quebec.

One would have thought that under those circumstances the commission would have tried to make as few changes as possible in the boundaries. Instead they have simply drawn lines starting at the westernmost part of the province of Quebec where the St. Lawrence River crosses the American border, have gone eastward until they had a population of 70,000, drawn a line from the St. Lawrence River to the American border, and then they proceeded eastward and repeated this process. In so doing, Mr. Speaker, they have destroyed several community of interest areas which have existed since the region was colonized 150 years ago.

Quite frankly, I think the reason for our passing this act was to improve our democracy and the representation in parliament of the Canadian people. If the result of this redistribution is the reverse of that objective, surely the commission should at least study the situation and reconsider its decision in the light of objections which have been made. I think in a democracy like ours the most important principle of all is that it should be the aim of every level of government to provide citizens with the most effective way of exercising their influence upon government through their elected representatives. The commission was set up with this object.

It was hoped when we passed the act that when the work of the various commissions was completed Canadians from coast to coast would be more equally represented in the House of Commons than they had ever been in the past. I am afraid this is just not going to be so. When people in a constituency have worked together for generations in regional organizations, which in my area range from livestock exhibitions and purebred livestock clubs to hospital, recreational and school associations and committees, when they are concerned with water problems along an entire river valley, when they are linked together by trading patterns and communications, have a community of interest in waterfront development along the St. Lawrence River and share a regional approach to industrialization and agriculture, the commission should be prepared to recognize such areas of common interest and give consideration to them when redrawing electoral boundaries. This was the whole purpose of their holding public hearings. They did not know about these community of interest factors and the hearings were to inform them in this regard.

It would appear that in the province of Quebec at least, with one or two exceptions, the commission ignored the objections made to them. I am informed that this was the case in Ontario, British Columbia, Alberta and Nova Scotia. Quite frankly, I submit that those commissions which ignored objections made to them at the hearings are ignoring the express wishes of the House of Commons and are, I believe, at least morally not fulfilling the obligation which we placed upon their shoulders when we passed the act.

I realize that a fantastic work load was imposed upon the commission. They were given a time limit. If they found, however, that the work load was too heavy, I submit they should have come back to the house and asked for more time. I realize that the work load imposed on the commissioner himself was unbelievable. The result has been that because of the work load imposed on the commissioner and commission, it was simply impossible for them to conduct the full investigation we requested them to conduct when we passed the act. I hope that in the light of the objections filed in the last three months and in the light of the speeches that have been made here in the last two or three days, the commission in the province of Quebec and the commissions elsewhere in Canada will decide to conduct some of these investigations that should have been undertaken in the first place. I feel they will have plenty of time to do this. I do not foresee an election within three years. I believe they have plenty of time to go into this matter thoroughly and completely revise the map of the province of Quebec taking into account community of interest and population growth factors.

By the time the new maps come into effect they will be as out of date as the present maps because the commission has not taken into account the population growth potential of the various areas of the province. I know this is the case with the commission's work in Ontario and I believe there have been similar instances in British Columbia.

One matter that the Quebec commission seems to have ignored completely is the factor of local pride. Local pride is expressed in the names of historic counties. I cannot understand why it should be necessary to remove from the list of constituencies names which have been famous in our historic past, as anyone can ascertain in a history book. In my own case they have eliminated the historic names of Châteauguay and Salaberry. There are no more historic names in the province of Quebec than Huntingdon, Beauharnois and Laprairie. Beauharnois and Laprairie have been preserved. There is no reason why they should not also preserve the other two historic names.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order; I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but if I read the proposed objection correctly it relates to social and economic factors. The hon. member is now dealing with historic events. I should like to ask him if he would relate these events to social and economic factors.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): With all respect, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the historic names of counties are the main factor in preserving local community pride. This is a social aspect and for this reason I submit that I am in order. However, I am not going to dwell on this aspect of the matter except to say I have noticed that in Newfoundland they have managed to retain such historic names as Bonavista and Twillingate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hon. member is speaking about objections to the boundaries in the province of Quebec which allegedly fail to take into consideration social and economic factors.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): I was simply giving examples, Mr. Speaker.

As I said at the beginning, the House of Commons agreed to the passage of this measure, which has some rather unique features in it because it gives the commissions the right to render decisions without appeal, the right to render decisions without the house being able to impose its will upon the commissions. We agreed to the passage of the act because of the inclusion of section 13, especially section 13 (c). I was here at the time, and other members who were here will agree that this section was a major factor in our decision to accept the act. However, the commission in the province of Quebec, as did all other commissions in Canada, had a moral obligation to accord some attention to the factors mentioned in section 13(c)(i) and (ii). Quite frankly, in the last year we have seen many fairly pious editorials about the advantages of independent commissions. If these commissions are not prepared to revise the maps and to change their minds and pay attention to the objections that have been made at public hearings, as well as in the House of Commons in the last three of four days, then I suggest that no group of gerrymandering politicians we could have gathered together in this country at any time in our history could have done a worse job.

In spite of the editorials about the advantages of independent commissions I have serious doubts now. I am prepared to accept the original theory that it is a good idea if the various commissions are prepared to show that they are at least acting in good faith and are prepared to take into consideration the geographic, community of interest, and population growth factors which I consider to be the main reasons for the house accepting this act.

I believe we all agree that this debate has been an exercise in futility because the commission is not obliged to accept the objections we are making here. It is not obliged legally to do so. I should like to ask for the attention of all hon. members when I say that the only useful thing we can do is for the house unanimously to pass a resolution which would not change the law or attempt to do so but would simply be a unanimous resolution expressing the opinion of this house that the commission should pay more attention to section 13 (c)(i) and (ii) of the act. If we do this we will be staying strictly within the act and not contravening it in any way or changing one comma.

A resolution of this sort would have no effect unless it were passed unanimously. I should like to read to the house the type of wording which I think such a resolution should have:

That this house respectfully urges the representation commissioner and the other members of the commissions in each of the several provinces to reconsider all objections legally made to their respective commissions in the light of section 13 (c) (i) and (ii) of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that if we pass this resolution as a body it will have more effect on the commission than any individual objection we could make here. I strongly urge that all hon. members support such a resolution. I should like to read the wording of a porposed resolution in French:

That this house respectfully urges the representation commissioner and the other members of the commissions in each of the several provinces to reconsider all objections legally made to their respective commissions in the light of section 13 (c) (i) and (ii) of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the only useful thing which could be done today would be for the house to pass unamimously a resolution urging the representation commissioner to reconsider the objections made to the respective commissions under section 13 (c) (i) and (ii) of the act.

[English]

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that a resolution of this kind has first to be placed on the order paper, and I would ask unanimous consent of the house to do so. I would then move the resolution, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler). May I have unanimous consent to place it on the order paper, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Winkler: On the record.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Yes, Mr. Speaker, on the record. May I have unanimous consent to place the resolution on the record?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. May I inform the house at this time that the Chair has not yet decided whether this motion is in good form and I should like to report it to the Speaker so that a decision can be made. May I say that we have before us objection No. 27 relating to the proposed electoral districts of the province of Quebec. This resolution seems to have a more general scope and is in the form of a recommendation made to the different commissions. However, a decision on this motion will be brought before the house at a later time.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order in support of the resolution, inasmuch as it is the will of the house, unanimous consent having been given to the resolution, surely we can place it on the record at this time as being the will of the house.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Speaker, Your Honour stated that because the question before the house refers only to one province such a resolution might be out of order. May I suggest to Your Honour that there is no way whereby an objection covering more than one province can be submitted. The act restricts the making of any objection to one province at a time. Therefore there is no other way to present a motion to accomplish the apparent purpose of the house, and it does appear to be unanimous.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order that has been raised, I did not rise to make any remarks while the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie was speaking because I was awaiting Your Honour's reception of the proposed motion.

As I understand it, we now have a motion before the house. I was not clear what it was the hon. member was asking unanimous consent to do. If he is asking unanimous consent to put on the record something which I understood he had already read into the record, then I would have no objection to that. But it seems to me that if the hon. member wishes to introduce a resolution the normal course of doing so is open to any member without any particular delay other than that entailed by the normal procedure of putting it on the order paper.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes to place such a motion on the order paper for the consideration of the house, it seems to me that course is open to him. I cannot quite see where the question of unanimous consent enters into the consideration of his proposal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The house has before it at present objection No. 27. It has relevancy to a general recommendation which will be made to a commission. The Chair feels at this time that it is not able to render a decision but will take the matter into consideration and give a decision later.

• (1:30 p.m.)

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): If the hon. member wishes to continue his speech he can, but I should say at this time that the Chair is not ready to give a decision on the validity of this motion.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I have completed my remarks on this general objection and I believe that my remarks will complete the objections of the province of Quebec. Therefore, if you wish me to raise this point again after I have completed my remarks, perhaps this would eliminate the argument raised by Your Honour that I made the motion on the Quebec objection. The motion is not an objection but simply an expression of opinion by the house as a whole which we wish to have conveyed to the representation commissioners for all the provinces and the representation commissioner for Canada. I do not really see any other way of proceeding. It looks as if the debate might end this afternoon at the rate we are going.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. There will be an opportunity later for the hon. member to make representations beyond the observations he has just made because this motion will be considered by the Speaker's office. The hon. member who has just spoken and other hon. members who wish to make representations may be able to do so later on. Could the hon. member inform the Chair whether that concludes objection No. 27 concerning the province of Quebec?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The house having considered this objection, it is the Speaker's duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of this house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

Mr. Caron: Could the objection be put aside until Mr. Speaker has decided this question? If it is disposed of now the amendment will be of no use.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it the unanimous wish of hon. members to have objection No. 27 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does any other hon. member have any suggestion relating to the proposal made by the hon. member for Hull?

Mr. Stewart: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we could say that discussion on objection No. 27 has been concluded. This would not have the effect, which I think the hon. member for Hull felt it might have, of obliterating the motion proposed by the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie. I understood Your Honour's ruling to be that consideration of that proposal would be allowed at a later time, but that as this proposal is of general application it is not suitable for discussion at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Has any hon. member anything to say on what has just been said?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, may I raise a question on the point of order. I may not have correctly understood what has been said but I take it that what has been suggested is that the house by unanimous consent should agree that this substantive and separate motion ought to be put on the order paper in such a way as to allow immediate discussion of it. That is my understanding of what has been suggested.

If that is the proposal I must say that I for one would not feel disposed to be a party to giving unanimous consent to that course of procedure because, as I read the proposed amendment, in granting unanimous consent we are by implication at least giving tacit approval that in each of the several provinces or in any one of them the commissioners and representation commissions have not given due weight to the sections of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to which the motion refers. I for one would not be willing to imply that I considered that to be the case in every province of Canada.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret).]

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the wording in the fourth line of the motion will perhaps answer the objection of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. It provides that the commissioners in each of the several provinces should reconsider each of the objections legally made to the respective commissions. We are only asking them to reconsider the objections which have been legally made to them. In those provinces where objections have not been legally made to them there simply is no problem.

Unless there is unanimous consent this motion obviously is not going to be of use. If there is unanimous consent, I feel that it is the only useful method of impressing on the commissioners and commissions the fact that this house wants them to reconsider all the objections in the light of section 13(c), paragraphs (i) and (ii).

Individual objections in the house do not bind the commissions. In fact, I do not think that all these expressions of opinion bind them either. I would think that the motion would have more moral effect, if the house would give unanimous consent to it, than if we objected individually to the findings of the commissions. I hope that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni will be satisfied with that explanation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. It is the impression of the Chair that at this time there is not unanimous consent to consider this motion. The Chair has that impression from the comments made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. It was foreseen that the subject matter before the members of the house would be the different objections. I take it that that is the last objection for the province of Quebec. We will now consider the province of British Columbia, objection No. 16.

I point out that when the hon. member presented his motion he asked for unanimous consent. The Chair at that time had the impression that there was unanimous consent, but after hearing the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and some other hon. members the Chair is under the impression that there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, if I understood the hon. member for Comox-Alberni correctly he did not say that he was withholding unanimous consent for the presentation of the motion and the consideration of it by the Chair. I took him to say merely that by giving unanimous consent at this stage he was no binding himself to agree to the motion if the Chair rules it in order.

I believe I am correct in that, am I not? I took it that the hon. member does not have any objection to the Chair taking the motion under advisement to see whether it is a proper one to be made and considered at this time.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I certainly have no objection to any matter that is placed before the Chair by this house being taken into consideration. I cannot quite see the point of this. As to the question of the motion being in order, I had hoped that the Chair might give that consideration. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, from a cursory glance at the motion and from my limited knowledge of the rules it seems to me that there would be little question on this point if a resolution were to be placed on the order paper by the hon. member in the normal course of events. If the resolution before the house by unanimous consent will be dealt with at a later stage after Mr. Speaker has had a chance to examine it, then of course I certainly have no objection to Mr. Speaker considering the resolution.

Mr. Stewart: In view of what has been said just now, may I suggest to Your Honour that you bring to a conclusion formally the discussion on objection No. 27 and at some later hour render a decision on this different question which has been placed before the house.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is there unanimous consent to the suggestion made by the Parliamentary Secretary?

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to have clarification on one point. If we end the discussion on objection No. 27, does that rule out this amendment? I share the concern of the hon. member for Hull. Does that shut off the amendment?

I was in the house last night when hon. members were discussing redistribution in Ontario. The Speaker today refused to allow the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie to refer to Newfoundland. I am now referring to Ontario. Whether you wish to rule me out of order or not, I point out that there was some discussion about the hon. member for Simcoe East not being in the house and not being able to speak for ten minutes on some matter he had in his mind.

I have before me a copy of today's Hansard. As hon. members will see if they turn to page 4485, the leader of the house was speaking. Reference was made to him by the Deputy Speaker who was then in the Chair and the following exchange took place:

> Mr. McIlraith: If it will help, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we can leave objection No. 7 open. The suggestion agreed to earlier was that we close the discussion at this point and allow the hon. member for Simcoe East to speak for a period of ten minutes on another occasion when he is in the house.
> Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?
>
> Some hon. Members: Agreed.
> Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house having considered this objection, it will be the duty of Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer to the report of the boundaries commission, together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house, back to the commission for reconsideration thereof.
> The house will now proceed to objection No. 9—

This matter was brought up last night and I should like to see an opportunity given to discuss the motion later. I think we should leave the objection open as we did yesterday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member for York-Humber is drawing a parallel with objection No. 7 concerning the constituency of Simcoe East. The hon. member for Simcoe East not being present in the house, unanimous consent was given to reporting this objection at a later date. The hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie has made certain representations concerning objection No. 27 relating to Quebec. But at the end of his speech a motion was presented to the house, one which in my humble opinion was not relevant to the subject matter of the objection in that it was a motion general in scope. I asked the house whether there was unanimous consent to referring this matter to Mr. Speaker and I had the impression that this consent was given. But having heard the hon. member for Comox-Alberni I have the feeling that unanimous consent to refer this motion for consideration by the Chair has been refused. I ask again: Is there unanimous consent to refer this motion to Mr. Speaker for consideration later today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): So it is understood that the motion put forward by the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie will be considered by the Chair and a decision given later. The Chair understands that this does not jeopardize the representations which were made by the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie in a formal motion. Objection 27 has been decided by the motion I read a few minutes ago. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Now we shall proceed to the British Columbia, objection No. 16, which is to be found at pages 27, 28 and 29 of the pamphlet.

Proposed Electoral Districts of the Province of British Columbia:

Resolved that, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65) consideration be given by this house to the matter of certain objections to the following provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of British Columbia, laid before the house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19th, 1966, and to the reasons appearing in the said objections, hereinafter set forth.

The objections to the provisions of the report are as follows:

1. Throughout British Columbia the commission failed to give due regard to special geographic considerations, including the sparsity and density of population of various regions of the province, when they set the boundaries in dividing the province into twenty-three (23) new electoral districts.

2. The commission failed to give proper appreciation and consideration to the accessibility of one region to another region and to the size and shape thereof, in several of the rural electoral districts, when determining the boundaries of the same.

3. The commission failed to take into account, and erred in holding that it could not take into account, population trends as established since the census of 1961; such trends should have been taken into account by virtue of section 13 (c) (i) of the act, and would have resulted in substantial variations from the boundaries laid down in the commission's report.

4. The commission failed to give due effect, and erred in not giving due effect, to special community or diversity of interests of the inhabitants of various regions of the province as set forth in section 13 (c) (ii) of the said act, with the result that areas with a community of interests with each other have been separated as a result of the commission's report, and areas formerly included in constituencies or with areas with which they had a community of interests are included in constituencies or with areas with which they have no community of interest.

5. The commission failed, in addition, to give or pay proper attention to the principle of practical feasibility of a representative keeping in physical contact with his constituents and the constituents' ability to make physical contacts with their representative, thereby rendering adequate representation of the people in parliament a virtually impossible task.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret).]

6. Examples of the results of the foregoing and of the effects of the report to which particular objection is taken are the following:

(a) the exclusion of the Williams Lake and adjacent area from the interior riding of Kamloops, with which it has a complete community of interest, and its inclusion with a coastal area in a new riding, including the Queen Charlotte Islands, the inland and coastal areas of the new riding having virtually no interests in common, contrary to the expressed wish of the community of Williams Lake.

(b) The virtual merging of the former riding of Okanagan-Revelstoke with the former riding of Kootenay East, with the result that the communities of Vernon and of Fernie are included in one riding, creating an area not only without community of interest, but quite impossible physically to serve properly.

(c) The exclusion of the Merritt-Nicola area from the Kamloops riding, with which it has a historic and complete community of interests, contrary to the expressed wish of the community of Merritt.

(d) The exclusion of Quesnel from the former Cariboo riding and its severance from Prince George, with which it has a community of interests and commerce, and its inclusion with Kamloops, with which it has minimal interests and commerce in common, contrary to the expressed wish of the community of Quesnel.

(e) The exclusion of the Queen Charlotte Islands from the coastal riding of Skeena, with which they have a community of interests, and their inclusion in a new riding containing Williams Lake and a vast interior ranching and dry belt area, with which they have nothing in common.

(f) The creation of a situation whereby the Williams Lake area is excluded from the Kamloops-Cariboo riding, while Quesnel is added in on the north, although it is impossible for the member for the riding to get from the southern area of the constituency to Quesnel in any practical sense without going through about seventy miles of the Williams Lake area, in the new riding of Coast-Chilcotin.

(g) The concomitant situation whereby the member for Coast-Chilcotin, in order to get from the coastal areas of his riding (which themselves extend over some 480 miles) to the Williams Lake and interior area will, in practice, have to drive or fly another 250 miles from the coast, through three other constituencies, including the Kamloops riding, to get from the one part to the other of his riding.

(h) With respect to distances, it is essential not only that it be practically possible for members to cover their constituencies, it is also a principle to be followed that constituents should be able physically to gain access to the member to discuss business with him. In three constituencies newly-created, the constituent who wishes to go to do business with his M.P., from Powell River to Williams Lake, from Fernie to Vernon, or from Quesnel to Kamloops—or vice versa—will face a return journey in the order of 820 miles, 800 miles, and 540 miles respectively. In other words, given any time at all for the transaction of business itself, a visit to their M.P. for these constituents would involve a two- or three-day undertaking.

(i) The failure of the commission to take into account the relative rate of growth of the areas of Vancouver ordinarily called the west end and Kitsilano since the 1961 census, resulting in the new riding of Vancouver Centre having a presently estimated population well in excess of the applicable limit.

(j) The commission failed to give due effect and weight to the representations made and, in particular, failed to give effect to the quite reasonable representations that if large areas of the former ridings of Vancouver Centre and Vancouver-Burrard were to be combined into a new riding, that the new riding be called Vancouver-Granville.

(k) The subtraction of the municipality of Esquimalt from the Victoria riding separates two areas which have many years of close historical association, as well as a remarkable community of interests. The trend of population growths in B.C. is such that at the next redistribution there is every likelihood the boundaries will be broadened again and, for the foregoing reasons, the municipality of Esquimalt is the logical area to then be restored once more to the Victoria riding. It would appear to be advantageous from all points of view to leave the municipality of Esquimalt in the Victoria riding as at present, particularly since the population of the total area is within the limits allowed to the commission as was the expressed wish of the reeve and the council of the municipality of Esquimalt.

7. Application of the principles heretofore referred to, and avoidance of the anomalies and inequities herein listed, would have the result that the two proposed ridings of Coast-Chilcotin and Okanagan-Kootenay could not be brought into existence as presently recommended. They should be eliminated from proposals for new ridings in British Columbia and a new set of riding boundaries for B. C. drawn accordingly.

For the foregoing and such other objections and reasons as the undersigned members may deem necessary to carry out the spirit, terms and conditions of the said act, it is considered essential that the said report be referred back to the commission, pursuant to the said act, together with this statement of objections, in order that the commission may revise its report to meet the said objections and draw new riding boundaries along the lines referred to in paragraphs 6 and 7 above.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the notice of objection from British Columbia, which is to be found on pages 27, 28 and 29 of the pamphlet, I would point out first of all that it has been agreed to by representatives of all parties in the house from British Columbia. I wish to make it clear that I and those associated with me in approving the notice do not say that it represents the official position of all parties from British Columbia, but it is significant in my view that this notice has been subscribed to by representatives from all parties in our province. To this extent this motion or this notice is, I believe, exceptional and significant in the light of the discussion we are having.

Others will speak to the motion and will express their own views concerning the extent to which they feel their parties or their colleagues in their parties may or may not be committed through the statements contained in the notice. But so far as I am concerned I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that all the members of the Conservative party in this house from British Columbia do subscribe precisely and, indeed, vigorously to the representations which are made herein.

It had been my intention to include in the notice words which would have called for a vote of the house so that the house itself might indicate its acceptance or rejection of the representations therein made. It seemed to me that any such representations would carry much greater weight with the representation commission if they were supported by a vote of the House of Commons than if simply a report of discussion were sent back to the commission. However, Your Honour indicated to me that since no other motion had contained such a provision and, since it was desired to follow a uniform pattern, it would be preferable if I omitted those words from the particular motion under consideration. I agreed to do so reserving, however, my right to re-introduce them by way of an amendment to the motion at this stage. This I would have preferred to do. The amendment would simply have added the words "and that this house do approve the same."

However, I have been engaged in activities in another place in this town recently, and I have not had an opportunity to take part in the discussions between representatives of the parties when agreement was obtained as to the manner in which we should proceed. It seems to me, therefore, that at this stage it would be inappropriate for me to attempt to introduce, with respect to this particular notice of motion, a departure from the generally agreed procedure. For this reason I do not intend now to move an amendment to this notice along the lines I would otherwise have pursued. But I should like to make it clear that in refraining from so doing I do not admit for a moment that this house does not have the right, by an appropriately worded motion in this matter, to record its opinion by a vote. I do not intend to follow that course at the present time only because I think it would upset the procedure which has been agreed upon.

In turning now to the matters contained in our notice, the second thing I should like to make clear at once is that by presenting this motion we are not objecting to the principle that redistribution should from now on be decided by an independent commission. As far as I am concerned as a member of the Conservative party, that is the position. As has been pointed out on various occasions, when we were in government we prepared for introduction to this house a bill with respect to redistribution which incorporated the same principles as the bill which resulted in the matters we are now discussing.

When I said a few minutes ago that representatives from all parties in the house from British Columbia support this motion I should therefore have made it clear that during the discussion held before the motion was drafted it was agreed that the presentation of the motion should not be represented as an objection to the principle of carrying out redistribution by means of an independent commission.

Third, I should like to say we all recognize, and certainly I recognize, the very difficult task which confronted the British Columbian representation commission in trying to incorporate one additional seat into our province and then to carry into effect the principle of relatively equal population in each of the 23 ridings that were thereby to be established.

Especially difficult tasks must face any redistribution commission in British Columbia because of the special nature of our province which arises by reason of its geography. The very rough terrain, the massive mountain chains which run from north to south, transversed only occasionally in an east-west direction by major rivers, the comparative, and here I am making no reflection on the provincial government of British Columbia, but the comparative sparsity of roads and means of communication throughout that vast terrain, all add to the problems. There is further the fact that in our province there is an unusual concentration of population in the southwest corner, what we call the lower mainland area.

While the interior of the province is fast growing and no area is faster growing than Kamloops, nevertheless it does happen that some three quarters of the population of the province is concentrated in an area with a radius of some 100 miles in the southwest corner centred on the great metropolitan area of Vancouver. This, therefore, creates a special problem for any redistribution commission, in meeting the question of how to adjust riding boundaries in the interior, where the vast areas of the province are located which have such a relatively small population, and at the same time creating ridings of a size which are manageable from the point of view of their representation in parliament.

Though recognizing all these problems with which the representation commission was faced I do, however, say with respect to it and with respect to the difficulty of its task that it has nevertheless unfortunately produced in its report certain very anomalous results, results which with respect to at least two of the constituencies it has created make it virtually impossible to give those constituencies effective representation. I shall deal a little later in my remarks with the details of those anomalies, but I do say at this stage that for a variety of reasons the commission has failed properly to apply certain principles. Not only has it failed properly to apply certain principles but it has ignored other principles which should be applied in order to produce an equitable redistribution for British Columbia.

In my view, among the principles which it has applied too rigidly is the principle of equality of population between the various constituencies. I am sure this will be appreciated by the fact I have commented on, namely, that three quarters of the population is concentrated in an area around the city of Vancouver and that if you are going to insist upon such an equality of population between 23 ridings you thereby necessarily create some unworkable ridings in the interior or rural areas. It is this principle of equality of population which I feel the commission has applied too rigidly.

Among the principles I feel it has ignored are those found in section 13(c) of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act under which it was working. I refer specifically to the principle contained in section 13(c)(i) which says that the commission may depart from the strict application of certain rules in any case where:

> —special geographic considerations, including in particular the sparsity, density or relative rate of growth of population of various regions of the province, the accessibility of such regions or the size or shape thereof, appear to the commission to render such a departure necessary or desirable—

As is set out in the detail of our objections, Mr. Speaker, there are many instances of the failure of the commission to apply that relaxation or to take advantage of that relaxation, of the strict rule of equality of population. In particular, in my view the commission has failed to take into account or give effect to the relative rate of growth of population of various regions.

I am going to endeavour to avoid making a specific structure on the commission because, as I have said, I recognize the difficulty of its task. But it is certainly my impression, based upon the attitude of the commission at the various public hearings that were held, that it felt itself bound by the 1961 census population figures. Indeed, I believe members of the commission are on record as saying, "We are not allowed to take into account your views", that is, the views of those appearing before them, "as to the rates of growth that have taken place, the trends of population growth and the shifts that have become evident since 1961."

The commission in being bound by its own rigid, and in my submission erroneous, interpretation of the act, erroneous by virtue of the provisions of section 13(c)(i), was bound to produce certain anomalies, and while I have said anomalies, if you look at one or two of the ridings they are monstrosities, unworkable monstrosities and certainly the commission erred in that it failed to give due regard to the other relaxing principle set out in the act contained in section 13(c)(ii), namely, that it could depart from the strict application of the equality rule where:

> —any special community or diversity of interests of the inhabitants of various regions of the province appears to the commission to render such a departure necessary or desirable.

Those words were not put into the act without purpose. They were put in with the desire that the commission would pay attention to them as being principles parliament properly wished to apply in making adjustments in the constituency boundaries, and the commission has in several important respects completely disregarded that statement of principle.

Next, Mr. Speaker, may I give some examples of the result of the commission's failure to apply these principles I have just read. Before coming to those examples I should say that not only has it failed to apply those principles as they are written but it has failed to apply other principles which are inherent in any approach to the problem of redistribution. These are, first, the principle of accessibility of various parts within a constituency, one to the other and, second, the further principle of the practical feasibility of anyone who may be elected serving his riding efficiently and the practical feasibility of the residents of a constituency obtaining access to their member of parliament when he is back home.

An examination of the proposed map of the redistribution of British Columbia ridings indicates conclusively the disadvantages which will be produced with respect to all these matters unless the commission substantially revises its present proposals. Let me give to the house and record, in the hope that the commission will give very serious consideration thereto, some examples of the kind of things I mean. They are to be found in paragraph 6 and the various sub-paragraphs thereof of the motion which is recorded in the pamphlet at the pages to which I have referred.

In my examples I refer especially to the results that would follow the creation of the two new ridings, Coast-Chilcotin and Okanagan-Kootenay. As a result of the creation of those ridings the following situations will occur. In the one riding of Okanagan-Kootenay will be located the cities of Vernon and Fernie, a riding extending in one great arc from Vernon in the south central part of the province to Fernie in the southeast corner. These are cities which have no community of interests and are quite impossible to serve by one member of parliament.

You will have, for example, in the creation of the Coast-Chilcotin riding, the Queen Charlotte Islands off the coast of British Columbia, one of the most typical coastal areas, having no community of interests with the town of Williams Lake which lies in the interior dry belt area, but both will be included in the same riding.

As a result you will have a riding with areas not only having no community of interests but one which will require a member of parliament, in order to serve the area, having to undertake a journey of some 800 miles first by some means of transport from the Queen Charlotte Islands either to Prince Rupert or to Vancouver—and I suggest the second would be more likely—then travelling from the city of Vancouver up through two Fraser Valley ridings, through a portion of the remainder of the riding of Kamloops and back into his riding of Coast-Chilcotin in order to serve that part. That is an absurdity, Mr. Speaker.

Coupled with that fact one finds that the proposal involves the necessity of the member of what is left of the riding of Kamloops having to go through a part of the new riding of Coast-Chilcotin—that part which has been carved out of the Kamloops riding—in order to get from one part of his riding to another part which has been added on. You thus have the ridiculous situation of members trying to serve their own constituents having to travel through two or three other ridings in order to get from one part to another of their own.

You will also have the additional situation that the town of Merritt, which presently is included in Kamloops riding and which has a complete community of interests with the city of Kamloops—the residents of Merritt do what business they do not do in Merritt in Kamloops which is only 60 miles away and joined by an excellent highway involving only an hour's drive—in order to make possible the adjustment arising out of these two monstrosities, will be included in Okanagan Boundary, with which it has no community of interests. In other words, this city and area that has every community of interest with its present riding will be put in a riding with which it has little or no community of interest.

The same situation applies to Williams Lake. It has no community interest with the coastal area of the new proposed riding of Coast-Chilcotin, but in order to conform with some notions, of which I am not aware, of the readjustment commission, Williams Lake is taken out of its present riding and included in this new area.

I should say at this stage that with respect to all the communities I have mentioned the chambers of commerce and city councils have all passed resolutions making it clear that they object to what is being done because they wish to be left in the riding with which they have a community of interest.

Similarly, as a result of this proposal Quesnel will be taken out of the present riding of Cariboo, in which it is included with the city of Prince George and with which it has a complete community of interests, and will be included in the new readjusted riding of Kamloops, with which it has no desire to be joined as expressed through a resolution adopted by its municipal council.

I could continue in that way, Mr. Speaker, illustrating the anomalies that arise from the proposals of the readjustment commission. So far I have been dealing only with the geographical factors with respect to the constituencies themselves and the communities of interest. Let me now detail for the house, so this will be part of the record, what these new proposals mean in respect of representation. Let me assure you that I consider as only secondary the convenience of the member of parliament who may represent one of these constituencies. I imagine that members of the public might say: Well, you ran for office; you wanted to be there, so do not complain about the difficulties you have in representing us; if you have to travel a long way, that is up to you. That is an understandable view on the part of the general public, so I am not complaining from the point of view of a member who may run and be elected. On the other hand, I think the residents of a constituency have a right to have reasonable access to their members of parliament, and it is from the point of view of the constituents that I talk now about the distances involved. Surely a constituent of mine or of any other member of this house—the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton) or the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford)—has a right to have reasonable access to his member to discuss his political business. However, in respect of these new ridings and the constituencies newly created or reorganized, a constituent who wishes to do business with his M.P. in the Coast-Chilcotin riding will have to face a return journey in the order of 820 miles to get from the place where he may live to the place where his member of parliament is likely to live. In the case of the Okanagan-Kootenay riding, if the member of parliament lives in Vernon a constituent from Fernie will face a return journey of 800 miles just to see his member of parliament. In the case of the new Kamloops riding, if the member lives in Kamloops a constituent from Quesnel would face a return journey of 540 miles just to see and do business with his member.

The answer may be suggested that the member should travel around his constituency. Members do that now and will continue to do so, but they cannot be in their ridings travelling around all the time. It should be possible, and it is a right, for a constituent who wants to see his member of parliament to get to the place where he lives and back in what is a reasonable and physically possible manner.

I know that other members from British Columbia will be dealing with matters particularly relevant to their areas. What I have tried to do in my remarks is outline the general objections and anomalies which will be created. I do not wish to detain the house any longer and will leave it, therefore, to others to deal with other problems, problems relevant to the lower mainland and the Vancouver island areas. But I hope that what I have said in outlining the general principles, and the specific illustrations which I have given, will be enough to convince any reasonable person that the B.C. redistribution commission—and certainly I include its own members in that definition—should scrap its proposal and, as I humbly and respectfully suggest, start all over again.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I must first apologize for not having the speech prepared I ought to have prepared for this occasion. This is not my normal practice. But being vice chairman of the broadcasting committee, which has been sitting three times a day in respect of the "Seven Days" impasse, I have not been paying much attention to redistribution. I should like to indicate, as did the member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), that this notice of objection is signed by representatives of all parties. I concur in the objections set forth in the notice and with all the remarks of the hon. member for Kamloops.

It is in a way unfortunate that this act did not require the commissioners, when they brought in their final reports, to deal with representations and objections made at public hearings because there were, it seems to me, some very important objections made at the public hearings held throughout the province. At the moment it is inexplicable to me why some of these representations were not taken into account. Possibly the commissioners had very good reasons for not doing so, but I certainly cannot understand their reasoning at this moment. It is unfortunate that, unlike a judge, they have not had to say why they did certain things.

I should like to deal briefly with my own riding. I hesitate to say anything about it, Mr. Speaker, because, as you know, under the commissioner's report my riding is eliminated and I am therefore speaking in something of the capacity of a lame duck member. I know that anything I may say will in the minds of many be taken as sour grapes, but it is not sour grapes because I am not too worried about my political future.

While the province of British Columbia gains one seat under redistribution, going from 22 to 23, the city of Vancouver goes down from 6 seats to 5. In coming to this conclusion the commissioners have not made proper use of section 13 of the act. This section was put in the act for very special reasons, and the commissioners have not taken into account what has happened in Vancouver. The details of our objection are contained in subparagraph (i) of paragraph 6 of the notice of objection. They have not taken into account the shifts of population that are occurring and have occurred in parts of Vancouver since the 1961 census.

You will not be familiar, Mr. Speaker, but the commissioners certainly are or should be, with the fantastic rate of growth that has occurred over the last two or three years in what is commonly called the west end of Vancouver and the Kitsilano region of that city—this area is within my riding—where every month a new high-rise apartment block is opened. This development has occurred since 1961, and I do not think the commissioners have properly taken into account, as they should have under section 13 of the act, the growth of population in these two areas of Vancouver. As a result of not having taken into account the rate of growth and shift of population into high-rise apartment blocks, the proposed riding of Vancouver Centre will be the largest population-wise in the province of British Columbia. I suggest that if one were to take a census right now the population figure would be away above that allowed for any riding. I suggest to the commissioners that the riding they have created is away above the legal limit they were to apply.

I have one other remark to make about my own riding, Mr. Speaker. Representations were made to the commissioners quite sincerely by Liberal spokesmen that the name of the proposed riding that encompasses the old Vancouver Centre and Vancouver-Burrard ridings should be Vancouver-Granville. Spokesmen for the Conservative party agreed with that submission and indicated to the commissioners that they thought it was a good idea. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am at a loss to understand why the commissioners did not accept that simple suggestion. There were good reasons for putting forward the suggestion and it would not have hurt anyone to accept it. Therefore I cannot understand why it was not accepted. The request was made because Vancouver-Burrard and Vancouver Centre are very historic ridings and have within them political organizations which have existed for a great many years.

Those people who for years and years have worked in the riding of Vancouver-Burrard, which is to be eliminated, are entitled to go into a new riding on the same footing and with the same status as anyone else. But I am afraid—perhaps this is very minor politics—that those people who have worked for the four political parties in the riding which is going out of existence will have to go into the new political organization as newcomers and deal with those who have been working in Vancouver Centre. If a new name were used I think this would be avoided. I see no reason in the world why the commissioners should not have accepted the recommendation made and agreed to by both parties. That is all I wish to say with regard to my own riding, Mr. Speaker, and I shall now deal generally with ridings with which I personally have no connection.

The hon. member for Kamloops has detailed many of the objections with regard to what the commissioners have done in the interior regions of British Columbia. I concur in what he has said in this respect. British Columbia is geographically a very difficult province for members to represent because of its mountains, rivers and very vast areas. No matter how you draw the electoral boundaries in British Columbia you will have difficult ridings. But it seems to me that whereas we have at the moment two ridings that are difficult for a member of parliament to represent and wherein communication back and forth is difficult, as a result of the work of the commissioners we will have four, if not five, difficult ridings.

I would hope that the commissioners in reviewing their work will get us back to the situation where at most we have only two difficult ridings. As the hon. member for Kamloops pointed out, it is essential that a member of parliament be able to serve his riding properly, that he be able to get about his riding and that the people within the riding be able to get to him to discuss their problems. I think this will be almost impossible in the proposed ridings of Coast-Chilcotin and Okanagan-Kootenay.

We in British Columbia particularly are a long way from the national capital. Our M.P.'s have to spend most of their time in Ottawa because of the long sittings of the house. It is essential therefore that during the periods we are able to get home as many constituents as possible should be able to see us in order to tell us what they need in the area and bring us up to date on the growth and development of the area. I suggest this will be very difficult in ridings such as Coast-Chilcotin and Okanagan-Kootenay.

I wish that one of the commissioners at some period in his life had served as a member of parliament. Had any of the commissioners served as a member of parliament I think they would have had a greater appreciation of those things the hon. member for Kamloops and I are talking about. I suggest that if the member for Coast-Chilcotin, for example, went home for an Easter recess, which would mean he would arrive home on the Thursday before Good Friday and leave a week later, it would be utterly impossible, no matter how much he tried, to get around that riding and visit the various communities within it. If we are to create ridings such as Coast-Chilcotin I hope parliament will authorize the purchase by members of parliament of airplanes, boats, helicopters and horses, because that is certainly what any member of parliament will need to serve the riding of Coast-Chilcotin.

Mr. Aiken: We will have to put horses on the payroll again.

Mr. Basford: It is essential, it seems to me, that ridings should be designed so the parties within them can organize effective political organizations. We as politicians, and even the political scientists, urge members of the public to take an interest in politics and involve themselves in the subject. It is essential, it seems to me, for the health of this country that in each riding the various parties have healthy, vigorous political organizations, nominating candidates, fighting elections vigorously and enthusiastically and, within their own party structures, putting forward policies and principles for consideration both provincially and federally.

I ask the commissioners to consider whether in a riding like Coast-Chilcotin or Okanagan-Kootenay it would be possible for any political party, be it Liberal, Conservative or New Democratic, to organize an effective political organization. I ask each of the commissioners, when they are doing their work, to imagine themselves to be president of the Coast-Chilcotin Liberal organization, the Coast-Chilcotin Conservative organization or the Coast-Chilcotin New Democratic Party organization and faced with the problem of trying to organize a nominating convention. He is going to have to bring candidates to that nominating convention across three mountain ranges, two time zones and from one island which is 100 miles off the coast. I suggest that the president of that riding association is not going to be able to organize a nominating convention. I suggest this condition is not good for the parliamentary democracy we are trying to develop. Had the commissioners had any experience in politics at all, they would have realized this.

As the hon. member for Kamloops has said, British Columbia is a very difficult province indeed in which to try to draw riding boundaries fairly and equitably. We live in a computer age, and I cannot help but get the idea that the electoral boundaries for British Columbia were drawn by computers rather than by human beings. I think there has been too much attention paid simply to the slide rule, simply to the census figures. When the commissioners approach the study of these debates and any other objections, I hope this will lead to a complete revamping or substantial revision of the electoral boundaries of British Columbia.

I should like assurance, Mr. Speaker, that the maps for British Columbia were drawn in British Columbia by the British Columbia commissioners. I cannot believe at the moment that they were because of some of the decisions that were made. I should like assurance, in fact, that the maps were not drawn by some Carleton University students who were hired by the office of the chief commissioner in Ottawa, with the resultant maps being sent to British Columbia and almost rubberstamped by the commissioners. For example, Mr. Speaker, when the report was first published there was a statement issued that the commissioners had followed, where possible, natural boundaries such as rivers. This might seem logical. You have a river and everyone knows where it is, so you make the boundary follow the river.

However, anyone who is familiar with British Columbia knows that communities develop on both sides of a river along a river valley. If you want to draw a boundary you draw it not along the bottom of the valley but along the mountain tops; you use the tops of the mountains or the watersheds as division points. According to their statement, however, the commissioners used the rivers as boundaries wherever possible. Consequently you have a community divided in half. One half on one side of the valley was in one riding and the half on the other side of the valley was in another riding. I know of one case in which a mill owner's mill site was on one side of the river in one riding and his log storage yard was on the other side of the river in another riding. Perhaps this was all right because he would have two members of parliament to whom to appeal rather than one. I think that sort of approach is somewhat illogical.

When the commissioners are doing their work I should like them to go back to the representations that were made to them by the various public bodies. I suggest, with respect, that they have not paid sufficient attention or given sufficient weight to the representations that were made to them at the public hearings. I make particular reference, for example, to subparagraph (k) of paragraph 6 of the objections, which deals with Esquimalt and Victoria. I mention this particularly because the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) (Mr. Groos), who has signed these objections, is not here as the result of some obligations to NATO. He would want me to refer specifically to that situation. As I understand it, all of the people concerned, the city council, the aldermen and the mayor, object to what has been done and have made representations to the commissioners that the division between Esquimalt-Saanich and Victoria not be made. I ask, really on behalf of the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.), that the commissioners pay particular attention to the representations that were made with regard to these two ridings.

I want to ask the commissioners, as the hon. member for Kamloops has done, to pay more attention to the application of section 13 of the act which allows the commissioners to take into account in the drawing of these boundaries special geographic considerations and any special community of interest. I feel the commissioners have not given sufficient weight to the provisions of section 13, which were put into the act very deliberately by this parliament because hon. members realized that in drawing boundaries you cannot merely use a computer or a slide rule. You are dealing with people and not with figures. I suggest that the commissioners, at least I got this impression in reviewing their work, dealt with figures and forgot that they were dealing with people. Section 13 is in the act simply because in drawing electoral boundaries you are dealing with people and not just census figures.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, under redistribution British Columbia has gained one seat; the number of members has risen from 22 to 23. I know it is easy for us to criticize the work of the commissioners, work which is very difficult indeed. There are people who say you cannot criticize them unless you can come up with a detailed map of your own or with a better plan. I do not have the machinery to redraw all the boundaries. I do suggest to the commissioners that all the problems that have been created by redistribution in British Columbia could have been avoided by giving the extra seat that British Columbia secures under redistribution to what is called the lower mainland and Fraser Valley area of British Columbia. The other ridings of the north and interior of British Columbia could have been left substantially as they were before redistribution. In this way you would get greater fairness and equity for the people involved. You would avoid creating two ridings which it is impossible for members of parliament to serve properly and, what is more important, in which it is impossible for the people of those areas to be properly represented.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on this subject will be very brief. First of all, I should like to say that I am not questioning the method of redistribution in Canada, nor am I questioning the impartiality of the representation commissioners for British Columbia. This is not questioned at all in my mind. My main protest is that I represent a Pakistan-like riding and I will continue to do so in the future but the situation will be worse.

The existing constituency of Burnaby-Richmond consists of two parts, Burnaby and Richmond, which are quite separate. In order to go to Richmond from Burnaby I must travel several miles through the city of Vancouver or alternatively go through the city of New Westminster. There is no direct connection between the two parts of the riding because a river separates them.

This constituency will be further complicated geographically by adding another area, roughly the municipality of Delta, which again is across another river. I realize that I am speaking of an urban area here and the problems are certainly not those faced by members representing rural areas, particularly in our province.

The proposed riding of Coast-Chilcotin which has been mentioned, or the new riding of Okanagan-Kootenay, do not have difficulties of that nature. I am speaking of an urban area out of which I think the representation commissioners could have made more compact ridings than they have.

The situation at the present time is that I have a riding with two sections which are quite separate. I must travel through other cities to get from one part to the other. The new Burnaby-Richmond riding will be further complicated by the change I mentioned a moment ago.

There is to be a new riding called Burnaby-Seymour which takes in part of the existing riding of Burnaby-Richmond and part of the existing riding of Burnaby-Coquitlam. The part of that riding called Seymour is across an inlet and quite separate from the Burnaby part of the riding. In order to reach it one must enter the city of Vancouver by crossing a bridge. Again we have the same Pakistan-like situation with the two parts of the riding quite far apart. This does not seem to me to make very much sense on any basis at all.

I have had the impression, Mr. Speaker, that when the representation commissioners were dealing with the lower mainland of British Columbia they took the city of Vancouver by itself and started there by drawing the boundaries of the ridings to be contained within the city limits of Vancouver. When they had done that they then went out to the suburban areas of the city and tried to do the best they could after completing their work within the city. I say that because none of the new proposed constituencies in the city of Vancouver extends beyond the city boundaries.

For example, Richmond in my riding is much closer to the existing constituency of Vancouver South. It would have made just as much sense to have taken the existing constituency of Vancouver Centre and added it to part of north Vancouver if you must cross an inlet. That has not been done with the city of Vancouver at all. They have been kept intact. The commissioners did their carving up when they got outside the city into the surburban areas. I think that is rather unfortunate because we could have had more compact ridings had they not dealt with the city of Vancouver by itself as I rather think they did.

I also feel that the commissioners have not taken into account the population growth since 1916 in the lower mainland area of British Columbia. I think that if they check the figures they will find that the municipality of Richmond and the municipality of Delta at this date are very close to the figure used as a norm for a riding. This would make a reasonably compact riding and at the same time it would still be a large surburban area. But a riding of Delta-Richmond without the Burnaby part would make a good deal more sense than the proposed new riding of Burnaby-Richmond which is going to contain three different parts.

When the maps were published last summer a number of protests were made by the people of Burnaby and the weekly newspapers in Burnaby. It is unfortunate that our municipality, which is the second largest in the province, second only to Vancouver—it happens to have more people than Victoria, the capital—is divided in three ways. We have Burnaby-Richmond. We are to have Burnaby-Seymour and a third part of the municipality is to be in the proposed new riding of New Westminster.

I maintained at the time, and was supported by the weekly newspapers in the constituency, that it would have been quite possible to create a riding entirely of Burnaby, with the additional population in another riding which would be associated with another municipality. Instead we have the municipality divided in three ways. I do not think that this is the best job the commissioners could have done.

I made my views known to the commissioners by letter some time ago. Unfortunately I was not able to appear when they held their public hearings. However, I would urge them again to take another look at the lower mainland and particularly at the type of situation which exists in the proposed ridings of Burnaby-Richmond and Burnaby-Seymour. In both cases the ridings are divided by bodies of water. I suggest that the commissioners could redraw the maps so that we would have constituencies which would be compact and not separated by bodies of water.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, it gives me considerable pleasure to echo the opening statement of the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) regarding the redistribution proposed for the province of British Columbia. I was not a member of the house when it turned this task over to an independent commission so I will reserve my comments on the wisdom of that move until another time. My one concern at the moment is to endeavour in some small way to improve the proposed electoral map for British Columbia.

I might tell the hon. member for Kamloops that when I announced my candidacy for this house I was living in his constituency and for several days had a busy time. When I went downtown in the village of Salmon Arm I met people who told me that they would have to make an agonizing decision, and I was able to inform them that the decision might not be all that agonizing because I was running in the neighbouring constituency. However, I was unable to reach all of them. I do know that come voting day there were six people who went to the polls determined to vote for Johnston and on receiving their ballot forms were amazed to find that that name was not on the ballot. The closest they could come to it was Jones, and they had their doubts about that; but their loyalty overrode their doubts and the N.D.P. candidate was at least six votes closer to the hon. member for Kamloops than he really deserved to be.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the kind of confusion that existed prior to the redistribution now proposed. A geographical area was divided; the people in the area customarily did their business in the nearest large town, which is the city of Vernon, and they were confused as to which constituency they were in. That confusion has not been remedied by the proposed changes but has been compounded enormously owing to the fact that the boundary on the eastern side has been extended clear to the Alberta border and from there right to the United States border, thus making up a most amazing constituency.

I first heard of this constituency when the original proposal was presented. At that time I had no idea that I would be campaigning to enter this house. Yet on hearing what had been done to the constituency in which I had grown up and lived through all of my formative years I was very concerned. I went to the public hearings that were held in the city of Vernon and listened carefully to the presentations made to the commission there. They were most ably made by a variety of groups. I have one of those presentations with me, although I will not read from it at great length.

I would point out that this presentation had the support of the Liberal association and the Social Credit association. It had the support of the corporation of the district of Coldstream, the township of Spallumcheen, the city of Armstrong, the corporation of the city of Vernon, the city of Revelstoke, the Vernon

It was a presentation that had been worked out with a great amount of co-operation throughout the constituency. It was extremely ably presented, as were the representations from other political parties. The former member for this constituency, who had chosen not to run again, appeared to plead about the problems in organization that the new constituency would present to whoever should happen to take his place.

I was impressed by the carefulness, the logic and the clear development of the arguments used against the establishment of this constituency that was being constructed. I wondered at the time whether in this modern age the protests were sufficiently dramatic. I thought possibly that if the people protesting had picketed the courthouse or if somebody had done a sit-in or if there had been a hunger strike or some really dramatic effort, possibly the commission would have been impressed, although it should have been impressed by the carefulness of the presentation.

On the appearance of the final map that we have before us it became apparent that no attention at all had been paid to any of the presentations that were made. This, I feel, is most regrettable. It seemed to me that the commission erred in presenting the maps prior to the hearing. Once a map is drawn there is some pride of authorship, some sensitivity to criticism that there would not be or that would not be a factor if no maps had been prepared. It would have been better if the commission had heard presentations throughout the province and had then caused the maps to be drawn based on the wisdom it had gained by travelling through the province.

If people feel that they had a part in making a plan then they will also do something to make it work. But if they feel that the plan finally handed to them is not only something they did not have any part in making but is something in direct contradiction to their wishes, then it is unlikely that they will make it work.

By concentrating too narrowly on the single criterion of population and by interpreting their terms of reference iin such a way as to eliminate any consideration of population trends, the Redistribution Commission for British Columbia has produced a set of constituencies that will guarantee less adequate and even less democratic representation than the province has had in the past. In its concentration on this one factor, which is admittedly important, the commission has ignored such considerations as community of interest between areas, geographical relationships, economic similarity, transportation routes and historical and traditional patterns of unity.

I have no objection to the proposed name of the constituency but I would point out to the commission that the very words that are used to make up the name of Okanagan-Kootenay come from two languages that are totally unrelated. The people who spoke the languages do not have linguistic relations or historical ones.

Mr. Herridge: We hardly speak to one another.

Mr. Johnston: The native peoples of the Kootenays and those in the Okanagan area were so far away from each other as to be two quite different groups. The Kootenay people, proud and able as they were, had no relationship to the great interior Salish group that made up the majority of the peoples of the interior of British Columbia.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Explain.

Mr. Johnston: The previous speaker referred to his proposed constituency as a Pakistan situation. I was going to use that term myself but as it has been preempted and does not really apply to the constituency I now speak of I shall not do so.

In order to create a Pakistan situation there must be compelling reasons to link two areas widely separated. In the case of the original Pakistan it was unity of religion which made it essential that two widely separated parts be made into one country. There is not this kind of relationship between east Kootenay and the north Okanagan and Revelstoke area. It would be much better to describe it as an Austro-Hungarian empire. I am afraid that once it is set up the two parts will very quickly fall out and you will have a situation that will only ensure a great deal of conflict until such time as another commission sits to rectify the error that this commission has made in regard to this constituency.

It will also happen to have the two parts surrounding the principality, so to speak, of the hon. member for Kootenay West. Again, in this regard the constituency further resembles the Austro-Hungarian empire. An hon. member beside me says that I should not refer to a principality. It is a Baronetcy.

The development of British Columbia has been primarily north and south. I fail to understand why the commission did not take this into consideration. I take tremendous pride in the highway development that has gone on in the last few years in the province of British Columbia, but it has not yet reached the point where one can travel hundreds of miles directly east and west across our great province with the ease that would be required to make the proposed Okanagan-Kootenay constituency work.

It seems to me that once the commission had determined the population tolerance within which it could work and had realized that the corner of our growing province occupied by the Kootenays and the Okanagan would of necessity lose one seat, the commission should then have taken three centres and from those three centres have radiated the boundaries of their proposed constituencies until they had arrived at the population balance that would have fitted the tolerance the commission thought there should be. It would not have been necessary to fit it as closely as the commission seemed to feel that it must. As far as I can determine, their aim seems to have been complete equality rather than to use the fairly generous limits of tolerance they were assigned. I submit that had that been done they would have had a constituency that it would have been possible to serve. It would have been possible to develop a unified approach to the very many problems that present themselves to a constituency today.

The north end of the Okanagan Valley has been further divorced by the proposed redistribution from the rest of the Okanagan area. The north end has been attached to an area hundreds of miles away. This has been done just at a time when the northern Okanagan area is enjoying a period of development that promises a great future for it. It will be very difficult for whoever serves the proposed constituency to serve the two opposite ends adequately.

Although the trans-Canada highway makes a fine link between Vernon and Calgary, it does not therefore make a fine link between Vernon and Cranbrook or between Vernon and Fernie which will also be within this proposed constituency. Tremendous transportation problems will arise within the constituency. This morning a radio commentator said that members speaking in this debate were concerned only with their own political fortunes. I should like to deny this statement utterly. I was concerned about the constituency before I ever thought I would represent it. The plan proposed was bad then, and now that I have the fortune to represent the constituency I find it is still bad. But there is still time for the situation to be corrected. I trust that the commission, on the urging of all the members who have spoken on the subject of the boundaries in British Columbia will reconsider the whole matter very carefully and make those changes, not only in the proposed Okanagan-Kootenay constituency but also in the proposed Coast-Chilcotin constituency and in other constituencies mentioned, which it seems to me are absolutely necessary for the future development of the province. I can understand the commission being concerned not to favour any one political party when drawing boundary lines. At the same time it must not be made impossible for all political parties to form any workable organization in the new constituency.

This is what happened in Kootenay and elsewhere. If not corrected it will become a question of "us against them". A member would never be able to reconcile the conflict of interests which would constantly be presented to him, whoever he might be, when he came to represent the area. It is, of course, my hope that such a situation will never come about and that the commission will reconsider its conclusions and redraw the boundaries.

Finally, I should like to add a few observations on behalf of the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe), who is unable to be present in the house this afternoon, with reference to the changes made in that constituency. He puts forward the following points:

1. The name of the new constituency should be Portage Mountain, not Prince George-Peace River. The next redistribution will see another constituency in and around Prince George.

The area from Lucerne West to Crescent Spur should not be included in Kamloops. The interests of these people are tied to Prince George and should be included with Prince George. The present suggestion of the commission fails to make sense.

3. Quesnel area is oriented to Prince George. It does not present its representative with the problem that the section north of Fort St. John will present. It would, therefore, benefit these people if they remain in the same constituency as Prince George.

4. The area could be much better served if three constituencies were constituted from the present constituencies of Cariboo and Skeena.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief. The hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) has in an eminently successful manner presented arguments relevant to objection 16 which was signed by representatives of all the political parties in British Columbia. First, I might explain that I am dealing entirely with the two ridings of Victoria and Esquimalt-Saanich in the southern part of Vancouver Island. To avoid confusion I might also explain that the municipality of Esquimalt is not included in the riding of Esquimalt-Saanich. It is a misnomer. But instead of taking the easy and right course and merely changing the name, the electoral boundaries commission took the difficult and anomalous decision to take the municipality of Esquimalt out of Victoria and put it with Saanich so that the name could be justified.

When the commission sat in Victoria on September 14, 1965, briefs were presented by all the local municipalities involved, by the chamber of commerce and by the shipyards. The gist of the arguments presented by all these municipalities and other bodies was virtually the same and the objective was the same. Yet to our amazement the commission apparently failed to recognize any of these representations. At any rate, it did not act on them in a significant way.

The first objection on which we base our argument is that the commission did not consider the rate of growth. As the hon. member for Kamloops has pointed out, the chairman of the commission sitting in Victoria said himself that this factor would not be taken into consideration. This is why I asked the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) a few days ago whether I could have a transcript of the proceedings during those hearings. I wanted to quote the actual words used by the chairman. However, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has pointed out, the commission in cavalier fashion refused to give the house to which it is responsible any information whatsoever.

During those public hearings the chairman of the commission said to me, when I made my presentation using arguments based on the rate of growth, that the commission could not consider anticipated growth. I put it to him that the act itself in section 13 says that the commission may consider relative growth. The chairman told me that in his view this referred to past growth. How ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. What would be the purpose of considering past growth except for the purpose of considering future growth?

We used figures which had been prepared for us by an official board in British Columbia in order to forecast what would happen to population figures in the proposed constituencies. In 1961 the difference between the populations of Victoria and Esquimalt-Saanich was approximately 1,000. By 1971, when the next redistribution will take place, the difference will be 25,000. The commission completely overlooked the fact that the city of Victoria is fully built up and that the surrounding areas are growing rapidly. Indeed, the commission admitted that it did not consider the anticipated relative rate of growth and went so far as to say it could not.

I made a definite proposal which I think would solve this problem not only with regard to anticpated growth but with regard to other considerations which I shall mention later. This proposal would result in the creation of a very slight difference in population between the two constituencies both at the present time and in 1971. Incidentally, the previous speaker, the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston), indicated that some people say that members who are objecting to these proposals are concerned only with their own interest. If this were the case I would not be speaking today. So far as my own interests are concerned the proposal of the commission would certainly benefit me.

Mr. Johnston: On a point of order, I should like to make it clear that it was not I who said this. I said it had been said that members taking part in this debate were speaking in their own interests. I want it to be clear that I am in no way indicating that this is so.

Mr. Chatterton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did not mean to say that the hon. member said it. I meant to say he had mentioned that some people had said it.

The second basis of objection that the municipalities had was with regard to section 13(c)(ii) which says that the commission may consider community or diversity of interest. What the commission is proposing is that the municipality of Esquimalt be removed from Victoria riding and added to Saanich, and all the local councils involved, including the council of the municipality of Saanich, have stated there was a close community of interest between Saanich and Victoria. The shipyards, the major industry, are located in both ridings. The business is intertwined, but the commission did not pay attention to that. Neither did it pay attention to diversity of interest.

There is a diversity of interest between Saanich municipality and Victoria city, but the commission is taking a large chunk of Saanich municipality and putting it into Victoria. There has been confusion in that area every year at every election—I am almost coming to think of elections being held every year—because a small part of Saanich has been in Victoria. Now the commission is magnifying this trouble and confusion by putting a larger part of it into Victoria. Incidentally, going back to the first objection with regard to the commission guessing, I think it is guessing in any event, because the official census of 1961 does not give the population of these areas that are being removed from one riding to another.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those brief remarks and in order to save the time of the house, I would ask consent to have printed in Hansard as part of my speech the brief presented to me by the city of Victoria, which the council had requested I bring to the attention of the house, and also the brief submitted to me by the municipality of Saanich, which that council suggested I bring to the attention of the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. gentleman would be satisfied if I were to undertake to ask the Speaker to have them forwarded to the commission?

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Speaker, I think yesterday one of the members requested, in order to save time, that a certain table be included in Hansard as part of his speech.

Mr. Aiken: It was not done.

Mr. Chatterton: In that case may I request the Speaker to forward these two briefs, together with copies of Hansard to the commission.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that he leave the two briefs with the Clerk of the House.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at any length but I do want to say that on this occasion I listened with approval to the speech made by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), and I think it is quite correct to say members of all parties from B.C. have in general supported the points of view expressed by him. I think it is also quite correct to say that for once, on this issue, we are four hearts that beat as one.

In addition to that I think I can say I am one person from B.C. who can take a strictly objective and non-partisan approach to these questions because, as most people know, I had a Liberal father and a Conservative mother. I also have relatives who belong to the Social Credit party, but I am still an unrepentant old democratic socialist. Therefore I think my point of view will be judged non-partisan.

I was interested in the speech made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford). I was sure he was speaking, as it were, from the heart because he told us his riding would be wiped out when redistribution is completed. I had a sort of feeling he was preaching for a call, and as it has been the custom in Kootenay West to have some prominent person from Vancouver run as a Liberal candidate once every 50 years, I invite him to Kootenay West for the next general election.

I have no objection to the principle of the bill, which was to carry out redistribution with the aid of an independent commission directly divorced from politics. I recognize, along with the other hon. members who have spoken, the difficulties that are created in B.C., particularly as a result of geography and of our population—its density in some places and extreme scarcity in others, although I did what I could to improve that situation. There is also the question of developments in B.C. in recent years, and of developments in the years to come.

Hon. members from all parties who have spoken have objected to the commission's failure to recognize factors other than population. It seems the commission has interpreted the act in a very narrow sense. It has formed ridings that comply with the act so far as normal population is concerned, but in the opinion of many other hon. members, and of myself, it has lacked a certain flexibility in giving consideration to the other factors which have been mentioned by all the speakers from B.C. who preceded me.

I am sure it is quite right to say that hon. members who have spoken have represented the views of their supporters in their ridings. I am expressing the view of those members of the New Democratic Party who live at present in the riding of Okanagan-Revelstoke and in the riding of Kootenay East, and I think their views are supported by a great majority of community organizations of various types, whether they be trade union organizations, women's institutes, farmers' institutions, and so on.

I think it is also quite correct to say that hon. members who have spoken this afternoon were voicing the opinions of people in their districts regardless of party, as a result of getting their reactions to the report of the commission. Personally, the people I have spoken to are very concerned at the creation of this new riding, this Okanagan-Kootenay riding, which changes the complexion of Okanagan-Revelstoke and of Kootenay East.

I speak with some personal experience on this question because I have lived in the interior of B.C. for approximately 60 years. I know the geography of the interior. I know the history of the development of that portion of B.C. for that period. I know the circumstances that prevail in every large and small community within that area. I am very closely acquainted with all these questions. I know the economies of the areas concerned. I know the past developments and the developments that are anticipated in the days ahead. With that knowledge, related to the opinion of many persons who have given this subject consideration, I think I can speak with some authority on the question.

We are to have this new monstrosity known as Okanagan-Kootenay which attempts to combine historically speaking in the form of one political riding two races never on speaking terms with one another. There is to be a giant horseshoe around Kootenay West and, as the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston) mentioned, it is a form of Pakistan, with the populous end in one portion of the riding, the other concentration of population in the other end, and a large horseshoe of smaller communities joining them.

Mr. Barnett: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Herridge: Certainly.

Mr. Barnett: I am wondering if the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) is implying that we should establish a new bicultural commission to look into the situation?

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Herridge: No, Mr. Speaker, that would not be necessary because the riding has been settled by some splendid people of British and other stocks and some French Canadians who came from Quebec to work in the woods. That question was settled years ago.

My second complaint is that there is no community of interest between the two ends of this riding. At one end we have persons interested in mining, particularly coal mining and metalliferous mining, and where there is some ranching.

At the other end we find the major interest in the fruit growing industry. There is no community of interest and, as expressed throughout the years by chambers of commerce and other organizations which represent the people in those areas, the local problems facing the people of the Okanagan-Revelstoke area are entirely different from those faced by the people of Kootenay East.

As pointed out by the hon. member for Kamloops, the new riding will be very difficult to serve. An individual living at one end of it will have to make a round trip of 800 miles in order to see his member. I do not suggest that all constituents travel in order to see their member; it is the habit of all hon. members of this house to visit their constituents. But this has become very difficult in the past few years because we find ourselves here at parliament ten months of the year. In my own case I have had constituents who, knowing I was only going to be home for two or three days, have travelled 300 or 400 miles to come to my ranch to see me about their problems. This new riding will be very difficult to serve, particularly during the winter when one is likely to run into heavy snowstorms and other weather conditions that make travel difficult.

All political parties depend upon organization. If it were not for the satisfactory organization of political parties we would not have a democracy. Neither would we have the opportunity to come here and present our views and differ from one another, while at the same time respecting the rights and opinions of the minorities. This new riding is going to make it very difficult for those who wish to organize political parties, because of the circumstances I have mentioned and those pointed out by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston).

I suggest that all these circumstances should be considered by the commission. I realize that it had a difficult task to perform in British Columbia but I think it failed to be sufficiently flexible in drafting the boundaries of some constituencies. I trust the commission will read today's Hansard and will reconsider and redraft several boundaries of constituencies as set forth in the present report, in order to meet the wishes of the great majority of the people as expressed to members of parliament, and in turn by them in this house today.

I look upon this whole question as a somewhat experimental one. I think we have made some mistakes, but I believe it was a good idea to have redistribution undertaken by independent commissions. In the future when we are perhaps considering amendments to this act, members should consider that it might be appropriate to have one person on each commission in each province who has had some active political experience and understands something about organization and the problems that face not only political parties but the members of parliament who serve the constituencies. This individual should have some understanding of the problems faced by members who represent ridings that have a conflict of interest because of local problems and situations. All these things could be considered by an individual on the commission who has had active political experience, and in that connection I suggest such a man could be a retired senator or retired member of parliament.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker I rise today to take part in the discussion of these recommendations to the commissioners, not only as the member for Qu'Appelle but in an effort to direct my thoughts to the province of Saskatchewan as a whole.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, but perhaps I should point out that we are now discussing objection No. 16 which applies to the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I intended to rise on that very point. I do not wish to speak to the objection but I thought you would follow the pattern set with respect to other objections and call attention to the fact that the objection dealing with British Columbia is now completed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Have we now completed the discussion on objection No. 16 in relation to the province of British Columbia?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house having considered these objections, it is the Speaker's duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

The house will now proceed to a consideration of objection No. 10 in relation to the province of Saskatchewan, the text of which can be found at pages 20 and 21 of the pamphlet.

On February 15 last a notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with Mr. Speaker in the following terms:

Proposed Electoral Districts for the Province of Saskatchewan:

That, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65) and for the reasons hereinafter specified, consideration be given by this house of the matter of an objection to the following provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Saskatchewan, laid before the house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966.

The principal objections to the provisions of the Saskatchewan report are:

1. The commission attempt to provide each constituency with somewhat comparable size and population has resulted in unrealistic boundaries for most of the ridings. The South Saskatchewan River is a natural boundary for three proposed constituencies—(Battleford-Kindersley, Swift Current-Maple Creek, and Moose Jaw). The proposed redistribution map fails to provide for this geographic division.

2. Natural trading areas have been ignored and communities having common means to travel and communication have been separated. The riding boundaries proposed by the commission would result in unnecessary obstacles to adequate representation in parliament for people with common interests. As one example, the proposed constituency for Moose Jaw does not take into consideration the area covered by the local newspaper and by the local radio and television station. Community of interest is developed to a large degree by these communication media.

Also following the same argument of community interests, the proposed redistribution removes the area west of Prince Albert including Parkside, Shellbrook, Canwood and, Debden through to Big River, and the area north of Prince Albert including the townsite of La Ronge. People in all of this area do business with Prince Albert and should be included in the Prince Albert constituency.

3. Particular objection is taken to the commission proposal to have no fully urban seats in Saskatchewan. The capital city of Regina, and the city of Saskatoon should be city ridings. This can be accomplished by allowing the full quotient of 88,960 population, placing the remainder of these cities in the surrounding rural constituencies.

And other objections that the undersigned members may deem necessary to carry out the spirit of fair redistribution will be presented verbally. A map will be submitted to the Electoral Boundaries Commission with constituency boundaries drawn to meet the objections noted above.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out too soon, my remarks today will be directed toward outlining the redistribution situation as it concerns the province of Saskatchewan rather than just the constituency of Qu'Appelle which I represent.

When we passed the legislation which turned the power of redistribution of electoral boundaries over to independent commissions, we did so after lengthy and historical difficulty in the House of Commons in trying to decide the boundaries of constituencies, because on too many occasions the paramount consideration was political partisanship on the part of various people concerned with their various positions.

At that time I think all parties agreed that the time had arrived in Canadian development to turn much of the responsibility for the establishment of electoral boundaries over to independent commissions. That did not, however, free the members of the House of Commons, from the final responsibility of making a decision about the worthiness of the work of those independent commissions.

It is for that very reason we included safeguards, one of which we are now taking advantage of in having the reports of the commission submitted to this house for consideration and reference back to the commissions, with the hope that they too will recognize that this whole matter involves co-operation between members of parliament and the independent commissions.

In the objection, signed by 16 of the 17 members of parliament from Saskatchewan, there are four general criticisms of the commission in respect of Saskatchewan. One of these criticisms, and I think this is the most cogent, relates to the fact that in the agricultural province of Saskatchewan we have only two large cities, yet the commissioners have cut these two cities in half and included the halves with rural ridings. As a result of this redistribution the number of ridings in the province has been reduced from 17 to 13.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

There are no city ridings as such. We have some purely rural ridings, and some partially rural and partially urban. This gives a member no opportunity whatsoever to devote himself entirely to urban problems. It gives those who live in the cities the feeling that their particular, narrow interests are not being fully represented in the national parliament. This was one of the main criticisms in our objection.

I think it is a matter of judgment and a correct assessment that if a member of parliament has 50,000 urban people in his riding and, say, 30,000 or 35,000 rural people, he will soon find that 75 per cent to 90 per cent of his time is spent on rural problems. This is the area in which the tremendous revolution has been occurring in economics. This is where the great personal tragedies have been occurring. The records of this house over the last 30 years indicate the truth of this statement.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, to emphasize my point with regard to the cities, with the proposals of the commission we would have the people of the two major cities of Saskatchewan feeling they were unrepresented by members in this house who could speak solely on urban problems.

I believe that what I have said about the preponderance of rural over urban problems will change in time many of the matters dealt with in this house. Any person who recognizes the needs of city people will realize that in the next 10 or 20 years the house will be continually inundated with problems that we have not heard before. These problems concern, primarily, built-up areas and so far they have not been adequately expressed in the house. I refer to problems such as the high interest rate paid by the city dweller on furniture, cars and other things he needs for his home. I refer to the mounting cost of urban transportation, amounting to a heavy penalty imposed upon all those who live in large cities. I refer to the increased cost caused by a lack of coherent and integrated planning which is placing a heavy burden on families living in our cities. These problems will come before this house.

Problems of education are common to us all, but because of the tremendous cost of building universities, junior colleges and different classifications of vocational schools in the future, the question of education, which has not been a large matter in this House of Commons over the last 99 years, will soon be taking up as much time as railways used to take. There are also the problems of the small, independent businessman trying to survive in the cities against the competition caused by mass distribution. These problems will come before this house and we must have members who can speak with knowledge of them and have a personal interest in them. Then there is the problem of recreation. As we crowd more and more people into smaller areas and build more high-rise apartments in which they can live, the provision of more and more recreation will become a problem for the House of Commons in so far as it affects the people of our urban and built-up communities.

Over the last 15 or 20 years we have dealt with the question of housing. Gaps still remain in this legislation, but once again there is an urgent problem in our built-up areas and an urban member should be able to put these matters before the house.

Then we have the human problem. Many hundreds of thousands of people are classified as aged just because they have been superannuated or retired and we are now living in our cities and creating a tremendous reserve of unused human resources. These are the type of problem that must be dealt with, and we must have city members who understand them and can deal with them. In addition to our elderly citizens there are, or course, many classifications of people who are physically handicapped, perhaps from birth, an accident or illness of some kind, and are unable to compete in our labour market.

Many of these urban problems have not been discussed in this house in the past but they are the type of problem that I believe we shall be dealing with more and more in the future. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I speak not only for the province of Saskatchewan and the two major cities of our province but for every city in Canada. I believe we must have someone in parliament who understands these problems, lives, works with and knows the people of the cities and can express their point of view in this house. The city vote—and these remarks refer to any province—should not be submerged or given second rate importance compared with the problems of rural areas around the cities.

I recognize that some cities will have to have an urban and a rural member, but I think that cities must be represented in this house and the right of city dwellers to have their viewpoints expressed should not be taken from them. This is one of the major objections contained in the Saskatchewan submission to the commission.

I have read a number of the redistribution debates which have taken place in the House of Commons over the last 50 or 60 years. These debates contain a tremendous number of complaints with regard to readjustment of boundaries. If one reads the debate on the last redistribution bill in 1964 he finds that the province which suffered most, Saskatchewan, had the least to say. Ours was the province which had the number of seats reduced to 13 from 17. We did suggest in one or two mild questions to the minister that he might consider doing for us what had been done in 1953 by using the 15 per cent rule. But when no positive reaction came from the government side we in Saskatchewan accepted the democratic rule of representation according to population.

This fact emphasizes that those of us who come from rural areas have no intention of trying to limit in any way whatsoever the right of a person in the city to have fair and proportionate representation in this house. I mark that up on the plus side for those of us who come from the province of Saskatchewan, namely that we accepted this reduction in the number of seats without putting up a tremendous, prolonged objection, which has historically been the case in redistribution debates. This does not mean we were happy about the reduction in seats. On the contrary, we were deeply unhappy. We know that as a province, even though we are small in population, we provide proportionately a tremendous share of the gross national wealth of this country. We should have two or three seats right in the middle of Toronto which are called Saskatchewan seats, because that is where our money ends up.

Having made that point, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the fundamental position I am taking here is in defence of the right of city people in Saskatchewan to have at least two city ridings and not a combination of rural and rural-urban ridings. That is my first point.

My second point has been made many times in this debate. It is that the commissioners in almost every province used too narrowly the mathematical concept that every city should have approximately the same number of people, regardless of the circumstances, and in too few cases did they follow the wish of parliament that there should be some tolerance in order to meet various conditions. Parliament in its wisdom declared that the commissioners be allowed to use a tolerance of 25 per cent.

The members here recognized, as a result of their experience, that you have to have the number of people in a seat to fit the needs of the area. As the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) said earlier, the principle was to allow the people in these constituencies to have access to their member of parliament. If you have a thinly scattered population, this becomes increasingly difficult. This is the second criticism which we, in Saskatchewan, have made of the Saskatchewan report. It is a criticism which is common to the other provinces. The drawing of these boundaries was purely a narrow, mathematical exercise.

I should like to quote a few figures to prove how mathematically accurate the commission was in Saskatchewan. There are four city ridings, and they are shown as follows: Regina East, 82,571; Regina-Lake Centre, 83,574; Saskatoon-Biggar, 82,472; Saskatoon-Humboldt, 83,536. The population in the four rural-urban seats varies, plus or minus, about 1,000. You cannot make it any more accurate than the commission has made it. It would seem that, so far as the commission is concerned, justice was purely a matter of arithmetic.

When you look at the purely rural ridings, which are set out in schedule C, you find these examples: Assiniboia, 66,326; Battleford-Kindersley, 69,170; Swift Current-Maple Creek, 66,514. You will find a small difference separating these rural ridings. I do not believe the academic exercise of drawing constituency boundaries in order to achieve the same numbers in each constituency is what parliament wanted these independent commissions to do.

We have done something radical in this house. We have removed our traditional power to redistribute the seats, and turned that power over to an independent commission, with clearly defined criteria as to how the commissions should establish these constituency boundaries. The commissions have largely ignored these criteria which parliament, in its wisdom, laid down in the act, and relied upon mathematics. This is the intellectual exercise of a bureaucrat and does not represent the independent judgment of a commission.

In my remarks to you, Mr. Speaker, which are being recorded in Hansard, I want to say to the commissioners of my province that we would like a serious, detailed re-analysis of the report they have submitted in order to get away from this narrow concept of mathematics, and return to the concept of the needs of the people.

I am not going to say too much about the historic associations in the province of Saskatchewan. I have travelled in all the provinces and I know that in the eastern part of Canada generally there is a tremendously deep attachment to the counties. This is part of their history and their culture, and their loyalties are to these counties. We have a little bit of this in Saskatchewan, even though our province is new. We have the relationship between Regina and Moosomin; between Prince Albert and the routes northward. There is the historic relationship of Prince Albert and Carlton; Moose Jaw and Assiniboia. These historic relationships may not be as deep as they are in eastern Canada, but they are all the history we have.

The fourth objection relates to geography. In Saskatchewan, we have about 5 per cent of the population of Canada, yet we have approximately 40 per cent of the roads in Canada. This indicates that the area is thinly settled. Yet here we are trying to provide a parliamentary system of government under which not only the members can serve their people but the people have a feeling of easy access to their member. No matter how good a broad jumper one might be, no matter how good a swimmer one might be, there is nobody in Saskatchewan strong enough to jump the Saskatchewan river. In about two years time, when the dam is completed, we will have a lake 200 feet deep, several miles wide and 138 miles long, dividing the province. The report prepared by the commissioners ignores this fact, that we are not supermen, and constituency boundaries have been drawn straddling these rivers.

I do not know what was in the minds of the commissioners who were raised in Saskatchewan when they drew these maps. Certainly they must have forgotten the long hours of driving which are required to get around a barrier 138 miles long. This not only prevents a member from serving his constituency, but the constituents are denied access to one another. When you look at the constituency of Swift Current-Maple Creek, you find that the boundaries cross the Saskatchewan river to the north, while the boundaries of the Moose Jaw constituency run north nearly to the city of Saskatoon. The river also divides this constituency. These are the results of this report submitted by the commission. I do not want to mention some of the other difficulties that are related to rivers.

We have an historic lake in the centre of Saskatchewan. Traditionally they fight over this area, and I believe the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has been in many of these battles. Actually at one time the constituency received its name because of the fact it was in the centre, and it was called Lake Centre. What would be wrong with taking this lake out of the centre and using it as a dividing line for the constituency? These are natural, geographic features. I do not want to mention a lot of the little details, but I believe I could make a good case on this point.

I have 20 minutes of my time left, so I want to leave these general criticisms for the moment. I believe I have made my points adequately in these four general criticisms. Since we have 17 members from Saskatchewan belonging to the same political party, there is no possibility here of gerrymandering seats. We have accepted, unhappily, with a view to doing justice to the city population, the reduction from 17 seats to 13. Some of us have put together a map showing constituencies that do fit into these historic patterns of the past and the present. We have allowed for growth. We have used the census figures of 1961. We have used municipal boundaries. We have not split up municipalities or townships, as the old maps do.

We have tried to put together constructive proposals to send along through you, Mr. Speaker, to the commission. We know they are human beings and perhaps if all the work is done for them, if all the lines are drawn, if we consider all the geographic features, if we consider the marketing areas, perhaps they will look at these maps and remember that the independent commission is, in effect, on trial.

Will they listen to the parliamentarians, if they are sure that there is no evidence here of hiving political opponents, of gerrymandering seats, will they listen? If there is evidence here of all these things I have mentioned such as the geographic factors, the tolerances within the act, that we have provided two purely urban ridings, will they listen? We have allowed for communications, highways, television, radio and newspapers, we have considered the historical associations which we have and above all, we have considered the needs of the people? This is what I want to propose now.

These figures which I am quoting are drawn from bulletin 1.1 No. 5 and bulletin 1.1 No. 9 from the 1961 census of Canada; they are the official figures with which the commissions must deal. I put these proposals forward in the hope that the commissioners will not have the excuse that it will take too long to draw a new map, or that it will take too long to work out all those difficulties. They will have to have all this material which the house has considered to put into this electoral boundary map of Saskatchewan.

My first step here is to give the figures for the constituencies. I am going to apply names to these constituencies which may or may not be acceptable to the commission. However, on looking at the map and knowing the relationship of these people in the areas, I believe this may be considered worth while. No. 1, Weyburn-Estevan a population of 67,713; No. 2, Swift Current-Maple Creek a population of 68,821; No. 3, Moose Jaw-Assiniboia a population of 77,532; No. 4, Regina a population of 80,141; No. 5, Regina-Qu'Appelle a population of 73,689; No. 6, Kindersley-Rosetown a population of 64,669; No. 7, Saskatoon, a population of 80,526; No. 8, Saskatoon-Humboldt a population of 72,448; No. 9, Yorkton-Melville, a population of 68,300; No. 10, Melfort-Tisdale-Nipawin, a population of 68,379; No. 11, Mackenzie, a population of 56,282; No. 12, Prince Albert, a population of 62,039; No. 13, Meadow Lake-The Battlefords a population of 63,557.

In addition to these numbers allocated to the 13 seats, Mr. Speaker, there are 11,300 Indians in the northern area and there are no documents that I can lay my hands on which give the exact position of these Indian tribes. Therefore, the 11,300 Indians will naturally be divided among the three seats last mentioned, Mackenzie, Prince Albert and Meadow Lake-The Battlefords. From what little knowledge I do have of the location of these Indians, I would suggest that the greater bulk will come into Prince Albert, as the map will indicate.

There may be a few errors in these figures in the adding up of these boundaries along the rivers and so on, where an adding machine and a person with intimate knowledge of where the boundaries of villages and towns cut inside the municipal boundaries might make some correction. However I would say these figures are 95 per cent to 96 per cent accurate and serve the purpose of what this presentation hopes to do.

I have the map in my hand and I will run through each of the seats from a geographic basis and a cultural basis. In the southeast of the province we have the two large towns of Weyburn and Estevan and the constituency outlined is on a straight line basis, centred at these two towns. In the southwest constituency of Swift Current-Maple Creek we have retained the old boundary on the east side and used the Saskatchewan river as the north boundary. This seat has a population of 68,000 and is a tremendously large seat. It would take over 800 miles of driving to get around this one constituency travelling in straight lines.

The seat in the centre, between Weyburn-Estevan, and Swift Current-Maple Creek is Moose Jaw-Assiniboia. Moose Jaw is roughly the centre and the people in that area are on highway No. 2 which runs right through the centre of the constituency; everyone has access to radio and television, and this is the traditional market area for all these people.

The key thing to remember about the city of Regina is that according to the census figures it has a population of 112,000 people, but we only allocate 80,000 to it. There has to be a division by a single street running north and south or a railway running east and west, some sort of a division which is fixed so that if there is expansion one way or the other it will come into that particular seat. I believe the main consideration here was to make sure that this seat could expand, that an area would not be carved out of the centre of the city with a boundary around it saying that this is the fixed boundary of the seat. We can get around this difficulty by placing a boundary line in this city which runs right down the street, or across some natural barrier which every person is aware of. This leaves the Regina-Qu'Appelle seat with a population of about 73,689 which is approximately 3,000 above the quotient for the province. Once again the Qu'Appelle river is used as a northern boundary in this instance.

The seat north of Regina-Qu'Appelle is Yorkton-Melville. These two large towns dominate the area and the traditional highways lead into Regina, and the two towns are used as the basis of the seat. Their culture, their marketing and their natural affinity is put together. North of this we have taken the heavily populated area and the small farming area and put it in Mackenzie, which runs up to the Northwest Territories. To the west of the province we have the constituency of Kindersley-Rosetown which has the towns of Macklin, Unity, Wilkie, Biggar, Rosetown, Elrose, and Eston which are all well known wheat farming towns. However, the population in this area is below the quotient by some 6,500. It is a huge area. You simply cannot take a big area such as I have mentioned without its being completely unified in interest, and without the people having a chance to get in touch with their member.

I mentioned the city of Saskatoon. What I then said applies to Regina. The city should be divided by a clearly marked dividing line so that growth goes on on both sides. There you might have a combination between a rural and city seat and a pure city seat. When the commissioners decide on a line to divide the city constituencies of Regina and Saskatoon they ought to take some straight line.

When you take the proposed constituency of Saskatoon-Humboldt, you see one of the most perfect examples of community of interest. From Saskatoon to Rosthern is less than 60 miles; from Saskatoon, Humboldt is within 80 miles. The distance from Saskatoon, to Watrous is about 80 miles, and from Saskatoon to Davidson is about 80 miles. The whole community is served by highways, roads, radio and television, and there is a tremendous community of interest.

If you look at another area, such as the proposed Melfort-Tisdale-Nipawin constituency you will find that that is all one big area containing these three towns. That is a traditional mixed farming area using the river as a natural boundary of the north. These people are on one side of the river.

When you go north of the river, you find Prince Albert. Instead of the constituency of Prince Albert being put across the river running along both sides, we have run it up towards the north. We have taken the area containing Lac la Ronge, which is in the constituency of Mackenzie in the commission's redistribution, and put it into Prince Albert.

Presently, Meadow Lake constituency goes right up to Uranium City, which is a long way from Battleford. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that between those areas there is no community of interest, either by road, newspaper, or other means. Therefore Uranium City should by interest and communication be in Prince Albert.

The Battlefords are the traditional historic centres of the area, with roads going to Lloydminster, to Maymont, to Meadow Lake. From Meadow Lake now new roads go to Ile-à-la-Crosse and other places.

I think that all these proposed suggestions, Mr. Speaker, will meet the necessary criteria of 90 per cent of the people of the province of Saskatchewan.

I have gone into all these details because this is all the chance that we have of getting before the commissioners the points that we show here. We want to present them in such form that it will be possible for them to accept advice as to the new proposals we make. We do this to help the commission lay out precise, legal definitions of boundaries. Second, although I have checked on the figures and on their accuracy, I expect there will be a few minor changes.

Third, it is hoped that names of constituencies that I have put forward will have some bearing on the commission's thinking. Fourth, I submit that what the commission ought to try to do in the cities of Saskatoon and Regina is to make sure that the cities are not cleaved in two with a "dead centre". A city should be an alive and expanding operation. It should not be dead. If you are going to have boundaries inside Saskatoon and Regina, they should be laid down either on a single street, or else should run through the cities along boundaries such as a river, so that the people in those cities know in which constituency they live.

We do not want a situation say, in Regina, where in the outskirts the people belong to the rural neighboring constituencies and the people in the centre of the city belong to the city constituency so that if people move from one block to another they will suddenly change from an urban to a rural seat.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that I have made the best case I can for a positive, constructive type of amendment for the report of the commissioners. The suggestions I have made may be the result of something that the commissioners by themselves did not see, but are the result of many, many years of practical experience on the part of many hon. members. There is no question of gerrymandering here. It is a question of having a constituency the boundaries of which will be compatible historically and geographically, and will follow municipal boundaries, which will unite the people through the natural means of communications by way of highways, radio, television, and newspapers that make for the cultural life of the community.

We had a royal commission sit in Saskatchewan from 1952 to 1956 on the agricultural and rural life of the people. That report was published in 13 volumes, and it emphasized that what is strongest in keeping together the thinly scattered peoples of Saskatchewan are the cultural and marketing ties of those people. You might take away a railway line, or any other means of keeping the people together. But the people are kept together by the common ties of cultural pursuits, which might include anything from curling to going to church, or school. That is the one thing that the royal commission emphasized that kept together the thinly scattered people of the areas.

We should like to see this business done properly in our province, so that there can be that cultural life in a community. We want that, instead of having what I can only describe as artificial suggestions for artificial constituencies, which could have no relationship with the needs of the people of Saskatchewan.

I wonder if I might ask the Chair for permission to submit my figures and maps through Mr. Speaker to the commission in Saskatchewan?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to be allowed to table these statistics, have them referred to the Speaker, and taken as part of his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak for a short time on a matter which I believe is of transcendent importance. During my administration as prime minister we decided on a course of appointing a non-political, non-partisan commission to bring about in our country an end to the murky business of gerrymandering.

I was one of those who in two different and successive redistributions found my constituency operated on without anaesthetic by the government of those days for the political purposes of that government. Indeed, if it had not been for their manipulations I would long since not have been in parliament. I owe a great debt to some hon. members who are still sitting opposite, who belonged to the government of those days. I hasten to add that my remarks do not apply to the ministers I see here today. We have the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin) who are the two present today. Neither one of them at that time participated in those electoral campaigns. Nor, knowing their past, and knowing of them during the present, would they have done what was done by other members, had they been in a position of responsibility.

Mr. Pepin: Thank you.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I must extend my thanks to some hon. members opposite, because I had every intention not to be a candidate in the next election following the one in 1949. I had once been gerrymandered out of my seat by alterations that were made in it which were designed to assure that a socialist candidate would win that seat. That was done by the addition of large areas of overwhelmingly socialistic sentiment as expressed by their votes in the previous election. As a result I decided no longer to be a candidate. When my constituency of 1950-51 was so operated on, and subdivided, or trifurcated with bits and pieces put on here and there, I determined to return to my constituency of Prince Albert, where for many years a Conservative was not regarded as worthy of political support. Indeed, those were the days, and I say this for those young ministers I have referred to, and for others, when the only protection a Conservative enjoyed in the province of Saskatchewan was under the provisions of the game laws.

Those things have all changed. As I say, I owe a deep and never to be forgotten debt to the Liberal government of those days for what it did. Otherwise I should not have found myself in the position of ultimately being prime minister, or indeed of having any reports on the prime minister's desk referring to my tenure of office, that were on that desk for a period of 14 to 16 months. That point is worthy of comment; but not worthy of approbation.

Having said that, may I now deal in particular with the concepts which moved all of us to accept the principle of a non-partisan, non-political approach to representation.

We have had experience of manipulating or gerrymandering, and we endeavoured to bring about a plan which would deny that unjustifiable sport of endeavouring to eliminate political opponents by altering political boundaries. Commissions were set up. Originally the proposal was that the several provincial commissions should have one member named by the Prime Minister and another by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Objections were taken thereto, the legislation did not make much progress, and finally there was agreement that those two provisions should be eliminated.

In the province of Saskatchewan the commission was set up under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Brownridge, together with Professor Ward and Mr. Koester, the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly. At no time was there any communication, directly, indirectly or at all with me or anyone on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, which had all 17 seats in the house, regarding various matters with which my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) has dealt in such a masterful way. I have not heard anyone in this house consider in such detail and with such complete objectivity this complex subject in a way which, if carried into effect, would assure the basic principles of redistribution under the commission formula.

I was told by Mr. Castonguay that the first principle was to be this—that the cities were to have their representation determined, and from there on the number of seats found for the urban constituencies entitlement was to be subtracted from the total number of constituencies in the province in question, and then there was to be a reasonable division on the basis of population, provision being made for the tolerance of 25 per cent.

What has happened? In the province of Saskatchewan the commission departed from that principle. They started to divide up cities. The great city of Regina, with its large population, should have a member of its own to the extent of the quotient that is determined upon, consideration being given to the tolerance. So should the city of Saskatoon. But what did they do? They started in to tinker. They have set boundaries which have no basis in historical fact. They took Regina and divided it down Albert Street, as I understand it. They took Saskatoon and divided it by the river. Saskatoon is divided into two parts: If they had had two rivers there it would have been Gaul.

Why not give representation to Saskatoon and Regina in accordance with the principles which Mr. Castonguay told me were to be followed? I have no criticism about my own constituency of Prince Albert to which I shall make only a passing reference, but I do have objection to the general division which has taken place. We in Saskatchewan lost four constituencies. We have gone from 17 to 13. I am not here to enter into political discussion. But we lost tremendously in population from the middle '40s until 1960, a period which happens to be coincidental with socialist government within that province. I do not mention this for any particular purpose; it is just a statement of fact. Alongside are Alberta and Manitoba with free enterprise governments. We in Saskatchewan went back, and we are down to 13 constituencies. It is many years since we had so few.

What was the basis upon which the commission operated? I do not know whom they consulted, but the chairman of the commission, a very good friend of mine over the years, a student in my office, made this statement:

> The commission carefully considered each of the representations made but was unable to give effect to any of them.

The report refers to the representations made during various meetings held in all parts of the province. One brief was presented in each of the six centres—Regina, Moose Jaw, Swift Current, Saskatoon, Prince Albert and Weyburn. Surely there would have been one of them that was right. But they were just brushed aside. They talked, and the commission decided there was no basis for their arguments. The chairman goes on to say that the significance of these hearings to the commission was that the proposed map was generally acceptable. I do not know who gave him that impression, for the day the announcement was made, speaking for this party, I criticized the basis upon which the commission had operated, and my statement was given appropriate space in the press reports.

I also pointed out that some action should be taken to assure that we should not lose four constituencies, bearing in mind the vast wealth of our province and multiple developments there, the like of which few hon. members in this house have any realization. We are down to 13 seats. We have reached the position where we shall have about three times the representation of Prince Edward Island. We have reached a position where we have very few more representatives than Nova Scotia. Those two provinces have basic rights; they are assured that the number of their members will not be reduced below a certain level, and that is proper and fitting.

Mr. Stewart: New Brunswick.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, 12 members. It is proper and fitting that we in our province, with the vast development there and the expansion which is taking place in the field of potash alone—developments which will make wheat and other agricultural products increasingly less important with the passing of the years, should have additional representation. Yet we are to have 13 seats. I think consideration must be given to a constitutional amendment which would provide additional representation for a province as large and as important as Saskatchewan.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The chairman went on to say:

> We appreciated the submissions and were sympathetic to them but the commission tried to satisfy itself the implementation of any or all of the changes suggested would result in an over-all improvement.

That is a strange and unusual attitude, that when members from all parts of Saskatchewan appeared before the commission and made representation to the contrary, the commission of four simply said, "You don't know what you are talking about. We don't think your suggestions are worth consideration, and so they are out."

He also said:

> We found that in general any attempt to redraw the map to conform with the suggestions did not persuade us any improvement would result.

You, sir, listened to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) today, and though he was limited for time he made a compelling argument to the contrary, and one that cannot be brushed aside. It is an interesting circumstance that for many years, according to some who live in the aura of university training and education, the rural areas were over-represented. Some of the political scientists said it was wrong that the rural areas should not be required basically to have the same population as the urban areas.

I cannot place on the record what I have here in my hand and am showing you, sir, but in the proposed map, schedule D, of Saskatchewan, if you look at the area representing Meadow Lake, the representative of that constituency goes from the city of North Battleford to the north end of Saskatchewan, to Uranium City, a very flourishing place in the northern area. But the commission was not satisfied with that. It also took an area west of Prince Albert up to Big River, an area that has always been in Prince Albert constituency from the earliest days in the 1880's, and added it to Meadow Lake.

No member of parliament, even though he had twice the energy of the present member, would be able to cover the new constituency of Meadow Lake. Why not add on Big River to Shellbrook and Parkside, adjacent to Prince Albert, and put them all in Prince Albert where they have always been? That would not reduce the population of Meadow Lake to any extent.

The additions that are made do not concern me, but these people have the right to be considered when they are to be placed in a constituency in which they have no comradeship or interest. These people deal in Prince Albert. They have been there for generations, but now they are bodily cut off and put into a constituency several hundred miles long, far removed from that community of interest that should justify their inclusion.

I might mention the historic nature of Prince Albert. I am not here for the purpose of advertising my constituency. I did that in my maiden speech, Mr. Speaker, my second maiden speech in 1953, but we are the only constituency in Canada that has ever been represented by three prime ministers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is an unusual circumstance. It just shows that there must be a particular attraction to the area because Wilfrid Laurier, as he then was in 1896, became member for Prince Albert. Incidentally, we are having a school named after hin in the city so that in 1967 it will be remembered that he was our member. He was also elected for Quebec East. In those days leaders used to run in two, three, or even more constituencies, and when they got elected in them all they sorted out the one they finally remained in. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as he subsequently became, remained in the province of Quebec, and understandably so.

Then we had Right Hon. Mackenzie King. He came to Prince Albert in 1926. He was a stranger and he took us in. I am one of those who met defeat at his hands in 1926, and he represented us for a long period of years. Both in 1896 and 1925, when Mr. King came to Prince Albert, the area to which I refer contiguous to Prince Albert, was in that constituency.

It is immaterial to me so far as votes are concerned. It is not a question of that at all because, sir, without boasting, having received 66 per cent of the vote in 1965 that is not the kind of a percentage that causes a member to be too fearful if he looks after his constituency. But, sir, this area should be in Prince Albert.

Now I come to another area north of Prince Albert. I understand you are quite a fisherman, Mr. Speaker, no one from your constituency could be other than that. But one of the finest fishing areas in all Canada is at Lac la Ronge. It is joined to Prince Albert by road, but not to any part of Meadow Lake by road. Lac la Ronge does all its business in Prince Albert, but it is to be taken bodily out of the constituency and added to Mackenzie constituency, to which it has no relationship or no continuity or community of interest. These changes that I advocate will not affect the map in any way but they will bring a degree of reason and logic to it which otherwise will not be there.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle has dealt with the other constituencies and I am not going to repeat the arguments he has advanced. But I come back to the point I made earlier. The cities should have their own constituencies. That was the basic principle that was made clear by Mr. Castonguay. But in the province of Saskatchewan they departed from that. Why? I do not know what the reasons were.

As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has pointed out, the mathematical manner in which the division has been made is amazing. There is a surprising equality. There are the rural seats. I have mentioned Meadow Lake and Mackenzie. There is no member living who can cover all those constituencies if he carries out his responsibilities in parliament. It was never intended that a map should be designed on a mathematical basis with no regard to topography, to past associations and to historic relationships.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle mentioned Fort Carlton. There is no more historic place in Canada than Fort Carlton. He mentioned that there were some areas in eastern Canada, in the province of Quebec and in the maritimes, where there was a deep loyalty to them.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Fort Carlton was not in existence when we went west, but my father taught in that area. Fort Carlton is one of the earliest settlements in western Canada, and it has always been associated with Prince Albert. It is now to become part of the Meadow Lake riding. That shows there has not been that degree of care taken that should have been taken.

One hon. member when speaking today mentioned that he hoped these maps were not drawn in Ottawa and simply handed to the provincial commissions. This map could not have been drawn anywhere else than in Ottawa, by somebody that does not know anything about Saskatchewan. This same thing has happened in respect of the proposed maps of other provinces, and I cannot understand why this is the situation.

I wanted to see non-political, non-partisan maps providing for proper representations, based not on political but on sensible foundations. This proposed map of Saskatchewan does not qualify on the basis of that criterion.

As a result of a competition which took place in the United States, the Supreme Court of that great nation ruled in 1957 or 1958 that there should be representation by population, as far as is possible. However, this parliament, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said so well, decided in its wisdom on a tolerance formula, but that formula was not utilized as it should have been.

For many years we have heard the suggestion that farming areas have too great a representation, and there was foundation for that suggestion. This map should have been drawn before the last election was held. There never should have been an election pushed on us as it was, with constituencies in Canada having 225,000 population and others having populations of 35,000. We now have time to do something about the situation.

The suggestion has been made over and over again that we are ending what Mr. J. B. McGeachy of the Financial Post describes as a "tyranny of yokels", a "yokel" being a rural fellow. I do not like that expression and I think there will be resentment over its use. A rural riding is much more difficult for a member to cover than an urban riding. There are great difficulties facing a member who has to serve a rural area with all its varying features, the pull of attraction or antipathy, as the case may be. Our objective must be to have representation by population as far as possible, but it was never intended that the commissions should be given the power to say: Whatever the tolerance may be that parliament provided, you must take what we give you and like it or lump it, to use a colloquialism.

I urge very strongly that action be taken by the commission in Saskatchewan to give the fullest possible consideration to the representations that have been made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and others. All we are asking is that there be justice—that there be justice for the people living in these areas.

A division such as was made by the commission in certain areas in Saskatchewan is a division that could have been made with a compass and a population list, with no regard whatsoever to the physical features. One of the most impressive portions of the argument advanced by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was that part relating to the Saskatchewan river dam, which is in the constituencies of Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, Meadow Lake, Kindersley and Rosetown-Biggar. When that project is completed how is a member going to get across into his constituency?

An hon. Member: He will have to swim.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Anybody who tries to swim the Saskatchewan river will only succeed in reducing the population, and it will be reduced by exactly the number who participate in the attempt.

The commission has not given consideration to that situation but I hope it will do so. The brushing aside of representations is not conducive to that co-operative attitude that we have had in this house in our attempt to assure that representation in parliament shall not be determined on a partisan basis, but only having regard to the welfare of this country as a whole.

I conclude by again suggesting that the time has come for a constitutional amendment to add to our membership from the province of Saskatchewan, which today is being reduced to a minimum. There is a maximum of economic development and tremendous hopes for the future in that province, but this is a relegation of that province, by its reduced membership, to a kind of borough, because of its reduction in population as compared with the increases in population in adjoining provinces.

I hope that the commission will not follow the course it has followed, of consulting nobody but itself, or, if it did consult anybody, not listening to them, pushing everything aside that was brought before it. Surely of all the representations and briefs presented to that commission there was something worthy of consideration by this commission. One would think that among all the representations made by the people of Saskatchewan there would have been something that the commission could accept.

Surely the admission of the chairman of the commission would indicate that what took place was cut and dried. That is much like the laws of the Medes and the Persians. That is not the way to build co-operation and to assure that the franchise—the highest right a Canadian citizen has—shall not be subject to considerations other than for the welfare of the state and the right of the individual.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) have presented very clearly and forcefully the objections of Saskatchewan members of parliament to the proposals of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the redistribution of the federal constituencies in our province. I do not consider it necessary to add anything of a general nature to those very strong objections to the redistribution map that appears in the report of the commission. There are a few points that I should emphasize in regard to local problems.

I want to state, as other members have, that my remarks are not based on self-interest. I consider that I am speaking for a community of interest and for local contacts. I have before me the map of the constituency proposed by the Electoral Boundaries Commission. It includes the city of Moose Jaw which I represent. About the only portion that remains of the constituency I represent, Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, is the city of Moose Jaw. Nearly all Lake Centre, which I have represented for more than eight years, has been chopped off. I would point out, however, that another portion of old Lake Centre has been included. This is a very fine area and any member would be very proud to represent it. I am not presenting this individual objection on any other ground than trading areas, accessibility and coverage by news media. I consider these three criteria to be very important in determining constituency boundaries. Accessibility to all sections of a constituency is a main essential in redistribution. This fact has been emphasized by previous speakers.

Accessibility involves main highways, natural boundaries such as rivers, and the avoidance of barriers such as large lakes and river valleys which make automobile travel difficult. An inspection of the map of the consitituency proposed by the commission will emphasize the points to which I refer. I am dealing now with the proposed new constituency of Moose Jaw. I deal first with the trading areas. The line drawn by the commission extends north from Moose Jaw a distance of about 100 miles to within 12 miles of Saskatoon, which certainly is in the Saskatoon trading area. Then it extends 80 miles or more to within 18 miles of Swift Current, which is completely within the Swift Current trading area. These are very fine trading areas but they are distinct trading areas, being separated by distance and having very little to do with each other in regard to commercial trading.

I would emphasize particularly the importance of accessibility to all sections of a constituency. This matter has been referred to by other hon. members. In the map drawn up by the commission the South Saskatchewan River cuts through almost the middle of the proposed constituency of Moose Jaw and includes Outlook, where the dam on the South Saskatchewan River will be situated. As other speakers have mentioned, the building of this dam will create a lake over 200 feet deep, seven or eight miles across and 135 or 140 miles long clean through the middle of the proposed constituency. Whoever represents the constituency of Moose Jaw will have almost as large an area on the northwest side of this huge lake as there is on the southeast side, and there will be very few ways of getting across the lake except by means of a few bridges.

In my opinion the commission should have considered this matter very carefully. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) referred to statements of the commissioner. The commissioner said that he listened to arguments but saw no reason for changing these boundaries. I would point out that in my objection—and I appeared before the commissioner and presented my case as clearly as I could—I told him about this lake. He and the other two commissioners nodded their heads, appeared to agree with what I said, and then I was surprised to read the report that they decided they would leave the boundaries exactly where they were. Perhaps I should not say this, but maybe they did not want to go to the trouble, as they told me personally, because moving the boundaries of one constituency would involve changing all the rest and arriving at new figures.

I can vouch for the fact that the figures on the map presented by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle have been compiled very carefully from the official population statistics in the last federal census and by reference to the boundaries of all the municipalities. Now that these figures have been compiled, I suggest to the commission that they should consider them carefully and give serious consideration to the boundaries contained in the map filed here today.

My objection also referred to coverage by news media. I have in my hand a map showing the area served by one of the stations that covers Moose Jaw. It goes nowhere near completely covering the area included in the proposed riding of Moose Jaw. The station in Swift Current will cover part of the area and the station in Saskatoon will cover part of it. Therefore there will be three widely-reported news media covering this very large area each with different community interests.

The suggestions I have put forward and those of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who had the help of the other members from Saskatchewan in compiling this objection, should be very, very carefully considered. The commission has a precedent for making changes. I should like to read just one comment contained in a Canadian Press story printed in the Moose Jaw Times-Herald of January 20, 1966. This paragraph says:

> Prime Minister Pearson's Ontario riding of Algoma East, altered severely in the preliminary map, was almost restored to its present shape.

Therefore, as I say, there is certainly a precedent for the commission to consider very carefully what we have suggested and I hope they will make changes such as this Canadian Press story indicates were made for the constituency that is to be called Algoma. That is all I wish to say, Mr. Speaker. I thought a member should rise and comment upon how the proposal of the Electoral Boundaries Commission affects him. I say again that this is not a matter of self-interest but of trying to arrange a constituency that a member of this house can adequately represent.

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): I should like to make some brief remarks at this time with regard to the objections of the electoral boundaries in Saskatchewan as drawn by the commission. I think it goes without saying that their task in Saskatchewan was difficult because we were losing four seats. The efforts that were made prior to the commission being given its task to have our loss of four seats lessened fell flat. There was no co-operation from the government here. A plea to the legislature of Saskatchewan to support our efforts was rejected. In fact, the Premier of that province, in response to an argument I had made, said that I was just trying to shift my responsibility to their shoulders; I could look after it myself.

This is not what happened in 1952, when Saskatchewan was slated to suffer a severe loss of seats. At that time the legislature was controlled by the old C.C.F. party. This government introduced a bill into the legislature, which carried unanimously and was referred to the authorities in Ottawa. The then prime minister recognized the plea, and Saskatchewan's loss at that time was minimized. This is in comparison with the actions of the present Liberal government in Saskatchewan, and this government here.

We recognize that the commission had no alternative but to deal with the Saskatchewan problem on the basis of giving Saskatchewan 13 seats. I have listened to the remarks of my colleagues and, in general, I feel the arguments they have put forward are worthy of support. It does appear that the commission has used mathematical calculations almost completely in their consideration, and that they have ignored lines of communication and community of interest. Community of interest is very important to people who are going to be represented by a member, especially where there are diverse interests in a constituency such as urban-rural interests. Urbanization is growing apace, and the voice of the largely increasing urban areas must be heard, and must be heard emphatically in parliament.

My purpose in rising at this time is to make a plea that the commission give consideration to the presentations that have been made here today, pointing out the failure of the commission to recognize natural boundaries, community of interest and so forth. In giving this consideration, the commissioners should bear in mind that the voice of the urban areas, our two large cities of Regina and Saskatoon, must not be diminished. This has happened in the past. The boundaries were set on the basis of gerrymandering and for political purposes. The result was that a large number of people in the growing and developing urban areas, whose whole interest was in the city, who paid their taxes there, who were subject to police and fire protection of that area and the school system of the area, could not make their voice heard in the choice of a representative for the area.

So far as the city of Regina is concerned, the division proposed by the commission does not fracture the city. We know that if we are to keep within the tolerance set by the act, the city cannot have two completely urban constituencies. A line has been drawn along the main street, and it continues along a prime highway in Saskatchewan. It is a boundary that leaves no one in any doubt as to which part of the constituency they would be in. The commissioners, however, go beyond community of interest and I think this is important. The boundaries have been set according to the population in the city, and some people have been put in areas in which there is no communication and no community of interest whatever. The people in the northern areas are oriented toward Saskatoon, one of the other large centres. These people, in effect, lose their voice in that constituency to an extent that I am sure would not be satisfactory to them.

If the commission listens to the representations that have been made by my colleague in regard to natural boundaries and community of interest, and gives consideration to the fact that we have presented them with a well prepared map of constituency boundaries, which results from weighing these problems that have been raised in connection with the proposed boundaries for the two seats designated as Regina-Lake Centre and Regina East, they should bear in mind that the division of a city should be a straightforward division. It should be a division that will not fracture the voice of those whose interest are urban. It should be a division that will allow for new growth, expansion and development that will take place before the next census. There is no real cleavage between urban and rural areas in these constituencies. These people are oriented to doing their business in a certain place and this community of interest should be kept in mind in drawing the boundaries.

It is in the interests of urban people that the rural community be successful and prosperous. It is in the interests of the rural community that the urban area should develop. These people have, therefore, a united interest in having the boundaries drawn in such a way that community of interest is dominant, and will leave a happy situation for the member or members who will represent those interests.

This would be my submission. The commissioners should consider the representations that have been made, the new map that has been drawn, as well as have regard for the increasing urban areas. The boundary lines should be set so that the voice of these areas will not be fractured but can be heard, and heard emphatically. The boundaries should be set in such a way as to allow for the growth that will take place before another redistribution occurs.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I may be somewhat repetitious, Mr. Speaker, in speaking about the redistribution of Saskatchewan seats. I think the saddest part of this redistribution is the fact that Saskatchewan will lose four seats. This redistribution is based on the 1961 census, but the population of Saskatchewan has increased greatly as a result of some industries moving into the area. I believe that at the moment the population may be well over a million people, and at the last census it was less than a million people.

Another objection I have is the fact that the redistribution commissioners paid absolutely no attention to the agricultural constituencies. Strictly speaking, the majority of our seats are agricultural seats, and the two largest cities in our province, Saskatoon and Regina, have two large rural areas attached to them. Another factor which was not taken into consideration is that we have a number of rivers and these rivers run right through every constituency the new commission has approved. This is a hardship.

It was stated here previously that after the South Saskatchewan River project is completed and comes into operation there will be another big lake right across the centre of Saskatchewan which will also make it very difficult for a member of parliament to serve these constituencies. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) and other members have given their time to speak on this matter and have sketched out the new constituencies basing them on such considerations as making the cities strictly urban constituencies, and the rural areas representing the agricultural people as rural constituencies.

I would ask the commission to give serious thought to our representation and particularly to the very masterly deliberation of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who was instrumental and helped us to draft these new constituency lines. Everything was taken into consideration; the representations were not neglected. However, I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if this presentation of our new map will be accepted, many of the inconveniences and representations by the rural people to one member and by the urban people to another member would be more satisfactory than it is at the present time.

There is very little I can add to what has already been said so eloquently by the leader of our party, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), and also by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). However, I know I speak for all the people of my constituency of Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale when I say they will not be pleased to be attached to the Saskatoon constituency. The new constituency as outlined at the present time will be strictly an agricultural area; it will be divided from the Prince Albert constituency by the South Saskatchewan River. It will also leave out some other areas which were attached to Saskatoon.

It gave me great concern when I saw the new map. I do not know if the people of my constituency would want to nominate me again according to the new map or the new redistribution system, but if I were elected again I would have to serve about two thirds of the people in the city of Saskatoon, urban citizens, and the rest would come from the agricultural area of Saskatoon-Humboldt. On the other hand if a member from Saskatoon, who may not be informed about agricultural matters and grievances, represented such constituencies pertaining to matters of agriculture, I believe this would be a hardship to the people.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the commissioners, who will be presented with this new map, give serious consideration to the matters which have been brought up in this debate. It is not a matter of just criticizing the commissioners from Saskatchewan, but one of presenting the facts as they exist in our province.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is not my wish, Mr. Speaker, to take part in the debate on Saskatchewan boundaries in any sense of arguing with the points which have been made by the members from that province. However, there was one statement made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) which I believe should be corrected, at least for the purposes of the record. His statement was to the effect that the Saskatchewan population had declined; the inference was that its population is down now from what it used to be. In particular he inferred that the population had declined during the years when a socialist government was in power.

Let us look at the figures, just for the record. According to the 1921 census there were in Saskatchewan 757,510 people and in 1931, there were 921,785. In the next ten years, from 1931 to 1941, the population declined to 895,992. Then in the next ten years, 1941 to 1951, during which the C.C.F. government was in power for part of the time, it continued to decline to 831,728. However, the most recent census, taken in 1961, recorded a population in Saskatchewan of 925,181. During that ten-year period, from 1951 to 1961, when there was a substantial increase in the population of Saskatchewan, the C.C.F. government was in power the whole time.

I do not think there is any particular connection here, but the Leader of the Opposition saw fit to try and make a connection between the government which was in power, and facts which he did not state quite correctly. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the population for Saskatchewan in 1961, listed at 925,181, was the largest in the entire history of that province. As I say, I just felt that this fact should be on the record. Obviously, the reason Saskatchewan suffers a loss of seats is not that Saskatchewan has suffered a loss in population, but that other provinces, notably Ontario, Quebec, Alberta and British Columbia, have gained in population at a rate more rapid than is the case for Saskatchewan. We also know that the reason the drop at this time is from 17 to 13 seats is that there was a Gardiner floor which protected the representation at 15 seats ten years ago.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I am not arguing with the case the members have made; I believe they have made a good case for their map to be reconsidered. However, I think the case would be even stronger if the facts were stated as they really are. I submit that in fact the case which Saskatchewan has for consideration is strengthened by the fact that its present population is not one of decline; but its present population is the largest it has ever had in its history.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deachman: May I ask the hon. member a question? I want to know whether he felt that the increase in population in Saskatchewan was due to the fecundity of the socialists, or was it due to the immigration policy of the Liberal government?

Mr. Knowles: I do not contend there is any necessary connection at all between the growth or the decline of population in a province and the government that happens to be in power in that province. What I did not like was the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition that there was a relationship between the government that was in power, and the alleged facts which he stated incorrectly.

Mr. Rapp: If I may comment on that point, I think what the Leader of the Opposition had meant was this, that the population at the present time is above what it was in 1961. Presently there are over a million people in the province. Then he said that this is perhaps for the reason that we now have another government, and not that C.C.F. government which was in power previously. However, I do not think that the Leader of the Opposition meant to reflect on the previous government.

Mr. Knowles: I am surprised that my hon. friend would advance an argument of this nature. What he is doing is to give credit to the Liberal government for something that it did, which is strange, indeed, coming from a Conservative such as he is.

Mr. Winkler: I should like to ask a question of the hon. member also, or make a statement to clear up the matter, in the context in which it was discussed.

I believe that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition was making a comparison of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba in the same period. I leave it there.

Mr. Knowles: What I said for the record will speak for itself. I quoted the actual figures, and I put them on the record.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does this complete discussion of objection No. 10 with respect to the province of Saskatchewan?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house having considered this objection, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act it is the Speaker's duty to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

On Wednesday, when the house was discussing objections respecting the province of Ontario, the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) was unable to make a statement which he desired to make. The house agreed then that permission would be granted to him to make a statement when he was present in the house. Will the house agree that he may proceed with this now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Greene: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I also was in the position of being caught. I could not be here last night as I had to arbitrate a conflict between two participants, one in Detroit and one in Montreal. I would ask the same consent of the house as was extended to the hon. member for Simcoe East.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, as a result of a prior appointment I was unable to be here. However, I was informed that I should have an opportunity to speak on this matter too. I should be only a few minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member may speak?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure that the house, in extending the privilege to the hon. member for Simcoe East to make the statement now which he would have made previously, would be generous enough to extend the same privilege to other hon. members from Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you, and through you the house for its courtesy in allowing me to speak on this matter. I should be remiss if I did not refer to the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) for making a request on my behalf when he knew that I wished to speak, but that I had an engagement out of town.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, may I report on the riding of Simcoe East which, according to the last census figures, had a population of 59,000. Today, with normal growth, that population ought to be 65,000.

This is a growing economic area. This year in the north end of the riding in the town of Midland, three new industries will be established, one of them being the $25 million plant—it may be worth more—of the R.C.A. Victor Company. The new industries will bring in a number of people. It has been suggested that the new industries would bring into the area between 3,000 and 5,000 additional people.

That means, Mr. Speaker, that with the natural increases, this riding alone would have a population of between 75,000 and 80,000 people at the next census. The area covers 1,600 square miles, with three centres of communal interest, the three centres having a mayor or a municipal council, service clubs, federal buildings, business centres, hospitals, newspaper and radio centres, bringing news of regional and communal interest.

Here, in one area, we have more communal interests than is the case in most urban ridings. Within the area we have great diversification of occupation. I think it is well to consider this. We are surrounded by water on three sides. The federal Department of Transport has officials, with their families, living in the area. We have post office officials, unemployment insurance officers in all centres, and in both ends of the riding we have half a dozen post offices, and smaller sub-post offices. In other words we have a sizeable number of civil servants and their families in this area alone.

Also, we have people engaged in the tourist industry, which is one of the big industries of this country, and we have the operators of tourist resorts, with all their problems. Also, we have all the way from vegetable to large dairy farmers, in addition to which we have highly industrialized areas in the Midland-Penetang area in the north and Orillia in the south. Besides this we have those in the business and professional community in all areas. As I have mentioned before, we are surrounded by water on three sides, and as a result we have sailors, those who operate boats in one form or another, and fishermen who fish both for pleasure and for profit.

This, I submit, indicates the diversity in the occupations of the people, and therefore the diversity of their needs. I hope, in having indicated this diversity in our peoples, that I have also indicated that as a result of this diversity the whole area requires more service from a member than would be the case in a great many other urban areas of Canada.

If the service by the member is to be provided to the community, it follows therefore that a member cannot serve all of a given number of people equally, because due allowance must be made for regional diversity of occupation, and for the size of any group of people in any given area. If these facts are not considered, I submit that they ought to be. I humbly submit that Simcoe East is large enough, without making any changes whatsoever. If change is needed, and if more population is needed, then regionalism ought to be respected and the townships of Mara, Rama, Thorah, Beaverton, Carden and Dalton ought to be considered.

This is an area, Mr. Speaker, with a chamber of commerce in Orillia, the members of which go out into these areas. In the town of Orillia there are two hospitals, namely the Ontario Hospital and the Soldiers Memorial Hospital. The Orillia hospitals serve that entire area, the people who are sick coming to hospitals in Orillia from an area which stretches 25 miles to the south, to the east, and beyond.

I wish to say that if these townships are taken into the area, it would increase the population of the area by 5,000 to 6,000 people. Then, Mr. Speaker, it would be well up and over the 80,000 which is put as the average or the maximum for a rural area.

The city of Barrie and the township of Vespra would be very welcome additions, indeed, to this riding, and any member would be happy to represent this area. Most of the people in the area I know well. However, if this is done, 32,000 more people would be added to the constituency—28,000 in the case of Barrie and 4,000 in the case of Vespra.

Where are we going? Before very long there will be 100,000 people in this somewhat rural area. What will happen too when the census is taken in 1971? This area will have to be split up again. This means a lot of trouble; it means many break-ups. How can we expect the school children to know where they are or to get a member or the executive in a riding well acquainted with the area when so many changes are made? As I have indicated, this riding will probably contain more than 100,000 people by 1971, bearing in mind the rapid economic growth. I do not think it would be fair to Simcoe North or to Simcoe East to have to divide them again after putting them together.

If a precedent is needed we need only look at the riding of Algoma East, the Prime Minister's own riding. It is fairly close to and north of my constituency, in the Georgian Bay area. This riding was changed. I submit this was an excellent idea. I have not gone into all the figures. However, I am sure some of these constituencies need changing. There is a need for alteration. These boundaries should be made as permanent as possible by taking account of all the relevant trends. Here is a growing area, an area which will contain 70,000 people. Why change it? Why not leave it as it is? If any adjustments need to be made, advantages could be taken of the areas to the north, to the south and to the southeast.

I hope the commission will reconsider their proposals before they commit themselves to a course of action which would in my opinion be mistaken. The constituency would cover around 2,000 square miles and I submit it is hardly fair to expect a member of parliament to give adequate representation to an area with so many community centres and such a large and diversified occupational population.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I should like to make a few brief remarks with regard to this report. I thank hon. members for giving their consent in this respect. The reason many of us were not present yesterday was because the time of the discussion had been changed; it was originally to have taken place today.

In making these representations I am one who cannot be accused of any political partisanship inasmuch as the representations I intend to make concern a portion of my present constituency which is now destined to be broken into two parts and transferred to two other constituencies and which, I believe, should be placed in a third constituency which is not the one in which I am presently located. So any representations I make in this regard can be of no possible benefit to me politically. Nevertheless, I feel representations should be made, since I hold the view that the present boundaries as defined by the commission can only lead to inadequate representation of the people concerned.

I may say that in this regard the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) and I appeared before the commission and put forward very much the same type of representations with regard to these ridings in eastern Ontario as I am putting forward now. I agreed wholeheartedly with the representations the hon. member for Carleton made at that time and again I concur in his representations in the present debate as far as they involve the approach of the commission to the delineation of the eastern Ontario ridings.

May I point out, as I think has been done by other speakers, without in any way impugning either the integrity or the ability of the commissioners, that here we have a classic example of the dangers of relegating to administrative bodies functions which ultimately relate to the elected representatives of the people. There has been a great tendency in the past few years to give powers to administrative bodies and to remove them from elected bodies. I always think this is strange inasmuch as in the first instance the people themselves achieve power and freedom by taking it away from the executive arm and giving it to their elected representatives. In the past few years we have been reversing this trend and telling ourselves: Anything we can take away from our elected representatives and give to administrative bodies will constitute an improvement.

Here we have a clear example of the danger of doing this type of thing. All of us who are elected representatives of the people, should take cognizance of this flagrant example of what happens when responsibility is taken from elected bodies and given to boards and tribunals. In my humble opinion no elected body of men sitting in this house or anywhere else could possibly have made a redistribution on this basis or could possibly have made a worse redistribution than has been done in this case. Yet there still seems to be some sanctity about giving the job to an administrative board or commission rather than to a committee of this house.

If a committee of this house had made a redistribution in this fashion without in any way considering the social, economic and political habits and mores of the people—if an elected body said, "You will vote wherever we say you are going to vote. It does not matter what you are used to, or what you like, or what would be more convenient for you. We do not care about that. You will vote where we say you will, irrespective of your convenience"—if any elected body of persons had done that they would be called to account very quickly at the next election by the people whom they so treated.

But here we find this body is not responsible to the people. They can make decisions of this kind and have apparently to account to no one for such decisions. Apparently they have complete security of office. They are not too concerned with the effect on the people whom they are putting into these unaccustomed areas.

They say that as long as they have a reasonable numerical equity per vote, as long as there is something in the neighbourhood of 53,000 people in a rural constituency, then where the people vote, does not matter. They say, "We will take a compass and draw a circle on the map, and wherever that circle happens to touch that is where the people will go and vote." This is the very negation of an honest attempt at a form of redistribution which will give the best possible representation to the people concerned.

I think we are all agreed that a redistribution was badly needed, that in the great cities which had grown so rapidly in the post-war period there was an inequity in that a very large number of people had only a single member, as compared to a smaller number of people having a single member in a rural constituency. I think all hon. gentlemen would agree that that was not right. But surely merely to equate numbers and say, "Now that we have equated the numbers everything is the best in all possible worlds," is just as grave as to have the inequities of numbers that we previously had.

I think the commission has shown great contempt of the people with this redistribution and its approach to the matter. When debate took place in the house on the redistribution bill, I was somewhat concerned because I have had some experiences with administrative tribunals. I know how very quickly they lose touch with the people, and how very quickly they are inclined to become a law unto themselves because they are responsible to no one but themselves. I very much feared that a tribunal of this kind might not consider what was best for the people themselves in the areas which it was carving into new ridings.

At the time of that debate, even though it may not have been specifically spelled out in the act, I hoped that the commissions would take the trouble to catch the spirit of the act. I hoped that the commissioners would read the debate that had taken place, and thus catch something of the spirit of the act. I hoped they would not just carve the new ridings, willy-nilly, without considering the social mores of the people in the areas involved, the geographical connotations or the new boundaries, the historical associations of the people involved and also, very importantly, the ready ability to organize for political purposes within the new boundaries that they were going to establish.

