Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

CONCURRENCE IN SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Hochelaga) moved that the sixth report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, presented to the house on Friday, May 6, 1966, be now concurred in.

He said:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there is a motion on the order paper stating that the committee on broadcasting films and assistance to the arts begs leave to sit while the house is sitting every day, this week only.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, before the motion carries I should like to say a few words.

Personally, I would not object to it, nor vote against it, because this request is only made for a limited time, this week.

Since the committee will not sit before eight o'clock tonight, we shall only miss one sitting of the house.

Mr. Speaker, the request made this afternoon by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier) shows that, once more, our whole committee system is poorly organized. We are asked to sit while the house is sitting. However, if we consider the business of the house for today and tomorrow only, we see for instance, that the house will be asked to vote on the setting up of the new Department of Manpower.

Thus, 50 or 60 members about will be called to sit on committees while the house is discussing matters as important as the setting up of a Department of Manpower, of a Department of the Solicitor General and the creation of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, as well as the setting up of a Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which will replace that of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

That is less important, Mr. Speaker; this would be the exception to the rule. While that department is being set up, very well, we can sit on the committees, but very important things will happen and, in spite of all that, some members will have to attend committee meetings.

That clearly shows, Mr. Speaker, that our committee structure is not up to date, that reforms are needed.

I think that the committee on the business of the house, which is under your chairmanship, Mr. Speaker, should convene to find a better procedure with regard to the creation and organization of committees.

The hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) said a short while ago that the attendance of the members of his party, or at least his own party in the house, was relatively good compared to that of the other parties. I am glad he did not give any statistics, because he would have found that he was talking through his hat and was not too well aware of the situation, because I remember one day when our party, although allowed only one member on a committee, had two and sometimes three members attending meetings and asking questions, which means that our party had three times as many members as it was entitled to, whereas some of the hon. member's colleagues who had been appointed members of that committee were not there. The hon. member is young and he needs more experience. He will learn.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the member for Lapointe to put an end to a discussion with the member for York-Scarborough, which has already been ruled out of order.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I was only trying to clear matters up and set the record straight. I admit the discussion was out of order, but the member for York-Scarborough should learn to abide by the rules of this house. It is a bit hard, but with some goodwill, he will manage to do so.

Mr. Speaker, the request being submitted to us at this time proves that the whole organization system of committees should be changed, because when witnesses are called before the committee, we are asked to sit at the same time as the house, so that the witnesses are not summoned needlessly. I would not object, were it only for a limited period.

But I feel that my earlier suggestion or perhaps the one made by the member for York South (Mr. Lewis) which is somewhat along the same lines, asking that certain days be exclusively devoted to committee work when the house is not sitting, would provide a solution and I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, or rather the government house leader, to call together the business of the house committee in order to discuss the changes likely to be made in the operation and work of committees and to find a solution to the problem now facing us.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, following the remarks made by my colleague for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), I shall only say this. The motion presented by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier) asking that the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts sit only this week seems to have been submitted rather regularly over the past few weeks. Each of these committees is always asking us to sit for a limited time only, but may repeat the same request the following week.

I do not believe we can logically accept this suggestion or these suggestions. I said earlier, as pointed out last week, that if there are too many committees, we should reduce their number so as to allow members to attend the meetings of these various parliamentary committees, which should not sit at the same time as the House of Commons but outside the regular hours of the house.

Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we can accept this suggestion, because for the last two or three months we have accepted suggestions to allow the committees to sit during parliament sittings. Some members of the Ralliement Créditiste were accused earlier of not attending committee meetings held outside the sittings of the house precisely because it is impossible to be in the house and at the committee meeting at the same time. That is why we cannot accept the suggestion or request of the member for Hochelaga.

Let the government members attend these sittings of the parliamentary committees and there will be a quorum. If there are charges to be made against other members of the house, they can be made following these committee sittings.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot accept the suggestion of the member for Hochelaga for the same reasons that we could not earlier accept a similar suggestion with regard to the passing of his fifth report before the one which is now before us.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen the cohesion, understanding and co-operation existing between the two old parties in the house; they fight one against the other but join forces when need be. We are not united with them, however, and we object to the passing of the sixth report as requested by the hon. member for Hochelaga.

[English]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a very few words in this regard. In view of the way the committees are constituted and the way the members have been organized I believe the committees should be allowed to determine their own course because of the fact that from time to time witnesses are called who must be dealt with as called.

It amazes me that in this connection the members of the Social Credit party are so quick to get up now to criticize the government concerning the committee system, when a few days ago when they had the opportunity to voice their criticism what did they do? We know what the answer is.

Mr. Ricard: They ran away.

Mr. Winkler: I am very happy to say that I supported the previous motion, and I think this suggestion by the committee chairman also should be supported because of the circumstances. If this is the committee's right, I think it should be supported by the house. If changes must be made, then they should be made in such a manner that the committee can conform to what the house desires. I am very proud of the record of my party in respect of the committee system this session.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, accused us of having supported the government. I may say that we acted quite openly, while he and his party have acted like hypocrites concerning the federal government.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: On division.

Mr. Caouette: Not on division. Ask for a vote.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, could it be assumed that the members have now been called in? Could we not now take the vote?

Division

Mr. Speaker: Is there any objection to it being assumed that the members have been called in, and the count of the house taken now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUBSIDIES TO C.N.R. AND C.P.R.

Question No. 814—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What annual subsidies are paid to (a) the Canadian Pacific Railway (b) the Canadian National Railway?

2. For what purposes are these subsidies paid?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1 and 2. If by subsidies is meant payments to the railways in respect of certain specific authorizations by parliament, the following payments are being made: Payments were made to companies subject to order No. 96300, dated November 17, 1958, of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, of an aggregate amount of $20,000,000 in respect of the period April 1, 1964 to March 31, 1965, payable in instalments at such times as may be determined by the said board for the purpose of reimbursing the said companies for such diminution in their aggregate gross revenues during the said period as in the opinion of the said board is attributable to such companies maintaining the rate level for freight traffic at an 8 per cent increase instead of 17 per cent as authorized by the said order; and payments are also made to the said companies of an aggregate amount in respect of the calendar year 1964 of $50,-000,000 payable in instalments at such times and in accordance with such methods of allocation as may be determined by the said board for the maintenance by such companies of the rates of freight traffic at the said reduced level.

Paid to Canadian Pacific Railway 1964-65, $26,575,186; paid to Canadian National Railways 1964-65, $39,296,841. Payments were made to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian National Railway Company, equal to the annual cost of maintaining the trackage between specified points in Ontario on the transcontinental lines of the said railways and of directing the application of the amounts paid to a reduction in freight rates on traffic moving over the said trackage.

Paid to Canadian Pacific Railway 1964-65, $3,734,073; paid to Canadian National Railways 1964-65, $3,265,927. Payments were made to the railway companies operating in the select territory designated by the Maritime Freight Rates Act of the difference occurring on account of the application of the act between the tariff tolls and the normal tolls under approved tariffs on all traffic moved during the calendar year 1964.

Paid to Canadian Pacific Railway 1964-65, $856,032; paid to Canadian National Railways 1964-65, $12,515,000. Payments will be made to the railway companies subject to paragraph No. 2 of Order No. 103860, dated February 23, 1961, of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, which paragraph authorized the railways to increase freight rates on export grain moving between certain ports on Georgian bay, the Great Lakes, the St. Lawrence river and the east coast, and which has been suspended by orders in council which have required the railways to continue in force the rates that were in effect on November 30, 1960, such payments to be based on the difference between the rates in force on November 30, 1960 and a compensatory level of rates as approved by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada.

It is estimated that total annual payments to all railways will amount to about $3,000,000 and will apply to grain moved after January 1, 1966.

In addition annual payments are made to Canadian National Railways related to operating deficits on ferry services for Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, and between Yarmouth and Bar Harbour, and on the Victoria bridge at Montreal.

Agreement in principle has also been reached to make a payment on account of the wage settlement in 1964, but the amount has not yet been finally determined.

1. Was the question of pay for pilots in Canada's armed forces reviewed by a special committee?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): 1. A special study group was appointed by the defence staff to examine the question of pilot attrition in the Canadian armed forces. PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING ESTATE TAX

Question No. 1,317—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Since April 23, 1963, have any representations been made by any provincial governments to the effect that the federal government should vacate the field of estate tax?

2. If so, from what provincial governments and on what date was each such representation made?

3. What consideration has been given by the government to any such representations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. Yes.

At the October 1964 federal-provincial conference the federal and provincial governments adopted the terms of reference of the tax structure committee. Among other matters, the committee was directed to study and report on:

4. The tax fields that should be used exclusively by the federal government and by the province and municipalities and the fields in which joint occupancy is desirable.

PAY PROMISES TO AIRCREW

Question No. 1,323—Mr. Enns:

1. Was it the policy of the Department of National Defence before April 1, 1966, when recruiting for aircrew candidates, to promise equal pay and career opportunities for all aircrew?

2. If so, does an aircrew officer have the option to resign from the service at his convenience, without penalty of pension or other benefits, in the case of a breach of this promise?

NEGOTIATIONS ON TROIS-RIVIÈRES GRAIN ELEVATORS

Question No. 1,330—Mr. Mongrain:

Did the National Harbours Board send Mr. John Lloyd to negotiate with the Trois-Rivières' municipal council concerning the grain elevator in that city and, if so (a) when (b) what suggestions did the National Harbours Board representative make?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. Negotiations were not conducted by board member J. E. Lloyd with the Trois-Rivières municipal council as such.

2. Mr. Lloyd has had several meetings with Mayor Gaston Dufresne of Trois-Rivières and

J. G. Cyr, president of the Trois-Rivières Chamber of Commerce. The meetings took place on December 16, 1965 and February 24 and April 5, 1966 and were undertaken as a co-operative effort to identify steps that could be taken by the grain elevator company to minimize its local taxation and N.H.B. charges.

3. The grain elevator company has appealed the local assessment valuation of its property. That is a matter entirely between the company and the city's assessment court of revition and therefore not open to negotiation between the city and the N.H.B.

4. In so far as N.H.B. is concerned, it has agreed to arrangements with regard to a lease of vacant land that will lessen the 1966 rental and tax costs of the grain elevator company.

AIR CONDITIONING SYSTEM, H.M.C.S. "BONAVENTURE"

Question No. 1,332—Mr. Forrestall:

Is it now the intention of the government to install an adequate air conditioning system in H.M.C.S. Bonaventure during its half-life refit to serve the several mess decks, the main engine room, boiler rooms, etc.?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): During the design stages of the half life conversion of H.M.C.S. Bonaventure considerable attention was paid to improving the habitability of the vessel. As stated in reply to Starred Question 606, at page 1859 of Hansard on 28 February 1966, additional air conditioning and ventilation is being provided to electronic compartments as well as to dining halls and living space, together with other habitability improvements. The combined engine and boiler rooms are not being air conditioned. Due to weight and space limitations, habitability cannot be expected to reach the standard of ships of the latest designs.

HISTORIC SITE—HOME OF HON. JEAN-CHARLES CHAPAIS

Question No. 1,336—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Have any proposals been made to the government that the original home of Hon. Jean-Charles Chapais, a father of confederation and Canada's first minister of agriculture, at St. Denis in the county of Kamouraska, be made a national museum as a rural memorial to confederation?

2. If so, what was the nature of the proposals, by whom were they made and what attitude has the government taken to them?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Yes.

[Mr. Byrne.]

2. The Canadian Historical Society so proposed in 1964. The matter was referred to the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, who recommended that the building be declared of national historical importance. Consequently, in line with the policy governing the preservation of buildings of national historical importance, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources is presently negotiating an agreement with the province of Quebec by which acquisition and restoration costs will be shared, and the house established as a national historic site open to the public.

2. For what reason or reasons were these exemptions granted?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. A report of all exemptions granted during the calendar year 1965 has already been tabled in the house on April 26, 1966. From January 1, 1966 to April 22, 1966, 53 ships were exempted; (a) 36 of these exempting the ships from the requirement to be provided with a properly certificated master; (b) 23 exempting the ships from the requirement to be provided with properly certificated mates; and (c) 216 exemptions have been issued for engineers.

CARIBOU IN CAPE BRETON NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 1,349—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Has the government's study of a proposal to re-establish caribou in the Cape Breton Highlands national park been completed and, if so, what is the final decision?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. The feasibility study has been completed, was satisfactory and the decision is to go ahead with the re-establishment pending specific evaluation of potential parasite problems by the Canadian wildlife service which is investigating the matter in consultation with provincial game officers.

EIGHT HOUR DAY FOR FIREFIGHTERS, POINT EDWARD BASE

Question No. 1,360—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Is it the intention of the Department of Transport to implement an 8 hour day with particular reference to the firefighters employed at the Point Edward Naval Base, Nova Scotia and, if so, how soon will this take place?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The department is studying the hours of work of all firefighters employed in the department at various locations across Canada which may result in a future change.

MANPOWER MOBILITY LOANS, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,361—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Under the manpower mobility program, have any persons received grants or loans through the offices of the National Employment Service at (a) Sydney Mines (b) North Sydney (c) Sydney, Nova Scotia and, if so, how many?

2 Have any persons been refused in each of these offices and, if so (a) how many (b) for what reasons?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. Yes, (a) Sydney Mines: one person has received a grant; (b) North Sydney: none; (c) Sydney: 38 persons have received loans and 20 have received grants.

2. Yes, (a) Sydney Mines: two applicants for grants; North Sydney: none; Sydney: seven applicants for loans and four applicants for grants; (b) Sydney Mines: of the two applications for grants which were not authorized one was not approved because the worker did not apply within three months of moving to his new area of employment and one because the employer in the area to which the worker wished to move did not confirm that he had a vacancy for the worker concerned; Sydney: of the seven applications for loans which were not authorized five were not approved because employment was available locally for the workers concerned, one because the worker left his last employment voluntarily and one because the employment to which the worker wished to move did not offer reasonable prospects of permanent re-establishment for him. Of the four applications for grants which were not authorized one was not approved because the employment to which the worker wished to move did not offer reasonable prospects for his permanent re-establishment; two applications were for transportation only and the employer authorized the payment of the transportation; one application was from a worker who was returning to his regular employment.

ABANDONMENT OF BURNED OUT TRAWLER

Question No. 1,375—Mr. Crouse:

Did H.M.C.S. Gatineau leave the burned out fishing trawler Karen B after the crew abandoned her on April 1, 1966, before the arrival of the Halifax-based tug Foundation Vigilant and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. The circumstances pertaining to the fishing trawler Karen B were as follows: On 1 April, 1966, fire broke out on board the Karen B, which was approximately 100 miles off Halifax. A distress message was sent and the crew of 14 took to a life raft. Two Sea King helicopters were promptly dispatched from Canadian forces base Shearwater and the crew of 14 and a dog were picked up and flown to Shearwater.

H.M.C.S. Gatineau, which was at sea, was diverted to the position of the Karen B. When she arrived, later in the day, the fire was out and the Karen B was out of danger. Having ascertained that the trawler was seaworthy, that a Canadian salvage vessel was on its way, and that there were no other ships within 20 miles of the Karen B, the Gatineau resumed operations.

[Mr. Munro.]

As was demonstrated in this instance, the navy responds immediately to any emergency at sea and takes all possible action to save lives and property. The navy does not normally involve itself in salvage operations, however, leaving this to salvage companies who derive their revenue from this type of work and strongly object to the navy becoming involved in salvage operations thereby establishing claim by naval personnel to salvage entitlements.

POSTAL STATION "F", HAMILTON, ONT.

Question No. 1,378—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Does the government propose the establishment of postal station "F" in Hamilton, Ontario and, if so, what site, if any, has been chosen?

2. Have tenders been called for the construction of a building to house postal station "F" and, if so, has any bid been accepted?

3. What is the proposed date for the completion of these facilities?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes. A site has not been selected.

2. Tenders have not been called.

3. Not applicable.

BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION, FUNDY NATIONAL PARK ENTRANCE

Question No. 1,384—Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert):

1. Does the government intend to build a new bridge at the southeast entrance to Fundy National Park at the village of Alma in Albert county, New Brunswick and, if so (a) has work started on this new bridge (b) what is the completion date?

2. Will the existing bridge at this point be repaired for the coming summer season and, if so (a) when (b) have alternative routes been considered?

3. Was there a loss in number of tourists and dollars owing to the bridge restriction last summer and, if so, what is this estimated loss?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. The bridge in question is the property of the province of New Brunswick. As it is the prime entrance to a national park, and as a portion of the structure lies within the park, the federal government has held meetings with the province to negotiate a cost sharing agreement for a replacement structure. This agreement has been submitted to the provincial government for its consideration and this is where the matter stands at the present time. (a) No; (b) the tentative completion date is June 15, 1967.

2. The existing bridge underwent repairs last August which should suffice for the coming summer season. (a) N/A; (b) an alternate route to the park exists via highway No. 14 which joins the trans-Canada highway near Sussex, New Brunswick.

UNITED NATIONS

POSSIBLE ACTION AGAINST RHODESIA BY AFRICAN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is a matter of great urgency concerning the question of whether a new resolution is to be brought before the security council by the African nations seeking further action against Rhodesia. Britain is trying to dissuade this group from so doing in order to continue the talks that are now going on in London between the British government and the Rhodesian government.

As 36 African states have this action in mind and as it was a result of Canada's action that many of these states found their way into the United Nations, what is Canada's stand on this question? Is it playing its part to try to bring about a postponement of any such resolution at this time? Has it communicated with the various African states, and has it joined with Britain in its request that action be not taken in the United Nations at this time but rather should await the conclusion of the discussions or such further action as Britain may take?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with some African countries in London, and in the special committee on colonialism at the United Nations. Canada strongly supports the view that an opportunity must be given to assess the effectiveness or non-effectiveness of the sanctions program. This is the position we have been taking in London and we have also made it clear in the United Nations that we think this course should be followed.

We have also pointed out that to resort to force in current circumstances could have serious implications for the multiracial character of the Commonwealth. Instead of meeting the objective which some countries have in mind such action could create a much more serious situation. We believe there is evidence that the course taken by the British government and by Canada and other counties both inside and outside the Commonwealth may be achieving results. In view of the exploratory talks that are now under way, it would be tragic if the opportunity were not taken to await the outcome of these discussions. I hope this will be the course that will be followed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I give of course, complete support to what the minister has said. Now I ask him, has the Canadian government communicated with the African nations outside the Commonwealth and impressed upon them the seriousness of any action that might be taken at this time and the dangers inherent in precipitate action?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in the discussions we have had at the United Nations—I will not say with all the African countries at the United Nations, but with some of those countries from inside as well as outside the Commonwealth—we have taken this position.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—HEARINGS ON PROPOSED TOLL INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has he received a telegram from Mr. Stuart Armour, president of the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association, protesting the fact that although the hearings regarding seaway tolls have not yet commenced and are not to begin until May 25, Mr. Delmer E. Taylor, a member of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, is quoted as saying, "There has already been considerable support for the toll increases proposed by the authority." I ask the minister whether he has received this protest, what action he is taking with regard to it, and whether the opinion expressed by Mr. Delmer E. Taylor represents the government's policy with reference to an increase in tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have received Mr. Armour's telegram. I dictated a reply to it, which I do not think I have yet signed, in which I pointed out that this parliament decided that tolls should be levied which would over the years pay for the seaway and that I could not see any good reason why a member of the seaway authority should not advocate carrying out the law any more than I could see why Mr. Stuart Armour should not be quite free to advocate changing the law.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If this matter has already been decided by the members of the seaway authority, may I ask the minister what is the purpose of the hearings commencing May 25?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not a matter for decision by the authority at all; it is a matter for decision by the government, and the government is going to await the hearings. But it does not seem to me that is any reason why a member of the authority should not point out what the law now is.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): A supplementary question to the minister, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister or the government any intention of replacing the tolls on the Welland canal?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think the government's position—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question concerns general policy and is not so urgent that it should be allowed at the present time.

HOUSING

HULL, QUE.—REQUEST FOR RELAXATION OF RESTRICTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Finance?

Has the minister recently received representations from the Homebuilders Association of Hull and Ottawa concerning the present policy and, if so, is it the minister's intention to revert to a policy favouring the maintenance of residential construction?

[Mr. Douglas.]

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the housing policy of the government was enunciated by the Minister of Labour the other day, and I have nothing to add.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

POSSIBLE LEGISLATION TO CREATE FEDERAL DISTRICT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as the minister responsible for affairs relating to the national capital area. In view of remarks attributed to the minister over the week end regarding the need for the restructuring of the Ottawa city type of municipal government leading toward a federal district for the Ottawa area, would the minister inform the house whether it is the intention of the government to introduce legislation to this effect?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would have to point out that legislation restructuring the municipal government in Ottawa can only be passed by the provincial legislature and that this house does not have jurisdiction over this subject.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister, either directly or through the National Capital Commission, be prepared to attend meetings with municipal and provincial government officials with a view to seeing whether something can be worked out along these lines?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is not urgent.

AIR TRANSPORT

TORONTO-CHICAGO—SERVICE BY TWO CANADIAN CARRIERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the new Canada-United States air agreement permits Canada to operate a second carrier on the Toronto-Chicago run, is it the intention of the government to permit Canadian Pacific Airlines to operate this second run in competition with Air Canada?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, all that is intended at the present time is what has already been announced.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Transport. I take it then that the answer is no, the government does not intend to allow any competition with Air Canada on the Toronto-Chicago run?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think this is a fair interpretation of my answer.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

CONSIDERATION AT COMING DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the President of the Privy Council who is in charge of federal-provincial relations.

My question arises out of the statement, yesterday, by Mr. Gérin-Lajoie, Minister of Education in the province of Quebec.

Is the minister in a position to tell the house whether the question of amending our constitution will be discussed at the federal-provincial conference to be held next month?

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I must first say that I have not had the opportunity to examine the statement made by Mr. Gérin-Lajoie, as mentioned by the hon. member. As concerns the questions to be discussed at the next federal-provincial conference, I believe the Prime Minister will be making a statement on the matter.

[English]

Mr. Grafftey: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I just received from the President of the Privy Council the answer to my question, for which I thank him. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if it is the desire of the federal government at the federal-provincial meeting next month to discuss questions of constitutional reform in the broadest sense.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My understanding is that when replying to the first question the minister indicated that a statement would be made in due course. In view of this I do not believe the question should be accepted.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

AMHERST, N.S.—LAY-OFFS AT ENAMEL AND HEATING PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry of which I have given him notice. Has the minister been informed of lay-offs which have taken place at Enamel and Heating, Amherst, and can he inform the house what action he has taken through his department to counter this situation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed of production lay-offs at Enamel and Heating. This is a difficult situation. Enamel and Heating, aware of the fact that military overhaul and repair contracts were declining and were going to continue to decline, has been endeavouring to secure an additional work load through the production sharing program and, in relation to civil aircraft contracts, good progress has been made in getting additional work through production sharing with the United States. Unfortunately recent attempts to negotiate work for production of DC-9 components has not resulted in agreement between the Douglas Aircraft Corporation and Enamel and Heating.

It is hoped that we will be able to find some alternative form of work load in connection with the DC-9 program to what was originally proposed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH VIET NAM—REPORTED STATEMENT OF PREMIER RESPECTING ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the very humane Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister any comment or emotions with respect to action taken by the premier of South Viet Nam's military regime yesterday to stifle any political agitation which might come from his pledge to stay in power for another year, and with respect to the premier's statement that he will fight any government elected by the people of South Viet Nam that does not receive his approval?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend gave me notice of his intention to ask this question. I have only seen a press report of Premier Ky's alleged statement, and I note Mr. Rusk has said it was not an accurate report.

Inquiries of the Ministry

As far as the government are concerned, we have frequently made it clear that we hoped elections could be held as a basis on which a popularly supported and broadly based government in South Viet Nam could proceed to develop peaceful and stable conditions in that country.

INDIA—PAYMENT OF FREIGHT ON GIFT OF WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs is now in a position to answer the question I asked concerning the shipment of wheat by way of assistance to India. Will Canada pay the freight on the wheat shipped there? Otherwise it is the kind of gift which it is very difficult for a nation to accept, short as it is of foreign exchange.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention of the government to pay these costs. I may say that when Mr. Mehta, the minister of planning of India, was here last week he expressed very deep gratitude on behalf of the government of India for the assistance Canada has already announced it is going to give to India to meet the serious food situation. He also acknowledged with gratitude the fact that we proposed to cancel the some $10 million owing to Canada by India in respect of her food shipments in 1958.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, was Canada's $10 million to take the place of paying the freight on the wheat being shipped or about to be shipped in this connection?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With regard to shipping costs we are, of course, following the same policy the previous government and all governments in Canada have followed in respect of this matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would not want my hon. friend's question to give the impression that the food assistance which Canada is giving this year to India is insignificant. Our total food assistance this year will be in the order of $75 million.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How much is the freight, though?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This permits a volume of assistance to India, which apart from the assistance which the United States is giving, is the greatest measure of aid that is being given to India by any country.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CENTRALIA, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO CLOSING OF BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister make a statement regarding the story in this morning's Free Press and tell us whether the Centralia Canadian armed forces base might be closed by this fall?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recognize that it is not in order to ask a minister whether a press statement is correct or incorrect.

Mr. McKinley: I will rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Centralia Canadian armed forces base in danger of being closed this fall?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend is aware one of the benefits to be derived from the integration of the armed forces is the reduction of overhead through eliminating duplication and triplication. Certainly so far as training command is concerned we anticipate there will be some base consolidation, and it is only in this way that we can achieve the savings which we expect to achieve from this process.

So far as the Centralia Canadian armed forces base in concerned, although the matter has been studied by training command no decision has yet been taken as to whether the base will be closed.

[Later:]

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer by the Minister of National Defence in connection with Centralia a few moments ago, I should like to ask him whether his policies in regard to the savings of manpower in defence forces have been so successful that he has now arrived at the point where he has only 22 naval ships in operation instead of the 60-odd which were there when he took over some two years ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member asking a supplementary question? The first one was not allowed. Perhaps this could be a new question by the hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Starr: How does the Minister of National Defence explain the increase of $11 million over the expenditure for last year when he has told us he has been trying to save—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. These two questions are argumentative, and I suggest to the minister he has no authority to reply to them because they have not been accepted.

[Later:]

Mr. McKinley: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Industry. If some Canadian forces bases are closed, will his department help to secure other employment for the people affected?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is hypothetical.

AIRPORTS

OTTAWA—IMPROVEMENT OF ACCESS ROAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Having in mind the minister's very welcome reply as reported in today's press to the effect that federal aid is possible to help improve what passes for the airport road in Ottawa, my question is can the minister indicate when such action can be expected?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a precise answer to the question at this time, but I hope it will be very soon.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAR FERRIES—HEARINGS ON FARE RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On Saturday of last week the minister announced that there would be a reduction in rates on the C.P.R. Northumberland ferries, for which I thank him very much. However, I should like to know how soon we might expect an inquiry into the proposed ferry rate structures, where the inquiry will be held and something about the terms of reference of this inquiry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question seems to be of a general nature. The hon. member has asked a number of questions with reference to a number of points. I suggest that he might place it on the order paper.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could confine myself to the first two points. I am primarily interested in when the inquiry will be held and where, because these are pressing and important matters in order that preparations can be made to make submissions to such an inquiry.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): It is the intention to have the chairman of the maritime commission go to Prince Edward Island to receive representations from any of the users who wish to make them. I anticipate that it will be Prince Edward Island only where the chairman will hear these representations. However, if there are some representations from people on the mainland we would endeavour to make arrangements for them as well, but I think the main interest is in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): When?

Mr. Pickersgill: As soon as can conveniently be done.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry, the minister responsible for the ARDA program, with regard to the studies which have been undertaken by the eastern Quebec planning board. Can the minister advise this house if the studies that are being made are based on the principle that poverty in the lower St. Lawrence is an accepted state of mind as stated by—

Mr. Speaker: This question also is argumentative and cannot be accepted.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION REGULATING PRIVATE PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister yet in a position to indicate when the legislation providing for the regulation of pension plans that come under federal jurisdiction, promised in December, 1964 will be introduced?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this matter is under discussion in the cabinet committee at the present time. We are not yet prepared to bring it before the house. We shall do so as soon as we have completed our consideration of this rather complicated matter.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

RENAMING OF POST OFFICES AT DEFENCE ESTABLISHMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a non-argumentative question for the Associative Minister of National Defence or possibly the Postmaster General. I should like to ask whether official action has been taken to rename post offices associated with defence establishments in line with the new designations of the Canadian forces.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This non-argumentative question should be placed on the order paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RE-ENLISTMENT BONUS FOR THOSE WITH BROKEN TIME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a non-argumentative but somewhat urgent question for the Minister of National Defence. Has the department yet made its decision with regard to a re-enlistment bonus for those with broken time in the armed services?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR MEETING TO IMPROVE WORK OF COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Public Works, in his capacity as house leader, if he would call a meeting at an early date of those who are concerned in the matter to see if we cannot do something to improve the work of the committees of this House of Commons?

[Mr. Knowles.]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question I should draw the attention of the house to the fact that the committee structure is operating much better than hon. members indicated in their remarks earlier today. For instance, in so far as the broadcasting committee is concerned it has had a wonderful record of attendance. I have the figures here for the meetings since that committee started, and I would be glad to place them on record if the house wished.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister answer my question?

Mr. McIlraith: Not with the inference in the preamble to the question. If you ask the question without any inference I will be glad to answer it.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the sensitive minister if he will call a meeting of those who are interested in looking at our committee structure.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, I would be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the house leader?

Since the attendance at the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts has been so good, is he in a position to tell us why a reduction in the quorum was asked for?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is in the nature of an argument and is not in order.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DEPARTMENTS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the organization of the government of Canada to establish a Department of the Solicitor General, Department of Manpower, Department of the Registrar General, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; to establish the offices of the ministers of those departments and to provide for the respective powers, duties and functions of the ministers thereof; to establish the office of President of the Treasury Board; to provide for the appointment of deputy heads of the new departments and for the appointment in the manner authorized by law of other officers and employees; to authorize the transfer of appropriations to the new departments and other departments to which the functions for which such appropriations were made are assigned; to amend the Financial Administration Act and the Salaries Act and generally to make such other consequential or incidental statutory amendments as are necessary to implement the changes to be effected by the said measure.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to be able to move the adoption of this resolution, item No. 56 on the order paper, which stands in my name. In doing so I think I can say, with general agreement, that the legislation contemplated in this resolution will be very important indeed in the conduct of government. The purpose of the resolution as set out in its opening words is:

—to introduce a measure respecting the organization of the government of Canada—

In moving the motion for the adoption of the resolution, I want to talk primarily about the purpose and the need for reorganization of government as proposed in the resolution. Then, Mr. Chairman, if the resolution carries, I shall be pleased to go into the matter in much greater detail on second reading of the bill.

The reorganization of administrative responsibilities which the government has undertaken, which is referred to in this resolution and which will be reflected in the proposed bill if the resolution is adopted by the house, constitutes the most extensive change in the administrative organization of government that has ever been made in peacetime. I am afraid we have had a tendency to ignore or at least, if not to ignore, to under-estimate, the importance of the administrative organization in achieving the substantial results which we expect from policies, results which are vital at a time when government is far more concerned with and is far more important to the life of the citizen, the productivity of our economy and indeed the character of our society, than has ever been the case before.

I put alongside the desirability, indeed, the necessity of reorganizing our parliamentary procedures to make parliament a more effective instrument in agreeing on policies, the necessity for that change to adapt parliamentary institutions to the needs of our contemporary society, the parallel need of reform in the administrative organization of government so that government as such will be able to achieve the substantial results and maximum effectiveness which we expect when policies are adopted by parliament. Results both in policy and in administration are vital, as I say, at a time when the government is so concerned not only with making the national economy work but with protecting and advancing the interests of the individual.

We are well beyond the point where it is even a matter of debate whether government should assume any responsibility for economy planning, for social adjustment, for individual welfare and for the basic nature of our society. All countries now recognize that effective organization and administration in government are an essential part of the complex inter-relationships that are a feature of our technical and rather affluent society.

If the role of policy making is vital, and it is, it is equally vital that administration should be well conceived and efficiently directed. Indeed, effective administration and organization lie at the core of many of our political problems. The reorganization which is now being undertaken and which is referred to in this resolution will, I believe, contribute in an important way to the effectiveness of government administration in important areas of national activity in the years ahead.

The broad outlines of the measures contemplated in this resolution are already known. Many of the proposed bills' more immediate objectives have already been implemented, as has been done in the past in similar circumstances, by the use of the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act. Certain statutory changes are required to establish fully, formally and finally the new and the affected departments. The names of several departments have to be altered to reflect their new functions. It is interesting to note that while under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act it is possible, because parliament has given government this authority and power, to transfer duties in a very important way without further legislation, it is not possible, except by legislative change, to alter the name of a department. That is only one reason why, of course, legislation is required. Also, in some cases departmental structures have to be fitted to different roles and some legislation is required for this. The reorganization that I mention, Mr. Chairman, will, I believe, facilitate more effective action in a number of important areas of government responsibility.

I have been glad to note that there has been widespread public approval of the changes that are being proposed. I believe this approval stems from public recognition of the changing needs of our times and the changing demands on government to meet those needs, and also that the structure of government be adapted to meet those needs.

The recent report of the Economic Council of Canada states in endorsing one important change, and I quote from the report:

> The area of greatest need for urgent and effective action is that of manpower and labour market policies . . . whether an active manpower policy is to be successful hinges critically on effective administration.

And the report goes on:

> It is essential that a proper administrative structure be established for co-ordinating labour market programs. This is an important initial step.

Along with the Economic Council, the government recognizes, in the words of the report, and I quote again:

> That the development of strong initiatives and effective policies to promote adaptability and mobility of the labour force, to facilitate the matching of demand and supply of labour, and to generate timely and useful information about labour market conditions, will yield high rates of return in relation to the resources required to implement them.

That is one change that is being proposed, Mr. Chairman, the setting up of a ministry which will deal with manpower problems.

The government has also decided that it would be a wise course to place immigration under the same minister as the minister dealing with manpower generally. Immigration policy obviously must be administered in the interests of the country and of the immigrants themselves in a context that takes into account the entire position of employment, training and placement in Canada. The association of the various aspects of manpower policies under the same minister should make it easier to implement programs and to implement them more effectively.

As hon. members know, the department of manpower will be in addition to and not be a replacement for the Department of Labour. The latter will continue its traditional and important role in conciliation and labour relations, in the field of labour standards and labour conditions generally. These are very important functions, especially in times of remarkable economic activity such as the present and of increasingly rapid change in the techniques of production that so affect, as they are affecting now, the position of labour. So there will be a very important role for the Department of Labour to continue to play.

It has become increasingly difficult for one minister to discharge fully both areas of responsibility at the present time. I speak of manpower on the one hand and labour relations on the other. With the attention of two ministers, one in the area of labour relations and the other in the area of manpower, placement and training, we will be in a better position than we were before to deal effectively with two of the most important aspects of our economy in the present climate of great domestic activity and high international competition.

A third department, Mr. Chairman, that bears directly on employment opportunity, productivity and the standard of living, is forestry, which the government organization bill seeks to have renamed and enlarged as the department of forestry and rural development. This change will recognize the increasing importance of the department's responsibilities for the government's program in agricultural rehabilitation and development. The program already extends well beyond agricultural matters to include a variety of instruments aimed at breaking what has been called in the Economic Council's report, from which I again quote:

> —the vicious circle of low productivity, low incomes, low government revenues and low investments in growth-promoting services.

The government will continue to recognize the special regional development problems, not only the ones which I just mentioned concerning agricultural development—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Could I ask the Prime Minister where this is referred to in the resolution?

Mr. Churchill: Where is forestry? Forestry is not in it.

Mr. Pearson: The resolution reads:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the organization of the government of Canada to establish a Department of the Solicitor General, Department of Manpower, Department of the Registrar General, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; to establish the offices of the ministers of those departments and to provide for the respective powers, duties and functions of the ministers thereof; to establish the office of President of the Treasury Board; to provide for the appointment of deputy heads of the new departments and for the appointment in the manner authorized by law of other officers and employees; to authorize the transfer of appropriations of the new departments and other—

I hope I will come to it.

—departments to which the functions for which such appropriations were made are assigned; to amend the Financial Administration Act and the Salaries Act and generally to make such other consequential or incidental statutory amendments as are necessary to implement the changes to be effected by the said measure.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the resolution will have to be redrawn.

Mr. Pearson: I must confess to being a little disconcerted at the right hon. gentleman's intervention.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not there.

Mr. Pearson: Then perhaps I should say nothing further about that particular change, and I will not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You will have to bring forward a resolution for it.

Mr. Pearson: Before I apologize to the committee perhaps the right hon. gentleman will allow me to try to find out the reason for the omission. This is, I believe, in the resolution: the government will continue to recognize the special regional development problems of the Canadian north through a department of northern development. Under the government organization bill, however, Indian affairs replaces national resources as the companion responsibility of the minister of northern affairs.

As the royal commission on government organization pointed out, the joining together of Indian affairs and northern development is a natural step which cannot but strengthen both the well-being of Canada's indigenous peoples and the cause of northern expansion and development. The new organization will place under one minister federal responsibility for both the Indian and the Eskimo people. This change will result in more effective work than has hitherto been possible and will help to eliminate differences in standards and treatment which have been a cause of some criticism and discontent.

The resource jurisdiction which has been connected with the development of the north will remain under the minister of northern development. Other resource responsibilities once located in the department of northern affairs have now been transferred to the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. There they have been joined by various resource an energy responsibilities from the ministries of industry and trade and commerce. In the government organization bill all these will be fashioned to form a single department of energy, mines and resources. There will be one minister who will have both the facilities to develop and the authority to implement national policies with regard to the resource and energy responsibilities of the federal government with the exception of resource development in northern territories.

Resources and energy are, of course, closely inter-related. Energy, on the one hand, is the product of resource use; it is on the other, a key to the full application and use of our resources generally and we believe it is wise to have the two handled together if policy is to be of the greatest effectiveness and to contribute to our long term economic growth and development. The new organization will greatly facilitate this.

A totally different but no less vital instrument in the order growth and development of the Canadian society is the law itself. In this connection the government organization bill is concerned with re-shaping the Department of Justice and the Department of the Secretary of State, with raising the office of the Solicitor General to departmental status and with the establishment of a department of government, the department of the registrar general, which will bring together legislation and policy concerning existing federal responsibility for certain aspects of business activity.

In recent years governments have been much concerned with social legislation which has involved the establishment of economic mechanisms to achieve national purposes. All of this has enormously increased the burdens upon our law officers and legal advisers. It has also caused us to think more readily in terms of economic rather than strictly legal techniques for encouraging social action. In administering these techniques, under the present set-up we have tended to overload our legal advisers. This has resulted in a tendency to obscure the creative social role which the law itself can perform. It is in the context of correcting both these failings that the government organization bill will propose the completion of a radical reform of the Crown's law offices.

On the one hand, the Department of Justice and the office of the Attorney General of Canada will be returned to the full time discharge of their traditional functions: the drafting of legislation and documents; the conduct of litigation and prosecutions. The appointment and maintenance of courts and quasi-judicial tribunals will rest here, where principle of justice and the lessons of history show they should reside. The R.C.M.P., criminal investigations, detentions, paroles and pardons, on the other hand, will be the full time responsibility of the Solicitor General in a department which, like the Home Office in Britain, will be separate and distinct from that of the Attorney General.

In addition to the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General the government organization bill will provide for a third department, the Department of the registrar general, which will have charge of that aspect of legislation dealing with what might be called business law. Patents, trade marks, companies, bankruptcy and restrictive trade practices are all matters which have important economic as well as legal aspects. Legislation in these areas must not merely record commercial rights but protect the national interest and the rights of individuals and act as an instrument in the promotion of social and economic goals.

Hon. members will have noted that some of the areas of business law which I mentioned will be taken from the Department of the Secretary of State. The work transferred from this department will certainly be replaced by the transfer to it of the citizenship branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. The government organization bill will seek the repeal of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration Act after making provision for the transfer of citizenship responsibilities to the Secretary of State. I am sure that this change will commend itself.

Given the nature and meaning of citizenship—the legal summation, if you like, of all that our country, our history, our form of government and our society stand for—we believe it is clearly best to place this with other responsibilities that relate to the non-material nature of our society such as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the National Film Board, the Canada Council and the like. So these matters will all be in the Secretary of State's department.

A further feature of the bill that is of no small importance is the implementation of the recommendation of the Glassco commission to put the Treasury Board under a separate minister.

Mr. Knowles: Before the Prime Minister gets too far away from a question he raised, would he mind stating the relationship between the department of the registrar general and the President of the Privy Council, because it seems to me something was taken out of the Privy Council and given to the Registrar General?

Mr. Pearson: That is true, as a temporary measure. There is no necessary relationship in this particular resolution. It might well be desirable, and I emphasize that this is a possibility but not a decision, to make the President of the Privy Council the Registrar General, in which case he would have the function to go into this new department which will be discussed later. It might cover anything that the President of the Privy Council has now, and he has one or two things which will go to the department of the registrar general. I am thinking of bankruptcy. But these things will be discussed when the bill is before the house and then my hon. friend will see what it is proposed to do. All I am stressing now is that there is no necessary connection between the President of the Privy Council and the minister of the new department, the department of the registrar general.

Mr. Knowles: Did I understand that combines investigations would come under the Registrar General?

Mr. Pearson: If my hon. friend will have a look at the bill he will see that it is all laid out in detail, all the functions that are being transferred, and bankruptcy is included in these.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who has that? The President of the Privy Council?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mention was made of it. I would not have asked if the Prime Minister had not referred to it.

Mr. Pearson: This refers to the draft legislation, and I have said already—

Mr. Diefenbaker: But the Prime Minister said—

Mr. Pearson: Dealing with the department of the registrar general I think I did outline what that department would deal with, and I said that patents, trade marks, company matters, bankruptcy and restrictive trade pracices are all matters which have important economic as well as legal aspects and could be transferred to the new department of the registrar general. I think that is as clear as I can make it on the resolution stage.

I was beginning to mention an important and final feature of the bill, the implementation of the recommendation of the Glassco Commission to put the Treasury Board under a separate minister. The Treasury Board will have the added functions that the Glassco Commission contemplated for the improvement of administrative organization in the government service generally. It will be associated administratively with the Privy Council office to bring together the co-ordination of policy and administration in a manner which will add to the effectiveness of government at a time when the complexity and scope of its task are greater than ever before.

That, Mr. Chairman, is a short explanation of the changes proposed by the resolution which is before the committee. I do not for a minute suggest that with the steps included in this bill reorganization of government will have been completed or that we will have reached a place at which we can rest with the feeling that full adjustment has been accomplished, even adjustment to the problems of the present let alone those problems which will develop in the future. This is by no means the case and it would not be wise to consider that any reorganization, however extensive, and this is certainly an extensive one, is final.

The Royal Commission on Government Organization, the Glassco Commission, noted as found on page 26, volume 5 of its report:

> The persistence of change and the need for adjustment to change are, in fact, the only future certainties known to any organization. The successful adaptation of the machinery of government to changing circumstances will require two things: within the public service itself there must be an awareness that adaptation is an inescapable part of the task of management; and, both within the public service and beyond it, there must be a continuous assessment of the role of the federal government in the life of Canada, to ensure that the machinery of government remains responsive to the ends it must serve.

As the circumstances of society change in this swift-changing, indeed, revolutionary age, the pattern of governmental organization and of administrative direction must also change if they are to be properly effective. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that in this resolution and in the legislation visualized by it the government is asking parliament to make a major, important step forward. I am sure that additional steps will be required and I believe they should be taken as conditions continue to change. Meanwhile I am asking the committee to consider this resolution favourably so that we can, without delay, introduce a bill based upon it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I intend to speak but shortly on this resolution. It is of unusual interest that after months of preparation, going back to December 17 of last year, the government produces a resolution dealing with this reorganization which has been spoken of as the most comprehensive of all time and has forgotten all about the minister of forestry and rural rehabilitation. It is a most unusual situation. I know that the Minister of Forestry has frequently been regarded as being of such a rebellious nature that his presence in the cabinet was not entirely welcomed by all, but I must speak in his defence now. I say that I feel for him—

Mr. Pearson: So do I.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —left out in the cold. Here is a man who was going to envelop agricultural rehabilitation, ARDA and the like, under his protecting wings but somebody has made a fearful mistake. The Prime Minister did not know that the department of forestry and rehabilitation was not included.

Surely the Minister of Forestry has not joined the record of missing persons, but that is his position. He comes into the chamber and finds himself absent without leave, missing from the document that is to preserve the parliamentary system for years to come. Lo and behold, here is the gentleman adventurer from the Magdalen Islands being traded by the government into non-existence.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt for a moment?

Mr. Diefenbaker: If it is a question.

Mr. Pearson: I should like to say why this was done. It was to give my right hon. friend an opportunity to bring the minister back into the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I think the government needs assistance because there have been times when we have wondered whether he was in fact in the government—of it or in it. This day represents one of the most unusual events that has taken place in my time in the House of Commons. With fife and drum they bring in this resolution and then they forget the main thing, the piccoloist. What an oversight. Is this anti-Quebec? What would have happened if such a thing had taken place under our administration? It is disturbing; it is revealing. It is proof of what we on this side of the house have contended, that this government does not know where it is going. It produces a resolution and leaves out the reform element.

When the hon. member became a minister all of us had great hopes for him. I am trying to ensure that some of those hopes will be realized. The government will now have to bring in a new resolution, an addendum as it were, to ensure that that minister who represents the epitome of the new politics is not going to be left out in the cold. We are going to do everything we can to help him, this man who is forgotten by his comrades and remembered by his opponents. Greater love hath no man than this, that he ensure that the mistakes of the government shall not deprive this nation of the services of a reformer.

Speaking seriously, Mr. Chairman, is it not a terrible mess? The cornerstone of reform omitted. The powers of reaction apparently have become paramount in the government. I may make reference to this a little later, but I wish to assure you at once that anything we on this side of the house can do to preserve the Minister of Forestry from oblivion among his colleagues will be done. If the Prime Minister will bring in a resolution to include the unincluded, I think we could pass it pretty well unanimously without further discussion and thereby present more proof that an opposition can be beneficial.

The government has produced a resolution which, to say the least, shows that the Prime Minister has forgotten he has in his ranks a man of reform and vision. Indeed, he has been so far in advance of those with whom he serves that often there has been wonder how he got into that party at all. With reference to the resolution the Prime Minister dealt at some length with the necessity of improving the organization of government. No one disputes the necessity for that, but reforms based on experiment and not experience do not always work out very well. We had an example of that in connection with the committee system. Two years ago or a year and a half ago I said we were going much too far under our form of government in bringing about the United States idea of a committee system. What have we found? We have found that the government cannot get its members to attend. Committees are set up and they are not being attended. This is another example of what befalls a government which just tries to do something new regardless of how experimental the plan may be.

What is the situation today? There are 127 or 128 members on the government side of the house including 26 ministers and 16 parliamentary secretaries. Thirty per cent of the membership occupy positions of responsibility. But with all that horde, Mr. Chairman, they come up with a resolution which omits one of the major considerations, the assurance that agriculture shall receive a fair deal. It indicates that this government has forgotten agriculture. It is very obvious that this government no longer considers agriculture of any great consequence.

The government is increasing the number of ministers. It is shuffling the deck and adding a couple more deuces; that is what is happening. The trend today in parliamentary systems in other parts of the world is not to increase the number of ministers but to reduce them. I know how difficult that is, but today the cabinet is too large for the effective carrying out of the business of the nation. If he were to call together only certain members of the cabinet, the Prime Minister would have difficulty. Preferences naturally would be assumed.

I think one of the major reforms which must be brought about is to ensure a reduction in the number of ministers and to divide those ministers into two classifications, those of the cabinet and those of the ministry. It will be difficult to do, but if there is to be any effective reform of cabinet government, that is the first thing which must be done. I recognize all of the difficulties. As I look at this shuffling, I wonder what were the reasons.

I have here the original press conference statement made by the Prime Minister on December 17 in which he sets out the benefits which will flow from these changes. I am going to summarize it. He said that the changes were designed to adapt the machinery of the government to new and changing needs. He further said that the planned changes were designed to improve efficiency by increasing the attention given to the problems that have become more important. Those conditions become significant when we realize that agricultural rehabilitation has been left out in the cold. In his press release the Prime Minister went on to say:

> At present some of the most important problems of government are the concern of only one section of a department, while others are scattered among various departments and agencies. The effect of the administrative changes will be that one minister will have a specific responsibility for the Treasury Board—

I think that is a good move; I think it is necessary. On the basis of personal experience I think that one deserves implementation.

Let us look at the others. Resources have been divided, part going to the minister of Indian affairs and northern development and part going to the minister of energy, mines and resources. Why should some of our resources be placed under one department and others under another? How does one obtain strength by division?

Labour has been divided with the Minister of Labour responsible for legislation on collective bargaining and other things in that field and the minister of manpower responsible for training, placement and immigration. The Prime Minister suggested that this was a forward step but I think it is a retrograde one which represents the antitheses of the recommendation, as I read it, of Woods, Gordon and Company which made a report on this subject in November, 1965. After all, this is one of the leading companies of chartered accountants and consultants in Canada, and no matter how you look at the situation the hon. member for Davenport, who was connected with this firm at one time, was a man with ideas. Sometimes I wonder how the "Gordon Highlanders" are going to be able to stand up to the "Sharpshooters".

In any event, this recommendation was ignored and I should like to know why it was ignored. The recommendation reads as follows:

> The manpower and labour relations fields have in the past been regarded as being largely unrelated. However it is becoming increasingly evident that in the type of industrial society toward which we appear to be heading, manpower problems will, to a greater and greater extent, become labour relations problems as well. As the pace of technological change quickens, so must the adjustments to change quicken, and in this situation workers will look increasingly to the institution of collective bargaining to ensure that their interests are adequately protected. Management, on the other hand, will be seeking to negotiate the elimination or modification of contract provisions that are making it difficult to adapt to change or are standing in the way of rational solutions to manpower adjustment problems. The conclusion we draw from this is that, although the manpower and labour relations fields are distinct, there are increasingly important interactions between them. This suggests that the development of policy and programs in these two fields must continue to be closely integrated.

Integrated policies do not result from divided responsibilities among ministers. I wonder why that recommendation was not carried into effect.

It is interesting to note how the changes took place. According to the press there was a great internal power dispute last November and December over the suggestion that members of the cabinet from the province of Quebec should be given prestige appointments. New oil was poured into old bottles. The three wise men were brought in and each one of them is ambitious. I do not criticize ambition, but what did this bring about? It brought about a hodgepodge.

The minister of energy, mines and resources, who carries on temporarily as the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, will take over the responsibility for atomic energy, oil, gas and water power, and water and coal. I have already dealt with the duties of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the authority that he is going to have as minister of manpower.

These men had to be given decorative authority. After all, they wanted them to have prestige. I read the French language press each day and it has been said there that the great weakness of the former cabinet resulted from the fact there were not enough prestige appointments for the province of Quebec. Prestige has now been created by giving these new decorative powers to these members from the province of Quebec. I am not going into the events that took place when the President of the Privy Council was minister of justice, but he is the one now who is going to be looking after the administration of the Bankruptcy Act. He had that responsibility when he was the minister of justice and bankruptcies multiplied three, four or fivefold. There is also a strange situation regarding combines legislation.

Apparently it was felt that everybody should have something added and the plan was to build people up in this way because they did not want to occupy small portfolios such as that of Secretary of State. Now these people will have more authority and greater new power. This is termed by the government a measure to strengthen administration but I suggest the purpose behind this measure is to strengthen the present administration.

The situation with regard to the Department of Justice is the most interesting of all. All that minister now has is the name. I presume he will be very effective in carrying out his duties because the government has taken away the whole essence of the Department of Justice. How can one have a Department of Justice with authority spread out all over the place?

I am very much impressed with the way the Solicitor General answers questions in the house and accepts his responsibility, but what do we now find the situation to be in that department? The Solicitor General has practically appropriated the major powers of the Department of Justice. All the Minister of Justice is going to have left is the prestige of the name. Apparently he is to look after legal matters in the Department of Justice. That looks all right on the face of it, but what legal matters come to the attention of the Minister of Justice? He is not in the position of having such things come to his attention because the law officers of the Crown look after these various things: The government had to keep him in the cabinet so it continued his title, realizing no doubt that it might be better to place his authority elsewhere.

The administrative changes mean nothing. With one or two exceptions they seem in large measure to be designed to enable the Prime Minister to take care of his commitments. Instead of cabinet posts being created in accordance with departmental needs they seem to have been created in accordance with the political needs of the government. The divided and subdivided powers of the Department of Justice can only result in indifferent administration and confusion One can see today in Ottawa a lack of confidence on the part of professional civil servants who observe departments being splintered, severed and added to other departments for what has every appearance of being a political purpose on the part of the government. That is not good enough because administrative necessity is not met by conforming to political necessity.

Whenever questions are directed to the Minister of Labour answers are given, as is the case in respect of questions directed to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, in keeping with the responsibilities of the government. However, certain powers are to be taken from that hon. gentleman and I have already mentioned some of those in connection with the proposed changes in the Department of Labour.

What about agriculture? We cannot discuss that because it is not even before us. But we were told in advance, months ago, what was going to be done. They had to give something to the Minister of Forestry. When we set up the Department of Forestry it was ridiculed and laughed at. They had to give the Minister of Forestry something to give him prestige. What is the use of being a reformer without prestige? But what a position for a minister to be in—forgotten, only remembered for what he has done. I hope this situation will be corrected at the earliest possible date so that our uncertainty and concern will be obliterated

May I say that if ARDA has been included in the responsibilities of the Minister of Forestry it would have meant and will mean that agriculture is being placed in a secondary position. When I mentioned this a while ago I noticed one of the ministers indicating disapproval, so I shall read from the Family Herald, a magazine nationally and internationally known, what is said on the question of the alteration in portfolio responsibilities:

> We were disappointed that there has yet been no indication as to how these all-embracing portfolios will be dovetailed with the existing ministries which cover rural development and agriculture. For despite the reverse title there appears to be no apparent change in Mr. Sauvé's responsibilities. And we cannot help but feel that the ministry of agriculture has been relegated to a secondary status, comprising the ill-defined policies under the direction of a little-known minister.

Agriculture is placed in a secondary position. Why? The Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition said, "We have to have two ministers of agriculture, a western minister and an eastern minister." One of the ministers had already appropriated to himself the position of eastern minister of agriculture but he never got the portfolio because it was not set up. Agriculture, as the Family Herald says, is relegated to a secondary position.

What reforms are there? There is a Treasury Board minister. That is a forward step and a necessary one. But you have agriculture placed in a tertiary position. It is not even included in the resolution. They have forgotten about it altogether in this resolution which took a long time for a government that was most careful in assuring that everything would be included to prepare.

Yet they forgot about agriculture. You have a minister of manpower to be. He has a wide knowledge of labour problems, and in regard to his manner of approach in the House of Commons I say to him that I like the way in which he places his views before the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But what do we see? Labour problems are handed to one minister and then another. How can this minister be effective? Surely we have not arrived at the point where the government contends that to make this important department effective it has to be divided and subdivided by spreading out responsibility. Certainly labour problems are of major importance, but why the subdivision? I come back to the reason. They wanted everybody to have something so that one minister and another could say, "He got this but I got that." But in it all the Minister of Forestry became the forgotten man. I would not allow that. That is why I would draw this matter to the attention of the house, because we will not have a minister removed by governmental forgetfulness. It cannot be permitted. I hope the Prime Minister will seize on this problem and without delay remove the fear that fills our hearts that this minister, so necessary in the new politics is to be left out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We cannot have it; we shall not have it. Speaking seriously now, Mr. Chairman, I will have more to say regarding reformation in administration when the bill is before us for second reading. At that time we will be able to bring together the resolution that is and the one that was forgotten.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, as the Prime Minister has said, this resolution forecasts legislation which will constitute a fairly extensive reorganization of the various departments of government. Some of the reorganization proposed in the resolution we believe is advisable and indeed long overdue. Other parts of the reorganization we would want to reserve judgment on until we have had an opportunity to see the legislation itself.

I am somewhat surprised that the resolution introduced by the Prime Minister would seem to indicate that there is to be a single measure covering all the various items which he outlined. The government knows its own course of action best, but it seems to me that a single piece of legislation including all these various measures will cause a great deal of confusion in the future. It is much tidier for a department to have an act setting out those matters with which it may deal and the powers of the minister, those things he may do by ministerial discretion, by regulation through the governor in council and so on. Then, if the new department finds, as it will find, that certain of its powers need to be amended, altered or extended, the act can be amended from time to time. If the department goes into a hodgepodge with a number of other departments for which there is a single piece of legislation, the government will find itself in some difficulty. Perhaps the government has in mind that this will be an interim measure and individual acts will be introduced separately at a later date. But I do suggest to the government that unless later they separate the legislation in respect of these departments they will find themselves in a great deal of departmental difficulty.

I agree with what the Prime Minister said about the importance of giving thought to this question of government reorganization. Too often members of parliament and the public generally think that administration is not really important and that it does not make much difference what kind of departments we have. As a matter of fact, clearcut allocations of responsibility, a clear line of authority for the discharge of that responsibility and clearly defined lines of communication are absolutely essential in the complex society in which we live if government policies are to be carried out effectively and efficiently.

I should like to deal briefly with a few of the matters which the Prime Minister has suggested the legislation will implement. The first is the setting up of a department of manpower. In addition to its role for the training and allocation of manpower and job placement, it will also have some of the functions now pertaining to immigration. I believe this is an excellent combination. It seems to me that the body which is responsible for keeping its finger on the economic pulse and being fully aware of the manpower needs of the country is in the best position to deal with immigration, to know what number of people we can allow into Canada at any one time, to know what skills they should have or, if they do not have any skills, what training they will need after they come to Canada. Therefore I think the combination of immigration and manpower is excellent.

The Economic Council of Canada recommended, of course, that this combination be carried out and I am very glad that the government has seen fit to do so. If I may say so to the Prime Minister, I believe that both the minister and the deputy minister who have been selected for this department are admirable choices. I believe they are both equipped in terms of training and temperament to take on what will be a very difficult task which will involve blazing new trails and working out new programs. However, I want to say to the Prime Minister that if this manpower department, which our party has been recommending for years, is to be modelled on the Swedish labour market board and is really to have the kind of function which a manpower department should have in a technological society, it will require a great deal of support in terms of money and trained personnel. If the manpower program is to be more than a paper program there will have to be a very large sum of money spent on the training and retraining of workers as well as on the upgrading of their education.

I had some opportunity to see at first hand the work of the labour market board in Sweden. Of course, they have been at it for a long time, but they spend tremendous sums of money in training and retraining workers and as a result they are making full utilization of all their available manpower. This is something which we are not doing in Canada. The Economic Council of Canada has stated that we have now come within 97 per cent of our productive capacity. We are not using men and women in Canada who are often unskilled and unemployed and who will have to be retrained. Many of them will have to have their educational qualifications upgraded. There is no sense in giving the minister and his department, with all their enthusiasm, this heavy responsibility unless the government is also prepared to give them the very large sums of money necessary to carry out an effective program.

All I want to say about the responsibility given to the Solicitor General is that I believe it is a good thing to have the minister charged with the responsibility for penitentiaries. There has been a great deal of talk about penal reform in this House of Commons but very little has ever been done about it.

I believe that there should be a minister charged with the responsibility for looking into law reform, and the overhaul of the Criminal Code, and these other matters can very well be given to the Solicitor General. However, whether the R.C.M.P. should be separated from the department charged with the responsibility for law enforcement is something about which I have some doubts. My colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood, will probably discuss this in more detail later.

I congratulate the government for combining the Indian affairs branch with northern development; I believe this is a natural affinity. I have complained for years that Indian affairs have usually been under the jurisdiction of civil servants who have never seen an Indian in broad daylight and have never seen an Eskimo except on television. I know that with the combination now being proposed the Indians will be served by people who are much more familiar with their problems and the solutions for these problems.

With reference to the proposed department of the registrar general which the Prime Minister suggested is to deal with business law and those things which affect the protection of the nation and individuals, I think this is a very helpful move. We in the New Democratic Party have been advocating for years the setting up of a department of consumer affairs. We are still hopeful that the government will see its way clear to set up such a department. We would like to see the department charged with the responsibility for administering combines investigation legislation and restrictive trade practices legislation greatly strengthened with some teeth in that legislation.

We would like to see provision for the standardization of weights and packaging, with legislation to prevent misleading advertising. We would like, as we have said on many occasions, to see such a department have a price review board with full authority to look into price increases to see whether or not they are fully justified by increases in costs. We are convinced that such an investigation would show in some cases that increases in prices are warranted but in other cases it would show that they are not warranted.

Action by any company or combination of companies to raise prices merely to take advantage of a situation would receive a good deal of public criticism and if the criticism became widespread enough, of course, the federal and provincial governments would find it necessary to pass concurrent legislation to deal with these price increases. My own opinion is that no such legislation would become necessary because the exposure to public gaze of unconscionable profiteering would be enough to correct the situation. If the government is not going to set up a department of consumer affairs, then certainly the kind of department the Prime Minister proposed today could be the nucleus around which a department of consumer affairs could be built. I hope that if time permits my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, will elaborate on this question because it is something to which she has given a great deal of thought and about which she is very enthusiastic.

Finally, I want to say a word or two about the proposed president of the Treasury Board. Again, I agree with this proposal. I hope that in the not too distant future the Prime Minister will appoint a minister to give his full time to the responsibilities of being president of the Treasury Board. I should like to see the Treasury Board working on two functions which are not assigned to it at the present time. First, I think the Treasury Board ought to have a branch which would act as a budget bureau. At the present time, we have a Treasury Board which allocates funds according to departments and subdivides them according to branches. We have an Auditor General who audits the expenditures of these agencies. However, there is no agency for auditing the performance of departments and branches; there is no agency to examine the programs to see whether they still fill a useful function or whether they should be curtailed or even eliminated.

Every member knows that Parkinson's law operates in every government. Consequently, from time to time we set up commissions like the Glassco Commission which report to the government on whatever extravagance, duplication, overstaffing and unnecessary procedures are found. The tragedy is that by the time a government, not necessarily this government but any government, gets around to dealing with the situation which has been described by the commission the situation itself has altered. The only effective way that a government can deal with the problem of the proliferation of staff, extravagance and waste is to have a continuing agency constantly examining departments, constantly going over their programs to see whether or not those programs are still useful and whether or not the department is still using its staff efficiently or is asking for more money than the service which they render warrants. Every member knows that no program, once having started, is ever voluntarily curtailed by those who are running it.

Every minister and every deputy minister is told by his branch head that a program is absolutely necessary. A program may have been started 30 years ago to meet a certain situation and the situation may have changed, but the program has to be kept going. If the government is really going to do an effective job of eliminating waste and extravagance. I think they need something resembling the United States budget bureau. I can remember an instance when I was associated with a provincial administration. A certain department was asking for more money, more staff and more space. This meant putting up new buildings. The department alleged it was so crowded, so understaffed and working in quarters so congested they were not doing effective work. They made a marvellous case for a lot more money, a lot more space and a lot more people. When the budget bureau had investigated the case for over six months they found that by a simplification of procedures, by amending the filing systems, they could move some of the staff to other departments. Then, by microfilming their records, we were able to get rid of hundreds of file cabinets which resulted in more floor space.

Unless you have an agency to do this the staff keeps growing, the space required keeps increasing, the demands for larger and larger estimates keep rolling in to the Treasury Board. It seems to me one of the functions that ought to be given to this Treasury Board branch would be the assignment of teams to any department that is asking for more money to conduct an investigation. Even if the department is not asking for more money, perhaps it is getting too much money now. A team of experts could be sent to examine the procedures, to analyse the program and make a report to the Treasury Board whether or not this department was getting enough money or too much money, whether it could reduce staff and get along with a smaller allocation of funds.

The other function I should like to see given to the president of the Treasury Board is related to the whole basis of economic planning. I am trying to fit within the government's framework something I had hoped the government would do. Personally I would prefer to see a department of economic affairs and planning, an agency which could work closely with the Treasury Board, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Industry and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Since the government has not set up a department of economics affairs and planning, it seems to me that the Treasury Board could form the nucleus for the beginning of a genuine economic planning agency.

So far as I can see at the moment, there is no real economic planning in the government's set-up. The Economic Council, which I understand has been moved now from the Secretary of State to the Prime Minister's office, is purely an advisory body and does not concern itself with day to day planning. It is doing long term projections and is doing excellent work. I want to congratulate the chairman and members of the Economic Council on the two reviews they have published. They are amongst the best things that have been put out in Canada and the council should be encouraged to continue.

However, the council works in one office and the Treasury Board works in another office. The Department of Industry works separately, as does the Department of Trade and Commerce. I know the Prime Minister will tell me there is a cabinet committee that co-ordinates the work of these various departments. I do not believe cabinet committees can do this. I think the members of such committees are too busy. I am sure they do not meet often enough. I am sure when they do meet they have even greater trouble in getting a quorum than have the committees of the House of Commons because these men are very busy and are called all over the country.

If there is going to be any real economic planning, any real co-ordination of economic activities, it has to start at a lower level. It is not going to be done or to be very effective if it is not, and for that reason it seems to be some thought should be given—

The Deputy Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to proceed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: I have only a few sentences to complete my remarks and I do thank the house for allowing me to finish.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Fairweather: What happened to the economic planning?

Mr. Douglas: That was not bad economic planning; that is just poor timing. It seems to me some thought ought to be given to having in the Treasury Board the Economic Council of Canada and representatives from the Department of Industry as well as Trade and Commerce co-ordinated so that within the Treasury Board itself there could be the nucleus of a genuine economic planning agency. This group could plan closely in relation to the fiscal needs of Canada, make an assessment of the wealth of the country and the revenues that would be available to the government and could establish an order of priorities as to how those revenues should be allocated to the various departments and to the various programs.

It seems to me that until this kind of economic planning is done we are going to continue to have what we now have, namely, a lot of competing departments all asking treasury for money, with the Minister of Finance and members of the Treasury Board having to slash requests each year when making up the budget. Often the estimates have to be reduced not by any order of priority but because the departments are told to take their estimates back and cut off 15 per cent in order to bring expenditure into line with revenue. This is a most unscientific way to reduce estimates. Some departments may have more money than they need. Others do not have enough. The sort of thing I contemplate can only be done if we build the kind of fiscal and economic planning agency that will enable the cabinet to make the kind of informed decisions which will help this country to grow and prosper.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we are glad that the government is bringing in some of these measures for reorganization. We may have doubts about some of the details. We shall be able to discuss those more intelligently when we see the legislation. In the meantime we commend the government for taking several very important forward steps in the resolution which has been presented today.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of clarifying what I thought was a misunderstanding of the form of the resolution. I will not speak in detail about the substance of it. Earlier in the afternoon, and regrettably I was not here at the time, some question arose as to the adequacy of the resolution. It was suggested that there was no reference in the resolution to the department of forestry and rural development. There was no such reference in the resolution because, I am told, it is unnecessary. I am advised by the law officers—

An hon. Member: That was quick.

Mr. McIlraith: I wanted quickly to find out quickly.

An hon. Member: You certainly moved quickly.

Mr. McIlraith: I admit acting quickly, but I was alarmed about what I had heard had taken place here. In any event, no such reference is required in the resolution, the reason being that there is a Department of Forestry now.

Mr. Starr: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Starr: Is the government house leader trying to lead us to believe that the Minister of Forestry is hidden in this resolution?

Mr. McIlraith: No, he is fully exposed. There is no need to refer to him or to the department as there is the case when a new department is created where none had existed before. The new department of forestry and rural development is a new department in the sense of having the name of the department changed and its functions redelineated.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: We are dealing with a new department which will affect directly employment opportunities, productivity and the standard of living arising out of existing forestry and rural development legislation.

Mr. Starr: I see.

Mr. McIlraith: These powers of the new department are set out—

Mr. Starr: I want to see the minister peeking out of that resolution.

Mr. McIlraith: The Minister of Forestry is already carrying on duties in this field in an extensive way, his duties being found under the provisions of the Forestry Act and in legislation in the rural development field. What I intended to indicate was that it was the opinion of the law officers who drafted the bill, and they persist in this view which I believe to be the correct one, that it is not necessary to have any specific reference in the resolution to the department, as there would be in the case of a new department.

Mr. Starr: You are satisfied, I take it?

Mr. McIlraith: That is because there are no money implications.

Mr. Starr: The government is satisfied? If the government is satisfied, we are.

Mr. Pearson: Will my hon. friends now apologize?

Mr. Douglas: Would it not have taken much less time just to say "we goofed"?

Mr. Starr: With reference to the explanation that has been given to us by the Minister of Public Works, if he says that he sees the Minister of Forestry among the trees that are in this resolution, then we have no objection.

Mr. Pearson: You should go back to Magna Carta.

Mr. McIlraith: If hon. members will wait until they see the bill they will have no difficulty in finding the trees.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. May I ask the consent of members of the committee to inform them of the adjournment proceedings at ten o'clock tonight?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the following questions will be discussed on the adjournment motion tonight: the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), Education—conditions governing free university training; the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston), Health and Welfare—request for statement on control of drug LSD; the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), Agriculture—inquiry as to dairy subsidy policy.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we can really make full and complete comment on this measure until we see the legislation. Therefore my remarks at this time will be limited to a few basic principles that are involved which I believe to be important.

I disagree with the Prime Minister if the final conclusion to be drawn from his initial premise is that there must be increasing control by government in every aspect of our social and economic activities. It seems to me that one of the problems we face today is that we are yielding to the pressures by following the path of least resistance, which too often results in things being taken over by the authority of the government. I am concerned, therefore, that at the present time we have the prospect of even greater control through federal government adminidministration. However, if the object of this government reorganization is to decrease government interference and government control over Canadians while at the same time facilitating greater efficiency and effectiveness of government, then we completely support the resolution.

I think it is high time that more recommendations of the Glassco Commission were instituted. I am concerned that we have already waited far too long to implement many of the obvious recommendations. As a result, if I sense correctly what is happening within the civil service at the present time, there is a general state of confusion and uncertainty which has resulted from these now very rapid and extensive changes in the structure of the federal government.

I believe it is vital, Mr. Chairman, that there be very well defined and clearcut areas of responsibility so far as governmental departments are concerned and that in this connection there be a complete flow of information to facilitate communication between governmental departments. None of these changes that are now contemplated will reach their desired objectives unless this is so. We trust that when the legislation comes before us there will be evidence that this is the intention of the government as the reorganization is brought to reality.

Let me comment briefly on a few aspects of the proposal which the Prime Minister has put before us this afternoon. It seems to me that the transfer of certain responsibilities from the Minister of Justice to the Solicitor General might be very useful and increase the efficiency as well as the effectiveness of the administration of justice. It is also my opinion that it is a very sound idea to set up ministry of manpower. One of the greatest problems we face in Canada today concerns the question of manpower. We boast about a booming economy; yet this very month there are 340,000 people who are unemployed. This emphasizes the fact that re-education is vital if we are to make best use of our work force. It is a paradox that so many people should be unemployed in an economy which is in some areas looking for skilled labour.

It is important that the government should recognize immigration as an important factor in any manpower policy. I do not believe we have the right to claim the vast areas of Canada we do today unless we occupy those areas and seek to develop them. The greatest eras of prosperity in our history have come in times when we have received the greatest influx of new immigrants. A complete overhaul of the department of immigration is necessary and it is logical that this should be combined with a vocational training program of wide scope so as to develop essential additional sources of skilled labour.

The effects of automation in Canada are proving to be different from those which had been anticipated. For a number of years we are unlikely to be faced with any real problem so far as automation is concerned because of the tremendous scope which exists for the development of our resources. Nevertheless there is need for a continuing assessment of this situation and a department of manpower appears to be the logical answer so far as government organization is concerned.

I am somewhat concerned to find that the Department of Labour is being emasculated, as it were, by the setting up of the proposed department of manpower. However, I would assume there will be an opportunity for greater emphasis on industrial relations and a more harmonious labour situation across Canada so far as the federal administration is concerned, particularly in the field of co-ordination between federal and provincial departments of labour. The importance of this question will continue to increase. From information I have it seems to me that co-operation between the various departments of labour will become more feasible under the arrangement proposed.

The establishment of a new department responsible for energy, mines and resources is a sound basis for reorganization, and we look forward to the legislation which will make this possible. Herein lies the potential for the development and administration of the tremendous natural resources which fall under federal jurisdiction.

The position of registrar general as outlined by the Prime Minister is not completely clear. We have noted the areas which will be assigned to the new minister. We assume he will be the President of the Privy Council acting in a dual capacity. I noted with interest that, according to the Prime Minister, the registrar general would have responsibility for the protection of the rights of individuals. However, it was most disappointing to find that the government had failed to establish the office of ombudsman. For a number of years this question has been the subject of various private bills. In addition, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has studied the matter and reported favourably to parliament. The response of the administration has been evasive. In the Speech from the Throne of the previous session it was suggested that a royal commission would be set up to look into the desirability of appointing an ombudsman. I use the word "evasive" because I do not think it is necessary to establish a royal commission to look into this question. We have the example of those countries which have already adopted a procedure of this kind. In addition, it seems to me there is clearly a need for an ombudsman to help protect civil liberties and rights in this country.

I still urge the government to establish such a post. A parliamentary commissioner or ombudsman, as he is better known, would provide a means whereby the people of Canada would have an officer of this parliament to defend their rights and liberties. I urge the President of the Privy Council, as he assumes the responsibilities of registrar general, to bring forward legislation to establish this important office. Bearing in mind the growth of government and the tendency for bureaucracy to increase, I believe this is the only way of affording protection to the rights of individual citizens.

I am disappointed too that in the course of this reorganization the Prime Minister has failed to provide for a department of federal-provincial affairs. This country's greatest single need is the co-ordination in an effective way of the various jurisdictions at the several levels of government. There was a period after the war when the federal government tended to dominate the national scene. Today the provincial governments are very strong, and it seems to me that in order to ensure a strong federal government, without detracting from the strength and vitality of the provinces, more concern must be paid to continuing liaison and co-operation in this area.

We have heard a lot about co-operative federalism, but co-operative federalism can never become a reality unless there is machinery to provide continuing liaison. The democratic process in Canada is in danger at the present time because the federal government, in calling a continuing series of federal-provincial conferences at which it places certain policies before the provinces, is using a process which tends to by-pass not only parliament but the legislatures of the provinces as well. A most effective way of dealing with this situation would be to set up a special department of government, not just a secretariat, where the work done at federal and provincial levels could be co-ordinated on a continuing basis to produce results more effective than in the past.

May I say a word now about the proposal to make the Treasury Board a new department of government charged with the implementation of the recommendations of the Glassco Commission. This could be a useful thing but I am disturbed that it will mean an addition to the cabinet. Again we can only make intelligent comment when we see the legislation itself.

In relation to citizenship in its narrowest sense, the fact that it is being assigned to the Secretary of State is also logical. There should be greater emphasis on citizenship. The other day one of my constituents suggested as a centennial project that we should undertake the issuance of citizenship certificates to all Canadians on the occasion of our centennial birthday on July 1, 1967. This would be a highly practical project emphasizing Canadian citizenship. I mention it only because I believe we ought to give greater emphasis to the value of citizenship and make that value known to all our citizens.

Without unduly extending my remarks on the resolution, again I would say that unless there are clearly defined areas of responsibility, unless there are open channels of communication between government departments, unless there is a determined effort to increase the efficiency of government, a reorganization such as is proposed by this measure will mean nothing. I trust that the government will place the correct emphasis on this important subject. Otherwise this reorganization will not have the effect that it should.

There is only one other point that might be considered as we are dealing with this resolution, namely, the need to set up an inner cabinet within a wider structure embracing junior ministers. With the cabinet at its present size there is a danger of lack of co-ordination and imprecise definition of government policy.

It is interesting to note that in Great Britain the ministry consists of more than 100 members of the house. This means that approximately 20 per cent of the membership of the house is in the ministry, with the whole area of routine responsibility shared with junior ministers. The junior ministers do not form part of the central cabinet in Great Britain.

If the government is to formulate policy and present it in an effective way, if inefficiency in government is to be improved, then along with this proposed reorganization provision should be made for a hard core central cabinet concerned more with government policy in the over-all structure in order to provide the Prime Minister, who holds a job that is extremely difficult, with the basic policy advice and consultation that he needs. This would ease the central cabinet of much of the load of administrative detail which would be taken care of by others not so responsible for policy and who would be occupied with routines administrative duties.

So, Mr. Chairman, we in this party reserve further comment until we see the bill. It is good to see this reorganization being proposed, and along with it I hope consideration will be given to the several points I have mentioned. I hope we will all receive the assurance that as a result of this reorganization there will be increased efficiency, and more effective government without necessarily a greater degree of interference with and control of individual citizens by government.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, resolution No. 56 concerns a government project to establish five new government departments.

The resolution stipulates that:

It is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the organization of the government of Canada—

Does this mean that the government is disorganized? The question is obvious.

—to establish a Department of the Solicitor General, Department of Manpower, Department of the Registrar General, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and Department of Energy, Mines and Resources;—

And, of course, to establish at the same time the bureaucracy and the bunch of bureaucrats necessary to all these departments.

[Mr. Thompson.]

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) has just mentioned that, under the circumstances, it would have been quite expedient to establish a Department of Federal-Provincial Affairs, because anyone who sees this list of new departments can tell that three of them will undoubtedly be directly concerned with questions under the jurisdiction of the provinces. For example, there will be a department of manpower. The provinces, whether Quebec or British Columbia, do not want their course of action or their policy to be dictated by the federal government.

The provincial authorities rightly believe that the matter of manpower comes under their jurisdiction and, in Quebec, we believe this sincerely and deeply.

With regard to Indian affairs and northern development, we witnessed in this house negotiations which took place between the present Minister of Northern Affairs of the province of Quebec, then Minister of Natural Resources, and the federal Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

The minister of the provincial government maintained that the administration of Indian affairs belonged to Quebec, as far as northern Quebec was concerned, and the federal minister held the opposite view.

Today, the government is asking the house to pass the resolution to establish a department of Indian affairs and northern development. That will create conflicts between the provinces and the Canadian government.

The establishment of a department of energy, mines and resources is also proposed. We saw the government of British Columbia and the federal government, then headed by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), engaged in a rather fierce struggle which lasted four, five, even six years. When the federal government of the day toppled, we saw the same struggle continue between the government of British Columbia and the present federal government; finally a compromise was reached under which the claims of the government of British Columbia to the effect that mines, resources and energy come under provincial jurisdiction were recognized.

In the present circumstances, Mr. Chairman, forever increasing the number of ministers, or appointing five more, does not seem to me the way to solve the problems which are now facing the Canadian economy and which the Canadian people must now overcome.

The government can appoint as many ministers as it wants to, in short, it can appoint a dozen or more if it so chooses, but that will not change anything. I feel that there are too many ministers already for the results we are getting in any field of economic activity whatsoever.

Of the present ministers, several seem ineffective; one wonders why they exist at all. They do not get results. And we are now asked to create five new departments, excluding the main ones. For instance, since the beginning of this session, we are told practically every day about the new department of manpower.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) said this afternoon that this department will have to study new production techniques, as well as the problem of automation and management-labour relations in Canada. Strikes are looming up in Quebec like never before in any other province in Canada. Professors' strike, teachers' strike, students' strike, government-employed professionals' strike, strike on the left—yes, the Coca-Cola strike in Montreal, in the riding of the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté)—all kinds of strikes, and none of them is settled to the advantage of the strikers. In fact, if we consider closely what is happening anywhere in Canada, we find that the end of one strike is merely the beginning of another. What is the new minister of manpower going to do about all this? The Prime Minister this afternoon mentioned automation. What does automation mean, Mr. Chairman? It means that man is being displaced by machine; this means that production will stem from the work performed by a machine instead of man.

And what is being proposed as a solution? Absolutely nothing, except the setting up of a department of manpower. When we see a strike break out anywhere in Canada due to automation—and more of them will be occurring within the next few years—what are the unions and the labour leaders asking for? They ask the industrialists, the employers to absorb the wages of employees displaced by machines, by progress, by automation. This automatically increases the cost of goods, hence the retail prices that the consumers of Canada will have to pay.

Increased prices means inflation. Such are the solution currently being suggested to automation which is growing always more important in Canada, like in most countries of the world.

Mr. Chairman, the solution advanced by certain labour leaders that the employers must continue to pay wages to employees displaced by machines—

• (6:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether there is a quorum present in the chamber?

The Chairman: Order. May I read to the house citation 60(2) of Beauchesne, fourth edition, page 49:

> If notice is taken by a member that there is not a quorum present in committee of the whole, the chairman follows the course pursued by the Speaker in the house. If he ascertains that twenty members are not present, he leaves the chair, the house is resumed, and, on his report, the Speaker counts the house, and if there is not then a quorum, he must adjourn the house forthwith.

I would therefore ask the Clerk to count the house.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, do you include those who have just walked in?

The Chairman: Order, please. At the top of page 49 of Beauchesne it says:

> While the house is being counted the doors remain open—

Mr. Deachman: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, will those who are present in the chamber now be recorded or what is the procedure in this regard?

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that you make the count because I have counted and there are now two over the quorum.

Mr. Starr: That happened only in the last half minute. There were only 16 when the hon. member drew it to our attention.

Mr. Kindt: About eight walked in.

And on the count being made, more than 20 members were declared to be present.

The Chairman: Order, please. I declare the committee properly formed. The hon. member for Villeneuve.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the hon. member raised the matter of a quorum, because I thought he was listening to me closely; as a matter of fact, I felt I was giving him rather valuable information on labour matters in Canada. At any rate, he was—

An hon. Member: Spying.

Mr. Caouette: —spying.

I shall proceed with my remarks, pointing out that I am not displeased with the appointment of a minister of manpower, but this does not provide a solution to the problem now facing us.

I maintain that the minister will have to come up with other solutions than the ones he offered when he was a very well known labour leader in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, I said earlier that the increase in prices meant inflation. I maintained that including in the price of goods the salaries paid to workers replaced by machines did not provide any solution at all to the problem. But we, members of the Ralliement Créditiste, and we, supporters of the Social Credit doctrine, believe that there is a way to correct the situation, and that is to increase personal incomes without increased prices being included in the cost of goods.

How? By using the Bank of Canada and by distributing a general dividend to every Canadian citizen. This new credit, based on Canadian production, would not be included in the price of goods but would increase the purchasing power of Canadians and restore economic order in Canada.

However, when we speak of this alternative, we hear good Liberals, good Conservatives retort that it is utopia, that it would be utopian to use the Bank of Canada and that it would be dangerous for inflation. But we are now in the midst of inflation. Not one Conservative, not one Liberal dares raise his voice against that system.

Mr. Chairman, in matters of labour-management relations, we see many union leaders now in Canada—I will name none—going all across Canada to rouse workers, labourers, their members against bad employers. That is why wherever I go, in the province of Quebec and outside Quebec, I say to workers, to labourers, to farmers: Instead of striking against those who pay you, strike against those who tax you. Those who levy taxes are here, in the federal parliament and in the Quebec parliament, in the political organizations of their respective provinces. They are the ones who are responsible for the misunderstandings between employees and employers. And certain union leaders, instead of trying to extol conciliation between employers and employees, try by all means to distribute boxing gloves to both sides in order to create conflicts, so that they may devour one another, they tear one another to pieces. That is the vile role pursued by certain union leaders throughout Canada. The government says nothing about that.

We are informed that a manpower department will be created. We will soon hear the new minister of manpower preach to us that employers and industrialists will henceforth have to pay workers replaced by machines and science, salaries which they will pay for their replacement. This is entirely illogical and unthinkable in a so-called sovereign and civilized country. I repeat: civilized.

Mr. Chairman, there is only one way to help and respect automation. We should ask ourselves as members of parliament, as federal members, whether machine was invented and created to punish man or whether it was invented and created to serve man?

If it was invented as a punishment, let us continue as we are going; we are following the right direction. If machines were invented to serve man, however, we who are responsible to the people must find ways to give men replaced by machines the financial means to buy products made by machines in Canada. Then, we will be able to say that we have worked to balance the Canadian economy, to give the consumers buying power and access to their products.

Mr. Chairman, we may establish as many departments as we like. This will not deal with the situation which is more serious. The solution lies deeper than the appointment of new ministers or the creation of new departments. We must go deeper to reach the source of the economic, political and social ills with which we are afflicted today.

There is talk of separatism in Quebec. There is talk of separatism in British Columbia, in Toronto and in Ontario. Why? Because these people are dissatisfied with the turn of events in parliament.

We are going to appoint new ministers and establish new departments on the pretext that this will conform to the wishes of the people. Let us not delude ourselves, Mr. Chairman; this is not the way to deal with Canadian problems nor to promote understanding between the provinces.

The member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) rightly said earlier that a department of federal-provincial affairs should have been established first, to assess the causes of dissatisfaction or disagreement between Canadians. This is not restricted to the province of Quebec. It also exists in British Columbia, in regions where Canadians do not think as we do; we find the same feelings in Ottawa and in Toronto, as well as in Montreal.

Mr. Chairman, there are serious problems needing solutions, problems which we must face not as politicians but as Canadians. This is what the Ralliement Créditiste is working for: the greatness of Canada. This is what the Ralliement Créditiste is working for in the house.

We will not object to the appointment of these ministers, but we will object if they do not give the Canadian people the results they are waiting for in the administration of their national and economic affairs.

At this stage, Mr. Chairman, I appeal to all members of all political parties and all regions of Canada to take a stand so that the ministers, the government and the cabinet may give the Canadian people results which will ensure their security and their freedom.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this resolution represents only a piecemeal, ad hoc approach to the very major problem of achieving an efficient, effective departmental structure. Nothing that the Prime Minister has said this afternoon changes my conviction that the bill or bills to be founded upon this resolution would set back rather than advance the cause of rationalizing ministerial responsibilities for departments of government. This resolution, in my submission, is exclusively a political solution; it bears no resemblance to genuine administrative or departmental reform. I want to make some very specific submissions in relation to it at the resolution stage in the hope that I may induce the Prime Minister to reconsider the bill or bills to be based upon the resolution.

As long ago as 1912 Sir George Murray, in his report on the public service of Canada, made a statement which has been quoted many times since:

> Nothing has impressed me so much in the course of my inquiry as the almost intolerable burden which the present system of transacting business imposes on ministers themselves. They both have too much to do and do too much.

In the intervening years I fear that has remained a law of ministerial life, and may indeed have intensified. But as well, the distribution of duties among ministers and departments has been uneven and inequitable. The Prime Minister's attempt to grapple with the problem in this resolution is in my submission just a tinkering with a major problem. It is not an attempt to achieve an over-all solution. My basic complaint is that the Prime Minister has taken a subjective rather than an objective approach to governmental reorganization.

The Prime Minister has sought to tailor the portfolios to the ministers rather than to establish the portfolios on a rational basis and then seek to find the best men and women to fill them. I suggest that he has really worked in reverse, creating new caps to fit heads, rather than choosing heads to fill pretailored caps. He has said: I must find something to fit the hon. member for Quebec West. So he tailored him a cap, one quite different from that which would have been tailored if either the hon. member for Mount Royal or the hon. member for Hochelaga had been the member of the triumvirate to be preferred.

My respectful submission is that this is the wrong approach both to governmental reorganization and to cabinet making, and it can only lead to further confusion and uncertainty at future cabinet reorganizations and changes of government.

If the Prime Minister should persist in his apparent intention to have only a single bill based upon this resolution, I suggest that administrative confusion will be the result. With great respect, I submit that each department should have its own establishing legislation. Separate bills can be enacted as expeditiously as a composite bill and the result would be not merely legislative tidiness but greater economy and efficiency in administration for years ahead.

Now, sir, may I state certain conclusions to which I personally have come. The first is that the Canadian cabinet has become much too large for effective administration. I should like to emphasize the submission so vigorously made this afternoon by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. In my view, the number of ministers should be reduced below 20 instead of the present 26 and the departments of government should be consolidated and rationalized. For this reason the trifurcation of the Department of Justice is the very reverse of what ought to be done.

Second, coincidental with the reduction in the ministry, and indeed whether this is achieved or not, the status and role of parliamentary secretaries should be greatly enhanced. Originally parliamentary assistants were designed to be junior ministers but they have been reduced to a status which is both equivocal and frustrating. I believe parliamentary secretaries should be raised to the status of junior ministers, given tenure during pleasure such as ministers enjoy, and be invited to sit in cabinet when matters relating to the department to which they are assigned are under consideration in cabinet.

Third, the dangers of appointing so-called specialists or experts to portfolios are, I would submit, very great. This is the real evil of tailoring portfolios to men. The Norman Ward revision of Dawson's, "The Government of Canada", deals in detail with this at page 211, and after outlining the dangers of appointing third or fourth class experts to cabinet portfolios concludes with this statement:

> But even a specialist who is first-class is likely to make a poor minister. Practice has given this an unequivocal double confirmation. Not only has the use of the amateur minister been vindicated by long experience; the expert minister—the one who has presumably a profound technical knowledge of his department's work—has proved time and again to be a failure. The exception that proves the rule in Canadian history—

I am glad to be able to read this.

> —is Mr. Pearson's undoubted success as Secretary of State for External Affairs from 1948 to 1957, after 20 years service within the department as an expert.

May I put it in this way, that I believe in the supremacy of political acumen and intelligence in ministerial choice, particularly in opposition to expertise.

Finally in this phase of my remarks I should like to say that a major rationalization of departmental structure is urgently needed. Much of the present structure has only historical justification. Branches are included with others without semblance of reason except historical aberration. There are some departments and certainly some branches of departments which could operate more effectively and with greater viability as crown corporations. Rather than this piecemeal approach, this ad hoc mending which the Prime Minister is attempting in this resolution this afternoon, I submit he should be proposing a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons to study and review the whole structure and fabric of departmental organization with a view to simplification and systemization.

Now, sir, may I state certain specific objections to the haphazard and retrograde proposals now before us. The first is that the emasculation of the Department of Justice and its division into three separate ministries will defeat rather than advance the administration of justice. If there were problems of lack of co-ordination in the old department—and I think we all know that there were—they will be intensified now at least threefold under the new proposals. Nothing the Prime Minister said this afternoon has altered my firm view that one ministry of justice, presided over by a competent, knowledgeable counsel, can administer justice in Canada more expeditiously, more efficiently, than the proposed three departments which have no base of uniformity among them. I say that rather than elevate the role of Solicitor General it should be abandoned as a ministerial portfolio and should only be filled as a non-ministerial role when there is in this house a counsel of outstanding talent who might plead crown causes in the courts, as is done in the United Kingdom and some other countries.

The creation of the new portfolio of registrar general is, in my respectful submission, wholly unnecessary. Its evident purpose is to create a portfolio suitable for one man, who happens to be a member that I like very much personally, but that is not sufficient excuse to upset the established balance of the Department of Justice and the Department of the Secretary of State. I predict that we will have a compartmentalized, nook-and-cranny brand of administration of justice, with the public interest suffering.

I want to put this test sincerely and without any malice or guile whatever. Is there a member of this committee who believes that this proposal to divide the Department of Justice into three would ever have been proposed if my hon. friend from Papineau had not encountered what I shall describe in a kindly way—and I mean to be kindly—as misfortunes. Surely everyone knows that to be the truth. Had he not had these misfortunes there would be no proposal for the division of the Department of Justice. Then why are we now engaged in wrecking that department?

I suggest that this is just an unfortunate by-product of the Dorion inquiry. Even at this late date I urge the Prime Minister to turn back, to re-examine the proposal, for I fear that the abridgement and, yes, the truncation of the status and authority of the senior law officer of the Crown, will have a most undesirable aftermath. I submit to the Prime Minister that with one ministry, one minister and an experienced, able counsel in that role such as the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand, we can restore fully public respect for the administration of justice in this country.

I have equally strong feelings about the dispersal of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and the creation of the new department of manpower. In the first place, I do not think citizenship should be divorced from immigration, certainly not the citizenship registration branch. Citizenship registration must necessarily use immigration files as its basic records, and I believe the whole balance of convenience is in retaining them in the same department. In many ways the citizenship branch has not had sufficient attention. Successive ministers—and I admit my own fault—have inclined to become so immersed in the detailed problems of immigration and of Indian affairs as to have insufficient time for citizenship problems.

Implementation of some of the best features of the Sedgwick report would relieve the minister somewhat to enable him to give more time to citizenship problems. In the Department of the Secretary of State I fear the citizenship branch will be just another orphan, unwanted, unattended and unheard. All this will indicate my definite view that the citizenship branch must have much greater attention, more money, more staff, more parliamentary support. We have done much less in this field, and what we have done has been less effective, than other democratic countries.

The transfer of Indian affairs is probably logical but it cannot be realistic without the appointment of a separate deputy minister of Indian affairs. Many members of this house do not, I think, realize that we have rushing upon us—I was going to say "creeping upon us" but really it is rushing upon us—the major problems of the 1970's in the field of Indian affairs. This parliament must make soon some very basic decisions or we shall have among our original citizens the most urgent problems of the next decade. At the very least a separate deputy minister is needed. Very soon after I assumed the portfolio of citizenship and immigration I became convinced of this and I think I can say that had there been no change of government we would have had already a separate deputy minister.

However, what troubles me is that the new department of manpower is a marriage of immigration and parts of the public service formerly in the Department of Labour. Personally I believe in proper, selected, continuous immigration as a stimulus to the economy even in periods of recession, but that has never been the opinion in the old Department of Labour.

During consideration of the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration I have already stated my strongly held opinion that the submerging of immigration into what is basically a labour portfolio is a grave error of national policy. I repeat it and I assert my confidence that a sensible, continuous, long range immigration policy will suffer.

When I assumed the portfolio of immigration, I soon learned that it was the very branches of the Department of Labour now sought to be integrated with it that consistently and persistently brought pressures to bear to reduce immigration, to cut it back, to hold it down, and this at the very time when in my opinion the Canadian economy badly needed the stimulus, the shot in the arm, if you will, of expanded immigration.

The department of manpower will be a department warring within itself, and because of the orientation of the proposed minister of manpower I have no doubt which contestant will win. As a matter of fact, I submit that the net effect of the proposed changes will be to deprive this country of a consistent, long range immigration policy.

I believe I could give the committee evidence of what I assert. In my travels I have visited other countries and their various departments of immigration. I will not mention the countries; I do not want to be invidious in mentioning them. But I believe those which have a separate immigration portfolio are much ahead, in relation to immigration policy, of those that combine immigration with labour. Without hesitation, I assert that immigration as an instrument of national policy is subdued wherever there is this marriage of immigration and labour.

Regretfully I predict that this will be the result of the Prime Minister's proposals here.

In other portfolios the changes have been tailored to a new minister. In the department of manpower they have been tailored not only to the proposed minister but to the deputy minister as well. With great respect and equal firmness, I ask the Prime Minister to re-examine his proposals. It is not too late to change, particularly when a change would be in the interest of more effective administration.

One of the results of the proposals is to leave the Department of Labour, now presided over by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, so emaciated as not really to be a department at all. Except for the addition to the hon. gentleman's responsibility of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, one of the most effective ministers in this government would be virtually unemployed. So basically what I urge the Prime Minister to do at this resolution stage is to refer his proposals to a joint Senate and House of Commons committee for detailed analysis of the whole structure of departmental administration and ministerial portfolios.

I believe that hon. Senators and hon. members can advance new and simplified proposals which will accrue to public advantage generally. The present resolution will defeat effective and realistic ministerial responsibility; it is retrogressive and ought to be reconsidered.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, in discussing the proposal concerning the organization of the government of Canada I believe it is important that we try to get a perspective of the situation in which the government find itself today. In very broad terms something like 20 million people have sent 265 others here to Ottawa to do what we can to see that the government, its departments and its agencies handle the federal business of the country as efficiently, effectively and economically as possible.

The proportions of this federal business can be very briefly described in these terms. We take in and spend every year something over $7 billion. We have at the latest count some 345,000 civilian employees working in the federal field. The figures I have cited, Mr. Chairman, reflect an enormous expansion in governmental activities over the last 15 or 20 years. It is natural that this has been the case because in the last two decades Canada has moved toward the status of a modern industrial state with the collective type of life and living which that entails.

Both the federal and provincial governments in their departments have certainly stepped up their efforts and their spending toward economic and social development. But this has been going on, Mr. Chairman, under outmoded constitutional provisions with few clear demarcations of the responsibility between the federal and provincial departments. With both stepping up activities there is duplication which is costly to the taxpayer who supports these governmental agencies. I believe the overlapping of federal and provincial authorities is a subject related to the legislation before us, but I will not go into that. I will confine myself entirely to a discussion of the federal governmental need of reorganization, except to say in passing that there are at least 160 federal and provincial agencies involved in water management in Canada, a situation giving rise to a great deal of overlapping and duplication.

There is no doubt at all in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, that for many years federal ministers and departments and supporting agencies have been involved in related and fragmented responsibilities. As one who believes that public enterprise must continue to increase its worth and play a growing role in our way of life in Canada, I mean to do what I can to try to make public enterprise, which is represented by the federal government at the federal level, work efficiently and to improve its administrative functions.

I want to quote briefly from the findings of the Royal Commission on Government Organization, a report which we should remember was made some two or three years ago. I think this report is particularly pertinent to the resolution which is before us. It states:

> It is a wasteful use of ministerial talent to have several ministers concerning themselves unnecessarily with common or closely related problems, just as it may cause a wasteful use of resources to have similar or related operations conducted by a number of separate units throughout the public service.
> In addition to the proposals for consolidation of supporting services, a number of recommendations submitted in other reports for the regrouping of duties will have the effect of simplifying ministerial tasks. This can be seen, for example, in the proposal for consolidation of maritime patrol operations in the coastguard service, the transfer of the wild life service to the Minister of Fisheries, the transfer of the Canadian government travel bureau to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and the assumption by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources of responsibilities relating to northern Indians now held by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

So, Mr. Chairman, I take it that the measure before us represents at least a first step toward a regrouping of these federal functions in line with the principles which were enunciated as the result of the royal commission studies made during the years 1960 to 1963. It is proposed now to establish some new departments, to take from others some services which are now performed in them, and to try to bring out of the whole reorganization a more efficient piece of machinery with which to carry on the business of the country. I personally approve, generally speaking, of what is being done and I am certainly in favour of the principle involved of better planning, co-operation and co-ordination at the federal level.

I do not know that we can judge exactly at this point how efficiently some of these new departments or new groupings will work. I feel that we will have to withhold our judgment until we see the new machinery in operation.

The other proposals commend themselves to me immediately, particularly those concerned with citizenship and manpower, the grouping of energy and mines and so on in one department. I want to say, though, that while I approve of the objective I do believe it has taken a long time to make this attempt. We are seeing an effort to reform something which has been in need of reform for many, many years. All of us have had the experience of dealing with two or three or more departments of this government, in addition to having provincial agencies involved and realizing that the matter could be settled very quickly if there were a co-ordinating agency.

I note that the Auditor General of Canada, in his recent report, was at pains I thought to underline the need for further reforms in organization procedures of the federal government. He said this, Mr. Chairman:

> We selected 32 departments or agencies of government whose operations had been studied by the royal commission three years ago and where the conditions giving rise to some 450 findings existed.

I break off the quotation there to explain that these findings represented items which the royal commission listed as being defective or, wasteful procedures and practices by the federal government. The Auditor General states that his survey involved seeking answers to over 900 questions at the appropriate levels of government departments and agencies, questions which could be summed up briefly by saying that he was seeking to find out from them what they had done about the many recommendations for reforms made by the royal commission. The results of these questions, the Auditor General says, brought forward this sorry state of affairs, one which I believe still exists to this day. In brief, three quarters of the recommendations by this royal commission, which incidentally cost the country $3 million, had been ignored to date by the different levels of government or agencies.

I think it is incumbent upon every member of the house, Mr. Chairman, to do what he can to encourage the government to go further than they have toward streamlining government operations and making more efficient the operations of the departments. As a social democrat, I have been long acquainted with the overlapping and duplication which is evident in private industry. As a social democrat, I am very much concerned also that public enterprise, as represented by the federal government at least, should seek to eliminate wasteful procedures and present an efficient, competent operation.

The cost of that royal commission, as I said, was $3 million. In my view it did excellent work. The Auditor General states that the task the commission undertook is far from complete. He found no lack of awareness in the departments of government which he questioned as to the need for the many reforms dealt with in the report of the commission. In many instances he found that there was a lack of action in the top management bracket to have these reforms undertaken. This is what interested me, Mr. Chairman: He found that top management itself, in many cases, said that they could do very little to change the practices and procedures which were under criticism in their departments because they had their beginning in actions by the Canadian parliament itself.

I feel therefore it comes back pretty well to us, certainly to the government and to the members of this house, to do whatever we can to continue to eliminate or reduce waste and duplication in the service. With this in mind, while I favour the general proposals which have been put forward by the government, I regret that I have not heard of the government's intention of continuing with this reorganization. We have had no indication from the government that it intends to do what any private industry would do, that is conduct a continuing survey on an annual basis to ascertain how and where more efficiency can be introduced. I support the remarks made earlier today by my leader who said he thought there should be a federal agency which would concern itself solely with improving the efficiency of the government. For many years, Mr. Chairman, in the field of municipalities we have had a municipal manager. It may be the time will come when we will have something in the nature of a federal manager.

I want to conclude by saying I support generally the proposal of the government, which I believe is heading in the right direction. I deplore the fact that no time has been set for a continuation of the same type of work to give us more reforms.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, we now have before us a rather meaty piece of legislation, since it provides for the establishment of a department of the solicitor general, a department of manpower, a department of the registrar general, a department of Indian affairs and northern development, department of energy, mines and resources, for the establishment of the office of president of the Treasury Board and provides finally for such other consequential or incidental statutory amendments as are necessary to implement the changes to be effected by the said measure.

Mr. Chairman, this is quite substantial for a single piece of legislation and we do not have time, in the few minutes at our disposal to analyse in detail all the new trends brought about within the federal administration.

At the outset, I want to point out that the suggestion made a while ago by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell), was justified, because it would be important not to act quickly with regard to that measure but to allow parliament, through a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate, to study all its possible changes.

Tonight, however, Mr. Chairman,—I reserve the right to speak when the bills are introduced for each of the objectives of that resolution—I want to deal mainly with the proposed creation of a department of manpower, subject of capital importance in Canada because it must allow us to approach effectively the country's major economic problems.

We know that a great effort must be made to develop our production capacity, whether in the field of productivity, manpower qualification, training or mobility. Economic and social problems change very rapidly. It is urgent that the governments of our country co-operate to our economic growth and the qualification of our labour force.

For some years now—not only here in Canada but in every country—the repercussions of that phenomenon called automation have been felt in various areas, namely unemployment, manpower displacement training of workers, financial help to workers and today, there is talk of the need for a department of manpower.

But, before giving our blessing to the creation of that new department, it would be important to know, and we will know it only when the bill is introduced, what responsibilities exactly that new department will assume in the field of federal jurisdiction and probably with regard to the provincial jurisdiction. Besides, the question has been raised sharply and is already quite controversial.

We have, on one side, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) who has been saying for some months that to be effective the manpower policy must be carried out at the national level. His argument is based on the fact that the central government is responsible for the economic life of Canada and that, since manpower is an essential element, the central government must be able to establish itself an effective national policy.

The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration does not object at times, in the speeches he makes outside this house, to the provinces administering their own problems of reclassification of manpower. Outside the house, and sometimes in the house, in answer to questions, he repeated the same assertion to the effect that he would not object to the provinces administering their reclassification of manpower, except on two points: the employment office and the financing of a manpower policy.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, we have the opposite attitude, controverted by the premier of Quebec who, in Sherbrooke, on May 2 last, stated:

> Action in this field, to be efficient, should come under the government closer the people. This government, said Mr. Lesage, is the government of Quebec. This is a field of provincial jurisdiction, considering its close relationship to education, and the connections of such a policy with area development, social security, schools, educational establishments.
> If Quebec did not want to do anything in that respect, said the premier, it would be difficult to blame the federal government. The latter, however, would hardly be able to adapt its means of action to the concrete needs of the people of various areas in the province of Quebec.

The Quebec minister of labour, who comes from Sherbrooke, has also been asserting for some months, in various speeches, and this is probably the reflection of the attitude he had to take when he met the responsible minister in Ottawa at the end of 1965 or at the beginning of 1966, that the provinces have a responsibility in the economic development.

For that reason, the province must look after the organization of industry, labour and manpower. There should be co-operation with Ottawa, but the latter must not take direct action on manpower in a province, without co-operation with the province. Ottawa should be a kind of clearing house whose director would be in touch with the provincial minister of labour.

A little farther than the province of Quebec, we are aware of statements and attitudes on the part of representatives of British Columbia; for some months, the British Columbia minister of labour has been asserting that the province intends to stay master of its manpower policy.

If we look at the statements of persons who are not involved in political activity, we notice, for instance, that Mr. Roland Parenteau, director of the Quebec council for economic orientation, during the 21st convention on industrial relations, maintained that action in the field of manpower should be restricted to the province without, however, closing the door against the necessary co-operation with other levels of government.

Mr. André Raynaud, of the Economic Science Department of the University of Montreal, also stated at this 21st conference, on April 19, 1966, that an adequate manpower policy comes as much under provincial as under federal jurisdiction, and that manpower mobility was merely an intermediate step in the adjustment process of supply and demand.

Mr. Claude Ryan, editorial writer of Le Devoir, had this to say on February 24, 1966:

> Political leaders are dealing here neither with words nor slogans, but with the livelihood of workers. It is essential to become very aware of the problems peculiar to Quebec and to prevent Ottawa from entering alone in a field of great concern to the provincial government. But the common good requires that the true aspects of the problem be first looked into, as realistically as possible, and that care be taken from the very start to prevent the whole study from becoming a jurisdictional dispute.

Here are opinions on manpower policy which are at variance in certain respects and consider matters in a different light. Is the federal government well advised to introduce a piece of legislation designed to set forth a manpower policy without giving us the assurance that all Canadian provinces have agreed on a formula which meets everyone's approval and which would be essentially beneficial to the working class?

To this question of manpower are connected matters coming under different jurisdictions. The matters involved include labour, unemployment, immigration, economic responsibilities, social aspects, educational training and even, in certain respects, civil rights and freedom. Thus it seems that the meaning of the word manpower, which is to become a national policy, comprises responsibilities which are recognized at times as being under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces.

This shows that the refusal of the central government to undertake a revision and constitutional reforms in a 1966 context continues to stir up and maintain in this country pressures and tensions which are neither good nor favourable to understanding and national unity.

As for this department of manpower, like in the case of the Science Council and other matters which I pointed out since the beginning of the session, the central government is going about the problem in the wrong way. These fields did not exist explicitly in 1867, they are not defined in the Canadian constitution—the question of manpower did not arise in 1867—it was not then an acute economic problem. Today, however, we are in 1966 and we must respect our constitution. If the governments no longer respect the constitution there will be complete chaos from the constitutional and even political point of view.

In spite of many requests from various members of the house and from all parties for the creation of an urgently needed parliamentary committee, so that federal legislators of both houses may state their ideas clearly on federal policy and responsibility in the economic, social and national context of 1966, the central government refuses and continually puts off the creation of such a committee which would be a first step—while for example the province of Quebec has already established a constitutional committee with the same objective in view—toward a national conference precisely in order to establish and define responsibilities. I am convinced that, from coast to coast, from Halifax to Vancouver, Canadians, even those who do not meet often, feel more like brothers and much closer when they do meet, in spite of the geographic distance between them. But instead of defining responsibilities, the central government continues to increase the constitutional chaos and to maintain tension and pressures on all sides.

Our attitude on this question of manpower is clear, precise and even seems categorically opposed to the new manpower policy announced, not only on the part of the province of Quebec but of British Columbia and probably other provinces, for I have not had the opportunity to discuss it with all the ministers of labour of the other provinces.

Thus the central government decides, by itself and perhaps before the end of its last meeting or before holding another meeting with the ministers of labour of the ten provinces, to define a national manpower policy comprising regional and provincial economic policies. Unfortunately, as in many other fields, the central government is acting unilaterally. It asserts itself, and when it has had its way there will still be pressures and dissatisfaction in the country and nothing leading to the national understanding wanted by all. The steps leading to it are not taken in this house.

Here again, certain initiatives are taken without the consent of the provincial representatives in order to establish Canadian policies which will please everyone.

Mr. Chairman, this is another example of intervention, centralization and bullying with regard to the aspirations of the provinces. I hope that before presenting a bill, those responsible for the new legislation—and today I speak of manpower only—will, as the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) suggested, refer the question to a joint parliamentary committee, even if this delays by a few months the application of a bill.

When a bill is introduced here, it should take into account the aspirations of the provinces and the particular characteristics of a certain province. There is no iron curtain, there is no problem. It is only a matter of reaching an agreement first and not always imposing policies or upsetting whose who have special problems. That gives rise to tensions, dissatisfaction and creates islands of separatism, dislocation, balkanization, whatever you call it.

Do we want a united country, a united Canada, not only on the cultural level but on the economic level? Well, it is time, with regard to that bill on manpower, not to proceed quickly but to refer the question to a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons and to consult representatives of the provinces—particularly those which show some reservations about some areas of national manpower and which could create about that repercussions in all the fields where there is misunderstanding and incomprehension—in order to create a mosaic or intelligent policies, accepted not only by one provincial capital up to the third provincial capital, but from Halifax to Vancouver, in order to make our country a united country, to put an end to the disputes, discussions and struggles on constitutional matters.

It is very simple, Mr. Chairman, let us proceed to a necessary reform of a constitution which is only an old piece of paper dating from 1867 and which, probably as far as three quarters of its provisions are concerned, has no meaning whatsoever in 1966.

That is what has been refused here for three months to a great number of members of the Social Credit, the Ralliement Créditiste, the New Democratic Party and the Progressive Conservative party, and to some members of the party in office. Some ministers go to Toronto and elsewhere and say what we are now openly saying in this house.

To smooth over the difficulties, it is essential to unite Canadians on the cultural as well as the economic level. A bill dealing with the creation of a company of young Canadians will be introduced shortly. Well, once again we will see interference in fields of provincial jurisdiction.

[English]

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Kindt: Having spent many years of my life working with corporations in order to improve the efficiency of their operations, and having worked in a similiar capacity with government organizations, perhaps I might be pardoned for speaking on the resolution before us. This resolution is, I believe, of a type which is important and which could be made productive, as far as the smooth working of the government of Canada is concerned.

I was especially interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for Carleton. It was mentioned by him, and by other speakers earlier, that some 26 departments of government are now contemplated.

There is no question of doubt in the mind of any sound thinking administrator that 26 departments are too many. I do not intend to reiterate the words used by others to describe the overlapping and slitting up, but the departments have become so split up that the average man having a problem and wishing to bring it to the attention of his government is faced with the additional problem of knowing where to write, and to whom he may direct his questions.

The Minister of Labour, who is sitting opposite me, is one of the most efficient ministers in the government, and I am certain that he could handle the portfolio of manpower as well as of labour. The two fit nicely together. When you are talking of one you are talking of the other, and the policies of one affect the policies of the other. If we are going to get the maximum benefit in this country it is necessary to have both those portfolios combined under the supervision of one good man.

The hon. member for Carleton mentioned immigration and citizenship. I shall not dwell on them, but I do wish to mention the Department of Agriculture which at present is split three ways. The marketing of wheat, which is one of the principal functions in agriculture, is just about a full time job for one man, working in co-operation with the Wheat Board and with all other agencies of government concerned with the marketing and the finding of markets for wheat, in order to keep a balance between supply and demand and give the farmers the maximum return for their product. But no one man, be it the present minister or anyone else, can handle the heavy work of the Department of Finance and also the marketing of wheat. The two do not fit together. Marketing of wheat, a part of agriculture, is tailored to fit one particular individual who is responsible for the agricultural portfolio.

Dealing with the other splits in the Department of Agriculture, I notice the Minister of Forestry is also in the chamber. He has responsibility for ARDA, and for feed grain for eastern farmers. I submit that a minister of agriculture could be assigned those functions. I can understand why he was given them, in order to give an eastern connotation or flavour to actions which might be taken. I submit that the responsibilities for ARDA, feed grain and so on, rest primarily and most efficiently under a minister of agriculture, as does also the marketing of wheat.

The present Minister of Agriculture is responsible for certain scientific branches. He also controls the pricing of certain products such as butter and eggs, but at the same time he is concerned with production. I would like to see any corporation that could operate efficiently if it had production in one centre and the marketing away off somewhere else. These have to be co-ordinated under one individual.