This is something that cannot be done in a vacuum. The purpose of a redistribution is to create boundaries for political elections, which involve political organization, and if a commission carves up these new ridings without having any concern as to whether or not they are areas that might readily and most facilely be organized for political purposes, then it is denying the very object of the thing it is doing.

Mr. Greene: The area with which I am particularly concerned is that which was formerly in the west end of the constituency of Renfrew South. This is an area which goes roughly from Eganville to Whitney, an area which, if I am not mistaken, has been entirely within Renfrew South since 1941 and at that time it was only the Whitney portion which was added. The rest had been in Renfrew South for many years previously. The people living there, apart from voting in Renfrew South, have all their connections, all their organizations and their habits—their whole lives—centred in the county of Renfrew. When they go to a larger centre to do their shopping they do it in either Pembroke or Renfrew.

Their church organizations are determined on a county basis. All their clubs and social associations are determined on a county basis. Their provincial political organization, even after redistribution, is on a county basis. The riding was maintained almost intact in South Renfrew in the provincial redistribution. They are organized politically for municipal purposes on a county basis, and are associated with the county of Renfrew for all purposes.

Now, all of a sudden, we take these people and for no good reason put them into two other ridings—no good reason but that this is the simplest thing to do. The commission did not take the trouble to concern itself with the habits of these people and where it would be most convenient for them to vote. It merely considered creating a numerical equation. All these people are being put into two new ridings. The key town of the two new ridings, the town which will likely be the hub of a new political community, in one instance is the town of Lindsay, and in the other the town of Napanee. But there is virtually no communication of any kind between Napanee and Lindsay and this area which is being carved up stretching from Eganville to Whitney. There are virtually no roads to speak of, whereas between Pembroke and this area there is a major highway.

The people in this area have no association with either Lindsay or Napanee because they have been used to dealing with the county of Renfrew and the county town of the county of Renfrew, at Pembroke. If the commission had taken the trouble to find out, instead of getting the job done in a hurry so that its members could go back fishing, or to whatever else they were concerned with, it would have discovered that these people are historically geared to the county of Renfrew. All their associations, political, social and church, are in the county of Renfrew.

They are used to travelling to the town of Pembroke and they will be much better served politically if they remain in the county of Renfrew, and not carved up with one half going into one county with which they have no connection, and the other half going into some other territory with which they have no connection.

Apart from the difficulties of political organization I would bring this point to the attention of the house, Mr. Speaker, and to the attention of the commission, if it wishes to pay any attention to our contributions here—that is, if it does not treat them as unthinkingly and unconcernedly as it has other representations that have been made to it—that quite apart from the difficulties of political organization, which may be something that the public might feel was a selfish motive, I suggest that in this day and age it was never more important that people take an interest and play a part in the political affairs of their country.

Surely if this system of ours is going to prevail and do the job it is intended to do, it can only do so if the people themselves participate to the greatest possible degree in the political affairs of their country, either through association with a party of their choice or by taking part in deliberations at meetings of various parties, if they prefer this course. If you take people and put them in a new riding with which they have no previous communication, for any purpose, they are not very likely to take part in political affairs.

Several people have spoken to me and have said: "Well, Joe, I took part in politics, I went to meetings and belonged to a party, but I am not going to do so any more because what is the use, I do not know anybody in Lindsay, I've never been to Lindsay". Many of them have said they do not know anybody there, have no association or connection with the area and they will no longer be interested in politics. This is the same in the case of Napanee in the other riding. These people point out that they have nothing whatsoever against the areas of Lindsay or Napanee, but they feel they can take a more active part and would be more interested in the politics, and for that matter, better served by their representative because he would know about their problems, if they were permitted to remain in their traditional location for all purposes, namely in the county of Renfrew.

To be specific on this point let me say this. The new riding of Renfrew North could very well have taken in these people and would serve them much better, for the purposes to which I have referred, than they will now be served by this new riding with which they have no association. I can see no reason in the world why the area between Eganville and Whitney could not have been put in the constituency of Renfrew North. This may have required a little effort. But this ought to have been done all the way through, as my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Bell) suggested, in order to find geographical delineations which would serve the people in the manner in which I have mentioned. The commission should have said to themselves, we are going to draw new boundaries, and we are going to have great concern for the idea of having an equal number of votes per riding, so that the principle of one man, one vote, will be the order of the day. But we intend to have some flexibility.

I suggest that this flexibility was given to the commission for the very purpose I have envisaged, in order that the people could be included in ridings where they would get the best representation. The commission was given some flexibility in order that it might do this only after very considerable discussion and deliberation in this house. They completely ignored that flexibility that was given to them for that very purpose and thus, I suggest, were if anything in contempt of this house.

I do not think that absolute numerical equality is the answer. The necessary thing is that people receive adequate representation. The name of the system under which we operate is that of representative government. Surely this requires that ridings be set up in such a way that the people have a geographical entity, whereby they can best be represented.

It does not matter if one riding has 51,000 people and another has 56,000 people if the boundaries of the riding are such that within that riding the people are living in a unit in which they are accustomed to operating in other fields of their endeavour, and if they maintain their traditions and history, and if the riding is that kind of unit which encourages them to participate in politics and take their proper place within the political system. Surely it is far better to have some numerical discrepancies and have that kind of a riding than to have perfect numerical equality by shoving everyone into ridings where they have no connection or association, and where they will not take part in the political affairs of their country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I should now like to add a word or two on behalf of the Polish community which is centred in Wilno, which is located in the area to which I have referred.

This community has existed for over 100 years. There are several generations of Polish people living there who have played a very great part in the history of the development of Renfrew county. These people have been among the foremost citizens who took part in the last great conflict. I am not personally familiar with world war I, although I may look that old, but certainly during the second world war—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Just wait until you have been a minister a couple more years.

Mr. Greene: In another couple of years I will be back to the Boer war.

Certainly no people played a more worthy and glorious part in serving their country during the second world war than did the Polish people of Renfrew county. I have no specific statistics but I would venture to say there is no segment of the Canadian population that had a greater percentage of men enlist voluntarily in the armed forces than did that Polish community of South Renfrew.

These people came to that part of Canada, even though there might have been land available that was more arable, because it reminded them very much of the part of Poland from which they had emigrated. They have played a very great part in the historical development of Renfrew county, and they are proud to be a part of that area. Renfrew county means a very great deal to them. All their associations have been within the county of Renfrew for many years. These are Roman Catholic people, and the diocese of Pembroke is the diocese in which they find themselves, for the purpose of religious organization. The bishop of the diocese lives in Pembroke. They are deeply religious people and they look to Pembroke as the centre of their religious organization.

As I said earlier, for every purpose—social, economic and religious—they are a part of Renfrew county and a very proud part. They have always taken a very keen interest in the political affairs of this country. These people came here because of the inadequacies of the political affairs in their own land, and they have not forgotten that it is important to take part in political affairs in order to preserve those rights which they cherish and deem paramount.

These Polish people have been accustomed to doing everything they do in associations of various kinds, since the time they came to this country, in the county of Renfrew. What we are doing now by this commission proposal is chopping them in half, placing part of them in one riding and part in another, showing scorn and contempt for their history and tradition. They care not how much it has meant to them to have been part of Renfrew county for all purposes—social, religious, economic and political—from the time they came to Canada.

I believe their history is extremely important. We have too little history in this country and this is a time when we must have more concern and pride for our past. I think we are doing a great disservice not only to these Polish people, but to the needs of the country, in showing this complete disregard for their past, and by putting them into these new ridings, irrespective of what they might want.

I would urge the commission, now that they have the opportunity and the time, to take a second look at this matter. We have all made mistakes in the past, and it may well be that the commission felt there was the pressure of time upon them—they were in a hurry; there was an election coming and they had to get this job done. Perhaps that is why they did the job in such a haphazard fashion.

My hon. friends opposite have assured me that if the commission will but do a proper job in this regard there will be no need for redistribution for two or three years, so the commission will have plenty of time to do a proper job.

I hope they will have the courage to take a second look at this matter and to consider anew the need for good representation; that they will review their findings in the light of representations here made and will come up with a better job, on second look. In that second look I trust they will bear in mind that the people of the west end of South Refrew from Eganville to Whitney should be placed in the constituency of North Renfrew.

If this is done, these people will be more adequately represented in this house and will feel they are members of a meaningful political system to a far greater degree than if this area is carved in half, as proposed, and they are put in what is to them an alien, foreign and unknown political home.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I thank you and hon. members for the opportunity to speak very briefly in this debate. I shall speak only briefly because I welcome this report on behalf of the some 350,000 people of York-Scarborough and wish to do nothing to delay its implementation. My enthusiasm must be inhibited somewhat by the realization that the five parts into which this riding is to be divided will still be among the most populous ridings in Canada. This is so despite the fact that they constitute probably the fastest growing area in Canada.

Beyond this general observation there is one minor point with respect to boundaries which I feel should be recorded. The returning officer for York-Scarborough has recommended, I understand, that the lands between Brimley road and McCowan road and between highway 401 and Steeles avenue be included in the new riding of York-Scarborough rather than in the new riding of Scarborough East.

There are a few—I believe eight—existing houses on the east side of Brimley road between highway 401 and Sheppard avenue which are included, under the report, in the proposed new riding of Scarborough East. But these houses would be completely isolated from other residential areas of that new riding. They are separated from those areas by the CFTO television station on the east and the C.P.R. marshalling yards on the north. It would appear that the residents of these houses would have to go a considerable distance, probably in excess of a mile, to vote and the houses are really part of the community which extends west from Brimley Road as well as east, being part of an area whose residents have traditionally voted together at the local school which is on the east side of Brimley road.

The people on the east side of Brimley road are part of the community of Agincourt, which lies to the west of Brimley road in the new riding of York-Scarborough, and in no way are they connected geographically or socially with the other residential areas of the proposed riding of Scarborough East. I support the recommendation of the returning officer, which I understand is strongly supported by the commissioner of planning of the township of Scarborough, that the north-south boundary between York-Scarborough and Scarborough East be the centre line of McCowan road north of highway 401, as it is south of highway 401, at least up to Sheppard avenue but preferably to Steeles avenue, the northern limit of these ridings. Then it would cut through the centre of the railway marshalling yards, which would provide a natural division of residential areas between these two new ridings.

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I first want to thank you and hon. members of the house for allowing me to say a few words in this debate. They will be very few. I do not know whether it has anything to do with the portfolio of Minister of Agriculture, but two of the finest speeches this afternoon were made by the former minister of agriculture and the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene). I feel deeply that they have put forth some very sound, practical, and shall we say right down-to-earth thinking and facts. It is my earnest hope that the Boundaries Commission will give very, very serious consideration to all the suggestions put forward before they close the doors on this important matter.

Speaking for myself, I am quite pleased with the new constituency that has been formed. However, I am asking for a very minor change, but shall I say a very important change for the people of the historic constituency of Norfolk. The Boundaries Commission have named the new constituency Haldimand-Norfolk. I should like to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that it so happens that the county of Haldimand is divided so that part of it is in another constituency. On the other hand, Norfolk has not been divided and remains as it always has been over the years. In fact, it has never been divided federally.

Therefore I believe that it would only be fair to the people of the new constituency to call it Norfolk-Haldimand rather than Haldimand-Norfolk. In addition, I should like to point out that the name of the provincial riding is Haldimand-Norfolk. This riding is made up of Haldimand-Norfolk and takes in all of Haldimand but only part of Norfolk. Therefore changing the name of the federal riding to Norfolk-Haldimand would, I am sure, help keep clear in the minds of the people, and goodness knows, the press, which riding is provincial and which is federal. This is just a small matter that I wanted to raise. I am sure the Boundaries Commission will take it into consideration. This is just a little bit of practical thinking.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank hon. members for allowing me to speak at this time. As you know, I represent the riding of Kenora-Rainy River which is the last Ontario riding and is right up against the Manitoba boundary. Northwestern Ontario is a nightmare in regard to redistribution, not necessarily because of what the commissioners have done but because of the problems the commission had to take into account in trying to make an equitable distribution.

There are some minor changes I should like to see made in my riding. I am putting them forward at this time because when the commission was holding its second series of hearings I had not provided notice of speaking, because the former member was holding the seat at that time, and I was not allowed to make my presentation.

In the southern part of my riding, in the town of Fort Frances, the line comes through the middle of the town. It seems to me that the line should come through the outskirts, which would take in an Indian reserve, the Couchiching reserve, and a few other scattered areas. It would be much more sensible if this line were moved to the other side, to Rainy Lake, which is to the east. This would save a great deal of confusion.

In addition, it might not be a bad idea to move the line about 50 to 60 miles closer to Atikokan, because there are only a few small hamlets there. I do not believe this would disrupt the population of my riding and the new riding of Thunder Bay.

The other point I want to make is that the way the lines are drawn in the northern part of my riding, the town of Dryden is eliminated from it. In order to go to Sioux Lookout, it is necessary for me to travel through Dryden and three other little towns before I can get up there. This is a bit ridiculous, to say the least.

The next point I want to make is that my riding, with the exception perhaps of the town of Atikokan, before redistribution had for its economic, cultural and social centre, the Manitoba town of Winnipeg.

Mr. Knowles: We are a city, please.

Mr. Reid: I am glad to hear that. What they are doing by the drawing of this boundary line is distorting the whole social structure of the constituency. They are taking towns like Fort Frances and Dryden and arbitrarily putting them in an area with which they really do not have that much in common. I believe that in minor, political matters, we do look to the Lakehead. I am one of those who believe that when you have a riding, particularly in a rural area, there should be some sense of community interest.

Kenora-Rainy River has been a particularly difficult riding to represent because it has no one centre, no one town, that stands pre-eminent among the others. This has created a special problem for a member. If one town in a particular area chooses not to print your press releases this means that, for election purposes, you are cut off from communicating with this area. One of the last accomplishments of the former member was to arrange that the whole area of Kenora-Rainy River would be served by a satellite television system beamed out of Winnipeg. For the first time in the history of this riding since 1924, a sense of community was beginning to develop. At least they had one thing that bound them together. The result of this redistribution has been completely to destroy quite a large territory that had been laboriously built up.

There have been many complaints against the commissioners. I think we should be fair and recognize that they had to overcome a great many difficulties in doing the job, particularly in this area of northern and northwestern Ontario. However, there have been many incomprehensible decisions, particularly the one creating the riding of Cochrane, as well as the nightmare of Thunder Bay. How these people in Thunder Bay are going to get adequate representation, I do not know. It seems to me that the distance between Fort Frances and White River, and White River and Dryden, is in the neighbourhood of 600 or 700 miles. This is a lot of territory for one person to look after. In addition, I am, personally, picking up about 2,000 Indians to the north. This means my expenses in going to see them between elections, and the expenses during a campaign, are going to be quite out of proportion to the population that has to be served.

There have been a great many complaints about this commission. I think one of the reasons for this fact is that this is the first time redistribution has ever been accomplished on a representation by population basis. I feel that a great deal of trouble could have been avoided had this problem been turned over to a 25-member committee of the house. Then the committee, on a provincial basis, could have set the constituency boundaries on what they considered to be an equitable basis. In order to avoid any accusation of gerrymandering, the committee's report could have gone to the commissioners and they could have looked into it. There could have been only the same type of limited appeal that we have here. I think this would have been far more equitable and I think more people would have been satisfied with the end result.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that I call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the house leader indicate if it is the intention to proceed with a supply motion on Monday, and what the business will be thereafter?

Mr. McIlraith: Before I do, may I say that I understood that the other motions from Ontario had been completed yesterday. Is that correct?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the Minister of Public Works, it is my understanding that the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie wanted to make a comment in connection with a motion he attempted to move this afternoon.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): I should like to withdraw the motion which I made this afternoon, under reserve of my right to reintroduce it next week.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, on Monday we propose to bring forward a supply motion, which presumably would take Monday and Tuesday. At the conclusion of that debate, we would continue with the redistribution motions from Manitoba, and then legislation, the program for which I would announce on Tuesday night.

Mr. Knowles: How many departments does the government wish to ask for at the conclusion of the supply motion?

Mr. McIlraith: As many as the opposition parties will agree to, Mr. Speaker. The rules provide for six. Perhaps I will ask the house leaders of other parties to ask their members if they would agree to a larger number than that. In any event it will be no fewer than six.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER OF ECONOMIC PLANNING FOR INDIA

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I call your attention and the attention of hon. members to the presence in the Speaker's gallery of the Minister of Economic Planning for the government of India, Mr. Ashoka Mehta.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

MOTIONS FOR CONCURRENCE IN REPORTS

On the order:

Mr. Cameron (High Park) (chairman of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs):

That the first report of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, presented to the house on Tuesday, April 26, 1966, be now concurred in.

Mr. Stanbury: In the absence of the member for High Park may I ask that the motion in his name stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On the order:

Mr. Hales (chairman of the standing committee on public accounts):

That the first report of the standing committee on public accounts presented to the house on Wednesday, April 27, 1966, be now concurred in.

Mr. Hales: May I ask that this motion appearing in my name be allowed to stand.

Mr. Winch: May I ask why these motions are being allowed to stand? The public accounts committee is being called into session tomorrow. Twice now we have not been able to function because of a lack of a quorum. Why, after all these days, are we being asked to stand this motion?

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Hochelaga) moved that the fourth report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, presented to the house on Friday, April 29, 1966, be now concurred in.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Before the committee report is concurred in, I wish to point out that this committee is being required to sit this week at the same time as the house. Since the committee's mandate is a limited one, we have no objection.

I should like to take this opportunity to point out that an irregularity took place over the weekend. While a committee of the house has been set up to look into the matters relating to arts, broadcasting and films and this committee is now considering the matter concerning the program "This Hour Has Seven Days", as well as the renewal of the contract of Messrs. Watson and LaPierre, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has appointed a mediator between the parties concerned.

Therefore, it means that the Prime Minister is appointing someone to arbitrate a dispute already before a parliamentary committee. I wonder what part this parliamentary committee can play, since the Prime Minister has appointed another person to study and analyse the matter and report thereon. Is this not a typical example of contempt for parliamentary committees? If parliamentary committees were shown due respect, this committee would have been allowed to study the problems brought before it. Somebody is now appointed in addition to this committee, in order to perform exactly the same work. Such a situation is quite unusual and indicates utter contempt for the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts.

Mr. Speaker: I allowed the hon. member to say a few words. He realizes, I am sure, that his remarks are outside the scope of the debate on the motion introduced by the hon. member for Hochelaga.

The motion now before us is to concur in the report to enable the committee to sit while the house is sitting. I doubt that a debate can be initiated ouside the subject matter of the report, and more particularly, the motion before the house.

Mr. Grégoire: We are asked to sit while the house is sitting from now until May 5. The purpose of these sittings, as I explained at the start, is the question of the program "This Hour Has Seven Days". We are asked to sit while the house is sitting and while a mediator appointed by the Prime Minister is sitting.

That is why I believe my remarks are in order at this time, without objecting to granting the committee permission to sit while the house is sitting.

I object to sit so as to discuss this question while a mediator appointed by the Prime Minister is considering the same matter.

The motion, introduced last Friday, was perfectly in order and acceptable. But since then, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister has set aside the rights of the committees and has shown contempt for the committee of the house by the appointment of a mediator to do the same work, the necessity to sit is no longer so great.

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe the hon. member should go any further. He has stated an opinion which is not sufficiently related to the question before us to enable him to go on any longer.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me, although I do not entirely approve of the particular appointment which has been made, I think the record should show—and my friend the hon. member for Hochelaga was trying to get Your Honour's attention—that the appointment was made on the recommendation of the committee about which the hon. member is speaking.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: The recommendation just mentioned by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) was that the two parties use the good offices of the Prime Minister at the present time. All the good offices of the Prime Minister are eliminated purely and simply and replaced by mediation.

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the minister rising on the point of order?

Miss LaMarsh: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on this point of order which has been raised. The motion of the chairman of the broadcasting committee, the hon. member for Hochelaga, which was before the house on Friday last made reference to using the good offices of the government. My hon. friend will realize that it is the office of the Secretary of State which reports for the C.B.C., and thus that office could not become involved in such a matter.

In response to questions in the house the Prime Minister offered his good offices. He did not offer to mediate or to arbitrate personally in this regard; he suggested to the house, having been requested to do so by a resolution of the broadcasting committee of this house, that he would be prepared to offer those good offices providing it was satisfactory to the producers involved and to the corporation itself.

As a result of a purported threatened strike as of ten o'clock last evening the Prime Minister used, as he undertook to the house, his good offices to obtain an individual, one apart from the public service and who would be satisfactory to both parties concerned, to meet with them independent of the government and independent of the office of the Secretary of State in order to ascertain whether they might arrive at a settlement.

I suggest on this point of order, Mr. Speaker, that it is not inappropriate for the committee to proceed as it chooses to do in its motion now before the house, in that the resolution which was presented has been accepted and acted upon by the Prime Minister, who is thus not in any way in breach of the privileges of the house or the committee. The committee is at perfect freedom to proceed now as it chooses, while the individual who is acceptable to both parties goes ahead to try to arrive at a compromise agreement.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, with reference to the motion, I feel that since the matter before the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts has now been entrusted to a mediator, the committee should no longer deal with the particular matter of "This Hour Has Seven Days".

That is why we do not want the committee to sit while the house is sitting and this, all the more so, because a most important supply motion is coming up today, which was not expected two or three days ago. We therefore object to committee sittings for the next two days, during the regular sittings of the house.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Unfortunately the hon. member for Hochelaga cannot speak now without the unanimous consent of the house, because this is not a substantive motion. Therefore he does not have the right of reply, nor does he have the right to close the debate on the motion. The only thing I can do now is to put the motion to the house.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the hon. member for Hochelaga did not avail himself of the opportunity to speak when he moved the motion, I wonder if the house would not let him make his speech now.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, a brief remark to say that, unlike what was just advanced by the hon. member who spoke before me, it has always been implicit in the proceedings of the committee that it did not seek to settle any particular dispute, namely that submitted to mediation as a result of the good offices of the government, but rather to explore the much larger and much more important situation of which this particular dispute was only symptomatic.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? Is it the wish of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT

Hon. Paul Martin (for the Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-174, to provide for the establishment of The Company of Young Canadians.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

MARITIME TRANSPORTATION UNIONS TRUSTEES ACT

PROVISION FOR REPEAL

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Howard, seconded by Mr. Herridge—

Mr. Herridge: Pardon me, Mr. Speaker. Don't put me down on that bill.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Howard, seconded by Mr. Knowles, moves for leave to introduce Bill No. C-175, to repeal the Maritime Transportation Unions Trustees Act. Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DEPARTMENTS

Hon. Paul Martin (for the Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the organization of the government of Canada to establish a Department of the Solicitor General, Department of Manpower, Department of the Registrar General, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; to establish the office of President of the Treasury Board; to provide for the respective powers, duties and functions of the ministers thereof; to establish the office of President of the Treasury Board; to provide for the appointment of deputy heads of the new departments and for the appointment in the manner authorized by law of other offices and employees; to authorize the transfer of appropriations to the new departments and other departments to which the functions for which such appropriations were made are assigned; to amend the Financial Administration Act and the Salaries Act and generally to make such other consequential or incidental statutory amendments as are necessary to implement the changes to be effected by the said measure.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CONFERENCE ON HIGHWAY SAFETY

Question No. 228—Mr. Noble:

1. Has the government received representations from any provincial government or association or other organized body asking for the calling of a federal-provincial conference for the purpose of working out a national program (a) to ensure that all practical safety devices be required equipment in motor vehicles (b) to ensure that more and better driver education be made available (c) to require more rigid traffic law observance or (d) any other action which would help in reducing the accidents and loss of life on our highways?

2. If so, has the government taken or does it intend to take any action on such representation?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Prime Minister's office as follows:

1. Yes. A letter dated August 12, 1965, was received from the premier of Manitoba who urged the calling by the federal government jointly with the provinces of a national conference on highway safety.

2. The matter is receiving appropriate consideration by the government.

C.P.R. BOX CAR MOVEMENTS

Question No. 651—Mr. Douglas:

1. How many box cars on the Lethbridge division of the Canadian Pacific Railway had been loaded with grain and waybills prepared but had not been moved as of November 26, 1965?

2. How many box cars on the Lethbridge division of the Canadian Pacific Railway had been loaded with grain and waybills prepared for each of the following periods: November 26 to December 3; December 3 to December 10; December 10 to December 17; December 17 to December 24; December 24 to December 31; December 31 to January 7; January 7 to January 14; January 14 to January 21; and January 21 to January 28?

3. How many box cars of grain had been moved off the Lethbridge division of the Canadian Pacific Railway between the following dates: November 26 to December 3; December 3 to December 10; December 10 to December 17; December 17 to December 24; December 24 to December 31; December 31 to January 7; January 7 to January 14; January 14 to January 21; and January 21 to January 28?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Agriculture, Finance, Trade and Commerce and Transport as follows:

1, 2 and 3. Information not available.

PROPOSED CORRIDOR ROAD THROUGH MAINE

Question No. 734—Mr. Macquarrie:

2. Have any departments or officials of the dominion government participated in discussions on this project?

3. Is the Atlantic Development Board conducting a study of the feasibility of this project or in any way giving assistance to it?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am informed by the Atlantic Development Board as follows:

1. La Chambre de Commerce du Haut-Madawaska, the council of the municipality of Madawaska, and the Annapolis Royal Board of Trade.

2. No.

3. No.

NAME CHANGES, HUDSON BAY COMMUNITIES

Question No. 1,185—Mr. McCleave:

1. Have any communities on Hudson strait and on the east coast of Hudson bay undergone changes of name since 1962 and, if so (a) what are the new names (b) were the people in such communities consulted as to the changes in name (c) by whom were they consulted (d) who requested the name changes?

2. Are name changes established by the Canadian permanent committee on geographical names?

3. Does such committee include non-federal employees appointed by the provinces and, if so, who has been the representative of the province of Quebec on the committee with regard to communities on Hudson strait and on the east coast of Hudson bay since 1962?

4. Is it the practice to require that adequate information on origin or usage of new names be provided to the said committee and, if so (a) has this practice been carried out in regard to communities on Hudson strait and on the east coast of Hudson bay since 1962 (b) who supplied such information to the said committee?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. Yes.

(a) New name	Previous name
Bellin (Payne Bay)	Payne Bay
Maricourt (Wakeham)	Wakeham Bay
Port-Nouveau-Quebec	George River
Saglouc	Sugluk
Ivugivik	Notre-Dame-d'Ivugivic
Koartac	Notre-Dame-de-Koartac
Inoucdjouac (Port Harrison)	Port Harrison
East-Main	Eastmain
Nouveau-Comptoir	Paint Hills
Poste-de-la-Baleine	Great Whale River
Fort Rupert	Rupert House

(b) Not by the federal government; (c) see (b); (d) in 1963 and 1964, the Quebec geographic board investigated the toponymy of settlements in New Quebec. Recommendations concerning certain names were received by Quebec from an independent researcher. In January, 1965, the government was informed by the government of Quebec of certain name changes approved by the province. As far as the Canadian permanent committee on geographical names is concerned, these changes originated with the Quebec geographic board.

2. Name changes are endorsed and recorded by the permanent committee on the recommendation of the provincial or territorial representative and become official when approved by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys or the appropriate provincial minister, according to their respective jurisdiction. Name changes are published in the semi-annual supplements to the Gazetteer of Canada. The changes listed in 1 (a) above appeared in supplement No. 5, January to June, 1965.

3. Yes. The representative for the province of Quebec is the secretary of the Quebec geographic board, Mr. Jean Poirier.

4. Yes. (a) The permanent committee is aware of the origin of the name changes listed in 1 (a); (b) information obtained from correspondence with Quebec and from published documents.

Questions

2. Were Charolais cattle kept this winter at Grosse Île for experiment and, if so (a) how many head (b) is this the maximum number possible and provided for (c) what is the total value of the said Charolais cattle (d) what was the cost of the quarantine operation with regard to transportation, feeding, salaries, maintenance, etc. (e) how many persons were directly or indirectly employed for this purpose and how were they hired (f) how will the said Charolais cattle be distributed among the breeders who have applied for them, according to province, when the quarantine period is over?

3. Is an increase in activity expected at Grosse Île during the 1966-67 season?

4. Is it the intention to offer again this year, the summer courses provided for American and Canadian veterinarians during the last few years?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works and Agriculture as follows:

1. Total cost to date including architect's and engineer's fees, material and labour, $565,804.90.

2. Charolais cattle were kept at Grosse Île during the past winter as part of a quarantine procedure. These cattle were the property of the importers who selected and purchased them in the country of origin. (a) 113; (b) Yes, of the age and size in this importation; (c) Not known as they are the property of the importers; (d) Importers bore the cost of transportation. The total cost of feeding, salaries and maintenance is not yet known and will be borne by the importers; (e) four animal attendants were provided by the importers. In addition, a departmental veterinarian was in charge of the quarantine procedures; (f) By provinces, the cattle will be released, at the termination of the quarantine, to the holders of import permits as follows: British Columbia, 4; Alberta, 50; Saskatchewan, 28; Manitoba, 6; Ontario, 14; Quebec, 11.

3. No.

4. This has not yet been decided.

*PROSECUTION OF PENCIL MANUFACTURERS

Question No. 1,228—Mr. Orlikow:

Did the government charge and prosecute a number of companies that make pencils and, if so (a) what were the names of the companies (b) have the trials of these companies taken place (c) were the companies found guilty and, if so, what were the penalties imposed by the court (d) what were the costs to the government of investigating and transcribing the above cases, exclusive of the salaries of permanent government employees, but including fees paid to lawyers, court reporters, etc., and travelling expenses for officers of the Department of Justice, cost of transcripts, etc.?

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes. The answers to the subquestions are as follows: (a) Eagle Pencil Company of Canada Limited; Venus Pencil Company Limited; Dixon Pencil Company Limited; Eberhard Faber (Canada) Limited. (b) Yes; (c) Yes. INDIAN AFFAIRS BRANCH TEACHERS

Question No. 1,293—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many teachers are employed by the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

2. What are the minimum academic qualifications required for teachers hired by the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

3. How many teachers working for the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources have more than the minimum academic qualifications required and how many have (a) a bachelor of arts degree (b) a bachelor of science degree (c) a bachelor of education degree?

4. What is the salary range for teachers working for the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, minimum, maximum, yearly increments, etc?

5. Of the teachers working for the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, how many have worked more than two years; four years; six years; eight years; ten years?

6. Is the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources giving consideration to the payment of a bonus or an allowance similar to the $1,000 bonus now being paid by the Ontario Department of Education to teachers in isolated northern schools?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. During the 1965-66 academic year there are 1,489 teachers employed.

2. The minimum desired qualifications are senior matriculation and one year of professional teacher education. However, the national shortage of professionally qualified teachers necessitates employment of a number of applicants with less than the desired qualifications.

3. Five hundred and seventy four teachers have more than senior matriculation and one year of teacher education. A total of 266 hold one or more university degrees at bachelor, master, and doctorate levels. Of that number (a) 115 have a bachelor of arts degree, (b) 23 have a bachelor of science degree, (c) 93 have a bachelor of education or pedagogy degree, and the remaining 35 have degrees in other fields or postgraduate degrees in arts, science, education, music and philosophy.

4. There is a salary schedule in effect for teachers and the following is a summary of the minimum and maximum basic salary ranges and yearly increments for the various levels of qualifications:

Level	Qualifications	Minimum salary	Maximum salary	Number of increments
Teacher aide or unqualified teacher	No professional teacher training	$2700	$3900	6
Sub-level	Jr. matriculation and one year of teacher education	$3200	$4400	6

Questions

Level	Qualifications	Minimum salary	Maximum salary	Number of increments
Level 1	Sr. matriculation and one year of teacher education	$3700	$5700	10
Level 2	Sr. matriculation and two years of teacher education	$4000	$6250	10
Level 3	Sr. matriculation and three years of teacher education	$4400	$6875	11
Level 4	Sr. matriculation and four years of teacher education	$5400	$8650	13
Level 5	Sr. matriculation and five years of teacher education	$5800	$9300	14
Level 6	Sr. matriculation and six years of teacher education	$6200	$9700	14

5. 152 have worked more than two years; 157 have worked more than four years; 142 have worked more than six years; 141 have worked more than eight years, and 631 have worked more than ten years.

6. In accordance with the isolated posts regulations, isolation allowances are paid to 462 teachers employed at 154 locations which have been designated as isolated posts.

TORONTO—SALES TAX EXEMPTION ON SENIOR CITIZENS HOME

Question No. 1,304—Mr. Scott (Danforth):

Has the Department of National Revenue received a request dated March 28, 1966, from Beaches Gardens Limited, Toronto 8, Ontario, requesting exemption from the federal sales tax for the construction costs of a limited-dividend senior citizens home in the east end of Toronto and, if so (a) has the government made any decision or made any responses to this request (b) what were these responses?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Yes. (a) Yes, a reply was made under date of April 20, 1966; (b) Section 47 of the Excise Tax Act provides exemption from sales tax by way of refund on purchases by public institutions which have been certified by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In the reply given to Beaches Gardens Limited under date of April 20th, 1966, attention was drawn to this provision of the law and in particular to the necessity of their establishing qualification as a bona fide public institution as a prerequisite to claiming refund of sales tax.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC RECORDS

Question No. 1,312—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has an advisory committee on public records been appointed?

2. If so (a) when (b) by what authority (c) who are its members (d) by whom was each member designated (e) what are its powers and instructions (f) does it replace any previous committee or body and, if so wherein does it differ from the predecessor committee or body?

3. Has any plan been formulated for the preparation of a complete schedule of departmental records?

4. If so, what is the nature of the plan and as of what date will it be fully operative?

5. Has any rule or policy been established as to the date after their creation at which departmental records will normally be open for inspection?

6. If so, what is the rule or policy and to what exceptions, if any, is it subject?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the dominion archivist and national librarian as follows:

1. No.

2. Answered in 1.

3. General records disposal schedules, covering types of records common to many departments and agencies of the government were prepared by the records management branch of the Public Archives and approved by the treasury board in 1963. Most departments are now preparing disposal schedules covering records relating to their own special and individual activities. Many of these have already been approved and are being carried into effect.

2. If so, by whom was the exhibition chosen?

3. What Canadian artists were represented?

4. What was the total cost of the representation and exhibition at this biennial?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State):

1. Yes.

2. The National Gallery of Canada.

3. Jacques Hurtubise, Roy Kiyooka, Claude Tousignant and Gerald Trottier.

4. $5,489.24.

STUDY OF SECURITIES TRANSACTION REGULATION

Question No. 1,314—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has the government undertaken recently study of the regulation of securities transactions and financial disclosures by corporations?

2. If so, by whom is the study been carried on?

3. Has any counsel been retained to assist in the study?

4. If so, who, and upon what terms and conditions?

5. What is the purpose or objective of the study?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister):

1. Yes, a number of studies are now under way.

2. The studies are being carried on by a group of officials from the Department of Finance, the Bank of Canada, the combines branch, the corporations branch and the R.C.M.P. The studies are being co-ordinated by the Privy Council office.

3. Yes, Marc Lalonde, a Montreal lawyer.

4. Mr. Lalonde has been retained as a consultant, for a period of six months, by the Privy Council office to advise and assist on the studies underway with respect to financial disclosure and securities regulations, and to preside over the group of officials referred to in paragraph 2. Mr. Lalonde's terms of reference also provide that he would undertake such other matters as may be assigned to him by the Prime Minister or the clerk of the Privy Council.

5. The studies are in preparation for a federal-provincial meeting of officials, to be held late in June, which will discuss problems in financial disclosure and securities regulation.

FISHERIES CONTRACT FOR POLES, P.E.I.-N.S.

Question No. 1,327—Mr. Coates:

Has the Department of Fisheries or any agency of the government entered into a contract with anyone for the purchase of poles for use by the department in designating the imaginary line between Crapaud, P.E.I., and Bergman's Point, N.S., for lobster fishing purposes and, if so, what are the names of the individuals in question and what is the amount of the contract?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): The Department of Fisheries purchased 20 poles from Richard Cameron of Port Howe, N.S., at a cost of $30.

MANPOWER OFFICE IN MARITIMES

Question No. 1,333—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the government decided on the location of a manpower office to serve the maritimes?

2. If so, what site was chosen?

3. If not, will the decision be made and, if so, when?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1. Yes.

2. The department will have at Halifax, N.S. a regional headquarters at which will be located the regional director of immigration and the director of the manpower service for the Atlantic region, with appropriate specialist staffs. The manpower service will also have a regional office at Moncton, N.B., in charge of the director of operations for the region, which will be responsible for the supervision of area offices throughout the region.

3. N/A.

BIRTH RATE

Question No. 1,334—Mr. Smith:

By provinces, what has been the birth rate in Canada for each of the last six years ending December 31, 1965, expressed in absolute terms and in terms of percentage per thousand population?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce):

Questions

UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS—INVESTIGATION BY MINES DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,345—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Has the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys ever undertaken an investigation of reports of unidentified flying objects and, if so, are such investigations continuing at this time?

2. Have results of such investigations been made public and, if not, is consideration being given to making them public in future?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. The geological survey of Canada and the observatories branch, both of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, investigate reports of sightings commonly called unidentified flying objects. These reports refer to a wide variety of phenomena and many of these are reports of spectacular meteors entering the atmosphere, for example, the one at 8:14 p.m. EDT on April 25, 1966. These may lead to the recovery of meteorites which are of great scientific interest to scientists of the department.

2. There is no attempt to restrict the results of such investigations and officers of the department frequently comment to the various news media on this subject.

LANGUAGE OF EMIGRANTS TO U.S.

Question No. 1,348—Mr. Harley:

In the past five years, what percentage of Canadian emigrants to the United States have English as their mother tongue and what percentage have French as their mother tongue?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): This information is not available.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 1,350—Mr. Ballard:

1. What was the total amount of contributions paid into the unemployment insurance commission fund by both employees and employers for the calendar years 1964 and 1965?

2. What was the cost of administering the unemployment insurance commission (including the national employment service) for the year ended March 31, 1965?

3. What was the number of employees of the U.I.C., both permanent and casual, for the year ended March 31, 1965?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I am informed by the U.I.C. as follows:

1. 1964, $304,895,000.53; 1965, $324,083,850.94.

2. $54,253,989.57.

3. 10,340.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED USE OF DRUG IN SCENE FOR "THIS HOUR HAS SEVEN DAYS"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State, and is based on a world copyright story in the Telegram today reporting that a 17 year old girl had alleged to the Telegram that while under the influence of a pill she was photographed in bed with two youths by the roving camera of a crew of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's "This Hour Has Seven Days" program, the incident apparently being laid on for the purpose of simulating a teen age marijuana party. Under whose authority was such a filming set up in the C.B.C.? Is the C.B.C. investigating the circumstances of this case, and is an investigation being made in respect of the extent to which the C.B.C. is permitted to go in its so-called artistic licence?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I learned of this matter just before coming into the house. I am informed that the C.B.C. is looking into the matter. I have a memorandum from the executive producer indicating, in his words, that the story is grossly inaccurate and in its essentials untrue. I would hope it is only a smear story and that the particulars are not accurate. However, I ask hon. members to give me a day or so to ascertain the facts, at which time I shall be happy to give them to the house.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. When the minister is making her inquiry will she also obtain for the members of the house information as to whether this was the real reason for the firing of the hosts of the "This Hour Has Seven Days" program? Would she also inform us whether the Department of Justice is investigating the circumstances, and whether any charges have been laid or whether it is the intention that any will be laid?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I have not heard any reference to this matter before from any source. Therefore I cannot suggest to hon. members, nor has there been such a suggestion in the C.B.C., that any reference to the set of circumstances as alleged had anything to do with the announcement made by the C.B.C. management about two weeks ago.

In answer to my hon. friend's question in respect of the Department of Justice being consulted, I may say this is a speculative question which would depend upon the result of my investigation into the alleged circumstances.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. Since the allegations contained in the article may have a bearing on narcotics, does the minister not think it would be a wise course to consult the officials of the Department of Justice immediately?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's further supplementary question appears to be argumentative.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question. Would the minister inform the house whether the Department of Justice or the R.C.M.P. have been asked to investigate the possible use of narcotics in this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question seems to be hypothetical. This is the reply that was given by the hon. minister a moment ago, and I am inclined to agree with the attitude she has taken with regard to the third part of the question raised by the hon. member, that the course of action he is suggesting now would depend on the answers which would be obtained to questions 1 and 2.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps my question was not clear to Your Honour. What I am asking the minister is—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: —whether the R.C.M.P. or the Department of Justice have been requested to investigate the possible use of narcotics in this case. My question is seeking information.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the Chair can accept that question.

APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR IN DISPUTE BETWEEN MANAGEMENT AND PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State, in the absence of the Prime Minister, arising out of the appointment of the publisher of the Vancouver Sun as mediator in the dispute between C.B.C. management and "Seven Days". Would the hon. lady inform the house whether before Mr. Keate was appointed account was taken of the fact that the Vancouver Sun supported the C.B.C. management editorially in the dispute; and if so, what assurance was received that Mr. Keate is in a position to deal with the dispute in an impartial and objective way?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether acccount was taken of the editorial position taken by the Vancouver Sun, but I happen to know that Mr. Keate was out of the country for the past two weeks and had no part in any editorial position taken in this regard.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. lady a question in connection with this matter. In the appointment of the mediator by the Prime Minister was it made clear, with regard to the statement of the president of the C.B.C. that there could be no reinstatement for the two promoters—if that is the proper expression for Mr. Watson and Mr. LaPierre—whether the mediation was to be on the basis of their removal regardless of any other condition?

Miss LaMarsh: I have not seen reduced to writing the terms which were agreed upon between the producers and the C.B.C., although I had them read to me. But it is my impression that the terms under which Mr. Keate is empowered to discuss this question with both sides are broader than that immediate issue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not an answer to my question. I am trying to find out whether it was made perfectly clear that the adamant attitude taken by the president of the C.B.C. would be alleviated to the extent that a determination by Mr. Keate would include the question whether or not these two people should be removed as promoters or producers of "This Hour Has Seven Days".

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, if I understand the right hon. gentleman, he is asking whether Mr. Keate might consider the reinstatement of these people, whether this is part of his purview. It is my understanding that Mr. Keate's responsibility is wide enough to include that question should he actually so decide.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the hon. lady whether Mr. Keate was requested by the government that whatever else he may consider, he will go into the question of the justification of the removal of the two gentlemen mentioned as hosts of the program "Seven Days".

Mr. Diefenbaker: I used the wrong expression when I said "promoters".

Miss LaMarsh: It is my understanding that in the drawing up of the phraseology of the instructions it was left sufficiently fluid that Mr. Keate would be able to look into all the circumstances of the controversy that obtains at the present time in the narrow sense of the program in question, and in the wider sense of the lower part of the iceberg.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question, and I hope the hon. lady can assure us that Mr. Keate is not being inhibited in his investigation by any ex cathedra statements by the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Miss LaMarsh: He is one of the most uninhibited people I know.

[Later:]

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I wanted to ask the Secretary of State. Having in mind the current C.B.C. troubles, I wanted to ask the hon. lady if she will do what she can to expedite the tabling of the government white paper on broadcasting, so that we do not become too involved in patching up something which may be facing a basic change.

Miss LaMarsh: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

HULL, QUE.—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN C.M.H.C. POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the most precarious position in which the credit restrictions imposed by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation leave the residential builders of the Hull area, is the government or the Minister of Finance contemplating a change in this policy which is harmful to the development of the Hull area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question the hon. member is asking is of a general nature. I do not believe it is acceptable.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Caouette: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but my question pertains to a specific area, namely the Hull area. Has the minister received complaints from the builders association on the credit restriction policy laid down by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is, on the whole, the same as was asked before and I do not think he is adding anything to the question to which reply was made by one of the ministers.

Mr. Caouette: On a point or order. I shall change the nature of my question.

I ask the minister whether he is currently considering the possibility of giving the municipalities of the Hull area and other areas the same credit facilities as those the government is getting ready to grant to countries outside Canada by lending them money without interest.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SHORTAGE OF MORTGAGE MONEY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, all of us know that the number of telegrams we are receiving in connection with C.M.H.C. lending has been increasing. Indeed, one telegram after another speaks of the shambles in connection with house building, and this delay has added to it. Is the minister now in a position to give the answer which the Prime Minister said would be given, as I recall, last Friday? That was the original statement. What is the position the government intends to take in this matter?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, reference to Hansard will show that when this matter was last raised in the house the Prime Minister stated that the government's position would be made known tomorrow, Tuesday. It will be made known on motions tomorrow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING U.S. "FOOD FOR FREEDOM" CAMPAIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and refers to a statement made by the President of the United States on Friday when he brought down his new "Food for Freedom" campaign.

Mr. Starr: Order.

Mr. Thompson: At that time the President said this was a program of American farmers combined with the efforts of other foreign farmers. I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture could tell us whether there has been any consultation with his department regarding this program or whether any commitments have been made to it by the Canadian government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The way this question is phrased it seems to be so general in nature that it does not appear to be urgent enough to justify either a question or an answer at this time.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I have heard your decision with respect to the question, but this is a matter of the head of state of another country speaking in regard to what Canada is going to do in respect of this program.

Mr. Speaker: I may be wrong in this regard but as the hon. member knows he has an opportunity to discuss the matter on the adjournment debate if he does not agree with my decision.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED CO-ORDINATION AUTHORITY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister advise the house when he expects to introduce legislation dealing with transportation matters and based on the ideas expressed in the speech he made in Winnipeg last Wednesday?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I would not be candid with the hon. member or the house if I suggested it was very likely that the legislation could be introduced before the end of June. There are the deliberations of the committee on transportation at the present time and certain other developments going on which I believe the government should prudently take into account before introducing legislation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

As I said in Winnipeg, I would welcome the views of anyone, and particularly of a former minister of transport, on some of the questions which I raised in that speech.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

McGILL UNIVERSITY RESEARCH PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Defence Production. I should like to ask him whether the government is now in a position to announce to the house whether it will continue its assistance to the high altitude research project carried on by McGill University at Highwater, in the Barbados.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that this question should be placed on the order paper.

OTTAWA—REPORTED REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO USE WHITE ENSIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask the minister whether he refused permission to the Ottawa-Hull Naval Association to use the naval white ensign in yesterday's commemoration service.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I did not.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I did not hear the reply made by the minister, but I assume what he said prevents my saying that the question is out of order.

TELEVISION

CLARESHOLM, ALTA.—APPLICATION FOR STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. CFCN Television Limited of Calgary, Alta. has asked the Department of Transport for authority to establish a television broadcasting station at Claresholm, Alberta, and the authorization is held up by the Board of Broadcast Governors pending clarification by the Department of Transport of public policy for the extension of alternative television service.

My question is, can the minister indicate when we can expect this policy decision which is under study by his department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this question might well be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, may I phrase the question in another way?

Mr. Speaker: Well I hope the hon. member rephrases the second part of the question in a different way, and not the first part.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, would the minister appreciate it if I were kind and gave him one more chance before ringing it up for the late show, in view of the fact that he is going to a dinner tonight and he might have to appear here in tails and white tie?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, can I answer now? My answer is that this is a matter of government policy which will be announced in due course, and I hope soon.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF FEMALE PRISONERS FROM KINGSTON PENITENTIARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General may I direct a question of most urgent importance to the Acting Solicitor General. In view of the official opening on Friday of this week of the Matsqui institution for narcotic addicts sentenced to penitentiary terms, and the expressed desire conveyed to the Solicitor General of all but one of the addicts in the women's prison at Kingston not to be transferred to Matsqui institution, can the Acting Solicitor General now fulfil the promise given to me by the Solicitor General that I would receive an answer on government policy on this most important matter early this week?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Acting Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I can promise to refer the question immediately to the Solicitor General.

Mr. Winch: I understand the Solicitor General is in England.

[Mr. Kindt.]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF ADDITIONAL FILES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council who attended the meeting between the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the R.C.M.P. commissioner at the end of November 1964?

Can the President of the Privy Council tell us if, in addition to the Munsinger file, the R.C.M.P. commissioner handed him or the Prime Minister other files concerning other events, similar or almost similar, to the Munsinger case over the last ten years?

Mr. Speaker: That question is out of order because it deals directly with an inquiry now under way.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, my question is in no way connected with the royal commission now sitting. I am just asking if, at a given moment, Commissioner McLelland gave the Prime Minister other similar files concerning hon. members over the last ten years. That has nothing to do with the royal commission on the Munsinger case.

Mr. Speaker: Even if I accept the hon. member's suggestion that his question bears no relation to the inquiry I referred to, he must admit just the same that his question is not so urgent that it can be asked at this time.

Moreover, that question deals with something that has already happened and, under the circumstances, I feel that it is unacceptable.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I did not quite understand the reference you made a moment ago, but if I comprehend correctly you indicated that any matter which came before the royal commission could not be discussed here in the house. I want to make it very clear that we cannot accept such a ruling.

Mr. Speaker: No, this is not what I intended to say and I hope it is not what I said. I had the impression that the hon. member was asking a question which dealt directly with evidence, and in its limited context it was my opinion that the specific question could not be answered.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, my question had no direct relation to the Munsinger case—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I accept the hon. member's explanation but his question, as put, is not urgent enough to be considered at this time.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I will put my question in another way so that it will be urgent enough to be considered at this time.

Can the President of the Privy Council tell us if other similar files were handed to him or the Prime Minister and if they will be made public shortly?

Mr. Speaker: The question is not any more urgent now than it was when asked the first time.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, may I discuss the matter on the ten o'clock show?

[English]

FINANCE

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance, who is responsible for the Tariff Board. I have given the hon. gentleman notice of this question. In view of the fact that the voluntary economic planning board of Nova Scotia now warns that the infant automobile industry in Nova Scotia may fail unless an extension of tariff arrangements is made, would the minister lend his good offices to help this industry?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question cannot be accepted. The hon. member may wish to place it on the order paper.

INDUSTRY

BEAVERTON, ONT.—CLOSING OF AUTO PARTS PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria (Ont.)): My question is to the minister of manpower, and relates to a question I asked of the Minister of Industry last Friday. Will the minister advise the house if his department is looking into the lay-off of approximately 225 employees of Lake Simcoe Industries Limited, at Beaverton, Ontario, and assure the house that all employees affected by this lay-off will be given all possible assistance in finding new jobs, if possible in the area in which this plant is located?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I will take the question as notice, but the hon. member can be sure that if this lay-off is taking place now, we will make all our services available to this group of men.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I address a supplementary question to either the minister of manpower or the Minister of Industry. Has either minister received a request from certain of the employees to purchase the particular business which is being closed down? Has the government considered giving them a loan to assist them in that purpose?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): No such proposal has come to my attention. I do not know whether it has come to the attention of my colleague the minister of manpower.

MANITOBA—REQUEST FOR DECLARATION AS DESIGNATED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. R. Schreyer (Springfield): I have a question for the Minister of Industry. I should like to ask the minister if he has received a resolution passed virtually unanimously in the Manitoba legislature last week calling on the federal government to declare the entire province of Manitoba a designated area under the designated area program of his department? If he has, how has he considered this request?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I can understand the desire of the legislature of Manitoba to be brought under the umbrella of this really quite successful program, but I have not received any such resolution.

If and when it is received it will be replied to, but it will have to be pointed out to the sender that this program calls for designation of areas suffering from high chronic unemployment. It is difficult to find that metropolitan Winnipeg, for instance, is suffering currently, I am glad to say, from high chronic unemployment.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—POSSIBILITY OF RECOGNITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question is based on an address given by the Minister of Veterans Affairs on behalf of the Prime Minister to the council of world veterans federations in Toronto yesterday. I may say the minister did himself proud. His address was well received and he delivered it very well. I am quoting from the remarks of the minister:

> For the UN to secure a valid mandate to intervene with effect anywhere in the world, its membership should include states everywhere in the world.

My question is, will the minister inform the house, in view of past government policy, what the government is undertaking at this time to promote the recognition of mainland China and its admission to the United Nations?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question seems to be of a very general nature. I suggest to the hon. member it cannot be asked in this form at this time.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—POSSIBLE INTEGRATION WITH ONTARIO PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and is based on reports concerning the limited enrolment taking place in OMSIP, the Ontario medical services insurance plan. Are discussions taking place between the federal government and the Ontario government concerning the possibility of integrating OMSIP and the federal government's medicare program?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Following the federal-provincial conference held early in the year there was an exchange of correspondence between me and the minister of health for Ontario with respect to further elaboration of the federal proposals. Since that correspondence there have been no further discussions at the ministerial level. I will investigate whether discussions have taken place between my officials and the officials of the health department of Ontario.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR WHITE PAPER ON NATIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. R. Schreyer (Springfield): My question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. His colleague the Minister of Forestry was reported as having said in Winnipeg last week that the government was working hard to produce a white paper on national agriculture policy. Can the minister say whether a white paper on agriculture policy will be tabled in the next 60 days or so?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I make no commitments that have any 60 day connotation in them.

Mr. Ricard: Are you speaking from experience?

Mr. Schreyer: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are the minister and his colleagues in fact working on a white paper on national agriculture policy?

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe that question, in the way it is put, is acceptable. The hon. member may either put it on the order paper or discuss it on the adjournment debate.

Mr. Schreyer: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

MORALITY IN GOVERNMENT AND PARLIAMENT —NEED FOR REFORM

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, the institution of parliament is on trial and we who are its present members, I submit, are in danger of being accused of standing by while what some think of as its splendid purposes are destroyed by those whose conception of its role is narrow and mean. Bruce Hutchison in the Ottawa Journal for April 30 last wrote in another context, but the application of his words is relevant:

> . . . the largest question in the western world remains unanswered. It is whether, against the proliferating state, the individual can survive; whether the collective roof will fall in, under its own weight, and crush the private human beings who built it. Some day, perhaps, our politicians will get around to thinking about these matters but at the moment they are otherwise engaged in their jolly sham battle fought with spitballs and mud.

We have serious problems and those problems demand our combined intelligence and our combined ingenuity. Surely those who have an interest in the continuity of this place feel that there are large problems which we should be considering. One of those that I look upon as being very real is how to improve the control that parliament should, if it is to fulfil its prime mission, be able to exercise over the general administration. This is a difficult concept to discuss, but it is discussed in a most interesting way in a book entitled "Modern Capitalism," by Andrew Shonfield. Obviously our parliament is not unique in its search for a formula which would enable it to adapt itself to the modern world. In the United Kingdom, France, Sweden and in the United States the search for better methods continues.

We representatives, I suggest, must re-equip ourselves and our system so we can talk on equal terms with the great body of administrators who intervene increasingly in our daily lives. Let it be clearly understood here that I am not launching a discussion on the public service as an institution, because I believe Canada is tremendously well served by our public service. The concept I have in mind is much broader than this. As Shonfield says:

> —the central question is how far an active government wielding great and varied economic power, intervening in the detailed conduct of private business affairs, discriminating between one citizen and another on the basis of subtle and complex judgments of the community's needs ten or twenty years ahead, driving bargains with particular interest groups as administrative convenience dictates, can be subjected to effective democratic control?

These are things on which we should be spending our time. As Shonfield says:

> —a nation which is unable to establish effective democratic control over the processes of modern government faces one of two alternatives. Either it must accept that the liberties of its citizens will be diminished or it must forego the great material benefits which can be made to flow from the operation of the active interventionist state of today.

What more acceptable challenge could be imagined for the parliament of 1966 than devising a formula which would recognize our traditional anxiety about the individual citizen and his liberty and our concern that parliament remain an effective and relevant instrument for the conduct of public business? How do we make sure that the member of parliament plays a meaningful role in the business of government? How too do we ensure the protection of the individual citizen against the arbitrary exercise of an ever more extensive public power? The ombudsman of Scandinavia, the Conseil d'État of France, the Swedish principle of the goldfish bowl, are all ways in which various other countries have begun to try to solve this fundamental question.

But, Mr. Speaker, rather than deal with these affairs, we seem to be dealing in this country with quite a different issue. We ignore the fundamental problem, to our peril I suggest. Because we do, many thoughtful Canadians have been deeply troubled, in fact they have become alarmed, at the low estate to which government and parliament have fallen of late. There is no need here to catalogue a list of the smirches on the escutcheon of parliament, but let us examine the events surrounding the evidence given at the so-called Spence inquiry by the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who disclosed that late in November 1964, within days of charges having been made in this chamber by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the Prime Minister asked the commissioner whether there were any files involving members of parliament in wrongdoing.

The fact that the Prime Minister asked the commissioner whether there were any files involving any member of parliament of any party in matters of a scandalous nature over the past ten years is evidence—evidence which has been published abroad, and quite properly—which shows how proper was the concern of many people in this country that this inquiry should be a public inquiry. There really need not have been any other single piece of evidence to prove this essential point. The commissioner told the Prime Minister about the Munsinger file and a summary of it was provided. That summary was kept in cold storage, if that can be possible in this context, by the Prime Minister until the commissioner last month asked that it be sent back.

What a sinister abuse of the rules of law. What a tragic and dangerous misuse of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. What a cynical attitude to the constitutional role of a member of parliament and his obligation to exercise independence in debate, unfettered by any threat or improper pressure.

I shall make no attempt to try to anticipate the outcome of this inquiry because that would be improper. I shall not comment upon the manner in which it is being conducted except to say, as has been said in other places, that the terms of reference are cleverly designed as a government fishnet which, when carefully used, could gather in a very bitter harvest of wrecked careers of people in public life.

The evidence of Commissioner McClellan is now being subjected to a most interesting process of interpretation by unnamed spokesmen for the government. This is what brings the matter into the public domain and is why I feel it is quite proper to discuss it in this parliament. These unnamed spokesmen for the government and even, we learn, the members of the national executive of the Liberal party, have been asked for their opinions about the grave implication of the commissioner's disclosures in what is termed a question and answer session with the Prime Minister.

We know all about the open telephone line that is the new device of radio. It must have been a very open telephone line to 24 Sussex Drive this week end. The commissioner was not restricted in his instruction from the Prime Minister. As George Bain put it in today's Globe and Mail:

> This was not to confine the commissioner to any evidence he might have about an offence or possible offence under any law; it was a straight request for any scandal or gossip that the R.C.M.P. might have acquired.

The file was delivered to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, in November, 1964. Why, if matters of national security were at stake, did the government not use it until April, 1966? The security which to me is now of transcendent importance is the security of our very parliamentary system of government. Can anyone possibly believe that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police should in effect be used by government as a political force? To quote Mr. George Bain again:

> If the R.C.M.P. can be called upon by any government for "information indicating any impropriety or anything of a scandalous nature" about members of parliament, who is to say that it cannot similarly be called upon for scandal about others? That was not wrongdoing under the law that the commissioner described in those words; that was the stuff of smear.

None of us can stand aside from this issue, Mr. Speaker. None of us can hide under any interpretation—

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order at this stage. The hon. member is seeking to deal with a portion of the evidence which is now in the course of being given before a royal commission.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now given.

Mr. McIlraith: Now in the course of being given before a royal commission.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now having been given.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should like the courtesy from the Leader of the Opposition, because of the nature of the subject matter, of being allowed to make my point of order. Whether or not it is well founded is a matter for decision in due course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But your wording was incorrect.

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to make it with the usual rules of the house being applicable, namely, that I not be rudely interrupted by the right hon. gentleman from his seat in this house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I did not rudely interrupt; I just corrected a statement that was incorrect.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, there is a procedure for correcting statements in this house which any hon. member thinks are incorrect. I should like the Leader of the Opposition, who I think has received courtesy from me in the past, to avail himself of the rules of the house and I ask him to observe them as the rest of us are expected to.

My point of order, at least as I see it, is deserving of the attention of this house. Very simply, it is this. A royal commission is sitting on this matter. Evidence is being given before it. The hon. member who now has the floor on this supply motion has been discussing—I take it he has been quoting from the record though personally I have not yet seen the record—a portion of the evidence which has been given before the royal commission.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if that is to be done with any matter which is before a royal commission or before a court, it must be patent to everybody that those bodies would not be able to carry on, because by the very nature of things evidence may not be completed at one sitting of a court or royal commission, and until it is complete, conclusions should not be drawn. The evidence comes out piece by piece, question by question, witness by witness. What I presume the hon. member is now seeking to do is to discuss one question and one answer that have come out in evidence on one day before the royal commission.

I respectfully submit that the rule is that when a matter is before a royal commission or a court it is not proper for the house to discuss it during the currency of the taking of the evidence.

Mr. Churchill: Is it all right for newspapers to do that?

Mr. McIlraith: It may be very proper at the appropriate stage when the proceedings are concluded to raise such matter. But that stage is not now. That is my point. I therefore ask that the hon. member's remarks be ruled out of order.

Mr. Fairweather: What I have been trying to discuss is a much larger question. I am sorry I have not been able to put it into the kind of words to suggest my feelings about the matter. What I refer to is of far broader implication than the subject to which the house leader refers. I am discussing, if I need to clarify it for him, what is really the question of morality in government or morality, if you like, in parliament. I have used as an example a question and an answer.

I am perfectly aware how these commissions are conducted. I commented on the fact that unless I discussed the subject in very broad terms I might be out of order. Furthermore, this very question and answer have been subjected to interpretation by as yet unnamed people. If this type of thing is subjected to interpretation outside parliament, surely we should be privy to it here. Unless there are serious objections I am going to continue with my speech.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood on the point of order.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word, if I may, on the point of order. I should like to try to make the point that the claim that a matter is sub judice, or has been in some way taken beyond the right of this house to discuss merely because it happens to be mentioned in the proceedings of a royal commission, is a claim that is without precedent and without foundation.

Mr. Nielsen: They know that.

Mr. Brewin: Furthermore, such a claim could seriously damage the rights and privileges of this house.

Mr. Nielsen: They know that too.

Mr. Brewin: A royal commission is appointed to inquire into many broad matters. It is not a court. Let us make that clear. Let us also make clear that when a matter before a court is properly under consideration by the court it would be contempt of that court for this body or any other to discuss matters before that judicial tribunal.

However, a commission of inquiry is not a judicial tribunal even though it be presided over by the most distinguished judge in the country. It would be a strange thing, Mr. Speaker, if the rights and privileges of this house, having been brought in issue by something which incidentally happened to be revealed in the proceedings of a royal commission, were, during the months or perhaps years that some of these royal commissions sit to be withdrawn in such a way that the house would not have the right to discuss them.

I took down the words used by the house leader. He said that the rule is that a matter which is before a royal commission or the courts is not to be discussed in this house. I challenge him to produce authority to equate a royal commission with the courts of the land.

An hon. Member: They are different.

Mr. Brewin: I do not think that can be done. But, Mr. Speaker, I point out that what is before the royal commission are the terms of inquiry and the terms of inquiry do not cover the question being discussed by the hon. member for Royal. Nothing that the royal commissioner may say in respect of this statement which happens to have been made in evidence given by the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or, indeed, nothing that is said before that commission affects the rights and privileges of members of this house. It is not something that has been referred to the royal commissioner. Indeed, I would think it strange if he saw fit to comment on it. What has been included in the very narrow terms of reference of that commission are certain matters which are well known to this house. I do not need to enlarge on them.

I point out to you, sir, that the matter before the royal commission does not include something which arose incidentally out of the evidence before the royal commission and which was to the effect that a member of this house, the Right Hon. Prime Minister, had made an inquiry from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police not affecting the Munsinger inquiry directly at all in any way but affecting the reputation of every member of the house. That inquiry related to the conduct, supposedly scandalous, and possible wrongdoing of every member of the house at that particular time.

I suggest to you, sir, that this matter is not before the royal commission in any way, shape or form. I suggest that to use this incantation of sub judice as the reason why this house should not discuss the very important matters raised by the hon. member for Royal would be to deprive this house of the opportunity to vindicate its own privileges and rights. I therefore hope that you, sir, will rule, in accordance with my submission, that the hon. member for Royal should proceed to discuss this matter now according to the rules of this house.

Mr. Nielsen: On the point of order—

An hon. Member: Are you an authority?

Mr. Nielsen: I hear an interjection by a backbencher referring to me as an authority. He should know. He is sitting with his Hansard before him.

Mr. Lind: I resent that because I have not said a word. Withdraw.

Mr. Ricard: There was no need to identify yourself.

Mr. Nielsen: Contrary to what the Minister of Public Works has said, the evidence which has been given before the inquiry is being discussed. Where are we in this house if that evidence can be discussed by the communication media across this land, by every newspaper in the country, by every television station, every radio station while at the same time we are prohibited, according to the submission of the Minister of Public Works, from discussing it in this house where the privilege surely resides?

The precedent was set during the proceedings of the Dorion inquiry. I know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs looked at this matter very carefully at the time. The evidence before that inquiry was discussed in this house before that inquiry made its findings. Indeed, the subject matter arose as a result of the Prime Minister's sending a memorandum and thereby smuggling evidence before that commission that he did not appear to give personally. On the basis of that action the precedent has been set by this house.

I took from the remarks of the hon. member for Greenwood the argument that Your Honour ought to find that it should, in effect, be prohibitory to discuss in this house matters which may fall within the terms of reference passed by the house. I think that also is unduly restrictive of the privileges of debate and of privileges generally in this house.

Parliament from start to finish is seized of those terms of reference. At any time they can be altered by parliament. The terms of reference have to come before parliament to be so altered.

Mr. Starr: They were not approved by parliament.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sorry; I ought to have said "by the executive". It would be very strange if, once an order in council has been passed setting up a commission, the executive or parliament could not at any time enlarge, restrict or alter the terms of reference.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I submit that the authorities are clear. There is nothing sub judice about discussing any matter before the royal commission. I say that not because of the compelling reasons given by the hon. member for Greenwood but by virtue of the fact that parliament is supreme in this field. It is always seized of the right to discuss matters such as the one before Your Honour now. In my submission it would be an abdication of the rights of parliament if the right to discuss such matters were to be taken away from members.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, once again I am in agreement with the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) when he states that such a matter may be considered by the house.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, a Royal Commission has not the authority to hold anyone in contempt of court. If such power is not given, if it may not, through positive action, prevent mention of it, I do not see, then, why the members should not be entitled to discuss the question raised by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather).

Furthermore, the matter referred to the Spence Commission for investigation has nothing to do with the ways or methods through which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) has gone through the file. This is precisely what we want to discuss. According to the member for Royal, two totally different questions are involved. When the Spence Commission was instituted, its terms of reference were not to inquire into the ways through which this could have come to the ears of the ministers of justice. The purpose of the Spence Commission is surely not to investigate as to how the Prime Minister has taken cognizance of the Munsinger affair or how he asked for the file.

In the circumstances, I believe this is a new matter and that the hon. members should be entitled to discuss it. I do not mean to say that it is appropriate to discuss it now, while the people expect something positive from us, namely legislation. But I say it is a privilege of the members to discuss it and if the members wish to avail themselves of the privilege, it is their right to do so. I am not in favor of pursuing the debate interminably on this matter, I feel rather that it is time that the house go on to, the positive consideration of legislation.

[English]

Mr. Fulton: I wish only to refer Your Honour to the situation which now prevails in the United Kingdom. I do so because the select committee on procedure which sat in 1962 and 1963 gave specific attention to the question of what is involved in the phrase "sub judice" in so far as it may restrict the right of discussion in parliament.

For my authority I refer to the seventeenth edition of May. At page 454 hon. members will find set out specifically how the sub judice rule applies. It bars references in debate to "matters awaiting or under adjudication in all courts exercising a criminal jurisdiction and in courts martial."

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What edition is that?

Mr. Fulton: The seventeenth edition at page 454. The commission here is not a court exercising criminal jurisdiction.

In the second place, reference is barred with respect to "matters awaiting or under adjudication in a civil court." Once again, a commission of inquiry is not a civil court. Third, the citation speaks of the ban applying "in the case of any judicial body to which the House has expressly referred a specific matter for decision and report".

It is clear from what has happened earlier in this chamber that the House of Commons did not approve or in any way pass upon the terms of reference to this commission. The inquiry was set up entirely as an act of the executive. I appreciate that the rules of the parliament of the United Kingdom are not ipso facto the rules which govern us here, but since a committee there has given careful consideration to this question and set out in detail what the phrase "sub judice" really means, I do suggest this is something which should be taken into consideration by Your Honour as having great weight in reaching a decision on this subject.

Mr. Knowles: I wish to support briefly the position taken by the hon. member for Greenwood, a position which has been supported by others. I should like to begin by drawing attention to something which is not in our Standing Orders as well as to the only reference to this matter which is to be found in the citations covering our proceedings.

First, may I point out that in our Standing Orders as such there is no sub judice rule. There is a Standing Order—I believe it is number 35—to the effect that members cannot speak disrespectfully of the Sovereign and certain other persons. But there is no such thing as a sub judice rule in our Standing Orders.

Nevertheless, in our citations—and we are governed largely by them—there is item 149(c) to be found in Beauchesne's fourth edition at page 127. This is the one which deals with reflections on the Sovereign, and it says:

> It has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking, must not:
> (c) refer to any matter on which a judicial decision is pending

I would add that if one looks up "sub judice" in the index to Beauchesne he will find that this is the only prohibition to which reference is made, namely, that a member cannot refer to a matter on which a judicial decision is pending. I would point out that the question which has been referred to Mr. Justice Spence is one calling for him to inquire fully into certain matters. I have before me the full text of the order in council as it was tabled in this house on Monday, March 14, 1966 and as recorded at pages 287 and 288 of Votes and Proceedings for that day. It is a lengthy order in council and I will not read it all, but I have checked it over carefully. All it does is appoint Mr. Justice Spence to be a commissioner to inquire fully into several things. These things are spelled out. But there is no suggestion anywhere in the order in council that Mr. Justice Spence has to make a judicial decision; he has to inquire into the matters which were referred to him.

I agree with my hon. friend from Greenwood that for the most part the subject which the hon. member for Royal was raising is outside the terms of reference of the order in council of March 14. It is surely not precluded from discussion here because these are not matters on which a judicial decision is pending.

Therefore the only rule, if one may call it that, the only citation in the book, does not stand in the way of what the hon. member for Royal is seeking to do. I will go further and say there is nothing in our Standing Orders which could be called a sub judice rule. I should like to support very strongly the remarks made by one of the earlier speakers, the hon. member for Kamloops, to the effect that the reference of Monday, March 14, was made not by parliament but by the executive, by the governor in council. If this were a device which were to be allowed, if each time a government by executive action referred something to an outside body it could not be taken up upon the floor of parliament, one could easily see the extent to which such a practice could be abused. I am sure Your Honour appreciates the force of the arguments of those who have already spoken to the effect that this matter is in the hands of parliament and, because it is in the hands of parliament, we have the right to discuss it.

So far as the point of order raised by the Minister of Public Works is concerned, I would point out that all he did was to make an assertion. He gave no citation or ruling, nothing to back up his assertion. He just asserted that this matter is sub judice and therefore it cannot be discussed. I submit that the only things we are barred from discussing, even by the citation, are matters upon which a judicial decision is pending and, no matter what comes out of Mr. Justice Spence's inquiry, he is not called upon to make a judicial decision.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, my comments will be very brief, and I speak from the standpoint of the authority provided for us in standing order No. 35. I believe that is the only authority to which we can refer. I do not refer to it from a legal standpoint because I do not feel qualified to do so, but I must speak in support of what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has just said. Citation 149(c) makes it very clear that the restrictions placed upon members of the house refer to a matter in which a judicial decision is pending.

[Mr. Knowles.]

In my opinion the royal commission that has been set up is not in any manner a court. There is no judicial decision that can be made by it and even though the chairman of the commission is himself a member of the Supreme Court of Canada the commission is not acting in any sense as a court of justice. Mr. Justice Spence is chairman of a royal commission that has been set up by the executive, and the recommendation which he will make can in no way be considered as a judgment made by a court of justice. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we must give our support to the argument that has been made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and we must also support the point made by the hon. member for Kamloops.

I believe that the Minister of Public Works is mistaken in the position he has taken because he is claiming that the royal commission is something which it is not. He is assuming that the decision or recommendation to be made by the commission is equivalent to a judicial decision, something which it cannot be. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we base our position clearly on this one point, paragraph (c) of citation 149.

Mr. Baldwin: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I think the issues have been pretty well covered but I would like to place before Your Honour a narrow interpretation within the wording of citation 149, even if Your Honour takes the view that a judicial decision can be taken to cover the findings of a royal commission. I submit that there is no judicial decision pending in any sense of the word on the particular matter which the hon. member for Royal has raised, namely, the statement made by the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. in his evidence before Mr. Justice Spence.

I put it this way. Surely with respect to collateral issues which may be raised at any time by evidence given we cannot be deprived of the opportunity to discuss them. The res gestae, yes, in a civil case, the charge and defence in a criminal case, yes, and in a royal commission the terms of reference, but where evidence is given which may be collateral to the issue and with regard to which an attack might be made on credibility, surely this house is not to be prevented from discussing at any time, even while the royal commission proceedings are continuing, those collateral issues in that narrow sense. Furthermore, in this case the matter raised is not one with respect to which any decision is pending.

Mr. Justice Spence is not going to make a finding on the credibility of the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. in respect of this particular collateral matter. Therefore I think it is perfectly open for the hon. member for Royal and for this house to discuss it.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. After hearing these very learned comments I think hon. members would expect the Chair to express an opinion about the point raised by the Minister of Public Works.

I think I should mention honestly to the house that this is a point I have had in the back of my mind for some days. It was brought to the forefront when questions were asked during the question period last week. The questions asked at that time were not allowed at that particular moment, but I did not want to convey the impression that these questions could not be debated at all in the house. It was my feeling that because of the way in which the questions were posed they were not so urgent.

However, this raised the issue and I had to consider the matter further when I received notice that the hon. members who had asked the questions wanted to debate them on the adjournment motion. This put me in a position where I thought I should give the matter very serious consideration, which I did over the week end and particularly this morning. Briefly I might say I agree substantially with the views expressed by hon. members who have taken part in the debate, for reasons which I will now give.

In a general way the principles that govern the sub judice doctrine are found in the following quotations. Lord Campion in May's Parliamentary Practice, sixteenth edition, at page 400 states:

> A matter whilst under adjudication by a court of law, should not be brought before the house by a motion or otherwise. This rule does not apply to bills.

Also in the same edition, at page 457:

> Matters awaiting the adjudication of a court of law should not be brought forward in debate, except by means of a bill. This rule was observed by Sir Robert Peel and Lord John Russell, both by the wording of the speech from the throne and by their procedure in the house, regarding Mr. O'Connell's case, and has been maintained by rulings from the Chair.

Bourinot's fourth edition at page 301 also states:

> A matter which is under adjudication by a court of law cannot be brought forward before the house by a motion or otherwise.

Also, in Beauchesne, fourth edition, at page 127, is found the following, and this citation which I have before me was mentioned by a number of hon. members who took part in the discussion including the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

> Besides the prohibitions obtained in standing order 41, it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and Canada, that a member, while speaking must not . . .

Generally speaking I believe it may be stated that the creation of a royal commission is purely an administrative matter, that the commissioners are not called upon to render decisions on what has been submitted to them but are only asked to make recommendations which the government is free to act upon or not as it wills. In other words, parliament is still the highest court in the land. One of its traditional rights is to express its power by the enactment of legislation and this right cannot be set aside by a mere reference of certain matters to a royal commission for a study thereof and recommendations thereon.

As hon. members well know, commissioners are generally appointed under Part I of the Inquiries Act which simply provides that the governor in council may cause inquiry into public matters and appoint commissioners for the purpose who shall have the power of summoning witnesses and of requiring them to give evidence on oath. They are, it is true, given such powers as are vested in any court of record, but the wording of the act is that it does not constitute them a court of record.

On October 15, 1957, an order in council was passed to appoint commissioners under Part I of the Inquiries Act to inquire into and make recommendations concerning, inter alia, policies in relation to the export of energy, the regulation of the transmission of oil and natural gas, the financial structure and control of pipe line corporations, prices or charges, the extent of authority that might best be conferred on a National Energy Board, etc.

A few days later the then hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar sought to discuss the subject matter of the inquiry. A point of order was raised submitting that the hon. member was out of order because he was dealing directly with the terms of the royal commission and a subject referred to it. Mr. Coldwell then said:

> May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I am not dealing with the report of the royal commission. When does an announcement that a royal commission is being set up preclude discussion in this house?

After some argument Mr. Speaker Michener rose and rendered the following decision which is found at page 119 of the debates of 1957-58, volume I:

There is nothing on the order paper which would preclude a discussion of this matter. The royal comimssion is not a court of record and matters before it are not sub judice. Therefore I see no reason why the hon. member should not discuss it.

From a study of the precedents it appears that if the subject matter introduced in the house is at the moment before a court for decision and adjudication and a judgment has not been rendered, or if judgment has been rendered and an appeal taken, then the matter is sub judice. On the other hand, if the subject matter has simply been referred to a commission for study and report and it is not asked or empowered to render a decision—in other words, if once the report is made it will be the function of the government to implement—the matter is not sub judice.

During the question period, when a question was asked by an hon. member about which I had some doubt because it seemed to be dealing perhaps directly with evidence given before the commission, I had in mind at that time a decision of Mr. Speaker Macdonald which so far as I have been able to ascertain is the last decision on the point. It reads as follows:

I would accordingly rule that it is not out of order to discuss transportation problems generally when such matters have been referred to a royal commission. On the other hand, I would also rule that reference should not be made to the proceedings, or evidence, or findings of a royal commission before it has made its report.

This, of course, is something we have before us; it is a decision of Mr. Speaker Macdonald which we have to take into account. It cannot be easy for the Chair to decide, when an hon. member is taking part in a debate, whether or not he actually is dealing with the evidence itself. I think there is much to be said for the position of the hon. member for Peace River when he referred to evidence which might be given before the royal commission on a collateral issue or issues perhaps not of essence. I have in mind that the witness before the commission discussed collaterally something which was not basically of the essence of the subject matter of the commission. I believe we should not preclude hon. members from referring to such a matter if it was discussed collaterally in the evidence given by such a person.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I still feel that hon. members should bear in mind the decision of Mr. Speaker Macdonald that we should not delve into the evidence itself. In any event, the hon. member for Royal has indicated that is not the subject matter of his contribution to the debate this afternoon. I would think, therefore, that the discussion we are having now is not a discussion of a matter which is sub judice, and I rule against the point of order raised by the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, this very discussion, it seems to me, contributes to the jurisprudence of this place and the manner in which it is conducted. It fits in very well with the theory I am trying to enunciate. None of us, as I was saying, can stand aside from the fundamental issues. All of us must be called to account, those in high places and those on the back benches. Those who bandy about highminded phrases about the new politics must interpret their philosophy in the light of their words and their actions, since they have enunciated that philosophy.

Obviously—and this has been said by other speakers in other forums—we must expect the thrust of legitimate political debate and as a matter of fact should welcome it, but all of us must conduct ourselves so as to be above suspicion. It seems to me that when we think of the evil that is the subject matter of this inquiry we should remind ourselves that public morality is not confined to the bedroom. Public morality is part and parcel of every public man's actions; public morality is relevant in this chamber; public morality is interwoven into all our motivations, into all our policies as political people, and is even interwoven into our tactics.

There is public morality in the tactics we employ. I think we should remind ourselves of this as some of us go about our sinister business. I wonder whether survival unscathed and untarnished will be the only thing to the credit of some of us when we have finished our membership here? What a hollow type of victory this would be. Jacques Barzin answered about another event, when asked what he accomplished in those days, "I survived". Is this to be the sole thing we can say at another time, that we survived? The engines of smear, once started, are hard to stop. The habit of scandal is hard to break. These are days when we should be asking whether there is in fact a decline in the integrity of public life.

Here I should like to share with the house a couple of quotations from speeches by Right Hon. Harold Macmillan. The first will be found in the Parliamentary Debates 1962-63, volume 667, dated November 14, 1962. I do not think I need draw the attention of the house to what issue was before the House of Commons on that occasion. He said:

I repeat that none of us who has had any long experience of the ordinary thrusts, however wounding, of political life pays much attention to them. We try to control our temper and take as easily as we can the ups and downs. If one were to answer every falsehood that is put about, one would spend one's whole time in repudiation. Many things are best put aside and many criticisms find their own level.

Again, on page 401 he goes on:

I have a feeling that the time has come for men of propriety and decency not to tolerate the growth of what I can only call the spirit of Titus Oates and Senator McCarthy. At any rate, let the judgment be made. If these men are guilty of what it is said they are guilty of, in the old days their heads would have fallen on Tower Hill and today they would never dare lift up their heads among their comrades again. If those who accuse them have done so falsely out of wantonness or malice, let them receive, in due course, not only those who come in the front line, but those who stand behind them, the reprobation which they will have deserved.

The second quotation is from a speech by the same right hon. gentleman on May 7, 1963, and is found on page 250, volume 677:

As for men in public life—and here we are all in the same boat—I do not think that they must be too sensitive. They must expect, whether by the reporter's words or the cartoonist's pencil, to suffer some wounding blows. This is part of what we assume when we voluntarily enter upon public affairs.

• (4:40 p.m.)

It is in this context, Mr. Speaker, that I deplore what we have been about. Because I am one who believes that talk should be followed by some action, I propose, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), amending the motion that is before Your Honour as follows:

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this house strongly deplores and condemns this government's actions in having the R.C.M. Police provide information to the government as to the past conduct of all members of parliament generally, a course of action which would destroy the independence of all members and undermine the institution of parliament."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Hon. members have heard the amendment moved by the hon. member for Royal. If there is no objection to this amendment I shall proceed to read it.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there is a procedural point of some importance which I believe arises out of the ruling made by His Honour a few moments ago.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I interrupt the minister? When the minister rose to speak I was going to add that I would read this amendment from the chair subject to the ruling made by Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the minister would wish to continue now.

Mr. MacEachen: I am not sure whether I should proceed to make the point of order now or following the reading of the amendment, but I do wish to present a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the terms of the amendment. I make the submission that the terms of the amendment are not in conformity with the ruling made a moment ago by His Honour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then I shall proceed to read the amendment moved by the hon. member for Royal again, subject to the limitations contained in the ruling made by Mr. Speaker. Moved by Mr. Fairweather, seconded by Mr. Dinsdale:

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this house strongly deplores and condemns this government's actions in having the R.C.M. Police provide information to the government as to the past conduct of all members of parliament generally, a course of action which would destroy the independence of all members and undermine the institution of parliament."

The Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the ruling made by His Honour was based on a ruling previously made by Mr. Speaker Macdonald.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker Michener.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Speaker Macdonald.

Mr. MacEachen: I understand that this ruling is reported in Hansard for March 21, 1950, at page 949. I understand that Mr. Speaker Macdonald was ruling on precisely the kind of discussion that could take place in the House of Commons with respect to a matter which was at that time before a royal commission. It has been suggested by hon. members opposite that the inquiry we are discussing is a royal commission. At that time Mr. Speaker Macdonald ruled, as I recollect the quotation, that it was possible to deal with collateral matters relating to a royal commission but it was not possible to discuss evidence given before a royal commission.

I submit that this amendment is simply, and not only simply but straightforwardly and fully, founded upon evidence given before this royal commission and that the amendment would be meaningless unless it involved a discussion of evidence given before the royal commission. My submission is that this amendment as framed should, by virtue of the ruling previously made by His Honour, be ruled out of order because it cannot be discussed. It has no meaning, no relevance, unless it hinges upon evidence given before a royal commission and, as His Honour ruled a few moments ago, this kind of discussion would be irregular and improper.

Mr. Nielsen: No, he did not.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the matter can be squarely placed before Your Honour in this way. If the house is called upon to come to a decision on the amendment of the hon. member for Royal, I submit that it is not in any sense of the word a question which Mr. Justice Spence is called upon to make a desicion on under the terms of reference before him. In other words, if Mr. Justice Spence makes a decision or finding in due course following the hearing of the evidence which has been taken, he will not make a decision and keep squarely and properly within the terms of reference if he includes in his findings the issue upon which this house is now called upon to come to a decision.

I submit it is a completely collateral issue. There might well be—and I do not think that Your Honour nor I can be called upon to give an opinion on this—certain types of evidence which go so squarely to the issue with regard to which Mr. Justice Spence is charged that the house might not be able to discuss it. But this is not that type of evidence. I submit with confidence to Your Honour that under these circumstances the issue raised by the hon. member for Royal is one that we are competent to deal with, to debate and vote upon.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the point just made by the hon. member for Peace River I should like your permission to read again from Hansard for March 21, 1950, page 949, the ruling made by Mr. Speaker Macdonald. Your Honour adverted to the last paragraph of this ruling in an earlier ruling:

> I would accordingly rule that it is not out of order to discuss transportation problems generally when such matters have been referred to a royal commission. On the other hand, I would also rule that reference should not be made to the proceedings, or evidence, or findings of a royal commission before it has made its report.

I think that my hon. friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has already pointed out that this motion is founded upon evidence given before a royal commission and upon nothing else, and without the evidence given before that royal commission it would have been impossible for this amendment to be moved.

Therefore nothing could be more squarely in contradiction of what Your Honour, if I recall properly, referred to earlier in your previous ruling as the last judgment which a Speaker had made on this precise point, and it could hardly be more precise. On the other hand, I would also refer to the ruling that reference should not be made to the proceedings or evidence, or findings of a royal commission before it has made its report.

The hon. gentleman is not merely referring to these matters but is founding a motion upon the evidence and upon nothing else. He is asking the house to pass judgment on the evidence given before the royal commission and before the royal commission has completed its work, and on nothing else. It seems to me, sir, if we are to have any respect for the rulings of previous speakers, which have always been respected in this house except on occasions when they were clearly contrary to the expressed rules or when the rules had been changed in respect of them, that Your Honour, on the basis of the previous ruling, would have no choice but to find this motion out of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the minister is anticipating a debate which he has not yet had the privilege of hearing. If he is patient and if His Honour will find, as I am sure he will, the motion to be acceptable the minister will be enlightened. What is before the house is an amendment which, if I may be permitted, I should like to read:

> This house strongly deplores and condemns this government's actions in having the R.C.M. Police provide information to the government as to the past conduct of all members of parliament generally, a course of action which would destroy the independence of all members and undermine the institution of parliament.

Even if we were to accept the minister's argument and that of the Minister of Public Works, which Your Honour has already ruled upon, there is nothing here which is sub judice.

Mr. McIlraith: Nobody is suggesting that.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Transport in his argument did suggest it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister said to the house that this motion must be based upon arguments which in turn must be based on the evidence given at the inquiry. He was anticipating. Even if that were so, there is nothing sub judice about the contents of this amendment. Therefore, on the face of it I submit to Your Honour that the amendment itself must be accepted. Despite the ruling you might come to subsequently upon any future possible points which may be raised in debate, there is nothing sub judice and therefore nothing unacceptable about the motion itself.

I have one more point, Mr. Speaker, and then I will sit down. Your Honour's ruling, as I took it and as I heard it, was primarily based on a ruling given by Mr. Speaker Michener seven years after the ruling which was quoted by the minister. I believe a distinction can be drawn between the circumstances which gave rise to the ruling of Mr. Speaker Macdonald in 1950 and those which surrounded the matter which gave rise to the ruling of Mr. Speaker Michener in 1957.

I wish to point out again, sir, as part of this discussion on the point of order, that a precedent has been set—it is a matter of record—in that in the early months of 1965 matters before a royal commission of inquiry were not only discussed in this house but members adopted strange means of getting evidence before that inquiry through the vehicle of this house. Now, sir, surely parliament is not going to be deprived of its right to discuss a matter affecting, as it does, the very survival of the institution itself by the kind of weak, specious and devious arguments which have been advanced by those opposite.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will permit me to emphasize the fact that I did not maintain and I am not maintaining that this matter is sub judice, nor did my learned colleague, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith), so maintain. We both maintain that the motion and now the amendment were based upon a piece of evidence. Your Honour quoted Mr. Speaker Michener's ruling which, as I recall it, was based on matters which were sub judice. This is totally irrelevant to the point which my hon. friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, made and which I was supporting by reading Mr. Speaker Macdonald's ruling to this effect:

> On the other hand, I would also rule that reference should not be made to the proceedings, or evidence, or findings of a royal commission before it has made its report.

There is nothing here about whether or not it is sub judice. This is a categorical statement, and I would suggest that reference should not be made to the evidence and that this motion is founded exclusively on the evidence. Without that evidence there would have been no finding of the kind which was made on this motion. Therefore I say nothing could be more clearly within the terms of the ruling of Mr. Speaker Macdonald.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has been reading from Hansard for March 21, 1950. In view of the fact that he has read a portion I believe we should look at other portions as well. A point of order was raised and at page 949 Mr. Speaker stated as follows:

> The point raised by the hon. member for Yorkton is, as I understand it, that at the present time a debate should not be permitted on any matter affecting transportation because a royal commission has been set up to inquire into that matter. I take it that that is the point of order raised.

Mr. Stewart, the member for Yorkton, said yes. In the next column Mr. Speaker said:

> I would accordingly rule that it is not out of order to discuss transportation problems generally when such matters have been referred to a royal commission.

So Mr. Speaker made it quite possible for the house to discuss in general terms the question of transportation despite the fact that the subject was before the royal commission. He went on to use the sentence which the minister has read to us. He then stated and again I quote:

> It was a new question for me, and I hope my ruling meets with the general approval of the house.

The Speaker showed considerable uncertainty with regard to a matter which had just recently come to his attention and I notice that he does not give any citations or references such as Your Honour has been able to give to us this afternoon. The only reference given was to Beauchesne, citation 490. I submit that you have gone much more fully into this question and I believe that Mr. Speaker Michener's ruling and yours today would tend to supersede rather than support the conclusion which was arrived at on March 21, 1950.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I take it that what is now before us is the contention by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, supported by some of his colleagues, that the amendment as moved by the member for Royal somehow contravenes the ruling which you gave earlier this afternoon. I submit that such is not the case and I ask the house to recall the general terms of the ruling which Your Honour gave. Your ruling was that a matter before a commission of inquiry was not beyond the right of this house to discuss. You based your ruling on a study of the authorities and in particular on the judgment of Mr. Speaker Michener. I believe it is quite clear that your general position was that we have the right to discuss certain matters even though they may be under discussion in another place.

Then, sir, you asked the house to have regard to a very narrow point. I believe you used the word "narrow". This point was to be found in Mr. Speaker Macdonald's ruling of 1960. As I understood it, the narow point you were making was that we should not in this place be trying the evidence being given in another place.

An hon. Member: He said "refer".

Mr. Knowles: My friends over there quote what Mr. Speaker Macdonald said. I am trying to interpret what the present occupant of the chair said. As I understood Your Honour, your view was that it would be improper for us to be trying bits of evidence here at the same time those bits of evidence are being tried somewhere else. You did not rule out discussion of matters just because they are being discussed in that other place.

I suggest what the hon. member for Royal has brought before this house is not the question of whether evidence being given in another place is to be examined there or not. What the hon. member for Royal has brought before this house has been a practice, an action, concerning which there is now knowledge in the public domain. It is not only a matter of discussion before the inquiry, it is fully reported in the press. It has not been denied by the ministers opposite. There is no suggestion that the statement that the government asked the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to provide information is incorrect.

What we are asking, what the hon. member for Royal has asked be discussed is a practice. This is something quite different from trying or assessing the evidence in the way that was dealt with in Mr. Speaker Macdonald's ruling of 1950. I say again, Mr. Speaker, that I think your general ruling was clear and I think it was correct, that this house has certain rights that cannot be abrogated by the reference of a matter to a royal commission. You merely asked that within that general rule we have regard to what Mr. Speaker Macdonald said and that we not try bits of evidence here while they are being tried in another place.

I submit that this amendment does not do that in any sense at all. This amendment deals with a practice on the part of the government, knowledge of which is now part of the public domain. We have a right to discuss that matter in this house. In the light of your own ruling given earlier this afternoon, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Royal is in order.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I add my support to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has just said and what has been said by my own colleagues previously. Following on from where the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre left off and along the same general lines, I say that the ruling of Mr. Speaker Macdonald was on a narrow point. What he said was that reference should not be made to the proceedings, evidence or findings of a royal commission. It is clear that what he had in mind by his use of those words in that juxtaposition was matters which were in effect the res gestae before the royal commission.

It is true that as a result of evidence given we now know there was a certain course followed by the government. However, this is not a matter before the royal commission; it is entirely a collateral matter. It is in keeping with Mr. Speaker Macdonald's ruling and certainly in keeping with what Your Honour had said—you have said here earlier that parliament is not to be precluded from discussing a matter simply because it is before a commission of inquiry—that parliament certainly should not be precluded from discussing a collateral matter having no relationship to the real matter before the commission, simply because that collateral matter may have been referred to down there.

If we were to follow that principle, then if any matters were mentioned before various bodies even though they were irrelevant to the issue before those bodies we would be precluded from discussing any number of matters. Clearly what Mr. Speaker Macdonald had in mind was that parliament should not be discussing or even referring to the very matter with which the commission is dealing. Here I come very close to the point to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was referring. He was referring to the proceedings or findings by a royal commission. There will be no findings by the commission on this matter. It is entirely collateral. I submit this is in keeping with your ruling as well as the ruling of Mr. Speaker Macdonald, and hon. members should be allowed to discuss the amendment moved by the hon. member for Royal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, because reference has been made from time to time to the actual terms of reference, for the purpose of the record the material points in the order in council perhaps should be placed before you. The material portions thereof include appointment of a commissioner, and I now quote in part:

—a commissioner under part I of the Inquiries Act to inquire fully into a statement by the Minister of Justice in a letter dated March 11, 1966 to the Prime Minister, with reference to a case involving one Gerda Munsinger, which was read in the House of Commons on March 11, 1966; into all statements concerning the case in the House of Commons on March 4 and March 7, 1966; and into all statements by the Minister of Justice in a press conference on March 10, 1966, which, among other things included statements about involvement with the said Gerda Munsinger, about failure to seek the advice of the law officers of the Department of Justice, that there were circumstances that may have constituted a risk to the security of Canada and that the case was not properly handled; and to enquire whether the case was handled in accordance with the rules and principles normally applicable to persons having access to classified information, and into all the relevant circumstances connected therewith—

Sir, in all of that there was not one reference or suggestion to the matters referred to in the amendment moved. I am not at all agreeing that if there were the amendment would be out of order. However, I am pointing out that nothing within the amendment was placed before the commission. I continue quoting the terms of reference:

—and in particular but without limiting the generality of the foregoing to consider fully all reports submitted to the government or any member of the government of the day and any evidence laid before them in connection therewith and any further evidence elicited by or laid before the commissioner and to consider such other matters as may appear to the commissioner to be relevant.

There is not one word of reference there to this matter. As has been well said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, this whole matter is in the public domain. It is now known in every part of our nation. We find, to our great surprise and indeed to our horror as parliamentarians, that the government has elected to use tactics that tyrannize the members of this chamber, tactics that cannot be excused under any circumstances and were not in contemplation when the government, by itself, prepared the terms of reference.

In other words, the government did not include this matter but they do not want us to discuss it in parliament. It shocks the public conscience that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police should be used by the government as its private eye over the lives, purposes and reputations of members of this chamber. It is a shocking situation that the mounted police would be used by the government as part of its tactics to peek into the private lives of members of parliament. It is this to which we are objecting, Mr. Speaker, and in the strongest possible terms. This house has a right to speak.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was going to inquire whether or not the Leader of the Opposition was still on the point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You see, Mr. Speaker, in order to speak on the point of order I must necessarily tell you what we are speaking about. I was trying to do so in most restrained terms, having regard to all the circumstances. On the basis of your ruling earlier I am sure you will hold that the amendment is in order. It was very obvious that the arguments advanced by hon. gentlemen opposite were advanced with diffidence, realizing that you had brought finality to this matter by your earlier ruling.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wish that a ruling I had made could bring finality to any matter in this house. I have some doubts whether I will ever achieve that. Hon. members realize, as I indicated earlier this afternoon, that to some extent we have a conflict between the precedents to which I have referred. Certainly there is a conflict in the house this afternoon between the authorities cited. It is not easy to reconcile rulings which have been made in the past, but I have expressed the thought that I believe that as a general rule the principle by which we should be guided is that parliament is supreme, that it is only in extreme cases that we might consider our debates to be limited in some way in light of certain considerations, including the fact that certain questions have been referred to a royal commission.

This principle is in accordance with the authorities I have cited. It is certainly sustained very strongly by the ruling of Mr. Speaker Michener. However, I thought that at that time I should bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that there is a limitation, and a very narrow one, to the general rule that no reference should be made in the course of our discussions to evidence given in any proceeding before a royal commission or inquiry. The reason, of course, is that we would not want to have a parallel inquiry going on in the house at the same time as that now being carried out in another forum.

However, having taken that into account I still believe that the rule to which I referred a moment ago applies, namely, that this type of question is not really sub judice but can be discussed here.

When I made my ruling a moment ago I said that there was much merit to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Peace River that certain decisions or bits and pieces of evidence which come out in the course of a hearing might not be of the essence of the matter which is before a royal commission or inquiry, and because of this we should not be precluded from discussing certain matters. I do not want to reduce this to the absurd but, for example, if in the course of his evidence a witness said that it was raining or was not raining we could not come to the conclusion that we could not discuss the weather in the House of Commons. In other words, there is a limitation in this regard. We cannot eliminate from our discussion in the house any evidence that is presented before a commission.

In my opinion the type of subject matter contained in the amendment presented by the hon. member for Royal is collateral to the main issue. It does not refer to the essence of the evidence but rather to knowledge, acquired from evidence, of what is considered to be a collateral issue, namely, the manner in which certain information was given by or obtained from the R.C.M. Police.

When there is doubt in the mind of the Chair I believe there is an obligation on the part of the Speaker to give the benefit of whatever doubt there may be in his mind to the hon. member who wishes to discuss such a matter in this chamber. On the basis of the authorities I have quoted this afternoon and on the basis of further evidence presented for my consideration by hon. members who have taken part in the discussion on the point of order raised, I feel that the amendment is in order and should be accepted.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the house that we in this party intend to support the amendment presented by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather). We do so because we share with every person who believes in parliamentary democracy a very grave sense of disquiet over what has been revealed in the last few days and has now been made the subject matter of this motion.

It would appear, Mr. Speaker, that police reports of a confidential nature gathered, we presume, for security reasons have been used, threatened to be used, sought to be used or made available to be used, against members of parliament, not for police or security purposes but for political purposes. If this is so, Mr. Speaker, it reduces our police system to the point where we have political police, and this is something we should stand up and oppose as vigorously and firmly as we possibly can.

Every member of this house knows that in an era of cold war or total war it is inevitable that some things happen which we would rather did not happen. One of the things which does happen is that acts of espionage and sabotage are committed, against which it is necessary that the sovereign state protect itself. One of the instruments the sovereign state must use is a police force which collects confidential and secret information and maintains files or dossiers on public men. We do not complain, Mr. Speaker—I think least of all can anyone in public life do so—about the proposition that police who are charged with the responsibility of maintaining our security should keep dossiers or records on individuals.

We are all very conscious of the fact that these dossiers must of their nature include much that is gossip, much that is unverified, much that is perhaps even false and malicious fabrication. The duty of the police who are charged with this responsibility is to collect unreliable as well as reliable information and to sift it out.

As a result of the era in which we are living the weapon of blackmail can be used in a cold war and details concerning personal weaknesses or aberrations, normally completely irrelevant in public life, may be collected and put into a file. The private aberrations of individuals may affect their public responsibility. This is a matter which cannot be helped. But the very fact that police files may contain derogatory and often inaccurate information about individuals is precisely the reason they should not be used, should never be made available to be used, and should never be sought to be made available to be used for purposes that do not affect the security of the state.

As members of parliament we are not freed from the obligation of accounting to the law. If charges are to be made, of course, any files relating to us ought to be revealed as in any other case. We are not in any sense above the law. But what we do have the right to insist on, Mr. Speaker, is that information of this nature collected in confidence for security purposes should not be used, particularly by governments, to strike back at opponents even when governments are suffering from political criticism. Such a proposal is utterly intolerable in a democracy. Criticism in this house may be and often is harsh and sometimes unfair. However harshly and however unfairly one is criticized, one has absolutely no right to use confidential police dossiers for the improper purpose of striking back or threatening to strike back at individual members in this house.

What are the circumstances surrounding the matter we are discussing? In November, 1964, the present administration was under bitter attack. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) had revealed an attempted bribe by an executive assistant to one of the members of the government and also the possible implication in the matter of the then Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister. Another cabinet minister was under suspicion of influence peddling for which he has subsequently been convicted.

The Prime Minister was naturally hurt by revelations of this sort affecting people he trusted. Under those circumstances, for him to ask the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for reports on his own colleagues was both natural and proper. But, Mr. Speaker, when he went further and asked for files and information on other members of parliament of all parties relating to any misconduct or scandalous matter over the past ten years, I suggest, if this is a fact—unfortunately we have no explanation of this matter at the moment—that the Prime Minister was yielding to the ugly mood of the moment, the mood of counterattack by improper methods. If this was his purpose, and so it appears, in our submission he was demeaning the function of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to that of a political police force. I do not think there is any point in labouring this matter at great length. The proper functioning of parliament and of parliamentary democracy is based upon the mutual respect of persons and groups in parliament. We have political differences. I hope we shall continue to have them. We have political parties with different principles. But, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that basic to the functioning of our party system is this mutual respect of persons and groups in parliament. It is the erosion, the wearing away, of this mutual respect that in my view threatens to paralyse parliament and discredit democracy. When confidential police reports are sought for the purpose of possibly being used or threatened to be used against hon. members of this house, which seems to me an utterly improper purpose, then we believe that democracy itself is in danger.

The people of Canada, Mr. Speaker, urgently hope that his parliament can get down to doing the business for which it was elected, that of legislating in the interests of the people of this country. It is our duty, no matter how painful it is, no matter what respect and affection we may have for some members of this house, including the Prime Minister against whom these remarks are directed, to stand firm on certain principles. One of the principles of this house and of every parliamentary institution, I suggest, is that secret police reports shall not be used or threatened to be used against anybody. If anybody wants to make a charge let him make that charge in the courts and have it dealt with in that way.

Matters affecting the privileges of members of this house must be brought out openly. It is intolerable that this house should be under the cloud of the sort of suspicion and counter-suspicion that presently exists. It is intolerable that R.C.M.P. files should be used for such a purpose.

I have even heard of immigration files being used. It is intolerable that people such as myself, who act in immigration matters, should have the files in such cases looked into to see if there is anything discreditable in our professional conduct in connection with such a matter. It seems to me reasonable to think that something of this sort is going on, because people have given me information and I do not know where else they could have got it but from the confidential files of the immigration department. I had no complaint to make in that case because nothing further came of the matter, and there was nothing discreditable in my conduct. But the atmosphere was discreditable, Mr. Speaker. The atmosphere of "We can find out something about you and maybe this will silence you, maybe you will not be so critical," was discreditable.

I say that members of this house should be free to criticize without fear that some matter affecting their personal reputation, other than a proper accusation of crime or misconduct, will be brought up. Matters of a scandalous nature ought not to be made available to any member of this house on the government side or elsewhere.

We feel strongly about this matter, Mr. Speaker. We do not want to take part in this debate in any tone of partisan bitterness. For myself I hope that the Prime Minister will come forward and give and explanation satisfactory to the house. I asked a question in the house last Friday. I did not do so in order to make a score off the party to which I happen to be opposed. I asked the question because I wanted some sort of explanation made to the house as to something which it seems to me strikes at the freedom and fundamental dignity of the members of this house.

It is for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that I for one and other members of this party will support this amendment.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather). I can assure you, sir, that I am going to deal with the principle that has been raised in the amendment, namely, the violation of the rights and privileges of private members in this house. I shall tie that in to the tactics that have been referred to whereby the R.C.M.P. has been used to investigate the background and past activities of hon. members for the sake of personal persecution, blackmail or for whatever the purpose might be.

I think the hon. member for Royal has established the debate on a high level in dealing with the obvious difficulty that we are confronted with in this parliament. The destruction of parliament's prestige and the criticism of the parliamentary process in the press and other news media of the nation are closely connected with the events that have been referred to by the hon. member for Royal and the hon. member who has just resumed his seat.

[Mr. Brewin.]

I am going to try to bring some concrete information before the house which I think will pinpoint in specific terms the need for raising this question as a matter of confidence at the present time. Many hon. members have been disturbed by current trends. A few have become personally involved, and I have been one of those. I think, Mr. Speaker, that as I refer to the incidents in my own particular case it will be agreed and it will be concluded by my colleagues in this house, particularly the private members, that at the present time we have a reasonable grievance.

Two years ago in December, 1964, I had occasion to take part in a C.B.C. radio broadcast. At that time I dealt with a subject that was exercising the minds of a good many members of the house as well as of citizens across the country. I dealt with the subject of morality in politics. This, incidentally, has been described by the hon. member for Royal as the principle that he is trying to get at in his amendment this afternoon.

I thought that I dealt in reasonable and moderate terms with the subject of morality in politics, which I think all hon. members will agree was topical then and is still topical at the present time. However, notwithstanding the reasonableness of my approach on December 14—the broadcast took place on December 11, 1964—I received a letter from the Prime Minister very bitterly upbraiding me for the manner in which I had downgraded the parliament of Canada.

Although this letter has been tabled in the house, no reference has been made to it in detail, and perhaps if I were to read it at this time it would indicate the tone to which I refer.

Dear Mr. Dinsdale:

I have been trying—without success—to secure from your office a copy of your Nation's Business broadcast of December 11th. However, I have received a transcript from the C.B.C. which confirms that you said this:

"Today, too, we find the nation rocked by evidence of lack of integrity in high places in government."

This is a serious charge to be made against men in high places in government. It becomes the more serious when made by a Privy Councillor.

Will you, therefore, let me know what evidence you have to support this charge?

Yours sincerely,

L. B. Pearson

I replied the next day by a letter dated December 15, 1964:

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

I was sorry to learn by yours of December 14 that you had not been able to obtain a copy of my Nation's Business broadcast on December 11. Unfortunately I do not make a practice of circulating a speech other than providing Canadian Press with a copy.

It is quite true that I referred to a lack of integrity in high places in government. If you refer to the copy of the transcript you received from the C.B.C., you will find that I based this squarely on your own action of writing a letter to your Ministers outlining a code of ethics. This suggests that you yourself have become disturbed over the matter.

In case you have not been able to follow public reaction as indicated in press reports from right across the country, I am taking the liberty of enclosing a summary that has come to hand.

Perhaps I might digress for a moment to refer to some of this material, first, to an article written by Mr. Claude Ryan in Le Devoir of November 27, 1964. It uses a phrase which has become well established in the knowledge of the general public. The article reads in part as follows:

In any case, the facts reveal a grave lack of communication within the government. They seriously shake public confidence in Mr. Pearson. We are witnessing the explosion of the old Liberal garbage can in Montreal. Sordid stories have been accumulating for months. Mr. Pearson will pay dearly for the blunder he committed in giving his confidence to a clique against whom he had been duly warned.

In the same letter I referred also to an article in the Hamilton Spectator of November 28, 1964, which came to the same conclusion in the following words:

The Department of Justice is now under a heavy shadow. The first demand should be less for the resignation of a minister than a blunt facing by Prime Minister Pearson of this grave challenge to integrity in his government, and an immediate and exhaustive inquiry.

The Winnipeg Tribune of November 27, 1964, had this to say:

While Ottawa rocked with the latest dramatic move in the bribery-coercion case this morning, Prime Minister Pearson relaxed in dressing gown and slippers at the farm home of his brother-in-law at nearby St. Norbert.

So in my reply I substantiated the claim that there was disturbance across the country over these matters. To continue with my letter, I wrote:

The fact, too, that your own parliamentary secretary found it necessary to resign also casts a shadow of suspicion in high places.

It is precisely because I am a member of the Privy Council that I felt duty bound to express this opinion.

Unhappily there is far too great a reluctance in Canadian government circles on the part of active Privy Councillors to resign from positions of public trust when actions have been severely criticized. This is in decided contrast to the policy in the United Kingdom where cabinet ministers resign at the slightest suggestion of dereliction in duty.

I appreciate your taking the time to write to me on this matter. It does provide me with an opportunity to place my comments in the proper perspective.

Yours sincerely

The Prime Minister's letter was written on December 14, 1964. It will be recalled that on the same day or more precisely in the early hours of the following day we had the final vote in the flag debate. I believe that vote was taken at about 2.15 a.m. in the morning of December 15. It was an exciting moment in the life of the last parliament, as those who took part will recall. As I was leaving the chamber I was accosted by a member of the administration, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud). He asked me why I was looking so gloomy and I indicated I did not see anything to be very happy about on that occasion. He then told me I would look a lot gloomier when they exposed something they had on me. I began to search my conscience to see—

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege is involved in an accusation of that kind. I should like the hon. member to repeat exactly the words I used at that time. I did ask him if there was any truth in the rumours to that effect.

Mr. Churchill: Just a veiled threat.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The rumour government.

Mr. Robichaud: I did not make any statement in public. I asked personally the member concerned.

Mr. Dinsdale: The hon. member said he had something on me and that I would be hearing about it in due course.

Mr. Robichaud: That is not so.

An hon. Member: Just a rumour.

Mr. Robichaud: Tell the truth.

Mr. Dinsdale: I discussed this with several of my colleagues at the time and I was told not to be too concerned. I thought it was in connection with my vote on the flag issue. They said: Surely feelings will not be carried to the extent of wreaking vengeance against a member of the house for the stand he took on a particular issue. But it was more than coincidental, I would think, that the two incidents occurred on the same day. It would suggest there had been discussion going on in cabinet circles involving certain members of this house.

Nothing further was heard until early in the new year a series of questions appeared on the order paper involving a certain citizen in the city of Brandon who was concerned with the Chinese immigration investigation. It surprised me that these questions were presented not by a member who had been in the house for a long period—

An hon. Member: Nor by a minister.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Dinsdale: Nor by a minister. The member concerned, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso), had not even been in the house while the Chinese immigration investigation was under way. But the questions remained on the order paper for quite some time, and it was not until March 4 of the following year, 1965, that I came under direct attack in the house by the then minister of justice. I replied to the charge on March 5, 1965, because I was not present in the house on March 4, being engaged in delivering a speech in the city of Montreal on the day when the accusation was made.

Mr. Nielsen: Where did the backbencher get his information?

Mr. Dinsdale: This is what I am leading up to, I assure the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). We had to take the situation as it developed at face value and, as I have already intimated, I wondered why the hon. member for Hamilton West, who was not present in the house at the time the events took place, was the one who placed these questions on the order paper.

As a result of the attack in the house several stories appeared in the press, and I think I can best summarize the matter in the words of the story which appeared in the Toronto Star, written by the late Norman Phillips, one of the highly respected members of the press gallery. The headings of that story were: "Under Attack For Liberal Scandals They Dir For Tory Scandals" and "Politics—Ottawa Style." The story read as follows:

The Buddy Leeds' case is the story of a Chinese restaurateur, an angry Prime Minister, and a misguided Minister of Justice. It could be subtitled: Politics, Ottawa Style.

The moral was provided by the Prime Minister one vexing December day before he even knew the Chinese restaurateur existed.

In an uncanny coincidence, Mr. Pearson quoted Confucius: "He who digs dirt loses ground."

The Prime Minister was angry on December 18 because a few days previously an inoffensive Conservative ex-minister named Walter Dinsdale had gone on T.V. with some pious pronouncements about the lack of integrity in high places.

Mr. Pearson's immediate reaction was to write a letter challenging Mr. Dinsdale to produce evidence or make a specific charge.

As I already intimated, I replied immediately to his letter, and I should point out that in a later exchange the Prime Minister denied receiving my reply and I had to send him an additional copy. But that is incidental to the main theme. I continue to read the Norman Phillips article.

Ever since the Conservatives had unearthed the alleged $20,000 bribe offer from a government executive assistant and had forced the setting up of the Dorion inquiry, the Liberals had been digging frantically through the files for instances of Conservative wrongdoing.

The search yielded a letter written by Mr. Dinsdale on August 17, 1960 on behalf of a Chinese constituent, Yuen Bak Lee. A popular figure in Brandon, Manitoba, where he runs the Litchi Gardens on Princess Avenue, he is known to local citizens as Buddy Leeds.

Mr. Phillips very fairly reviewed the whole case and dealt with the part played by the hon. member for Hamilton West in the affair. Then he moved on to the next important step in this whole plot on the date already referred to, March 4, when the then minister of justice launched a personal attack against me in the following words, and I am quoting the Phillips story:

"I will call attention to one forgery case," Mr. Favreau began, "where a charge was made and a parallel case of conspiracy instituted—the case of Buddy Leeds."

He read from the Dinsdale letter and explained the charge had been withdrawn, one year later. The inference was that there had been political interference with the course of justice.

"There have been other cases," Mr. Favreau said ominously. "There have been a few, quite a few."

The use of the Dinsdale letter was quite out of character for the embattled justice minister, who has a reputation as an eminently fair man.

He attacked Mr. Dinsdale on a day when the latter was not in the house to defend himself.

As Andrew Brewin, (N.D.P.-Greenwood) put it: "I think the Minister of Justice does himself no good by calling the kettle black, if that is what he was trying to do."

Mr. Dinsdale was back in the house yesterday with a long-winded self-justification involving the amnesty granted Chinese Canadians who had infringed immigration regulations.

In fact, his letter was similar to ones that 99 out of 100 M.P.'s write for their constituents.

An outraged Douglas Fisher (N.D.P.-Port Arthur) moved to block any further snooping into government files and planting of embarrassing questions.

Back in Brandon Buddy Leeds probably wondered what had caused him to become a subject of parliamentary debate for two successive days.

And students of Confucius began searching his sayings to see whether he had ever linked the black on the kettle with the dirt that was dug.

He did say: "High moral conduct along the Golden Mean is indeed supreme form of such conduct. For a long time, however, few among the people have been capable of it."

The point I want to raise, Mr. Speaker, is the reference Mr. Phillips made at the start of his article when he said:

Somewhere in the Liberal administration a decision was made to punish Mr. Dinsdale for his effrontery.

I also want to point out that it went much further than myself because the then minister of justice in his personal attack on me said:

There have been other cases. There have been a few, quite a few.

This leads up to the present situation. We wondered who had initiated the witch hunt, as I have referred to it from time to time in the house. We wondered how the backbenchers in the Liberal party were able to get hold of information not only concerning myself but others. I received a clue when the hon. member for Hamilton West in defence of his action, as recorded at page 11,962 of Hansard for March 4, 1965, said:

I wish to state that my interest was not directed specifically toward the Chinese immigration problem—

I think that is true.

—and I have very many friends of Chinese origin in my constituency and in other areas—but was raised because of certain information I had received and because of certain pious statements which were made by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. I assure the hon. member that there was no intention on my part to create any—

• (5:50 p.m.)

He was interrupted by laughter at that point. Obviously the house was not convinced that the hon. member was making a legitimate point, but he said it was because of certain information he had received.

In the intervening months we have wondered what the source of that information might be. It now would appear—and this is the basis of the amendment before the house—that it was the Prime Minister himself who instigated what can only be described as a witch hunt in requesting, as has been revealed, confidential information from R.C.M.P. files going back over a period of some ten years. It would appear that this was a deliberate act. At the time of the accusation against me the then hon. member for Port Arthur, Mr. Fisher, was almost persuaded to move the same motion which we have before the house this afternoon.

If the institution of parliament is going to be preserved, I think it is high time some action is taken on this subject. We have had since that time a book written by Mr. Richard Gwyn, a member of the press gallery, entitled "The Shape of Scandal". In that book Mr. Gwyn has many interesting observations to make in respect of the scandals which emerged during 1964, and obviously it would seem that it was the spirit of revenge which gave rise to the witch hunt under way at the present time.

One passage which I think is significant is found on page 157 of the book, "The Shape of Scandal". It reads as follows:

Unlike Diefenbaker, who served as a lightning rod for all criticisms of his government, Pearson's style has been to shift blame away from his own office.

I think that was meant to be an apology for the present Prime Minister. I think it is most revealing, however, in the light of the information which just has come to hand. I feel, on the basis of the evidence I have endeavoured to put before the house this afternoon, that what has taken place in this parliament over the past several months is not designed to encourage the progress of the new politics which has been piously referred to from to time by members of the opposition, and I use the word "piously" advisedly.

Mr. Starr: You mean by the members of the government.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, members of the administration. I feel that the whole strategy began in the year 1962 with an attack led by the Prime Minister and reported in the Toronto Star of September 19, 1962, under the heading "Won't Ease All-Out Attack Until P.C.s Fall—Pearson". The writer on this occasion was Mr. Hyman Solomon. His article reads as follows:

Liberal leader Lester Pearson last night began an all-out, pre-parliament attack on Prime Minister Diefenbaker and promised his attack would not cease until it tumbled the Conservative government.

The Liberal leader flayed Mr. Diefenbaker for his "deplorable display" at the London Commonwealth meeting, and promised to introduce a vote of non-confidence in the government at the first opportunity in the coming parliament.

The article goes on:

Charged Mr. Diefenbaker with 'complete contempt of Parliament" for not convening Parliament as soon as possible after the election and with a crucial Commonwealth conference facing the leader of a minority government.

I should like to pause, Mr. Speaker, to remind hon. members of what took place in Canada last fall with regard to the calling of parliament. Another charge was:

Claimed that Mr. Diefenbaker's plea for a cooling off period following the election had resulted in "wasted weeks" after "wasted years".

He went on generally to outline the charges that became all too well known during the 1962 election. This was an election in which any tactics were used such as "Diefenbucks" and all the other gimmicks of propaganda in order to do precisely what is indicated in that headline—"Won't Ease All-Out Attack Until P.C.s Fall". That attack, of course, continued in the House of Commons.

I go now to the words of Mr. Claude Ryan to bring these remarks to a conclusion. Mr. Ryan always has been a responsible editorial writer. In the light of what has been taking place in this house, when the Munsinger affair was launched on parliament and on the people Mr. Ryan had this to say, as found in a newspaper report on editorials written by him, the report being headed, "Pearson, Cardin Urged to Resign":

By his own hand he has destroyed the myth that he once created around his name. There is now nothing left for him to do but to draw the ineluctable conclusion.

Notwithstanding remarkable talents and his long experience in public affairs, Mr. Pearson has revealed himself to be inept to govern.

During the last few months he has taken several deplorable decisions over which he later must have chewed his fingernails. In less than two years he has burned out at least half a dozen collaborators of top standing.

On serious occasions he has displayed a staggering lack of courage and solidarity. Nobody can feel secure any more under his leadership.

That was Mr. Ryan's editorial comment. I can understand why the Prime Minister was so exercised by the remarks I made over the C.B.C. on December 11, 1964, but I do not think it is in the interest of preservation of our parliamentary system for the Queen's first minister to use tactics which, as has been described in the amendment, bring the R.C.M.P. into the role of political police in order to bring hon. members of this house into discredit.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

My own experience has been recited here this afternoon to indicate that the Munsinger affair is just one of a series of episodes which are largely responsible for so badly poisoning the atmosphere of parliament that we now are faced with a situation across the country where a good many people question the institution of parliament as being a proper method of ruling the country. I should have brought into the house this afternoon the letters I have from my constituents which consistently harp on the theme, what has gone wrong with parliament? This is the question I was endeavouring to answer as I spoke to the people of Canada in a radio broadcast on December 11, 1964. I will conclude my remarks by reading one paragraph:

● (6:00 p.m.)

There was a time, not so long ago, when Canada, secure in her internal serenity, a serenity based on a spirit of good will and tolerance, looked askance at the racism, rioting, and all the other indices of social and political confusion in other parts of the world. Now, it would appear the poisons are seeping through the Canadian body politic and we too have become a sick society.

It is for this reason that I heartily endorse the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Royal.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the house, and in particular the Acting Prime Minister, if it would not meet the wishes of the house to agree to take a supper adjournment this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: This is agreeable to us, Mr. Speaker, and for the course of this debate. May I therefore extend that suggestion to include tomorrow?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Does the house agree that during this debate, that is, for today and tomorrow, the period from six o'clock to eight o'clock shall be considered as the dinner recess?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Indefinitely.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), Privileges and Elections—inquiry as to presentation of first report of committee; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Public Service—superannuated federal employees—request for increased pensions; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), External Affairs—mainland China—possibility of recognition.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Fairweather.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, in the eight years that I have been a member of this house and of parliament, I have never before risen to speak on a question which was more vital to the individual members of this house, to the dignity of parliament and to all that this stands for, than the present amendment to the resolution. It aims directly at the cause, and the cause is that the Prime Minister asked for the files on a number of individual members. What for? It is clear to anyone that the motive was political revenge. The protection of national security, past, present and future had nothing to do with it—or very little at any rate, giving the Prime Minister the benefit of the doubt. What he had in mind was to find something with which to strike back at the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen)—in other words to try to silence the opposition.

Well, I can assure the Prime Minister and other members of the government that before this debate is over they will rue the day the Prime Minister ever took this type of action.

After he received these files from the R.C.M.P., I do not know what he did with them—let us assume that he examined them. But he had them for roughly 16 months and then the R.C.M.P. had to ask for them back. Well, if there was anything in them of a security nature, surely the Prime Minister would have asked the R.C.M.P. to take action. In my view, and I say this in all seriousness, if anything of a security nature should be found against a man who is elected a member of parliament, who enjoys the trust of the people he represents, surely the government or the R.C.M.P. or the people in power are justified in giving him the works. We have to preserve honesty, integrity and dignity in this parliament. No wrongdoing can be condoned. If such a case comes to light it is the duty of the R.C.M.P. to present to the government the file relating thereto. I submit it is not the duty of the Prime Minister to ask for the files of members of parliament, placing those members in jeopardy and holding such files like a bucket of slops over their heads which he might pour on them at any time. This is not the type of conduct that any government should condone, let alone the Prime Minister. I am certain that the purpose behind the action of the government was to create a witch hunt so as to try to find something to pin on somebody and expose them to public scrutiny; and this is the method they chose to do it.

As I said before, I do not know why the government was not able to find something on somebody. At one time I was covered for security and had access to secret files that others had not, through this was not in Canada. I found some things, and things were shown to me which were more or less of a hearsay nature, and doubtful. I imagine that all files contain matters of that nature. But to bring these people before the bar of justice or to cast suspicion upon them is absolutely wrong. When no wrongdoing is proved, then nothing should be done.

I would imagine this was the attitude the Prime Minister took after looking at these files; otherwise he would not have kept them for 16 months without doing something. Something is wrong somewhere. There is a nigger in the woodpile, and before this debate is over I hope we will put our finger directly on the problem. In my view the problem lies directly on the desire of the Prime Minister and his government to find something to pin on the opposition and secure a certain degree of revenge.

It may be that when the Prime Minister—or perhaps it was some of his assistants, I do not know—looked over these files he found Liberals with some kind of record and did not want to bring them forward. I think we should know about this from the Prime Minister. I am sorry he is not here; I am also very sorry to learn he is indisposed with a cold. It is unfortunate that this matter should come up at a time when he is not in his seat, because it is he and his government who are the ones on trial. Beyond that, there is no question but that this parliament, in the eyes of the people, is on trial. Parliament has a certain dignity, or it used to have. But dignity it should have, and if hon. member in the government and elsewhere conducted themselves as they should vis-à-vis other membrse, it would still preserve its dignity.

I was very much embarrassed last night, on listening to the program "This Hour has Seven Days", to hear the House of Commons referred to as the common house by one gentleman taking part. That might be all right for a laugh for some people, but it is something that should not be perpetrated by the press or others. This house is for dignified people and, above all, it must be kept that way if we are to maintain the respect of the nation and fulfil our parts in the function of passing laws for the guidance and government of the people.