The production of wheat and other agricultural products, as well as the marketing of them, should be the responsibility of one man, who would also look after pricing,—instead of being scattered all over the map as they are at present, one in finance, one in forestry and one in agriculture.

The Department of Agriculture was split up in order to accommodate the former minister of agriculture. There is no doubt about that. Now it is split up to help accommodate the demand for someone who can look after Quebec. We all want Quebec looked after, just as we want all other provinces looked after. One department should be sufficient for agriculture, and one should be sufficient for manpower and labour.

If I were to repeat what other hon. members have said I could show where we can do away with no less than six ministers, which would bring the number of departments down to about 20.

If we had only 20 ministers, then to make the house operate efficiently I suggest that a committee of members be set up behind each minister, and stipulate that each minister attend all the meetings of his respective committee. At the present time we have a committee structure under which we cannot get quorums. I ask why? It ties into this whole set-up of governmental organization, and when you talk about one part you are also talking about the other. It is like a number of balls in a bowl: When you move one ball every other ball shifts to a new position. The same thing is true when you delve into the question of the proper organization to make parliament click.

Parliament is not clicking now, and a lot of people are saying that we should do this or that in order to make it more effective. I suggest that if parliament were organized in terms of a number of committees, one behind each department, and made it obligatory for the respective minister to attend all committee meetings, the system would work. A committee chairman could ask a particular minister, well in advance, what dates he could attend.

We all know ministers are busy but they are not such big shots that they cannot attend committees when members of the house are present. When I want to get some point across on the estimates of a particular minister, I can do it in committee if the minister is there. He is the man I want to talk to, not some parliamentary secretary. If the minister is not present then the committee should adjourn. What is the point of meeting and just talking to the four walls? It is the minister who is responsible for the work of his department and it is to him members want to talk.

In addition, at committee meetings certain officials on the administrative staffs of branches should be present. If that were done, then all three branches of government would be concentrated in a committee and a subject could be discussed meaningfully. The order of business would be worked out ahead of time.

Each particular member would know well in advance what subjects would be discussed and the work would be divided up logically. Different persons would be responsible to lead off in discussion, and they would be prepared, whether it was in respect of estimates or any other subject. However, there now is no such organization back of committee. The member receives a notice to attend at a certain time; you go and there is not a quorum. I went to a committee the other day and sat there for half an hour; there still was not a quorum and we had to go out and shanghai another representative in order to make up a quorum.

It is clear to anyone that the problem of making these committees work is one which involves giving to the members of parliament who are sent here an opportunity to get their ideas across to the minister who is responsible and to the administrative officials in the various departments; in other words, the members wish to get together with the ministers and their officials to hear what is being done in their particular departments. They also want the opportunity to discuss with the minister the financing and so on of the particular department, rather than with somebody else, because the minister is responsible.

I should like to say that any minister who is running a department of government should welcome the opportunity to have 10 or 15 members of parliament meet with him and with certain members of his executive where they could have an opportunity to sit around together and talk. Of course, it all would be taken down and so on; but out of that discussion the minister would receive a tremendous benefit. I say to the Minister of Forestry and the Minister of Labour, as the ministers who are here now and who may be leading in the discussion on this, that if they are going to make this parliament work, and satisfy the members, they must get down to the fundamentals of what will retain the interest of individual members. The 60,000 people who sent me down here did not send me here to talk to four walls in a committee room without the minister being there; not on your life. The minister too does not have enough time at any other period to listen to my words on this, that or any other thing. If I or any other of the 15 members who might be on the committee have any contribution to make on the subject of his department, the time to do so would be when they are called together and the minister is there in front of them.

I would suggest that if this type of organization was set up, it would be the obligation of the minister to be present whenever a committee meeting is held. If that were done, it would solve the problem of attendance, of a quorum, and every other thing. I would go one step further. I would give the members a couple of chances and then if they did not attend, except in cases of illness or something like that, they would be taken off the committee and somebody else put on in their place; you have to be a little more strict and a little more tough. It is a little like the sap in the tree: It flows both ways, from the cabinet minister to the members and back. The executive also benefits, and everyone is stimulated. If you harmonize those people and being them together under one committee set-up, you will receive the best co-operation from members of parliament and, in addition, you will get the various parts of government fitting properly together.

In respect of the suggestion that this matter be submitted to the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, I should like to say that I do not think that is the place to submit it. I think it should be sent to some special committee composed of members of this house who have had some experience at least in making committees work; it should consist of representatives of the various parties. They could then bring in a suggestion to the government containing changes which would improve the order of business and the type of business.

I am certain—with all due respect—that if the ministers who are in the front benches were to take this up and seriously consider it, they would find that the members of this parliament would be more behind what they are doing, would be more cognizant of the action they are taking, more appreciative of it, and that it would all work out in the best interest of the people and the government of Canada. The work of parliament could be handled in six months.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, the approach in principle to resolution No. 56 which now is before us already has been presented by our house leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the hon. member for New Westminster. I am not going to repeat what they have said. I do wish to speak, however, for a little while on this most important resolution because of two aspects contained therein, and also because I have been intrigued somewhat by the statement of the hon. member for Carleton, and just now by the hon. member for Macleod. It appears to me that the major attitude of the hon. member for Carleton toward this resolution was the fact that if it is passed and the bills which are to follow it were passed, it would mean the establishment of 26 departments and 26 cabinet ministers.

I should like to emphasize that personally I do not give a hoot whether the number of cabinet ministers is 15, 20 or 26; the number of cabinet ministers is not the important factor. The important issue is that whatever number is required in respect of cabinet appointments they shall be such that there is no overlapping, that there shall be efficiency and that the responsibility of each and every cabinet minister shall be such that he will be in a position to know his department, know his responsibilities, do his job, and do it effectively.

The ultimate question is not the number; it is the efficiency of the operation. Therefore I cannot accept, in opposition to this resolution, a debate with regard to whether there should be 15, 20 or 26 cabinet ministers. I was of course most intrigued by the remarks made a few moments ago by the hon. member for Macleod. When it comes to labour, he wants everything put together; but when it comes to the matter of selling our wheat, that is the problem for one man.

It was most interesting when the hon. member for Macleod stated that manpower should be within the ministry of labour. Originally I felt the same way, but I had to change my mind. Why did I change my mind? When considering the history of events in the last few years we find that when the Conservatives were in office the hon. member for Ontario was the minister of labour. I remember that hon. member in answer to a question in this house telling us that the government had established an interdepartmental committee to deal with problems associated with automation. However, I cannot place my hands on any report received by the House of Commons on the work of that interdepartmental committee dealing with automation, nor can I place my hands on any legislation based on the studies of that committee.

The Conservative party was then replaced by the Liberals as the party in power. I remember the minister of labour in the Liberal government also telling this house about an interdepartmental committee which was set up to deal with the problems created by automation. I cannot place my hands on any report from that interdepartmental committee or legislation based on any studies it may have made.

For these reasons it appears to me that under both the Conservatives and the Liberals no department of labour or departmental committee under the responsibility of the Minister of Labour was able to come up with recommendations dealing with one of the greatest problems which faces the Canadian economy. Let it not be forgotten that perhaps the greatest problem facing our economy is related to matters of technological development, modernization and automation.

Over the years these problems have fallen within the purview of the Department of Labour, but no effective action has been taken by that department. I think the present government is doing the right thing by establishing a manpower department, because this whole matter is of such vital importance it requires special and intensive study on a basis separate and apart from the other responsibilities the Minister of Labour must accept.

Mr. Winkler: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Winch: As soon as I have completed my remarks I shall be glad to answer the hon. member's question.

The importance of this whole question was brought forcibly to my attention last fall when I was a member of a conciliation board sitting in British Columbia. This board sat for some eight weeks listening to evidence and formulating conclusions. One of the greatest problems it had to consider and report upon was the matter of technological advance, modernization and automation. I am proud that this three-man board, representative of employers and employees, with a government appointed chairman, was able to bring forward a unanimous report. Top priority was given to the question of automation. The board recommended that within 60 days there should be a joint committee appointed with certain objectives and powers to work with departments of government and committees on this question of manpower and automation.

We made that recommendation in that way because we felt there had to be co-ordination and co-operation among employers, employees and the government before this problem of advancing technology and automation could be tackled effectively. Unless the three bodies in question work together our Canadian economy will be completely stymied. That is why, although I originally thought manpower should come under the Department of Labour, I now support completely the suggestion that there should be a separate manpower division.

Not only must there be co-operation among these three bodies, but there has to be direction and co-ordination on policy matters. Undoubtedly only the government can undertake to provide this direction in bringing the government, employers and employees together. One of my greatest hopes in supporting this suggestion for the establishment of a manpower department with its own minister is that there will be that type of priority given to direction and co-ordination.

There is no need to emphasize the interest and worry on the part of workers regarding this matter. They have taken the initiative in this directon, but success can only come as a result of co-operation. The leadership should come from the government. There are some employers who buck progress, modernization, and labour's attaining its fair share of the benefits that follow advances in technology and automation.

Here again we see a need for government interest, because in order that the Canadian economy be maintained, so that we can take our proper place in the national economy and international competition, the government must bring in legislation to make employers play ball. There is no other answer to this problem. For the reasons I have expressed, I welcome this recommendation on the part of the government to establish a manpower department with its own minister.

I said there were two phases of the resolution in which I was very greatly interested and with which I was concerned. The second relates to the transfer from the Department of Justice to the department of the solicitor general of authority and responsibility in relation to our penitentiaries, and the ramifications connected with the granting of parole. I have had a great interest in this matter for many years and I think this transfer is an important step in the right direction. Perhaps now we will see some action; perhaps now we will have a department and a minister which will have time to study and understand these important matters. I realize the terrifically fantastic responsibilities the ministers of justice had under the past administrative set-up, and this is the only reason I can think of why this whole field has been neglected so much in the past. Ministers of justice have not had the time or the interest to deal properly with questions of modern penology. As a result the taxpayers of Canada have been paying millions of dollars unnecessarily because of government stupidity and the fact that their policies were so archaic.

Hon. members know that the Department of Justice had a plan of penitentiary construction over the period of seven to ten years. This was going to cost the taxpayers God knows how many millions of dollars. The Elizabeth Fry organization, the John Howard Society, the parole association and every similar body were completely opposed to this plan, but the Minister of Justice said, "Phooey; you don't know what you are talking about. I am going to call the tenders."

As soon as this matter was turned over to the Solicitor General the same representations were made by the same organizations, and within two hours he said, "I cannot stop the development at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary; it is 75 per cent completed. But I will hold off in regard to every other new tender until this matter can be studied." This illustrates the difference of attitude and approach on the part of a minister who is perhaps going to have the time to make the necessary studies.

We have spent millions of dollars on a narcotics institute in British Columbia. It was opened only last Friday. I was in the Kingston penitentiary for women—I can get in and out—and found there are 20 narcotics addicts in that penitentiary who are to be moved in June or July to the new Matsqui institute in British Columbia. Nineteen of the 20 women do not want to go there. Why? Because they will be released right back into the same environment and among the same people who made them addicts. Nineteen out of 20 women in the women's institution at Kingston want to be held there and released from there, not taken to an institution 3,000 miles away from which, upon release, they will drift back into the same environment.

The decision was to transfer them to Matsqui, but now that decision is being reconsidered by the Solicitor General. Three days after I and the member for Vancouver-Kingsway drew this matter to the attention of the Solicitor General he was at the women's penitentiary looking into the question. He showed an entirely different approach. He is one who can and will give of his time. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am in favour of this change. I hope it will result in a different approach than we have seen in the past.

I have just mentioned the women's penitentiary at Kingston. This government spent thousands of dollars equipping a hairdressing establishment there to teach those women a trade. After a long time permission was received from the provincial authorities in Toronto and the plan was that after 1,600 hours instruction under personal supervision these women would be given an official Ontario certificate as hairdressers, and upon their release would have a trade.

This hairdressing establishment has not yet been opened. Do you know why? Because it was under the Department of Justice, which spent the money to equip an establishment inside the prison to teach hairdressing, but it has not yet been used because they will not supply the money to pay an instructor. These are the kinds of stupid things that have gone on in the penitentiaries system, which falls under the Department of Justice. I presume these things have happened because the minister has not the time to deal with everything and leaves it to the bureaucrats, who do not give a hoot anyway. I give the committee just those two examples, the transfer of narcotics addicts to a place they should never go to, and spending a great deal of money to train people, and then leaving the plan to gather dust because they do not supply an instructor. We hope that upon a transfer of responsibility to the Solicitor General this sort of thing will change.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to ask the hon. member a question?

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give its unanimous consent to the hon. member's asking a question of the hon. member for Vancouver East?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Winkler: I listened attentively to the hon. member's contribution; I heard his words of approbation, and so on. He was denigrating this government and the previous government for lack of action in meeting the technological advances and advances in automation in today's society. I would ask the hon. member—and I ask my question in all seriousness—if he does not consider that the contribution made by the previous minister of labour, the hon. member for Ontario, for the vocational schools training program and in the field of university expansion was a valuable one?

Mr. Winch: Of course it was a valuable contribution; but that does not solve the problem, and it did not require a special committee, departmental or otherwise, to bring in that legislation.

Mr. Winkler: That is quite right.

Mr. Winch: The major problem is still to be resolved.

Mr. Winkler: It will never be resolved.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks, and they will be critical, on the matter of the setting up of the energy, mines and resources department. When I say my remarks will be critical, they will not be critical of the fact that the department is to be set up, because I think it is necessary. However, I will be critical of the actions, of lack of action, of the minister who holds the portfolio of Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys at the present time. I will not stray from the subject before the committee, but I think this question is important to the subject.

I agree completely that a department of energy, mines and resources is a logical department of government. In my opinion the duties assigned to this department are the most important in the whole area of government at this time. Several problems are critical and others are urgent on a long-range basis. In the critical stage I place the matters of water pollution and power transmission. In the urgent stage I place the matters of water resources and minerals development. The setting up of a department does not of itself accomplish anything. Neither does the shuffling of responsibilities among the ministers, because this is an administrative act. Nothing is accomplished until results are obtained.

I submit that reorganization should be a tool to strengthen and co-ordinate policies in energy and resources.

Some strong policy direction should come from such a department. However, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys already has his responsibilities assigned under order in council. In effect the passage of this measure will not add anything to the department, except to change its name.

During the past three or four months we have had an opportunity to observe the minister's conduct of the department and the effectiveness which the combination of these various responsibilities has had on the energy and resource field. I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that we have waited in vain for some policy statement in connection with water pollution and water resources. I have read the numerous speeches made by the present minister, all across this country, and he has made many, but I have not managed to read any which refer to the department of which he is the minister.

His speeches have been directed toward English-French relations, constitutional readjustments and everything else except the department for which he is supposed to be responsible. Therefore the burden on my point is that some reorganization of the department will not produce results.

I am sorry the minister is not there tonight. I am not normally critical. I make no apologies, however, because his department is under consideration. The resolution certainly includes a reorganization affecting energy, mines and resources. I believe it is my responsibility to point out that, regardless of the fact that the reorganization of this department has been in effect for several months, nothing has come of it. For example, we tried to get statements of policy on pollution. Many questions were asked, and the minister's reply was: "A statement is coming; we are working on it; give us time"—and so forth. We were led to believe that eventually we would receive a statement on this very urgent and serious problem of water pollution, particularly as it affects the Great Lakes. Then within the past week the minister, when pressed as to when he was going to make a statement, said he was working on it. He then said, in effect: When you do get it there will not be anything in it; we are only going to explain what we are doing, and in some general sort of way pacify the public and try to prevent them from getting too upset.

It is true that a solution to the problems of water pollution is not quick, and it is not easy. The problem on lake Erie is one which will take years to solve. However, as we all know, there has to be a beginning, there has to be a first step. Not only that, there has to be the appearance of a first step. However, we have had nothing along these lines. I regret that nothing has been done about this critical matter. In spite of the fact that the responsibilities have now been transferred into the minister's hands, what we are discussing will do nothing more than give a name to the department of which he is the minister.

Therefore, while I do support the creation of this department and the idea of energy resources, minerals, atomic energy, water resources, and so forth being placed into one department and under one minister, this action should be a tool to assist the minister in doing the job which he is supposed to be doing; it should be a tool which he can use to co-ordinate the policies in connection with water.

We know and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who is in the house, knows the terrible mess water problems have got into under the administration of the government. I am not blaming anybody at this moment at all, but we had one facet of water in one department and another facet in another department. This has been spread all over the map. Those of us who have been interested in water levels, water resources and water pollution have had to skip from minister to minister to find out which one has the particular authority in this situation. This is an intolerable situation. I had hoped when I read the original announcement about the combination of these departments, and of water resources under one minister, that here at last we were going to have under one minister the responsibility for these related problems. I thought this idea was good, but only the results will show whether it is good or not.

In supporting the resolution in connection with this particular department, I say that there is no use whatsoever in making these administrative changes unless the ministers who are in charge of the departments take hold of them, and make use of the tool the government has created for them.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I am very glad, along with other members in this group, to welcome this resolution and the changes it is bringing about in general, because we approve very much of the principle underlying the reorganization of necessary government services at this time. This does not mean that we are necessarily going to believe that everything will work out as planned. There may be a great many reasons why parliament should continue to develop the reorganization. I believe what the Prime Minister said this afternoon was very true, that there will have to be continuous changes and that in these times of rapidly moving events we are far from having reached a final form of reorganization or effectiveness in governmental departments. There are several departments where I believe there is real hope for great improvement through the new set-up. One I believe will be in combining the Indian affairs branch with northern development. One finds out at every turn from people who are working with the Indians that the only hope is to deal with them in conjunction with their surroundings, and not try to pull them out of those surroundings.

I believe that the combining of these two branches will be a benefit to the Indian people and to Canada as a whole, because they are citizens of this country.

Now, in looking over some of the changes in the departments, it seems to me that the improvement lies in the fact there is an attempt in reorganizing these departments to fit the people concerned into the services in a much closer way than has been the case in the past, and to have ministers deal with a more limited range of services and a more limited sector of the population.

Another department, in which I think many of us are perhaps more interested than any other, is the new department of manpower. I am interested in it from an angle that has not been mentioned, I believe, during this debate. I refer to the fact that I want to hear what is going to happen not only with regard to manpower but with regard to womanpower. I find over and over again illustrations of the survival of an economy where women were expected to remain in the home and men were outside. The outside life was directed mostly toward men and their work. Even the term "manpower" indicates that such is still the case in the mind of the government.

I know it is very easy to brush off this argument in a gallant way by saying that man embraces woman, and that sort of thing. However, this is not the case when it comes to the organization of labour. I should like very much to have the new minister of manpower make a statement some time about the plans of his department for dealing with this large proportion of workers who will be married women gainfully employed outside their homes, as well as single women. I think that in any discussion of manpower there are additional facets that must be discussed, in view of the fact that women, particularly married women, have now moved out into industry in very large numbers.

In so far as vocational training is concerned, I think the department of manpower will have a great many new things to consider, which perhaps they do not even realize now. As the problem of training for women comes more and more to the fore, consideration will have to be given to the provision of facilities which will allow married women with children, even older children, to work in industry without neglecting those children. Perhaps we might like to have women with children remain inside the home, but this is not the case today and we have to deal with conditions as they are. I hope that the newly constituted department of manpower will be considering such matters as vocational training for women including the training, perhaps on an apprenticeship basis, of helpers for nursery schools and supervisors for nursery schools. Perhaps this training could be given in conjunction with universities. Nursery schools are going to be an essential part of the machinery to make it possible for married women with children, who are now out in industry, to continue their work without neglecting their children. These are the things the department of manpower will have to consider.

Far from wanting to leave the department of manpower combined with the Department of Labour, I think myself that if the present minister of manpower is going to hope to do the job that is laid out for him, along with immigration and other classes of work, he will have to be triplets. I should like to underline, just for a moment, what my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver East said about the desirability of the Solicitor General, whose work now includes the penitentiaries and parole boards, paying some heed to the demands of prison officials and the people in penology before these women drug addicts are moved out to that new prison at Matsqui. These people have made a study of the problem and have had something to say about the extreme foolishness—perhaps an even stronger word could be used—of sending these women back to Vancouver after their release. There is only one place they can go, and that is 30 miles back into the metropolis of Vancouver where they originally got into trouble. Vancouver is the worst drug centre in the whole of Canada, and these people will only resume those associations and those habits which got them into this trouble in the first place.

I would hope the Solicitor General would take a long second look at this matter. I am convinced he would be far more inclined to follow the advice of those in the east who have made a study of this thing and who have successfully released some of these women into Ontario centres, which are not so dangerous for drug addicts.

I want now to turn to the other point I wish to mention tonight. If it were possible to introduce an amendment to this resolution, I would do so. While it is an excellent thing to have these new departments created, and I think in the main we shall find they will work out satisfactorily, I am going to suggest that the one which has been left out is probably more important than any one of the changes that has been made. We have a government department for nearly every sector of the population we can mention, except the big one which covers all of us in our capacity as consumers. We have no government department today to look after the affairs of the millions of men and women who do the buying in this country. There is no government department to advise them, to protect them or to look after their interests in the consumer field.

Consumers are big business in Canada. They spend about $29 billion annually. By far the greatest part of our spending in this country is done by consumers, yet they have no department of government solely charged with looking after their interests. I know there are bits and pieces of consumer legislation and consumer facilities scattered throughout the various government departments. For instance, Trade and Commerce has its division of weights and measures. Agriculture has its consumer information service, and the inspection of meats and other products. Fisheries has its consumer branch and its public information branch. Health and Welfare has its food and drug directorate. Justice has the combines legislation. Undoubtedly there are other departments of government which have, as I say, bits of consumer legislation in operation; but there is no single department charged with the responsibility of looking after the interests of consumers as a whole. This department is long overdue.

Outside this department the Canadian Association of Consumers has for six years now been demanding over and over again that we should have consumer affairs in charge of a single minister. They urged specifically in their brief, which was presented just three weeks ago, that before this legislation is passed there should be a review of the necessity for having a department of consumer affairs set up. I do not intend to cover the whole field of what should be included in a department of consumer affairs, because that will be done during discussion of my resolution, which will be up for discussion shortly. However, I should like to quote from the brief of the Canadian Association of Consumers:

> Consumer problems concerning several departments are sometimes referred to interdepartmental committees. If the chairman has no definite responsibility for the effect of government policy on consumers, the problems are apt to become "bogged down" in these committees.
> For example—in December 1963 the recommendations on pesticides made by the committee of the House of Commons on food and drugs were tabled in the house and were later referred to an interdepartmental committee. C.A.C. is still waiting for action on the recommendations concerning the labelling of pesticides.

There, Mr. Chairman, is just one example of what happens when everybody's business is nobody's business. That happens when you have got consumer affairs matters being scattered throughout various government departments.

The Canadian Association of Consumers is very anxious that any department of consumer affairs should have included in it (a) the food and drug directorate; (b) the combines investigation branch, (c) an economic research branch, responsible for research into such items as matters arising out of the combines legislation, legislation on patents, companies, consumer credit and other economic questions; (d) administration of legislation on consumer credit; and (e) administration of any other legislation related primarily to the consumer interest.

The association is most anxious that this committee should be set up with a minimum of delay. I would point out that this afternoon the Prime Minister stated: "I am sure that additional steps will be required." He was, of course, referring to additional steps in government reorganization, and in the reassessing of the work of the departments.

I am sure that millions of consumers in this country tonight are convinced not only that additional steps will be required, but that this particular step of setting up a department of consumer affairs is long overdue. I would urge upon the government the necessity for including in this particular reorganization the beginnings of a full fledged department of consumer affairs, with a minister whose whole time will be devoted to it.

The urgency is great. From month to month we find the cost of living rising. Complaints are coming from consumers about labelling, deceptive packaging, about their being kept in ignorance as to the cost of credit, and about many other things. When these complaints have been brought up in the house on a number of past occasions since the beginning of the year, no one on the government side of the house has been in a position to answer with respect to them. I urge that if the government is serious about representing the interests of the people of this country, that it should not stop after representing only the sectional interests of industrial workers, farmers and people in various occupations in this country, but that it should take time to look at the Canadian people as a whole in that activity which concerns all of us, namely the buying of the things in this country that we all need from day to day.

I think we ought to set up without delay a department of consumer affairs as part of the reconstituted set-up of government.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, when I saw the resolution on the order paper last Monday grouping five departments together, I immediately recognized the astuteness of the move. Instead of having a single resolution, and a single piece of legislation covering each department, which would be the regular and orthodox way of handling the matter, the government has attempted to cut down debate by grouping the five departments under one resolution.

As does everyone who tries to outmanoeuvre the House of Commons, the government has fallen into a trap that only it could fall into. It has left out one of the key departments, the department of forestry and rural development. I mention that, Mr. Chairman, because my remarks—

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question? Did he hear the remarks made by the house leader late this afternoon on this very subject? Have those remarks been reported to him, if he did not hear them?

Mr. Hamilton: I did not hear the remarks of the house leader, but they were reported to me. I did not want to embarrass anybody by taking his statement too seriously. I simply point out that in the effort to try to reduce debate, the government is going to make debate chaotic. Several members in all parties would like to deal at some length with several of these departments. We still have hope of course for some sort of answer from each of the ministers involved, as to what his policies are.

Since December, when the announcement was made, we have been waiting and waiting for the minister to bring some statement before the house, so that we would have a chance of considering constructively policy suggestions, which the minister could work into his new department.

Having said all this in the way of introduction, I should now like to get down to the points in the resolution at hand. One of the statements made this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition was that the best reason for change was experience, as opposed to the concept of change for experimental purposes. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka I think got the kernel of the debate correctly when he said that it does not make any difference how many departments you create, it is what you do with the departments that counts. Therefore on the basis of the admittedly limited experience I have had, I am going to discuss the question of the reorganization of departments.

The Leader of the Opposition mentioned that from his experience he thought there should be two levels of cabinet. He inferred that there should be the senior ministers and, in effect, junior ministers to handle those operations and divisions of government that were not in the mainstreams of general policy.

I do not think there is any question that, with the tremendous increase in the involvement of government in running the country, the multitude of things that have to be handled by cabinet is much greater now than it was 10 years ago. Certainly it is much greater now than it was before the war. Therefore I am going to propose that in addition to the two cabinet levels—and to set this up would not require any legislation in the house because that could be set up as a matter of custom—there could also be a grouping of cabinet ministers.

I suggest that the cabinet could be grouped into four groups. The three main groups are, first, human resources; second, material resources; third, trade, finance and all those things dealing with the monetary and fiscal side of government, and, fourth, the grouping of those ministers who do not fit into those particular categories.

I do not think there is any question about it, and any of my colleagues on this side of the house who have served in cabinet, as well as the ministers on the other side, will agree that a natural grouping takes place between matters dealing with justice, Indian affairs, citizenship, labour matters and education. Those things always seem to have similar characteristics that naturally make the ministers in charge of these departments colleagues in similar groupings of cabinet.

Next I deal with material resources. Into that grouping come headings such as energy, resources in the form of mines—or any other form of energy utilizing land, air or water —agriculture, fisheries and forestry. All these ministers are interested not only in the development of the production of the items under these headings, but also in the movement forward of these items into the productive machinery. Of course there is a relationship between them because they are all competing for the some things, namely land, water and air.

The third grouping of trade and finance would naturally include the headings of national revenue, the Treasury Board, trade, and departments of industry, and naturally all those matters under the supervision of the Bank of Canada.

I have not tried to be all inclusive in these groupings. I am simply saying that if, once a month there were meetings of these groups, in the organization of cabinet work, where problems of particular departments were correlated, a great deal of the overlapping and a great deal of the clash that occurs in cabinet could be reduced.

In some of the provincial governments across Canada I know that the premiers of those provinces periodically call in their ministers and asks them to report to them what they are doing, what they have been doing and what they hope to do. The premier himself takes on the job of correlating the work going on in the different departments. This is possible in a provincial government because the work there has not yet multiplied to the degree of being beyond a single man. The premier can have a grasp of the general directions and operations of each department.

At the federal level it is almost impossible for a minister to have full knowledge of his own department. Many ministers make the mistake of spending so much time in trying to learn about it in detail that they cannot see the relationship between the department and the general good of the whole government, or of the country.

I would think that, without the necessity for additional legislation, one could add to this legislation the understanding that not only should cabinet be grouped into the senior ministers of each of these sections—and one or two others if you want to add them for the particular experience which they might have to help develop general matters of policy and direction—but you should have these meetings of groups of cabinet ministers to try to eliminate the situation which seems to go on in increasing measure—20 odd departments going in 20 different directions.

In many cases I think we can demonstrate the schizophrenia which has developed in our cabinet for, without any attempt on the part of particular ministers, we have ministers going in different directions without realizing it; we find Treasury Board making one decision when cabinet is making another and it takes months before it becomes apparent that there is schizophrenia in government.

I suggest this is a useful proposal to add to what the Leader of the Opposition had to say this afternoon. He suggested that two levels of cabinet had to come now, because cabinet had grown to such complexity. I have added an amplification to that idea, and suggested that there should be groupings of ministers and that the whole cabinet should not be required to discuss something which is of interest only to the particular ministers involved in a particular phase of government.

The second proposal I want to put forward based, again, on experience is one doubly needed by the present government. It is clear to me that what is killing the efficiency of government in Canada as well as in the United States and, I believe, in Great Britain and France, is the fact that with this division into departments and the fact that no minister or deputy minister has the time or the strength to learn all about his department, we have this departmentalized effect going on and there is a tremendous loss of efficiency due to the fact that there is no co-ordination between the departments or between groups of departments.

My second suggestion is similar to what I was talking about last Thursday on the bill to amend the Research Council Act, namely that someone has to be in the Privy Council who can report back to this house. At the present time under our rules the Prime Minister is the person who speaks in the House of Commons for all matters looked after by the Privy Council. The Privy Council tends to collect in its orbit matters which cover several departments. That is why scientific affairs, for example, are dealt with in the Privy Council, as they have been for many years.

We understand from the Prime Minister this afternoon that Treasury Board is coming under the Privy Council. Common sense tells us that the Prime Minister is too busy with the tremendous load of other government policy and the social pressures placed on him to attend to all this work in detail and the house does not wish to bother him with questions which ought to be asked.

We have seen many fine things done in the various departments, things which are supposed to be brought to life and pushed by the Privy Council, but they have become dormant because there is no one there to watch over these enterprises. I suggest that someone other than the Prime Minister should be responsible to the house for all the affairs of the Privy Council about which hon. members have a right to know, and upon which action should be taken.

I do not care who this person is. Under our system we can give to the parliamentary secretaries more power than they now have. We can say to the two parliamentary secretaries to the Prime Minister: We hold you responsible for the action or lack of action on these various administrative things that are going on in the Privy Council.

This would mean no loss of prestige to the Prime Minister because the whole house accepts the fact that you cannot ask the Prime Minister to look into all the details of Treasury Board transactions. That is a full-time job for any one man, and even then he would have only a partial grasp of it.

If we had someone here we know we could approach when certain things happened or did not happen in Treasury Board, if we knew we could ask questions and this person would be empowered by the government to answer, it would be an improvement. If the government or the Prime Minister do not like the idea of giving this extra power or normal power to the parliamentary secretaries, maybe they would appoint a deputy leader who would have the responsibility of handling the administration. If you like, he would be a junior minister to the Prime Minister. And if that seems a threatening proposal to a leader—if it is felt you are building up a rival—maybe you could empower a junior minister to answer for the affairs of the Privy Council. A position of this kind would be tremendously important, not necessarily in the field of policy. I think this minister would be the one to call the ministers concerned together every two weeks and ask them: What have you done about this cabinet decision; what is ahead that you should be doing? There is need for a correlation and co-ordination of this group of individual ministers.

This would mean no loss of prestige to ministers. I believe most of them would be glad to know what was happening in other departments, but in many cases ministers have to read in the press what is happening. Certainly I know that many of the members of the present cabinet must be convinced that this statement is true, because the variety of statements we get in the press from various members of the cabinet indicates that there has not been any correlation, and indicates that no one has co-ordinated their proposals. They are all riding off in different directions, each in his own right absolutely sound; but when we ask the Prime Minister if what they say is government policy, we all know the type of answer we get. I would suggest it is in the interest of all parties if we could have one minister or parliamentary secretary as a co-ordinator. Which one is immaterial to me, but there has to be co-ordination and correlation of the work.

This system would work two ways. First, all the directions could go down through it, from the Prime Minister and the cabinet to the ministers. All ministers would get directions flowing the same way and they would be working on the same wavelength. Vice versa, a flow of information and ideas could go back up through it, covering suggestions coming from one group of ministers, or from an individual minister if the group agreed to his suggestions, and then these could be fitted into the over-all policies. It would also obviate long debates in cabinet to explain a very technical matter to a group of people who have not had time to learn about it in their own departments.

The second reason for suggesting this person to co-ordinate and correlate the work is a simple, single word, and that word is dynamics. I am sure ministers know what I am talking about. One minister works hard at producing an idea. He gets it to the stage where it can receive cabinet discussion and direction. It is then put in the hands of the Privy Council, or some other department, but the idea drops there, and stays dormant because the person who has direction of the idea is not the one who is pushing if forward.

Without trying to single out any particular minister, I quote the legislation called ARDA. This legislation took a long time to develop, a long time to sell not only across the country but to one's colleagues, because the legislation is a very technical type of approach to a problem. Then when the government changes there is a long hiatus before one catches any indication that any minister in the new government is beginning to understand what one has been trying to do.

I want to pay my respects to the present minister because, after a long year of waiting, I was glad to see the intellectual power he turned loose on this legislation, and I helped to do whatever I could, not because I am a supporter of his but because I thought it was an idea that was worth pushing. But I know there was a gap of a year or two before a decision was made as to who was going to take it over. I could not tell whether it was going to be under agriculture or under the new Department of Forestry. To people at the low level of income that gap was a period of long, painful waiting. Therefore we missed about two years of forward motion, something which is not fatal, but to the people engaged in that wait it was a desperately long time.

So, the word is dynamics. You have to know, to understand and want something to make it work. This can only be when you have someone correlating your work, when you know someone is not cutting it off, and stymieing it, because of lack of understanding or appreciation. Once you have cleared the idea with a group of ministers, once the cabinet has accepted it and you know that there is somebody pushing it, then you can expect progress.

I think I have made my points clear enough. I had hoped to speak on manpower. I had hoped to suggest that manpower should really be one department with an associate minister. I wanted to speak on energy, mines and resources, because these were my first interest. I had many things I thought I would say. I also wanted to speak on forestry. I may get the opportunity to do so during discussion at later stages of the legislation to be brought forward.

In closing I want to support the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka in his plea that some time during debate on second reading, when the duties of the ministers are before the house, the ministers who are going to take over these departments will give the house and the country some indication of where they stand and what they are going to do so that we, to make our criticism helpful, can concentrate it on a definite proposal. It can only be concentrated, successful and positive if we have statements from the ministers. I appeal to the government, when second reading is reached, to have the ministers concerned give us clear statements on what their duties will be and what their philosophies are, so that we can concentrate our criticism on those subjects.

I know it was a politically smart idea to bring all these departments into one resolution, but the only chance we shall have to put our best ideas forward is to have the new ministers make statements, so that we can focus our attention on those statements.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did I understand the hon. gentleman to suggest that this afternoon the Prime Minister said Treasury Board was to be under the Privy Council Office?

Mr. Hamilton: Yes, I said that because I heard the Prime Minister say it, and my understanding of the resolution was that there was going to be a sort of president, or almost a minister. When I heard the Prime Minister's statement I was waiting for amplification of it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was not present to hear the Prime Minister, but if the hon. gentleman will look at the resolution he will see it says, "to establish the office of President of the Treasury Board." I do know it is contemplated that that office would be held, not by the Prime Minister, or normally by the President of the Privy Council, but by another minister. In so far as that part of the hon. gentleman's argument is concerned, I thought it well to make that point clear at once.

Mr. Hamilton: I want to thank the minister for making that clear, because I did write down what the Prime Minister said about it and it bolstered the strength of the argument I was making last Thursday vis-à-vis the National Research Council. I think the minister will agree that, periodically, scientific research has been pushed forward for a few years, and then interest is lost in it. Later it is pushed forward again. There is an up and down in the pushing behind it, and one of the reasons is that the Prime Minister's office is so busy that it cannot push the idea forward dynamically. When I heard the Prime Minister say today that Treasury Board would be under the Privy Council, I was quite surprised.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think if the Prime Minister did say that it was a slip, and he would want to have it corrected. If one reads the resolution, that is not the intention.

Mr. Walker: Would the hon. member permit another question? His were very interesting and constructive suggestions, but I just want to be clear. Was he the spokesman for his party tonight? Do these suggestions have the support of the rest of his party?

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, if ever I said they had the support of my party my remarks would be in great doubt; but I can say this, that I have discussed this matter with a good many of my colleagues who served in the cabinet, and they agree that these suggestions have great merit. They are not party policy, however, or anything like that.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and other speakers from this party have already made it clear that in general this party approves the resolution and the proposed reorganization it contemplates. But I must admit personally that I rather tend to underemphasize and underestimate the importance of structure. My sentiments could be summed up in the proposition that the shape of the bottle is of less importance than the contents.

Notwithstanding that, and although I feel that the quality and energy of a minister and his colleagues are of much more importance than the precise definition of their duties and responsibilities, I recognize I may be wrong and the formal division of responsibilities is perhaps important in facilitating or frustrating the efforts of a minister and the efficiency of his department.

Tonight I would like to discuss the proposed changes affecting the Department of Justice and to express my fears about some aspects of the proposed changes.

Mr. Chairman, there can be very little argument but that the minister of justice in past years has been greatly overburdened and that some adjustment was overdue. I think we urgently need a new quality, new energy and power in this most important department. There are however some other key matters which face a minister of justice. I should like to suggest that the inroads and the threat of organized crime on this continent present a very real challenge to governments, and that this challenge cannot be met without a new concept of co-operation among the different levels of government, new co-ordination among the different governments and new training of those who are required to deal with this problem.

I do not have his words in front of me, but recently the President of the United States declared a war on organized crime as being necessary in that country. I think we have seen enough evidence of the reality of this problem to realize that it is important here. I suggest that the Department of Justice and the police force which it directs are in key positions in any war on, or in any effort to combat, the inroads of organized crime.

We must recognize that organized crime is a serious phenomenon and not just something which was thought up. It has tremendous resources; it has scientific skills; it has a concentrated international organization; it has the ability to hire skilled lawyers and even to corrupt police and other officials. In order to combat this menace the law enforcement officers must be efficient, well trained, and must be able to co-ordinate their operations across political boundaries.

I am disturbed that in the proposed reorganization of the Solicitor General's department as separate from the Department of Justice, it apparently is the intention to bring the Royal Canadian Mounted Police under the Solicitor General, while on the other hand the law enforcement and the prosecution of the criminal law and the determination of when there shall be prosecution is to remain with the Department of Justice. I fail to see how this can work. Which department will be in charge of co-ordinating activities, say, with the F.B.I. or state, or provincial, police in various provinces, or the municipal police in certain areas? Who will be responsible for the continued training of the R.C.M.P.? Will it be the Solicitor General, whose other main responsibilities are in the correctional field, or will it come within the responsibility of the Minister of Justice, who retains control over the problems of law enforcement?

We are not discussing the personalities of individual ministers; ministers come and go, and even governments come and go. However we are setting up a sort of organization which I suppose is to have some degree of permanence. In this situation I ask quite seriously whether it makes sense to give the responsibility for training of the police who are responsible for law enforcement in various fields and who are responsible for security, to the Solicitor General, and take it away from the Department of Justice.

I am not sure at the present time whether it is contemplated that some of the other responsibilities which come under the Department of Justice are to be taken away from the Minister of Justice and his department. I refer to the fundamentally important function of the Minister of Justice, as the chief law officer of the crown, to give advice on constitutional matters, and to have responsibility for defending the federal rights in the courts—not only in the courts, but in all the discussions which go on with the provinces, and perhaps even the discussions in this parliament. It has seemed to me that sometimes ministers of justice and departments of justice in late years have forgotten that one of their major responsibilities is to protect the federal domain against encroachment from the outside.

Is it contemplated that the registrar general, which I think the title is, should have the responsibility in this field; I hope not. We have heard that the President of the Privy Council—and I do not know whether this is intended as a temporary or a permanent arrangement—is to be given special authority in constitutional matters. I suggest that the traditional responsibility of the Minister of Justice, to be the main adviser in constitutional matters, the main protector of constitutional rights or federal authority, be not taken away from that particular officer and perhaps dissipated in some shape or form.

Again, in the field of responsibility, it has seemed to me that there ought to be a division of the Department of Justice similar to the constitutional rights division of the department of justice in the United States, and I know the situation is different in the two countries. Certainly that is a fairly new department; but if we are going to expand the constitutional rights of individual Canadians, the Department of Justice in my view will have to take far, far more active a role than it ever has played in the past in defending the individual rights of Canadians.

Without adequate enforcement the pronouncement of rights, such as are contained in the Bill of Rights, can turn out to be virtually meaningless. There are many fields, such as in the field of criminal procedure, in which I believe in the future a department of justice should have a division to deal with these matters, in order to be sure that the constitutional protection of these rights is properly enforced. I entirely agree with my colleague from Vancouver East that it is a step forward to have correctional matters assigned to the Solicitor General; it is a very important step forward and I welcome it. I do not quite understand, however, why this could not have been done under the existing procedure by setting up a division on correctional matters and by having the Solicitor General still in a position where his work could be co-ordinated under the general umbrella of the Department of Justice; because I think there is a serious danger in setting up a distinctly separate department in this field. I hear my colleague from Vancouver East saying "oh, oh". I agree with him that there is a necessity for separate responsibility, and I already have said so. Perhaps he was engaged in conversation and did not hear my statement. I agree with him entirely, that there is a need for a separate responsibility or separate minister in this field.

I do not see however why the position of this minister should not be closer to that of the Minister of Justice as is the case in respect of the Associate Minister of National Defence. By virtue of his office he would hold cabinet position and rank, but at the same time by the very nature of his work, he would be working in close co-operation with the Department of Justice. I believe that would be useful.

There is one other field in which I think a very careful look ought to be taken, and in respect of which I am not too happy. I understand it is proposed to assign the field of bankruptcy law to a new department or to the registrar general. The weakness in the past of the bankruptcy administration is that there has not been adequate staff; there has not been adequate enforcement and the legislation itself has been totally inadequate. The suggested change does not seem to me to entirely make sense, because the breakdown has been largely in two fields—inadequate enforcement and inadequate legislation. In view of this it does not seem to make sense to say that we will solve the problem by lifting something that is now inadequately enforced out of the field of responsibility of law enforcement generally. It seems to me that this could very properly be left where it is, where it seems to me with an adequately staffed Department of Justice and with adequate legislation it could be properly administered.

Solicitors general in the past seem to have had something of a sinecure. This seems to have resulted from the fact that the responsibility for assigning tasks has not been accepted. No clearcut responsibility was ever assigned to the office of solicitor general.

The proposed changes in the Department of Justice should be carefully reconsidered before we reach a decision, and before we encounter a situation, as was referred to by an earlier speaker during this debate in which we are in danger of tearing away from the first law officer of the crown, the minister of justice, some of the functions that ought to be performed under his supervision. I hope this will be very carefully considered in the light of the legislation to be placed before us.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Brewin: Certainly.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I should like to ask him on what he based the premise with which he commenced his remarks, that the ministry of justice is overburdened and overworked. Does he not think that in relation to such portfolios as finance, transport, agriculture and national defence, justice is a relatively leisurely portfolio?

Mr. Brewin: No. I simply pointed out that it has not been a leisurely portfolio because there are very great responsibilities which exist in this field. One need only look at some of our ministers of justice to realize that they have been overburdened. They were responsible for advising on all sorts of legal matters. They were responsible for constitutional issues and for law reform. They were responsible to some extent for correctional institutions, and all sorts of other subjects. One need only remember that the present President of the Privy Council when he was minister of justice, and I know the hon. member was not here at that time, was given the burden of being house leader in addition to other responsibilities. He was clearly overburdened.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Perhaps he was overworked as a result of added tasks.

Mr. Brewin: So far as taking responsibility for correctional institutions away from the minister of justice and giving them to the solicitor general is concerned, I think this is a sound move. The minister of justice may well be required to accept responsibility in some of the other fields I have mentioned, such as civil rights, in respect of which an adequate job has not been done in the past.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Pearson) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-178, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, can we obtain some assurance from the minister that the bill will be available tonight?

Mr. Pickersgill: There are some copies available and I will endeavour to see that as many as possible are distributed as soon as possible.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Is there only one bill to be based on this resolution? Surely the government intends to introduce a separate bill for each department?

Mr. Pickersgill: There is only one bill, which has several parts.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Financial Assistance to Newfoundland

FAIR WAGES AND HOURS OF LABOUR ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING HOURS OF WORK, RATES OF PAY, ETC.

The house resumed from Wednesday, April 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nicholson for the second reading of Bill No. C-2, to amend the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, when I moved second reading of this bill approximately a month ago I made a very brief statement as to the purposes of the bill. I am afraid that I was a little too brief in omitting to say that the amendments are being proposed in order to carry out a promise made by my predecessor, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen). This promise was made in the name of the government and related to bringing the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act into line with the labour standards code.

Since those opening remarks, representations have been made to a number of hon. members in this house, including myself, which would indicate that there has been some misunderstanding or lack of understanding. At the suggestion of members from all sides of the house, I have agreed that in the interests of making sure that everybody does understand the purpose of this bill, following second reading, if it is given tonight, I will immediately ask that it be referred to the Committee on Labour and Employment for clause by clause study.

Mr. Starr: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour and Employment.

NEWFOUNDLAND

PROVISION FOR ADDITIONAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE UNDER TERM 29

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to give effect to term 29 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada and to pay to the province out of the consolidated revenue fund, in the fiscal year commencing on the first day of April, 1967 and in each and every fiscal year thereafter, an annual amount, by way of additional financial assistance as contemplated by term 29, of $8 million.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this resolution is to obtain the approval of the house for the introduction of a bill which would have the effect of making the award of the royal commission established under term 29 of the Terms of Union with Newfoundland a separate statute, which would continue indefinitely unless the governments of Newfoundland and Canada mutually agree that there should be a change.

It will be recalled that after the royal commission made its original report, the previous government asked parliament, and parliament agreed, to make provision for the payment of this award first for the period ending March 31, 1962, and subsequently as a part of the legislation respecting tax sharing and other fiscal arrangements with the provinces for the period which will end on March 31, 1967. The position which was taken by those of us who were in opposition at that time was that this was the completion of the Terms of Union bringing about confederation; that it should not be in the same statute as the tax sharing arrangements, which were subject to change from time to time after discussion with the provincial governments, but that it should stand on its own feet as a part of the Terms of Union, and the award of the royal commission should be paid annually until such time as both governments felt that it was no longer required for the purpose set out in term 29 of the Terms of Union.

I could, of course, go into a great deal of detail about this matter if any hon. member wished me to do so; but I have no desire to stir up the controversies of other days. The policy which we are now seeking to translate into legislation was set out by the leader of this party in 1962, 1963 and again in 1965 as one of those things which a Liberal government would propose to parliament and ask parliament to approve. We feel that, in Newfoundland and in the rest of Canada, we have a mandate to do this, and we are seeking at this stage to carry out that mandate and complete the terms of this union with Newfoundland, which I think all hon. members, however much we may differ on other things, would agree has been a harmonious union, beneficial to all Canadians and to Canada itself.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, while I might agree entirely with the Minister of Transport, who is a member from Newfoundland, as to the mutual advantages to both Newfoundland and the other provinces of Canada in the accession to Canada of Newfoundland, I must say that at the present time I must differ from him as to the irrevocable nature of what is one interpretation of the Terms of Union with Canada of Newfoundland.

If we approve the resolution and the bill comes before us for discussion, there can be on that basis no commitment as to the passage of the bill because, to put it quite frankly, the interpretation of this term does not depend entirely upon the view that is put on it by the people from Newfoundland and the government of Newfoundland. In view of the fact that the government of Newfoundland is trying to, shall we say, acquire vested interests in a certain annual grant from the rest of Canada, I am sure everybody will agree that the rest of Canada has also a point of view to express.

I think there is an honest difference of opinion here. I remember the discussions in 1962. They were based, frankly, on the so-called interpretation, if you want, and whether or not it should be irrevocable. There are demands or, shall we say, legitimate needs —because I will not put it on the basis of demands—of the provinces from the government of Canada under a federal constitution, and this will always be so. It has been for years in the past. As long as this country exists under a federal constitution it will always be a condition that there shall be negotiation between the government of Canada and the provinces as to their legitimate fiscal requirements and fiscal provisions.

Surely no one is going to insist that they are absolutely right today. I remember the debates of the past, particularly in 1961 and 1962. At that time the Minister of Transport was a very ardent advocate of the Terms of Union as expressed by the government of the province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Monteith: According to their interpretation.

Mr. Lambert: According to their own interpretation, of course. I think it was quite as legitimate for representatives from other provinces in the parliament of Canada, who had just as legitimate an interest, to put forward their views. As a representative of the province of Alberta, I have just as much a legitimate interest in determining whether term 29 shall be irrevocable; because any provincial premier or provincial treasurer, if he could get a few extra million dollars determined as being irrevocable, would be some sort of a fool, would he not, if he turned down the interpretation that this was irrevocable?

Certainly we would like to see the province of Newfoundland—which I have had the pleasure of visiting—get as much money as they can. But are the remaining provinces and the government of Canada to determine that this shall be, on the basis of the Terms of Union, irrevocable? Shall not there be an interpretation of this question in a hypothetical sense? Is there not just as much justice in determining that Newfoundland in joining the other provinces of Canada is equal, in a fiscal sense, with the rest of the provinces? This is the view of my province. As a member of parliament from another part of Canada I believe that in so far as fiscal relationships are concerned we are all equals, regardless of other considerations. The Minister of Transport may have some comments to make in this regard, but in so far as we in the rest of Canada are concerned, in the matter of fiscal relations we are equals. This is the fundamental question. Should this grant not be considered as part of our fiscal relations one with another, regardless of the economic advantages of our provinces?

My own province is attributed to be one of the wealthy provinces. That is fine; we are prepared to pay our share of the load, and I am sure the province of Ontario is also, as well as the province of Manitoba. But why should there be enshrined in perpetuity an additional advantage? This is a question which is posed by a lot of people.

The people of Newfoundland may have another view, and I do not deny them the right to have this other view. The minister may be smug and say: Well, all right; this guarantees us political support. But I am not too sure about that. In the long run we are dealing here with a union of Canada. We are all in on this on a partnership basis and we would naturally like to see the terms of the bill, which I assume will be fairly short and fairly clear. However, I put these considerations before hon. members here who are from all parts of Canada, not from one part or any other part of Canada.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): There is nobody here from Newfoundland.

Mr. Lambert: As I said, I have very grave reservations about incorporating this into an irrevocable grant on the basis of an interpretation of the agreement of 1949. Albeit the rest of Canada was most grateful to the people of Newfoundland for agreeing to come into Canada, after all this was a decision of their own; it was a mature decision. On the other hand, even though they may have that right of a mature decision, surely to goodness the rest of Canada also has a right to a mature decision. In my province and the rest of Canada, who may have to assume the burden of this grant, there is also the right to discuss and to agree on the basis of the allocation of whatever dollars and cents may be represented in the minds of the people of Newfoundland with regard to term 29.

We are quite prepared to pass this resolution so that we can see the bill, and we will then be prepared to discuss this matter on the basis of the government's proposal. It is not an undertaking from an election campaign which is going to bind the parliament of Canada. It is not binding, whether it is by a man who is seeking the prime ministership of this country or whether it shall be by representations of a minister or a member who comes from that province. It is what this house says and what the other house says, in so far as any of these points are concerned.

I have repeated several times now that this is a determination to be made by representatives of the people of the rest of Canada. If it is their desire that they shall grant unto the province of Newfoundland the amount, fixed in perpetuity—and here I am not trying to second-guess the bill—then that shall be the fiscal price of accession to confederation within Canada. Leaving aside all other considerations, I am sure all other parts of Canada welcome the people of Newfoundland into Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman will permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. Lambert: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was the hon. member speaking for his party?

Mr. Lambert: Well, I am speaking here as—

Mr. Monteith: The minister started to play politics with this bill and he still is. If he would quit playing politics he would get farther.

Mr. Starr: Why does the minister play politics with all of these things? That is the business of the country.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. Lambert: Is the minister speaking for every member of his party?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking for the government.

Mr. Lambert: Are you speaking for every member of your party and the representatives of my province?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, this is a very illuminating approach by the minister. He has no representatives within my province; he has no representatives within my neighbouring province of Saskatchewan. Are many other provinces to be brushed aside? I point out to the minister that perhaps the reason he has no representatives in these provinces is because they have no mandate within those provinces. If this requires a third repetition, I will say again that notwithstanding the repeated elections, he has no mandate within those provinces, and those provinces are just as much a part of Canada as any other part. This is a factor which seems to be forgotten in too many instances.

I would underline to the minister: Let him come out to those provinces and find out, instead of sitting here in a sort of ivory tower, or listening to the advice from certain provinces as to what Canada should be. This is a partnership.

Mr. Pickersgill: I agree.

Mr. Lambert: All right. A partnership if made up of views which are expressed openly and freely, and are never imposed. I am quite prepared to discuss this with the people concerned, but I will not have them imposed on me. In this connection I believe I express the views of my party.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the concern which I have in connection with this legislation is why the minister has not sought to have it enshrined in an amendment to the British North America Act. It seems to me that if, as he told us and as some others believe, it is as sacrosanct as he suggests, then it ought to be by way of an amendment to the British North America Act. What basis is there for putting it in a single statute, rather than a statute which has some other legislation in it? Where is the minister improving the situation?

If he really believes, and I think he does, that something should be done, then it seems to me that what he ought to do and what he ought to be seeking in the house tonight is an opportunity to put it in the British North America Act—to consult the other provinces, and get it into that statute so that the people of Newfoundland would know the word of the people of Canada had been put behind this. He knows that a statute of this kind is subject to amendment at a future date. If it is subject to amendment, he has not achieved the purpose which he has in mind. Why does he not go the full distance? Why does he not do what he ought to do, make it an amendment to the British North America Act and put the word of all the people of all the provinces of Canada behind it?

Mr. Starr: Because he is only playing politics with it.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Is the minister not going to answer?

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to get into an argument over the interpretation of term 29 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada. I may say that I have term 29 before me. I have read it once again to refresh my memory. Although a royal commission had to come into the picture, I think there was an element of irrevocability in the wording of term 29 as it was drafted. In case there is any doubt I, for one, would be prepared to give Newfoundland the benefit of that doubt.

I confess nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, that I was concerned, and perhaps I am expressing the same concern that has been just voiced by the hon. member for Carleton, when the Minister of Transport says that the bill to be based on this resolution will contain a section which would make it impossible for that legislation to be amended except by consent of the legislature of Newfoundland.

An hon. Member: Mutual consent.

Mr. Knowles: The consent of Newfoundland and the federal parliament. This takes the legislation out of the category of ordinary statutes. Most of the statutes of the parliament of Canada are the property of the parliament of Canada and can be amended from time to time. I know we have departed from this principle on occasion. We did it in the Canada Pension Plan, but I objected to the special constitutional formula put into the Canada Pension Plan. It seems to me that is what the Minister of Transport says we are going to do on this occasion. We are going to have an ordinary statute of parliament and we are going to say in that statute, this money shall be paid in perpetuity. I am not objecting to that because, as I say, I think there is an element of irrevocability in term 29, no matter how one reads it. The minister says that act, once it has been passed, cannot be altered except by consent of Newfoumdland and Canada.

It seems to me if we do that we will have arrived at one more stage in the development of a formula for amending our constitution. We have a constitution now, parts of which can be amended only by going to Westminster, parts of which can be amended by the parliament of Canada. Then, we did have around here for a year or two what was known as the Fulton-Favreau formula, under which amendments could be achieved in various other ways. Here we will be establishing that with respect to term 29 the basic constitution of Canada can be amended by the consent of one province and the parliament of Canada.

Now, if that is the case, would it not be neater to do something along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Carleton, namely to amend one of our basic constitutional statutes? As I say, I do not want the Minister of Transport or any other Newfoundlander to misinterpret my remarks. I am not quarrelling with the way in which Joey seems to have won his point. I go along with the liberal interpretation of term 29, but I still think there is cause for concern in the statement the minister made that this statute of this parliament of Canada, which we will freely pass, will have in it what amounts to a constitutional provision that it cannot be altered unless there is consent by one province.

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles: Certainly.

Mr. Churchill: I was wondering if the hon. member could indicate to the Minister of Transport whether or not he is speaking on behalf of his party?

Mr. Knowles: All the members of my party who are here tonight are saying to me, "Yes, you are".

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Why couldn't the member for Edmonton West say that?

Mr. Starr: Why couldn't the Minister of Transport say that?

Financial Assistance to Newfoundland

Mr. Patterson: Unfortunately we do not have before us at the moment the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada. We are not therefore in a position to make any statement with regard to this particular point that has been raised. However, we are concerned about the nature of this provision which, as has been pointed out, is going to be in perpetuity. This is something that raises a real reservation in our minds. I do not think there is any question but that the provinces of Canada are prepared to share in programs to assist the less favoured areas of this great nation of ours. However, I question very much whether the other provinces of Canada would be prepared to state that forever and a day we are going to be prepared to support a measure to contribute to this particular part of Canada the sum of $8 million, in addition to the other types of grants that are made under our fiscal arrangements.

It seems to me therefore, Mr. Chairman, that unless it is definitely a provision of the Terms of Union that this must be the situation, then I suggest there should be an expiry date established. I do not care what it is, whether it is 10 years or even 20 years. I do not believe it is a very satisfactory arrangement to say that this payment is going to be made forever. I doubt if that will be satisfactory so far as the rest of Canada is concerned.

We will look forward—I suppose this resolution is going to pass—to the bill when it is introduced. It may be short, but we will want to ascertain just exactly what the bill does contain. At the moment, in so far as the resolution is concerned, I would say there are serious reservations about whether or not this is a desirable arrangement.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I feel that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has made a very valid point. He pointed out that this will be a statute of the parliament of Canada. The minister pointed out in his opening remarks that the statute would remain until such time as both governments felt it was not longer necessary. Now, there is no question of a unilateral decision here today. It is for this reason I feel the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is valid. If we put this measure through in this fashion, all we are doing is multiplying the constitutional difficulties which may arise in the future. I hope that when the minister replies he will attempt to answer this particular point.

[Mr. Starr]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have a great deal of sympathy with the view taken by the hon. member for Carleton. I think perhaps I would be even happier if we did have an amendment to the British North America Act to carry out this purpose. I believe all hon. members will realize that an amendment purporting to be an amendment to the British North America Act passed by the parliament of Canada would be ultra vires because it would go beyond the scope of the amendment to the British North America Act made in 1949 which permitted this parliament to make amendments respecting exclusively federal matters. The only way we could make an amendment to the British North America Act which would be valid in a matter which obviously concerns a province, would be to go to Westminster. As I say, there might be some argument for doing that.

I also think that what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said is quite important to consider, namely that this will be a statute of the parliament of Canada. Under any strict interpretation of the constitution it will be amendable or repealable by the parliament of Canada without the consent of the legislature of Newfoundland, just as the British North America Act is amendable or repealable by the British parliament without the consent of the parliament of Canada, in strict legal theory.

However, it is my opinion as a constitutional historian, that if a future parliament thought we had done something wrong, and was going to disregard utterly the feelings of one part of the country, that this might be perfectly legal according to the present view of the constitution, and the act might be repealed by another parliament.

I do not believe that it ever would be repealed. I do not believe, once parliament has made the declaration that we are going to ask the house to make if this resolution is adopted, and put it into the laws of Canada, that it would ever be changed, This does not, of course, mean to say that this would be in perpetuity. The bill is going to say that it would be the arrangement until the two governments agreed that it was no longer necessary.

I would point out that when I was young—

An hon. Member: When was that?

Mr. Pickersgill: In the 1920's—we had a long agitation in the three prairie provinces where

I grew up, whatever my mandate may now be, to get back our natural resources which, up to that time, had been controlled by parliament. A few people at that time said that we did not have the right to have them back; that we could not get them back because they were vested in Canada as compensation for something or other—it does not matter what.

I think the argument made by the hon. member for Edmonton West about the measure we are proposing now will be regarded in Newfoundland in exactly the same way as in Manitoba, or Saskatchewan, or Alberta an argument would have been regarded that after a five year period their resources could be taken back from Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta.

To reinforce what I say, I think I should put on record the actual term 29 itself. It does seem to me that, if it is on the record, most of us will feel, whatever views we entertained a few years ago, that this really was intended to be part of the Terms of Union, and to be carried out as, I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre very fairly stated, in that spirit. This is the way it reads:

> In view of the difficulty of predicting with sufficient accuracy the financial consequences to Newfoundland of becoming a province of Canada, the government of Canada will appoint a royal commission within eight years from the date of union to review the financial position of the province of Newfoundland and to recommend the form and scale of additional financial assistance, if any, that may be required by the government of the province of Newfoundland to enable it to continue public services at the levels and standard reached subsequent to the date of union, without resorting to taxation more burdensome, having regard to capacity to pay, than that obtaining generally in the region comprising the maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island.

What was intended by those who negotiated the Terms of Union on both sides of Cabot strait, was a later determination of the statutory subsidies. It was not meant to be a determination of taxing arrangements or tax-sharing payments. To suggest that, once this royal commission had made a determination, and once the government and parliament had accepted that determination, that the determination could be changed or altered without the consent of that province is, in my opinion, in the opinion of the cabinet and in the opinion expressed by my leader at the time, equivalent to suggesting that the statutory subsidies in the British North America Act provided to Nova Scotia or British Columbia or any other province could be taken away after a period of years. We know that in 1945 there was some suggestion that the statutory subsidy should be englobed in the general payments to the provinces. It was a regrettable suggestion and hastily withdrawn.

Not only Newfoundlanders, but all those who have really studied the matter I think, were entitled to believe—unless the royal commission made an absolutely silly recommendation—that once it had made a recommendation and once the government had accepted it, the payment was to be assimilated, not to taxing arrangements but was similar to the statutory subsidies that are provided for in the Terms of Union with the other provinces. The opening words suggest that—

> —in view of the difficulty of predicting with sufficient accuracy the financial consequences to Newfoundland becoming a province—

That is why there was to be a royal commission. The royal commission at that time recommended that $8 million be paid and that there be no limit upon that payment.

Mr. Monteith: What are the terms in the royal commission recommendation respecting the $8 million?

Mr. Pickersgill: The recommendation was that $8 million should be paid indefinitely. The royal commissioners say:

> Accordingly we recommend additional financial assistance as follows:—
> (d) for the fiscal year beginning April 1, 1960, $8,000,000 less the transitional grant of $350,000—

• (10:00 p.m.)

It is on this basis, and because it is our belief that this was intended to be the equivalent of the constitutional subsidies, that the government is recommending the adoption of this resolution and the first reading of the bill.

Mr. Lambert: May I ask the minister a question? Does he not feel there is some danger that acceptance of the term of recommendation of the commission of $8 million may become, shall we say, enshrined in the terms of confederation and that subsequent parliaments, provided Newfoundland were entitled to an increase in this sum, might regard it as a payment in perpetuity, regardless of the value of the dollar, and that an undesirable degree of inflexibility would be introduced.

This is an argument on the other side. This is one of the difficulties that I find in interpretation—that for all time, regardless of the good will of the people of Canada with regard to this particular term, it will be $8 million from now until, say, the year 2100, regardless of whether the dollar goes down to a relative value, say, of 10 cents, in which case Newfoundland would, of course, be the loser.

My primary concern is to introduce into this arrangement a sufficient degree of flexibility. With all possible respect to the people of Newfoundland and the minister in advocating this, I fear he is introducing a negative degree of inflexibility, something which the government of the day, a previous administration, was unwilling to recognize. This is what bothers me.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I can answer that very simply. I would have been happier, of course, had a higher sum been recommended or if escalation had been recommended, but the royal commission did not recommend that. We appointed a competent commission, that is, the St. Laurent government did. The finding in this respect was not happily received. Mr. Smallwood thought the amount was much too small. But this is what the commission said, and this is what the Terms of Union said.

The statutory sums of all the other provinces are stated in dollars. There is no escalation for them. I am asking only justice for Newfoundland; I am not asking a special escalation for their constitutional subsidies which other provinces do not have. It seems to me that beyond this $8 million they should take their chance with tax arrangements, just as all the other provinces do.

This is regarded by every Newfoundlander as part of the constitution. It is part of the constitution—term 29 of the Terms of the Union, which are part of the British North America Act—and it is on this basis we are recommending it in this way.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Winch: I desire to speak on this resolution and I would call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the resolution and the bill are so very similar, would hon. members consider passing the resolution, which only says it is expedient to introduce a bill and does not commit anyone to the principle of the bill, and have the rest of the debate on the bill itself, so that we would have the bill in front of us?

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. Monteith: I think the hon. member for Edmonton West gave a very reasoned statement as far as he was concerned.

Mr. Winch: On a point of order. Before the hon. member rose I said I desired to speak on the resolution and called it ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Tomorrow we will bring forward for the consideration of the house item 5 on today's order paper, second reading of a bill to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas. Then, from the budget resolutions, we will take the one relating to tariffs—but only that one. We would then turn to item 47 on today's order paper, second reading of the collective bargaining bill for the public service; and item 51, the resolution dealing with the measure to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act, and the various other superannuation acts.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

EDUCATION—CONDITIONS GOVERNING FREE UNIVERSITY TRAINING

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) the following question:

> In view of the minister's statement within the last day or so in Halifax that lack of education is the most important of the causes of poverty and that free university education may become necessary, will the minister say how the government proposes to determine the extent of poverty necessary before a policy to make free university education possible can be provided?

My question was rejected by Mr. Speaker as being argumentative. I am sorry, indeed, if this is the case because I know the minister is deeply interested in education. He comes from a part of Canada and a stock of people who have always been deeply interested in education, even to the point of sacrificing practically everything else in order to get it.

I would point out today that this matter of education and of poverty can no longer be solved by individuals on an individual basis, and that it has got to be dealt with by government action. We hear a great deal about the brain drain after university, with our students going down to the United States, but the brain drain after university is as nothing compared with the brain wastage because students cannot get to university in the first place.

I think it is a twofold wastage, Mr. Speaker. It is a wastage for the individual and for our society. For the individual it is a matter of wasted talents. Many young people are condemned to a lifetime of frustration. They are condemned to much less than they could have, than their native ability would make possible with university education. They are condemned to a bread and tea existence instead of a full, modern, all-round diet that would be possible if education could be given to them fully. Wasted talents are the first thing I bring up as a loss for the individual.

There is also the definite matter of much lower income. The Second Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada points out that those with a university degree have an average income of more than two and a half times that of those with only elementary education, and more than twice the average of those who have only one to three years of high school.

To put it another way, the average male who gets to grade 8 will earn in later life an income of $3,526. If he gets a university degree he will earn $9,188. In addition, the higher the level of education the greater are the earnings differences between younger and older age groups. Those with university degrees get higher earnings all their lives and the higher standards of living that such earnings bring. That is the individual side of it.

In connection with our society, as far back as Adam Smith it was recognized that education is an investment in human capital. This continent realized early in its history that public schooling must be made universal. Now we are realizing slowly that horse-and-buggy education is not good enough for the atomic age. We need to make university education available today on the same free basis as public and high school education.

Those in poverty are simply not getting to university now. The Canadian Union of Students on March 16 of this year gave figures to show that less than one quarter of the Canadian population, 23.3 per cent to be exact, sends nearly one half of all students to Canadian universities. Some 48 per cent of the students contacted gave their fathers' occupations as professional, proprietary or managerial. Families with salaries of over $10,000 provide 25 per cent of all university students, whereas families with salaries of less than $3,000 provide only 9 per cent of all university students.

No wonder that Mr. Robert Rabinovitch, analyst for the Canada Student Means Survey commented that Canadian students by and large are not representative of Canadians generally, but rather bear the characteristics of the middle and upper income classes of Canadian society. Professor Porter, of Carleton University when speaking to a seminar of the Canadian Teachers Federation yesterday made the statement—> —that only the granting of equality in the education system can make possible equality of opportunity. The key is university attendance, he added.

> He flatly rejected statements by some education officials that no qualified student is denied a university education through lack of money. "I just don't believe that," Prof. Porter declared, citing the case of a bright graduate student who was forced to leave Carleton this year. "He was so deeply in debt he just couldn't risk staying any longer."
> Government loans to students are not the answer and are in fact a backward step, Prof. Porter asserted. "The federal student loan program is an invitation to a student to get into debt to acquire a university education. It may seem rational to a middle-class mind but it will not be an incentive for low-income families to keep their sons in college."
> He said he could not understand why the nation's politicians moved so slowly in expanding educational opportunity. "Maybe it doesn't get votes like medicare or even roads."

I am going to say I think there should be sufficient poverty now. A quarter of the population live in poverty, according to the government's own statistics. That ought to be a high enough percentage for the government to take steps so that the people in the poverty group can get free education if they have the mental ability to do so? Again I ask the minister, what degree of poverty must we have before action is taken?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I am speaking tonight for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to whom this question was directed in the first instance, but I should like to say by way of a brief response to what the hon. lady has said that as one of those who had some difficulty in obtaining an education, I sympathize entirely both with the views expressed by my hon. colleague and the hon. lady who has just spoken.

This government has taken some major steps forward to assist students in obtaining university education, both through the payment of youth allowances and through student loans. As I see the problem it is not only a question of providing free university education. It is a much deeper problem than that, as I am sure the hon. lady herself would be the first to recognize. One of the most serious problems standing in the way of ensuring that people receive an education is ensuring that students reach the point where they can enter university.

I should like to say to the hon. lady that I believe it should be the aim of government at all levels to increase the opportunities available to our young people to receive an adequate education, including a university education. I think there is a legitimate difference of view in respect of whether one should begin by providing free university education. These different views are to be found not only among members in this house but also among educational authorities in the provinces.

University education is a provincial responsibility. The federal government can assist to make university education more available only through our help to the universities and through the loans themselves. Perhaps the day will come when free university education will be available, but there are a great many things to be done as well as that. I should like to say that I share the hon. lady's interest in this subject, and that I think that she has made a contribution by bringing it before the house at this time.

AGRICULTURE—QUEBEC—FAILURE TO PAY FULL MILK SUBSIDY

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to thank the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) who was patient enough to wait until now to hear the question I want to discuss tonight.

On May 5 last, I asked the Minister of Agriculture, on the orders of the day, if he was aware that his efforts to raise to $4 per cwt. the price of milk containing 3.5 per cent butterfat, as paid to producers, had failed to give the results he expected.

[Mr. Sharp.]

I raised this question so as to call his attention to the fact that dairy producers will not accept anything less than the price they requested and which was promised by the minister.

It will be recalled that last year, the then minister had promised $3.50 per cwt. for industrial milk. This price was never reached; I warn the minister that we will not accept the same situation this year.

According to reports I have received from two agricultural co-operatives in Abitibi and many dairy producers, the first half of April this year yielded $3.67 per cwt. at most. This is far from the promised price. The farmers need—and the minister knows it—this minimum of $4 per cwt. of milk to meet their obligations.

The government can, even if it is not advisable, make good the deficits by increasing taxes and borrowing, but the farmer cannot do so, and indebtedness has certain limits.

I ask the Minister of Agriculture to increase the present subsidy which is inadequate. Otherwise, the factories will have, to reach the price of $4, to increase the price of butter, casein and other dairy products, and consumers cannot withstand another increase in the cost of living.

The minister must take immediate action in order that the promise he made to Canadian farmers may come true as from April 1 of this year.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): In reply to question asked by the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) concerning the results of the new dairy policy, may I point out that the payments received by the producers from the processing plants during April apply to March deliveries and that such payments were made under last year's support program. Payments on milk delivered later than April 1 under the new support program are just starting to be paid by several processing plants.

May I further point out that the basic price of $3.25 per hundredweight is an average price applicable to milk with 3.5 per cent butterfat content. Should the milk indicate a lower content, the payments will necessarily be less.

I should, however, point out to the hon. member that, as I indicated when I announced the support program of the current milk year, the federal government is not empowered to set the prices paid to the producers by the processing plants. This question comes under provincial jurisdiction as concerns milk, and I insisted in my statement on the fact that producers associations and marketing boards should do everything in their power to secure a fair price.

When the dairy commission is instituted, it is expected that each province will set up its own milk control, responsible for setting the price of milk. For instance, the Ontario Dairy Board has already set a price of $3.25 per hundredweight which, combined with the federal subsidy of 75 cents, gives the producer a price of $4 per hundredweight of milk.

In the casein producing areas, I am given to understand that low prices on world markets are creating difficulties. The Agricultural Stabilization Board is currently considering this situation in order to remedy the problem.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.23 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RESIGNATION OF CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

Mr. Speaker: I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members a communication I have received from the Chief Electoral Officer:

Ottawa, May 4, 1966.

The Honourable The Speaker of the House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir:—

In my report dated January 19, 1966, made to you, pursuant to subsection (3) of section 58 of the Canada Elections Act, I requested to be relieved of the duties of Chief Electoral Officer for the reasons that I gave in that report. For the same reasons, I now find it necessary to resign my office of Chief Electoral Officer.

In order to enable the new Chief Electoral Officer to commence the preparations resulting from the redistribution of electoral districts, which will be required to be made before the next general election, I respectfully suggest that the effective date of my resignation should not be later than the date of publication of the proclamation declaring to be in force the representation order referred to in section 22 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

After that date I propose to carry out the assignment that I am given by section 9 of the Representation Commissioner Act to study and report on methods of registration of electors and absentee voting, and to continue to discharge the other duties assigned by the two Acts in question.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

N. Castonguay,
Chief Electoral Officer.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAFLAMME—C.B.C. NEWS BROADCAST RESPECTING LIBERAL CAUCUS

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Québec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

On the C.B.C. newscast, Thursday, May 5, at 6.30 and at 11 p.m., commentator Jean-Marc Poliquin in his usual style commented on alleged leaks from the Quebec Liberal caucus concerning the current provincial elections and on the Liberal party prospects in some areas of the province.

To such garbled, imaginary and unfounded comments both as to wording and overall meaning, the sensation-seeking commentator attached my name and that of several colleagues of mine, to give his news the tone of an official newscast on the national network and thus insidiously create the impression that I and some of my colleagues were opposed to the premier of Quebec.

This unfounded, humiliating and prejudicial news item rouses indignation and contempt.

My question of privilege is a personal and collective one for the following reasons:

First, a political party caucus is a strictly private and confidential affair; any infringement of secrecy reflects upon every member of this house.

An hon. Member: You have not been here long.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Because it is not controlled at the federal level as it is at the provincial level.

Mr. Laflamme: Second the national radio or television network and the press do not have the right to allow rumours and hearsay to be commented upon without giving in detail their sources of information.

Third, it is cowardly and unworthy of a public service to broadcast such trash and attribute statements to any members of this house without checking whether they are authentic.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has indicated in his introduction the basis for his question of privilege, but without hearing any more I must advise him that none exists.

I would suggest that he consult citation 108 of Beauchesne's fourth edition which states:

Libels on members have also been constantly punished: But to constitute a breach of privilege, they must concern the character or conduct of members in that capacity, and the libel must be based on matters arising in the actual transaction of the business of the house.

The matter the hon. member is mentioning obviously does not arise in the actual transaction of the business of the house.

I should also point out a provision of citation 104 paragraph (5) that reads as follows:

(5) As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the prearranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity.

Since this involves a matter which, according to the hon. member himself, goes back to Thursday last, I do not feel the question of privilege has been raised at the earliest opportunity. For this reason, I cannot find that a question of privilege exists in the circumstances.

PROPOSED CHANGE IN BUSINESS ANNOUNCED FOR TODAY

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement about the business of the house. Last night when indicating the house business for today I said we would proceed first with item No. 5 on today's order paper, second reading of Bill C-151 providing for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas, to be followed by the Customs Tariff resolution. I then indicated two other items, second reading of the collective bargaining bill for the public service and the resolution dealing with a measure to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act and other superannuation acts.

Consequent upon and after discussions with the house leaders of other parties, I should like to indicate a change in the proposed business for the house today. We propose to proceed with the first two items, the special rural development measure and the Customs Tariff resolution, and at the conclusion of those two items, we will ask for unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of estimates now before the house.

For tomorrow's business we would propose to call the two bills standing in the name of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and at the conclusion of those bills proceed to consider estimates that are before the house. Because this is a Tuesday, and under the provisions of standing order 56 we cannot proceed with the consideration of estimates without having a debatable motion and that motion counting as one of the four supply motions allowed each year under our rules, I would therefore ask unanimous consent to move:

That notwithstanding the provisions of standing order 56 or any other order of the house, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair without question put when the order of the day is called for the house to go into committee of supply later this day; and

That the committee of supply this day then may proceed to the consideration of the estimates of the departments of forestry, labour, industry and post office, but of no other department; and

That the house resolving itself into committee of supply shall not be deemed a supply motion for the purpose of any order limiting the number of supply motions or providing the procedure for supply motions.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): No, Mr. Speaker. If hon. members will look at the estimates of the Department of Forestry, which have been mentioned, they will see that they include the ARDA program, which really comes under agriculture. The agriculture committee has had the estimates of the Department of Agriculture referred to it, and I would expect that part of the estimates of the Department of Forestry would be referred to it as well because part of those estimates is concerned with agricultural arrangements.

We cannot be responsible for how the government decides to allocate the business of the various departments, but I think it would be very foolish if this type of arrangement was agreed to. It would take out of the discussion and review of the agricultural estimates a large part of the potential discussion of the ARDA program which is under the Department of Forestry.

I would also suggest that if the estimates of trade and commerce are brought before parliament it will mean there can be no committee discussion on the wheat board or the grain commission, which is also a large part of agriculture. I think this is just another indication that we really have not sat down and decided what we are going to do with estimates. If we are to be fair in dealing with estimates I am opposed to this motion.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. He mentioned the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. This motion has nothing to do with the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. They are before a committee, and this motion has nothing to do with any other estimates that are now before a committee.

Mr. Peters: I agree that this is true. I only raised the problem of the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce because I think the steering committee of the agriculture committee have felt that we will have to ask for the estimates of the Department of Forestry to be placed before the agriculture committee in order that they may discuss the ARDA program, which is part of the Department of Forestry. I think we will have to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to appear before the agricultural committee, because the responsibility of that minister includes the operation of the grain commissioners and the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Starr: That is finance.

Mr. Peters: Well, perhaps this has now gone to the finance department. Perhaps I have the wrong minister and the wrong department, but the point is that we should really consider this matter in order to make the work of committees effective. If the agriculture committee is to discuss these matters and report back to the house, in order for the discussion to be complete we must have the opportunity in the committee to discuss the whole problem of agriculture. This will mean a discussion of the estimates of departments that are involved in agriculture. Perhaps the minister has not considered this matter, but I feel strongly enough about it that I am not prepared to give unanimous consent.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent the minister cannot proceed with the motion.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the estimate referred to by the hon. member for Timiskaming, could I ask the minister whether he would agree to send that part of the forestry estimates dealing with ARDA to the agriculture committee rather than to have it discussed here?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the house leaders have agreed that those estimates should be dealt with in committee of the whole. However, I shall be very glad not to ask that they be discussed here. I should remind hon. members that committees have responsibility for work assigned to them by the House of Commons. It is not the responsibility of the House of Commons to deal with such work as the committees wish it to deal with. There seems to be some confusion on this point. In any event, I will consider the point and discuss it with the house leaders of the other parties. I would then ask that my motion carry today without reference to the estimates of the forestry department, and that we proceed with discussion of the labour estimates.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to support what the hon. member for Timiskaming has said.

Mr. Fairweather: Would the pragmatic socialists hold their caucus somewhere else so we can carry on our business?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): If the wiseacre lawyer is finished we can proceed. We seem to have leaders all over the place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): This raises a similar problem as far as I am concerned, and I am sure I did not know about this at the beginning. But how stupid can we get?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we should not have a debate on whether there is unanimous consent. I would now ask hon. members whether there is unanimous consent and, if so, the motion will be put.

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous agreement.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, could I have one point clarified. Is there unanimous agreement that I have permission to delete the reference to the estimates of the Department of Forestry from the proposal put before the house?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be allowed to ask a question. I am not objecting to it, but does this not remind the members of the House of Commons that we have agreed to a 30 day limit for discussion of estimates? If we bring in these estimates, which may or may not be the important ones without the business committee having allocated times so there is a fair distribution of the discussion of estimates within the 30 day period, does not this bringing in of estimates haphazardly without that type of consideration tend to eliminate the proper time which will be allotted for the departments that the members of parliament and the parties agree should be considered more important than others?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, it does not create that difficulty. The house leaders have already started to discuss the method of computing the exact numbers of hours in the 30 day period with a view of trying to apportion the time equitably among the different types of supply items which are included in the 30 day limitation period.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Scott (Danforth): There is no consent.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, do you not think the N.D.P.'s could have their caucus outside the House of Commons?

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry) moved:

That the second report of the standing committee on veterans affairs, presented to the house on Friday, May 6, 1966, be concurred in.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to say just one word. It is obvious that the veterans affairs committee has found a way of dealing with the problem of the lack of a quorum.

Mr. Herridge: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I wish to inform the house that the standing committee on veterans affairs has the highest attendance record of any committee in this house, as the members arrive within 15 minutes of the time set for the meetings.

Mr. Starr: It is quite obvious now, Mr. Speaker, that the caucus should have been held before the members came to the house.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT REQUIRING JUDGE AND JURY TO ATTEND EXECUTIONS

Mr. Milton L. Klein (Cartier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-179, to amend the Criminal Code (attendance at execution).

[Mr. Peters.]

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Klein: Article 645 of the Criminal Code lists the individuals, such as the sheriff and prison doctor, who shall be present as witnesses to the execution of a person who has been condemned to death on a charge of capital murder. The object of this bill is to add to this list the presiding judge and all the jurors at the trial.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT PROVIDING ALTERNATIVE PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER

Mr. Milton L. Klein (Cartier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-180, to amend the Criminal Code (punishment for murder).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Klein: Under the present provisions of the Criminal Code the death penalty is mandatory in the case of capital murder. The object of this bill is to allow the judge the discretion to impose either the death penalty or the alternative of imprisonment for life.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE U.S. TAX ON TOURISTS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, and ask him whether communications are now taking place between the United States administration and Canada with reference to threatened action on the part of the United States to bring in restrictions against tourists from the United States, thereby adding still further to the $1.5 billion payments deficit.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, so far as I am aware there have been no further developments in this matter since I made my report to the house last week.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the past week have there been any communications with Washington taking strong objection to this projected action?

Mr. Sharp: The Leader of the Opposition is saying the United States intends to take this action. I know of no such intention.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I ask the minister whether there is any foundation for the suggestion made in an article by Knowlton Nash, who is usually very reputable, to the effect that the United States administration is seriously considering restrictions on spending by U.S. tourists.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition knows that he cannot ask a member of the cabinet to comment on the accuracy of press reports.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, Mr. Speaker, I simply ask this. Is the minister in a position to say that under no circumstances has he in the last week had any communication with the United States government in this regard?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had made it quite clear that I have not had any such communications. Suggestions of this kind about further restrictions have been floated from time to time in the United States. We have not been informed officially of any; therefore I cannot accept the premise that the United States government intends to do these things. I cannot read the minds of the members of the United States administration any more than I can read the mind of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, but I have not had any direct communications of this kind.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I suggest to the minister that it is not a question of mind reading but a question of a government that does not stand up—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question. The minister referred to suggestions and communications, and I am wondering whether he could explain the difference between the two.

Mr. Sharp: Yes. There are many occasions when reports appear in the newspapers which do not represent the official opinion of the United States government or even the Canadian government. I want to say to my right hon. friend that there have been no official communications about this matter with the Canadian government so far as I am aware. If there had been I can assure him that there would be very strong protests from the Canadian government; but since there have been no communications of this kind I think it would be quite premature for the Canadian government to go out and cry from the housetops before the United States government takes action the Canadian government will protest.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): A further supplementary question. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether there has been any indication by the United States that they will tighten any of the present restrictions or resort to any supplementary measures in this respect. I do not mean in respect to travel funds alone, I am talking of the outflow of funds from the United States.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have had no approaches from the United States government to consider the effect of any purported United States action, which would be the only basis on which I could answer to the house. The hon. gentlemen can read in the papers, as I can, reports about what the United States government may do. I cannot answer questions about these reports; I can only answer questions put to me as to whether the United States government has communicated with the Canadian government, and it has not.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—EFFORTS TO INITIATE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could the minister inform the house whether Mr. Chester Ronning and/or anyone else is now in Viet Nam, or has been there within the last week or two, continuing the search for ways of using the international control commission for the purpose of initiating peace negotiations in that unhappy country?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that Mr. Chester Ronning is not in Asia. He was here last week.

FIRES

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I shall put my question to the Prime Minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Has the government set up an inquiry about the recent fires in Montreal harbour and, if so, is the government or the Prime Minister in a position to tell us what progress has been made, if such an inquiry has taken place?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to deal with that question, but I will make inquiries of the Minister of Transport immediately.

BANK ACT

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask the minister when the house can expect the resolution in regard to revision of the Bank Act.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that this will be on the order paper fairly soon. The cabinet is just completing its consideration of the issues raised.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONFERENCE OF PRIME MINISTERS THIS SUMMER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell the members of the house whether any conference of commonwealth prime ministers is presently planned for June or July of this year?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the communique issued at the last commonwealth prime ministers' meeting at Lagos in January stated that if the Rhodesian situation was not cleared up by June or July there would be another meeting of the prime ministers of the commonwealth in July of this year.

REQUEST FOR COPIES OF BILL GIVEN FIRST READING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, last night the Minister of Transport promised the house that he would be making available to hon. members copies of Bill C-178, dealing with the reorganization of the government. The house passed the resolution last night but hon. members cannot get copies of the bill. My question to the Prime Minister is, when will these copies be available?

[Mr. Caouette.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed the bill was available in the house last night.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which is based on the answer given by the Prime Minister a moment ago to the effect that copies of the bill relating to the reorganization of government departments were available last night. I have just checked; no bills were available, and none are yet available, because they are at the printer's.

Mr. McIlraith: I had one here last night.

Mr. Churchill: Then why didn't we?

Mr. Starr: Again on my question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the minister seems to have had a bill which is not yet printed, but he has it in some form or other. No one else has a copy of the bill which he says was available. Available to whom?

Mr. McIlraith: It was available in the house at the table.

Mr. Starr: It was not. Again I raise a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I have checked with the table and it appears the bill was not available at the table.

Mr. McIlraith: I should just correct the hon. gentleman on the procedure. I do not know the numbers that were available; it may well be that insufficient copies were supplied. When a resolution is passed the usual procedure—though it was deviated from four or five years ago on two or three occasions—is to have limited first printing. I think the number is 25, but I will verify that and find out the exact number. Then when the bill is given first reading, a pro forma reading, the required number for total distribution is made available, and those copies are usually available the next morning.

If this bill on government reorganization necessary steps to find out why it was not distributed I would be very glad to take the necessary steps to find out why it was not distributed in the usual way to all hon. members, but the bill was available last night at the conclusion of the resolution stage.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, once more I raise a question of privilege on what the government house leader has just said. He still leads us to believe that the bill was available, when it was not. He is trying to tell us about the procedure through which a bill must go for printing, and we all know that. We want to know when the bill will be available to members of the house, and that is all he has to answer.

Mr. McIlraith: If that is the case—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Chair can offer some assistance. I will certainly endeavour to intervene, where intervention might help, to ensure that distribution is made without delay.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege which, in effect, you have ruled upon, I asked last night at the close of the house, as reported at page 4911 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, can we obtain some assurance from the minister that the bill will be available tonight?

The Minister of Transport answered in these words:

> There are some copies available and I will endeavour to see that as many as possible are distributed as soon as possible.

I was in the house last night until eleven o'clock and I received no copy of the bill. The first thing I did this morning was to ask for the bill. I was told by the Prime Minister that it was available. However, on asking the ushers, the messenger boys and the people at the table it turns out that no bill is available. I want to re-emphasize what my colleague has said about this question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Is this a new question of privilege?

Mr. Caouette: It is the same question of privilege as that raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton).

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle and his colleague for Ontario (Mr. Starr) must both know that the bill concerns government reorganization. They must not be surprised that it was not distributed yesterday. Let them wait and they will have it today or tomorrow.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT FUNDS BE MADE AVAILABLE THROUGH CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the worsening situation regarding the lack of mortgage moneys for home building, and in view of the consequent serious inflationary effects which this is having on the home building industry, will the minister not consider making available more funds for home building purposes through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My understanding is that this question was asked some days ago and replied to by the minister. I do not think there is any new element in the question as outlined by the hon. member.

Mr. Brand: A supplementary question. Mr. Speaker, I must emphasize that there is indeed a new element in this question. Mortgage funds, according to my information, are becoming unobtainable from any source. This is a matter of great urgency, and it is something that should be dealt with now. It was not dealt with one week ago.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Industry, of which I have given him oral notice. In view of the fluctuations of the New York Stock Exchange yesterday owing to several incorrect announcements by General Motors with respect to the operations of their various plants, does the minister consider this a form of retaliation for the successful campaign carried on for safer cars being undertaken by the member for Brome-Missisquoi?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Did the Minister of Justice say last Sunday, during a political meeting in connection with the Quebec elections, that the splinter parties did not have a sense of responsibility and that they were unwanted in parliament?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In my opinion, this question is not in order.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice made statements which are apparently quite irresponsible.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot raise this point in the circumstances—

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house whether he delegated his Minister of Justice to the public meeting in Sorel last Sunday and whether it is his intention to allow other federal ministers to go and help Mr. Lesage?

[English]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. When he makes announcements in my riding about public works, will he also give the announcements to the radio station as well as to the newspaper? He might also send a copy to me.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister optimistic about the success of plans which would prevent the hon. member for Davenport, as requested by the leader of the Liberal party in Manitoba, from carrying his party into a Toronto oriented policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot accept that question.

Mr. Fairweather: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC—DISPUTE WITH U.S. OVER SALMON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was unable to reply to the question from the hon. member for Red Deer on Friday last, due to my absence from the house. I may say also that I received notice from the hon. member for New Westminster that he intended to ask a question similar to that put by the hon. member for Red Deer.

I agree with hon. gentlemen that the situation arising out of the controversy about salmon net fishing limits in the Noyes island area off Alaska is one which requires the urgent attention of the Canadian government. I should like to assure the hon. gentlemen that the Canadian government has been giving this matter its most serious attention and is taking steps to deal with it as effectively as possible.

Contrary to rumours circulating in recent days to the effect that a proposed meeting to be held in Seattle was to be cancelled, in fact such a meeting is to be held in Seattle between officials of the Canadian and United States governments to renegotiate the location of lines along the coasts of California, Oregon, Washington, British Columbia and Alaska, to the seaward of which net fishing for salmon will be prohibited for Canadian and United States fishermen. The Canadian government is fully aware of the unsatisfactory situation which has prevailed because of the discrepancy in the net fishing limits as applying, on the one hand, to British Columbia along with California, Oregon and Washington, and on the other hand to the state of Alaska, a discrepancy which is not satisfactory from the Canadian standpoint.

I wish to assure this house that the Canadian representatives at the Seattle meeting will do their utmost to work toward arrangements regarding net fishing limits on the west coast which are satisfactory to Canada.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether any representations have been made to the minister by the United States administration with regard to a possible retaliation by way of our exports of fish products, if Canada takes unilateral action?

Mr. Robichaud: No, Mr. Speaker, no such representations by the government of the United States have come to my attention.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—FAILURE TO PAY FULL MILK SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, last week it was pointed out to the Minister of Agriculture that a few days after he had announced his new dairy subsidy program, the milk processors upped their transportation charges and the farmers were not benefiting from the new policy. The minister at that time stated that in a few days he would report to the house with respect to contemplated government action in this regard. I would ask the minister if he is now ready to report to the house.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in the province of Quebec there appear to have been some examples of the situation the hon. member referred to. As to the question of the manufacturer concerned raising transportation charges, this does not come within the ambit of federal authority. There is no federal authority to prevent manufacturing plants from raising transportation costs.

As I indicated when I announced the program, the federal share of the subsidy program enables the manufacturers to pay $3.25 per hundredweight. It is up to the producers to organize themselves to prevent the kind of action they object to, and it is within the provincial ambit of authority to act if they so wish.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In future when the government designs a dairy subsidy policy, will it make sure that this policy is fitted to the needs of the individual farmer? I am sure the government wishes to benefit the individual farmer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is rhetorical.

Mr. Grafftey: Should this matter not be of benefit to the farmer, to the individual?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE ORGANIZED CRIME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

Could he tell the house whether he has received recently a request from the Quebec minister of justice for a nation-wide royal commission on organized crime? If so, will the minister take action on such request?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, personally I have never received any formal request from the Quebec minister of justice regarding a royal commission on organized crime.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us if his contacts with the provincial government at Sorel recently were close enough to receive an informal request?

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question has not been accepted. The hon. member cannot therefore continue to speak on a question ruled out of order.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question does not follow that of the member for Lapointe but rather that of the member for Chapleau.

[Later:]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

A little earlier the minister told the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) that no official request had been received from the province of Quebec to set up an inquiry on organized crime. However, at the time of federal-provincial conferences, and more specifically at the last one between the ministers of justice of Canada, was there not talk of setting up such an inquiry to discover and hunt down organized crime in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is putting forth an argument and asking a question dealing with events which occurred some time ago already. I do not think the question can be put in such a way.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. With all due respect—and you know how respectful I am—the Minister of Justice said a little earlier that he had not received any request. Well, I am just asking him if that matter was discussed at the last federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The first question was in order and the minister answered it. The second question is not and the minister should not answer it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR REPORTS OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE MEETINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State may I direct my question, which is for her, to her parliamentary secretary. Would the parliamentary secretary request the printing bureau to produce the reports of the standing committee on external affairs? Other committees seem to have had their reports in prompt order, but our committee has not received its reports. We rely on the report of the previous meeting in order to carry on our next meeting.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED SLOWDOWN IN NAVAL PROMOTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): My question is for the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker. Has a policy or practice now been developed in his department to freeze or slow down promotions in the navy between the levels of commander and captain?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. The promotion rates—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: —for the Canadian forces are better this year—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer:—than in the last five year average.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

SELLING PRICE OF SETS OF GOLD COINS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to ask the Minister of Finance a question to clarify a press release issued from his office, having to do with the issuance of the centennial gold coins. The value of the coins amounts to $21.91, and sets of the coins are to be sold for $40. Can the minister explain in what the $19 difference is going to be absorbed, with relation to this set?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest this is not the type of question which should be asked at this time.

[Translation]

FINANCE

REDUCTION IN DEPRECIATION ON AUTOMOBILE EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice, or rather to the Minister of Finance?

Does he intend to consider favourably the representations made by the Trucking Association of Quebec Inc. concerning the depreciation on automotive equipment to be reduced from 30 to 20 per cent and the sales tax of 11 per cent on the cost of retreading tires?

Mr. Speaker: That is a question of a general nature which the hon. member might put on the order paper.

[English]

CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING DISCLOSURE BY CORPORATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is he consulting with the provinces so that the constitutional difficulties involved in working out legislation which would require full financial disclosure by corporations of their financial structure and operating results could be solved, in line with the speech he made last week in Toronto?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are starting these consultations in June, beginning with the securities legislation, and I am quite sure we will cover the whole field as we proceed.

HATE LITERATURE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether a decision has finally been arrived at in connection with possible amendments to cover hate literature. Some weeks ago it was indicated that it was only a matter of days away.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter is still under consideration as to what action can be taken during this session.

AGRICULTURE

CHEESE—POSSIBLE U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Is the minister aware of the legislation placed before Congress in Washington regarding the curbing of imports of Canadian cheese, and may I inquire what action the government contemplates, if any, in order to protect the interests of the Canadian cheese industry?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt that this question is of immediate urgency. If it is, perhaps the hon. member might justify it at this time.

Mr. Danforth: If I may elaborate, Mr. Speaker, an announcement was made in the house a few weeks ago by the Minister of Agriculture that exports of Canadian cheese to the United States had been increasing. Now a bill has been introduced in the U.S. Congress which, if passed, could result in grave circumstances so far as exports of Canadian cheese are concerned. The bill has been introduced and I want to know what action is being taken.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It might have been better had I accepted the question in the first instance.

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture) Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the hon. member that the minister and the government are carefully watching any legislative measures adopted across the line which may affect us here, and this particular measure is under study at present.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): As a supplementary question, could the parliamentary secretary say whether the Canadian government is doing anything to protect hog producers against imports of pork?

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the MacDonald report available yet?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): As a supplementary question, based on the remarks of the minister's predecessor, who last Sunday evening asked that the Prime Minister and other members of his cabinet be a little more specific, could the Minister of Finance indicate when he expects to receive that report, which was due some time in January?

Mr. Sharp: As soon as it is prepared, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): As a further supplementary question, how long does it take to dot an "i" and cross a "t"?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MANITOBA—COURT DECISION RESPECTING HUNTING RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in his capacity as superintendent general of Indian affairs. In view of the report that the Manitoba Court of Appeal has ruled that Indians in the province lost their right to hunt migratory birds out of season with the introduction of the Migratory Birds Convention Act, will the minister assure the house that his department will be prepared to pay the expenses of those so convicted if they desire to take their case to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this question as notice.

POWER

REQUEST FOR SUMMARY OF NATIONAL GRID STUDY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys in what is to be his new capacity as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and it has to do with the National Power Grid. Before the bill is debated on second reading would it be possible for the minister to give the house either a progress report on the study of the Ingledow report or some form of written summary on which we can base our remarks? Second, has there been any consultation between the minister on the one side and Ontario Hydro and the Ontario government on the other side concerning the interconnection between Sudbury, Ontario, and Manitoba?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I am not acquainted with the second part of the question. With regard to the first part, I shall try to inform myself better and see if this matter can be brought within the framework of the discussion on the reorganization of the department.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

POSSIBLE CONSPIRACY IN PRODUCTION OF PROGRAM "THE PUBLIC EYE"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as the minister who deals with matters coming under the purview of the Combines Investigation Act. Would the minister look into the possibility that a conspiracy may exist between a former member of this house, an officer of the Canadian Labour Congress, and the executive producer of "The Public Eye", a former public relations director of the C.B.R.T., to portray on the program "The Public Eye" tonight a biased and distorted view of a certain trade union in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The significance of this question is not apparent to the Chair. I assume that the minister, if he understands the purport of the question, will take appropriate action.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the interesting question asked by the hon. member for Skeena, will the minister provide all hon. members with a copy of the script of the program "The Public Eye" which is to be televised at 10.30 this evening? I am sure everybody will find it most interesting.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

INQUIRY AS TO TERMS OF REFERENCE OF MEDIATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In the light of Mr. Ouimet's statement this morning that it was difficult to see what kind of outcome would result from the present negotiations conducted by Mr. Keate, could the Prime Minister tell us whether terms of reference have been drafted for Mr. Keate's negotiations?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Keate is in touch with both sides to the dispute, and has been for some days, within the terms of reference outlined a week ago Sunday when I announced his appointment.

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): As a supplementary question, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister said that terms of reference have been given to Mr. Keate, could he supply a copy of them to Mr. Alphonse Ouimet, the president of the C.B.C., who said this morning that none were available?

Mr. Pearson: The terms of reference to which I have referred were included in the statement I gave to the press a week ago Sunday announcing that Mr. Keate was going to try to be helpful in this matter.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT REPORT ON GOVERNMENT JURISDICTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the widespread interest in the subject of automobile safety, has the minister yet received the report from the Department of Justice dealing with the question of which level of government has jurisdiction to outline safety features for motor vehicles at the production level?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister table the document so that members of the house may see it?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, as I understand the rules of the house, the tabling of opinions by the law officers of the crown is not the practice.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): May I ask a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister complete his perusal of the document so we might question him on it when he appears before the committee on justice and legal affairs?

Mr. Drury: I will peruse it, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC WORKS

LONG BRANCH, ONT.—PLACING OF FILL IN LAKE ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Inasmuch as the little village of Long Branch has decided to follow the lead of New Toronto in respect of the dumping of fill into lake Ontario, which is the senior level of government, the private developers, the village of Long Branch or the Department of Public Works?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot ask the minister for a legal opinion.

Mr. Cowan: I would not welcome it from him anyway.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, in an effort to prove to this house that the filling in of lake Ontario is not a laughing matter, may I ask whether the government is accepting the challenge of the village of Long Branch in defying the order of the engineering branch of the Department of Public Works to stop filling in the lake.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This second question is not acceptable because it is argumentative.

FISHERIES

COUNTRIES PERMITTED TO FISH WITHIN 12 MILE LIMIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that he is reported as having said yesterday that Canada now is enforcing the 12 mile limit measured from the sinuosities of the coast against fishing vessels from certain countries, could the minister say how many countries or preferably which countries are still being allowed to fish within such 12 mile limit?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the only countries which are still allowed to fish within the 12 mile limit are those countries which have entered into a treaty with Canada and those which have established a historic right. Perhaps the hon. member is prompted to ask his question in view of a press report this morning to the effect that the U.S.S.R. and Japan have such a right. The situation is not so.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the minister indicate which countries have been prevented?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that both questions are out of order. Perhaps I should not have accepted the first question by the hon. member for Queens, because it is the type of question which relates to debate which might take place in the house and is one which normally should be placed on the order paper.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

PROVISION FOR ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT OF SPECIAL AREAS

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-151, to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the present bill, No. C-151, will establish a fund for economic development which will add greatly to the scope and flexibility of the ARDA program. Before examining the purposes and administration of this fund in more detail, I think it is desirable to describe the general context of the ARDA program so that hon. members will be able to see why such a fund is necessary and will see how the proposed fund can deal with the gap which now exists in the ARDA program.

Hon. members are familiar with the ARDA legislation which was amended this session. They are equally familiar with the program which has come into effect across Canada since the act was unanimously approved by parliament on June 21, 1961. Before proceeding further I should like to give appropriate recognition to the part played by the minister of agriculture of the day, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), because I believe that ARDA is one of the most useful and well conceived pieces of legislation on the Canadian statute books.

Rural Development

During the two and a half year initial pilot period under the first federal-provincial general ARDA agreement, some 735 projects involving alternate uses of land, soil and water conservation, research and community development were put into effect. These involved a federal commitment of approximately $35 million. Since the termination of the first general agreement nearly a year ago, the program has been continued and intensified under the federal-provincial rural development agreement.

There is reason, I believe, for great satisfaction in the way in which the ARDA program has developed. Many hundreds of worth-while projects have unquestionably improved the environment and circumstances of rural people, and many programs by other agencies, both public and private, have been modified in some degree because of ARDA to accommodate more closely to the realities of the modern rural situation. In short, ARDA has accomplished much both directly and indirectly.

However, it is now possible for ARDA to accomplish more. Many, perhaps most of the ARDA projects to date represent an intensification of alternate land use and farm adjustment programs which had been in effect previously. It is understandable that ARDA did not concentrate on more comprehensive projects because both the provinces and the federal government required time to do physical, social and economic research in considerable depth, to develop staff, to plan rural development programs and to establish ARDA within their system of priorities.

Certain facts have become apparent as the ARDA program progressed. First, it became obvious at a fairly early stage of the program that the problem of low incomes in rural Canada could not be solved within the agricultural sector alone. Even if all the low income farms could be enlarged, improved or consolidated, there would still remain a considerable problem of rural low income. Second, it became equally apparent that some rural regions were so hamstrung by poverty, lack of social capital and poor educational opportunity that no ordinary program of resource adjustment and rural manpower development could hope to greatly improve their situation in a reasonable time. It is this latter fact which impelled this government to take the special approaches which are implicit in the bill before the house today.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

• (3:40 p.m.)

Before discussing the more particular problems of the rural areas which are relevant to Bill C-151, I will refresh the memory of the hon. members by repeating certain statistics on poverty which were assembled by ARDA and published in various combinations during the past several years. Mr. Speaker, I have two pages of tables which I should like to have tabled, without reading them, by unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister simply wish to table these documents or is he requesting that they be printed as part of Hansard?

Mr. Sauvé: I should like to have them printed as part of the text of my speech, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The tables referred to above are as follows:]

Table I—Some Indicators of Rural Poverty in Canada by Province

Mr. Sauvé: These figures were, of course, based on the census of 1961. However, it would be optimistic to assume that the absolute figures have altered substantially for the better. Children in many rural regions still grow up with few opportunities, and the great technological revolution in agriculture and the other primary industries has by no means run its course.

I would like to explain, briefly, Mr. Speaker, what those statistics mean when they are taken out of the cold generalities formulated by the statistician.

Those statistics show that, in rural areas, half a million families live in poverty, that is over 2 million Canadians.

I am calling on some remarks included in the report of a study made recently for ARDA by the Canadian Welfare Council. Those statistics show the existence of poverty that is not due to a moral failure but to a lack of possibilities and outlets in rural areas.

One could find that out easily by reading the 200 pages of the report of the Canadian Welfare Council and several members have already done so. That document outlines the life of 300 Canadian families whose members are for the most part honest and very hard-working people. A thousand similar reports could be prepared without giving the full picture of the situation of those unhappy people who fight to survive in our society where affluence prevails in general.

Mr. Caouette: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sauvé: How is it then that those people are reduced to almost total helplessness in a society which is well organized and generally effective?

Mr. Caouette: But badly organized.

Mr. Sauvé: Why are so many people in rural areas living in poverty? I do not think that is because of character deficiencies or lack of personal initiative. It is due rather to the lack of a rational and organized way of dealing with the present potentialities in rural areas.

Mr. Caouette: Especially the pocketbook.

Mr. Sauvé: The federal program called ARDA can and wants to support the provincial efforts aimed at solving problems of that kind throughout Canada. A great deal of progress has already been made.

It would be tragic, however, if Canada acted too late and did too little to really succeed in bringing a higher standard of living to the rural population. Most important human values are concerned. Such values are not only the obvious and negative aspects of human misery.

If we, that is all the other Canadians, walk the other way, feeling that it is not our responsibility to organize our society in order to serve the have-nots among us, our lack of interest will have repercussions on the vitality of our society. If we cannot do it, what can we really expect?

There is another side to the question which we cannot forget. It is true that the country's production and consumption potential shows, at the present time, a heavy decline because hundreds of rural areas are at a standstill, underdeveloped and underproductive. That potential could certainly be evaluated at several billion dollars.

[English]

The statistics on rural poverty which have been assembled and published in map form by ARDA during the past several years indicate that problem of rural low income is general throughout many areas of Canada where the land, climate or marketing conditions are not especially favourable. The normal ARDA program, which includes research, land use adjustment and farm adjustment, rehabilitation and soil and water conservation, is well under way. We can foresee that the basic ARDA program, together with the many related programs pertaining to the manpower, education and the like, can with proper application prove adequate to meet the broad problem of rural low income over a number of years. However, it is obvious from the statistics and from the detailed studies carried out that many rural areas have economic, social and resource use problems of such magnitude that extraordinary measures will be required to solve them.

The fund for rural economic development is one of these extraordinary measures. It is designed as a special weapon to help deal with areas in which rural development requires a coherent and comprehensive approach. Let me describe in detail three examples of such areas in eastern Quebec, northern New Brunswick and the Interlake region of Manitoba.

Beginning with the Interlake area, we find a large area of about 12,000 square miles which is relatively thinly populated by 61,000 people. These are people of various ethnic backgrounds, mainly of northern and eastern Europe but include about 8,000 Indian and Metis. In the main the citizens of the Interlake area carry out mixed farming operations with some ranching and dairy farming. Some are occupied with the major inland fishery that exists on lake Winnipeg and adjacent lakes and others are engaged in producing gravel, gypsum and limestone.

Of the 3,346 farms in the area, only 8 per cent sold more than $5,000 worth of products annually. About one-third of the farms sold between $1,200 and $2,500 worth of products annually and the remaining 40 per cent sold less than $1,200 worth of products annually. These figures relate to the 1961 census.

A further 3,200 of the men of the region are employed as fishermen. During the fishing season of 1961 and 1962 they marketed a little more than $3½ million worth of fish. The average gross income of these men was $689.

From this information, it is easy to see that there is a relatively low average standard of living in this area. During the past several years the Manitoba government has carried out a very broad and comprehensive research program in the Interlake area, with the federal government paying 100 per cent of the cost through ARDA. This research program, which cost approximately $400,000, provided detailed information on the natural resources of the area. Also, a great number of possible projects for development of the region were studied in detail, with a full analysis of the economics of possible development projects and with equal attention to the very important sociological problem of getting local people to participate in programs which might require changes of occupation or moves to other areas.

One might sum up the results of this research program by saying that it has revealed in detail economic and social problems of the Interlake area which are so acute that nothing short of a major, comprehensive program of development, and resource adjustment can hope to provide these 60,000 Canadian citizens with a decent opportunity for productive and satisfying lives. Anything less than this would be unable to bring this region any significant degree of economic vitality and social improvement. It is like some of the modern antibiotics; too small a dose merely cures the symptoms of the disease for a time, after which it emerges more violently than before.

We expect that the government of Manitoba will request participation in the fund for rural economic development to help finance the major program they are planning for development of the Interlake area. We do not yet know the details of their development program, but we expect that it will provide for basic improvements in primary and secondary education, adult education and technical training, further development of the transportation system, resource adjustment programs, resource development programs and measures to stimulate business and industry. I can assure hon. members that such brief statements relative to a regional development program have tremendous implications when they are being translated from words to action. For example, the Manitoba government has already organized seven or eight area development boards in the Interlake area in order to enable local people to participate in the studies and in the planning. Educational groups have been organized to bring adequate knowledge of present and future programs to the people who will be affected by the programs.

At the provincial and federal levels of government co-operation is essential among the numerous agencies which have a role to play in the comprehensive development program, and I am most pleased to note that co-operation among the various government agencies is improving constantly as each agency more clearly perceives its role and the role of other agencies. I may state my conviction that one of ARDA's most significant contributions to rural development has been that ARDA has provided a sort of reference point for the planning of many private and public agencies. This has resulted in a breadth of view and a degree of co-operation which had previously been in some degree lacking.

In Quebec, the pilot-area for ARDA development extends east of Rivière-du-Loup along the south shore of the St. Lawrence. It includes the Gaspé Peninsula and the Magdelen Islands. Its 16,000 square mile territory offers limited resources to the 325,000 inhabitants scattered in some 250 communities located mostly along the coast.

The area is far less urbanized that most of the other parts of the country. In 1961, its agricultural population was 83,000 and the non-agricultural rural population numbered 130,000. Approximately 38 per cent of the active population found employment in the lumber industry, agriculture, fishing or mining, that proportion being two and a half times greater than the figure for Quebec as a whole. Only 17 per cent worked in secondary industries, as compared with 28 per cent for the whole province.

The per capita income was lower in the pilot-area than in the rest of the province, namely $700 per annum as compared to $1,206 per annum. Almost a third of all income of any kind came from transfers from the federal or the provincial governments. These payments, totalling $83 million, equalled the total value of goods manufactured in the area. Unemployment often reached up to 35 per cent of the population during six months of the year.

It was obvious that such a situation cannot be tolerated in an affluent society. Accordingly, the Quebec government set up in the area, thanks to considerable financial assistance from the federal government, a research and social stimulation program under the terms of ARDA.

As a result of intensive work over a period of three years, the Quebec government is now able to launch a vast overall program of rural readaptation and development.

These three years of work clearly show that the inhabitants of the region can react most dynamically when the occasion arises. During the winter of 1964-65, 5,000 of them took courses to qualify for grades 7, 8 and 9.

In view of this, it would be intolerable to allow this enormous economic and social waste to continue through a laissez-faire attitude on the part of the government. The fund for rural economic development, which is to be established by Bill No. C-151, now before the house, is the answer of the federal government to this sort of situation. I believe the Quebec government will soon present a detailed plan which will help us to make proper use of the fund in this vast pilot-area suffering from such economic imbalance.

[English]

To conclude the examples of regions in which the fund is applicable, I will turn to the ARDA pilot region in New Brunswick. This region, located south of the Bay of Chaleur, comprises 3,350 square miles and in 1961 had a population of 106,000. A little more than three-quarters of the people are Acadians. This region differs from most other parts of Canada in that its rural non-farm population is rising. While the rural non-farm population of Canada as a whole dropped to 19 per cent during the 1950's, the rural non-farm population in this region rose from 46 per cent in 1951 to 61 per cent in 1961. In Canada as a whole, rural farm and rural non-farm people represent 30 per cent of the total population. In this region they represent 70 per cent. The income per family is about one third of the Canadian average. Unemployment varies from 6 per cent in summer to 30 per cent in winter.