The action of the Prime Minister is merely a symptom of what is wrong with this parliament. The root of the problem is the weakness of the government. It has to resort, in seeking some revenge, to asking for files on Liberal members, N.D.P. members, Social Credit members as well as Progressive Conservative members. Resort to those tactics certainly indicates that something is wrong with the present government. The only thing you can do with a weak government like the present one is to toss it out, because there never was a weaker government in office in the Dominion of Canada. All you have to do is to talk to the people; they will tell you the same thing.

No longer does this government, Mr. Speaker, hold the confidence of this house. Neither does it hold the confidence of the people. It is high time for them to make amends, go before the electorate and let the electorate decide on what action to take. For this reason I would therefore support the amendment to the motion before the house.

Mr. Orange: Would the hon. member permit a question?

[Mr. Kindt.]

Mr. Kindt: I shall answer all questions when I have finished, and I am almost through. As I said before, the thing to do is to support this motion and throw out the present government in view of the tactics which have been used by the Prime Minister. Let the people decide on the type of government this country should have. The time is ripe, the ground has been prepared, and the way has been paved by the actions of the Prime Minister. No other course of action seems logical at this particular stage of this parliament.

Mr. Orange: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the hon. member who has just sat down. During the course of his speech he brought out the fact that perhaps this nation is prepared for a general election. I would just like to know in my own mind whether that is exactly what he said—that if this amendment does go through we should have a general election in the country at this time?

Mr. Southam: If this amendment goes through you will have nothing to say about it.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Kindt: I was going to say the very same thing before the hon. member interjected that remark. I do not say we would have to have an election, but it may be the only way to get rid of a government of this kind, a weak government such as we now have in power. There may be other alternatives, but a last resort may be to have another election. The people are fed up with elections and I hesitate to think about another election. However I will say this, that the people would be more willing to have another election than they would be to tolerate any more nonsense or weakness from this particular government.

Mr. Orange: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member has posed his question. The Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat will not misunderstand me if I do not follow his line of thought and if I seek to establish a basis for the discussion for the remaining part of this debate which, I think we will all agree upon reflection, should govern our consideration of a matter of such importance. The Leader of the Opposition

(Mr. Diefenbaker) and I are among those who have been in this house the longest. I must say that I had thought the question put the other day by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) was out of order. I had thought also, though I must have been mistaken, that the present amendment, on the basis of our rules and practice, was likewise out of order. However, Mr. Speaker, who so obviously has the confidence of everyone in this house, has ruled otherwise. Of course we accept his ruling without reservation.

The Leader of the Opposition has made a number of speeches in which he sought to indicate to the Canadian people what parliament is. I must say that with a lot of what he has said in that regard I cannot find myself in disagreement. I think one of the most salutary consequences of this parliament is that in Mr. Speaker we have someone who unquestionably enjoys the confidence of every member in this house. On the basis of long experience in this house, I suggest this will prove to be a vital factor in the preservation of this parliamentary institution.

Now, I have risen at this time because I could not sit in my seat and hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) attacked, and not offer some explanation, first of all for his absence and, second, to indicate as reasonably and as fairly as I can what I believe should be the governing factors in the consideration which we give to this matter at least until he has an opportunity of taking part in our discussions. The Prime Minister is absent because he is suffering from a 'flu condition, but he hopes to be able to be here tomorrow.

In order that there will be no misunderstanding, I may say his condition is not a serious one but his doctors did not think it would be wise for him to be here today. He will be here tomorrow, and he wishes to take part in this debate to explain what he believes to be the interpretation of a situation that has been described by someone else in the inquiry that is under way. I have thought it would be worth while to say that it must be clear to all of us that the amendment we have been discussing this afternoon is obviously not based on fact. The most that one can say at this stage is that the argument has been based on assumptions.

The hon. member who has just taken his seat spoke about files. I do not recall any reference being made to files. I may be wrong in this regard, but it seems to me in a matter of this importance none of us will consciously want to be loose or imprecise in the use of words, because of the implications involving what is basic in this amendment, that is the protection of the individual rights of members of this house, just as we would be jealous of the protection of the individual rights of any Canadian citizen.

Am I wrong in suggesting that this amendment, moved by an hon. member for whom all of us have a high regard, is an amendment that assumes a certain conduct without finding out if the assumption is correct? It is an amendment based on a one-sided interpretation of events, as they are presumed to have existed. I do not know whether or not they do. This amendment assumes that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were asked to provide information on the past conduct of members, without limitation as to time. Is that a correct assumption? Are these the facts? Some hon. members have been participating in this debate as though this were, in fact, the true situation, without having had an opportunity of hearing from the Prime Minister, who is alleged to be the author of the remarks attributed to him by a third party.

I suggest that if we have confidence in this parliament—and I am one who has confidence in this institution—surely the facts ought to be ascertained fully before deploring and condemning. The amendment and the assumptions are remarkable because they derive from information at an inquiry, without waiting for that inquiry to be completed. Why is it so urgent to make the assumptions without waiting for the hearings to end? Why is it so urgent that parliament cannot wait until it has the views of the commissioner, and all the facts, before deploring and condemning.

An hon. Member: We know what he will say.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not know what that interjection was, but I think what I have said is based on ordinary principles of justice as we understand them and as we generally seek to practise them in this country.

Mr. Peters: We never went into this file business before—at least, I hope we did not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the very argument: Have we gone into them.

Mr. Orlikow: The commissioner went into it.

Morality in Government

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I ask, is it possible that we want to condemn the Prime Minister before the facts can be established. Apparently we are asked to pass judgment before the case is over.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does he doubt the truthfulness of the commissioner of the R.C.M.P.?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My right hon. friend knows the answer that I will make to that question. I have every confidence in the R.C.M.P. But I do want to understand what is the explanation of the circumstances about which the commissioner commented the other day. I want to understand exactly what the man to whom are attributed the words had in mind. That, I think, is only fair.

I am sure that no one in this house would respect me if, after listening to this debate, occupying the position in the government that I do, sitting with the Prime Minister —who, by the way, is ill at the present time—I did not rise and at least put these questions to the house which I think any fair minded man would expect me to do, and which is the proper thing for me in the circumstances to do.

We in this house do not all agree on questions that divide us, in terms of our respective programs. We have our controversies. But, no matter what anyone thinks of the Prime Minister, does anyone really believe that the present Prime Minister of Canada is the kind of man who could possibly undertake the kind of course that is suggested and that is implicit in this amendment?

An hon. Member: What did the commissioner say?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am trying to deal with this matter as reasonably as I can, in the absence of the Prime Minister. I ask again, does anyone really believe that the present Prime Minister of Canada is the kind of man who would undertake to deal with a situation like this in the way which is suggested in the amendment before the house?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does this accord with his reputation?

An hon. Member: No.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is he the type of man who would do what the assumptions indicate?

I say, as one who has known him long before I came into this house, this is not in accord with his past conduct, either as a diplomat, as a minister, as Prime Minister, or as an individual. That is the opinion I am sure of every hon. member in this house. His record, surely, has been concerned with individual rights, and not with the destruction of the rights of individuals. There has been criticism about his conduct in the Spencer case.

An hon. Member: That was quite justified.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We all know what was behind the attitude he took in that case. He did what he did because he had a deep regard for individual human rights and was very greatly concerned that there might have been an infraction of those human rights.

Mr. Diefenbaker: After how long?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I happen to know something about his attitude in the matter, and I can say this without fear of contradiction: that there was no one in this house more anxious than was he to make sure that no act of his government was in any way infringing unduly on the rights of the individual concerned. I cannot believe that anyone in this house really and sincerely believes that the present Prime Minister would deliberately embark upon a course to affect the rights of individual members of this house.

The revision of our security procedures, long before this matter arose, has been a concern of his. He had every reason to be deeply concerned at a time long before he was Prime Minister of this country. His concern, for instance, for the right of collective bargaining in the civil service is based upon his concern for the rights of the individual.

I do not expect that anything I have said will bring this matter to a conclusion. I did feel tonight, during the dinner hour, because he could not be here, because he has been the object of the attacks, that I owed to him, because of my belief in his integrity and good intentions at least to ask this house to wait until an explanation of the facts had been given. I have enough confidence in my fellow members in this house, in all parts, to believe that this courtesy will be extended to him.

I can understand what motivated the hon. gentleman in bringing forward this resolution. I am not criticizing him for doing it. I know the hon. gentleman who is bringing this matter forward, and I know what influences him in the judgments he makes in matters that concern us. But surely I am not asking too much when I ask hon. members to take into account the fact that there will be an opportunity given to the head of this government, to the Prime Minister, to explain his interpretation of the events which Mr. Speaker now has decided may be discussed within our rules.

I have said that I have full confidence in the Speaker of this house and in the decision he has made. I would ask the house to consider carefully what I have said, and I would not ask this if I were not perhaps the man in the house who has been here longest.

An hon. Member: That is a one-sided argument.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, it may be a one-sided argument, but I assure my hon. friend that it is a necessary one.

I say to this house, as the right hon. gentleman opposite has said many times, parliament still remains the effective embodiment of the national will. It may not be at any given moment what the people of this country would like it to be. There have been many periods in history when the Canadian people have complained about their deliberative assembly. I say tonight, in the remaining hours of this debate, we ought to make sure, before passing judgment that we have all the facts before us. Only then, if we are true to the ideals and traditions of what this parliament professes to be, will we have the right to reach conclusions which are now implicit in this amendment, as though there had been full disclosure of all that was involved.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Disclosure?

Mr. Peters: Would the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, of course.

Mr. Peters: I should like to know if he has within his knowledge the answer to a rumour that has been widely circulated. I ask this question only because he has mentioned the Spencer case. The rumour is, and looking at the evidence that we have before us it would seem that there is a basis for it, that the head of the R.C.M.P. brought forth this information in question on a rather voluntary basis, rather than being asked questions about it—if I follow the proceedings correctly.

The story that is abroad is that the Prime Minister, through the Minister of Justice and several others, was threatened by the R.C.M.P. to protect the R.C.M.P., and that when the Spencer inquiry was granted, that was done despite the objections of the R.C.M.P. For this reason, I ask the minister, is it within his knowledge to say whether or not this is a vindictive attack that is being made on the Prime Minister by persons outside this house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not believe that.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I say, I do not believe it. I do not know, but I do not believe that there is any basis for that. I do not know the facts but I do not believe that people generally in authority are so motivated. I cannot bring myself to think that that kind of thing happens to reasonable and well intentioned men.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my participation in this debate will be as brief as the participation of those who preceded me. All of us, I think, are unhappy that a debate such as this is necessary, and we find that the views we wish to express can be stated briefly.

I speak in the context in which the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) opened the debate and to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) made reference, namely the confidence which all of us have in the institution of parliament. Not only do we in this house believe in parliament but we confidently feel it will survive the trials and tribulations through which it is passing.

Nevertheless, we are all aware that parliament is on trial. We know that the people of this country are asking the question which was quoted this afternoon by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale): What is wrong with parliament?

I realize that anyone who sets out to answer a question as weighty as that runs the risk of being accused of knowing too much about other people's faults. But I feel the only reason for participating in this debate is to try to give an answer to that question.

In my opinion the speech just made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs revealed the answer that is in my mind. He found it necessary—and I think this is sad and pathetic—to stand in this house and defend the reputation of the Prime Minister of this country. Why should he feel it necessary to do that? It was because the reputation of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is under attack. I refer not just to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Royal; one has only to pick up newspapers in any centre of this country at the present time and read the editorial pages to realize that the Prime Minister of Canada, the first citizen of this country, is under attack.

The Prime Minister is not the only public man whose reputation has been called into question. He is not the only man who is under criticism and attack. There are other members of parliament on both the government and the opposition sides of the house whose reputations have been seriously damaged by recent events, by allegations, by stories in the press and so forth. I suggest that right here, in the fact that public men are being attacked, that politics has become a game of trying to destroy the other person, is precisely what is wrong with parliament.

I hear an interjection from over there. I think someone said: "Who started it?" I have my own view, but I do not intend to state it. I think we are only compounding the illness if we keep asking the question: Who started it? The fact is that for a long time politics in this country has consisted in an effort to win elections and gain power by destroying the character and reputation of persons on the other side of the house.

If I talk about the two main parties in this chamber someone might well say: That is fine; you are speaking from the vantage point of not yet being one of the major parties. But I do so in the light of the facts of the situation. It cannot be denied that an effort has been made from one side of the house to win political advantage by linking the other side with organized crime.

An hon. Member: They were.

Mr. Knowles: Someone says: "They were". That does not matter any more. What matters is what this game is doing to Canada. The other side comes back and says, in effect: Whatever you say about us, you yourselves are engaged in various forms of immorality.

These things have their effect. I say to hon. members in each of the old parties that if they wish to play the game of destroying members on the other side they can do it, and they can succeed. The tragedy is that a great deal of success has already been achieved.

But the process of seeking to destroy members of parliament, whether on the front benches or the back benches, for the sake of gaining political advantage does something further: It destroys parliament itself. This, I suggest, is what is wrong with parliament. This is our malaise. Instead of being engaged in combat over issues and principles, we are engaged in this effort at mutual destruction as a substitute for politics as politics ought to be. We must see an end to this kind of thing in the parliament of Canada.

One of my colleagues, when he knew I intended to speak, urged me to be sure to suggest to the House of Commons that the country wants us to get on with the business of the nation. I agree. I can tell my hon. friend I was going to say that.

But, Mr. Speaker, we cannot get on with the business of the house just by the way we order our procedures, or what items we consider next, or by agreeing, for example, that we should not have had this particular two-day debate. We cannot get the business of this country done as long as this poison stays here —as long as the means of winning out over the other side consists mainly of destroying persons on the opposite side of the house.

I hope members of parliament are listening to the commentaries on radio and television. I hope they are reading the editorials and the letters which constituents are sending. I hope we all realize there is a sickness here. I still believe in parliament. I believe we shall survive this sickness and come out of it stronger than ever. But in order to do this we must call a halt to this abuse of politics, this practice of each side trying to destroy the other and, in particular, of individuals trying to destroy individuals on the other side of the house.

This is what the amendment now before us is about. It is really just a symptom of what is going on. The reference in the amendment is to a course of action which has apparently been followed on the government side of the house; it has not been denied. But we know that on the opposition side of the house, too, certain practices have been followed. When people accept the destruction of the other party as a means of action, the ultimate way of doing that is by character assassination, accusing people of being linked with crime or immorality, or anything else, so as to get them out of the way.

This is not parliament at its best. This is not parliament as we should like it to be in the history of Canada. This is not the kind of parliament that any of us in the House of Commons wants. Therefore, I call on the leadership of this house. In particular I call on the leaders of the two main parties, the leader of the government and the leader of the opposition, to eschew this method of carrying on, to say we have had enough of it, and to give leadership in constructive battling over real issues. I believe they can. But if they cannot respond to that challenge which is coming to them from all over the country, then they know what the country is saying they ought to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as a member of parliament I would also like to make a few comments with reference to this debate. I could not help but be very impressed with the speech just made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I believe all hon. members basically agree with just about everything he said.

I also believe many hon. members were impressed with certain aspects of the speech made by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather). I say certain aspects advisedly because I think it is unfortunate that in the latter part of his speech he tried to frame it into a partisan, no-confidence motion in the government. When he talked about public morality on the part of all members of parliament, in fact he was talking about the conduct of all members of parliament in all parties as exemplified by our behaviour over a period of three or four years.

One could take about two thirds of his speech and say it would be a pretty effective indictment of parliament as a whole, rather than of the government, and so it is unfortunate that his speech had to be twisted for that particular purpose. But one thing that he has accomplished is that he has brought the subject out for further discussion.

In many parts of his speech he suggested that the type of poisoning that has been taking place in this parliament is a thing we have all contributed to in a collective way. He got that message through pretty well before he put forward the motion of no confidence. But I think it was a pretty superficial subterfuge to try to place the blame for what is wrong in this parliament on one hon. member, irrespective of whether he be the Prime Minister or not; and that, in fact, is what has been done by this motion. It is most unfair and I think it is beneath the reputation of the hon. member who moved the motion, an hon. member for whom many of us have the highest respect.

We realize that the disclosure by the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. at this particular hearing was an irresistible temptation to take political advantage of a party and to heap abuse and blame for all that has taken place on the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) who, it is alleged, ordered these files. But we all know basically that this is not the root cause, or anything related to it. We all know that what has been going on has been growing for three or four years.

The substantive words of the motion refer to—> —a course of action which would destroy the independence of all members and undermine the institution of parliament.

I submit that this has been effectively done over a period of three or four years by the action of all of us in a collective sense. We are all members of political parties. We all take part in party caucuses. We have to share our responsibility for this type of compromise in our role as members of parliament.

To use this particular disclosure by the R.C.M.P. as a springboard for heaping all the abuse and blame on one man is beneath the dignity of all hon. members, and we should desist from it now if we are to adopt a constructive course and put an end to this action. Its having been stated that the Prime Minister ordered these files then, of course, all the assumptions referred to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) came into play this afternoon.

But even assuming for the sake of argument that these files were in fact ordered by the Prime Minister, following that allegation there is a mighty big assumption which has been made by hon. members that the files were ordered with malice aforethought, to be used for threatening members of parliament and to blacken the reputations of members of parliament. There are no facts to substantiate that type of assumption, but it is an allegation which has been made at random throughout the house all afternoon. Yet the very ones who make that type of generalization are the people who say this type of conduct must cease if we are to save the institution of parliament.

I do not for one moment impute that type of motive to the Prime Minister. I know the Prime Minister. I have a very high respect for him and I do not believe for one moment that these files, even if they were ordered—and presumably we will hear the Prime Minister's statement on that tomorrow—were ordered with any type of malice such as has been imputed to him here today.

We can all recall the atmosphere in the house—I have never been in such a poisonous atmosphere—in 1964 when allegations were made arising out of the Rivard affair, when a parliamentary secretary and an executive assistant were alleged to be involved in wrongdoing. Those charges were made from the benches opposite, and were used as a basis for wider generalization. We heard that there were going to be great bankruptcy revelations, but these did not come to fruition. It was said that somehow these bankruptcies were a link with the underworld. This lent a certain plausibility to these devastating generalizations, and so other reputations were hurt through unwarranted conduct for which we have never had any substantiation.

We all, as members of parliament, deplore this type of conduct. We all know that certain other members of the government are ghosts that must be present with us, members who were subjected to this generalization technique, but about whom wrongdoing was never substantiated. I cannot help but think of the ex-postmaster general. The justice who presided over the Dorion inquiry said he was a man who was completely exonerated, and that even in the furniture affair his conduct was above reproach. The justice even said that he should be exonerated by all men in public life. Yet he was subjected to this wide type of generalization which must have brought tremendous pain to himself and his family. It was an unjustified type of devastating generalization founded on innuendos and implications. We have all had to live with that type of conduct for the past three years.

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Munro: For us to say now that we will forget all that in the past, because the alleged ordering of certain files by the Prime Minister is an implication that one man is the author of all that is wrong with the house, is a conclusion which is obviously ridiculous.

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member permit a question? When he is dealing with unfounded accusations would he deal with the press conference which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) held on March 10?

[Mr. Munro.]

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I would like to finish my comments and then I will be pleased to answer the hon. member's question. We are talking about all the allegations that were thrown about this house for a year and a half, involving bankruptcies that were never substantiated, and the origins of which followed closely upon the Rivard affair. We have all experienced the rumour craze that went around the corridors of this house, to a degree never experienced before, when reputations of members too numerous to mention were being compromised at random, whose names came up in the context of some improper conduct in their personal lives. We all know that there were rumours.

• (9:00 p.m.)

There were vicious rumours floating throughout the press gallery. It seemed that certain members were conducting their own private police force and dropping dark hints that they had revelations which would be coming forward to destroy some particular member of this parliament. If it is a political responsibility of anyone in public life, I would think it must be that of the Prime Minister—this is my own interpretation—to consult and have interviews with the R.C.M.P. to find out whether or not there is any substantiation for the vicious charges being levelled, whether in fact any of them were true or were on the other hand, unfounded gossip; and once that was ascertained it would be the end of the matter. But, to base charges on the assumption that the files were ordered for the purpose of threatening and blackmailing members I think is a motive which should be most distasteful and beneath the dignity of members.

That then was the type of atmosphere which we had for a year and a half. There is little wonder that these files would be ordered. I would have been very surprised if in fact they had not been ordered. I would think it would be the responsibility of any prime minister in the context of his oath as a privy councillor, to check out some of the rumours to find out whether in fact there was any truth to some of them, so that some action could be taken; but it certainly was not designed to discredit the actions of any member of parliament. This is my own interpretation. That disclosure at the inquiry did not surprise me. I suppose, if we listened to the hon. members here, we would think it was some type of outrageous conduct. I never cease to be amazed at how pious we politicians can become.

The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) today spoke in very injured tones about how his reputation had been compromised or had been damaged because of questions placed on the order paper designed to point out some wrongdoing on his part, of even a minor nature. In the same speech, when he decries that type of behaviour, the hon. member quotes from a speech that he gave on the C.B.C. embodying some of the most wide-sweeping generalizations of a smear nature containing a reference to "garbage cans" and a "whole government under suspicion." Yet, in the same breath he claims his reputation is being tarnished. When one complains, surely one must be prepared to acknowledge at the same time one's own shortcoming.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege. The hon. member, if I heard him correctly, a few moments ago said that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) was guilty of wrongdoing. That statement should be withdrawn or substantiated.

Mr. Munro: It is too bad the hon. member did not listen. I said that he complained that there were questions placed on the order paper designed to point out that he was guilty of some wrongdoing.

Mr. Nielsen: Where did he get the information?

Mr. Byrne: Where did you get yours?

Mr. Munro: If the hon. member wishes to remove subtle threats placed on the order paper, he will have to find some consistency in his own conduct, I refer to the hon. member for the Yukon, because after I made a speech in Toronto complaining about members demeaning themselves by scurrying around the halls trying to get something on one another, I can remember the hon. member's comments then. I think he met me a few days after and said he had received letters from my constituents complaining that I was using my privilege of air travel to give political speeches.

Mr. Nielsen: That is true.

Mr. Munro: He was going to take some policing action in this matter. The hon. member does not know that I gave a personal cheque for that particular air fare.

The hon. member for Brandon-Souris was complaining bitterly about this type of procedure. Surely this is another example of inconsistency on the part of us all. All of us collectively have been responsible for what has taken place. I would think that if the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) wishes to talk about political morality not only in our tactics but in our everyday conduct of affairs as parliamentarians, one tactic is the framing of a motion of non-confidence in the government. I would think that a lot of political morality is involved in that type of tactic. Surely he is aware, as are all of us as members of parliament, when these rumours are going about and when there are wide-sweeping generalizations being made based on unfounded implication and innuendo that, as the words of the motion indicate unquestionably: "this destroys the independence or certainly impairs the independence of all of us as members of parliament". How could this action in respect of the ordering of files, as came out at a royal commission hearing have done this type of damage as set out in this amendment, when in fact we know that has happened to us as members of parliament through our course of conduct and through the collective action of all of us for the last three and a half years.

How can this pat and convenient device—I refer to the use of the revelation which came forth four or five days ago at a royal commission hearing—be placed upon one man as his wrongdoing? I say we should all be prepared to accept our shortcomings and do something about them. I should think that a new point of departure for us as members would be to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles); we should forget trying to dig up dirt on one another and get on with the business of the country.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this motion of non-confidence in the government with very deep feelings, because I can speak as a member of the privy council and can say flatly that one of the first instructions I received on being sworn into the council was that under no circumstances was I to probe into any file of the previous administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: As a member of the privy council I can say that I was instructed on the first day of my being sworn into office that I must remove myself from all business transactions because my judgment as a minister might be affected, and I assume that instruction applied to all the ministers who were sworn in ahead of me. I can state, Mr.

Speaker, that as a member of the privy council inadvertently information came to me about predecessors of mine, not only in my own department but in other departments. On no occasion, with one slight exception, did I ever divulge to my colleagues or other members in the house what information I had gleaned. That one exception was in the year 1959 when a member on this side of the house, a privy councillor, asked me a question in debate on a certain subject which, as I said earlier, inadvertently I had come across, and I did indicate by my statement that I understood what his position had been in that matter when he was in the cabinet. That may have been an improper use of information which had come to me inadvertently, and I would stake my life on the fact that this privy councillor and myself are the only ones who knew of the information that was passed. I say these things deliberately in order that the house may understand that in 1957 we were a new government; not one of us had ever been in a cabinet before, and the instructions I have mentioned came from one person only, the then prime minister of Canada, the man who today sits as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker).

I do not want the house to believe that this attitude was taken by the Leader of the Opposition purely on his assumption of office. The illustration which I shall now quote dates back to the year 1952. It took place in the town of Lumsden, Saskatchewan, in the month of June. It occurred at an election meeting I was attending as a candidate in the provincial election, as leader of the Conservative party in Saskatchewan, for the constituency of Lumsden. The speaker on my behalf that evening was the only Conservative M.P. in Saskatchewan, John Diefenbaker, Member of Parliament for Lake Centre, who is now Leader of the Opposition.

At that meeting was a member of today's press gallery with whom I have checked this story in the last month to verify my memory of this event. On this occasion a man named Rawluk asked at the end of the meeting whether he might read to the meeting a sworn affidavit. I am not a lawyer, nor was the chairman of that meeting. If my memory serves me correctly, and I think it does, I asked the speaker of the evening, who was a distinguished lawyer, whether he could guide us on the course of action we should follow. He asked Mr. Rawluk whether he might read that sworn affidavit. He read the affidavit and then announced to the meeting that the document would not be read at any meeting at which he or, he hoped, any other Conservative was present, because the allegations in it, even though sworn, would bring down in ruins the reputations of several leading public figures in Saskatchewan.

I quote this incident because the same gentleman, Mr. Rawluk, tried to get another M.L.A. named Benson to let him read the same document at one of his public meetings. This independent M.L.A. refused to read the document, I think on the same grounds as those of the then Mr. Diefenbaker. I point this out because it has a bearing on the situation we face in the house at this moment. The members of the legislature of Saskatchewan knew by the rumour-mill that these allegations were in the wind. It was in the month of February, if my memory serves me correctly, that the leader of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan, Mr. Tucker, read this affidavit into the record of the legislature, namely before the crown corporations committee of the legislature.

My remarks are now aimed at the members of the N.D.P. in this house, the successors of that party, the C.C.F. On that occasion the premier of the province of Saskatchewan offered to the opposition three types of investigation. If my memory is correct, the opposition chose a public hearing of these charges on the floor of the house through the forum of the crown corporations committee. Those hearings lasted for several weeks. They were attended by lawyers and representatives of all those people involved in the charges. As I say, Mr. Speaker, the hearings lasted for several weeks and the business of the province of Saskatchewan was held up until the allegations could be cleared away.

I have two points to make. One is that during the long period of the hearing of these terrible charges aimed at the premier and the senior ministers of the government of the province of Saskatchewan you never heard from the leader of the Conservative party in that province one word except in an effort to try to stop this awful going-on. Rightly or wrongly, I have fought the Liberals all my life, I have fought the C.C.F. as hard as I can; but I look upon members of both these parties as Canadians and fellow citizens of Saskatchewan who I hope some day will continue parliament in that legislature after we are all gone.

The second point I want to make is that during those hearings on several occasions I met with leading figures on both sides and tried to use my good offices to bring some kind of end to their impossible tug-of-war, because they were asking that the matter be decided by a vote of the members, and no one would give in. When the hearing was completed, the ministers of the crown were cleared.

It is true that the head of the government insurance office left his job. But my point is this, and I make it to the N.D.P.: During that time when the premier of Saskatchewan, along with his ministers, was under heavy personal attack, charged with allegations in many ways much more terrible than this house has had to endure, the Conservative party in Saskatchewan stood for the rights of all people in that province to see that their legislature was preserved and that the rights of individuals were not condemned.

During that awful period the rumours that went around our province and through the legislative building every hour on the hour were just as bad as we have had to endure in the last few years here in Ottawa. I mention this to the New Democratic Party on the ground that now I think they can measure up to their democratic responsibility by indicating in this house that they disapprove, not only of this type of blanket charge that we have had to endure, but of the concept that the mounted police of our country, which has the highest reputation of any police force in the world, should be forced into a position where they have to degrade themselves to become watchdogs over members of parliament for a period of 10 years.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question. I wonder whether he is aware of the fact that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) stated this afternoon that this is the position of our party and that we shall be voting for the amendment.

Mr. Hamilton: I am very glad to hear this interjection because I wanted to make this appeal and I wanted to make it absolutely clear, with no sense of malice to the N.D.P. whatsoever, that we can all be subjected to this type of treatment.

I recall what the premier of Saskatchewan had to go through in my province on this same type of attack, not only the type of allegations but this rumour-mongering. I believe it would have been easy for me to have joined in this business of worrying the premier when he seemed to be flat on his back. However, I took the course—and many people in my party in the province of Saskatchewan accused me of destroying the chance for my party to rise in power—of trying to defend a principle which I still believe in. I am glad to hear that the N.D.P. are going to stand with us on this matter, because it is crucial.

When a government is attacked as the opposition must attack a government, it is not a proper course of action to use the national police of the country to destroy the reputation of any individual in this house, whether requested by a prime minister or not. I believe this country knows that we can only carry on as a parliament when certain codes of ethics are followed. This is illustrated in the fact that we assume every person in this house is a gentleman and we must take his word, even though that is hard at times.

Second, we have certain rules developed over the centuries to try to protect the rights of individuals in this house. If my history is not wrong, that mace sitting on the table when Mr. Speaker is in the chair, is a symbol that no one, neither a monarch sitting up in the gallery nor any agent of a monarch, has any right to impose pressure on members; it makes no difference whether the Queen's first minister uses that technique. This is what the issue is here today, Mr. Speaker—and my time goes on.

I should like, if I may, to read an article which appeared on March 8 in many papers across Canada. It is written by a gentleman named Douglas Fisher who was in this house. This article disturbed me at the time and I have questioned this ex-N.D.P. member closely about the article. The article has been challenged but no action has been taken on this challenge. I ask all members who are not committed to a fixed course of action to read what one of our ex-members said. Before going into that article, I have been rereading what was quoted by the member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) about what the member for Port Arthur said on March 4, 1965 when he asked the speaker for a ruling on this question of private members, on the government side, posing questions which indicated extremely clearly that they had access to documents only available to ministers. I could duplicate, for example, the question which he used with other samples, because I noticed, as an ex-minister, certain questions going on the order paper which could only come from the files of ministers. At this time the member for Port Arthur asked the Speaker this, as reported at page 11963 of Hansard, March 4, 1965:

I think all members of parliament, whether government or opposition, only ask for a fair chance. After consultation with your officials, Mr. Speaker, who deal with the order paper and questions of procedure, I now put before you for your advice the question whether there is a clear cut case here of collusion of the kind that would attack the traditional parliamentary rights of members of parliament.

This point of privilege raised by the member for Port Arthur was followed by the member for Winnipeg South Centre who goes on to say this at page 11964 of Hansard, March 4, 1965:

But the problem raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur is much wider than that. Surely it is no function of the Speaker to ascertain whether or not access to files has been made available to private members of the house. I do not know what sort of investigation Mr. Speaker could carry on in that regard. If I understood the accusation of the hon. member for Port Arthur, it was based more on that ground rather than simply the technical arrangement of questions on the order paper.

Then the member for Winnipeg South Centre went on to say that he would like to move a motion, and there were other parts of the debate which I have a feeling will be referred to before this debate is over. So here we have, on March 4, 1965, a member of this house, who I think we will all agree has been very interested in the institution of parliament, questioning a practice that was becoming self-evident.

Now almost a year to the day later the same member of parliament, who is no longer with us, publishes an article of which I am going to read a part.

Mr. Lewis: He is fully alive.

Mr. Hamilton: When I say he is no longer with us I mean on the floor of this house.

Mr. Fisher's article appears in the Toronto Telegram of Tuesday, March 8, 1966 and reads:

At first blush, the manner in which Justice Minister Cardin dropped the Monsignor case into the house record made it seem almost accidental. The mistaken spelling or pronunciation, Munzinger for Monsignor, supports this. But it could not have been that casual.

Before Mr. Cardin spoke, Mr. Diefenbaker had said during remarks on the Spencer case" . . . . the time has come for a full and complete investigation. I want to go back; I want to cover the period from 1944 onward."

Remember that this was early Friday afternoon before we had any threat about the Monsignor case from Mr. Cardin. Shortly after saying this, Mr. Diefenbaker remarked: "Let us assure that our security shall be preserved. Let us go into the matter. Why do you not do it? Don't go around telling members of the press gallery: 'If we were to tell what we know, we would be devastating.' I say to you, let us bring out the facts. Establish a royal commission. I want to go back to 1944-45 to see whether our security is what it should be."

So the press gallery had been told something. What was it?

It won't surprise anyone that members of the press are always being given tips and leads, especially by a politician or worker for one party about another.

The hon. member who has made an interjection should remember that one of his predecessors sitting in his seat was in very serious trouble and is now out of this house.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes to threaten me, let him deal with facts.

Mr. Hamilton: I believe, Mr. Speaker, we need only to regard where this comes from and let it pass.

Let me go on to quote again from Mr. Fisher's article, where he says:

In this sense the reporter becomes the broker or agent for the interest that gave him his lead. Of course, he is not consciously such an agent because his main concern is to dig out a story for the public.

I am new enough around the press gallery to have a strong curiosity about how the news process works. I notice the people who are not reporters who drop into the gallery room—the MP's, the executive assistants, and the public relations men.

Several weeks ago it struck me that one chap, medium sized, glasses, rather scholarly, seemed to drift through the quarters a lot.

He was a familiar face around the buildings but I had never placed him directly. I asked a colleague who he was and the answer was that he was a former executive assistant to George McIlraith, Minister of Public Works. His name was Hugh Lawford. He is now attached to the Privy Council office and working around the Prime Minister's office.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Stewart: May I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker? I should like to know if the hon. member is assuming responsibility for the accuracy of the information he is putting before the house.

Mr. Hamilton: I think the necessary action can be taken if this is inaccurate, as the hon. member knows.

Mr. Teillet: The hon. member was making certain assertions a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, with regard to me. I should like him to specify those.

Mr. Hamilton: I think the success of my remarks is self-evident.

Mr. Teillet: That is no answer.

Mr. Hamilton: I want to go on and quote.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Teillet: If you have any accusations to make, make them.

Mr. Stewart: Is the hon. gentleman assuming responsibility for the accuracy of the statements he is putting on the record? This is the rule of the house, as we all know.

Mr. Greene: And stake his seat on it.

Mr. Hamilton: I do not know why hon. members are objecting. I am reading an article which is available to everyone and if the actions that they want to take are not taken we can only assume the statements are accurate.

Mr. Stewart: The authority of the information is very important.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): If the hon. member for Qu'Appelle reads an article contained in a newspaper, he is also assuming responsibility for the accuracy of these different points that have been put forward in the article.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, provided he will read the article and leave out the asides he is making, then we will accept that.

Mr. Nielsen: You put in the asides.

Mr. Hamilton: I will be glad to accept that admonition. I will have no more asides if the minister will keep quiet. I continue to quote:

I asked whether Mr. Lawford was a party worker and the answer was not clear. Mr. Lawford had been on the staff of Queen's University. His training was in law, and he was much interested in the parliamentary process. Innocent enough. I asked what brought him to the gallery so often. Did he have some friendship or association with some reporter? The person I questioned wasn't sure. He hadn't thought about it before but it was true that Mr. Lawford was drifting around on many occasions during the day and evening.

About this time the prospect of a storm over affairs in the Department of Justice was developing. Erik Nielsen had said that he would be naming names on bankruptcy matters and the Spencer case was becoming more and more of an issue. I began to hear the odd hint that the government wasn't worried about Nielsen and any of his charges; that the government had some juicy items of its own about the Diefenbaker administration and that some truly exciting revelations were in store.

Naturally I was all ears and I am sure the same attitude prevailed among most newspapermen. Now this kind of hint was not new. It had been dropped repeatedly at the time of the Rivard brouhaha. In fact, some of the ugliest stories I have ever heard were running below the surface at that time, involving members of all parties. Stories to make the seamy ones in Arthur Hailey's In High Places seem tame.

I remember that I wrote a column at the time which tried to make the point that morally the federal politicians were as good or better than the people they represented.

In tracing these hints to a source I found that most of them seemed to lead to Mr. Lawford. It seemed that in his excursions through the gallery a few reporters were told that they could expect or might get some real sensations very soon, that the government had more than enough to put the Tories in their place. Of course, these hints got back to Mr. Diefenbaker. That's what he was referring to with his sentence: "Don't go around telling members of the press gallery: 'If we were to tell what we know, we would be devastating'."

When Mr. Cardin dropped his Monsignor reference, the cat was out of the bag. The reporters or some of them had been given just enough information to have the most lurid outline for a breaking story. Thus the first line of one reporter's story . . . "The photograph shows a voluptuous blonde, nude, lying in bed with a man. Ordinarily, it might be just another smutty picture. But the woman is Olga Munzinger, an East German, who was considered a security risk by the R.C.M.P. and the man was a minister in the Diefenbaker government in 1961."

Now, this reporter was not around Ottawa in 1961. He is not an old hand in Ottawa. His information was a tip from someone in the government. I have to conclude that it was given him deliberately as part of a plan, that Mr. Lawford was the source or one of the sources for it.

Mr. Teillet: May we know who the hon. gentleman is quoting now? Will you let us know whom you are quoting now?

Mr. Nielsen: Lawford.

Mr. Hamilton: I know you cannot protect me from this type of thing, Mr. Speaker. I promised I would not interrupt my reading if the minister would keep quiet.

Mr. Teillet: I should like to know from whom he is quoting now.

Mr. Hamilton: I am quoting now from a reporter by the name of Douglas Fisher who is quoting from a newspaper known as the Toronto Star.

Nr. Nielsen: Not always friendly to this side.

Mr. Hamilton: I continue to quote:

Since Mr. Lawford is working out of the P.M.'s office and is a contract employee with the responsibility of advising the government on problems of parliamentary procedure (that is, he is not a petty clerk) it seems clear that the Munzinger revelations are part of a calculated government plan to shift attention to the behaviour of the Diefenbaker government.

Morality in Government

It seems a queer thing, an odd plan, perhaps a stupid plan. But it is obviously a plan that the government has gone into with deliberation and with the approval of the Prime Minister. As might be expected, much more than the Munzinger case will now be heard.

I read this article into the record, Mr. Speaker, because it bears out something that I feel we have been a little slow on this side to grasp, namely, the appearance of statements in 1962 read this afternoon to the effect that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), now Prime Minister, in several places announced that under no circumstances would anything happen in the house until the government of the day was defeated. These headlines went all across Canada. This policy of destruction of government at any cost to parliament or the members of this house was started on that occasion. I cannot divulge any part of what I know for the simple reason that I have to hold myself to my oath as a privy councillor and to the level of ethics to which I personally adhere.

I want to ask the members of the Social Credit party now about a pledge they made to the people during the last election campaign to the effect they would support the government except on matters of corruption or doubtful action. This was the pledge which I am sure was made with all sincerity. I have fought the Social Credit party just as I have fought the Liberals and the N.D.P. On an issue such as this, I have a right to ask the Social Credit members where they stand. Will they come with us in a clearcut expression of opinion that no one, the monarch or the first spokesman of the monarch, has the right to apply police state principles to the members of this house.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I remind our friends in the Créditiste party that in the election in 1963 they had a man by the name of Dupuis flung at them. He had instructions to get the Créditistes. He was sent out to follow every member of the Créditiste party and overwhelm them with the thunder of his voice, and make charges against them. Is this not true? It is true. This man came into the house and was rewarded with a position in the cabinet by the present Prime Minister. Even after the government of the day knew of the allegations made against him by the Quebec government, that member stayed in the house and in the cabinet.

I think the Créditistes know that if they want the right as individual members of parliament or collectively as a party to survive, they have to expect that with Dupuis out of the way someone else will take his place.We hear rumours and rumbles of this tonight. I have to ask members of parliament, both individually and as members of a party, where they stand on this issue of using the police for a purpose for which they were never intended, namely, to threaten and to restrict the freedom of the individual members of the house.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, there may be many members of the Liberal party across this country who remember the principles of Liberalism, who remember the long struggles over hundreds of years to build up the freedom of individuals in this country and in our parliamentary structure. The many Liberals who have shared these principles with many others will remember that their loyalty to them is greater than that party devotion which they have had drilled into them in the last 50 years or so.

Therefore, I ask some of the members across the floor tonight to think very long and hard before they make their decision on this matter. If the government goes down to defeat tomorrow night they will lose a Prime Minister and a leader. But this house must show where it stands. Should a Prime Minister or should anybody call on the police force of our country to look into the private behavour of all M.P.'s for the last ten years so as to find whether there are any scandalous actions which can be used as a threat, to be held over their heads—as the headlines point out—for 16 months? I hope the principles to which I referred will force many members, individually and collectively, to stand up and be counted tomorrow as Liberals of this house who believe in Liberalism, not the Liberal party. Let them be counted with those of us who fight on this issue of the preservation of the rights of individuals in this house to freedom from fear of a police state.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the hon. gentleman who has just finished speaking? We have heard a great deal tonight about the dangers of general allegations. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he is accepting responsibility for the accuracy of the article, allegedly written by Mr. Douglas Fisher, upon which he relied so fully in the argument he has developed in the house tonight.

Second, I should like to ask the hon. member whether he knows that these allegations were categorically denied by the gentleman mentioned, namely Mr. Hugh Lawford, in the next day's issue of the Ottawa Citizen.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned when I started to read the article of Douglas Fisher that I knew that the article had been objected to by the person mentioned, Mr. Lawford. I also went on to say that no action had been forthcoming. I simply say that in the refutation of this article by Mr. Lawford he threatened to sue, and I am waiting for the suit to start.

Mr. Stewart: May I ask another question. May I ask the hon. member if the mere fact that a person does not persist in an action in the courts is to be taken as conclusive evidence of the accuracy of allegations against which the person objected?

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I want to state my conviction so that there is no misunderstanding. I have been in this house for nine years. During that time, specifically in the last two or three years, I know that rumours have been floating around this place the like of which I have not known before. When this case of which we cannot talk developed, things appeared in the papers which turned out to be untrue. Now, somebody must have started these rumours, and I put Mr. Douglas Fisher's opinion as to who one of the sources was on the record.

What I have to say now is very blunt and to the point. What the hon. member is saying in his question is that I am trying to nit-pick; that I am accepting responsibility for every word written by Douglas Fisher. He is completely missing my main plea. Certainly somebody was spreading these rumours; they did not get abroad by accident. I heard them myself and from Liberal M.P.'s, but I will not stoop so low as to mention any names. I simply ask where these rumours started from. I quoted one source, and I am now wondering why we are so naïve in not realizing the tremendous public relations effort put in by the government in 1963 in lieu of policies. They are trying to do this by means of a type of public relations smear and scandal campaign, which must stop if we are to exist as a parliament.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, having listened earlier this evening to the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and comparing it to the speech just made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), I am sure the people in the galleries will all know just how sick parliament has become. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle saw fit to attack this person named Hugh Lawford for about ten minutes in what was to me the most puzzling speech of the day, because I do not know what purpose it served. Nevertheless it seemed to me both despicable and cowardly for a member of parliament to stand in this house and attack a civil servant, whose only recourse is to sit silently in the galleries and listen to the hon. member read what is nothing more than gossip, inference and slander.

I have been a member of this house for four years. Like most new members, when I first came here I had no fear or hesitation about standing up in the House of Commons and issuing what I thought, in my humble way, was a belligerent and vicious attack. In those days I viewed every member outside the Liberal party as an enemy.

Since then, Mr. Speaker, I like to think that I have matured a little. In the four years I have been here I have come to know most members of this house, regardless of party, by their first names. It is no secret that after hours I have had the chance to fraternize with most members—Créditistes, Socialists, Conservatives. I can say without fear of contradition that individually I do not know a nicer group of people.

I sit in this house, Mr. Speaker, day in and day out, rarely participating in debates, though at times when I do it may be in a belligerent manner, but I am puzzled and wonder why this House of Commons has deteriorated to such a state that the Munsinger affair could become a reality. I wonder why we are discussing an amendment reflecting upon the integrity of a man who has yet to have an opportunity to defend himself. I refer to our Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), who is ill.

It seems to me that the question raised today on the supply motion should have waited until the Prime Minister was present in this house. I think the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather), in introducing the amendment, did so in a very reasonable manner, as is his custom. He is worried, as am I, about the freedom of individuals both inside and outside parliament. I think that all hon. members on this side of the house share to a certain extent misgivings as to what is taking place.

When I listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) tonight make what I thought was a reasonable plea to all members of the house, that perhaps the time had come for us to get back to discussing issues rather than personalities, I thought that perhaps his reasoned approach to the debate at hand might have had some influence on the tone of debate.

Mr. Speaker, this is why in a moment of anger I began my speech by expressing my opinion about the remarks made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). What I then expressed is still my opinion. However, I think the speeches today as well as many of the speeches made on the estimates of the Department of Justice reflect growing misgivings by members on all sides of the house at this insidious attitude creeping into the house, because it is a dangerous attitude, and is one with which nobody seems to be happy.

We should once and for all rid the House of Commons of this type of atmosphere of which no member that I know feels happy. None of us, Mr. Speaker, who go home on the week end go home without feeling a certain amount of relief at getting out of this atmosphere. None of us know from what corner of the house the next ill-founded charge will be levelled at some surprised, inoffensive member of the house. I say that sincerely, because such a charge could come from this side of the house as well as from the other side. It simply amazes me, knowing most people here individually, that collectively we have created the atmosphere which has led to this sorry state of affairs. When hon. members stand up and say that people on the street today are taking a second look at parliament and asking what is happening, I think it is time that we realized that we are embarked on a course of self-destruction.

Members on both sides of this house, and of course I speak for myself also, have not come here for monetary gain. They have come here because they really feel that in this the highest court of the land they may have an opportunity, perhaps once in a lifetime, of doing something for their fellow Canadians in some field or another.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to cure the present attitude in the house we should review what has led up to it, not for the purpose of dishing out blame to any individual member or to any parties, or to any segments of parties, but to try to understand what has brought it about.

It would seem to me that some of the older members of the house, and even some hon. members who were here during the last ten or 15 years, can remember a time when they debated political issues, fiercely, and after that walked out of the House of Commons arm in arm. Today it is different. Today you are afraid to speak to a member on the other side of the house because you do not know when that member is going to stand up in the House of Commons and use in debate the confidential remarks you have made to him. That has happened all too frequently. Again, I am not pinpointing any particular individual, but I think all of us know that what I say is accurate and true.

Some people here have said, "Oh, it is because of the Rivard case, and because of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), that we have these troubles". I am looking at the clock, Mr. Speaker. Let me say that I participated in that debate. In fairness to the hon. member for Yukon and to the hon. member who now leads the New Democratic Party, let me express my opinion as a simple backbencher that in that particular debate they were doing what they were sent to parliament to do, which was, as members of the opposition, to make sure that the government of the day or any of its members were not doing things that they were conveniently pushing under the rug.

The Dorion probe came about through the skilful and insistent prodding of the opposition. I think the Dorion probe was a necessity. But somewhere along the line, Mr. Speaker, events occurred that created the atmosphere where this type of inquisition, legal or otherwise, continued. Again I am not pointing the finger at any particular individual.

We went through the Dorion probe with all its emotional arguments, and tomorrow when I resume debate I mean to read my remarks made at the time, which were very short and inconsequential, but which expressed at that time how I felt about the House of Commons and how I still feel about it. We went from the Dorion probe to the discussion of the furniture scandals. Tonight an hon. member of this house lies on his deathbed in the hospital with a heart attack. He is a man in his forties. His family well know that what brought on the heart attack were the charges that the newspapers of this country laid at his doorstep, when they connected him with the furniture deals. I predicted this precisely in 1964. Let me repeat now what I said then. I said, "What, in the House of Commons, do we do to protect the innocent in our zeal to get at the guilty."

The furniture dealings ruined the careers of two hon. members. The contribution of one of them to the Canada Council has never been fully realized in this county. The other hon. member is a good man who came here, as you and I and as the rest of us have come here, in the interests of the country. His career has been ruined.

An hon. Member: He resigned.

Mr. Mackasey: He was completely exonerated. I thought everybody knew this. His name came into the Dorion case, and I am not blaming anybody for that. His name was dragged into that probe as part of the evidence, as part of the inferences drawn, as part of skilful manoeuvrings. I did ask at the time who would protect him if he was found innocent of wrongdoing, as indeed he was. I think it is a great shame, when the Dorion report was tabled, that the house did not officially apologize to that man who was completely exonerated by a judge.

When we finished with the furniture deals, Mr. Speaker, was that the end of the disturbing atmosphere in this house? No. It was only the beginning of an attitude and of an atmosphere that is leading to the self-destruction of all parties of the house, because shortly after that we embarked on an election campaign. The tenor of the election campaign unfortunately was set by the tone of the house when it dissolved.

Therefore, as though it were smoke coming out of a bottle, that spirit of belligerence and hostility which marked the Dorion debate, which marked the debate on the furniture business, came into the question period, and carried on into election time.

I have a file here. I will read a few comments from it into the record tomorrow. These are headlines that made news across Canada. I would ask the older members of the house, from the New Democratic Party, from the Liberal party, or from the front bench of the Conservative party to compare these headlines with the types of headlines that you traditionally see in the heat of an election campaign, either out west, in the east or in central Canada. We all expect a little freedom, a little licence and a little irresponsibility in an election campaign. But how irresponsible do you get? Take the Toronto Star for instance—

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS—INQUIRY AS TO PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on December 20, 1963, two and a half years ago, the committee on privileges and elections under the chairmanship of the hon. gentleman who is now the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) considered the Canada Elections Act, but did not complete its studies at that time. In its final report to the house the committee unanimously recommended, and I quote from the Journals of that year, at page 765:

> —that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be empowered to study the Canada Elections Act, at the earliest possible date next session with a view to affording this committee an opportunity for exhaustive and constructive examination and study of the said act.

That was in 1963. Even though the Prime Minister has been asked on a number of occasions since that time to carry out the wishes recommended unanimously by that committee, he has failed to carry out those legitimate requests and has denied the committee the opportunity to study fully and completely the Canada Elections Act, as has been the practice for quite a number of years.

Some two months ago I moved that the committee report to the house, and that the Canada Elections Act be referred to it for study. That motion of mine was carried unanimously in the committee. There was not a whisper of objection to the idea that we should complete the examination begun in 1963.

We waited in vain for the committee to report. The chairman, the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. McWilliam) who is not here this evening, said in answer to one question of mine that someone had objected to the proceedings of the committee. But this was a unanimous decision. So we must ask ourselves: Who objected, and for what reason?

The only conclusion one can reach is that one of the close supporters of the government objected to this procedure because it ran counter to the desire of the Prime Minister and his colleagues not to have the Canada Elections Act looked into.

This was primarily because the committee at one stage in 1963 passed a resolution that the age of voting be reduced from 21 years to 18 years. After that decision was made I heard, quietly and privately, many Liberals saying that they wished they had not supported the resolution because it was an embarrassing thing in the province of Quebec, because the most notable radicals in the separatist movement were in the 18 and 19 year age group, and they did not want to be tarred with that sort of distasteful brushing.

I submit that it is for that reason the government has refused to carry out the unanimous recommendation of the Privileges and Elections Committee of 1963, that the government has interfered with the privileges of the committee, and did it by having the committee stymied through the chairman. I submit that this has been an unwarranted intrusion into the affairs of the committee.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, March 1, 1966, at the organization meeting of the Committee on Privileges and Elections a motion was made, as stated by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), in substantially these words, "that the Canada Elections Act be referred to the committee for study, examination and report." The motion was accepted by the committee. However, I am told that a point was raised at that time that the committee acted beyond its terms of reference because a study of the Elections Act was not referred to the committee.

Mr. Howard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is not correct to say that an objection was raised at that time because it was not.

Mr. Béchard: Well, I am told by the chairman of the committee that it was raised, due to the fact that the act was not referred to the committee by the house. The chairman of the committee then requested opinions on the matter, not from the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) or the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), but from the Clerk of the House, the parliamentary counsel and the chief of the committees branch. These three officials stated in writing to the chairman that the committee acted beyond its terms of reference.

Since then the chairman of the committee has requested space for the accommodation of another meeting, at which time the opinion of the officers of the house will be brought before members of the committee for consideration and action. I must state that there was no interference by the Prime Minister, the government, or any member of the government.

[Mr. Howard.]

PUBLIC SERVICE—SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last, as reported at page 4424 of Hansard, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) a question concerning retired civil servants. My question was put in these words:

> In view of the fact that the government has on the order paper a notice of intention to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act, including the making of amendments of a general character, may I ask whether this will include an amendment to increase the pensions of civil servants already retired?

The Prime Minister's reply was very brief. He simply said:

> No, Mr. Speaker.

I then put a supplementary question, to which the Prime Minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, this matter is being brought to our attention, as my hon. friend knows, not only by him but by those directly concerned, and it is under continuous consideration. There is no intention to change the position at this time.

I find that answer very disappointing, if not somewhat confusing. We are told by the Prime Minister that the matter is under continuous consideration but that there is no intention to change the position at this time.

The basis of my question last Thursday was a resolution, which is order No. 51 on the order paper, which forecasts legislation dealing with a number of pension statutes. It is obvious from the resolution that the main purpose of the legislation will be to provide integration between a number of pension plans and the Canada Pension Plan. However, at the end of the resolution, the Public Service Superannuation Act having been mentioned, there is this phrase:

> —and to make amendments of a general nature in connection with the administration of those acts—

Therefore it was my contention that since legislation is to be brought before the house at this session, amending the Public Service Superannuation Act, and if the amendments to be presented at that time include amendments of a general character, then that would be an excellent opportunity to deal with this tremendously important question of raising the pensions of retired civil servants.

I know the answers to this question. I have had them given to me a good many times. They shift a bit. Sometimes it is a case of waiting for the Canada Pension Plan. Sometimes it is a case of waiting for review of the Old Age Security Act. Sometimes it is a case of waiting for the Canada Assistance Plan, and sometimes it is just wait. This is what the retired civil servants have been doing—waiting, waiting, waiting across the years.

Of course the argument is put forward that the pensions these people get are the result of a contractual arrangement and that it is unusual to escalate pensions after they have been put in pay. But that argument does not hold any more, because the government has provided for escalation of pensions under the Old Age Security Act and under the Canada Pension Plan. That the government has put this piece of escalation into effect is a recognition of the fact that we are going to have to get over the notion that pensions, once fixed, are good for all time.

The cost of living keeps changing; the standard of living keeps changing; prices go up; wages and salaries go up. The thought that retired people from age 60 or 65 for the rest of their years must never have an increase in the pension awarded to them is completely out of date. Surely the body which ought to start doing something about this is the federal government. Information has been placed on the record many times, certainly at least once a year in the time I have been here, concerning the pensions which our retired civil servants receive. There are far too many cases where they are low. The argument today to the effect that perhaps some of them have something else in addition to their pension has nothing to do with the case. It is our business to be a good employer, and just as some other employers have made adjustments to pensions after they have been put in pay, I say this should be done for the retired civil servants. It was done once; it was done by the Conservative government in 1960 or 1961 and there is no reason that it cannot be done again.

I say that the answer of the Prime Minister, that this matter is under continuous consideration, is not good enough. If the answer tonight still is no, the parliamentary secretary might as well stay in his seat. I hope he will indicate instead that the kind of study which is being given to this matter is the kind which will see action taken on this important question of increased pensions for retired civil servants at this session of parliament.

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, of course I have not much to add to the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

I think we gave an adequate answer to that question on January 25, 1966, when the hon. member raised it in the house.

I know that he is very much interested in pensions for all Canadian citizens and, as we said in our reply of January 25, 1966, we are also very much concerned by the situation of pensioners.

However, the government has decided that the matter of pensions for civil servants would be studied in the general context of the pension plan for all the citizens of Canada, and that policy has not changed since then.

The hon. member has only to read the answer given on January 25, 1966, on the same subject.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING DATE AND AGENDA

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, members have been inquiring about the dates and the agenda of the federal-provincial conference to be held in Victoria as part of the commemoration of the centenary of the union of Vancouver Island and British Columbia.

I should now like to advise the house that the conference will open on Thursday, June 16 and continue on June 17, and if necessary on June 18. The conference was originally scheduled for the first week in June. It subsequently became evident, however, that the dates suggested were not in fact convenient to all governments concerned, principally because of provincial elections. The proposed new dates have been established in consultation with Premier Bennett and have been accepted by all the other provinces.

The main item of business on the agenda will be the question of federal assistance to university education. I hope to be able tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, to table copies of the correspondence exchanged with the provinces regarding this conference.

HOUSING

STATEMENT RESPECTING REPORTED SHORTAGE OF MORTGAGE MONEY

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement on a matter that has precipitated a number of questions and observations in the house during recent weeks, and to which the government has given most earnest and continuous attention. I refer to the difficulty being experienced by Canada's house building industry in obtaining an adequate volume of mortgage funds.

It is now apparent that the flow of institutional mortgage investment has declined sharply, yet a substantial demand for new housing exists. This demand is more acute in some designated areas, in new resource-based communities and certain other areas. To assist in some measure in relieving this situation, and in an effort to ensure that the most urgent needs are met, the government has determined upon the following action.

As I have affirmed on more than one occasion, the government is taking, and will continue to take every step necessary to ensure a program of direct mortgage loans by Central Mortgage and Housing at the same level as that of last year when, including the fall program, loans for approximately 31,500 houses were approved. This will ensure a minimum house building program in 1966 within approximately 15 per cent of the 1965 total.

Having given this assurance, Mr. Speaker, I should also like to make it clear that it is not the intention of the government to make up all the deficiency which has arisen in the supply of mortgage funds. The amounts involved in this announcement here are approximately $450 million. I might say it is my own personal view that, since merchant builders are building with the hope of profit, they should intensify, they must intensify if they need help, their search for other sources of mortgage moneys. They cannot expect the government completely to solve such problems for them.

In view of recent developments, including the budget, one thing is certain, Mr. Speaker. The government does not propose to finance a program of model homes this summer with direct speculative loans made by a government agency. Such a program would be directly contrary to the government's objectives in restraining the level of construction.

I wish to conclude this short statement, Mr. Speaker, by reiterating a further assurance that I and other spokesmen for the government have given on many occasions, namely that there will be no diminution of the funds made available by the government to assist in meeting the housing needs of lower income and elderly persons and families in Canada. Funds have been provided to support programs of public housing and projects for elderly persons to the full extent of the demand for such worthy endeavours.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have asked a number of questions about this matter. I know hon. members in all parts of the house, including the Prime Minister, have been receiving strong protests from, I think, every province in this country regarding the serious situation resulting from the action of this government with respect to housing loans. It is a very serious matter and one that affects Canadians as a whole.

The minister has endeavoured to sweeten the pill by the words he added at the end of his remarks, to the effect that there would be no diminution in the funds made available by the government to assist meeting the housing need of lower income and elderly persons.

However, this announcement today seems to be a modern exemplification of the old adage that the mountain in labour brought forth a mouse. I underline that fact that it was not a house. All we have is a generalization that does not meet the situation in any way and which will result in widespread disappointment.

Today I received a copy of a telegram sent to the Prime Minister which summarizes the situation. I am not going to read it all. It is from the president of the National House Builders Association, and it states:

> Reports received today from member associations indicate further disruption and curtailment of employment due to lack of mortgage funds. Examples Winnipeg quote layoffs by quality builders 120 shop labour. Other typical layoffs 30, 35 and 15 respectively. Lakehead quote six builders report reductions in carpenter and labour force from 322 total to 57. Victoria quote 75 carpenters unemployed as compared to 14 this time last year. Calgary quote most home builders laid off approximately 10 per cent trades. About 75 per cent will have to be laid off in approximately 1½ months. Ottawa quote Ottawa builders alarmed over prospects for next three month period. Montreal quote curtailment in excess of 70 per cent. Hamilton quote survey of eight builder firms indicate average layoffs of 38 men per firm—

What has happened is that the government refuses to act. Interest rates have climbed to inordinate levels. Eight per cent is the rate that is being charged in many places if there is to be any borrowing at all. Altogether this is a most disillusioning and disheartening statement. It does not indicate the serious concern the government ought to have given to this question.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, in commenting on the statement of the minister I would certainly echo some of the words of the leader of the official opposition. To say that this statement is a disappointment is putting it mildly. I cannot really believe that the approach it indicates represents the thinking of the minister himself who, I had felt, was far more cognizant of the building industry in Canada and who understood its problems far better than this statement would indicate.

Let there be no misunderstanding about it; this is merely a statement by the government to the effect that last year's program will be repeated. Indeed, the total program will be approximately 15 per cent or more below that. It seems to me fatuous to suggest to builders that the government does not intend to take any real responsibility for the shortage of money, and to tell the builders that they should intensify their search for other sources of mortgage funds.

The minister is well aware that it is the government which sets the N.H.A. interest rate. Now he intends to dispose of any responsibility for seeing that mortgage funds are available at the interest rate which the government itself has set. There are simply no other sources of funds to which to turn. Builders under the N.H.A. are sitting with four, five or six refusal letters in front of them from the insurance companies stating they simply will not lend any further this year. It is silly to suggest that builders should keep looking when there is no where to look.

The fact of the matter is that because of the limited rate—and I am not suggesting it should be raised—N.H.A. institutions are simply out for the rest of the year. The sources which have funds are going to lend where they can make the most money, and no one will blame them for it. But there is a duty on the government which sets this rate to see that the National Housing Act functions. The government has, in effect, already set aside the recommendation of its own Economic Council which calls for a continuing rise in the number of housing units being constructed.

So this announcement, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, means nothing. It will do nothing to correct the shortage of housing. In effect it underlines the truth of something the opposition has been saying for the last three or four years, that this government has no housing policy. We have no idea of its aims in this field, or of the amount of housing Canada needs, or where it is to be located or how people can afford to pay for it, or where the necessary finance will be obtained. Housing is treated merely as a tap to be turned on and off for the purpose of producing employment or economic expansion. There are no goals. There are no objectives. There is no housing program under this government.

But maybe it does not matter that a lot of our people are inadequately housed or lacking proper facilities. I suppose the really important thing is to get back to the basic national objective of this parliament; back to the spies charging each other, the character assassinations and the old personal feuds and vendettas.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, at the end of September 1965, the Department of Trade and Commerce issued a press release in Ottawa announcing that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation had decided to finance a housing project in Great Britain. It was announced that over a hundred houses would be built in Great Britain and financed by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation of Canada.

Today, it is announced that Central Mortgage and Housing have no more money to lend to Canadians. In Great Britain, everything is fine, but restrictions are being applied in Canada. Furthermore, the minister says that the house builders should not expect the government to solve their problems for them. But the problems have been brought about by the government. The government placed an 11 per cent tax on building materials. The government have brought on the problems now facing the building industry.

After the government have created problems, they wash their hands of them. They say they will not solve "your problems" and the minister adds that such a program would go directly against the government's objectives—I repeat "would go against the government's objectives in restraining the level of construction." The government's objectives are to restrain the level of construction.

We are told that Canada is a progressive country, a developing country; we are told that the future belongs to Canada and to Canadians but, on the other hand, we are told that one of the objectives of the government is to restrain the level of construction. To what purpose? To prevent progress in Canada. If the country is developing, why are efforts being made to halt this development?

The government cannot be censured too much for seeking to restrain construction in a country as young and as wealthy as ours. No, the government will never be blamed as much as they deserve for that. Besides, it is an inevitable result of the last budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) who prefers to restrain the economy of the country rather than to progress along with it.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, within the framework of what has been stated government policy I suppose the statement that has just been given to us by the Minister of Labour offers some little hope; but I must reiterate what has already been said, that it certainly is not adequate to meet the needs of the country. It is quite contrary to the recommendations of the Economic Council, which stated that the number of housing units should continue to increase not only to meet the needs of the economy but also to meet the needs for housing.

The very acute situation that exists in Canada, more so in some parts of the country than in others, so far as the shortage of mortgage money is concerned, does not arise because there is not a sufficient money supply. It is simply because of government policy. It is government policy today that is creating the shortage of funds.

We agree with the Minister of Labour that at this time it is not the government's responsibility to supply money for speculative capital, but the fact is that the private source of capital is not there any more, the money just is not available. It is for that reason that this sector of the house building industry is not going forward as in previous years.

The minister's statement is entirely inadequate to meet the needs of the country with respect to assistance from the government. There is not only the need for the provision of more direct money, but because of the complete inability of the private sector to supply building funds, interest rates, where private money is available, are now more than 8 per cent. According to reports the other day the cost of a $13,000 home has risen to $15,000. This is the kind of difficulty which the house building industry and the home builder face.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, though we can say we are grateful for small mercies, government policy which has given rise to this situation should be corrected.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

MOTIONS FOR CONCURRENCE IN REPORTS

On the order:

Mr. Cameron (High Park) (chairman of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs):

That the first report of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, presented to the house on Tuesday, April 26, 1966, be now concurred in.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I ask that the motion standing in my name be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On the order:

Mr. Hales (chairman of the standing committee on public accounts):

That the first report of the standing committee on public accounts, presented to the house on Wednesday, April 27, 1966, be now concurred in.

That the second report of the standing committee on public accounts, presented to the house on Wednesday, April 27, 1966, be now concurred in.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, because of the time allotted to the supply motion I would ask that the two motions in my name be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACTIVITIES IN CANADA OF U.S. INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has to do with one Eerik Heine, a Canadian citizen regarding whom libelous statements have allegedly been made by the C.I.A., the central intelligence agency of the United States, and disseminated throughout Canada to Estonian groups. These statements were to the effect that Heine was or is a communist agent.

I should like to ask the minister whether the Canadian government has sought information or made representations to the government of the United States regarding C.I.A. activities among immigrant groups in Canada; are such activities being carried on and, if so, are they being carried on with the cooperation and consent or permission of the government of Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this matter is being discussed with the government of the United States, and until those discussions have been completed I would prefer to withhold my reply.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN ATTITUDE TOWARD ADMISSION OF MAINLAND CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of his message to the world veterans federation urging that there be universal membership for the United Nations, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether this means that the Canadian government will instruct its delegation to the United Nations to support the admission of mainland China.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it always has been the position of the Canadian government that the membership of the United Nations should be universal, and that there are disputes, and will be disputes, in the world which cannot be resolved or even assisted by the United this ideal soon will be realized, but there are not members of the United Nations. We hope this ideal soon will be realized, but there are certain conditions which have to be fulfilled before the membership of any particular country can be approved in the United Nations. I am thinking now of the government at Peking, and I understand discussions are going on at the moment with a view to that matter being considered at the next meeting of the assembly. I cannot add anything other than that statement.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Since this matter might be facilitated if Canada followed the example of Great Britain, France and many other countries in establishing diplomatic relations with mainland China, are any steps being taken by the Canadian government at the present time to recognize mainland China and establish diplomatic relations with that country.

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker; I cannot add anything to what has been said previously in respect of the establishment of diplomatic relations by Canada with the government of Peking.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Prime Minister what are the conditions; would he elucidate. I think he has gone a long way further on this occasion than previously. What are the conditions? He mentioned the government at Peking, and I wonder whether he meant the government at Taiwan as being the area regarding which the conditions would be imposed.

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I have gone any further on this occasion than in the past when discussing this matter. One of the conditions for the entry of the Peking government into the United Nations would be the extent of the area covered by the writ of that government as a member of the United Nations, and the undesirability of taking any action which would establish the rule of the government of Peking over the people of Formosa without their consent.

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Is it a fact that Communist China was recently invited by the Canadian government to open a trade mission in Ottawa and what was the reaction of Peking on this matter?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that the question is in order.

[English]

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker; I do not know of any offer of that kind.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: In any event, it seems that an answer has been given to the question, but I do not believe it was in order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EDUCATION

RESPECT FOR PROVINCIAL RIGHTS IN FORTHCOMING DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the Prime Minister announced that the main question to be considered at the federal-provincial conference in June will be assistance to university education, can he assure the house that exclusive provincial jurisdiction over education will be respected at that conference?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker; the constitutional position undoubtedly will be respected.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

In that case, may I ask him what the federal government will be doing at a conference dealing with education.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—ACTIVITIES OF INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of his statement on Saturday night, when he called for a cease fire or a more normal armistice agreement in Viet Nam; in view of the statement by President de Gaulle on Sunday that there was nothing which could be done in Viet Nam at this time, and the statement today by U Thant, the secretary general, that there is nothing the UN can do in respect of the Viet Nam situation, is there any comment from the Prime Minister regarding the statement from Peking that his proposal is nothing more than an American hoax?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member will agree that questions to the Prime Minister or the government asking whether they have any comment to make about a statement which has been made outside the house cannot be asked. The hon. member may wish to rephrase his question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question by asking the Prime Minister whether there has been any further contact with the UN or the international control commission in the efforts of Canada to bring about some kind of solution.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): My statement on Saturday night certainly was not in any sense a United States or Canadian proposal; it was made in the light of the activities that are now going on with respect to a role for the international control commission in bringing about a negotiated settlement, and it was made also in the light of the discussions with the secretary general of the United Nations and others.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the likelihood that the military escalation on both sides in Viet Nam may seriously jeopardize the efforts to which the right hon. gentleman referred a moment ago in respect of the international control commission, would he consider making representations to the administration in the United States to the effect that they reconsider the decision, reported in today's newspapers, to accelerate their military participation in Viet Nam?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in a matter of this sort I think it is dangerous to rely on reports which appear in the newspapers before one has had a proper opportunity to examine their full import. In a matter of this sort I do not think conclusions should be drawn from such stories until there has been the fullest opportunity to examine all the circumstances.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. I did in fact send notice of the question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but this arises out of the questions which have been asked of the Prime Minister. As the hon. member for Red Deer said, the secretary general of the United Nations is reported to have said, after discussions about Viet Nam with General de Gaulle, that for the time being he did not see any possibility of a new initiative on the part of anyone. I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in the light of this report, whether he believes the proposals of the Canadian government to use the international control commission to bring about negotiations to end the conflict in Viet Nam can serve a useful purpose.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this question has been dealt with in part by the Prime Minister. The hon. gentleman will recall that I indicated to the external affairs committee on Thursday last that we did not believe the time was opportune for calling a Geneva conference. I believe that what the secretary general had in mind was mainly related to that, but I can say that the difficult situation attending the possibility of calling such a conference in no way interferes with the Canadian proposal that there is a role for the commission to play in probing and seeking to narrow the differences between both sides. As a matter of fact, as the Prime Minister said, the secretary general strongly concurs with the ideas we have for the role of this commission in the circumstances prior to the calling of a general conference.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am wondering why questions based on the Prime Minister's speech to the world federation of veterans were ruled out of order yesterday, yet are in order today.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CHAIRMAN OF CONCILIATION BOARD IN RAILWAY UNION DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour based on a report that the Canadian brotherhood of railway, transport and general workers has refused to endorse the nominee of the Minister of Labour, Judge Craig Munroe, as chairman of the conciliation board. What is the position now taken? Will the minister insist that Judge Munroe be chairman of that board, or will he submit another name for consideration?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad this question has been asked. There are actually three conciliation boards. The requests from the railways and the unions regarding the chairman of the first two boards both called for Mr. Justice Munroe. It was following those requests that the announcement was made.

In respect of the third dispute, where conciliation has been requested, no approach has been made to Mr. Justice Munroe. Consideration will have to be given to the fact that the parties involved have not been able to agree on a chairman, and the minister will have to accept his responsibility in this regard.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION OVER MANPOWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Is the hon. minister acquainted with the statement made by Premier Jean Lesage to the effect that Quebec intends to exercise sole jurisdiction in manpower matters; is he willing to accept that stand in the formulation of his federal policy on manpower?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have read, like everyone else, a press report and as the matter is most important I shall wait till I have seen the text of Mr. Lesage's statement before making any comment whatsoever.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the hon. minister?

Can he tell us when he intends to study the statement made by the Quebec premier, and when he intends to make his comments on it?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, as soon as I can get a hold of the text and have a chance to read it.

Mr. Grégoire: May I put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order. No. I believe the question the hon. member has just asked was possibly or probably out of order. I do not think it should have been allowed and I would ask the hon. member not to continue with that type of question.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

RECALL OF DEFECTIVE AND UNSAFE AUTOMOBILES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Industry relating to a subject on which he has been keeping the house informed from time to time. Has the minister any further information to give the house about the recall of defective Canadian cars in Canada?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated the other day, the principal motor car manufacturers have been undertaking to recall all motor cars manufactured in Canada with defects, as they are doing in respect of those manufactured in the United States that have defects. If the hon. member would like a rather more detailed report I will be glad to see that one is provided to him.

CHAROLAIS CATTLE—FREEDOM FROM DISEASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture based on a report that the Charolais cattle, which have been quarantined since last autumn, are to be released today to the respective owners across Canada, and that these cattle will be kept in quarantine for an additional 90 days by those owners. Is the minister absolutely certain that these cattle are free of foot-and-mouth disease and that this disease will not be spread to other cattle in Canada as a result of this action at this time?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, these cattle have been under close quarantine at Grosse Ile for the prescribed period of time. Out of the total of 113 head quarantined at Grosse Ile, 109 have been released. Of the others one died, two reacted to T.B. tests and one reacted unfavourably to foot-and-mouth disease testings, but did not have foot-and-mouth disease. These are very stringent tests in regard to this disease and a further period of observation is necessary merely to assure that these very stringent tests are repeated, in order that we may be satisfied that everything is in order.

Mr. Starr: I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that these cattle will be quarantined by the owners, will there be any government supervision and tests made during that period of quarantine, and will the cattle be released when it is absolutely certain they do not have this disease?

Mr. Greene: That is the practice, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Starr: I have a further supplementary question. Can the minister say whether any of these cattle are eventually destined for shipment to the United States?

Mr. Greene: Once the cattle are clear of quarantine, being the property of the purchasers they will be disposed of as the purchasers see fit. If they are admissible to the United States they may be sold there.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister consulted with the United States department of agriculture in order that there will be no repercussions to our exports of Canadian cattle to the United States?

Mr. Greene: We have received no objections from the United States in this regard. I believe that when this program was entered into it was done with consultation with United States authorities.

WATER RESOURCES

NORTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—REQUEST FOR ACTION ON POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since Health Minister Steuart of the province of Saskatchewan said at North Battleford that the serious problem of water pollution in the North Saskatchewan river is the responsibility of the federal government, when may we expect some action from the government on water pollution?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This appears to be a very general question and I do not believe it should be asked at this time.

Mr. Cantelon: With all due respect, sir, this is a matter of some urgency, because unless something is done immediately these people along the North Saskatchewan river will have to drink water throughout next winter which is certainly unfit for human consumption.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would like to debate the matter on the adjournment motion.

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys where the Donald report is.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): It is on its way, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the answer, if the minister gave one.

Mr. Pepin: It is on its way.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CONTROL OF IMPORTATION OF MISLABELLED FOREIGN DRUGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he has an answer now to the question I asked last week.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman asked last week whether checks had been completed concerning the importer of mislabelled drugs, and whether the importer had been delisted as an authorized supplier of drugs to Canada's armed forces.

The answer to the first part of the question is yes. Further checks have been completed, and the department has been advised that the firm in question is no longer in conformity with the Canadian government specifications board standard on the manufacture, control and distribution of drugs for supply to agencies of the government of Canada, including the Department of National Defence.

UNITED NATIONS

SUGGESTED CONTRIBUTION TO CAMPAIGN AGAINST ILLITERACY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, asking him whether the government will give consideration to the implementation of a policy such as that announced by the Shah of Iran under which an amount of money equal to one day's expenditure for defence would be allocated to the United Nations campaign against illiteracy.

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED USE OF DRUG IN SCENE FOR "THIS HOUR HAS SEVEN DAYS"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) brought to the attention of the chamber a rather unhappy story which was headlined in the Toronto Telegram, asking for information. The information I have for him is nothing particularly new, but I thought it should appear on the record after yesterday's query.

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that it has noted the story published in the Toronto Telegram, which contains serious allegations. The matter has been referred to the Department of Justice, and on the advice of the department, because of the reference to the use of drugs, the C.B.C. has asked the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to conduct a full investigation.

I am further advised from sources outside the C.B.C. management that Mr. Leiterman and Miss Fox have instituted action and served notice of libel against the Toronto Telegram in respect of this story.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister, but I heard that release on the radio this morning.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE LOANS TO BE MADE BY CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Minister of Labour a question with reference to his announcement this afternoon. Can we interpret the announcement as meaning that under direct lending the same number of mortgage loans will be available, as distinct from the same amount of money?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): The same number of mortgage loans will be available in order to provide a minimum of 31,500 houses. Apart from the guaranteed loans, these are direct loans.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Does the 31,500 refer to new loans to be made this year?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Nicholson: It refers to direct loans to be made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. In giving out these N.H.A. loans, will areas with outstanding development of extensions, such as university communities, be given special preference?

Mr. Nicholson: Again, Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have this question asked. This does not apply to housing for university areas at all; that is covered by special legislation which was passed in this house in 1964, and the funds were provided in the 1965 amendments. This type of housing, as well as housing for the elderly and lower income people, is in addition to the 31,500 direct loans.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour if the 15 per cent decline which he anticipates is to be in the private mortgage fund area of housing and, if so, whether that 15 per cent decline is based on an estimate after a survey among the insurance companies and lending institutions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubts whether the type of question which is now being asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and other similar questions which have preceded it, should be accepted. It seems to me that if we get in the habit of allowing hon. members to ask a series of questions on announcements made on motions by the ministers, we will have daily debates on these announcements. It seems to me also that the information the hon. member is seeking now is not so urgently required that the question should be allowed at this time.

CANADAIR—PRODUCTION OF NEW VEHICLE FOR ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry.

Could he inform the house concerning a $2.7 million contract awarded to Canadair, in Montreal, to build a new vehicle and could he say whether this vehicle will be used by the Canadian Army.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would like to put his question on the order paper.

Morality in Government

[English]

SUPPLY

The house resumed from Monday, May 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Fairweather.

MORALITY IN GOVERNMENT AND PARLIAMENT—NEED FOR REFORM

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I feel I should begin by expressing my regret at not being here yesterday to listen to the speeches of the mover and seconder of the amendment. I must confess that my regret in that regard has been mitigated somewhat by the opportunity of reading the speeches in Hansard.

I shall do my best, Mr. Speaker, to deal with the facts of the situation which, according to the statements made in the house yesterday, have brought about this amendment. I recognize at once that I am handicapped in approaching this task; I must be handicapped in the eyes of the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) at least because according to him I have now reached my second childhood and should not be talking about things like this especially since, in his elegant words, I am at the moment bug-eyed from reading about sex.

I listened, Mr. Speaker, on Sunday night to the hon. member talk on television about improving the character of politics and the atmosphere of parliament. This is the kind of language about a prime minister in this country, whoever he may be, which, of course, elevates political life in Canada. I warn my hon. friend that if he is not careful he will soon rival the picturesque and at times offensive extravagances of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton).

The mover of this amendment said the institution of parliament is on trial, and he is quite right. It is indeed and in many ways not mentioned by him yesterday. In moving this amendment he was not, of course, dealing with those ways. There is a relation between amendments and these other pressures on parliament which in my view are weakening it as an institution. One of these pressures is our ability to get things done, to adapt our procedures to the requirements, and the struggle in this regard is often referred to as a deterioration of parliamentary action and parliamentary atmosphere, which is not in any sense peculiar to Canada.

All those who have been reading the London Times and other United Kingdom papers in the last week or two will have noted that they have been philosophizing about the opening of parliament in that country after the last election and the work which is before it. They have been expressing doubts about the ability of the mother of parliaments to deal with all the important matters with which it should be dealing. I believe that we can adapt ourselves to these changes, but to do that we have to change ourselves and yet change in a way which will not betray but will retain democratic elective control over the executive and protect always the fundamental rights of the individual against the executive or against anybody or anything else.

I am just as concerned, Mr. Speaker, about the preservation of the rights of parliament and of the individual as any member in this house. I share that concern, I am sure, with all members of this house. The hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) has cited as evidence of his uneasiness, which has resulted in this amendment, certain things that have been going on in a royal commission of inquiry. In producing his amendment and bringing his subject to our attention, he did not wait until that inquiry was completed, until all the evidence was in and the examination of witnesses or re-examination of witnesses was completed. He based his motion on one day's evidence and made statements about that evidence which I consider to be tendentious, and in my view he has drawn some unwarranted conclusions from that evidence.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and his friends, having interpreted this particular piece of evidence as they saw fit and I or any other member of the government having said nothing about it in the house in answer to questions because Mr. Speaker ruled the questions out of order, complain that, in his words, an unnamed spokesman for the government dared to give another interpretation in defence against distortion and misrepresentation of the position as we see it.

The hon. member is concerned, he says, and I know he is because he has given evidence of this over the months and years he has been in political life, about morality in government. So am I, Mr. Speaker, and I think I have shown my concern. I wish the hon. member had been able to postpone his expression of this concern in this particular instance until the evidence was in. The hon.

member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), who seconded the motion, made certain remarks which I am going to quote:

> —I am going to deal with. . . the violation of the rights and privileges of private members in this house.
> I shall tie that into the tactics that have been referred to whereby the R.C.M.P. has been used to investigate the background and past activities of hon. members for the sake of personal persecution, blackmail or for whatever the purpose might be.

This is a statement made by my hon. friend about the R.C.M.P. and its investigations. If this were so, Mr. Speaker, the investigation into this particular case which is before us, the Munsinger case, was conducted not by this government but by one of which he was a member in the course of the legitimate discharge of their responsibilities for security and administering the law but not, I am sure, for the purposes he mentions.

Perhaps my hon. friends could remain quiet for a few moments while I continue my speech. They will have an opportunity to participate.

Mr. Dinsdale: Since the Prime Minister has made remarks with reference to me may I ask, did he or did he not ask the R.C.M.P. for this information?

Mr. Pearson: If my hon. friend will wait he will find out.

Mr. Starr: Yes or no.

Mr. Pearson: He will find out. My hon. friend in his remarks did not say that. He said:

> I shall tie that into the tactics that have been referred to whereby the R.C.M.P. has been used to investigate the background and past activities of hon. members for the sake of personal persecution, blackmail or for whatever the purpose might be.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is what the amendment says.

Mr. Pearson: It does, and I shall deal with it.

Mr. Dinsdale: Don't take my words out of context, as you have done in many instances.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Dinsdale: Don't take my words out of context.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to remind hon. members that the right hon. Prime Minister has the floor and should be allowed to make his statement.

Mr. Pearson: In the case we are considering, what is known as the Munsinger case, the R.C.M.P. were used exclusively in the investigations for the legitimate purpose of security. They had no other purpose in their actions and it would have been intolerable if there had been any other purpose. The operation of the police as a security service has only one purpose, that is, the defence of the country, and any interfering with any person must never go beyond that fundamental purpose, the defense of the country against subversive activities within and from without. These activities have nothing to do with a man's politics or morals or actions except when they are related to this primary security purpose.

I want to say a word now about a question that has been raised, though it was not raised in the debate yesterday but outside the house, about the propriety of the use by one government of reports and information bearing on the operations of a previous government. There are many reports and documents and, indeed, the great majority of reports, documents and records are quite proper to be brought to the attention of a government even if they concern activities during a previous administration. This is done and has been done since confederation as a normal aspect of governmental administration. Administration records, including inquiries and investigations and reports, can be used in this way except, and the exception is a very important one, memoranda to the cabinet, to cabinet committees, and records of discussions of the cabinet or cabinet committees they cannot be properly used. These cabinet papers may not even be seen by the successor government. Letters of understanding to this effect were exchanged when governments changed in Canada in 1957 and again in 1963. Cabinet and cabinet committee material will not be produced for a successor government by the secretary of the cabinet even if, which is inconceivable, a minister or prime minister should ask for it.

Other records are of a different character. In the Munsinger case, for instance, it was quite proper for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in their investigation to secure any immigration records concerning this case that covered the period of the previous Liberal government, and to show them to any minister of the succeeding government, and for that government to use them in the proper way. Such information and reports can be examined in this way, can be used in debate or discussion, even if they concern the actions of a preceding government—if they are of a kind that can be properly used and if they deal with matters pertaining to the current administration. The nature of the information, the nature, not the time covered by it, is a governing consideration.

The orders for the tabling of papers prove this every day in the week in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker. In this session the opposition have demanded not only agreements concluded with other governments, provincial or foreign, but they have asked that discussions and working papers leading up to these negotiations be made public. This is quite a proper use of reports, inquiries, memoranda, files and so on, whatever previous period they cover, if they could properly be used in any period. It is quite proper to ask for and to see reports of police inquiries that have been made.

This is done by every government. It was done by me not very long ago, Mr. Speaker, in the case of Victor Spencer, with the knowledge and approval of the opposition. The reports in this case also covered a period when we were not in office.

Would it not have been perfectly proper for me to have seen these documents even if a member of parliament had been mentioned in them as having intervened? There was no such mention, Mr. Speaker, but if there had been such mention, in my view it would have been perfectly proper for me to examine these documents.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the principles in regard to the use of material of the kind I have been discussing, and I have followed these principles in the situation under consideration to which reference has been made, though it is not specifically referred to, of course, in the amendment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me look at the amendment. It reads as follows:

> This house strongly deplores and condemns this government's actions in having the R.C.M. Police provide information to the government as to the past conduct of all members of parliament generally, a course of action which would destroy the independence of all members and undermine the institution of parliament.

That might well have been the result, Mr. Speaker, if that had been the action which was taken. But the R.C.M.P. were not asked by me or by any one else to provide information to the government as to the past conduct of all members of parliament generally. That would indeed be an indefensible and shocking request which would go against all the rights of parliament and the rights of the individual; it would be a quite improper use by the executive of the powers of the police. But as I say, that request was not made.

Nor would it ever be made, Mr. Speaker, by any government of which I was the head. Our record as a government in defending the rights of parliament and the rights of the individual is a good one, and I do not propose to be apologetic about it any way, shape or form.

Within a few months of taking office, Mr. Speaker, we examined security regulations, the conduct of security investigations and the procedures of security investigations. We examined them and we altered them in the interests of liberalizing—and I use the word with a small "l"—the regulations to bring about greater protection of individual rights.

We are concerned, Mr. Speaker, with parliamentary and individual rights and parliamentary and individual privileges always being respected by government. We have already altered, as I have said, our security procedures to strengthen safeguards. A statement in great detail was made in this regard by the former minister of justice and by myself in this house in 1963. We are now in the process, which I hope will become completed very shortly, of setting up a royal commission to examine into general security procedures, which will include the conduct of inquiries. I think that will be a step forward too.

Now let us look at the particular situation at the end of November, 1964 which, while not specifically mentioned in this amendment, was undoubtedly in the minds of those who moved and seconded the amendment. At that time, Mr. Speaker, I asked for the results of inquiries that had been made. I did not ask, of course, for inquiries to be made. I asked for the results of inquiries that had been made in regard to particular conduct and dealing with particular matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Which ones?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad, if my right hon. friend will contain himself—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to get the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted at my right hon. friend's determination to get the truth, and I think he will get it. As Disraeli once said to an interrupter in the British House of Commons: "Truth travels slowly, my friend, but I think it will reach even you in time".

Mr. Diefenbaker: That quotation has been used over and over again over the years.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps my right hon. friend will just contain himself for a short time and then he will be able to spend the rest of the afternoon speaking, and I know how he loves to do that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the evidence here.

Mr. Pearson: What concerned me, Mr. Speaker, at the end of 1964 and what I sought, was information as to the extent to which over a period of ten years there had been political intervention or attempted political intervention in police investigations, in the administration of justice and in our processes of law, to determine to what extent there had been abuse of position.

At that time—most hon. members in this house ought to remember this because they were here—very serious allegations were made to the effect that a minister had intervened for political reasons in a police investigation. At that time there were allegations that at least one member of parliament had attempted to intervene in the administration of justice. At that time, Mr. Speaker, I had learned that my own parliamentary secretary had made certain telephone calls, and on learning that this was so I called him in and received from him first hand evidence of his indiscretion; and I asked him to resign that afternoon and to inform the house that very day. I did so not because he was guilty of wrongdoing, but because he had left himself open to the charge of improper exercise of authority in his position.

At that time, Mr. Speaker—I have the record here but I do not want to take up too much time of the house by putting examples on the record—there were allegations of pressures brought to bear on members of parliament by criminals, by the underworld. At that time we were setting up the Dorion inquiry. All these allegations and disclosures were made and continued to be made for months after this period until we reached the point where my hon. friend, from Brandon-Souris, who himself spoke last night, said that there was a lack of integrity in high places in the government. That was a very mild statement compared with other things which were said about us afterwards and during the election campaign.

At that time the Leader of the Opposition said that this house, as the supreme court of parliament, has the right to know that justice is administered without fear or favour, that it has the right to know that the administration of justice shall not depend on the persuasion—he meant political persuasion, I suppose—of alleged wrongdoers, that it has the right to know that it will not be strangled by the concealment of facts.

This, Mr. Speaker, was the background to the request which I made. All of these allegations and charges worried me as they must have worried every other member of parliament. But perhaps they worried me most of all. That is why I asked for information, if there was any such information, about other cases which were in any way similar, or which were related to these charges in which members of parliament were involved.

I thought I had to know the nature and the magnitude of this problem. It was my duty to make inquiries and to try to find out. I was as deeply disturbed as any member of this house by the disclosures of pressures on members of parliament by dubious and, at times, criminal elements. I was deeply disturbed, as it was my duty to be, by the allegations which had been made. Was the situation regarding interference by members of parliament as bad as was being painted? I decided to try to find out from the facts as disclosed in the record.

So I asked, Mr. Speaker, not for any new inquiries to be made, not for the police to report on or look into the private conduct of members of parliament, not to search for personal scandals, but to give me a record whether there had been in the past the kind of contact with dubious and criminal elements now charged, reports of which had been increasing month by month. How deep did this sort of thing go? Was parliament becoming a victim to criminal pressures? That was demanded by the opposition: that we investigate, that we look into these matters.

My request, Mr. Speaker, and I made it, was not for information about the Munsinger case. I have learned since that at that time many people apparently knew something about the case. Apparently rumours and gossip were rife even then. I knew nothing about that case. I had never heard the name so I could not possibly have had this case in mind when I made this inquiry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: That happens to be the literal and absolute truth. My request, Mr. Speaker, was not for information about a particular case. My request through the Minister of Justice, whom I consulted first because he was the minister responsible for the R.C.M.P., was that the R.C.M.P. search their records and give me evidence, if there was such evidence, of other cases, beginning with the government, that they had investigated in which members of parliament, whether ministers or not, were in any way involved or mentioned in connection with this kind of thing. I wanted to get information on the nature and the magnitude of this problem. It was my duty to try to secure that information and to make sure, Mr. Speaker—and I have witnesses to this statement and to other statements I have been making because these meetings were not held in the presence of only one person—that the request for the records, which I claim to be a perfectly proper procedure in the circumstances, covered a period when both parties were in power. I asked those who had compiled the records to go back ten years, so that it would not look as if I were just delving into the records of the previous government's time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: My hon. friends may scoff at this sort of thing. Perhaps it is not the kind of procedure they would have followed if they were asking for records.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: My own notes, made at the time—and I made notes at the time, and of the discussions I had with the commissioner of the R.C.M. Police and the secretary of the Privy Council who was present—made my own purposes quite clear.

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask a question of the Prime Minister?

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Grégoire: Did the R.C.M.P. give to the Prime Minister other files at that time besides the Munsinger file?

Mr. Pearson: I am just coming to that.

Mr. Churchill: How many have you got?

Mr. Pearson: It is a laughing matter to my hon. friend but it will not be, as the matter develops.

Mr. Churchill: It is not a laughing matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, my first request was made toward the end of November. The commissioner of the R.C.M.P. has indicated it was December 2nd that we met. He told me at that time that he had conducted a search and had looked into the records and that there was only one case of any significance at all, although he mentioned two or three that were quite inconsequential in which an hon. member's name happened to be mentioned in a very inoffensive or innocent way. There was only one case, so he told me, of any significance or consequence, in the inquiries that had been made in which an hon. member was involved. I found this report, Mr. Speaker, very reassuring indeed in respect of the involvement of hon. members generally in the kinds of things which were being talked about at that time and have been talked about, indeed, subsequently.

On this particular case the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. left a memorandum with me. It was not a file. I have never seen the file in this case and I have never asked for it. I saw a memorandum made by the police or a copy of it, a précis, if you like. This copy of the memorandum or précis of the file was left with me by the commissioner. The Clerk of the Privy Council, who is the chairman of the security committee of the government, was present when I received this memorandum. I studied that memorandum that evening, December 2, and I realized at once its importance from a security point of view.

Surely there is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, in the minds of hon. members that this particular case was an important one from a security point of view. That is the consideration that mattered in this case and the only consideration.

Mr. Churchill: You took no action.

Mr. Pearson: It was the only consideration that mattered. This is a far cry from the picture that has been painted by some hon. members, by some persons outside the house and by this amendment, of the Prime Minister asking that the private lives of all members of this house be investigated.

At the beginning of December, Mr. Speaker, as I considered it to be my duty, I advised the right hon. Leader of the Opposition about my great concern in respect of the one case that had been brought to my attention and about the situation generally. I told him about the information I had been getting and about my reasons for making the inquiry. Having also advised him that there was only one case reported to me of any substance or consequence, and that that case gave me very great concern because it affected the security of our country, I asked him if he had anything to add to the information given to me by the R.C.M.P. as he was the prime minister at the time. I considered, Mr. Speaker, that that was the right course of action to take in the circumstances.

• (4:00 p.m.)

The next question concerns allegations that I personally or, if you like, as Prime Minister, kept possession of the R.C.M.P. Munsinger file from December, 1964, until the beginning of April, 1966. I have already pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that at no time has the R.C.M.P. file in this case been in my personal possession. All I had was a memorandum, a précis of the file. I did not keep that memorandum on my desk, as has been alleged, or in my files, as has been suggested in comments here and in the press. I turned it over, immediately I read it, to the chairman of the government security panel for safekeeping, assuming it would either be returned by him to the R.C.M.P. or would be locked up by him in a safe in the Privy Council office. And that is where it was. The Clerk of the Privy Council, who as I have said is chairman of the government security panel, did lock it up in a safe and the memorandum remained in that custody until the R.C.M.P. sent for it early in April by messenger—not to my office, because they knew where it was, but by a message to the Privy Council office. That ought to dispose of that particular point, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: You hope it does.

Mr. Pearson: I hope no one will accuse the secretary of the cabinet, Clerk of the Privy Council and chairman of the security panel, of acting improperly in retaining custody of a memorandum on an R.C.M.P. security file, the original of which was with the R.C.M.P.

I never used that memorandum. It was never circulated. So far as I was concerned, it did not deal with a case involving the private and personal activities of anybody; it was a serious security matter and it was considered by me as such, and only as such.

An hon. Member: For 16 months.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it was kept there for 15 months and if the hon. member will follow some of the evidence which is being given now, he will find out it was kept for longer than that in other places, before—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —but in circumstances very different from those which existed when the government had changed hands and the ministry had changed. Very different, indeed.

The next question concerns the allegation that I knew in advance that this matter was going to be thrown into debate, that the name Monseignor or Munsinger would be mentioned in this house, that this was all part of a carefully calculated plot and that I had been holding the document on my desk waiting to produce it as part of that plot. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) in March, after vigorous attacks against him, including personal attacks to which he was vigorously replying—having been called among other things a dwarf in giant's clothing—did, I admit, when goaded beyond exasperation, blurt out this name.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Don't ask us to believe that.

Mr. Pearson: I do not ask the hon. gentleman to believe anything because it would be quite impossible for him to believe anything from this side. He has been conditioned to disbelief for too long.

It has been said here and in some press and other comment—and I wish to repeat this—that I knew this was going to happen. Mr. Speaker, I had no knowledge, of any kind, that this name was going to be mentioned in any debate. That is my statement, and I stand on it and my reputation stands on it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear.

Mr. Pearson: The right hon. gentleman who is scribbling notes down has undoubtedly put down: "Well, he applauded; he applauded when the Minister of Justice was speaking."

Indeed, I did applaud when the Minister of Justice was speaking. I applauded when the Minister of Justice was defending himself so vigorously against the attacks which had been made on him. I applauded when he suggested that the right hon. gentleman opposite was the last to criticize this government's handling of security cases. But if hon. members opposite will read Hansard—perhaps they have already done so—they will soon find out that the indications of approbation, as they have been called, were all before the word "Munsinger" was mentioned, not afterward, and Hansard, page 2211, March 4, 1966, will show that this was the case.

An hon. Member: You will have to do better than that.

Mr. Pearson: I heard someone say: "You will have to do better than that." What I am doing is telling the facts—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —and if it can be shown that any statement I am making today is not a fact or that it is untrue, then I stake my reputation on that. I cannot do more than that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: There are many questions being asked in this house and in the press. Many of the answers to these questions will, I think, be given in the course of the inquiry which is now in the process of being conducted. Those questions which I have felt I could answer without infringing the responsibility of that inquiry, I have tried to answer, and I will summarize those answers in very simple language which will state my position clearly on this matter.

First, we should ask ourselves and have, indeed, asked ourselves: Has the R.C.M.P. ever been ordered by the Prime Minister or anyone on behalf of the Prime Minister to inquire into the private lives and activities of any member of parliament? The answer is, no.

Second, did the Prime Minister keep in his possession or in the files of his own office any report by the R.C.M.P. or anyone else on the Munsinger case? The answer is, no.

Third, did the Prime Minister have any knowledge of any kind that the name Munsinger was to be mentioned in any debate in this house? Again, the answer is, no.

Fourth, did the government, as the amendment before this house alleges, have the R.C.M.P. provide information to the government as to the past conduct of all members of parliament? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is, no.

I know that these questions and variations of them have been asked as a result of interpretations placed on evidence which has now been given before Mr. Justice Spence. As you have ruled, Mr. Speaker, and, indeed, as my principles dictate, I cannot discuss the evidence placed before that commission of inquiry. I wish I could and perhaps the time will come when I can. But the interpretation placed on that evidence to date has gone far beyond the evidence itself and questions are being asked concerning my motives and my actions at the end of November, 1964, in connection with this particular inquiry. These I have done my best to deal with.

I submit that my motives in asking for that inquiry were understandable and were honourable and that this amendment, which is inaccurate and false in its very wording, should not meet the approval of the house. I ask the house to vote against it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: Before the Prime Minister takes his seat may I be permitted to ask him a question which I think is important since all of us are trying to understand his statement fully? The Prime Minister said he kept notes of his conversation with the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. I ask the Prime Minister if the notes he kept confirm the statement which was made by the commissioner when he said, "I was then asked if I had any information indicating any impropriety or anything of a scandalous nature involving any member of parliament in any party over the last ten years." I want to ask the Prime Minister if that statement corresponds to the request which the Prime Minister made to the commissioner, according to the notes which the Prime Minister has retained?

Mr. Pearson: No, they do not correspond, Mr. Speaker; quite the contrary. I am not quarreling and have no right to quarrel with the commissioner's evidence—I am not sure I should even comment on it—but if the commissioner is referring to personal improprieties and personal scandals, there is nothing in my notes to confirm that. If he was talking about scandal in the sense of the Rivard scandal, and at that time the word "scandal" was being tossed about in this house without any reference except to political scandal, if the commissioner was referring to that kind of scandal I was looking for that kind in the relation of members of parliament with government departments and their intervention on behalf of dubious elements. That is the kind of thing I was looking for because that is the kind of thing that was being talked about every day and with which we were being charged.

Mr. Dinsdale: I wonder whether the Prime Minister would accept another question. If the part he played in these matters is as pure and innocent as he indicates, how is it that the Minister of Fisheries on December 14, 1964, could approach me with a threat of dire consequences about something I had done which he did not reveal to me and which, in the light of later revelations, could only come from these files that we are talking about?

Mr. Robichaud: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member tried to make such an accusation last night which I denied personally, and again I would ask him to prove it.

Mr. Starr: You are all denying everything.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my first reference will be one of agreement with the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on the statement he made early in his remarks regarding parliament. He pointed out that everywhere parliament is being judged, that criticism is strong of parliament, that this is nothing novel, that we in Canada face criticism and that in recent months there is hardly a newspaper in the United Kingdom that has not spoken out against parliament.

This has become a course of action. It has become a standard practice. This has been the situation throughout the years. Parliament has always been condemned but, strangely enough, parliament, condemned as it has been, carried out its mission in two world wars and preserved freedom.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think those who would change it and bring about an alteration of its mission, those who are everlastingly arguing that it should be reformed, fail to recall its functions, fail to recognize that while in the course of debate strong arguments are used all of us recognize that our political opponents are individuals who are trying to do what they can for their country, and we do not have recourse to secret police to undermine and destroy the reputations of our fellow members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have before me a copy of the Daily Mail. I am going to quote only a very few lines in this connection from an article headed, "Reform It Now—The House of Decay, Incompetence and Fully Justified Ill Repute". The article says in part:

> . . . the House of Commons is today in a state of decay incompetence and fully justified ill repute, worse than at any time since the worst days of George III.

Then it goes on to say that parliament, referring to the parliament of Westminster, year by year is sinking in the general regard of the people. I do not believe that. I could not be more in agreement with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) when he spoke last evening. With his long years of experience and being now removed from politics—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —he was able to speak of parliament in an objective way and, indeed, in a manner that indicated that he has not the eye or rather the ear of the Prime Minister, for the things that have been done cannot be laughed off.

The Prime Minister produced a chestnut regarding truth which has been used over and over again, usually in county councils. I am glad the Prime Minister found it necessary to resurrect it. We want the truth. We are asking for the truth. I listened to him today and I could not help but go back to that momentous day in April, 1963, when he said that what was going to come was "a time to excite the daring, to test the strong, and to give new promise to the timid". There was none of that today. There was an apologia, a speech that consisted in the main of confession with avoidance of responsibility. He has placed the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. in the dock and has in effect said of him that his evidence was false.

Mr. Pearson: Not true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to make that very clear and I am going to quote from it.

Mr. Pearson: Not true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not going to generalize. I am going to quote from it.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Sir, I would have thought he would have risen and said—he couldn't have done it though—well, we all in the course of life suddenly under the impetus of the moment act in a way which is contrary to our whole being. As a sort of revelation, the evidence before the commission shows that what was done, in spite of all the elaboration in words, was calculated and contrived to annihilate political opponents, and this by a Prime Minister who talks of the new politics.

An hon. Member: New, all right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He wanted to use this as a club; that is what he wanted. He applauded the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) on two occasions when the Minister of Justice was making the most irresponsible statements last March. Sir, the Borgias used to poison their political adversaries. Today what has been done in this case has been to poison the arteries of parliaments probity.

The Prime Minister's speech was an alibi of tortured guilt. He was attempting to explain the unexplainable. The words he used bear no resemblance to the evidence given before the commission by the R.C.M.P. commissioner. It is very obvious that throughout the picture the Prime Minister was in the wings. The Minister of Justice struck. They decided on a policy of smear and run and then appointed a commission which the Prime Minister says protects the rights of individuals. I shall deal with that. It was not just a thing of the moment; it was not spontaneously aroused or provoked. It was a deliberate and planned campaign to destroy by inference, to befoul and besmirch by innuendo and thus bring about the destruction of political opponents.

The Prime Minister said he told me about this matter in the summer of 1964. He is wrong. No reference was made to it by the Prime Minister until I was ill, I think in February, 1965, when he wrote me. Oh, yes, there was a letter, but I do not have a copy.

Mr. Pearson: The letter was dated December 4, 1964.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not care what the date was.

Mr. Starr: That does not means you mailed it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister has forgotten. He knows that when it was delivered to me it was delivered to my home by a secret messenger.

Mr. Pearson: The Leader of the Opposition called on me on December 10 and talked about the letter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now we are going to get truth. I went to see the Prime Minister. He said he was going to get to the bottom of something. He did not indicate what it was but it was apparently this case. I said, "Go ahead, carry on". He said, "I have looked it over and there is no suggestion of any breach of security so let us forget about it." I never heard from him from that date until the matter was used. He said to me he had to write the letter because he was a diplomat. I say the letter was written by a lawyer, and the identification and the words of that letter owed their paternity to the former minister of justice. I said at the time, "If you want to go into these things, let us go into them." He said, "Let us forget about it; there was no breach of security." I went on to say that some of the hon. gentlemen sitting opposite might be interested. He said, "You know we do have troubles with our cabinet ministers". He knew what he was talking about.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege. The right hon. gentleman has stated that I sent him a letter which he received in February, 1965, and that he must have discussed it with me afterwards. I have a copy of a letter which was delivered to him and it is dated December 4, 1964. He called my office and discussed it and the security aspects on December 10, 1964.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister, who through the years has followed a course of endeavouring to bulldoze, brickbat and put fear into one's heart—when I discussed the matter with him said, "Forget about it". That is what he said. He never mentioned the matter again until it came up in the house. That is the old, old stunt of trying by underhanded means to put fear into the hearts of political opponents. That is what he did; yet he says he did not know anything about the Munsinger case. When the present Minister of Justice held this famous press conference there was an official from the Prime Minister's office present and a tape recorder from the Prime Minister's office. What was that for? Was that just prescience on the part of one of the employees or was it in fact with the knowledge of the Prime Minister?

I am going to deal with the sequence of events, because I am surprised to find the Prime Minister denying the record.

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the right hon. the Prime Minister take his seat?

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege, the right hon. gentleman has referred and I have referred to a particular letter marked "confidential" from one privy councillor to another. Would he agree to have the confidential character of the letter removed so that the letter could be tabled and made public?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The right hon. gentleman says it was confidential and then in the house he related that he was in touch with me. What goes on? This is exactly the kind of insidious thing that the Prime Minister does. Indeed, all through the years he has been talking about destroying the leader of the Conservative party and on September 18, 1963, he said, "I think we have him about destroyed." I dislike bringing that up.

Mr. Favreau: Where are you quoting from?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I dislike bringing that up. All we have to do is look at this speech. We can read exactly what happened. Let us find out the order. On November 23, 1964, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) made certain charges in the house. On November 24 Mr. Rouleau resigned. I do not know anything of the circumstances of that. Mention was made of it, but I seem to recall that the then minister of justice told the Prime Minister about the Rivard case back in September on an air trip from the Maritimes and he forgot about it. He put it in the outer recesses of his mind and forgot about it.

On November 25 the first terms of reference in connection with the Rivard matter were presented and on November 27 the revised terms of reference were presented to parliament. This is all coincidence. The Prime Minister would have us believe that. He was apparently away for a few days on a trip, but then on November 29 or November 30 a meeting took place attended by the Prime Minister, the then minister of justice, the Clerk of the Privy Council and the commissioner of the R.C.M.P.

On December 1 assistant commissioner Kelly, who is in charge of security, brought the report on the Munsinger case to the minister of justice and on December 2 the file went to the Prime Minister. He now finds himself in the difficult position of having to explain why this whole matter took 15 months to incubate. The Prime Minister says that the report was not on his desk and not in his possession but in the possession of the Clerk of the Privy Council. Let us just follow the course of events. It was on March 4, 1966, that the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) first mentioned the word "Monseignor" or "Munsinger" in this house. On January 31 and on February 28 the minister made oblique references to a case which occurred when the former government was in power. Just a few days before, according to a statement made in the house on March 14 by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau) sought an interview with that hon. member and warned him about the Munsinger case and its implications, which would apparently be brought to light if the Conservative opposition continued to press the government about the Spencer case.

Mr. Favreau: That is all wrong, of course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The President of the Privy Council says this is all wrong. He is the last person in the world who should talk about wrong. All I wish to say in this connection is that it is a strange coincidence that just at that time, following the threat of blackmail made by the President of the Privy Council—described by the hon. member for Kamloops—things started to happen.

On March 9 the Minister of Justice in an interview with the Globe and Mail said that the Munsinger case was worse than the Profumo case. On March 10 he held a press conference and revealed information of a security nature affecting the reputation of the former government. That is a strange coincidence when one considers the course of events I have mentioned. This information was available but withheld to be used at a time when it would be most effective. On March 10 the Prime Minister said there has been a stigma placed on the Liberal party. The Minister of Justice gave us to understand by his attitude and his actions that they had something they were going to spring. The evidence about the meeting to which I referred indicates that the Prime Minister was aroused and disturbed and of course never thought he would be doing anything wrong to members of the house. He met with the Minister of Justice, the chairman of security panel and the commissioner of police. Today the Prime Minister avers that we must be very careful to say nothing against the R.C.M.P. I say that the Prime Minister endeavoured to use the R.C.M.P. as a political police force, which is something that will be resented by all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why were these four persons gathered together? They were not gathered together for the protection of the nation, they were not gathered together for the betterment of the administration of justice. The only purpose they had in mind was to decide that the time had arrived when it was politically advantageous to bring this case to light. We should never have heard of the meeting and it would have been lost to posterity had it not been for the fact that an examination of the records brought it to light.

As the commissioner of the R.C.M.P related his story before the inquiry, he was asked whether this information regarding the Munsinger case had ever been brought to the attention of Mr. Chevrier when he was minister of justice, and the answer was in the negative. The same question was asked in relation to the present President of the Privy Council and the commissioner stated that the information was given to him on December 1, 1964.

It was on that date that the assistant commissioner, Mr. Kelly, according to the commissioner, was told by the Prime Minister, to discuss this case with the President of the Privy Council. We now begin to see the course. I should like to read what actually took place as reported in the press.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: This is what was reported in the press.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the Prime Minister say what has been reported by the press is not relevant? These reports relate to an open hearing, not a secret one. This is the one thing that came out into the open that would have been concealed if the attempts had been successful to establish secrecy in this commission. In that event the Canadian people would have received this story haphazardly. There is no false notion in this nation in respect of the political implications. The press of this nation is appalled that anyone occupying a high position such as the Prime Minister should be in the invidious position in which he now finds himself.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman would—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just a minute. The Prime Minister said he did not want to be interrupted and I do not—

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a point of order.

An hon. Member: There is no point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister is rising on a point of order.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is a very simple one. The right hon. gentleman is purporting to read from a document and I think the house is entitled to know what the document is. I believe the right hon. gentleman said it was a press report. We should, therefore, know precisely what newspaper it is so that it will be identified and can be referred to by hon. members for the purposes of this debate which ends at 8.15 p.m. today. I hope the right hon. gentleman will give us that information because, and this is part of my point of order, sir, the right hon. gentleman must vouch for the absolute accuracy of the press report compared with what may be shown by a transcript of the evidence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the right hon. gentleman vouch for the accuracy of the report to which he refers?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps there is a point of order in respect of the first question raised by the minister. However, I believe the second question is an inquiry rather than a point of order.

An hon. Member: The Leader of the Opposition has found himself a sucker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Villeneuve wishes to speak to the point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Leader of the Opposition is about to read a press report on the subject we are now discussing or on what happened during the inquiry.

Not so long ago, when it was discovered that Gerda Munsinger was actually alive in West Germany, Your Honour prevented me from reading certain newspaper articles, one of which was from the Toronto Star. It seems to me that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) does not have more privileges than any other member when it comes to quoting a newpaper article.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I intended to read from press reports, and I have never heard this practice challenged before. Certainly we have a revised version of things from the Prime Minister today who tried to explain the unexplainable. The Minister of Transport asked me to identify what I intended to read.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I am expected to give some brief comments on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Villeneuve. If my recollection is correct, I was not in the chair when the point of order in question was raised, but my understanding of the rule is that it is permissible on the part of members to read newspaper articles provided they vouch for the correctness of the reports.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was going to read from a Canadian Press report and I do so accordingly as reported in the Ottawa Journal of April 29.

Mr. Favreau: Are you vouching for its accuracy?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall not attempt to do what the Prime Minister did and say I did not say what I was reported to have said by the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. I intend to read first what the press reported and then, as I have been pressed to do this, I will also put on the record what was actually said.

Commissioner McClellan said the meeting was attended by then Justice Minister Favreau—who lost that portfolio after the airing of the Rivard case—and he believed, by Gordon Robertson, cabinet secretary. He testified—

Mr. Greene: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I believe you have ruled, if I understand correctly, that the evidence before the inquiry is not admissible in this debate and I suggest to Your Honour—

An hon. Member: It is too late.

Mr. Greene: I know we have been hearing the wolves over there howling for three years and it has not got them anywhere yet. I wonder whether we could have your ruling, Mr. Speaker, rather than the cackling of geese over there.

Mr. Starr: You are one of the geese, Joe.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Greene: I know that hon. gentlemen opposite are not too anxious to get the facts.

An hon. Member: Look who is talking.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that Your Honour has ruled that the evidence at the inquiry is not the subject matter of this debate and is not admissible. The right hon. gentleman is now trying to do indirectly what he cannot do directly, namely, he is reading from a newspaper which purports to quote the evidence at the hearing. I submit that he cannot do indirectly what he cannot do directly because surely if the evidence is admissible at all we should have the evidence from the transcript first hand and not some newspaper report which purports to give the evidence. Your Honour has ruled that the evidence is not admissible and I submit with respect that the right hon. gentleman cannot do indirectly what Your Honour has ruled he cannot do directly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, all I have to say in this connection is that the Prime Minister interpreted what Commissioner McClellan had said and what he must have meant when he said it. Now I am going to place on the record exactly what was said, and it will show that the Prime Minister distorted—

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is now speaking on a point of order.

Mr. Pearson: The right hon. gentleman seems to have completed his contribution on the point. I wanted to point out that I did not quote from the evidence. I was sorely tempted to do so but I did not refer directly to the evidence, either the transcript which I have or the evidence as it was reported in the newspapers. As I said, I would have been out of order had I done so.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton South on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I am just wondering what goes on in this house when the Chair recognizes the Leader of the Opposition on a point of order and yet the Prime Minister continues to talk.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Rap him down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Kamloops.

Morality in Government

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, may I refer to the ruling which you actually made yesterday because it seems to me that this is what we should have before us and not an interpretation from hon. members opposite. What was said yesterday is found at page 4590 of Hansard, namely:

When I made my ruling a moment ago I said that there was much merit to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Peace River that certain decisions or bits and pieces of evidence which come out in the course of a hearing might not be of the essence of the matter which is before a royal commission or inquiry, and because of this we should not be precluded from discussing certain matters. I do not want to reduce this to the absurd but, for example, if in the course of his evidence a witness said that it was raining or was not raining we could not come to the conclusion that we could not discuss the weather in the House of Commons. In other words, there is a limitation in this regard. We cannot eliminate from our discussion in the house any evidence that is presented before a commission.

That is what Your Honour ruled.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would read the next paragraph of your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: I would rather not hear it.

Mr. Fulton: I think you probably would read it better than I would.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of hon. members to continue the debate on the point of order? Are there any further contributions?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously the point at issue here is the ruling made quite some time ago by Mr. Speaker Macdonald which I quoted on the occasion of the ruling I made yesterday, and it is to the following effect:

I would accordingly rule that it is not out of order to discuss transportation problems generally when such matters have been referred to a royal commission.

On the other hand, I would also rule that reference should not be made to the proceedings, or evidence, or findings of a royal commission before it has made its report.

This is a very restrictive ruling. I said yesterday that I did not want to use this ruling to preclude any discussion or reference to the Spence inquiry, and I believe I was as lenient as I could be in the circumstances in allowing the discussion which took place yesterday and also in allowing the amendment moved by the hon. member for Royal. However, the point is still there that this ruling exists. I believe it is a precedent by which I am bound and by which hon. members are bound.

While it is possible in my view to make reference in a general way to collateral matters, which I believe was the ruling I made yesterday, which may come up in the course of an inquiry, in my mind, there should not be a specific reference to the evidence itself. I did feel that in view of this ruling the right hon. Leader of the Opposition should not quote from the evidence.

The point raised by one of the members who took part in the discussion, that we cannot do indirectly what we cannot do directly, is well taken. I believe it would not be in order to read from the evidence at the present time in the course of this debate in view of the ruling to which I have referred. I do not believe that this has been done by the Prime Minister in the course of his speech. If he did, I failed to catch it. I would invite the right hon. Leader of the Opposition not to quote directly or indirectly from the evidence which was taken in the course of the inquiry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I shall try to keep within your ruling. However, I want to point out the fact that the Prime Minister has given an expurgated explanation of what actually took place and has interpreted what the evidence was. Now I want to place on the record the evidence which answers him 100 per cent. It indicates that the revelation which he made today as to what took place bears only a distant relationship to the truth.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Filibuster. Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister now rising on a point of order?

Mr. MacEachen: I am rising on a point of order which has to do with a statement made by the Leader of the Opposition. It has to do with a very fundamental practice in the House of Commons. As I understood the right hon. gentleman, he stated that a statement made this afternoon by the Prime Minister had a distant relationship to the truth. I should like to refer to citation 145 in Beauchesne, Mr. Speaker, which reads as follows:

It has been formally ruled by Speakers in the Canadian Commons that a statement by an honourable member respecting himself and peculiarly within his own knowledge must be accepted—

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that almost all of the statements that have been made by the Prime Minister are statements in this category respecting himself and peculiarly within his own knowledge and not within the knowledge of the Leader of the Opposition. A statement made, for example, by the Prime Minister that he had no prior knowledge whatever of the disclosure of the name "Munsinger" by the Minister of Justice is a statement respecting himself and peculiarly within his own knowledge. It must be accepted.

Mr. Fulton: Read the rest of it.

Mr. MacEachen: As suggested by the hon. member for Kamloops, I will read the complete citation.

—but it is not unparliamentary to temperately criticize statements—

Is it temperate criticism to say that a statement has a distant relationship to the truth?

—made by a member as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible.

I conclude the citation by quoting this sentence:

A statement made by a member in his place, is considered as made upon honour and cannot be questioned in the house or out of it.

The Prime Minister has made a number of statements on his honour, upon which he has staked his reputation, and they must be accepted by the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: They must be accepted by the house. If the right hon. gentleman refuses to accept the statements made by the Prime Minister, then he knows the course of action to take. I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in this particular debate this rule ought to be rigidly observed. We on this side of the house intend that statements made by a member in his place be considered as made upon his honour and they cannot be questioned in the house or out of it. I respectfully suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that he was certainly on the verge of transgressing, if not transgressing, this particular custom of parliament.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I think there is some inconsistency in the whole proceeding here. This debate is based on exactly what was said before the inquiry. If I recall correctly, a few minutes ago the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam quoted the whole statement from beginning to end which was placed before that inquiry. I cannot see why the Leader of the Opposition, therefore, cannot talk about it since the whole debate is on that subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I can well understand the feelings of hon. gentlemen opposite because the Prime Minister chose to give his views as to what the evidence would have been if he had been the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. and had given the evidence as to the events. I was quoting from a Canadian Press dispatch.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Filibuster. Closure.

Mr. Greene: You have ruled this out of order—

Some hon. Members: Closure.

Mr. Greene: —quite properly. The right hon. gentleman would like to get the evidence before this high court before it is all in before the tribunal. He does not want to hear the rest of the evidence of the commissioner. The rule is a very sound one because, of course, the witness has not yet been cross-examined. The right hon. gentleman does not want to wait for that. The rule is there for the very purpose of preventing half the evidence being discussed here before the whole of the evidence is discussed before the inquiry. Your Honour has quite properly ruled that it cannot be directly or indirectly discussed here until it has been heard in full before the inquiry. We cannot discuss half the evidence here, but the right hon. gentleman is transgressing the ruling. I ask the Chair to enforce the ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am a bit disturbed by the suggestion made by the hon. member for Mégantic that the evidence which the Leader of the Opposition now wishes to quote and put on the record has already been quoted by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. If this was done, it escaped my attention. My understanding of what the hon. member said at the time was that it was a passing reference to this evidence in the same way as was done by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Douglas: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me absurd to deny any member the right to place on the record the statement attributed by the press to the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. when it has appeared in every newspaper in Canada and has been quoted over every radio and television station. I submit, Your Honour, that you have permitted the Prime Minister this afternoon to give his side of certain events. If you deny members on this side of the house the opportunity to quote what the R.C.M.P. commissioner said about those events, you are certainly doing in reverse the very thing to which the Minister of Agriculture is objecting, namely, allowing one side of the story to be told and denying members the right to give the other side of the story by revealing the statement of the R.C.M.P. commissioner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, lest the house be beguiled by the rather beguiling suggestion of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I think it should be recalled, as has been pointed out by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that the Prime Minister made certain statements of his own knowledge. There is nobody, except the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who can make statements of his own knowledge. I suggest that for a second person to take a press report which may or may not be an accurate transcript of the evidence and parade it in this house as though it were the direct knowledge of that person is a travesty of ordinary justice. It is for this reason we have the rule which Mr. Speaker Macdonald and His Honour have upheld. The rule was upheld a moment ago in response to a point raised by the Minister of Agriculture that the evidence could not be quoted directly or indirectly until all the evidence had been heard. This is exactly the same point Your Honour made yesterday in your original decision. It is clear and precise. I suggest that debate on a motion introduced by an hon. member who wants to restore the rights and dignities of parliament should conform to the rules of the house.

Mr. Starr: I rise on the point of order. I have listened with interest to the arguments that have been put forward by members of the treasury benches. They claim that no evidence can be quoted in this house until all the evidence has been gathered. I am not going to quote from any authority or read any excerpts from rule books. However, logic and common sense, as well as a sense of justice, tell me that this evidence has been published day by day, word by word, in newspapers across this country and has been commented upon by editorial writers. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we sit in this house as representatives of the people and find the government hiding behind a shield of rules and rule books. We are not permitted to bring this evidence out because some sort of closure is put on us. I suggest that we should have the same rights as any editorial writer or newspaperman who has written about, quoted word for word from, or expressed his opinions on, the evidence. But we are deprived of these rights, which I think is illogical, irrelevant and certainly is beyond common sense.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member for Ontario a question arising out of his remarks for clarification purposes?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the minister addressing the Chair on the point of order?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, and I wanted some clarification.

Mr. Starr: The house leader is hiding behind a point of order in asking me a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McIlraith: I would ask the hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: Would the minister kindly address the Chair on his point of order?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to try to make myself heard over the din. The point I was seeking to raise was this. I did not understand one part of the remarks of the hon. member for Ontario, so I should like to ask for clarification of one short part of those remarks. If the hon. member is ready to accept a question I would be glad to put it. It is simply this. Is it the hon. member's argument on the point of order that we should seek to establish order and re-establish the dignity of parliament by disregarding the rule book?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, this is another piece of camouflage in the smokescreen put up by the government in connection with what is transpiring here in the form of a point of order and the opportunity of hon. members to say what they think should happen in the light of what some authorities say. There is a tremendous difference between this situation and the normal situation in this House of Commons, and the difference is this.

The argument put forward by the government in defence of the proposition that the debate should be confined within very narrow limits is that evidence such as this cannot be put before the house though it can be discussed outside. There is the great difference. This evidence has been published in papers across the country and yet we are not allowed to discuss it here.

I might make another point, Mr. Speaker, since you have permitted me to speak again. This afternoon the Prime Minister was given an opportunity to put his own interpretation on the evidence given by the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. That is exactly what happened this afternoon and I think that threw the gates wide open. I do not think that any rule applies to the extraordinary circumstances in which we find ourselves.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, just to make our position clear I would suggest—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pearson: —that we should leave the matter entirely in your hands.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have been trying to obtain assistance from hon. members on the point of order which has been raised, which is a very serious one. I am wondering whether this is the point which the Prime Minister is raising at this time.

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. I have just suggested that as we have made our point we should leave the matter in your hands and the right hon. gentleman should be allowed to proceed.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I will not take very long on the point of order, but it does seem obvious to me that we are going to be asked at 8.15 tonight to vote on the amendment to the motion which is based almost exclusively, it appears to me, on the testimony given by the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Prime Minister gave his version today of the discussions he had with the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. and the instructions he gave to the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. I have listened very carefully to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, and it seems to me that his version is in direct contradiction of the testimony given by the commissioner of the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Pearson: It is not.