• (4:00 p.m.)

The educational situation reflects the economic situation. In 1961, 15 per cent of the labour force of the area had no schooling. In Canada as a whole the figure is 5 per cent. Less than one third of the whole labour force had achieved a grade four education. Less than one third of the young people of 15 to 19 years were in school. One quarter of the teachers of the region have not gone beyond grade nine. I hope that hon. members will consider this last statement carefully. Imagine how an intelligent, eager child must surely and quickly lapse into frustration and apathy when forced to accept the poor quality of instruction which an uneducated teacher, however well-intentioned, is able to impart. It is like trying to grow plants without water and sunshine. If hon. members saw the television program "Inquiry" a year and a half ago, which made a report on this region, they must have been shocked at the terrible situation of the families living in this area.

There is no need to say more. Only by large capital investments, by a new, careful and general land redistribution and by other measures strong enough to change the way of life of each community, can we hope to end the poverty of these Canadians. In this region, as in others I have mentioned, ARDA teams—which are groups of experts in economic and social development—are deciding on plans of action. The special fund provided for by Bill No. C-151 is indispensable for these programs; it will bring an economic impetus which will counter the social and economic stagnation now holding back thousands of our rural people and preventing Canadians from making the contribution they might if they had the opportunity.

It is essential to assert that the government does not want the fund to be used in the form of transfers. The fund will not serve as a disguised social welfare program nor as a program whose sole objective would be to give work to the unemployed. It will not be used to support the economy in areas having unsufficient resources to ever be able to provide a reasonable income to its citizens. The fund will be used to develop promising resources and provide other opportunities for resourceful people. Because it is concentrated on relatively small areas whose needs are great and whose economic potential is adequate, instead of being diluted right across the country, the fund should give impressive results over a few years. By this I mean that we can expect to see these areas work much better socially in about ten years and much more rationally from the economic standpoint.

I must say that in planning the creation and the application of the fund, we have considered similar plans developed in the United States and in Europe and taken advantage of their experience; we have developed our programs after consulting all the provinces of Canada and with their consent.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

[English]

Our intention under ARDA is not simply to adopt a welfare approach, which alleviates problems but does not solve them. Rather our practice will be to gather the facts, to evolve a strategy of development. On the basis of a plan for the most rational form of development and adjustment the programs are carried forward in a co-ordinated and planned way. ARDA seeks always to achieve the best possible combination of public investment and participation by the local people. ARDA seeks the most efficient investment for basic improvement of the region's capacity to provide a sound base for the economy. There is no thought of making transfer payments or creating employment by artificial means. Investments are selected and priority is given to projects which will achieve the maximum effect within the human resources and financial resources which are available.

The special fund for rural economic development will be employed to finance development and adjustment programs which cannot be financed by other public programs, whether federal, provincial or joint programs, including the normal ARDA program. The fund will be applied on the basis of joint agreements with the provinces which will set forth the strategy for development of the area and will outline the development program and the arrangements to carry it out. Provinces in the process of developing plans for application of the fund include Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

The approach now being considered offers promise of greatly improving the situation in certain low income rural regions of Canada. It is doubtful that any other program approach could succeed within a reasonable time. The fund for rural economic development will be administered by the rural development administration of the Department of Forestry, which also administers the ARDA program. The fund is intended to finance certain rural development projects and programs under comprehensive rural development plans for certain problem areas. The fund will be employed to implement such plans in special rural development areas which are rural areas that warrant a comprehensive, co-ordinated approach to economic and social development because they are subject to widespread low income and have major adjustment problems but have recognized developmental potentials.

The comprehensive rural development plans for these areas under this act will be implemented through agreements with the provinces. These agreements, as authorized by the act, will allow the federal government to undertake directly parts of the approved comprehensive special rural development area program, or to undertake parts of one program while the province undertakes other parts, or to share the costs of projects and programs undertaken by the province.

A proposed comprehensive rural development program will involve the following steps: (a) the undertaking of the necessary studies and research to determine the main development and adjustment problems of the area, and its potential; (b) it requires the involvement of local people through the establishment of rural development committees who will take part in the planning process; (c) it then requires the preparation of comprehensive rural development plans for the area, and (d) the implementation of the projects and programs in the plan to increase income and employment and to raise standards of living for the people of the area.

The joint federal-provincial agreements under the act will set forth a general strategy to develop the area and the programs and projects which will be implemented. They will set down the role of each level of government in implementing the plan.

The kinds of development projects and programs that may be implemented are not restricted. However, those projects and programs which may be carried out by existing federal and provincial agencies will be carried out by them.

It is proposed that in those projects to be carried out by the provinces the federal cost-sharing will vary, depending on the priority allotted to the project or program in the over-all plan.

It is proposed that the projects and programs under the plan will be of the three types:

1. Projects allowed for under the general ARDA program. Moneys from the fund may be employed to increase the federal financial contribution for some of these projects under the comprehensive plans.

2. Other federal and provincial programs which will be financed in the normal on-going way.

3. Major developmental projects under the plan which are specifically required for these areas, and the federal participation in which will be financed entirely from the fund.

The federal government will retain considerable initiative in a number of ways:

1. The federal government will participate in the research and studies.

2. Direct federal programs will be required to implement some parts of the plan.

3. The federal government will jointly participate only in those parts of the program which are believed to be in the national interest, and the priority attached to them will be expressed in the degree of federal participation.

The advisory board provided for under the act has a particularly important function. Since the plan will propose direct participation or direct action by federal agencies, and will propose joint projects which are in the fields of interest of a number of federal agencies and departments, it is essential that the officers of these agencies be actively involved at the senior level. The board will assure that interdepartmental co-ordination is achieved to implement the plans, and that a number of federal departments are actively engaged. It will help assure the required mix and balance and integration of the various programs.

No simple, single unco-ordinated program approach will prove effective. The board will not only assure co-ordination but will assure program input at a senior level in the federal administration. The active participation of the people affected will be promoted at the regional level. The act permits and provides a framework for joint federal-provincial planning and program implementation to tackle directly the difficult problems of these low income rural areas.

The effective co-ordination of the programs of a number of provincial and federal agencies and departments involves rather complex administrative and organizational problems, but we believe that this act provides a program framework within which this can be done effectively.

From what I have said hon. members can see that the fund for rural economic development is an important weapon in our arsenal against rural poverty. It is a tool which provides what has been previously missing, a method of framing comprehensive development plans for the regions of Canada which most need help. This proposal provides a vital means to an urgently necessary end. It is a proposal that deserves the support of all hon. members of the house.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I think I can speak on behalf of all the members in all parties on this side of the house when I thank the minister for giving us not only the general aims and objectives of this legislation but also for being courteous enough to tell us something about what has been done in detail. I think what the minister has done today could be an example for other ministers in the government. By giving us a statement that has been clear, comprehensive and non-partisan he has provided us with an opportunity to discuss the subject in the manner in which it should be discussed. I do not believe there is any question but that there is no place for partisanship in a discussion of a subject like poverty, whether it be at the rural level or the urban level.

The problem that affects the industrialized nations of the world, where the wealth of those who are doing well increases steadily, is that you have in the midst of this affluence a body of poor in the cities and rural areas who do not seem to be able to take advantage of the updraft in the economy. If they are left too long in this environment they simply begin to think it is a way of life. Then you have a deep sociological problem which cannot be resolved by government action. It is a question of changing the attitude of the people concerned.

Having said these things and realizing, I think, that the minister is emotionally involved with these people, I think the job of the members of the opposition should be to discuss this legislation in principle, conveying the ideas that we believe are worthy of commendation to the house as well as pointing out what might be improvements. First of all, this legislation, when enacted by parliament, creates a fund which is to be administered by the minister and an advisory board and upon which special areas of this country will be able to draw for special projects. This measure will be placed alongside the ARDA program. In my judgment it gives some chance to control the expenditure of money for this particular type of development in special areas.

I think this principle is good. It allows those who have control of the finances of our country to establish more clearly what the criteria of the program are and to assess if the money is being well spent rather than have moneys provided for an overall ARDA program. In order to refresh the memories of hon. members as to the purpose of ARDA, I may say it was set up originally with three purposes in mind. The first was land use. Land use programs really can only be carried out by government. They are strictly a federal or provincial government operation.

The second purpose of ARDA was the conservation of land and water. This is a physical task which, once again, is usually beyond the financial and physical capabilities of the individual farmer. This too will be largely a government operation.

The third purpose of ARDA was rural development. In this regard you muster all the human resources of the area, not only those who are not doing too well but the business and professional people. The government services available bring all these human resources together in a joint effort to try to lift the income level of the area. It is under this section of ARDA that this particular bill applies. Under the bill a fund of $50 million is to be established upon which the minister and his advisory board can call to help in those areas which are designated as special areas.

The minister has described three special areas in Canada. One is the Interlake area of Manitoba. The second is the lower St. Lawrence on the south side, including the Magdalen Islands, while the third area is in northern New Brunswick. In his statement the minister mentioned the C.B.C. program concerning one of these counties in northern New Brunswick. I watched that show and listened to it. I do not believe you can say anything else but that no nation can stand idly by and allow a situation like that to continue. These are essentially sound, moral people, but you could tell from their conversation that their faith in themselves and their hope for the future had almost disappeared. They did not know what to do. This program will enable us to bring them help.

There was another program in the same series dealing with a county near Ottawa. The difference between these two counties was clearcut. I believe the county in New Brunswick was Gloucester. The people of the county in Ontario had not lost faith. They were struggling to stay off relief. They believed in their land and believed that their country would produce a way of life for them. They were ready and willing to take on any challenge they were given. A county like this could be easily made into a pilot project under ARDA because here you have the human resources ready and willing to take the risks and to work. The people have a reputation for great mental capacity, as the evidence concerning schools shows. They have the reputation for being hard workers. But above all they have the reputation for having a moral fibre unmatched in any other part of the world. When you go through the spectrum from the extreme case at one end to cases at the other end not too difficult to rehabilitate, I suggest that in between there are many cases of need.

I have gone into this background in the hope that the remarks I am now going to make will be considered by the minister in a constructive fashion.

The first point I want to make has already been made to the minister by me in the house and it deals with the question of constitutional responsibility. Under the present constitution agriculture is a joint responsibility. The federal government can do anything it wants under the constitution in relation to agriculture in any province. The provincial government can do anything it wants within its own province. There is complete power for both governments to do anything they want.

However, when you begin to look at the needs of the people in these lower income areas you soon find you cannot redevelop these areas unless you use all of the resources such as the forests, the fish, industry and recreation, and these particular functions are outside the constitutional responsibility of the federal government. For half a century we have had to stand by and watch the relative lowering of incomes in these areas because of the excuse that the federal government had no responsibility in that field. In many cases the provinces felt that they did not have the financial capacity.

The great feature of ARDA, Mr. Speaker, was that we enabled every province without exception to agree that because of the great need of these people we could forget in this particular legislation any thought about the favourite tool of the partisan politician, which is quarrelling over the constitution. In this particular legislation there were no party differences. In this legislation there were no provincial rights or federal or centralized rights advocates. We were Canadians trying to help the people who needed help. If this concept is clearly in the mind of the minister, then I have no fear for the future. I think he grasped the warning I gave him some months ago.

With regard to the activities of ARDA I have noticed that over and over again the minister has repeated that nothing will be done by the federal government unless they receive a recommendation from the province. I stated in the house that this practice was making him the most centralist minister the country had ever known. I did not make this accusation to bother the minister politically. I was simply pointing out that when you are working with the provinces and trying to solve problems which require the use of their sovereign fields of jurisdiction or those of the federal government, then you must have great flexibility.

For example, if the province of Quebec wants to take government action under this legislation—call it socialism if you like—then let them be; that is not our concern. Our task is to get the job done. If the province of Manitoba wants to use the uplifting force of private enterprise to achieve the same objective of raising income, then let them be.

In other words, what I was complaining about at that time was this. I know from long experience in dealing with organizations like Treasury Board, committees of cabinet and committees of civil servants that those bodies all try to put their own imprint on any proposed legislation. If any way can be found to delay a good program until every shoe lace has been tied they will find it, because they are the experts.

The minister will need to take a firm hand in administering the ARDA legislation to see that no group in Ottawa, be they advisory board, committee, Treasury Board or otherwise, breaks the minister's will to make certain that the job is done. That is the first point I want to raise.

My second point is very important and must be raised now. It is becoming very clear to me, as the federal government now moves from the stage where it provides money to carry out planning operations for 2,000 projects across the country, that sometimes the planning involved is purely federal and sometimes a study is jointly supported by both federal and provincial governments. With all these studies pouring into the minister's department the time for action has now come.

This is the significance of this bill. A fund is being created to handle those special areas where it is clearly indicated that something has to be done on a mass, comprehensive basis rather than on an individual, small locality basis.

What is my proposal? My proposal is that we have to have some type of federally operated agency to carry out the purposes of ARDA, and ARDA includes this special area of rural development. I should like to suggest a name for this agency which we now need and which should be in existence. The minister may change it if he likes, but I would suggest it be called the national land and water services agency. My reason for naming it in that way will become clear as I speak.

In 1934 we set up in Canada an agency under what is known as the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. As one of those who survived the dust storms of the thirties I look back over the period of nearly 30 years and see what has been accomplished by P.F.R.A., mainly in the southern part of the three prairie provinces, and I have to ask myself why this was not also accomplished in all of Canada.

There are good, consitutional reasons why it was not done. However, now that every single government accepts that the ARDA legislation goes beyond the constitution, I would suggest that if the minister would work out in collaboration with P.F.R.A. the machinery which would have to be set up, the type of administration which would have to be applied and the rules applicable thereto, a bill could then be brought into the house to set up such an organization. I have suggested a name for it which represents what I think the government will find it will have to take part in. If you are going to have land use measures put into effect as a joint proposition between the federal government and the provinces, then some agency will be required to carry them out. If you are going to carry out conservation of land and water some sort of agency will be required to administer the program, particularly in these rural development areas.

To increase incomes in these areas you have to do things such as draining the muskeg, building dams or half a dozen other things that come to mind which will increase income. Then you have the job of scrambling around trying to find someone to carry out such a program, someone who can assess the cost for you. You need an advisory board to tell you what it should cost. This is one of the proper functions of P.F.R.A. If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) is faced with the proposition of doing something of a physical nature, he needs the P.F.R.A. engineers to provide him with an estimate of the cost. Sometimes this is not done by the federal government. The province may do it but the federal government may have some agency that can advise.

The point I want to leave with the minister is that over and over again the provincial governments do not have the machinery for this sort of thing. Why should a province like Manitoba maintain the expensive machinery of P.F.R.A. to handle redevelopment programs? They are glad to turn that sort of thing over to P.F.R.A., sometimes paying part of the cost themselves. When farmers build dugouts, they have them inspected by officials from P.F.R.A., and that is all. But we should have an agency that checks on government expenditures, developments, land use and conservation.

Sir, I should like to propose here a national land and water services agency which would carry out purely federal operations not only relating to ARDA but to other departments as well. It would carry out co-operative programs between the provinces and the federal government. Obviously it would have to work with all departments and not just with ARDA.

Such an agency could assist those provincial governments which do not want to maintain the necessary large staff with skilled people to carry out operations of the sort I have mentioned. For instance, in the case of a dam it takes years to build a staff to plan and construct the dam. Once the dam is finished, the staff are thrown out of work. But if you had a national agency employing such people they could be moved around. A province would not need to ask for help because such services would be officially provided. Under such an organization any work of this kind could be better and more efficiently undertaken.

Next I want to deal with the question of the advisory board. On reading the bill I was a little disturbed about the advisory board. I will not discuss the bill in detail at this stage but just put my thoughts before the house in a general way.

My first reason for being disturbed is that there is something lacking in the bill. It does not show any indication of awareness on the part of those who drafted the bill that ARDA is subservient to and always must be subservient to the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers. I think I have told the minister privately, and if I have not told him publicly I do so now, that the ARDA legislation agreement with all ten provinces was more than just a written document. It was the work of two federal ministers sitting in this house at the present time. I refer to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) and myself. We gave our word that ARDA, being a device primarily to raise the income of agricultural areas, would always be under the over-all umbrella of the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers which is, under the very sophisticated reasons behind its establishment, responsible to the two levels of government to see that there is no overlapping of functions between federal and provincial governments as well the minimum possible clash in the proposed use of land, water and air. If I am incorrect in this assessment I know that my colleague from Brandon-Souris will correct me.

I remember the provincial ministers who attended that meeting in the office of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources agreeing that if it was the solemn pledge of the federal government that ARDA was not a way of imposing the federal government's authority in agriculture upon the provincial jurisdiction, they would go along with it. They recognized that there are other types of uses for land besides agricultural uses and that it would not do to work so hard to redevelop agriculture as to affect unfavourably forestry, recreation or wild life interests.

That is an understanding which was not written into the legislation but was to be honoured and passed on from one government to another. I am disturbed about this advisory board. I am disturbed that there is no mention that the viewpoints and decisions of the advisory board and the minister with regard to special areas will be passed on to the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers. Perhaps it is not necessary to put that into the bill but perhaps it is necessary to state it publicly. It is important to reassure the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers that we look on them as the over-all resource body covering fisheries ministeries both federal and provincial forestry ministries both federal and provincial, and all the various ministers. This body must be the umbrella under which we all operate.

The terms of the bill I will not refer to in detail but they can be read in this framework. The bill does not mention the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers. If one reads the bill carefully it seems to suggest that the special areas fund has been put into a secondary position. For instance, if any other agency can do a job the proposed agency in the bill must back away from the job. It seems to have the power to veto decisions of the minister and the board. I am not going to say any more about that. I think I can say what I have to say more precisely when discussing the details in committee.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by making some general comments. The minister was good enough to give us a description of what has been happening in the Interlake region of Manitoba, in northern New Brunswick, in the Gaspé and elsewhere. I have only looked at the report dealing with the Interlake area. It was a good report and well worth the money spent on it. However, I am sure the Minister of Forestry has spotted as I did that the potential of forestry for lifting up the incomes of these rural people has been overlooked.

I expressed this view privately to my friends in Manitoba. You always have to watch these prairie governments. They are so concerned about traditional agriculture that it is difficult to get them to look beyond that furrow and realize there is money in trees. This must be done and this is where the task of the minister comes in.

I have not been able to read the other reports. However, at this time I should like to pay a small tribute to Mr. Hutton, the Minister of Agriculture in Manitoba. I served under Mr. Hutton for a number of years. I do not think any minister of agriculture in any province would mind my saying that I have never met a minister more dedicated, more outspoken on behalf of farmers, or who tried harder to get them to raise their incomes by doing new things, than Mr. Hutton. He has decided to leave his high position in public life and go into the pulpit as a minister. I could not let this opportunity pass without paying tribute to a man who has done great work not only for Manitoba farmers but for farmers all across this country.

Another suggestion I wish to make is one that is going to be very difficult to work out. In deciding how much money should go into various operations there is the power under ARDA, and I believe under this legislation, to use the basis of need. I think hon. members understand what I mean. You do not take the number of people living in an area and say that help to them will work out at so many dollars per head. You take their need for help, into consideration. Whether the money goes to the interlake area or northern New Brunswick is not our concern. I do think that if there were discussions between the various ministers across the country, they would support the concept, if is is left up to them, of allocating the money on the basis of need.

There is a clause in the bill which says that the advisory board must meet at least once a year. I hope that was not put in for any real purpose. If there is a year's delay in waiting for the board to meet and give its commitment to any program that has been worked out, this will hold up arrangements much more than the present set-up. During the next 10, 15 or 20 years the advisory board will have to meet frequently because nothing is so frustrating to local groups who produce an idea and get the approval of the province and the minister's office than to have to wait months for the advisory board to meet. Local people must see action. They are not as patient as civil servants trained to wait for decisions.

These are small points but I wanted to make them. I was very glad to hear the minister say that he will not use this legislation for social welfare or for the relief of unemployment. These are not the purposes of ARDA. These are not the purposes of rural development. Leave relief and work on dams and roads to other local, provincial and federal programs. Do not spoil long-range legislation designed to build permanently the income capacity of areas. If these other things are mixed up in it they will kill the long-range program.

The minister is quite right that this is not a transfer payment type of legislation. This is social capital by way of investment that will be returned in higher incomes and a better standard of living for the people of Canada. If that purpose is maintained then this legislation is good.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it is not often that we have a debate on a subject as important as ARDA and the complementary program outlined in this bill. The minister's introductory remarks were non-partisan, obviously reflecting the thinking of the farm population and those involved in social service fields. The problem is serious enough to warrant non-partisan consideration and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) indicated his agreement with this approach.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

It is always a pleasure for me to listen to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, a former Conservative minister of agriculture, when he speaks about the ARDA program, because it is one in which his party is really able to take pride as being a completely new approach on a long-term basis to problems of people in all fields connected with the rural areas of our country. The ARDA approach is one that can be supported by people living in the rural environment and those in the urban communities. If the establishment of a manpower department has any vision such as that associated with ARDA, it will create a brighter picture for people in urban centres.

I wish to make several criticisms of the legislation before us. The minister gave no good reason for introducing this regional type of program rather than incorporating it under the ARDA program which already has regional divisions and makes allowance for the development of the type of program outlined today by the minister. It may be that the reason which the minister will eventually give will be that in the regional program the federal government will carry out projects in those areas of Canada where the need is greatest without necessarily having the support of provincial governments. If that were so then there would be some reason for making these two divisions, because in the case of the first there must be co-operation federally and provincially. But if the minister does not give this as the reason, then I feel we are going to have a duplication of staff and an increase in bureaucracy resulting in people tending to say: After you, Alphonse, it is not in my department.

If the minister wants to see an example of this he has only to look at the Department of Industry and its many branches covering regional development in the electrical field, the aircraft field and other industrial fields, each one a bureaucracy unto itself and with the minister not knowing what they are doing. With such diversification the stage is reached when everybody can pass the buck to somebody else without anybody doing anything about it. This is a criticism which is also made by farm organizations and, after all, an amount of $50 million is not so large to incorporate within the ARDA program where administrative machinery already exists.

I am not familiar with all the areas which the minister has selected. I have been in the Interlake area of Manitoba and agree with the comments the minister has made about it. The majority of the people there have a gross annual return of less than $5,000 from the sale of their produce. More than 40 per cent of them sell less than $1,200 worth of produce annually and they certainly are in dire need.

I believe the south shore of the St. Lawrence is the minister's own area and I presume one reason it is being given immediate attention is his complete knowledge of the people and conditions in that area. The minister mentioned the Magdalen Islands and the Gaspé area where conditions are the same, and that area does need assistance.

Incidentally the minister will have a great deal of difficulty in my opinion in developing a program in much of that area which will provide a solution to the problems of the people there because the problems they face involve the distance of the farms, even if they are economic, from the market and also the ability of the soil to produce diversified farm products. There is also the fact that educational standards in this area, as in many agricultural areas, are far below the national level and certainly much below the requirements which we believe are necessary for agricultural communities if they are to develop and place themselves on a firm base.

This raises the second point, Mr. Speaker, the matter of education. In Canada we find that our rural population is not in a good position to attain a reasonable or decent standard of living. So far as the agricultural population of Canada is concerned, educational standards are far below what is desirable and really needed for agricultural purposes. In my own riding we have a compact agricultural area in the little clay belt and I know that education in this rural area is almost nil. It is true that the children go to urban schools now and receive a fairly good education in a general sense, but not in the sense of equipping them to operate a farm. In order to be economic, a farm today has to be in the production range of $40,000 to $100,000. The type of education required to keep the books for this kind of unit, to make the necessary purchases and do the marketing, is not available.

It is quite true that the agricultural college at Guelph and some of the other agricultural schools throughout the province have provided limited leadership training for some of the farm people, but most of the young farmers have neither the money nor the time to leave home to obtain the type of education they need. I think the minister will have to consider the whole problem of education because it is high time we recognized the fact that it is no longer sufficient just to have a pair of overalls and get up at six o'clock in the morning and go to bed at ten o'clock at night after working all that time in order to be able to make a living. Farmers do that now and do not make a living. There are many people who are working as hard as they can and are giving of their best in an effort to make a success of their farm operation but are not able to do so simply because they have not had the education.

In order to farm well and make a reasonable income a great deal more training is necessary in many fields than has been given. I know this is a fact. When I am at the farm at New Liskeard which my father and brother operate I see my father sitting at his desk drawing pictures of cattle for registration purposes, working out his record of milk production, deciding whether or not he got beaten on the surplus milk price in relation to his quota for fluid milk or deciding how best to take advantage of the income tax structure of the federal government about this time of the year.

An hon. Member: Or reading Hansard.

Mr. Peters: I do not think he has time to read Hansard. I believe that 25 years ago this type of work was not necessary. Most farmers got along quite well if they had sufficient products to sell so that they were able to pay their debts at the rural store. If they were able to break even, they were all right; if not, they had to do a little better. If they went in the hole, the bank manager told them about it. Today, even with the very large loans provided and the other facilities available, they are in serious trouble.

I think one of the main problems of the farmers is their inability to duplicate what has been done in the field of industrial development in this country through retraining and technical training to qualify people for specific jobs in industry. We have failed to do this in the agricultural field. Innovations are being practised by farmers which, had the proper education been available, they would know had been tried and had been found unsuccessful.

As I have said many times, the ARDA program really represents the future for agriculture in Canada. It also is the future for a number of other aspects of our renewable resources. It can really provide the future for our forestry industry; it can provide the future for our recreation and tourist industry, and it certainly can provide the basis of a better future for Canadians to come. In all aspects ARDA will be operating in the renewable resource area. Any education now will provide opportunities for Canadians for many generations to come. If we act in a responsible manner the result will be evident for generations. I would not say for all time because it is hard to say what eventually will happen, but certainly in the foreseeable future much can be done.

The minister has indicated three areas in particular which are to be covered immediately under this program. I have no objection to the three areas he has chosen but I am quite sure every member in this house would be able to stand up and name other areas. I should like to know from the minister, however, what preliminary work has been done by the officials of ARDA which warranted the selection of these three areas. In selecting an area to come under this program I would think one would have to be assured that there was a possibility of changing its environment so that it might provide an economic income for the people left in that area.

I was shocked when the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) came into my area during the election campaign and made the statement that the Liberals had a program to solve the farm problem which was for the government to buy the farms, develop them and sell them back to the farmers. From watching the operation of the House of Commons I would say, God help the farmers if this should happen. If they are in bad shape now I hate to think what shape they would be in within a very short time if the administration of farms was taken over in this way.

To give an example of how bad the situation is in respect of agriculture, I notice in Votes and Proceedings that a meeting of the Agriculture, Forestry and Rural Development Committee is scheduled for this afternoon at 3.30 while the house is sitting. I do not know whether the committee met but they did not have the right to sit at this time because they had not made arrangements to do so. The fact that the introduction of this ARDA legislation today had been known for several days is an indication that really much is to be desired in respect of the operation of the house, but I will not go into that.

It does give an indication of what might happen if the government decided on an agricultural policy of buying up all farm land and selling it back to the farmers. This is an idiotic arrangement because all it would mean, if it meant anything, would be that we would have to have a sufficient number of people in the forestry department attached to the ARDA program to operate these units. Surely these people do not intend to get up as early in the morning or go to bed as late at night as the farmers must. It would be doubtful that they could do much better with the facilities available to them than the farmer can now do.

I presume the problem in the interlake area is similar to the problem in the New Brunswick area, although I am not familiar with the situation in the Gaspé or the Magdalen Islands. There must surely be large areas in the county of Gloucester, New Brunswick, as well as in the interlake area of Manitoba where there are small farming uneconomic units. It is doubtful that the farmers will be able to borrow enough money to establish economic units and pay for the extra land and equipment necessary to operate them.

The government through this policy may be able to amalgamate some of the small farming units so that the operators will be in a position to increase their earnings. It is also true that the government may be able to develop the potential of agriculture in some of these areas through reforestation rather than by developing the lands for agricultural purposes. Whatever we do in this regard must be accompanied by direction on the part of the federal government.

In relation to these possibilities the government must keep two factors in mind. There must be a sufficiently broad and comprehensive survey made of all projects to enable the government to be sure that there is a reasonable chance of success. The government must also take into consideration all the ramifications involved in moving rural people from an area which has been occupied by them for generations to urban communities. This transition must be undertaken in such a way that it will cause the least displacement of people in a social sense.

The government must take into consideration another problem which will be raised by the transfer of a segment of our population. Many individuals prefer to remain on farms or in rural areas even though they are uneconomic and do not provide the normal luxuries of a modern society because they prefer the rural environment. If and when these people are moved from these rural areas to urban centres consideration must be given to the question whether the areas to which they are to be moved can support them with whatever government assistance is to be provided.

I remember a speech made by the then minister of agriculture when the ARDA legislation was introduced in which he referred to the Renfrew area. This area is generally rocky and non-arable. The minister suggested that it should be devoted to a reforestation program with one man working perhaps 15,000 acres until the trees had reached maturity and allowing controlled cutting on a perpetual yearly basis. He suggested that this program would probably require the moving of 15 or 20 small family farm units.

I have often wondered whether these family farm units have any desire to be moved to the outskirts of urban areas where they would be completely at a loss to cope with existing circumstances because they might often find themselves without trades or training enabling them to fit in. In many instances their educational standards would be so low that it would be difficult to train them for new jobs which they would not want and which they had not asked for but which we had decided they should be given.

Would it not be much better to move these people into a small municipality with a post office, a small general store and perhaps a gas station where they would feel more at home? Perhaps under this legislation small factories could be established to provide these displaced farmers with a means to earn a living. I am not suggesting it would be necessary to provide schools and other urban facilities, but perhaps they could be provided with small acreage holdings in order that they could have gardens and live in a semi-rural atmosphere.

If the government does not give consideration to the problems I have mentioned I suggest that many of these farming families will eventually wind up living in the slums of our metropolitan areas. Surely it would be better to provide employment for them in suburban areas where they could breathe freely and feel more at home. As I said, perhaps factories or other small industries could be built under the provisions of the ARDA legislation in order to provide these people with an opportunity to make a living while at the same time enjoying the advantages of a rural environment.

I was raised on a farm myself and I have no desire to live in the city. I have no great desire to become a farmer but I do live in the country and enjoy the rural atmosphere. I think everyone who has moved from a metropolitan area to a suburban area has done so because of a basic desire to get away from the crowded conditions of cities and live in a rural atmosphere.

We must be very careful in this redevelopment that we give consideration to the feelings of the people who are going to be moved. Their co-operation can be obtained more easily and to a greater extent if the suggestion is that they be moved to a semi-rural environment in small communities where work can be obtained rather than to slums in urban areas in which they will feel completely out of touch.

I know that the minister is interested in the transitional problem. The amount now provided is very small. Although my arithmetic is very poor, if there are 50,000 units involved and the amount is $50 million, each family will receive about $1,000.

Mr. Laing: Perhaps you should ask the Social Credit people.

Mr. Peters: Surely that amount of money will not be sufficient to assist these people in the way envisaged.

Mr. Laing: The Social Creditors are better at multiplication than division.

Mr. Peters: I did not intend to cause this kind of a discussion, but I am sure the minister will agree that $50 million is not nearly sufficient to provide a solution to the problems of the three areas in question and the 250,000 people involved. The $50 million will only be enough to start the project. I am sure the minister will have no difficulty in obtaining more money when he comes back to the house because there is genuine support on all sides for this type of program.

In closing I should like to make this last comment. I hope the minister will be a centralist, which was the accusation levelled at him by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I hope the minister will keep tight control over the whole program. If there is any justification in this division, it is in the fact that the minister is able to maintain tight control over the program. There is no question that the other ARDA program became a political football of some of the provincial governments. In Ontario patronage is being practised to a great extent in regard to some of the projects that have been undertaken. I am not saying this is a bad thing, particularly in relation to the cases I know about; I do not think it has really hurt the program although it has been the cause of some political deception.

I hope the minister will keep really strong control over this program and that the provinces will not be allowed to sidetrack him in the development of a program for which the federal government will have to pay. I hope the minister will keep right on top of the program. If he wants advice, assistance and co-operation from the provinces, that is fine, but the program should not be jointly administered. If we are to take over one of these areas, let us take over and make it work. If it is successful we will know we are on the right track in achieving a solution for the Canadian rural problem. In that event we will be able to extend the program into other areas. If the minister operates a co-operative program we will never be sure which is the right method to be used in extending it into other areas because we will not know which program should be operated. Let us give the program a chance. I ask the minister to keep federal control over the program. If he does this I think he will have the support of every member of the house in trying to solve what is an immediate and very serious problem.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, first of all I must congratulate the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) for introducing Bill C-151 which, in conjunction with the ARDA program, will help to develop further the areas in need of help. I did not speak very long, approximately three of four minutes at the stage of the resolution because I wanted to keep what I had to say until the bill itself was introduced. It is always more interesting to speak when there is something to refer to than trying to guess what it is all about.

We will try not to keep the discussion going too long in order to vote those amounts as soon as possible. However, they should not be voted too quickly because there is an election campaign going on right now in Quebec and one knows that the province is always ready to make political hay out of such good things. Our province must not be trusted. I would not like to see a recurrence of what happened during my last election campaign, namely ARDA money being used for political purposes.

The minister explained his bill at length and did it well. He started by telling us about poverty in rural areas and ended by saying that something had been done. Some things have been done in the last three years but a lot remains to be done, and the best tool is always money. Those are briefly the general ideas of his speech.

With regard to poverty, Mr. Speaker, if I may talk about my region, and I must do it in order to make it better known to the minister, poverty in my region has increased particularly over the last thirty years. There is no need to make a socio-economic study to discover it. I live in that region and I know it. Between 30 and 35 per cent of the farmers earned a living from farming and approximately 60 per cent of them were part-time farmers and part-time loggers. Those who lived from farming have kept on doing so. Because of higher taxes, but especially the high price of mechanization, those farmers faced with bankruptcy because they have to buy machinery much too costly in proportion to their income, leave after 15 or 20 years. Some family estates were mortgaged, whereas farm lands often valued at $50,000 and $60,000, without any mortgage, were mortgaged to the hilt 15 or 20 years later. This is what we see today. Farmers are still making a living on their farms, but less than 3 per cent of the farms are not mortgaged. That is the first problem to solve.

Farm assistance was not granted in time and that was the first mistake. The governments failed to help those farmers to modernize their farms. All government appropriations went to help other provinces. I am not blaming these other provinces, they were lucky, but we have simply been forgotten. I am not blaming the federal government, far from it, but I do blame my own province which failed to take action at the proper time and which still has not done, and I will prove it later on, what it should have in order to use ARDA.

Those farmers who depended on their farms for a living have received no assistance when they should have, and now they are faced with bankruptcy. The last three years have been particularly bad for the farmers of my riding, because of the weather, the rain-making machine, the artificial rain. For three years in a row the farmers have not even produced enough to feed their own livestock. And, last fall, all dairy cattle herds were reduced by 50 per cent; half the herds had to be slaughtered. The result is being felt in the whole province of Quebec. In fact, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) told us we would have to import butter.

That is the reason why. Our area is productive, it is an excellent dairying region, but this year it will not be able to produce. It needs government assistance. Our farmers, with government assistance from both governments, can improve their lot, provided the governments face facts and put an end to playing politics and come to their help before they are forced to kill off their herds. That is the first reason.

There is another one, namely that the farmer does not live off agriculture, when he is half-farmer, and half-lumberjack. I lived through that period, for I am the son of a farmer. We had eight lots and yet we could not live off them. There were 16 children in the family and we could not live off the land. Such is the case with 60 per cent of our present-day farmers, especially since the last great depression. Lumbering was very easy. Father stayed home and four, five or six of his sons went to the lumber camps to get the money needed on the farm to buy tools and animals; the land was farmed a little, for the fun of it, just enough to obtain the required food. We never at that time considered making a living from the produce of the land.

What has happened, especially in the last 25 years? Lumber companies have grown modern, they were forced to do away with roughly two-thirds of their labour. Two-thirds of the lumbermen, two-thirds of these farmers' sons who used to go earn the money needed for their farms were laid off, because of mechanization, because logging was modernized. Some companies—there are four lumber companies in our area—that used to hire from 10,000 to 12,000 men hired 1,500 men this year. All those farmers' sons left the farm. They had to, naturally, because the governments, the members of parliament did not follow the march of progress. They failed to orient these farmers' sons in time. The latter were forced to quit the land; often the family head remained alone with his lots. Too old to farm them; he had to let them go. After eight, nine, ten years, unable to find a buyer, it would have cost too much to rehabilitate the land into production and he had to abandon it for lack of help from the government.

I feel that that is the reason why today people talk about the land having been deserted. It reminds me of the days during the depression where cities were being emptied and people sent to our farms; from that time on our area developed.

They developed those farms and, today, we have exactly the opposite. That same population is leaving to go back to the city. Why? Because when the father no longer gets unemployment insurance, he must get social assistance. He must be a tenant in the city. Note well: he has to be a tenant in the city. Formerly, to obtain social assistance, he had to go to the farm. This year, in order to get social welfare, he must be a tenant in the city because if he stays on the farm, without work, without any possibility of farming it, he will get no assistance. It is impossible for him to get any; he is told: "Go to the city, leave the farm, and then you can get help."

In the province of Quebec, 60 per cent of our farmers are in that position.

For four years now, I have been fighting in this house but I do not yet want to blame the government 100 per cent. We talk, but talk always ricochets. We try to advise the Minister of Forestry, so that when he meets our good agriculture minister in Quebec, he might make him understand what we have been harping on for four years. If the same assistance were given a family going to the city—it is expensive in the city—if the same welfare cheque were given to have it stay on the farm, that family would be much better off, because it would have a garden and keep some cattle, etc.

But no. We are doing the opposite of what was being done during the depression and we are doing the nonsensical thing, with the result that in my home town, 40 per cent of the population is getting welfare. These people come from all the small parishes because they cannot have welfare assistance at home. They give up their farms, give everything up and come to our town to try to survive.

If the amount of money we are voting today were liable to help the farmer who does not want to go into town, but who is forced by circumstances to do so, or to give him assistance that would at least help him start earning a livelihood on his land and, later on, to increase his holdings, we would have the satisfaction of knowing that we have been generous, because the minister is well aware that today, a farmer cannot live on 100 acres of land, he must increase his holdings.

Let us stop driving off a farmer with thirty years of experience and sending him into town to be on relief. Let us start by keeping him there for a few years, let us try to establish him, for the time being. I feel this is the worst we can do today, it is very poor tolerance. I note that the Government does not find it so. It is absolutely necessary that ARDA look to the old farm families to give them the necessary help.

I must admit that something has been done in the last three years, but in my area, particularly in Quebec, I think too much has been done—here again, I am not blaming any one, I am simply making the point to the minister—too much has been done on the study of each problem.

In other words, we have had the satisfaction of studying the percentage of our poverty and of crying over it. Even if more tears were to be shed on our poverty, this would not change anything.

It is all very well to study poverty, but others things are pressing, not only now, but they have been pressing for three years. Under ARDA, moneys have been granted—and I spoke of this before—for blueberry fields. If, at least, these subsidies had been properly organized to protect the family farm, as I was saying, instead of sending the families into town. Up to $95 were given to build blueberries fields on crown lands, uncultivated land where there was nothing at all. Yet, one of the aims of ARDA—the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) said so a while ago—is the use of cultivated lands. That is one of the aims of ARDA.

Grants were being made and it was under a provincial program; besides, I discussed the matter with the minister. It is obvious that everything cannot be controlled from here, in Ottawa, but I think the minister has a part to play; he can at least give advice. Blueberry unions were formed only with small-time friends of the party as members; they had their share of the grants and paid settlers and farmers $25, $30 or $35 and pocketed the $80.

In fact, I met the Quebec minister concerned and told him that if he could afford to give $70, he should give it to those farmers, in so far as they improved blueberry patches.

If this had been done, perhaps they could have saved 25 or 30 per cent of the land of those farmers who now live in the city on social welfare.

They boast that unemployment no longer exists. The minister has just said: "We have 33 per cent unemployment." For our part, we have 30 to 40 per cent who live on social welfare in our region. And the provincial minister tours the province boasting: "There is no more unemployment."

I tell you that those words are not quite plain. I refer to the Quebec minister when he says that there is no more unemployment.

Mr. Lachance: The good Quebec minister.

Mr. Gauthier: I do not want to talk too much about him. However, the facts are there.

But ARDA money must absolutely help the farmer. Let us stop making studies, let us stop pouring everything into study groups.

I read also in the bill that an advisory board consisting of ten senior officials would be appointed. I am filled with apprehension when I see such a board consisting of ten senior officials but not one single member of the area, not one single member of the UCC Catholic Farmers' Union. It is interesting to have officials; there should be five officials and five members of the area, five members from the Catholic Farmers' Union, of the parish council that is where information should be sought. If you want to be useful, you must seek information. If you want to know the actual situation in an area, you will achieve nothing with ten men, ten bureaucrats from Ottawa; these officials know nothing of the Roberval area.

For instance, appoint in your advisory board, members of the Catholic Farmers' Union, members of the Council for Economic Orientation and of the council of Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean. Even the member of parliament will be able to give you good information. We are elected by the people, as you are. Why leave us aside? We are elected to work for the people. Do you think it is because we are in the opposition that we will allow anything to be done without saying a word? On the contrary. We are here to protect the interests of the people and you can be sure that we will protect them.

Now we are told that there is much to be done. There remains a great deal to do—and I want to close on this thought—to save the family farm.

I hope the minister is not in favour of the principle of the community farms, because I would not agree at all.

He has succeeded in trying out this system of community farms, but we are now coming back to family farms. A direction must be given to save the family farm; the family lot must be enlarged. This is essential, because the basic principle of agriculture in the province of Quebec is the family farm.

I heard a good minister, in Quebec if you please, 100 per cent socialist, Mr. René Levesque, say that the state had to take control of everything and that it was the end of private enterprise.

I am completely against that. I submit it is private enterprise that built up the country and that will develop it; it is through it that we will prosper. As long as we have socialist ideas, we will have the same headaches as today and I think the province of Quebec will not be rid of them soon, administrated as it is by all those socialists.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the tool mentioned by the minister, that is, the $50 million we will vote, will really help economic development. The objective of ARDA, when established, was first the use of farmlands, then draining and water preservation, and then rural development. This bill concerns particularly the third objective of ARDA, but the second and especially the first, which is the use of farmlands, should not be forgotten. The point is not to develop crown lands in the wilderness.

The point is to save the 45 per cent of unused land. Today, someone spoke, of buying back uneconomic land. I think the idea is wonderful, but it would have to be put into practice, for I do not know, at least in my region, whether a farmer was paid for his land. I myself asked the provincial agronomist that redistribution of land be arranged, for example in the case of someone who would be willing to sell his lot to increase that of his neighbour by giving him some 300 or 400 acres. But I do not know whether it is ARDA which is at fault or whether the scheme was born out of other circumstances. The idea was to help the farmer, and particularly the farmer's son, to acquire land. There are farmers' sons who are only waiting for that today.

Obviously, a father with eight or ten children cannot buy them three lots each.

The government must help him, not by a loan but by material assistance. I do not say it must give him everything. Let the farmer keep certain obligations but let the government help him halfway, so that he can begin to operate his farm economically.

Convinced as they are, people in our district can see these ills nowadays; they can lay their finger on it. They know they must go back to the land, that things must change. And this change will not take place without the farmer, first and foremost, and the help of the government. It will not come about by the government fighting the farmer. It will occur when the farmer takes the first step, with the help of the federal government and the provinces, toward complete possession of a farm that will be forever his.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make lengthy remarks on this proposal. No doubt as we enter into a discussion of the various clauses there will be comments and questions which will arise. At this time I do want to state the support of the Social Credit party for the particular measure before us now. I regret very much that I was not privileged to be in the house when the minister made his introductory address. As all of us know, many of us are supposed to be in two or three places at the same time, and because of that factor I was unable to remain in the house. I understand that the minister made a very comprehensive statement about the background and possibilities of the ARDA program in relation to rural development, and I know that as this program is carried through it will have increasingly beneficial results with regard to the economy of our country. Since the inception of the ARDA program a number of significant changes in its application have been made. In the main I believe the broadening of the application of the act has had beneficial results in many areas of the country.

The Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) was reported to have said recently that there is no limit to what can be carried out under the present terms of the act. This statement was made in my own constituency a little over a week ago when the minister met with representatives of the various municipalities who were concerned about some areas of development required in the locality. I hope the minister enjoyed his visit to my constituency. I am sure he found those who gathered there were men of vision and competence, men desirous of doing the very best they could for the further development and progress of that section of the beautiful Fraser Valley.

In introducing the resolution on March 8 on behalf of the Minister of Forestry the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) referred to the problems of low rural income, poverty and underdevelopment. As reported at page 2882 of Hansard he stated:

> As the ARDA program has evolved, it has become evident that special comprehensive and coordinated development programs for these areas are required if living standards for the people in these areas are to be greatly improved in a reasonable length of time.

From looking at the bill it is apparent it is designed to work out programs not solely on an individual farm basis but encompassing a larger area. This is very commendable, but I should like to say at the outset that the appropriation of only $50 million would appear to be a very small amount in view of the task it is hoped will be accomplished. I hope this is not an indication of the rather limited use which some people may think is contemplated under this legislation. However, Mr. Speaker, being mindful of the vision the Minister of Forestry has for his department, coupled with the need for such a development program, I believe we can look forward with anticipation to the work which will be accomplished under the terms of this legislation.

We are given to understand that a great deal will be involved in the development of this program. Areas are to be selected and this will be a very important part of the entire program.

Reference was made by a former speaker to the fact that the advisory council will apparently be made up of ten officials from departments of the federal government. I do not think that this will be conducive to the best application of the entire program because it appears to me that to a large extent the success of the program and its effective development and over-all application will be dependent upon the views and knowledge of the local inhabitants in these areas and the attention they give to it. I refer to those who know their area, who live there and work there, who are cognizant of the various problems that are faced. So I suggest that the selection of these areas should not be entirely based on the views of the advisory board but should also take into consideration the views of those who are closer to the projects contemplated.

It appears that this bill encompasses physical, social and economic surveys of the areas affected. I believe this was the reason the Minister of Forestry met with officials in my own constituency, to discuss the possibility of an overall survey of the needs of a given area. I believe it is a good thing that the government is prepared not only to give assistance in the actual execution of plans but is also willing to take part in the burden of making surveys.

We also find that the entire program is dependent upon the co-operation of provincial authorities. I presume it will be possible, as has been the case in the past, for the provincial authorities to recommend particular programs for consideration.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, without going into detail on any of the particular aspects involved but considering the overall picture, the need for such a program and the possibilities envisaged by the minister so far as his department is concerned, I believe the entire program to be a very commendable one. Even though in the past there have been limitations and perhaps frustrations and certain obstacles placed in the way, considering the overall picture I believe that this program will have a tremendous effect and bearing upon the development of these areas and the raising of standards of living, with a consequent contribution toward a better environment for people to carry out their responsibilities and occupations. Therefore, as I have said, so far as we in this party are concerned we are going to give this measure our support.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Jean-Paul Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, the present government has included the war on poverty in its program. I am convinced that this program is most commendable. His Eminence Cardinal Léger has advocated concrete action and we agree with him.

Bill C-151 introduced by the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) is certainly in that category, since it aims at furthering the development of the rural areas where greater poverty prevails. In conjunction with the provinces and through this legislation, we seek to reach mainly the areas where salaries are also low because of economic and social rehabilitation programs and which, in the council's opinion, based on information submitted by the province about the physical, economic and social situation of the area, offer reasonable possibilities of economic and social development.

It is meant to push ARDA further still and to make it more effective and more concrete. I understand there are regions where poverty is more prevalent and they are the ones which must be helped first. However, Mr.

Speaker, in every region which seems prosperous, there are pockets of poverty or individuals who are no better off than the economically weak regions.

That is why there should exist in each rural county an ARDA council. I would see it linked to the county council or to the C.F.U. Thus, it would be possible to analyse the situation in order to prepare assistance programs which would be submitted to the central committee in each province.

Very often, people talk about ARDA but do not know where to go. Then, every citizen, every parish could get in touch with the office in the county which could analyse the projects and submit them after approval to the central committee in each province.

Of course, in some pilot areas, very exhaustive studies were made and gave results but they will give more with that new legislation. But until it is possible to analyse the situation in all the counties, I think that temporary ARDA committees in each area could help considerably numerous individuals while helping farming at the same time. And I think of my own parish, about cleaning up of the Envies river, developing the tourist industry and countless other projects.

There are in my riding and in my region some unusually attractive spots for tourists. I would even say that there are none other like them in Canada but they cannot be developed without help. I would like to talk about the northern part of my riding between St. Jacques des Piles, La Tuque, Lac-Édouard and the new road from La Tuque to Lac-Bouchette. The development of that area would help enormously to increase the standard of living. I am convinced that the tourist board of the St. Maurice region and the mayors' conference are waiting for help from the governments to make exhaustive studies on tourist possibilities and realizations.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that an even more promising future is in store for the region because of ARDA and that is why Bill C-151 deserves our full approval. I therefore extend my most sincere congratulations to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

[English]

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to compliment the minister on his presentation and the background material he provided. Certainly, sir, I cannot resist the opportunity of pointing out to the minister that it is unique for a minister of the government to take the time to analyse exactly where he is in order for him to be able to portray with wisdom where he will go in the future.

Many of those engaged in the profession of agriculture will look upon this measure with some degree of scepticism. Too often in the past the members of this great profession have seen measures designed sincerely to help the industry become, after a glorious presentation in the house, nothing but first class coloured illustrations on campaign literature. The results for farmers have proved to be of very little value.

Listening to the minister's dissertation this afternoon, I am convinced that he is sincere in his desire to bring about a measure of relief to the areas that he so eloquently described. I am sure that all of us who have had an opportunity to read some of the reports referred to can understand to what degree Canadian citizens have been subjugated financially. I think we are beginning to see on all sides of the house why it is so necessary to take the necessary steps at the federal level in order to bring about the relief that must be brought to these areas.

I am concerned that we are speaking of setting up committees in respect of the administration of this bill. Too often in the past we have seen large sums of money designated for specific means to aid the citizens of Canada, but for every dollar designated for that specific purpose it seems that just a few cents have reached the people most concerned.

We have also set up ever more bureaux. We have an overlapping of authority and the passing of responsibility from department to department and from bureau to bureau, as was so ably pointed out by one of the preceding speakers. When we consider how frustrating it is for a member of parliament in pursuit of a principle to go from department to department trying to obtain some definite ruling on a question, how much more frustrating must it be for those in agriculture to have to wait for measures that will make their lot an easier one under the conditions we have today? May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order

39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), Agriculture—request for protection on grade standards; the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc), Finance —depreciation reduction—automobile equipment.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

UNITED GRAIN GROWERS LIMITED

Hon. Douglas Harkness (Calgary North) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-5, respecting United Grain Growers Limited.

• (6:00 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill refers to a company, the name of which is familiar to all members from western Canada and quite probably to most other members of the House of Commons. Its country elevators, 750 in all, are to be found in every part of the prairie provinces at some 600 different points. It is the oldest of the farmer-owned business institutions now operating in the prairie provinces. Organized in 1906 and with a record of continuous progress during 60 years, it is this year celebrating its diamond jubilee.

The primary business of United Grain Growers Limited is handling grain and during its history it has received from customers some 2½ billion bushels. Annual receipts now amount to 100 million bushels or more. Inventories of grain in its country elevators amounted on July 31 last to some $54 million.

It owns and operates a terminal elevator at Port Arthur with a capacity of 6.5 million bushels, and at Vancouver operates under lease another terminal elevator with a capacity of 3.6 million bushels. It has some ancillary businesses, distributing annually several million dollars worth of fertilizer as well as other supplies needed by farmers. Through a subsidiary company it publishes a well known national monthly farm magazine, Country Guide. The Company has 54,000 shareholders, the great majority of whom are active farmers in the prairie provinces.

The company was originally incorporated in 1906 under the Companies Act of Manitoba with the name, "The Grain Growers Grain Company." By 1911 it had expanded to such an extent as to need a federal charter, which it obtained under an act of parliament in that year when its authorized capital was increased to $2 million from the former $1 million level. Amending acts were passed in 1915, 1916 and 1917 to enable amalgamation to be carried out with another farmer-owned company under the name United Grain Growers Limited and with an increase in authorized capital to $5 million. Another amendment in 1941 enabled it to carry out reorganization of its capital stock structure, and one in 1950 increased its authorized capital to $7.5 million.

Under these enactments the company has been empowered to set up an organization differing in important respects from many other incorporated bodies. Voting rights are confined to the holders of membership shares which may be issued or transferred only to farmer customers of the company. Each such holder is entitled to one vote and one vote only. Because of their large number, member shareholders are organized into 314 locals, each of which elects a delegate to annual or special meetings of the company and proxy voting is not allowed. The company is empowered to issue out of its earnings, patronage dividends to customers after dividends on capital stock have been provided and reserves have been set aside.

United Grain Growers is and has been a very large taxpayer, as indicated by the substantial provision for taxes on income included in annual financial statements. The amounts paid in patronage dividends are deductible in calculating taxable income to the extent provided in the Income Tax Act for all companies making such payments. Its dividends on capital stock, like those of all companies, come out of income on which tax has been paid. I mention these facts because in the other place a question was raised as to what the tax position of this company is or was.

Prior to 1941 United Grain Growers had only one class of share with a par value of $25, which could be issued or transferred only to farmers. That limitation created difficulties for those who might find it necessary to dispose of shares when qualified purchasers had little money for investment. It was desired to correct this situation but at the same time to ensure continued control of the company by its customers. Consequently, a division of shares was effected into two classes.

Each former share was divided into one $5 membership share and one $20 five per cent preferred share. The former may be issued or transferred only to farmer customers. The latter may be held by anyone, but not more than 2,500 by one person. The plan worked satisfactorily. The market for shares was broadened with no change in the effective contol of the company. New shares were issued without difficulty when there was occasion to do so. Originally all the preferred shares were held by voting members. It is still the case that the majority are so held; in fact, the figure 53 per cent according to information furnished by the company.

The company has been headed from its inception by men recognized as leaders in western agricultural organizations and who have played their part in the country's public life. Hon. T. A. Crerar, at present the oldest member of the other place and the only person left in these precincts who was in the cabinet of Sir Robert Borden in 1917 and also in the cabinet of Mackenzie King from 1935 to 1945, was president of the company for nearly 25 years during its formative period until be retired in 1930 to give full time to his political duties.

He was succeeded by the late R. S. Law who served for 18 years, and then in 1948 by Hon. J. E. Brownlee whose death took place in 1961. I may say that during the nearly three and a half years I was minister of agriculture Mr. Brownlee gave me the best and most practical advice of any of the farm leaders from western Canada. Mr. A. M. Runciman, president now for five years, has become well known in Ottawa through frequent appearances before members of parliament and the government on behalf of western farmers.

The company has requested this amendment to its parliamentary charter because it wishes to provide a broader financial base for its operation by an increase in paid up capital. In presenting this proposal to the annual meeting last November the directors expressed confidence that members and customers would readily subscribe to a new issue of shares whenever such an issue becomes available. That, however, is contingent upon removing an existing limitation on the rate of dividends which may be paid on Class A preferred shares.

When the two classes of shares were established 25 years ago in 1941 it was during wartime and after a long depression when interest rates generally were low. It seems to have been assumed that 5 per cent would continue to be regarded as a good rate of return on an investment and that the company, by passing such a rate of dividend, would be able to attract investors to its shares. At all events Class A preferred shares, with a par value of $20, were established in such a way as to preclude the company from paying a higher rate in years of good earnings.

To correct that situation it is now necessary to obtain such amendment to the company's parliamentary charter as is provided in this bill. When enacted this will empower the company in a year when earnings are sufficient to declare an extra dividend on Class A shares of a half per cent or multiples thereof, not to exceed a total of 1½ per cent, that is, to a maximum rate of 6½ per cent, subject to a concurrent provision for an equal rate of dividend upon the company's Class B membership shares. At the same time it is proposed to increase the authorized capital of the company from the present level of $7.5 million to $12 million.

Twenty-five years ago it could not have been foreseen that interest rates would rise to levels such as now prevail or that bonds of the government of Canada and of various provinces would be issued at rates substantially above 5 per cent. Nor could it have been foreseen that the company's business and its requirements for invested capital would increase to the extent that actually has occurred.