Mr. Orlikow: I wish the Prime Minister had himself quoted from the testimony and had said clearly and specifically that the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. was wrong or was misinformed or did not remember what had taken place, but the Prime Minister did not do that.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that to enable us to vote tonight somebody should put these quotations on the record, and I would ask the Prime Minister to answer the specific allegation made by the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. It may be that a narrow interpretation of the rules makes this impossible, but if that is the case the loser will be the Prime Minister because everybody in the country and every newspaper, Liberal, Conservative or independent, has taken the same interpretation. Therefore I appeal to the Prime Minister and his cabinet ministers not to obstruct the introduction of this quotation but to co-operate, and I would ask the Prime Minister to make the statement and to give the answer for which the public are waiting.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, may I ask one question? Does the authority to which you have referred in making this ruling relate to a court of law in this country? I submit that a court of law in this country is not the same as a court of inquiry. I would suggest that if the authority referred to a court of law you would by this ruling be raising a court of inquiry to the same level as a court of law, and I submit those two bodies are not the same.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I feel the only thing I can do is again to quote the ruling to which I referred earlier. The point raised by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek is that the ruling to which I referred, the ruling of Mr. Speaker MacDonald, relates not to a royal commission but to a court of law. It was the opinion of the learned Speaker that although we might discuss the matter in general we should not refer to evidence or proceedings before or the findings of a royal commission.

I very much fear I must ask for the co-operation of the Leader of the Opposition in paraphrasing the evidence in words which are somewhere between the two extremes, taking a middle course which might satisfy both the Chair and the members of the house. However, the ruling is there. I did not make the ruling but I am bound by it. It says clearly and specifically that when a royal commission is currently discussing a matter

hon. members in the course of debate should not quote or refer specifically to the proceedings or evidence. I do not think I have any authority to change that ruling. I believe hon. members should abide by this precedent which certainly is part of the rules of the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I can have no complaint about any ruling you make because you always try to be fair. However, that does not deny me the right to say that the reason the government do not want this evidence disclosed is that they are afraid.

This afternoon the Prime Minister decided to contradict the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. He did that for his own purposes. He now wants to deny this house its right to know what the commissioner said. I will paraphrase, sir, as you suggest. I am now paraphrasing from the report in the Canadian Press: "I was asked if I had any information on my files of a nature which indicated impropriety or wrongdoing on the part of any member of the government—the present government. I then asked, if I answered that"—the commissioner did not say at that time what his answer was.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition indicated that he wanted to abide by the ruling of the Chair in that he would paraphrase the evidence, as I suggested. I have the impression that he is perhaps quoting it a little too closely. It is difficult for me to judge when I have not read the evidence. I do not know whether the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is paraphrasing or quoting from the evidence, but I take it that he is abiding by the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You know, I never was very good in grammar and when it comes to paraphrases I have difficulty. I will proceed to say that the commissioner did not say at that point what his answer was, but he was then asked if he had any information indicating any impropriety or anything of a scandalous nature involving any hon. member of any party over the last ten years.

An hon. Member: Scandal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He was, of course, aware of the matters that were being discussed in the house and that they were the subject of gossip. In answer to a direct question of the Prime Minister he spoke in the affirmative.

[Mr. Speaker.]

He then referred to the Munsinger file, at which time the Prime Minister indicated that he thought he had better see it. That in general is a summary by way of paraphrase of the report in the Canadian Press on April 29, which I point out, sir, is in complete contradiction of the revised version placed before this house by the Prime Minister for his own purposes.

I now paraphrase the evidence that actually was given. I will paraphrase the page from which I cannot quote. It is page 331. A question was asked by Mr. Carson about what had happened on December 1 and December 2, 1964, with reference to a matter coming to the attention of the Prime Minister and the President of the Privy Council. He asked the commissioner if he had any indication of how the matter had come to the knowledge of the Prime Minister, to which the commissioner replied in the affirmative. He was then asked, and I paraphrase, as to the nature of this, and the commissioner went on to say in answer that from the questions that were asked he could give information.

Then he proceeded with his evidence, at which time Mr. O'Brien, counsel for the commission, thought that possibly Commissioner McClellan was disturbed that he might be disclosing something he should not disclose. Commissioner McClellan indicated that that conclusion by Mr. O'Brien was indeed correct at which time Mr. O'Brien stated, and I again paraphrase, that when he had first seen the commissioner he was in a position of some discomfort. The attitude of Mr. O'Brien was that he could see no reason why what took place between the Prime Minister and the commissioner of police should not be disclosed.

The commissioner then gave his evidence, which I paraphrase. The commissioner was called to the Prime Minister's office with the President of the Privy Council. He believed that Mr. Gordon Robertson, secretary of the Privy Council, was present. The commissioner was then asked by the Prime Minister if he had any information indicating that there had been any impropriety—and I do not know how to paraphrase this—anything of a scandalous nature involving any member of parliament in any party over a period of what he thought was ten years. That generally, I think, was the expression used. It must have been the expression used because the Prime Minister himself referred to ten years. He said that an examination had been made over a period of ten years.

The commissioner said that he was aware, of course, that the matters that were being discussed were, in part at least, subject to gossip. When answering that direct question before the Prime Minister he said, "Yes, sir," and he referred to this specific file, the Munsinger file. The Prime Minister then, according to the commissioner, said that he had better see it, and he saw it.

There is also the evidence, and I again paraphrase, that while this took place as far back as December 1 or December 2 of 1964 the file was delivered to the Prime Minister on this occasion and it was not an excerpt or anything of the kind, as he would have it today. A file was delivered. I did not say "the". I say "a file" was delivered to the Prime Minister. It was never seen again by the commissioner of police for a period of 15 months.

That, sir, is the evidence in paraphrase, and it answers the Prime Minister today when he comes before this house and leaves the impression, by what he says took place, that the commissioner's evidence was not in accordance with the facts.

An hon. Member: It was given under oath.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That evidence was given under oath by the commissioner. I point out that circumstance. Instead of facing up to this, because he knows that is what was said by the commissioner, the Prime Minister comes to the house and produces a caricature of what took place. Sir, what we are facing is an interpretation of evidence that could not be misinterpreted if it could be read into the record of this house. The Prime Minister gave a misinterpretation of that evidence in order to get out of a position in which no prime minister has ever been in this country, of using the mounted police as "Pearson's political police" for his own purposes to destroy political—

Mr. Sauvé: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I cannot speak in too strong terms—

Mr. Sauvé: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Kindt: What is the point of order?

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: Is the Leader of the Opposition not in fact accusing the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. of having been part of a political plot?

Mr. Pearson: That is exactly what he is doing.

Mr. Sauvé: If this is so—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the minister kindly resume his seat? It seems that the point he is making now is a point of debate. If there is a point of order he should state it directly. What he is stating now is an argument, not a point of order at all.

Mr. Sauvé: Would the Leader of the Opposition allow a question at this time, because this is very important?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Forestry is rising to seek permission to ask a question of the Leader of the Opposition who has the floor.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think I have been very generous. I have been standing here now for over an hour and in that time I believe I have spoken for about 15 minutes because of the opposition of members opposite who are afraid to hear the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They have said that the truth will take a long time to permeate, but the truth will not take a long time to permeate if I can read the record.

Mr. Sauvé: I am asking the Leader of the Opposition if he will permit a question.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister knows that the Leader of the Opposition has the floor and that if he is not disposed to allow a question—

Mr. Sauvé: I am asking the right hon. gentleman if he will hear my question.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition, who has the floor, has indicated that he will not allow a question at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not dealing with shoes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sauvé: On a question of privilege, I am asking a question directly related to this debate, one which is fundamental.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Sauvé: The Leader of the Opposition is accusing the R.C.M.P. commissioner—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I ask the co-operation of all hon. members and in particular the co-operation of the Minister of Forestry. He wishes to ask a question. According to our rules he cannot do so at this time. He may have an argument he would like to submit in the course of debate and he may have the occasion to do so later this afternoon or early this evening. But he cannot ask a question at this time and there is no question of privilege or point of order.

An hon. Member: Did that sink in?

Mr. Diefenbaker: At the time of that interruption I was about to return to the statement made by the Prime Minister. He endeavoured to leave the impression that he acted altogether correctly, that it was proper to look at administrative records except, of course, memoranda from cabinet, cabinet meetings and the like.

Sir, what has been done here, according to the testimony of the commissioner of the mounted police, which I paraphrased, is that the Prime Minister is trying to rewrite in parliament the evidence which was given under oath before the commission, realizing that if that evidence stands his government is indicted of one of the most terrible offences of which any government could be indicted—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker:—namely, the assassination of the characters of members opposite for political purposes. Then the right hon. gentleman represents himself as being clothed in the garments of piety. He tells us he wants to see the rights of the individual protected. But by stealth, by snooping, he planned to use the R.C.M.P. with its distinguished record to do the kind of work that he wanted to do to destroy political opponents. Then, when he is faced with it, he smiles. He is pleased at his success. He is delighted. And he tells us about the new politics.

He has by his action in this regard committed a tremendous crime against parliamentary government. He has destroyed that something which brings us together in heated argument, but with respect. He brought this out because he wanted to find something which would destroy. For 15 months it incubated. There it was on his desk. If it was not there he may have put it somewhere else. I know I wish he had put it some place else. But he had it there. Hon. members know the kind of thing: You be careful; I have something here; if you do not do what I want you to do, out comes Munsinger.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the right hon. gentleman admitting he had something to hide?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the last thing in the world the Minister of Transport should say. He and his friends are trying to hide the truth from the Canadian people as to the despicable tactics they used in this connection. Let that be clear. I did not want to say that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Carried away.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is fine. One could go back over the years and take up the records of our respective ancestors and all that kind of thing. We do not do that. Files disclose things but we do not want to hurt our political opponents in that way. I say to the Prime Minister that from the time he took office he examined every line and word in my life—everything—with one purpose in mind. I do not want to go into personalities as to what happened. But you will remember, sir, that in 1962 they held a meeting and decided that the one person to be destroyed was Diefenbaker. They spread a story across this country that I was suffering from an incurable disease. It came from the front bench and I say to the Prime Minister: I know where it came from.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am supposed to accept that and not resent it. Well, they got their answer. They thought they could win an election with that kind of thing. Now, having tried for several years to bring an end to the leadership of the Conservative party, for the benefit of Canada—and I admire their freedom from partisanship in this desire—they resort to these tactics and use the police.

I am surprised—and I intend to say that I am surprised that the commissioner of the mounted police did not say, "No" to the Prime Minister. But it is not for me to judge. The Prime Minister asks, and when the Prime Minister asks the Biblical words are always true—"He shall receive".

He asked for this and he got it. He says: There is security of state involved. Where was the security during the 15 months he kept it under cover, only to be produced if needed?

Is that security? He knew what the evidence was, and again I paraphrase that evidence. On January 19, 1961, the R.C.M.P. report was that it was becoming very apparent that this woman was not engaged in any intelligence operations and therefore was of no further interest to the branch and no further watch would be maintained.

The Prime Minister dug it up. He has the responsibility, no one else. He was assisted by those who for their own purposes would destroy. Now on May 3, 1966, when I want to produce what was said, the Liberals raise an unholy noise against it. They object. They are afraid of it.

Mr. Greene: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No. At the moment I do not want any observations from Lincoln or his re-incarnation.

With all the power at my command I ask, can parliament condone this? If we can, then McCarthyism is in this land. It is worse than McCarthyism at its peak. McCarthy simply said, "You are guilty by association," and destroyed the souls of men. I wonder how many hon. members in this house would want to go back over the years and recall whether at one time or another they did not think a little differently than they do today.

I have had files before me—not from any source whatever, but knowing of them. There has been the evidence in Washington before the security committee of the United States Senate. But no, that is not the way we act in public life. Are the private lives of individuals to be dug up? Are we to start looking up the moral wrongdoing at any time of each and every one of us? Are we to start on that? That is what this thing will lead to. Who of us is without sin? Who of us can judge without being judged?

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the right hon. gentleman a question.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to judge the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman tried to be a lawyer and he did not succeed, so he does not know anything about being a judge.

This is the danger of this thing. This is what parliament is going to vote on tonight, not on the self-serving views of the Prime Minister designed to place before parliament a view that is the very antithesis of the evidence that was given. The Prime Minister laughs. He said that this is really nothing, but they are just taking reputations and destroying them. He could have got up to day and excused himself by saying, "We all do things sometimes when we get annoyed," but he did not do so.

The file lay around for 15 months. You can just see them there looking at it and asking, "When do we strike"?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh yes, that is the way they operated. The Prime Minister laughs. I ask him, why did you keep it for 15 months? For decoration? He kept it there, according to the evidence of the commissioner, and returned the file after 15 months.

Mr. Starr: Because they requested it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I suppose they asked for it back. What were you doing with it in that time? We heard about it. It went from ear to ear—"We have got something; you wait, if you are not careful we will get you." You cannot build a parliament that way. That is why this motion is so important.

I am asking for the support tonight of all political parties in this house because, as we are now, unless you condemn this action, so will you be. There is no safety for any person or group. Each one of us, admitting the frailties of human nature, knows that if anybody were to dig into our records there would be something to find. That is why I say to those in all political parties that this is a principle above all else transcendent. Give me the resolution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They laugh over there. The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) jeers when I ask for the resolution. Is this the new politics that would destroy? I have a high regard for the hon. gentleman but jeering of that kind does not add to it.

Mr. Stewart: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, my amusement was not prompted by the right hon. gentleman's aside to his seatmate. It was prompted by a remark made by the hon. gentleman who sits directly behind me, which I found very amusing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sorry. I hasten at once to say to the hon. gentleman that I am glad there are times for humour. The resolution is as follows:

> This house strongly deplores and condemns this government's actions in having the R.C.M. Police provide information to the government as to the past conduct of all members of parliament—

What about you Liberal members? Have you got nothing in the closet? Watch out, because the Prime Minister asked that you all be looked into. He was not so sure of you either. I repeat the resolution:

> This house strongly deplores and condemns this government's actions in having the R.C.M. Police provide information to the government as to the past conduct of all members of parliament generally, a course of action which would destroy the independence of all members and undermine the institution of parliament.

The Prime Minister ridicules that. I say no more about the resolution. We have established the facts. They tried to silence us. They tried to prevent me saying what is known across this country. I do not want to quote editorials but there are many. Here is one headed "Political Malice", and another, "A New Pearson". Men and women in Canada cannot understand it. In correspondence to me they say: This is not in keeping with the man we thought we had; we did not agree with his views, but that he would fall for this kind of thing, no matter whether activated by the President of the Privy Council or the Minister of Justice or any of the others, makes a sad day for parliament.

The Liberals have not come out yet with the argument that members have to be careful how they vote on this motion lest they defeat the government. Well, one of the great authorities in this country is Dr. Eugene Forsey—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister smiles about that but Dr. Forsey is an authority on national and international affairs. This is what he says:

> A fresh election now, on the old distribution of seats, would be the ultimate outrage. Until redistribution can come into effect, a few months hence, some means must be found to carry on—

Then he goes on to say:

> Mr. Pearson could follow the example of Mr. Disraeli in 1868. Disraeli's government was defeated April 30, 1868, by a vote of 330-265, ... On May 4, Disraeli told the house that he had obtained the Queen's consent to a dissolution "as soon as the public interests will permit,"—

The government went ahead and carried on for several months. It got the necessary legislation passed and, indeed, dissolution did not take place until November 11.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Second, the government cannot rush into an election. The Prime Minister asked for the votes of the people of Canada so that he could get a majority and he did not get a majority. I prefer the objectiveness of Dr. Forsey to the uncertainty of the Minister of Transport.

> The Liberals could simply resign (if they asked for an immediate dissolution, the Governor General would be bound to refuse, because of the redistribution situation). The Governor General would then send for . . .

The Leader of the Opposition

. . . and ask him to form a government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They wanted a majority and what did they end up with? A minority. I am just quoting from an authority and they do not like authorities. They do not like the truth given by the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police any more than they like the objectivity of Dr. Forsey.

Then he goes on to say that if the Governor General were to take it that we could not form a government, even a caretaker government, he could call an all-party conference to consider letting someone form a coalition caretaker government from the various representatives in this house, who in a community of endeavour would have to carry on similarly to what was done in Australia and New Zealand. I point this out because that is all they have left.

What we have before us, Mr. Speaker, is an explanation from the Prime Minister which is not in accordance with the facts. This is the last chance for parliament. Are we to be puppets in the hands of a Prime Minister who keeps dossiers on members? I do not know who these members are but he has dossiers on two or three of them. Watch out. Some day they will be produced. That is the position today. That is the position in respect of which the Canadian people have the right to be disturbed and which should receive the condemnation of hon. members whatever their party in this House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister rise to ask a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rise to ask the right hon. gentleman whether I might now ask the question I wished to put earlier. In view of the reference the hon. gentleman made to McCarthyism, would the hon. gentleman now make a public apology to the hon.

member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay)?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I never knew that shoes were connected with McCarthyism.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Matapédia-Matane is Mr. Tremblay.

Mr. Starr: What apology do you want?

Mr. Pickersgill: You might well ask.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Minister of Forestry rising to ask a question?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman this question which is a fundamental one in a way. If I understood the hon. gentleman exactly this afternoon, he said that the R.C.M.P. commissioner in a way—

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, this afternoon the Prime Minister presented his case for asking the house to vote against an amendment and since that time the major part of the opposition's time has been taken up with ministers and members of the government rising on points of order.

Mr. Starr: The government.

Mr. Douglas: Irrelevant and meaningless questions have been raised and we have had no opportunity—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: I should like to suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that we should allow the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam to complete his point of order and I will then hear the question of privilege.

Mr. Greene: Let him state it.

Mr. Douglas: I am glad the Minister of Agriculture recognizes who is at fault in this instance.

Members of the various parties, Mr. Speaker, have had no opportunity whatsoever to make a statement on their position in the light of the Prime Minister's statement this afternoon. With the very limited time we have left, it seems to me it ought not to be taken up by questions or points of order on this matter.

Mr. Greene: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has any right to impute motives to any member of this house. If we feel the rules of the house should be abided by and wish to raise points of order in this regard, we have every right to do so without hearing the sanctimonious insinuations of the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Does the hon. Minister of Forestry wish to ask a question?

I must remind him that he may ask it only if the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) permits him to do so, as part of his speech.

[English]

Mr. Sauvé: Will the Leader of the Opposition permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lapointe.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Several questions have been asked. The debate will be closed in 25 minutes and we did not have the opportunity to put in one word yet, nor has the party sitting on our left. What will happen if all the ministers ask questions? We cannot get the floor.

Mr. Speaker: Order. According to standing orders, the hon. Leader of the Opposition is allowed to speak without any time limit when he has the floor and, if he so wishes, he can accept, as an integral part of his speech, any question directed to him. I have no authority to prevent the minister from putting a question to the Leader of the Opposition if the latter accepts to answer it.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, a supply motion is before the house, but not a word has been said about supply yet.

The government is seeking authorization to spend money, but nothing has been said about that.

When the estimates were considered last January and February, not a word was said about government expenditures or how the people's money had been spent. The Spencer case was discussed, then the Munsinger case, and now we are discussing the McLellan case. When we should be finding out how the people's money is spent, we are discussing all sorts of thing.

We are supposed to be on supply, but we are discussing scandals, investigations and what not.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, $2,400 million are being paid to the federal government as taxes by the province of Quebec. And we have two days to discuss how these taxes will be spent.

What did we speak about? Not about supply at all, nor about the budget or estimates, but about other things. There has been mudslinging from both sides, and the people have not been mentioned.

What would happen, Mr. Speaker, if elections were called on the matter under discussion for the last two days? Well I, for one, would have to tell the people in Quebec: When we should be discussing how to spend your tax money, we talk about all sorts of other things. If the people were aware of what is taking place in parliament whenever the expenditure of the people's money is under consideration, I feel that the people would demand that we close up parliament.

Mr. Allard: It gets depressing.

Mr. Grégoire: It is depressing, as the hon. member for Sherbrooke has said.

Mr. Speaker, it never fails. We thought we were clear of that sort of thing for a month at least, but no. As soon as we finish with one, off we go with another. We did not initiate this. But why are we always forced into such discussions? Why can we not finally come around to legislating for the people, instead of spending our time discussing scandals and throwing mud at the next guy?

It seems simple to me, Mr. Speaker. We are on a supply motion. The discussion was initiated on one subject. An amendment was introduced and we are required to limit ourselves to that question. Nothing is being said of any interest to the people.

Do you not think there are many people in Quebec who want to separate from the federal government? Why? Just look at what is being accomplished in this parliament: 0.00.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) spoke a long time. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) also. Has any mention been made of the peoples' taxes? No. It is becoming a habit, it seems. Unless there are changes, let us not be surprised if confederation does not long hold together, if the people become discouraged with its members of parliament. If this keeps up—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must also rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) may not relish the subject now under discussion, but under the rules, we are restricted in this debate to the subject matter of the amendment introduced in this house. I take it for granted that the remarks the hon. member for Lapointe is making are in the nature of a preamble to what he intends to say later when he comes around to the amendment, but I should like to point out to him that under the rules, he should discuss the subject matter of the amendment.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, you have just confirmed my own findings. The rules are so poorly designed that if I want to speak at all, I am required to speak about scandal. You will have to admit that this is the final inconsistency and stupidity, to be forced to talk about scandals. Can we not say a few words about supply? Are we not on a supply motion? That is the main motion.

The amendment. Well, a Conservative member once again put us on this business of scandals and we have to talk about them. Mr. Speaker, the rules themselves require that. That is why I say—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not know whether I should intervene again at this time, but I shall point out to the hon. member that the rules provide, should he so wish, that he may speak to supply after tonight's vote.

Mr. Grégoire: That is the most logical thing yet, Mr. Speaker. Two days are provided to debate supply but in the final analysis, there is only one half hour after the vote, for discussion. That is marvellous. Out of two days on supply, half an hour is allowed, after the vote.

In the amendment, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is taken to task for asking for files on all kinds of things concerning the members of parliament in the last 10 years. The Prime Minister has told us his side of the story which differs from commissioner McLellan's. One of them did not explain himself well or did not tell the whole truth.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister rose to state: here is what I said. If he feels that commissioner McLellan did not tell the whole truth, it is his duty to discharge him. He has no alternative. It is either the Prime Minister or the R.C.M.P. commissioner who has to go. That is the decision facing the Prime Minister. If the R.C.M.P. commissioner has told the truth, the Prime Minister has to leave. If the Prime Minister is telling the truth, then the R.C.M.P. commissioner has to leave. There is no other choice.

They cannot both stay because there would always be one of them who did not tell the truth, maybe not on purpose, but it remains that he would not have told the truth.

I was surprised to see that commissioner McLellan gave answers so quickly, even without being asked anything. From what I can see, questions were not even put to him and the R.C.M.P. commissioner gave answers, and quickly at that, apparently happy to do so. His attitude gave me the impression, and other members told me they had the same impression, that the R.C.M.P. commissioner felt that things had not been going too well for some time and took that opportunity to make some statements and say afterwards: Now, if the Prime Minister wants to discharge me, everyone will claim he is getting even and my position is safe.

That, Mr. Speaker, is an interpretation which is entirely logical.

Should the Prime Minister discharge commissioner McLellan, many people will say that he is getting even. And the commissioner is sure of keeping his post, or, at least, he wanted to make sure he would keep it that way. If you read the evidence over, you will see that the answers were given quickly, that the commissioner even anticipated the questions, that he gave the answers freely without even waiting for the questions. That is strange.

But on the other hand, all that was brought to light in order to distract attention from the Munsinger case, to put the blame on someone else. The Leader of the Opposition would be happy to focus on the Prime Minister the attention now centered upon him, to try to prevent the inquiry into the Munsinger case.

Mr. Speaker, the house or the Canadian people should not allow attention to be drawn off the main point, which is the Munsinger investigation itself.

As far as the other problem is concerned, the right hon. Prime Minister gave us explanations. He stated what he had said that day he requested the reports. As I said a while ago, this is inconsistent with what the R.C.M.P. commissioner said.

The Prime Minister knows very well now that there remains only one solution for him and for the R.C.M.P. He should not need much time to decide. I agree that the examination and cross-examination of commissioner McLellan has not yet taken place. If he wished to correct or justify certain answers he gave at that time, the Prime Minister would have a part to play. If his statement is corrected in the sense mentioned by the Prime Minister, the case will be settled; if not, the Prime Minister will have to dismiss commissioner McLellan.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Valade: May I put a question?

[English]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the following questions will be discussed on the adjournment motion tonight: the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), External Affairs—mainland China—possibility of recognition; the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer), Agriculture—request for white paper on national policy; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Old Age Security—request for increase to $100 per month.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGE IN TIME FOR TAKING OF VOTE ON AMENDMENT TO SUPPLY MOTION

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in relation to the time of the vote which is scheduled for 8.15 p.m. today. In view of the fact there has been an important statement by the Prime Minister today, I am wondering whether the house would be amenable to the idea that each of the opposition parties be given an opportunity to make at least a brief statement. Perhaps we could have unanimous consent to postponing the time of the taking of the vote until the hon. member for Lapointe has completed his remarks and the leader of the Social Credit party and the leader of this party have had an opportunity of speaking.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: I would suggest, Mr Speaker, that we postpone the taking of the vote until nine o'clock so that the time between eight and nine could be divided equally among those members.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre?

Business of the House

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, if it is clearly understood that when the hon. member for Lapointe has completed his speech the leader of the Social Credit party and the leader of the New Democratic Party will have an opportunity to speak and that the debate will then be concluded, we are agreeable.

Mr. Speaker: Is that the understanding of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: I rise on a question of privilege.

I should like to point out that there are two independent members in this house and that they too are entitled to have the floor.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member against the motion which has just been made?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, unless the two independent members are allowed to have the floor for a few minutes.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to agree. On behalf of my leader let me say that I understand he intends to speak for not more than 15 minutes.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I would keep my remarks within a limit which would permit the independent members to have their say as well.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the suggestion now that the two independent members will take part in the debate?

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: We are asking that either one be given the floor for not more than ten minutes.

[English]

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, what I meant to say is that we can still keep the nine o'clock deadline if we allow one of these members to speak, if that is your wish.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member for Lapointe will complete his remarks and that there will be one speaker for the Social Credit Party, one speaker for the New Democratic Party and then the member for Trois-Rivières? In any event, the outside limit will be nine o'clock so that the vote will be called for nine o'clock rather than 8.15.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, may we have the assurance that the independent members will not be allowed to go beyond that and that enough time will be left—what would happen if the N.D.P. member were to speak for three quarters of an hour, to say nothing of other members?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this shall be made an order of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Valade: I have a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot raise a question of privilege now; it is after six o'clock.

Mr. Valade: But this point has been before the house for the last ten minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Is it unanimously agreed that we sit after six o'clock to hear a question of privilege?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Fairweather.

Mr. Valade: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Valade: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Before the House adjourned at six o'clock, I rose to ask permission of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) to ask a question. The occupant of the chair at that time did not recognize me. After this right was refused, there were five members who rose on questions of privilege or points of order. They were all recognized. I was deprived of my right, without any explanation from the Chair. I believe I have the right to put a question to the hon. member for Lapointe if he would allow me to do so. On this score I think my right as an individual member of parliament has not been recognized. I hope that I can now put the question, if the hon. member for Lapointe allows me to do so and if the Chair would recognize this right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will be pleased to recognize the right of the hon. member to put a question if the hon. member for Lapointe is willing to accept it.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, as I do not have too much time left, I would ask the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) to wait until I have completed my remarks. I will then be only too glad to answer his questions.

[English]

Mr. Valade: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I forgot to mention when I stated my question of privilege that the house did not adjourn until seven minutes after six. I rose at one minute before six, but I was refused that right to ask a question.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: When I have completed my remarks, I will be pleased to answer the questions of the hon. member for Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Speaker, in his testimony the R.C.M.P. commissioner made a few statements provoking the ire or the anger of certain members of the opposition. This afternoon the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) made a correction. If we accept his statement, then we will vote against the amendment; on the other hand, if we vote in favour of the amendment, we would be saying that the Prime Minister lied when making his statement.

Mr. Speaker, this is a poor situation, because not only have scandals been raised, but even the Prime Minister's word is being questioned. Of course, we do not have all the facts in this matter. There were witnesses to the conversation between the Prime Minister and the chief commissioner of the R.C.M.P. The present President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau) was there, and so was the secretary of the Privy Council, Mr. Robertson.

Obviously, if we had the opportunity, before the vote, to question those witnesses, we would have a better idea of what may have occurred during that conversation. But the vote will soon be taken and we will not be able to question the other witnesses. We must therefore vote on the amendment without having heard those witnesses.

Mr. Speaker, for the time being, I do not hesitate to say that, even though the Prime Minister is a Liberal, which may be a defect, on the other hand I believe what he said. I think he is an honest man and I do not hesitate to believe what he tells us. Just as I can say to the Leader of the Opposition that I did not doubt his word either. I have always respected him to the extent that, when he rose in this house to make as strong a statement as the Prime Minister made this afternoon, I always took his word for it, as I did in the case of the Prime Minister. Everything is based, as I said this afternoon, on accusations made on both sides. But when one considers who makes the accusations, the value of the argument put forward by the one who moved the amendment yesterday is reduced.

For two or three years now, in the House of Commons, a pretence is made at discussion in order to sully reputations. The opposition blames the government today for doing what it has been doing for three years. For instance, we saw the reputation of the member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) tarnished without his being even given a chance to justify himself and without his accusers being requested to retract their words.

Those who doubt other people's word are the first to object to light being thrown on accusations made against them.

I remember among other things—and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) must recall this—that he was once accused himself in this house of making false statements under oath. The hon. member for Yukon was accused of this before and he did not want the truth to come out in this regard; he did not want those who laid the charges to be in a position to prove them. Charges had been made against him that he had made false statements under oath. However, he did not want those who had made such charges to be given an opportunity to prove them. He took advantage of exceptional circumstances to camouflage the affair. But we were not convinced by that. I, for one, was never convinced; I do not say he was wrong, but I know he avoided any clarification of that matter.

Those were serious charges, charges of having made untrue statements twice, under oath. The hon. member for Yukon, as I say, did not want light to be thrown on that matter.

Now, they are the ones who make accusations, who smear reputations, but when they are involved, they do not want any part of it. The hon. member of Yukon knows that I speak the truth. When he was offered to have the matter referred to the committee on priviliges and elections, he objected. He cannot deny that and he does not deny it. Besides, it is in Hansard; I do not know the date when this took place, but it is in Hansard.

What does this prove? Since mention is made of what detracts from parliament's reputation, I take the opportunity to point out this fact, after due consideration. In my opinion, the accusations made still remain. Indirect means were used to conceal those accusations, but they still stand. As long as the member for Yukon will not take it upon himself to refer the matter to the committee on privileges and elections, I shall have my doubts.

Mr. Speaker, if the member for Yukon wants to protest against this, he is free to do so. But he knows I am right and that he refused to deny the accusations made against him. He has nothing to answer to this.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a subamendment to the amendment of the member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather), before my time is up.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That all the words after the word "That" be struck out and replaced by the following words: the actual operation "smear" which has been taking place for too long, should cease immediately and that parliament should proceed to a sound and honest legislation for the well-being of the Canadian people.

Mr. Valade: Does the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Grégoire: I shall conclude my remarks before answering the question of the hon. member.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

We tried to draft that amendment in such a way that no one can accuse us of indulging in petty politics or taking a roundabout course.

We would simply like the house to express its wishes clearly today, because we are all tired of those endless discussions always bent on destroying reputations.

We would like to see an end to that and see the government concern itself from now on with legislating for the good of the people. Enough of personalities, let us concern ourselves with the people; they are waiting for us to legislate in their interest. I think that all parties in the house should agree on that. Let us bury the hatchet and work from now on for the good of the people.

It seems to me that, from all sides of the house, members should vote unanimously for that subamendment to put a stop to those slander campaigns and prevent us from losing more time as we have been doing for too long; from now on, let us legislate in the interest of the people.

The hatchet should be buried to allow us to work for the welfare of the people. It is time for the house to assume its responsibilities. A great number of bills are waiting to be considered and passed. The people are looking towards parliament and waiting for us to legislate for them.

We take money out of their pockets as taxes but there is never any time to discuss their problems.

Time is spent discussing all kinds of other things. That is what happened, as I said this afternoon, when the estimates were considered. Right now a supply motion is before us and what are we talking about? Scandals again.

It would be time to proceed with legislation. That is what the Ralliement Créditiste recommends.

I am convinced that a good number of people in this house will support us. Let us put a stop at last to those endless and useless fights and let us get to work and legislate to improve the lot of our fellow-citizens.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question which I have long wanted to ask him?

Mr. Grégoire: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Valade: Before the six o'clock recess the hon. member for Lapointe said that the Tories and the Grits were smearing each other over the Munsinger affair. Will the hon.

member for Lapointe admit that the first member in this house to mention the name of a former minister supposedly implicated in the Munsinger affair was none other than his present leader, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette)?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. If I named the minister mentioned, I never made any accusations against him, and I formally stated in this house that if this concerned only the private life of certain people, the federal parliament was not the place to name or accuse anyone. I did not make accusations against the minister in question, and the hon. member is the one to mention him.

Mr. Valade: Yet, you did mention his name.

Mr. Caouette: Of course, just as I can mention yours anywhere.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair would like to make reference to the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). May I refer the house to citation 203, to be found at page 171 of Beauchesne's fourth edition.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Are you going to give us a chance to argue on the validity of the motion, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should like to refer to citation 203(1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition. Before doing so, may I say to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), since time is limited, that my mind is made up as to the validity of the subamendment. I shall now proceed with my ruling at this time.

Citation 203(1) at page 171 says:

> It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed. Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the house the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

May I go further and cite for hon. members citation 203(5):

> An amendment was ruled out because it raised a new question which could only be considered on a distinct motion after notice.

It is the opinion of the Chair that the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) is not relevant to the amendment and, second, that it raises a distinct question which can be considered only by a motion on notice. The Chair therefore rules that the amendment raised by the hon. member for Lapointe is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is a pity you did not ask the opinion of the house, because although I had read the two citations you quoted I wanted to give a third one which would have settled the matter. It was—

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Order. The ruling has been given.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has already made a ruling regarding the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I take part in this debate with a heavy heart because we in this party feel that parliament has had too much mudslinging, scandal mongering and character assassination over the past number of months. We should have welcomed having parliament get down to some of the fundamental matters which affect the welfare of this country.

However, the statement which was attributed in the public press to the commissioner of the R.C.M. Police, in a recent appearance before a judicial inquiry, is something, first of all, which affects the rights of members of this house, and secondly, affects the administration of justice. If the police can be used for political purposes of any kind, under any circumstances, then we have begun the destruction of democracy and the establishment of a police state.

It is therefore important that this matter be discussed. I only regret that some statement such as the one the Prime Minister made this afternoon was not made last Friday, because it is idle to argue that we ought to wait until the judicial inquiry is completed. This is a collateral matter. The statement of the R.C.M.P. commissioner was carried in every newspaper, over every radio, and on every television service, and it has already been judged in the court of public opinion.

The members of this house and the people of Canada were entitled to a clear and explicit statement from the Prime Minister about this. Last Friday there was ample opportunity to make such a statement. It was not made.

There being only a few moments before the vote is taken, and some other hon. members wishing to speak, I shall make my remarks as concise and to the point as possible. The basic issue in this amendment is whether or not the Prime Minister asked the commissioner of the R.C.M. Police to ascertain whether he had any information on his files which would indicate any impropriety or anything of a scandalous nature involving any hon. member in any party, over the last ten years.

No one will question the right of the government to use files in order to take action against any member of parliament or against anyone else who has broken the law, or who is guilty of some misdemeanour. But what has alarmed the country, and what has disturbed and dismayed a great many Canadians is the possibility that R.C.M.P. files were to be used in order to intimidate or to blackmail members of parliament.

If that process were to be started with members of parliament, there is no reason why it should not be extended to candidates; there is no reason why it should not be extended to the presidents and secretaries of political organizations in the constituencies; there is no reason why it should not eventually be extended to looking at income tax returns or at any other type of documents which have always been considered confidential. Therefore the house and the country are properly exercised about the statement which was attributed to the commissioner of the R.C.M.P.

This afternoon the Prime Minister said that he had not asked for an investigation by the R.C.M.P. into any of the private improprieties, or into any of the things of a scandalous nature concerning the private lives of members of parliament. Mr. Speaker, I accept the Prime Minister's statement. I do not think we can have government in this country unless we are prepared to accept the statement of the Prime Minister made on the floor of the House of Commons.

However, when the hon. member for Lapointe says that anyone who votes for this amendment is saying that the Prime Minister lied, I want to take issue with him. While the Prime Minister denied asking for an investigation into the private peccadillos of members of parliament, he did say, as I understood him, that he had asked the R.C.M.P. commissioner to examine the files to see if there were any improprieties, or anything of a scandalous nature respecting any members in any parties, over the last ten years, with reference to their public lives. That would be with reference to such things as intervening in matters havi..g to do with the Department of Justice, or with the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, or with anything having to do with security. Mr. Speaker, I submit that while that is less reprehensible than asking the R.C.M.P. to look into the private lives of members, it is still reprehensible.

I should like to know, for instance, why the Prime Minister would ask for this information about members of parliament, going back over a period of over ten years. I should like to know what he proposed to do with this information. I should like to know what action he proposed to take on the basis of those files. If he were here and if he were prepared to tell the house that, we might understand his motives.

I do not for a moment question the Prime Minister's right to ask for any information that he can get regarding members of the cabinet and parliamentary secretaries because, with the collective responsibility of cabinet, he is responsible for anything they do and he must know everything about cabinet members that it is possible for him to find out.

Nor do I question his right, through the Minister of Justice, to say to the commissioner of the R.C.M. Police: "If you had information on your files regarding any members of parliament or anybody else on which you have not taken action because of political pressures in the past, I, as Prime Minister, am now authorizing you to take such action, and to take it into the courts, and to take it in the proper manner through the due process of law".

But, Mr. Speaker, I object strongly to the Prime Minister setting himself up as a judge and jury and having placed on his desk files collected by the R.C.M.P., and having discretion placed in his hands as to what use will be made of those files. If there is anything in those files which indicates that some criminal act has been committed, if there is any misdemeanor shown there, then the R.C.M.P. should have acted on them long ago. If the Minister of Justice wants to instruct the R.C.M.P. to take such action now he will have our full support. But surely it is an entirely different thing for the Prime Minister of the country to go on a fishing expedition, to be poking through the political garbage cans of this country to see whether he can find something which has an unpleasant odour in connection with the public actions of members of this parliament. I say this is a very dangerous precedent which the Prime Minister has established by his speech today.

If the amendment is refuted, does it mean that this House of Commons is giving its assent to a new principle in government? Does it mean that future Prime Ministers will upon taking office have the full assent of parliament in instructing the head of the mounted police to begin curry combing the files to see whether he can find some morsel of gossip or some peccadillo which the Prime Minister can keep up his sleeve for future use?

I am sure the house is fully seized of the importance of the issue at stake. We have always prided ourselves, living in a democracy, that the administration of justice and the functioning of the police were free from political interference and partisanship—that if some person has committed a wrong the R.C.M.P. will consult the law officers to see whether or not they have a prima facie case. And if they have sufficient evidence to warrant the laying of charges, the person so charged will have the opportunity to defend himself in court through the due processes of law.

The moment we begin to destroy this basic principle of democracy, the moment we allow a prime minister, no matter who he may be or what party he heads, to begin collecting R.C.M.P. files for his own use, at his own discretion, we have taken the first step toward establishing a police state in this country.

I want to conclude by saying that I do not accuse the Prime Minister of lying. I am prepared to accept the statement he made this afternoon. I am saying that on the basis of his own statement as to the instructions he gave to the R.C.M.P. commissioner, he erred in giving those instructions and made a most unhappy departure from the long established principles of democratic government.

I want to say to the Prime Minister, or to his colleagues who can convey this to him, that if he is prepared to rise before this vote is taken and apologize to the house for the instructions he gave, and assure the house that this practice will not be followed and that his apology will constitute a precedent against any future prime minister following such a course of action, then I am quite prepared to see this amendment dropped. But if the Prime Minister is not prepared to do this, I say that on the basis of his own statement to the house this afternoon he stands condemned of having given instructions for an investigation into the lives and activities of members of parliament which, if allowed to stand, will do irreparable damage to the democratic form of government in Canada.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Not having had an opportunity to take part in this debate, particularly following the participation in it by the Prime Minister this afternoon, when he gave his explanation of the events which led to the charges contained in the amendment before us, I am grateful for the few moments available to me at the present time to set out the position of the Social Credit party.

I believe that we as members of parliament ought to be more concerned with this debate than with any debate which has arisen for a long time. It is not just parliament which is at the heart of this issue; it is the rights and responsibilities of every member of this house.

In the first instance, the principle stated in the amendment is a vital and basic principle of parliament. In my opinion it is not the prerogative of the Prime Minister or of any member of the government to peruse R.C.M.P. files or reports relating to members of this house, nor is it the responsibility of the R.C.M.P. to provide such information to the government about the past or present conduct of members.

There may be two important exceptions—one, where there is a question of the security of the nation being involved, and the other where there has been some transgression of the Criminal Code. In either case the R.C.M.P. must report to the Minister of Justice, or, under the new organization of government, to the Solicitor General. If the government or any of its members fail to observe these basic principles then, truly, the useful existence of every member of parliament will have been destroyed and the institution of parliament itself undermined.

We must therefore support the principle set out in this amendment, that is to say, that the R.C.M.P. shall not be used by any member of the government to provide information regarding the conduct of members of parliament; nor is it the right of the R.C.M.P. to divulge such information except to the minister in the cabinet who is responsible for the administration of justice.

To me, the whole matter centres on one simple question: Is the Prime Minister responsible for parliament or is he responsible to parliament? I do not think any Prime Minister is responsible for me. I think I have a responsibility to him as leader of the government of a nation of which this parliament is the most vital part.

I do not think that the Prime Minister can rightfully take upon his shoulders the responsibility for members of parliament because basically, according to the principles of parliament as I understand them, under the traditional parliamentary system in which we operate we are all responsible to parliament. Therefore if situations do arise where the conduct of an hon. member is involved there are other definite, specific channels through which he can move. In this regard you, Mr. Speaker, are one who holds a most vital position, and it is to you that the Prime Minister and all of us must look on matters respecting the conduct of hon. members.

The Prime Minister has today outlined his position with respect to the particular situation in which we find ourselves. He has stated the circumstances as he saw them. He was involved in a situation at the time when he sought the assistance of the commissioner of the R.C.M.P., a situation which I am sure we all would agree was a most difficult one for him. I do not for a moment question his motives in doing what he did.

Because he is the Prime Minister, because he is the leader of the government, I believe it is my responsibility to accept the statement he made, although I cannot agree that in each instance he was warranted in taking the action that he did, nor can I agree that he gave us the explanation as clearly as he might have done. Nevertheless, if we have come to a point in this parliament where we do not and cannot accept the word of the Prime Minister, then indeed we are in a sorry mess.

It is only reasonable to say that the statement he has given is his explanation of why he felt he must do those things was in the best interests of the country. On reflection however, I hope he will see the errors of his action, and make sure that not only does this mistake not recur but that steps be taken to guard the interests of every member of the house and preserve the rights and privileges of the house.

Having said that, I come back to the issue involved. Yesterday, as I listened to the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) presenting the background to the amendment he moved, I could not but agree with what he said. He set a very high level and tone for this debate, based upon what I am convinced was his sincere conviction. But what has happened since then is that we have lost ourselves once again in the constant bickering and in-fighting which has characterized this house for the last three or four years, and which has been responsible for the lowering of the image of parliament and the lack of respect for this house across the country.

Therefore we have to come to the reality of the situation in which we are. At this point it is basically a political one. What we have seen happening today is something that has been most discouraging to hon. members who want to get on with the business they were elected to do. It might be well if an arena could be found somewhere for the leaders of the two main political parties, in which they could go to it, thus allowing the rest of us to get on with the work that has to be done.

To precipitate a crisis in the country at this time will solve nothing. In saying this I could add we do not have respect for either of the two main leaders for the way in which they have faced up to their responsibilities in this house. The stability of parliament and the ability of all of us who make up parliament to get on with the job are things that are our own direct responsibility, and theirs.

I must say that whatever happens in the vote tonight, it is a responsibility of all of us to awaken ourselves to the fact very quickly. Certainly I am not going to be led into some pious crusade for self-righteousness as sought by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) as he spoke last night, because I think he dropped this debate into the political doldrums and into the wrangling in which he find ourselves today. So, Mr. Speaker, despite the scandalmongering and character assassination which has characterized this session of parliament, we must be objective tonight and face up to the real issue before the house. We must continue to deplore this type of thing. We believe something better is expected of us. Sir Francis Bacon had something to say about this type of situation. I was reminded of his words by a statement in the press by a journalist friend of mine, who made a case for the fact that the people of Canada want to be governed. Not only do they want to be governed but they expect to be governed. The words of Sir Francis Bacon have survived many governments and many parliaments, and they are:

> When discords and quarrels and factions are carried openly and audaciously, it is a sign that the reverence of government is lost.

Here is the key reason why we have lost the respect of the people who have elected us to do a job which they still expect us to do.

I think it was unfortunate today that the Prime Minister, or at least some members of his cabinet, did not see fit to let the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) put on record what was already public knowledge—the words that were first spoken before the inquiry by the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. That is another item that will have to be marked down as an error. Though I regard it as such, I must respect the Prime Minister's statement and what he outlined to be his reasons for his actions regarding the file summary which was given to him by the R.C.M.P. commissioner and which, as he explained, was filed away by the chairman of the security committee in the Privy Council.

Though we realize the conditions which existed in November, 1964, I think we can say it was to the credit of the Prime Minister that he called in the Leader of the Opposition and explained the situation to him in February, 1965. If there were any doubt about the motives of the Prime Minister, this is corroboration for what he said today, because it should be obvious that he was trying to do what he thought would be the right thing. To impute selfish motives to him in this, is to cast a slur on all members of parliament and to say that all members are here for selfish reasons.

On the strength of the statement of the Prime Minister today and the events of November and December, 1964, we in the Social Credit party are compelled to take a position where we say that the subject matter of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Royal is not relevant to the situation that is before us, and therefore we cannot support it on that basis.

I would just say this in closing, Mr. Speaker, that this does not take away—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Hypocrisy rampant.

Mr. Thompson: Would hon. members please give me a little of the respect that they get from us when they speak?

Mr. Ricard: You don't deserve it.

Mr. Thompson: Our action on this vote tonight does not take away one iota from the principle that is enunciated and stated in the amendment for certainly, if the Prime Minister had not explained his position today, it would have weakened the very warp and woof of this institution.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for bringing some of the hon. Conservative members out of their dishonourable noise making. This outlines our position, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will, of necessity, be brief for two obvious reasons: First, only a few minutes remain and second, it seems that all that needed to be said in this debate has been said eloquently.

This afternoon, when we, the independents, claimed the right to express our views for a few minutes. I heard someone on the opposition side say:

[English]

You will vote Liberal anyway.

[Translation]

This worthy colleague felt, as I did, that his chief had not succeeded in bringing me around to his point of view.

I have not always voted with the Liberals, I am not committed to vote with them, but in the circumstances, I have listened to all that has been said on both sides of the house. Some things struck me as an independent member, for instance when someone said that it could not be imagined that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) could have strayed from the truth. It should, however, be said about him that he is an honourable man since, this very afternoon, he staked his honour.

Morality in Government

I was surprised to hear the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas), whom I hold in high regard, say, after admitting the Prime Minister's honesty: But after all, what does the Prime Minister intend to do with all this information? What evidence do we have that he does not intend to use it to compromise some member of the house?

I believe that the evidence we have is what the leader of the New Democratic Party recognized a while ago: the honesty of the Prime Minister and the fact that he has given his word of honour.

What more can be asked of him? I presume the leader of the New Democratic Party would not ask the Prime Minister to kneel in the center of the house to beg forgiveness for what he himself calls an admission. I cannot imagine that he could ask for such a thing.

Besides, I find that the amendment on which we will vote is machiavellian to a certain extent. It comes from a side of the house which, for two or three years, has been accusing the government of hiding scandals, of condoning to a certain extent all kinds of wrongdoing, of encouraging all kinds of crimes. And now the Prime Minister is accused of going where he found such information, that is the R.C.M.P.—such information cannot be found elsewhere—to find out if anything can be held against any member of parliament. It seems to me that he showed courage in view of the fact that—and those who are here know it—he asked some of his closest collaborators to resign following information he received. Therefore, he had the courage of his convictions and we should pay tribute to his courage and integrity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mongrain: Besides, Mr. Speaker, we find something else shocking. It is the fact that some learned lawyers agreed to play that game. I have a deep respect for the bar, even if at times I thank the Good Lord for not making a lawyer out of me. I see many lawyers who do a thing which appears to me to go against their professional ethics: they allow themselves to bring here all the evidence given to a royal commission, to evaluate it, to weigh it, to read it as they wish, and in some cases they lean obviously on the side of their own electoral interests. It has always seemed to me, as an ordinary man, that it was against the most elementary decency to do such things and that the house should give the judge who is hearing the evidence time to complete his case and submit his findings before getting into the act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mongrain: Another thing surprises me in all that, Mr. Speaker. I just want to point out that everything that is happening now is the result of an unfortunate state of mind, which, as everyone said, is beginning to discredit parliament before public opinion. One or two members here, for whom I have a deep respect, should use their authority to say that things have gone far enough.

If this is not stopped as soon as possible, it will become a sort of electoral Russian roulette turning against the leaders of the main parties in the house. A sort of parliamentary masochism is being allowed which scandalizes public opinion and only kills in the rising generation any respect for the institution of parliament which we are trying to restore and promote in every way.

In my opinion, the two old parties should cease these overly violent and partisan battles. I think that we should instead discuss the value of future legislation and better ways to ensure the public good. Like many others who spoke before me, I believe that this is what the leaders of the two old parties should be concerned with, particularly the Leader of the Opposition, since it is he, in fact, who raises or allows these objections. He said that this is his role. I know it is, but his objection must be based on the discussion of bills promoting the good of the nation; it must not lead to discussion of slander or be inspired by obsessions which every day bring up in the house sickening details which we discuss to the great disgust of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the motion tonight because I do not want to be party to this waste of time and all these scandals, this whole sickening atmosphere which has been allowed to pervade this house far too long.

I shall resume my seat after this plea because, again, I respect the Leader of the Opposition. I ask him to put an end to all this slander as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member in his remarks referred to the fact that he did not want to take part in this nauseating procedure. I would call attention to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a point of order, I would ask him to state it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that prior to the supper hour it was through the request of the hon. member, who said he did not want to take part in this nauseating procedure, that an arrangement was made by an order of the house that the house sit beyond the voting hour until nine o'clock in order to give the same hon. member an opportunity to take part in the debate. He now has stated he would not want to take part in it, and it was through his arrangements that the house sat until nine o'clock to listen to him—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): —at his own request.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being nine o'clock, pursuant to a special order passed this day, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith the question on any amendment before the house.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Fairweather) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago I accepted a pair. My pair is absent tonight on government business. Accordingly, notwithstanding the particular nature of the issue involved in this vote, I had no alternative but to honour the pair. Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Howard: With respect to pairs, it was requested that I be paired this evening with an absent cabinet minister. In the circumstances, that was far too much of a sacrifice to make.

Mr. Chatterton: I was paired with the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who is away on government business. Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

PUBLIC SERVICE—JOHN KROEKER—ALLEGED IRREGULARITY IN DISMISSAL

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to take advantage of the opportunity given to members to raise a grievance before the final question is put on the motion. The grievance I raise is a matter that concerns me very deeply and affects the rights of a citizen of this country to free expression. The matter has been alluded to indirectly on many occasions but has never been placed before the house. No decision has been made by the government and no explanation has been given.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

On March 3, 1965 a senior actuary in the Department of Insurance, John Kroeker, was dismissed from the public service. The reason for his discharge was never stated. The method used to terminate his employment deprived him of severance pay of over $2,000. One of the principles of employment of professional men in the public service was raised but was never settled.

I do not want to go into the details of the reason for Mr. Kroeker's objection to his dismissal. He was in the employ, as I say, of the department of insurance. He is a Bachelor of Commerce from the University of Manitoba, a Fellow of the Society of Actuaries, and a member of the education and examination committee of the Society of Actuaries in the United States and Canada. He is married with seven children. His salary on discharge was $15,100.

In his mind, Mr. Kroeker's code of ethics of his profession came into question. He believed that an actuary has a professional obligation not only to his employer but to the public and to his professional colleagues. In his mind, there was a conflict between his government employment and his professional conduct. His integrity as an actuary, as he saw it, was in conflict with government policy. He was not prepared to sacrifice his integrity and he spoke out against the terms of the Canada Pension Plan, which was then being considered by parliament. I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that at the time in question the Canada Pension Plan had not been passed and had not become the law of the country. It was under consideration by parliament; we were considering the matter in committee of the whole in this house.

I should like to make a comparison between this situation and the professional integrity of an engineer who believes that the construction of certain work is dangerous to the public, but who is instructed nevertheless to complete it. Is it his duty to sit silent because policy has decreed that this work should be constructed? The situation of a medical doctor in the employ of the government service is also a similar comparison. Is a doctor required to do something that his professional ethics do not permit him to do merely because policy is involved?

The circumstances of his discharge were that Mr. Kroeker had criticized the Canada Pension Plan and had stated his criticism publicly. He was not the only person in the civil service who had such reservations about the plan, but he was the only person who spoke out. His criticism was based on his professional and personal opinion of its actuarial results and its future effect on the Canadian economy.

On or about March 3 he received a notice from the superintendent of insurance stating that he was being suspended. The reason given was "for reasons that are well known to you". He never received a definition of the reasons for his discharge. He appealed to the Civil Service Appeal Board; his appeal was heard and as a result he was discharged from the service.

Perhaps it might be said, Mr. Speaker, that a civil servant has no right to comment on a government proposal. However, I would point out that in this particular case numerous civil servants were then proceeding to go across the country praising the terms of the Canada Pension Plan, which was and had been a political proposal of the government in power. Therefore I would ask where the difference lies. If a civil servant is permitted to comment at all upon proposed legislation, surely the comment should not be limited merely to the expressions of people who are prepared to go out and support it. Surely those who are expert in the field and who oppose the plan should have some right to express their view in giving advice not only to the government but to parliament on the matter before them.

As a result of his discharge this man has not been able to obtain employment with a life insurance company or an actuarial firm since his release from the civil service. He has made an attempt on his own to find such employment and has been registered with the National Employment Service. He has had offers from the United States but does not wish to leave this country. He is presently self-employed on a commission basis with a financial house.

The first question I want to raise is that of his pension, quite apart from the question of his dismissal. If Mr. Kroeker had resigned he would have received some $2,000 severance pay. But since he stood by his principles of professional integrity as he saw them, and as a result was discharged, he stands to lose.

I should like to look into this matter for a moment, because I am going to suggest that, regardless of whether Mr. Kroeker was right or wrong in his statements, the then minister of finance, by his statement to the house, in fact deprived this man of his severance pay.

In 1961, when a special committee of the house was discussing section 60 of the Civil Service Act, the question of resignations was raised. A member of the commission on June 2, 1961 stated that employees are normally permitted to retire, in order to protect themselves, and presumably one element of such protection is a financial one. On March 1, 1965 the then minister of finance announced in the house that if Mr. Kroeker did not resign he would be discharged. This act of the government certainly eliminated the possibility of the routine resignation of Mr. Kroeker.

This whole matter concerns me, Mr. Speaker. It raises questions that I think ought to be considered. May I also ask this question: Why should this civil servant be deprived of his severance pay because he chose not to meekly resign? He may have been wrong in the opinions he expressed, but surely he should not be penalized because he decided that he wanted to be discharged so that he could appeal to the Civil Service Appeal Board.

Second, may I ask, what alternative did he have but to take this case to the appeal board, in view of the statement by the Minister of Finance whereby he lost his right to severance pay. This is the financial aspect of the matter.

I want to compare this case with that of George Victor Spencer. The main questions before the commission in that case were the question of Mr. Spencer's release from the government service and his pension rights. Whether or not you agree with Mr. Kroeker, he had the nerve to stand up, to put his job on the line, and to say: "I do not believe in all this. I am going to say so, and by doing that, I think I shall be doing my country a service".

I think that second thoughts about the Canada Pension Plan over a number of years will show that many of the matters that were raised in committee, and many of the matters that he raised were perfectly valid objections. In time amendments will have to be brought in to this plan.

However, here is a man who said: "I do not like this plan. I am involved in it. I know that everybody else is going around saying what a wonderful thing it is, but I know that it is not, from my professional knowledge of the plan itself, and from the way it is designed. I think I ought to say so." This man at least had courage. There are very few people left who have the courage, to say: "This is my conviction. I will put my job on the line". Remember, he was a man with a wife and seven children to support.

What he did was I think an act of bravery. I do not think it was an act of cowardice. I do not think the man should be pursued, as he is being pursued, to the point of making his name known across the country. I do not care whether he is right or wrong. Personally I think he was right, and I have said so. However, right or wrong, what comparison is there between this man who spoke out for himself and his children—he said he did not want his children raised under the provisions of this plan—and Mr. Spencer, who was, on his admission, an agent of a foreign government. I think that in all this there are certain matters which ought to be considered. This is a question which concerns me deeply.

We must also ask ourselves whether a professional man in the government service must compromise principles, if necessary, respecting any government policy which has not become legislation. There are many professional men in the public service, including those in the medical fields, in engineering, and so forth. What is their position if professionally they feel obliged to differ from conclusions which have been arrived at by a majority of their colleagues or by the government? Must they stay silent, or must they resign?

Is this the kind of civil service we want, where civil servants must knuckle under, and be prepared to compromise principles, if those principles do not happen to agree with government policy? I am raising this question because that is the sort of thing that has been accepted. For some time now any person who has had some disagreement along these lines felt it necessary to resign quietly from the civil service. I am not sure that this ought to be the situation, particularly as it affects professional civil servants.

Should one civil servant be permitted to praise government legislation and be promoted, while another who, talking about the same legislation and deciding that it is not what he wants, is fired without receiving even his severance pay? I know some people think this to be right. To my way of thinking this sort of thing strikes at the root of a person's freedom of speech.

It was never explained in the house, or to this man, why he was discharged. It was assumed, so everybody thought, that it was because he spoke against the Canada Pension Plan while he was in the government's employ. That was the end of it.

He has not been able to get other employment. On various occasions he has been close to being employed by people who feared that the government would retaliate if they did employ him. He had a speaking engagement at the Sudbury Chamber of Commerce. Then, some time after he left the government service—and this is what bothers me—somebody said that they did not think it in the best interests of the country to hear him because he was opposed to government policy. He received a polite letter from the Chamber of Commerce saying: "We are sorry, but we do not want to get involved in this. We think it best not to hear you".

I do not say that the government was to blame for what happened, because I am sure that no minister would phone the Chamber of Commerce and say: "Do not hear this man". However, the threat is there. The threat is somewhere in the government service. There are people who perhaps feel annoyed at this man because he stood out against the Canada Pension Plan. There are those who feel that, if they become involved with him, they are going to get into trouble with the government.

Most of the people he was associated with, in employment, are required to deal with the government. I think he has been improperly pursued, even following his discharge from the civil service. Assuming that he was properly discharged, why is this man being pursued, because he continued to do what he chose to do? In this particular situation I am asking two things of the government. First, I am asking that an inquiry be convened. I do not ask for a royal commission. However, I do ask that somebody make an inquiry to consider Mr. Kroeker's severance pay and his pension entitlement.

This man ought to be treated in the same way that Mr. Spencer was going to be treated, because Kroeker at least did what he thought was in the interest of his country. As I say, first, I would ask that an inquiry be convened for the purposes I have stated.

Second, I ask that someone in the government should announce that this man will not be pursued, throughout the life of this government, as a result of the real or implied actions of the government, for speaking against what was the pet project of the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), the then minister of national health and welfare. I do not ask more than that.

This man's case was taken to the appeal board, which, itself, is composed of three other civil servants who are themselves in the same difficult position he was in. The appeal unfortunately was dismissed, and that was the end of it. There are, however, some tag ends.

The Secretary of State has been asked on several occasions in the house if she would not reconsider this man's pension rights. As I understand it, she has said that she had never been asked. However, she has been asked on a couple of occasions, and tonight I am asking again that something be done to reconsider this whole question. I ask that this man not be made a martyr because of the things he had the nerve to do—because he had the nerve to stand up and do what very, very few other people in public service will do, which is to put his job on the line, state his case and take his discharge.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Motion (Mr. Sharp) agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the Chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

1. Departmental administration, $1,121,200.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

1. General administration, operation and maintenance including authority, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year from firms and individuals requiring special services, $49,278,000.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

1. Postal services including Canada's share of the upkeep of the International Bureaux at Berne and Montevideo, $252,804,000.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $6,795,400.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

1. Departmental administration, $6,732,100.

Proceedings reported.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

VETERANS AFFAIRS—MOTION TO REFER ESTIMATES TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works) moved:

That saving always the powers of the Committee of Supply in relation to the voting of public moneys the items listed in the main estimates for 1966-67 relating to the Department of Veterans Affairs entered for consideration be withdrawn from the Committee of Supply and referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Tomorrow the business before the house will, first, be consideration of the motion by way of objection to redistribution proposals relating to the province of Manitoba.

If this is completed before the end of the day we shall proceed to call the following legislation: first, item 54 on today's order paper, the second reading of Bill C-169, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code. Then we would take the second reading of Bill C-150, an act to amend the Research Council Act. That is item 4 on today's order paper. Next we would proceed to consider item 5 on today's order paper, second reading of Bill C-151, an act to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—MAINLAND CHINA—POSSIBILITY OF RECOGNITION

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): As a member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs I had an opportunity with my colleagues to attend the opening of the 24th meeting of the Council of the World Veterans Federation held at the Royal York hotel in Toronto on May 1. During that time we were able to meet some of the delegates who were attending from some 49 countries. I wish we had had more time in which to do that and to listen to the various points of view.

Talking with these men and listening to the opening ceremonies, I and others were interested to see people whom I would consider to be Colonel Blimps in present circumstances speaking very forcefully on behalf of peace. I thought at the time: I wish some of the United States labour leaders could be here to listen to the colonels of various armies who have fought in war taking a much stronger stand on behalf of world peace than many of them have done. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) had intended to be there to deliver an address. Unfortunately, because of his illness, he was unable to be present. But the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) delivered his address for him and, I may say, did a very good job and was well received by the audience.

I have the text of the address here. It was one of the best speeches which has been made on this question for a long time, in my opinion, and I listened to every word with great attention. I was so interested that yesterday I rose in the house, after giving the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) notice, to ask two questions. I thought it would be well worth while to hear from the Secretary of State on this subject. In asking these questions I quoted from page eight of the Prime Minister's text which stated:

> For the United Nations to secure a valid mandate to intervene with effect anywhere in the world, its membership should include states everywhere in the world.

I then asked the minister whether he would inform the house, in view of this statement, what the government was doing at the present time to promote the recognition of mainland China and its admission to the United Nations. I had intended to ask the minister—but I was nipped in the bud—a second question based on the same excellent speech. Here is the quotation I gave:

> The first concrete step in this direction would be a cease-fire, or a more formal armistice agreement, put into effect as part of a wider pattern of peace negotiations without prior conditions.

• (10:00 p.m.)

> Once the cease fire was in effect and as negotiations progressed, equivalent and phased withdrawals from South Viet Nam by North Viet Nam and by the forces of other governments could take place under international supervision.

Then I intended to ask the minister this question: Can he inform the house, in view of government support for United States policy in Viet Nam, what the government is doing at the present time to promote a formal armistice agreement which provides for withdrawal of all the foreign forces from South Viet Nam?

[Mr. Herridge.]

I shall look forward to the minister's reply to these two interesting questions, prompted by a very interesting, and to me a very excellent speech, which received the applause of all delegates present. When the meeting concluded several of the delegates from countries in Africa and the Middle East expressed to me how pleased they were with the contents of this speech and its general approach to the international situation at this time.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank my hon. friend for agreeing to have this matter come up tonight instead of last night. The Prime Minister's statement, which the hon. member has quoted, is a statement of fact which lies behind Canada's support for the principle of universality in the United Nations.

We have consistently supported that principle on the grounds that if the United Nations is to be an effective organ of international opinion it must be able to bring all the members of the international community within the framework of the responsibilities and obligations laid down in the charter. But this is not merely a principle we support in the abstract. It is an objective which we have carried closer to ultimate achievement.

As the hon. member will recall, it was Canada which was instrumental in 1955 in breaking the deadlock which was then barring a substantial number of countries from membership in the United Nations. The achievement of universality, as I told the General Assembly last autumn, remains our firm objective and we would hope that progress could be made toward achieving it as soon as possible.

In the particular case of communist China I have expressed Canada's support for the view of the Secretary General of the United Nations, that it is in the interests of the international community to have communist China exposed to the currents and cross-currents of international opinion to a much greater degree than is now the case. I have in the past recognized that communist China's co-operation is necessary if we are to solve a number of problems in the realm of international peace and security and, in spite of the discouraging attitudes communist China has taken on a number of such questions, this remains the government's view.

Nevertheless we must recognize that part of the difficulty of the question of communist China's participation in the United Nations arises from the position taken by that country itself, and from the conditions it has set for taking its seat in the organization. In my view, China itself must make an accommodation; it is not only for us to look to what can be done to approach the ideal of universality of the United Nations in this respect.

My hon. friend has asked me another question and, in the time available, I would simply like to say that, as he knows, since last December the government has been engaged in developing a proposal to give the International Control Commission a role in trying to bring about a negotiated settlement in Viet Nam.

The proposal is that the three members of the International Control Commission should agree to consider themselves as a body that would engage in a necessary probing to see if the gap between the various positions of the main parties concerned, as well as other countries involved, could not be narrowed. There have been discussions with both India and Poland, discussions in which it was basically recognized that at the appropriate moment the commission powers might assume the responsibility which we have in mind.

It is a fact that at the present time the opportunities for calling a Geneva conference do not look propitious. Nevertheless this gives the proposal that Canada has made a greater sense of urgency.

A great deal of ground work is required if the necessary foundation for the calling of such a conference is to materialize. I may assure my hon. friend that the Canadian government seriously is engaged in this and in related efforts to try to bring about a negotiated settlement. If some other instrument can be used for this purpose—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs, but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

The hon. member for Springfield.

AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR WHITE PAPER ON NATIONAL POLICY

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, yesterday before orders of the day I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) whether it was the intention of the government to table a white paper on a national agricultural policy, and whether it was the intention to do this some time within the next 60 days. In other words, I was asking whether the government is in a position to state whether or not it would try to give to the house and to the country a national agricultural policy statement before the middle of the year, and fully three years after having taken office. I do not think this is a particularly unreasonable request.

I asked this question of the Minister of Agriculture yesterday for two reasons. First of all, I asked this question because the Minister of Agriculture himself has been in the habit of making occasional and intermittent references to what he considers to be desirable goals in respect of a national agricultural policy. For example, I have heard him say from time to time that it is about time the family farm and family folk found a place in the economic sun in this country. This is a very desirable sentiment to express, and I have heard him express it on several occasions.

Then, too, according to the press I notice that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), when speaking to an audience in Manitoba just a few days ago, made reference to the possibility of the government's coming forward with a white paper on agriculture. In fact I might quote from the report. According to the minister the federal government is on the verge of producing the outline of a national agricultural policy for Canada. The press report states:

> Speaking at a press conference on the University of Manitoba campus, Mr. Sauvé said he wasn't ready to express his views on a national agricultural policy, but he claimed he had been "working hard" to have the government produce a White Paper on agriculture.

If ministers of the crown are to allow themselves the opportunity to make reference to what well might be desirable goals, principles or features of a national agricultural policy, I do not consider it an unreasonable request to ask them just what the government or the cabinet as a whole is doing with regard to framing or formulating the national agricultural policy.

If a minister of the crown can tell a group of people that the government is working on the formulation of a policy, then the minister or his colleagues should be able to tell a member in this house when it is hoped that his policy will be finalized and made ready for tabling in this house.

It is obvious that the farmers of this country would welcome a comprehensive farm policy statement by this government. Only a few weeks ago the Minister of Agriculture made a statement relative to dairy policy which has helped a great deal toward informing producers about what they may expect in the next 12 months as far as dairy production is concerned. Similarly it may be said that a comprehensive policy statement would be welcome in respect of other sectors of the agricultural industry, relative particularly to livestock and grain growing.

For those reasons I would ask the minister, or whoever is answering for him at this time, whether or not it is the intention of the government to present a comprehensive White Paper on agricultural policy before the end of this year.

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for bringing this important matter to the attention of the house. I note from his question that he has quoted from a statement made by the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) to the University of Manitoba. I can only assume that the Minister of Forestry was referring to a White Paper which he may contemplate producing, concerning the aspects of agriculture which come under his jurisdiction.

So far as the Department of Agriculture and the minister of that department are concerned, I am not aware of the presentation of a White Paper being imminent. The Department of Agriculture and the minister announce from time to time certain changes in agricultural policy. The hon. member has referred to a recent announcement in respect of a dairy policy and the important effect it had on farmers generally from coast to coast. I can only assure the hon. member that when important matters are to be introduced an announcement will be made by the minister in the prescribed way in this house.

I do not have any further information to give my hon. friend at this particular time which might enlighten him regarding the question he has asked.

OLD AGE SECURITY—REQUEST FOR INCREASE TO $100 PER MONTH

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, last Friday morning I asked the Prime Minister the following question, which is to be found at page 4503 of Hansard:

> What answer has the government given to a recent request from the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation for an across-the-board increase in the old age security pension to $100 a month?
> [Mr. Schreyer.]

The Chair felt that my question was not couched in the terms prescribed for questions to be asked on orders of the day, so I gave the appropriate notice that I would discuss it on an adjournment motion. I welcome the attendance at this time of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), who I assume will be answering my question. I hope his answer will be one of his better ones.

As the minister knows, as a result of the communication being addressed to him, as well as to the Prime Minister—indeed, copies of it were sent to all members of parliament—the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation is concerned about reports to the effect that any increase in old age pensions may be based on some kind of a test—needs, means or otherwise. This organization feels very strongly, as do many people of this country, and I share their view, that what we need at this time is an across-the-board increase in old age security pensions without a means test, to a figure of not less than $100 a month, payable now at age 65.

When the minister is answering I hope he will not put us off by a reference to the Canada assistance plan, or by telling us that the government is studying this sort of thing, which is often what we hear. This is a serious situation concerning many millions of Canadians, not just those on pensions but many others. Some of us feel that this parliament could go a long way toward redeeming itself in the eyes of this country by taking action on this important question.

Let me say to the minister, although I am sure he knows it, that there are many things about parliament which the people of Canada do not really understand. I believe indeed if they were here tonight they would find it difficult to understand the huge crowd that was on the floor and in the galleries when we were discussing a certain subject, but in this last half hour, when we are discussing the peace of the world, agricultural policy and old age pensions, perhaps it is a good thing that no one asks whether we have a quorum.

When people ask questions about parliament, may I suggest that there are two things that old age pensioners in particular cannot understand. First they cannot understand how it is that we find time in parliament to discuss some of the things which occupy our attention, some of the things which fill our newspapers and are broadcast on radio and on television but, despite the time which we can find for that kind of discussion, we cannot seem to find time to deal with this question of raising the old age security pension.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I am glad to hear some support from the other side of the house. Greetings, brother.

The other feature which people cannot understand is that parliamentary interest in this question of raising the old age pension seems to have flagged from the high point it reached early in the session. Pensioners have not forgotten that on January 21 and 25 there were votes on the old age security pension having to do with raising the amount to $100 and making it payable at the age of 65. Those votes were very close—five votes the other way could have resulted in the opposite conclusion. Rightly or wrongly, many pensioners had thought that we were very close to getting action and that it would be merely a matter of time before members of parliament would make a decision to take a further step and raise the pension. However, it seems that we are further away from an increase in old age security pension now than we were at that time. The people cannot understand the procedures which are involved in all of this. They cannot understand why we can discuss certain other things, but not pensions. What is wrong with our procedures, what is wrong with our common sense, what is wrong with our sense of responsibility, that we cannot act on this issue?

Everyone knows the ways in which things are changing in our time. Wages and salaries are going up; the standard of living is going up as well as the cost of living. The idea that people should be expected to live the rest of their days on the kind of pension they were given when they retired no longer is valid. It is no longer valid, either, that the pension should be at a level that makes it possible for people merely to stay alive. Indeed, one wonders if they can stay alive on $75 a month. The whole approach of our society is one that recognizes the importance of old age, one that recognizes the right of older people to share in the abundance of our times, to share in our increased standard of living, which is now possible for everyone.

I say to the government that it should realize this is a field in which the people of this country expect action. In another context, we have been talking about parliament and what people think about it. One does not need to repeat what has been said in another debate, in fact it would be out of order to do so. However I say to the minister, to the government and to this House of Commons that one way in which we can redeem ourselves in the eyes of the people of this country would be to take action on this important issue. I hope that tonight the Minister of National Health and Welfare can answer this question by saying that favourable consideration is being given, not to something that diverts attention, not to some other way of doing it, but that the government is considering taking action to raise the old age security pension to not less than $100 per month.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for renewing the acquaintance we have had over the past several sessions in this general field of social policy. I congratulate him on his heightened and continued interest in this problem.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to be able to return the compliment.

Mr. MacEachen: I have not as many minutes as the hon. member had to deal with this question. I draw to his attention an address that I gave in early March in Regina in which I spent half of my time dealing with the various possible approaches to the problem of older people. It is, in a sense, a 1966 edition of the Regina manifesto, and I commend it to the hon. member for careful attention. It has all the sympathy, all the consideration and all the idealism that characterized the earlier edition of the Regina manifesto.

Seriously, however, the government is concerned. The government realizes that one of the groups in our society that will require continued support through public programs is, of course, our older citizens. As my hon. friend realizes, as the Canada Pension Plan comes into effect it will provide a decent level of retirement income for those who reach retirement age.

Mr. Knowles: Not until five or ten years from now.

Mr. MacEachen: There is a group that have not been able to contribute because they are now retired or who will not be able to contribute to earn the maximum pension.

This is the group, of course, that must occupy the attention of the government and of parliament itself. Of course, these people will be eligible for the flat rate pension of $75 per month. This is, clearly, not enough, will not be enough for them to live adequately and decently.

The question that must occupy the government is, which of several alternatives offers the most reasonable way of continued support for the older citizens of Canada. My hon. friend has come down squarely in favour of a flat rate increase of $25 per month. This has its attractions, but it has its disadvantages because it will help people who do not need this amount of money and it will not be enough for others. One of the factors to be considered is that it is a very costly expenditure in the field of income maintenance. At the moment, we are spending about a billion dollars per year on old age security. If we raised the pension to $100, then by 1970 the annual cost would be $2.1 billion.

There are competing demands on the resources of Canada in the field of medicare and in the field of pensions. These competing requirements must be considered. We are about to consider in the House of Commons the Canada assistance plan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park) moved that the first report of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, presented to the house on April 26, be now concurred in.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words against the adoption of this motion. I am not suggesting that the time of the house should be taken up for long. I am not suggesting that the time of the house should be taken for a division; but it seems to me that we should look very carefully at what we will be doing if this motion is passed.

The proposal is that the committee of which the hon. member for High Park is chairman have its quorum reduced from 13 to 10 members. I do not blame the hon. member for making this request, but I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very superficial way in which to deal with the problem that seems to be facing us in the committee work of this House of Commons. No suggestion for the improvement of parliament has been more universally made than the suggestion that we should do more work in committees, and that we should improve our committee work.

The government at the last session of parliament gave some attention to this problem and brought in suggestions and proposals which, in effect, involved a complete reconstruction of our committee setup. Hon. members know that the names of committees were changed and that a number of other alterations were made. One of the alterations made was to increase relatively the size of the quorum. Under the old rules, under the provisions of standing order 65, the committees had various quorums. They ran at about 30 per cent of the total membership.

In the last session the government deliberately, after much forethought, asked this house to approve that from now on the committees would be smaller in size but would have a quorum of not less than 50 per cent of the membership. There is the provision in the standing orders for the quorum to be reduced under certain circumstances, but that was to be by way of exception.

I suggest that the government asked this house to take a deliberate decision that our committees should operate with a quorum of not less than a majority of the members. The government, in taking this step, in effect stated its view that we should do more work in our committees, and that the committees should do better work. This is a point of view that we all share, and I want to say that I share it too. I think parliament could be greatly improved if we were to upgrade the work done in our committees.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the great reform that was brought in at the last session has not turned out to be such a tremendous reform after all. Committees are having difficulty in getting sufficient members to carry on. Generally speaking they are not making parliament work in the way we thought they would.

I think there are other things that ought to be done. I think the work of our committees should be upgraded by having some arrangement whereby they are encouraged to bring in reports, with the assurance that those reports will be considered in this house. I think we should make arrangements, as has been proposed, for committees to sit at times when the house does not sit so those committees can devote their full attention to their work.

It has been my experience on two or three occasions during the years I have been here to be a member of committees which met while the house was not in session. The most recent example of that was a year or so ago, when the Canada Pension Plan committee met under those circumstances. I can say to the hon. member for High Park, who was the chairman of that committee—and he will confirm what I say—that we had no quorum difficulties with that committee. I am sure he will agree with me, as other hon. members would, that that was an excellent committee, and that it was able to do an excellent job.

My fear, from the way we are carrying on, is that our committees will work with reduced quorums. Letting our committees sit only when the house is sitting; making no arrangements for a time when they may occupy the centre of the stage; giving no guarantees that their reports are going to be considered on the floor of the House of Commons, all indicates one thing. It indicates that this experiment we thought we were making for a revised and improved committee structure has not worked out at all.

I believe this whole question of what we do with our committees is extremely important. I am not trying to say that the motion before us today is the most important motion that has ever been brought on the floor of the house. However, the way we handle our committees is extremely important. It is not good enough to say that committees cannot meet because they cannot get a quorum. As a matter of fact the committee in question, which I believe consists of 24 members, has on it 13 members representing the government side of the house. The government itself has sufficient members to provide a quorum. This is true of most of the committees.

This problem is not to be solved simply by saying that the committees can meet with fewer people present and still get their business done. This does not measure up to the great ideal of improving parliament by having a better committee structure, as was proposed last year. I hope we may hear, even if briefly, from the Prime Minister who brought in the rule changes last year, or from the leader of the house who piloted them through the Commons. This was part of the proposal; that committees should have fewer members, quorums consisting of a majority, and better opportunities to do good work.

There are a number of other suggestions which I might make in this regard, but I shall wait for another occasion to do so. I feel it would be a mistake for the house to pass this motion thinking it had thereby put these committees on a path which might lead somewhere. I urge the house to turn this motion down and to seek other ways of improving the work the committees are doing.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): As the person responsible for the co-ordination of house committees during this parliament—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): may be of interest to the house as it considers this motion. In the course of the current parliament 22 committees of the house have been formed. These committees have held 96 committee periods this year, periods lasting approximately one hour and a half. So to date about 144 hours of committee work have been carried out by members of the House of Commons.

Most of these committees are standing committees to which the estimates were referred on March 22 by the house leader. So, as will be seen, the bulk of the work has been accomplished since March 22. We must bear in mind that the Easter holiday intervened for a couple of weeks, with the result that the greater part of the 96 meetings which have been held and the 144 hours of committee work have been in a period lasting approximately three weeks.

I do not want any hon. member who has been serving diligently on committees to think for a moment that his efforts have failed. Indeed, I believe all members ought to congratulate themselves on the effective work they have been doing in attending these committees and operating the committee system.

With regard to the difficulty encountered in getting a quorum on some occasions, I note that on six occasions out of 96 a quorum was not obtained and committees fell on this question. On two of these occasions a very important debate was going on at the time in this chamber. Thus, in the period outside the hours when this house was sitting only four committees out of approximately 90 fell because a quorum could not be obtained. In the circumstances I believe hon. members can commend themselves for having sustained these committees in such a fashion.

There are in the House of Commons some 234 members who are eligible to attend committees. These 234 members certainly cannot be expected, with quorums fixed at 13, to sustain 22 committees meeting and all attempting to get their work done. The size of committees is obviously too large, and should be reduced. The basic problem facing this house is that we are attempting to operate far too many committees with far too many members needed for a quorum.

We must face the question of a reduction in the size of committees, and of more efficient committees, in order to get that work done. With respect to the motion moved by the hon. member for High Park, I want to say that what is good for one committee surely is good for all committees, and we in the House of Commons should not be picking apart our committee procedure piecemeal. We should act in a concerted fashion to correct something which I believe is wrong in our committee procedure.

I would appeal to parliament today to take one more look at our committee procedure, and if it needs adjustment in the size of committees—and I believe it does—then we should move quickly to make that adjustment and increase the effectiveness of the procedure, without going to the trouble of having one committee, a second, and a third coming back to the house for a reduction in size and for permission to sit while the house is sitting.

If all 22 committees were to meet while the house was sitting the House of Commons would lose its own quorum. Therefore if committees are to meet when the house is sitting there must be an orderly scheduling program for them which could be, in fact would have to be, a matter of a proper arrangement in the house satisfactory to both sides. Therefore I believe this motion should not be passed today but that some means should be found to immediately look at this question of the size of committees and their efficiency in relation to the number of committees that must operate.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion of the hon. member for High Park, and I do so for various reasons. The very fact that this committee system has been rearranged from what it was in former years, with two or more committees meeting at the same time and with two or more members expected to attend meetings of two committees, it is humanly impossible for this to be done. Therefore I say that the request to reduce the quorum from 13 to 10 is very reasonable in view of the fact that the quorum fixed for a meeting of this house, which has a membership of 265, is only 20.

In this case we have a committee of 24 and a set quorum of 13. It does not seem reasonable to have such a high quorum as 13, and I speak from some experience in this matter. I speak as chairman of one committee which had to adjourn on two occasions because of the lack of a quorum. On investigating the reason we found it was due to the fact that in one instance two members, and in the second four members, were on another committee which was meeting at the same time. They were torn between the two, not knowing which meeting they should attend.

My hon. friend suggests that we could get more work done through committees. I agree with him, but I suggest that if we had a quorum of 10 we could get more work done because committees could start on time. I think all chairmen of committees would agree with me that we have had to wait 15 minutes, 20 minutes and even half an hour to get a quorum, but if the quorum were reduced to 10 we could start on time.

In the case of the public accounts committee of which I am chairman we have a tremendous amount of work to complete. We have the 1964 report of the Auditor General. We also have his 1965 report before us, and we are most anxious to get on with the work. I feel that a quorum of 10 would assist greatly.

There are many legitimate reasons why members cannot be present at committee meetings. They may be serving on parliamentary delegations to international meetings. They may be sick. There are various reasons why they cannot attend, and I believe it would be a good idea if some provision could be made whereby in such cases they could name alternates to attend committees for them. However, I must stick to the point regarding the quorum and not go into that aspect of the question.

I think the house, recognizing the points I have put before it and the fact that other committee chairmen think the same way, should see fit to endorse the motion moved by the hon. member for High Park. I have a similar motion standing in my name; therefore it has been a privilege for me to speak on behalf of the hon. member's motion and also on my own behalf in this regard.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like very briefly to support the motion of the hon. member for High Park, and also to support what has been said by the hon. member for Wellington South. This year parliament is operating under a new set of rules. We are trying them out, and apparently the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre feels very badly that some of the rules which he helped to revise have not worked out perfectly. I am rather surprised at this, since the hon. member has been a member of this house for a long time—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member not aware of the fact that this particular rule was brought in by the government; I had no hand in it at all.

Mr. Nesbitt: The hon. member says he had no hand in it. Perhaps he did not directly, but as we all are aware his advice may have been sought on the matter. What I am getting at is this. When we are trying out new things I think we have to be pragmatic about the matter.

In respect of one of the important committees of this house, of which I am vice chairman, we have found it very difficult indeed to get the required quorum for the very reasons which have been expressed by the other hon. members, such as other committees meeting at the same time and the like. I think I would agree with the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra that perhaps it may be necessary for the house to start considering reducing the quorum of all committees and other things. That is fine, but these things take time, as we know, and we may not get around to approving these things in this house for weeks.

The fact of the matter is that certain committees, the one which is chaired by the hon. member for High Park, the one chaired by the hon. member for Wellington South, and other committees—and I suspect the committee of which I am vice chairman may be making a similar request—have work to do which they want to get done. Everybody is complaining about parliament not getting down to its work. These committees want to get the work done which is before them. If they have to wait for quorums for the many reasons which have been set out, this delays their work and the work of the house.

If we wait until parliament gets around to revising the rules in respect of all committees, we may wait until doomsday. I would hope that the motion by the hon. member for High Park would be supported, and that similar motions in respect of other committees would be supported in the same way. If at a later date we wish to revise the general rules with regard to committees, that is fine, but in the meantime let us have the committees which have work to do, get to work.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, after listening attentively to the arguments presented by the various members on all sides of the house, and attending some committees, I feel I may properly say that the problem of adequate attendance or quorum at the committees is real.

On the other hand, I noted that the government always has a majority of members on these committees. In some committees then, the lack of attendance is not often due to members of the opposition, but to the members of the party in power.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I hear exclamations but it is a fact. I shall give an example among others.

At the committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts quite a few were present, more than the total membership of 24. Nevertheless, there was no quorum for the simple reason that members of the opposition are restricted to a certain number who may sit on the committee. The members of the party in power were the absentees.

I am aware that some were in attendance at other committees. But before concurring in the reduction of the quorum I would ask that the whole policy of attendance on the committees be revised. It would do away with certain insinuations we heard during the last election campaign, namely that such and such a member never shows up in the committees. It became a political football and I should not like to have the same thing happen again in an election campaign.

A few moments ago a government member requested that the quorum of the committees be reduced. Before accepting such a proposition I would call for a full revision of the committees policy, with a view to determining whether there should not be less members on the committees or better representation of the various parties. It seems to me this should be considered.

This also proves that perhaps it would be better to adjourn the house for a week so as to allow the committees to do their work.

It has always been recognized that a human being cannot be present in two different places at the same time, and fulfil a double duty.

For my part, I am strongly opposed to a reduced quorum on the committees.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman).

It seems to me that something is lacking. I am told several members sit on two or three committees at the same time. I know some who are members of two or three committees but do not attend any of the meetings.

I feel that the committees are made up of too many members. As the member for Vancouver Quadra said, the number of members as well as the quorum should be reduced. I am hoping for a general rule, and not a rule providing for exceptions applying to some particular committee or other. I do not like rules of exception and have never liked them. We are occasionally forced to tolerate them, but where rules of exception are concerned, you never know where you stand.

It might be a good idea for the leader of the government to come to an understanding with the leaders of the other parties in order to reduce the committee membership. Moreover, before we appoint someone to a committee, we should ask him whether he has any intention of attending; if not, he should not be appointed. Those who do not have time to sit on the committees should not be appointed; they should be left aside.

This is the reason why I ask for a much greater caution on our part. We appoint committee members right and left. We appoint Mr. So-and-so without telling him; when the time comes to sit on the committee, the whip is informed that the gentleman in question is not interested and that he wants to be replaced by Mr. So-and-so. We replace him by Mr. So-and-so who is not anymore interested than the previous one.

If the membership of our committees did not exceed 20, with a quorum of ten or eight, they might operate normally. This is why I ask the leader of the government to get in touch at once with the leaders of other parties and that the request made by the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron), be denied.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): There are just one or two matters in respect of the committees of this house that I should like to bring to the attention of this chamber. There is more wrong with committee operations than those problems relating to quorums. I suggest there is a basic problem relating to the organization of committee meetings. These committees apparently have been set up for some reason of which I am not aware. They have no responsibility, but operate for the purpose of keeping backbenchers quiet, happy and perhaps satisfied.

The second point I wish to make relates to the difficulties of committees obtaining quorums. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) may laugh, but he will laugh from the other side of his mouth before I finish speaking. He seems to be subject to fits of laughter, perhaps because he was the author of this motion. I hope he will have something to say about it, because I think he was working with those who were considering the matters in question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I deny the paternity.

Mr. Kindt: Many of the matters discussed at committee meetings are rehashed in this house. For that reason the committees have no authority or responsibility and the members have no incentive to attend their meetings. I believe our committees are absolutely useless, and until the government of this country which is responsible—and I include the minister who is laughing—gets down to brass tacks and establishes these committees with some responsibility and purpose, they will not function as they should or serve the purpose which they are intended to serve.

It is my belief that our parliamentary committees could be as useful a part of parliament as committees are in other places, including the United Kingdom and the United States congress. In Canada our committee system, as I have said, is useless.

There is one other aspect of this matter I should like to mention. Someone should be appointed to schedule the meetings of these committees so that a member who wishes to attend a committee meeting will not find himself faced with the necessity of making a decision as to which of three or four committees he shall attend because several are sitting at the same time. Obviously such a member cannot help to form quorums on three committees which sit simultaneously. I mention this fact to indicate why I believe there is no organization behind committee meetings. This organization, or lack thereof, and the responsibility for it rests squarely on the shoulders of those hon. members who occupy the front benches on the government side of this house.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I find myself compelled to support the mild arguments of the last speaker, because the responsibility to which he refers in my opinion does fall squarely upon the shoulders of the government. In support of this argument I should like to quote from the statement the Prime Minister made yesterday. He said, as reported at page 4626 of Hansard:

> One of these pressures is our ability to get things done, to adapt our procedures to the requirements, and the struggle in this regard is often referred to as a deterioration of parliamentary action—

I think Your Honour is well aware that the committee on procedure, which was set up last year, brought in a series of recommendations after a great deal of hard and zealous effort. One of the recommendations of this committee—and it seems to me this should be perfectly obvious to anyone who has examined the situation—related to the fact that often 24 or 25 committees were suddenly handed a large amount of work with terms of reference requiring them to complete their tasks as quickly as possible. A proposal was made to cover this situation. It is perfectly obvious at this time, under the conditions which now exist, that we are not going to be able to perform the detailed work that has been set out for us. I think everyone will agree that something less than perfection exists in this parliament.

With those facts in mind I think the government fell short of accepting its responsibility when it rejected many of the recommendations of the special committee on procedure as to how these committees should operate under conditions which now exist. The committees are short of personnel, short of adequately equipped rooms with simultaneous translation facilities and short of trained staff. In terms of logistics it is impossible for all these committees to operate efficiently.

While the government has implemented certain procedures along the lines of suggestions made by the committee on procedure, I should like to point out that at this time committee hearings have only just started. Very shortly the estimates of the current fiscal year will be considered by eight or ten committees, which at this time have inadequate facilities with which to operate efficiently. Surely it is incumbent upon this government, if we are going to overcome the present crisis, to immediately direct its attention and energy to these difficulties. It is the government's responsibility to solve these problems, and for that reason I support the motion.

I should like to make one further suggestion which should be borne in mind when we are dealing with the committee problems relating to their ability to obtain quorums. These are not decision making committees. They are examining committees, the decisions are interlocutory in nature, and the decisions and recommendations they make come back to this house for final decision. I think no great harm is done by reducing the quorum to a number adequate to conduct the examinations which need to be conducted for the purpose for which the committees are established. Whether we have eight or 12 members I submit is immaterial, because decisions made in the committees have to be reconfirmed in this house.

I think it is positively scandalous to have prevailing the situations which have prevailed in the past, when civil servants with important jobs to do are called before a committee, compelled to wait a long period of time, and then are called back again if no quorum is established, sometimes the next day, to the detriment of their own work. I think what is suggested now is only an ad hoc solution, but I believe we should agree to it. In the meantime I hope the government will direct its attention to this problem and come up with some alternatives.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, shortly after the opening of this session of parliament the house adopted, on a trial basis for the duration of this session, a series of amendments to the rules of procedure. Included in those amendments was a revision of the committee structure.

Following the adoption of the revised committee structure the government referred a great deal more work to committees than has been usual. I think it was said in the house at the time the rules were adopted that the reason for their adoption on a trial basis only was to get experience with them, knowing full well that there may be a requirement for amending them before their adoption on a permanent basis.

These new rules may well be a major breakthrough in bringing the practices of this house in line with the demands that modern times make on parliament. Today we have a motion before us by the chairman of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, and a similar motion by the chairman of the public accounts committee, asking to reduce the committee quorum in a very modest way. An examination of the orders of the day will show the important work that has been referred to the justice committee. It does not appear so clearly in the standing orders, but anyone who follows the references to the public accounts committee will agree on the importance of the work of that committee.

These two committees are chaired by hon. members of this house who have had long experience in committee work and who are also well experienced in parliamentary work. They have come before us today making this request for a reduction in the quorum. While I hope other committees will not generally adopt the practice at this stage of asking for a reduction in quorum, because I have grave doubts whether that is the remedy for the problem, I am not surprised that the problem has arisen; because it was foreseen, at the time the amendments were made to the standing orders in respect of committees, that there would be difficulties; and there will be many more difficulties, I suspect, before the session is ended.

I would ask the house to go along with the committee structure and the new rules for the duration of the session, until we can see whether they are good or bad or what adaptation should be made to them. While I express the hope that other committees will not be prone to come too readily to the house asking for the right to reduce their quorum, I would hope that the motions respecting these two committees could be concurred in and their recommendations adopted without prejudice to any position we may wish to take later on the subject generally, or on later applications for concurrence in similar types of motions.

I want to raise one other point that is concerning me a bit. This is the last day, by statute, for considering the redistribution motions. I would hope, in light of this, that we do not unduly cut down the time for discussion of the remaining objections with regard to redistribution, and either agree to deal with these motions on a voice vote and get on with the other business or, if there is very strong objection to that, stand the debate over until another day so we will not be cutting down on the time for the discussion of the redistribution motion.

Mr. Churchill: In other words, give Manitoba a chance.

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I must say that having listened to the Minister of Public Works I think there will be general agreement with the argument he has advanced. I have on more than one occasion—and this is an opportunity to raise this matter again—expressed the view that if we wish to restore parliament so the people will understand its operations, one means to bring that about would be through broadcasts or television representation of parliament from day to day. I can tell you, sir, that if this practice were adopted in committees as an experiment there would be no difficulty about having a full quorum in committees at all times.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is a matter that later on I intend to deal with at length, but at this time I say that if the committees could agree that when they are dealing with matters of general interest representatives of the C.B.C. and private stations might be present to broadcast the actual performance in those committees, there would be benefit to the people as a whole and to parliament; for there is nothing more condemnatory of parliament than from day to day having recorded in the press that committees have been convened which, in the words of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt), were unable to carry on because of the absence of members. This builds among the people of Canada the concept that there is dereliction on the part of members of parliament.

When I mention broadcasting of committees by way of experiment, I do so on the basis of considerations that have arisen in the last few years which in my opinion make it necessary that this whole question be considered by a committee of parliament. We broadcast on television the opening of the Canadian parliament in 1957. It was an experiment. That practice has been followed ever since. The United Kingdom tried it this year and found it of such benefit that at the present time very wide consideration is being given to continuing it in order to bring about something that we all wish, namely a closer relationship between the people and parliament. To this end they are considering having the proceedings in the British House of Commons broadcast on television and placed before the people.

I suggest that if we are really serious about this matter we will never have any concern, Mr. Speaker, that if the quorum is 20 there will not be 20 members present. I suggest there will always be a quorum if this course is followed by way of experiment. It would be one way in which one could find out the reaction of the people, for certainly today in the British press and on every side consideration is being given to this procedure as one means of bringing about a stronger relationship between the people and the parliament of the country.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, in raising this matter the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said he would not say this was the most important motion ever to come before this house, but it certainly has generated quite a debate. I should like to make this suggestion. In view of the fact that we have seemingly reached the point where there is agreement on the matter, perhaps a reappraisal could be made of the committee structure or the membership of committees to ascertain if members are absent because they are not interested in that particular committee, if they are away because they are attending another committee, or absent because of other responsibilities in their constituencies or other government business.

It seems to me these three reasons would cover all absentees. If a member is absent because he is not interested in a particular issue before the committee, then he should be replaced. Before we go ahead with the motion to reduce the quorum of the committee we should take another look at the membership to ascertain why members are not in attendance.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, there are complaints that members are absent from the committee sittings and, on the other hand, we are talking about reducing or maintaining the quorum. I should like to point out that the present uneasiness, in a certain sense, goes much further back.

When the committees are formed at the beginning of the session, I think more attention should be paid to the talents, the wishes and the qualifications of members. I make the point today, without any malice whatever, simply to state my position on this matter.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

In my case, for instance, at the beginning of the session I called on you to express my earnest desire to sit on the justice and legal affairs committee and on the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts—in the case of the first named committee, as a lawyer and independent member. We know that it is helpful to have on the committee a member who can serve as buffer between the accusers and the accused, in the case of the second named committee, for having been on 35 televised broadcasts and for being interested in the matter.

You referred me to the member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Pilon). For the last three months he has been telling me that "next week," I shall be transferred to these committees. I have been put on the committee for northern affairs and national resources. I am not interested in northern affairs, nor are my electors.

If more notice were taken of the wishes, the requests and the qualifications of members, well, more members would be in attendance at the sittings of the committees. That is why I am not present at the sittings of the committee on northern affairs and national resources and of the committee on the library, and I am waiting to be transferred to the committees I have asked to sit on.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? Shall the motion be adopted?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to on division.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South) moved:

That the first report of the standing committee on public accounts, presented to the house on Wednesday, April 27, 1966, be now concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to on division.

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South) moved:

That the second report of the standing committee on public accounts, presented to the house on Wednesday, April 27, 1966, be now concurred in.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): This is a slightly different motion, and the arguments that can be advanced are different from those advanced for the reduction of the quorum. I had hoped the government house leader would ask that this motion be allowed to stand until some discussion could take place amongst the parties as to the extension of sittings. The problem we have in committees cannot really be solved so long as estimates are referred to these committees.

When the members agreed to the change in the rule they were of the opinion that there was going to be a discussion of estimates in these committees, and that this discussion would eliminate some of the debates which took place in the house. In return for this many members agreed to a limitation of the debate on estimates in the house. Now we are hearing a plea for a reduction in the quorums of these committees, but they will not work any better if you reduce the quorum from 15 to 10 or to 5. Eventually we will get to the position where a committee can hold a meeting if only the chairman is present. This will not solve the problem and will not satisfy the country.

There has been a suggestion from the member who is co-ordinating these committees that members who are not on these committees be established as second class members of the committee. If every other member of the committee has completed his discussion, these second class members will be allowed to ask their questions.

In my opinion all this is contrary to what we are trying to do. I feel it is a fact that we are trying to operate more committees than we can legitimately operate. We have increased the space available for these committees; we have provided the facilities to allow them to operate. However, we just do not have enough people. It seems to me that if the Prime Minister is really interested in substituting committee consideration of estimates for consideration in the house, then those members who are interested in matters before the committees should be allowed to participate in the discussion even though they are not members of the committee.

Then, too, the committees have got to be operated in such a way that a member will not find he has to be in three places at the same time, and therefore is not in a position to do the job he is supposed to do. One morning I was supposed to be at three committee meetings. I thought about this for several minutes and finally came to the conclusion it was not worth while making up my mind which one I should attend, so I did not go to any of them. I think this must be true of other members.

There is something else that has to be taken into consideration. There is this bilingual aspect of parliament in which most people are interested, but no consideration has been given to that. There are 35 members of the house who meet to study French for two hour periods when committees are meeting. There are seven or eight members who are studying English at this time. This further decreases the number of members free to attend committee meetings. If we are not really willing to face these facts then we can reduce the quorums, we can sit when the house is sitting, but we will not have solved the basic problem. If we are going to use the majority in this house to insist that things run smoothly on the surface, then we will create a situation that will blow sky high before very long.

I think the house leader is well aware of the problem with which he is now faced and of our inability to solve it. On many occasions in this house recently the attendance has dropped to as low as 15 to 17 members, but no one has brought it to the attention of Your Honour for the simple reason that we are trying to get things done. I suggest that the situation will only deteriorate further if the quorum of this committee is reduced, quite apart from the quorums of other committees handling very important business which will wish to sit while the house is sitting.

I have not objected to this being done on a temporary basis. When some very important matter is put before a committee it has the right to make this request and have it granted on such an occasion. But to give blanket approval to such a situation would mean that not only would ten members of the public accounts committee be withdrawn from the house any time the committee wanted to meet, but possibly members of all the committees could be withdrawn if the occasion demanded, leaving perhaps no members to attend in this chamber at all, and an unhappy situation would develop.

I will not oppose this request any further Mr. Speaker, but as I say I think the situation will deteriorate very rapidly. I am sure the public will soon become aware of the fact that we have been creating new rules without really paying continuous attention to the problems which have developed. It seems to me that under these new rules we are putting ourselves into a worse position than we were under the old rules. So while I am opposed to this step, we must be prepared to put ourselves in the position of restricting ourselves further without once again changing the whole committee structure. But I warn hon. members to be cautious about such changes as these which are not made on an over-all basis. We should take the initiative right away of sitting down in our business committee and making over-all plans which are of much more advantage to members of parliament and to the country as well as to the new committee system, which I say should be given a fair chance to succeed. It is not now being given that fair chance.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, on this matter, I must say that I was probably the first to object to committees meeting while the house is sitting. This evil has existed for a long time. We objected to it while we were in opposition and I remember that, at the time, the present ministers were with us and objected to the committees meeting while the house was sitting, because we could not properly serve two masters, namely the committees and the house.

According to the division yesterday, 239 members voted. If we had thirteen members for each sitting committee, this would call for a total of 299 members. Thus, with 236 or 239 members, there would not be enough. If the number of members per committee is reduced to 10, the total is brought down to 230. Subtract from this figure the number of ministers who are not members of the committees but whose names only appear, and we would not have enough members to sit in the house.

I have suggested before that Wednesdays be reserved for committee meetings, so that the committees may sit sensibly. But we are asked that the house permit committees to meet while the house is sitting. I submit we should not allow it. If a committee has special reasons, witnesses to be heard, in short if it is convenient, permission may be granted. Any committee can always ask permission to sit.

The other way I feel it is asking too much. For these reasons, I object, unless permission is asked to sit.

The other day it was requested that a committee be permitted to meet during the sittings of the house. It met once and has not met for the rest of the week. Permission had been asked to meet while the house was sitting.

Today, we are in a bad position. The government should seek to improve the situation, not by changing the rules but by designing acceptable rules. If time is needed for the committees to meet, let the house adjourn. We surely cannot sit at the same time on the committees and in the house. It is a physical impossibility.

To this end, I shall ask for a vote and then I shall be through speaking on the question.

[English]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I was keenly interested in the motion moved by the hon. member for High Park and the motion which followed, moved by the chairman of the public accounts committee. I did not speak on either. The motions were carried on division and are now orders of the house. However, in view of the discussion which is now taking place on the second report of the standing committee on public accounts I feel I must say a few words.

In the 13 years that I have had the honour of sitting in this chamber as a member of the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, I have always firmly opposed any reduction in the quorum of a committee below the accepted figure, and any suggestion that the committee should sit while the house is sitting.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope I have not risen for nothing, but I should like to take the liberty of reminding the hon. member that the first motion has now been carried, and his remarks should be limited to the subject matter of the second motion.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I should have thought, in view of the position I have taken in this House of Commons for 13 years, I could be allowed to say two sentences without being called to order by Your Honour. What is now before us is the question of the right of the public accounts committee to sit while the house is in session, which involves a principle I have opposed for 13 years. However, Mr. Speaker, today out of necessity I support it, in view of the requirement that certain work referred by the House of Commons to the public accounts committee should be completed.

The Auditor General of Canada is not responsible to the government; he is responsible to the House of Commons. He files his reports with the House of Commons. The House of Commons does not deal with the reports of the Auditor General but refers them to the public accounts committee. At this session of parliament the House of Commons has referred to the public accounts committee the Auditor General's report for the fiscal year ending 1964, which contains 184 matters which the Auditor General thought the House of Commons should know about. The House of Commons has referred to the public accounts committee the report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965, which contains 263 matters which should be considered by the House of Commons and the public accounts committee.

So there are now before the public accounts committee a total of 447 recommendations or matters of concern to us. Sir, in considering this, let me say that a decision has already been made by the public accounts committee to call witnesses from across Canada. It will be calling witnesses, not just the 10 or 12 in Ottawa, but from the crown corporations and from as far away as Halifax.

I say, sir, that even with a reduction in quorum to 10 members it is still absolutely essential that we bring in witnesses from across Canada to appear before this committee, under our order, or under our subpoena. In carrying on with the work of the committee, we must give reasonable consideration to the fact that these men and women will be called before us from across Canada. We cannot day by day decide that we should come to the House of Commons and ask for special permission to sit on the day we request permission, or the next day. I say, sir, that the public accounts committee should have the general authority to sit while the house is sitting, which I assure you, sir, will only be exercised under some extreme emergency.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few remarks to make concerning the report presented by the chairman of the standing committee on public accounts.

In my opinion, the leaders of the various parties should consider the advisability of reducing the number of standing committees rather than the membership of those committees or the quorum required to allow them to sit.

It seems to me the various departments should be more concentrated and that fewer committees should be established in order to enable members of the house to attend their sittings. I cannot see any other solution at present. Even though the quorum or the membership of every committee were reduced, it would not provide a final solution, whereas decreasing the number of committees would enable the members interested in those committees to attend their meetings when the house is not sitting. I feel that it would then make the work of the house and of the committees much easier, because at the present time committees are unable to get the required quorum.

[English]

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I think we should agree to bring this debate to a close. We have spent considerable time on it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member needs the consent of the house to speak now because this is not a substantive motion, and he does not have the right of reply. However, in view of the fact that the hon. member has not availed himself of the opportunity to make a statement, I am sure the house will not mind his saying a few words at this time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. All points, I think, have been well covered. The standing committee on public accounts is asking for permission of the house to sit while the house is in session. There are three points which ought to be mentioned. The first is the terrific work load that is before the committee. The second is the fact that we have witnesses to call from all parts of the country, and accordingly we have to plan our meetings as far as one month or even more in advance. Third, as time has gone on we have been given a tremendous work load and we must get down to work.

That is why the standing committee asks for permission of the house, and I hope the house will see fit to give that permission to this committee regardless of what may be the feeling with respect to the other committees.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to on division.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NUGENT—ALLEGED CHANGE IN OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to a question of privilege affecting all hon. members in this house. It has to do with the transcript of the record of debates in this house for yesterday, and with what I believe to be an unwarranted change which has been made in that record by someone.

I am referring to some of the remarks made by the Prime Minister in this house, as reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail for Wednesday, May 4, and as reported in the Ottawa Journal for the same date. Two words appear to have been deleted, for some reason or other, from the record. I do not think the words which have been deleted change the sense of what was said. The sentence quoted means the same whether or not the missing words are included in it. The important point is, what does this house allow by way of interference with the record as it is taken down by the shorthand reporters? Certainly I think we all agree that an hon. member, in order to make sense of ambiguous statements, may change some words as taken down by the reporter, for the sake of clarity.

[Mr. Hales.]

I do not think that is the case here. The words in question that I refer to are a part of the Prime Minister's statement referring to the testimony of Commissioner McClellan. The Ottawa Journal, on page 17, says:

> I was looking for that kind of scandal in relation to members of parliament with government departments and their intervention on behalf of dubious elements.

In Hansard, page 4632, the words "of scandal" have been deleted. In the Globe and Mail version of the same story the same words appear. I will read the paragraph, if I may, to make clear what I mean:

> If he was talking about scandal in the sense of the Rivard scandal—and at that time the word scandal was being tossed about in this house without any reference except to political scandal—if the commissioner was referring to that kind of scandal, I was looking for that kind of scandal in relation to members of parliament with government departments and their intervention on behalf of dubious elements.

At page 4632 of Hansard, part way down the right hand column appear the words:

> —if the commissioner was referring to that kind of scandal I was looking for that kind in relation—

And the words "of scandal" have been deleted in the Hansard record.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nugent: The point is simple, Mr. Speaker. The meaning is approximately the same whether or not the missing words are in the sentence or not.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Nugent: There is no reason why a person should claim the right to go to the Hansard office, save for the purposes of accuracy to make sense of what he has said. There is no right to interfere with the record. What has been done establishes a precedent, Mr. Speaker, whereby hon. members have the right to go to the Hansard office to see if they can improve the language of their speeches. Perhaps something looks better if it is put in a certain way. If certain words are repeated too often, is the aesthetic sense of what has been said affected? I do not think the members of this house have ever pretended that anyone has the right to so varnish his speech.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, here we have had the extraordinary spectacle of the house being asked, on a question of privilege, to take newspaper accounts of what was said rather than the official record of Hansard. There is no suggestion, obviously, that any change was made by anyone in Hansard since the meaning, as must be apparent to all who listened, is identical in both usages.

Surely this house cannot be asked to take the newspaper record as the official record instead of the record of Hansard. A point could be made if it were suggested that there had been some change in the meaning, but surely the staff of this house are not to be charged with having acted improperly on the strength of a newspaper report of the text of what was said here, when they are the professional and trusted writers in the house, as against the other writers who have to make their notes as best they can. It is quite clear from the two records that the meaning is identical; there is no change in meaning.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that to my mind there is no prima facie question of privilege here. The hon. member may have had a point of order on the general question whether hon. members should correct or have the right to correct in some way the "blues" or the draft of the take which is sent to their offices. It is my understanding that this right has been recognized for a long time, even to the extent that there is a reference to it on the back page of our daily Hansards.

In the circumstances I suggest to the hon. member that there is no question of privilege here and that we should not debate this matter further.

Mr. Nugent: What the Minister of Public Works said with respect to the transcript—

Some hon. Members: Order.

NATIONAL GALLERY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the house that the Civil Service Commission has approved the appointment of Dr. Jean Sutherland Boggs as director of the National Gallery of Canada. Her appointment also has the unanimous support of the board of trustees of the gallery.

Miss Boggs, now Steinberg professor of art at Washington University in St. Louis, will take up her new appointment on June 1. Dr. Boggs, who is a Canadian, is a graduate of the University of Toronto in fine art and of Radcliffe College at Harvard University, where she obtained her doctorate. From 1948 to 1962 she was employed as an assistant and associate professor of art at three institutions in the United States.

In 1962 Miss Boggs was appointed curator of the Art Gallery of Toronto. In 1964 she left Toronto to take up the Steinberg professorship at Washington University, the first to be established on this continent for the study of modern art.

I think all Canadians interested in the development of the gallery and the furtherance of our cultural life in general will be pleased at the appointment of a Canadian of such national and international stature. For my own part I need hardly add that I am particularly happy to see a woman filling such a senior position among our cultural agencies. She is, in fact, the first woman in Canadian history to head an agency with the status of deputy minister.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[Later:]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Because the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona spoke of aesthetic considerations, I have the obligation to reply on behalf of the official opposition to the minister's interesting announcement about the appointment of a director of the National Gallery. I thank the hon. lady for providing a copy of the announcement.

I think we need to remind ourselves of the important role which the National Gallery could and should play in the cultural life of this nation. I suggest we should ensure that the gallery has an adequate budget. I suggest further that public people—and by that I mean members of parliament—should not interfere with the selection of its acquisitions.

One recalls that the gallery and its staff have been the subject of some angry differences of opinion over the years, a situation which to my mind has not done any good to the public image of the gallery. I hope we can be assured that the trustees were fully consulted and that several nominations were considered by them before this appointment was announced. I hope also that the senior staff of the gallery were not overlooked when the selection was under discussion.

In the course of her press release the minister said she would introduce new legislation. I would point out that the position of director has been vacant for almost a year, and to me it seems a pity that during this time the minister was without the benefit of the knowledge which obviously the new director could bring to this situation.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I have a brief comment on the same subject. The position of director of the National Gallery has been vacant since last July. There is nothing wrong with that; it takes time to find the right person for such a position, a person with good academic qualifications as well as the administrative gifts necessary for the running of a large organization.

Dr. Boggs appears to be very well qualified academically, and the fact that for four years she was curator of the Toronto Art Gallery does demonstrate her administrative ability. I have looked over the curriculum vitae. The new director has an impressive list of publications to her credit. It was interesting to hear the minister say that she is the first lady to be appointed to a federal position in Canada carrying a status equivalent to that of a deputy minister. Perhaps we shall see more of such appointments in the future. We welcome the appointment of Dr. Boggs. She seems to be well qualified to undertake the large task which is to be done at the gallery.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish personally and on behalf of my group to congratulate Miss Boggs on her appointment as director of the National Gallery of Canada.

According to the information given by the hon. minister, Miss Boggs is fully qualified for this position.

Now, I should like to know whether, in appointing Miss Boggs, the Civil Service Commission and the Board of Directors of the National Gallery also considered the bicultural character of our country.

The National Gallery of Canada is not meant only for a small part of the country but for the whole of Canada. This is very important, since the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has been saying for some years that we should always take into account the bicultural character of our country. Is the new director perfectly bilingual? Does she speak French as fluently as English? It would be worthwhile to give the house this information when such an appointment is made.

Did the Civil Service Commission take this into account? There is no doubt whatsoever that Miss Boggs is fully qualified, but what if there were others, equally qualified but bilingual? On the other hand, if Miss Boggs is bilingual, I should like to be the first to congratulate her and to support her appointment to a position on the same level as that of deputy minister.

Mr. Speaker, these are the few comments I wished to make on the occasion of this appointment by the Civil Service Commission announced by the hon. Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh). It would be important and interesting to know whether the bicultural character of Canada was considered before this appointment was made. I should like the hon. minister to give us information on this subject.

[English]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): The hon. minister will have noticed that the comments on her statement were delayed; that once more art in Canada had to give way to politics.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Johnston: I do not think any explanation is necessary. With regard to the hon. lady's announcement I should like to say this. Bearing in mind that the greatest single genius produced in the ranks of Canadian artists—I am speaking of the visual arts—may well have been Emily Carr of British Columbia, we join in welcoming the announcement that Dr. Jean Sutherland Boggs has been appointed director of the National Gallery. We will expect that under her direction the National Gallery will break new ground, as does her appointment. We also hope that her tenure will not be shortened by the hesitancy and delay which have characterized this government in its approach to necessary legislation, or by its failure to provide the gallery and its director with an adequate budget.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): I wish to ask leave of the house to table the correspondence exchanged with the provinces respecting the forthcoming federal-provincial conference.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Does this correspondence include the letters written by the governments of the various provinces with respect to the setting up of a royal commission on crime which has been the subject of an exchange between the Prime Minister and myself?

Mr. Matheson: It does not.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Would there be any objection to tabling that exchange?

Mr. Matheson: That is a different subject.

Mr. Speaker: Does the parliamentary secretary have leave to table the said correspondence?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, before that passes, I think all hon. members must give their consent.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was given.

Mr. Nielsen: It was not given at all. The subject which was the exchange between the Prime Minister and the members on this side recalls that he did give the house his assurance—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There should be no debate. There is either consent or not. Is there consent to the tabling of this correspondence?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: I understood there was going to be included that exchange with the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that under the rules there can be no debate on a request of this kind. The hon. member, however, has every right to object to the tabling of the correspondence if he wishes to do that. Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GRAIN

WHEAT—PROTOCOL EXTENDING OPERATION OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise hon. members that on April 28 our chargé d'affaires in Washington signed, on behalf of the government of Canada, a protocol extending the current international wheat agreement, without amendment, for a further year to July 31, 1967. The International Wheat Council agreed at its session last November to recommend to member governments the second one year extension of the agreement in view of the continuing negotiations in the Kennedy round for comprehensive arrangements covering cereals generally.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. It is difficult for the Chair to determine whether the minister was merely making a statement. If he made a statement, then spokesmen for parties in opposition have a right, according to our rules, to make comments. I could not follow the minister's words too clearly and I am just wondering whether he was simply tabling documents or making a statement.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, I was just informing the house of the signing of a protocol.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, the announcement by the minister may sound a very routine one but I would like to point out to the house that it affects the movement of over 2 billion bushels of wheat, worth between $3 billion and $4 billion in world trade, into world markets. It affects the livelihood of hundreds of thousands of producers in Australia, Canada, the United States, Argentina and France.

This is the second time we have extended this international wheat agreement and I would like to point out very clearly that, for two or three very good reasons, the time has come not to give any more extensions. At the meeting in November, 1961 the United States held up the signing of the international wheat agreement for many weeks, and it was only with the strong support of all other producing nations, coupled with the support of farm organizations in the United States, that we were able to get the United States government to agree to increase the floor and ceiling price by 12½ cents at that time.

The agreement came up for renewal two years ago, and instead of renewing it, as it should have been done for a three year period, it was agreed each time since to extend it for one year. The prices of the things the farmers must purchase in Australia, Argentina, the United States, France and Canada are rising steadily and the purpose of this agreement is to stabilize prices and provide some fair relationship between the cost of production and the price the producers receive.

The excuse given is that we are waiting for action by the cereals division of the GATT negotiations in Geneva, but if we have to wait for it to agree on an over-all cereals program for all cereals in the world we will be waiting for many years before we get back to our international wheat agreement.

I would very strongly suggest to the new Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) that the time is now ripe to make a concerted approach to the United States government, and to ask for two things in exchange for a third. The two things we should ask for are that in the renewal of the old agreement there be no price wars like we had to endure in 1962 and in 1965. This type of agreement would be supported by the Argentine, I believe by France, I know for sure by Australia, I know Canada would support it, and I think the Americans would too if approached at this time. Before I continue I think I should point out that this agreement was agreed to in 1957 by the heads of states. It is not a matter for wheat boards.

The second thing we should ask for, because the time is ripe, is that the international wheat committee be brought together this fall, in November, and that the floor and ceiling prices both be raised a minimum of 20 cents. In this move we would have the support of the Argentinians, the Australians, the Canadian Wheat Board, as well as farm organizations in the United States. I think this time we could get the support of the United States government because last February 10 President Johnson announced to the United States nation that the old philosophy of the wheat policies of the United States government was changing from one of getting rid of surpluses to one of calling on producers in the United States and all over the world to grow all they could to feed the people of the world. His speech of February 10 was taken to the United States Congress by his Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Freeman, and has since been repeated throughout the United States in various forms by various members of the administration.

If they want to carry the appeal of President Johnson to all the producers of the world to meet world needs, because we are very short of cereals—and the United States is asking Canada and Australia specifically to contribute a million tons of wheat per year to supply India, with which we are all in favour—then at this moment, when the United States is trying to take the diplomatic initiative we should ask in exchange that they abandon their policy on prices, which has held down world wheat prices so long and to agree, if we meet our responsibility to provide a million tons a year to India, and if Australia meets its commitment also, to stop their opposition on wheat prices.

They should give us the stability of no more price boards. They should give us an additional 20 cents on the floor and ceiling prices, and then we can make a deal. I personally intend to do all I can as a member in opposition to achieve these things. I spoke to the Australians when I was there three weeks ago and I know they are fully behind this. I have spoken to the Canadian Wheat Board and to certain farm organizations in the United States. When I go to Washington in two weeks time I hope to take this matter up with the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Freeman, and I hope the minister will try to back up this play to get price stabilization, and to get the producers to produce the wheat that the world needs.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I should like to offer some brief comment on this important matter which affects world grain export prices and the stability of income of many of our Canadian farm people. The statement which was made by the minister today is practically identical, word for word, with the statement made last year by the previous minister of trade and commerce. On reading the previous minister's statement as given in Hansard I notice that he not only expressed the hope but gave an assurance that within a year the negotiations in the Kennedy round would come to an end and we would have a new international wheat and cereals agreement.

I am not sure on what basis the minister was able to give an assurance on the outcome of international negotiations, but the fact remains that he did.

I would like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to express the hope that the Canadian representatives at the Kennedy round talks will firmly resist any attempts made there to lower the grain export price levels. There has been much speculative talk in recent months to the effect that the United States government and others were strongly pressing for such a reduction. If this were to happen it would put Canadian producers in a very unenviable and precarious income position.

There is a greater onus on the Canadian representatives to these talks than on the representatives of any other country, for the reason that it is only in Canada that grain producers, farmers, are expected to bear the brunt of international price fluctuations without any kind of price stabilization and support by government.

If the United States, for example, succeeds in obtaining an agreement—as we are told it is attempting to do—toward a reduction, then of course this in the United States will be cushioned by the effect of an increase in government price support or subsidy. If the Canadian representatives fail—and of course similarly this is a multilateral negotiation—the government will have to take responsibility and work toward possibly the necessity of a program of price support in respect of grain marketing. So I can only express the hope that in the course of the next short while the negotiation of the Kennedy round will come speedily toward finalization and that there will be a better level of prices which will be reflected in the Canadian economy, and which will help the problem of the cost price squeeze facing agriculture.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in respect of the signing of the protocol agreement—the extension. This statement did not say much more than what I heard last year on this subject. I should like to remind hon. members, as did the hon. member who spoke previously, that I do not know what the other minister of trade and commerce was basing his assurance on when he assured us there would be an agreement on price stabilization last year. Nevertheless this exchange of practically two billion bushels of grain between the different countries involved, of which we are required to furnish approximately one million tons, for our country represents quite a sector of our economy, and especially the producers of this grain.

There is an extension without coming to any kind of a final agreement with regard to the floor price of the wheat or cereal, because the cereal agreement is not terminated yet and we do not know when it will be. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) mentioned, it might be next year or in two years; we never know how long these discussions will be carried on. In the meantime our Canadian producers are left more or less on the fence.

We know this might last for one year; what is going to come next? I do agree with the proposal of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that we should insist on the United States government coming to a final agreement in respect of stabilizing the world price of wheat which would give a fair share to Canadian as well as any other producers. This price support I think is a thing which the farmers have been asking for. It seems to me Canadians and the Canadian government should be striving to obtain this; other countries are requesting it.

Now we are faced with just a renewal of the part time agreement for another year; it is an extension. I would have liked the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) to say at least what he expected out of this renewal, and to have told us whether there was any definite time in which he could foresee this agreement, so as to give assurance to the Canadian farmers.

As I said at the beginning, this is a one million ton business proposition; it represents a great deal to Canadian producers. Because of Canada's position within such an agreement and because of our large contribution, possibly we should have the most to say. I think the minister in his dealings with Washington should strive to come to a final agreement, and not only a renewal. He should endeavour to have a definite policy agreed upon in respect of wheat and world prices to give Canadians a higher price. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle mentioned 20 cents. If it is possible to give more, then give them more; if not, give them something definite and let us not always play the sidelines while Washington plays the main line.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I regret that my colleague from Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) is not here this afternoon; he is unavoidably absent. I should like to make one or two comments on the statement made by the minister. Surely all Canadians recognize the importance of this particular agreement. Since we know that the extension is just being made now on a yearly basis, I do not think this contributes in any way to the stability of the pricing or the stability of our agricultural economy.

As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) has pointed out, a great many people are affected seriously by this particular agreement. Just this morning some of the members of the farm union delegation pointed out how essential it is to have some long-term program and planning with regard to agricultural matters. I think surely one of the major efforts should be directed toward resolving the problems which are delaying the return to the normal desirable extensions of this particular agreement.

I believe there should be maintenance of a reasonable price. Mention has been made that there should be an increase in the floor. Maintenance of a reasonable price for their product is absolutely essential to the welfare of those in our agricultural community. I trust that every endeavour will be put forward to bring the discussions—the Kennedy round—to a conclusion in order that these other matters can be resolved satisfactorily.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. At this time I should like to remind hon. members once again of the provisions of our provisional standing orders, particularly standing order 15(2a) which enjoins hon. members when making comments in connection with ministerial statements to limit these comments as much as possible. Perhaps I should commend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, whose statement was a model of brevity.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

IMPLEMENTATION OF JUDGES ACT AMENDMENT, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 698—Mr. Cashin:

Has the Minister of Justice or any other minister had any communication from the province of Nova Scotia about any action necessary to give effect in that province to the amendment of The Judges Act (12 Elizabeth II), passed in 1963?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed as follows: Yes by the Minister of Justice.