The reason for increasing paid up capital is to be found in expansion of the company's business which has taken place during recent years and further expansion which is expected.

When the company's affairs were last before parliament in 1950 reference was made to the company's balance sheet for the previous year which had shown assets to a substantial total of more than $16 million. That reference, I might say, was made by my former colleague from Calgary West, Mr. A. L. Smith, whose contribution to this house I am glad to be able to recall at this time.

The balance sheet issued as at the close of its past financial year on July 31, 1965, showed total assets of $89 million. A large part of that was made up by a grain inventory valued at $54 million. To accommodate grain stocks of that magnitude, the company has been enlarging its elevator system during the past 15 years, bringing its total investment in capital assets to some $42 million. That is a very substantial business to have been established on the basis of a paid up capital of just under $5 million. Its size was made possible by extensive current borrowings of some $38 million and long-term debt of $12.7 million. It is apparent that additional funds made available by the issue of further paid up capital stock can be put to good use at once. It is also apparent that with a broader financial base the company can continue to expand its services to western farmers in the years which lie ahead.

I am led to believe that this bill, which involves the welfare of so many thousands of western farmers, will receive speedy second reading. Therefore, in order to expedite its passage through the house I would ask at this time, if that proves to be the case, whether we might have unanimous consent to continue in committee with this bill during this hour.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member realizes that before the bill could go either to committee of the whole or to a special committee it would first have to receive second reading. The bill at this point has not received second reading. I can only invite hon. members to participate in the debate.

If the debate concludes and the bill receives second reading, then the Chair might give consideration to the suggestion made by the hon. member, although he knows very well that this would be a very unusual, indeed, unique practice. Standing order 102 provides that these bills automatically are referred to certain committees. In addition, standing order 105 says:

> Every private bill, when read a second time, is referred to one of the standing committees as follows: bills relating to banks, insurance, trade and commerce and to trust and loan companies, to the Committee on Finance—

And so on. In other words, all bills automatically are referred to special committees. It would be a departure from this standing order and also from standing order 102, to which I referred a moment ago, to adopt the practice now suggested by the hon. member for Calgary North. In any event, at this time we still have not given second reading to the bill. I might ask hon. members whether they are ready for the question.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say first of all, with reference to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) that this bill might be dealt with in committee of the whole house after second reading, that in spite of the fact that I recognize, as Your Honour suggested, that this would be a rather unusual procedure I for one would be very happy to support it in this particular instance.

[Mr. Harkness.]

It is a real pleasure for me to rise to speak to a bill presented to the house in this particular period of our proceedings which has to do with the capital share structure of a company to which I can give my warm and wholehearted support. In my view the proposal contained in the bill introduced by the hon. member for Calgary North represents an honest, straightforward, businesslike proposition. As such I feel it should commend itself very easily to the house. Unlike certain other bills with which we have dealt, having to do with the share capital of companies, this bill does not suggest the splitting of shares or any action which in my view would tend to deceive either the house or the Canadian people in the way in which certain other bills have, particularly those relating to certain oil pipe line companies. I mention this because I should like to emphasize that in considering this bill, as indeed in respect of others, I like to look at it on its merits as I see them.

As I said at the outset, I am very happy to give my warm support to the proposal introduced by the hon. member for Calgary North. As the hon. member said, this company is a rather historic institution in the western Canadian grain producing area. In fact I think I can fairly say that among my earliest recollections as a small child was the publication of this company coming into our farm home in the days when I still was resident in my native province of Alberta before as a young lad I went to live on Vancouver Island from which I currently come as a representative to this house.

I am interested to see that United Grain Growers gives a clear definition of its purposes in the explanatory notes. It indicates that the sale of further Class A shares will provide capital for the enlargement, acquisition or construction of additional grain handling facilities. To me this is a very legitimate reason for seeking to expand the capital structure of the company. Indeed, in my view I think it really is the only legitimate purpose for making changes in a capital structure.

Certainly the value of this type of organization to the farmers of western Canada in the handling of their grain has been evident even to those who have not had any close association with grain farming. The continuous support which has been given by farmers to this organization, as indicated by the growth which has taken place and the fact that they have reached the point where they feel it is necessary and desirable to seek additional capital for further expansion, is an indication of the continuing worth of this farmer-owned organization to its customer members.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, and because this company looms large in my earlier recollections, I thought I should like to say a few words in support of the bill which has been placed before us by the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say substantially what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) has said with respect to the proceedings concerning the bill. We are completely in agreement to waive the rules in this instance and consider the matter in committee of the whole house in lieu of sending the bill to a standing committee. If I might be permitted to transgress, I think we could have done this a few moments ago because quite often by unanimous consent the house waives the rules and makes special orders in respect of things which are to occur in the future. It is within our ambit of authority to agree unanimously that after second reading the bill be referred to committee of the whole house for consideration. However, that is another question and I merely make that comment in passing.

I notice that United Grain Growers is seeking to increase its capitalization by some $4,500,000 for purposes of expansion. It operates some 600 elevators in western Canada as well as two terminal elevators, one at Port Arthur and one at Vancouver. In the light of the heavy grain sales of recent years to the Soviet Union and to the Republic of China, it seems to me that recognition has been given to those sales and undoubtedly to the necessity of increasing the capacity of terminal elevators.

Not long ago the Canadian government decided not to proceed with a proposal to expand the facilities of the terminal grain elevator at Prince Rupert which is operated by the Board of Grain Commissioners. I should like to urge the United Grain Growers, if they are thinking in terms of using some of the $4,500,000 to extend and modernize terminal facilities, to give consideration to the advantages of establishing terminal facilities at Prince Rupert. I point out the opportunity there resulting from the Canadian government's decision to change its original intention in this regard.

The terminal facilities at Prince Rupert were built some years ago but were designed in such a way as to facilitate easy expansion. Docking facilities were provided in 1926 in anticipation of the capacity of the terminal elevator in Prince Rupert being doubled. There is an opportunity in this area for co-operation between the United Grain Growers and the Canadian government to expand terminal facilities. Prince Rupert is some 400 or more miles closer to the Orient than the port of Vancouver. It is located at the railhead of the C.N.R. and the elevator has a storage capacity of something less than one million bushels. These facilities could very easily be expanded and I am sure the people of Prince Rupert would welcome such an expansion. I make this suggestion in passing because of the reluctance on the part of the government to deal properly and adequately with a recommendation made some years ago that the facilities in Prince Rupert be expanded.

In general terms we look with favour on companies with a corporate structure similar to that of United Grain Growers Limited because they operate to some extent on the principle of co-operative ownership in that the people who own these companies are producers and have a greater say over the distribution and marketing of their products. That is in essence one of our concepts of public ownership, namely, that if people are given a greater say and greater control in their own economic affairs our society and economy will be much better off. It is for that reason we look with extreme favour on the bill currently before us. We wish this company well in its operations, and I personally urge it once again to look at the possibilities of establishing a terminal facility at Prince Rupert. I am sure the area generally would welcome such a plan, particularly inasmuch as the government itself has been reluctant to consider Prince Rupert as a shipping port.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the hon. member for Calgary North has suggested that standing orders 102 and 105 be suspended to allow this bill to be referred to the committee of the whole rather than to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Private Bills

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Harkness moves that I do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of the whole on the said bill. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. May I remind hon. members that this bill has one clause and a schedule with several parts.

On clause 1—Increase of capital stock.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the sponsor of the bill is in a position to make any comment on his own behalf or on behalf of United Grain Growers concerning the very interesting and worthwhile suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Skeena regarding an expansion of grain terminal facilities in the city of Prince Rupert. Those of us who have been following the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena realize that he has made a number of attempts to place before the house the advantages of the harbour and terminal facilities at Prince Rupert in relation to the possible expansion of our grain trade. In view of the position that has been taken by the government it seems to me that this suggestion is one which is relevant to the possible future activities of United Grain Growers.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member as well as others will realize that I am in no position to commit United Grain Growers to a project of this kind. I am also sure I am safe in saying that the directors of United Grain Growers will give careful consideration to the remarks which have been made in relation to the establishment of a terminal elevator at Prince Rupert. What their decision may be will, of course, depend on what they consider to be the best interests of their many thousands of farmer shareholders who supply the grain. I am sure they will give careful consideration to the idea.

Mr. Barnett: I am sure the hon. member for Skeena will agree that the directors of the company must consider first their responsibility to their shareholders. I am glad to note that the sponsor of the bill has assured us that the directors of the company will pay attention to the idea proposed by the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to endorse what has been said about the possibility of encouraging the company to establish facilities in Prince Rupert. Over the last few years Canadian National Railways have spent millions of dollars in improving the railroad which has its terminus at Prince Rupert and on which this grain would move. Because a great deal of the grain goes to the Orient, it seems to me that rather than putting stresses and strains on the facilities at Vancouver and other places this is one place where a great deal of good for Canadians could be accomplished by United Grain Growers stepping in and filling the gap, as the hon. member for Skeena has said, and providing these facilities.

It is interesting to note that the greatest grain producing areas of western Canada are closer to the west coast. There is an exceptionally good railway grade for moving grain from Edmonton west through Jasper and Prince George. There are no high passes to go through and no steep grades to climb. It would therefore seem to me to be a very feasible operation. I should like to commend the hon. member who introduced the bill for making the statement that he would bring this suggestion to the attention of the directors of the company. I am sure the directors will look into all the advantages offered by the port of Prince Rupert, which incidentally is one of the great ports on the west coast.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have now had the opportunity of listening to the hon. member who sponsored this bill and the remarks of other colleagues in the house. I should like to add my support to this bill because it appears that the farmers have themselves operated this organization for a very long period of time in a very economical manner and the company has brought advantages to its shareholders as well as the membership who ship their grain through United Grain Growers.

The suggestion that has been made merits the attention of United Grain Growers board of directors. I refer to the building of facilities in the hitherto unserviced area, so far as United Grain Growers' elevators are concerned, of Prince Rupert. As previous speakers have said, the C.N.R. line appears to be the most direct one from the area of production to point of shipment to the Orient where a large share of our grain is now going.

It also appears from what has been said on previous occasions that the facilities of the port of Prince Rupert lend themselves to the storage and assembly of a large number of box cars, which would facilitate the handling of grain in that area. This is not possible in some other areas. I believe that all of us in the house have been concerned with the situation that has developed over the last few years in the Vancouver harbour area where there has been a lack of facilities and railway sidings. There has also been a lack of space for the expansion of railway line facilities. I gather that this situation does not exist in the port of Prince Rupert.

The limitations inherent in the Vancouver area would therefore warrant the board of directors considering the port of Prince Rupert for the movement of grain, because it is generally conceded that the export of grain to the Orient will probably continue at an increasing rate for some time to come.

I presume that this company operates almost like a co-operative and applies the same principles. You do not have more than one vote no matter how many shares you hold; there is a limitation in this respect. That brings it into the class of most producer co-operatives in that to be a member of United Grain Growers Limited you must be a bona fide farmer, either as a lessee or as the owner of land. At least, I presume you must hold a permit—perhaps that is a better description—to be a member of United Grain Growers Limited. Therefore this body has many of the attributes of producer co-operatives. For this reason I believe the proposal that has been made, taking into consideration the increase in capitalization being sought, should allow for the consideration of development in an area that is not far removed from the large wheat fields of Alberta.

It seems to me there is a great deal of merit in the method of control in this company, unlike that of some companies with which we have been dealing recently. Those that are members of and support this organization should be quite proud of the advantages and facilities it has been able to provide its membership. They should also be proud that this expansion is now being undertaken on behalf of its members, and of the role the organization has played in western Canada over the years.

I therefore hope the organization will give consideration to the solution of a problem that has been worrying many members of the agricultural community in all parts of Canada whereby restrictions in regard to assembly of box cars have been causing considerable hardship in moving grain to the coast and loading it on ships. In my opinion this difficulty could be eliminated if a greater percentage of grain were moved to a northern port. I hope, therefore, that at the next board of directors' meeting they will consider this proposal and will perhaps find the government, which has been responsible for these restrictions through the action of the Minister of Finance, in a position to assist them in providing facilities at this port. This suggestion has already been accepted and a recommendation in this regard has been made by the National Harbours Board. I refer to the establishment and extension of grain handling facilities in the Prince Rupert area.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the sponsor of the bill a question? As I understand it, there are two classes of shares, A and B. Class A shares are considered to be investment shares as distinct from membership shares. Does this carry with it the implication that class A shares are not what we would otherwise call voting shares? Do they entitle the holder thereof to be a delegate at meetings and to vote as such or is the right to vote and determine matters confined exclusively to holders of class B shares?

Mr. Harkness: No. As I outlined, Mr. Chairman, the class A preferred shares have no voting rights whatever. The control of the company is in the hands of the class "B" shareholders. There is a limit of 25 class B shares to any one particular farmer and therefore the affairs of the company in that way are wholly in the hands of the farmer customers of the company.

There is also provision that there shall be no proxy voting, so that if the situation ever arose that the control of a large number of these class "B" shares passed to any of these farmers they still could not control the affairs of the company through proxies.

Mr. Howard: This is a commendable thing to see in corporate law and I believe it can provide us with an opportunity to see if we cannot incorporate it in the same way in some of the bills which are dealt with between the hour of six and seven. I must apologize to the hon. member for Calgary North because at the time he was speaking on second reading of the bill I was in conversation with one of my colleagues in respect of another feature of the bill and I missed the point about the ownership.

I asked the question because as I understand the bill the increase in capitalization is purely an increase in the number of class "A" shares from 325,000 to 500,000 and no increase is contemplated in the number of class "B" membership shares. This prompted me to ask which were voting shares or whether both classes were voting shares. There are only 57,881 class "B" membership shares now outstanding of the authorized 200,000, and this situation should continue as it is at the moment. Is it the purpose of the bill to raise additional funds by attracting people to invest money in United Grain Growers Limited by way of class "A" shares or by way of debentures or lending money to the company at 6½ per cent interest instead of 5 per cent?

Mr. Harkness: As a maximum.

Mr. Howard: Yes, as a maximum. As I said earlier, it is worth while to see the structure of a company set up in this way. It provides ideas for including this same concept in drafting legislation with regard to other companies which claim that one of their objectives in seeking to be incorporated is so that they can be owned by the greatest number of people possible rather than a small group. We will take this under advisement when other bills are before us.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, in connection with the two types of shares can the sponsor of the bill throw any light on the restriction with reference to holding class A shares. This is outlined in the schedule of the bill at page 4 in these words:

> That no person shall be entitled to hold or own more than two thousand five hundred of such shares.

I am intrigued by that limitation in view of the fact that class A shares have no voting rights and, as I understand it, are really entirely a source of capital funds for the company through the sale of such shares. Can the sponsor of the bill give us any information why that limitation is imposed by the by-laws of the company as set out in the schedule, placing a limit on the holding of class A shares?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, originally there was only one type of share and, as I outlined, when these shares were split into class A and class B shares the limitation of 25 shares was removed so that it would have been possible for class A shares to be made available to anyone who might be in the market to invest funds. At that time, as I understand it, in order to prevent the accumulation of very large proportions of these shares in the hands of one individual or a small group of individuals or a company, the limitation of 2,500 was imposed so that a situation would not occur where the bulk of the preferred shares would be owned by one institution which would be able to exert financial influence, shall we say, on how the affairs of the company should be conducted.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now, by leave.

Mr. Harkness moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, before third reading is given I for one would like to express my appreciation to the sponsor of the bill for the lucid explanation of its purposes which he gave the house on its introduction at the second reading stage and also for the manner in which he was able to answer the questions asked when the bill was in committee of the whole. So far as I am concerned, the manner in which it was dealt with justifies us in having agreed to his suggestion that it be dealt with in committee of the whole house.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I believe the house should certainly be very cautious about the procedure which has been used today in allowing the waiving of a stage that provides for a detailed discussion of a particular bill. It is true that this should not be taken as an indication that this procedure should be sought or followed in other cases. However, I should like to join with the member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) in saying that this bill appears to offer a number of innovations that other members would be well advised, when sponsoring bills, to be prepared to implement.

The passing of this bill indicates, I believe, the support of members for the principles which have been enunciated. As I mentioned a few moments ago, this organization does not fall into the class of co-operatives as we know them but certainly falls into that class of farm organizations where shares are issued whose purchase enables anyone to participate financially while at the same time preferred stock is issued which provides for control of the company.

The provisions to limit the number of preferred shares held by a farmer to 25 and the minimum limitation of at least five shares being held by a person who is a delegate to a convention in my opinion are good. I think we should perhaps extend this principle to other bills I have in mind. If this were done, many of the objections we make to bills of this type would be eliminated. I believe the passage of this bill will indicate support for the idea of the shareholders of the company being provided through legislation with enough capital and the means of extending that capital to provide for the healthy expansion of their business. At the same time, the interest rate attached to this capital is in keeping with the type of operation being conducted. In my opinion the increase being requested is certainly not unreasonable, particularly after reading some of the deliberations of the recent inquiry into our two major telephone companies which operate in the public service field. The interest rate allowed these companies seems to be approximately the same as the interest rate requested by this company.

I believe, therefore, that the sponsor of this bill can be quite pleased at having accepted the responsibility for piloting this measure through the house. I think it is a good company. Nothing has been said against the company by anyone, and in this day and age that in itself is quite an accomplishment. The sponsor is to be congratulated also on the fact that he understands the operations of the company for which he is sponsoring the legislation, and he probably has been well briefed by the company. This bill and the way it has been sponsored should serve as an example for many of the bills that come before us in private members' hour which are not as well prepared or as lucidly explained. It therefore gives me pleasure to add my endorsement to that of other members who are in favour of this bill with regard to the United Grain Growers.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that as a farmer customer of the United Grain Growers for some 20 years now I was very happy indeed to sponsor this bill. At the same time I should like to say that I am not the holder of any shares in the company, preference or otherwise. As I say, I have been delivering grain to the company's elevator at my point at De Winton, Alberta, for some 20 years now. Again I should like to thank the house for the co-operation they have given in getting this bill through and to thank all those who have spoken about the bill in such laudatory terms. This company is one of the finest, farmer owned companies in this or any other country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May I ask hon. members if they wish to call it seven o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hour allotted to private members' business having expired, the house will return to the consideration of the business interrupted at six o'clock.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

PROVISION FOR ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT OF SPECIAL AREAS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sauvé for the second reading of Bill No. C-151, to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, when six o'clock was reached I was speaking on some of the general aspects of the bill proposed by the minister. I was dealing with the fact it was hoped by those engaged in agriculture that this measure would not become bogged down by cumbersome bureaucratic methods, as has happened with many other measures of this type. Frankly, I am prepared to support this bill in order to see what will happen, how it will be used and how it will be administered.

It appears to me that under proper conditions this measure could be used as a real tool in helping agriculture, especially in the battle against poverty. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, having regard to the way it is constituted and the way it may be set up, it could provide a ready vehicle for political patronage. A great deal will depend on the calibre of the members of the advisory committees set up at the local level to advise the department on ways and means of administering the bill. If the farmers across this nation observe that men are appointed to these committees because of their peculiar abilities, because of their technical knowledge of the problems involved, because of their previous experience with the problems of agriculture, if men of this type are appointed regardless of political affiliations, then the people who are engaged in agriculture will begin to have faith in the government's objectives in passing this bill.

However, as I pointed out before, Mr. Speaker, if the farmers find that men of questionable ability are put on these boards because of their political affiliation rather than their knowledge of agriculture, then this operation will collapse. It will not receive and will not deserve the co-operation of the people engaged in agriculture. The co-operation of these people is necessary for the complete fulfilment of the wishes of the minister as he outlined them in the house today.

When the minister was dealing with designated areas of rural poverty he did not point out that Ontario has such areas. It is true that there are some sections of Ontario where agriculture is carried on to a remarkable degree and which are classified as some of the most progressive areas in Canada. However, sir, there are other rural development areas around the clay belt and on both sides of the Ottawa valley where conditions are not as affluent. I do not believe that the application of this bill should be confined to the areas outlined by the minister.

I am going to be very interested indeed when the minister deals with the different clauses of the bill to hear him outline in detail the machinery set up, provincially and at the local level, to analyse all the various areas across this great country of ours. As I stated before, agriculture today presents a tremendous challenge to people with vigour and imagination, to people who are determined to analyse the situation and to familiarize themselves with the tremendous problems of shortage of food, which will cost Canada and other nations dear in the future. We should design practical means to meet this challenge and to have the energy and resources behind these means to carry out our ideas, once they are conceived.

Once again, I think that far too often when we contemplate these areas of so-called rural poverty we confine ourselves to too limited a scope. We concentrate our thinking on what we can do to the soil itself in order to provide a better living for our people. I was very interested indeed to hear the minister speak of social welfare and the desire for and necessity to educate people, to train them for other trades and for a better way of life. But I cannot accept the solution which is offered in too many instances, that the people on these so-called submarginal farms and in areas of rural poverty should be taken off the land. This is not, in my honest opinion, the answer for which we are looking.

The reason these people are on the land is because they want to be on the land. They are on the land because this is the type of living they wish for themselves and their families. They are on the land by desire; and it is up to us at the federal level to explore the ways and means of providing the necessary climate which will enable these people to earn a living where they are presently located.

I have been tremendously impressed by one of the growing industries in this country, and how its methods might be applied in these particular areas. I speak of the tourist industry, with which we are all familiar. I am often amazed at the tremendous dollar earnings this industry brings into sometimes very small and restricted areas.

A striking example is taking place in my own province of Ontario. I happen to live adjacent to two provincial parks. These parks are perhaps no closer than some other areas to the United States, from where a great number of our tourists come. These parks to which I refer have been developed by local labour, which has cleared the underbrush and provided the necessary facilities. The amazing thing is that in the course of the tourist season these parks in their very first year of operation attracted hundreds of thousands of tourists, with a consequent tremendous influx of money to the area.

These tourists provide work for most of the local people by way of developing marinas, offering guide services, enlarging local vegetable and fruit routes, as well as bread routes. The dairy facilities require more scope. Very soon we see a complex municipality with tremendous surge. We see a little village of 700 to 800 people become for a few weeks a town of some thousands, bringing tremendous benefit to the locality. I am wondering whether we could look into this aspect of the matter in our search for assisting these local people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one other fact of which we must never lose sight, and that is that this nation and the world more and more each day is approaching a crisis in the search for edibles to feed the multitudes of people on this planet. More and more we are becoming conscious of the fact that the people who live in the so-called have-not nations are not going to be satisfied with the low calorie diet which has been forced upon them through the years. They are not going to be satisfied to see their populations decimated every year or so by famine. They too are becoming knowledgeable and know there are areas where there is abundance; but unfortunately areas of abundance are becoming fewer and fewer every year. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, in the last few years some of these so-called exporting nations are becoming importing nations because they do not produce enough food themselves to feed their own populations. So we must never lose sight of this fact.

In addition, we should never develop a policy which to any degree removes arable land from cultivation and out of the over-all concept of producing as much food as possible. Food and water are the two most important commodities of human resources Canada will have for the future. These are two commodities we must produce in abundance; and in my humble opinion as far as ARDA is concerned our program must be directed toward this production.

How do we do this, Mr. Speaker? I think we must provide a tremendous amount of money for the research which is necessary to bring these so-called designated poverty areas up to a production never before thought possible. This is done by producing grains which have a shorter growing season or which have a higher protein value; grains which can be grown in soil which cannot produce grain today. By the use of proper planting methods we must extend our growing areas further and further afield and produce food more successfully.

We must not only develop these areas but must employ the necessary technicians to show our farmers how this food may be grown, how cattle may be raised, and how poultry may be reared on a limited acreage to provide that living for our families which is necessary. The people will learn by example.

If, under this scheme as set out, the government intends to take area farms or a township or county in any segment of the country, and carefully husband all of the resources available—as was so ably pointed out by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton)—analyse them and see what can be done, and by going into such areas show the rest of Canada that we not only have the desire at the federal level but the ability and knowledge to increase the living standards of these people, regardless of whether they are on the farms, in the related industries or in small factories, then if we do raise the living standards of an entire area which is suffering from poverty today the people of Canada will take heart and support such a bill as that brought in by the minister.

However, if we find that the enthusiasm of the minister, when it is filtered down through the various bureaus and committees to the grass roots level, is nothing less than lip service, then we are doing the people of Canada a disservice in this type of legislation. I have hopes that this bill will be the beginning and not the end. As has been pointed out by other speakers in this house, the responsibility lies on the shoulders of the minister, not only as to the manner in which he administers this bill, but in the way he provides the enthusiasm and drive behind it.

If he can do this, if he can make the people enthusiastic about it, if he can keep out partisan politics and keep out everything that would distract from the accomplishment of the purposes set out in the bill—if he does nothing else, he will have performed a great service to the people of this nation. This is what the people of Canada are waiting to see; this is what the people of Canada expect from a government. The people have a right to this; they have a right to expect this kind of administration. Surely the minister is in a position now to meet this challenge.

I think the minister grasped the concept of this when he carefully analysed the problem. I hope, after serious consideration, that the legislation he proposes is correct. If the minister has considered this legislation, and if his associates in the department have carefully considered it, and applied themselves, not just to treating it as another act of parliament, as window dressing for political purposes, but to making it work as something designed to help the poor areas of Canada, it will not only have the support of all sides of the house, but it will have the support of that great agricultural industry and its leaders in Canada. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity of speaking to the new resolution because it deals with granting the Department of Forestry $50 million to set up a fund for rural economic development.

I sincerely believe that in the two counties of Pontiac and Témiscamingue, there are areas in which this new measure can surely be applied. We were recently given the report of an inquiry on rural poverty in four counties. One of the ridings mentioned was that of Pontiac. There, in some remote areas of that large county, we found extremely poor people, lacking in education and means of improvement. The same may happen in the county of Témiscamingue.

I am truly convinced that rural areas in the East are in great need of government assistance. In as prosperous a country as ours, it is abnormal to have regions in which people live in misery, poverty, ignorance, without hope of ever knowing such improvement as would give them as decent a standard of living as the majority of our citizens enjoy. Doubtless there are areas where people live on farms which cannot produce profitably, where the climate will not allow it.

According to the program set up by the department, I understand that in those cases, the solution would be very complicated, that many of these people would be asked to move where their work and their skills would be better rewarded. The problem of rural ridings is one of the major problems in our country. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that during the last electoral campaign, I visited many unfortunate families, where the father was out of work or was paid a salary which did not allow him to enjoy or even come close to a normal standard of living, where children had a long way to go to reach school and often did not even have the necessary clothes to go.

I must congratulate the Minister of Forestry for his interest in rural areas. In passing Bill C-151, we are taking an important step.

[English]

There appeared in the newspapers recently, Mr. Speaker, a report from the Economic Council of Northwestern Quebec. In this report it was stated that the council viewed with alarm some of the problems facing the rural population in this region. The council has recommended that a study be made of the county of Témiscamingue, regarding the economic situation and possible projects that might be undertaken to help ameliorate the conditions that exist. Just recently also, the Minister of Forestry for the province of Quebec has announced that such a study will be undertaken. This will be a joint federal provincial plan and $12,000 will be spent on this study. I am confident that if the right kind of study is carried out, good results will be obtained.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that there were only three regions mentioned in the minister's speech as he outlined the bill this afternoon. However, I find nothing in the reading of the bill that would exclude the counties of Pontiac and Témiscamingue. In these two counties one can find all of nature's unspoiled beauty and natural resources. It is a large region beginning only a few miles from here and ending about 50 miles from the city of Rouyn. There are operating mines in both sections of this riding, north and south, also to be found are many saw mills. At the town of Témiscamingue, in Témiscamingue county, can be found a large pulpmill that has been in continuous operation for almost 50 years, and is owned by the Canadian International Paper Co. In Pontiac county there is now under construction a similar mill by the Consolidated Paper Corporation. This is in Litchfield township near Portage du Fort. There are lakes and streams abounding with fish, and big game hunting is available for both moose and deer. Farming occupies a large segment of the population in both counties. It is truly a region where ARDA and its programs can certainly help to upgrade the living standards of those sections which up to now have not kept up to the more prosperous sections of our vast country.

I sincerely hope that the advisory board set up to administer this fund will take into serious consideration any demands for this region. There is no doubt that Pontiac-Témiscamingue certainly qualifies in respect of physical, economic and social conditions, and has a good potential for economic and social development, including tourism, which is attracting more and more people to our region. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on this particular measure. I think it has been well stated up to this time that in principle we agree with the general terms of the measure as outlined by the minister.

We are interested in this particular measure as it relates to the province of Ontario. Although I would suggest to the house that possibly a similar type of assistance might have been available to the rural areas in another way, or under existing legislation, nevertheless we are pleased to concur in the principles as set forth by the minister. I believe that this type of assistance and this type of philosophical thinking is quite necessary.

I listened to the minister very carefully and realized that what he said applied to a number of areas in the province of Ontario. Indeed, not too long ago the provincial government prepared an economic report indictating the levels of income in several areas of Ontario, and it was revealing to note the averages stated in it. Also, a survey was completed under the aegis of the federal government covering some of the same areas. This being the case, and as I have said previously in other debates, it is difficult for people as a whole to appreciate that they are living in a poverty stricken area, or a depressed area.

One of the objections I have to the way the government has acted is with regard to the manner it has dealt with the country as a whole. Just recently we finished the debate on redistribution, and I know the minister has much sympathy with my words in this regard because he is in a similar position of extinction. The government appears to want to reduce the voice of rural Canada, and that has been evident in the way the maps were drawn. I objected to that last week, and I object again this evening on behalf of the people I represent—not that I consider myself the best representative in this house, but the people in my constituency depend on me for the things which flow from legislative and statutory government.

I have another grievance in this regard. Not too long ago I asked a question of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) about the importation of pork products into this country. I relate this to the fact that the minister says the bill before us is designed to give a lift to rural areas. I tried for a number of days to get an answer from the government. It was at a time when prices received by the pork producers had reached the highest point in the history of Canada. The minister gave an answer, cutting off my question at a certain date.

I knew I was getting the runaround and I was finally forced to put my question on the order paper so that I might get a detailed answer. As a result I found it was not just simply 2 million pounds of pork but 2¼ million pounds of pork which were imported, and that very week the price went right down. Surely we should have more regard for our primary producers. If they run across a time of high return, let them enjoy it. We should not take it away from them. No one can tell me that this was not deliberate. I realize I cannot put the finger on the government and say it was responsible, but it was responsible to the degree that it did not have the interests of the pork producers at heart.

Therefore I am prepared to give the minister full marks on his philosophical thinking about what he intends to do for these people through the measure we are discussing. But, as another hon. member has said, we do not want lip service: We want action.

Before this debate is concluded the minister should lay down in clear form the procedure that a group must follow, from the municipal level right through to the federal level. It is not clear now. During the last year I had a number of groups, organizations and individuals come to me in my area asking about the procedure. On numerous occasions I was forced to say "I really do not know. Have you done this and this? Have you been to see so and so? Have you a county organization"? They have told me, "We have been through all that. How on earth do we get our problem to the responsible minister in Ottawa"? On some occasions I have used very plain words to them, but for the benefit of these people I would ask the minister to make the procedure clear.

Since I believe the minister has spoken sincerely on behalf of the rural areas, I also want him to pay attention to the type of thing which happened back in March in regard to the importation of products that tended to reduce the income of our own primary producers. You, Mr. Speaker, and the minister both know that an industrial firm has a different method of control over such a situation. I think the minister will be able to do something about it if he remains as alert as he indicated in his speech this afternoon.

The minister has mentioned the flexibility of ARDA, and that this bill will fill a gap. He also mentioned the use of the program for land, soil and water conservation. This is a very important thing at this point in our economic history. On many occasions in previous sessions I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) to consider instituting a national water policy and a national water authority. This is another channel into which the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) could direct his thinking, because we cannot have one small area of our great resources dealt with at one time, and another small area at another time. Now is the time to consider a national water policy for the benefit of Canadians, a benefit which will flow to the rural areas as well as to those seeking water.

The minister also mentioned the importance of the social and economic effects on rural areas, and went on to say that farming as such is not the only rural problem. He mentioned education. This is truly worthy of consideration. I do not know how he can project his thinking in this regard because of the constitutional question, but I agree with him. The Toronto Daily Star of May 6 carried the following report:

> At a conference of county officials in the Lord Simcoe Hotel yesterday, W. G. Rae—

A school inspector whom I personally know well, and who resides in my home town.

> —blamed poor rural schools for much rural poverty.

Unquestionably the rural student or pupil does not have the same advantage as the city pupil. This is a ridiculous state of affairs if we want the rural areas to develop to any degree. If we are to spend $50 million under this bill, this is a factor which deserves consideration. Then there is the industrial side.

• (7:30 p.m.)

A day or so ago one of the government supporters, the hon. member for York North (Mr. Addison), was boasting about the tremendous industrial development along the lake front in the city of Toronto. This is fine; I know this. I pass by there twice a week; but can we not do a little decentralization of this type of industry. Can we not support them to a degree that it will be economically beneficial for them to move into these areas so that they may develop. Then the educational system will develop on the same base. The educational system will serve the rural area in the same way it serves the urban area. It cannot do so now because of the decreasing economic situation which exists. I can prove that by the census report for the year 1961, which I have before me. I could go down the list and point out a number of municipalities in that ten-year period which have decreased. I am sure the minister will be aware of this, because he also represents a rural area. I consider this to be a responsibility of government. I have been in municipal government and I know what the tax burden at the municipal level means. This may be an oversimplification, but it is becoming simply too burdensome. The only answer is to give them relief.

The people are there and in most cases they are willing to work, and do anything they are asked to do, so long as there is some area of development. Although the population figures for the whole constituency have increased, the decrease in the rural population is explained very simply; it is because the young people will not stay in the rural areas. I have said this before, and supporters of the government have supported this view. Almost anyone in the house who knows the situation in a rural constituency will tell you it is so. I will now depend on the minister to come forward with some ideas, and not five years or ten years from now. We do not want to wait ten years when our families are grown; we want something now for the young people, so that we can maintain their interest in the area after they have received a full and sufficient education.

To support further the view I am putting forward this evening, I have a newspaper report before me from the Toronto Telegram dated May 6, 1966, a few days ago. I think this is quite significant because of the fact that it is a report of a speech by a Liberal member of the legislature in the province of Ontario who is from a riding adjoining mine, Mr. Ross Whicher from Bruce, a person whom I know very well. The caption on the article reads "Farms starve, MPP charges". It says:

> Mr. Whicher said the provincial government had done nothing to prevent these areas slowly being strangled—

He goes on in strong terms and says:

> "We're not just asking for help . . . we're crying for it."

This is one of the areas which was painted as a black area and one which is underdeveloped, and indeed a poverty area. I say there are other areas in the province of Ontario. Mr. Whicher was supported by

N.D.P. members and a Liberal member by the name of Singer. He said:

"You've got all the flexibility in the world!"

This is what he was saying to the provincial government. It was the minister tonight who said he has flexibility in ARDA, and I sincerely hope he is aware of the need and will act accordingly. I can indicate to him the income which other counties in the province of Ontario have. These are official figures from the provincial government. In the township of North Hastings the income was an average of $1,380. In Lindsay township in the county of Bruce it was $1,530. Those are gross figures. I do not think we need go beyond the province of Ontario where the general belief is that everyone is wealthy. There are areas there which should be considered, too. I would ask the minister to bear this in mind when he is carrying out the terms of the legislation. There are others here. I could go down a long list, but statistics mean nothing except to prove a point at this time. We are looking to the future. We are looking to the minister to back up what he has said tonight. This concerns the whole country and not just one area.

I have sympathy for the people in Gaspé, whom the minister mentioned, the same as I have sympathy in respect of the need which I know exists in my own province. I am just as sympathetic concerning the people in Manitoba as I am in respect of the people who I know need help in my own province. We cannot go along and allow this area of taxation in the country to sink these people, because there is not another place for them to go. Most of them love the industry they are in and want to stay on the land; they do not want credit. Earlier in this session we expanded the use of the credit offered by the Farm Credit Corporation. But these people do not want credit; they have enough of it now. Some of them are buried in credit. This is the reason they feel no one is coming forward to do something which will give them the opportunity they require.

I notice that many of these points I have raised are in print in the bill now before us. I am pleased about that, because obviously the minister knew about all the provisions that were going into the bill. I do believe he has his finger on the important aspects of rural life which need attention, and he has outlined all of the ideas which will do the job. If he wishes to employ the powers that are at his discretion, he will now through this legislation develop a program which will assist the people to help themselves.

The minister himself said that this is not a welfare approach. As I said to him, we are not interested in this business of coming along and offering returns for efforts which do not produce. These people are willing to put the effort forth themselves, if the opportunity exists. As he stated, the legislation is not designed to step in where public investment cannot support the program that may be necessary in many areas. We experience this in our area of Ontario almost every year. There are other things we need. I often think of the assistance given in respect of the trans-Canada road program through western Ontario, and that a road program well might be considered to assist some of the small secondary industries in coming into these areas, if they should deem it advisable to locate outside the urban areas.

If again, as the minister stated, the bill is to create in the final analysis a better economic balance, a better standard of living, and a new era of development, the minister I think can be sure of the support of every member on this side of the house. Because of some of the things I have mentioned, I do not think we should be suspicious—not at all—but I think we must be very watchful and on guard to see that what the minister has said indeed becomes action, and is carried through into a realistic program for the benefit of the people in rural Canada.

Mr. Hugh Faulkner (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak very briefly to this bill, which I consider a very imaginative one. Indeed, I think the whole approach exemplified by the minister is imaginative. It is one which deals with the sort of specifics we were told about last night on television. It is very important that this sort of approach be characteristic.

Before making one or two points I should like to deal with an assertion made by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) to the effect that this government is pursuing a line which is designed to reduce the voice of rural Canada. I suggest categorically that that is a false statement, if it is based on the results of redistribution. Redistribution was considered by independent commissions whose decisions cannot be attributed to the government.

This party, of which I am very proud to be a member, is deeply concerned with what is going on in rural Canada and, furthermore, unlike some previous governments, is resolved to do a very great deal about it. I think the bill before us tonight and the attitude of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) are symptomatic of the concern of the government.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question? I should like to ask him whether he listened to my contribution to the debate on redistribution, in which I made a full explantion of the situation and suggested how it could be rectified. If he did so, the statement he has made is not valid.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, my statements were related to what the hon. member has said tonight, and that is all that concerns me at this time. His speeches cannot constantly be qualified by what he has said on previous occasions.

The other point I should like to make relates to something said by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.), (Mr. Danforth) during this debate. He referred to a fear which possibly exists in rural areas, that some of this program is designed to move people off the land, and that the solution to rural poverty is wholesale migration. I think that is a legitimate fear, but I do not think it is a valid criticism. I do not think it was ever intended by the minister, within the framework of this legislation, to provide for such an exodus.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit another question? I certainly do not wish to inject a partisan attitude to this debate, but if the hon. gentleman is at all familiar with the promises made by his party during the last election campaign as to how they would solve farm problems he should be more aware of the cause for fear in the rural population as it exists today.

Mr. Faulkner: I certainly hope that those individuals who incorporated promises of wholesale exodus from rural areas in their campaigns were defeated at the last election. Very few of us who are fortunate enough to be here incorporated that kind of promise in our election speeches.

Mr. Winkler: Walter Gordon is still with us.

Mr. Faulkner: The alternative, of course, is the concept of better land use. The hon. member for Kent (Ont.) developed some of the alternative possibilities, particularly when he referred to the tourism potential. I am very mindful of this alternative in my own riding.

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce mentioned the need for development of small industries in rural areas. I think it is imperative that members on all sides of the house make it clear to audiences in rural areas, who fear that somehow the solution envisaged in this legislation is some sort of exodus from farm areas, that this is not the purpose of the program.

I should like to make one or two specific points. I recognize, as do all hon. members, that the problem of poverty necessitates that priority be given to areas of chronic low income. I am concerned about the effects of this legislation on the more affluent, yet not totally affluent areas of Ontario. Although the problems in the Peterborough riding may not be as severe as those in other areas, they are nevertheless grave. It is very important that attention be given within the framework of this legislation to those areas which may not be chronic areas of low income, but nevertheless have grave problems. I trust the minister will give consideration to this situation.

My other point, which I think is extremely important, relates to the provision in this bill for the participation of residents of these areas. I have had some experience recently within my riding with what is going on at the provincial level in Ontario, and I think it is fair to say that there is a deep concern within rural Ontario, if my area can be taken as typical, about intrusions into the basic rights of citizens. They are not anxious to be patronized from above by governments. What they want more than anything else is simply an opportunity to exercise the sort of initiative of which they are capable, and it is important to stress this dimension in this bill.

This is not something that will be solved by a group of individuals located in Ottawa or Toronto. It will only be solved by an active participation on the part of the residents themselves in planning programs for their particular areas. This has been proven beyond a shadow of a doubt by the results of the village development programs instituted in countries like India.

There must be greater efforts made to inform rural areas as to what will be available to them through this program, what this bill intends and how they in fact can participate. It is my experience that this information is not available to them, or has not been brought to their attention as yet.

My final point refers to the role which can be played by young people. At the present time there is an exodus of young people from rural areas. This is happening for one reason, that there is a greater opportunity for them off the farms. What is really lacking is a concerted attempt to show young people that there is a future for them, not necessarily on farms but in rural areas, perhaps in other lines. There is very little in the way of leadership training programs available to them. I noticed in one of the many press releases I received from the minister's office that such a program was carried out in Alberta. That is the sort of example that is necessary, and the sort of initiative that is needed.

As I look down the concession lines of my riding I find that the average age of the farmers in my area is between 50 and 60. Most of the young people who were there have gone to work in factories operated by Canadian General Electric and Outboard Marine, mainly because no one suggested there were alternatives. They felt they had to remain on the family farm or go to work at these factories. There is actually a tremendous opportunity for these individuals if the necessary leadership is provided, and these people can in turn take advantage of the work of organizations such as 4-H clubs which are doing an invaluable job in rural areas.

I hope the role that young people can play and the advantages of participation on the part of residents will be developed as fully as possible within the framework of this bill which, as I said at the beginning, is a most imaginative and important one.

Mr. Irving: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the hon. member said that a statement made by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce was false. I do not believe the hon. member for Peterborough wants to leave such a statement on the record.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that it is not unparliamentary to say that a statement is false, incorrect or inexact. What is unparliamentary is the suggestion that a statement is deliberately and intentionally false or incorrect. That is not what the hon. member said.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I was not able to hear all the introductory remarks of the minister when he spoke at the second reading stage this afternoon. Like other members, I presume, I went to attend the committee on agriculture only to find that it had been cancelled. That fact says little for the co-ordination of committees of this house and the work of this chamber itself.

I would assure the minister, however, that I have on many occasions in the past taken the time to read—with diligence, I hope—some of the speeches he has delivered to various organizations across the country, agricultural organizations, groups of businessmen, and so on. In this way one gets a pretty clear picture of the thinking of the minister with regard to the problem of rural poverty, rural rehabilitation and ways and means of improving standards of living and levels of income in rural parts of this country.

I hope the minister will consider some of the points I raise this evening and reply to them seriatim. It may well be that what I have to say was touched upon by the minister when speaking this afternoon, or by other hon. members. I would begin by saying that the ARDA legislation in the course of the past few years has become very popular, at least in concept, and few members, if any, would really want to be critical of it.

On the other hand, I think that while we are all enthused with the legislation and the concept behind it, some of us are less enthused than others. I am one of those who, after reading about and studying the problem with which this legislation is designed to try to cope, has become somewhat sceptical and pessimistic about whether the legislation has the scope and enough money behind it thus far to really grapple with the problem in depth.

I shall try to deal with some of the reasons for my having become sceptical and somewhat pessimistic in this regard. I would ask the minister whether the amount referred to in the legislation before us, namely $50 million, is to be replenished annually, so there will be $50 million available for expenditure each year. Is this to be on a revolving fund basis or not? We have no clear indication in this respect from reading the legislation itself.

Another question that arises is, how long will the ARDA legislation be applied on a special, designated area basis? In effect, at the present time it is applied on a sort of test area basis. I maintain that it is not right, and we cannot justify for very long applying this legislation on a highly selective basis across the country. I know that in the case of crop insurance, for example, for a few years it was deemed necessary and prudent to implement crop insurance on a test area basis so the administration could learn from experience and through that learning could decide when it was right to make crop insurance available on a province-wide basis. I maintain that after five years it is time we thought seriously about making this legislation applicable to all parts of the country, and all regions of the country that meet certain requirements having to do with level of income, land use, and so on.

I do not know whether the minister has mentioned this, but I would say with all the emphasis I can muster that to my way of thinking it is really unfair that we should continue year by year applying ARDA to only a few parts of the country. For example, in Manitoba ARDA at the present time is for the most part restricted in its application to the interlake area. It is true that agreements have been entered into with the province of Manitoba for the construction and development of a provincial park on the outskirts of metropolitan Winnipeg, and so on; but in so far as rural residents are concerned, the program has been restricted to the Interlake area. Yet there are other fairly large regions within that province that have much the same kind of economic circumstances as the interlake area. In the eastern part of Manitoba, running from lake Winnipeg in a crescent on the western escarpment of the Canadian shield, one finds much the same kind of farming operations and economic circumstances as in the interlake area. Surely an area like this should be considered for inclusion in the ARDA program before many more years pass. If this is not done one would have to admit that these people are simply being denied the opportunity to benefit from whatever programming ARDA has to carry out in the next few years.

I should also like to put to the minister the thought that already there is growing skepticism, not just on my part but on the part of many people to whom I talk about ARDA, to the effect that after this number of years—and it is almost five years now—it seems that ARDA is still very much in its first phase, that is to say in its analysis, survey and study phase, and nothing really concrete or tangible of any magnitude is being done by ARDA in the way of actual, concrete programming.

I know that before effective programming and implementation of programming can be carried out there must be a pretty thoroughgoing study and deep understanding of the economic and social problems involved. But I am only passing on to the minister what I said is becoming a more deep-rooted attitude on the part of people in so far as ARDA is concerned. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) said earlier today, if the feeling becomes more widespread on the part of people that there is procrastination and bureaucratic delay in this or any other program, that program will be killed in the minds of the public and particularly those who will be involved with it. With that sentiment I thoroughly agree.

I would take this opportunity of congratulating the minister on bringing forward this legislation, which I hope will be the beginning of a real intention to start, without delay, actual, concrete programs of development and income raising in different parts of rural Canada. I think at this point, too, it would be relevant to ask the minister whether all due consideration has been given to the desirability and possibility of including in the program the people living in areas such as those I have mentioned. I am sure the minister is aware that in the war against poverty program in the United States the practice, which I believe is authorized in the legislation, is that at each level there shall be representatives of the dwellers in the designated areas themselves. So that I hope, as the minister follows through with this legislation, if this practice does not obtain, one will be developed to include the various advisory and planning boards to deal with representations of the people living in these designated rural areas. The expertise must be there, but at the same time it seems to me that there is much to be gained by having included the opinions and the advice of people who are actually and directly involved.

I must say that in reading the several speeches given by the minister on ARDA and its implementation, I have not come across any reference to this specific point as to whether such representation was being allowed, encouraged or solicited by the administrators of this legislation.

Let me say too, Mr. Speaker, that I believe the task which faces the ARDA program is immense in the extreme, and that is perhaps the main reason why I am somewhat pessimistic as to whether it will succeed to the extent of the image built up by publicity of this program, and to the extent of the hope built up in the hearts of many farm families and farm people. There is nothing wrong with publicity, of course; it is part of the process of informing the people of the problems they face, and informing them of ways and means being considered for helping them out of their unfortunate economic circumstances. I believe this kind of publicity is good, and that it is necessary. However, I cannot escape the impression that the publicity has had another effect as well, and that is to leave the impression that it will give to groups with an over-all problem, an inadequate farm income. I cannot see that this legislation will be able to assist them. But since it is a fact that ARDA shall be carried out in conjunction and in co-operation with two levels of government, and the various departments of the government, I would hope that among other co-operation which is to be carried out between the Department of Forestry and the Department of Agriculture vis-à-vis ARDA, they would also co-operate with respect to the problem of trying to come up with a new and revised policy statement on agriculture which would, among other things, deal with the problem of farm income.

As has been said by the Minister of Agriculture, for the first time in a long time—perhaps the first time ever—we are beginning to leave the economics of surplus in agriculture and we are beginning to enter the phrase of economics of scarcity of food products. As a matter of a fact, in recent days, certainly not more than two weeks ago, there was a major policy announcement from the White House to the effect that reverse United States government farm policy, particularly as it affected grain production, was now out to stimulate greater production from American farms. It seems to me that inasmuch as we are now beginning to worry about scarcity in Canada instead of surplus, now would be the time to concentrate on incomes and price policy for agriculture. Not until agricultural prices are improved considerably will we be able to hope that much of the rural poverty now existing in Canada will be erased. Only after we succeed in obtaining a more realistic and a fairer commodity pricing policy in agriculture will ARDA's task become manageable, because then they will be faced with the problem of attacking rural poverty, which stubbornly remains even after price revision and the measure of improvement it permitted.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the minister when he replies will be in a position to deal with some of these points and comments. I want to reassure him however that while I do have some sceptical feelings to express relative to ARDA and its implementation to date, nevertheless at least in concept it is the kind of program which can be endorsed and if given sufficient moneys it will be able to do a creditable and memorable job in eradicating much of the world poverty existing in our country today.

I would restate that I feel much of this publicity about the efficacy of the program and its potential is really holding out false hope, and will continue to do so until such time as we have a revision of basic farm commodity prices and policies in this country.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I shall say first to the Minister that Bill C-151, which is now before the house, is a piece of legislation which will be welcomed by all Canadians.

I should like also to mention the intellectual honesty of the minister when he said, at the beginning of his remarks, that ARDA, which was introduced in the house by the former Minister of Agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), had proved to be extraordinary legislation.

Indeed, ARDA which was presented by the previous government, has, I think greatly contributed up to now to the economic expansion of our rural areas. Of course, that legislation did not propose to cover all the economic sectors that are found in those rural areas; however, it has rendered a tremendous service to our farmers, our industrialists and those of our people whose income was below average.

I would say that Bill C-151, now before the house, supplements the ARDA legislation which was introduced by the former government and which was enacted by the house.

This legislation is entitled the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act. Of course, as a member from a rural area of Quebec, I must tell you that this legislation appeals to me in a very special way and that it is welcomed in our rural areas.

Through ARDA, the Department of Forestry has carried out in my area a project called Mont St. Anne, in Beaupré, on the north shore of the St. Lawrence. I must tell you that the taxpayers in that locality have greatly benefited from that undertaking.

But what I find a little disturbing in that legislation is that apparently the provincial authorities will have the choice as to pilot projects. The minister has already told the house that the provincial authorities will decide on the pilot projects and that the federal government will to a certain extent contribute to their preparation.

This afternoon, I was greatly impressed by the figures the Minister of Forestry gave us about the pilot project in the Lower St. Lawrence region.

Since I live on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, over the last few years, I had opportunity of hearing reports from directors of the pilot project of the Lower St. Lawrence area. The minister said it this afternoon and I noticed it myself during those television interviews, an economic survey was made not only of the economic factors but also of the human factors of the localities to which the pilot project of the Lower St. Lawrence region applied.

I am convinced that this pilot project was extremely useful when it came to statistics in the following fields: geography, demography, sociology and economics.

However, I deplore the fact that the government did not organize in the various regions of Canada a greater number of pilot projects.

There is in Quebec a designated area, that is to say an area which is not industrialized and where there is a lot of poverty. When there is talk of waging war on poverty, I think that those areas which are least favoured from an economic and social point of view should be the first ones considered.

The region I represent, Mr. Speaker, is one of those. When I speak of my region, I speak of the north side of the St. Lawrence, between Quebec City and the North Shore.

There are not a great many industries. In the Charlevoix area and part of Beaupré, there are only two paper-mills employing about 1,200 people. Of course, I am not talking here of the bush-workers who keep those mills busy but of the workers employed in the paper-mills. There are naturally family type secondary industries but they are far from employing the great number of unemployed registered now in our various selective employment offices.

I wish also to say that our workers do not have much schooling; I think the minister will understand that the area I represent can easily be compared to that of the Lower St. Lawrence and the South Shore, about which he spoke this afternoon.

To support my arguments, I would like to give you some figures. On March 31, 1965, we had in the riding of Charlevoix, 2,691 men and 217 women, a total of 2,908 persons, claiming unemployment insurance benefits.

According to the 1961 census, Charlevoix had 8,273 paid workers, namely 6,469 men and 1,804 women.

Since the number of workers has changed little since then, the rate of unemployment, as of March 31, 1965, was 37 per cent in our area. If we add to this the number of persons in receipt of relief who are not paid benefits even though they are out of work, I think the rate of unemployment would easily exceed 40 per cent.

Heaven knows that our area provides exceptional opportunities for the experts, for those who want to look after the rural development of the district. Like all those who visited our region, they were able to admire our mountains, our lakes, the sites suitable for camping. In addition, in St. Urbain, there are mines still idle for lack of capital. Moreover, forestry operations are undeveloped because we lack the required capital.

That is why our area lacks secondary industries which could help especially those hard-working people whose only wish is to earn a decent living.

There are, of course, in our areas economic planning boards. We have the tourist board which, as you know, promotes the tourist industry in our region. For six months of the year, a large number of our people live on the tourist industry. But that industry is only developed to an extent of 20 per cent.

Of course, as I pointed out to the economic planning board, our Chambers of Commerce and also our boards which promote the tourist industry, try to do something to develop that industry which is essential to our population, because our area is one of the most attractive in the province as far as the tourist industry is concerned.

Even recently I asked that Tourist Council what grants it had received from higher governments to works stimulating our tourist industry. I was told that, last year, the provincial government gave that agency only $2,000 to $3,000. And why, Mr. Speaker? For publicity to attract a greater number of people, in an endeavour to develop, as I said a while ago, an industry that is profitable, the tourist industry.

Naturally, I believe the bill introduced by the hon. minister, as I have said before, is an excellent one. But I would like the hon. minister to give us some explanations. The bill provides an amount of $50 million. This amount will, of course, be allotted by a board to be appointed by the department. Its purpose, will be, as indicated in section 4 of the bill:

(a) the undertaking jointly with the province or any agency thereof of a comprehensive rural development program in a special rural development area; or

(b) the payment to the province of contributions in respect of the cost of a comprehensive rural development program in a special rural development area—

I would like to know—I am sure he can tell us—if this money will be paid only where pilot-areas have been set up. That is extremely important. Will the $50 million provided for in this bill be paid to the provinces to help the pilot-areas already set up, those regions the hon. minister spoke of this afternoon? Here is an example: if a sum of $20 million is given the government of Manitoba, New Brunswick or Quebec, I would like to know, especially with regard to Quebec, if those millions given the provinces for rural development will be handed over exclusively to the regions where surveys of social, economic, and geographic conditions have already been made. I have no wish to start an argument with my good friend the member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron), but I would like to point this out: if the hon. minister intended these amounts to be spent first of all in those areas or pilot-areas already set up, I think it would be detrimental to the areas where the needs are just as great, whether the pilot-areas are located in other parts of the province, or elsewhere in Canada.

I would like the hon. minister to enlighten us in this regard. That aspect of the bill worries me for, in his opening remarks, the hon. minister spoke of three provinces where surveys had been made in pilot-areas. He mentioned New Brunswick, Manitoba and Quebec. I feel that should the act apply solely to the development of those pilot-areas, great and serious injury would be inflicted upon the other areas that are in great need of this help and also need these millions to fight off poverty.

In his opening remarks the hon. minister spoke of the war on poverty. We stand with him, we are all for fighting poverty in all its aspects. Now, I say it again, I feel there are regions in Quebec in great need of government assistance, federal and provincial assistance, to pull out of stagnation, to develop economically and to raise the standards of education of their people. To my mind, one of those regions is the lower St. Lawrence. I am pleased to see the hon. minister seems to agree with me, but I would ask him to enlighten us at the end of this debate and tell us how these amounts will be allotted in those regions which are also underdeveloped, designated areas. I know our municipal councils have adopted resolutions requesting information on how ARDA might be used to develop our rural areas—

Mr. Caouette: They did not get any reply from the hon. minister.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): —and in passing —did the hon. member for Villeneuve say something?

Mr. Caouette: I said they did not get any reply.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): And, in passing, I must point out to the minister that obviously, agriculture at home is terribly depressed. I recently encountered some farmers who told me that their average yearly income is between $900 and $1,600. How do you expect a farmer who must pay school taxes as the worker does, and who must make payments on machinery to improve his farm to live in 1966? It is well known, Mr. Speaker, that school taxes are terribly high in the province of Quebec. It would be high time, I feel, that the minister consider this forsaken class that is the farmers.

And so, in closing, I strongly applaud this legislation, but I trust it will be equitably applied to all areas of Canada, not only in those areas where surveys have been made to decide the best way to apply it in the economic and social fields.

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I should like first to congratulate the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) for his speech and to assure him that our economies complement each other and that, undoubtedly, any provision likely to develop the Lower St. Lawrence, more particularly the riding of Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata, will affect his own economy. I also wish to assure him of my cooperation to promote more adequate communication so that the tourists who take to the North Shore and the Lower St. Lawrence may benefit our two areas and contribute to their development.

I also wish to congratulate the minister on the introduction of his bill, on his dynamic administration of his department and on his often expressed desire to co-operate with the provinces and the public bodies which concern themselves with the problems of the development of designated areas in particular. Several members were jealous of our selection as a pilot area because there is also poverty in their regions. It must surely be the first time that poverty is to be envied. I believe there are two reasons—there is no cause for an area to congratulate itself on its selection as a pilot area. First, the main characteristic of those regions was a high level of unemployment, a low level of income and general poverty.

Another reason why we can be proud to have been chosen as a pilot area is that in the Lower St. Lawrence region, we did not merely throw the blame on others and weep over our sorrows, but we tried to take our future in hand and organize ourselves for the necessary work of rehabilitating our region and of getting the help of competent authorities.

Indeed, in 1956, the former Secretary of State, now member for Outremont-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lamontagne), in a speech made at Mont Joli, introduced the idea of an Economic Council in our region which would unite our efforts and work toward our economic development. His message was to be heard by the chambers of commerce and the municipal councils which, as early as in 1956, grouped Rivière-du-Loup, Témiscouata, Rimouski, Matapédia and Matane through an economic council whose goal was to unite all men of goodwill in the region to promote the development of its human resources so as to ensure true and lasting prosperity and to represent them before governments and higher economic organizations with regard to regional questions.

Thus we became a group and the municipalities paid 10 cents a head while the county councils contributed 5 cents a head to the establishment of an Economic Council with a permanent secretariat to help with economic surveys throughout the region. We began by assessing our main strength, our population.

We had done a study on transportation, on agriculture, and we necessarily became aware that we did not have the financial facilities to develop more fully and adequately the complex program of studying a vast territory with many complex problems.

However, that work drew the attention of government authorities and we became the first pilot area in Canada under ARDA, with special studies projected and also I hope special subsidies.

The Economic Planning Board gave birth to the Eastern Quebec Development Board and brought together many experts of different schools of thought who, for three years, have been making studies of the territory. The E.Q.D.B. decided to undertake a general study of the territory instead of specific projects, and also encouraged the people to participate in that work. Undoubtedly, much could be said on the whole question of development and the new duties of whoever would undertake it with regard to his relations with the people and his future projects.

Suffice it to say that, to my mind, developers are architects who draw up plans for the land of the local people who are its first owners and who must therefore keep the initiative and the final decision which, is recognized as that of any owner with respect to an architect.

Social incentive may have a double purpose, that of inviting the population to understand the rules of the art of development as well as the purpose of translating the aspirations of the proprietor, of the local people. I dare hope that, at the conclusion of those studies which are to be made during the summer, there will have been a full understanding of this double mission, on the one hand, of the architect who must not only have planned his development, but also have considered all the aspirations of the local people and that the latter on the other hand, will realize the considerable risk in brushing aside all the studies and in thinking that planning or development can be done simply as chance directs or by improvisation.

I think both elements are essential and must play their part and that people in office, members of parliament and others, really do their share and take part with development experts in the preparation of a program which might possibly bring about a real development of the area. We hope for a great deal from the preparation of this plan and we hope very sincerely that it will get the approval of the federal and provincial governments and that there will be numerous adjustments to develop the economy of the area.

We also have some concern which is shared by all outlying communities, or the less favoured areas, which now see great economic concentrations take place away from their territories, and in relation to the problems of agriculture, on which a man could once make his own living and which today can feed about 30 persons, gradually moving toward an industrial and commercial orientation, while the necessary expansion of lands and better utilization of farming machinery release a great number of farm employees who cannot find employment in our areas and increase the haemorrhagic outflow toward the large sectors, which deprives our society of the dynamic elements for the development of our territory.

We are greatly worried because we know that, at the present time, industrial development is made in relation to great concentrations of population and also that universities settle where there are research centers, thus accentuating that migration of young people from the rural areas to the city and creating great problems.

We understand that the industrialist is not responsible for the social problems he creates but, in the end however, through his taxes and his participation to the fiscal and economic life of the country, he foots the bill.

One may wonder what social and economic problems those economic forces, left alone and aiming toward that greater centralization, create at all levels.

Air and water pollution, the ever-increasing cost of expropriation in large cities for road construction, underground and air traffic, finally the crowding in great cities of often badly prepared people from rural areas. What does that bring about as social and moral problems? What is the general cost to society and what is the problem with regard to the standard of living and the joy of living?

Will it be necessary in the end—and that is the question being asked in rural areas—to encourage progress where it is, where it can happen or if it will be necessary to stop that drain and try to create a type of economic stability which would be better distributed throughout Canada?

In short, to remedy unemployment in rural areas, will it be necessary to encourage only a policy of manpower mobility? Would it be aiming too high and taxing too much our human and economic resources to want to better economic stability throughout the country?

Those are the questions being asked and they worry the rural areas which, in spite of all, want to build, to expand.

Father Pierre said:

> —that a world governed to please those who are happy and not to free those who suffer unjustly is necessarily doomed to hate.

One may wonder what the feeling of frustration felt in rural areas about that constant migration of their primary forces can result in at the political level for the future of the country.

If some demagogues really knew how to capitalize on those feelings of frustration, they could sometimes lead us in adventures which would have terrible repercussions on our country's future.

I submit that, in any case, we will have to pay the price of progress or recession, and by recession, I mean let things follow their own course and do nothing to restore the economic balance to which I referred a while ago.

It would be interesting to have exact figures on what I call the price of recession. What is the social and economic cost of this youth migration? People, speaking in a popular way of this centralization toward large centres, translate this thought by saying: water goes to the river and developments of large centres invite governments to invest the necessary funds for public works and other services, while the same services are refused to small centres because it would not be profitable. But shall we allow—and I return to my example—an extremely fertile land to be flooded and carried away into a single gulf, or shall we be able to embank it to allow irrigation of its shores for the benefit of all the areas?

The whole problem concerns the necessity to set up an economic balance throughout the province, throughout the country. This bad distribution leads directly to chronic and lasting unemployment in less favoured areas.

There is also the danger that this unemployment, this destitution may lead to intangible social calamities, when there are so many opportunities and so much good will that have only to be put to good use, so much wasted talent and frustrated ideals, which need only a little hope and the possibility to solve these problems, and instead of being a burden, let alone a shame for society, they can become an important asset capable of contributing to the progress of the country.

It would be interesting to know exactly the social, moral and economic problems which this human stream, poured as in a single gulf, has involved for the big city. What is the exact cost of this overcrowding of population and public investments necessitated by its greater traffic?

It is easy to conclude that the economic forces left to themselves develop like a cancer killing the best cells of our society, and developing great urban centres which are too large for man and cannot answer his deepest aspirations.

A survey made in Paris among 7,700 families gave the extraordinary result that 80 per cent of them had concluded that if they had the choice, they would prefer to live in the country; 10 per cent were indifferent and 10 per cent were happy with their lot.

It may be easy to conclude that the large amounts invested in housing, which do not really meet the wishes of the people and to say that, one day, we might want to go back to nature, to own property where we could have a garden, a swimming pool, and other facilities, that the dwellings we conceive at a heavy cost might become slums because all those who will have the opportunity to get out and the necessary income to do so, will leave.

Therefore, it is necessary to reconsider the philosophy of urban renewal and to promote instead a better distribution of municipalities and also their opportunity for a more harmonious development.

Areas where sometimes the most dynamic factors have been siphoned out, are faced with ever increasing community charges with a decreasing number of people to carry them. At any rate, society foots the bill.

There is no need to quote all the data of transfer payments or social security or unemployment insurance and assistance in the nine counties represented by the B.A.E.Q. but the minister said in his speech that it amounted to $83 million.

This is what I call to foot the recession bill. However, 50 per cent of the people work only six months a year in temporary jobs and during winter, the number of unemployed amounts to 30 or 40 per cent of the available labour force.

Prejudices go around in that respect. We will, of course, get a clear conscience by saying that these people do not want to work, that they are lazy, they do not have the necessary drive, but I should like you to answer the telephone calls of those asking the mayor for the privilege to work in ditches with water up to their knees, in extremely difficult and painful conditions.

If it costs the government a lot and the gap still widens between the more favoured and less favoured groups, this is good reason to increase the measures for industrial development in the designated areas, and to have an overall policy to assist industrial development in the outlying areas.

I proposed, as president of Quebec union of municipalities, the establishment of a department for rural development at both federal and provincial levels. I admire the work performed by the minister and I am firmly convinced that this whole problem of rural development and war against poverty is everybody's problem, in short the problem of every department, of every crown corporation, and every individual.

When a war is threatening, is everyone not urged to contribute to its cost and to share in its problems? I say that this department of national development should be headed by the Prime Minister himself, because only the Prime Minister can effect the required coordination among all the departments, ensure the centralization of their activities so as to make them realize that it is not enough to administer at best their own department, but that everyone should concern himself with promoting a more harmonious development of our economic activities.

This responsibility should be shared equally by all crown corporations and companies, such as the General Financing Corporation, the C.F.U., whose mission should be not only to bring about a general improvement in their particular field but to implement regionalization and decentralization.

If this is nobody's concern and efforts are dissipated, this serious problem will never be solved. Farms should be regrouped so as to increase their economic potential. Our people are ready to do this. The establishment of quasi-agricultural bodies and the marketing of farm products should be promoted. I know that many pieces of legislation and many persons, namely the minister, are concerned with these matters.

Municipal regrouping must also be promoted to counterbalance the large centres and to enable them to secure the equipment and the services required for desirable development.

The dispersion of industry also represents a most urgent problem. This dispersion must be remedied by putting a premium on amalgamation, reconversion, plant building, to be paid automatically and directly to the contractor who creates employment, and thus emphasize premiums on employment instead of premiums on unemployment.

Additional assistance should also be given generously to equip and organize urban services in centres likely to bring about industrial development.

The establishment of regional industrial development organizations should be promoted to regroup contractors and companies, to distribute information concerning government services on imports and exports. Surveys through advanced projects should also be undertaken to reduce investment risks by contractors.

Employees have well attended training courses, and it may be the most interesting indication to observe the dynamism of those people in the underdeveloped areas and to see how interested they are when the slightest hope of improving their lot is given to them, and the efforts and the sacrifice to which they will readily agree for their own development and for the greater general development of their environment.

Everyone understands today the problem of agriculture cannot be solved unless that economic stability is arrived at throughout the territory, because a farmer needs that marketing; he needs urban centres growing within his territory which become a market for his products; he needs in many cases to find non-agricultural or seasonal work in industries which could help him to round out his income and make it possible for him to earn a decent living for his family. That is what I call meeting the cost of progress.

Our territory is very well endowed with assets and possibilities. Father Lebret said that we have a lot to learn from what we call underdeveloped countries. Such is the case for the areas whose fundamental qualities and assets must be revalorized and which must meet the challenge of our ancestors who wanted to make of those 30 acres of ice and snow the second most industrialized country in the world and the one with the highest standard of living.

The Prime Minister of Canada said:

> In Canada, the pressures come from the north and south and not from the east and west, because our economic, social and geographic regional limits lie in the north and south. We have refused to accept the dictates of nature, economics and geography. We have built in the northern part of our continent a country which spreads from one ocean to the other and from the southern border to the Arctic ocean. Very few people in the world could have done that.

Well, we took up that challenge as a country. It is also true when it comes to a province; it is also true when it comes to a region. We have always wanted to take up a challenge to build a country. I cannot see why today we should give up those deep aspirations and keep only to what is understood, what gets along by itself, leaving the outlying areas to their lot under the pretext that it would be asking too much from the people to develop the whole territory.

The people want to take up that challenge. In the past, no one could see any possibility in the swamps of western Canada, and today it is the bread-basket of the world; important natural resources were discovered there and they are our pride and prosperity.

If there exists a territory with natural resources still untouched, with impressive water resources, which, on account of its location, is the doorway to the Atlantic markets and opens on Europe and America, it is indeed the lower St. Lawrence.

If there is a secluded part of the country where the people have kept unsullied the qualities of the great builders, and among other things an indomitable will to develop their own territory, if there is a country with a promising future, it is indeed the lower St. Lawrence.

Such a promising future is just beginning for this area, the cradle of our civilization, and the saying "Go East, Young Man" will undoubtedly be added to the traditional "Go West".

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, along with the other members who already have spoken in support of this fund for economic and social development in rural areas, I should like to say that properly administered I think it can be a very excellent thing for the farming communities of our country. I see that in this bill provision is made for a fund of $50 million and that the aim of the measure is to help the depressed agricultural areas in which this type of assistance is needed. This measure will be spread over ten provinces, and it seems to me this $50 million will have to be spread very thinly indeed in order to cover the areas in which it is required.

I hope this is just a preliminary amount and that the government will see to it that additional sums are made readily available as they are needed, because I am convinced they will be needed before very long. I should like to ask the minister a question, which I hope he will answer when he makes his summation at the end of this debate. What is the yardstick which the government is going to use in deciding which areas will receive this very much needed help?

I have in mind my own riding of Northumberland, and areas there which I believe to be very much in need of aid through this measure. I should like to know from the minister just how the decisions will be made as to which farming areas will receive this kind of assistance, and which will be excluded from it. During the election campaign the government claimed that the intention in this measure would be to take the people off the farms they are working; develop those farms into larger units, and then sell the larger units back to the farmers. The people whom I represent are not in favour of that kind of move, because they do not wish to be taken off their farms.

When they are removed, where do they go? They have no choice but to move to the city. With the new automated system into which we are moving more and more every day, one needs special skills in order to take a place in our factories in this automated age. People who have come off the farms will be at a great disadvantage in finding an opportunity to make a livelihood without having had the type of training which is needed. What the people whom I represent wish is to remain on the farms where they are today, and receive financial assistance in the way of farm loans at reasonable rates of interest, and farm loans which can be obtained without the many obstructions which are put in the way of our farmers today.

I have found that in many cases unfair restrictions are placed in the way of our farmers who desperately need financial assistance in order to buy the additional land which is needed to have an economic farm, and to buy the necessary machinery so that they can farm it economically. I hope the main purpose of this measure will turn out to be the encouragement of our farmers to remain on their farms and to enlarge the size of their farms by the purchase of additional land, and the additional machinery which they need. I hope they will not have to move off the farms so that the government can take over their land, change it in various ways, and then at some later date, after they have displaced the people, sell it back to them.

I hope this plan will make it possible for people to maintain the family farm of today. Enlarge it if necessary, but maintain it. I am convinced this is the basis of our agricultural life, and indeed the basis of our true Canadian society.

We must make it possible for our young people to remain on farms. To do so we must make loans available to them at reasonable rates and without impediments. In this manner they will be able to carry on the traditions of their families by doing the work they are best suited to do, and like to do. They will not have to move to towns and cities to work in factories, but rather remain in the areas in which they were born; which they know; and in which they wish to live.

As we all know, our farmers need financial help today in order to be competitive. This help should take the form of reasonable loans so that they can purchase the machinery necessary to farm economically, and overcome the cost-price squeeze in which they find themselves at this time. Those of us who are associated with farmers, and have the honour to represent farming communities, realize that farmers are caught in a vicious cost-price squeeze, because the prices they receive for their products remain stationary, or continue to go down, whereas the cost of supplies, machinery, and other things they must purchase on a day to day basis continue to go up. The return they receive for the capital they expend is getting less and less.

This bill calls for the setting up of advisory committees. I hope the minister when he concludes the debate, will explain how these committees are to be set up, and what type of personnel they will contain. In this regard, I should like to mention something I found to be very useful when I was in the government some years ago, as minister of Trade and Commerce. We wanted to know how best the businessmen of this country could expand our exports. To obtain this information, we held a series of conferences in various parts of the country, to which we invited businessmen. These businessmen, and the departmental heads, discussed this subject intimately and in detail. The businessmen explained the difficulties they faced, and asked us how best they could be solved. The departmental officials advised them, in turn, about the assistance available to them through the Department of Trade and Commerce.

This procedure could very easily be followed with beneficial results to the government and to the farmers of this country. Meetings could be held in the important farming areas all across Canada. Farmers could be invited to attend for the purpose of giving advice which could not readily be obtained in any other way.

When these committees are set up, I hope that the farmers whose operations may be affected by the provisions of this measure, will be given good representation, because I am sure they can provide useful and practical information. Only in this way can this measure be as efficient as it is intended.

I hope this measure will be accepted and begin to function as quickly as possible, because it is a good and useful one. Many good suggestions have been made by hon. members in all parts of this house, and I hope the minister will make use of them for the benefit of the farming community of Canada. I feel his approach to the problem is good, and I am sure he will take advantage of the many suggestions that have been made. I am very pleased indeed to give my strong support to this measure.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, having listened to hon. members of various counties, we can easily understand that even though pilot-areas are located in our province, there are others which are not considered as such but where the hon. minister could certainly find as much poverty as in any of the so-called pilot-areas.

This afternoon, the minister dealt rather at length with the poverty which exists in many rural areas of our country. In fact, the department, which is under the minister's jurisdiction spent several million dollars to discover the poor.

They forgot, Mr. Speaker, to spend millions of dollars to relieve them. To discover the poor is one thing, but to relieve their poverty is another.

A few moments ago, I heard the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Roxburgh) telling us about the poor in his constituency, one of the richest in Canada and the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) talking about the need to attract tourists in his constituency and asking the minister to direct tourists toward Charlevoix. He stated with reason, that the Lower St. Lawrence, the Charlevoix area, is one of the beautiful regions of the province. The hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron) emphasized the importance of farm product marketing. I do not think the problem lies there. Farmers who are sure of selling their products are able to market them.

They have to be sure that they will sell their products at a profit, so that it will pay them. Nobody can blame a farmer who decreases his production or gives it up when he realizes that it does not pay. This, to some extent, is what is happening not only in one area but throughout Canada, except in the west where the government guarantees to western farmers the sale of their wheat at a profit. We do not enjoy the same privileges in eastern Canada.

I come from a mining area where 30 years ago, settlers were established on uncleared lands. The legislation was then known under the name of Colonization Act. We then had the Rogers plan in Ottawa and the Auger plan in Quebec and the federal government had developed jointly with Quebec a plan for those who wanted to settle on farms.

Well, thousands of families came to settle in Abitibi, in the vicinity of Chapleau county and my own county of Villeneuve, in 1934, 1935 and 1936.

Mr. Speaker, after 30 years of labour on these farms, it has just been found, in 1966, that there are poor people living there. It is important to consider now if it would not be wiser to guide them back to urban centres. The study that could be made today would not take long, because 30 years ago, we had settlements of 200 to 250 families while now—and I invite the minister to come up for a visit to my area—in these same settlements there is not even half the population there was in 1935. At that time, both governments, federal and provincial, had a settlement program under which the settlers were paid from $10 to $15 per acre of cleared, tilled and seeded land. These people were dying a slow death.

Nowadays, most of those remaining in those agricultural sectors have to work in our cities, in our mines and other industries in order to support their farms because the land no longer feeds the farmer.

Now the minister tells us that he has found out poor people in those settlements and in the agricultural parishes. Kindly take note of this. Some members of Parliament claim, as we were told last night on the C.B.C. radio network, during the news report: "Settlers live in slums and shanties; the Abitibi settlers are unhappy".

The settlers of Abitibi are no more unfortunate than those of Lotbinière or those of Montreal who live in shanties. Our settlers are as respectable as any of those people. They are getting bad publicity. There may be some poor people but in comparison with other areas, there are not more in our area than in Montreal or in Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata, Charlevoix, Lotbinière or in any other agricultural riding of the province.

There is in our northern area an exclusively agricultural county, that of Témiscamingue, which has perhaps the best farming land in the province of Quebec, and there again the farmers experience difficulties. Why? The farmers do not want to work. Their farms are not large enough. I heard the premier of the province of Quebec mention this fact on television. It is intended to reorganize the farms, to create collective farms, since an area of 100 acres is not large enough to ensure the livelihood of a family, but most of these farmers have no more than 40 to 50 acres of arable soil ready for production.

If we could only assure the farmers and the settlers that they can sell their products and earn a profit, Mr. Speaker, the farmers in Quebec and in eastern Canada would undoubtedly double, triple and quadruple their production in a few years.

The minister indicates that it is so. Then, why spend hundreds of millions of dollars to say that we are looking for the poor whereas we should spend those millions to assure the sale of their products? He was saying that we must be able to expand markets. We are told every day, every week and every month that two thirds of the world are underfed, that people in India are underfed, and they tell us in the House of Commons, in Canada, one of of the most affluent countries in the whole world, that we must find markets for Canadian farm products.

Mr. Speaker, it is a shame to hear such statements in the Parliament of one of the wealthiest nations in the world. It is neither the markets nor the market possibilities which are lacking but the financing which would secure the sale of the farmer's products.

The Minister of Forestry knows very well that I am right on that point. Let us guarantee the farmer the sale of his products and you will see a decrease in the number of the poor in the rural areas of our country. This guarantee of sale of the products, Mr. Speaker, will put a check on the desertion of family farms, prevent the creation of community farms, and a farmer on a 100 acre-farm will be able to do well and even have employees.

We have seen community farms in Russia: Their agricultural production has been decreasing year after year for the past ten years. In Canada, because of the family farm, our agricultural production has increased.

Today, in Quebec, we do not produce 50 per cent of the consumption of our province. It is said that we lack markets, openings. Let us be reasonable. Let us use our brains and organize agriculture on a viable base which will allow the agricultural class to live like the other classes of our society.

Bill C-151 stipulates that an amount not exceeding $50 million is to be earmarked for agriculture to help farmers throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, when we are at the point where farmers, not only in Abitibi, Rouyn, Val-d'Or and La Sarre, but in all the province of Quebec, leave their homes in winter to work as lumbermen in Abitibi and in northern Ontario, we wonder why. But it is to earn money, because the farm does not give them enough for their living.

The minister does not speak about that. I see the member for Charlevoix; he has the same problems in his riding. There is not a single member here, who has rural areas in his riding, who does not face the same conditions, the same problems. We spend our time trying to find out the poor among the agricultural class. For 20 years, we have known that agriculture is poor, we have heard about poor farmers.

We are presented a program establishing at not more than $50 million the amount to wage war against poverty. His Eminence Cardinal Léger said it on television: We have been talking about the poor and poverty for a long time and yet nothing is done to relieve them. Whatever programs we create, they will give nothing if we do not guarantee the sale of agricultural products in Canada.

This is the only way. Besides, it is the only method followed by this government and even by former governments, to assist agriculture in western Canada. The sale of wheat was guaranteed in the west; let us do the same thing in the east. We do not know what to do with foodstuffs, we are afraid of a surplus. Let us build refrigerated storage instead of paying inspectors to go and find the poor. Let us build refrigerated storage to store foodstuffs in case the people of the world would need them and, of course, first the people of Canada, our country that we are developing and building.

Mr. Speaker, this ARDA plan as that assistance to redevelopment is called: An Act to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas. All areas are special in eastern Canada.

The hon. member for Charlevoix mentioned that in his area, the government is not too quick to help fight poverty and he insisted on the fact that his riding is a wonderful touristic area, that the minister should tour his county in order to assess the possibilities for a tourist industry. He is right, that is a beautiful area. However, I would like to point out to the hon. member that the finest lakes for fishing are located in my area and also the best trout. This is why each year Americans and a good number of Canadian citizens come to my riding. But this is not the answer to the problem.

Mr. Speaker, the matter of farming does not concern only one group in a riding, it concerns all farmers.

I want to speak again of my area. It has good fertile lands. We do not have only sheds, log cabins as some would want to believe or try to make us believe, but there are agricultural opportunities in Abitibi. This is proven by the fact that Abitibi has existed since 1908, 1909. People who live there all the time have not always worked in mines; they lived off agriculture during the years 1920, 1921, 1922. The first mine to be opened in the north, at Rouyn, dates back to 1925, when the Noranda mine started its operations. In the Amos and LaSarre areas, we had farming and forests. The land was beautiful and our farmers had big herds in Abitibi as elsewhere in other provinces.

But, when sales in the dairy industry no longer pay the farmers, when costs of dairy products exceed selling prices, everyone can understand why the farmers want to get rid of their herds. When it cost more to fatten a pig than it brings in, can the farmer or producer be blamed for doing so?

Farmers are forever being blamed: he has no talent, he does not have enough education. All sorts of nonsense is spoken about the farmers but, Mr. Speaker, I say so again before closing, the only way to help them and the rural people, in every province throughout Canada, is to guarantee the sale of their products.

Let us put an end to expenses in search of the poor, and instead, let us find a way to sell their products and encourage the farmers. You will see that the settlers, the farmers are able to organize their production according to the demand. All the government has to do is see that the products are sold. The farmers do not need the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), nor the hon. Minister of Forests, nor ARDA, to tell them what to produce when there is a demand and they are sure of selling their products.

You will see that farmers can organize production when they feel it is possible to sell their produce. And the same thing goes for stock breeders and dairy farmers. If there is a chance for milk sales to double, herds will be doubled within a few years. Two hundred and five hundred acres will not be needed.

A farm of 100 acres can provide livelihood for a family. It has done so in the past when there was a chance to sell its produce. You will see that the family farm could survive and be profitable to the farmer, and thereby to the whole of Canada, for, at long last, we will have brought balance to the economic life of the farmer, and he will stand on an equal footing with other classes of Canadian society.

Mr. Jean Berger (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that those who are familiar with the riding of Montmagny-L'Islet cannot but warmly and sincerely welcome this bill introduced by the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) and entitled: an act to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas.

If you allow me a little aside before starting my remarks, I should like to call attention to a remark of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). He attempts to condemn this bill by suggesting that funds are being earmarked for a poor hunt, meaning farmers. If he only takes the trouble, he will realize that even though the present government has not accomplished everything it intended, it has nevertheless accomplished a great deal especially by giving the country the best dairy policy since confederation.

We also have a program providing for the establishment of a feed grain purchasing and distribution agency for eastern Canada. All those measures are designed to help agriculture, but the main reason why I am interested in agriculture as a whole, is because provision is being made for the establishment of a $50 million fund, in addition to the $125 million available to us under ARDA.

I think that all fields should be looked into. At present, I am concerned with all matters pertaining to agriculture.

Before starting my remarks, I wish to say that I heard the hon. member for Villeneuve quote Cardinal Léger. On the same occasion, His Eminence Paul-Emile Cardinal Léger said about war on poverty something that should be noted:

> As desirable as may be a strong state intervention, so should be rejected the idea that everything should be expected from the state and that it is sufficient, in order to eliminate poverty, for every individual to seek quietly to enjoy as much as possible the largest income possible, entrusting with the state alone the care of looking after the outcasts of fortune. The delusion that a brotherly and orderly human society can be established on that basis must be denounced. In the war on poverty, public authorities should therefore take strong action, but should allow programs resulting from private initiative, which are also necessary, to come into being and to progress.

This is what the cardinal said about war on poverty.

It is not claimed that this legislation will of itself solve all problems: along with others which already exist or which are being prepared, it will help not only the farmers but all levels where some unbalance is to be found.

Naturally, it is realized how popular a program ARDA is. Everyone applauded when it was introduced. I think it was the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer) who said that after five years, he had some doubts; he felt that ARDA was possibly not progressing fast enough. He was not alone. We too may have felt for a time that ARDA was a cure-all for every ill and possibly quicker-acting than we thought.

[Mr. Berger.]

But in view of the seriousness and the scope of the problem, it is quite evident that the greatest caution must be exercised.

The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) himself stated that legislation adopted 30 years ago may have been instrumental in establishing municipalities on crown lands that should have remained as such. Villages were founded all over and unfortunately, it is realized today that such villages possibly should not have been founded but that the areas should have been maintained as timber lands. Such things have happened in most ridings I have had the pleasure of visiting, in which I have stayed, lived and worked on the north shore of the St. Lawrence as well as on the south shore. Such legislation, it is being realized today did not produce the expected benefits.

It is obvious that with such a program as ARDA, with its scope and with all the assistance it is intended to bring forth, we must proceed cautiously.

That is why, in closing the debate, the Minister of Forestry, who is responsible for ARDA, will surely have the opportunity of replying to the observations that have been made.

But as far as I am concerned, I should like to join with the hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron) and others to say that we, too, are interested in the adoption of this particular bill. Obviously, if the legislation provided for an increase of $100 million instead of $50 million, everybody would be happier still. And when I say this, I am casting an eye toward the Minister of Finance who would undoubtedly not smile so readily if his budget were to be encumbered more than he can afford at the present time.

I come back to this point. When the topic is the farm situation, you can be sure that I am interested, not so much because I was brought up in the riding of Montmagny-L'Islet and have returned, there, but because, due to close co-operation with the South Shore Development Council, which is mainly concerned with the activities in the counties of Bellechasse, Montmagny-L'Islet and Kamouraska, we see various problems arise on several occasions.

Obviously, like many others, I am not too happy sometimes to be part of a so-called designated area or an area which is not quite able to meet all its wishes and aspirations.

Nevertheless, when we must face problems, it is up to us to consider them seriously and to establish priority needs. Agriculture, on the shores of the river, in counties such as Montmagny-L'Isles, Bellechasse, Kamouraska—and I would go as far as Témiscouata—faces very complex problems, because if farms are fine in the lower part of the county, when you get to the heart of the district—and the Minister of Forestry is aware of this, since he went out there and met with the local people—the problem of agriculture arises. There has been a suggestion about a reforestation program or an improvement program, through the development of parks that could be used by hunting and fishing clubs, thus allowing everybody to practise those sports. There is a program which, I am sure, concerns as much the neighbouring riding of Kamouraska as mine. Through ARDA, we foresee the possible improvement of the touristic industry, not only the domestic travelers but visitors from the neighboring United States, by developing access roads to Eastern Lake which, in passing, is very interesting and most important, being partly on Canadian territory and partly on U.S. territory. There are surely many things to be done there.

Speaking of reforestation, I am convinced that ARDA can certainly help us in the best possible manner. It may be, in a few years, the only lasting solution which will allow us to protect our lumber industry, the most important economic element of our constituencies. I am thinking of the sawmills on the upper limits of the ridings along the American border which, nowadays and for a few more years, must bring in their supplies of raw materials almost exclusively from the American side.

Under the Canada-United States project for dredging or harnessing the St. John river, these sources of raw materials will disappear within an indefinite number of years. That is why it is very urgent, considering the seriousness of that suggestion, of that agreement between Canada and the United States for the harnessing of the St. John river which is under study, to think now about protecting our forests, if we want to keep that industry of vital importance to most of the region all along the St. Lawrence.

Unfortunately, some of our forests have been plundered; I do not blame anyone here in particular. There is certainly legislation which should have been passed before, either at the provincial or at the federal level, but I can scarcely mention it because I am not now asking myself whether what was done in 1962 or in earlier years was right. We are now in 1966 and we must look to the future to be sure that in 1966 and until 1976 at least, we have checked this danger sapping all our natural resources. To a certain extent, that is the reason for measures such as the one we are discussing to-night.

Mr. Speaker, this bill interests me because I see that it means to increase revenue and employment, raise the standard of living and, above all, provide for the participation of the inhabitants of the region in the implementation of such a program.

That is another commendable factor which should be mentioned and which will help to reassure our young people, to set them up or to resettle them by giving them the benefit of the experience of older people, their parents who, as pioneers working these strips of land, managed to make them productive in spite of changing times and hardship. If young people still wish to live where they were born, where their home is, they and those who are less young will, under similar programs, be able to participate themselves in the struggle of their region for survival. Let us extend this to the provincial and national level and we will be sure of reaching our goal.

This is not what I call a war on poverty. I believe it is a well planned and orderly way to look at our production and examine our future needs.

Can we blame a government or a department, be it the Department of Agriculture, that of Forestry or the one responsible for ARDA, for insisting to tell people who desperately want to stick to a strip of land which is not really one but rather an expanse of rock, that in spite of their insistence and their obstinacy, they will never be able to grow the products they want to sell or need for their subsistence?

Then the time has come for the government to help those people through appropriate legislation. I am not saying that those people have to be moved and dragged all over the country, but it is certainly our duty to concern ourselves with the people living in areas where there is no means of subsistence, so that they are not ruthlessly uprooted. But if they are now classified as farmers without really being so actually, they will never be.

Why not let them benefit, under ARDA, from the advantage we enjoy for reforestation work? That would give work to all the people concerned and would ensure the development of a heritage so very important in an area like the one I have the pleasure of representing here. That would enable us to bring about improvements in every respect and in every field. It is this flexibility of ARDA which will enable us, when the very necessary studies which are under way have proven the foundation of certain measures, to work more wisely and particularly more seriously without having to boast of any action of our government.

It does not necessarily endeavour to find where the poor are, but it tries above all to bring them relief. And in this field of help to the needy, the party to which I have the honour to belong is certainly not the one which has done the least since confederation. Anyway, there always remains something to be done. Through conscientious work, not by always doing the same thing and distorting the facts we shall succeed in accomplishing something for the poor people. In fact, it always comes back to the dollar sign. It always ends up the same way. It is always the same tune. If we lend an attentive ear it is always the same tune, the same song.

If the bills presented to our attention do not always completely fulfil our aspirations, we can always try to improve them somewhat. But it is nevertheless a new landmark which will allow us to follow a safer path, which will allow us, without political distinctions, to further our social, cultural and economic development to its fullest extent if we wish to have a more prosperous and stronger country where it will be good to live.

The county of Montmagny-L'Islet which, according to the new redistribution of seats, is to disappear—it will remain the same in length and breadth—to the advantage of surrounding counties in which it will eventually be incorporated, will become one of the most prosperous counties, where this dangerous downward trend will have been stopped and in which production will start again.

I wish to congratulate from the bottom of my heart, on behalf of my constituents, the Minister of Forestry for having introduced a bill which will certainly make our work more pleasant and more effective.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize for having taken so much of your time.

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet?

[Mr. Berger.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac wish to ask a question of the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet?

Mr. Latulippe: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. member tell us who led the people into poverty, who brought poverty, who ruined the economy of the country, who did all that?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, it should first be proven that we have reached a point that calls for such pessimism as I have just heard from the hon. member, to which I do not agree at the outset—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hon. member for Queens.

[English]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I will try to be as objective as possible. It is not of much interest to me which government belonging to which party had the best or the worst record with regard to the rural problems of Canada. I think we all recognize that there are rural problems.

I want to base my remarks on the problems existing in the maritime provinces chiefly, but my references will be directed almost exclusively to Prince Edward Island, and what applies there in most cases equally applies to the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and to a lesser extent Newfoundland.

In the maritime provinces agriculture and the primary industries are a very important part of our economy. The primary industries of agriculture and the fisheries are the mainstay of our economy. Yet if we examine the over-all economy in the maritime provinces, what is the situation we find? We find that the population in the maritime provinces imports—and I use this term in the sense of bringing products into the area, not necessarily from outside the country—about half of its total meat requirements.

If you go into a shopping centre in the maritime provinces, Mr. Speaker, you will see foods that could be produced in the maritime provinces but which have been imported from all corners of North America. You find turkeys from California, carrots from Texas, apples from British Columbia, and so on.

In addition to this the agricultural economy of the maritime provinces imports great quantities of feed grains from western Canada; and there is a place for them up to a point. We also find that in the last 50 years the maritimes have changed from producing an important portion of their flour requirements to a situation today in which virtually all flour requirements are imported from western Canada.

It is true that in Prince Edward Island especially, and also in New Brunswick, there is trade in the opposite direction in food products, chiefly potatoes, which are exported in large quantities to markets in central Canada and the New England states. In the past number of years the provincial governments have also made a great effort to develop frozen food industries, and they are helping the economy to a considerable extent.

What is happening to agriculture in the maritime provinces? Why is this great importation of food necessary? Is it that the potential agricultural production in the maritimes has already been fully exploited? You would imagine, Mr. Speaker, that that is probably the case, but in actual fact it is not the case. In my own province of Prince Edward Island, which depends to such a very great extent on agriculture, the situation has been a very discouraging and disappointing one over the period of the last 30 to 40 years.

I should like to quote briefly from a very excellent publication known as memoire No. 9, produced by the geographical branch of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, 1962-63, with reference to land use in Prince Edward Island. This publication points out that between 1911 and 1956 the Island's acreage of improved agricultural land decreased from 769,000 acres to 645,000 acres, or approximately by 16 per cent. In other words, over that period of time 16 per cent of the agricultural land in Prince Edward Island has been abandoned. In addition, the number of farms has decreased between 1941 and 1956 from 12,230 to 9,442.

This is to me, Mr. Speaker, a shocking decrease in the use of the agricultural potential of that small province. Naturally the question we need to ask and to which we should find the answer is: What is the basic root cause of this situation?

A number of factors can be cited. There are of course the economic causes, such as small farms which had served their purpose during the pioneering stage of subsistence living but which were unable to make the transition to a commercial operation which was viable. But I believe there are other causes. For example, I am concerned with rural blight. I have noticed that when a rural area becomes depressed a cumulative effect sets in and the economy of the area becomes depressed. It becomes more difficult for that area to carry the necessary facilities to maintain a reasonable standard of living, such as provision of good schools and so on. The educational level of the people drops and they become discouraged. The more ambitious of them, or at least the more discontented, emigrate from the area, which becomes depopulated as a result, making it more difficult for the people who remain to carry on supporting community requirements such as schools, churches, roads, telephones, power lines and so on. You have a spreading malaise within the area which, once it starts, is very difficult to cure. There has been a tendency by all governments over the years, I believe, to fail in their attempts to get at the root cause of this problem. There has been a tendency for agricultural departments to follow the doctrine that: To him that hath shall be given; and from him that hath not, even that which he hath shall be taken away. What I mean by that is that the agricultural departments over the years have been concerned chiefly, or to a great extent perhaps, with the better types of farmers—the farmers that tend to go to them for information.

At the lower end of the scale there are the completely discouraged, poorly educated, depressed farmers who have given up hope almost entirely and who have failed. They have become so cynical in their attempts that they have failed to seek advice of a technical nature from agricultural departments which are doing their best to bring about better methods of farming and to bring about all those other things that would lead to a better life for others.

There is a tendency for government services to be provided—I mention services such as rural electrification, and so on—for those areas that have the greatest number of people, where such services can be put in with a minimum of outlay. The result of this is that thinly populated areas which need encouragement and stimulation are the last to be considered, and the last to be served. This has further discouraged the backward agricultural areas, with the result that even in a province such as Prince Edward Island, where agriculture is of such importance, and which has been almost totally settled, there are places—in my constituency, and in other counties to a larger extent—where in a school district that in living memory had perhaps 30 students going to a one-roomed school, today has not a single resident. The whole area has been permitted to grow up in scrub. This is a very discouraging situation, and a very unfortunate one. I believe we are nearing the point when we shall require all the usable agricultural land of this country to help supply the food needs of North America, not to mention the food needs of the underdeveloped and overcrowded parts of the world.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this, as well as the ARDA program, is a new approach to the realization of the fact that previous programs have not met the problem of rural blighted areas.

I commend this legislation. I think it would be folly to expect it to be a cure-all for all ills, but I think it is a step in the right direction. I think one of the most important things that has to be done is to revive the self-confidence of the people who want to live in the country by agricultural or other rural pursuits. I believe this can best be done by setting up pilot operations. For instance, if an area has become blighted, I think it would be well, as an administrative project, to buy up the required amount of land to create an economic farm unit, and to put a young, well educated farmer on that farm, giving him some sort of incentive under a buy-back program to buy the farm so that he could demonstrate not only that certain things can be done, but that they can be done economically, thereby proving to farmers who want to carry on a modernized farming operation but who hesitate to do so because they have to borrow most of the money, that the operation can be made to pay off.

That is a responsibility that we have if we believe in what we are trying to do. It behooves us to prove the point that farms can be economic. Otherwise the confidence of rural people will be further destroyed, and they will hesitate to take advantage of programs which may be envisaged by those who are in government and who are conscientiously trying to do a good job, but who, unlike the farmer, have not any of their personal livelihood at stake, and who are living on a guaranteed salary.

After all, in this day and age it takes a large investment of something like $40,000 or $50,000 to operate the average economic farm, and even that is a fairly small operation. It has to be demonstrated that it is good business, nevertheless, to borrow most of this money. It has to be demonstrated that if a farming operation is carried out with the most modern methods, with industry and good intelligence, a livelihood—and not just a poor livelihood, but a reasonable livelihood—can be earned for a man and his family, so that they can look forward to the future with the expectation of being able to educate their children, at least through high school, so that they can have some of the amenities of life, and so that they can live in a reasonable house with a reasonable standard of living somewhat comparable to that of the lower income brackets in the average city.

[Mr. MacLean (Queens).]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): I wonder if I might announce the business of the house now for tomorrow and Thursday. We should like to start tomorrow with item No. 5 on today's order paper, the continuation of debate on Bill C-151. Then we should like to take item No. 12, second reading of the bill to amend the Northwest Territories Act, then, second reading of the bill to amend the Yukon Act. Then we would take the Forestry estimates, the Labour estimates, the Post Office estimates and the Industry estimates.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION ON GRADE STANDARDS

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on May 4 I addressed the following question to the Minister of Agriculture:

Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister mind, for the information of members of this house, having a pamphlet issued by his department informing consumers what is being done by the Department of Agriculture to protect consumers with respect to grade standards in all types of agricultural produce?

This should also include the words "distributed to members of this house".

I shall have to make that a correction in Hansard. However, I am quite sure that the parliamentary secretary understood the intention behind my always pure motives. I asked this question as a result of a meeting of the Agriculture, Forestry and Rural Development Committee. The minister was present at the meeting, and some of the officials were answering questions with respect to literature and information that was published by the Department of Agriculture for the information of consumers, dealing with the work of the department in connection with the establishment of grades for all types of agricultural produce, for instance, meat, beef, mutton, other meats, fruits, vegetables, honey and so on.

They also informed us of the inspection services undertaken by the Department of Agriculture to protect consumers across Canada, so far as possible with the staff available. I thought it was a very interesting and informative morning. It was for that reason that I asked the minister this question, but once again the Speaker failed to recognize the urgency and importance of the question, and I was referred to this late hour to discuss it. Anyway, I am quite glad to have the opportunity to speak for five, six or seven minutes instead of for one minute.

I mention this because I am quite sure there are many people in Canada who do not know of the services provided by the department, and of the literature and information that is available. In the first instance, I thought it would be a good idea for members of this house to understand this, because many members do not understand what is being done by the Department of Agriculture in this respect. This is why I ask whether the minister could distribute this pamphlet to the members of the house.

Naturally there is need for co-operation between the department and its officials, and consumers generally across the country. I am simply rising to bring this to the attention of the house and to suggest that a particular effort be made to send this literature not only to consumers organizations, which normally are found just in the larger centres—you do not find them in the smaller towns or villages —but also to farmers institutes, women's institutes, all sorts of agricultural organizations at the local level, chambers of commerce, trade unions, co-operatives and other community organizations of that type.

I believe it is important that more people know about this legislation and understand it. We must realize that the wife of a trade union member is just as interested in knowing what is being done in this respect as is the wife of a farmer, or of a member of a chamber of commerce, or of a member of some other organization. For that reason I rise to bring it to the attention of hon. members, and once again to urge that a particular effort be made to inform the consuming public of the services now available from the Department of Agriculture.

I know there is co-operation between consumers and officials of the department, but not to the extent that could be possible. I know of one instance where a man went down Elgin street in Ottawa and saw some apples on display in a store. They were obviously what we call in B.C. jumbo packed. It was a normal grade of apple, but not a fancy grade. However, these apples had been taken out of the box and put in small piles, with a card reading, "Extra fancy B.C. apples."

In this case the man knew something about grading apples and immediately got in touch with the Department of Agriculture. Within an hour and a half officials of the department went to the store and stopped this practice, which was an attempt to sell low grade apples at a high price. I am not going to say any more about this tonight, but I do feel that this is a service that can be improved, not only to the advantage of the department but to that of all whom it is intended to serve.

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to have the opportunity of answering a question put by my fellow alumnus, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). I am particularly happy that he has brought this important question to the attention of the house at this particular time.

One of my earlier experiences and my first opportunity to see western Canada was in 1937 when I had the duty of looking after a Canadian Department of Agriculture exhibit, following the class A circuit in western Canada. In that particular exhibit we had one section which was devoted to the consumer and which suggested that the consumer should always buy by grade. I recall quite vividly the sections of the exhibit which dealt with canned fruit, canned vegetables and so on, which were packed in various grades such as fancy quality and others. Then there was a section which dealt with the grades of eggs which were available to consumers at that particular time. So, my early experience is in keeping with the question which has been asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

I am particularly happy to be able to say tonight that the department has undertaken to prepare a compendium, if you like to call it that, of all the grades affecting products such as have been mentioned by the hon. member. This will be available in the near future and will be available for fairly liberal —fairly free distribution.—

Mr. Douglas: Be careful.

Mr. Beer: —to consumers and to members of this house. It will be available for wide distribution, and I think this is a publication we all look foward to having in our possession. I believe it will be most informative on the matter of grades of farm products and other products which are available to the consumer.

FINANCE—REDUCTION IN DEPRECIATION MOBILE EQUIPMENT

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, on April 13, the Truckers Association of Quebec Inc. sent the following telegram to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp):

> Urgent Stop Reduction of depreciation rate on spare parts of automobile equipment from thirty to 20 per cent will seriously affect already weakened financial position of trucking industry Stop Earnestly request reconsider maintaining present 30 per cent depreciation rate for replacement truck, tractors and trailers Stop This is vital economic security factor Stop Announced budget provides no change in depreciation rate of competing railway and shipping interests.
> (Signed) Camile Archambault
> Truckers Association of Quebec Inc.

In addition, the Canadian Trucking Association Inc. which, like our Parliament, represents every province in the country, advises its members in its Bulletin of April 15, 1966 that in spite of the desirable objective of the government to restrain the demand for the production of services to reduce the pressure of inflation, the government has failed to solve the special problems of the trucking industry. The reduction of the depreciation rate on automobile equipment will increase the operating costs of some industries by raising taxes. The 11 per cent sales tax on tire recapping will also increase operating costs since manufacturers estimate that this change in the excise tax will increase cost from three to four dollars per recapped tire.

The federal government can surely not be accused of over-protecting the trucking industry, since the competitive railway companies have been enjoying since 1959 the bounteous gifts of that government.

It should be kept in mind that when the federal government affects the operations of the trucking industry, by the same token, it affects all the suppliers of that industry and I need not emphasize in this house the economic importance of that group. However, I would be remiss if I failed to point out that this industry represents a capital investment of over $1 billion in rolling stock and facilities, of which more than 90 per cent are controlled by Canadian interests. The industry directly employs over 125,000 people.

In 1964, I put on the order paper a notice of motion which was not discussed due to the time limit set for the discussion of private members' business. This notice of motion read as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should not implement the recommendations of the royal commission on transportation, better known as the MacPherson Commission, which suggests, among other things, that railway companies should be free to set up a trucking system.

It is unthinkable that the federal government should subsidize an enterprise when the latter, thanks to those subsidies, enters into an unfair competition with a private enterprise which has all the required facilities to serve the country adequately.

The trucking industry has never asked Ottawa for special privileges. On the contrary, it kept on organizing its services to meet the ever increasing needs of Canadian shippers, and it contributed materially to the development of several regions of Canada. Wherever there are highways, the cost of which is partly paid by the trucking industry, there are trucks serving those areas.

• (10.10 p.m.)

In the United States and the United Kingdom, access of railways into the trucking field is prohibited, and the same should apply in Canada. Railway companies buying trucking firms are surely not helping to solve the highway transportation problem in Canada, where a truly independent and competitive method of transportation by land must be maintained.

Parliament should set policies preventing the taking over of trucking firms by railway companies. Shippers should be able to choose between two really competitive land transportation methods. Shippers would thus be sure of getting better service. Besides, they can decide in favour of maritime or air transportation.

Our policy of grants to railways is really harmful to the trucking industry. Those grants make it possible to charge lower rates and undermine competition. They are the equivalent of a preferred treatment at the expense of free enterprise because they seriously endanger the growth of the trucking industry.

Of course there is no question of minimizing the importance of our railway system which is essential like all the other transportation systems to the economic development of our country.

Recently, the trucking association of Quebec Inc. submitted to the Quebec minister of transport and communication a brief which also concerns the federal government. In that brief, resolution 18 reads as follows:

The trucking firms must be protected against the railways having access to the field of road transport.

Whereas the trucking industry in the state of Quebec is operated now, as it is generally in Canada, by private enterprise and that it is essential to protect it against the subsidized competition of the railways;

Whereas the intrusion of the railways in the operation of road services would have serious repercussions as much for the users as for the professionals of the road;

Whereas in having access to road transportation, the railways compete ridiculously against each other and that this monopoly in piggy-back transport puts an end to any real competition;

Whereas the shipping public, the industrialists, the business people, the farmers, are not complaining about the quality of the trucking services now operated by private enterprise, without direct or indirect state grants; and that, on the contrary, important bodies such as the Quebec chambers of commerce have made known clearly that they favour private trucking in that respect;

Whereas it is necessary to give the public a choice between two separate transportation systems which really compete against each other;

Whereas the government of the province of Quebec in its brief to the MacPherson Royal Commission on Transport states in section 203 the following—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to thank the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) for the excellent speech he has just made on the situation of the trucking industry. Naturally, we are very well aware of his desire to defend the rights of the Quebec Trucking Association and, as far as I am concerned, I would be inclined to share his opinion on several of the points he raised in his speech.

As for his reference to the telegram sent to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) on April 13, 1966, by the Quebec Trucking Association Inc., with regard to the lowering of the rate of the capital cost allowance for certain assets acquired in the course of the next 18 months, the department is giving serious consideration to the representations made by the Trucking Association of the Province of Quebec which, by the way, is very alert and always ready to defend adequately its members' interests.

It goes without saying that after serious consideration of this problem, I think the possible solutions will be put before the house, upon consideration of budget resolutions, which should be brought before the house soon. The hon. member could raise the matter again at that time, and if the minister has reached a conclusion with regard to this aspect of the budget, the policy of the government will then be made known.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.18 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FULTON—NEWSPAPER REPORT OF EVIDENCE AT ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of personal privilege.

Yesterday's edition of the Toronto Globe and Mail on page 8 contained an article with the following headline: "Fulton felt Sevigny was security risk but stayed in cabinet with him 2 years". It contained also the following lead paragraph:

> E. Davie Fulton acknowledged yesterday that he remained in the Diefenbaker cabinet with Pierre Sevigny for two years believing that Mr. Sevigny was a risk to the security of Canada.

It was only yesterday afternoon that I was able to compare the transcript of what I had actually said in evidence with the passage as quoted from the newspaper report. The headline quoted creates an entirely false and misleading conception of my position as outlined in the evidence I actually gave; and the lead paragraph is simply not true and is contrary to the position I took in my evidence.

Since the commission adjourned yesterday until Wednesday, May 18, this is my first opportunity to refute the impression created by the passages quoted. In my evidence, while I referred to the definition of a security risk, I also referred to the fact that in assessing the matter, account would have to be taken of the character of the person concerned, his loyalty to his country and the likelihood of his succumbing to blackmail.

I said in my evidence that in my view Mr. Sevigny was a man who would not yield to blackmail. I also said that after Mrs. Munsinger left Canada in February, 1961 I received no indications from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police of any continuing concern with respect to security, and that if I had I would have raised the matter again.

It should also be added that while Mrs. Munsinger was in Canada and after her association with Mr. Sevigny was known, evidence given before the commission disclosed that the R.C.M.P. officer in charge of the surveillance reported to his superiors that in his judgment there was no reason to continue surveillance from a security point of view. In my evidence I repeated that in arriving at a decision on this point of security risk the Prime Minister would properly take into account the factors of Mr. Sevigny's character, loyalty to his country, war record and family reputation, and that in my view on the basis of all these considerations, including the absence of any breach of security before or after December, 1960, the judgment to keep Mr. Sevigny in the cabinet was vindicated.

In the light of my full evidence it will be seen that the conclusions reflected in the passage I have quoted from the newspaper simply do not reflect my position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

TABLING OF COMMUNIQUE FOLLOWING MEETING OF LAW MINISTERS

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I ask permission of the house to table a copy of the communiqué issued following the meeting of the law ministers of the Commonwealth, which I attended together with two officials of the Department of Justice as representatives of the Canadian government. I invite attention to the text of the communiqué that states:

> The meeting considered that Commonwealth extradition arrangements should be based upon reciprocity and substantially uniform legislation incorporating certain features commonly found in extradition treaties, e.g. a list of returnable offences, the establishment of a prima facie case before return, and restrictions on the return of political offenders.
> The meeting accordingly formulated a scheme setting out principles which could form the basis of legislation within the Commonwealth and recommended that effect should be given to the scheme in each Commonwealth country.

The ministers discussed reciprocal arrangements concerning the enforcement of maintenance orders within the Commonwealth, and the meeting also agreed to recommend to the Prime Ministers that a small legal section be added to the Commonwealth secretariat to perform the functions of a legal liaison office among Commonwealth governments. The discussions were notable in demonstrating the community of feeling and purpose that exists within the Commonwealth.

Subsequent to the conference I met with the Home Secretary and other officials in the office of the Home Secretary for the purpose of discussing matters relating to penitentiaries, the correctional system and senior police training.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to welcome the Solicitor General back to the house. He is one who has always been close to the law, and as a bencher of Grey's Inn I want to say that what I hear from the United Kingdom is that the Solicitor General performed his duties in a way that brought honour to our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is one matter to which I should like to make reference. The Solicitor General did not allude to it during the course of his report. I refer to the question of the establishment of a Commonwealth court of appeal. This concept has received support from time to time among various Commonwealth countries.

However, having had some experience in this regard my own feeling—and I think it represents generally the attitude of the bench and bar within our country—is that the establishment of a Commonwealth court of appeal would not be in keeping with the relationship of the Commonwealth countries one to the other and would not be generally accepted.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to detain the house for more than a moment except to say that we are very glad to also welcome the Solicitor General back. We hope he has not exercised his vocal cords too much and that he will quickly recover the full use of his voice.

I just add this comment, that we believe this sort of conference indicates the value of a multiracial commonwealth; because it enables the Commonwealth, which is united by a respect for the law, through representatives of the law in various Commonwealth countries to receive the benefit of an exchange of opinions. I noticed, for example, that there was discussion of a Commonwealth court of appeal. It may well be that in this country we do not need any such court of appeal, having our own Supreme Court of Canada.

[Mr. Pennell.]

However, this sort of discussion and this type of institution may be useful in other parts of the Commonwealth, and we welcome the statement.

(Translation)

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased that the Solicitor General is back in Canada. We trust his vast experience will have helped to enlighten the representatives of other countries who attended this recent meeting.

(English)

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I join in welcoming the Solicitor General back to our midst. We know he did a good job, and we might say that we missed him while he was away from us.

In supporting the remarks which have already been made, Mr. Speaker, I would just add that the evidence which has been placed before us today of the progress made at this meeting further substantiates the position within the Commonwealth of the two great heritages that we have, that is British parliamentary government and British justice. We trust, Mr. Speaker, that this conference may help in the preservation and extension of these two basic factors of our way of life to all parts of the Commonwealth.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. He was employed as an architect grade 7 from August 14, 1961 to February 15, 1962.

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): I am informed that the office of the director of investigation and research under the Combines Investigation Act has received no complaint about price fixing by the manufacturers of school buses in eastern Canada. NATIONAL CENSUS

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONERS IN QUEBEC—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, under standing order 26, I should like—

Mr. Speaker: The member must wait until the motions for papers are disposed of.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise now because the standing orders stipulate this must be done after the questions rather than after the notices of motion. We have just disposed of the questions on the order paper.

I should like, therefore, to move the following motion under standing order 26:

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

The adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the serious irregularities committed in the appointment of the commissioners in charge of the 1966 national census.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member like to comment on the matter of urgency?