*EXPORTS AND IMPORTS, CANADA-CHINA

Question No. 722—Mr. Mather:

1. What was the value, in dollars, of Canadian exports to mainland China in 1964 and 1965?

2. What was the value, in dollars, of Canada's imports from mainland China in the same years?

3. Has mainland China been invited to participate in Canada's world fair in 1967, and, if not, for what reason?

[Mr. Patterson.]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in answer to part 1 of the question, the value of Canadian exports to mainland China in 1964 amounted to $136,263,000. In 1965, the latest information available is for the first 11 months, when the value of exports to mainland China was $95,547,000.

In reply to the second part of the hon. member's question, the value of imports from mainland China amounted to $9,420,000 in 1964 and to $11,512,000 for the January to September period 1965, the latest figure available.

The answer to part 3 is no. An invitation has not been extended to the government of mainland China for the reasons indicated to the House of Commons by the then minister of trade and commerce on March 3, 1964.

DEATH SENTENCES COMMUTED

Question No. 766—Mr. Irvine:

1. How many people in Canada were sentenced to be hanged in each of the years 1930 to 1965?

2. How many of these sentences were commuted to life imprisonment in each year?

3. Of those sentenced to life imprisonment in the years 1930 to 1955, how many were paroled and when?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Answers to parts 1 and 2 will be found in the following table.

3. The following table shows the number of paroles, by year, of persons who were sentenced to death in the period of 1930-1955 and whose sentences were commuted to life imprisonment: 1930, 0; 1931, 0; 1932, 0; 1933, 0; 1934, 0; 1935, 0; 1936, 0; 1937, 0; 1938, 0; 1939, 0; 1940, 0; 1941, 0; 1942, 1; 1943, 0; 1944, 0; 1945, 3; 1946, 0; 1947, 1; 1948, 2; 1949, 0; 1950, 4; 1951, 8; 1952, 1; 1953, 3; 1954, 3; 1955, 7.

The following table shows the number of persons sentenced to death, executed, commuted or otherwise dealt with in the years 1930 to 1965. Each case is carried through to its conclusion under the year in which the sentence was imposed. In comparing these figures with those otherwise sometimes published, it should be noted that the latter may include convictions resulting from both the original and a subsequent trial, while the figures given here eliminate this duplication. The classification "otherwise" covers cases in which the conviction was quashed on appeal or the person died before the case was disposed of.

Questions

ABOLITION OF PATENTS ON DRUGS

Question No. 1,247—Mr. Orlikow:

Was a recommendation made in the report of the restrictive trade practices commission on the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs that "patents with respect to drugs be abolished" since "in the opinion of the commission this is the only effective remedy to reduce the price of drugs in Canada" and, if so, has the government reached any decision as to the desirability of implementing that recommendation?

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): The report of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission concerning the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs speaks for itself. Careful consideration is being given to the recommendations contained in the report but it is not expected that a decision will be made until after the report of the committee on drug costs and prices has been received.

DOCKING FACILITIES, CHAMPLAIN INDUSTRIAL PARK, N.B.

Question No. 1,255—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Does the government intend to construct a wharf and docking facilities in the Champlain industrial park, Charlotte county, New Brunswick?

2. If so, what will be the size of the facilities and the estimated cost of same?

3. Will these facilities be operated by the government, or by private interests?

4. If by private interests, what is the name of the person or company who will operate same?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. This is under investigation at the present time.

2. 3. and 4. See answer to 1.

*CANADA PENSION PLAN AND ESTATE TAX

Question No. 1,311—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Will it be the practice of the Department of National Revenue to include the commuted value of a survivor's pension under the Canada Pension Plan in determining the value of a deceased estate for estate tax purposes?

2. If so, upon what basis or principle will the commuted value be determined?

3. Will the government consider an amendment to the Estates Tax Act exempting payments made pursuant to the Canada Pension Plan from estates tax?

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the departments of national revenue and finance as follows:

1. Yes, under the provisions of the Estate Tax Act as they now are.

2. The pensions will be calculated, as far as possible, in accordance with existing regulations and tables.

3. This is a matter of government policy. If any changes are to be proposed in the Estate Tax Act they will be announced at the appropriate time.

*REFUND OF ESTATE TAX, ALBERTA

Question No. 1,315—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Have there been any discussions or correspondence between the government of Canada and the government of Alberta or representatives of either, regarding the proposal of the latter government to rebate to estates in that province seventy-five per centum of the estate tax collected from estates of decedents resident in that province?

2. If so, what has been the nature of such discussions or correspondence and what was the result thereof?

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part, yes. In answer to the second part, by letter Hon. A. O. Aalborg, provincial treasurer of the province of Alberta, informed the Minister of Finance of the resolution concerning the estate tax adopted by the legislature of Alberta on April 15, 1966. The Alberta legislature resolved that legislation be submitted to the next session of the legislature providing for the rebate of estate tax remitted to the province by the government of Canada in all cases where the deceased was a bona fide resident of Alberta and, that the government of Alberta enter into negotiations with the government of Canada with a view to securing the removal of estate tax in its entirety in so far as it applied to residents of Alberta.

Mr. Aalborg indicated that Alberta would be requesting later this year a meeting with the Minister of Finance to discuss the proposal that the government of Canada remove the estate tax in its entirety in Alberta commencing in 1967.

*INCREASE IN SUCCESSION DUTIES EXEMPTION, ONTARIO

Question No. 1,316—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Have there been any discussions or correspondence between the government of Canada and the government of Ontario, or representatives of either, regarding the increases in exemption from succession duties granted in Ontario?

2. If so, what has been the nature of such discussions or correspondence and what was the result thereof?

3. Will the government of Canada consider now increasing exemptions under the Estate Tax Act to achieve exemptions at least as favourable to taxpayers as those now granted under the Ontario succession duty act?

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is, no. The answer to the second part is not applicable. The answer to the third part is, this is a matter of government policy. If any changes are to be proposed in the Estate Tax Act they will be announced at the appropriate time.

FEDERAL BUILDING, PARRSBORO, N.S.

Question No. 1,328—Mr. Coates:

1. Is it the intention of the government to construct a new federal building or post office at Parrsboro, N.S.?

2. Have investigations been carried out in the Parrsboro area with regard to the purchase of a site for a new federal building or post office and, if so (a) has any land been acquired by the government and (b) from whom and at what price?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes a federal building.

2. Preliminary site investigations have been carried out with regard to the purchase of a site. (a) no, (b) not applicable.

NATIONAL MUSEUM SPACE

Question No. 1,365—Mr. Reid:

Are all the functions of the National Museum consolidated in one building and, if not (a) for what reason (b) what are the other addresses (c) what functions or departments of the National Museum are housed there (d) what is the cost to the government for this space?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the directors of National Museum as follows:

The answers to Question 1,365 are that the functions of the National Museum are not consolidated in one building, because

(a) the Victoria Memorial Museum has long been too small; and

(b) the other addresses are: (i) The Canadian War Museum, in a one storey building used for exhibits on Sussex street; (ii) The National Aviation Museum in space rented for exhibits from D.O.T. at Uplands airport, under an agreement between the Minister for Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Minister of Transport, dated July 1, 1960, for a rent of $60,000 per annum paid out of the museum estimates; (iii) Hangars 66, 67 and 68 at Rockcliffe used for exhibition of aircraft from the national collection of historic aircraft, for workshops for the repair of aircraft and the storage of aircraft not currently on display; (iv) 7 Murray street,

Ottawa, for the Canadian War Museum's laboratories, renovation work and study collections containing specimens not currently on display; also offices for the staff employed there; (v) 1523 Laperrière avenue, Ottawa, for housing the study collections of the history division and specimens held for the future Museum of Science and Technology; workshops for renovation and conservation; offices for the staff employed there; (vi) Until September, 1966, the Engine House, Ottawa West, for housing historic railway material; (vii) The Côté building, Carillon and Iberville streets, Hull, housing palaeontological and zoological study collections; (viii) Mines Branch Annex, Sussex and George streets, Ottawa, housing paleontological offices, laboratories, workshop and study collections; (ix) 860 Bank st., Ottawa; storage for the Technical Services and Display Sections; museological items; and field equipment; (x) Services building, 211 Montcalm street, Hull, P.Q., for housing study collections of Canadian War Museum and National Aviation Museum.

(c) Rentals for this space total $188,528.23 per annum including the $60,000 for the aviation museum.

CONTINUATION OF NATIONAL MUSEUM WORK

Question No. 1,370—Mr. Reid:

Does the government intend to continue the scientific and educational work carried on by the national museum (a) in the present building and, if so, for how long (b) in the proposed new national museum building and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the directors of National Museum as follows: (a) Yes, in the present buildings and additional temporary space as necessary, until the new building is ready. (b) Yes.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL RESEARCH CENTRES

Question No. 40—Mr. Allard:

1. Are there French language sections in the National Research Council, the Canada Council and other federal research institutions and, if so, what are their designations and locations?

2. In small research centres established by the National Research Council (a) where is each centre located (b) how long has it been active (c) what is the subject of each research project (d) what were the amounts spent in 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964 and 1965 (e) on whose representations was each centre established?

Return tabled.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

STATEMENTS OF ELECTION EXPENSES

Question No. 282—Mr. Caouette:

1. What are the names of the candidates who have not submitted, within the prescribed time, the declaration concerning their electoral expenses for the federal election of November 8, 1965?

2. Will the penalties prescribed by section 63 of the Canada Elections Act be imposed upon them and, if not, for what reason?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions No. 119 and 123 are acceptable to the government.

Notice of motion No. 122 is also acceptable to the government and the papers in question are tabled forthwith.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the other notices of motions stand.

AIRCRAFT SEPARATION ON NORTH ATLANTIC ROUTE

Motion No. 119—Mr. Dinsdale:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the Canadian submission to the I.C.A.O. on the question of separation of aircraft on the north Atlantic route.

Motion agreed to.

HOLDERS OF BROADCASTING LICENCES

Motion No. 122—Mr. Stafford:

That an order of the house do issue for a list of owners and shareholders of all private radio and television companies licensed to broadcast in Canada and at present holding licences issued under the authority of the Department of Transport.

Motion agreed to.

USE OF SEAWAY BY RUSSIAN SHIPS

Motion No. 123—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

That an order of the house do issue for copies of letters or correspondence with the Department of External Affairs or other departments concerning a request by Canadian representatives of Russian shipping in Canada for permission to sail up the St. Lawrence seaway.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that notice of motion No. 123 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, is it my understanding that notice of motion No. 123 is deemed to have been adopted? There may have been a slip of the tongue, because the government's intention is that this motion should be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The parliamentary secretary called notices of motion Nos. 119, 122 and 123 and they were deemed to have been adopted.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the government's request is that No. 123 be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately a motion has been made by the hon. parliamentary secretary and carried.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I must take responsibility for this difficulty which occurred while I was otherwise engaged. I spoke to the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) about this matter and he agreed that this motion should stand, for the reasons I discussed with him.

Mr. Starr: He is not here—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He was here and I discussed this with him.

Mr. Starr: The motion has now been passed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Surely the house does not want to pass something that is—

Mr. Starr: The house has already passed it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend knew the circumstances I am sure he would agree that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In view of the explanations given by the parliamentary secretary and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is it the wish of this house that this motion be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: The mover of the motion is not in the house, sir.

Motion agreed to.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

WHEAT—PROTOCOL EXTENDING OPERATION OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of his statement in respect of the one-year extension of the protocol on the international wheat agreement. Is it not a fact that this will result, as far as the farmer-producers of this country are concerned, in the price of farm products being frozen for another year, in spite of the fact that the cost of various items required by farmers, such as machinery, fertilizer and the like, have increased to great heights? What representations has the government of Canada made to the United States in order to impress upon that nation that the Canadian farmer has been caught in an impossible position as a result of this additional year of frozen prices, and the ever increasing cost of production?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the right hon. gentleman's question is that present price limits are extended for the next year under the terms of the protocol. In answer to the second part I should point out that the Canadian government recognizes the position of the farmers and is doing everything within its power to bring this situation to the attention of importers throughout the world.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What representations have been made by the Canadian government to the United States in this connection, to point out that the Canadian farmer will have the price of his produce frozen at a time when everything he purchases is increasing in cost?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that his question is argumentative.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can rephrase my question so that it is something other than argumentative. What representations has the government of Canada made to the United States regarding the injustice of this situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that he has merely paraphrased his question rather than rephrased it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR RETURN OF BOX CARS FROM UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway made representations to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport asking them personally to intervene with United States authorities in an attempt to obtain the return of some 2,000 box cars which are being held in the United States? If such representations have been made, what action does the government intend to take concerning this matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such representations having been made to me, but I shall be glad to look into the matter at once. I do not know whether representations have been made to my colleague, the Minister of Transport.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman indicate his understanding as to whom these representations were made?

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I asked whether representations were made to the Minister of Transport and, following no action on his part, to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he can indicate to whom the representations were made, because that is the part of his question I could not hear.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, were representation made to the Minister of Transport and the Prime Minister asking them personally to intervene with United States authorities in an attempt to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway to repossess some 2,000 box cars which are being held in the United States, and which the C.P.R. has not been able to repossess to meet the serious need for the movement of grain?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If this is the only question asked by the hon. member, I think it is out of order. The hon. member is asking whether representations have been made to the minister, and I suggest this is not an urgent matter.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Douglas: May I, with great deference, Mr. Speaker, point out that previously I had asked what action was being taken, because I am sure Your Honour recognizes that the holding in the United States of 2,000 box cars belonging to the C.P.R. is a matter of great urgency to the farmers of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was under the impression that the hon. member had dropped the other part of his question.

Mr. Douglas: Not at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker in order to clear up this matter I may say that I have had several conversations, and so has the Minister of Finance, with various officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and on every one of these occasions we have drawn attention to the desirability of doing everything possible to get Canadian box cars back from the United States as fast as possible. The railway has on every occasion assured us that they wanted to do so because they could make a lot more money if they had them in Canada, rather than the United States. I believe they are making every effort to have them returned to this country.

At one stage very briefly, for one or two days, there was some order of the United States authorities which might have created difficulties. It was removed almost immediately as a result of representations, not made by me, but made in the ordinary way through the ordinary channels in Washington. I know of no other way in which the United States authorities have intervened at all to prevent the normal operation of the arrangements between the railways.

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF PROCEDURE IN CALLING TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works I shall put my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Tenders will be opened Friday night for the selection of a company to tear down the Roxborough building. The department called for tenders from four companies. Why did the federal government not proceed as usual, that is by inviting public tenders and awarding a contract to the lowest bidder?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member has a grievance to raise, but the question he puts at this time is out of order.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING BASE LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Considering the repeated questions raised in this house which have added to the demand from the Fisheries Council of Canada yesterday for measures to protect Canadian fisheries for Canadians, is the government prepared to set a deadline within which agreement must be reached for the application of a 12-mile protected fishing zone measured from a headland-to-headland base line?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This appears to be a question of a very general nature and I suggest to the hon. member that it cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the negotiations on this question have been going on for two years.

Mr. Speaker: This is why I thought the question should not be asked at this time.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ARDA—PROVISION FOR DRAINAGE ON RESERVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry of which I have given him notice. Recently the minister issued a press release indicating that the federal government and the government of Ontario have arranged through ARDA to share the costs of drainage work in eastern Ontario municipalities in a five-year drainage program. Would the minister be prepared to participate in a similar arrangement to promote drainage work on Indian reserves wherever the agricultural capability of Indian land would be improved thereby?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would suggest to the hon. member that he place his question on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

INCREASE IN TRANSPORTATION COSTS TO DAIRY FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our dairy producers I should like to put to the Minister of Agriculture this urgent question. Since a very few days ago when the minister announced his new dairy subsidy policy, have certain processors raised their transportation costs by as much as 50 per cent in some cases? If the minister is so informed, will he intervene right away, before it is too late, so the individual farmer will get the benefit of the minister's new policy? Has the minister been informed that this has happened in the few days since he announced his policy? It is an urgent matter that can only be dealt with immediately.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice and report to the hon. member.

TRANSPORT

NOVA SCOTIA—SECOND FERRY TO NEW ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It is my understanding that a study has been undertaken by the federal and provincial governments relative to the proper terminus in Nova Scotia for a second ferry between New England and Nova Scotia. Would the minister inform the house when a report on the progress being made by this study group may be expected, and whether we can anticipate the provision of this very much needed second ferry within the next year?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I hope quite soon to be able to say something about this subject.

GRAIN

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—INCREASE IN ELEVATOR CAPACITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture? I would ask the minister whether his attention has been drawn to a brief presented to the government yesterday by the National Farmers Union, wherein the National Farmers Union indicates that there is a growing volume of exports of western grain through west coast ports and regrets the postponement or delay in the expansion of the grain elevator facilities at Prince Rupert. I would also ask whether this has tended to change the minister's mind about that grain elevator.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question cannot be put in this way and is not acceptable.

INDUSTRY

COPPER ORE—SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF EMBARGO TO UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister received lately representations about the copper scrap shortage and suggestions that the embargo on this ore should be extended to the United States?

Mr. Speaker: I would invite the hon. member to place the question on the order paper.

Mr. Mongrain: Ten o'clock, please, Mr. Speaker.

FIRES

HEAVY LOSS ON MONTREAL WATERFRONT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Milton L. Klein (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is the government conducting an investigation into the disastrous fire which occurred on the Montreal waterfront, and if so does the minister have anything to report to the house in this connection?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): We certainly are conducting such an investigation. It is a very worrying situation. I should like, if I might, to pay tribute to the wonderful work done by the Montreal fire department in saving all that could be saved of these buildings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION ON GRADE STANDARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister mind, for the information of members of this house, having a pamphlet issued by his department informing consumers what is being done by the Department of Agriculture to protect consumers with respect to grade standards in all types of agricultural produce?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question is not so urgent that it should be asked at this time, and it might be placed on the order paper or perhaps debated at a later hour.

[Translation]

ABITIBI—REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION FOR CROP DAMAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Could the minister tell us whether the federal government will make direct payments to the farmers of the Abitibi area, as was done in the case of the farmers of the Lake St. John area, for damage sustained by their crops in 1964? If so, will those amounts be paid soon?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand this question refers to a situation back in 1964 and I fail to understand the immediate urgency of the question. I would suggest to the hon. member that he place it on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, when a similar question was put to the minister the other day, he was able to reply that an amount of $12 million had been paid to the province of Quebec for the farmers of the Abitibi and Lake St. John areas.

The member for Chapleau is now asking whether the federal Department of Agriculture has started paying those amounts.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister wishes to make a statement on this matter, he is free to do so.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. My departmental officials inform me that the cheques in question were mailed yesterday.

[English]

EDUCATION

CONDITIONS GOVERNING FREE UNIVERSITY TRAINING

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the minister's statement within the last day or so in Halifax that lack of education is the most important of the causes of poverty and that free university education may become ncessary, will the minister say how the government proposes to determine the extent of poverty necessary before a policy to make free university education possible can be provided?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

EXPO '67

USE BY EDMONTON OF "KLONDIKE" THEME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I wanted to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence affecting the peace and security of the country. It arises out of a certificate I received this morning referring to the Yukon-Klondike defence force, in which this statement is made:

> This . . . . puts you in the front line of battle of the Yukon's fight with Edmonton to win back the Klondike.

I want to ask the minister whether the recruitment of this private army to wage war on Edmonton—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, this question cannot be accepted.

Mr. Scott: Ten o'clock.

PUBLIC WORKS

TORONTO—PLACING OF FILL IN LAKE ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public works a question relating to the illegal filling of lake Ontario at the city of Toronto. Why is it that officials of the Department of Public Works stopped the town of New Toronto from extending their two public parks into the lake, and yet they did not stop the private developers, Millgate? Should the town of New Toronto hire a new lawyer?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may want to discuss this matter at a later hour.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REMOVAL FROM FRANCE OF POLITICAL AND MILITARY HEADQUARTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, which arises out of remarks made to the external affairs committee. In view of the reports in this morning's Globe and Mail that proposals for the removal from France of NATO political as well as military headquarters have gained ground among NATO experts and diplomats could the minister tell this house whether this is a result of this government taking the initiative?

Mr. Speaker: This question cannot be accepted. The question is out of order.

REDISTRIBUTION

CONSIDERATION OF OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: The house will now proceed to the consideration of objection No. 14, relating to the province of Manitoba. A notice of the objection in the form of a motion was filed with Mr. Speaker in the following terms:

> Proposed Electoral Districts of the Province of Manitoba:
> That, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), and for the reasons hereinafter specified, consideration be given by this House to the matter of an objection to the following provisions of the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Manitoba, laid before the House by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966.
>
> The objections to the provisions of the Manitoba report are as follows:
> 1. The Commission failed to give sufficient emphasis to geographical considerations, the sparsity, density and relative rate of growth of the population, and overlooked the special problem of communication and transportation in respect of certain new electoral districts.

2. The Commission failed to give special consideration to the accessibility of one region to another region in determining the boundaries of certain electoral districts.

3. The Commission failed to give proper attention to the physical, social or economic cohesion in some of the new electoral districts created, thus ignoring the importance of unity or community of interest in those electoral districts.

4. And such other objections that the undersigned Members may deem necessary to carry out the spirit and terms and conditions of the Act in question.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Since this is the last day of the debate on this subject, Mr. Speaker, and the objections of one province, the province of Manitoba, are to be considered, and since the business of the house has consumed so much of the time, I wonder if the house would agree to hearing all of those who wish to speak on the objections concerning the province of Manitoba, even though this might take us beyond six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Order; I understand that in addition to the objections relating to the province of Manitoba there are still two specific objections from the province of Quebec to be considered. I assume that if hon. members want the house to make an order respecting these particular objections, that order should also include a reference to the two objections from Quebec. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I know that the tasks that were assigned to the redistribution commission were difficult. It is essential, however, that the best maps possible should be submitted for final approval. It is desirable that as few people as possible be left dissatisfied. It is for this reason I propose to make a few remarks on the objections before us, in an endeavour to be helpful to the commission. If, during my comments, I use some strong words about some of the things proposed by the commission, it will be because I have the strong feeling that some people are not getting fair treatment. I feel that I have to speak on behalf of these people. I feel, too, that it is of major importance to get started on the right foot and produce a map that will be acceptable to most people.

Before I deal with the map proposed by the commission, I want to point out that the four original ridings were Provencher, Lisgar, Marquette and Selkirk. These are historic ridings. It does not seem right or fair that one name should be dropped and three retained. The historic name of Selkirk certainly deserves to be retained, but this should not be done in a meaningless way. It should be done in such a manner that the town of Selkirk would remain an important hub of such a riding. The name of the constituency should not be a hyphenated name.

In dealing with the map proposed by the federal Redistribution Commission for the province of Manitoba, I should like to say that I have some serious doubts concerning the redistribution act itself. I also question the knowledge that the members of the Manitoba Redistribution Commission have regarding the community interests of people located in rural Manitoba. The commission, in fact, completely ignored the geographical, cultural and economic interests of Manitoba's rural people. In addition, they have ignored the basic lines of communication throughout the province. With due respect to the members of the commission, I ask why there was not a professional geographer on the commission and why there was not one person from rural Manitoba on it.

I have heard rumours that the maps were actually sketched by university students at Carleton University in Ottawa and that the Manitoba commission merely chose one of those maps and made slight alterations thereon. If this is true, I consider it an insult to the people of Manitoba. The opinion of a great number of Canadians who have studied this problem is that the members of the provincial commissions are dominated, and in some cases actually afraid of, the representation commissioner. The rumour in Manitoba is that the commission has decided their choice of maps is final, and that no evidence produced by members of parliament will change their minds. This is precisely the same arrogant attitude which they took at the public hearings last fall.

There were many excellent representations made by people from the interlake area and the northern part of the province. The arguments presented by those people would certainly have convinced an independent judge that there are serious faults in the proposed map. In addition, a brilliant presentation was made by Mr. J. A. MacKay of Winnipeg. Mr. MacKay presented a map that is far superior in all aspects to that of the commission. If the people of Manitoba had their choice in the matter, I predict they would take Mr. MacKay's map. Why do the members of the commission not go out to rural Manitoba and obtain the opinions of the people? Should political maps not be the ones which the people want? It appears that we do not have this, but instead we have a dictatorship that is unwilling to accept the opinion of the people. Is this what we want? Is this what is meant by an independent commission? If this is the situation, and it appears that it is, we have gone backwards rather than forwards. Instead of satisfying the people's wishes we have put the redistribution of federal seats in each province into the hands of a four man dictatorship rather than in the hands of 265 elected representatives of the people.

What were the most frequently mentioned complaints at the hearings last fall? For the record, they were as follows:

1. That it is completely unnecessary to have rural areas in a Winnipeg seat or to have a Winnipeg area in a rural seat. The reasoning is quite clear. People should not be dominated by others who have completely different interests.

• (4:50 p.m.)

2. That the interlake area forms a natural unit and should not be divided into three parts but should form one constituency. If it must be divided, it should be divided along the highways system. There are three main highways running through the interlake, all of which run in a north-south direction. One highway, the St. Laurent-Ashern line, is situated on the west side, and the other two are close together on the east side.

3. The Churchill constituency, which has been extremely difficult in the past, has become impossible by the addition of the northern interlake. In addition, complaints were heard from the people of the northern interlake who feel that they do not belong in Churchill.

What did the commission do about these complaints? First of all, they moved the people of Gimli and Riverton into the Winnipeg-Selkirk seat, making this seat more impossible in that they have allowed additional domination, and in that they have given this seat, which is one third rural, the second largest population of any seat in Canada.

Second, they moved the dividing line between Portage and Churchill a few miles north, reducing Churchill's population by some 3,000 people. Do they actually think that this has eased the Churchill situation? Well, I have represented this area for eight years and I know that it has not. The member still has to travel three lines, and whether or not he must cover a few extra villages makes no difference. It appears to me that all they saw was population figures and they were determined to reduce the population of Churchill.

It is true that population was an argument, but there is much more to redistribution than population. In making the change, they have cut through two municipalities which were originally included in one constituency. The people of Fisher Branch, Broad Valley and Poplarfield are one family and the commissioners have worsened the situation by drawing a line through that area.

What could they have done without redrawing the map? They could have made great improvements by making changes as slight as they did. First, Brooklands could have been transferred into Winnipeg North from Portage; Old Kildonan and West St. Paul could have been moved from Winnipeg North to Winnipeg-Selkirk. The result is an increase of 1,000 people in Winnipeg North.

There were complaints at the hearings from the town of Brooklands. Those who are almost in the centre of Winnipeg do not want to be dominated by a rural area. Everything in the municipality of St. Andrews that is north of the town of Selkirk could have gone into Portage. If these changes were now made, Portage would have a population of approximately 65,000 and Winnipeg-Selkirk would have a population of approximately 77,000. This minimum of change would have eliminated most of the domination which now exists. The commission could then have redrawn the Portage-Churchill line in order to ease the Churchill situation. This would have little or no effect on the populations of the constituencies concerned.

As I see it, the major faults in the proposed maps are as follows:

1. Lines of communication and community interests have been completely ignored in the Churchill constituency.

2. Metro Winnipeg has not been given its fair share of Manitoba's 13 seats.

3. Lines of communication and community interests have been completely ignored in that the interlake area has been divided into three.

4. The proposed map allows certain areas to dominate other areas which are completely unrelated.

5. It is quite clear that my complaints are the same as those presented by the people of Manitoba.

On the first point, the reasons for objecting to the proposed Churchill constituency are so numerous that an entire volume could be written on it. The Churchill constituency as it was before redistribution had sufficient population and should be left as it was. The argument put forth by the commission for not doing this is that the farming district in the Swan River valley should not come under the same representation as the northern towns of Flin Flon, Thompson, etc. They have therefore placed it with the northern interlake. The same argument applies to the northern interlake in that the largest industry in the northern interlake is mixed farming.

In addition, there are numerous other arguments as to why the Swan River valley should be in Churchill. First, Swan River has come under Churchill representation in the past and is therefore accustomed to it. I have heard that these people would prefer to be in Churchill. Second, the main highway to the north goes through the Swan River area and not through the interlake. Third, the distance between the northern towns to the Swan River valley is much closer than it is to the northern interlake.

Fourth, the Churchill constituency is one of the largest in Canada and therefore difficult enough to represent without making it much more difficult. The northern interlake area is out of the way and loosely connected. Fifth, by including a part of the interlake in Churchill, the commission has split the natural, economic, cultural and political interlake unit.

As I have already stated, the interlake is a natural unit bordered by lakes on both sides. Someone stated at last fall's hearings that the commission claims to advocate natural boundaries and that they have ignored the most natural boundary of all. Lakes have a tendency to separate people whereas rivers and other boundaries do not. The numerous arguments as to why the entire interlake area should come under one representation were tabled in detail at the hearings last September. I should, however, like to make a special plea for the people in Ashern, Fisher Branch and other towns included in Churchill. These people are extremely unhappy and feel completely neglected. Their only source of communication is with the people to the south. I should also like to make a special plea for the people on Hecla island. The only direct communication that these people have is with the people of Riverton. They therefore must come under the same representation.

Besides being a natural unit, the entire interlake area is a designated ARDA area. This is an additional reason why the entire area should come under one representation. If the interlake must be divided, it can only be divided in two, not into three as the commission has done. If it is divided, the only logical way to do so is to divide it on a north-south line; that is, the provincial constituency of St. George could go into Churchill and the remainder into another constituency. At least the entire interlake population in Churchill would then be in along one highway, that is highway No. 6. The portion now included in Churchill is very loosely connected. There is limited road connection from east to west.

The same problem was encountered in the last provincial redistribution and at that time the commission made the change and divided St. George and Fisher by a north-south line rather than an east-west line. Why is this course not followed this time?

A special objection should be made to the proposed Winnipeg-Selkirk seat. The chairman of the Manitoba commission has stated on several occasions that a proper population distribution was essential and that this had created problems for the commission. The typical Winnipeg constituency has been given a population of approximately 84,000 and the typical rural constituency a population of 60,000 people. In this case, a constituency which is two thirds Winnipeg and one third rural should have a population of 76,000 people. It is therefore extremely unfair to give Winnipeg-Selkirk the largest population of any seat in Manitoba.

Another objection which I have to this seat is that there is absolutely no community of interest between the people of a town such as Riverton and the people of Elmwood, a district in Winnipeg. The placing of Riverton with Elmwood is the same as if Morden were placed in St. Boniface, or if Pine Falls were placed with St. James. Unless it is absolutely necessary, no city seat should contain a rural area or vice versa.

If a rural area must be placed in a Winnipeg seat, at least the areas should be adjacent to each other. For example, Riverton is 100 miles from Elmwood with no highways leading into Elmwood. There are two highways from Riverton to Winnipeg and they both lead into West Kildonan. Another objection which I have to the Winnipeg-Selkirk seat is that the rural people should not be dominated by unrelated people from Elmwood and East Kildonan. The same holds true for the people in the town of Brooklands.

Metropolitan Winnipeg has not been given its fair share of Manitoba's 13 seats. The population of metropolitan Winnipeg, as taken in the 1961 census, is 475,989 people. As I stated earlier, there is absolutely no need to make any constituency partly rural and partly urban. Winnipeg should have been given six seats with an average population of 79,331. Upon reviewing the proposed maps for Ontario, I notice that all but one of the Toronto seats have a population between 79,000 and 80,000. In Ontario and Quebec only five out of 164 seats have a population of 80,000 or more, and in all cases they are just slightly over 80,000.

In conclusion, I would like to state that I endorse the political map of rural Manitoba which was presented at the hearings last September by Mr. J. A. MacKay. I have prepared a map displaying Winnipeg divided into six seats. This took me approximately two hours to prepare. If I have been able to prepare a map in two hours, it should be no hardship for the commission to redraw the Winnipeg constituencies. If they feel that my map is inferior to the one which they have proposed for greater Winnipeg, I challenge them to publish my map alongside theirs in the daily newspapers and give the people a chance to make their decision.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I would ask at this time whether I might table the map of the city of Winnipeg and of rural Manitoba, which could go along with these remarks.

Mr. Dinsdale: Including Brandon-Souris?

Mr. Stefanson: As far as I am concerned, the entire map should be redrawn on a six-six-one basis; that is, six Winnipeg seats, six rural seats and one northern rural seat. My map of greater Winnipeg is an indication of what can be done.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member to table the documents referred to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stefanson: Mr. MacKay's map of rural Manitoba is a good starting point for the commission. If the commission is not prepared to listen to our viewpoints as well as the viewpoints of the people of Manitoba, the entire redistribution has been a failure. At a very minimum, I emphasize that the commission must give Winnipeg six seats. They can then transfer the entire rural portion of the Winnipeg-Selkirk seat to Portage. The rural portions include the municipalities of Bifrost, Gimli, St. Andrews and most of St. Clements. Portage can then give up its portion of the municipalities—Assiniboia and Charleswood—along with the town of Brooklands, to Winnipeg seats. Portage can then give up everything south of the Assiniboine river to Lisgar, and Lisgar can give up the municipalities of Riverside and Turtle Mountain to Brandon-Souris. The result would be that Portage, Lisgar and Brandon-Souris would all end up with a population of 67,000, while the other rural seats, with the exception of Churchill, would have populations of around 60,000. This seems fair in that Portage, Lisgar and Brandon would have much less territory than the other rural constituencies.

In addition to giving Winnipeg six seats, the minor changes just listed would mean that the interlake would only be cut into two rather than three as presently proposed After making the above mentioned changes, a switch could be made between Churchill and Portage, dividing the interlake according to lines of communication as outlined earlier. Even though it is not the ultimate solution for the Churchill constituency, it would be an improvement.

In closing, I wish to state that I regret that the commission did not see fit to apply paragraph 13, section 3(i) and (ii) of the redistribution act which reads as follows:

> (c) the commission may depart from the strict application of rules (a) and (b) in any case where
> (i) special geographic considerations, including in particular the sparsity, density or relative rate of growth of population of various regions of the province, the accessibility of such regions or the size or shape thereof, appear to the commission to render such a departure necessary or desirable, or
> (ii) any special community or diversity of interests of the inhabitants of various regions of the province appears to the commission to render such a departure necessary or desirable.

The proposed Winnipeg-Selkirk riding, an urban rural riding, has the second largest population of any riding in Canada, and this proposed riding includes the city of East Kildonan, the fastest growing area in Metropolitan Winnipeg. The riding of Churchill, according to the 1961 census, had a population of 54,952, which gave it sufficient population by using the tolerance allowed under the act, and therefore, it was not necessary to add any additional area. The riding of Churchill is the second largest in area in Canada, and therefore it should have been a primary concern of the commission not to increase its area size.

I trust that the commission will give serious consideration to the points and suggestions I have made, and endeavour to produce a map which will be acceptable and fair to as many people as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. So that there will be no misunderstanding, may I say to the hon. member who has just spoken that previously in this debate, when documents were to be sent to the commission they were deposited with the Clerk, and he then would have them forwarded to the commission. Is this the wish of the hon. member, rather than actually tabling the documents?

Mr. Stefanson: That is what I want. I want to deposit them with the Clerk.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): In taking part in this debate, I wish first of all to say that I am in full agreement with the system of having an independent commission in charge of the very complicated work connected with any necessary redistribution of the various electoral districts or ridings of our country, and I might add that the party I support is also in full support of an independent commission to do this particular job. In saying this, I do not agree completely with the manner in which the commission has been selected.

I wish also to pay some measure of tribute, Mr. Speaker, to the work performed by the members of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Manitoba, who I believe were confronted, as were members of other provincial commissions with an extremely difficult task.

Redistribution of electoral boundaries is a very controversial subject at any time and is one that is certain to result in protracted argument, regardless of who may be empowered to determine new boundaries. While I pay tribute to the efforts of the commission for the province of Manitoba, I do have several strong arguments against their decisions to date. I therefore strongly suggest that they be prepared to review again any suggestions put forth in this debate before any final decision is made. This procedure was followed to a small degree at the conclusion of public hearings which were held in various parts of the province last summer, and at that time some minor changes were made in relation to the original considerations of the commission.

I would respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the commission give serious consideration to the creation of six electoral districts in the metropolitan area of Winnipeg, with these six electoral districts being entirely urban. I would then suggest that the balance of the province be divided into seven electoral districts.

I am sure that all Manitobans realize that the most northerly electoral district in the province, which in this case is the riding of Churchill, must of necessity encompass a much larger area than any of the other six ridings outside metropolitan Winnipeg, and this is purely and simply a matter of having to encompass within its boundaries sufficient population to meet at least the minimum population requirements as laid down in the terms of reference of the commission.

Now, while recognizing the fact that the electoral district of Churchill of necessity must be considerably larger than the other rural ridings, I suggest that there are a number of very valid reasons why the fullest possible consideration should be given to keeping this northern riding as compact as is humanly possible. It is my intention to present these suggestions at this time.

The first point I would like to bring to the attention of the commission is that under present redistribution plans the electoral district of Churchill will be by far the largest electoral district in Canada, within the provinces, comprising over three quarters of the entire area of the province, and this is far from necessary.

Despite the fact that we who live in the north, and that seems to include everyone who lives north of the northern extremity of Winnipeg's international airport, are quite accustomed to extensive travel, and despite the fact that if given sufficient time a person can visit every nook and cranny in the entire province if necessary, I do have many reasons for suggesting to the commission that they keep the northern electoral district as compact as they can.

This can only be done by coming just far enough south to get into the handiest pockets of population. The boundaries which existed during the last five federal elections did just that. I wish to bring to the attention of the commission that within the boundaries of Churchill riding as established during the last five federal elections there resided 54,952 people, according to the 1961 census. This is almost 2,500 more than the minimum requirement for any electoral district. The boundaries at that time comprised some 171,000 square miles. The newly suggested boundaries will add a further 20,000 square miles of area, while adding only 600 people to the over-all population.

Granted, there is a population switch whereby some 15,000 persons are removed from the riding, while some 15,600 were added. However, in the process an area of approximately 2,500 square miles is removed and an area of 20,000 square miles is added.

Someone might say that a considerable amount of this new territory is water. To this I would answer that when a representative charters an aircraft to visit his constituents the price is the same to fly over water as it is to fly over land, and it takes just as much time. It was not necessary, from the point of view of population or otherwise, to add this additional 20,000 square miles to Churchill riding.

Throughout the years the area removed has had a common interest with the rest of Churchill riding. On the other hand the area which has been added has always been more closely associated with the region to the south. It is known as the interlake area, and the interests of the people who live there are, as I say, associated with the area south to Winnipeg and southeast to Gimli and Selkirk. I have had friends in this area for many years and I know of their interests along these lines.

Because of the size of Churchill riding as it existed during the last five federal elections, it has been very difficult for political parties to keep their organizations functioning in a proper and interesting manner, mainly due to the difficulty of arranging meetings as often as would be desirable. People in this riding are of necessity obliged to travel 700 miles and more to attend constituency organization meetings. If the new boundaries which have been suggested are put into effect, people who may not wish to fly will be obliged at various times of the year to travel 1200 miles or even further to attend such meetings. This is not a healthy situation.

Now I come to a subject which I strongly feel is a most important one, and that is our native Indian people. Here is a group of people with whom I have been in close contact for a number of years. I have had scores of meetings with them and I have spent many days visiting with them on their reservations and in their homes. I am sure anyone who knows these people will agree with me that they are very interested in writing to both their federal and their provincial representatives and in having their representatives visit them. We as Canadians must give all the attention we can to the long struggle of improving the lot of these people and this can only be done through close association with them.

During the last five federal elections in Churchill constituency there were 17 Indian bands living on widely scattered reservations with a total population of over 14,000. In the area which the commission suggests should be added to Churchill riding there are nine more Indian bands, with a total population of over 6,300 people. Surely the commission does not believe it is fair to say to these people, who so earnestly need whatever understanding we can give them: You will have one person to represent more than 20,000 of you, despite the fact that you reside on 26 reservations scattered over an area comprising three-quarters of the province of Manitoba. Incidentally, these 20,000 Indian people make up more than two-thirds of the native Indian population of Manitoba.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether the commission followed closely the population figures of the 1961 census or whether they merely ignored the relative rates of population growth in any particular area. The population of the northern part of the province has been increasing rapidly. As an example I would point out that according to the 1961 census the population of the local government district of Mystery Lake is recorded as 3,449 people. This local government district is now the townsite of Thompson, Manitoba and town records show there are presently more than 10,000 people living there. So it becomes quite apparent that there was no need whatever to enlarge to such an extent an electoral district which was already the second largest in Canada within the provinces.

The north has been ignored for too long. This is just one further proof that those who do not live in the north know little or nothing about conditions there. A graph showing the relative population increase in Thompson alone would make it clear that there were 7,514 people residing there in 1963, that there were 7,807 in 1964 and over 9,000 in 1965. I might add that this was pointed out clearly to to the office of the census division of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in 1961 by the resident administrator of the local government district of Mystery Lake. At the same time as preliminary figures for the 1961 census were showing a population for this district of 3,336, an official local census established that there were in fact more than 7,000 people living in the immediate area. This is one further example of how unreliable some of our census figures really are and it shows how little attention is paid to the needs and requirements of the people who live in the north.

I strongly suggest that the commission should study this debate. I would respectfully ask that they check very carefully the points which have been made, before reaching final decisions.

Mr. R. E. Forbes (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in taking part in this debate is to compliment the Electoral Boundaries Commission on its good judgment in giving recognition to the community of interests of the electors of the Dauphin federal constituency, and on the proposed boundary extension to include the area known as the Swan River valley. The Dauphin federal constituency, together with the proposed extension, is one of the most highly diversified agricultural areas in Manitoba. Maybe at this time I should indicate the interest that the residents have in common.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Within the framework of the proposed boundary alteration we have a large number of beef cattle ranchers and a number of the best dairy herds in the province. We also have fur farmers, turkey raisers, egg and poultry producers, and honey producers. We have a large fishing and lumber industry at lake Winnipegosis. In addition, we produce considerable quantities of wheat, oats, barley, flax, and during the last few years have included rape and mustard seed. Many of the farmers are specialists in the production of registered grains and forage crops. Also we have a large tourist industry that includes the whole area from McCreary to Swan River.

It is one of the most cosmopolitan areas in Manitoba. Settlement began about 1890. The first settlers were of British and French origin, emigrating from Ontario and Quebec, followed by a large number from the Ukraine, Poland, Holland, Germany, and Iceland, bringing with them their cultures and traditions which have become part of our way of life.

The proposed constituency is well located geographically, and can be served conveniently through a network of highways and municipal roads by political organizations, chambers of commerce, churches and farm organizations that have been working together for the advancement of their community since the creation of the Dauphin constituency in 1903. To my knowledge residents of the Swan River area have indicated on numerous occasions a preference to be included in the Dauphin federal constituency.

I think I can summarize the community of interest of the residents of the proposed area as follows:

1. The proposed alteration is within the present Dauphin judicial district which also determines the representation on the union of Manitoba municipalities.

2. Approximately one fifth of the present Dauphin electors are included in the Swan River health, diagnostic and hospital district, and welfare services.

3. Two local government land districts are presently administered from Swan River, which includes provincial government engineering services etc.

4. Recently the school boundaries have been adjusted under the new school division plan for convenient administration from Swan River to part of the present Dauphin federal constituency.

5. The proposed extension is served by radio station CKDM and television station CKOS.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the foregoing has indicated the community of interest of the constituents of the present Dauphin constituency and those within the boundary extension as proposed by the commission, and it is my hope that the boundaries outlined by the commission will meet with the approval of all concerned.

I should like to conclude by saying a few words with respect to the two constituencies which lie adjacent to my own, Selkirk and Churchill. Certainly Churchill is much too large. As indicated by the previous speaker, it covers almost two thirds of Manitoba. What it needs is less land, not more.

The commission could reduce this area, and also give the people in the Selkirk area a greater community of interest by putting the Selkirk constituency back in its original form with respect to that area which lies between lake Winnipeg and lake Manitoba. This could be done with very little adjustment to the tolerance allowed under the act.

I would hope the commission would give consideration to the community of interest of the people who live in that general area. There is another feature about the Churchill constituency. If one looks at a map he can see it is broadly spaced over two thirds of the province, as has been said previously. Therefore the government might well give consideration to allowing some compensation to the member who represents that area for travelling purposes in order to enable him to cover his constituency.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, like the other spokesmen for the keystone province I would like to endorse the principle of redistribution being carried out by an independent commission. Under the circumstances I feel that the commission did the best job possible. When I use that phrase "under the circumstances," I want to make the point right at the outset that the commission which served Manitoba, as was the case with the commissions in all other provinces, was faced with an almost impossible task.

The fact that protests and criticisms have been universal from all sides of the house and from all parties indicates that there is something not functioning efficiently and properly with regard to the process of redistribution as set up under the act. I would suggest that the reason for the difficulty arises from a fundamental flaw in the act itself.

It is just two years since we debated the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act in this house. At that time members of the official opposition pointed out that an amendment to the act, accepted and proposed by the government itself, was going to lead to the dilemma which now confronts all members and which has been referred to at length during this extended debate. The act, as originally introduced, recommended that the two top officials of this house, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), should have a role in designating at least one member for each of the provincial commissions. This was opposed.

An amendment was put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). It was taken up by the government, and I recall that the debate on that point waged fast and furious over a period of some two days. The reason for the government agreeing to change the legislation was because of the protest made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that redistribution should be taken out of politics.

I think what he meant to say was that it should be taken out of partisan politics because it is obvious from comments made here today, and on other days, from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene)—up or down—that in attempting by that amendment to withdraw the process of redistribution from the realm of partisan politics it was withdrawn entirely from the realm of politics.

The people who are knowledgeable in this field, having been excluded by the act itself, now have to resort to this unsatisfactory indirect method of bringing their own ideas before the independent commissions. It is almost like a case of one good custom corrupting the whole world. The act was a good act as it originally stood, and I think we will not be able to resolve this dilemma until necessary amendments are made to it which will make it possible for politicians to play an integral part in the process of redistribution, rather than working outside the official process as we are doing at this moment.

After all, politics is a noble and an honourable profession. Politics is a science, it is true. Political scientists have a role to play, and demographers have a role to play in this whole job of redistribution; but politics is also an art. I am sure hon. members will agree that in order to become an accomplished artist in any line of endeavour, whether it be in the field of music or in the field of politics, you have to have considerable experience and practice. Having made that point, which I believe is a fundamental one, I do hope that some five or six years hence—because this whole matter has been delayed to the point where we are on the eve of a new decennial census and a new redistribution—this fundamental flaw will be remedied in amendments to the act.

No amount of skill, no amount of care and concern by the commissions as presently constituted, will avoid the problem which has led to the extended debate in this House of Commons. There is another suggestion I should make in this regard. As I recall, it was the Conservative party which first put forward the proposal for an independent commission. Our original concept was that we have a single commission which, on the basis of broad experience would be able to apply this experience to every province. As I have listened to the discussions of the representatives from other provinces, I am sure this idea also has merit, because the arguments and the complaints have been the same; the criticisms have been the same, and I feel that the original idea of one single commission has considerable merit.

Coming to the specific problems of Manitoba, I think that these have been outlined in the earlier speeches in a very reasonable and responsible manner. The cynical attitude is to suggest that members of parliament are complaining because of selfish vested interests, and that we are concerned with this matter of redistribution for the sake of self-preservation.

I think it has been demonstrated by the speakers who have already taken part in this discussion that this is the furthest thought from their minds What concerns Manitobans, as it concerns members from other provinces, is the failure of the commission to make maximum use of the provisions of section 13 of the present act, which makes it possible to take into consideration what one might call the intangibles which can be understood and appreciated only by the political practitioners themselves.

I do not need to repeat the arguments. I support what has been said by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson) and the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson). Speaking on behalf of my own constituency of Brandon-Souris, I may say that we seized the opportunity to make representations before the commission. In order to ensure that there would be no personal interest or selfish or vested interest involved, I refrained from making the presentation myself. We had a distinguished member of the legal profession, Mr. James Doak, appear before the commission on behalf of the Brandon-Souris constituency. He spoke entirely from the standpoint of the geographical considerations, and the considerations of economic and social cohesion, which ingredients are necessary to the sense of community, which of course must exist if we are going to have a reasonable basis for redistribution. In making this point pertaining to the constituency of Brandon-Souris he also took into consideration, and made the point to the commissioners, that any change in the boundaries contemplated for Brandon-Souris which he recommended were designed to deal with the fundamental problem of Manitoba, that is ease the geographic problem that has been mentioned by the hon. member for Churchill this afternoon.

In Manitoba we have a population imbalance to which I shall refer in just a moment. The particular anomaly in my constituency to which I should like to refer is the elimination of the eastern end of the present Brandon-Souris constituency involving communities such as Killarney, Ninette, Donrea, Hilton, and Holmfield. Here is a part of southwestern Manitoba which over the years economically, geographically, legally, and in all sociological respects has regarded itself as a part of the southwestern Manitoba community. With the boundaries which have been proposed by the commission, this part of southwestern Manitoba now will become part of what we refer to as south central Manitoba. With this area it has no community of interest whatsoever.

I just wish to bring a few points before the house this afternoon, and by this means bring them once again to the attention of the commissioners who will be reviewing this debate. I feel these commissioners are responsible men who did the best job possible within the limitations of the act. As the hon. member for Selkirk intimated, they were all drawn from the city of Winnipeg, and that very fact alone would be a handicap, because with all due respect to the city of Winnipeg I do not think commissioners or representatives from that area really can appreciate the fundamental problems which exist in the rural part of Manitoba.

These are the points then which once again I should like to bring to the attention of the house and these gentlemen. The market area for southwestern Manitoba includes these communities which are going to be eliminated in the redistribution process. The centre of the market area is Brandon. Brandon is the only other substantial urban area outside the city of Winnipeg, and over the years it has become known as the wheat city of the west; in other words, it is an agricultural community. But more than being an agricultural community, as a result of recent economic changes and advances it now has become the centre for industrial development in the southwestern corner of the province. In the last four or five years the government of the province of Manitoba has sponsored the regional development concept of economic development, and the regional area covered by this concept embraces the part of the Brandon-Souris constituency which now is being removed by this rather drastic redistribution surgical process.

• (5:40 p.m.)

As a matter of fact, at this very moment an important body is in the process of being organized, to be known as the Westman Development Corporation, which will draw together all towns and rural municipalities in this area to co-ordinate an effort to encourage the development and diversification of industry.

I am sure the commissioners, as dedicated to the task as they were, had no knowledge of these economic developments that are taking place in that area. They were given the power under section 13 of this act to take these important factors into consideration, but I do not believe they did to a sufficient extent.

Communication is obviously basic to any sense of community, and I point out again that the city of Brandon is the communications centre for this whole area. The Brandon Sun is the daily paper which is read by the citizens of this area. It is interesting to note that the one newspaper which raised the strongest protests about redistribution as it has been proposed by the commissioners was a weekly newspaper in this area, the Killarney Guide.

During the period when the commission travelled throughout the province hearing representations and suggestions about possible changes, the Killarney Guide published several editorials which indicated that the people of this area were not happy with the commission's contemplated changes.

The mass media of radio and television covering this area is also concentrated in the city of Brandon. The entire road pattern in the area is designed to bring southwestern Manitoba together. I cannot refer to rail transportation, because it has almost been eliminated, but the bus pattern is certainly designed with the idea that this area is a separate community.

At the present time there is an economic upsurge in southwestern Manitoba. New industry has been encouraged by the area development plan of this government to locate there. All these things are vital to the fundamental community concept. Next fall, for example, a $30 million fertilizer plant will be opened in Brandon which will have a dynamic impact throughout the whole area.

It is vital for the community progress of southwestern Manitoba that the present constituency boundaries be maintained and, to go one step further, be enlarged. This brings me to the crux of the matter so far as the problem raised by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) is concerned. It is beyond understanding why the population base for the new constituency of Brandon-Souris has been reduced to 62,000. At the present time it stands at 69,000. This is the only other urban area in the province of Manitoba, aside from Winnipeg, which can serve as a counterbalance to one of our major demographic difficulties. That is, the concentration of one half of our population in one huge urban centre, the city of Winnipeg. Instead of recognizing this important sociological factor, and instead of recognizing that the Brandon-Souris area is another urban centre which is developing rapidly and which should be placed in a population category as an urban centre with broadened bounds, the commission has reduced the population to 62,000, only 4,000 greater than the population of the constituency of Churchill.

The constituency of Lisgar is strictly a rural constituency, but it will have a larger population than the riding of Brandon-Souris. That indicates that the powers given the commission under section 13 were not taken into consideration by the commissioners.

The population of the Brandon-Souris riding should be stabilized at 70,000 in view of the current economic development trends which I have outlined briefly. By the time another redistribution takes place, some five or six years hence, the population will have increased tremendously. In order to maintain a proper balance in population the Brandon-Souris constituency should include Killarney and Ninette, and the other areas to which I referred, and at the same time should retain the new area on the northern boundary. This will make it possible for the commissioners to come to grips with the dilemma presented by the huge geographic expanse of the constituency of Churchill. The constituency of Churchill should be given the maximum benefit of the 25 per cent tolerance. There is no logical reason why its population should be as large as the population of the Brandon-Souris riding.

I conclude as I commenced by saying the commission has done an excellent job within its terms of reference. I hope that by the time another redistribution takes place, it will be possible for politicians who have intimate knowledge of the problems, to become directly involved in this process, obviating the necessity of absorbing the time of parliament in an attempt to deal with them in an indirect manner. If the officials of the House of Commons such as the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Official Opposition could, as was the original intention, assist in the function of redistribution, I believe this would be a big improvement on the provisions, of the act as they now exist.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, because the house will have to sit beyond the normal adjournment hour I will try to be brief. I begin by saying that I accept the premise that this parliament took a step forward toward electoral reform when it passed legislation at the last session setting up an independent Electoral Boundaries Commission. The work of that commission across Canada has been the subject of criticism. That is to be expected because the adjustment or redrawing of constituency boundaries is bound to cause some amount of dislocation in past patterns of thinking in respect of political organization. In past years whenever redistribution of a political nature was carried out by committees of this house, there was anguish and screams of protest to an even greater extent than has been evidenced in the house in the past three days.

Therefore, while I endorse the concept and the legislation setting up these independent boundaries commissions, I had hoped the Electoral Boundaries Commission in Manitoba would have done a somewhat better job, at least in certain particulars. I wish to refer to some of these particulars with regard to which I feel the commission did not take into sufficient account what seem to me to be certain of the regional entities or patterns of trade, if you like, and so on.

It seems to me that the boundaries commission should have taken into greater account the following two factors, one of which has already been mentioned by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson). This is that the interlake of Manitoba is and ought to be considered as a regional unit and, as was also said by the hon. member for Selkirk, in view of the fact that there is at present operating in the interlake an ARDA program covering most of this area, it is indeed unfortunate that this program will now come within the interest of two and possibly even three members of parliament. It would have been much better had the area been allowed to remain one constituency.

The second factor of which I had hoped the commission would take greater account is that the area of eastern Manitoba, that area lying east of the Red river and east of lake Winnipeg, should be regarded as comprising two rather distinct regions. One region east and north of the city of Winnipeg is made up of several rural, farming municipalities, the Whiteshell area and the Winnipeg river area, and the other area south and east of the city of Winnipeg centres on the town of Steinbach. I hesitate to say too much in this regard, Mr. Speaker, because it might be said I was indulging in some political self-seeking, because it is a fact that the commission has deemed it necessary or desirable that both regions to which I have referred should be fused together into the political constituency of Provencher. Because of this recommendation of the commission, the constituency of Springfield, which I have the honour to represent at the present time, is the one constituency in the province of Manitoba that is slated to disappear not only in name but in fact.

I leave this point simply by saying that I would have hoped the commission would have seen fit to provide for the continued existence of both these constituencies, Provencher and Springfield, and if necessary in order to meet population quotas and the population tolerances laid down by the legislation, in my opinion it would have been possible for the commission to have brought the area of St. Boniface into the Provencher area, and Transcona into the Springfield area. It seems to me this would have satisfied the population requirement. However, Mr. Speaker, at this point I am under no illusion that the commission will see fit to make such a drastic rearrangement of the map which it has recommended to parliament.

With regard to the new constituency of Winnipeg-Selkirk I would point out that the boundaries of the constituency were further revised subsequent to the initial recommendations of the commission. As a result of the second revision, the proposed riding of Winnipeg-Selkirk, which will be a semi-urban and semi-rural riding, will also be the most populous of all ridings in the province of Manitoba. It is to have a population, as I understand it, in excess of 86,000 people. It strikes me as strange that a semi-rural riding should also have the largest population of all ridings in the province. If it is desirable, as I believe it is, to keep rural ridings within as reasonable a range of size as possible, then the commission should have arranged the boundaries so that the most populous riding would have been urban rather than semi-rural.

It is difficult to know whether at this stage the commission will be in a position to take cognizance of all the suggestions put forward by various speakers today, but I would hope, against hope, that the commission would still be able to rearrange these boundaries so as to leave the interlake and the area surrounding it as one unit politically, as it is one unit in other respects, and proceed from there to look at the possibility of leaving two constituencies in eastern Manitoba east of the Red river, so that the work of representing, serving and servicing the area of eastern Manitoba will be more manageable. I consider it will be a very difficult task for a member of parliament to represent the proposed constituency of Provencher, for example, inasmuch as it will extend for 400 miles from north to south and over 100 miles from east to west, and even the relatively densely populated parts of that constituency will comprise an area extending about 200 miles from the south to the northernmost part of the populated area of the riding.

In my opinion it would have made much more sense to have provided for two constituencies remaining in that part of the province. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to mention the interest and work put into an analysis of the commission's recommendation by Mr. Armour MacKay who has already been mentioned today. He provided several members from Manitoba with copies of maps, summaries of population analyses, reports, etc. In my opinion this gentleman has a very intimate knowledge of the province of Manitoba, particularly of the rural parts of the province, and has an understanding of the regional divisions that make up our province. I think it is a pity that the commission was not able to make more use of some of the suggestions he advanced during the course of the hearings.

I feel there is much more that I could say, Mr. Speaker, but in view of the time factor I will conclude now. Before doing so however I want to make one more point. If one has to choose between ridings that are partly urban and partly rural on the one hand and ridings that are exclusively rural on the other hand but which, because of that, are excessively large in size, I would opt for the former. I think that in these days a representative of the people should be qualified or should make himself qualified to represent people of both urban and rural occupational interests. It is really asking too much to expect members to represent rural constituencies that are thousands of square miles in area. It would be much better if urban areas were included in order to satisfy population requirements and thereby allowing for smaller constituency areas.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Everyone who has spoken has attempted to restrict his remarks because of the time of day and the nature of the debate. I will endeavour to do the same. I hope that this is not an exercise in futility. We realize we are not speaking to the House of Commons, but we are speaking to the three members of the commission for Manitoba, including the representation commissioner himself, who makes the fourth member. Our remarks are, of course, directed to these people.

I feel it is a rather odd situation into which we have got ourselves by way of the act that was passed by this parliament, and that this method has to be used in order to draw to the attention of the commission the objections that practising politicians may see. It is obvious from other things that have happened in the course of redistribution that the act should be amended, but I do not have the time to go into that matter at the moment.

I want to ask for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, and that you turn a deaf ear for a minute and a half while I diverge from the exact point which is in front of us. I realize, as all do, that six years from now another redistribution will take place based on another census. I want to view with alarm for the benefit of the people in Manitoba and Saskatchewan the situation that has developed now and which will be worse in 1971. The point that I made on April 16, 1964, passed unnoticed, I think because there was certain other business in front of the public at that time. I want to make yet another attempt to emphasize this point and I realize you can only do this by repetition. I want to draw to the attention of the people of Manitoba and Saskatchewan the position into which they are being forced through redistribution, and which is going to get worse.

I want to repeat something I said on April 16, 1964, as found at page 2249 of Hansard. I was talking about the discrepancy that was developing with regard to certain areas of our country. I was making an argument which I thought was very sound with regard to area representation in addition to representation by population. I do not know what effect it had. However, I went on to say this:

> Here is a major discrepancy which I think we can avoid if we give serious attention to the bill before us and make a proper amendment. Under the census of 1961 the combined population of the four Atlantic provinces was given as 1,897,425.
> Now under the distribution of seats to which they are entitled at the present moment they will have a combined total of 32 which gives them a quotient of 59,294. Set that against Manitoba and Saskatchewan. The combined population of those two prairie provinces is 1,846,867 according to the 1961 census—only 30,000 fewer than the population of the four Atlantic provinces. The seats to which they will be entitled under the redistribution now contemplated will be 26 and the quotient per constituency will be 71,033 which is, incidentally, higher than the quotient which has already been estimated for Canada as a whole. Here, with our eyes open, we are establishing a discrepancy between two very important areas of this country. I suggest we should guard against doing so, because why should the Atlantic provinces have 32 seats in this house while the prairie provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan with a population almost the same have only 26? Immediately one finds a variation of six seats as between two of the great areas of Canada. This situation is one which should be examined.
> Then, as has been pointed out, we have a somewhat nebulous protection, which I think has been mentioned, for the provinces out there in the absence of a senatorial floor. So by 1971 it is conceivable that Manitoba and Saskatchewan representation could drop from 26 seats to 20 and that the Atlantic provinces would then have 31.

Instead of having a discrepancy of just six seats there will be a discrepancy of 11. That is only one instance where the act has to be reviewed and amended for the future in order that we may not get too far out of line between the various areas of our great country.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Churchill: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Naturally I have followed with interest his point today, as I did a year ago, but may I put to him this question. Is it not the British North America Act which would have to be amended to meet this point, and might it not be worth his while to press for such an amendment fairly soon?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, thank you; I should have said the British North America Act.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Manitoba members will perhaps join together, along with Saskatchewan members, to see that this is done.

I do not think it is necessary for any of us to say that we are in general agreement with the principle of independent commissioners. We said all that two years ago and are still of the same opinion. We objected then to the method. We objected to certain aspects of the bill. We had a good debate in April of 1964, and then later on in October and November, and we should have taken a little more time, but were under quite a bit of pressure in that year.

I respectfully draw to the attention of the commission that although they called the meetings in Manitoba for the month of September, and did so properly by advising us in the month of July that the meetings to hear representations would be held in September, it is rather odd that when the election was unexpectedly called in that month the commission did not deem it wise to postpone their hearings, especially in view of a matter as important as the redistribution of seats, which affects elections. In the midst of the election campaign in the month of September, I for one had no time to make representations to the commission; I had no time to study the problem and present a proper case, so I did not appear.

The commission held its hearings and then continued with its findings. If this occurs in another period when redistribution commissions are sitting, and an election is unexpectedly called, provision should be made for a postponement of those hearings so that people who are actively engaged in political matters might have their voice heard. Therefore, I regretfully raise that objection.

I notice in the commission report that they are careful to say that although certain maps were put before them by the representation commissioner, they found those helpful as a guide but did not use any of them, as suggested, in the preparation of the proposals of the commission. They were used as a guide, and it was a bad guide. I saw those maps in 1964, or earlier, for Winnipeg South Centre, the area I represent. I raised an immediate objection then because the representation commissioner with his staff had cut off one-third of that constituency. Everything had been worked out on a representation by population basis. I pointed out at that time that of all the constituencies in Canada I thought

Winnipeg South Centre was the one which met the quotient before the interesting exercise with regard to redistribution commenced. I said: "Why take a constituency which already meets the quotient? Why lop one third off it?" I saw that map in the early stages, yet, the commission map follows it very closely. Although they perhaps did not use the maps presented to them by the representation commissioner, they certainly used them as a guide. I raise that as another objection.

Representation by population was a theme of our debate in 1964; but we hedged it around with tolerances. We said: You do not have to go entirely on the basis of representation by population. You must make allowances for a community of interest, boundaries, rivers, lakes, and so on. Yet, the commission for Manitoba has got out a neat little summary, which I have here, showing the urban constituencies to be all about the same. They seem to show that they have been made on the basis of representation by population, which concept has been followed as closely as they could follow it. St. Boniface, Winnipeg North, Winnipeg North Centre, Winnipeg-Selkirk, Winnipeg South and Winnipeg South Centre are all in the neighbourhood of, say, 82,000. That looks very neat on paper. But, in order to achieve that, they had to carve up old, established constituencies.

Winnipeg South Centre was established in 1924, and for 42 years has managed to get along. Winnipeg South has a much longer history than that. I would have thought that the commission would have retained the central portion of these old established constituencies, and made their modifications out in suburban areas of the city where the growth has been very rapid. Why cut the central core out of a constituency that has been in existence for 40, 50 or 60 years? Why not start from the known and move to the unknown? I said that in April, 1964, as reported at page 2271 of Hansard. I entertained the fond hope then that the representation commissioner and the provincial commissions would read what was said in the debates in this house that year. I wondered why they did not weigh some of the factors that had been raised. They may have done that, but if they did, they have rejected them.

I am going to read what I said at page 2271 of Hansard, for April, 1964. I quote:

> Perhaps there is another approach. I do not know what it is in the mind of the commissioner who is going to be the co-ordinator. I think the approach should be from the known to the related unknown; that is, to take the constituencies as they are, you see how closely they come to the quotient that is set and you leave unchanged just as many as you can because of the historic association with so many of our constituencies. Then, you gradually work your way to the point where you approach the quotient for your province, but at the same time taking into account whatever tolerance is permitted. Of course, my view of that is that there should be a wide discretion in the hands of the commission.

That is the suggestion I made then, and I think it should have been applicable right across Canada: You retain the older portions of a constituency and make your modifications where new development has been going on. There was plenty of leeway allowed to the commission on the tolerance and on the increase in population following the 1961 census.

I have been told—and this is secondhand—that some of the commissions have ignored the steady increase in population since the 1961 census and have said: We are bound by the act, which tells us to go by the 1961 census. Well, we did not have time to write into the act all the modifications which, perhaps, we should have done. But when we were debating the issue, time and time again we raised the question: What about increases in population following the 1961 census? On page 2248 of Hansard hon. members will find that when I was talking about this matter I said:

> This is a one-shot effort by the commissioner. We are not making provision for a review of the constituencies in two or three years time, yet all of us realize how quickly suburban developments can be put up in this country, and how quickly thousands of people will move into a certain area.

A first class example of this was given today by my hon. friend from Churchill (Mr. Simpson) who talked about Mystery Lake, now known as the city of Thompson, which the census showed as having a population of only a few thousand, though the population today is now in the region of 10,000. This should not be ignored by the commission.

After I had made the statement I have just quoted, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), the member of the government who was piloting this bill through the house, had this to say:

> Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? On June 1 each year the Dominion Bureau of Statistics publishes estimates of population. Does he think that a commission, in working out the tolerance, should take into account the growth which has taken place since 1961?

I replied:

> I think that matter should be seriously considered by the committee in view of the fact that the findings will be made four years after the last census.

The Minister then commented:

I merely asked the question because that is what I thought the hon. gentleman was driving at, and I agree with it.

I underline—and I wish I could underline in Hansard—that last phrase "I agree with it". That, sir, was the government spokesman, speaking on behalf of the government of this country and agreeing with the proposition I was putting forward, that the commission should take account of increases in population subsequent to the 1961 census.

It does not appear to us that this has been done. Everyone who lives in a city knows those areas which are increasing rapidly in population. I am told that at the western end of the constituency of Winnipeg South Centre, bordering on St. James, Assiniboia had a population of 6,000 at the time of the last census, but that the figure is now rapidly approaching 20,000. Has the commission taken any account of this?

These are the questions which I think should be seriously considered by the commissions. We appreciate the difficulty of their work. We also appreciate the fact that what they do now may stand for two or three elections, possibly longer. For this reason their work should be done with the greatest of care. In addition, I believe close attention should be paid to what active, practising politicians have to say about this subject.

None of us here has been talking from a partisan point of view. Mercifully we have been saved from that. But we are thinking in terms of the people in the areas we represent, their community of interest, and the methods of communication with those areas. We are speaking on behalf of the people, the electors.

May I conclude by saying I do not think for one minute that it is necessary for the commission to come up in greater Winnipeg with five or six constituencies, all beautifully the same size, so that there is only a matter of a thousand population to divide one from the other. It has never been that way at election time. There has always been a variation, possibly 5,000 or 10,000. It does not matter so long as it does not get too great. All these years I have never heard any complaints in greater Winnipeg about that factor, although there has been a difference in the populations of the constituencies.

I do not see why the commission could not have applied a tolerance within the city in order to make allowance for community of interest and old historical considerations. There could have been a tolerance of 5,000 to 10,000 with regard to population among the constituencies. Anyway we are going to have that discrepancy because the census of 1961, on which the commission relied, is out of date. One cannot control that situation. One cannot get constituencies that are exactly equal one to the other. I hope the commission will take another look at the city of Winnipeg and see if it cannot retain more clearly the old historical boundaries of its constituencies, and make provision, through alterations in population, for the increases which have to be applied to some of the constituencies.

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my voice to those that have already been raised across the province of Manitoba, and indeed across this land, with unassailable justification, in protest against the new boundaries for our federal electoral divisions proposed by the Electoral Boundaries Commissions.

Naturally enough, my own particular dissatisfaction is with respect to the changes that have been proposed by the Manitoba commission for my own constituency, that of Winnipeg South, a historic constituency date dating back to the redistribution act of 1914, more than half a century ago, when it was created.

Under the proposals of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Manitoba, if they are implemented, my constituency of Winnipeg South stands to lose upwards of 25,000 people in municipalities and neighbourhoods whose outlook has been the outlook of Winnipeg South ever since the area was settled, and whose federal political ties have been with Winnipeg South ever since their fathers and their grandfathers began to vote.

Under the proposals of the commission, links and ties of a half century's standing are to be severed in Winnipeg South, and not merely on the political level. The ties that will be cut, if the commission's recommendations are adopted, are ties of a cultural, social and economic nature, and they are ties that run like the intertwined roots of stately trees.

I have no hesitation in suggesting that in its proposals the boundaries commission has, in Winnipeg South, defied the logic of social homogeneity, regional compatability and community of interest, flouting in some cases natural geographic lines, flouting in others natural social and economic interests. In fact, the commission's revision of the boundaries of Winnipeg South is nothing less than a dismemberment of a body social, and it is the type of dismemberment that invites one to describe it as a hatchet job. Moreover, it is the type of job that leads one to believe it was done for one purpose and one purpose only, that of slashing the total population of the constituency, and that as far as the commission is concerned that end justified whatever crude and clumsy means it was deemed practical to employ.

How else can one explain the proposal under which the city of St. Vital will be removed from Winnipeg South, and its cultural involvement with same, and stitched on to the predominantly French speaking constituency of St. Boniface? How else can one explain the removal of the town of Tuxedo out of its natural orbit with River Heights on the south side of the Assiniboine river, and the transportation of it across that river into the constituency of Winnipeg South Centre, in direct contravention of obvious lines of social and economic interest? And how else can one explain the operation that is perhaps the most illogical of them all—the amputation of the entire northwest corner of the district of River Heights from the rest of River Heights?

In this last violation the commission would cut away a whole corner of a homogeneous residential area of Winnipeg which, in its homogeneity, constitutes the Manitoba provincial constituency of River Heights, and declare that for federal purpose it must not be allowed to be whole. The commission then takes the corner which lies, as does all of River Heights, on the south side of the Assiniboine river, and with a devastating defiance of logic adds it on to a constituency on the north side of the river. It thus tears out a chunk of a specific established neighbourhood which, at the provincial political level, is recognized as one unified community, and buries it in a constituency on the other side of the river with which it shares no semblance of a neighbourhood tie.

Anyone with any passing knowledge of the greater Winnipeg area knows that the two rivers, the Red and the Assiniboine, play a vital role in the life of that metropolitan community, and that they constitute natural dividing lines between many of the different municipalities which make up the metropolitan Winnipeg area as a whole—the Red river running north and south, and the Assiniboine running east and west.

One does not need to be an expert in sociology and the rest of the social sciences to appreciate that a river can, and usually does, constitute a fairly considerable social border. Neighbourhoods in residential areas, both urban and rural, tend to unite in a community of interest with the neighbourhoods which share with them the same side of a natural dividing line, like a ravine, a range of hills, or a river. The natural flow of social interest generally is along the same side of that natural barrier, and not across it to a community on the other side.

This is the situation, generally speaking in metropolitan Winnipeg. Although all of us are Winnipegers and Manitobans, there is no denying that social and neighbourhood alliances have crystallized—and it is natural that they should—in relation to the respective sides of the respective rivers. It is the height of illogic and absurdity in metropolitan Winnipeg for the Electoral Boundaries Commission to ignore, in fact defy, those natural dividing lines, break up neighbourhoods and forcibly transfer parts of homogeneous residential areas from one side of a river to another, as they have done in the case of Tuxedo and part of River Heights in Winnipeg South.

Critics of my stand at this point will say that I cannot then justify the relation of St. Vital in Winnipeg South, because it is across the Red river from the remainder of Winnipeg South, and therefore properly belongs on the east side of the Red river where the commission has put it, with the city of St. Boniface. But here I submit that another consideration is operative; and that is the consideration of culture and language. St. Vital may be on the same side of the Red river as St. Boniface, but St. Vital is predominantly an English speaking city, and St. Boniface, French. Moreover, St. Vital lies in the southern ambit of metropolitan Winnipeg; its historic social affiliations are with Winnipeg South and its interests are the interests of Winnipeg, not St. Boniface.

For these reasons I have no hesitation in protesting most strenuously the proposals of the commission with respect to Winnipeg South and have no hesitation in appealing to that commission to re-examine its decision. As strongly as I can I would urge that in its re-examination the commission take cognizance of those social, cultural, economic and geographic ties that are being flouted in its present proposals, and flouted without regard for logic, reason, community of interest, or the feelings of individual citizens. I am aware that the commission faced and still faces no easy task in redrawing the Manitoba electoral boundaries, and I would not presume at this juncture to suggest that all of them should be withdrawn.

Surely even the most cursory examination of the proposed new map would convince any impartial observer that the commission has done a detrimental rather than a beneficial job inside greater Winnipeg. It has crossed every kind of natural line, separating districts and neighbourhoods which always have been united, and forcing union on communities and neighbourhoods which have little in the way of obvious common interest.

It would take very little, Mr. Speaker, to readjust the boundaries in greater Winnipeg in such a way as to fulfil the population requirements of redistribution, while leaving generally intact the communities, and the communities of interest, in that metropolitan whole that have always been knit together. Essentially, all that is necessary is some appreciation of and regard for long-standing sociological ties, and some imaginative thinking.

My basic point is this: There was a lack of mental elbow grease employed in this map drawing exercise. I can only conclude that the commission, faced with the task of reducing somewhat the population of Winnipeg South, threw up it hands at the prospect of the work involved and took the easy way out, with the resulting dismemberment, without valid reason, of an historic constituency, against all natural and logical factors.

I feel I can speak for all the citizens of Winnipeg South in saying that we do not want to lose those integral parts of our constituency which the commission would have us lose. We protest, sir, and we ask for immediate reconsideration.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this discussion for a few minutes I must say at the outset that I feel I do so with two strikes against me. In the first place, I have been such a strong advocate for many years of the principle of redistribution by an independent body, someone might say it is inconsistent with that position to make suggestions to an independent body once it has done its job. However, the legislation as we passed it in this House of Commons provides this opportunity for us to make suggestions, if we wish to do so. I rise therefore to make just one suggestion.

[Mr. Sherman.]

The second strike against me, and I feel I had better put it on the record before someone else draws it to my attention, is this. The one small change which I should like to suggest involves an area which, over the years, has been voting overwhelmingly for the present member for Winnipeg North Centre, and it would seem, therefore, that I might have something less than complete objectivity regarding this area.

Mr. Dinsdale: Never, Stanley.

Mr. Churchill: We would be the last ones to suspect that.

Mr. Knowles: We are hearing interjections from members of this house, all of whom have protested their objectivity. I suppose that is why they are prepared to accord me the same degree of disinterest.

Before I reach the one point I wish to make I should like to pay my tribute to the work that has been done by the Manitoba commission. Indeed, I go back one step and say that I was pleased at the appointment of the members who make up that commission. It seems to me the positions they hold make this commission some kind of a model.

The chairman is Mr. Justice Guy of the court of appeal of Manitoba. The deputy chairman is Dr. Hugh Saunderson, president of the University of Manitoba, and the third member is Mr. Charland Prud'homme, clerk of the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba and the deputy provincial secretary. The fourth member, of course, is the representation commissioner, Mr. Nelson Castonguay. I might point out that the first three are also members of the redistribution commission for the province of Manitoba, although Mr. Justice Guy has replaced one of the other judges of the court of appeal on that commission.

I believe these men did a good job, and I do not subscribe to the suggestions I have heard from some quarters that the first three were pushed around by Mr. Castonguay. That could hardly apply to Mr. Justice Guy, Dr. Saunderson or Mr. Prud'homme. I recognize the right of members to feel dissatisfied with some of the boundaries that have been drawn, and I think if I were drawing the map I could produce one which, to my satisfaction, might be better. But generally speaking, bearing in mind that they had to provide for the loss of one seat in Manitoba and had to take into account the representation by population ideal, I think the commissioners did a pretty fair job. I believe they will pay attention to the points made in this debate, and when they have done this and brought back to us their final map, I am sure all of us from Manitoba will accept it as being one arrived at after the due processes that we provided in the legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I come to the one point I should like to make. As I say, I am hesitant to do so for the reasons that I gave, but I feel I must, out of loyalty to the people of the town of Brooklands. Let me put it this way. I realize, as others do, that I am speaking not to those who are in this "crowded" House of Commons, but rather to the members of the commission. The town of Brooklands, through its council, made an official presentation to the commission when it met in Winnipeg last September I would simply ask the commission to take another look at the point made by the town of Brooklands. The town to which I refer occupies one square mile. I hesitate to talk about one square mile after listening to the speeches of the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Forbes), and the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson), and others who talked about many thousands of square miles. At any rate, this one square mile is right at the west end of the city of Winnipeg and adjoins a community known as Weston. It just so happens that the people of Brooklands and the people of Weston have interests which are very much together. They work in the same places, the C.P.R. Weston shops, Dominion Bridge and plants of that sort. Their interests are common. They attend the same churches. The fact that the legion in that area is known as the Brooklands and Weston branch of the Canadian Legion emphasizes the fact that it is an area of common interest.

This one square mile has been in a Winnipeg constituency from the beginning, as it were, and to take it out of that urban area, put it into the riding of Portage and make it part of a large rural riding in which it will become lost, is something that the town council of Brooklands felt it had a right to complain about. May I get over the difficulty that I felt about speaking in a way that might not seem objective by pointing out that the town council of Brooklands, when it made its representations to the commission did not say, "Leave us in Winnipeg North Centre." I wish they had and I should like them to stay in Winnipeg North Centre. The town council said, "Leave Brooklands in an urban constituency." This square mile adjoins Winnipeg North, Winnipeg North Centre and Winnipeg South Centre. I have no hesitation in going all the way with the town council of Brooklands and saying, at it did, that it really does not matter, in terms of objectivity, which of these city ridings the town of Brooklands is put into. But I do agree with the town of Brooklands and its town council that it ought to be in one of these urban areas.

If perchance it is put into the riding of Winnipeg North Centre as newly drawn, that will of course add a population of about 4,000 or 4,500 to the proposed new Winnipeg North Centre. That is all that is involved, a population of between 4,000 and 5,000. At the moment Winnipeg North Centre has the largest population of any of the ridings in Winnipeg proper. The new Winnipeg-Selkirk would be larger, but Winnipeg North Centre has the largest population of any of the four ridings in Winnipeg itself.

I point out that the constituency of Winnipeg North Centre does not have land area in which growth is likely to take place, as is the case in Winnipeg North, Winnipeg South and Winnipeg South Centre. I suggest that if Winnipeg North Centre is made a little larger by putting Brooklands in it, this will be overcome probably at the next census. Then, instead of Winnipeg North Centre being the largest of the Winnipeg seats, it will probably be the smallest. I welcome the nodding of the head by my friend and next door neighbour, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill).

However, if the commissioners do not wish to have that large a discrepancy in the city of Winnipeg, even for a short time, some other area could be taken out and put in Winnipeg South Centre, or perhaps there could be an adjustment in favour of Churchill. The commissioners are more aware of the adjustments that are possible than I am, and they can make easily the change if they accept the point—which of course I leave to them.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a question?

Mr. Knowles: Certainly.

Mr. Churchill: I ask the question in order to support the hon. member in the argument he is making. Does he agree with what I said earlier that, so far as the people of Winnipeg are concerned, they have not been unduly alarmed over the fact that in years gone by, and at present, there has been a substantial discrepancy as between our constituencies, and would not be too much concerned if the constituency of Winnipeg North Centre were larger for the time being than the other constituencies?

Mr. Knowles: In answer to the question, I may say I think that is true. There would not be great concern over a discrepancy a little wider than is now the case, or of the extent of which my friend and I have been speaking. In view of the fact that we in this house argued rather strongly in favour of representation as closely as possible to population, I do not think any discrepancy should be large. However, the kind of discrepancy about which the hon. member and I are talking is not a very large one.

I wondered when my friend got up whether he was going to refer to some of the areas that we have been trading back and forth. There is one little triangular area that used to be in Winnipeg North Centre, and when it was I carried it handily. It was moved into Winnipeg South Centre some years ago, and to my surprise my friend carried it handily. Now, I am to get it back and I just hope the plate will again be reversed.

There is no point in carrying on this discussion any farther. I hope I have overcome, as I say, the charge that I might be personally concerned in this by supporting the proposition the town council of Brooklands made to the commissioners, that the commissioners consider putting that square mile, not into a far-flung rural riding where the people feel they would be lost, but rather into one of the city ridings to which it is adjacent. I join with those who have already spoken in the tribute that has been paid to the work done by the Manitoba commissioners. I hope when the Manitoba map comes back, what is already a good map might be just a little better.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): I certainly do not want to impose on the generosity of the house to any extent, nor do I want to cover the territory that has been covered by many members who have spoken before me. I simply want to add my voice to the protests that have already been made. So far as the riding of Provencher is concerned, it is going to take a great deal more than even the clumsy effort of the commission to destroy the historic name and riding of Provencher. This was the earliest riding in the province of Manitoba and was first represented, although the representative did not sit in this house, by the very famous Canadian, Louis Riel. His name does appear on the scroll in the Clerk's chamber, even though he was not able to take his seat in the House of Commons.

I should like to sum up my remarks very briefly by saying that, so far as redistribution is concerned, I would much rather be carved up very cleanly and deliberately by a political opponent who knew what he was doing, and I knew what he was doing, than the clumsy, hacking to death that has taken place at the hands of this commission. I do hope they will listen to some of the representations that have been made by members from Manitoba and other parts of the country, and take into consideration some of the cultural, economic and communication lines that exist within the various areas. We think a much better job can be done and we hope that they will attempt to give consideration to the arguments that have been put forward today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does this complete discussion on the redistribution of seats in Manitoba?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house having considered this objection it will be the duty of Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the boundaries commission, together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of this house, back to the commission for reconsideration thereof.

On Wednesday, April 27, when the house was discussing redistribution, two objections were brought up for the proposed electoral district of Dorchester and the proposed electoral district of Temiscouata. At that time it was agreed that these two objections should stand and be taken when all other objections had been completed.

The house will now consider objection No. 19, the text of which is to be found at page 34 of the pamphlet.

On February 17 last a notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with Mr. Speaker in the following terms, namely:

Proposed Electoral District of Dorchester:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), consideration be given by this House to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Quebec, laid before this House by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, for the reasons hereinafter specified:

I wish to suggest the following changes to the new distribution of federal counties: That the following parishes be included in the county of Dorchester, totalling a population of 53,559: Saint-Anges, Ste-Aurélie, St-Zacharie, Louis-Joliet, St-Anselme, St-Benjamin, St-Bernard, Ste-Claire, St-Cyprien, St-Édouard de Frampton, Ste-Germaine, Ste-Hénédine, St-Isidore, Ste-Justine, St-Léon de Standon, St-Louis, St-Malachie, Ste-Marguerite, St-Maxime, St-Nazaire, St-Odilon, St-Prosper, Ste-Rose, Taschereau-Fortier, Lac Etchemin, St-Anselme, St-Bernard, St-Isidore, Francoeur, St-Agapit, Ste-Agathe, St-Patrice, St-Sylvestre, St-Apollinaire, St-Gilles, St-Narcisse, St-Henri, St-Luc.

[Translation]

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, the member for Dorchester (Mr. Côté), who was taken ill this afternoon, asked me to inform the house of his objection to the boundaries proposed for the constituency of Dorchester. Unfortunately, I was prevented from doing so until now.

[English]

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, there will be any further comment on the objection for Dorchester, but what happened in the case of Temiscouata and Dorchester last Wednesday afternoon was that a number of members with objections were outside the house. I was in my office and was telephoned by the party whip in connection with my specific objection at approximately five minutes to five. I gathered my papers together, came over to the house, but by the time I arrived I was too late; the house had moved from the province of Quebec to another province.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I can have the consent of the house to place on record a few comments on the subject of my specific objection, which relates to the proposed districts of Beauharnois, Chambly, Laprairie, Longueuil and Saint-Jean which was filed with Mr. Speaker on February 18, 1966. I realize that I am asking a favour of the house but I will not take any more than about three minutes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): For the record, Mr. Speaker, I should like the commissioners, when they read the comments of the members from each of the provinces who have taken part in this debate, to take cognizance of the objections which were made by ten members of parliament, including three of the members of parliament concerned in the five counties mentioned in this objection, namely the hon. member for Châteguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie, the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) and the hon. member for Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Beaulieu). At least three members signed the objection, and I think I can state, Mr. Speaker, that a fourth, had he not been a member of the Privy Council, would also have signed the objection. In this area, the people of St. Lambert through their town council objected to the commission's plan. The peoples of Châteauguay; that is of Châteauguay Centre and of Châteauguay Heights, through their town councils, properly made clear their objections before the commission, which held public hearings. Also, approximately 20 municipalities in the present constituency of Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie made clear their objections to the electoral divisions proposed by the commission. Of the 20 municipalities that objected, approximately 15 did so correctly from the legal point of view, and appeared before the commission at its public hearings in Montreal, after having given proper notice. I would simply ask the commissioners when they are reconsidering, as I hope they will, all objections placed before them, that they read carefully this objection which deals with the five constituencies between the United States border, the St. Lawrence river and Richelieu.

The alternative plan as presented by the various municipalities at the public hearings last September has been revised somewhat in this objection. Nevertheless, I submit that the objection as suggested contains an alternative to the commission's plan which is more realistic, and which sticks closer to the population norm required for the province than the proposal. The most important feature of the objection is that if adopted it assures the population of this entire area of a more democratic and more equitable representation in this federal parliament.

When I went into the general objection, which was placed before Mr. Speaker on February 18, I talked of some of the general reasons for the necessity of the commission's taking into account community of interest factors, and so on. There is no need for me to go over this again tonight. I think if the commissioners read through copies of Hansard for the last six days, if they study them as parliament most certainly expects them to, if they study each of the objections taken before them, take those into consideration, and act upon them, we shall be satisfied.

I am not sure that this is the point at which to raise this particular matter, but on Friday last I brought forth a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler), in which we asked the commissioners to reconsider the reports and the objections legally made to the respective commissions in the light of section 13(c) subsections 1 and 2 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. Last Friday I withdrew the motion made at the end of the proceedings because there was some doubt whether there was unanimity of permission to introduce it on the order paper. I then gave notice of motion under private members' notices of motions and members of the House of Commons have had three days notice thereof.

I should like to state for the benefit of the commissioners that in speaking with members of all parties of the house about this motion I found, with one exception, a complete unanimity of opinion on the motion.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member permit a question? I should like to ask him this: With how many members of the house did he discuss this matter?

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): I spoke with a representative of each party in the house. As to the number of members, perhaps it was no more than 15 to 20. But I spoke to the house leaders of each of the parties and I received an indication from them that this motion would not be objected to. On this basis I assumed they represented something near unanimity of opinion in the house on this motion.

I should like to read the wording of this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should like to point out to the hon. member that there is already before the house a notice of an objection in the form of a motion. Maybe in a few minutes the hon. member will find a more appropriate occasion on which to continue.

Does this complete the discussion on the proposed electoral district of Dorchester?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house having considered this objection it would be the duty of Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission together with a copy of objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

[Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie).]

The house will now proceed to objection no. 20, text to be found on page 35 of the pamphlet. On February 17, last, a notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with Mr. Speaker in the following terms:

Proposed Electoral District of Témiscouata:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada, 1964-65), consideration be given by this House to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Quebec, laid before this House by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, for the reasons hereinafter specified:

1. That the following municipalities which share the same social and economic interests be part of the constituency of Rivière-du-Loup—Témiscouata:

Témiscouata: Saint Joseph-de-la-Rivière-Bleue, (village) Saint Benoît-Abbé, Saint Eusèbe, Saint Joseph-de-la-Rivière-Bleue (municipality), Saint Marc-du-Lac-Long, Saint Pierre d'Estcourt, Saint Elzéar and Saint Jean-de-la-Lande (Saint David d'Estcourt); part of the townships of Botsford, Cabano and Packington being without any local municipal organization.

Rivière-du-Loup: Notre-Dame-du-Portage and Saint Antonin.

2. That, for historical and geographical reasons the designation of Rivière-du-Loup—Témiscouata be retained.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Can the Chair assume that consideration of this objection has been completed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house having considered this objection, it will be the duty of Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the boundaries commission together with a copy of objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

This completes the objections on the electoral boundaries.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): As I mentioned a few moments ago, last Friday I placed on the order paper a motion under the heading Private Members' Notices of Motions for discussion on Wednesday of this week, expecting we would be having a private members' hour today.

The motion is worded as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the representation commissioner and the members of the commissions in each of the several provinces, while they are reconsidering the reports and noting the objections made in the house should further consider all objections legally made to the respective commissions in the light of section 13 (c) (i) and (ii) of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (13 Eliz. II, Cap. 31).

• (7:00 p.m.)

The purpose of my putting this notice of motion on the order paper was simply to impress upon the commissioners the feeling of the house that, in their deliberations, they should take into account the population growth factors and the community of interest factors which are a feature of section 13(c)(i) and (ii).

As I said when I spoke on the general objection last week, the reason the house incorporated this section into the act was to give the commissioners the right to look into these absolutely essential factors, if an equitable redistribution were to be the result of their investigations and hearings. By accepting this motion I feel the house would underline its understanding of section 13, and underline its feeling that the commissioners, when going over the objections as they are legally obliged to do, should give further consideration to them in the light of section 13.

I realize that to move this motion this afternoon would require unanimous consent, and if hon. members are prepared to indicate unanimous consent I shall move it. Otherwise, I feel we should simply allow my words to stand on the record as an indication of what I know is an almost unanimous opinion in the house. Could I have an indication that such a motion would be unanimously supported?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. I think the hon. member should recognize that when discussion was going on regarding the objections to redistribution, hon. members did make some reference to the fact that they were talking to the commissions. The Chair at this time is not prepared to ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, as the seconder of the motion I would respectfully request that you place the question before the house and see if a determination might be made.

Mr. Barnett: To avoid any further consideration by Your Honour of any question of order, so far as I am concerned I cannot see that, since it is six minutes after seven o'clock, it would be appropriate to give unanimous consent to revert to private members' hour and have an hour's discussion on this motion even though, again so far as I am concerned, I would have no objection to giving unanimous consent to placing the motion on the top of the order paper.

In view of the latitude allowed in respect of certain earlier remarks on this question, perhaps I might be permitted to add that I feel certain, if the motion as proposed were to come up for discussion and proper debate, there would not be anything like unanimous consent to its passage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Winkler: A very regrettable state of affairs.

CANADIAN LIVESTOCK FEED BOARD

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, before indicating the business of the house for tomorrow, I should like to ask the house to deal with item No. 48 on the order paper, which is a resolution asking for leave to introduce a measure to establish a corporation to be known as the Canadian Livestock Feed Board. Due to inadvertence the resolution lacks one phrase which we now are advised should be in it, if it is to be effective to proceed to a bill.

I therefore wish to ask that this order be discharged and replaced by a new order, which His Excellency has recommended for the consideration of the house. Perhaps I should add, before asking for consent, that the new order is in identical language except that it adds at the end thereof the words "plus any amount advanced to the board as authorized by the governor in council pursuant to the said measure".

If I have unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the present item No. 48 be withdrawn and the new item substituted therefor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Due to the fact that the house agreed to sit after six o'clock for a certain purpose, I wonder whether I might ask the hon. Minister of Public Works whether it might be convenient for him to move his motion and ask for unanimous consent tomorrow.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker; I would be glad to do that, because now notice will appear in Hansard of what is proposed.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: I should like now to announce the business of the house for tomorrow. Tomorrow we propose to call item No. 54 on today's order paper, second reading of a bill to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code; then item No. 4 on today's order paper, second reading of a bill to amend the Research Council Act; then item No. 3 on today's order paper, a resolution asking that the Houses of Parliament do approve the agreement concerning automotive products between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America; then item No. 7, house in committee of the whole on a bill to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act. Then we would proceed with the estimates of the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Labour. That would be the business for tomorrow and Friday.

It being eleven minutes after seven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING FITNESS TO STAND TRIAL

Mr. J. C. Munro (Hamilton East) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-176, to amend the Criminal code (insanity at time of trial).

He said: Under the present law a person suffering from mental infirmity, or a mentally retarded person, has the issue of his fitness to stand trial determined before the main trial and may, in some cases, have a charge hanging over his head for years. This bill, if adopted, would enable the issue of fitness to be postponed until the opening of the case for the defence.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO SPEECH BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would ask the Prime Minister whether the speech made yesterday by the Minister of Finance in which he enunciated an economic manifesto represents anything new, or any new viewpoint, in government policy. I would also ask him whether, in view of the minister's strictures against foreign control and the possibility of the growing curtailment of Canadian independence, the government has any further steps in mind to remove the influence of United States guide lines from firms operating in Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I can say that the minister's statement was, I thought, a clear expression of existing government policy in this field.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is something of a generalization, since the interpretation which has been given—and I ask whether it is true—is that because the hon. member for Davenport is about to have a book published showing Canada the way—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I interpolate, sir, and say I congratulate the former minister on the widespread support he still has in the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The interpretation that has been given is that the Minister of Finance stepped in ahead to outline his own program in order to forestall the Gordon concept.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, naturally I would like to do anything I could do with propriety to advertise my hon. friend's book, but I am afraid I cannot comment on the interpretation given to the speech of the Minister of Finance and its relationship to this particular book.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It looks bad for the Gordon policies.

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, April 5 the Prime Minister said that he hoped to be able shortly after the Easter recess to announce the personnel and terms of reference of the commission which would look into security procedures in Canada over the past 20 years. I want to ask the Prime Minister, is he now in a position to make such an announcement?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not at the moment, Mr. Speaker, but as I have already stated to my hon. friend from Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson)—and I apologize for having to repeat this statement—we are anxious to get this commission established as quickly as possible. For the last week or so I have been preoccupied with aspects of security matters other than this particular commission, but we are doing our best to get the personnel established for this commission. We will, I think, need three royal commissioners on a task of this importance and magnitude. The terms of reference have been drafted and I hope to get them before cabinet and approved for submission very shortly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—OVERFLIGHTS AND LANDINGS ON FRENCH TERRITORY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he tell us whether there has been any communication, either from NATO or from the French government, regarding the report that overflights and landings on French territory by Canadian NATO aircraft will require a different basis of permission than has been given heretofore in the blanket agreement?

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I must say that the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) intended to put the same question as the hon. member has just put himself.

[English]

I can confirm that the Canadian embassy in Paris was informed by the French foreign office on May 3 that existing arrangements whereby R.C.A.F. aircraft are permitted to overfly or land on French territory in Europe, will henceforth be subject to monthly review. I have not yet had direct confirmation of the report that similar notification has been given to other NATO governments, but I see no reason to doubt it. We are, of course, examining the implications of the French government's intention to place arrangements for overflights on a stand-by basis.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): As a supplementary question, will this new policy undertaken by France in any way affect the different protocols signed between that country and Canada?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to make a definite reply to that question at this stage until there has been an opportunity for examining fully all the implications involved.

TRADE

PROPOSED SUBSIDIZATION OF UNITED STATES EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the recommendations to the United States government by industry in that country for the subsidization of United States exports, a move which would have a serious adverse effect on Canadian exports, will the government advise the United States government that Canada already has an adverse commodity trade balance in excess of $1 billion with the United States, and that any move of that kind would be completely unjustified?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think it is well known that Canada attaches the greatest importance to exports on a multilateral basis, and I think our determination to increase our exports has been made clear abroad. We have recently had an opportunity to stress to the United States government the importance of our exports to that country, and will continue to press for an increase.

Mr. Hees: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, this is a move of very recent date. This is something quite separate from any other moves made in the United States. Would the minister address himself to this particular, serious situation?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, this has not become United States policy. It is simply a submission to the United States government by a group of responsible American businessmen.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could the minister inform the house whether the Canadian government has pointed out to the United States administration the results for Canada if these proposals are accepted? Have they warned them of the difficulty we would face and the courses we might have to follow.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, there is virtually day to day communication with the United States government in this field. They are well aware of the importance we place on the maximization of our trade.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

TIRES—REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF SAFETY STANDARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry. In view of testimony before the house committee in the United States yesterday, in which a government authority said that millions of Americans were travelling on unsafe tires and that the United States government intended to take action in 60 to 90 days, could the minister assure this house that the federal government in Canada will take similar action, that the population of Canada similarly will be protected, and that the safety code people in his department will study tire standards?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the government is concerned that tires on cars should be as safe as possible. I can assure the hon. member that the committee on safety standards is looking into the question of tires. Without having looked at the details of the United States proposals, at the moment I cannot give any assurance that we will copy them completely.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. I assure the minister and the house that I am not asking for a legal opinion by the government, but is the minister now in possession of a legal opinion from the Department of Justice telling the minister whether the federal government has jurisdiction to impose safety standards on the automobile industry in Canada?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen it yet.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

METHOD OF APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR IN DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister, and is urgent by reason of the meetings of a house committee. Was Stuart Keate engaged by order in council or by some other means to inquire into the "This Hour Has Seven Days" controversy, and does he have purported powers to require the C.B.C. to hire personnel?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think this question refers directly to committee hearings in progress at the moment and might be asked more properly in committee.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, if I may elaborate on why I raise the question at this time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand why the hon. member asked the question. I do not think it can be accepted.

[Later:]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister table today or tomorrow in this house the document which engaged Mr. Keate?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no document. I discussed this matter with Mr. Keate personally and got his agreement to act in the way that has been announced.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question. How could Mr. Keate operate if there is no order in council giving him authority and power? Under what circumstance can a cabinet or a prime minister give an individual the right of mediation without there being any cabinet authority in the form of an order in council?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the terms on which Mr. Keate was asked to begin his operations have already been made public. He was asked to discuss with the parties to the dispute ways and means of bringing about a resolution of the dispute in accord with detailed terms of reference to be worked out between them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask how Mr. Keate can have any authority unless there is an order in council. A mere verbal ipse dixit on the part of the Prime Minister or the cabinet cannot give that authority to any individual.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Leader of the Opposition will recognize that his question is argumentative. He is perhaps asking for a legal opinion from the Prime Minister.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The question has not been accepted, so there can be no supplementary. The hon. member may put another question.

Mr. Fairweather: May I put a question. Is it proposed that Mr. Stuart Keate be paid by the government of Canada for this mediation?

Mr. Pearson: The mediation has not yet begun. Mr. Keate is discussing with the parties concerned how best his work of mediation can be accomplished and within what exact terms of reference it can be accomplished. I will be very glad indeed to table anything that can be tabled about the modalities concerned in the matter.

Mr. Fairweather: I think the Prime Minister missed the terms of my question. Is it proposed to pay Mr. Stuart Keate for his services?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Under what condition or understanding as far as expenditures are concerned did Mr. Keate take on the responsibility of negotiating this dispute?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Keate is discussing with the parties concerned the dispute between them, as I have said. He came from Vancouver to do this at my request. If Mr. Keate has to operate in this regard at the request of the government the necessary technicalities will be followed to make it possible for him to do so.

WATER RESOURCES

GREAT LAKES—INQUIRY AS TO ANTI-POLLUTION MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I see by his smile that he knows what I am going to ask him. When can the house expect the statement by the minister with reference to the problems of water pollution, particularly on the great lakes?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): We are working on it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask a supplementary question. The minister has been working on it for several months. Has he any idea when we might expect some definite information?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the exposé on which I am working will not change anything in the present activities on the great lakes. We are just trying to bring to the attention of the public what is being done there. It is not a question of policy or decision; it is just a question of education, if you want to put it that way. These matters are rather difficult to couch on paper, but we are working on it.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. I presume we have been waiting in vain for something useful.

FISHERIES

LAKE HURON—MEASURES TO CONTROL LAMPREY EELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can he inform the house as to what progress has been made regarding lamprey control in Lake Huron and Georgian Bay, and are there any special efforts contemplated in this regard for this body of water in 1966?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I feel that this question is of a general nature and not so urgent that it cannot be placed on the order paper or discussed on the adjournment motion.

Mr. Noble: Mr. Speaker, I think this is an important question because an investigation is being conducted at this time in my area by fisheries people. I am sure the minister could answer it if you would allow him to do so.

Mr. Speaker: I think it might be preferable for the hon. member to discuss it during the debate on the adjournment motion.

AIR TRANSPORT

APPLICATION BY CANADIAN COMPANIES TO SERVE ALCOHOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to again put a question to the Minister of Transport which I asked a few days ago, and I do so on the same basis and in the light of certain findings made by aviation research agencies in respect of reaction time in the air under vital circumstances. Is his department making any representations or participating in connection with applications by two major air lines in Canada for authority to serve alcohol on aircraft?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there have been some inquiries made by members of my department with regard to the issue raised by the hon. gentleman. The information I have is to the effect that there is little evidence to show that there have been any incidents endangering safety in the operations of other air lines on which alcohol is served.

NATIONAL DISASTERS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as a pragmatic socialist I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. I apologize for not sending him notice, but I received several phone calls during the last hour or so. In view of past experience in Canada with regard to disasters—and I now refer particularly to the Manitoba floods—and in light of the growing demand for some legislation regarding such situations, is the government giving consideration to bringing in legislation which supports in principle the private member's bill introduced by the hon. member for Kootenay West, which is aimed at establishing a Canada disaster fund?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as a pragmatic Liberal as well as a convinced one—and that is where I differ from my hon. friend—I would naturally want to give consideration to that bill. I shall be glad to do so, because I am very much aware of this problem. We in the government have been giving consideration to this situation for some time, and I hope the progress of parliamentary business will enable us before long to deal with this matter of disasters on a somewhat different basis than the pragmatic way in which we have been approaching it over the years.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT TO MONTREAL BY U.S. DEFENCE SECRETARY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

According to newspaper reports, Mr. McNamara, the American Defence Secretary, will be in Montreal some time this month. Will Mr. McNamara confer with the Canadian authorities at that time?

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe that question urgent enough to be in order at this time.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION OVER MANPOWER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration?

Has the minister had the opportunity of reading the statement made by the premier of the province of Quebec with regard to manpower "jurisdiction".

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is out of order in its present form.

[Later:]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration?

Further to the undertaking the minister gave last Tuesday in answer to a question of mine, is he in a position today to make a statement on manpower policy?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my reply to the question was that I had not seen the text of the premier of Quebec, I have not yet seen it, because the premier very likely spoke without notes.

The only reply I can give is that I feel the premier was commenting on the provincial Liberal platform. As for the aims of that program, they contain on the whole nothing contrary to our policy, save the employment offices.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I only rise to point out that the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) has just put a question similar to mine and that his was accepted while mine was turned down.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

In view of the fact that the premier's speech was broadcast and tape-recorded and that the views therein expressed do not at all seem to concur with the opinion stated today by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, is it the intention of the minister—

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that he seems to be on the point of initiating a debate on a question which, to my mind, is not debatable.

I apologize to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) if a similar question he intended to put was rejected. The reason why I accepted the question of the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) is that he started by saying that he had previously put a question and that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration was to consider it. That is why I accepted his question.

Mr. Grégoire: If you will allow me to put my question, Mr. Speaker, I was just going to.

Mr. Speaker: I will allow the hon. member for Lapointe to put his question. I will then rule whether or not it is in order.

Mr. Grégoire: My question is as follows. Is it the intention of the minister to obtain the tape recording of the speech of the premier of Quebec, in order to compare his manpower policy with his own?

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order.

[English]

QUEBEC—PETITION RESPECTING CHANGE IN PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister now in a position to advise the house of the attitude the government of the United Kingdom intends to take in respect of the resolution passed by the legislature of Quebec to alter and vary the powers and authority of the legislative council? Is this matter going to come up before the United Kingdom parliament, and might the resolution in question, passed only by the Quebec legislature and a recommendation made by the government of Canada, be accepted by the United Kingdom parliament as a means to amend the constitution?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any change in the situation with regard to this resolution being on the calendar of the United Kingdom parliament, though in the eyes of the United Kingdom government there may not be the same haste in bringing it before parliament because of the existing electoral situation in Quebec.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On April 5 the Prime Minister said he would make an inquiry. Has he made an inquiry, and what has been the answer from the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom?

Mr. Pearson: I realize, Mr. Speaker, that my right hon. friend did ask me to make inquiries, and I did make them at the time. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would give me a few hours to look into the question and see what reply has been received.

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Has the minister yet received the Donald report? If not, when does he expect to receive it; and having received it, will the government make it public?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I received a phone call two days ago from Mr. Donald. He told me he was dotting the "i's" and crossing the "t's" of his report, and that it would be forthcoming in a few days.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister answer the third portion of my question? Will that report be made public when the government receives it?

Mr. Pepin: This has not been decided yet, Mr. Speaker; but this is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance because the report is coming to him.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR EXPANSION OF R.O.P. HOG TESTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister now in a position to answer the very urgent question that was asked the other day about an increase in the facilities for the record of performance testing of swine?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am now prepared to answer this question. There was a meeting between my officials and the officials of the Ontario Swine Breeders' Association in this regard on Friday last. The representations made by that organization are now being given very active consideration by the members of my department.

EPIDEMIC TREMORS IN POULTRY—USE OF U.S. VACCINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the other day the hon. member for Huron asked me a question with respect to the testing of vaccine for epidemic tremors in poultry, namely whether this vaccine had been approved for use in Canada. I am pleased to advise the hon. member that a permit is being issued to allow the importation of this vaccine.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF PAROLE REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the numerous opinions expressed during the recent debate on the subject of the abolition of capital punishment, pointing out the necessity of amendment of the parole laws and regulations—incidentally, these opinions were expressed by abolitionists and retentionists alike—is it the intention of the government to bring forth any amendments to the parole regulations at this session of parliament?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter is being considered by the ministers concerned, in the light of the debate in the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REVIEW OF REPORT ON JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Some time ago I asked the Minister of Justice about the report on juvenile delinquency tabled in the house two months ago. I ask him now what progress his department is making in its review of this report. I would further ask whether he has considered the advisability of referring the more useful recommendations contained in this report to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): As the hon. gentleman knows, the question of juvenile delinquency comes under the portfolio of the Solicitor General. This matter is being looked into, but I am not sure whether the question of referring the subject to the committee has been followed up to date.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON POSSIBLE CANCER CURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister in a position to make a statement concerning what could be today's most important item of news, namely the report that a Canadian father and son team of scientists may have discovered a cure for cancer?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no statement on that matter.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister look into this matter and make a statement to the house at an early date?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to investigate the matter and report to the house later.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I wonder whether the minister has considered making a grant available to this father and son team, and to the three scientists who discovered the new antibiotic drug myxin just a week or two ago.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the department makes a very considerable amount of money available for research, including research into the problem of cancer. We have a continuing interest in this problem, and I am sure the representations made by my hon. friend will be considered.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—FAILURE TO PAY FULL MILK SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Is the minister aware that his dairy subsidy policy has not reached the amount of $4 per cwt. as promised, and will he take action so that this price of $4 per cwt. may be reached immediately?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the hon. member's question is rather general in character and cannot be accepted.

Mr. Laprise: I would ask your permission to debate it at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot ask a question which is supplementary to another one that has been rejected.

If he has a new question, he will be allowed to ask it.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the general dissatisfaction which prevails—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member ask his question?

Mr. Ricard: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I want to give some sort of advance notice. In view of the general dissatisfaction which has prevailed among dairy producers since the last statement made on this matter—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows better than I do that he cannot express an opinion before putting his question as he just did.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, will the minister change his dairy policy since the price of $4 per cwt. has not been reached under his new policy set up some time ago?

[Mr. Thompson.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is very closely related to the one ruled out of order when put by the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise).

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question and that one will be in order.

Can the minister tell us if he has instructed his officials in the Department of Agriculture to apply that policy of at least $4 per cwt. of milk or if he has yet to give such instructions?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this question is of the same kind as the other two. The hon. member is asking whether or not the Minister of Agriculture gave instructions. I fail to see how that can be urgent, and in view of the fact that one of the hon. member's colleagues has just given notice that he wants to discuss that matter at ten o'clock, that side of it can also be considered at that time by the minister.

Mr. Grégoire: Another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I trust will be in order this time. In view of the fact that the minister has already made a statement in the house on that matter and that the officials of his department have not implemented it, I would like to know if the latter really intends to carry out what he stated in the house. Besides, if he was not talking seriously, a statement from the minister is in order in these circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think so.

Mr. Grégoire: Well, I do, Mr. Speaker.

OIL

INQUIRY AS TO REVISION OF NATIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Has the operation of the national oil policy, which was established more than five years ago, given any indication of a need for a revision of that policy today?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this question is not so urgent that it should be asked at this time.

[Later:]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that oil is a very important commodity in this country, both nationally and internationally, with the greatest respect I would put a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. In the light of strong representations from the petroleum industry that the national oil policy must be brought up to date, will the minister advise whether any consideration has been given to this and whether there has been any evidence over the past three years that the policy must be revised, and revised now?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I feel I cannot accept the premise that there is general dissatisfaction in the oil industry in Canada. On the contrary. I was in Calgary recently and I gained there the opposite feeling. Some people have expressed resentment in regard to the present situation, one person in particular, but I do not think that this represents public opinion or the opinion of the oil industry in Canada.

The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees), then minister of trade and commerce, started something in 1960-61, and the production of oil in Canada has more than doubled in the last five years. I think that the hon. member should be satisfied with what has been done. The policy itself is reviewed continuously, and if we find in the coming months that something is wrong we will try to remedy it.

Mr. Lambert: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My question is motivated by the replies given to me by the former minister of trade and commerce, now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), that the policy was due for revision and improvements. We know, of course, that it has worked well, but it still could be improved upon.

Mr. Pepin: A national policy like that one is always being reviewed.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received representations that the national oil policy has worked to the great disadvantage of every consumer in Canada who purchases gasoline?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question is not in order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONSIDERATION OF ELECTIONS ACT BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Considering the long period which has elapsed since a thorough committee study and scrutiny was made of the Canada Elections Act, can the Prime Minister indicate when it is intended to have the act referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections for exhaustive study?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am perhaps becoming repetitious, but again it seems to me that this question is not so urgent that it should be asked at this time.

HARBOURS

MONTREAL—PROTECTION AGAINST FUTURE FIRES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Transport?

Yesterday, the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Klein) asked the minister whether he had undertaken an investigation into the disastrous fire which occurred in Montreal harbour. The minister then answered that it was a very worrying situation and that he would conduct an investigation.

I would ask the minister which measures he intends to take immediately to prevent any other such disasters and provide a better protection for the workers and users of Montreal harbour.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Every possible precaution, sir.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Sainte-Marie have a supplementary question?

Mr. Valade: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the following question.

Has the minister communicated with Montreal authorities to set up a joint policy concerning security for the users of Montreal harbour?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the harbours board has been in the closest touch with the city authorities of Montreal.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Did the stabilization board or the department have any butter in storage in Montreal which was affected by the fire?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether this is a supplementary question, and if it is not I do not think it is acceptable.

UNITED NATIONS

SUGGESTED ESTIMATE OF COST OF PEACE KEEPING OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the subject which he talked about at a conference last night. Has the minister or the Canadian government suggested to the United Nations that the cost of maintenance of the United Nations peace keeping forces be estimated in the future before any of these programs are set up? This question concerns all countries participating in peace keeping activities, particularly Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he should consider his question further and put it in another form, or perhaps place it on the order paper. I do not see that it is so urgent that it should be accepted in its present form at this time.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SMOKING—REPORTED INCREASE AMONG SCHOOL CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I want to direct to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last week, in the absence of the minister, I asked this question and the Prime Minister was good enough to say that he would direct it to the minister.

My question is this. Having in mind the recent report of an official of the health department to the effect that there has been a very marked increase in cigarette smoking among Canadian school children in the 12 to 14 years age bracket, would the minister say what is happening to the program which is being financed by the public through his department to reduce or end this addiction?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ADDITION OF CONTIGUOUS CENSUS DISTRICTS UNDER DESIGNATED PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Does the government accept the addition of contiguous census districts to qualifying national employment service areas under its designated area program, providing these districts meet the income level of the National Employment Service area to which they could be added?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentlemen has correctly read the regulations.

EDMONTON—LAY-OFFS AT NORTHWEST INDUSTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Has the minister yet replied to the letters and telegrams which he and his colleague the Minister of National Defence have received from the international association of machinists with regard to the heavy lay-offs at Northwest Industries in Edmonton?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member is not asking his question properly. He is asking whether the minister has replied to certain telegrams. He may wish to put his question in another form.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the house whether the government made commitments to the effect that work would be given the company in Edmonton under the defence sharing program? Is this the case?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, a reply has gone out in answer to the representations to the effect that the government has been doing and is prepared to do all in its power to assist Northwest Industries to even fuller participation in the production sharing program with the United States.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO BY-ELECTION IN NICOLET-YAMASKA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, thank you for having aided my digestion, I have been rising for thirty minutes.

I have a question to put to the Prime Minister and it is an urgent one for the following reason: The riding of Nicolet-Yamaska is henceforth without a member. A government victory is foreseeable—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The hon. member may put a question but no more.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

The member for Lotbinière has just deliberately misled the house by saying that a government victory is foreseeable in Nicolet-Yamaska. He has no right to say things contrary to the truth, as he has been doing just now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the rules do not provide for forecasting and deciding of a by-election in Quebec and to report on it. The question period has expired. But in view of the circumstances, and considering that the hon. member has waited for 30 minutes before putting his question, he may now put it.

Mr. Choquette: It is quite a normal question I intended to put to the Prime Minister.

Is it his intention to call an early by-election in the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska, in view of the fact that a Creditiste will assuredly never be elected in that riding?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The question period is over.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT AND CRIMINAL CODE

EXTENSION OF MORATORIUM RESPECTING B.C. FISHING INDUSTRY

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-169, to amend an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, is the minister going to make a brief statement?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, this legislation was originally introduced in 1959 and enacted because the statement of evidence submitted concerning the raw fish inquiry by the director of research and investigation cast doubt upon the legality of the arrangements and agreements between the fish packing companies and the fishermen relating to the supply and price of raw fish. As a result the companies declined to negotiate prices with the fishermen's union as in past years and it appeared that a strike might result leading to the loss of the salmon catch and possibly other catches if legislation were not enacted to provide that the anti-combines legislation was not applicable to such an agreement during the period January 1, 1959 to December 31, 1960, both dates inclusive.

It has been necessary to amend this legislation from year to year by extending the period of its application as in the present bill. This extension has been occasioned by delay in completing the inquiry because of a series of court actions or injunctions bearing on the procedure in the inquiry.

In 1963 a federal-provincial committee of officials of the federal government and the provincial government of British Columbia was appointed, and they have now made a report. A recommendation of that committee is to the effect that negotiation procedures between the fishermen and the fish processors should be formalized.

It has not yet been possible to implement the conclusions of that federal-provincial report and it appears that, unless the exception is further extended and the exemption of the British Columbia fishing industry from the application of the act is continued, prejudice will ensue. Therefore the present bill provides for the extension of the exemption of the British Columbia fishing industry under the combines act and the Criminal Code.

It had been intended to ask for a further extension of 18 months, but in order to prevent the requirement of coming before parliament again in the event that the report is not implemented within 18 months the amendment has been drafted in such a way as to provide for a continuation of the exemption, it being provided, however, that the exemption will cease to be in effect if a motion of discontinuance is made and passed in this House of Commons.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, this is not such a simple and straightforward question as the President of the Privy Council has so blandly expressed it. It has a far deeper significance than explained by the hon. gentleman who introduced the bill.

To understand the significance of what I am about to say we need to look at the history. The statement of evidence by the director of research and investigation to which the minister referred arose out of a decision, as I understand it, of either six or seven people in the fishing industry who became disgruntled and unhappy because of a strike in the fishing industry a number of years ago. They took steps under the Combines Investigation Act to set out the basis of their claim that the act had been contravened and that a conspiracy to set prices had been engaged in between the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union, the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia, and the fishing industry of British Columbia.

The director of research and investigation under the Combines Investigation Act had no recourse whatever under the law but to launch an investigation, because the provisions of the law are that when six citizens of Canada lay a complaint together with background information before the director he is then duty bound to proceed to conduct an investigation. The director made a statement respecting the procedure itself, which became an issue in the 1957 federal election. At that time we argued, and we still argue, that section 4 of the Combines Investigation Act, which says that workmen or combinations of workmen may engage in activities for their own reasonable protection, should have been brought into force and that the investigation ought not to have been proceeded with.

The government of that day saw fit not to enforce the law, thereby protecting the rights of those in the fishing industry, but instead launched a prosecution. Subsequently there was a reluctance on the part of the fishing industry to negotiate with the fishermen's union over wages, hours and working conditions because it was claimed that if there were negotiations the companies in the fishing industry would be laying themselves open to another prosecution under the provisions of this act. Therefore, in order to ease the awkward situation prevailing in the fishing industry the original amendment was brought in exempting contracts, agreements and arrangements between fishermen or associations of fishermen in British Columbia from the workings of the Combines Investigation Act.

At that time we argued that the exemption ought to be permanent. We argued that if there was doubt in the minds of members of the government preceding this one as to the definition of "workman" in the fishing industry, which has been a perennial problem, that doubt ought to be resolved and some exemption should be provided for fishermen in the fishing industry in British Columbia. We argued that the exemption should be a permanent one and should be brought within section 4 of the act which now provides a permanent exemption for workmen in regard to certain actions for which they would otherwise be prosecuted under the Combines Investigation Act.

I shall quote section 4 of that act so that it will appear on the record. It reads as follows:

> Nothing in this Act shall be construed to apply to combinations of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as such workmen or employees.

That section has been interpreted and reasoned to mean that a combination of workmen or a union that involves itself and a company or industry in collective bargaining for a collective agreement does not contravene the Combines Investigation Act by such negotiations in reaching a collective agreement. We say that this is the correct approach. There ought to be this protection and exemption from the conspiracy sections of the law in so far as unions and their collective bargaining rights are concerned. However, if there is doubt on the part of the government whether fishermen can be classified as workmen, then the provision in the bill now before us, which has been on the statute books since 1959, should be made permanent so as to extend to fishermen in the fishing industry of British Columbia or in any other part of Canada the same sort of protection that exists with respect to other workmen under the Combines Investigation Act. The present government and its predecessor have failed to make the exemption permanent. The failure to do so means that the government is engaging in the game of playing favourites. It is discriminating against a segment of industry for some peculiar or odd purpose.

In 1960 the Combines Investigation Act was amended quite extensively. We spent many hours, both in the house and in the Banking and Commerce Committee going over the proposed changes which were introduced by the hon. gentleman who is now the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) but who was then the minister of justice. One of the interesting changes made in 1960 was, in effect, a provision to exempt the fishing companies from prosecution under the Combines Investigation Act if they engaged in a conspiracy to fix prices in the export market. In other words, they were exempted from prosecution. The parliament of Canada in 1960 singled out one section of the industry under what I called the Pickersgill-Fulton formula or amendment, because both hon. members conspired the one with the other, to develop the exempting section of the Combines Investigation Act which exempted that industry from prosecution under the act if it conspired to fix prices for the export market.

The effect of that provision in so far as the fishing industry in British Columbia was concerned was to bring about an exemption from prosecution for fixing prices in the domestic market. We all know that the various companies in the fishing industry of British Columbia, having been given the authority to sit down with each other and fix common prices for their products in the export market, surely do the same thing when they establish prices in the domestic market. Is there any suggestion that this does not happen? Certainly not. When we buy canned fish that comes from the coast of British Columbia we are buying canned fish whose price has been set by a conspiracy among the companies concerned which has the protection and sanction of law.

The previous government of that day, with the assistance and help of the present Minister of Transport, sought to exempt one section of the fishing industry in British Columbia from the law. This government has not the courage and the common decency now to take the next step, the one that ought to have been taken, namely, to exempt another section of the fishing industry from the provisions of the law. That is one-sided favouritism. It was one-sided favouritism when that concept was originally introduced. The President of the Privy Council is carrying on that one-sided favouritism by asking parliament to continue the temporary exemption respecting fishermen on the west coast. This is not nearly good enough.

It indicates that the President of the Privy Council has not learned very much as a result of his transfer from the position he used to hold in the cabinet to the one he holds now, that he has not come to appreciate that you cannot play favourites, that it is unethical to pick and choose among groups in the nation, that it is politically immoral to take steps to exempt the fishing industry from prosecution under the act while taking other steps to preserve the possibility that individual fishermen or their organizations may be prosecuted.

The gobbledegook of a while ago in explanation of the various safeguards was misleading, to say the least. There is only one reasonable, sensible, fair and just course to take. I can appreciate that the government may not fully understand what is meant by "just". But the only course which would be just to all so far as the fishing industry in British Columbia is concerned is this: If there is any doubt as to the interpretation of the word "workmen" or the phrase "combinations of workmen" in section 4 of the act we should take the bill now before us when we get into the committee stage and make this exemption permanent in the same way that a permanent exemption was granted to the company side of this industry.

The minister says that the bill provides for repeal because as soon as the collective bargaining procedures which may result from the work of the joint federal-provincial committee are worked out and in effect there will be no further need for exemption under the law. If a simple process of establishing a system of collective bargaining in the fishing industry of British Columbia will obviate the need to provide for an exemption from the law, what is the purpose of the law in the first place, because this system of collective bargaining is already in existence? What comes to mind is that there is in contemplation a collective bargaining procedure which will not be true collective bargaining but which will result in the imposition by one group of hours, wages and working conditions on another group. This is not free collective bargaining; it is dictatorship. If the minister contemplates the introduction of a system in British Columbia whereby one element in our society will be told what their hours, wages and working conditions shall be, I agree there could be no conspiracy because those who are under the heels of a dictator have a difficult time conspiring with one another.

One thing this bill has done has been to reveal once again the attitude of the present government which is identical with that of its predecessor and shows its complete lack of interest in fair play. It is not interested in fair play, only in paying attention to those elements in our society which have control of the government itself.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I recall it, during the debate that took place in the twenty fifth parliament I more or less supported the view which has been taken by the last speaker. I felt there were sound arguments for making the exemption permanent. If my memory serves me correctly, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) also supported this view. However, the government of the day felt that the extension of one year which it had suggested might be on the short side and eventually acceded to a suggestion that the term be extended for two years.

Considerably more than two years have elapsed and this, I think, vindicates the position that was taken by the hon. member for New Westminster and myself at that time. Since then, as the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau) has announced, a federal-provincial committee has been studying this problem. It is one which merits study because the fishermen and the fishing industry in British Columbia have been following certain practices since the last decade of the last century and nobody ever suggested that they were not legal until the investigation which took place in the late 50's.

Since the federal-provincial committee is now making a study of this situation, I think it is desirable that if ten members of the house wish to question the propriety of the exemption that right should be reserved to them. The result would be in effect that under this amendment the exemption for which the hon. member and others have asked in the past will continue in perpetuity, unless and until ten members decide they want to propose a change you will have a permanent exemption.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I recognize that what the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) has just said is correct. Unless there is an objection made by ten or more members the provision will be permanent. What the minister neglected to mention is that there is a provision for the repeal of the bill as a result of other action by the house; in other words, if superseding legislation is brought in this measure may be repealed. That is my understanding of the position, and if it is not correct I hope the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau) will tell me so.

I do not intend to speak at length on this matter but I should like to say that in my view it is nothing short of a national disgrace that for ten years uncertainty has hung over the heads of the fishermen of British Columbia. I was a member of the house when the complaint under the Combines Investigation Act was laid. It was startling at the time. It was even more startling to find that the terms of the act which specifically exempt workmen were considered not to prevent the application of the section requiring the director to make an investigation. My impression was that the then minister of fisheries, Hon. James Sinclair, was as surprised as I was to find that this question had arisen in respect of a practice which, as the Minister of Labour has said, has been going on in British Columbia for decades, certainly for longer than I can remember.

I was not a member of the house at the time the action was taken to which the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) referred. I certainly agree it was a regrettable course of action but I shall not go into it. However, I would like to direct the attention of the house to the fact that in addition to that protective section in the Combines Investigation Act there are similar provisions in parallel sections of the Criminal Code.

I well remember the lengthy discussion which took place in the house during the 1953-54 session, when the Criminal Code was being completely revised, on this very question of conspiracy and the protection of working people from the application of the conspiracy sections of the Criminal Code. As we all know, the battle for the protection of working people against charges of criminal conspiracy goes a long way back into the history of our country and of that country where functions the mother of parliaments.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I consider it a national disgrace that this situation has gone on and on and that over the years there have been nothing but temporary extensions of the act. I do not know what kind of proposal will be placed before the house arising from the special committee of federal and provincial authorities, but from reading the committee's report I am not too optimistic that its proposal will be one that will really protect the rights of the fishermen of British Columbia. I hope I am wrong in my forecast.

Inasmuch as the hon. member for Skeena has referred to the section in the Combines Investigation Act I think I should put on record the parallel sections of the Criminal Code. Section 411 deals with the whole question of various types of conspiracy which might be considered in restraint of trade and commerce, including the fixing of prices. Subsection 3 reads as follows:

> This section does not apply to combinations of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as workmen or employees.

Section 409 of the Criminal Code, also dealing with conspiracy in restraint of trade, says that such a conspiracy is an agreement between two or more persons to do or to procure to be done any unlawful act in restraint of trade. Subsection 2 states:

> The purposes of a trade union are not, by reason only that they are in restraint of trade, unlawful within the meaning of subsection (1).

This, of course, raises the whole question of the determination of what is a trade union. The United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union has operated as a union on all fours with the normal operation of any other union in this country except that instead of bargaining on an hourly rate or monthly wage it has to bargain on a rate for piece work. But this is not a unique situation. The Minister of Labour knows that in relation to certain activities in the logging industry in B.C. the traditional method of bargaining has been on a price for 1,000 feet of lumber or logs.

No matter from which angle we look at this situation, for example, from the angle of this house having passed the Canada Labour (Standards) Code last year, it is incredible that even if we pass this bill we still leave unsettled the basic question of whether or not these fishermen are working people under the laws of Canada.

I am not going to prolong my remarks on the bill. Certainly I shall support its passage in lieu of any better proposal but I hope that the President of the Privy Council, who is perhaps not as fully acquainted with the circumstances surrounding this situation as the Minister of Labour, will take a good look at the definition of a workman around which this whole unhappy situation has hinged.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I know I should not rise a second time to speak in this debate, but during his remarks the hon. member for Comox-Alberni posed a question to which he is entitled to an answer. He was concerned with the last few words in the proposed amendment, "or such sooner day as this section is repealed." I assume that those words were inserted in order to permit the repeal of the section if a constructive proposal comes forward from the federal-provincial committee. Otherwise, as I said earlier, the exemption will continue indefinitely unless and until ten members of the house feel that parliamentary action is necessary.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, in view particularly of the remarks made a while ago by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard)—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should advise the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Favreau: That is why, Mr. Speaker, I took a long look around the house before beginning my remarks.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

In view of the remarks of the member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), I feel it is important that the matter should be made clear at this stage.

He said that, in his opinion, this legislation designed to extend temporarily the exemption of the British Columbia fisheries from the provisions of the act is immoral because this exemption should be permanent.

Personally, I note that on four occasions between 1959 and 1964 inclusive, the Canadian parliament saw fit to provide for the temporary nature of this exemption by enacting a similar legislation. I feel therefore that for the moment, since the circumstances making the previous exemptions necessary have not changed, it is quite in order for the minister now responsible for the application of the act to ask parliament to provide for an exemption similar to those previously granted.

In order to indicate that the present government has no intention of removing the exemption before making sure that the legal and other conditions in British Columbia are likely to protect as completely as possible the situation and interests of the fishermen of this area, the bill now before the house is designed to ensure that the exemption be made practically permanent, so as to provide that, barring very special circumstances, the exemption will remain in effect until the recommendations of a federal-provincial committee, which reported in February 1965, have been implemented in some pieces of legislation.

Since there are still some particulars to be looked into, those measures will come exclusively under provincial or federal jurisdiction or under joint jurisdiction, being complementary to one another.

I think it was essential that the previous exemptions, and the one which is now asked for, be granted because if in 1959 as well as for the following years, the exemption had not been applied, the strike threats which existed during that whole period could have resulted in the complete loss of the catch during those years and in lay-offs for all the fishermen concerned. That is why I think that the legislation which was passed was essential and that the one now before the house is also essential.

When the situation has been settled by legislation and we know exactly how it works out, then we can revise our Combines Investigations Act and find out, before cancelling the exemption, whether or not it will be necessary to amend the act in any way.

Hon. members can rest assured that the government has no intention of cancelling the exemption before all those facts have been studied and before it is convinced that the future and interests of all the fishermen concerned will not be prejudiced in any way.

[English]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Application of acts to fishing agreements.

Mr. Howard: This clause, Mr. Chairman, carries with it a relatively new concept in legislation, namely, one which gives the initiative only in the repeal of a law and not its carrying out to any ten members of the House of Commons. I am in agreement with that general principle. It long has been my contention that the cabinet has taken unto itself far too much authority and control over parliament. At least in a small way the provision of the right to any ten members of parliament to initiate a certain legislative step is in itself good. The corollary of this, however, is that this right to take the initiative to repeal or remove the exemption applies only to fishermen in so far as the fishing industry is concerned. In other words, any time any ten members, for whatever reason, feel it is necessary to place the fishermen as individuals and their union in the position of facing potential prosecution for conspiracy under the Combines Investigation Act they can do so.

I think that what the President of the Privy Council should have done, if it is his sincere desire to see this procedure used, was not to have stopped here but rather to have given the same right to any ten members to initiate legislation to repeal the present sections of the Combines Investigation Act which permantly exempt the industry from prosecution for conspiracy to set prices. On the one hand he says that any ten members of parliament should have the right to remove the exemption which now applies to the fishermen, but on the other hand he says he does not want any ten members of parliament to have the right to remove the exemption which now applies to the company side of the fishing industry.

I submit that this is discrimination. As the law stands now, it says that the court shall not convict in any prosecution if there is a conspiracy, combination, agreement or arrangement relating only to the export of articles from Canada. As I pointed out, this is the argument that the fishing industry used as its defence for what the companies were doing in the period prior to 1956 when they came under the glare of the director of research and investigation.

They said then: We are not fixing prices on the domestic market; while it is true that we negotiate with the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union, in our selling policies we do not fix prices on the domestic market but, because of international competition, we have to be able to consult with each other to fix prices for the export market. I would point out that by a process which I believe Professor Skeoch called osmosis the price fixing arrangements on the export market also extend into the domestic market. And this is so.

If the minister is sincere in saying that any ten members of parliament should have the right to initiate a law to remove the exemption in so far as one section of the fishing industry is concerned, why did he not introduce a bill containing the same right to remove the exemption of the company side of the fishing industry as well? Why the different approach? I would very much appreciate an answer from the minister on this point before we proceed to pass the bill.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is no discrimination or unfair treatment. As concerns exports, the same treatment applies to all, but for the domestic market, each and every one, save the exceptions herein provided for, is covered by the Combines Investigation Act.

Nevertheless, I have duly noted the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and I can give all members of the house the assurance that I shall study them and that later consideration of some provisions of this act will be made in the light of the remarks made here. It is clear that if agreements allowed on exports were carried over into the domestic market and were to produce illegal agreements, well then, the necessary investigations would be carried out, whether initiated by the director or at the request of outside persons.

I was pleased with the very frank remark made about the procedure set out in this legislation to the effect that if it is desired at any time to cancel the exemptions, that will not be done by an order in council according to the wishes of the government but by a decision of the members of this house. But I wish to point out also that it was intended by the government to ask for an 18-month exemption, as it did the last time, because it feels that over the next 18 months the matter will be settled to everyone's satisfaction. Then we considered the fact, which the hon. member of Skeena mentioned, that if the exemption had to be continued after 18 months, it would be appropriate to decide if it could be cancelled by an order in council. That is when we decided to abide by the much more democratic principle providing that the decision of the house, and not that of the government, would prevail in those circumstances.

But I want to clarify one thing. It is obvious that the exemption cannot be cancelled at any time simply following a motion by ten members of this house. There is an exemption for a minimum period of 18 months, that is until December 31, 1967, and that exemption will remain in force afterwards unless a motion is passed by this house.

[English]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I did not ask the President of the Privy Council to examine the proposition I put to him or to examine the situation in the light of my remarks. I did ask him whether he thought it correct to follow a more democratic procedure than the use of an order in council, and those were his words, as a result of giving ten members of parliament the right to institute repeal of the exemption. If he is of that opinion why did he not take a further democratic step in respect of fishing and other companies which now have an exemption under the Combines Investigation Act and which now can and do conspire to fix prices for the export market? Why did he not follow his ideas about democratic procedures and take the next step? After all, what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. Ten members have the right to initiate the procedure of repeal in respect of the exemption as it applies to fishermen and their unions. On the surface it seems to me that the minister is thinking in terms of democratic procedure on one side of the coin but not on the other.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I should first like to point out that ten members of parliament cannot abrogate the exemption. The House of Commons can do so on a motion introduced by ten members. As to the further extension of what the hon. member refers to as the democratic process, I think we are here concerned with one rather narrow issue, whether or not the exemption in favour of the fishing industry in British Columbia which has been granted by this house on four occasions should be continued.

So far as the balance of his remarks is concerned, I said a few moments ago that at the time of any further review of the act, those things he referred to will have to be taken into consideration. What he has referred to is a modification of one of the broad and basic principles of the Combines Investigation Act. Surely if any such modification is necessary it ought to be made as a result of an act of parliament rather than through the special type of provision by which ten members of parliament can move a motion to be approved by the house.

The hon. member, I repeat, can be assured that if it is discovered that the application of the exemption from the act to any type of industry for the purpose of export markets is transposed to the Canadian market in terms of an illegal combination, the matter will be looked into by the director of investigation and research.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the President of the Privy Council and the Minister of Labour made reference to the possibility of superseding legislation, and I am using my words, not theirs. I realize that at this stage we cannot consider the details of possible legislation. The question in my mind relates to the fact that this proposed extension is more permanent than the extensions provided by other bills of this type. Nevertheless it does retain in essence the principle that these fishermen are exempt only because of a special exempting provision.

I should like to relate that fact to the question I raised earlier which has been of some concern to me since the problem of the application of the Combines Investigation Act to a group of workmen first arose. Has the President of the Privy Council or the government in mind that any superseding legislation which may be passed will clarify the existing provisions of the Combines Investigation Act regarding what constitutes "workmen". Some of us felt that these provisions protected working people from any application of the Combines Investigation Act. The provisions of section 7 relating to a complaint by six or seven people destroyed what some of us had considered up until 1956 to be a specific provision with general application to working people. Who is to say that tomorrow some other group of workers may not find themselves in the same position as the fishermen were in 1956? It has not happened in the last ten years but, as the Minister of Labour pointed out, it did not happen in connection with the fishermen in British Columbia over a considerably longer period, even though the practice followed in negotiations between them and the fishing companies had been on all fours with what it was in 1956 and in fact has continued to be as a result of this kind of exempting legislation.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Could the minister give us some clarification on any proposals the government has in mind in relation to the application or interpretation of this exempting clause of the Combines Investigation Act? I would also ask for clarification in relation to the parallel clause in the Criminal Code.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, the concern of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni with the possibility of further incidents in other provinces or industries is well understood. The hon. member will also understand that the reason this particular exemption has been granted stems from the fact that the word "workers", or the elements which integrate the notion of a worker within the meaning of the general exception were not precise enough to allow a determination of whether they covered the case of fishermen in British Columbia. Rather than provide at the time for a basic review of the principle involved here, it was decided that the thing to do in the interests of the fishermen and the fishing industry in British Columbia was to exempt that particular industry from the provisions of the act and the Criminal Code.

I am not in a position to say whether it will be the intention or decision of the government to extend further the notion of "worker" within the meaning of the general extension. Hon. members will appreciate that it would be difficult and probably unfair for me to use the pretext of the narrow clause now before us to forecast a basic or general review of the principles of the act. But I might say at this time that within the next ten days or so I intend making a statement with regard to a governmental decision respecting a broader view of the Combines Investigation Act. However, for the moment, because government policy is involved and a general review of the act as such is not being discussed here, I think I should not state that policy. But I can tell the hon. member that within the next ten days or so I intend to make a further statement on a more general view of the act itself.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Favreau moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I might say one word on third reading. I meant to say this at the committee stage but was called out to the telephone. I apologize for my absence. For my own part I think the bill is phrased correctly, because I believe that the more we do to strip the Senate of any function the better off we will be. But if I were in the Senate I would object most strenuously to the bill. I am sure hon. Senators will say that the House of Commons is taking unto itself exclusively the right to repeal legislation whereas our concept of repealing legislation is by means of the Governor General, the House of Commons and the Senate as an entity indivisible. It seems to me that legislation drafted in this way is terribly poor, even though I agree that this is the way it should be done.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this discussion but I think the hon. member for Skeena (Mr.

Howard) is labouring under a misapprehension. As I understand the bill, it means that ten members could initiate the legislation if this bill is passed by the House of Commons and the Senate in the usual way. I should like an opinion in this regard.

Mr. Favreau: I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member is putting a question?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Yes.

Mr. Favreau: In answer to the question I would say that the basic issue, of course, is an extension by both houses of parliament of the exemption for a period of 18 months until the end of 1967. But the exemption is to continue subsequently until such time as the House of Commons, upon motion of ten of its members, decides to repeal it.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): If I may continue my remarks, Mr. Speaker, because I did not make myself clear, my point is that this legislation gives that authority to ten members of the House of Commons but this legislation has to be approved by the Senate.

Mr. Favreau: Yes.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): We in the House of Commons cannot by ourselves take away this right from the Senate. It is even possible that the Senate will not pass the bill if they feel their rights are being denied. In closing I wish to congratulate members on the treasury benches who have taken part in this debate for a more responsible attitude regarding this rather difficult and contentious problem than was habitually adopted by them when they did not have the responsibility of administering these measures. I sometimes think what a tremendous benefit it would be if the hon. member for Skeena had the advantage of sitting on the treasury benches for a while so that this attitude might be transformed to some extent, but on balance I am not sure which would be worse for the country.

Mr. Favreau: I am sorry I misunderstood the original question put by the hon. member. He is completely right, of course. In dealing with the present bill the Senate will be completely free to accept the principle which is very humbly suggested to them. They will, I hope, understand that the basic issue will be resolved by them in the same way as it is resolved by this house.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, I have one question. Do development projects come strictly within the prerogative of the provincial governments or is the federal government making recommendations in this area?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier in this debate, the issue is not yet completely clarified whether there is here an exclusive provincial jurisdicition or an exclusive federal jurisdiction or whether both provincial and federal legislation which will complement each other will have to be passed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

RESEARCH COUNCIL ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING NAME, ADDITIONAL REMUNERATION OF OFFICERS, ETC.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-150, to amend the Research Council Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out when the resolution introducing this bill was under discussion, this is rather in the nature of a housekeeping bill made necessary by the passage of legislation setting up a Science Council of Canada. The principal object of the bill in its few clauses is to reconcile the position of the National Research Council with the new Science Council. In addition to this, steps have been taken to make a number of small operational changes in the latter clauses of the bill for the day to day operation of the National Research Council.

Since I have already made a statement both on the Science Council and the National Research Council, I think perhaps if we could proceed to committee without delay I would be prepared to answer any questions that there may be.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay the bill reaching the committee stage but I think my remarks with respect to the principle are more aptly put on second reading and can be made in about ten minutes. I do not believe they will seriously hold up the bill in any case, and an orderly procedure will be correctly maintained.

As the minister stated, this bill is a housekeeping measure designed to change the name and to make one or two other adjustments in the act. One of these adjustments is to relieve the National Research Council of its responsibilities in an advisory capacity or, to put it more accurately, to refer matters to a committee of the cabinet on science policy. I believe that in this principle a more coherent pattern is being followed than heretofore. I know from the minister's first statement that this results not only from the recommendations of Dr. Mackenzie, the past president of the National Research Council, but from studies carried out following his report. With the council on scientific matters and the secretariat in the cabinet we are beginning to get a framework now whereby we can separate policy and the investigational branch of the National Research Council's work into two parts under an over-all umbrella of a committee of the cabinet dealing with scientific matters.

My remarks today are directed through you, Mr. Speaker, not only to the National Research Council but to the minister who reports to parliament for it. Many people in Canada, over the last score of years have spoken at some length on the necessity of research as part of the adjustment that must be made in a modern industrial country in order to keep pace with technological advances. I should like to say, and I am sure the minister supports me in this, that the work of the National Research Council of Canada is outstanding the world over. My remarks are along the line that the tremendous effort by the National Research Council requires, I believe, a little reinforcement. Let me give some examples. One of the duties of the National Research Council is the job of doing basic research which might be classified, for the purpose of my argument, as government research. Within the field of government research a tremendous amount of pure research and applied research springing from pure research has been done. I do not believe that any country in the western world exceeds Canada in this regard.

With respect to the second duty listed in the act, whereby the National Research Council representing the government, if you will, joins with private industry to do research, there is much to be desired. The chief fact, as I see it, is that even though the relationship is voluntary between the National Research Council and industry there has not been as much government-industry research in Canada as there has been in most of the other industrial nations. I do not think this is the fault of the National Research Council to any extent whatsoever. As I see it, the fault lies in the fact that many industries in Canada are American owned or American controlled and they have developed a pattern of behaviour under which their research is done for them by their parent companies in the United States. To a certain extent the remark I have just made about American owned and controlled industries also applies to British owned and controlled industries in Canada. In other words, the subsidiaries of foreign enterprises in Canada find it difficult, under the pattern of behaviour which has been established in their industries, to come voluntarily to the National Research Council and join with it in industrial research which would do so much for industry in Canada.

Therefore I am going to suggest to the minister, even though the act does not lay down any such responsibility for him, that he could serve his country well by using the considerable prestige which goes along with his portfolio in deliberately searching out opportunities where the facilities of the National Research Council could be combined with those of various industries which have the job of producing a particular product that is the end result of the pure and applied sciences in co-operative research programs. We do have some examples of this. In connection with nuclear development and the use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes in producing electricity, we have the example of the co-operation of the Canadian subsidiaries of Westinghouse and General Electric. The Atomic Energy Control Board has done tremendously fine work in providing us with a type of nuclear power production which equals anything in Great Britain or the United States.

In this particular type of co-operation these subsidiaries took great pride in the fact that they were able, in co-operation with a Canadian government agency, to go along a path different from that taken by the parent companies. They took great pride that in some aspects of this problem they exceeded the work done by the parent companies. I do not believe there was any loss financially to the parent companies; in fact, the opposite was the case.

I would suggest that the bringing together of these two subsidiaries of United States companies and a Canadian government agency resulted in benefit for Canada economically as well as from the point of view of prestige and research. I just use that as an example because I am sure there is need for the same thing in many other fields. I want to come back to this matter in a moment.

Another phase of the work of the government research council is the contracting out and delegating of certain problems of research to the scientific departments of the various universities of Canada. One of the main purposes of this technique is to develop scientific facilities at our universities but at the same time to supplement the work of the National Research Council. It is this particular phase of the work of the National Research Council that I believe will enable the people of Canada, through the federal government, to bring about a tremendously increased amount of work which will not only add to our basic research but will be a device acceptable to the provinces which will allow the national government to play a large part in the financing of education in Canada.

I think the reports dealing with the cost of higher education indicate that the largest single component of that increased cost is and will be not only in the field of basic research but in the facilities which are made available to do this research. In this phase I believe the minister would have the support of all parties, including his own, if he were to use this as an opening wedge into the education field without in any way destroying the legitimate right of the provinces under the British North America Act to full control over education. This is an acceptable way in which we could move in this field.

This is something which cannot be pushed effectively by the personnel of the National Research Council; it has, I believe, to be a matter of deliberate government policy. I think that in this regard the minister will get not only the support of members of all parties but also the enthusiastic thanks of men and women across Canada who are trying to build up our higher levels of education.

I want to conclude my remarks on this aspect, Mr. Speaker, by reverting to the question of the minister's contribution in backing up, supporting and reinforcing the work of the National Research Council. I deal with this subject under the heading of "Education of the Public".

Let me turn, first of all, to education of industry. I do not think there are many of us here in the house who are not aware that through the basic research of government agencies we have produced new technology that should be utilized in our industries across Canada (a) to make them more competitive and (b) to produce new and superior products. Yet we realize that much of this basic knowledge, for the reasons I advanced earlier, lies at the root of ownership and control.

I want to say without any malice whatever that I think I can put forward the thought that one of the functions of the minister as he surmounts the organization period in his department is more and more to make the country aware of what these technological changes are which have been made available by basic research here in Ottawa and across Canada. He should also publicize the fact that certain industries are not adopting these potential improvements.

I am not an expert in these matters, Mr. Speaker, and my views are only those of a layman, but let me once again give the house some tangible examples. I think of the mining industry. Canada is one of the leading mining countries of the world; yet the great bulk of the mining machinery utilized in Canada is imported from the United States. There has been a definite lack of basic research into the type of machinery required in our mining operations in Canada, and we actually build our mines around the type of machinery which is available.

The new move in Canada these last few years of beginning to re-examine the type of mining operations we are carrying on in this country provides a great oportunity to develop new types of machinery suitable to our own particular problems, which in turn could be put before the steel industry complex and the industrial machinery manufacturers in Canada. With the help of the National Research Council they could produce a type of mining machinery unique to Canada and which would be both efficient and suitable to the new type of mining I am now going to describe.

One of the new problems created by the new type of mining has resulted from the change from deep mining operations to the extraction of minerals from the surface—open pit mining, if you like. The type of machinery which is utilized in most cases is the same as that utilized for the extraction of any soil or dirt. Not enough thought has been given to the techniques of moving minerals or mineralized rock to the concentrator or to increasing efficiency to the point where there is a dramatic reduction in cost. I still see being used bulldozers and loaders that carry 12 to 15 tons and in some cases even 35 tons. The type of machinery used in building a highway is being used to move the rock to the place where it is crushed.

There is also the type of machinery which is used in the coal mines around Estevan in Saskatchewan. There the largest machinery in the world is used to move tremendous tonnages of coal per day per man, thereby producing a very low unit cost per ton. This is the type of machinery we must start developing in Canada not on a single unit, custom basis but on a mass production basis which would result in several hundred units every few years, thereby making available to open pit mining the type of low cost machinery which must be made available.

The reason I mention open pit mining is that much of the ore in Canada is low grade. To make money out of low-grade ore you first of all have to have a great volume of such ore and, second, you have to have a very low unit cost for moving the ore to the concentrators.

The Minister of Industry will be moving into a field already very large and lucrative, one which has already grown at a tremendous pace, and I have put forward this example so he will realize that here is a type of secondary industry which helps not only itself but primary industry to develop. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, I am not an expert in this matter; these are the observations of a layman. However, I believe they merit examination by those around the minister who are experts.

If there is merit in what I am saying I think the minister could serve his country well by bringing these problems to the attention of industry. The National Research Council could bring about a great forward step in the types of operations along the same lines as the steel industry which I should have liked to describe.

Most of us in Canada realize that for many decades to come steel will remain a basic industry of the modern industrial nation. We know that government agencies in Canada have done a great deal of work in this field. In that regard I should like to mention the metallurgical division of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys which has done research work resulting in the addition of uranium to steel, thereby coming up with a steel the characteristics of which are superior to other types of steel being produced elsewhere in the world. Since we have the basic uranium supplies, since we probably have the largest iron ore reserves in the world, since we have the energy to process steel through electrolytic techniques, through the traditional open hearth technique or through the new chemical techniques, and since we also have the water necessary to do this, a great advance in steel production can be accomplished.

As the United States rapidly becomes short of water for industrial purposes, which is probably more important than anything else, our water can probably be used as an inducement to bring heavy steel industry into Canada. If this is accompanied by increased technical know-how developed by our research people, with our basic energy, water and other resources I believe we can accelerate the fantastic growth of the steel industry even more than has occurred in the past eight years. Instead of being so proud that we have gone from 4 million tons to 8 million tons in eight years, let us think in terms of doubling and redoubling in short periods the present volume of 10 million tons.

In this particular industry we are completely competitive with the United States. As a matter of fact, we cannot even produce enough for our own needs in Canada, let alone export steel. I believe that the Minister of Industry could reinforce the work of the National Research Council if he were to inform himself as to what is available by way of know-how from the various government agencies, bring together all this knowledge and then ask pointed questions as to why it is not used. I will not deal with the other industries I have referred to in my notes. I have said enough to make my point.

My final point has to do with the consumer. In this field I know that traditionally the National Research Council has high ethics. When a product is produced by an industry and is brought to the National Research Council for examination, it is examined and the results are available if they are requested. Let me ask this question. How many times have the millions of home owners and consumers in Canada hoped and prayed for the day when there would be some form of easily available knowledge so that it would be possible to check on the efficiency and relative cost advantages or cost benefits of the various products available on the market? When a person buys a furnace, an automobile, a refrigerator and so on, he always asks himself when making his choice: What is the best article of that type for me?

I know that it is not according to the ethics of the National Research Council to issue comparative information of this type. But I have often wondered in thinking about the matter why the minister would not put himself in the place of the consumer today who is hard pressed by rising costs, not only of basic products but costs of distribution and those brought about by the tremendous added cost of advertising, and give the consumer some sort of standard to use from which to judge what is the best buy. Some sort of code might need to be set up. It might be part of the advertising; I do now know. I am simply saying that there is a tremendous need now among the consumers of Canada for some type of basic information that will enable them to judge what they are buying objectively in some reasonably fair way.

I know that when you buy an automobile you can get information from the automobile magazines published by private enterprise and thus get an evaluation that way. That is the sort of information needed when it comes to traditional hard goods such as stoves, refrigerators, dishwashers and all those things that go into a modern home, to say nothing of bigger things such as furnaces and so on.

I have made my point, Mr. Speaker, that the general principles of these housekeeping amendments have my support. Second, I have taken advantage of this opportunity, in the general freedom of the debate on second reading, to put forward some proposals that are additions to the terms of reference, if you like, to be utilized by the National Research Council. Most of the additional things I have suggested I hope will be given attention by the minister. I hope he will apply the dynamics of his position to achieve the ends I have suggested, because they really come under the understood terms of the act.

I am suggesting that the work of the National Research Council, plus the work of government agencies such as Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the work done by research people in the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, the Department of Forestry and so on, should be brought together under the scientific committee of the cabinet. I think that the ministers on this committee, particularly the Minister of Industry, should take the tremendous amount of know-how, the tremendous amount of basic information, and try to give to industry all the available knowledge in order to put Canada in a more competitive position, both as to cost structure and the variety and quality of new products, vis-à-vis other nations. I think we should all be very glad to support the minister in any initiatives he might take even though such duties are not laid down for him in the act we are now amending.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. Is it the wish of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 1—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I shall not take many minutes. I refrained from speaking on the other bill dealing with the advisory science council and also on second reading of this bill simply to expedite the business of the house and not because of lack of interest in the subject matters of the two bills. I had a long and profitable association with the National Research Council, Atomic Energy, Eldorado and other people engaged in scientific activity in this country. I look with favour on scientific progress. I think that the very capable and dedicated men who are doing scientific work in Canada should interpret the debate in the House of Commons as a commendation of their efforts. The very fact that we are not spending much time on these two bills is not because of lack of interest in parliament with regard to what is going on in scientific research but rather because of a general desire to get on with the job.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I propose to do no more than ask a few questions this afternoon. My hope is that the proposed changes will be to the general advantage of scientific development in Canada. Do I understand that the Science Council will not in any way supersede the National Research Council but will rather be of assistance to the National Research Council? Do I understand that the Science Council will give advice to the minister who will then pass on advice or direction to the National Research Council? In other words, is the situation such that we shall not find one organization treading on the toes of the other?

Next, I would ask the Minister this question. Will the National Research Council or, for example, the Atomic Energy Control Board, be represented on the Science Council so that they can give the value of their experience and advice to the council when it is considering long-range plans for the advancement of science in Canada?

These questions have arisen in my mind with regard to these two bills which, of course, have to be considered jointly.

Mr. Drury: I think it is safe to say there will be no phenomenon which might be described as treading on the toes as between the Science Council and the National Research Council. As I pointed out at an earlier stage, though in the past it was the duty of the N.R.C. to formulate a science policy for Canada and to advise the Canadian government thereon, the council has tended over the years to preoccupy itself with somewhat more immediate and possibly more pressing questions such as the operation of substantial and effective laboratories and the granting of financial assistance in support of research in the universities as well as making strides along the road indicated by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in encouraging scientific research and development within industry itself.

The National Research Council has not tended to address itself to the larger issues of determining scientific objectives for Canada as a whole and making some measurement of priorities. It is because the National Research Council has not been in the habit of doing this that Dr. Mackenzie recommended the setting up of a Science Council of Canada. The Science Council will be undertaking a task which the N.R.C. is not performing so its work will in no way conflict with the operations of the N.R.C. I fully share the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre of the excellent work which the N.R.C. has done in the past and which I hope it will continue to do.

So far as representation of the various government science agencies throughout Canada on the council is concerned, I would point out there are a considerable number of government departments and agencies, all of which are concerned with scientific research. If they were all to seek and be granted representation on the Science Council the latter would, I am sure, become an unwieldy body. We hope to have as members of the Science Council individuals who will be in a position adequately to represent the interests and the functions of government science.

Mr. Hamilton: One of the questions which worries me is this. There is usually a scientific committee of the cabinet and unless the cabinet contains a minister who takes a great interest in these matters, there is a tendency to allow the committee to become inactive. I believe the records will show that the ups and downs of the meetings of this particular committee over the past 20 years have been extremely noticeable.

Perhaps the minister will give us more information on this point. Am I right in thinking that the Science Council has the task of considering long-range policy? Does it then make recommendations to the Minister of Industry or to the science committee of the cabinet as was the case with all these agencies in the past?

Mr. Drury: The Science Council will report to a minister designated by order in council, not to the Privy Council committee on scientific and industrial research.

Mr. Hamilton: If the Science Council reports to a minister, what part does the scientific secretariat of the Privy Council play in this arrangement?

Mr. Drury: The scientific secretariat will in effect be the secretariat of the Science Council of Canada. I am sure the hon. member is aware of the importance of a competent secretariat in the operation of any advisory body, whose work, generally speaking, is fruitful or not depending largely on the effectiveness of the secretariat. Since the minister to whom the Science Council reports is subject to change, it was felt that the permanent location of the scientific secretariat should be in the office which provides general secretarial services for the government as a whole, namely, the Privy Council office.

Mr. Hamilton: This underlines my main cause for concern. If the line of communication is to a minister and if the secretariat of the Privy Council is used as a repository for these recommendations and the minister to whom the council makes recommendations can be changed, as I see it there is this weakness. The Privy Council comes under the Prime Minister and on occasions prime ministers are for months involved in matters other than science. There is always a tendency to set science aside as being a low priority item.

I was wondering whether there would not be some improvement now in the method of communication in the scientific field so that the danger of science being left in a backwater might be avoided. If these matters were reported to a minister with an active secretariat, we would be in a better position to ask questions in the house about what is going on. We cannot expect the Prime Minister to answer detailed questions about events which are taking place in the scientific field though I agree it is logical to place this secretariat with the Privy Council which is responsible for all the government's secretarial facilities covering matters which concern several departments. The weakness is that we have to look to the Prime Minister for answers to questions. If there were some other minister that we in the house could ask questions of, then I personally would feel a good deal happier.

Mr. Drury: I do not think that the bill stipulates that the minister designated be the Prime Minister. I am much interested in the views of the hon. gentleman that science might be better served were the minister designated by the governor in council to be one whose duties are less onerous than those of the Prime Minister. The bill itself does not provide that the minister designated shall be the Prime Minister merely because the science secretariat happens to be in the Privy Council office. There is complete freedom on the part of the governor in council to choose any one of the members of the government as the minister to be responsible for answering questions to the extent that the bill provides in respect of the operations of the council.

Mr. Churchill: Obviously there is an administrative difficulty there but I am not certain I would be able to offer any solution. As I recall, because of the pressure of business on the cabinet it was difficult to give the attention that scientific matters should have received, and the committee which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has mentioned has a long history of infrequent meetings. The minister named by the bill, unless he has some relationship to the National Research Council, would not be able to pass on the recommendations of the advisory science council to that body. But I do not expect we can solve that problem this afternoon.

Mr. Drury: I shall take note of that.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, there is just a brief word I should like to say even though the matter to which I refer may not as yet have come directly under the National Research Council. However, I do think that the matter reported in today's issue of the Ottawa Journal, and perhaps in other papers throughout the country, is something which supports the idea of the government underwriting and assisting research work.

Naturally I have no idea whether the claim made is a valid one, but newspaper reports today indicate that Dr. V. A. Mirkovich, who is a civil servant, and his father, Dr. V. V. Mirkovich, who is retired, claim that they have developed a hormone which may prove to be a cure for cancer. The story, as it is found on pages 1 and 7 of today's Ottawa Journal, is a most exciting one.

On orders of the day I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question about this report, and I took the liberty of characterizing it as possibly today's most important news. Even if these men have not achieved final success it would look as though they are making real progress. It would look as though mankind is on the way, and it would be a wonderful accomplishment for Canada if two Canadian scientists have achieved this tremendously important breakthrough in the field of human health.

As I say, this particular project may not be something that the National Research Council is concerned with, but it does demonstrate how much mankind owes to research and how important is the subject about which we are talking. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is quite correct in saying that although the house may not be debating this legislation at length, we all recognize the tremendous importance of the subject. If perchance the report that has appeared today is correct, then I feel the names of these two Canadians ought to be on this day's records of this house.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, following up what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, this is an important point related at least indirectly to the legislation that is before us because here is an area in which the National Research Council ought to be taking more initiative. These two men are recognized scientists in their own right. For eight years they have been unable to get the necessary help for their research from any of the cancer research societies, nor I presume from the National Research Council. As a result they had to use their own meagre resources. They had to go to Mexico to carry out tests. If their claim has any merit at all, and I think it has because cancer societies in Canada are aware of it, then it is the kind of thing the National Research Council ought to be investigating and supporting.

The report in the newspaper goes into some detail on the discovery of the hormone by the father and son Mirkovich team. I would just add my support to what has been said and I hope the National Research Council will follow up this type of research.

I cannot help but think back to when I was just a boy and one of my sisters died from diabetes not too many months before the Banting and Best team discovered insulin. At that time there was hope on the part of some and ridicule on the part of others, but today these two Canadians are looked on as great benefactors for their work in an area of research which has saved the lives of millions of people. In passing I would point out that in the eight years since the Mirkovich father and son team began working more than 2 million North Americans have died from cancer.

I would also draw attention to the results of other research announced last week. I refer to the work of three Canadian scientists in the federal Department of Agriculture, Drs. Gillespie, Peterson and Cook. Their discovery of the antibiotic myxcin has been hailed as a tremendous breakthrough. In fact, the Minister of Agriculture, when mentioning it the other day in a press release, said that these men were heroes for what they have done.

This is the kind of thing in which the National Research Council must be interested. I know it does great work, but in this area we are dealing with something that concerns the welfare and health not only of Canadians but of people all over the world. Assistance for this type of research is something we should support even if in some cases the research itself should not achieve ultimate success. It is a part of an over-all program for improving the lot of all mankind.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 5—Tenure of office.

Mr. Hamilton: Is there any deep explanation for the limit of three years?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Chairman. The present act provides that appointments to the council shall be for a term of three years. From time to time there have been occasions when, through decease, resignation or otherwise, members have ceased to be members of the council half way through their appointments, but the subsequent appointments have had to be for three years. The council has a system of rotation whereby one third of its members will be renewed every three years. The council likes to do this on a particular date so that everyone starts off together and ends together. This provision will enable new appointees to fill out the remainder of a term rather than holding an appointment for three years ending at a non-conjunctive date.

• (5:20 p.m.)

On clause 6—Duties of Council.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, this is the substantive clause.

> The Council has charge of all matters affecting scientific and industrial research in Canada that may be assigned to it by the Committee.

The committee is the committee of cabinet. Based on friendly experience in trying to get something new in the scientific research field, I find there comes a period in the life of a cabinet when it is decided that this must be done. So a secretariat to the cabinet is appointed which is a permanent body. Then the committee of cabinet may not meet for five, six, or seven years, and if it does not direct anything to the National Research Council the council continues and falls into a set routine of carrying out and finishing what they already have in motion.

My point is that under this clause, as I read it, the National Research Council does not have the right to take the initiative to embark on research unless such is recommended to it by the committee of cabinet. Is this right?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the initiative in respect of the National Research Council arises sometimes from within the council itself, which is quite natural, and sometimes from within the government. The infrequency of the meeting of the Privy Council committee on scientific and industrial research is not a difficulty from which we are presently suffering. I do think that not only the committee itself but also the panel of advisers under the committee have been re-activated and in my view are doing the kind of work they should be doing.

There is no question that activity on the part of the panel or the scientific committee itself is needed. I think that now this is not in an unsatisfactory state. However, I suggest that the initiative for new ventures and new operations comes from the bottom for ap-instructions.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I take it that the minister does not consider this section is at all restrictive, no matter how it reads. I do not think it has been restrictive, in any shape or form in the past. I believe that the National Research Council on its own initiative has instituted quite a number of investigations. I do not recall any question ever being raised which would limit its activities in any way and I hope that this will not be done now. However, when it comes to the allocation of funds the advisory council may feel that a certain course of action would be more profitable in the long run perhaps than some idea which has emerged from the National Research Council, but I hope it will not. Having in mind the limitation as to available money, I hope there will be no restriction on the activities of the National Research Council in initiating research.

Mr. Drury: I did not take it that in any way that was implied by the question of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. There is no doubt about it; if the National Research Council were to rely on instructions from the government before proceeding to do anything it certainly never would have achieved the reputation it currently has.

I think the effect of this particular clause merely is to give a right to operate with authority in respect of all those things with which the scientific committee charges it. That is the way I understand it, and not in any way as limiting the activities of the National Research Council to a set of instructions provided from time to time by the committee.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question concerning the distinction between fundamental research, for which the National Research Council was set up, and applied research? If I understood what the minister said, there will be no curtailment of fundamental research at the National Research Council. I always have thought that research in Canada should go one step further and that there should be an agency for applied research directly geared to industry where the end findings of pure research can be applied to industry. In respect of this bill I am wondering whether the minister had applied research in the back of his head. What is there here which will deal with applied research?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in this bill which will deal more with applied research than there is in the unamended act. As I mentioned, the purpose of this bill is to make the work of the National Research Council generally more effective, to provide a clear and comprehensible framework within which it will operate with respect to the scientific council, and that is all.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Macleod can get a pretty good idea of what is contained in the act by reading section 13 of the act which definitely includes applied research in many fields.

INDUSTRY

APPROVAL OF CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT ON AUTOMOTIVE PRODUCTS

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry) moved:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the agreement concerning automotive products between the government of Canada and the government of the United States of America, signed on January 16th, 1965, and that this house do approve the same.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it was indicated in the speech from the throne that parliament would be asked to approve a resolution concerning the important agreement respecting production and trade in automotive products which has been concluded between Canada and the United States. Subsequent to the throne speech the following resolution was tabled in the house:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the agreement concerning automotive products between the government of Canada and the government of the United States of America, signed on January 16th, 1965, and that this house do approve the same.

There is a great deal of interest in the agreement and I am sure members will wish to have a report on developments under it and the automotive program generally.

The automotive industries are a major sector of our economy, not only because of the magnitude of their production and the large numbers of workers they employ but also in terms of their requirements for a wide array of industrial materials and services. Like many other secondary industries in Canada, however, the automotive industries traditionally have faced the problems of manufacturing for the limited Canadian market. No matter how carefully the Canadian vehicle and parts producers managed their businesses, no matter how diligently they took advantage of the latest technologies, they faced higher costs than those of their competitors outside Canada. To overcome these and related problems, the automotive program was introduced.

Costs for Canadian vehicle producers have been higher than for their parent companies because of three factors: first, the higher costs associated with short run assembly and manufacturing operations; second, the duty payable on imported parts and, third, the cost of writing off tooling and facilities over much smaller production volumes. The proliferation of style and variety intensified the problems of short runs. The multiplicity of models added greatly to costs when applied to a production volume of 600,000 automobiles annually.

What were the consequences of these factors for the industry and for Canada? First, and perhaps most important, costs and prices were appreciably higher in Canada than in the United States. Second, the motor vehicle industry in Canada was becoming increasingly dependent on imported components. Because of the limited volume of Canadian production it was not economic to produce many parts in Canada. The trend to greater variety resulted in even shorter production runs being available to Canadian parts makers, thereby making it increasingly difficult for them to meet United States competition. Because of these developments, Canadian content was not growing in the production of motor vehicles in Canada. Third, for the reasons just mentioned, imports of vehicles and parts into Canada were increasing rapidly. In 1960, Canada imported $581 million of such products, whereas in 1964 imports had reached $833 million, an increase of $252 million. Fourth, exports of Canadian made motor vehicles and parts were relatively small. Higher costs of production, foreign tariffs and institutional barriers to trade made it difficult for Canadian producers to compete in other markets. In 1960, exports of Canadian vehicles amounted to only $33 million, while parts exported were valued at $42 million. Fifth, employment in the industry was prevented from expanding to levels which might be reasonably expected if these obstacles were removed.

In order to explore means of dealing in the most effective manner with these serious problems, the government entered into detailed discussions with Canadian motor vehicle and parts manufacturers. After careful consideration of the various alternative courses of action, it was agreed that the problems of short runs, variety, high costs and the rapidly expanding trade imbalance could best be countered by gaining access for Canadian products to the much larger total North American automotive market.

Following these discussions with the Canadian automotive industries, the Canadian government entered into negotiations with United States government representatives in the spring of 1964 with a view to obtaining the removal of tariff and other governmental barriers to trade between the two countries. These negotiations, which involved numerous meetings both in Ottawa and Washington, were successfully concluded on January 16, 1965, when the Canada-United States agreement on automotive products was signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the President of the United States.

This agreement is one of the most important and imaginative trading arrangements ever made between our two countries. Under its provisions Canadian made motor vehicles and original equipment parts enter the United States free of duty. On the Canadian side, vehicles and original equipment parts may be imported duty free by a Canadian vehicle manufacturer who meets a number of specific requirements. These requirements are set out in a tariff item which forms a part of the Canada-United States agreement and in the letters of commitment to the Canadian government signed by each of the vehicle producers. Each vehicle producer in Canada must meet the following conditions:

1. It must maintain the same ratio of vehicle production in Canada to vehicle sales in Canada that existed in model year 1964.

2. It must maintain Canadian value added in vehicle assembly in Canada at least equal to that achieved in model year 1964.

3. It must increase Canadian value added by production or purchases in Canada equal to 60 per cent of increased sales over those achieved in the model year 1964 base period.

In addition to the requirements which I have just mentioned, vehicle producers must increase total production or purchases in Canada, by $260 million annually by the 1968 model year. This amount is over and above the increased Canadian production of vehicles or purchases of parts achieved through growth in the market. It is also over and above the Canadian value added which was achieved in the 1964 model year base period, and which must be maintained each year.

Duty free entry of auto parts into Canada is also available to parts makers if they are for use in Canadian vehicle production.

These provisions mean that, for the first time in the history of our trade relations with the United States, we have an arrangement which recognizes that the differences in size, financial strength and in the relative development of our industries require special provisions to ensure that Canada, in fact as well as in theory, derives real and reciprocal benefits from trade agreements between the two countries.

Moreover, this agreement recognizes that it is necessary to do away with institutional barriers to trade as well as formal governmental barriers, if Canadian industries are to be able to participate effectively in the United States market.

Another important feature is the acceptance of the principle that Canadian industry is entitled to a reasonable transitional period to facilitate its adaptation to production for the larger international market. Furthermore, the agreement places the automotive program on an agreed basis, thereby giving companies in both countries reasonable assurances about its permanence and status.

Already the program and the automotive measures adopted earlier by this government have had substantial beneficial effects. To date, the industry has announced the expansion of or concrete plans for expansion of 136 plants. In addition, it has announced the establishment of 69 new plants in Canada, making a total of 205 plant expansions or new plants. This expansion includes assembly facilities for cars, production and assembly facilities for trucks and buses, technologically advanced engine plants, a large new trim plant, new installations for commercial vehicle frames, stamping plants and other facilities to manufacture efficiently many other automotive products.

Many of these new and enlarged facilities are being designed to service not only the Canadian market but the United States and other markets as well.

Expansions are also taking place in the materials, supplying and service industries which rely upon the automotive industry as one of their major customers.

Production during the first year of the automotive program has totalled over 855,000 motor vehicles, a 27.5 per cent increase over the same period in 1964 and a 36 per cent increase over the same period in 1963. The value of shipments of motor vehicles parts and accessories for model year 1965, the latest complete production year, shows a 51 per cent increase over model year 1963, which was the last model year prior to the introduction of this government's automotive measures in the fall of 1963. During the first 12 months of the program the average number of workers in the automotive industries has increased by almost 10,500 persons, or 16 per cent, over 1964. More than 4,700 of these additional jobs are in the auto parts industry.

Exports of Canadian automotive products have increased greatly under the program. During 1965 exports to all countries amounted to $362 million, an increase of 275 per cent over the same period in 1963 and 94 per cent greater than in 1964. Imports, on the other hand, increased by only 33 per cent in the first 11 months of 1965 compared with the same period in 1964. Exports to the United States during 1965 increased to $231 million compared with $99 million during 1964 and only $40 million in 1963. This represents annual increases of 133 per cent in 1965 over 1964, and 147 per cent in 1964 over 1963. Over the two-year period there was a 475 per cent increase.

This substantial increase in Canadian exports has contributed favourably to our balance of payments and trade. For many years Canada has had a large adverse balance of trade in motor vehicles and parts. This imbalance had increased sharply in recent years, largely because of the expansion in the Canadian automotive market and the fact that Canadian production has a high import content. Between 1961 and 1964 it grew from $476 million to $646 million, with the greater portion of the deficit caused by imports from the United States.

In the absence of the automotive program, the record growth in the market for automobiles during model year 1965 would certainly have resulted in a further major increase in Canada's adverse trade balance in automotive products. For example, if Canadian automotive exports had continued at the 1962 level the imbalance would have grown by $183 million in model year 1965, compared with the previous model year. Instead, the actual increase was approximately $19 million. This is an increase of less than 3 per cent, whereas in 1964 the increase in the imbalance over 1963 was 21 per cent.

One of the major objectives of the program is to enable Canadian producers to reduce the costs, and consequently the prices, of their products. In September of last year I stated that we should see a progressive narrowing of the differential in manufacturing costs of automobiles between Canada and the United States as the automotive program was implemented. I was most pleased, therefore, when an examination of Canadian manufacturers' prices for 1966 models which sell in greatest volume showed appreciable decreases from the prices of comparable, similarly equipped 1965 model cars. Furthermore, the Canadian prices for 1966 models resulted in an appreciable narrowing of the price differential between Canadian and United States prices for comparable models of popular cars.

When the 1966 models were introduced, General Motors announced price reductions averaging $72 per car. Ford announced reductions averaging $62 per vehicle. At the same time Chrysler announced price reductions ranging from $38 to $126 per car. These price reductions and the comparisons of price differentials are stated in terms of factory wholesale prices, which is the only level at which reasonably accurate comparisons can be made. Retail prices both in Canada and the United States vary greatly for a number of reasons. Transportation charges from factory to dealer differ within both countries; sales taxes vary from province to province and state to state; dealer profit margins differ from agency to agency; options on the same model of car normally show wide variations and greatly affect prices. Because of these many variable factors, attempts to compare prices at the retail level are very difficult to make accurately and are quite frequently misleading.

For the popular models of 1965 cars the average factory wholesale price differential between Canada and the United States was somewhat less than $150, or 8 per cent. Because of the price reductions announced in October, this differential was reduced by 3 per cent to 5 per cent for current models. This, I would suggest, provides clear evidence that the automotive program has already had an appreciable beneficial effect for Canadian consumers.

During the brief time that the automotive program has been in effect, automotive parts producers have increased their business substantially. To illustrate this point, one large motor vehicle manufacturer in Canada has increased its sourcing with independent Canadian parts producers by $120 million over model year 1964. This is an increase of more than 80 per cent in its purchases from independent Canadian parts makers.

It is important, I suggest, to relate these facts to statements which have appeared in the press and have been made in this house that the independent parts makers would receive less business under the program. There have also been statements that millions of dollars of business was being taken from the Canadian parts makers and transferred to the United States. I think the figures I have just referred to clearly show that Canadian independent parts makers are gaining a great deal under the program.

There is no doubt that significant progress is being made in reducing institutional barriers resulting in a freer flow of Canadian vehicles and components to the United States and other markets. At the same time, it cannot be expected that deeply-rooted customs and practices of doing business in this industry can be changed in a few months. Purchasing agents in the United States have for many years been in the habit of obtaining practically all their needs from the large United States parts industry. Until the introduction of the automotive program they hardly ever considered parts producers in Canada as a source of supply.

We have been informed by senior representatives of the motor vehicle industry that appropriate steps have been taken to provide equal opportunities for Canadian producers to compete for North American business. Nevertheless, during the period of transition special problems will inevitably emerge which will have to be dealt with expeditiously and equitably to ensure that the purposes of the program are achieved with a minimum of disruption. The department is keeping in close touch with developments in the industry so that problems can be anticipated and dealt with promptly.

I should like to assure members of the house that a thorough review will be undertaken within a reasonable period of time to determine whether the majority of the institutional barriers to trade have in fact been removed.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Also, periodic reports are being obtained from the industry regarding the attainment of the objectives and the fulfilment of commitments under the program. Furthermore, provision is made in the Canada-United States agreement for a review late in 1967 of progress in achieving the aims and objectives of the agreement.

I have outlined somewhat briefly the measures which the government has introduced to enable the Canadian automotive industries, and particularly the parts makers, to adapt their production and their facilities to the new and expanded market conditions in an orderly manner. However, a major economic program of this nature is bound to require transitional adjustments for some workers and firms. For example, many parts makers are finding that the increased demand for their products means that they can only produce in sufficient volume if they substantially re-equip and expand their facilities. In numerous instances, whole new plants are required and are being provided. In order to ensure that no Canadian parts producer is prevented, by a lack of available financing, from modernizing or expanding his facilities in order to take full advantage of the opportunities afforded by the program, the government has established an adjustment assistance fund. This fund is administered by an adjustment assistance board under the chairmanship of Dean Vincent Bladen of the University of Toronto.

The board is authorized to make loans at an interest rate of 6 per cent and repayable over not more than 20 years for land and buildings and 10 years for other purposes. To date, 13 loans amounting to approximately $10.3 million have been made and a number of additional applications are being processed and under consideration.

Provision has also been made for transitional financial assistance to workers laid off from plants in Canada of manufacturers of motor vehicles or motor vehicles parts because of the agreement. Because of the relatively buoyant market for skilled labour in the economy generally and in this industry in particular, only a small number of applications have been received for benefits under this program.

In summing up, I believe that the success of the automotive program is more than amply demonstrated by the new investments, the increased employment, the expanded production, the greater efficiency, the higher exports and the narrowing in the Canada-United States cost differential for vehicles. The program has brought new employment opportunities and greater prosperity for Canadians and has made a major contribution to the further development of secondary industry in Canada on an efficient and competitive basis. I therefore urge the house to give this resolution strong support and endorsation.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, as the time is now five minutes to six perhaps I could just outline the steps I propose to take in speaking on this resolution which is before the house asking us to give approval to one of the most important pieces of legislation that has ever come before this honourable chamber for many years or, as the minister said, I believe, that has ever been introduced in this chamber.

I should like to make a few introductory remarks and then I should like to proceed under four headings with the objections which we on this side have. The first point is the method by which this whole matter has been handled by the government. The second is the delay in bringing this important matter before the house. Third, what are some of the things which we might expect this great auto treaty will do in the interest and for the benefit of Canada? Fourth, what have been the results as we have seen them to date?

With those few introductory remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

AETNA CASUALTY COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-4, to incorporate Aetna Casualty Company of Canada.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the sponsor is going to outline the purpose of the bill or shall we proceed to operate in the dark?

Mr. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks the incorporation of a company under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act to carry on business in all classes of insurance other than life insurance. The bill was introduced in the last session of parliament and was passed by the Senate on June 30, 1965, but received only first reading in the House of Commons before parliament adjourned.

The proposed company would be a subsidiary of the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company of Hartford, Connecticut. The Aetna Casualty and Surety Company is a corporation carrying on a substantial general insurance business in the United States of America with its head office at Hartford, Connecticut. The Aetna Casualty and Surety Company, with its subsidiary, the Standard Fire Insurance Company, carries on business throughout the United States of America and in all classes of insurance for which application is being made in the bill to incorporate the Canadian Company.

The Aetna Casualty and Surety Company was incorporated in 1907 and operated as a partially owned subsidiary of Aetna Life Insurance Company until late in 1964, at which time a reorganization was effected under which all the shares of the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company were transferred to and are now held by trustees for the shareholders of Aetna Life Insurance Company.

Aetna Life Insurance Company was incorporated and commenced to carry on business in 1853. It now carries on business throughout the United States of America and is one of the largest multiple line insurance organizations in the United States. Aetna Life Insurance Company commenced doing business in Canada over 100 years ago.

The Aetna Casualty and Surety Company of Hartford has conducted business in Canada for some years and has held a certificate of registry under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act for the past 47 years. A substantial part of the business conducted by the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company has been related to business conducted by the company with United States corporations having subsidiaries operating in Canada. A certain amount of direct business has also been carried out, especially in connection with major risks, an example of which is the liability insurance for Expo '67. The company has not maintained any offices in Canada but has carried on its Canadian business through agents, Dale and Company of Montreal.

[Mr. Cameron (High Park).]

Aetna Casualty and Surety Company has been reviewing its operations in Canada and has concluded that it would now be desirable that its direct Canadian business should be carried on by a Canadian company incorporated under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. It is felt that this step would enable the Canadian operations of the company to be developed more effectively and with greater Canadian participation in the conduct of the business.

It is proposed that the head office of the Canadian company, incorporation of which is proposed in Bill S-4, will be in Toronto. Because the scale of operations in the first instance will be small it is not proposed at the outset to establish a large staff, but the experience and the services of the Hartford company will be available for the assistance of the Canadian company.

The Aetna Casualty and Surety Company is convinced that the general insurance field in Canada is an expanding one in which a new Canadian company would have an opportunity to share without adversely affecting existing companies.

It is proposed that the new Canadian company will from the outset be prepared to undertake all classes of business. While the bill provides for a minimum paid in capital of $500,000 together with a contribution to surplus of at least $500,000 before the company commences business, it is the expectation of the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company that in fact the paid in capital and contributed surplus will be in excess of these amounts before the company commences to carry on business.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, first of all may I express appreciation to the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) for his fairly broad explanation which gives us a better understanding of the effect of the bill and of the company itself than might otherwise have been the case. I gather that in so far as writing insurance or participating in the insurance business is concerned, it really does not matter very much whether the bill passes because the company is in business through its United States parent and is writing insurance now. At least, that was the understanding I gained from the remarks of the hon. member for High Park.

The desire to incorporate a company in Canada under Canadian law permits of a bit of subterfuge and allows a company to capitalize on the psychology of Canadians who like to see Canadian companies incorporated in Canada doing business in Canada. Yet in the over-all scheme of things the ownership and control of this company will not be here at all but in a foreign country.

Much was made some time ago of the provision in the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act which requires a majority of the directors of any company, and in the case of a company having more than one class of director, the ordinary directors or the shareholders' directors as the case may be, at all times to be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada.

Some of us advanced the reasoning in so far as companies other than insurance companies are concerned that this was thought at the time to be one way in which a company might think Canadian and act Canadian to a greater extent than might otherwise be the case. It was reasoned that if it was a requirement that the directors be Canadian citizens at all times ordinarily resident in Canada, this in itself would bring about a different psychology among the board of directors to the point that they would act, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) indicated a few days ago in his letter to foreign subsidiaries, as good Canadian corporations under the act.

If there is a desire to develop Canadian ownership and control of companies, to see companies operated in such a way that they are beneficial to Canadians first and foremost, then the mere requirement that the majority of the directors be Canadian citizens at all times ordinarily resident in Canada is not nearly sufficient. As we know, Mr. Speaker, money talks more powerfully than people, and in the field of insurance, as in other businesses, only scant recognition is given to international boundaries. The prime concern of these companies is the colour of the ink used to tally up the year's operations. Such being the case, the interest of companies like this one in things Canadian becomes secondary to their desire to be economical—I could say "efficient" by way of another euphemism—or, more properly, their desire is to conduct a profitable operation.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am not persuaded too much by the argument that this company will be a Canadian company incorporated in Canada under Canadian law, with its head office in a Canadian city, or that this fact in itself will do much to augur well for Canada when the control of the company is in the hands of a group outside of Canada. It also seems to me that this bill, seeking as it does to enable the company to write insurance from A to Z, which it does literally if one looks at the types of insurance in which the company wishes to engage—the whole alphabet has been exhausted in listing the various categories—should not be before us, because there is contained in it eight clauses which are spread over just a little more than one full page. The key part of the bill, the clause which carries the most weight, is clause 8 which states:

> The Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act shall apply to the Company.

The Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act extends to some 111 pages in the booklet I have in my hand and contains innumerable sections going well beyond 150 in number. The Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act is the controlling legislation here, not the bill now before us. All that the bill currently before the house does is to indicate that certain people desire to form a company. It gives the name of the company, the capital structure and the type of insurance the company wishes to write. I would submit, as I submitted earlier with respect to other bills, Mr. Speaker, that it is a much more desirable end not to have parliament waste its time considering the incorporation of such companies, and in saying that I make no disparaging remarks about this company. I simply say we have gone far beyond the point where this sort of business should be the business of parliament.

In this house we are concerned with public business. Every day someone or other makes the statement that parliament is wasting its time, that parliament is not getting down to public business. Yet the government, which has been reminded of this time and time again by myself, persists in clinging to this archaic system of forcing people who want to incorporate an insurance company to go through the parliamentary mill, to proceed through all of the tortuous processes in the other place, and simply in order to do business under a public statute, in this case the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act.

I have not looked too thoroughly at that act in so far as powers of incorporation are concerned, but presumably it is because of the terms of that act that Aetna Insurance, for example, and other companies of a similar nature have to come to parliament. I know this line of reasoning can perhaps be looked upon as being outside the ambit of second reading of this particular bill.

• (6:10 p.m.)

But it is a crucial and important point because the bill before us is one that is consuming the time of parliament. Whether it is examined scantily or in depth, it is consuming the time of parliament and of its staff because we are dealing with something which should not be here.

We have asked the government house leader to take steps by way of a public bill and bring in an omnibus piece of legislation which will permit groups such as Aetna Insurance Company to become incorporated in the same way as other companies, by going to a lawyer, asking him to do whatever is necessary and filing documents with the companies' branch to obtain letters patent to incorporate the company.

We think that is a much more sensible way to do things. There is relatively little interest in parliament whether Aetna Insurance Company is ever incorporated. Members of parliament have far more important things to consider. On their minds are matters concerning the very social structure of our nation and its economic well-being. They are the things parliament should deal with.

I should like to see this hour devoted to other kinds of business; whether it be government business, the introduction of public bills or the business of the public of Canada generally does not matter. I do not want to see the business of a few private individuals dealt with who are seeking to capitalize on the psychology that exists in Canada that a company incorporated by parliament somehow is better than one incorporated normally.

Whether the capitalization is $5 million or $50 million does not matter. Whether the shares are $50, $5 or 5 cents does not matter. I am sure it does not matter to the hon. member for High Park. It does not matter to members of our own party who will make up the initial board of directors. It does not matter what their names are, where they live or what are their occupations. Most of the other things in the bill do not matter very much either.

I submit that in this hour we should be seeking ways and means of preventing bills such as this coming before parliament. Public business generally ought to be dealt with. It does not matter whether it is an amendment to the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act or something similar.

[Mr. Howard.]

We do not require this tortuous process of incorporation for most other companies and I do not see why we should require it for insurance companies. Alternatively, we ought to require that all companies in Canada engaged in all sorts of business must be incorporated in this way. You cannot make fish of one and foul of the other. That, I submit, is grossly unfair.

I do not enjoy discussing Aetna Insurance Company. I do not enjoy the prospect that may be before the hon. member for High Park who in good faith is the sponsor of this company. I do not enjoy his having to proceed through this hour without his dream coming to realization, if that is what he wants. I do not enjoy the prospect of having to sit with other members in committee to go into the details of the operation of the company. I am sure there is not a solitary member in the house who enjoys such a prospect. I am sure all of us would much rather spend this period of time dealing with public business and not with the private business of those who want to enter the insurance field under Canadian law.

I hope that some day our words will carry weight with the government and especially with the Minister of Public Works as house leader. We hope he will see it is necessary to bring in a law providing for companies such as this to be incorporated in the same way as other companies.

We may have to persist in consuming the time in each private members' hour by talking on whatever bill happens to be before us. This is a regrettable course to take but we know from experience that often it is the only way to get action by this or any other government we have had in recent years. It is a course that has to be persisted in. We may be obstinate about it and sometimes incur disfavour and dislike among other hon. members who are affected in any way by the filibustering. However, that is not a prospect from which we shrink.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, this bill will receive second reading tonight and be referred to the appropriate committee. Perhaps it will not. In the long run it does not matter whether the bill passes. First, the company is in business and will still be in business and, second, one of these days the government is going to come to its senses and produce a general public law which will, I am sure, receive easy passage through parliament so that companies such as this one will not have to come to parliament in future.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, while I certainly agree with my colleague the hon. member for Skeena that it is essentially a waste of time for the parliament of Canada to deal with these insurance company bills and others like it, nevertheless it does give me an opportunity to discuss something which will be quite in order and which has disturbed me for some years since I came to Ottawa. I refer to the proliferation of insurance companies in this country. Never a session goes by but that we have a number of insurance company bills on the order paper. I note that there are five now including the one we are discussing today. I want to assure my clansman from High Park that it merely happens to be his bill on which I am going to hang my remarks.

I think it is very appropriate that at this time we are discussing this bill, which is to incorporate a branch plant, shall we say, of a United States corporation, within the context of the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to which such prominence was given in the newspapers this morning. The minister was dealing with some of the acute problems facing the Canadian economy. You will recall, sir, that he was emphasizing the necessity for taking steps to offset the ever-increasing United States ownership of the Canadian economy and suggested that in order to do this we must encourage the generation of Canadian capital in order that Canadian capital can be involved in the development of our country. In connection with this bill I would point out, as I did a moment ago, that we have a continual proliferation of new insurance companies. The point I want to stress is that in our modern economy one of the most important methods of pooling the savings of the Canadian people and carrying out the wish of the Minister of Finance with respect to the generation of Canadian capital is by means of insurance.

I have noticed that in spite of the fact that we have more and more insurance companies incorporated year after year, in spite of the great myth of competition which is supposed to be so beneficial, the cost of insurance does not appear to be down. If anything, it appears to be continually rising. In fact, in some fields, particularly in the field of car and accident insurance, the cost has risen at such a rate as to give rise to public protest across Canada.

I think the answer is not far to seek. Far from there being genuine competition which will bring down insurance rates to the public, all we have seen is an increase in overhead costs, all of which has to be borne by the policyholders, and the division and disintegration of the pools of savings which have become available to the insurance industry in this country.

It is obvious that when conditions exist such as exist in the insurance industry today, when, for instance, the mere renewal of a policy which would perhaps occupy the agent concerned for about 10 minutes nets him between 10 and 30 per cent of the face value of the policy, the more insurance companies we have the less chance there is to accumulate the capital which the Minister of Finance is suggesting is our major concern.

Particularly is this the case with regard to a company such as the one which the hon. member for High Park is seeking to have incorporated today. This is merely another branch plant operation. If it is established and if it is successful, it will constitute a further drain on the resources of Canada and render us less able to combat the growing concern which is disturbing so many Canadians, the ever-increasing sector of our economy which is falling into United States hands. It will add, as have all the recent developments in this area, to our balance of payments problem though in a minor way, I suppose, since I gather this company is not to be a very big one.

If we examine the history of existing insurance companies which are branch plants of United States corporations we find that a large proportion of the funds they have accumulated from the Canadian people are invested in the United States. And in cases where they are not incorporated Canadian companies a large share of the profits is funnelled to the United States, adding to our balance of payments problem.

I think it is time the government of Canada and the governments of the various provinces took a serious look at the insurance business and considered carefully whether the number of companies engaged in it should be allowed to grow without any serious check simply by getting an hon. member to sponsor a private bill on their behalf and hiring the necessary legal talent. All this, it seems to me, increases the cost of insurance to the Canadian people while, as I say, breaking up and disintegrating the pools of capital formed by the savings of Canadians, funds which could be pooled under public auspices.

I can think of one particular type of insurance which it seems to me it is altogether improper to leave in the hands of private companies. It is, of course, a preposterous situation that any private corporation should be placed in a position where it can tell me whether or not I can drive a car on the roads of this country. This is what happens when we leave insurance in private hands. The same argument could be applied to a number of other insurance fields into which the company we are considering is proposing to enter. I suggest that insurance coverage could be provided much more cheaply and much more effectively under public auspices than under the auspices of the various insurance companies.

If year after year we allow new insurance companies to become incorporated, these companies will have to fight for their share of existing business. The hon. member for High Park tell us the volume of business is growing. Of course it is. Our population is growing and the incomes of our people are rising. But they are not rising at anything like the rate at which insurance companies are proliferating in this country and I suggest that the more lucrative this field becomes the more insurance companies will try to enter it. In order to survive they will have to keep premium rates high, higher than they are now, thus causing increasing hardship to the Canadian people.

The insurance business to my mind is one of the very weak spots in our economy from the viewpoint of its contribution to the welfare of the Canadian people. I have watched it over the years both in the house and in the committees which have dealt with this subject and I have had an uneasy feeling that what I have been observing was merely, shall I say, the barnacles attached to the economic barque. One might use an even better marine analogy and say these companies are something like the lampreys which I understand are destroying the edible fish in the Great Lakes—parasites on our economy.

These companies draw very large sums from the savings of the Canadian people and give very little in return. In fact, I think it would be almost impossible to find any area in which Canadian citizens can be sure of getting so little in return for the money they invest. And the more insurance companies we allow to be incorporated the less will be the money Canadians will get in return for their contributions in the form of premiums.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

I urge the government to take a serious look at what is going on in the insurance business in Canada today. If they do not already know these things, I suggest members opposite should walk along the main street of any sizeable city in Canada and they will find that every real estate office advertises itself as an agent for one or more insurance companies. They will find insurance agents by the score along any business street in the country.

• (6:30 p.m.)

They are deriving a livelihood out of the savings of the Canadian people which, as our Minister of Finance has told us in very emphatic terms, must be made available for the development of our country if we are to escape the fate that he and his predecessor in office appear to see before us due to foreign ownership of our economy. So, as my colleague from Skeena says, it will not make any difference to the people presenting this bill whether or not the company is incorporated. They will go on doing this anyway.

However, I hope the government will realize it is going to hear something about this each time this sort of insurance bill comes before us until it is prepared to take a serious look at what is happening to the Canadian citizen when he seeks protection in the form of fire insurance, accident insurance and all the other types of insurance listed in this bill.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I join those who indicate concern at the increasing number of insurance companies being incorporated. It seems true, however, that only a few major companies are involved, the rest being ancillary, and it seems that the individual insurance agent acts for a large number of these companies on a fairly indiscriminate basis.

When I go to an insurance agent to buy insurance he usually looks in his drawer and pulls out a policy issued by a particular company, but it does not seem to matter to him which company it is. It is rather like the man who is owed a debt and who does not really object if he does not get paid so long as the debtor puts his bill in the hat when he is choosing which one to pay.

Insurance companies drain off a large amount of money from our nation and it is something over which the country has little control. The last budget pointed out that we should have more control of finance and the distribution of finance for the development of our country.

Each year our order paper shows a large number of companies seeking incorporation, and it appears that there will be absolutely no value to the Canadian public if the Aetna Insurance company is incorporated. It is not going to do Canada one bit of good. It is not going to do one individual citizen one bit of good. Therefore its incorporation must be for the benefit of the people forming the company.

The list of things which the company proposes to do is lengthy but many of them will be of little concern to the average individual in Canada. The list is synonymous with those provided by most other companies of this type.

Insurance companies share in the risk that they underwrite. It is safe to say that this company will not hurt the situation in Canada but in my opinion it is not going to help it. I believe members of parliament should look at the matter from a Canadian point of view.

The sponsor of the bill should give us a reason for incorporating the company. In passing may I say I do not know why, under our parliamentary system, the same hon. member is willing to sponsor a number of these companies. It may be that they are divvied around and that his turn comes up oftener than any other hon. member. I presume he has no knowledge of the people applying for the incorporation although he may have spoken to them.

Of the names mentioned in the bill three are those of counsel. Therefore I presume they have no particular interest in the incorporation and that the main people involved are Albert Bruce Matthews, executive, and Melvin Kirkland Kenny, insurance executive. It is true that the company meets the requirement of the act to have $500,000 in their possession before starting operation, and this is to be divided into shares of $50 each. If this bill were going to establish a mutual benefit society covering a large number of people there would probably be some justification for it but I believe there is no justification for the establishment of this company.

I did not hear anything said by the sponsor of the bill and so I am not aware whether Aetna was a name chosen from a hat, but I suspect Aetna is the name of a company in the United States which will have an interest in this company and will provide the $500,000 immediately. If this company is to be an extension of Aetna Casualty of the United States or Aetna Life Insurance or the Aetna Sickness and Accident Insurance Company, with several of which I have had previous dealings, it will turn out to be a well financed and normally operated insurance company. Therefore it will meet some of the criteria.

However, this raises the problem mentioned by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) of keeping in Canada the money earned by these companies and preventing expenditures being made in the United States. We have a deficit with the United States because hundreds of similar companies are able to take a large amount of money out of Canada.

One stipulation made by our Department of Insurance is that insurance companies operating here must at all times retain sufficient money to cover current liabilities. Therefore I presume this company will retain enough money in Canada for that purpose.

We are faced with many of these companies which are only extensions of existing companies. I suppose it is a little like the analogy I drew a few moments ago of the storekeeper who does not object to the person who owes him money putting his name in a hat and drawing to see whom he will pay on pay day. I suppose this happens in respect of insurance companies and many of these insurance companies perhaps think to themselves, if we have 100 companies the chances of the name of one of our subsidiaries coming up more often is quite possible. This may be one of the reasons this is done.

In this country we should face the matter of insurance fairly and squarely and demand a reasonable return on the money invested so that we will get a fair break in the insurance rates. I think it also is true, when an insurance agent reaches into a drawer in his office, that no matter what the name of the insurance company is on the policy he draws out, whether casualty insurance or some other kind the premium on the policy will be identical with the premium of almost every other company for the same kind of policy.

If I thought that was not correct, the next time I buy fire insurance or some other kind I would ask for a comparison of the rates, but I have discussed this matter with insurance agents and they say it really does not matter which insurance company they insure me with because there is a set price anyway and it is so much a hundred based on the facilities provided in the area in which one lives.

There is a total monopoly in the insurance field. There is absolutely no competition in insurance. If you get automobile insurance from Aetna Casualty Company of Canada, it will cost exactly the same amount it would cost had you taken it out through Aetna Insurance, General Insurance Company, Aetna car insurance company, Aetna auto insurance company or whatever other companies these people may have. So there is no competition. There is no justifiable reason why we should create a large number of additional companies when no service is being provided.

I am not aware of how the Department of Insurance, acting under the federal statute which provided for its creation, interprets several of the clauses which are included in the Canadian and British insurance Companies Act. The act does say, however, in the preamble:

> Whereas the insurance business transacted within and outside of Canada by companies incorporated by the parliament of Canada, and by the legislature of the late province of Canada, and within Canada by British insurance companies, constitutes an important factor in the international and interprovincial trade and commercial relations of Canada; and
> Whereas it is contrary to the public interest that insurance companies which are unable to discharge their liabilities to policyholders in Canada as they become due, or are otherwise insolvent, should be permitted to carry on the business of insurance in Canada—

It goes on to state what protection is provided. I think it is interesting to note the section which says that the establishment of these insurance companies constitutes an important factor in international and interprovincial trade and commercial relations in Canada. I believe this is true.

Therefore when we incorporate this company or any other insurance companies without any knowledge of whether or not it is in the interests of Canada, whether it is serving an individual purpose or is creating the possibility of additional coverage to that provided already by hundreds and possibly thousands of companies in Canada, it seems to me to be a waste of our time unless we collect a sufficiently large fee so that lawyers will really feel it is to their advantage to pursue the incorporation of these companies.

The other side of the coin, of course, would be the benefit received by those who hold shares in these companies because of the large amount of money invested by them.

[Mr. Peters.]

The day will come very shortly when many types of insurance being underwritten by this company will not be carried by private carriers at all. That will be the day when we eventually decide to cover some of these items, and I will refer to several of them. One would be automobile insurance, another aircraft insurance, another guarantee insurance which is underwriting insurance or insuring insurance; another would be marine insurance which is becoming increasingly important with the advent of power boats and the large amount of equipment being used in a recreational way throughout Canada, a fairly recent innovation.

Sickness insurance obviously is a type of insurance which the federal government is considering in its intention of providing sickness and accident insurance through a national plan for all Canadians. Then there is another one which should be of national significance and that is weather insurance, if it means what it says, insurance against weather. There are many factors which go into bringing about a change in weather including a recent innovation which has come to my attention in northern Ontario. If we are going to change the weather and establish a company to insure against this, I should think that the federal government has some responsibility to decide whether or not this is within the jurisdiction of a private insurance company or is a major field of insurance in which the government of Canada must interest itself.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there are fields in which the federal government will have to interest itself. I think it is an absolute fact that we probably are 50 years behind the times in establishing companies in the manner we do by private bills. As has been pointed out, I think this matter must be looked at. I believe some consideration will have to be given to the national good in the establishment of these companies, which we are not able to give in isolation concerning a particular case when we are not aware of the over-all situation which would come to the attention of the Department of Insurance.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, insurance is in the public domain in a number of ways, and not only in the hoodwinking of the Canadian public which takes place in the establishment of all these companies which really are not companies but are subsidiaries of other companies competing with themselves while at the same time establishing fixed firm prices on certain types of insurance. It must be in our interest to know the intention and the reputation of the insurance companies involved with relation to the Department of Insurance. Surely we did not establish the Department of Insurance just for fun; surely there was a reason behind its establishment and the establishment of a superintendent of insurance who supervises insurance operations.

These bills are introduced as privately sponsored bills without any recommendation from the superintendent of insurance. We are asked to make decisions without having the advantage of the knowledge of the people we have appointed to supervise activities in this very complex and complicated field.

Surely it will make little difference whether we pass this bill or not, because the Aetna Casualty Company will not have agents in Canada. There will be a head office in Toronto, probably because this is a requirement of the law, but that will only be a place where the executive will hang out. This company will just send out forms to brokerage and insurance agents asking them to fill them in. We are wasting our time and the time of a good number of people by debating this kind of a bill because the people of Canada would be much better advised to do business with insurance companies now existing in Canada. Anyone who becomes a shareholder of this proposed company will be contributing money to the United States parent company.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the following questions will be discussed on the adjournment motion tonight: the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), United Nations—suggested contribution to campaign against illiteracy; the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), Public Works—Toronto—placing of fill in lake Ontario; the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), House of Commons—inquiry as to holding of by-election in Nicolet-Yamaska.

Private Bills

PRIVATE BILLS

AETNA CASUALTY COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cameron (High Park) for the second reading of Bill No. S-4, to incorporate Aetna Casualty Company of Canada.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, like some hon. members who have taken part in this discussion I find that I have some serious questions in my mind as to the advisability of giving approval to the incorporation of this proposed casualty company. I regret that I will not be able to advance my reasons for thinking this way to the same extent other hon. members have done because of the limited time available to me. However, in the time left at my disposal I should like to make one or two comments about my serious doubts.

Very often heated arguments have been reported in the press regarding the high cost of administering charity campaigns such as the Red Feather appeal. These articles have given consideration to the question of whether the overhead of these charitable activities is justified. If one compares the operating overhead of organizations such as the Red Feather campaign with the operating overhead of companies such as the one proposed for incorporation by the bill now before us, I am sure he would realize how great the disparity is between these two.

Because of that fact, one often wonders whether it is in the public interest to proliferate almost endlessly the number and variety of companies operating in various fields of insurance. It is my opinion that the business of insurance involves perhaps the most expensive bookkeeping system in this country. It is obvious that the insurance business is not productive because it does not create new wealth in our society. This is a business of keeping accounts and records. The way in which this proposed company will operate, similar to that of many other companies, is something which should give us cause for consideration, particularly when we are asked to increase the number of incorporated insurance companies in Canada. While I should like to pursue this debate, I will conclude my remarks on this stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

INDUSTRY

APPROVAL OF CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT ON AUTOMOTIVE PRODUCTS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Drury:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the agreement concerning automotive products between the government of Canada and the government of the United States of America, signed on January 16th, 1965, and that this house do approve the same.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, just before the commencement of private members' hour I just had time to outline the steps I propose to take in debating the resolution now before us. This is one of the most important matters to come before this house and it affects many people.

The Canada-U.S. automotive agreement has far-reaching effects and involves very complex and complicated matters. I only wish that in preparing my remarks, I had the battery of officials available to and at the minister's disposal. Because this is such a complex and difficult subject I can only speak as a humble layman, but I propose to bring to the attention of this house the facts that have been brought to my attention by some of the individuals engaged in the automotive industry in Canada.

The Canada-U.S. automotive agreement was entered into by the government after having been conceived in secrecy, born in mystery and developed in controversy. This is a free trade agreement which provides for free trade for the producer but not for the consumer.

When you speak of free trade, you immediately think of free trade for the consumer as well as the producer. We must realize that the automotive industry in Canada was forgiven an amount of $50 million in the form of tariff reductions. This amount would have been collected from the industry if the treaty had not been instituted. I am broadminded enough to realize that this pact has its good points as well as its bad points. There are always two sides to any coin, and I am prepared to look at both sides. However, I believe that the present government in bringing this treaty into being had one major decision to make, and it was a political decison. If anyone in this country is asked what is the main difference between the two predominant political parties in this country today, I suggest that this treaty would be an example one could use to illustrate that difference.

We in the Conservative party, practically since the days of its formation, have believed, since the days of Sir John A. Macdonald, and we still believe, that if you sell the economic birthright of your country you at the same time lose your political birthright. In other words, if a company in the United States has 61 per cent of the shares of a company in Canada, I think we all realize who will control that company; it will be Uncle Sam, or the United States.

Therefore I think this was the first decision that should have been made by the Liberal government before entering into this treaty. They apparently believe that Canada can sell her economic birthright and still retain her political birthright. I am one of those who do not believe this. Time will tell whether we in this party are taking a short-term view of this very important matter of free trade in the car industry between Canada and the United States. Have we sold out, in the long-term view, our economic control of this industry, or is this just a short-term outlook? I am afraid we have sold out our economic birthright in this industry, and I believe we must be prepared to pay the consequences.

I am a little confused about the thinking of the Liberal government in regard to policy. Just last night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) made a speech in Toronto. I should like to read a few quotations from the Globe and Mail of today's date regarding what he said concerning Canadian ownership of industry:

There is of course not only the question of the proper conduct in Canada of subsidiaries of foreign owned companies. I am even more interested in the retention and the establishment in Canada of Canadian-owned and controlled corporations.

Does this U.S.-Canada car treaty create a situation of which the Minister of Finance speaks? In my opinion it creates just the opposite situation. The Minister of Finance went on to say:

Canadians must strive to have their share of head offices. It is desirable too, that companies who have their major production facilities in Canada should have their head offices in Canada. Unless these views are accepted in the Canadian business community, we shall have to accept the limitations that go with a branch office economy.

Does not the United States-Canada car treaty create a branch office economy in this country? I humbly suggest that it does. In his speech the minister went on to say:

> It is important too that we realize that there are certain key areas of our economy which must be controlled by Canadians.

Yet we sell out our car industry to the United States. Then he said:

> As a final but by no means the least important item on my economic and financial "agenda for independence", I would put industrial development policy.

The minister went on to explain what he meant by that. Then he said:

> If we are to be true nationalists today we must think in terms of a different kind of economic nationalism, which seeks to strengthen Canada in the context of growing interdependence between the nations and our obvious interest in the expansion and liberalization of world trade.

Having read that speech of the Minister of Finance, I cannot understand how he expects to have anything but a branch office economy in Canada flowing from this United States-Canada car treaty. We come back again to the old matter of cross-purpose legislation that seems to arise so often in the Liberal ranks.

In this regard I think of the last session of parliament when the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) was introducing this car treaty. It seemed to me he was suggesting a take-over of Canadian subsidiaries. At the same time the minister of finance of that time, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), was doing everything in his power to retain industry in Canada with Canadian control. It seems to me they were working at cross-purposes. Let us consider another field. The former minister of agriculture announced the payment of subsidies on the growing of tobacco, if this was necessary, and the former minister of national health and welfare spent $700,000 in asking people not to smoke cigarettes. This was cross-purpose legislation to the greatest degree.

Then we found the Department of Labour at cross-purposes with the Department of Justice. The former minister of labour announced the spending of a $3 million advertising program to get people 45 years of age back to work; yet the former minister of justice, when asked in the house about this situation, said, "No, we do not hire people over 45 years of age." One minister authorized the spending of $3 million to put people over 45 years of age to work, and another minister would not hire them. Then we had the situation concerning cars of $5,000 in value imported from the United States. The former minister of finance did not want these cars imported, so he said, "All right; there will be no income tax depreciation allowed on these cars. We do not want them to come into Canada." Just about that time the Minister of Industry introduced the free trade car treaty. So again we had another piece of cross-purpose legislation. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it must be proven to me that the Minister of Finance is thinking along the same lines as the Minister of Industry in putting into operation this U.S-Canada car treaty.

Having said that in the form of an introduction, I should now like to deal with the objections we have to the introduction of this resolution. First is the manner in which this matter has been handled. How was it done? It was brought in by order in council; we never had an opportunity to debate it in the house. The Minister of Industry, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and another minister went to the United States and signed this treaty on President Johnson's ranch. Other officials went with them. On January 16 they announced to the people of Canada that they had entered into a far-reaching treaty that would be of great benefit to so many people in Canada. They did this without even giving elected members of parliament the opportunity to debate the matter or have anything to say about this very complicated treaty.

I ask, why was it done by order in council? Why was parliament not asked to endorse this before the treaty was signed? Before I leave that point, let me say that I cannot understand the change of thinking in the Liberal party since the days of their former great leader and prime minister, the late Right Hon. Mackenzie King. I quote here from a speech he made on June 21, 1926 when he was speaking in the House of Commons. Parliament was being asked to adopt a resolution standing in his name, the final paragraph of which read:

> That the house considers that before His Majesty's Canadian ministers advice ratification of a treaty or convention affecting Canada, or signifying acceptance of any treaty, convention or agreement involving military or economic sanctions, the approval of the parliament of Canada should be secured.

Those were the words of the late Mackenzie King. Then on April 12, 1928, in the course of a debate on the international sanitary convention, the same right hon. gentleman had this to say:

> I submit that the day has passed when any government or executive should feel that they should take it upon themselves without the approval of parliament, to commit a country to obligations involving any considerable financial outlays or active undertakings. In all cases where obligations of such a character are being assumed internationally, parliament itself should be assured of having the full right of approving what is done before binding commitments are made. I would not confine parliamentary approval only to those matters which involve military sanctions and the like. I feel that parliamentary approval should apply where there are involved matters of large expenditure or political considerations of a far reaching character.

This treaty certainly falls into that category. That was the thinking of the former leader of the party across the way, but apparently that is not the thinking of today. This treaty was signed, sealed and delivered without the elected members of parliament having an opportunity to voice their opinion one way or another.

What about the commonwealth? Since we are the senior member of the commonwealth, I believe that we should have had at least some respect or some thought about what effect this far reaching treaty would have on the commonwealth. As you know, cars are imported into Canada from the commonwealth free of duty. However the minute this treaty came into force American cars were allowed to come into Canada duty free. The English cars immediately had to meet this stiff competition, which was anything but fair.

What about GATT? We are supposed to be members of GATT, think highly of it and respect it. As all hon. members know, under the terms of GATT any member or nation which gives special privileges to any other member must give the same opportunity to all other members. I do not know whether this has been done or not. I do not think it has.

Mr. Drury: It has.

Mr. Hales: I sincerely hope it has. The minister has never told us whether it has or not. This treaty has been in force for 15 months. There are so many things we do not know about it. We have asked for debates and so on, but we have never had an opportunity to discuss this matter.

The second objection we would like to register in this regard is the delay in bringing the matter before the house. As I have just stated, it is 15 months since the treaty was signed and we have had no chance whatsoever of debating it. A supply motion was used back in 1965 and this was the subject which was debated. We had a very limited opportunity to discuss the matter at that time. We have asked numerous questions from time to time, which is about the only opportunity we have had to learn more about this very complex and far reaching subject. As I have said, this is a subject of great complexity and certainly every opportunity should have been given to allow the members to look into the whole question.

Those are the objections I wished to raise under that heading. The next heading was, what were we told that this Canadian-United States car treaty would do for Canada? I believe I am quite reasonable and fair when I list these four points which the minister told the house would be the important and beneficial results from the treaty. First, he said it would increase employment substantially and, second, that it would correct the rising trend of imbalance of payments in the automotive industry. Then third, it was understood that it would enable the Canadian automotive parts manufacturing industry to achieve a lower level of costs which would be competitive with United States parts manufacturers producing similar parts. Fourth, it would help to equalize the Canadian factory costs and selling prices in the automotive industry with costs and prices in the United States. In other words, Canadians would be able to purchase cars at the same prices as are paid for American cars. These were his selling points for this treaty.

Now let us take a look at these points one by one. The first was to increase employment substantially. I know the minister, in his introductory remarks, said that 10,000 more people are employed in the industry today. However, I would suggest to him that he forgot to subtract from that figure those people who have been put out of work in the industry. I am thinking of car parts manufacturers who have found it necessary to close their plants, and in other cases to reduce their staff. I do not propose to dwell on this subject. I know one hon. member in our party has had a car parts manufacturing firm close in his riding, throwing hundreds of people out of work. In my own riding I have had a manufacturer of car electrical harnesses who has had to lay off approximately 30 people because he can no longer compete with his American competitors in the manufacture of car harnesses. Then not only do we have these industries closing, but it also affects the associated industries.

I know that in Windsor they have benefited from employment in many respects; I would ask the minister and those who boast about the great increase in employment whether these are the types of jobs we really want to maintain in Canada. I would ask the minister for a list of the extra people who have been employed in skilled capacities, such as draftsmen, technologists, purchasing agents, and all the way down the line. I know for a fact that Ford closed their Oakville purchasing department and moved it to their head office in Dearborn, Michigan. The firm which closed in Beaverton was the Canadian subsidiary of a United States plant, and it closed its doors because parts could be made cheaper at the head plant in the United States, which parts they can now ship into Canada duty free. So that if you want to create a lot of jobs for people on the production line, people who put nuts and bolts, together you can do so with ease; but I would ask the minister to think about the skilled men and technologists in the trade as well.

I know for a fact that McKinnon Industries in St. Catharines who have been making steering gear boxes for Chevrolet cars, is closing down and moving operations to their United States plant. How will this create more jobs in Canada? I know that the Ingersoll Machine and Tool Company had to find another line of manufacturing, or close down, because they lost their gear box steering business with Chrysler of Canada. This goes on down through the industry. Car parts manufacturers are losing orders. They are getting by on their 1967 model bids, or some of them are, but others do not even get the opportunity to bid.

In some cases these people have had to go and cry on the minister's shoulder, and ask him to help get orders for 1967 models or else they would have to close their doors. Is this the kind of treaty we want, Mr. Speaker, with individuals sitting on the minister's doorstep asking him for business, and with the minister telephoning Chrysler, General Motors and Ford and telling them to see that these people are given business because he does not want them to close their doors?

With regard to the second point, that the minister said this treaty would correct the rising trend of imbalance of payments in the automotive industry, how many times have we heard this said? How many times did the minister go across the country in October, campaigning for the November election, telling the public what a great thing the car treaty was and how it would improve our balance of payments? As a matter of fact, our balance of payments position today has deteriorated to the extent of $100 million compared with last year, despite what we were told. While we argued, as did the minister, that it would cut back Canada's automotive deficit, the true picture is that it has increased it nearly $100 million, resulting in an imbalance of trade between the United States and Canada, so far as the automotive industry is concerned, of $674 million.

I agree with the minister that Canada's exports to the United States more than doubled in 1965; I do not question that for a minute. The figures went from $76 million in 1964 to $164 million in 1965. But United States exports to Canada far outstripped Canada's exports to the United States—$184 million compared with $838 million. So the result for Canada was that the net automotive trade deficit with the United States rose from $578 million in 1964 to $674 million in 1965, an increase of $96 million.

It was shouted from the house tops that this treaty would help Canada's imbalance of trade position; but the true picture is that we are now $100 million further in the red than before the treaty came into effect. I will say no more on that point.

The third point was that it would enable the Canadian automotive parts industry to achieve a lower level of costs and make them competitive with United States parts manufacturers producing similar parts. What do we find in this regard? The minister had some very fine objectives in this field, but once again he forgot to talk to the Minister of Finance. Here again they are at cross-purposes in their legislation.

During the budget debate the Minister of Finance did not remove the 11 per cent sales tax on productive machinery. The Minister of Industry told the people engaged in the car parts industry to go ahead and instal machinery; that they would have to buy machinery in order to increase production and bring about an efficient operation. He even set up a fund from which they could borrow money to buy machinery at 6 per cent interest. He may not in so many words, have said the 11 per cent sales tax would be removed, but these people were led to believe that it would be removed.

According to the Globe and Mail for March 31, 1966, the car parts manufacturers had this to say on this particular point:

> Canadian auto parts manufacturers yesterday reacted angrily to Finance Minister Mitchell Sharp's failure to remove immediately Canada's 11 per cent sales tax on production machinery.
>
> Parts industry spokesman said retention of the sales tax for the next year will impose such a heavy penalty that their companies will be unable to compete successfully—

A little later the article continues by stating that—> —his group's members were urged by Ottawa to buy the new equipment so they could produce parts in large enough quantities to serve the North American market. He said that because of Industry Minister C. M. Drury's encouragement, Canadian parts makers went ahead with expansion plans, although they felt at the time that the 11 per cent sales tax was a severe competitive handicap.

> "We know that our U.S. competitors were not hampered by any comparable sales tax—

And so on. There is no 11 per cent tax on productive machinery in the United States, but there is in Canada, and the Canadian car parts manufacturer is supposed to compete with his United States counterpart. The article continues:

> —but Mr. Drury told us to have the courage to expand" . . . Mr. Drury should have been talking to Mr. Sharp, not to me . . . When a government advocates free trade and then does something like this, you begin to wonder where the brains are!

So, on the one hand they talk of free trade; on the other hand they inhibit it or make it impossible for Canadian car manufacturers to compete. As I have said, in order to compete with the United States competitors, Canadian manufacturers have to buy machinery and produce efficiently. But first of all they are hamstrung with the 11 per cent sales tax on machinery. Then they cannot buy all this machinery in Canada owing to the backlog of orders and have to buy some machinery from the United States. They import it into Canada, making it subject to a customs duty of 22½ per cent. Then they are told to go ahead and compete with their neighbour across the line and do the best they can. There is free trade on the one hand, and they are cut off on the other.

Another problem faced by the car parts manufacturers is opportunity to bid. I think the minister realizes, as I do, that the minute you cross the border into the United States there is only one way to get an order, and that is to offer the same or a lower price than that obtainable in the United States. They are not going to buy from Canada if they can get it from their own producers in the United States. The only way they will buy here is if it costs less. The farther south you travel in the U.S.A. the more difficulty you have. You even have difficulty in getting your Canadian dollar accepted as exchange.

This brings up another point: Where would the car parts manufacturers of Canada be today if it were not for the 92½ cent dollar that the Conservative government introduced a few years ago. The devaluation of the Canadian dollar has kept the Canadian car parts manufacturers in business. If it had not been for that, the whole bunch of them would have had a really difficult time, and more of them would have been out of business than are out of business today.

My time is running short, and I wish to bring up some other points. The point I wish to discuss is that it was claimed the Canadian people would be able to buy cars at reduced prices. The minister quoted prices this afternoon. He said that the main car manufacturers had reduced car prices. I am not going to dispute that. All I have to go on is what people have said to me who have bought cars. I have been told that they have had to pay the same prices for identical cars as they had to pay before the treaty came into operation. I have not purchased an automobile recently, and therefore I cannot speak from experience. However, people have written to me to say that they have found no difference whatsoever in identical cars bought this year, and those bought prior to the institution of the treaty.

I am told that 80 thousand cars, according to figures I have, made by Canadian Chrysler workers in Windsor, were shipped to the United States and each of them is sold for $615 less than the same model of car is sold for in Canada. Why cannot the same car be sold for the same price in Canada? Is the public in Canada subsidizing this company so as to allow it to sell cars more cheaply in the United States, or is that company making more profit on the cars it sells in Canada? Even taking into consideration the difference in the tax of 11 per cent, it still does not add up to $615. This is supposed to be a free trade treaty. I say that it is free trade for the producer but not for the consumer.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I go back to the points I mentioned at first. We object to the way in which this measure was introduced. We object to the failure of the government to give the elected representatives an opportunity to debate this very complex legislation, and to deal with the points the minister said would be forthcoming by this treaty. I have tried to the best of my ability to show how some of these things, that were claimed would come about, have not come about.

Many people in the industry would like to have a say in this matter. I think this whole question ought to be sent to the Committee on Industry Research and Energy Development. People could be given the opportunity to appear before that committee, and lay their problems before it in addition to any ideas they may have concerning this unique but yet unproven treaty which was the idea of the Minister of Industry.

I conclude by saying what I said before: I am broadminded enough to know that there are some good points and that there are some bad points in this treaty. It remains to be seen whether there are more good points than bad points. I do not know how else we could find out, other than by calling people in the industry to appear before the committee and give their views. Failing that, time will supply the answer. In due time we shall know whether it was a good or a poor treaty.

I would remind the minister and I would remind his party that the first decision they should have made was a political decision and not an economic one. Their economic decisions, or principles, and our economic principles are not quite the same, because we feel that if you sell your economic birthright you lose your political birthright.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, in some ways we are engaged in a curious debate. The order paper says that we are to give approval to an agreement, or to an arrangement made by the Government of Canada some 15 months ago. It is a unique experience for us to have the infant before us 15 months later and to be asked to approve of his birth. Of course, what we are doing now is not legitimizing the infant, as my colleague behind me says, but reviewing the agreement and the changes which have taken place under it.

I was very interested in the remarks of the previous speaker, who seemed to feel that before the agreement was brought into effect the government ought to have decided whether or not we could have a Canadian automobile industry of our own. I would say to him that that decision was made many years ago. Canada, at least as far as the automobile industry is concerned, passed the point of no return long ago. There does not now seem to be any way in which we can economically construct a Canadian car manufacturing industry. The decisions that brought this situation about were made many years ago, and are probably irreversible.

Of course, the agreement brings out the whole problem of foreign ownership. The real problem, it seems to me, about foreign ownership in Canada does not come out of trying to make political decisions. The real problem that I have encountered in the little travelling I have done in Canada is that the Canadian people themselves do not have the guts to build a Canadian owned economy. They want all the advantages and the high standard of living that comes with increasing domination by the people to the south, but they are not prepared, from what I have been able to ascertain, to make the effort and the sacrifice that would be involved if we were to try genuinely to come to grips with the whole problem of foreign control of our economy.

In the few minutes I have available I should like to deal with four aspects of the problem. What I say may be somewhat repetitious. I want first to deal with the general background, and with the way this whole agreement came into effect. Second, I want to touch on its general performance to date, in the light of the forecasts made for it by the minister. Third, I want to bring out some criticisms of the pact in certain areas where we feel it can be justifiably criticized, and where we think it needs strengthening, notably with respect to the prices of cars, assistance to displaced workers, and as it affects car part manufacturers.

In conclusion, and fourth, I want to make some general observations of what we think are certain disturbing aspects of the plan, which seem inconsistent with certain fiscal policies of the government and with its professed interest in the field of foreign control.

It is interesting to look back and remember the circumstances in which this agreement came about. No doubt there was some need for an approach such as this, given the general picture of the automotive industry in Canada which, effectively, as has been pointed out, was a branch plant operation built up behind the protection of tariff walls. It has always had a limited manufacturing base—short runs resulting in higher prices, making it virtually impossible to get into export markets.

Canadians would not be prepared to accept anything but a wide variety of models. We all look at those great Canadian programs, Bonanza, and the Dinah Shore show, which create in us a desire for all the models and ranges the Americans have. This has always resulted in a measure of inefficiency in production here. For example, in Oshawa, in the 1965 model year, 595 different types of cars and trucks were assembled, while the most complex assembly line in the United States was building 256 models. Hon. members can see the difficulty, or the danger, of this situation.

In order to cure this state of affairs, hon. gentlemen opposite introduced what is called the Drury plan. This was an arrangement for the remission of taxes. The minister will recall that it was brought in with all the fanfare which he is capable of bringing to his imaginative schemes. We on this side said we thought it looked suspiciously like an export subsidy, though we hoped it would not be so regarded. However, it was immediately regarded as being such and quickly ran into lots of trouble with United States tariff authorities. When it became obvious that the commission would find against it, some of the "whizz kids" in the Department of Industry got busy and drew up this plan to counteract what appeared to be the implications of the Drury plan. This is how the present pact came about.

The intent behind it is good and in some ways it is an imaginative solution to the problems of the industry. The intent is to rationalize and integrate the industry so that specialization can occur on both sides of the border. Let us hope that this will lead to increased expansion, more jobs, more efficient products, a lowering of prices opening exports to the U.S. market, and an easing of our balance of payments position.

As has been said, this is an important agreement. It was introduced in the usual Liberal fashion amid fog and secrecy, lack of information and midnight diplomacy. Then all concerned went down to Texas to sign it. Later they came back and told us what had been done. We were able to get very little information from the minister about this agreement but he did give us his bland assurance that all would be well because he was handling the affair. As a matter of fact we obtained most of our information from the hearings in Washington. Incidentally, it has always been embarrassing to me as a member of the House of Commons that we have to rely on the senators in Washington to snap their fingers and get the detailed information which we wanted from our own government in Canada but could not get.

It seems to us that important policy changes of this nature involving taxation and finance should be given the full legislative treatment, rather than coming before the house later to be rubber-stamped or inadequately criticized by an unprepared and possibly inadequately informed opposition.

Contrast what is being done here with the way in which this was handled in the United States. The issue went before the legislative committees of both houses. Exhaustive investigations were made and full disclosure of information was obtained. Only afterwards did the legislators feel they could pass judgment. It seems to me we should follow this example to a far greater extent in Canada. While we may be in agreement as to general objectives, our inability to criticize important measures involving taxation and finance is, it seems to me, one of the reasons why our parliament is not giving effective leadership to the country. This is sensed by the public and it is partly because of this failing that our parliament is at a low ebb in terms of public esteem.

This leads me to the consideration of the general performance of the agreement. I listened with interest to the minister extolling the virtues of the pact. Nothing like it, he said, had ever happened before. What he says is, to some extent, true. The performance of the automotive industry generally has been phenomenal. There has been a notable increase in production and sales. For example, in 1961 production amounted to some 328,000 units. By 1965 the figure had jumped to more than 710,000. This is a remarkable increase. Sales rose from 446,000 to 786,000 in the same period, again an amazing performance for an industry.

I do not know what proportion of this increase is attributable to the agreement. I do not think the minister knows. Obviously the figure would be hard to establish. All the investigations we have carried out indicate that a good deal of this expansion would probably have taken place in the absence of an agreement. This good performance does not really tell us very much about the plan. A better test is to see what is happening to our balance of payments figures.

I can remember when the plan was introduced. The government made an extravagant presentation claiming that this was the answer to our whole balance of payments problem. This, they said, would cure it. Of course it has not done so. The imbalance rose from $386 million in 1961 to $615 million in 1965. This was the net deficit in the automotive industry. I realize that it might well have been worse in the absence of an agreement. Indeed I suspect this would have been the case. But the agreement has not been the cure, the answer, as we were all led to believe it would. I know the minister will tell us that the deficit is becoming less serious each year than would have been the case had there been no agreement. But this does not help us much, in view of the fact that it is continuing to increase. I should like the minister to tell us what he has in mind—what means he proposes to employ to deal with this problem since, to date, the agreement has not done so. I should add, however, that in other areas the agreement has been a real source of success. There has been increased production and there have been more jobs provided—and we are glad to see this happen.

I wish to turn, now, to the third section of my submission on this subject—the price people have to pay for their cars. We all remember the discussion which took place when we were told that the automotive companies would, in effect, receive a "bonanza", a saving of $50 million, because they would not be paying the tariff charges. We were told that a lot of this money would be passed on to the consumer. Any way, we were told, the poor automobile companies needed the money in order to finance their expansion programs. General Motors needs the money like we need three holes in our heads. It is coming out its ears. But we were told these poor companies needed this money for expansion purposes and that, anyway, they were going to pass it on to the consumers in lower prices.

It is hard, because of the complexity of the situation, to give comparative prices of Canadian passenger cars and those of comparably equipped United States cars, but some attempts have been made. The minister himself made one in the Toronto Globe and Mail on October 14, 1965, when he said that the gap remaining between Canadian and U.S. prices, after the adjustments made in the price of 1966 cars in Canada, was about $150. This was done by taking a high volume model and comparing it with the U.S. counterpart. If you take smaller models it goes down to $100. If you take a model like the Oldsmobile Delta it is $600, but anyway there is a substantial difference between the two.

Have the manufacturers passed these savings on to the buyer? My suggestion is that they have not, that they have engaged in a lovely piece of window dressing, in a fantastic financial double shuffle to try to convince the public that they are passing on these savings. If you take the $50 million that has in effect been handed to the companies and spread it over the 580,000 cars involved, you realize the average saving per car is about $86 to the companies. With the release of their 1966 model price lists last fall there was a great fanfare and the big three, General Motors, Ford and Chrysler, claimed reductions. I think General Motors said a reduction of $73, Ford claimed $62, and Chrysler did not provide a figure; but they all did it in the same way.

They compared the cost of 1966 models with the cost of 1965 models equipped with a safety package now included as standard equipment, and they said, "Because we are including this safety package and not increasing the price, the consumer is actually getting a very substantial reduction in price." But, Mr. Speaker, when they were examined on this in the United States they were forced to admit that producing all these safety features on an assembly line basis cost about $22.

This cost would be a little bit higher in Canada. We would accept the figure of perhaps $30 as the cost to the companies of producing this safety package on a production line basis as distinct from special gadgets. The companies reduced their prices by $3 or $4. They added in $23 worth of safety features, and it must be remembered that the average saving per car to the companies was $86. If you take off the little extras they have thrown in as safety features, then the car companies pocketed $50 on every car.

For example, the net effect of this to General Motors, which produces 300,000 cars a year, was that it pocketed $15 million of the Canadian taxpayers' money. It did not pass this money on. It kept it and stuck it in its profits. Its profits were so low that it needed this extra money. In 1965 General Motors had a profit of only $2.1 billion. Chrysler stroked along on a profit of $233 million. General Motors net profit in Canada averages around $59 million, which is second only to the Bell Telephone Company. The poor auto companies really had a rough time.

This is one of our complaints, that the government is not assuming any responsibility or giving any leadership in the field of prices. To us it is imperative that it do so. It is pretty clear that normal growth will not be big enough to absorb the expanded output that the government has set for the motor industry, and unless car prices are reduced so that Canadian manufacturers can get into the United States market there will be further dislocation. We want the government to take some action to protect the consumer, to free the consumer and remove the wall of protection that has been built around this multimillion dollar industry.

If the companies are not prepared to reduce prices then there is a remedy, namely reduce the tariff that individuals pay. If Ford of Canada does not want to make cars available at a reasonable price, then people can drive down to Buffalo to buy new cars and have a real good week end on the money they save. People in Vancouver can go down to some other American city and buy their cars. This would be the quickest and the most effective way to force these autocratic car manufacturing companies into giving greater consideration to the Canadian consumer.

The third criticism we want to make deals with the transitional assistance. This was an arrangement called TAB, transitional assistance benefits, to compensate workers who were put out of work as a result of dislocations arising out of the auto pact. I can remember being in the house and listening to the then minister of labour and the Minister of Industry telling us what a magnificent plan this was going to be, and how the generous motor companies would rush in to make their payments to the government so that the workers would be eligible for assistance.

We asked the government if it did not think it a little unusual to have an arrangement whereby the motor companies had to participate voluntarily in return for the $50 million handout, and we were told no, that there would not be any difficulties, that General Motors, Ford and Chrysler were just waiting for the legislation to be passed so that they could run down to Ottawa and give the government a cheque for their contribution. Well, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, none of them has made any contribution.

Out of 1,500 workers dislocated, not a dozen have received any help under the TAB plan. Because the companies did not voluntarily contribute, their workers are not eligible for the benefits. As a result, when out of work, the workers have been forced to rely on the benefits provided by their collective agreement.

In its usual cheapskate fashion the government has forced the workers to carry the burden of a change in tariff policy, a tariff policy designed to protect and help the whole country and the economy generally. But the government has not assumed its responsibility. It has left it up to the workers. The collective agreements were designed to cover seasonal lay-offs. They were never intended to cover this tariff adjustment, and in the usual cheapskate way that this government does everything, it has let the workers carry the burden.

At the time it was introduced I asked who was paying the tab. Now the tab is being paid by the Canadian auto workers. The payment by the companies should be made mandatory. Subsection 5 of the regulations which provide for this sort of voluntary participation should be deleted because the workers are being rooked over this deal, and are being unfairly and improperly treated.

We would hope that some decision would be made by the government. I am not going into the whole problem, that our benefits are worse than the Americans are able to attain. Their benefits and wages are considerably superior to ours. This is something we have discussed with the minister on other occasions but he has indicated a blind eye, and so there is not much point in trying to do anything about it now.

The third objection has already been covered by the previous speaker, dealing with the problem of the car parts manufacturers. The 11 per cent sales tax on production machinery results in these people having higher production costs than their American competitors. In a free flow market I do not know how they are expected to overcome that difficulty. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is really curious. This took brains, for Canada is one of the few countries in the world that has been able cleverly to discriminate against its own domestic manufacturers. We should be proud of ourselves for dreaming up this arrangement. We would hope the government would give consideration to removing this tax. This matter has been raised on many occasions, but again I think we got the blind eye on it, although I am not quite sure.

Mr. Speaker, my time is running out and in conclusion I should like to make a couple of observations concerning certain features of the agreement which worry us. I know it will be approved. In fact I think the minister would have to commit suicide if by some miracle we did not approve it. What would he do, if by any strange chance we turned down an agreement which has been in effect for 15 months. This agreement confirms, once and for all, the complete domination of our automotive industry by United States subsidiaries. A large United States owned auto producer has a tremendous advantage in this kind of nationalized market which you are bringing about. If ever there was any doubt about it, it now is settled for all time that our industry is completely dominated by the United States subsidiaries in this field.

Second, the pact is one sided, mostly in favour of Canada, and perhaps we should congratulate the minister on good horse trading in that regard. In any event, it is dependent on the benevolent good will of the United States auto companies. This is the first time, in my knowledge, where a Canadian government policy is subject to the whims and good will of American private business. It will be interesting to watch 1968, when this comes up again, because by that time the integration will be so complete that there never will be any opportunity to reverse it; that may be inevitable, but at least it is established.

Third, this constitutes a disturbing integration of our facilities with those of the United States. It makes us, therefore, highly vulnerable to United States decisions. This too may be inevitable, but it now is pretty obvious that from here on in the decisions we can make in one of the greatest industries we have are not our own to make. They will be very vulnerable in respect of decisions from Washington or Detroit. Indeed, from now on when Washington hiccups Ottawa will tremble in the automobile business.

Fourth, this represents a strange paradox in government thinking—a subsidy of many millions of dollars and a tax on building materials for the houses our people have to provide. There is something wrong in this approach. Maybe we will sort it out before the debate is over.

Fifth, there has been disturbing talk, not from the minister but by some of the responsible backbenchers, of an extension of this type of development into other areas. We have heard of tires, forest products, and an extension of this whole plan to other sectors of the economy. I hope this is not so, and I hope the government will go very carefully.

The automobile industry is unique; there is nothing like it in North America. We have a few large foreign owned firms producing the same products on both sides of the border. To extend this would continue the integration of Canada with the United States and, just as important, it would create great harm for Canadian firms operating in an industry which is not United States owned, because they would be at a fantastic disadvantage, one which they could not overcome.

When speaking of integration with the United States, most of us feel this government is committed, in that they have accepted the view that we have passed the point of no return and that it will be a lot easier in the long run to integrate smoothly with the United States economy. I think the continentalists have taken over in this government, notwithstanding the window dressing, and that they really have accepted the fact that it is too late and we cannot overcome this American ownership.

Those are the problems in this agreement. We realize we cannot stop it nor, perhaps, would we. These are the disturbing aspects of it about which I would hope the minister would try to set our minds at ease before we rubberstamp it.

May I say one further word. The minister is interested in auto safety. We hear in the press that he is preparing a voluntary code of auto safety to be issued shortly. I should like to suggest to him that if he really is serious about auto safety, he should remenber his experience with the voluntary participation of the companies under this legislation, and if their participation in auto safety is as good as it has been under this, it is useless to be designing and issuing the code.

Briefly those are our suggestions, and they will be enlarged upon by other members of my party as the debate proceeds.

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate briefly in the debate on the auto agreement because in my constituency of Halton is one of the largest auto manufacturers, the Ford Motor Company of Canada. If we look back to the minister's statement on the introduction of this trade agreement, we will see that the statement said it was a program designed to achieve a substantial expansion in production and employment, and to promote improved competitive efficiency in this important sector of Canadian manufacturing.

I think everyone in this house will agree that the automobile manufacturing industry is one of the backbones of Canadian industry. This pact will give the Canadian automobile industry free access to the huge United States, or really the huge North American market. What we really are hoping to accomplish in this agreement are three things primarily: first of all, increased production and a larger share of the North American market; second, increased employment in Canada; third, to improve competitive efficiency as reflected in the cost of automobiles to the automobile buyer.

I think, because the program has been in effect since January 1965, we now at this time can decide whether this to date has been a successful program. Under the first heading, increased production, we have, or have plans for, 69 new plants, and 136 plants which are planning expansions. The value of the capital investment in Canada in respect of these new plants to be constructed is $400 million approximately, and for those which will expand their facilities an investment in Canada of capital of more than $335 million.

In the Toronto-Hamilton area, which is relatively well within the reach of my constituency, we have 25 new plants, and 38 which are expanding their facilities, a total of 63 plants with a capital investment of something in the neighbourhood of $75 million. As was mentioned earlier, there is no question but that the production of commercial vehicles in Canada has been rising steadily. As an example, in 1965 our production was up approximately 28 per cent from 1964. Reference already has been made to export and import of cars. Car parts and accessories, both exports and imports, are up. I think it is encouraging to all of us to know that the rate of increase of exports is greater than the rate of increase of imports. We certainly hope those two lines would meet.

The second factor, increased employment, has truly come about. There were approximately 57,000 people employed in the automobile industries in Canada in 1963; there were 66,000 in 1964 and 77,000 in 1965. I am pleased that approximately 1,700 additional workers have been employed in the automobile industry in the Toronto and Hamilton area of my riding, and that in the entire industry, as the minister mentioned earlier, there are something in the neighbourhood of 10,000 new jobs which have been created, with a potential addition of 7,000 in the foreseeable future.

Several members have already made reference to the comparative costs of automobiles. We have been pleased to note in the last car price list for 1966 models that there has been a narrowing of the gap between the United States and Canadian prices. We expect and hope that this trend will continue until there is equality in these prices.

It would appear that as a result of the conditions laid down at the time of the introduction of this automobile agreement we have been very successful. The things we hoped would be accomplished by this agreement appear to have been partially accomplished and I am sure that this trend will continue. Let me illustrate this success by reference to certain things which have happened in my riding.

In 1964 the construction of a $25 million truck plant commenced. Recently it was officially opened. An additional shift has been instituted at that plant and at this time 400 trucks per day, through a two-shift program, are being produced. It is interesting to note that this truck plant is designed to produce as many trucks per year as were sold in 1965 by the entire Canadian industry.

This year the Ford Motor Company announced another $13 million program to modify and re-equip a passenger car assembly plant in the Oakville area. As we are all aware, other changes are taking place at Windsor and Talbotville, to which reference will be made by other speakers. These facts reflect the boom which is taking place in this area, with attendant improvements to all sectors of the economy.

The hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) referred to the closure of the purchasing department of the Ford Motor Company at Oakville. I should like to elaborate on that reference and point out that a portion of the purchasing department has remained in Oakville, while part of its operations have moved to Windsor and part to Dearborn, Michigan. It is my understanding this change was contemplated long before the automotive agreement came into effect. While the signing of the agreement may have advanced this move, it was one that was due to take place in any event. As a member of parliament for that area I received only one telephone call in protest of this change. To my knowledge the employees transferred were given equal or better job opportunities. The company did not force these employees to move, but allowed them to remain in Canada at Oakville, if they so desired.

I feel very strongly that this automobile agreement has been advantageous to Canada. Unlike the hon. member who just resumed his seat, I feel the government should consider implementation of similar agreements in respect of other industries, provided safeguards are included to protect Canadian industry. I feel that if the program is successful in one area it should be successful in other areas. I am strongly in favour of this agreement because I think it has been of advantage to the Canadian industry and Canada in general.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) has put on record the views of the members of this party, and it is not my desire to repeat them. However, there are one or two additional points I should like to bring to the minister's attention.

The hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) suggested a few minutes ago that the government has taken what is popularly termed as the continentalists' view, and that it was its ultimate intention to extend this type of agreement to other industries operating in the two countries. In this regard I should like to refer to a speech by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) to the Liberal association, as reported in the Daily Sentinel-Review of Woodstock, Ontario, on Saturday, April 30. This article in part states:

> Speaking at the annual meeting of the Oxford Liberal association, Mr. Laing said that to achieve this end, Canada would continue to strive for lower tariffs and would trade with any country in the world in all but strategic items.

That is a very interesting statement. The article begins by stating:

> Arthur Laing, federal minister of northern affairs and natural resources, yesterday said that the ultimate goal of Liberalism in Canada is free trade.

That may be the government's policy, but I think it is something that should be watched carefully by everyone, particularly by the opposition parties in this house.

I do not think many members of this house oppose this auto parts treaty as such, but as was pointed out by the hon. member for Danforth, the automobile industry in North America is a very unique operation, probably not duplicated anywhere else in the world. For that reason, special considerations and regulations must be applied. It is to be hoped that this treaty, which has now been in effect for about 15 months, will be given very careful review by the government, and the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) in particular, specifically in regard to its effects.

Many individuals have worked out the theoretical aspects of treaties of this kind and have found that in practice they do not always work out. A very good example of what I have in mind occurred yesterday in this house, when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has been a member of this house for many years and is an experienced parliamentarian, lamented the fact that the new rules he had helped to contrive for the house had not worked out in the expected way.

I think it is common knowledge that things which a great many of us hope will work out in theory, simply do not do so because there are so many things, particularly in a complex matter such as an automotive treaty, that just cannot be foreseen. Despite the remarks of the Minister of Industry a number of things have not worked out just as was hoped when the treaty was signed down at that ranch in Texas.

There is an industry in my riding to which I wish to refer specifically because I think the things that have occurred in that industry must have occurred in a great many others in the country. I refer to the Ingersoll Machine and Tool Company located in the town of Ingersoll, Ontario. This company is one of the largest, if not the largest, manufacturer of automotive parts in Canada. Since the middle 1930's it has manufactured gear boxes for the Chrysler Corporation, and has done so very efficiently and satisfactorily.

Prior to the treaty being signed, this particular company employed over 200 persons. It is a highly automated plant and a very efficient one. Over 200 highly skilled persons were employed in the manufacture of gear boxes, which is a sophisticated machine tool operation. As of this coming year I understand there will be approximately 20 persons employed in this operation at the plant. As the minister pointed out, while a number of persons have been displaced from their job of manufacturing automotive parts in Canada, because of the general high employment situation in the country they have had no difficulty in obtaining employment elsewhere. I think this is quite true. In the case of the Ingersoll Machine and Tool Company in particular, I understand that the Minister of Industry used his good offices to help them over the hump, shall I say, in procuring a very substantial defence contract from the government of the United States. This contract covers the making of rocket parts, I believe.

I should like to thank the Minister of Industry for using his good offices in this respect, and I am sure the people of Ingersoll would also like to express their thanks to him for his helpful intervention. I know that in other cases where there has been dislocation in the automotive parts industry the Minister of Industry has done a great deal to try to help. I give full credit to him for this. However, Mr. Speaker, having said that there are one or two other items I should like to mention.

I shall now deal with the effects of the treaty. I am quite prepared to accept the minister's statement that there has been greatly increased employment in Canada as a result of this treaty. That may well be. But, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales), the minister did not specify the variety or quality of alternative employment. It is my understanding that since this treaty was brought into effect the automotive companies, particularly the Chrysler Corporation and to a lesser degree the Ford Motor Company, have imported all their automotive parts from their wholly-owned subsidiaries in the United States. They have been bringing them into Canada and assembling them here.

This of course, conforms to the Canadian content requirements of the treaty, the Canadian content being assembly line labour and little else. It is quite true, as members on the government side have mentioned, that there has been a great, mushroom-like growth in assembly plant operations in Canada. On the other hand there has been a considerable loss in the manufacturing of automotive parts in the more sophisticated type of machine-tool industries. I think this is a very serious long-range loss to Canada.

It is quite true that the net employment situation may well have been improved in the relatively unskilled labour industries, namely the assembly line processes, and I am sure the city of Windsor—I see two hon. members from that area here this evening—have benefited in this respect. No doubt Oakville has, and one or two other places—I refer to the assembly line operation with relatively unskilled labour—but other parts of the country have not benefited in this respect. One has only to read the financial pages of the newspapers to understand, without my going into extensive detail, that in other parts of the country the much more sophisticated, machine tool, highly skilled industries have been seriously damaged, or in some cases put out of business altogether.

It is too early to say that these people will have no trouble getting jobs. I know that a number of the more highly skilled workers in this industry are moving to the United States and getting jobs there in the automotive parts industry. From their point of view this is fine, but I do not think it is a good thing from the point of view of Canada. If we are to go ahead—and I am sure every member of this house and every Canadian hopes that Canada will expand, grow and develop our secondary industries—in developing industry in the future, especially our highly skilled, technical industries, the movement of labour from this country as a result of the automotive parts treaty will not help this development. If our highly skilled, machine tool industries are jeopardized by this treaty we will have a lack of skilled personnel for the auto parts industry, and also allied and related industries.

One of the very dangerous, long-range effects of this treaty is that it will stultify the growth of highly skilled labour in this industry, which not only affects auto parts but all other similar and related industries. I am sure this is not something that we in this country want. As was mentioned by other members, the Canadian machine tool industry is put at a considerable disadvantage in purchasing the new machines that are required for the efficient, automated factories of today. Factories wishing to purchase these machines are faced with a 22½ per cent tariff if they purchase them from the United States or elsewhere. Then, of course, there is the 11 per cent sales tax on production machinery.

These points have been mentioned by others, but I think they deserve emphasis. These taxes place the Canadian manufacturer at a great disadvantage. To be fair—and I think this is not a political matter, really, but is one of trying to get to the heart of this problem—the revalued Canadian dollar at 92½ cents has offset to some degree the 22½ per cent tariff and the 11 per cent sales tax on large machines coming into the country. But we are still in the red, in the ledger, as a result of these items. I think the government has been concerned about the economic effects of this treaty, and some of its political effects. I know that in my own area we have had a succession of ministers visiting us trying to explain what a great thing the auto parts treaty is for this country. First of all the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) visited us last year and read a very interesting prepared speech, although he did not seem prepared at that time to answer any questions on it. Recently the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) visited us and told us what a great thing the automotive parts treaty is. The Minister of Industry himself was in my area during the last election explaining briefly what a good thing the treaty is. The former minister of mines and technical surveys was down there too. We have had a succession of cabinet members, some of them fairly senior, visiting the area and trying to explain to the people who will be put out of work because the plant was being put out of commission that, after all, this treaty was a great thing for Canada. So obviously, Mr. Speaker, this has been a matter of some concern and worry to the government.

There are a number of other items which I could mention at this time, but these have been covered by other members, the member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) and the member for Danforth (Mr. Scott), and I see no point in repetition. However, there is one thing I would like to say to the minister, and I hope he can see his way clear to agree to this. It is this, that the minister himself pointed out in his remarks, when the resolution was presented, that the government is of course very interested, as is everybody else, in the effects of this treaty on Canada and on Canadian industry.

While it is true that a number of representations have been made to the government pointing out the difficulties which a number of firms are encountering in this regard, I would hope that the minister would see fit to refer this treaty to the Committee on Industry, Research and Energy Development, because I believe that is the committee that would be concerned. In this way an opportunity could be given to a number of manufacturers who have been perhaps adversely affected by the treaty, and they could give evidence as to the way they are having difficulties. This would be very helpful to the minister and his officials when the treaty is reviewed in a year or two from now, as the minister indicated earlier it would be.

The automotive parts industry and related industries in this country from which parts are ordered would then have a feeling of participation in the government handling of this matter. I can see no disadvantage from the government's point of view in permitting this treaty to be considered by such a committee, so that witnesses from the auto parts industry as well as others can be called. Indeed the committee should have power to call any witness who could be helpful. Some of the complaints which have been registered may not be legitimate, and I believe that all members in this house are interested in getting to the bottom of this matter and getting all the facts.

As the member for Wellington South and others, pointed out, this is perhaps one of the most important treaties or international arrangements that Canada has ever entered into. This agreement has long-range economic effects on Canada and I can see no harm in its being referred to a committee which could hear representations. This is something which we are all interested in. It has gone on for 15 months and another month or so would make little difference. I believe everyone would be greatly benefited by an opportunity to hear evidence.

I would very much hope that the minister would give consideration to referring this treaty to a committee. In conclusion I have but one other brief observation. It was pointed out by the minister in his early remarks that one of the hopes of the treaty was that Canadian auto parts manufacturers would have an opportunity to compete in the United States market—not only in the United States market but in the continental market as a whole. I believe that this is a most commendable idea. However, as I mentioned briefly a few moments ago, and I would like to reiterate it at this point, this is simply not working out. The large automobile companies, and again I mention particularly the Chrysler Corporation and the Ford Motor Company, have large numbers of wholly owned subsidiaries in the United States. I have been informed that when very efficient Canadian auto parts manufacturers—and I refer to the Ingersoll Machine and Tool Company, for one—have requested an opportunity to tender on some of the auto parts for these large companies, they were simply told: You cannot even tender on these contracts; we have our wholly owned subsidiaries in the United States, so why should we allow any other firm to offer tenders because we will get them from our wholly owned subsidiaries.

I am sure this is something the minister and the officials did not envisage at the time the treaty was signed. They may well have had assurances from these automobile companies that this would not take place. However, this is what has taken place. These companies have been told that they cannot even have an opportunity to bid or tender on these contracts for auto parts, even though I have been assured that they are quite competitive with any American firm or any other Canadian firm. They have not been given this opportunity because these two large companies particularly are only buying parts from their wholly owned subsidiary companies on the other side of the line. Matters such as this should be brought to the attention of the minister and the government, which I believe would be very helpful indeed to all of us.

In conclusion I would request and hope that the minister could see his way clear to send this matter to a committee for consideration. I hope perhaps he may say something in this regard this evening.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, the minister will be pleased to know, or at least less apprehensive to know, that I fully support the automotive pact with the United States; in fact I believe it could be expanded. I am going to make some recommendations or suggestions on the auto proposal.

Mr. Knowles: How do you spell auto?

Mr. Otto: It can be called an Otto proposal under which this agreement can be enlarged. I believe it is no mystery to the minister and to all of us, that every country in the world wants to export manufactured goods; no country in the world wants to export raw materials. We also know that it is not possible for every country to export more manufactured goods than they import. If the hon. gentleman from Danforth was very worried about the word "continentalist", I am not at all worried about this as long as it means that each individual in each country can get a product produced most efficiently regardless of where it is produced, and as long as there is an equitable balance of trade.

This agreement could be interpreted as the first break in the old line of thinking where each country wanted to export more than it imported. I believe this agreement in reality wants to set an equitable basis; in other words it says: We shall export an amount equal to that we import. Now let us break this down. After all, this is free trade. The Liberals have always been proponents of free trade. We want to break down the tariff. On the other hand we want it done in such a way that we in Canada can take advantage of our productive capacity.

What is this agreement in essence? I am sure the minister will agree with me when I say it means this, that in the automotive trade we have recognized that the salary scale and skills required are just about equal throughout the trade. We want to recognize the fact that in the United States, for example, automatic transmissions can be manufactured more efficiently than they can for the Canadian market. In other words, by the time you set up equipment and set up an assembly line, it is cheaper if you can manufacture 10 million items rather than one million.

In Canada we may be able to manufacture car bumpers more cheaply and efficiently, because plating requires electric power and we have the raw materials, the chrome, nickel and so on. Let us presume the skills required, the wages paid, and so on, in manufacturing those bumpers were the same as those in manufacturing transmissions. Would it not be feasible to allow United States companies to export to Canada $1 million worth of transmissions, provided we exported to the United States $1 million worth of car bumpers, or headlights, or anything which we manufacture better and more efficiently? That is the essence of this agreement and it is really the essence of free trade.

However, if the manufacturers of transmissions used, let us say, $1 million worth of labour at $3 an hour and the bumper manufacturers used $1 million worth of labour at $1 an hour, the trade would not be equitable. The purpose of this agreement and its very content, as the minister explained, is much more equitable, because in the car industry—and this is probably why it was left in the car industry—the wage scale is almost identical.

Let us suppose the United States manufacturers say to us: We will export to Canada $1 million worth of transmissions, but we do not want anything else except $1 worth of farm machinery. What is wrong with that? The skills required in the manufacturing of farm machinery and the wage scales are identical to those in the automotive trade. I say that this would also be acceptable.

To go a step further, supposing a United States manufacturer says: "I will export into Canada tariff-free $1 million worth of transmissions and will import from Canada $1 million worth of furniture"—or carved wood, which Canadians can produce much more efficiently, and where the scale of wages and the skills required are also identical, or possibly even higher. There is nothing wrong with that at all. In other words, we have already established the principle of a balance of trade, not in dollar volume but in manpower, man-hours requiring identical skills and more or less the same wages.

You can understand, Mr. Speaker, that it would be possible under the present system of balance of trade for Canada to export to the United States $5 billion worth of gas reserves, oil, electric power, fresh water resources, and many other items of natural resources which may not require the employment of very many people. At the same time, does this mean that we can import into Canada sewing machines, radios, television sets, cars and so on? No. But that is the basis on which we have worked up till now—a balance of trade based on dollar volume, which is fallacious and is not really a balance of trade. That is where we find ourselves in difficulty. What we have been doing is hypothecating our natural resources in exchange for manufactured goods. But this agreement puts a new emphasis on a balance of trade in man-hours and skills rather than on dollar volume.

There is some talk about extending this agreement to, or making a new agreement with, the timber and lumber business. We can also do it in the plastics business, the chemicals industry and the services industry. We might find ourselves with 1,000 agreements with United States manufacturers.

In other words, I am saying we must formulate now, general policies which include the essence of the automotive trade agreement and put the trade agreement on a wide, general basis. There has been since 1959 a movement toward a export-import parity program. I have been a manufacturer, an exporter and an importer. I can see the difficulty in all these enterprises. The export-import parity program which I have promoted for many years is more general than the automotive trade agreement but is on exactly the same lines—to balance our imports and exports according to man-hours, skills and salary schedules rather than dollar volume.

Some economists have said for years that it really does not matter whether we sell $20 million worth of gas reserves and import $20 million worth of radios and television sets; it is the same thing. Their argument is that $20 million received for gas reserves would be spent in Canada on the purchase of consumer goods, and so on. That is not so, first of all because $15 million of that $20 million automatically goes to the United States because the United States owns 75 per cent of the gas reserve companies. This leaves $5 million, out of which comes profit and promotion, with little remaining. So that the argument the economists put forward, that it does not really matter as long as money is exchanged for something, really does not hold water.

Although we are talking about the automotive trade agreement—and the exact program could be extended to other agreements—I should like to put forward the proposition that, by and large, tariffs are really a punitive measure. That is to say, they penalize an importer for importing goods and do not give any incentive to an exporter.

For example, let us say I am a manufacturer of air conditioning parts, as I have been, and let us suppose that the tariff regulations were changed and the essence of this agreement was enlarged. If I exported $1,000 worth of air conditioning equipment to the United States or elsewhere, and supposing, Mr. Speaker, I then received a permit to import $1,000 worth of goods of the same category—say, sewing machines or radios, which are in the same category as air conditioners—free of tariff. In other words, I have exported $1,000 worth of man hours in the production of a certain category of goods and I now have the right to import goods of like nature free of tariff. That is not a punitive measure at all.

Let us suppose I do not want to import anything, but was allowed to put this import permit on the market and somebody gave me $200, which is 20 per cent of the $1,000. I can reduce my costs in this way because really I receive $1,200 for the exports, and the person importing other goods has had to pay the $200 difference. But he has not paid it to the government as a punitive measure; he has paid it to the exporter. In this way an importer pays an incentive to the exporter.

We could also have the different categories related to each other. Let us suppose that I did not have a permit for goods in category

"C", but there was available $5,000 worth of goods in category "A", such as farm products, for example, which were still relatively balanced with the different products in category "C" and the amount of money paid to produce them, the skills required, and the wage schedule involved.

We have to get away from the punitive measure of tariffs and enlarge this automotive agreement, not industry for industry but on general principle. If my proposal were followed, you would really have no tariff at all; instead you would have an incentive. Or, the tariff which would normally be paid to the government would be paid to the exporter as a further incentive, and in time all this would balance itself out. No one in GATT or anyone else would blame us. We do not want to take advantage of anyone. We only want to make the same kind of things as others, and we want to export and import products, not in dollar value, but in terms of man-hours and skills. We want to be equitable with others; we do not want to take advantage of anybody. The only way we can ensure a proper use of our natural resources is to produce those things that our training, and resources and abilities fit us for, and to import those things which can be produced better elswhere.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I believe that this agreement is the first step. It is a good step. I have no doubt that in time there will be other measures such as this one, in connection with other industries. However, we cannot have 1,000 or 10,000 agreements for different industries. We must have one general authority. We must maintain the principle that the Liberal government has always followed, of striving toward free trade, but equitable free trade. The only way that this can be done is to try to plan our imports and exports, not in terms of dollar value, not in terms of natural resources in exchange for manufactured products, but in terms of man-hours and the skills which are necessary to produce these things.

I entirely favour this agreement. I know that the reaction to it will be good, so far as Canada is concerned. I think that the idea behind this measure can be enlarged to include other industries, so that in time we shall have a general policy in connection with a new concept in trade balance.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking about this agreement not as a member whose constituency is affected in so far as employment therein is concerned, but because I want to take a look at this particular automobile agreement from a long range point of view.

[Mr. Otto.]

I must say that I find it very regrettable that there has been this delay of almost 15 months in bringing the agreement before parliament. I need not repeat what was said by the hon. member for Wellington South and by the hon. member for Danforth with regard to the great secrecy under which this agreement was signed. It was said that the minister did not want to disclose information about it because negotiations were going on. At one time it was anticipated that this agreement might be considered by parliament last fall. Of course our calculations were put out by having an unnecessary election, and this measure was one of the casualties of that ill-fated sortie.

Now, 15 months after its inception, the government is asking this house to rubberstamp the agreement. This is what is thoroughly repugnant to me. We are asked to rubberstamp this agreement, with the plea that if this house would have turned it down, scores of industrialists and thousands of workers would have been prejudiced, because they relied on the steps taken under the agreement which were taken prior to ratification by parliament. This is a form of not-so-subtle blackmail on this house. The house is being blackjacked to accept this agreement. As a principle, I find that to be wrong, regardless of the terms of the agreement, whether they be good, bad or indifferent.

What I object to thoroughly is the timing of the government, and the delay in bringing this agreement before parliament. It was not necessary to delay it. This should have been considered last June. However, other things crept in that were not necessary.

Having said that, I do not want to go over points made by other hon. members in the house respecting labour dislocation, respecting the cross-purposes that the government is working at by the maintenance of sales tax on production machinery, and by the maintenance of import duties on that machinery. In fact, in so far as buying the machinery is concerned, we are paying more for it as a result of the altered position of the dollar, for which the government is not responsible. But this is what our manufacturers are facing. When we say that we are going to have some sort of rapprochement or parity of costs and of prices for automobiles in this country, we are frankly deluding ourselves. This will be so until Canadian manufacturers can be in the position of their United States counterparts who do not have to pay the silly 11 per cent sales tax on production machinery, or the import duty on machinery.

Next we are going to hear about the parity of wages as between American and Canadian automobile workers, regardless of whether production per man hour is going to be equivalent on both sides of the border. That makes no difference to those advocating this parity, who just look at the dollar sign, and who do not look at what is done to earn that dollar. If this parity begins in the automobile industry, and this is expected, the next step will be to bring it into the steel industry and to related industries, one after the other.

Where do we go from there, so far as Canadian industrial production is concerned? I would suggest, by introducing the measure under consideration, that we, as Canadians, have embarked on a very dangerous toboggan slide, and we may be in a position where we have to go along for the ride, to the bottom of the slope, unable to control our course.

These are some of the questions that have to be examined. They have not been discussed in the house. They have not been exposed by the minister. He has not spoken about this question of parity wages. He has not spoken about the suggestions being put forward by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) and by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Harley).

Similar types of agreements might be contemplated to be entered into in other industries. I should like to hear from the Minister of Industry about some of these kites that his colleagues are flying. I do not agree with the minister's thinking. I have some grave reservations as to this agreement because of the penury of information. The minister quoted statistics. He gave, in percentages, increases of exports and increases of imports. If my memory serves me correctly, the financial pages of the newspapers within the last fortnight have indicated that the increases of imports on a dollar basis exceed the increases of exports on a dollar basis.

The position is no better. As a matter of fact, it is worse, from the position of the balance of payments. Where has been the gain? After all, this auto agreement was designed to deal specifically with the ever-growing deficit on international account. The minister may shake his head but there are many people who will disagree with him. It would be a valid reason. Remember, we are facing a deficit which amounts to roughly $600 million on the automobile account each year. It would be well worth striving for, to reduce a deficit of these proportions. If the present agreement has the result of reducing the deficit on the commodity account with the United States, let us give three cheers. That would be a point in its favour. But so far this has not been the case. The gap has widened. What will it be next year? Will the gap be wider still?

The minister spoke about increases in production but these increases are not attributable to the agreement—not all of them, by any means. The Canadian public has itself been responsible for a good deal of the increase in sales, whether the increase is measured in units of 100,000 vehicles, or in percentages or in dollars. The Canadian public has bought more vehicles. It is true that somewhere along the line we may have shared in an increase in the consumption in the United States. But let us not seek to give the impression that all this increase has suddenly come about because an auto agreement was made. To do so would, in the best possible light, amount to innocent misrepresentation and in another light it could amount to deliberate misrepresentation of the facts. As I say, I am not satisfied with the information we have been given with regard to this agreement. Neither is anyone else in this house.

I ask a further question. What is the value of this automotive agreement to those regions in Canada where there are no parts manufacturers or assembly plants and where the work force is not directly affected? Ministers went around the country last fall, receiving appropriate publicity—pieces were put in various newspapers by inspired writers—all announcing with great fanfare that the public would see a reduction in prices as a result of this pact. There was to be a substantial narrowing of the gap between the prices of a particular model in Canada and in the United States. We all know what happened last fall when the price increases were announced. The manufacturers suggested they were price reductions.

I believe it was the Chrysler Corporation which made the first announcement of a price increase. It did not meet with the approval of the United States administration and serious growling came out of Washington. The next company to do the same thing—I believe it was Ford—followed a different approach using the soft sell. They indicated that a number of formerly optional so-called safety features were being added and that the price was therefore being advanced slightly.

As it turned out, the increase in price substantially exceeded the increase in the cost of those particular features. On all those cars the company was picking up an extra amount between $25 and $50. The next step was a parallel announcement in Canada—that there was a reduction in price. But the movement in both countries was in the same direction. There was no narrowing of the gap. It was a movement in the same lockstep on both sides of the border. The minister may shake his head, but there are many people who will disagree with him. I believe I have in my office material which demonstrates my contention with reference to particular vehicles, models and so forth.

An hon. Member: Bring it down.

Mr. Lambert: I will, because I intend to suggest that we should look more closely into such questions as this. I am not disposed to believe a highly paid publicity agent who tells me: We have reduced our prices. I want to see evidence of these reductions. I therefore suggest to the minister that in view of the importance of this subject we should send this whole matter for further consideration to the standing Committee on Industry Research and Energy Development or, if deemed preferable, to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

I do not wish to be obstreperous. If this is a good agreement for the benefit of Canada, if it is to be the first of similar steps we have to consider with regard to other industries, let us have a hard look at it and see whether mistakes have been made. Let us hear from all sides—the auto manufacturers, the auto parts people and the labour unions involved. After all, the hon. member for Danforth made some strong criticisms about the inaction of the automobile companies with regard to TAB. Why has there not been more action? This is what we would like to know.

I make this plea straight to the minister. If, within a month, we have this agreement before the house, back from the committee, we will be in a far better position to reach conclusions as to its value. I should like to be convinced that this was a good action. So far, we do not have enough information to reach such a conclusion. It is not just by sitting over there mummy-like or like wise old owls or Buddhas that the government will convince us or the country.

Mr. Knowles: Which is which?

Mr. Lambert: I am not referring to any particular minister. This is just the attitude of the government. It is not only members representing half a dozen or more constituencies in Ontario who have to be satisfied as to the value of this agreement. The whole of Canada is concerned. After all, this agreement, by reason of customs forgiveness, is costing us about $50 million a year. This is what has been indicated to us. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) can shake his head. He should read some of the speeches his colleague and others have made in this regard.

• (9:10 p.m.)

This was given to us as the annual cost. It was to be an annual cost of $50 million in customs duties, and the benefits accruing to the major automobile manufacturers would total $50 million. If that is not the case then the ministers must clear this up in the eyes of the press. We have seen it mentioned editorially time and time again. We have seen it reported in news columns. If that is the wrong conclusion, then it should be corrected.

There is one way to get it cleared up, and this is before a committee where we can hear the appropriate testimony and where the ministers and officials can be examined. I now move, seconded by the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac (Mr. Webb):

> That all the words after the word "that" in line 4 of the resolution be deleted and that there be substituted therefor the following:
> the said agreement be referred to the standing Committee on Industry, Research and Energy Development for consideration, examination of oral and written testimony with respect thereto and report to this house prior to further consideraion of the said agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I have examined this amendment to the resolution with great interest and I would like to refer hon. members to citation 202(6) of Beauchesne which says:

> It is not an amendment to a motion to move that the question go to a committee.

I declare that this amendment is not receivable. Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Lambert: No, wait a minute please.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member for Waterloo South.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak but briefly. I intend to speak on behalf of a riding that is highly industrialized, the riding of Waterloo South, which I have the honour to represent, a riding that to a considerable extent has benefited from the auto agreement. However, despite the fact that this benefit has taken place and that increased job opportunities have occurred in the riding, considerable concern is felt by everyone that we may have taken a step which, in the long run, may work to our disadvantage. Perhaps we have sold out for a mess of pottage. The step the government has taken may be of an irreparable nature.

What creates the greatest concern is the apparent conclusion the government has arrived at, the conclusion that continentalism is inevitable and, because it is inevitable, we should work out an arrangement that will make it even more inevitable.

The method the government chose to bring this measure into effect is also cause for concern, in the sense that it did not permit a debate in advance of the decision it made—a debate in the House of Commons among the elected representatives of the people. Such a debate would have provided an opportunity for a national diologue on this whole problem: In other words, do we want continentalism or are there some other choices open to us? The government does not appear to have considered the other choices that might have been available in this particular matter.

Admittedly the automobile industry was badly in need of rationalization and, as my colleague from Danforth (Mr. Scott) pointed out, the multiplicity of models being manufactured in Canada really made a mockery of any attempt to get an efficient industry operating in this country. Perhaps Canadians did not need all those models of automobiles. Perhaps we could have taken the step that has been taken by countries like Sweden, Germany, France and England, and developed a national automobile of our own. We could have achieved rationalization in that manner. We could have eliminated some of the worst features of splintering that exists in the industry, and could have been very efficient in the production of a national automobile.

With such a national automobile we could have embarked on world trade, as did the nations I have mentioned. They did not discover it necessary to go into continentalism and integrate their industry with the industry of another nation in order to survive. I do not know what the answer might have been, but at least the representatives of the Canadian people in this parliament would have had an opportunity for that kind of debate and for the exploration of these ideas.

As we look at the effects of the agreement now, I think we can say that it has provided employment opportunities. I do not think we can say it has done very much for the Canadian consumer, although there is a possibility that even that may happen in the future. But if we look at what it has done to the quality and the nature of our industry, I think we have to be extremely concerned.

Speaking on the adjournment debate one night I indicated that we in Canada were possibly going to be the new hewers of wood and drawers of water in a technological age, that the skilled work, the scientific work that is involved in the automobile industry would no longer take place in Canada, that opportunities for work of that quality would no longer be available to Canadians, that the nature of this agreement permitted the automobile companies to do tool and die work in the United States, to do their research in the United States, and then to send their products here for us to run assembly plants.

I know there is some benefit we receive from this sort of thing, but in the long run it may not be a benefit; it may be to our great disadvantage and we may find ourselves inexorably bound to continentalism and to a position from which we cannot retreat.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Even if some time in the future we consider it in the national interest to have something indigenous to our country, that also may have been lost. The people we may require, the skills that will be needed, and the techniques that are important at the top will not be available to us. We all are fearful that some of the statements, which are made in the United States by people who perhaps do not understand how deep is the feeling among Canadians—if I may use the expression—to be masters of our own house, may become a reality. I should like to quote from some of those statements which appeared in the Financial Post. It is reported that one manufacturer said:

To give up a big part of the profits from a Canadian operation to Canadians—who gain through employment—is not my idea of the smart way to operate a foreign subsidiary.

He went on to say:

What are Canadians crying about? If the money was available in Canada to develop resources and industry, U.S. interests would not be there in such numbers and to such a high degree of ownership.

I really fail to believe the money for a national industry was not available for Canada. What I really am inclined to believe is that the will on the part of a government to ensure that we would have a national industry was not present and not meaningful. I am not attempting to be critical of the present Minister of Industry. I think his plan, within the framework of the philosophy which exists on the government side of this house, probably was the best plan that could have been devised, within certain limitations.

I should like, however, to go back to the initial consideration that was made. I have sufficient faith in the present minister and the people who advise him that, had the directive to the minister been "let us create an indigenous industry in this country, let us rationalize within ourselves rather than internationally" he could have accomplished that particular objective.

It is a great regret to me, as it must be to many Canadians, that this was not done. However, I am reasonably certain that this resolution will carry and that we will have to live with this pact for a long time. There are some things that the minister should consider doing immediately if he is to be as logical about the attendant difficulties as he was about continentalism. I have received letters from some of the industries in my riding which have pointed out, as have other members speaking tonight, the inability of one department of the government to communicate with another department of the government in order at least to give Canadian industry the opportunity to take full advantage of this particular pact.

I think we must untie the hands of our industry. We have said to them: Compete. I do not quarrel with that. I think our industry has to compete, and perhaps more so than it has in previous times; but if we tell them they have to compete, let us untie their hands and at least give them an equal opportunity.

I have a letter from an industrialist who starts off by saying "We are determined to compete". I think Canadian manufacturers deserve a great deal of credit. Faced with this kind of a revolutionary approach, they have indicated they intend to do everything possible to ensure that they are competitive in this kind of market. He goes on to say:

[Mr. Saltsman.]

The vinyl and vinyl coated fabric industry is presently being asked to compete on a continental basis in the area designated by the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement.

We are determined to compete on this basis and I know I do not have to outline to you the effect of the 11 per cent sales tax and a 22½ per cent duty on machinery and equipment, most of which is specialized and most of which is made either in the United States or the United Kingdom.

This whole matter has considerable immediacy as the international agreement covers dollars and cents and once the American companies have set their pattern to achieve the goals indicated, it will be very hard to change this pattern.

It is incumbent on the government regarding industry—and in this one in particular where you get into modified or relatively free trade—to see that the tariff which inhibits these industries from getting their machinery at competitive costs, and the sales tax which acts to their disadvantage in these matters, is removed. I think it is the very least the government can do. I am not calling for a blanket removal of tariffs or the sales tax; but in this kind of industry, where obviously they are going to have to fight for their lives, I think the government has an obligation to ensure they have the opportunity to do that without being at a disadvantage.

If the government requires revenue, it makes a great deal more sense to give our Canadian companies the opportunity to be competitive and to make a profit, and to take some of that profit afterwards. If we do not permit them to be competitive in the first place, there will be no profit from which we can derive taxation. So, from this point of view, it is my consideration that the government should act immediately in this area.

I should like to read into the record another letter from an industry in my riding:

The Minister of Industry has urged automotive parts plants to expand their facilities to meet the new demands to be made on Canadian industry by the Canada-United States automotive agreement. This we have done.

In 1964, we increased our manufacturing facilities by enlarging our building at a cost in excess of $100,000.00—sales tax (of course) was paid and is included at approximately $7,500.00.

This is a disadvantage which his United States competitor did not have. He makes these comments about the Minister of Finance, by way of justifiable criticism:

The Minister of Finance has stated that businesses should defer the acquisition of machinery and equipment. The policies of the two ministers cannot be reconciled.

Some of the policies of the minister and the former minister cannot be reconciled, judging from this morning's paper.

The one urges expansion and the other advocates the deferment of expansion.

I hope if the minister replies tonight that he will have something to say in this regard and will indicate which minister has made the better judgment in this case.

The parts manufacturing industry is in a unique position due to the Canada-United States automotive agreement and it would be disastrous to defer expansion at this time.

• (9:30 p.m.)

He points out that planning in private industry is very important, and that perhaps our government might learn something from private industry in this regard, and not bring in budgets on an almost year-to-year basis without an indication as to what the future holds. He points out that jobs for the 1968 automotive model year will be placed in 1966, and that he cannot wait for the minister to make a decision next year because he as a manufacturer has to make his decision this year. Production will commence in the summer of 1967 and facilities for this production must be available by that date. Should we not obtain jobs for the 1968 model, it is probable that no jobs would be available until 1970 or 1971.

These are very real dangers and concerns of the people who are being asked to compete in Canada, and I think it is incumbent upon the minister to provide them with answers if he wants them to be in a position to compete, as he says he does.

The writer goes on to state:

If we are to successfully compete with automotive parts manufacturers in the United States, we must be competitive price-wise, and must have the necessary equipment available to do the job.

The word "price-wise" lends authenticity to this document. I do not think anyone in this party would use that word. He then states:

This equipment must be ordered immediately for delivery in 1966 and 1967 and the retention of the sales tax is a most inequitable burden in our fight to compete successfully with the United States.

The minister has indicated that the sales tax may be removed next year, and that he has adopted the present policy because he wants to take a little heat off the economy. He is not only going to take heat off the economy if he continues to apply this policy to the automotive industry, he is going to make it stone cold.

I have often wondered whether we in Canada sometimes do not bargain hard enough. It is my impression that we act like lambs bargaining with lions, and I think we all know what happens to lambs that lie down with lions. They do not come out of such an association very well. To use a mixed metaphor, they usually get sheared. I do not think the government really realizes its power and authority. I am sometimes concerned because the minister does not assert his authority sufficiently.

I was impressed by the minister's statement at the time he tabled the correspondence between him and the automotive industry. I am not aware of what he said to the companies, but apparently the companies replied in the negative to his requests. The minister should be congratulated for at least making an attempt to persuade the companies to this way of thinking, but perhaps he should not have accepted their answers quite so readily.

I should like to quote from a letter addressed to the Minister of Industry dated January 13 on the letterhead of General Motors of Canada, Limited, which states in part:

It is our opinion that the elimination of the profit on sales of vehicles and parts produced in Canada by General Motors of Canada and affiliated Canadian companies to affiliated General Motors companies in the United States and other countries is also discriminatory and should be given added consideration.

I presume that means no.

Will the minister indicate why he made these requests of these companies and whether they were only part of the requests he intended to make?

It is my impression that these companies also replied in the negative in respect of the exclusion of depreciation on non-Canadian machinery and equipment, but I do not understand what that means. I hope the minister will have something to say in this regard, and will explain why his requests to the companies were turned down.

It seems to be a common impression in Canada that we are absolutely dependent on the United States, and in a terrible bargaining position for that reason. Apparently we dare not do anything that might offend United States companies, which can turn to their government for assistance. It was very enlightening to me to read an article which appeared under a Canadian Press heading at about the time the United States House of Representatives was holding hearings in respect of this Canada-U.S. agreement. The news clipping I have in my hand states in part:

> Fears of go-it-alone Canadian alternatives—harmful to the U.S.—were cited as primary reasons for approval by major speakers from both Democratic and Republican parties.

The United States gains substantial benefits from trade with Canada, just as we gain from trade with the United States. I do not think we should be reluctant in pressing our demands when negotiating agreements with our great neighbour to the south. I do not think we should hide our light under a bushel, or act like lambs in our negotiations.

In concluding I should like to express concern about the ultimate implications of government policies in this field, and to join with my colleague, the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) in his hope that no further continentalism of this type will take place in future negotiations. I hope there will be no more back door entries of this kind, but rather that such agreements will be placed before this House of Commons for a full and complete airing, so that the final results will represent the true desires of Canadians.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my participation in this debate will be very brief. We on this side of the house are aware that there are a tremendous number of complaints being made about this agreement, not only about the effects of it, but also about the way in which it was negotiated and put before this house. We believe assurances are required that any future action of this type by the minister or the government will be placed before parliament before it is taken.

We feel that our responsibility to Canada and the industry is such that we must, under the circumstances, be able to hear and understand all the complaints that are brought forward. We know there is some advantage in this agreement. We also know there is in it some great disadvantage in regard to the smaller types of manufacturing plants, and therefore to many Canadian municipalities and people. This has been made very evident in the course of the debate.

Inasmuch as the agreement is in effect, and has been for this protracted period of time, without the possibility of discussion in parliament, so as to provide a safeguard for the future which was not provided in the method used to implement the agreement, I believe this entire matter should be sent to the standing committee for consideration as has already been suggested. But as an alternative to this suggestion, it is my pleasure now to move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard):

> That after the word "same" in line 4 there be added the following:
> "provided that the said agreement may not be renewed in its present or in an amended form without the prior consent of parliament."

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I—

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether Your Honour would be prepared to hear argument on this amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Yes. I should very honestly tell hon. members that I had anticipated, as I assume I should, this type of amendment and have given the matter serious thought during the day. I have very serious doubts whether this amendment is receivable or not; but I would be very grateful to hon. members if they would help the Chair in reaching a decision in the matter.

Mr. Lambert: I realize, Mr. Speaker, that the question of whether a resolution may be amended is a fairly thorny one, outside of course the obvious six months hoist or something of that nature. But that is not the purpose of this amendment. Earlier this evening I sought to move an amendment to send the agreement to a committee of the house for consideration. Mr. Speaker's deputy at the time ruled it out of order and referred to a citation in Beauchesne on which I must reserve opinion because I want to see the citation's references. Sometimes I must regretfully conclude that some of the outright authorities so indicated are on some other proposition, and not all these references can be taken at their absolute face value.

Be that as it may, Your Honour's deputy made that ruling with regard to sending the agreement to a committee. However, the purpose of this amendment is merely to impose a proviso, which is within the power of parliament, in regard to a resolution. The resolution asks for the approval of parliament, and parliament is entitled, I would submit to Your Honour, to impose a condition upon its approval. This is all the amendment seeks to do. It does not seek to introduce any new subject matter which goes beyond the resolution. All it says is that if the house accepts the original motion, it will approve the agreement, but that such agreement cannot be renewed in its present or in an amended form without the prior consent of parliament. That is all the amendment does. It does not introduce any new subject matter.

It is certainly not a vague amendment; and even vagueness cannot disqualify an amendment. So I would put it to Your Honour that the purport of the amendment is entirely within the power of this house to approve. Since we are being asked for our consent, we certainly can impose a natural condition that a certain agreement be not renewed without our prior consideration. Therefore I submit to Your Honour that this is the type of amendment that is quite acceptable at this stage because it refers to a resolution which we are not to see in any other form.

This is not a resolution preceding a bill. This resolution is the finality of the matter. I would find it an extremely strange proposition if it were to be held that this type of resolution, which is not followed by a bill, could not be amended in the form proposed by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler). Otherwise everything can be done by way of resolution and the hands of the house are tied absolutely; it becomes a rubber stamp. With the greatest respect I would point out to Your Honour that this is not the case and should not be the case.

This is a matter which is different from the ordinary type of resolution that we see before a money bill. We have also on occasions amended resolutions to set up committees and what have you. Therefore, I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment is quite in order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could argue perhaps in a tentative way as the hon. member for Edmonton West has been doing. The hon. member was obviously not feeling very sure of his ground and perhaps I am not too sure of mine. However it did seem to me, sir, that if this proposition is to have any validity at all, it is a separate proposition and would therefore require notice. It does not in any sense amend what the house is being asked to approve. It purports to bind the government and perhaps a future parliament, although I do not see how it can do that. In fact, I think it could be better argued that it really has no meaning at all. We all know that under the strict interpretation of the constitution these agreements are ratified by the Crown and they do not in fact require —through it is a constitutional practice—to ask for approval of the house.

If what has become a constitutional practice is followed, the agreement would not be ratified by any future government without the consent of the house, if it came forward again. If the ordinary constitutional practice which we now have is followed, any agreement of this sort is brought by the government to both houses before there is ratification. So this is simply asserting something which is a constitutional practice in any event.

Mr. Winkler: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Winkler: Indeed that argument may be fair enough, but if the government had acted in good faith initially we would not be here discussing the proposition 15 months later to rubberstamp it. Surely in the constitutional sense to which the minister is making reference, we have the right to have these assurances built in tonight, by the determination of the house for the future. We want to control parliaments, and we want to assure the future parliaments that the good faith of the government does exist.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am not arguing the question of good faith or the lack of good faith because it seems to be totally irrelevant to the point of order. The point is whether this is in order according to our rules.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I suggest to hon. members that I believe I am in a position to express an opinion now. However, I see that other members want to contribute to the discussion and I shall be pleased to hear from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I confess that I would very much like to hear the results of your research. The only trouble is if I hear those results, then I might not have a chance to speak. We could then be in a situation where a ruling cannot be discussed. Therefore, may I inquire whether Your Honour has taken a look at citation 201 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, the first sentence of which reads as follows:

> The object of an amendment may be to effect such an alteration in a question as will obtain the support of those who, without such alteration, must either vote against it or abstain from voting thereon, or to present to the house an alternative proposition either wholly or partially opposed to the original question.

I cannot quite tell from your smile, Mr. Speaker, what you are thinking. At any rate, it seems to me that this amendment does come within those terms; it proposes an alteration in the question which would make it possible for some to support the main motion who might otherwise feel that they cannot do so.

There are, of course, other conditions that amendments must meet. I realize that it is not good enough to read a citation such as this and say this amendment falls within those terms and therefore it must be satisfactory. However, I have tried to look at the various requirements that relate to amendments. One, of course, is that an amendment must be relevant to the question which is before the house. With respect to the law of relevancy on an amendment, I am quoting from the second paragraph of citation 203(1):

The law on the relevancy of amendments is that if they are on the same subject-matter with the original motion, they are admissible, but not when foreign thereto.

It does seem to me that this amendment is clearly in the same field. It has to do with whether or not the house wishes to approve of the agreement that has been signed between the two governments.

Another requirement, of course, is that an amendment put together with a main motion must result in a complete question that is intelligible with itself. I have read for my own purposes the original motion moved by the Minister of Industry which suggests that the house and parliament do approve of this agreement. Then in my own mind I add the words, "provided that the said agreement may not be renewed in its present or in an amended form without the prior consent of parliament." It seems to me that there is no difficulty on that score. This produces a proposition which is intelligible and consistent with itself.

The Minister of Transport raised the question as to whether we have the right to amend the agreement. I believe this is the substance of what he said. I see he is shaking his head, so I assume he must have said something else. In any event, I am under the impression his suggestion was that we do not have the right to amend an agreement, whether or not that agreement is an executive act.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not make that suggestion at all.

Mr. Knowles: Let me make my comments as to what I think the minister said, and then Hansard can sort it out. I would just like to make the point that this amendment does not alter the agreement in any respect. It merely seeks to add a provision with respect to it, by means of an amendment. The house is being asked to give its approval. It seems to me that it is logical for the house to say that we are prepared to give that approval on certain conditions and up to a certain point. As I understand it, without this kind of limitation being imposed by parliament, the government could renew the agreement in its present form or in some amended form without coming back to parliament, and certainly without coming back before it would make such a change. It does seem to me that parliament can modify or qualify what it does, and if we are prepared to give approval, I believe that we in common sense should have the right to qualify that approval.

Now, it may be, Mr. Speaker, that you have gone over all these citations which I have drawn to your attention, and you may have some others which are on the other side. I am quite prepared to admit this. I suppose one which Your Honour will probably fall back on is that this is a motion of such substantial difference that it requires notice. It seems to me that that is hardly the case—that what is on the order paper is a notice of approval, and that all we are suggesting is that the approval have a certain deadline in it so far as the date is concerned. I suggest that if you go back to the citation which I read in the first place, namely citation 201, that this is a case of effecting such an alteration in the question as will make it possible for those who do not find it feasible to support it in its present form, to support it in its amended form. I hope Your Honour will give consideration to these points, perhaps overnight.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, may I have a moment to bring to Your Honour's attention—

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can tell hon. members I am prepared to render a judgment now or to express an opinion. If they wait until tomorrow my decision might be more lengthy, but it would not be different from what I am going to say now.

Mr. Lambert: The only thing, Mr. Speaker, is that if Your Honour makes a ruling it may bring forward the resolution for further discussion. I suggest it is ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I will render my judgment tomorrow, if that is what the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) wants.

Mr. Lambert: Basing themselves on Your Honour's ruling, members of the house may have to decide what course of action they should take, and I should not like to have that precipitated at four minutes after ten.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC WORKS—TORONTO—PLACING OF FILL IN LAKE ONTARIO

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I rise once again to bring before the members of this house the question of the placing of fill illegally in Lake Ontario in contravention of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, and evidently with the implicit agreement of some members of the government. I rise tonight in particular because of the reaction to this in the town of New Toronto, a municipality with at least 10,000 population which has received a letter from the Department of Public Works pointing out the municipality had not received a permit to extend two public parks into Lake Ontario. One of these parks is the centennial project of the town of New Toronto.

The New Toronto Advertiser of a week ago today has an eight-column streamer "Rap New Toronto Park Fill". Then there is a three-column heading: "Developers can, why can't we? Councillors answer government warning". The article reads as follows

> New Toronto councillors were all but incredulous Monday when they received a letter from the federal Department of Public Works pointing out the town had no permission from the department to dump fill in the lake at two park sites.
>
> The letter from district engineer R. P. Henderson said a complaint had been received from the Lakefront Owners' Association questioning the legality of the town dumping at Rotary park, at the foot of 10th street and Prince of Wales park, at the foot of Second street. The latter is the town's centennial project.
>
> Councillors took umbrage to the letter because they felt the municipality should not come under fire for dumping fill in the lake, while private developers did so unhindered.
> Mr. Henderson said his office had no record of the department granting approval to New Toronto to dump fill in the lake.

I might add that they also have no record of permission having been granted to Long Branch developers, Millgate Developments.

> Lakefront Owners' Association president Douglas Martin said the association laid the complaint as a matter of course. "The law is there that permission must be obtained from the Department of Public Works before dumping fill in the lake and it must be upheld", he said.
> The lakefront owners were responsible for stalling the Millgate twin 18-storey apartment building project which was to be built on a filled water lot. This battle has yet to be settled.
> According to the Navigable Waters Protection Act, any work which has not been approved by the Minister of Public Works may be removed at the expense of the offender.
>
> Councillor Gordon Baycroft motioned a letter be sent to Mr. Henderson informing him that the matter would be thoroughly discussed at a committee of the whole meeting and a full report would be forwarded to him at that time.
>
> Meanwhile, council is wondering why the finger is being pointed directly at them when so many other cases are evident along the lakeshore.
>
> Mayor Don Russell questioned if authority had even been given to fill operations at Exhibition park and at the Westerly Purification Plant on 23rd street where extensive public works projects have been carried out.
> Councillor Harry Brown mentioned the area behind the West Point Motel, the Chicken Palace and the Millgate water lot in Long Branch as areas which should also be investigated.

I point out that on Tuesday of this week the Toronto Daily Star on the front page of the third section ran an eight inch deep cut across three columns to point out that Metro Toronto is filling in 600 acres of lake Ontario. I can assure you that no permit has been granted for that plan whatsoever. The statement on the front page of the Star says:

> They've now accumulated a quarter million cubic yards of dirt and next year they'll start dumping it in the lake.
> Two years and 6,000,000 tons of fill later, they'll have created 100 acres of new land between Mimico creek and the Humber river.
> By 1985, Metro's two-year-old waterfront advisory committee hopes to push the new shore line up to 2,000 feet into the present lake . . .

Absolutely no permission has been granted for this fill to be dumped into lake Ontario, which is being done despite the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. It is two years ago last March, which is 26 months ago, when I first began to ask cabinet if it would make this a matter of reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. I asked for clarification for the Minister of Public Works as to what is the meaning of "patented waterlots".

Mrs. LeBourdais wrote a small paperback book on the Truscott case and sent the whole cabinet into a tizzy. Perhaps we in the ridings of York-Humber and York West should get a paperback writer to set out the facts of this illegal fill being dumped into lake Ontario between the Humber river and Etobicoke creek. Possibly if we pile up record sales of the book dealing with this illegal fill we may get the matter before the Supreme Court. Mrs. LeBourdais even got the cabinet to put up the money for the lawyer who will take the Truscott appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

We, in the ridings of York-Humber and York West ask for a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. We do not want an explanation by the Minister of Public Works, who has said that "I should explain where the responsibility of this lies." We have not accepted his explanation. We want an explanation by the Supreme Court as to what is meant by a patented waterlot, and what the rights of the proprietors holding them are. We do not want some interpretation by the Minister of Public Works.

The last minister said that this was not a hazard to navigation. Then he ordered navigation lights to be put on this spit of mud in lake Ontario to protect navigation. But it was not a hazard, because he said so.

You will be interested to know that last week the owners of this spit of mud sticking 470 feet into lake Ontario had bulldozers on the property, and were putting in an electric cable, and were putting up two lights which were much more powerful than those they had last year. If this is not a hazard to navigation why are the owners of this spit of mud putting up these lights?

When you have to put up navigation lights, obviously it is a hazard. We should like to have a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada so that we may know exactly what are the rights of owners of patented waterlots. We ask that this be done, because the bill affects the right of residents of York-Humber and York West. Must we have something like the LeBourdais book before we can get some action by the cabinet on this situation?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member made reference to the town of New Toronto which is concerned with building a park on the shore of lake Ontario. No complaints have been received that the town is proceeding with this work, or that it will interfere with navigation on a navigable water.

When we found out that fill was being dumped into lake Ontario we immediately sent a man down to find out precisely what was being done. We also gave to the town information relating to the Navigable Waters Protection Act with respect to the type of permit required, and that sort of thing. So far as I know, the conduct of the representative who went to investigate at all times was courteous, and I am not aware of any dissatisfaction on the part of the town. We have not in any way stopped the town from putting the fill in.

This is very much an active matter at the moment. I regret I was not aware until after six o'clock, when the department was closed, that this discussion would be raised tonight. Had I known, I would have found out what messages have passed back and forth today, if any. There may or may not have been any; I did not have an opportunity to check. Had I known this matter was to be discussed tonight I would have checked and been able to give full information.

As to the other matter, the suggested reference to the Supreme Court, I indicated on a previous occasion exactly what action we were taking in this field generally. I believe this to be the right course of action. I do not think it is proper to attempt to repeat what I said then, even in an abridged form.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—INQUIRY AS TO HOLDING OF BY-ELECTION IN NICOLET-YAMASKA

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Speaker officially announced the resignation of Mr. Clément Vincent as member for the constituency of Nicolet-Yamaska.

I should like to put the following question tonight to the Prime Minister or his spokesman: will a by-election be held soon in this riding? It is imperative, in my opinion, that a by-election be held as soon as possible.

It is not advisable to deprive constituents of a representative for a period of time. This is an elementary democratic principle.

Second, since we shall soon be celebrating our centennial, and in a year as historic as 1967, it is essential that the voice of all parts of Canada, without exception, be heard throughout the country, for celebrations on such a large scale.

Third, the new electoral map which is to be in force in the next general elections will result, under the proposed draft, in the elimination of the constituency of Nicolet-Yamaska and the absorption of the area by other ridings.

In such circumstances, what candidate could be interested in being elected merely for a few months, say for one year, if the by-election were put off to a later date and then to face another general election shortly after? Such a candidate would be elected to represent for a short time a riding doomed to oblivion. If the election were held within a few months, then a candidate could be interested in being elected from a period of three years.

Fourth, the constituency of Nicolet-Yamaska is French speaking and has always been represented as such in the House of Commons.

In the crucial times our country may have to face in the years to come, French speaking Canadians will need everybody at all times.

It is unfortunate to note that able men from the province of Quebec find provincial politics more attractive than federal politics.

That is an alarming tendency which must be countered, as well as the overbidding by nationalists which will take place during the provincial elections in Quebec. This is a tendency which must be reversed.

Instead of always thundering against the federal government, the leaders of political parties in Quebec should recognize the superiority and the policy of greatness of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), who is making constant efforts to promote racial equality in Canada. They should stop decrying the federal government and recognize its vital importance.

In conclusion, I shall castigate the Leader of the Opposition and the Conservative party for not having retained in their ranks such men as Léon Balcer, Rémi Paul and Clément Vincent, through fanaticism and lack of adaptation to the Quebec reality. French Canadians leave the Conservative party; the departure of Clément Vincent was a repudiation of his party.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I say that it is urgent to hold a by-election in Nicolet-Yamaska, because the government, which now has 131 members, would then have 132 and would come a step closer to a majority. I predict we will have a majority government before the end of our term of office and I hope there will not be any general elections before 1970.

Mr. P.-E. Trudeau (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government easily understands the urgency mentioned by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) to hold a by-election in the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska.

The government would, of course, be tempted to call that election as soon as possible and for the very reasons given by the hon. member.

However, the government must necessarily hesitate to take any hasty action and must act with its usual coolness, in the spirit of fairness which must guide the calling of an election.

The government knows that it will be relatively easy for the electors of the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska to find willing candidates.

We, on this side of the house will be happy to welcome the successful candidate after that election. But, in all fairness, we must realize that on the opposition side, it might not be so easy to find a candidate willing to run.

• (10:20 p.m.)

The people must be given time to get used to the idea of having to choose a candidate from one of the parties of the opposition. With a view to balancing, on the one hand, a desire to welcome a new member on the government side and, on the other hand, a desire to be fair in allowing the opposition to prepare itself for this eventuality, we must not rush into elections.

But the hon. member and the voters can rest assured that the government is considering the matter with interest, that it intends to call elections as soon as possible and when indicated, that it intends to win them.

Mr. Paul Langlois (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order.

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I am sorry, but the hon. member cannot raise a question of privilege at this time.

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice-Laflèche): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to point out that during the speech made by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), there was not a single Progressive Conservative in the house.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. According to the rules, on the adjournment of the house, a member can debate a question for which he is granted seven minutes then, the minister concerned or the government spokesman is entitled to three minutes to reply. Therefore, a question of privilege cannot be raised, nor any point of order, at this stage.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.23 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Hochelaga) presented the sixth report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. You continued with motions, when I had myself a report of a standing committee of the house to present. May I continue?

SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry) presented the second report of the standing committee on veterans affairs.

INCOME TAX

CLARIFICATION OF PROPOSED EXEMPTION FROM WITHHOLDING TAX

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, since I introduced my budget on March 29 some questions have been raised as to the precise coverage of income tax resolution No. 3 which, as the house knows, exempted interest payments on certain bonds and other obligations from the 15 per cent non-resident withholding tax. There has been some uncertainty about the exact scope of this measure, and in order to remove this uncertainty I thought it was important to make a statement as soon as possible.

In view of the fact that the measure applies in respect of such bonds issued and being issued since April 15, 1966 it is important for those concerned to know at this time in precise terms what issues we intend should be exempt, after considering the detailed legal comments we have received on the resolution.

We propose that with respect to bonds, debentures, bills, notes, mortgages, hypothecs or similar obligations issued after April 15, 1966 interest on such obligations (a) of or guaranteed by the government of Canada; (b) of the government of a province or an agent thereof; (c) of a municipality in Canada or a municipal or public body performing a function of government in Canada (this includes a school board or commission); (d) of a corporation, commission or association not less than 90 per cent of the shares or capital of which is owned by Her Majesty in right of a province or by a Canadian municipality, or of a subsidiary wholly owned corporation that is subsidiary to such a corporation, commission or association; (e) of an educational institution or a hospital where repayment of the principal amount thereof and payment of the interest thereon is to be made, or is guaranteed, assured or otherwise specifically provided for or secured by the government of a province, be exempt from the 15 per cent non-resident withholding tax.

These terms will be specifically spelled out in the bill to be introduced following the adoption of the income tax resolution.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment because I am interested in this. I have had correspondence with the minister with regard to some of the local governmental authorities that did not appear to be covered in the resolution. I am taking it that I have understood the minister correctly when I suggest that such bodies as the Greater Vancouver Water Board and the Greater Vancouver Drainage and Sewage Board will be included in this exemption.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I always hesitate to give legal opinions in the house. I have tried to set out the terms as clearly as possible. I suggest to the hon. member that after he has had an opportunity of looking at the statement he might, on another day, ask me questions on the orders of the day, or perhaps the best time would be when the resolution itself is under discussion.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Starr: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, are we launching into a debate?

Mr. Speaker: That is a very good comment. I would draw attention to the proposition made by the Minister of Finance.

CANADIAN LIVESTOCK FEED BOARD

WITHDRAWAL AND REPLACEMENT OF RESOLUTION PRECEDING BILL

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated at the close of the sitting on Wednesday last, item No. 48 on the order paper, being a resolution preceding the introduction of a measure to establish a corporation to be known as the Canadian livestock feed board, has an inadvertent omission in it. It has been drawn to my attention that a provision in the bill is neither provided for nor referred to in the resolution. I would ask the unanimous consent of the house to withdraw the existing item No. 48 and replace it by the new and correct version.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister point out what is the change?

Mr. McIlraith: The only change in the resolution is the addition at the end thereof of the words:

—plus any amount advanced to the board as authorized by the Governor in Council pursuant to the said measure.

I may say that His Excellency the Governor General recommends the resolution to the consideration of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave of the house to substitute the revised resolution which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency the Governor General, to replace the resolution appearing as item No. 48 on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSING

REPORTED LAY-OFFS THROUGH SHORTAGE OF MORTGAGE MONEY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Labour. It arises out of his statement regarding government policy in respect of loans and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Since making that announcement has the minister been advised by builders organizations and other ancillary trades across Canada that there have been an increasing number of lay-offs in construction; and in the face of these seriously increasing lay-offs in the building and ancillary trades is the government giving consideration to making provision for additional amounts of mortgage money, instead of requiring builders to find their own funds elsewhere at interest rates that are prohibitive?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have had a few such communications, but not nearly as many as I had expected having regard to some of the representations which were made before the announcement was made. The government has the matter under constant study, but I do not contemplate any change in our policy as announced earlier in the week.

INDUSTRY

COPPER—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the cost of living index for April was 4 per cent higher than for the same month in the previous year, has the attention of the minister been drawn to the fact that some of the copper producing companies are likely to raise their domestic price above the present level of 45 cents a pound and if so is the government planning to take any action to prevent this increase which could stimulate another rise in the cost of living?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the intention of the copper producers. I do know something about the copper situation. My colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce has taken measures to protect the domestic supply. The measures the government has taken have had a very moderating effect on the price, which is much lower in Canada than it is in many parts of the world.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister to tell us how it is that the United States, with all the inflationary pressures in that country, is keeping copper at a price of 36 cents when it is not possible for the Canadian government to keep the price at 45 cents?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is argumentative.

IMMIGRATION

FURTHER REQUESTS FOR ENTRY OF AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the future minister of manpower?

The other day I asked the minister if he had received other requests for imported labour. Can he tell us now if other provinces have made similar requests for help at harvest time?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as far as I can remember two provinces have requested help to pick the fruit and vegetable crops; I think they are British Columbia and Alberta.

[English]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a supplementary question. Will the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration make sure that this year the officials of his department see to it that workers coming into Canada from other countries are not sent out of the country before they complete their jobs, as has been the case on numerous occasions in the past?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the minister has made note of the hon. member's representations.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINES MINISTER RESPECTING COAL MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys regarding a statement he made to the effect that 6,500 Nova Scotia coal miners are to be replaced by automation as the result of a switch from the use of coal to electricity and atomic energy. Can the minister inform this house when these miners will have to be transferred from their present employment, as he has suggested, and indicate his basis for this statement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): The newspaper article to which the hon. member is apparently referring indicates that I made reference to 65,000 miners. The number involved is actually 6,500. Obviously the reporter who wrote that article was not fully attuned to the intricacies of this problem. What I did say related to an assessment of the difficulties miners are experiencing, particularly those in Cape Breton. I also said that coal was not playing the role in today's economy it played in the nineteenth century. I merely analysed the problem without expressing any views as to what might be done in respect of the situation in Cape Breton. I could not do that, because that would involve government policy and we are not ready to make an announcement as yet.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact the minister is quoted as having said these miners will have to be transferred to other employment, I should like to know whether he considers that a statement of that magnitude should be announced at a meeting of the Hull Jaycees before such information is made available to members of the House of Commons, the people of Nova Scotia and the miners who will be affected by such a decision.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the discussion is now becoming an argument between the hon. member and the minister.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. In view of his statement about the role being played by coal in today's economy, and in view of the fact that the Dominion Coal Board acts in an advisory capacity to the minister, will he consider what that board has to say about the use of coal at the present time and in the future, in order that he can bring himself up to date on this subject?

Mr. Pepin: Both the Minister of Finance and myself have had conversations with Dosco, if that is what the hon. member is suggesting. We have done so as part of the process of considering everything that can be said by anybody on the subject.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys?

Is the minister taking similar steps concerning miners in the gold mines of northwest Quebec? Is he now considering the problem and has he come to a conclusion or to an agreement with the authorities of the provincial Department of Mines?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the problem is one of manpower; it is a social matter and the hon. member for Villeneuve knows as well as I do the position taken by the province of Quebec on these matters. We have informed the Quebec government that we are at its disposal for any co-operative action that could be taken.

Mr. Caouette: Is co-operation coming, is it in the making?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member for Villeneuve will agree that his question is not acceptable at this time.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and is supplementary to a question I posed a few moments ago. Since the minister claims to be another of those misquoted and misunderstood ministers, may I ask him to make available to the house the text of his address to the Hull Jaycees so that we might better appreciate his statement regarding coal mining, in view of the fact that he appears more willing to discuss the matter with the Jaycees than with the coal miners of my province.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question, without the argument, and it is directed to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the urgent situation created by the unemployment of coal miners—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Are we not getting argument in your question?

Mr. Herridge: No, sir; I am quite sure this is a statement of fact. Has the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration brought to the attention of these miners the job opportunities available for miners in the Kootenays at the present time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Caouette.]

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC—DISPUTE WITH U.S. OVER SALMON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I intended to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries but in his absence perhaps I should direct it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What steps is the government taking to mediate the dispute between Canadian and United States salmon fishermen arising out of the controversy about the Noyes island area of the north Pacific, particularly in view of statements made yesterday in the United States congress which would indicate that this is a very critical situation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the acting minister if he would deal with this question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Acting Minister of Fisheries): I think the only way I can deal with the hon. gentleman's question is to bring it to the attention of the Minister of Fisheries, which I shall be glad to do.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DISCONTINUANCE OF CARGO SERVICE TO CHURCHILL, MAN.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Have representations been made to the minister protesting the discontinuance by Canadian National Railways of cargo service to Churchill, Manitoba, thereby increasing the cost of shipping automobiles by more than 300 per cent?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the question is so urgent that it should be asked now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: But perhaps it might be allowed.

Mr. Simpson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member objecting to my allowing the question?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the allegations of the hon. gentleman—and I use the word "allegations" because in the notice of his question he used the word "apparently"—have not yet come to my notice; but if they should prove to be correct I expect I will be receiving representations.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister be prepared to look into such representations immediately in order to rectify this situation?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is done almost automatically in these matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: "Almost" automatically.

FINANCE

COLLECTION OF SALES TAX ON CENTENNIAL PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in view of our approaching centennial, and to promote the spirit of unity in this house and in Canada, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the Minister of Finance explain why sales tax is charged on centennial projects which are entirely financed by grants from various levels of government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would invite the hon. member to place that question on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: I wish to rephrase my question to bring it in order. Has the Minister of Finance received any representations from persons or groups in Canada objecting to the payment of sales tax on centennial projects financed by grants from all levels of government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker; from many people.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance following his answer to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) concerning the numerous representations he received with regard to the 11 per cent tax.

Could the minister tell us what answer he gave to those representations or to those who complained to the minister?

[English]

What was the minister's answer to these complaints from people in Canada with regard to the 11 per cent tax?

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, I gave part of that answer in my budget speech, when I promised to remove that tax beginning next year and the year after on production machinery.

Mr. Starr: After the buildings are completed.

Mr. Sharp: In so far as buildings are concerned, I said the tax would not be removed.

NATIONAL PARKS

WATERTON LAKES—REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT OF SOFTBALL DIAMOND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, but since he is not in his seat perhaps his parliamentary secretary will accept the question. I would ask the minister to table a copy of all correspondence between the minister and park officials both in Ottawa and Waterton Lakes national park concerning the replacement of a softball diamond for the use of all in Waterton park, which park officials and the minister have refused to re-establish somewhere in the park.

An hon. Member: Let's play ball.

Mr. Kindt: That is what I and the people out there are asking the minister to do.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question cannot be accepted.

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I would ask the minister whether the Donald report has yet been received. If not, when does he expect it, and upon receiving it will it be released?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): The Donald report has not yet been received. When it is, we shall determine whether it would be appropriate to have it tabled.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys with respect to the same problem. Since the government has been declining to answer questions in respect of the mining problem in Nova Scotia because the Donald report had not yet been delivered, on what grounds does the minister now publicly state that he is worried about a situation which the Donald report and government policy were supposed to alleviate?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): So is the attitude of the government.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE—INQUIRY AS TO REPEAL OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns a minor housekeeping item. I should like to ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys the following question. In view of the complete cessation of the operations of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, has the minister any plans to announce the repealing of the legislation which keeps this now defunct organization in existence?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the problem. Could I take the question as notice, and I will try to provide an answer soon.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION TO INQUIRE INTO FOOD INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Could the minister say whether a request has been received from the farmers union asking for the establishment of a royal commission to inquire into all aspects of the food industry? If so, what consideration is being given to this request?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. This request was made by the farmers union in their brief to the government, but at the present time the government has no intention of establishing such a commission.

[Mr. Sharp.]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CONTROL OF DRUG LSD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the variety of statements being made with reference to the drug LSD, particularly in regard to its dangers, is the department studying this problem and can we expect a statement on control measures or a comprehensive policy to be followed by his department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot recognize that this matter is of such urgency that the question should be answered at this time. The hon. member may wish to place it on the order paper.

FAILURE OF DRUG MANUFACTURERS TO SPECIFY CHILDREN'S DOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of yesterday's statement by the head of the pediatrics department of the Ottawa Civic hospital that the health of children is endangered by the failure of drug manufacturers to specify the size of doses for them, would the minister say what the government proposes to do about this situation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to take the question as notice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ESTABLISHMENT OF RULES FOR DEALING WITH ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the government house leader with reference to our procedures. My question arises out of the fact that the program today includes dealing with estimates. What does the government or the government house leader intend to do about the order of the house which was passed at the last session calling for the establishment of a special committee to work out rules for dealing with estimates, in the light of our new provision of a 30 day limit?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the short answer would be to make the necessary motion to set up such a committee. Perhaps I should explain that I have taken a little time to do this for the simple reason that in view of the heavy demands being made on committees now, with such a large number of them having so much work before them, and the fact that members of such a committee undoubtedly would wish to have a few weeks' time to observe the handling of estimates in committees before making their final recommendations as to what the procedure should be, I thought it would be better if we left this matter to a later stage in the session. I must say that this is not just my own conclusion; I discussed it with some other members of the house to get their opinion as to what would be the best procedure, and that seemed to be the consensus as to the best way of handling this matter.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, on this point—and this is not in the form of a question, as it is difficult for me to form a question on this point—in view of what the government house leader has said as to consideration of this matter later in the session; in view of the fact that the government today is introducing the estimates of certain departments for consideration, and the time spent on the departments now will be deducted from the 30 day limit, in order that we in the opposition and government members also, for that matter, might be able to contain ourselves to some degree on these various departments I think we should take steps now to establish some schedule on these departments.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to take the necessary steps to have the committee set up right away in view of what has been said.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACTIVITIES IN CANADA OF U.S. INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in connection with complaints to which I made reference the other day, that Canadian citizen Eerik Heine has had his reputation bandied about by the C.I.A. of the United States as having been a communist. I asked what action the government was taking to protect the good names of Canadians, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs said the matter was being taken up with the authorities in the United States. I ask him whether the strongest possible protest has been made to this most unjustifiable way of assassinating the reputation of a good Canadian.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the matter to which my right hon. friend directs his question this morning was also raised by him three days ago. I indicated then that we were discussing this matter with the United States. In this situation judicial proceedings are of course involved. I would share my right hon. friend's concern if the facts as they eventually appear warrant the conclusion which he has placed upon them. In any event, my right hon. friend may be assured that the matter is receiving our attention. I hope I shall be able some time later to give a definite answer with regard to another aspect of the question which he asked three days ago.

REPORTED CRITICISM OF NEW TYPE OF PASSPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Addison (York North): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he received any criticism in connection with the new type of Canadian passport now being issued by his department and, if so, is his department planning on making any changes?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this does not appear to be a very urgent question and should be placed on the order paper.

VIET NAM—SPEECH BY UN SECRETARY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the statement recently made in London by Mr. Thant, Secretary General of the United Nations, whereby the only real solution to the problem is the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Viet Nam, including those of the United States, Russia, China and others, is this position supported by the minister and the government?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. As put by the hon. member, this question is of a general nature and out of order.

[English]

EXPO '67

REPORTED USE OF U.S. MADE MECHANICAL EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who answers to matters concerning Expo '67. Have any representations been made to the minister to the effect that American made mechanical equipment is being dumped on the Canadian market and is used in Canadian pavilions at Expo '67 without consideration to fair evaluations of quality and market value?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may wish to place the question on the order paper. In the meantime I am sure the minister has noted the hon. member's comments and representations.

Mr. Keays: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If I put it on the order paper possibly all the mechanical equipment will have been purchased before I receive an answer.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

POSSIBLE RESIGNATION OF QUEBEC CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the section of the standing orders of the house which allows a member to put a question to another member about matters concerning the business of the house.

[English]

I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. Will the right hon. gentleman inform the house if it is the intention of any other Quebec members of his party to resign their seats?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure the house would look forward with earnest and hopeful anticipation to the hon. gentleman himself leaving this place.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question was out of order.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Choquette: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the right hon. gentleman will leave the house before I do.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT WITH REGARD TO FARM SAFETY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that agriculture in Canada has become highly mechanized, can the minister make a progress report to the house with regard to his efforts in connection with farm safety?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member recognizes, I am sure, that this is not a question that can be asked now. It might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Noble: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I asked this question of the Minister of Agriculture about a month ago and he promised he would have a report to make to the house. I believe he must have something constructive to say now.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister has, but he might want to do it in some other way than by answering a question on orders of the day.

CONSUMER CREDIT

REQUEST FOR CONFERENCE ON CO-ORDINATION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I, on behalf of a colleague who has been called out of the house, ask a question of the Minister of Finance, notice of which was sent to him? I shall, however, abbreviate it. In view of the report that one of the provincial treasurers in the west is concerned about the lack of co-ordination of consumer credit legislation in the various provinces, is consideration being given to the calling of a conference to try to co-ordinate this legislation as between the provincial and federal jurisdictions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): The provincial treasurer of Alberta has written to me suggesting that I consider inviting appropriate provincial ministers and their officials to meet with me later this year to discuss the subject of consumer credit and interest disclosure. Ministers from other provinces have also indicated they would be interested in such a meeting.

I have undertaken to give this suggestion the careful attention it deserves. Before we have such a meeting I wish to review the current federal and provincial legislation in this field, the question of jurisdiction that may be involved, and the reports and recommendations which have been made to governments on the subject.

This would include, the house will be interested to know, the important work undertaken in this field by the royal commission on the cost of borrowing money, cost of credit and related matters in the province of Nova Scotia; by the select committee of the Ontario legislature on consumer credit; by the special committee of the Manitoba legislature on consumer credit, as well as that of the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on consumer credit. This review is under way, and I will be consulting further with the provinces on the question and timing of the proposed meeting.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—REPORT OF INQUIRY RESPECTING MAINTENANCE OF BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question, of which I more or less gave him notice earlier. I should like to ask the minister how close to completion is the job of translating the Thompson report, which has delayed its presentation for so long. This report concerns Winnipeg's aviation future.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I apologize to the hon. gentleman, but this was one case when something that is almost automatic, was not. I failed to make the inquiry of the Privy Council office which I will have made today, and I will let the hon. gentleman know.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport for clarification. Did he use the word "automatic" or "autocratic"?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not believe, sir, they are synonymous.

An hon. Member: They are over there.

INDUSTRY

APPROVAL OF CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT ON AUTOMOTIVE PRODUCTS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Drury:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the agreement concerning automotive products between the government of Canada and the government of the United States of America, signed on January 16th, 1965, and that this house do approve the same.

Mr. Speaker: When the house rose last night it had under consideration the question of the admissibility of an amendment proposed by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) and seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) which reads as follows:

That after the word "same" in line 4 there be added the following:

"provided that the said agreement may not be renewed in its present or in an amended form without the prior consent of parliament."

I indicated that I would consider the matter overnight, although I had expressed my views during the course of the arguments advanced by hon. members. Having considered the matter further I should like at this point to give a ruling on the proposed amendment. A moment ago I reminded hon. members of the terms of the amendment, which perhaps I should repeat:

That after the word "same" in line 4 there be added the following:

"provided that the said agreement may not be renewed in its present or in an amended form without the prior consent of parliament."

I expressed some doubts as to the legality of the amendment and invited hon. members to express their views on the procedural aspect of the amendment to the motion. The argument was advanced by the hon. member for Edmonton West that it should be within the right of parliament to impose by its vote the type of condition which is contained in the amendment.

I am in full agreement with the hon. member on this aspect of his argument. However, with respect I suggest that the proper procedure to achieve this aim is not by way of amendment to the resolution but rather by way of substantive motion, with due notice. I agree with the contention put forward by the Minister of Transport that this amendment is in fact a new proposition. In my view it goes beyond the very limited and narrow terms of the question.

I should point out at this moment that on many occasions in the past hon. members have tried to introduce amendments to resolutions of this type, and found it extremely difficult to draft one that would be acceptable to the Chair. I know the hon. member for Edmonton West, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Grey-Bruce joined in an attempt to move this amendment and knew of the difficulty they faced.

An excellent precedent which reviews rather exhaustively the rules and precedents applicable to the present case may be found in Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons for June 11, 1958. Mr. Speaker Michener, commenting on a proposed amendment to a motion for approval of the NORAD agreement between Canada and the United States, said:

If the amendment has the effect of denying the motion it is unnecessary and irrelevant because those members who wish to disapprove the agreement have only to vote against the motion as it stands.

If the amendment adds something to the motion in a positive way it is a declaration of principle in these terms, that it is advisable for the government to give consideration to the taking of such steps as are necessary to integrate these agreements within the structure of NATO. Assuming that the amendment and the motion were accepted you would have the agreement approved but you would have added to it a declaration of this independent principle which is not related to the motion nor is it necessary for the decision of the motion in question.

Further on Mr. Speaker Michener comments:

A motion clearly could be brought forward for the purposes of this amendment but it would have to be on notice and as an independent motion.

Mr. Speaker Michener then declared the amendment out of order, and I believe the reasons he invoked are applicable to the present amendment.

The proposed amendment is in the nature of a declaration of principle in that it proposes the adoption of a procedure relative to international agreements which would be a substantial departure from established practice. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred the Chair to citation 201 of Beauchesne's fourth edition at page 168. The citation reads in part as follows:

201. The object of an amendment may be to effect such an alteration in a question as will obtain the support of those who, without such alteration, must either vote against it or abstain from voting thereon, or to present to the house an alternative proposition either wholly or partially opposed to the original question. This may be affected by moving to omit all the words of the question after the first word, "That", and to substitute in their place other words of a different import. In that case the debate that follows is not restricted to the amendment, but includes the motives of the amendment and of the motion, both matters being under the consideration of the house as alternative propositions.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I understand, however, that this type of amendment, declaratory of a principle, does not apply to a resolution. As confirmed in Mr. Michener's ruling, May, Bourinot and Redlich are authorities for the proposition that the only motions upon which amendments declaratory of principle may be considered are motions for an address in reply to the speech from the throne, motions to go into committee of ways and means and supply and motions for the second reading of public bills. I believe that motions for third reading of public bills can also be amended in the way suggested in citation 201 of Beauchesne's fourth edition.

I should add that I have been unable to locate a single precedent where this type of amendment to a resolution was allowed, while there are a great many instances where similar amendments were ruled out of order for the reasons I have just outlined. It is therefore with regret that I must declare the amendment out of order.

Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly in support of this resolution and to urge this house to support its adoption, in this way confirming the progress that has already been begun in the automobile industry since the tariff changes were put into effect last January.

A number of suggestions by certain opposition speakers in this debate were made last night, that somehow or other in bringing forward this treaty the government had made a decision which will have put the Canadian automobile industry under United States control. As has already been pointed out by one opposition speaker, the industry in question went out of Canadian ownership or control over a generation ago. To me it seems that the effect of this treaty is to make this particular industry act more in the interests of Canada than it has in the past.

Surely this is the result of arrangements which bring about increased production and increased employment in Canada. I believe the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman) last night suggested that instead of making these arrangements as have been described, we should have considered in some way the taking of a step or the making of a decision which would have created an entirely independent national Canadian automobile industry. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that in this suggestion he seemed to be in conflict with the argument put forth very clearly by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott), his party colleague, who pointed out in effect that the decision by the Canadian people not to take a step of this nature had been made many, many years ago.

The hon. member for Waterloo South made references to the situation in Sweden, Britain and Germany. However, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the automobile industries in those countries reached their present status and acquired their present nature not basically as a result of government action, but as a result of the initiative of management and businessmen initially, and because of decisions by consumers to accept the models produced by firms in those countries even though there was competition from other makes of cars from outside those countries.

Mr. Douglas: Is the hon. member aware that the Volkswagen company was a wholly owned government company?

Mr. Gray: The Volkswagen company started out being owned wholly by the government in order to provide employment for people who had been working in those factories by producing these cars, where previously there had been produced only various types of war materials. The German government, as I understand, at the present time has begun divesting itself of the ownership of that concern.

Mr. Douglas: The government started it.

Mr. Gray: Yes, but the continued prosperity of the company was due to the design of the product, the initiative of management and the acceptance of consumers. I think the free enterprising Chancellor of Germany, Dr. Erhard, would be surprised at the suggestion that he would have kept the Volkswagen in production if there had not been market acceptance for it.

Sweden has no limitations of any kind on imports of parts and cars. Swedish industry must meet competition from all types of automotive products.

The point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that rather than lessening the benefits to Canada, the aim of this treaty is to increase benefits through increasing production and employment for Canada. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the evidence to date indicates that we have made very substantial progress in meeting this aim of the treaty. Reference has already been made to the fact that the production of cars and trucks has increased by over 350,000 units in the past three years; that production of automotive parts, comparing only 11 months of 1963 with 11 months in 1965, has increased by some $230 million.

These figures help to destroy the argument of the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), who suggested that two of the major automobile firms in Canada, Chrysler and Ford, were importing all their parts from the United States as a result of this treaty.

Mr. Nesbitt: I did not say all. I said most.

Mr. Gray: I thought you said all.

Mr. Nesbitt: You should read Hansard.

• (12:00 noon)

Mr. Gray: Even if I would accept the hon. member's interjection that what he had intended to say was that they were importing most of their parts, I suggest this would not be possible because of the content requirements included in the automotive agreement. The very fact that the production of parts has increased so substantially in Canada demonstrates the weakness of suggestions that the increased production in the vast Chrysler and Ford plants in Canada arises merely from assembly operations.

We also note the substantial increase in employment in both the automobile manufacturing industry and in the automotive parts manufacturing industry. If we compare the increase which took place between 1963 and 1965—I am speaking of average monthly employment in the manufacturing field—from 57,000 to over 76,000, it seems to me that even taking into account the suggestion by the hon. member for Wellington South, the spokesman for the official opposition, based on one or two isolated instances of lay-offs, we must all reach the conclusion that this vastly increased range of employment could not have taken place if those assertions had been correct.

I invite hon. members to look at the situation in the city of Windsor. In 1962 the employment index was 72.1 upon a base of 100 in 1949, meaning that 32,128 people were employed in industry. I am not referring to the automotive industry alone but to employment in industry generally in the area though it is, of course, well known to all members of the house that the automotive industry plays a most important part in the economy of the Windsor area. By December, 1965, the employment index had risen to 105.7 with more than 47,600 people on the job. I do not intend by going into detail to remind the house which government was in office in 1962. I think it is obvious that very significant changes have taken place not only as a result of the automotive pact itself and its predecessor, the initial export incentive program of the present government, but also because of the area development program introduced by the present administration.

Take one example of a major Windsor industrial firm, the Chrysler Corporation. According to reports in the Windsor Star this undertaking has more than doubled in size, production and the amount of employment provided since 1962. It is at present employing more than 11,500 people according to the press report to which I referred and it was recently announced that further expansion is expected to add at least another 1,500 jobs to that figure.

One of my hon. friends has just referred me to page 4770 of Hansard where hon. members may find the official report of what was said by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). He is reported as having said that the Chrysler Corporation and, to a lesser degree, the Ford Motor Company, have imported all their auto parts from their wholly owned subsidiaries in the United States. If the Hansard reporter did not get what was said, the hon. member's quarrel is with him, not with me. I think hon. members are already aware of the investment of over $50 million in new and improved plant and equipment by the Ford Motor Company in Windsor.

Mr. Starr: Would the hon. member permit a question at this point?

Mr. Gray: I would be very happy to accept questions from any hon. member once I have completed my remarks, if there is time. I do not think they will be too extended.

I think the house has already been made aware of the new General Motors trim plant in Windsor which it is expected will employ some 1,700 workers when in full operation. This expansion also involves independent parts manufacturers in Windsor such as Kelsey Steel. According to records kept by the Department of Industry, since this automotive expansion program has been in effect there is official knowledge of six new plants and 28 expansion programs in the auto industry in the Windsor area.

Reference has been made to the effect of this pact on our balance of payments situation. In 1963 exports of motor parts from Canada amounted to only $81.3 million. Had this figure continued at the same level it is apparent that the deficit today would be something like $871.9 million rather than $687.1 million.

It is clear that the increased export opportunities, indeed, the actual increase in exports made possible by this treaty, have helped in controlling the balance of payments deficit which would have been much higher in the absence of the agreement. The trend is such that in future, as can already be seen, this deficit will be vastly reduced.

In any event it seems to me, contrary to what was suggested by some speakers last night, that the main test of the agreement is not the balance of payments situation but its effect on production and employment in Canada. Already the treaty has had a positive beneficial effect in Canada not only upon the automotive industry but upon the economy in general.

We should note too that one of our most important aims is to give the Canadian automotive industry access to the vast United States market which, because of its larger population, obviously affords much greater opportunity than is available in Canada. If we consider this objective we find we are already making substantial progress. Exports of automobiles and parts have increased from a value of $81.3 million to over $265 million in the current year, an increase of more than 226 per cent if my arithmetic is correct.

This helps to answer the contention which was put forward last night that the growth of production and employment in the industry is due only to the expansion of the Canadian market. The impressive increase in exports demonstrates that our Canadian parts industry too is able to sell to the United States market and I am confident that the initiative and ability of our Canadian parts manufacturers, with the support of the Department of Industry, will lead to further expansion of their present sales in this market.

Some criticism was advanced last evening concerning the manner in which the tariff changes made necessary by the agreement were put into effect. Members complained that the changes in the tariff rates were made by order in council without reference to parliament. I suggest that this order in council was put into effect under powers which had already been given to the executive by parliament when it passed the Customs Act giving the administration power to vary tariffs and schedules without reference to parliament. In other words, the government was using a power which parliament had already given to it to make changes of this type.

I would remind hon. members opposite that when the previous government put into effect its extremely limited and scarcely effective program involving the import of transmission parts it did so by order in council without any reference to parliament beyond the tabling of the order. It is obvious that the present government was free to make these tariff changes by virtue of the power already given to it by parliament in order to permit the expansion for which provision was made in the first export incentive plan to continue without the interruption which would have taken place had there not been this ability to maintain continuity between the first plan and the second plan.

Another important aim of this treaty is to give Canadian consumers the opportunity to purchase cars at prices reasonably similar to those available to their counterparts in the United States. I think it was said right at the beginning that this result was something that could be expected over a period of years, but it is very encouraging to note that already there have been decreases in the prices of cars to Canadians which are such that, according to one suggestion, if these decreases are totalled they approximately equal the amount of duties which the government supposedly is not collecting from the automobile companies because of this treaty arrangement.

However, I suggest that basically jobs are just as important or more important than prices. Lower prices do not mean too much if people do not have the money in their pockets to afford them. Reference was made to the 80,000 cars being manufactured by Chrysler in Windsor to be sold to the United States. Let us not forget that there are people working today to manufacture those cars who were not working several years ago when production and employment by Chrysler at Windsor were a lot lower than what they are today because of this and other programs of the government.

Mr. Starr: What other programs?

Mr. Gray: I am referring to the area development program which has helped bring thousands of jobs, a number of new plants and the expansion of others to the Windsor and other areas of the country. According to information that is publicly available, in Windsor alone the Ford Motor Company is making fresh investments of $50 million in new plant and equipment.

Frankly, I was rather surprised to hear speakers from the New Democratic Party calling for an immediate removal of the tariffs in a way that would permit individual consumers to drive over to Buffalo or Detroit, buy new cars there and bring them back without reference to existing tariff requirements. I suggest that if that step had been taken before the Canadian industry had been given a reasonable opportunity to readjust itself, to rationalize its production, to bring its costs in line with its American competitors, the basic effect would be to throw some 80,000 Canadian auto workers out of jobs.

At the present time, because of the way this treaty and the surrounding arrangements have been created, Canadian plants and workers continue to have privileged access to the Canadian market, with a new access to the American market that they never had previously. An N.D.P. spokesman said last night that the removal of tariffs for individual purchases at this time would be the quickest way to protect the Canadian consumer. I suggest that if that were done at this time it would be the quickest way to destroy thousands of jobs.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I hope the hon. member does not mean to misrepresent what I said. I indicated that if the auto companies do not pass on the savings to the public the quickest way to force them to do so would be to reduce the tariff on individual purchases.

Mr. Gray: I am glad of the interjection by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) because it reinforces the point I was about to make, namely, that the removal of tariffs is certainly an ultimate weapon to be used by the government when in its opinion parity of costs of production has been reached between American and Canadian cars but without reasonable parity of prices being achieved. Obviously this would be a step to be taken not immediately but after a reasonable time has been given for the necessary adjustments to be made in Canadian production.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) asked a very important question about the value of the auto parts agreement to the west. I think I should remind him, his colleagues from the west and the people of the west, that it has been estimated that at least one job in every seven in this country is linked in some way to the automotive industry.

Mr. Lambert: You can link all sorts of things.

Mr. Gray: The hon. member interjects that you can link all sorts of things. I do not know what need we would have for our chemical industry, our steel and iron industry, our oil industry and even our forest industry to the extent that we have them today without the requirements of the automotive industry. I doubt that there would be the markets there are today in Canada for Alberta's oil, wheat and other products without the demand created not only by the Canadian automotive industry directly but by the incomes generated by the workers employed in it and their families.

Mr. Lambert: At our expense.

Mr. Gray: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there are too many types of separatist comments coming from all corners of the country today and I would have hoped a more constructive approach would have been taken by this leading spokesman for the west, one that could not be construed as a form of western separatism.

This treaty has a more direct benefit to ridings such as my own, that of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), that of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr)—

Mr. Starr: Don't include me. Just keep it to yourselves.

Mr. Gray: If the hon. member for Ontario is not happy with the benefits brought to Oshawa as a result of the expanded production and employment, I am sure his constituents will be surprised and disappointed.

Mr. Starr: We have always had them.

Mr. Gray: Even before prices are at a level comparable with those which American consumers pay, this treaty is something of definite advantage to all people in Canada at this time because of the increased opportunities for production in many related industries and the increased buying power created by the increased incomes earned by people in these industries.

[Mr. Gray.]

In conclusion let me suggest that the evidence is very clear that the trend as we have seen it so far is impressive and seems to indicate very positive benefits as a result of this treaty. Reference has been made to dislocation but I think the evidence before us, including the evidence produced by opposition speakers, indicates it has been slight in comparison with the sizeable number of firms in the industry, both the parts industry and the automotive industry itself, the sizeable number of people who were working when this pact came into existence and those who have been added to the industry work force as a result of the increased opportunities created by it.

The government has already taken steps to assist, where necessary, workers in the automotive industry and individual firms as well. But in a sense what has been done up to now is experimental. We are trying things that have never been attempted previously in Canada. We are engaged in this concept of rationalizing an entire industry, of trying to make it more efficient with the support and encouragement of a specific government policy.

I think it is clear that if government policy is attempting to achieve this type of result then the government must be prepared, where necessary, to add to and to extend existing measures of assistance to workers and firms. I think it is also clear that the major automobile manufacturers, who have been given greater opportunities and greater potential benefits because of this treaty, have a special responsibility to their workers and to the Canadian people in general, a responsibility to pass on to the Canadian consumer as quickly as possible the benefits of this opportunity for rationalization of the Canadian industry.

They have a responsibility to adopt attitudes which in my opinion some elements of the industry have not adopted to the extent that they should have, attitudes whereby they are willing to keep government and workers more fully informed, as far in advance as possible, of plans which may have an effect on workers and the community so that there may be time to work out readjustment programs where necessary. If existing measures are shown to hamper or not permit a proper opportunity for Canadian firms to compete, to meet production requirements, to fulfil opportunities in Canada and in the American market, then the government must be prepared to take further steps.

The same applies if trends of dislocation accelerate beyond what they seem to be today, trends which so far have been very slight in comparison to the not only vastly expanded opportunities for employment but also actual increases in jobs which the evidence before us demonstrates. Taking into account all aspects of the treaty itself, including the definite increase in production and employment in the automotive industry in Canada, I think the evidence is such that this house should support the resolution before us. I urge the house to join with supporters of the government and others and vote in favour of this resolution so that with confirmation of the treaty by the House of Commons we may hope for even more by way of expanded opportunities for production and employment in the automotive industry and for all secondary industry in Canada.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. member for Essex West which has to do with what he said in the fictitious discourse to which we have listened for the last number of minutes. He compared the unemployment figures of 1962 and 1963 with the figures at the present time. I realize there has been an increase through a normal advance in production. Can he tell me what the increase in the figures for employment is between January, 1965, when this treaty came into effect, and the present time in addition to what would have been the normal increase in employment?

Mr. Gray: I do not have the full figures available, Mr. Speaker, but according to partial information made available to the Department of Industry I understand that at least 10,000 new jobs can be attributed directly to new plants and expansions of which the Department of Industry has been informed. This is only partial information because I understand there is no obligation on the firms to give complete and detailed information in every case. I am trying, if you will pardon the expression, to be conservative in the figures I am putting forward. It may be that when the minister concludes the debate he will be able to supplement my partial information.

Mr. Starr: After that strange and more fictitious answer may I ask this question? Primarily the treaty was for the purpose of cutting down the automobile industry trade deficit with the United States which stood at some $520 million during the month of January, 1965. Can he explain why the deficit has increased rather than decreased and will the objective of cutting it in half be reached by the end of 1968?

Mr. Gray: First of all, I take issue with my hon. friend when he suggests that the primary aim of the treaty was to cut down the deficit.

Mr. Starr: Of course it was.

Mr. Gray: The primary aim was to increase production and employment in Canada and increase the number of jobs—

Mr. Starr: There is some more fiction.

Mr. Gray: —available to Canadians. If my hon. friends in the official opposition would be as interested in job opportunities for human beings as they are in dollar signs—

Mr. Starr: The only reason there are jobs available now is that the former government put into effect policies which brought this about. The hon. member admitted that the upward trend of employment started in 1961 when you were not even in office.

Mr. Gray: I will say to my hon. friend that I certainly did not intend to make remarks which would create bitter controversy.

Mr. Starr: Then why do you not speak the truth?

Mr. Gray: I think, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend is not expressing himself in a way which is worthy of the position he held and holds in this house.

Mr. Starr: But I always tell the truth in this house.

Mr. Gray: I am attempting to tell the truth to no lesser extent myself. I am sure he will have an opportunity to make a speech if he wishes. In answer to my friend, I should like to point out that in so far as the Windsor area is concerned jobs certainly did not increase in 1961, they dropped in 1962 and began rising only after the present government took office.

Mr. Starr: After devaluation of the dollar.

Mr. Gray: Employment in Windsor dropped the month after devaluation of the dollar came into effect.

Mr. Starr: How can you sleep at night?

Mr. Gray: When I look at the facts in the city of Windsor as a result of the policy of the present government in contrast to the situation which existed before April, 1963, I am sure I sleep not only as sound as my hon. friend but more soundly.

Mr. Starr: Yes, because of the devaluation to 92½ cents.

Mr. Gray: In answer to my hon. friend's question, if the devaluation of the dollar had come about as a planned measure to help the economy of this country he and his friends would be entitled to all the credit they are trying to assume for themselves, but unfortunately it was a panic measure in so far as the balance of payments was concerned.

Mr. Danforth: Get away from partisan politics and get down to facts.

Mr. Gray: I am trying to be non-partisan and deal with facts. If hon. members did not ask the questions which require these answers they would not be getting them. In respect of the balance of payments the hon. member asked if I thought the deficit was increasing. I think this is an effect of the removal of the duties because of the greater opportunities to bring things in over the short run. I think this comes about as part of the short term effects of the program of rationalization. Without the treaty I think you would have seen this very great increase in the deficit in any event. I regret that my hon. friend should think I am trying to be partisan—

Mr. Starr: I said you were fictitious.

Mr. Gray: You said a few other things. If I wished to attempt to bring this debate down to a level which I think should not exist in this house, I could take grave issue with some of the terms hon. members opposite have used. Had it not been for this treaty, I think the figures in respect of the deficit between exports and imports in the automobile industry would have been greater than they are today. I am confident this gap will continue to narrow, and certainly the rate of increase will not be what it was before the treaty. I think the hon. member for Oxford has a question.

Mr. Nesbitt: The hon. member for Essex West in his very interesting remarks has told us what a great success the treaty has been and that it has achieved its intended objectives. At the end of his remarks I believe he said it was experimental and that we may have to take further steps. I am wondering what objection the hon. member would have to this treaty being sent to an appropriate committee such as the committee on commerce and industry in order that those persons who have experienced some difficulty in respect of this treaty would have an opportunity to make presentations to the government and other members of the house so that improvements could be made if necessary. Would the hon. member tell us why the government flatly refuses—he obviously must have the ear of the minister—to allow this treaty to go before a committee where members of labour organizations who feel aggrieved and members of the Canadian auto parts industry could present their case?

Mr. Gray: First of all, I should like to correct the suggestion of my hon. friend. I did not say it had as yet met all its objectives. I said it is making very substantial progress toward meeting its objectives. I do not think I would take issue with anyone who said the time has not yet come that every one of these objectives in the treaty to which I and others have referred has been met in its entirety.

When I used the word "experimental" I was referring specifically to the measures put into effect by this government rather than to the treaty itself, to assist in the readjustment where necessary of auto parts firms and workers who may require transitional assistance.

The point I was attempting to make was that so far the predictions that adjustments would be relatively slight in comparison with the total range of the industry fortunately have turned out to be correct. It is interesting to note that in the criticisms put forward by the official opposition, and they are only doing their job in this regard and I do not object to that, they were only able to refer to two definite cases, the Ingersoll firm and another firm at Beaverton.

Mr. Nesbitt: I only mentioned those as examples. I could have mentioned quite a few more.

Mr. Gray: It would have added quite a bit of substance to their criticisms had hon. members come forward with names and details, including facts and figures as to the alleged harm being done to firms and employees. That was not done and I suggest to my hon. friend that it could not be done except in a few cases because the over-all effects in all phases of the industry have been good.

Mr. Nesbitt: That is what you say.

Mr. Gray: We have this House of Commons, the government and the opposition in order that we can put forward our different points of view. The hon. member has made reference to a committee. I feel flattered that he thinks I have the ear of the minister. I will ask the minister to give careful consideration to this suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Oxford. I must leave it to the minister to state any official point of view in this regard.

At this point, after taking into account the debate on the amendment moved by one of the opposition parties to a supply motion last year, after taking into account the opportunities for debate we are now having in this house, and after taking into account the full opportunity that has been and will be given to individual firms and their trade associations to come forward with their representations and discuss them with the minister, his colleagues and individual members of this house on all sides, I think there has been ample opportunity for discussion and that the need for a study to which the hon. member referred does not in my opinion have the priority that he sought to assign to it.

Mr. Nesbitt: Does the hon. member apply that argument to functioning of all committees? If he does there is no purpose in having any committee meetings.

Mr. Gray: I do not accept that statement. We are dealing here with a particular case and in regard to this situation I believe we have followed an appropriate course. It may be that as time passes we will want to consider the progress made under this treaty. At that time we may seek an opportunity under the new committee structure to look into the matter. At this time I believe we have had reasonable opportunity for discussion. Certainly so far as I am concerned the industry, either from the point of view of individual firms or trade organizations, has had full access to the minister and individual members to put forward their positions. As far as I am aware they will continue to do so, and I am certainly willing to assist them in this regard in so far as I am able to as a private member.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, for the past few minutes, I have been listening to questions and answers popping up from both sides of the house, particularly intent upon weighing the administration of the present government and that of the government prior to 1963.

I hardly think that time should be wasted on judging governments while we have under consideration such an important item as a new agreement. If the government prior to 1963 emphasized exports and the present government wants to emphasize employment, I think quite objectively that it is ill-advised in both instances to champion such tendencies exclusively, because the economic field, whether in exports or in employment, is not solely influenced by the Canadian government but also by foreign and provincial factors that weigh upon economic patterns.

There is before the house a proposed resolution moved by the Minister of Industry and Defence Production (Mr. Drury) as follows:

> That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the agreement concerning automotive products between the government of Canada and the government of the United States of America, signed on January 16, 1965, and that this house do approve the same.

In the text of the agreement distributed by the Department of Industry, we read that the agreement is entitled: Agreement concerning Automotive Products between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this agreement is a very important event. I congratulate the government as well as the officials of the various departments who have shared in the formulation and the completion of such an agreement.

This is an important event since it concerns our relationship with the United States and our foreign trade. As concerns the United States, we have reached the point of self-awareness. Canada, with its small outlet of 20 million people, next to a giant with 200 million inhabitants, with geographic and economic conditions at times different, is at the point where it is establishing a closer and more profitable relationship. We have improved our economic problems, our commercial relationship with that country, and the areas of production and employment within Canada.

Thus, this agreement is a loyal gesture and I hope it will constitute a precedent, an open door to further agreements in this direction.

Since yesterday we have been hearing a lot of criticism, that is the members' role. I often criticize myself and I have some criticism to offer this morning. We are at the experiment stage with this agreement. It will have to be reviewed in six months. The agreement itself, in section 4, subsection 3, I think, provides for frequent consultations between the two governments.

Therefore, this is an experiment which should be tried with an open mind. It is worth trying to make it work by every possible means. Yet, the agreement raises very delicate questions. Our economic and trade position with the United States—our trade deficit with the United States is noted —is what we must try to improve constantly.

• (12:40 p.m.)

The hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray) stated that the deficit with the United States with regard to automotive products totalled $687 million. That is a fantastic amount and this agreement tries, of course, to improve that aspect of the trade deficit and to make the situation better.

There is also a new spirit between our two countries. The American parent companies have issued directives to their Canadian subsidiaries. On the other hand, the Canadian subsidiaries of those American companies seem to have complied with the directives issued to them by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters). It might be appropriate during this debate or some time soon for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to inform us about the reactions of the Canadian subsidiaries of American companies to the 4,000 letters which were sent to them, so that we might be in a position to judge if those companies, whose parent companies are outside Canada, are willing to see the situation in the same light as the Canadian government, the Canadian people, in short if they want to co-operate in the development of Canada, together with the other sectors of the Canadian economy, in the fields of trade, industry, investment and development.

This agreement also has some influence on our industrial production, our exports and our imports. It also has repercussions in the field of automation, on the qualifications of labour, its mobility, on the production of automobiles in Canada. The government and more Canadians should take an interest in the production of automobiles in Canada and set up Canadian firms with the help of the government and the support of either the Industrial Development Bank or that new federal body, namely the Canadian Development Corporation, whose establishment we have been expecting for a year or two.

I hope very much that the government or the responsible minister will introduce shortly in the house a bill dealing with the creation of that development corporation—and that is urgent—to enable Canadians to take over their own economic development.

The agreement aims at allowing the manufacturers to engage in the automobile business without custom duties between Canada and United States, to increase employment —there is talk of 60,000 new jobs—to reduce production costs, to improve the efficiency and productivity of the Canadian plants and also to reduce our $600 million deficit with regard to the automobile trade.

Those are the five objectives covered by this international agreement on automotive products between Canada and United States. These are very commendable aims which we must support so that positive results will be achieved in this regard.

Statistics show that exports to the United States of Canadian-made cars were as follows: 1962, 1,136 units; 1963, 3,504 units; 1964, 19,094 units and, in 1965, from January to October inclusive, 29,202 units. The total value of cars exported from Canada to the United States from January 1965 to November 1965 (these are the latest figures available on exports, in March 1966) amounted to $68,800,000. As to cars, of similar models which are best sellers, the price of the Canadian models, in 1965, was on the average 8 per cent higher while in 1966, the difference ranged from 3 to 5 per cent.

It can be seen that, inthe autmotive parts industry between Canada and the U.S., a very significant trading area is involved which is full of promises and destined to a growing economic future. This agreement initiated by Canada and the U.S. and subject to frequent consultations, of course, will likely bring results and be advantageous to both countries.

We know, of course, that this agreement was ratified by order in council passed in January 1965, while its terms are submitted to us for approval in May 1966. This means in fact an interval of a year and a half. This delay in my opinion is too long. We notice that in the United States, the matter was submitted much more promptly to the representatives of the people for consideration and approval. I understand, as the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray) pointed out, that there is no control and that the federal government is authorized to pass such an order. I am not discussing the legal aspect of the order in council, but I am of the opinion that the government took too long in submitting this agreement to the house. I believe that, in future, when similar agreements are signed with the United States or other countries, the house should be informed as soon as possible of the provisions of these agreements, so that we may issue the necessary warnings, bring about corrective measures and so that Canadians may bring forward their opinions in order that there may not be too much time between the formulation and the implementation of agreements as sound as this one and that corrections made be included in these important trade agreements.

Several voices have been heard in Canada with respect to this international agreement. For instance, the production director of the General Motors plant in Ste. Therese is quite enthusiastic about it. Indeed, as reported in the newspaper La Presse, of Wednesday May 4, 1966, he stated:

Next year, General Motors will double its production at its Ste. Therese plant and will export a part thereof to the United States.

• (12:50 p.m.)

This was the statement made to the representative of La Presse by Mr. D. C. Lowe, production director of the plant.

Also, the president of the Ford Motor Company of Canada, Mr. Scott, said that the agreement restricting free trade between Canada and the United States is a bold experiment in industrial policy, justified by very plain economic considerations.

We were also informed of a press release made by the Minister of Industry dated December 29, 1965 and containing very interesting information on automotive production and trade. I quote:

As a result of the assistance given by the department, 187 companies announced the expansion of their plants or the acquisition of new facilities. Of these companies, 71 have stated that the expansion will increase the number of workers by about 15,000 and 91 that the new capital investments amount to almost $402 million.

During the first nine months of 1965, Canadian exports of automobiles and automotive parts reached $220.8 million, that is 83 per cent more than the corresponding figure for 1964. Exports to the United States reached $123.9 million for the same period in 1965, double the value of the corresponding exports in 1964. Imports from the United States rose by 18 per cent, from $427.4 million in the first seven months of 1964 to $541 million for the corresponding period this year.

This program resulted in an appreciable narrowing of the price differential between Canadian and United States prices for comparable models of cars.

In August, the government established the Adjustment Assistance Board, to provide loans for auto parts manufacturers and transitional assistance to workers in the industry.

This, Mr. Speaker, is in my opinion a most eloquent press release, which for several months has allowed us to hope for important and useful results from the agreement recently presented in the house.

Several Canadian and American economists obviously see this agreement as a modern counterpart of free trade. This is, of course, the present trend in world trade and each country must study the possibility of more lively commercial exchanges with one or more countries, always considering its own interests.

In importing and exporting commodities and in abolishing trade barriers, it should be considered that too great an influx of foreign products would, for example, be harmful to Canadian industry, or the good results expected may be wiped out by bad consequences in other sectors of the economy.

For a number of years, say since 1955, international organizations have been established throughout the world, for example the European Common Market, the Group of Seven, the Common Market of Latin America—and there is talk of a Pacific, south Asian common market.

At all events, it is obvious that governments, businessmen and economists intend to consider seriously the question of setting up a policy of free trade between various countries.

The agreement under consideration follows this course. However, I would ask the minister and the government to be very careful. I was indeed happy to notice that section 4 of the agreement provides for frequent consultations, during this pilot experiment, if I may call it that, which will perhaps be the first of a series of agreements with the United States and other countries.

Hence, it is important that the Canadian government should keep a close watch on certain areas of the production of automotive parts and other products, if manufacturers settle in Canada. This agreement will have to be revised if necessary, in order to protect, in the first place and very efficiently, the Canadian manufacturer and then favour substantially the Canadian consumer.

Consideration should not be given to the manufacturer only; the latter and the consumer are not so far apart. Both must be taken into account, for the same reasons, in all agreements, in all provisions. The common good, the general welfare should be considered.

That is why, on the whole, it is the interest of the Canadian consumer that has to be taken into consideration in the automotive field. We must wait some time to see whether the Canadian consumer, the worker, the farmer, the white collar worker, the small wage earner, who needs an automobile to go to work or for recreation, will benefit by a reduction in the prices of automobiles.

There is some talk about it now, but there was a lot more talk about it during the last election campaign.

But let us put aside all partisan or fanatic considerations. This is quite a delicate economic matter; it is a pilot experiment. Personally, I am going to wait for the minister and the government to have these consultations and all the relevant material made available to us from one period to another, to see what is good or dangerous in the provisions of this agreement.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, we know that Canada produces 4 per cent and consumes 7.5 per cent of the North American automobile production. In 1966, Canada should produce 12 per cent. In the forthcoming months, we are going to watch very carefully the effects of this agreement.

Of course, voices were heard which means that Canada is a democratic country; sometimes these express controversial opinions because there has not been praise only and a general, categorical and spontaneous acceptance of this initiative of the Canadian government. Some people have already mentioned its ill effects. For instance, the Canadian Labour Congress, in the brief it presented this year to the federal government, mentioned and regretted the fact that the agreement between Canada and the United States concerning free trade of automotive parts had not brought about a decrease in the price of cars.

This organization represents a good part of the Canadian workers, precisely that class of citizens to whom I referred a while ago. They reflect in a more direct way the general welfare and common good and they deserve, as consumers, the ultimate and main consideration.

We also have competent journalists who made criticisms, following the decision of the Canadian government to be a party to such an agreement. And I quote, among others, who said in a Clément Brown editorial dated February 10:

> One year later, it is found that Canadian exports of cars went up indeed, but that, on the other hand, imports of American cars greatly exceeded our exports. There was, it is true, an increase of some $200 million in our exports, but there was also an increase of $500 million in imports of American cars.
> If you do not call that being taken in, then, facts no longer mean anything.

Mr. Speaker, this is one point of view which should be taken into account by the government and the minister.

The effects of imports and exports, those figures we will be getting in the months to come, will speak highly of the desirability for Canada of such an agreement.

Also, when Canada and the United States spoke about consulting each other and taking a decision along the live of today's agreement, some countries apparently expressed concern and made protests. In his final statement, the minister may be in a position to tell us about the concern of some foreign countries or about the assurance Canada and the United States gave to those other countries which are members of international organizations to which Canada belongs such as GATT.

I note, however, that section 3 of the agreement should allay the concern of other countries, since it reads as follows:

> The commitments taken by the two Governments under this agreement prevent neither one nor the other from doing anything provided for under the obligations undertaken in Part II of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Mr. Speaker, you are doubtless wondering why I have again risen to participate in this debate. I do not claim to be an expert on automobiles, far from it; I can just barely drive my own car adequately. On the other hand, I am most interested in the interventions of several members on the question, as well as the efforts of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) to convince us that automobile safety should be increased. If I have taken part in the discussion, it is because I believe that the members have a duty to speak on the main items of legislation, and this is one of them, because this pilot experiment will probably bring forth many other agreements which will help Canada along on the road to progress.

Therefore, I believe that every member should state his views on this question, because such an agreement may have some bearing on the industries in his own riding.

For instance, in the wonderful riding of Sherbrooke—you may possibly believe it is somewhat like in Hong Kong—all sorts of problems seem to crop up. Obviously, it is a model constituency from the viewpoints of industry, its bilingual character and the mutual understanding which exists in the industrial areas, but this agreement does not provide adequate protection in its regulations for the producers of original parts for the automobile industry.

I would like to bring to the attention of the minister a complaint originating with a Sherbrooke concern, the Bemis Associates of Canada Limited, manufacturers of vinyl covered fabrics, which is not considered as a supplier of original parts for the automobile industry. This company, as a result, does not meet the eligibility requirements under the regulations for assistance to the automotive products industry.

I would ask the hon. minister to consider the point of view of the Bemis and other companies which often face the same problem, and to extend the agreement so as to include the suppliers of materials to the automobile industry. These Canadian companies, like many others, are interested in going ahead with their industrial expansion and are willing to support the Canadian government in all good projects which, like this one, may bring about certain clashes which we hope to be temporary. We ask the minister to bring remedial measures in all fields and particularly those which could be affected by such a trade agreement between Canada and the United States.

[English]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in this topic for a number of reasons. I have been listening to the debate and reading what was said yesterday by hon. members who spoke then. The ground has been well covered and I do not wish to repeat some of the arguments that have been used already. I noticed that the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales), the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott), the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) put forward quite a number of very good arguments yesterday in connection with this very important matter. We have heard today from those who have been defending the agreement and attempting to indicate how useful it has been for Canada.

When the matter was raised in the house a year ago a great deal of emphasis was placed on the fact that our balance of payments situation, particularly as it affected the automotive industry, would be improved by the operation of this plan. However, we have had the evidence presented to us yesterday by the hon. member for Wellington South that this has not been the case. He pointed out that the net automotive trade deficit with the United States rose from $578 million in 1964 to $674 million in 1965, an increase of almost $100 million. The great fanfare that we listened to a year ago to the effect that the balance of payments situation would be improved was just propaganda and not based on an accurate assessment of exactly what was going to happen.

I have looked at the index for Hansard for 1965 and just as an indication of how important the automotive industry is to Canada, as reflected by questions and debate in the house, you will find that the references in the index to the automotive industry in various forms cover one and a half pages. It is a vitally important subject, not only to those in central and eastern Canada who are engaged in the manufacture of automobiles but to those living in other parts of Canada who are consumers and pay the price for automobiles. Hope was held out to us a year ago that there would be a reduction in the price of cars as a result of this agreement but that hope has not been realized. We have not seen the benefit of that yet.

There was a great deal of talk about increased employment, but offsetting that has been a decrease in employment depending on the segment of the automotive industry at which you are looking. As was pointed out in the debate yesterday, you may have an increase in employment on the assembly line and a decrease in employment in the parts manufacturing area. All told, therefore, it is an uncertain course that has been pursued by the government.

One of the main complaints from this side of the house, and one with which I want to deal, is the method by which this agreement has been brought before parliament. A year ago we were advised that the government had signed an agreement with the United States. We were told there would be an opportunity for parliament to consider the matter but that opportunity was not brought forward by the government; it was seized by the opposition.

• (1:10 p.m.)

The leader of the New Democratic Party moved an amendment to a supply motion in order to deal with the subject, and questions, of course, where raised from time to time from this side of the house. But the actual agreement was not brought forward to us for ratification. Yet it is strange that on May 10 of 1965 the Minister of Industry said, as found on page 1126 of Hansard:

> The measures on the Canadian side were brought into operation by order in council in January of this year. The agreement itself will come into full operation on both sides of the border as soon as Congress has enacted duty free entry into the United States and the resolution presented to parliament has been approved by the Canadian parliament.

That was in May, 1965. This is now May, 1966. One year later the resolution is placed before us. As recorded on page 1125 the minister had already said on the same occasion:

> There has never been any intention on the part of the government to sign, implement, ratify, or consummate a treaty without first seeking the approval of parliament, accompanied by an appropriate debate and on opportunity for the expression of opinions.

I suggest, sir, that those statements of the minister scarcely accord with the facts. This agreement was made known to the house in January, 1965. It should have been debated immediately. It should have been settled by the house one way or another before it became operative. But parliament was bypassed. Now, almost a year and a half later, parliament is asked to validate this agreement. Parliament is asked to be a rubberstamp for executive action. This places parliament in a very awkward situation indeed. I find it rather disturbing.

I notice that when the Minister of Transport was dealing with the point of order raised last night he said, as found on page 4781 of Hansard:

> We all know that under the strict interpretation of the constitution these agreements are ratified by the Crown and they do not in fact require—though it is a constitutional practice—to ask for approval of the house.

Then he went on to say:

> If what has become a constitutional practice is followed, the agreement would not be ratified by any future government without the consent of the house, if it came forward again. If the ordinary constitutional practice which we now have is followed, any agreement of this sort is brought by the government to both houses before there is ratification.

This has not happened. The constitutional practice has not been followed. This agreement was not ratified with the United States after parliament had approved it but before. Therefore you have a break with constitutional practice which I think should be very carefully examined by parliament. I think that the other house, if it is not too burdened with duties, might very well examine the encroachment on the rights of parliament by the executive. It is my belief that the power of the executive in this country is increasing. In the famous words of the past, it has increased, is increasing and ought to be diminished.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: This is a first class example how the power of the executive has been used to derogate the rights of parliament, which runs quite contrary to the history of our country.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King was frequently heard to speak about the supremacy of parliament. He frequently raised objections, as have other hon. members of the house from time to time, against the encroachments of executive power. When he was prime minister he put before parliament in June, 1926, a treaty or international agreement which he wanted ratified by the house. He was very careful to indicate that parliamentary approval was essential. On page 4762 of Hansard for 1926 he used these words:

> The present government by this resolution is asking parliament to approve of a course of procedure which will involve with respect to treaties, involving military and economic sanctions, the approval of parliament before the government of the day agrees to any obligation implied in the treaty being undertaken in the name of the country.

That was sound doctrine in 1926. It is sound doctrine for today.

On page 4767, during the course of the same debate, Mr. Cahan, the then member for St. Lawrence-St. George, speaking on behalf of the opposition used these words:

> I understand that the duly authorized representatives of the Canadian government may, in accordance with its terms, properly sign treaties or conventions on behalf of Canada without having received the prior authority of the parliament of Canada to do so—

This is the important sentence corresponding with what Prime Minister Mackenzie King said:

—but that no such treaty or convention or agreement so signed shall be binding upon Canada until it has been formally approved by the parliament of Canada.

That has been the constitutional practice throughout our history. There are many instances of the signing of international treaties by representatives of the government of Canada, but those treaties have not become effective and have not been applicable to the Canadian situation until they have been ratified by parliament. Here we have an instance where constitutional practice has been completely ignored. The supremacy of parliament has been placed to one side, and by executive action in January, 1965, this country was committed to a treaty with the United States dealing with economic matters, without ratification by parliament.

A year and a half later, in order to validate this agreement, the minister has come before us asking for our consent. You can see the awkward position that we are placed in if parliament refuses to assent now. You can readily realize the disruption that would occur because of the very extensive changes which have occurred in the automotive industry during the last year and a half. A blunderbuss is placed at the head of parliament. We are in effect told to approve of the treaty or a chaotic condition will result in the automotive industry. So, whether Canada has benefited or not, and I am not debating that issue at the moment, parliament in effect is almost compelled to assent to something that was done without its authority a year and a half ago.

How far is this to go? Is the power of the executive to be exercised in the case of other agreements of a similar nature without the approval of parliament or is parliament going to assert its control over the executive? Mackenzie King's oft-repeated statement about the supremacy of parliament must be considered here. The reason I raise this issue is that in the course of remarks made yesterday by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) these words occur as reported at page 4773 of Hansard:

There is some talk about extending this agreement to, or making a new agreement with, the timber and lumber business. We can also do it in the plastics business, the chemicals industry and the services industry. We might find ourselves with 1,000 agreements with United States manufacturers.

The hon. member then went on to present arguments in favour of this method of expanding our trade. Is this kite-flying by a member on the government side to encourage the minister to make further agreements of this kind, to accustom the people of Canada to the fact that other agreements may be made by executive action without the consent of parliament? The hon. member for York East said nothing about the ineptitude of the present method. He said nothing about the supremacy of parliament. He just accepted the fact that the executive, according to his philosophy of political life, may make agreements of this kind and then bludgeon parliament into agreeing to them.

I would suggest to the hon. member for York East that a cautionary note with regard to his proposal has come from a high source in the hierachy of the Liberal party. I have not yet had an opportunity to read the book which has now been published by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon) and I regret having to advertise it as others have done. Nevertheless it may be worth reading. I was not sure that I would buy the book and read it until I saw a comment in a newspaper as to its contents. The contents seem to disclose a sharp division of opinion within the ranks of the Liberal party with regard to economic matters and whenever I discern a sharp difference of opinion within the Liberal party I like to read any article or book in which reference is made to it because I am very much concerned about the survival of the Liberal party.

The newspaper—it is the Globe and Mail of today's date—refers to Mr. Gordon's book and says:

He rejected the concept of continentalism for Canadian and United States business saying he would not favour extension to other industries of the 1965 conditional free trade agreement in cars.

So here we find one of the leading members on the government side, the former minister of finance, suggesting there should be no further extension of agreements of this nature and therefore in effect disapproving of the present agreement. I suggest to the hon. member for York East and to others who may be of his opinion that this kite-flying with regard to the extension of agreements of this nature should be checked out with the author of this book, the hon. member for Davenport. Maybe they are saying the wrong things at the wrong time and will cause dissension and disruption within their party, something which should, of course, be avoided.

Taking into account the weight of an opinion expressed by a former minister of finance, I think we are right on this side in asking for a very careful examination of the operation of this agreement. I am surprised that the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) did not accede to the request put forward yesterday that the agreement should be referred to a committee. Why would he resist such a suggestion? I would draw the attention of the house to the intense interest which was shown by hon. members when the automobile industry was discussed last session. That interest is still evident. The industry we are considering is one of the great industries of Canada. We all want it to be strong and flourishing. We all want to see the development of the automobile industry in Canada. We would like a great number of highly skilled Canadians to be involved in it. We would like to see our exports of automobiles increase. We would like to see the development of parts manufacturing in Canada. We would like to see a reduction in the cost of automobiles to the consuming public.

This being the case and in view of the intense interest taken in the industry, why should there not be a full examination of this subject? We have committees here which could look into the matter and hear evidence not only from officials of the government but from representatives of the automobile industry and the public. We could carry out a first class examination of this agreement as well as of the development of the industry in Canada.

The minister would, I think, reject the idea of an examination by a committee, though I am not sure. A motion proposing such an examination was ruled out of order. Possibly he will not object to this proposal. Indeed, he may be the one to suggest it and persuade Mr. Speaker to accept a motion made by him to that effect. If the agreement were dependent upon an immediate settlement of this question the minister might argue: there is no time; we must sign the pact now or the whole arrangement will fall through. That would be a serious argument. But the agreement has been in effect now for a year and a half. It was not brought forward in 1965 for ratification by parliament; it was brought forward a year and a half later. A fait accompli has been achieved.

In these circumstances there can be no serious objections to there being a little further delay so as to enable a committee to make an examination of this agreement. Indeed, the minister himself should be the one to suggest that all these matters might very well be placed before a committee. Let us give him the benefit of the doubt. His ideals with regard to the automotive industry may have been very sound and his actions may have been taken with the best motives in the world. I am not quarrelling with him on that score at all.

On the other hand, the agreement may not have worked out as it was depicted to us in such glowing colours a year ago. If it has not, let us know about it and perhaps the defects can be corrected. Why should we not have a committee to investigate this matter and why did we not have one last year? I doubt that there is anything more disturbing than what happened last year when we had to get our information about this agreement second hand from Congressional investigations in the United States. That is the wrong way to go about things. Yesterday the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) drew our attention to this when he said, as recorded at page 4764 of Hansard:

> As a matter of fact we obtained most of our information from the hearings in Washington. Incidentally, it has always been embarrassing to me as a member of the House of Commons that we have to rely on the senators in Washington to snap their fingers and get the detailed information which we wanted from our own government in Canada but could not get.

I recall the questions put and the answers given in this house last year on that very subject of information coming out of Washington through a Congressional committee about a matter upon which we could not get information here and yet it was just as important to us as to anybody in the United States. Now, a year and a half later, I suggest to the minister we still have an opportunity to appoint a committee, if you like a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, to investigate the automotive industry and this agreement in order to see whether the agreement is really operating as it should or should be modified. If it is found that it should be modified the matter should then be taken up with the United States.

Another reason can be advanced for appointing a committee of inquiry at the present time. I understand this agreement runs for three years.

Mr. Drury: No, unlimited duration.

Mr. Churchill: That is all the more reason for an investigation.

Mr. Drury: Why don't you read the agreement?

Mr. Churchill: This is all the more reason for an investigation because, if it is a perpetual agreement, we need to know whether it will benefit Canada or will be to our disadvantage. Why should this rest solely with the executive, a few people elevated to brief authority who make a decision in perpetuity of this nature without parliament giving its approval prior to the signing of the agreement?

I am glad the minister interrupted and corrected me because it shows exactly how serious the matter is. The executive of this country is setting itself above parliament and above the people of the country. It is tying us forever to an agreement with the automotive industry of a powerful neighbour, an agreement which may be to our serious disadvantage. If we are at equality with the automotive industry in the United States let us settle that point by a thorough investigation. But if we will be at a serious disadvantage in the future let us find out now so that steps can be taken to correct the situation. This emphasizes the whole point of the argument with which I started, that the cabinet has gone beyond its powers in making an international agreement without the sanction and authority of the House of Commons. The supremacy of parliament has been completely ignored.

The executive has set itself up as the supreme authority in this country and apparently is prepared to do anything it likes without the authority of parliament. Once it sets this precedent it can move from that point to another. It can break the constitutional procedure of the past and the precedents set in the past. This is what the executive has done. It reminds me of those years in the 1950's when we were battling about the excessive powers of the executive.

The minister was trained in that particular school when the government of that day wanted to ride roughshod over parliament. Now he is doing the same thing without having fully considered the extent of the derogation of parliament that has ensued from his action. I suggest that the supremacy of parliament must be re-established in this country and that the power of the prime minister and the executive must be diminished.

Mr. Addison: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Churchill: Of course.

Mr. Addison: I listened to his speech with great interest and I was unable to ascertain, even though he felt that parliament would reluctantly agree to this agreement, whether or not he was in favour of further agreements of this type. Is he?

Mr. Churchill: That is a hypothetical question. I was simply dealing with the automotive agreement. I brought to hon. members' attention an expression of opinion of one of the senior members of his party, and I suggest that the hon. member talk to the hon. member for Davenport.

Mr. Milton L. Klein (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I rise only to discuss one statement made yesterday by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) when he said, as recorded at page 4763 of Hansard:

> Of course, the agreement brings out the whole problem of foreign ownership. The real problem, it seems to me, about foreign ownership in Canada does not come out of trying to make political decisions. The real problem that I have encountered in the little travelling I have done in Canada is that the Canadian people themselves do not have the guts to build a Canadian owned economy.

This statement is partially true. One of the real problems facing Canada is that Canada does not have enough people. We cannot expect to be big if we remain numerically small. We cannot expect to compete on the North American continent or share the North American continent when we remain at the ratio of 20 to one population wise.

The strength of the United States lies in the fact that it does not have to export, that its domestic market is big enough to absorb the productive capacity of the nation. We are not in that position. We can produce much more in this country than the citizens of the country are able to consume.

It would seem to me that the only way to deal with the question of foreign ownership is not by creeping nationalization or creeping expropriation but by diluting foreign ownership in this country through creating Canadian investment. If there is an industry where, for example, foreign control is in the ratio of 80 per cent to 20 per cent Canadian, the way to deal with that problem is to introduce in that particular phase of commerce Canadian competition so that over the years we will be able with a greater population to reduce that 80 per cent and the 80 per cent foreign control will by dilution become 20 per cent and the Canadian proportion will rise to 80 per cent.

This, however, will take time. It will take years to accomplish, but we will accomplish economic sovereignty with political maturity. At this stage I believe it is politically immature to complain about foreign investment in this country when so many Canadians are dependant for their very livelihood on foreign investment in Canada.

It has been suggested that the Studebaker plant in Hamilton should be purchased. It would seem to me that here is an excellent opportunity to create a pilot corporation. I always ask myself this question: If Sweden can manufacture an automobile completely, why cannot Canada manufacture its own car? It might be a very good suggestion if the government would consider, along with the labour unions of this country and the banks, the purchase of the plant in Hamilton so that it might be operated as a joint venture of the government, the labour unions and the banks. It seems to me that the labour unions in this country could play a much larger role than they are playing now in an effort to remedy the situation about which the hon. member for Danforth is complaining.

The labour unions of Canada possess huge treasuries. If it requires legislation to release pension funds, if it requires legislation to allow trust companies to invest in Canadian enterprises of this kind, I think this is the way to tackle the problem presented yesterday by the hon. member for Danforth. It could be so arranged that the government, if it did participate in this joint venture, could participate in a manner by which it could dispossess itself of its shares in the enterprise by releasing them to the public when the corporation was in a healthy state of existence. So I would say to the hon. member for Danforth that there are many avenues through which he might be persuaded to help our economy and one is by getting the New Democratic Party and the labour unions of this country to favour wide-scale immigration into Canada.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): We do.

Mr. Klein: You do not. The New Democratic Party is opposed to immigration. You will accept immigration of skilled labour only. You will not accept wide-scale immigration into this country and I say it is this practice which is keeping this country down.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I know the hon. member wishes to be accurate. That is not the position of the New Democratic Party. If the hon. member wishes, we would be glad to send him the convention manifesto which would make it clear that this party for years has favoured much wider immigration than this government has been prepared to permit.

I am intrigued by this venture into socialism in respect of the buying of the Hamilton factory. I wonder whether the hon. member could indicate to us how this would work, who would buy the cars, how would you merchandise them, where would you sell them?

Mr. Klein: I do not know how we would do it. I am merely trying to indicate some of the things we could attempt to do to bring about the very things about which you were complaining in your speech. There was a period in recent history when Canada was the fourth largest manufacturing company in the world. That was because we were exporting the products of Canadian companies to those areas in Europe which at that time were devastated by the war and were not manufacturing the same articles themselves. So we had ready-made markets for the products of Canadian industry. Today those countries to which we were shipping products yesterday are producing them themselves. Therefore I think it would be a very splendid idea for Canada, if we are no longer able to export the product, to import the customer.

I would reiterate that the basic problem in Canada is the fact that when we speak of Canada we must know what we are speaking about. We are speaking about five, six, or maybe ten industrial centres. It is not that the rest of Canada is not important but from the point of view of population Canada consists only of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Hamilton, Vancouver and a few other centres. Aside from these eight or ten centres Canada is a barren, empty country. In order to remedy the situation my plea today is that we should have a broader and wider immigration policy.

Mr. John H. Addison (York North): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate and my remarks will be brief and rather to the point. I often have wondered whether the "grass" or backbenchers had any influence over a cabinet minister. Two weeks ago in the wind-up of the budget debate I urged upon the minister as strongly as I could that after about 15 months he should bring the United States-Canada auto agreement to parliament so that we might examine it. Two weeks later, by good luck or good management, here it is.

Mr. Churchill: The cabinet needs a lot of direction like that.

An hon. Member: It was coincidental.

Mr. Addison: The agreement has been considered very thoroughly both by the minister in his opening remarks and by members from each party in the house. There are two aspects of the agreement which bother me, as I am sure they bother other members in the house.

• (1:50 p.m.)

One of my reasons for asking the minister to bring the agreement before the house as soon as possible is the activity and interest in Canada in respect of safety in so far as the automobile industry is concerned. The United States government and the United States manufacturers who control the automobile industry and manufacturing facilities in Canada have agreed to work in co-operation to provide legislation in so far as safety equipment is concerned. Therefore we will be automatically included under this agreement. It seems to me we should know exactly where we stand in this parliament if we are going to be asked to pass laws to increase highway safety. Standards of safety in the United States might be different from those we feel are necessary in Canada. Certainly in the past there has been a difference in the specifications of a United States manufactured car and a Canadian manufactured car.

We have all read the guarantees which form part of this agreement. I hope that we will continue to enjoy distinctively Canadian automobiles but I suppose this will depend on the good will of the manufacturers. Over the years we have developed distinctive names for Canadian manufactured cars and I hope this situation will continue. In the future I hope we will see more research and development in Canada but at the present time very little of that type of activity takes place here. While manufacturing facilities are being used primarily to produce automobiles and provide employment in an effort to alleviate our balance of payments problem, I hope that some development will take place in Canada whereby manufacturers will undertake to bring skilled people into this country.

The hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) asked what the alternative would be if the price of cars in Canada did not come down so as to be more comparable with existing prices in the United States. In my opinion these prices will come down over a period of time because it is in the best interests of manufacturers, unions and everyone concerned with the automobile industry to bring our prices into favourable comparison with United States prices.

We all realize that this agreement pertains only to manufacturers and at the present time only to manufacturers of original equipment. There is no suggestion that someone could go from Canada to the United States and purchase an automobile at a lower price and return with it. That is not the purpose of this agreement. However, in connection with the suggestions of the hon. member for Danforth, there should be some voluntary aspects in price labelling of automobiles in the future and I believe that prices should be clearly indicated and that these labels should remain affixed to the automobiles until they have been delivered.

The advantages of this agreement have been enumerated by previous speakers. In my own area, which is about half way between Oshawa and Oakville, the opportunities for new manufacturing facilities are immense and already one factory is located in the township of Whitchurch.

Mr. Winkler: We should have a little more decentralization.

Mr. Addison: I should like to comment briefly on Canada's automobile industry so far as foreign markets are concerned. We supply quite a large number of automobiles to the Caribbean market, which is a favourable one for Canada, not only because of our relationship with Caribbean countries but because this trade signifies to them, many of whom are emerging as independent countries, that Canada is a real friend. As a result of our distinctive Canadian automobiles going into these areas we are able to build up a good reputation in these markets.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) was critical of the government for the way this treaty was brought about. It seems to me that over the last 15 months we have had a reasonable opportunity to observe the effects of the agreement, which to this point have been excellent. I think the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) and the government should be complimented in this regard.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winkler: Well, you have one supporter but he only used one hand.

Mr. Addison: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre made reference to a book now being published, written by the former minister of finance. I have read excerpts from this book which appeared in the Globe and Mail on Thursday, May 5, and I should like to quote a portion of the article:

> Referring to events during his term as finance minister, Mr. Gordon indicated that Time and Reader's Digest magazines were exempted from the Canadian ownership legislation of 1965 as a trade-off to secure passage through Congress of the auto agreement. The legislation extended to newspapers and magazines the existing law requiring that control of Canadian radio and television stations must be held by Canadian nationals. Time and Reader's Digest were exempted on the grounds, Mr. Gordon said, that these periodicals had operated in Canada for many years and recently had been doing their printing in this country.
> "Many people were unhappy about the exemption of Time," he said. "Its preferred position makes the establishment of new Canadian magazines more difficult."

I hope in this particular instance, where we have a strong, equitable bargain, that we have not at the same time traded away the possibility of distinctively Canadian publications being successful. I realize that the automobile business is, as the hon. member for Danforth said, a horse trading business. When we renegotiate this agreement, which runs in perpetuity, I hope we shall do so with wisdom. The agreement has the stipulation that it can be cancelled after one year and at the end of 1968 it will be renegotiated. I am sure Canadian manufacturers will eventually be expected to stand on their own feet. The guarantees presently enunciated in the agreement will sooner or later disappear, at which time we will be expected to produce automobiles in this country at prices comparable with prices existing now in the United States. I am sure we will be successful.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of participating in this debate but after listening to the remarks of some hon. members the thought struck me that because this agreement is to last forever there will have to be amendments made from time to time. That is only a common-sense approach to the situation because we could not have a hard and fast treaty with terms that are suitable now applying in the future in the light of changing world conditions.

The point I am making is that it would be a good idea to refer this agreement to a committee of the house before renegotiating in order that parliament might have all the existing facts before it. Obviously we are not going to be successful in having this resolution referred to a committee prior to its approval because the government will not accept that proposal. However, in future, because of changing world conditions, a committee of this house should make a thorough examination of conditions at the time of renegotiation in order that the aims and purposes of this treaty can be attained.

The last speaker has just suggested that the Canadian automobile industry will be expected to stand on its own feet in the future. I think the industry is standing on its own two feet now and that if we continue to take advantage of the favourable parts of this treaty the industry will benefit. One must remember that we are now operating on a devalued dollar basis. What would happen if a situation developed in which there was closer parity between the Canadian and U.S. dollar? It is in the light of this type of consideration that I suggest a committee of this house should have the most up to date information possible regarding the difference in automobile prices between Canada and the United States.

There is a host of other points which must be taken into consideration when this treaty is renegotiated. The last speaker referred to research. I agree wholeheartedly that if and when greater and better research facilities are developed here trained Canadian researchers will remain in the Canadian industry.

It would seem to me that these are all matters we should be discussing as we proceed from the point of passing this treaty. We should be discussing them not just when any change is considered desirable in future but right through the piece so that we in the House of Commons will be kept up to date.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my intervention in this debate will be very brief because the matter I intend to raise by way of a question to the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) is rather outside the scope of the agreement now being debated in the house. It arises from a question I asked the other day and the fact that Nova Scotia, which is one of the three automobile producing areas of Canada, apparently faces a difficulty regarding tariff arrangements. The voluntary economic planning board of the province has pointed this out. Therefore, Mr.

Speaker, my point is simply to ask the minister whether he and the government will bring their good offices to bear, if necessary, to see that an infant industry in my province is protected.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think we have had an interesting and not too protracted discussion of this particular question. I have found it most interesting, instructive and helpful. I am very glad indeed to have noted that there has been on all sides of the house general agreement with this agreement. Observations have been made as well as some complaints, but I have sensed in this house, as elsewhere in the country, general agreement with the fact that the government has made this kind of agreement with the United States.

I would particularly point out that although there have been some coy suggestions about eventually giving approval, no one has suggested that this agreement entered into in 1965 was a bad thing and should not have been entered into. I agree that it has given rise to some questions in the minds of members. There have been suggestions made that perhaps years and years ago we should have organized our automobile industry in a way different from that which existed in 1965 but that given the facts of the nature, structure and size of the automobile industry in Canada in 1965 this agreement is a sensible and useful course of action for Canada to have taken.

One might divide the observations made into two classes, one procedural and the other relating to substance. I shall try to deal with them in that order. A number of members have mentioned the fact that this agreement has been in existence for some 15 months and only now is ratification being sought. It has been referred to as a treaty. I should, without appearing to be trying to give a lecture, distinguish between a treaty and an agreement. A treaty is a formal instrument between two nation states which binds the states as states. Reference has been made to Mr. Mackenzie King's procedure in dealing with treaties in that in the normal course of events treaties call for ratification by the legislative bodies of the two nation states. But in this case this is not a treaty. It is an agreement between the administrations of two countries governing the exercise of their normal administrative functions—

Mr. Churchill: Is it binding?

Mr. Drury: —in carrying out their duties as authorized by the legislature of the United States and the parliament of Canada. This is all that is being done. In the case of the United States a formal reference was made to the United States Congress in respect of this agreement, not with a view to ratifying a treaty but in order to implement their undertakings, and to do the things they wanted to do the United States administration had to seek from Congress a change in the law of the United States. We were more fortunate in that the operations in Canada could be carried out without any change in the law.

Mr. Lambert: Under what authority?

Mr. Drury: Under the various laws providing for the administration of Canada.

Mr. Lambert: Including the remission of duty?

Mr. Drury: Including the remission of duty.

Mr. Lambert: As a general policy of remission of duty or simply the power to remit duty in particular cases?

Mr. Drury: The power to remit duty.

Mr. Lambert: In particular cases?

Mr. Drury: The power to remit duty. If this had been a treaty I would have agreed with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) that ratification would be required and that such a treaty could not become operative until ratification had been sought and obtained. The object in introducing a resolution to be approved by parliament was to provide members with an occasion for a discussion of this agreement. Perhaps the fact that it has been, to some degree in any event, in operation for a period of 15 months makes such a discussion much more intelligible than would have been the case if it had all been purely hypothetical. It is quite clear to me that hypothetical questions of a serious character are not at issue in respect of this agreement.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Drury: Some doubts have been expressed as to the way in which this agreement is operating. Some questions have been asked regarding whether the results are good or bad. But surely we are in a much better position to judge the results when we have partial results than if nothing had been done at all.

Mr. Churchill: Could I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Drury: Yes.

Mr. Churchill: If the agreement was turned down by parliament, would the cabinet simply ignore parliament's opinion?

Mr. Drury: If parliament failed to approve this agreement, obviously we would have exactly the same situation as when the House of Commons declines to approve an act of policy of the government which it is within the administrative abilities or functions of the government to carry out without parliamentary approval. This normally, of course, takes the form of a confidence motion. The result of failure to approve the agreement in this case would be exactly the same as failure of the government to secure the support of the house on a motion of confidence. I do not think I need tell the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that.

If I may continue from the point at which I was interrupted, Mr. Speaker, a consequence of deferring discussion on this agreement until such time as it had been in partial operation for a while makes such discussion more intelligible and consequently, I think, more constructive. I would hope that members of the house would welcome this delay rather than deplore it for purely technical, procedural or hypothetical reasons.

Mr. Lambert: Would the minister accept that principle in regard to other legislation or does it apply only in this case?

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker, this is not legislation. We are not dealing with legislation.

Mr. Lambert: Oh.

Mr. Drury: I would stop the hon. gentleman there. The suggestion has been made that this agreement might be referred to a committee for examination. The reason advanced is that there is great interest in the agreement and it will enable the house to be better informed as a consequence of examining both members of the administration and outside witnesses. As evidence of this interest, the hon. member referred to the large number of references in Hansard in the course of the past year to the automobile agreement. I note in passing that there is a page and a half in the Hansard index—not Hansard text—showing where information is to be obtained and was given and coupled with the debate we have already had on a supply motion this does seem to me to provide a fair and adequate answer to the charge or suggestion that the government has not been providing any information on this subject and has been withdrawn and secretive.

In so far as reference to a committee is concerned, I believe the house will recall the discussion we had a few days ago on the problem of securing quorums for parliamentary committees and the desirability of reducing them. The argument was made that this was necessary because there were so many committees meeting simultaneously and they had so much work to do that it was impossible to secure a very large attendance. To refer this to a committee would indicate a lightheartedness and disregard really for what are urgent questions for discussion by committees. To refer this matter to a committee on the grounds that somebody might be interested does not seem to me to be a very practical or businesslike way of conducting the business of parliament.

Mr. Winkler: Will the minister permit a question? Does he not think that at this stage, after the agreement has been in effect for so many months, the benefit of advice from manufacturers themselves would be essential to parliament to determine whether the government had indeed done something valuable or otherwise? This is all we are asking; this is all we have asked during the entire debate.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, if a parliamentary committee is going to endeavour to ascertain from the manufacturers whether they endorese this agreement, which they have already done in the form of letters tabled in the house, I do not believe that anything will be gained, to be quite frank. In my view it would be a misuse of parliamentary time to thrust this additional chore onto already overloaded parliamentary committees.

Mr. Winkler: It would at least be a democratic exercise.

Mr. Drury: Perhaps I should not comment on that. If the hon. gentleman equates democracy and inefficiency, perhaps there is some substance in what he says. I have the view, however, that democracy can be common-sense and efficient and still be democratic, and this is what we should be aiming at.

In so far as questions of substance are concerned, I listened to a number of members impute to the government statements that the object of this agreement was to reduce or rectify or correct our balance of payments deficit with the United States. Although it is supposed to be bad form to quote oneself, I should perhaps refer to the statement I made when this agreement was first announced. This statement on January 15, 1965 expressed in clear terms the objectives of the agreement. At that time I said:

> This program is designed to achieve a substantial expansion in production and employment and promote improved competitive efficiency in this important sector of Canadian manufacturing.

That is the opening paragraph of the statement and it contains, therefore, a statement of the objectives of this agreement. It has been quite evident from the comments of hon. members that these objectives are in the course of being achieved. I am prepared to admit quite frankly that the added bonus for which one would have felt grateful had we been able in the first year of operation to cure the imbalance has not been achieved. However, it should be quite clear to hon. members that the rate of growth of our exports is very much larger than the rate of growth of our imports in this field. If, as one would expect, there will be a continuation of this trend as the agreement becomes fully implemented and effective and this satisfactory trend continues, there will as a consequence be an improvement in the long run in our balance of payments deficit.

As I mentioned in my opening remarks, there has been an increase in absolute terms in the deficit in the first year of operations. It is unrealistic to expect that the industry in Canada, which manufactures only some 60 per cent of total sales of automotive products in Canada, will arrive at a situation in a vastly and rapidly expanding market where our imports would not seem to increase, but we have not been able in the first year to make a sufficient penetration of the American market to offset the increase in imports needed to serve the increase in our domestic sales.

However, I would ask the house to be patient with us and share with me the expectation that the current favourable trend of more rapidly rising exports than the rate of rising imports will continue and that there will be not only an anticipated but a real improvement in our balance of payments in this field.

I point out again that this is not the main and cardinal object of the agreement. The main object is to increase production in Canada on a more efficient basis and to provide more employment opportunities in our country. This, I suggest, is demonstrably under way.

Reference has also been made to the kind of expansion in production taking place and as a consequence the quality of the labour and the type of jobs which are being created. Mention has been made of the fact that so far there have been created some 10,000 new jobs. I believe the suggestion has been made by some members that all these will be men who put on nuts and bolts on the assembly line and that rather more skilled labour will be disappearing. I should point out that of these 10,000 new jobs slightly less than half of them are in the parts manufacturing industry. This, I think, would indicate that we are not becoming merely assemblers of motor vehicles. Indeed, in terms of total production, the house will recall that one of the things on which we insisted in the arrangements with the motor car companies was that they must maintain in Canada a ratio of assembly to total domestic sales no lower than they had in the past. I am glad to say that in terms of assembly operation in relation to total operation, this ratio continues to be substantially what it was at the outset of the agreement.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Reference was made also to the sales tax and duties and the difficulties facing manufacturers in expanding when forced to pay sales tax and duties on new production machinery they had to acquire in order to meet the expanded production. In the view of some members this was imposing on them an impossible task, and a rather more moderate view was that this was unfair. The answer, of course, to the question of the impossibility of both paying sales tax and duties and making other expenditures is given in the number and size of the expansions already achieved. If it were impossible to expand or set up new plants as a consequence of this taxation statute, then a very large number of Canadian manufacturers of both automobiles and components have succeeded in achieving the impossible.

Mr. Nesbitt: Are those independent manufacturers or subsidiaries of the major automobile companies?

Mr. Drury: Both, independent manufacturers and automobile manufacturers themselves and their subsidiaries. I am glad to say that this expansion has taken place over the whole spectrum and is not confined to one particular area. As to the contention that payment of sales tax and duties at a time when expansion is being urged upon them is unfair, I feel this is probably a question for the judgment of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp).

As he explained in his budget with regard to the prospective rate of expansion in Canada at the present juncture, the object of his budget in popular terms was to remove some pressure on the accelerator, namely, to slow down the rate of expansion. It has not been evident to me so far that as a consequence of the non-removal of the sales tax it will not be possible for the Canadian automotive industry to meet contracts, both with respect to quantity and in relation to other aspects of the agreement. Whether they will be able to do this on as profitable terms as they would have been able to do had the sales tax been removed is, of course, another question. There is no doubt about it that the manufacturer who is relieved of tax payments has more money available for retained earnings than if he had to pay the tax.

I do not know, and I do not have reason to know, that the proposal of the Minister of Finance to remove progressively over the next two years the sales tax on production machinery will make it impossible for both motor car manufacturers and parts manufacturers to achieve the targets toward which the agreement has been aimed. In so far as duties are concerned on imported machinery, which appears to be one of the main apprehensions, it has been stated that most of the manufacturers who have to import this production machinery because it is not manufactured in Canada are placed at a serious competitive disadvantage in relation to United States competitors by reason of having to pay a duty of 22.5 per cent on their production machinery. The fact of the matter is, I am advised, that in the case of production machinery not manufactured in Canada, which is imported by the automotive industry for the manufacture of automobiles, there is a tariff drawback of 99 per cent of the duty. This means that for all practical purposes there is no imposition of this 22.5 per cent duty on machinery required for expansion.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Nesbitt: Would the minister permit a question in this regard? Will the minister agree that in many cases, with regard to machinery used for production purposes of a class or kind made in Canada, on which there would be a duty of 22.5 per cent if it were imported from the United States, under present economic conditions in Canada there may be a waiting period of a year or a year and a half before this machinery can be obtained in Canada, so in order to meet production schedules it becomes necessary to import it from either the United States or the United Kingdom?

Mr. Drury: I agree that this is the kind of choice that faces every entrepreneur. He has to make his choice on the balance of economic advantage. Perhaps in this regard I should say that the problem of levying duty on machinery of a class or kind which could be manufactured in Canada, but which in actual fact cannot be manufactured within what I might call a practical time, is receiving consideration by the government now. I suggest that in so far as machinery not made in Canada is concerned, in practical terms there is no duty levied.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am very glad to hear that.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: One other question which was raised was car prices. I think in my opening remarks I did indicate that the only intelligent comparison that can be made of car prices or car costs would be at the manufacturers' level. When I say "intelligent comparison", I am talking in relation to this agreement. The agreement does not purport to influence or affect the rates of provincial or state taxation, nor the general scheme and structure of distribution in effect with respect to automobiles and automobile products in the two countries. This agreement is directed to the manufacturing operation and consequently manufacturing costs. In measuring its usefulness one should look, therefore, at these costs at the manufacturing level. If changes are indeed desirable at that more distant level in the distributive process, then I suggest that is another question altogether. It is quite clear that at the manufacturing level there has been a narrowing, even in our first year of operation of the agreement, of the differential in costs between the cost of manufacture in the United States and the cost of manufacture in Canada. I think that hon. members should perhaps look slightly askance at some of the figures given in relation to retail prices on the other side of the border.

Mr. Lambert: Is not that what concerns the public?

Mr. Drury: I agree, Mr. Speaker. What concerns a member of the public is the final price that he pays. This, which I would suggest is the concern of members of parliament, is not relevant to this particular agreement.

Another thing which was briefly examined was the question of continentalism and whether this agreement is leading us into continentalism as distinct from its antithesis which is internationalism. I should point out that in so far as Canada is concerned we are in this agreement dealing with an industry which is almost entirely owned and controlled by parent companies in the United States. The Canadian side of this agreement does offer to any country in the world precisely the same rights of entry and the same advantages that are offered to the United States. Because the control of the largest segment of the automobile industry rests with the United States, it must be remembered that any international agreement, or any agreement having international scope in so far as Canada is concerned, must be oriented in terms that bear in mind the automotive industry of the United States.

By reason of this I would suggest to hon. members that this does not represent the first step toward continentalism. I do not think it is conceivable, nor would it be a practicable exercise for Canada at this stage, to endeavour to buy back, out of the accumulated savings here, the automotive industry in Canada from its present owners in the United States. We have a vast need for additional capital to carry out the expansion that we all look for in this country and that we are trying to bring about. To endeavour to take what savings we are able to generate in this country and devote them to the single, very large and concentrated task of buying back the automotive industry would be in my view a wrong use of our savings. We can use them much more effectively and much more productively. To develop our national identity and our national interest we should employ such savings, I suggest, in new enterprises controlled in Canada rather than concentrating all the effort which would be required even to contemplate the repurchase of the automobile industry, to buy back that industry.

I am grateful, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset, for the observations and comments which hon. members have provided in relation to the automotive agreement. I am very glad indeed that there has been on the part of all members a recognition that this agreement is in the interests of Canada. I undertake to take note of the observations which have been made in relation to its future operation.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Industry would allow me to ask a question. I am sorry to have missed the first part of his remarks. If he has dealt with what I am about to ask, I apologize.

One matter that I brought up in my remarks last evening was that at least one of the large automobile manufacturers, and to some degree another of the big three, does not permit independent Canadian automobile parts manufacturers even to tender on job lots of automobile parts. Indeed, independent Canadian manufacturers have been told: "No, we will not even accept your tenders no matter how efficient or how competitive your prices may be since we would rather buy from our own wholly-owned subsidiary plants across the border."

I am sure the minister knows of this. Does he intend to use his good offices to try to rectify this situation? It has been my understanding that the automobile parts manufacturers say: "If we are not competitive, then we are not competitive and that is the end of it. But when we are competitive and are not given an opportunity to tender we feel that there is something the government did not anticipate when the automobile parts agreement was entered into."

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the government did anticipate this. Consequently the department is prepared to use its good offices to rectify this situation. I suggest that the problem to which the hon. member has made reference should be rectified by the Canadian manufacturer looking, as he has done, for a product which the United States wishes to buy rather than persisting in trying to get the U.S. manufacturer to buy or forcing him to buy something he does not want.

Mr. Nesbitt: That is not the situation I am speaking of.

Mr. Drury: It does not make economic sense for our manufacturers to endeavour to have pressure put on the United States to buy things they do not want.

Mr. Nesbitt: Nobody is suggesting that.

Mr. Drury: United States manufacturers do Not want to buy from us, or from outside their own manufacturing facilities, articles that they manufacture themselves. That is the situation here. Vertical integration has taken place in the United States to such a degree that components are manufactured by the motor car manufacturers themselves. They do not want to buy components outside.

It has been suggested to Canadian component manufacturers that they should expect this. It has been suggested that they should abandon the manufacture of those kinds of articles not wanted and look to other fields. In this process of looking about for other fields and establishing the manufacture of different items, the automobile industry has every assistance—

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister and I are thinking of different sets of circumstances. I was referring only to a situation where the automobile manufacturer requires an integral part of a car, which I shall call X and which has to meet certain specifications, that can be produced either by a wholly-owned subsidiary or by an independent firm. In this case the independent firms are not permitted even to tender on the specifications required. The minister and I are thinking of different things. However, if the minister has used his good offices in this instance I hope he will continue to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. minister.

I listened very carefully to the objections raised by several members, to the effect that the house was not consulted beforehand about this agreement, that there was no committee set up.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières is apparently rising to make a speech.

Mr. Mongrain: I apologize. I am just explaining my question to the minister; otherwish he may not understand my point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I pointed out to the house when the Minister of Industry rose to speak that he would close the debate.

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Mongrain: I wish to put a question to the minister. I am not trying to raise an argument. I will make my intervention as short as possible. Would the minister consider setting up a committee to study amendments to this agreement between now and the end of the argument so that the house may be able to make some suggestions before it is renewed?

Mr. Drury: The principal responsibility for the administration of this agreement rests with the Department of Industry. There are a great many occasions for example, when the estimates of the Department of Industry are before one or other of the standing committees, when this matter can be raised. I would hope, of course, to have the views of hon. members on modifications to this agreement at the time of the review which is specified in the agreement and I will certainly give consideration to the best possible means of seeking the views of members of the house at the time of the contemplated review.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF SUBSCRIPTIONS BY CANADA

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-144, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 1—Payment of subscriptions out of C.R. fund.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not have any comments to make.

This bill has been fully considered in committee; experts of the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada, and interested members participated very conscientiously to get information. Now, the bill was agreed to without amendment by the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

[English]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I should like to confirm what the parliamentary secretary has said. This bill was before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for two or three sessions. Advisers from the Bank of Canada, the World Bank and the Minister of Finance were present and the subject was canvassed at large. I think we are satisfied. If anyone wishes further information the reports of the committee are available. So far as we are concerned we are prepared to proceed right now without further commentary. The study has been made.

Mr. Douglas: The representatives of this party on the committee have gone over the material and listened to the witnesses. We are fully satisfied with the evidence which has been adduced and can see no need for further discussion now.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Customs and Excise—

1. General administration, operation and maintenance, including authority, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year from firms and individuals requiring special services, $49,278,000.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, knowing the time limit which the house has placed upon itself for dealing with all estimates in this chamber I do not intend to speak at any great length with respect to the Department of National Revenue.

I am now approaching my second year as minister of this particular department and this is the first time I have taken the time of the committee to make a general statement about the estimates. I should like to take this opportunity to commend the staff of the department and especially to commend the work which was done by the former deputy minister, Mr. Dave Sim, who left the department shortly after I became minister.

I believe the Department of National Revenue operates as efficiently as does any government department. The expenditure over the years—the cost of collecting money both in the customs and excise division and in the taxation division—has tended to decrease. I can give the committee an example of what is being done in the department in the field of income tax. In 1950 the department was handling 3,360,000 income tax returns. In 1965 this number had risen to 6.7 million tax returns; I am referring to both individual and corporate returns. In 1950 the permanent staff numbered 10,629. In 1965 it was 5,909.

In addition we employ a large temporary staff in connection with the computer operation used to deal with personal income tax returns. A good many hon. members have recently been out to see how we operate at this time of the year when millions of returns have to be dealt with and some 2,000 people are employed for a few months when the computer load is at its peak.

An interesting fact with respect to the taxation division—and this applies equally to the customs and excise division—is that it costs a good deal less today to collect $100 in taxation than it did only a few years ago. The collection cost per $100 amounted in 1950 to $2.16. In the 1965 fiscal year this cost had been reduced to 86 cents. Sometimes the efficiency of the department frightens me as a taxpayer.

I do not think I really wish to say much more with respect to the department other than there is a reorganization going on within it as a result of the Glassco report. We have been working toward this and during the coming year in the customs and excise division we shall open the first district office to deal with appraisal and rulings as distinct from the head office where all appraisal has been done in the past.

We are going to take the first step of this plan in London, Ontario. If it proves successful and operates efficiently, as I am sure it will, and provides better service to businesses in dealing with customs and excise matters, we would move on to establish similar offices in other parts of Canada. This will bring appraisal and rulings with regard to customs and excise much closer to the businessman in Canada and he will not have to go to the trouble of sending to Ottawa any time he wants a ruling. I shall be pleased to answer any questions hon. members have with respect to the estimates.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, in limiting his remarks the minister has followed the good example of one of his predecessors with whom I was associated for a number of years and who, on occasion, was even briefer than the present minister. Mind you, he also had a very efficient operation.

With respect to the figures the minister used regarding staff and improvement in staff, I think this has been a gradual process since the early years with the exception that with the development of technology within the last five years there has existed the possibility of a great reduction in temporary staff to process individual tax forms. This work is now concentrated in the processing centre especially built for the purposes of the department rather than as formerly in one of the ramshackle wartime buildings.

I propose to deal with a number of relatively minor points, and my colleague from Carleton also wishes to address himself to a number of matters.

One of the problems of the taxation division has been the difficulty in maintaining experienced assessors due to the improper classification of assessors within the civil service. The department was a training ground for accountants who, because of the limited pay and limited opportunity for advancement, were soon attracted elsewhere. The department trained many of them and many other people who also later went to work with outside organizations as tax advisers. I hope the minister can report that a more realistic approach has been taken toward assessors by the classification bureau and the pay research bureau.

These people are not merely accountants in the ordinary sense of the word. They have a tough job to do. One of the difficulties for the department is to have an inexperienced assessor coming up against the public. His job is not something that is learned overnight. I have always admired the tact and, from the accounting point of view, the skill of experienced assessors. The tax assessor or collector, by the very nature of his work, is not the most popular of men; yet much depends on his contacts with the taxpayer.

Exemptions for donations to charitable organizations have always been a knotty problem. I am glad to see this is now being placed on a rational basis in that any organization which will continue to enjoy the status of a charitable organization must report to the minister. There must be some control. This has created difficulties in some areas as a result of lack of experience. Church donations created the biggest problem but this is now being worked out, and I trust that in a short period there will be general acceptance of the practice that has been introduced.

The third item on which I wish to speak is really a budgetary matter, the correction of which would require a proposal from the Minister of Finance. I am speaking about the administration of estate tax, and this is not the first time I have spoken about it. I have advocated an extension of the six month period for payment of estate tax to something longer, and not within the limited exceptions that are at present permitted.

Perhaps the minister may be able to tell us about the result of the amendments made about five years ago to the Industrial Development Bank Act which were designed to alleviate the problem of the forced sale or fire sale of equity interests in Canadian companies in order to provide liquid funds to pay estate tax. Many Canadian companies have been lost to foreign ownership because the principal shareholder or shareholders had to liquidate holdings under pressure in order to provide for estate taxation. A good case can be made for widening the provisions of the act to allow time payments in appropriate cases of shares held by individuals in closely controlled companies so that the shares need not be sold.

I know there are differences of opinion on this matter, and for some reason or another the administration side of the estate tax division is reluctant to have these files continue open. However, I urge that this be done because it is one area in which we can assist in maintaining Canadian ownership of equity stock in Canadian companies.

It will be interesting to see how the proposed re-organization works out on the customs and excise side. In Edmonton it would simplify matters and cost less if the customs and excise branch facilities were concentrated within the new postal facilities. At present there is a shortage of prime government office space in the Edmonton federal building, and the customs and excise branch occupies prime ground floor space. So far as the public is concerned, however, it is quite inaccessible. The bus service is poor and I think there could be savings effected by a concentration of these facilities and staff in the new postal terminal building so as to minimize handling charges. These are all the remarks I should like to make at this time. I may have some further remarks on individual items.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

(Translation)

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, at the outset I wish to extend my most sincere thanks to the representatives of the New Democratic Party and the Railliement Créditiste who agreed to let me have the floor now because I must leave the house this afternoon for very serious reasons.

I would like to take this opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to say that the two independent members here appreciate the consideration which the house has shown them up to now in some trying circumstances. I see that respect for minorities has become a reality, possibly because some are saying to themselves that one of these days they might also be a minority. But, in any case, that respect exists, and I am very happy about it.

I hasten to add that I do not intend to take advantage of my colleagues' indulgence because I have only one thing to say.

All the more so, since I heard the minister tell us a little earlier that he was scared himself to see how efficient his department is. Imagine then how careful we must be ourselves if we must deal with that matter.

I would like to draw the minister's attention to one point. I get—and I think that other members do also—quite a lot of mail in which people complain about the way the minister's officials deal with the receipts for charitable donations. I know that it is an extremely difficult matter to settle. As a matter of fact, I had the opportunity to see that the minister takes that matter seriously, but I think that the standards that have been set are not realistic.

I even feel that to oblige the members of the clergy, of any denomination whatsoever, to give receipts for every donation, constitutes, in my opinion, interference in a field which should normally be surrounded with secrecy; by asking them to do that, we make their task much more difficult.

I saw myself lately income tax returns which had been sent back and in which large cuts had been made with regard to charitable donations, and it seems to me that those cuts are not always very realistic.

Would it not be possible to go back, within reasonable limits, to that practice—even if it was too generous in the past—of setting a percentage which would be allowed without receipts, because there are always charitable or welfare campaigns in our municipalities for which there is no opportunity of asking for receipts. There are all kinds of charitable organizations, card parties, public subscriptions, etc.

I am thinking in particular about the head of a large family with children of 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 and sometimes more who are still studying and whom he has to support financially. His charitable donations, which he pays himself, are multiplied by four, five, six and sometimes they are multiplied by ten. Then, when he asks why the amount he claimed for charitable donations has been reduced, he is given this answer: if you want us to accept your figures, send us receipts. That is not always practical, nor possible.

I think I am not the only one who will raise the matter in the house, but I believe that the minister should, if my suggestion is in order, set up some kind of special committee to consider that situation, which would give a hearing especially to representatives of all charitable organizations, bona fide social organizations, in short representatives of all religions who might have justified representations to make on that matter.

It has been alleged, Mr. Chairman, that the committees of the house are overworked, and that, consequently, it was useless to set up any more. I have my doubts about that. It may be that a few committees have too much work, but I believe there are others that are not overworked. I could mention two or three—three committees—I am on, where a meeting has not been called more than twice since the beginning of the session. These could surely work a little harder. The fact that some members are not overworked was demonstrated recently in a news report where it is said that some arrogant young members are threatening to start a revolution within their party. Well, it might be more profitable to keep them busy, say, in the field under discussion, the automobile industry, and it would be a good thing to set up a special committee for all concerned to discuss charitable donations.

That would provide an opportunity to consider, not donations or subscriptions of $10, $15, $20 or $25,000 for which it is easy to get a receipt, but rather to discuss the case of small wage earners who distribute their donations by quarters or dollar bills. Everyone knows that charitable campaigns are very popular. And the little man has to finance a large family. In short, make a study of that kind.

I suggest it would be most appropriate to consider thoroughly the whole question, because it is settled in an arbitrary and summary fashion, and the taxpayer cannot help himself, because in most cases he is unable to get a receipt.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, as is my usual custom, I will not detain the house for any length of time. I do wish, however, to take this opportunity to thank the minister for his courtesy and promptness in dealing with all matters which I have had the opportunity to bring to his attention. I might say that he has had one or two rather peculiar questions to deal with, which he has dealt with in a very satisfactory way from the point of view of the member for Kootenay West and the people of the constituency he represents.

I would like to thank also the headquarters staff in Ottawa and the regional and local staffs for their work which, shall I say, goes unsung so far as the people in this country are concerned because by its very nature it has to do with figures, taxation, and things of that sort which do not have a very glamourous appeal to the country. I think these people should be commended for their devotion to this type of work throughout the years and for their efficiency and accuracy.

I cannot let the remarks on these estimates go by without making reference to my old friend, Mr. David Sim, who has retired from his duties as deputy minister of customs and exise; he was very fond of the country which I represent, and any time he visited the Kootenays he took every opportunity to tell me how much he enjoyed the country and the people. I am sure all members of this house will wish him a long and happy retirement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I use the word "retirement" in the symbolic sense, because I am sure there will be plenty of opportunities for him still to serve Canada and the community in which he lives.

At the kind invitation of the minister, with other members I went to the headquarters here, where we were taken through the data centre and where we saw all the machines which are absolutely beyond my capacity to understand. I was brought up in a different generation. Some of my colleagues might say that it is quite beyond me. I am not one of the intellectuals. I went to the Data Centre as an old farmer looking at some of the great mechanical improvements of the 20th century.

It was very interesting when we went from the place where the letters came in to the place where we saw them processed through the various machines and finally saw either the refund cheques—I didn't see any great number of those—or the returns going back to the persons who had made their returns to the department. It was very interesting indeed. Personally I think many people in Canada are unaware of the developments within the income tax branch, in particular the new developments with regard to the processing of returns, collections, and so on. I think understanding brings co-operation, just as I have mentioned in respect of other spheres of government, and it would be a good idea to publish some in expensive pamphlet to provide the public of Canada with information as to what happens in the data centre from the time a letter is received until a reply is sent out, perhaps to include some appropriate photographs and so on.

I do not believe in getting something for nothing. I was not brought up on that philosophy and I have never found it to be a very successful way of life. It is my opinion that Canadians would be willing to pay 25 cents or 50 cents for a booklet of this type containing information in respect of income tax returns. A large number of people I am sure would then have a better idea of what is happening regarding the collection of income tax and would appreciate the developing and improved efficiency within the department as a result of improvements in machinery.

At the same time I think it would be advantageous to bring regional and local staffs to Ottawa whenever the opportunity presents itself. Having talked with individuals in local offices I am sure they are almost as ignorant about what happens around Ottawa as I was until I went through the division here a few days ago. Their conversations, approaches and language all indicate that they think in terms of what has been the practice in the past. It would be a good investment on the part of the department periodically to bring some of these regional and local officials here to Ottawa for one or two day courses on the operations of the income tax collection branch.

Let me now turn to less interesting subjects, from the minister's point of view. I shall not try him to any great extent. I asked a question today of the Minister of Finance, but once again I was nipped in the bud by Mr. Speaker. I feel it is appropriate at this time to ask the minister how he can reconcile, from a philosophical point of view, the collection of sales tax on centennial projects which are being built entirely as a result of grants from federal, provincial and municipal governments. An answer would be very interesting because it looks as though government funds are subject to taxation.

Every possible precaution should be taken to make sure that a thorough examination is made before any organization is given the right to issue receipts for income tax purposes on the basis of charitable or religious donations. This practice should not be extended beyond the intents and purposes of the Income Tax Act, and inquiries should be made when officials of the department do not have the information that should be available to them. There should be a strict insistence that proof of receipts for charitable and religious donations for income tax purposes must be provided.

The province of Alberta has made some rather drastic changes in its estate tax laws. I do not know whether that province is leading the way, but we in British Columbia look forward hopefully to enjoying the same advantage. Because of the changing practices that exist in various provinces, it is time the Minister of National Revenue made a review of this whole estate tax field. Federal practices in this regard should be fair and just in comparison to legislation that is being given effect to in the various provinces.

Having made those few remarks, Mr. Chairman, I shall now take my seat so that other members who wish to instruct and advise the minister will have an opportunity of doing so.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few comments to make on the estimates now before us, the estimates of the Department of National Revenue.

I fully agree with the statements of the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) on charitable donations. For four years now we have been insisting every time these estimates were before us, on overall legislation to cover charitable donations in a uniform manner all across Canada.

The law now provides that a taxpayer is entitled to donate up to 10 per cent of his net income and claim a deduction for that same amount. Now, in every case submitted to us in the past few years, most taxpayers who have complained to me claimed exemptions around 6 or 7 per cent of their income.

In nearly 90 per cent of these cases, the officials of the Department of National Revenue did not allow these claims, did not accept the exemptions claimed, or they granted the taxayers an exemption from $100 to $150, to which any taxpayer is entitled.

Now, if usages and customs of the officials of the Revenue Department are not to accept these receipts or these claims for charitable donations, it should be so stated in the house and not proceeded with secretly, in an underhanded way, as hypocrites, to make people believe that the Income Tax Act, as far as charitable donations are concerned, is generous to the Canadians who are making these donations to charitable institutions.

Mr. Chairman, the minister is well aware of the situation. I would suggest that the act be made uniform. Instead of saying that a taxpayer is entitled to give up to 10 per cent of his income for charitable donations, if it is felt that 10 per cent is too high, this should be reduced to 5 or 6 per cent, but it should be the same for all, for the whole population, so that everyone would be entitled to it. At present, everyone is not entitled to it. First, I note that the exemptions of $200 to $250 are not allowed this year.

Furthermore, I am told that from now on those charitable organizations must be recognized by the federal government.

But the legislation is not clear on that point. Will parish priests have to apply for a licence? Will they be given a collar to wear around their neck when they are issued a licence authorizing them to receive charitable donations? How does the government intend to apply that legislation? What does he mean by organizations recognized by the federal government? What will have to be done to be recognized? That is with regard to donations to charitable organizations.

Mr. Chairman, charitable donations are not made only in rectories. They are made outside also, for instance, to the Red Cross, any welfare association in a parish, the Boy Scouts or any tag day or apple sale. I think that people who give $1, $2 or $5 on such occasions are making charitable donations. Social clubs, such as the Richelieu, Rotary and Kiwanis clubs who work for underprivileged children, the poor, are charitable organizations—I am sure of that—but such receipts are not accepted. The money given to those people is not allowed. I think that the Income Tax Act is impossible to understand and can be taken to mean this or that, so that everyone is at sea. Even the minister does not understand the situation and we tolerate such administration.

With regard to another matter, I must say that for four years I have been asking the Minister of National Revenue to allow workers to deduct from their income the money spent to buy the tools they need for their work in any industry whatsoever. For instance, a mechanic should be allowed to deduct from his total income the cost of the tools he needs to work at his trade, and the same privilege should be given to construction workers, carpenters, woodworkers. Nothing is being done. There is discrimination there.

A doctor who buys office equipment, instruments, lancets to operate, can deduct such expenditures from his income, because it is considered that he needs them to practise his profession. But workers, carpenters, woodworkers, mechanics also have the right to purchase tools to work at their trade.

Why is such discrimination practised against the workers, against those who earn their living as honestly as any doctor or lawyer? And yet the doctor or the lawyer has the right to deduct from his income expenditures made to purchase office equipment or instruments.

Another thing. A doctor who must make visits, has an office 50 miles away and must travel by car, has the right to deduct his travelling expenses to practise his profession outside his house.

Strangely enough, a workman using his car in his work, in any industry, is not allowed to deduct travelling expenses from his revenue. He is told it is a normal means of transport. Is it not the same for a lawyer or a doctor? Why is this not considered by the Minister of National Revenue? These are facts and, in many cases, the income tax department makes arbitrary decisions concerning citizens as responsible as those allowed an income tax exemption or deduction.

Mr. Chairman, we have also called the minister's attention to the basic exemptions, from the income tax point of view. At the moment, the government allows an exemption of $1,000 for single people and $2,000 for married people. We have been suggesting for a long time that this be increased to $2,500 and $5,000 respectively. Since taxes are necessary, let us tax those who have the means to pay and not those who do not.

There are, in Canada, United States industries and Americans who make money out of our natural resources and pay nothing or next to nothing to the Canadian government for their operations. These are the people who should fill the pockets of the Minister of National Revenue instead of the workers, the miners, the small settlers, the farmers, ordinary people who work developing our resources for the benefit of foreigners. Why not tax those who have the means, those who benefit most from the development of our natural resources, instead of taxing those who work like mercenaries for foreigners in Canada.

I understand the Minister of National Revenue has a huge income in comparison to his expenditures which are not too high. We are asked to give him a further $94,565,800, increasing his revenue to something like $9 billion. The administrative expenses of this department are not excessive.

Before resuming my seat, however, I should like to draw the attention of the minister to another point. Last March 23, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) asked the government what its revenue was from the sale of liquor, lager, ale, spirits and wine. According to the minister's answer, in 1965 lager brought in $106,394,832 in excise duties, spirits $145,268,424, and wine $4,204,677, for a grand total of $225,867,933. Furthermore, from January to October 1965 only, liquor imports brought in $27,668,505 in customs duties. Thus excise and customs duties together brought in a total of 252 million. A note at the bottom of the answer on page 3047 of Hansard for March 23, 1966 says:

> Above revenue figures do not include the 11 per cent federal sales tax which also applies but is not identifiable with specific commodities.

Mr. Chairman, imagine an 11 per cent tax on the sales total. What a fantastic sum this tax must bring the Department of National Revenue.

In answer to the question of the hon. member for New Westminster who wanted to know whether the government was spending money to encourage public temperance and support programs fighting against alcoholism, the government said:

> Insofar as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned, expenditure on promotion of temperance and supporting anti-alcoholic programs was nil.

We make tremendous expenditures to enlarge hospitals and to cure sick people, for instance, and this is in order. But nothing to educate the people. This is what I want to emphasize. I realize that it is perhaps not for the Department of National Revenue to decide on broadcasts over the C.B.C., but I would ask the minister, who perhaps gets $500 or $600 million a year from alcoholic beverage consumption alone, to impress on his colleagues that they should urge the government to have the C.B.C. provide free time so as to educate our younger people, and adults too, on the importance of temperance in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I know that it is not the Department of National Revenue which will decide on such programs, but I wanted to point out to the house on how profitable the consumption or sale of alcoholic beverages in Canada is for the Department of National Revenue.

As far as the expenditures of this department are concerned, as I said, they are not excessive, as compared to the income which pours into the coffers of the said department.

In conclusion, I should like to repeat that, for instance, the section of the act governing charitable donations should be applied uniformly so that all Canadians without exception might be treated the same without any discrimination. This is the first point.

Second point: Our workers should be entitled to deduct from their income the cost of the equipment used in their profession.

Third point: Travelling expenses of workers being transferred, whether they use their own car or public transportation facilities, as in the case of doctors, lawyers, engineers or any other social class should be deductible.

Finally, we ask that basic exemptions be increased from $1,000 to $2,000 for unmarried persons and from $2,500 to $5,000 for married people and heads of families.

If such significant basic exemptions are granted to our workers, then the government will be able to claim that it has rendered a service, not only to one class of society, but to the whole country, because, in the final analysis, if workers have more money to spend, it is obvious that a large part of this money will return to the national treasury, since taxes are collected at every level of the Canadian economy.

The minister should consider this. Every year, he promises to do so, but once the year is over, he fails to keep his promises and to look effectively into the problem so as to achieve results.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely believe that the Income Tax Act can be adjusted and adapted to the needs of the Canadian people, instead of taking advantage of them as at present.

Let this act be amended so as to deal fairly with the little people as well as the rich and vice versa, but let everyone be treated fairly.

• (3:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, 32 years ago next month I started my first job, that of assistant private secretary to the then minister of national revenue. Since that time I have had what might be described as a filial feeling for the department and a most sympathetic understanding of the dedicated public servants who make up its staff. Consequently, to participate briefly in discussion of these estimates brings some nostalgic memories.

The hon. member for Kootenay West has mentioned that this is the first time the estimates of the department have been presented to the committee since the retirement of David Sim, the former deputy minister for customs and excise. To members of this house of all parties, Dave Sim, for many years the dean of deputies, was a model and an example to all public servants. I say to you, sir, that Canada has never had a more devoted, knowledgeable, impartial and intelligent deputy minister, and certainly not one so understanding and responsive to the role of parliament and of members of parliament. May I add that the department and the country is exceedingly fortunate in his successor, Ray Labarge. Neither has suffered from his early training in association with this House of Commons.

There are several matters, sir, which I should like to raise with the minister, matters diverse in nature, but each of significance to taxpayers generally, and most of which will relate to the taxation division. The minister is aware of my very grave concern about the lack of provision for refund or rebate of overpaid employers' contributions collected by the department under the Canada Pension Plan. These overpayments may arise in a number of ways. For example, wherever a person receives an emolument from more than one employer, there will be overpayment. A member of parliament who receives a stipend or emolument from another source or sources will pay twice or more, and he may recover his share of the overpayment, but the payer may not.

Just this morning, sir, I talked with one man who now has Canada Pension Plan contributions deducted by 13 companies with which he is associated. He himself can get back the 12 overpayments which represent his share, but these companies are unable to recoup anything.

In the construction industry an employee might easily work for several employers during the one year and the extent of overpayment could be very serious indeed. Employers are entitled also to a refund when the employee fails to earn the minimum $600 for the year, or where an employee does not receive credit for the full $600 exemption.

I submit that the minister has taken a very casual approach to this problem. In answer to a question by the hon. member for Wellington South on March 16, as reported at page 2777 of Hansard, he was very cryptic indeed and not a little arbitrary. I say, Mr. Chairman, that it would be morally wrong for any individual to accept these overpayments and decline to make refunds or rebates and it is no less morally wrong for the government of Canada. If a private corporation converted funds to its own use, it would be charged in the courts. The government ought not to hide behind its immunity, while converting and misappropriating funds to which it has no moral right whatsoever.

I am not at all impressed by the suggestion that in the United States they have been unable to work out a system of refunds of employer overpayments. I say that it must be within the wit of the officials of the Department of National Revenue to work out a system without invading the privacy of the individual taxpayer. If the minister has a genuine desire to solve the problem, it can be solved. I believe the government of Canada must not be a party to conduct so immoral, so unjustified, that it would amount to conversion if it were done by a private citizen. Let the minister achieve the will to end this unjustified conversion by the government of funds which belong to the taxpayers, and a settlement of the problem can be achieved.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one of the minor irritations for which the present minister is directly responsible is the growing insistence upon payment by certified cheque. During the past 18 months I have heard more taxpayers complain about this than about the amount of tax they pay. In my view this is simply administrative arbitrariness and personally I believe it is without colour of right. I know of nothing in the Bills of Exchange Act or any other act which enables the creditor, in the absence of some consensual arrangement, to insist that a debt be paid in any particular way. I say the practice of the department of sending back uncertified cheques has no basis in law and should stop. I see the minister shakes his head. Let him examine his forms. The practice in my view is impeding payment rather than facilitating it. The minister's tidy accountant's mind is simply self-defeating. I do not believe that the taxpayers like to be told that they should go to their bank to arrange payment. The taxpayer, in my view, has the right to pay however he likes and he should not be shoved around by the minister.

Then, sir, I should like to draw attention to an answer made to a question of mine on Wednesday, May 4, as it appears in Hansard at page 4688. The question is this:

1. Will it be the practice of the Department of National Revenue to include the commuted value of a survivor's pension under the Canada Pension Plan in determining the value of a deceased estate for estate tax purposes?

The answer to this question is:

Yes, under the provisions of the Estate Tax Act as they now are.

The second question is:

2. If so, upon what basis or principle will the commuted value be determined?

The answer is:

The pensions will be calculated, as far as possible, in accordance with existing regulations and tables.

The third question is:

• (3:40 p.m.)

3. Will the government consider an amendment to the Estate Tax Act exempting payments made pursuant to the Canada Pension Plan from estates tax?

Of course, I got the answer which I expected I would get. The answer is that "this is a matter of government policy and if any changes are to be proposed in the Estate Tax Act, they will be announced at the appropriate time". I recognize that this is partly a policy matter and therefore primarily under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance. However, I think it is proper to say at this time that the inclusion of the commuted value of survivor's pension under the Canada Pension Plan will frustrate a great deal of estate planning heretofore done. All persons would be well advised to re-examine their testamentary arrangements. Personally, I believe the tax revenue from this source will be relatively minor, having regard to the major nuisance to the crown and to the taxpayers. I, personally, would urge the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Finance to consider the total exemption of the commuted value of the Canada Pension Plan payments for estate tax purposes.

I have one further word about the estate tax. The present exemptions, in my submission, are obviously out of date and wholly obsolete. All costs have risen steeply since these rates of exemption were established. The exemptions today represent nothing like the value they did when they were established. Ontario has recently raised the widow's exemption to $75,000. I submit that this is the barest of minimums the government should now propose, and propose at this session of parliament. Personally, I believe the exemption should be considerably higher. May I submit, sir, that the same comments I have made may be appropriately applied as well to the provisions for exemption in relation to the gift tax of either $4,000 or one half of the difference between income and income tax payable and as well in relation to the once-in-a lifetime gift of a total of $14,000.

When the minister replies, Mr. Chairman, I should like him to give the committee some indication of the manner in which the tax collection arrangements with the provinces are now working out. Is he in a position to estimate the cost to the federal treasury of the services performed for the provinces? If so, would he tell the committee what that cost is? Are the provinces satisfied with the arrangements? Have there been any discussions about amended arrangements? If so, what was the nature of the discussions which have taken place?

Since we are so close to April 30, sir, one could hardly avoid saying a word about the complexity of the income tax returns. I think they have become a statistician's nightmare. I appreciate the problem of the Minister of National Revenue when the fault is really that of the Minister of Finance, who is making our tax structure so complex and so unwieldy. But the collection process in my view is likely to break down unless we can simplify the tax returns. I wonder if the minister, when he replies, will share with the committee his views on this matter One would hope that one salutary result of the Carter commission would be a less complex tax structure and much simplified tax forms. I feel we cannot simply go on and on putting more and more detail in tax forms which intelligent and thoughtful citizens have great difficulty in understanding.

In his initial statement, the minister made some comments with regard to the cost of collection of various taxes and duties. I think perhaps he should put on the record rather more detailed information as to the trend over, say, the last five years of the cost of collection of these various taxes and duties in the various sections of his department.

Then, sir, I should like the minister, if he would, to report to the committee upon the action taken to implement a proposal made in the Budget speech of April 26, 1965 when the hon. member for Davenport said, as reported in Hansard at page 436:

> An important tax concession will also be provided to encourage industry to take new steps to prevent the waste products from their operations polluting our streams and lakes. This will take the form of an amendment to the Income Tax Regulations to permit capital expenditures made until the end of 1966 by businesses primarily for the purpose of preventing water pollution to be deducted at the rate of 50 per cent. This provision will also be reviewed following the report of the Royal Commission on Taxation and after we have the results of studies being made of the problems of pollution and the means of dealing with them.

I should like to ask the minister when these regulations were put into effect? If they have been, what is their nature? The last time I made a detailed inquiry, which was, I believe, in February of this year, they had not been put into effect. Yesterday, we witnessed, from the lips of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, the cynicism and indolence of the present cabinet in respect of the enormous problem of water pollution. He indicated all this government wants to do is to educate where, in effect, no education is necessary. What they really want to do is to avoid the issue, remain inactive, remain complacent, in so far as that project is concerned.

Then, I should like to ask the minister if he has any plans to extend this scheme concerning capital cost provisions for water pollution to similar outlays to prevent pollution in the air, and in the waters of our ocean harbours. I ask him, what action has he taken? Will he report to the committee in respect thereof?

I think all of us in this committee recognize that the tax collector can never be a popular figure. In Canada I think we are fortunate in the integrity of our Department of National Revenue and in the quality of its staff. Such strictures as I may have are exclusively for the minister. I want, in conclusion, to suggest to him that he do not allow his new, added important duties as President of the Treasury Board to dilute the very major administrative responsibilities which he has as Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Johnston: When I rose to speak a few minutes ago, I did not realize that the thoughts in my mind would have been paralleled so exactly by the member who has just sat down. However, I feel that the reiteration of some of these points will not be out of place at all. I should like to thank the Minister of National Revenue for his kind invitation to visit the data processing centre the other day. I had to decline the invitation because I was meeting a delegation of farmers at that time. I trust that the interests of that group will always be very high on my list of priorities.

The points I should like to raise are these: Having just recently completed my own income tax form, I was distressed at the tendency to increase the complexity of the form. I really do not see why the form cannot simply say of the provinces and of the federal government, "This is their tax", rather than getting involved in pretending that something is being handed back to us because the province has already taken it away from us.

We do not really expect gifts from the tax department. I do not believe the department should, in its forms, suggest this is what is happening. I have my suspicion that the forms for next year, following the Budget which was recently presented, will be even more complex, as a much greater effort is made to suggest that the income tax has not really been increased, but somehow we are not being given back quite as much as was the case last year. I am sure if I had visited the data processing centre I would have been made aware of the tremendous efficiency being built into our tax collection system. I did question the total result of that efficiency, though, when I received a complaint that refunds which were acknowledged last December have not yet been paid. It seems to me the revenue department might send along interest on any refunds held for a period longer than three months.

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

It is the practice of the income tax branch to charge interest if there is a delay. As the machinery becomes more effective, if there are cases where, for unusual reasons, the refund is delayed for more than a normal period of time, then I submit that the taxation branch should have the same consideration for the people to whom it owes money as those people have with respect to the department when they owe money to it.

One of the points raised by the delegation of farmers was a plea that the minimum of estate taxable be raised to $100,000. I suggested to them that they might advocate the complete abandonment of the estate tax concept I have always considered that to be iniquitous, especially when it is applied to the estate of a farmer who has spent a lifetime in building up a farm. Farming does not lend itself to get-rich-quick schemes or to shady practices. The value of a farm is usually accumulated very slowly and painfully over long years of enormous toil. Then, at the end of that time to have the whole future of the farm, as a unit, jeopardized because through rapidly increasing prices of land the farm becomes an estate, I think is unfair.

Despite the fact that all monies earned on the farm throughout the years have been taxed, and taxes have been paid on everything that has gone into the farm, the estate tax nevertheless is levied. The process of handing down farms from generation to generation is jeopardized by this tax. The desire of agricultural departments to propagate paying and functioning farm units is also jeopardized. Through the estate tax there is a tendency for viable farm units to be broken up at the time the original owner dies.

In this connection I think that the Alberta government has taken a lead in its proposals to reduce or totally eliminate estate taxes, if the federal government co-operates. I hope the minister and his department in the government will give this matter the fullest and most careful consideration, and that he will look at the estate tax picture as it applies to agriculture. There is not much point in waging a war on poverty if we remove incentive from farm people to form farms that will be units of some value.

The last point I wish to raise, and raise very strongly—and I reiterate the words of the previous speaker—is the point regarding the Canada Pension Plan, and especially the requirements that require the employer to contribute and that allow a refund of the contributions respecting employees who have earned less than $600 per annum.

The minister in his letter of April 4 points out:

> The plan does not provide for a refund of an overpayment to an employer who has made contributions as required on pensionable remuneration paid to an employee.

Here again the principle is important, although the present procedure is wrong from the word go. By failing to refund overpayments the plan strikes particularly at the tourist industry in a province such as British Columbia, where there is a short season and where many employees are hired for the minimum period. Many employees do not earn the $600 per annum, because of the extreme shortness of the season.

This is happening at a time when both provincial and federal governments are urging the development of every facility in order to provide for the vastly increased number of tourists who will come to Canada. I think it important that the plan be revised as quickly as possible in order to allow refunds. The letter from the minister goes on to say:

> During the initial period of the operation of the plan we intend to observe how the various provisions work out in practice. After this period of observation we shall be in a better position to consider any amendments that may be appropriate.

However, we know that the concept is wrong. The refund is not paid. Yet, if the employer fails to make a contribution, then the entire weight of the Department of National Revenue is brought to bear on him. If his contribution is delayed, interest is charged. The Department of National Revenue makes very sure that it collects these payments from business people very quickly. I do not at all see why, if the department over-collects, it should not then be obligated to refund this amount. If you are considering only one employee, the refund may seem small. However, it would not take a very large business to have ten employees. During the height of the tourist season a small employer may often employ that many persons. An overpayment for each one of them would mount up. It is wrong that this is not refunded. The employer who has his own business, by the nature of the plan is forced to pay the entire contribution. He also pays to the plan half the contribution of all his employees. On top of that we ask him to subsidize the plan by a further gift, through the overpayment with respect to the employees.

I do not believe that we are in any way justified in asking individuals in this country to subsidize the plan for the rest of us. I urge the minister to give this matter his most urgent and his most careful consideration.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have a very brief comment to make on these estimates. I want to deal with a matter I raised last when the then Minister of Finance introduced the amendments to the Income Tax Act. I particularly want to deal with the amendment which provided for the first time that a farmer could claim a deduction for clearing land.

I welcomed that at the time. By reading the amendments I was struck, by the idea that there might be some difficulty in interpretation, and that some farmers, as well as those people who help them file income tax returns, might be confused when the returns are made out. This has been confirmed, because I have had one or two letters on the point. The issue has arisen. I might add that I hope the minister when he replies will be kind enough to indicate answers to my questions.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Can the words "for clearing" be interpreted to include or to cover the debrushing of land, the cultivation of the land and also the breaking of the land? The word "clearing" still has a distinct connotation in my part of the country, one of the last parts left where homesteading remains fairly active. In the last four or five years several thousand new homesteaders have come in and most of them have been obliged to clear the land on which they settle. The brush has to be taken off and the ground has to be broken and brought under cultivation before any revenue can be expected. So this is an important matter. These people who take on the formidable task of clearing the land and making it suitable for cultivation are surely entitled to the full benefit of the widest interpretation of this section. It used to be said in my part of Canada that pioneering of this kind needed a strong back and a weak head. Possibly it would be said by some of my constituents that at least the last half of that formula could apply to me. Be that as it may, I should be grateful if the minister could look into this question, consider the proposition I have made, and give me an answer.

After the clearing of the land has been completed it takes two or three years before any revenue can be expected. I would hope that by averaging income, or by giving farmers a right to select a particular year as the year in which a deduction would be claimed, an arrangement could be arrived at of some benefit to those who find themselves in the position I have described. I would ask the minister to give some thought to this problem.

Mr. McCleave: The question I wish to raise can be briefly stated. I realize that the Minister of Finance is the minister directly responsible for the Income Tax Act; but what I have in mind also relates to the collection of income tax, which is the somewhat more grisly occupation of the Minister of National Revenue. It would be in his department that most difficulties of this type would be directed, and I am sure a considerable correspondence exists in the department on this subject.

This matter was reported to me by a man in my own area whose wife was confined to hospital for two months last year. Since there are three small children it was necessary for outside help to be engaged to carry on housekeeping. If this woman had been ill at home and if a nurse or a nursing assistant had been employed to look after her, it seems clear under the income tax regulations that the man would have been allowed tax relief by way of deduction in respect of the money so spent. But the wife was in hospital during a time he had to employ a housekeeper.

It may be possible to draw a fine distinction between a woman being cared for in hospital and a woman being cared for in her own home. But I do not think such a line does, in fact, exist. It must have been a comfort to this woman to know that her children were being properly cared for in her absence. It must also have been a great help to the homeowner. But the department, as it is bound to do, advised the man that he could not make a claim in respect of the housekeeper when filing his income tax return. I suggest that probably hundreds of Canadians are involved each year in situations such as this, and that it is worth considering whether some tax relief could not be afforded in such cases.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I wish to raise two points. The first has to do with a matter I raised earlier in the session—Canadian employees of foreign embassies in Canada who are not eligible to join the Canada Pension Plan. Earlier this session I asked why such people could not enter the plan as self-employed persons paying the whole assessment themselves, and the Minister of National Revenue promised to look into the matter.

I have been approached by an employee of one of the foreign embassies in Canada. She is a native born Canadian and she feels she is being discriminated against in her own country. She is willing to be classed as a self-employed person, but she does feel that though she works for a foreign employer she should have the right to come under the provisions of the pension plan. A number of other Canadians are in a similar position. They feel that ways and means should be found to enable them to enrol in this plan, particularly since they are working in their own native country.

The other matter I wish to raise concerns this question: When is an employer not an employer? The answer appears to be: When she is a woman. I have had many cases brought to my attention of women who are working outside the home but who are classified as employers in connection with the Canada Pension Plan. They have to pay the assessment of 1.8 per cent on behalf of their household help.

Let me give the committee details of one of these cases. Here is a woman, married with two children. Her husband is working and she, too, is working outside her home. From her salary she pays her housekeeper $135 a month. Of course she has also to pay the contribution of 1.8 per cent on the housekeeper's account. She is taxed at the single rate, so she pays about $80 a month in income tax. Under the Canada Pension Plan she is called an employer; yet she is not allowed to be an employer under the Income Tax Act.

This woman points out that under the Income Tax Act employers are allowed deductions for expenses of all kinds. The expense involved in paying a housekeeper is an essential one in the case I have just mentioned, because the woman cannot go to work unless she has household help in looking after her husband and the two children, who still need care at home. I am sure the minister will remember the representations from delegations of women from coast to coast urging that a deduction ought to be permitted in cases such as this to professional women doing work outside the home.

I suggest this discrimination is most unfair. It means that the government is still thinking in terms of an economy when most women were in the home working, and their husbands salaries and expenses were the only things that had to be taken into account. Now more than a quarter of the married women are gainfully employed outside their homes, and by 1970 that figure will rise to half the married women.

I have no intention of raising the whole question of allowances for help within the home. It is something I should raise on the proper budget resolution. The only reason I raise this particular matter, however, is that I feel it comes under the Minister of National Revenue, since collections for the Canada Pension Plan fall under his jurisdiction. I would most earnestly ask that he try to find ways and means, which apparently the Minister of Finance was not able to do, to correct this situation. I think the minister could find ways and means to provide that a woman, who is declared an employer under the Canada Pension Plan, is also declared an employer under the Income Tax Act, so that she may not be discriminated against, and may have the right to list her expenses of employment in the same way that any male employer is permitted to do in connection with his income tax.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, my interest is in Hal Banks and his income tax payments. I have asked questions about this previously and at one time was assured that in Quebec a hypothecate had been put on certain property of his. Since he has departed from Canada I want to be sure that a plaster was put on his property to cover any income tax he had to pay to Canada. I understand there is a question as to his status as a Canadian citizen for income tax purposes. Did he file his returns up to the time he left? Has he paid his taxes? If he has not filed a return has the government taken steps to assess the amount due and owing and, having done so, has the government relied on the hypothecate placed in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Carleton has already raised the matter about which I wish to speak, and if a remedy for the situation could be effected I think the public image of the government would be improved, an objective no doubt close to the minister's heart. The problem is the delay in making rebates in cases of deductions at source, where overpayments have been made to the department.

I have in mind a particular case about which I have written to the minister, although he may not yet have received my letter. I am sure however that in his usual efficient manner he will have somebody look into it. It concerns a man who was employed by the city of Toronto and was injured in an accident in 1964. As a result, he was able to work for only eight months in 1965 and had to cash in on a private pension plan. From the payment made to him under the pension plan over $200 was deducted, which eventually will come back to him. In addition, from his income nearly $180 extra was deducted, so that the government owes him something in the neighbourhood of $400. He filed his return in February and has not heard a word about it since.

The minister may tell me that this sort of delay is inevitable, and that the mechanical system now used cannot ensure a more rapid return. But when the ordinary taxpayer owes the government money he gets plenty of letters telling him what will happen to him. If it is overdue he has to pay interest. But where the reverse situation obtains there is not the same speed, and a sum of $350 is a lot of money to a man with a modest income. This particular case is only an illustration of many complaints I have received. In the interests of good public relations, if rebates can be speeded up, then this ought to be done.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, it has been my privilege to work with the regional offices and I have always found the officials to be understanding and extremely helpful. But now, with the new tax data centre, or whatever it is called, it seems that the god of efficiency is being worshipped in place of—if there is one—the god of humanity. The minister shakes his head.

However, I have discussed this problem with many of the minister's officials in various regions who have an idea that the tax data centre does not really pay for itself and that the old system—here I am, a Tory, talking about the old system—the old system of employing people for three months of the year to process returns and authorize rebates was, believe it or not, more efficient and quicker than the present system operated by the processing centre. I would like to know whether it costs the government more money now to collect taxes than it did under the old system?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I believe in my opening statement I gave statistics indicating the great decrease in costs and in the number of employees over the past several years.

Mr. Fairweather: I regret I have not been able to follow all of this afternoon's proceedings, as I was otherwise engaged, but that is wonderful news: We have saved money. I am still not sure, however, that the human aspect has been preserved. That is a matter of judgment between the minister and those who are in consultation with the taxpayer.

I do not believe the cliché—and I say this sincerely—that the government is just gobbling up things indiscriminately. I bring this question up because of the very good relationships the taxpayer has had when the basis was a regional one, and not a centralized machine. In the coal mining area of Minto and Chapman in New Brunswick, for many years the minister's department allowed a reasonable deduction for miners' clothing and lamps and other necessities. Just two years ago, I believe, this deduction was withdrawn. I have brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Finance, and I now bring it to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue. There has been no diminution in respect of the expense the coal miners have in furnishing themselves with this equipment. I would hope that the minister would look into this problem to see whether it is possible to restore the deduction. I believe the allowance was an amount of a couple of hundred dollars a year; it is not a huge amount from the standpoint of the government, but it is a sizeable amount to the taxpayer.

While I am on this subject, it always has intrigued me why the professional man—the lawyer, the doctor, and so on—is able to deduct in various ways either his library or medical equipment, and yet the government discriminates against a person such as a motor mechanic when he offers himself for work, or is self-employed by preference, and chooses to use his own tools. This is an administrative problem which could be overcome instantaneously, if the minister would snap his fingers. He is a man of ability and somebody said a man of humanity. Will he extend this exemption to motor mechanics who are engaged in their lawful occupation?

Perhaps my next question already has been answered, and if so I shall sit down. However I should like to know the average number of tax appeals, say in the last five years. If that is a toughy, let us make it three years; I am easy, too. I should like to know the percentage of overpayments of tax and the percentage of underpayments. There is a most interesting analysis of this in a recent issue of the Reporter in so far as these statistics apply to the United States. I should like to have them for Canada.

I remember that some time ago when the act was amended to provide ease and cheapness of appeal procedures, this matter met with great approval across the country. I should like to know how many appeals there are and whether, in the minister's opinion, the appeal procedure is as simple and as cheap as it might be. If not, might I suggest the establishment of regional appeal boards—and here I am back in the regions, and the minister will not like this, although it is one area I like—so that appeals can be handled with a minimum of expense and inconvenience to the public.

Lastly may I remind the minister, although I do not think he needs reminding that, after all, the government is a government of laws and not of men. This cliché has been stated many times, but I think we have an obligation to repeat it: No citizen ever should be at the mercy of the official. That is the role we should play as members. We should see that there are—and I hope the minister can tell me there are—efficient and reasonable remedies for the citizen when he feels aggrieved.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief. Following the comments of the hon. member for Carleton, I should like to add a word or two. This of course concerns deductions by employers on behalf of employees, and also the matter of the deductions not being refundable in the case of dual employment, and so on. He mentioned the case of one gentleman who was having deductions made by 13 employers. This, I agree, probably is an exceptional case. I should like primarily, however, to bring to the attention of the committee the construction industry, where possibly many people fill the same position over the term of a year. Deductions must be made from each one, and where that person has worked a sufficient length of time in other positions as well, his pension will be overpaid by the employer, or several employers, but not the employee. In the case of the employee it is refundable.

My comments go back to the time when the Canada Pension Plan was before the committee, and I recall this question being raised. If

I am mistaken, I will be glad to be corrected; but I am quite sure the reply we were given to our queries, concerning why this procedure was being followed and why no rebate of overpayments of deductions could be made to the employer, was to the effect that the United States never had found a way, that this was the procedure in the United States, and their plan had been in force since 1934, 1935, 1936, or something like that. We were told they never had found a way to make these overdeductions refundable.

I think this goes back to the horse and buggy days. I recall following my profession for many years at a time when certain practices were considered to be difficult. But in these days, with the electronic computer and all this other modern equipment, I cannot see any reason why some way should not be devised to compute these overpayments by employers, and as a consequence make them refundable. I believe at that time the answer was to the effect also that these overpayments were taken into the actuarial calculations of plan; but, to me, this does not seem to be sufficient reason to justify these overpayments.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I will not take too much time. I simply want to share my impressions on the income tax form.

I believe this form should be redesigned, because as it now stands, it entails certain inequities.

First, there are two forms: one for individuals and one for institutions and corporations. Why two forms? Why not make them more simple and combine them into one? Only one form, so that everyone would be on the same footing. If there are now different classes in society who enjoy some protection from the Department of National Revenue, that is not equitable. It is not fair. If some citizens are paying too much tax while others are not paying enough, let us have an adequate form and let it be used by everyone and let everyone be treated on the same footing.

It is not because I am in favor of taxes. On the contrary, deep in my mind I think taxes are robbery, and the way in which they are collected from the individuals is depriving them of the purchasing power they need for their livelihood. Some people who pay their taxes are unable to pay their debts. And it is considered normal to make them pay their taxes and to leave their debts outstanding.

There are small companies and small industries that have paid a lot of taxes and that are unable to meet their debts, while some large companies have a certain separate tax and pay less, and they are entitled to build up reserves, declared and undeclared reserves. They are not overly bothered, those reserves are not declared. In addition, there are four or five kinds of reserves, allowing these institutions to invest money in other places, on the stock market for instance, or in other bodies which do not pay any taxes and which are passed off as capital surplus which is not taxable. That is where the tax form should be redesigned in order to put everyone on the same footing. There should be some degree of justice in the tax form so that everybody would be equal and on the same footing.

In the province of Quebec, for instance, as concerns the sales tax, those who collect that tax for the province of Quebec are receiving 2 per cent.

Well, the federal government has the taxes collected by industrialists, businessmen, employers and those employers are required—the tax forms are so complicated and the situation is so involved—to pay accountants, qualified men to collect the tax and prepare tax returns.

In the case of the general tax collection, the income tax or the 11 per cent tax and others which the federal government levies, nothing is given to those people who are collecting for the federal government.

If the province of Quebec has seen fit to give 2 per cent, why should the federal government not give something to the industrialists or the individuals for collecting? This would prevent an increase in the cost of goods. All those operations are included in the cost of goods. It is always the little people who stand the racket and pay taxes.

When one considers the taxes paid by corporations and individuals, one finds that individuals and workers pay much more than corporations. There are approximately 80,000 corporations in Canada. There are large corporations with a big turn-over which invest billions and hundreds of millions of dollars, and yet pay much fewer taxes than the Canadian workers. This is unfair, and that is why I say there should be only one income tax return form, a simple one, simplified in all respects. Let us simplify it as much as possible and we shall give satisfaction.

With regard to the 11 per cent tax and other taxes collected, I should like to point out to the minister or his representative that industrialists or businessmen who sustain losses have to pay the 11 per cent tax just the same. If people go bankrupt, if the situation is confused, it is because the system is defective. It forces people to go bankrupt and compels them to pay the 11 per cent tax just the same.

I would ask the minister to consider the matter of bankruptcies, because small businessmen or dealers who suffer such losses also have to pay the tax. This is further injustice. This tax should be deducted from the loss. The state must be able to take its share of bankruptcies just like individuals, small companies or small industrialists.

I would have many things to say on tax collection in Canada. There are so many kinds of taxes, direct and indirect, that we do not know which way to turn. The taxpayer pays more taxes than what it costs him for his living. It costs him less to live than the taxes he pays. The citizens are so taxed now that taxes will have to be reduced, because they are much too high. Instead of being reduced, they are increased, and at the same time, the cost of living is rising. The government creates inflation because of the taxes it levies. In the case of those who charge excessive rates of interest, nobody protests against that, against these companies; there is something wrong in our economic situation. The governments are now endorsing and protecting high finance. And the people are fleeced. The people are on the verge of bankruptcy. The people are so heavily taxed and indebted that they do not see the day when they will be able to get out of it.

For some years we have been saying that there is prosperity in Canada. It is because the government and the citizens have been allowed to run into debt that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has to impose restrictions on credit and investments; citizens are too heavily indebted.

Mr. Chairman, I shall conclude my remarks by advising the Minister of National Revenue to simplify as much as possible and to do that immediately, because our people can no longer afford such absurd and abominable taxes. They must at least have the right to live. This right is taken away from them as well as the right to breathe, they are forced to get along on credit, with borrowed money.

The Minister of National Revenue should open his eyes. This concludes my remarks.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

[English]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, there are only two subjects to which I wish to refer. The first relates to a duty or tax of some kind on farm equipment parts imported from the United States and other countries. Many people feel this is an unfair tax because these parts are used for machinery used in the production of farm produce. Unfortunately I left my file in Saskatoon relating to this tax but I will provide the minister with this information at a later date.

The other subject upon which I wish to comment relates to income of dairy farmers who obtain cash payments for fluid milk at an early point in a production year, while at the same time a reserve is established to their credit by the company to which they deliver their products.

In some cases the department has ruled that this reserve is taxable at the time it is set up to the credit of the individual producer, and in other cases they have allowed the producer to elect to consider it taxable at the time the company actually passed it out to him in the form of cash. It has been brought to my attention by one or two people that they feel they have been discriminated against because the department in their cases has asked that the reserve be considered as cash for the year in which it was set up to their credit. I do not know whether I need say any more in this regard. Perhaps the minister is familiar with this problem and can deal with it, and I will leave it at that.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few words to say with regard to these estimates. A contribution by another member brought this point to mind. I refer to the situation in regard to itinerant construction workers, about which I have received a tremendous number of complaints. The complaint is that these workers are not allowed to deduct as an expense the cost of transportation from their home to their place of work, as other businessmen are permitted to do. An hon. member pointed out that professional and businessmen are allowed to make these deductions to a substantial degree, and in my opinion a percentage of the total of these expenses should be deductible in the case of these construction workers. Because of the field in which they are employed, their income is not as great as that of professional and businessmen, and I think it is only right and just that these people be given consideration in this respect.

I should also like to bring this matter to the attention of the minister. This is a difficult area, I know, but many people in the country believe that in those special instances where field officials are sent from the offices of the department to carry out investigations, they should employ a much greater degree of diplomacy. Of course if a taxpayer believes, rightly or wrongly, that an injustice has been done to him, he usually becomes very annoyed if Department of National Revenue officials come to exert pressure upon him to pay the proper taxes. Most other departments of government are set up to serve the public, and consequently these people feel that if taxing officials have unilateral powers in this area, a greater degree of diplomacy and propriety should be employed. I draw this matter to the attention of the minister because these complaints come to us as representatives of the people.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, a good many subjects have been dealt with this afternoon in the field of taxation. To meet many of the suggestions would require changes to be made in the Income Tax Act. This responsibility is, of course, that of the Minister of Finance. However, I can assure hon. members who have made representations in this regard that I will bring their representations to the attention of the Minister of Finance. Indeed hon. members will have an opportunity to bring their questions to his attention in the house when we are debating the budget resolutions in the very near future.

I should like to deal quickly with some of the points that have been raised, and I shall try to deal with as many of them as I can. The hon. member for Edmonton West raised the question of keeping good staff in the Department of National Revenue. It is because of the high quality of staff in the department, the professional people such as chartered accountants and lawyers who come to us and receive good training in the field of taxation, that it is difficulty to keep them. The reason for the difficulty in keeping staff is that salaries offered in industry and the professions are often higher. However, our recruiting has been going along reasonably well.

I believe that the new system of civil service classification which will be coming into effect soon, together with some of the practices Treasury Board have authorized to assist in recruitment and maintenance of staff in the taxation division, will be very helpful. I am hopeful that we will be able to build up and maintain as good a staff as we have always had and indeed, if possible, improve the calibre of the staff in the department.

Several hon. members raised questions with regard to charitable donations. When the Minister of Finance introduced his budget it included some proposed changes with respect to the handling of charitable donations under the Income Tax Act. The Minister of Finance indicated at that time that I would make a full statement when the budget resolution came forward. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I intend to do that. I do not think I could add anything today to what I have said in the last couple of years about the problems we have had in regard to charitable donations deductions. I would point out, however, that we have reached a situation where the system is much better than it ever has been with regard to the misuse of deductions for charitable donations.

A question was raised with respect to estate taxes and an extension of the period for payment. I can assure the hon. member for Edmonton West that if the Minister of Finance decided to change the system of payment, we in the Department of National Revenue could administer it, although it does, as the hon. member knows from his previous experience with the department, create some difficulty. I would point out in this regard that 75 per cent of estate taxes go to the provinces. So the hon. member is actually asking the provinces to take this money over a longer period of time. The hon. member for Edmonton West also raised a question with respect to the customs office in Edmonton. I will have my officials look into the situation which was brought to my attention.

The hon. member for Kootenay West raised several questions, one of which concerned the number of refunds made by the department. In 1965 we made 4,200,000 refunds out of an estmiated 7,100,000 returns. There were 1,210,000 errors in these 7,100,000 returns. Payments were received with returns in 1,800,000 cases and out of the 7,100,000 returns—

Mr. Lambert: Who found the errors?

Mr. Benson: This is done by computer. The errors are thrown out. A question was raised, I think by the hon. member for Royal, with regard to the slowness of making refunds to taxpayers. If there is an error in the return, the return goes back to the district office and the officer at that office then deals directly with the taxpayer. The mechanical work is carried out at the data centre. Officials at the district office are the people who make themselves always available to taxpayers.

The hon. member for Kootenay West raised a question with regard to the payment of sales tax on centennial projects and asked for a supporting philosophical argument. I cannot give the hon. member a philosophical reason for this tax being collected, but would point out that we do it because the law requires it to be done. Sales tax is applicable to these projects, and therefore it is the duty of my department to collect it.

The hon. member for Carleton raised a question that is, or course, a matter of great interest, namely the over-contribution of employers to the Canada Pension Plan. The hon. member indicated that he felt we were swindling the public, and so on, in this respect. I should like to assure him that all we are doing is applying the law as this parliament passed it. This is not done by regulation.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: Over protest.

Mr. Benson: This question was gone into very thoroughly in committee. I believe there are several pages of discussion in committee on this particular point. I can assure hon. members that we have not given up our search to find a system of refunding, but if and when a system is found it will require a change in the law.

The hon. member for Carleton said the government would keep this money, which is not true. The money goes into the Canada Pension Plan fund and it is turned over by investment to the provinces, and it will ultimately be paid out in benefits to those covered by the plan. Therefore the government as such, does not keep any of this money.

Mr. Monteith: May I ask the minister one question. Was I correct when I recalled an answer in committee to the effect that actually these overpayments were taken into the actuarial figuring of the plan?

Mr. Benson: I cannot at the moment recall this point, but I believe that they probably were. As you know, involved are large amounts of money, but relative to the total amount in the fund the over-contributions are not very big. The collections, as I recall, were estimated at $500 million in a year, and the over-contributions, according to the estimates given by the committee, would be about $5 million a year. So it would not have a serious effect on the actuarial computations of the fund.

Mr. Knowles: I believe the member for Perth was correct in his statement that that answer was given.

Mr. Benson: Yes, perhaps that is correct. It is not a simple matter to refund the amounts involved. The hon. member knows some of the difficulties involved; they are indicated in the evidence of the committee. However I shall be pleased to go into it at length at any time. It is not simply an accounting problem, where a computer can come up with an answer, because you get into the problem of which employer to give back the funds. Suppose someone worked for five employers during a year and the employers had over-contributed, you then run into the question of which employers to give the over-contribution back to, and in how to calculate the percentage entitlement of each. There are some really difficult problems involved. I should like to assure hon. members that we have not given up on this, although I have not been able to see any simple solution, from all the suggestions that have come forward to us, and have been developed in the department itself to date.

There was another question raised by the hon. member for Carleton, and that was the matter of the requirements of certified cheques by my department. The only place where the department requires certified cheques to my knowledge is in employees' deductions, where the money is sent to Ottawa rather than deposited in a bank to the credit of the Receiver General. The reason for this is that we entered into a system last year which has been generally accepted by most employers in Canada; I believe something like 90 per cent have accepted the system as being simpler. What is involved is that instead of having to make up a form every month and sending it off to Ottawa, they could simply tell the bank, at the time they made up their payroll or when they made a deposit, the amount of money they had deducted from their employees, which would be immediately credited to our account in the bank and transmitted to Ottawa. I should like to point out that this has worked out very well and most people are quite happy with it. It has also resulted in quite a saving in labour to the department.

I heard an estimate the other day from an official in the department that where it used to take 668 man-days to account for this each month, it now takes one hour of computer time to run through all the employee tax deduction remittances in Canada. The reason we require certified cheques in this particular instance is to be fair to the person who is using the other system, because if he went to the bank and said, "I owe the Receiver General so much for employee tax deductions", it is immediately deducted from their account. On the other hand, supposing a person chooses the other system, which they can, and payment of a sizeable amount of money is mailed to Ottawa from Vancouver, they would have the use of the money for perhaps three, four or five days until the cheque was cleared through their local bank. The reason for the certified cheque was so that the people depositing money in the bank and crediting the Receiver General would be in exactly the same position as those sending money direct to Ottawa.

With respect to the water pollution regulations, these were amended by order in council dated January 19, 1966 and I will be glad to supply the hon. member for Carleton with a copy of them. The regulations apply to 1965 and subsequent years. I believe the Minister of Finance indicated in his budget speech that this program was going to be carried on.

The hon. member for Peace River raised the question as to whether clearing includes debrushing, breaking and cultivation? The answer is yes. If a farmer does not have a profit in a particular year, then he can deduct the cost of clearing for the year and, through the averaging process available to all farmers, he can receive credit in the years he has income.

The hon. member from Halifax raised the question as to housekeeper deductions and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway raised the same question from a little different aspect. This of course would require a change in the law to allow deductions for housekeepers. I know representations have been made to the Minister of Finance and to previous ministers of finance with respect to this particular matter, and it was decided that government would not act in this regard.

The interesting question which the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway raised, with respect to a woman who was deemed to have been an employee under the Canada Pension Plan and an employer at the same time, is a normal situation. One can be both an employer and an employee, but employers do not as she indicated, have the right to deduct any amount of expenses that they want. The only expenses they can deduct are those involved in earning their business income.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I was referring to the case of a woman helper.

Mr. Benson: But she is not deriving her income from the business; she is deriving it from employment. She is both an employer and an employee. On the employer's side, by having a housekeeper, she does not have any income. She is receiving her income as an employee. However, I can assure the hon. member that this cannot be done by regulation; it would require a change in the Income Tax Act.

A question was raised by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary with regard to Mr. Hal Banks. I cannot give him an answer because I cannot give information with regard to individual taxpayers, other than to say that we make every effort to collect all the taxes due to the government of Canada. I was able to give him information with respect to the hypotheque that we put on Mr. Banks' home in Montreal, because this was a registered public document. However, to indicate here whether he has paid his taxes or has not, or has filed his return, I just cannot do, the same as I cannot do it in the case of members of parliament or any other taxpayers in the country.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I should like an answer to my question about the Canadian employees at foreign embassies.

Mr. Benson: Yes, I would be pleased to answer that question. Such employment can be made pensionable if the foreign government signs an agreement with Canada to have such employment made pensionable. We are attempting to get them to do that, but it was considered inadvisable at this time to permit persons to contribute as self-employed and pay 3.6 per cent because the foreign governments might not then wish to sign an agreement. However, we are hopeful that they will agree to have their employees covered by the Canada Pension Plan.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This concludes the main estimates for the Department of National Revenue for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967. It being five o'clock, shall I rise and report progress?

Business of the House

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if, before we proceed with the consideration of private members' business, I might be permitted to announce the business we propose to submit to the house for consideration on Monday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIlraith: On Monday, the first item I propose to call is No. 56 on today's order paper, the resolution preceding a bill to reorganize government departments; item No. 12, second reading of a bill to amend the Northwest Territories Act; item No. 13, second reading of a bill to amend the Yukon Act; item No. 5, second reading of a bill to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas. If we conclude those matters we would take item No. 49, a resolution preceding a bill to authorize certain payments to the provinces. If, by any extreme good fortune, we finished that we would proceed with item No. 52, a resolution preceding a bill to introduce a measure to give effect to term 29 of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada, Then, we would go on with item No. 55, second reading of a bill to provide for the establishment of the Company of Young Canadians. On Tuesday, I would want to call the business in a different order, and not continue with this order.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MEASURE TO REPEAL MINERAL RESOURCES STATUTE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-8, to repeal the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act.

He said: In 1943, Mr. Speaker, the parliament of Canada passed the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act, which I now seek to repeal. The reasons for the initial passage of the bill were outlined by Hon. Mr. Crerar, who was then minister of mines and resources in the Liberal government of that day, as found on page 4921 of Hansard for July 16, 1943

[The Chairman.]

To go back a little, a question arose as to the ownership of the minerals which might be found on lands transferred to the dominion in British Columbia and a test case was taken to the Privy Council to decide the ownership of the precious metals. The Privy Council gave judgment that the precious metals belonged to the crown in the right of the province.

Then, Mr. Hanson, the then hon. member for York-Sunbury, asked the minister for the citation, and Hon. Mr. Crerar went on to say:

The case was decided in 1889. An extract from the judgment of the Privy Council reads:

"The precious metals in, upon and under crown lands, are not incidents of the land but belong to the crown, and under section 109 of the British North America Act, 1867, beneficially to the province".

That judgment, of course, established that if precious metals were found on such lands, the dominion had no claim to any benefits arising from the exploitation of these precious metals.

Having read these words of Mr. Crerar, I want to go on to indicate that, in my view, Mr. Crerar misrepresented the judgment of the Privy Council. Parliament was led to believe that certain things existed when, in fact, they did not. In the first place, the Privy Council decision of 1889, to which reference was made, had nothing whatever to do with Indian reserve lands as such. This decision was related to the land grants or the 40-mile swath of land which was given to the Canadian Pacific in consideration for building the railroad and carrying out one of the terms of union between British Columia and Canada.

The matter came to a head when gold was discovered in 1884 in an area within this 40 mile land grant. A dispute arose as to the proprietory ownership of gold. This was the case that went to the Privy Council. Under section 92 of the British North America Act, which gives jurisdiction to the provinces, certain things are exempted from provincial jurisdiction, such as railways which are interprovincial. Section 91 of the B.N.A. Act, part 24, specifically gives exclusive jurisdiction to the parliament of Canada in the matter of Indians and lands reserved for Indians.

If I recall the quotation from Mr. Crerar, in 1943 the government of that day took the 1889 decision of the Privy Council related to lands conveyed by the dominion and applied it to Indian reserves. They distorted the position of the Privy Council, either deliberately or otherwise. The matter which was before the Privy Council related to the railway and the terms of union between the province of British Columbia and Canada, and the issue with which the Privy Council concerned itself was the words "public lands". In giving this citation I submit that Hon. Mr. Crerar misrepresented what the Privy Council did. I should like to read a portion of the Privy Council judgment as found on page 306 of The Law Reports, Appeal Cases, 1889:

> Their Lordships are for these reasons of the opinion that the judgment appealed from must be reversed, and that it ought to be declared that the precious metals within the railway belt are vested in the crown, subject to the control and disposal of the government of British Columbia, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to that effect.

The decision of the Privy Council specifically spelled out in this way was concerned with precious metals within the railway belt. This decision of the Privy Council reversed previous decisions by the Exchequer Court of Canada and the Supreme Court of Canada, which held that these precious metals were within the domain of the dominion government. There was in 1943 a deliberate conspiracy of arrogation on the part of the federal government and on the part of the provincial government as well. We must remember that the federal government was the Liberal party in office. In British Columbia in those days we had a coalition government, which was a marriage of convenience between the Liberals and the Conservatives. In that coalition government the Liberals were in majority. The individual who was the then minister of mines in British Columbia was the late Hon. Ernest Carson, who was a Conservative in that coalition.

The people in that government, on the basis of having misrepresented the decision of the Privy Council in London, undertook to deal arrogantly with the rights of our native Indian people in British Columbia, in so far as mineral resources are concerned.

At no time could I find any reference in the speeches in Hansard, either of the House of Commons or of the Senate, when this matter was being considered, or indeed in any other documents or records, to any consultation or discussion with the native Indian peoples themselves. It was just a matter of the usual practice of governments running rampant over the rights of a group of people who were in this country long before anybody else and who have, and I submit still have in British Columbia, the original rights to the land and to the resources.

I think that the schedule to the bill passed in 1943 misled parliament in at least three respects. In the preliminary part of it there are four whereases, the first of which was misleading, and I want to show to what extent. I shall read it:

> Whereas from time to time treaties have been made with the Indians for the surrender for various considerations of their personal and usufructury rights to territories now included in the province of British Columbia, such considerations including the setting apart for the exclusive use of the Indians of certain definite areas of land known as Indian reserves;

That statement and that whereas is grossly misleading, because we know that the number of treaties in effect in British Columbia is relatively few and affects only a very small portion of the landed area, and of the people themselves. By and large the native Indian people in British Columbia have never entered into any treaty with any government over their land. It was simply a matter of encroachment by European settlers and by the government of those days on to the land held by the native Indian people from time immemorial.

Sir, the first whereas is false and misleading because it leaves the impression that treaties have been made to set aside certain landed areas as reserves, and such was not the case.

The second whereas says:

> And whereas the said Indian reserves were conveyed to the dominion government as trustee for the Indians under the terms and conditions set forth in an agreement dated the 24th day of September, 1912, between the dominion government and the province of British Columbia;

That is misleading because it follows the first whereas, and the implication is that this was done with the consent of and by the agreement of the Indian native peoples in British Columbia. The facts of the matter are that it was not.

Never at any time have the native peoples in British Columbia agreed to accept the so-called agreement of 1912, the findings of the McKenna-McBride Royal Commission, the provisions of the Indian Land Settlement Act, or any of the unilateral means used by government for its purposes. There has not been one iota of agreement by the Indian peoples to the one-sided approach that dealt with their original hereditary land claims.

The third whereas is misleading also, because it says as follows:

> And whereas the precious metals in, upon, or under the lands comprising such reserves are not incidents of such lands but belong beneficially to the crown in the right of the province of British Columbia with the result that the development of all the minerals in, upon or under such lands is at present impractical since the precious and base metals are closely associated and cannot be mined separately;

That is misleading because it takes the 1889 decision of the Privy Council that related to the C.P.R. land grants and says that, in effect, that decision applied to Indian reserves. Such was not the case.

Based upon that an agreement was signed to deal arbitrarily with the rights of the native Indian people with respect to their mineral resources. The effect of that was shown in a document recently circulated by the Indian affairs branch under date January 18, 1965, dealing with this matter. It points out that before the mineral resources of any reserves can be developed they must—and there is no question about this; the document asserts the term—they must be surrendered. In other words, in order for mineral resources on any Indian reserve to be developed today, under the terms of the agreement which was ratified in 1943 by the law which I now seek to repeal, it was made a mandatory provision that the Indian peoples must give up their rights to these resources, must toss them to one side, must surrender them and no longer have any rights in them.

This surrender is then followed by the administration of the resource itself being given to the government of the Province of British Columbia, and the relevant law of that province being made applicable. The income from any of the operations of mining or leasing, or from prospectors' licenses or the like, in fact the income from any such activity is, under the agreement, divided 50-50 between the province of British Columbia and the government of Canada.

It is interesting to note that the government of Canada persistently has claimed that it exercises that income and administers it in trust for the Indian Band concerned. It is interesting to note, too, that in the whole period of time since 1943, since this agreement has been in effect, the total amount of money that has accrued from the exploration or exploitation of mineral resources on Indian reserves in British Columbia has come to the grand total of $10 exactly. There is $6.25 from one reserve, and $3.25 from another.

However, as the memorandum of the Indian affairs branch dated January 18, 1965, points out, a tremendous amount of interest has developed in the last year to two in mineral resources and mineral exploration in British Columbia. The Indian affairs branch points out that there has been an increasing interest in the mineral resource potential on Indian reserves in British Columbia, and that this interest may serve to accelerate in developing these resources.

This parliament should want to repeal the act, for the reason that it was initially an imposition upon a group of people by unilateral action on the part of the government of Canada and the government of the province of British Columbia. The act was passed without consultation.

We are in an era now when there is an undivided opinion that the key to success for Indian peoples, and for their advancement, rests in their being able to control their own affairs. If we repeal this imposing legislation we shall return to the situation that existed prior to 1943 and we shall give to the Indian people the right to decide for themselves what they want to do with the mineral resources on their reserves. There was misinterpretation of a Privy Council decision. There was no consultation with the Indian people. In fact no advice was given to them about it. Parliament was misled, as I have indicated, and the question of land and mining resources has never been really settled.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The government has indicated on a number of occasions—although it has not done anything about it, yet—that it wishes to deal with this land question in a fair and just way. I submit that it is not possible to do so, and to meet the original and hereditary claims of the Indians of British Columbia, so long as this statute remains on the books. I sincerely hope that parliament will repeal this law at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has spoken well on a public bill which is of considerable interest to Indians and reserve Indians in British Columbia. He has spoken with his usual feeling for the Indian people of the province, and with the capability he always brings to a case in their interest when he speaks before this house.

I listened with a great deal of interest as he discoursed on this problem of mineral rights on Indian lands in British Columbia. The bill which he has brought before the house is a little bill which simply seeks the repeal of the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act. The hon. member for Skeena says in the explanatory note to his bill:

> The agreement provides that the administration, control and disposal of all minerals and mineral claims, both precious and base, in, upon or under all Indian Reserves in British Columbia shall be subject to the laws of the province of British Columbia.
> The agreement further provides that any revenues collected by the province of British Columbia in respect of any sale or other disposition of minerals and mineral claims shall be divided between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia on a 50/50 basis.

This is the purpose of the little bill, a measure which arises out of the historical background which has already been discussed by the hon. member for Skeena and which I intend to review to some extent, though possibly with the emphasis differently placed.

The province of British Columbia entered confederation in 1871. Clause 13 of the Articles of Union provided that the dominion would have charge of Indian affairs and that the province would from time to time convey to the dominion such lands as were required for reserves. The selection of lands for the Indians caused a great deal of trouble between the two governments and resulted in a number of commissions being set up either jointly or by each government separately. The matter was finally disposed of in 1938 by order in council 1036 of the Lieutenant Governor in Council of British Columbia, by which reserves were conveyed to the dominion.

From the very begining the dispute over surface rights involved mineral rights and the administration thereof, with both the dominion and province claiming jurisdiction. This dispute became even more complicated when in the precious metals case—Attorney General of B.C. v. Attorney General of Canada, 1889—the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council ruled that the precious metals, gold and silver, were vested in the crown in the right of the province.

The administration was then divided —precious metals to the province and base metals to the dominion. The province later entered a claim for administration over the base metals as well. The bickering led to the passing in 1943 of the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act, by which administration of base mineral rights would pass to the province upon surrender by the Indians. This act settled no legal rights but was merely an attempt to place administration in one place since, with the previous divisions, no development could take place, as in British Columbia gold and silver are contained in almost all the ores of the remaining minerals.

Anyone who sets out to mine base metals in British Columbia finds he is involved not only in a base metal mine but in a gold mine and a silver mine. For this reason, dividing minerals into precious minerals and base minerals presented an impossible situation.

While the hon. member for Skeena was addressing the house and referring to the action of the federal government in respect of this matter of the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act, I sent out for a copy of Hansard covering the debate from which he quoted, and I have before me the debates of the House of Commons for the session of 1943, volume 5. I wish to turn to the debate to which the hon. member referred. There was a good debate in the House of Commons that day. I see that the report begins on page 4920 and continues for several pages, to page 4927. A number of speakers took part, so it cannot be said that this little bill was cavalierly dealt with, or passed over very quickly by the parliament of that year. It received a good deal of consideration, and Hansard stands on record to that effect.

Hon. Mr. Crerar introduced the bill, and it is interesting to note that among those who entered the discussion was Mr. Coldwell the leader of the C.C.F. party in the house during that period. Another hon. member who played a considerable part and had a good deal to say about the bill—he finally called for it to be passed on division—was Mr. Neill, who was a long-time member for Comox-Alberni, whose able successor I see in his place in the house today. Mr. Neill was himself a member of the old C.C.F. party. Or was he an independent?—I stand to be corrected.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: If the hon. member is referring to the earlier member for Comox-Alberni, he sat in this house as an independent. I sat at one time as a member of the C.C.F. caucus, but that was later than 1943.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Neill was a well known member of the house. He was well known in B.C. and was quite a critic of the government of the day. He said, as recorded at page 4923 of Hansard for that year:

> The general principle of this bill is undoubtedly good—

He was raising some question in relation to the jurisdictional dispute going on, but he said:

> The general principle of this bill is undoubtedly good because it does away with the objection that has been in existence for many years in British Columbia, that if the Indians—or anyone acting for them—discovered a valuable mine, it could never practically be worked because the other party, the provincial government or the dominion government, would step in and say, "You may take out your silver but you must not touch our lead, for instance."

This is the old problem of trying to work any claim, and the divided jurisdiction between base metals and precious metals, recognition that precious metals under Indian reserves belong to the crown in the right of British Columbia, and that development of all minerals, under the laws of Canada and British Columbia, independently, is impractical since precious and base metals cannot be mined separately.

The act also provided that as a matter of convenience, without affecting legal rights, the province of British Columbia should have charge of development of all minerals under the Indian reserves. It went on to provide that the administration and development of the minerals shall be subject to the laws of the province, following surrender pursuant to the Indian Act.

It went on to say that there should be no prospecting or right of entry to the Indian reserves until permission had been obtained from the Indian agent, and then it said that the agreement concerns only metallic minerals.

Mr. Brewin: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deachman: Yes.

Mr. Brewin: I am following his argument with considerable interest, but is he going to deal with the point made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), which was that this act was passed upon an erroneous assumption that the situation of Indian lands was legally the same situation as railway lands whereas, in fact, by the provisions of the B.N.A. Act Indian lands were explicitly put under federal control and therefore were not provincial crown lands?

I wonder if, in the course of his interesting discussion, the hon. member is going to deal with that point, because it seems to me that the crux of the very excellent argument put before us by the hon. member for Skeena was basically that this act was passed on a misconception of the actual situation, passed upon an assumption that these were provincial lands, and therefore some arrangement had to be made with regard to mineral rights in respect of Indian lands in the province. In fact, if the hon. member for Skeena is right—and I studied the case in the Privy Council to which he referred—the whole assumption was erroneous, and minerals on Indian lands are strictly under federal control.

Mr. Deachman: My hon. and learned friend is skilled in the law and I am not. I see here an argument which is basically a legal one, and a deep constitutional matter involving the validity of the act itself. I do not think this is a matter upon which my hon. friend would expect me to be skilled or to discuss as skilfully as he did. In fact, I do not know very much about it at all.

If time permits and my hon. friend would like to elucidate further upon this point I certainly would be willing to listen to him develop that argument. It would be valuable to us to hear his discourse on that subject, and I would welcome his entry into the debate. Does my hon. friend wish to ask another question?

Mr. Brewin: I was going to ask my hon. friend if, in the course of his preparation for his contribution to this debate, he did not pay attention to this rather crucial problem?

Mr. Deachman: I must apologize to my hon. friend for my preparation. It was rather lightning-like, and somehow I skimmed over the very important constitutional point which my hon. friend is raising. As I say, I think it would be of value to our discussion if he were to explain the principle more fully when he himself has a chance to speak in the debate.

Mr. Howard: The bill has only been on the order paper since January 24.

Mr. Deachman: Since the effective date of the act, mineral surrenders to only six out of a total of 1,600 reserves in British Columbia have been approved by Indian bands, and none has been approved since 1950, which is a rather interesting note on the effectiveness of any program relating to the development of minerals under Indian lands in B.C.

Administrative responsibility for the use of the land resources is divided between the two governments, once a band has approved a mineral surrender. The mining or subsurface rights are administered by the B.C. government, whereas the rights to use land surface for mining purposes are administered by the federal government in consultation with the band council. There has been no development of mines on B.C. Indian lands, and exploratory work has been practically negligible.

The Indians' half share of revenues collected by the province would include only fees for recording claims and assessment work, etc., until such time as a mine had produced for three years, when it would become taxable under the British Columbia Mineral Taxation Act. There are no provisions for acreage rentals or cash bonuses on claims staked under B.C. legislation.

There have been discussions between the governments of B.C. and Canada in recent years, in fact within the last year or so, and progress is being made toward what is hoped to be a better situation for the Indians, and the administration of these lands for mining purposes.

In 1956 and 1957 discussions took place with the provincial deputy minister of mines in respect to interpretation of the act, and these led to some understandings which I will discuss. First, the revenue to be shared between the province and Canada, for band benefit, includes that collected under the Mining Income Tax Act by the province.

The band council could negotiate terms with an applicant for the use of surface for mining purposes, including payment to the band of acreage rental, cash bonus, amount per ton mined or a percentage of the value of mineral produced. On approval of terms, the band council could authorize the Indian agent to grant permission to the applicant to enter, prospect and stake claims on the reserve under the act and other provincial legislation.

No serious exploration or development of mineral resources resulted from these understandings, so a formal approach was made to the province of British Columbia for a revision of the agreement through an exchange of correspondence between ministers in 1961. My notes, in researching this, go on to say that the provincial ministers could not agree to transferring administration of minerals on Indian reserves to the federal government and, further, the province claimed ownership not only of precious metals, but also of base metals on some reserves. So the jurisdictional dispute continued. In particular was the fact that the province certainly did not want to see a situation in which two mining laws applied to the province, one which applied to commercial mining and one which now had sprung up under this act.

In subsequent discussions, Indian affairs officers produced evidence to invalidate the province's claim to base metals, and an appeal was made to leave questions of legal ownership unsettled in favour of reaching an agreement which would give the Indians in British Columbia similar benefits from minerals as was enjoyed in other provinces. At that time provincial officers found our general proposal unacceptable, but they offered no alternative proposal.

This is virtually where the negotiations stand today between the federal government and the province of British Columbia. I understand from the minister and from officers in the department that negotiations are going on steadily, that interviews have been held between officials of both governments and that to date no suitable solution has been found which would bring about a settlement of the question.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say I am as much in sympathy with the purposes of this bill as is my hon. friend. I am not certain that the simple repeal of the act, as he suggests, is the way to approach it. I think there will have to be further steps, and I believe these must be taken together. I think they have to be taken under the aegis of the government. There may be some question in respect of whether or not we are involving ourselves here in the handling of a money bill. I believe the government is aware that the problem exists. There is every evidence that it is being pursued by the dominion government and the provincial government, and that the government has at heart the interests of the Indian and native in working toward a solution of this problem.

I am sure the discussions in the chamber today, which have been aired by the introduction of the hon. member's bill, give impetus to the solution of a problem which needs a solution, and which we all would welcome.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, having seconded the bill introduced by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), I should like to say just a few words to indicate my support for it. I have been listening as closely as I could to the argument being advanced by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman). In his analysis of the situation it would seem to me that he was in error in certain particulars at least, although I am glad to know he indicated his sympathy with the purposes of this bill. The hon. member had something to say about the matter of unification of mining laws in respect of mining operations in the province of British Columbia, regardless of the class of lands involved.

I should like to suggest to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that the act which the hon. member for Skeena is seeking to repeal really is not concerned with the question of a certain set of rules for the conduct of mining operations, but rather is concerned with a certain division of the revenue. It seems to me that this is the important principle involved in the proposal of the hon. member for Skeena—that is, that an error was committed by parliament in ratifying the agreement with the province of British Columbia and that grievous injury was done in fact by the province and its government of that day in seeking to impose this kind of jurisdiction on the Indian affairs branch on behalf of the Indian people of their full rights to the revenues from the properties.

This, to me, is the issue. Had there been some discussion with the Indian people in an effort to seek agreement that there be general application of the mining rules on their property similar to those which apply to mining operations in the province, then that might have been a proper field of negotiation for the province of British Columbia and perhaps the Indian affairs branch on behalf of the Indian people.

I submit there is a distinction there. I also would suggest that I might have a word to say here on the question that was raised by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). In doing so, may I say I certainly am, shall we say speaking on, layman's level to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. In this connection I should like to point out, with particular reference to the decision of the Privy Council on which apparently this original law was based, the distinction between lands in the railway belt and the Indian reserve lands which, to my layman's mind at least, appears to set out the very important distinction which has been established within the British North America Act itself.

In section 92 of the British North America Act, which has to do with the fields in which the legislatures of the provinces may exclusively make laws, we find in No. 10:

> 10. Local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes:

It mentions specifically railways and other works or other undertakings connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces. This, it seems to me, puts the situation in respect of any lands granted to a railway in a very different category from that in which the Indian reserve lands are placed by the British North America Act, because thereference to Indian reserve lands is set out very specifically in section 91, which deals with matters which lie exclusively within the jurisdiction of the federal authority. As has been mentioned in many discussions in relation to Indian problems in this house, it makes specific reference to Indians and lands reserved for the Indians.

In my understanding of the matter of land title, the basic rule is that unless there is a specific reservation in the title of the land for a specific purpose, such as the reservation of mineral rights, then the title to the land includes everything that is on it and under it. I am not going to go into the question of what may be above it. I think this is a pretty clear understanding. I know for example, in the title to my own property in Alberni, in respect of the E & N railway belt there is a specific reservation of mineral rights to the present owner, the C.P.R. It seems to my lay mind at least that this is the point the hon. member for Greenwood was raising in his question, and I felt that I should express it in lay language, with the hope that the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) would understand me and perhaps agree with me.

Mr. Deachman: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Does he not agree that the dispute which arose between the provinces and the federal government in regard to mineral rights on lands which the provinces, after confederation, had to transfer to the dominion government for the purposes of establishing Indian reserves, involved a jurisdictional conflict which has not yet been solved? Does he not agree that the whole problem with which we are dealing today arose as a result of a failure on the part of the federal and provincial governments over the years to determine just who has mineral rights? Is that not the basis of this whole case?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that under the terms of union with British Columbia and the original provinces which formed the Dominion of Canada, provision was made that the British North America Act of 1867 would apply. It is clearly stated in that act that Indian lands come under the jurisdiction of the federal government, as trustees for the Indian people.

My own view is that the province of British Columbia has always taken a very narrow and parsimonious approach to the rights of Indian peoples, and that the grounds on which it has chosen to involve itself in disputes as to Indian rights have created serious injustices to these native peoples. I think it is part of our responsibility in this house to make sure that this situation is reversed. If we intend to deal with the question referred to by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), the first thing we should do is repudiate these bad arrangements, which were agreed to probably with an incomplete understanding and appreciation for the rights of Indians.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I want to make one or two observations concerning the Eden valley Indians in southern Alberta. This land was purchased by the federal government in order to create a reserve. I am told that the mineral rights were reserved, which is distinctly different from what happened in respect of the mineral rights on other reservations, where they were retained in the name of the Indians in the form of a settlement made prior to 1905. I have in mind the situation regarding the Brocket, Gleichen and Sarcee reserves. I understand the Indians on these reserves possess the mineral rights.

It has always been my feeling that, since the federal government purchased those lands from private operators to create these Indian reserves, the Indians occupying these lands should have the mineral rights. I rise at this time to speak on behalf of the Eden valley Indians and to place their difficulties, which have been brought to my attention on a number of occasions, before this house. I feel that these Indians should by all means have title to these mineral rights.

In order that a vote may be taken on this bill, which seems to have found favour in the eyes of most members of the house, I will sit down at this time.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to express my opinion about the provisions of this bill.

Mr. Knowles: That will take just about long enough to prevent a vote.

Mr. Mackasey: I do not wish to vote without expressing my opinion, and I think it would be in contravention of the open-minded approach normally taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre if I was not allowed the opportunity of speaking on this subject. There is a great deal I could say about this subject in relation to the very able contribution made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), who is interested in problems of this kind, but whose general contributions are made during other debates in a belligerent manner.

Mr. Justice Macdonald summed up the best attitude toward this problem in the Brantford courthouse on April 22, 1959 when he said:

> It is a matter of common knowledge that Indians in their dealings with white men generally get the worst of the bargain.

The hon. member for Skeena has done the Indian people of Canada a service by bringing this obvious miscarriage of justice to the attention of the house. In all fairness, the reason I am speaking at this time, even though the amount involved may be less than $10, is that the agreement in question was obviously arranged between the Dominion of Canada and the province of British Columbia. It relates to how the revenues derived from mineral rights should be shared. Money bills should not be introduced in this house under the guise of private members business. I find myself reluctant to express my opinion at this time, because I do not wish to talk the bill out, and I regret that I do not have more time at my disposal.

May I call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, in order to give the hon. member for Verdun an opportunity to complete his remarks, perhaps the house will agree by unanimous consent to put this bill in first place on the list of public bills for discussion on the next appropriate occasion.

Mr. Mackasey: I am agreeable to that suggestion, if it expresses the will of this house.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply this day:]

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Customs and Excise—

1. General administration, operation and maintenance including authority, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year from firms and individuals requiring special services, $49,278,000.

Taxation—

5. General administration and district offices including recoverable expenditures on behalf of the Canada Pension Plan, $44,986,300.

Tax appeal board—

10. Administration expenses, $171,500.

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Hochelaga) moved that the fifth report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, presented to the house on Thursday, May 5, 1966, be now concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles: On division, Mr. Speaker.

• (2:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this motion.

We are asked to reduce the quorum from 13 to nine members. The committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts is made up of 25 members of parliament.

I feel that there is something wrong. If 13 members out of those 25 cannot be found to attend that committee's sittings, then I submit that the committee is not important and must cease its activities.

The first point I want to make is that the Ralliement Créditiste is not represented at all on eight committees because the Liberals refused to allow us a member on them. An attempt was made to divide the number of committee members according to the number of members in each party.

It is a fact that Liberal members are not interested in taking part in the work of committees. On the other hand, we are interested and, in spite of that, there are eight committees on which the créditistes are not represented at all. It is not surprising, therefore, that committees fall short of the quorum when interested members are not allowed to sit on them.

And on how many committees is the party of my hon. friend the member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) not represented? And if I asked the same question to the members of the New Democratic Party? They are also interested in sitting on committees where they are not represented. I am convinced that there would be many of them if they were invited to become members of those committees.

They cannot attend because they were denied that. There are members of the New Democratic Party and the Ralliement Créditiste who are not members of the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts and who, in spite of that, attend its sittings. There is for instance, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). I do not think he is a member of that committee and yet he attends its meetings although his attendance is not recorded. Why? Because there is no room for those who are interested. Members of the Liberal party are chosen even if they are not interested and do not show up. Then, there is no quorum. Those who are interested cannot make up the quorum. That is my first argument.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members who are interested, whatever their party, should be asked if they want to sit on committees and should be allowed to do so if they agree. Then we would have a quorum and the committees could hold their meetings. If at least members who are interested could have their names substituted for those who have given their names to be members of committees, but are not interested.

There are hon. members who are interested in being members of this committee, but are not. Why? Because there is no room for them. When I asked the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) the other day whether he would have liked to sit on the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, he said he would have accepted. At any rate, he attends the meetings, but he is not a member of the committee and his presence does not count for the quorum. There is a weakness in the establishment of committees. The Liberal whip has to run after his own members to get them together, to ask them to attend committee meetings, even when they are not interested. The situation is the same for the Conservative party.

Instead of leaving that to the whips, all members interested in being members of a given committee should be asked to give their names. Afterwards, the substitutions needed could be made. Thus, we would not be faced with the problem we have today.

The second reason why I object to the quorum being reduced from 13 to nine is that no committee is without Liberal members, none has less than 13 Liberal members. If the government is serious,—it is to the government that we owe the committee reform—it should see to it that all members of its party attend committee meetings. There are 13 Liberals on each committee, but they are not interested in attending the meetings. That is why there is no quorum. The party in office wants to have too big a share in committee membership. Its members are not interested; they do not want to take part in committee meetings and that is why there is no quorum.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that if the members of the party in office were interested in attending committee meetings, then we would not face the problem we face today and there would be a quorum in committees.

As the motion is debatable and as we are entitled to 30 minutes each, I intend to use all my time or at least a good deal of it, because I believe that we are now debating a question of principle dealing not only with the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, but to any other committee. What is good for one committee is good for all the others.

The third reason why I strongly object to reducing the quorum is because I found that when a committee has a hard time getting a quorum, it is because more important work is being carried out in the house. For instance —and the chairman of the committee can bear me out on this point—Monday and Tuesday last, the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts found it hard to get a quorum for certain sittings. Why? Because important speeches were being delivered in the house, namely a statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), which was awaited by everyone. Now, it was understandable to find all Liberal members present in the house. That same afternoon, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) made an important speech and Conservative members were present in great numbers in the house. In the evening a very important vote took place. That is why the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts did not have a quorum all day long. This is entirely normal and I am convinced that the Prime Minister preferred making his statement when all members of his party were present in the house instead of making it in front of empty seats or when members of his party were scattered here, there, and everywhere in various committees.

It is quite understandable, Mr. Speaker, that members should be present in the house when important matters are being discussed here. But then, committees cannot get a quorum.

Mr. Speaker, the main reason is that committee members are selected by the whips, whereas all members, regardless of their party, interested in taking part in committee work should be able to do so.

The second reason is that counting the government members there would be enough for a quorum, but they are not interested.

In the third place, there is the fact that when something important is happening in the house, members prefer to sit in the house rather than in the committees, and that is perfectly normal. But reducing the quorum would not solve the problem because in that case, when members have to choose between a committee in which they are particularly interested and the house, where something important is happening, what would their decision be?

• (2:50 p.m.)

What should we, as members, choose? We are faced with a difficult alternative. The member should not be given such an alternative. He has to choose between being absent from committee meetings which are important and which, he feels, he ought to attend, and being absent from the house while something important is going on. A member should not be faced with such an alternative.

That is why the solution is not in reducing the quorum but in a better organization of the committees' work, in finding a system whereby members may be allowed to attend the house when it is important and also to attend the committee sittings when such committees, also of importance, are sitting.

Such a formula must be found instead of reducing the quorum.

We are asked to reduce the quorum to nine, which means that only nine members would submit reports and decide on some matters on behalf of all their colleagues. That is not proper.

Let me give an example. During the debate on the budget speech in the house, the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs was sitting. Now, the people most interested in the budget debate are necessarily the members of the finance committee. Yet, the finance committee was sitting during consideration of the budget in the House of Commons. That is not proper. Those who are interested in the financial administration of the country had to choose between taking part in the budget debate, which lasted six days and which is surely the most important debate of the session on financial matters, and attending the committee sittings where consideration was being given to the financial problems of the country.

You see, Mr. Speaker, the situation in which members interested in the problems and financial administration of the country found themselves. They could not be in both places at the same time while discussions were taking place on important matters concerning the finances of this country. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I claim that the solution is not in the reduction of committees' quorum but in finding time periods during which the committees could sit outside the sittings of the House of Commons. For instance let the house sit three weeks a month and let the committees sit one week while the house is not sitting.

Mr. Lewis: Or three days a week.

Mr. Grégoire: Or yet, have the house sit three days per week and, as the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) suggests, allow the committees to sit two days a week while the house is not sitting.

Let the committees sit a week per month or two days per week, while the house is not sitting, and their work will be done more seriously. Besides, members could then attend the sittings of the House of Commons. The way things are being done at the present time we would have to be in both places at the same time and that is not possible.

We are still looking for the scientist who will discover a system allowing people to be in two places at the same time. Such a system has not yet been developed and it is not this government which will develop it either. We still do not possess the gift of ubiquity. For lack of this system for the time being, we cannot be forced to be in the house and in the committees at the same time.

I therefore ask the government and the leader of the house to devise another system, different from that which is offered to us at this time.

That is why we object to the motion before us today.

[English]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I can agree with many of the things the hon. member for Lapointe has said. However, I plan to support this motion because it is the only way out of our immediate difficulties. But I would suggest that a committee of representatives from each party should be formed to discuss these matters.

An hon. Member: A committee on committees.

Mr. Prittie: A committee on committees, if you like.

I do not believe we are going to settle this matter on the floor of the house each time one of these motions comes before us.

I should like to make one suggestion, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that the house might well consider a system of appointing alternate members to committees. Quite frequently a committee has to meet on Monday and a member has not returned from his riding. If his party were able to name an alternate, that member could be there to take his place and it might be possible to provide a quorum. There have been many times, as the hon. member for Lapointe has said, when there have been enough members at committee meetings but not members named to the committee. It seems to me that this is a suggestion which might help to provide quorums and get the committee sessions under way. I would like to suggest again that this matter is not going to be settled in the house, but that a committee dealing with committees should take this matter under advisement very soon.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to protest the suggestion that quorums of committees be reduced. I have found in any organization in which I have previously been involved that only a few people participate actively in the real work of the organization. However, I believe in this particular situation in the House of Commons we are only a few—265 representatives—of the 20 million people who elected us. I believe the people of Canada have the right to expect that their representatives will concern themselves with the business of the nation, and that concern should be a continuing one as long as this house is in session.

It might be a good idea to recall the situation which brought about the hearings of the committee on broadcasting. The intention was to debate the whole issue on the floor of this house, but rather than use the time of the house when we have so much other business to attend to the suggestion was that the matter should be turned over to the standing committee on broadcasting. It seems to me that those who favoured the plan to turn it over to committee and those who opposed this plan have a common interest in seeing that a quorum for the committee is maintained, and that we should take the committee work seriously. I will agree that it is not a good thing to see the press and witnesses waiting for hours for a quorum to develop, but I do not believe there would be any improvement if the membership of the committee is reduced to nine when the membership of the entire committee is 25. If we have to reduce it to as low as nine we will be throwing out the balance which a committee should have in hearing the important issues placed before it.

How can such a committee possibly have the temerity to ask witnesses to come from great distances and from important duties to present their case to such a small group of members of parliament? I cannot see any witness looking at us very favourably under such circumstances. I would suggest that we take our duties a little more seriously than we have been doing, and that the alternatives which have been suggested by previous speakers be considered and tried before we act on the easy suggestion of reducing the size of the quorum.

• (3:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). All the members of the house know that the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts consists of 25 members, 13 of whom are Liberals.

Now we are asked to reduce the quorum from 13 to nine, that is four less than the number of Liberals assigned to that committee, the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts.

Mr. Speaker, I said last week that it is no more important to reduce the quorum of committees than to reduce the number of committees. We have some 23, 24 or perhaps 25 parliamentary committees, where members of the Liberal party and of the opposition parties make an appearance. Now, we of the Ralliement Créditiste have no members on eight of those committees. There are two points of view in that respect.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely believe that the hon. member for Lapointe is right in asking that the quorum be left as it is. If the Liberals cannot take their responsibilities concerning the committee in question, they should not lay the blame on the others; let them attend the meetings and the other members will also attend, as they are doing now.

And, Mr. Speaker, to support my colleague from Lapointe, I say that we cannot agree to the quorum of the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts being reduced. But we are ready to co-operate with the House of Commons as a whole to get results, not results to please the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier), for instance, who is chairman of that committee. The hon. member for Hochelaga told us himself last Friday night on the television program Les couche-tard—I saw him then—that he did not know what was going on in Ottawa but that he was there just the same. So he is here, we see him here right now, however we cannot accept any suggestion from the hon. member for Hochelaga. We want results and we will get them if each member assumes his responsibilities, if each member—

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. First, I think that the hon. member for Villeneuve quoted me so freely that I failed to recognize the remarks he attributed to me. Second, we are discussing at this time the suggestion from the majority of the committee, not from a single member.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, was there really a point of order in what the hon. member for Hochelaga just said?

An hon. Member: No, a question of privilege.

Mr. Caouette: Neither a question of privilege. I heard the hon. member for Hochelaga on the program Les couche-tard—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the hon. member for Villeneuve to keep to the matter now before the house, that is the resolution in the name of the hon. member for Hochelaga.

Mr. Caouette: Then, Mr. Speaker, will you give a ruling about the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Hochelaga?

Mr. Speaker: I will study the matter.

Mr. Caouette: May I expect an answer before next week, Mr. Speaker?

In any case, I think that even if the hon. member for Hochelaga is very active in the committee of which he is chairman, several of his fellow members from the Liberal party forget to attend its meetings.

Therefore, under the circumstances we cannot accept the suggestion that the quorum be reduced from 13 to nine. We ask that it be set at 13, that it remain at 13 and that the committee do its work in a constructive rather than a negative way. And the hon. member for Hochelaga is well versed in positive terms.

Now, I would ask him, through you Mr. Speaker, to call on his friends in the Liberal party to attend the committee sittings, and then we would not have to be concerned with reducing the quorum, but we would instead be concerned with increasing it to achieve tangible results, positive results concerning broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts as we are not discussing in parliament.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) that it would be unseemly at this time to reduce the quorum of the committees for reasons obvious to all.

One of those reasons is that, not so long ago the house voted an increase in parliamentary indemnity, and the people would not look kindly upon an apparently unexplainable measure to reduce the quorum of the committees.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure that the committee is truly overworked, because in my own personal case and in the case of some of my colleagues, I know that we are members of three committees that have been convened only twice in the past four months. We surely can handle more than that.

There may be another reason, deeper than that mentioned by some of my colleagues. Reading the newspapers and magazines, we have heard, we have read recently that there were in the house and in all parties, members called the "Young Turks" who are complaining that they are not kept sufficiently busy and are not carrying enough responsibility. I think it would be sound psychology to give them work to do and keep them occupied in committees.

Mr. Speaker, I think the crux of the matter is to find means to get members to attend the committees. There are several. I think the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) mentioned one worthy of consideration when he spoke of television. At these committee sittings, when members realize that the roll is called in front of television cameras and that their constituents will see they are absent without valid reason, they will then probably want to attend more often.

Accordingly, I shall second the proposal made by the hon. member for Lapointe.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is quite evident to the members of the committee which designed the rule changes that some modifications are necessary in these rules. I believe if we reduce the quorum of this committee now to nine we will have to reduce it again in a matter of a week or two to five. We are increasing the number of committees that are meeting, and I think this must be taken into consideration. The answer to the problem really is not a reduction of the quorum, but rather to persuade the members of committees that the committees are worth attending. Then arrangements should be made so they can attend those meetings.

I think this is a matter which concerns the house, and it certainly concerns the house leaders. There are 16 committees now constituted. The meetings of these committees have to be carefully arranged so they can get a quorum and the members will find it possible to attend meetings. The reduction in quorums might solve the problem for the government temporarily, but it really does not solve the problems of the committees and make it possible for them to work properly.

The question of consideration of the estimates is also affected. We agreed to give the committee procedure a fair shake for a year to see whether we could overcome the problems. We are not doing this now because we are asking for a reduction in quorums and this eliminates the government's responsibility in connection with this matter. I suggest this procedure does not give the new committee procedure a fair chance. It is up to the house leader to call a meeting of committee members and representatives of the other parties in order to reduce all quorums. If half the members is too much then let us reduce it to one third. I think it is unfair to the country, unfair to members of parliament, yes, and unfair to the operation of the committees themselves to reduce the quorums unless they are reduced for all other committees.

The actions of some committee members have strangled the committees. When members hedge-hop from one committee to another the proceedings have to be started over again, and I think it is the government's responsibility to make sure that the system works. However, to reduce this quorum, without reducing the quorums of other committees, is to continue a bad situation. I suggest that this type of motion ought not to be introduced now by the chairman of a committee. Instead, I think the government ought to consider revising the committee structure that does not seem to work. The number of members necessary for a quorum should be decided, but we should avoid doing it in the haphazard way that has developed.

The present system does not seem to work. It should therefore be overhauled. I think anything less is not fair to members of parliament, and would not be fair to the rule changes that were made to correct the way things were going.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I think nearly full attendance in the committees could be expected if it could be arranged that committees sit when debates on their reports are taking place in the house.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond to the effect that this motion be approved as an interim measure, but we ought not to lose sight of more important reforms of the committee structure that are necessary.

Also I wish to support some of the ideas expressed by the hon. member for Lapointe. However, I wish to take this opportunity to correct his eloquent and repetitious inaccuracies. He insists that the failure of the committee system in this case is to be laid at the door of the government members on the broadcasting committee, as this is the one we are discussing. My recollection is that the report of this committee was approved almost unanimously by that committee, but that the hon. member for Lapointe was not present at the time.

[Mr. Peters.]

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on a question of privilege.

I took care, a few minutes ago, to mention that when I was not attending the committee it was because I was in the house. Last Tuesday when the committee sat I was in the house to listen to the statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). I believed that was more important to me than to attend the committee on broadcasting. I was not absent from parliament then; I was sitting elsewhere.

I would ask the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) to withdraw his remarks.

There are 25 members on the committee; I am the only representative of my party and I attend the meetings. However, 13 are colleagues of the hon. member, but so many are absent that there is no quorum.

I ask the hon. member to withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lapointe cannot insist that the hon. member for Scarborough withdraw his remarks; I do not see on what basis.

Mr. Grégoire: Nothing is requested of those who do not have any sense of responsibility—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

Mr. Stanbury: I apologize for arousing the hon. member for Lapointe to such further eloquent inaccuracies. My recollection is that the statement of the Prime Minister was made at the time the committee was—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I point out to the hon. member that this discussion is entirely out of order. I would ask the hon. member for York-Scarborough to limit his remarks to what is before the house at the moment.

Mr. Churchill: Question.

Mr. Stanbury: I merely want to correct the record. The attendance of the Liberal members has been at least as faithful as that of any other members, and in that I include the hon. member for Lapointe.

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? Is it the wish of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if there could be unanimous consent to having a count of the house without ringing the bells.

Mr. Grafftey: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A suggestion has been made by the Minister of Transport that, by unanimous agreement, there be a count rather than a ringing of the bells.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, may I say something in reference to what has just been said?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Call in the members.