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I feel the motion I moved today meets all the requirements for a request that the house adjourn for the purpose of discussing a definite matter.

First of all, I should like to read the standing order which applies in this case. It is standing order 26 in the last edition of the standing orders of the house, as it appeared in the Votes and Proceedings No. 14, on Friday, February 4, 1966:

Any ruling made by Mr. Speaker after listening to argument on the question of urgency shall not be subject to appeal,—

It should follow that the point to be made today is the urgent importance of the matter, so that this motion will be adopted.

First of all, I intend to state the problem, its seriousness and importance, then the importance of the debate and finally the pressing importance of such debate.

This is a serious problem, Mr. Speaker, because the national census will begin in Canada on June 1, and to this end the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, a Canadian government agency, has appointed commissioners to take the national census of Canada. In a letter from Hon. Robert Winters, Minister of Trade and Commerce, responsible for the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, to the hon. member for Kamouraska dated March 26, 1966, he wrote:

There are no competitions but representatives of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics interview the candidates and report to me before selecting them.

The list of the commissioners who have been appointed was recently published. It is the most beautiful official list of the Liberal organization in the province of Quebec.

For instance, in my riding, it is Paul Labrie, former federal Liberal candidate in Lapointe in 1965 and opponent of the incumbent. Patronage.

Another, in the riding of Lapointe: Edouard Bluteau, present provincial candidate for the Liberal party in the provincial elections of Quebec which will be held on June 5 next.

He was appointed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to take the census on June 1, while he is a provincial candidate for the elections of June 5.

The chief Liberal organizer in my riding, Paul Tremblay—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member come to the question of urgency of this debate?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me to state the basis of my case, I shall do so, in view of the fact that the rules require that I show the importance of the debate. Well, I am showing the importance of the problem and I should like to demonstrate the importance of the debate.

In the constituency of Iles-de-la-Madeleine you will recall the man who signed the affidavits to save the ministers, the one who lodged the complaints to jail the minister's opponents, Frank Décosse, of Fatima.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. There is no relationship between Mr. Frank Décoste and other Messrs. Décoste.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): He is his first cousin.

Mr. Sauvé: Besides, in the Magdalen Islands the representative of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics interviewed some people and the bureau itself selected the census director.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, that proves that the debate is needed. We will find out the names of those who selected them.

In the riding of Roberval, the opponent of the present member was notary Villeneuve, who occupied a high post within the Liberal organization; and now the wife of notary Villeneuve is on the list of commissioners.

An hon. Member: What does it matter?

Mr. Grégoire: The candidate running against the present member in 1963 was a man called Garant and his wife is commissioner, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a list of 30 ridings in which 139 names were given. It is the choice list of the Liberal patronage and organization in the province of Quebec.

In the same letter dated March 24, 1966, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) said:

> The commissioners will get $1,100—

—one thousand one hundred dollars—

> —for the full job which might take two months or more.

One thousand one hundred dollars for two months' work and most of the people mentioned here are wives of professional people or Liberal patronage handlers. They do the work at night and that is a reward from the Liberal party.

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Québec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) is at the present time—

Mr. Caouette: Not the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Laflamme: I apologize, I mean the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), who is giving a series of names of people and he does not know—

Mr. Caouette: Oh, oh.

Mr. Laflamme: —their competence. I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that the chief commissioner undoubtedly selected people who are of age and have some education.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no point of order. Once again I ask the hon. member for Lapointe to co-operate with me so that I will have an opportunity to give a ruling as soon as possible, because the hon. member cannot at this time discuss the matter itself.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Speaker: He may only enlighten the Chair and his colleagues on the urgency of the debate itself.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt whatsoever about the competence of those individuals, although I might in some cases, but what I wish to stress is that an administrative agency namely the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, which must be above politics, was used for shameless purposes of patronage—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grégoire: —vulgar patronage, patronage the likes of which should not exist.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I now ask the hon. member to limit his remarks to the matter of the urgency of the debate.

Mr. Grégoire: In any event, Mr. Speaker, I think I have proved my point, namely the seriousness of the problem, since I have managed to stir up the anger of the members of the Liberal party by throwing in their teeth some of their dirty patronage.

Mr. Sauvé: Oh, come off it.

Census Debate Requested

Mr. Grégoire: I should like to close, in an attempt to point out the gravity of the problem, by saying that no one has the right to use a government body for low political ends as the Liberals are now doing.

My second point concerns the importance of the debate. And I know what I have to prove in this regard, Mr. Speaker.

According to standing orders, the importance of the debate—

An hon. Member: It is not important.

Mr. Grégoire: The importance of the debate, yes, because such a debate can throw some light, enlighten the house, and allow redress of the scandal—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grégoire: —of the unnameable scandal we are now witnessing. The debate is important as an attempt to root out the evil the Liberal party is now committing.

[English]

Mr. Winkler: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Grégoire: Certainly.

Mr. Winkler: I would ask the hon. member whether that is the reason he supports them every time we have a vote of non-confidence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, when in—

Mr. Sauvé: There is no connection.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, in their hypocrisy, the Conservatives tried to prove that one was black and the other was white. I was not taken in, because they are all just as black one as the other.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member again restrict his remarks to the point I have just suggested?

Mr. Grégoire: Then, Mr. Speaker, what I must prove, under standing order 26, is the importance of the debate. The importance of the debate: it is written right here.

I say that the discussion is very important, because it could help remedy the situation.

An hon. Member: It is too late.

Mr. Grégoire: And I should like to make a—I am told it is too late. I shall come to that later. But for the moment, I should like to quote a precedent to stress the importance of the matter. During the—

[Mr. Sauvé.]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The matter now being raised by the member for Lapointe is no more in order than his statement to the effect that he would take an active part in the election campaign.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I have here the list of commissioners in Quebec East, which indicates that patronage in the riding of Quebec East—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Duquet) has never done any patronage.

Mr. Grégoire: It has to do with patronage handlers, but I shall leave this subject and pursue my remarks, Mr. Speaker, on the importance of the debate. To support my argument concerning the importance of the debate, I should like to quote a precedent.

More than a year ago, when the question of urgency of debate was raised concerning drought in the province of Ontario—

Mr. Caouette: Including also the riding of Stormont.

Mr. Grégoire: —including also the riding of Stormont, as my colleague for Villeneuve just said, the question of urgency was accepted and, during the debate, discussions took place and decisions made. It was later established that the debate had given results, since steps had been taken to cure the disastrous effects of the drought in the province of Ontario.

That proves the importance of a debate such as this one to cope with the problem I pointed out.

Third, this debate is important now, Mr. Speaker, because to-day is May 11 and the census is beginning on June 1; if a decision is taken today, during the debate, to cancel the lists, give orders to have others made, the last 20 days will allow these things to be done: three days to notify the officials of the national employment offices to see to it that the commissioners are replaced; one day to prepare and send the required notices to recruit new commissioners; two days to enable those who are interested to send their applications—

An hon. Member: Why replace them?

Mr. Grégoire: —two days for the examination of the new commissioners; one day to choose a new commissioner; two days to send him the necessary literature and two days enable him to learn his work and to prepare himself. That makes a total of 13 days out of 20 days. There are 3 Saturdays, 3 Sundays and one holiday, May 21, the Queen's birthday.

This means that if we do not discuss it this very day, tomorrow will be too late, for there will not be time to replace all the commissioners. It is important, it is urgent and it must be done. They must be replaced, not by people selected through patronage by the Liberal organization, but since we are in the middle of the summer—

Mr. Sauvé: What you are saying is false.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grégoire: You do not have to shout like that.

Mr. Sauvé: It is false, you do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to the hon. member that he has stated his case quite comprehensively. I can hardly imagine what new arguments he could bring in support of his proposal and I call on other members who may wish to do so, to comment on the urgency of the debate.

Mr. Grégoire: Very well, Mr. Speaker; I have completed my remarks on this. I wanted to find a solution. I note that my remarks have been quite cogent and that it is now obvious a debate is necessary.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, in view of all the explanations just given by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) I would suggest that we postpone consideration of his motion until the day after tomorrow.

[English]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I find it a little difficult to understand precisely the question sought to be raised.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: If I understood the rather lengthy argument advanced, it seemed to be a complaint that one of the census commissioners, having had a background of training that would give him a thorough knowledge of the constituency, was thereby disbarred from doing this job that requires a thorough knowledge of the constituency. I have the greatest doubt that the matter raised could form the subject matter of a motion under standing order 26.

Mr. Starr: Why don't you appoint the Créditistes as a reward for voting for you?

Mr. McIlraith: In any event, the point I wish to raise now, and I will try to do it very briefly, is simply this. The type of motion that can be raised under standing order 26 must involve a matter that is of recent occurrence, and must be so urgent that the proceedings of the house should be halted so that it may be discussed. That is according to that part of citation 100 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 89, to be found at the bottom of the page.

As to the first point, about the matter being so urgent, the matter has been before the house for about one week now as will appear from question No. 1432 on today's order paper. There are other questions on this subject, indicating that it is not something that has just arisen today, suddenly.

The second point, to do with lack of urgency, is that there is other opportunity for discussing this. It is a matter that might better be discussed with the minister when his estimates are up for consideration. Those estimates, now before the committee, were referred to it on March 22. If this is a matter that the hon. member wishes to pursue, he might well pursue it there.

The subject matter the hon. member raises is not of a nature which should form the basis of a motion under standing order 26. Nor is there any urgency, within the meaning of the requirement for urgency of debate, under that order.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I rise to support the suggestion that this matter should be placed before the house as one of urgency, requiring immediate debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: About a week ago, say ten days ago, I questioned the Minister of Trade and Commerce on precisely this point. I respectfully suggest to hon. members opposite that we have reached a time in Canada when patronage of any sort is not a matter for cynical laughter, and that this house has a duty to deal with every manifestation of patronage immediately it occurs.

I would draw to the attention of the house the fact that I have had correspondence from young students who are seeking jobs.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member addressing himself to the question of urgency of debate?

Mr. Lewis: Indeed I am, or in my opinion I am, and I hope I am right. I was saying that I have received letters from some students who were seeking jobs as census takers—young Canadians who wanted to earn their university fees for next year. They were told they had to go to the Liberal organization in order to to get recommendations for the job, and when I raised objection to this through the newspapers in Toronto the song was changed; they had to go through the local member of parliament. I now have letters from people who are seeking recommendations for these jobs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: Just let hon. members opposite hold their laughter. They do not need to demonstrate their cynicism about these things; we know it without this demonstration.

I have dictated letters to these people telling them I do not propose to recommend them for any jobs, and I have given them the names of the Liberal commissioners so that application may be made to them.

This kind of action should end now, because we have come to a state in Canada where this miserable type of patronage should not take place. I urge upon you, Mr. Speaker, that the question raised ought to be debated now.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I submit that the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) have proven neither the urgency, nor the importance of the debate.

There cannot be any urgency unless there are irregularities. The commissioners were appointed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), under the provisions of subsection (1) of section 5 of the Statistics Act. The minister only used the powers he has with respect to the appointment of the commissioners.

As for the importance of the debate, the question of the competence of the commissioners chosen was not raised. Therefore, it is neither urgent, nor important.

[English]

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): There is one argument in support of the urgency of this debate which has not been raised. Since this matter involves the reputation of the government, I believe every member of the house would like to see it debated at once because it shows that despite this government's reputation for lousing things up it has done a beautiful job of patronage.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would appreciate it if hon. members were to limit their comments to the question of procedure which is before the house.

Mr. Nugent: I think we should waste no time—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nugent: —in giving the government the opportunity to prove they can be efficient, even if it is in the area of political skulduggery alone.

Hon. John M. Turner (Minister without Portfolio): In addition to the citation referred to by the Minister of Public Works I should like to refer Your Honour to page 90 of Beauchesne, where citation 100(3) states:

> "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

I think it would be in the interests of the house that this question be discussed at some time when estimates are before us for consideration, or on a supply motion. The hon. member for York South, together with his seatmate, representing 20 years of government in Saskatchewan, might show us how this should be done.

Mr. Lewis: It will not do any good, but we shall be glad to try.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, members of the government party may scream their heads off that the question is not urgent, that it is not important, that there has been no patronage and so on, I am of the opinion that this is a most important and urgent question. As we stated yesterday on the telephone to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), who is responsible for the appointment of the commissioners, it would have been better to appoint students, university people, people who are capable, regardless of their political leanings, to carry out the 1966 census. The Liberals overruled all. When we claim that party favourites were appointed as commissioners—

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. member?

Is the hon. member aware that in my riding the census enumerators were appointed after consultation with the secretariat of Laval University?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand the official list of those appointed by the minister. The following names are listed: Albert Quesnel, chief Liberal organizer in Rouyn-Noranda; Mr. Côme Lapierre, candidate at the Liberal convention for the election of last November 11; Mr. James V. Hardy, of Bourlamaque; Mrs. Marcelle Seewaldt, Mr. Roméo Smith, of Cadillac, the same thing again.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Villeneuve is now discussing the subject matter itself while we are considering a question of procedure dealing with the urgency of the debate under the rules of the house.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I understand that, under the rules, we might not have the right to name those people; however, we have the right to say that those people command $1,100 each, which represents $5,500 in one riding.

It does not matter that students belong to Liberal or Conservative families, but the students and not the patronage handlers should be in charge of that organization.

The urgency is so important and so valid that on March 24, in reply to the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne), the minister said this:

> The appointment of census officers also falls under my jurisdiction, but because of their great number, approximately 35,000, I will delegate that responsibility to each census commissioner—

That means that the Liberal patronage handlers in various ridings will now choose those who will work for the census.

Mr. Speaker: I feel it is my duty to intervene by reminding the hon. member that what is before us is just a matter of procedure, a matter which is very limited, namely if there is any urgency of debate.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe will kindly allow me to conclude my remarks.

I heard the remarks of the hon. member for Lapointe which are, in my opinion, somewhat outside the scope of the matter of urgency and importance, or pressing importance of the debate. It seems to me that we should try not to prolong the discussion. We have hardly touched on the substance of the matter during the last hour. To all practical purposes, it seems to me that we have had a debate. In any case, I will allow the hon. member for Villeneuve to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I would like to point out that standing order 26 relating to the debate uses the words "matter of urgent importance" and not the word "urgency".

I know that, in the English text, the word "urgency" is mentioned. But I submit that, in the French text, it is the word "importance" and that if we have two official languages in Canada, the French text is as valid as the English text. We are using the French text, and it is the matter of importance and not the matter of urgency. However, French is taken only as a language of convenience, a language of translation.

Mr. Caouette: All we want, and I believe it is urgent and important, we asked it before bringing up the matter in the house. We asked that changes be made, that the list of commissioners be cancelled and that appointments be made regardless of political considerations: we do not want political organizers appointed in those ridings. That is what we object to.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member for Villeneuve, and others as well, that they are now discussing the subject matter rather than the urgency of the debate.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the matter is urgent and it is important to know, for instance, who suggested those names. That is why we should discuss the matter fully today so that the minister might throw some light on the appointment of agents or commissioners for the 1966 national census. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to your sound judgment—I know your good sense—so that we might discuss this fundamental question, for it is important, and so that we might give our students the opportunity to earn that amount to enable them to continue their studies, instead of cutting up the pie, like the Liberals are now doing, through political patronage; that is intolerable in a country such as ours.

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to add a few remarks on the importance and urgency of the debate to those of the members who have preceded me.

With regard to the importance of the debate, it is of capital, utmost importance for there are irregularities which prove patronage and favouritism. In the riding of Sherbrooke the commissioners are five federal Liberal organizers, one of whom is the brother of the Liberal candidate who was defeated in the last elections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish to remind the hon. member for Sherbrooke that he must—and this is also for the guidance of other speakers—discuss the urgency of the debate.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, it would be a lot easier for us to make our views known, if the hon. members on this side of the house gave us a real opportunity, despite the inconvenience the matter may cause them, to express ourselves.

The importance and urgency of the debate must be shown. This matter is very urgent, for there are hardly 20 days left, as the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) pointed out, for the re-appointment of objective and impartial commissioners, regardless of the choice of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, that is either through the newspapers or through objective and impartial public bodies, such as the senior chamber of commerce, the junior chamber of commerce or the national employment service, registering in my area many unemployed people of various education levels who would be in a position to earn $1,100. There is also the students association of the University of Sherbrooke. This is why it is urgent.

Mr. P.-E. Trudeau (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the question of urgency is relative. The question raised by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) is important and urgent, but only from the point of view of political partisanship, from the politicking point of view.

As was explained by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) and the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner), the house will have an opportunity to discuss this problem when considering the estimates in question.

The political manoeuvring which is going on here is not what the people are expecting from us, I think.

There are important and urgent questions on the order paper. But, so far as this matter is concerned, the people are more interested in the passing of a piece of legislation for the Commonwealth than in wondering whether we will be helping friends of the party in power or of the opposition. This is an urgent question in a very minor field, and a few days difference will not change the ordinary procedure of the house.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in thirty seconds I can prove that there is no urgency to debate this matter, and to support my point I will quote a statement from a speech delivered on May 3, 1966 by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), as reported in Hansard, page 4648, second column:

> You will have to admit that this is the final inconsistency and stupidity, to be forced to talk about scandals.

The hon. member wants to speak about a scandal. Is it any wonder then that confederation—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member resume his seat?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Lapointe resume his seat?

I am asking hon. members to co-operate with the Chair so that the business of the house may be carried on in an orderly manner. During the past hour or so, hon. members have been discussing a strictly procedural point of order on which I hope they will very shortly allow the Chair to make a ruling.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to correct the statement made by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) who quoted a statement of mine.

I want to point out that what I said then was that I thought it was stupid to discuss a personal scandal. Today, we are discussing the scandal of squandering public moneys to the benefit of friends appointed in the constituency of Lotbinière.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members know that, under the rules, the Speaker can stop any discussion on a point of order if, in his opinion, all aspects of the question have been dealt with.

As every party had the opportunity, through its representative, of expressing its views, I think it is my duty, under our Standing Orders, to rule on the matter.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is an argument which has not been raised concerning the importance of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be in the interest of the Chair to hear it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Mégantic says it would be in the interest of the Chair to hear his argument. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) wishes to continue his remarks. The debate could obviously go on for some time.

I humbly submit that it would not be to the advantage of the house to continue the debate.

The hon. members, particularly the member for Lapointe who moved this motion under standing order 26, asked me to consider citation 100 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which reads as follows:

(3) "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

Paragraph (2) reads as follows:

The "definite matter of urgent public importance", for the discussion of which the adjournment of the house may be moved under Standing Order 26, must be so pressing that public interest will suffer if not given immediate attention.

I cannot agree that public interest would suffer if the matter referred to was not given immediate attention in the house.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): It would, as far as provincial elections are concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Some members pointed out that certain pieces of legislation are to be considered later on and they suggest that the discussion of that particular legislation is of a more urgent character than the motion now before the house. I believe such a suggestion to be reasonable.

It seems to me a motion such as the one presented by the hon. member for Lapointe is to be used only as a last resort. Only in extreme circumstances should it be moved and accepted. Only extraordinary circumstances warrant the suspension of the business of the house for the consideration of a question other than that on the agenda.

For those reasons, I do not believe I can accept the hon. member's motion.

• (3:30 p.m.)

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Would Your Honour be kind enough to call notices of motions Nos. 117 and 125?

I ask that the remaining ones be allowed to stand.

[English]

SEAFARERS UNION CONSTITUTION

Motion No. 117—Mr. Herridge:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any communications exchanged between the maritime trustees, or other organizations and other persons, and the minister, or any official thereof, of the Department of Labour, and for a copy of any constitution submitted to the minister for his perusal or comment, with respect to the Seafarers International Union.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, since this notice of motion was placed on the order paper I have made careful inquiries and have had an opportunity since then to discuss the matter with the hon. member in whose name it stands.

From my personal examination I am convinced that all the many documents, with possibly one or two insignificant exceptions, are privileged. I can understand, however, my hon. friend's concern and his desire to obtain a copy of the constitution of the S.I.U. of Canada. I have assured him that I will see that he gets a copy. If he has any comments to make or questions to ask regarding the constitution or any other matter after he gets it, I will be pleased to deal with them when the estimates of my department come up for discussion.

On that understanding I have been assured that the hon. member will withdraw the motion.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I discussed this matter with the minister, and in view of his explanation as to the confidential nature of the correspondence and the potential consequences which may follow a revelation of the information received from the R.C.M.P., I seek the unanimous consent of the house to withdraw this motion.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, in spite of the remarks that have been made, because of the interest that has been shown in this matter I think it would be better if this motion were presented.

Mr. Speaker: I understand there has been a request that the motion be dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

EFFECT OF U.S. ACT ON CANADIAN PRINTING INDUSTRY

Motion No. 125—Mr. Knowles:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all letters or briefs, dated since April, 1963, addressed to the government of Canada or any minister or department thereof, by provincial governments or any associations, federations, institutes or societies, concerning the effects of the manufacturing clause of the United States Copyright Act on the printing industry in Canada, and a copy of the replies thereto.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, subject to the usual reservations, that in respect of documents emanating from provincial governments consent must first be obtained and that any correspondence which might adversely affect the competitive position of persons or firms is regarded as confidential, the motion is acceptable.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to those reservations. The second one is quite in keeping with the terms of the motion. I am not asking for correspondence with individual firms but rather with associations of firms and other groups or organizations.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the motion be adopted subject to the reservations expressed by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to motion No. 121 which appears in the name of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams). This motion was signed by him in my unavoidable absence but in essence it is my motion. Since it is my opinion that most, if not all, of the information requested is at hand I should like to know why the motion has not been allowed to proceed. Does the government intend to wait until it obtains the information before allowing the motion? I think this is a fair question to put, because after all this is to be an order of the house, not an order of the government.

Mr. Pickersgill: The motion is in the name of another member.

SPENCE ROYAL COMMISSION—OBTAINING OF EVIDENCE AND APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Will he inquire from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as to how it obtained certain evidence being considered by the Spence inquiry to ensure that it was not obtained by means of a telephone tap and an electronic listening device in the Montreal apartment of Mrs. Gerda Munsinger, both of which practices are illegal?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I must fall back on the answer which has been given in this house on many previous occasions by other ministers charged with the responsibility of answering in the House of Commons regarding the methods of investigation used by the R.C.M.P. It would not be in the public interest to disclose these methods of investigation.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the unparalleled and unjustifiable manner in which the inquisition is being carried out by Mr. Justice Spence, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister to produce any correspondence regarding the appointment of this judge, and to tell the house whether before the judge accepted the appointment the Chief Justice of Canada was consulted?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister personally whether he communicated with the judge and told him that in certain interests—you can fill that part in on your side—he was wanted as commissioner?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that my right hon. friend does not in any way wish to cast a reflection on the royal commissioner.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I said that I was sure the right hon. gentleman, who is a distinguished member of this house, a former prime minister and a lawyer of great experience, would not wish to cast a reflection on the royal commissioner who was appointed by the government of Canada with the approval of this house. He is a member of the Supreme Court of Canada and—

Mr. Diefenbaker: He was not appointed with the approval of this house. This was just a narrow-minded appointment in so far as the terms of reference are concerned.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I must take the view, whatever my right hon. friend may feel to be the provocation, and on that I am not clear, that I cannot sit in my place at this time and listen to the right hon. gentleman express himself in a manner that could be construed as a reflection on the royal commissioner. If that is what my right hon. friend has done, then I must take strong issue with him and suggest that this is not the course that should be followed in this instance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ricard: Answer the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am still waiting for the answer. Did the minister ask the judge to accept this? Did he telephone him and say, "Now, this is something you could do for me"?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am not the Minister of Justice; I am not the Prime Minister of Canada. I did not speak to the Minister of Justice. I did not speak to anyone, because it would have been outside my ministerial responsibilities. In any event, if I had, that would not be a matter to which my hon. friend would be entitled to refer in this way, because implied in this suggestion is a reflection on a judge who holds an honourable post—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —in the final court of appeal of this country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am still waiting for the answer. Did the minister ask this judge to act because there were certain interests at stake?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what I ask.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition has asked a question, the minister has made a reply, and I think the matter should be allowed to stand there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know he did.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Has he personally looked into the question of whether the telephones of members of parliament are being tapped or interfered with by means of electronic listening devices? If so, will he provide a list of the names of members whose telephones are being so tapped or listened to by means of electronic devices?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not acceptable in the way it was put by the hon. member because he is making an assertion.

Mr. Nielsen: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McIlraith: If you have a charge to make, make it.

Mr. Ricard: That is what you said a year ago.

Mr. Nielsen: With the greatest respect to you, sir, I was not making any such allegation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: I was seeking information from the Solicitor General and asking whether he had ascertained if telephones of members of parliament have been subjected to wiretapping or electronic eavesdropping devices.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that the question is of a general nature. It may be of extreme importance in the minds of hon. members but I do not think the question is so urgent that it should be asked at this very moment. It could very easily be placed on the order paper. If the hon. member thinks it is very urgent, it could be discussed on the adjournment debate.

Mr. Nielsen: Again, with the greatest respect, the urgency lies in the fact that no member dare use his telephone unless he gets this assurance from the Solicitor General.

Mr. McIlraith: There is the only man who did wiretapping around here.

Mr. Ricard: Put a charge yourself.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Minister of Public Works just this moment uttered, loud enough for the Hansard reporter to hear, "There is the only man who wiretapped around here", and pointed to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

Mr. Nielsen: That is conduct unbecoming a minister of the crown, and he should make a charge or keep quiet.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, I will be very glad to explain the exact charge. The Leader of the Opposition, when he was prime minister of Canada, had this house tapped and the wiring extended to his own office—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: —to check proceedings that went on here. He admitted it himself and had the wiring removed when the matter was raised in the House of Commons by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ricard: You are a real Grit.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear that when I was prime minister it was suggested that I might be able to follow the debates in the house while working in my office. Objection was taken to that and it was withdrawn.

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not the kind of wire tapping we are talking about.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I wish to explain to the house that this complaint was made by Senator Argue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert: That is why he became a Senator.

[Mr. Speaker.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE CONSTRUCTION OF ANTI-MISSILE BASES IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of frequent references in the press, may I ask the minister whether there have been any discussions at any level between officials of the government of the United States and the government of Canada regarding the possibility of constructing anti-missile bases in Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I know of no such discussions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If any discussions are held and agreement reached, can we have the minister's assurance that this matter will be referred to parliament rather than having an agreement signed with which parliament is only acquainted after the event?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It appears to me that the question is hypothetical.

NATIONAL CENSUS

QUEBEC—INQUIRY INTO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister.

Can he tell us whether he proposes to call for an inquiry into the serious irregularities committed in connection with the appointment of commissioners for the 1966 national census which resulted in shameful patronage in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the question as put by the hon. member is acceptable or in order; as a matter of fact, it is more in the way of a statement and should not be put in such a way. This question, in the way the hon. member put it, cannot be accepted. It is accompanied by a statement and no question should be put that way.

Mr. Grégoire: I feel so indignant that I add things which should not be added under the rules.

Does the Prime Minister intend to launch an inquiry into the irregularities committed in connection with the appointment of commissioners for the 1966 general census?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer is no.

Mr. Grégoire: Would the minister tell us whether the government is interested in throwing some light on the matter or whether it prefers to hide everything under the carpet?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government is always interested in the truth.

[Later:]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Would the minister or his assistant tell the house whether the persons selected to take the census have passed an examination to ascertain whether they are qualified for the job?

Mr. Speaker: The question is argumentative.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—STOPPAGE OF WORK BY LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

In my opinion it concerns an urgent matter which is neither partisan nor political. It has to do with the increasing uneasiness among dock workers in Quebec and Montreal because of the difficulties they experience for parking.

Could the minister, who paid an official visit to the Quebec harbour yesterday and who has witnessed the situation, inform the house of the steps he intends to take to settle this problem and prevent general work stoppages as those which happened recently.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was in Quebec to visit the port, and there was a temporary stoppage of work in the middle of the day. My colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, was in Quebec with me. We went to the grain elevator where a considerable addition to the elevator was to be opened and was opened. In the presence of the workmen we then agreed, together with the port manager, to hear their grievances, and it was our understanding that the three people delegated for that purpose were quite satisfied with the measures which were to be taken to meet the immediate situation.

I regret to have to say that I understand we were not as successful as we had hoped to be, and that the men are still out. I also understand that in Montreal this morning there was a discussion between the leaders of the union and the harbour authorities; that the arrangement which was put to the men was not acceptable and the strike, if it is to be called a strike, is still going on. I also understand that some men are out at Three Rivers or Trois-Rivières.

This is a very grave situation indeed. I welcome the opportunity, sir, to underline the gravity of this situation at a time when we have an unprecedented quantity of traffic moving through the St. Lawrence ports, including wheat; perhaps I could almost go so far as to say above all, wheat; both wheat for commercial export and wheat for relief. I sincerely hope that everything will be done by everyone who can play any part to bring this dispute to an end as quickly as possible.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will the minister make a statement that the question of parking facilities for the convenience of the employees of the port will be looked into? I believe such action could alleviate the present situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, perhaps one who has not seen the situation personally should not offer an opinion on a matter of this kind. However, I am going to take the risk of saying that I do not believe parking facilities are the main question at all. I think if the question between the union and the employers could be settled this matter would be settled quite quickly and, as I said, we would have had no difficulty in Quebec yesterday. I believe there is a mixture of the two things, and I have asked the harbours board to do everything possible within reason to see that the men are satisfied. However, I think hon. members will realize that we cannot permit parking in areas where work is supposed to be going on and goods are supposed to be moved. If I may be permitted to give an example, it was agreed at Quebec that there was a particular area where at certain times ships were unloading and at that time parking would not be permitted, but it would be permitted, as it was more convenient for the men, when there were no ships coming in.

I am hoping that with a little more flexibility on both sides this question could be settled, but it is not the main question. What I hope is that both the employers and the union will get down to the business of making an agreement and get on with the work in the interest of the country.

Mr. Valade: I have another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister deny responsibility for applying some sort of set of rules to settle this situation or does he leave it entirely to the port authorities?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a matter of great national urgency, and even though it is not strictly according to the rules perhaps you will permit me to say that this is not a dispute between the government as an employer and its employees. The longshoremen are employed by private employers. The Minister of Labour is doing everything he can in this matter. He has appointed a conciliation board with an excellent chairman; I believe the other members are capable, but I do know that the chairman is excellent. Every effort is being made by the Department of Labour and the government to get the two parties to reach agreement.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport.

Is the minister not of the opinion that this conflict in the Montreal harbour is, in fact, a fight to the finish between two rival unions which make both workers and employers suffer?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member makes an argument. His question is not in order.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think I should go into the background.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have ruled that the question is out of order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INVITATION TO SAUDI ARABIA KING TO VISIT CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the announcement yesterday that His Majesty King Faisal of Saudi Arabia will be paying a state visit to the United States next month, has the government invited and, if not, is it considering inviting the king to visit Canada at the same time?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government has not given consideration to this matter. I am grateful to my hon. friend, however, for putting the question.

PARLIAMENT HILL

PARKING OF YACHT BY MEMBER FOR LAPOINTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works which arises out of the shortage of parking space on the hill. Would the minister inform the house if he issued a special permit yesterday to the member for Lapointe to park his luxury yacht on parliament hill?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, but I admired the yacht very much.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO TERMS OF REFERENCE OF MEDIATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statement by Mr. Ouimet yesterday that he had it on the highest authority that Mr. Keate is acting as a conciliator, would the minister inform the house precisely what aspects of the "Seven Days" dispute Mr. Keate has been instructed or asked to conciliate?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister made a statement as to the functions and prescribed duties of Mr. Keate. As this matter is not within my ministerial function I would prefer to look at what the Prime Minister said and deal with the question in the light of my understanding of both the question and the answer.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. When the Acting Prime Minister is looking into what has already been said, would he also be good enough to acquaint himself with precisely what authority has been given to Mr. Keate; whether he has been asked to look into the dismissal of Watson and LaPierre and whether an order in council has been prepared or is being prepared appointing him to what position?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would refer my hon. friend to the answer made to this and other questions, I believe, on Monday last.

FINANCE

TAX FOUNDATION REPORT ON DOMINION—PROVINCIAL FISCAL RELATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance of which I have given notice. It relates to the report on federal-provincial fiscal relations prepared by the Canadian Tax Foundation for the tax structure committee. Will the minister advise the house whether the policies outlined in this report constitute government policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have very serious doubts that this question is so urgent that it should be answered now. The urgency is not apparent to me. However, if the minister and others have no objection, I will permit the question.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe the question is of some urgency. I have here the booklet referred to and it does contain statements upon which I ought to comment in order to clarify the position as quickly as possible. If you will permit me, I should like to give a short answer. If not, I will be very happy to give the information outside the house.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the minister that the question does not appear to be the type of question which should be asked at this time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CURTAILMENT OF PASSENGER SERVICE BETWEEN LONDON AND TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister inform the board of transport commissioners of the grave concern of the city of Woodstock, Ont. with respect to the serious curtailment of passenger service on the Canadian National Railways between the cities of London, Woodstock and Toronto which has just taken place?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I wonder, sir, if the hon. gentleman himself would perhaps bring the matter to the attention of the board, which is a court. He could perhaps give it more details than I could.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

HOUSE BUILDING—REQUEST FOR PLACEMENT OF WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Has the minister consulted the proposed minister of manpower with regard to the placement in other industries of those displaced from their jobs in the house building industry as the result of a lack of mortgage funds?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is of a general nature and should not be asked at this time.

FISHERIES

LOBSTERS—OPENING OF SEASON IN DISTRICT 6B

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that the lobster season in area 6B opens in two short days, and in view of the fact representations have been made to the minister with regard to a change in the schedule for the opening date, may I ask the minister if he is in a position today to provide any information on the subject?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In so far as district 6B and the adjoining district 6A are concerned, the hour for leaving the shore with lobster fishing gear will be advanced from 11 a.m. as it now stands to 7 a.m. standard time or 8 a.m. daylight saving time.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On behalf of the fishermen of the area I wish to thank the minister for his good judgment and this prompt and wise decision.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—REPORT OF INQUIRY RESPECTING MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which deals with the investigations that have been conducted into the removal of the overhaul base at Winnipeg. I understand the Thompson commission report has been in his hands for about two months. Would he advise the house when he intends to make this report public by tabling it in the house?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's understanding is a misunderstanding. The report has not yet been received by the governor in council. I hope it will be quite soon. I intend to read it with avid interest the moment I get it. As soon as possible thereafter I shall indicate any action the government feels should be taken consequent upon it.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Justice?

Is the minister in a position to confirm or deny the rumour that he will resign from the cabinet very shortly?

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

FAILURE OF DRUG MANUFACTURERS TO SPECIFY CHILDREN'S DOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question regarding manufacturers endangering the health of children by not prescribing the dosage of drugs. He said he would take the question as notice. I wonder whether he has an answer ready yet.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act provide that drugs that are made for the use of children have the dosage specified. My officers, after considering the question, feel that this matter is looked after within the present regulations because it is not regarded as necessary to specify the dosage of drugs not recommended for children. This is the only case in which it is not done except where it is suggested that the dosage be prescribed by the physician.

RADIOACTIVE FALL-OUT FROM CHINESE BOMB TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of reports that the radioactive fall-out from recent bomb tests in China is four times as heavy as from former tests, and that this fall-out is expected to descend on North America within a day or two, can the minister indicate whether it is considered this will create a hazard in Canada?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of this question I should like to take it as notice.

MEDICARE—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the statement the minister has made several times recently in speeches he has given outside of the house to the effect that he is confident that a federal medicare scheme will be in operation by the target date of July 1, 1967, can he say what steps he has taken to make sure this target date will be met?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Every possible step, Mr. Speaker, including the preparation of legislation.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask if that legislation will be presented at this session of parliament?

Mr. MacEachen: The Prime Minister stated prior to the Easter recess that it was his expectation the medicare legislation would be on the order paper after the Easter recess, and the intention is to proceed at this session.

UNITED NATIONS

CONSULTATIONS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND SECRETARY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding the consultations today between the Prime Minister and the Secretary General of the United Nations. Have these conversations anything to do with the situation in Viet Nam or are they to be confined to the Rhodesian problem?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister had made arrangements to see the Secretary General of the United Nations, and while I have every reason to believe these two matters will be discussed I think the main purpose had to do with problems in the United Nations itself.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCIES—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF THOSE INVOLVED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister of Justice received from the hon. member for Yukon the names of those federal officials who, according to the hon. member as reported in today's Globe and Mail, are involved in fraudulent bankruptcies?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that question should be placed on the order paper or discussed at ten o'clock.

Mr. Stanbury: I suggest the question is of the utmost urgency, because if there are such individuals they ought to be investigated.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member can always discuss it on the adjournment debate.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

PROVISION FOR ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT OF SPECIAL AREAS

The house resumed, from Tuesday, May 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sauvé for the second reading of Bill No. C-151, to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, consideration of Bill C-151 gives me the opportunity to say a few words regarding this legislation to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas.

We will remember that this legislation deals with ARDA and that ARDA legislation was initiated by the Conservatives. It is the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) who made a name for himself across Canada by introducing this ARDA legislation which was passed on June 21, 1961. Ever since, this legislation has been known in every part of the country for its many benefits and the hopes it gave our farmers.

No need to read very carefully the speeches made when this legislation was introduced to realize quickly that those who today advocate it, who proclaim from the housetops that this legislation is going to meet the aspirations of our farmers, were the very same to censure and ridicule it. According to them, at the time, that legislation could not bring any practical results.

It is amusing to see that today they will try their best to implement legislation that the Conservative party is entitled to claim as is own.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, will certainly meet the approval of everyone in the House of Commons and particularly of the political supporters of the Conservative party. The needs of our rural economy are urgent and numerous.

It was appropriate that the Minister of Forestry should decide to give our farmers all the attention they deserve.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian farmer is not concerned with the creation of various committees which might consider all the fields of our farming economy. Our farmers are hoping for constructive measures. Through the implementation of Bill C-151 we will certainly have done something constructive for the improvement of our rural economy in a more or less distant future.

This bill provides for an expenditure of $50 million. However, I doubt that this amount distributed among ten provinces, will be adequate to solve this serious problem faced by our rural economy. I think that we should provide an even greater amount to foster this cause, since it is a cause upon which our rural economy is based and which plays such a significant part in the overall economy of our country.

There is another aspect which it might be wise to study specifically: that of jurisdiction in so far as the federal and provincial governments are concerned respectively. It seems the provinces are given a little too much authority in the matter. This measure being of federal inspiration, it should be directed, generally and efficiently, by the federal government.

I have been prompted to bring up the matter by an article published in Le Devoir on June 7, 1964, in which the Quebec minister of agriculture blamed the Minister of Forestry for doing something which, it seems to me the responsible federal minister should not be blamed. In his criticism, Mr. Courcy is reported by the June 7, 1964 Le Devoir as saying:

> Consequently, if Quebec, continued Mr. Courcy, considers it untimely and impossible to implement immediately a research program on rural development, it certainly does not behoove the present Minister of Forestry, Hon. Maurice Sauvé, to comment publicly on Quebec's decision, and to thus intrude in our affairs.

I feel it would be advantageous to delineate clearly what jurisdiction falls to each of the two administrations, so that discussions and misunderstandings such as the one I have just reported may not recur in the future.

There is also, in this legislation, a section providing for the setting up of an advisory board. On reading this section, it becomes obvious that only ministers or public servants of the federal government will be called upon to hold office on this advisory board.

It seems to me it would be wise to take advantage of the knowledge of representatives of the agricultural people and to secure their assistance in a successful war against rural poverty, in the province of Quebec as well as in the other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, for 50 years now there has been a continuous decline in the importance of the agricultural contribution to the general economy of the province of Quebec.

During those 50 years, farm labour decreased proportionately from 30 to 10 per cent of the total labour force.

In 1957, agriculture in Quebec, for instance, produced 5.4 per cent of the net product. In 1951, 230,000 Canadians earned a living in agriculture, roughly 16 per cent of the total national labour force. In 1961, the number of farm workers had slumped to 142,000, that is approximately 8 per cent of the total Canadian labour force. From 1939 to 1960, in spite of the fact that farm labour decreased by about 50 per cent, the Canadian farmer had produced twice as much.

This means that agriculture in Canada is being completely transformed, and that it would be timely to give it all the attention required, so that those talents that are indispensable to the success of agriculture in Quebec, as well as elsewhere in Canada, might not be lost.

It is a well known fact, Mr. Speaker, that country life has a tendency to make our young people shy away from the farm.

Our youth migrates increasingly to the towns. Of course, in the country, hours are longer and living conditions are more difficult than in the city; so, young people are discouraged by the fact that their parents cannot help them much to settle on farms.

Therefore, the credit given to the farming community, which is one of the best creditors one can find, should not be reduced but increased so as to allow young people to settle on farms, for if we let family farms disappear we will undoubtedly find ourselves in a difficult situation one day.

Farming, like any other profession, can be learned. It is learned more easily and more rationally in the company of one's parents, brothers and sisters. There will always be a place for family farms.

The trend today is towards larger farms and farming is considered as some sort of ever expanding business. But I am convinced there will always be room for the family farm. A man does not need a large farm to make a living for himself and his family.

I should like here to tell you of a personal experience which occurred in my riding. In the parish of Saint-Dominique, there is a strip of black soil which was practically untilled some 20 years ago. Every summer, drought fires would often start on this land, an easy prey to them, and thick, bitter smoke would rise, spreading even to the town of Saint-Hyacinthe.

Immigrants arrived in the country shortly after the war and bought these lands for ridiculously low prices. They worked them scientifically and made them so productive that those who sold them now wish they owned them.

Mr. Speaker, this is to show you that the important thing is not so much the size of the land as the intelligence and practical sense of the farmer who uses scientific methods to make his land productive.

Every day during the season there are dozens of workers in the parish harvesting the crops and sending on to the great centres the produce of these lands considered unproductive only a few years ago.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding my remarks, I should simply like to point out the great urgency of giving every consideration to the problems of rural life. The farmer is now squeezed between a high cost of living and the cost price, while the sales price of his products has remained almost unchanged in the last few years. The cost of living is rising continually and the farmer is forced to make one loan after another to meet his obligations.

This is not a normal state of affairs and, sooner or later, unless the necessary remedies are found, the farmer will tire and make demonstrations as he has done in the past. We should remember the march on Quebec last year or the year before and the blocking of roads by the farmers in order to understand what this usually peaceful class can do when it decides to take matters into its own hands.

Study groups are springing up everywhere. The Catholic Farmers Union is on the alert. The farmers are ready to follow their leaders and to expose their views whenever it is deemed proper and advisable.

Unless the federal government assumes its responsibilities and creates conditions which will allow the farmers to continue feeding the nation, we will have to ask ourselves whether we have really done what we should. Our duty is to conceive legislation which is general in scope and which will give the farmer his due, that is a fair share of the national revenue.

[English]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, having spoken at great length on the resolution preceding the bill I simply rise now to express my support for the spirit, principle and purposes of the bill which is actually, shall I say, another brick in the foundation laid by the former government and in particular by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) when he introduced the ARDA legislation whose principles are found in this bill. A lot of experience has been gained since that time.

The debate on this bill has been a demonstration of democracy in action. The bill was introduced by a forward looking cabinet minister who has ideas. It has been supported by a Progressive Conservative member who is the scion of a very famous manufacturing family. I refer to the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees). It has been wholeheartedly backed by a backwoods socialist rancher, the hon. member for Kootenay West.

I am very pleased to see the unanimity of agreement on the principle behind this bill which has received the support of those who live in near-castles and of one who is content to end his days in a log cabin. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, it has received wide support in this house.

I rise to say briefly that I support this measure first of all because it reflects as is felt on all sides of the house, an appreciation of rural life and its value to Canadian society. I am quite sure that many who have spoken on the bill have spoken from a background of experience sometimes gained in early youth.

Let me say that I support the bill, first, because within its scope it will assure a continually adequate supply of efficiently produced food and fibre to meet our national requirements and our responsibilities to less fortunate people.

Second, it aims to foster conditions which will promote living standards for farmers and rural people comparable with those of workers in other occupations. I point out that the concept of the bill is somewhat more expanded than the original ARDA concept. The bill, as I understand it, will provide for the establishment of rural communities, an increase in small industries and operations of this type.

Third, as I read the bill it will assist in the maintenance of the economic farm unit and the continuance of healthy and productive rural communities which historically have provided a healthy, human injection into urban life.

Fourth, I support the measure because it will assure the conservation and wise management of our basic soil, forest and water resources, within its limited field of action.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that we all freely admit that this is experimental legislation which will require determined application by the government, the co-operation of the provincial governments, and the participation of large numbers of Canadians through the various organizations that they support. While this bill provides for an expenditure of only $50 million, this figure can be quickly increased when the work undertaken under this legislation proves itself successful, proves its popularity and is endorsed by the people it is intended to serve.

I think I said that the bill provides for experimental legislation. I am rather conservative in many respects, you know, Mr.

Speaker. I never like coloured socks and things of that sort. I am quite conservative where finance is concerned. I always want to know that two and two make four. I think it was very wise not to launch into a crash program but rather to proceed cautiously and, on the basis of the experience we are able to gain from year to year in the various regions of Canada, solve some of the problems. For instance, the problems that we might find in Quebec are quite different from the problems in Ontario or the problems in the prairie provinces or even the problems related to the regions I have the honour to represent, which are in the garden of Eden. The minister will have much less difficulty in applying the terms of this act to that area.

I think it was wise to limit the amount of money to be expended at this time. I believe that the idea that the money supply can be expanded very rapidly as the principle of the legislation is proven is correct. In addition to having the support of all hon. members in the house, the bill has the support of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, farmers' unions, fruit growers organizations, farmers' and women's institutes and other community groups, particularly those rural community groups which are interested in co-operating with the government and with the groups directly concerned in making a success of this legislation.

I want to conclude on a personal note, Mr. Speaker. I rarely do that. As president of Canadian Tree Farmers Association I wish to quote from the minutes of the annual meeting which was held in Ottawa on Saturday, March 26, this year:

> On the recommendation of Mr. John Carley, chairman of the Ontario branch of the C.F.T.A., the members approved a resolution, that an advisory board to ARDA and similar programs be established, consisting of representatives from all farm associations and organizations, interested in what ARDA, and related programs are trying to do.

This was endorsed unanimously. Representatives of our organization are meeting with representatives of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and with other groups in Quebec.

I can assure the minister that he has the good will and support of the Canadian Tree Farmers Association with respect to rural development in Canada. I trust every effort will be made to secure public interest and participation in this program by means of information provided by the department itself through government publications, through the press and particularly through those papers and periodicals which are concerned with the maintenance and improvement of rural life in Canada.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I support Bill C-151 because the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act has become a sound establishment in our way of life and the $50 million stipulated in the legislation is a reasonable sum to allocate for the purposes of this measure.

Action in this field is the brain-child of a man of vision in a Conservative government and has caught on rapidly since its inception in 1961. It is particularly applicable to the area which I represent as we have an abundance of marginal land. Our whole economy has suffered from lack of industry. The Georgian Bay area has now been designated after two years of almost continual appeals to the government for justified consideration. With the benefits of designation and the proper application of ARDA the Georgian Bay area could become a most desirable place in which to live. We have all the other desirable characteristics such as good beaches, plentiful camping sites, fine scenery, good hunting and fishing.

I support this bill because I believe it to be progressive legislation. It will provide the proper atmosphere for a vast scope of possibilities essential to the improvement of rural income and the restoration of many natural resources so vital to the accomplishment of the desired result. The benefits it can render to the whole nation are almost unlimited.

The rejuvenation of rural areas will help simplify educational problems and other aspects of communities which are blighted when deterioration has taken its toll. I suggest that a thorough survey of the whole country be conducted so that those areas which should benefit will not be neglected. I endorse the idea presented by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) when he suggested that well publicized meetings could be held in areas in need of attention. At these meetings speakers would be available to explain in detail all the ramifications of ARDA. More personal interest would surely be forthcoming and this would contribute to a better result.

In my constituency of Grey North and the surrounding areas we have some fine farms and progressive people. We also have many marginal and submarginal farms which do not make sound economic units. Many of these farms are being vacated and sold to holders of larger units. However, others who have perhaps spent their lives on these farms, as did their parents before them, are reluctant to leave. Anything which would supplement their incomes so that they could continue to live on these farms would be acceptable. With these people in mind I will make some suggestions which I think will be helpful.

The government could assist by soil testing and other research necessary to provide a sound basis for any of these operations. Financial assistance will be a necessity in some of these fields of endeavour. I am thinking now of enterprises which could be satisfactorily adopted by family units. We have many areas suitable for blueberry production on which the Department of Agriculture has up to date information. Other low-lying areas could be utilized for the production of cranberries. Marked success has been achieved by several in this field. This could also be said about blueberry growing, especially in Newfoundland where this is a million dollar industry.

I had an opportunity on a recent visit to the southern part of New Jersey to talk with a man who had a blueberry plantation with four acres under production. This area was unsuitable for other agriculture as it was low-lying and sandy. However, it appeared ideal for the raising of blueberries, and this man was able to make an annual income of $10,000. He grew special types of cultured blueberries and no doubt had the knowledge required to propagate them. Nevertheless, I believe there are many similar areas in this country which would be suitable for such an operation.

Game farming is relatively new and offers excellent opportunities. Pheasant and other game birds are raised to supply the ever-increasing number of hunt clubs. A few game farms offer sportsmen the opportunity of hunting pheasant and other game birds on a per day or per bird basis. These birds are produced on the farm and released when stock on the preserve is in need of replenishment. Many more such farms will be required to supply the thousands of sportsmen who would like to hunt where game is available.

While I am on the subject of catering to sportsmen I would like to mention fish farming as another means of bolstering the rural economy. We have thousands of sports fishermen searching the country for streams, ponds or lakes which might yield some reward for their hours of angling. Many farmers own excellent locations for the development of fish farms. I might add that thousands of fish farms are being operated profitably in the United States. We do have some such farms operating successfully, and these derive most of their revenue from supplying large hotels and restaurants with speckled and rainbow trout. Many more people could be absorbed in this industry.

Fur farming has made a worth-while contribution to rural life in Canada over the past 50 or more years. The production of mink is the major operation in this field. Canada was the originator of this industry but today, with a world production of 20 million mink pelts, Canada provides only one and a half million. Some impetus will be registered in this industry no doubt as the result of an American rancher selling black mink skins at the New York auction on May 4 last for $1,100 each.

This country imported over $25 million worth of fur in 1965. This is a perturbing fact when we consider we are traditionally a fur producing country. For instance, we imported over $2 million worth of muskrat fur which could have been produced in our own marshes and lakes. ARDA, through the provisions of the measure before us, can create the proper environment by way of water conservation and resource management to remedy this situation and add substantially to rural incomes.

An organization which should be encouraged is a group of farm people who have banded together for the purpose of promotion of an enterprise known as "Farm Vacations". The idea has now spread to several provinces and each year more farmers will identify themselves with the enterprise and share and expand its possibilities. These farmers supply accommodation in their homes to urban families seeking an opportunity to enjoy rural life. This sort of holiday is becoming very popular because whole families can now enjoy a splendid vacation at reasonable rates in an environment which is healthy and appealing to children.

Many farms throughout the country possess spacious homes which provide ideal circumstances for the promotion of farm vacations. Of course, these people are quick to provide other attractions of which there is a large variety. Farm vacations open an avenue by which farm people may secure a larger share of the tourist dollar. A sugar bush can be maintained on rough areas which are unfit for agriculture and, properly managed, can be the source of extra revenue to the family farm.

These sidelines which I have enumerated could be promoted on family units over a wide area of the country. Some of the projects would lend themselves also to specialization. I draw attention to them in the hope that provincial governments or agencies thereof, through the provisions in this bill, might promote them among the rural people, 20 per cent of whom now operate farms which yield less than $1,200 a year to their operators.

It has been mentioned that marginal and submarginal farms could be converted to forest or tree farms. The Christmas tree farm is the only part of this program that would make a practical operation for individuals. Other reforestation of any magnitude is a long-range program and would of necessity be the responsibility of large pulp and paper companies, the provincial and federal governments, or all three working together. This bill provides for such action which should be one of the projects for immediate consideration and expansion.

Reforestation of large areas which have been timbered is taken care of to some extent by nature but these areas, if properly managed and if proper trees are introduced, would in the years ahead be much more productive. This holds true in my part of the province where we had many fine stands of hardwood but these areas are now cluttered up with tree tops and brush. They are of little value as pasture land and reforestation is the only hope of putting such properties back into useful production. Since we have such large areas denuded by timber exploitation and erosion, our water levels have dropped so that many wells go dry for several months of the year. Through the ARDA program and the provisions of this bill we have some hope of rectifying the situation, and I feel sure this can be accomplished with an accelerated reforestation program.

I would suggest an immediate survey be made of the facilities available throughout the country for the production of seedlings. If more accommodation is required to supply the quantities needed, steps should be taken in co-operation with the provincial government to get these establishments under way promptly. Reforestation, it seems to me, offers the best means to the result which we hope will be accomplished when the principles of ARDA are applied which is, to state it briefly, to promote conservation in all elements and create better circumstances for rural people in the unsatisfactory income brackets. The benefits of reforestation would affect our whole economy. We have much secondary industry which is dependent on forest products. Wood has never been replaced as man's most valuable servant. Instead, thousands of new uses have been found for it and old uses have been continually improved.

Most of western Ontario is vitally concerned with the matter of water. Cities are exploiting the areas adjacent to them and rural people in these areas are having trouble keeping a constant supply of water. Reforestation in the proper places can do much to relieve the situation. In the county of Grey there is the highest point of land in Ontario, 1,735 feet above sea level. This is the great watershed of a large portion of western Ontario. This great ridge encompassing approximately 40,000 acres should be completely reforested. In so doing results would be forthcoming and in a comparatively short time the Grand, the Humber, and the Credit Rivers which flow south, the Saugeen and the Sauble which flow west, and all the streams and rivers flowing north into Georgian Bay, could be restored to their natural flow with the assurance that spring floods would be at a minimum. The same program could be instituted at the headwaters of all western Ontario rivers or in any other province where such conditions exist.

Without a doubt the day is not far off when this program will be an absolute necessity. I would commend it for early consideration under this legislation with the co-operation of the provincial government. These 40,000 acres of which I speak could also serve the purpose of a national park and game sanctuary. Under the authority of this bill more suitable areas should now be designated for national parks while choice virgin timbered locations are still available. Fire and exploitation have lost to our people some ideal territory for this purpose. More game sanctuaries are required if we are to maintain wild life populations. We have thousands more joining the ranks of our hunters each year, and sport magazines continually report the scarcity of game in widespread areas. This is particularly true of the whitetail or red deer. Submarginal land or wasteland could be converted to suitable game sanctuaries. Our local conservation authorities are to be commended for the remarkable contribution they have made already toward restoring our natural resources. ARDA provides legislation that will extend the help and direction the authorities have hoped for and of which they will not hesitate to take advantage.

This government, Mr. Speaker, should give some thought to introducing legislation in respect of the future settlement of all new areas in our country so that many of the obstacles we are now legislating to correct would be avoided. Surrounded by a wealth of natural resources that seem inexhaustible, the pioneer in any area naturally shows more energy in using what is at hand to keep himself fed, warm, clothed and in business, than foresight in preserving any of it. I believe all the land we have that is suitable should be kept for the production of food and especially wheat. This is a commodity that can be stored for lengthy periods. It is used for food the world over. It is not difficult to handle or transport. It could be our most potent weapon for maintaining peace. It could save millions of lives. It could save our own if great catastrophe overtook us. Our great western plains are reputed to be the bread basket of the world and, as such, they should continue. More of our wheat should go to those now starving. This will not hurt our market because these people are not in a position to buy. However, such humanitarian treatment could win them over politically now and for mutual economic advantage later. I believe there is much truth in a statement once made by the late President Kennedy when he said: "If a free society cannot help the many who are poor, it can never save the few who are rich."

Perhaps too I should bring to the attention of the house a quotation from Scripture which applies at this time and which comes to us through the prophet Isaiah.

> And they that shall be of thee shall build the old waste places: thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations; and thou shalt be called, The repairer of the breach, The restorer of paths to dwell in.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I trust that the minister will review the suggestions and directions which have been brought to his attention by several members. I am sure they will be of assistance to him in bringing into fruition the visions we have for this great nation.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words first to congratulate the government and the minister on the very commendable action they took by introducing this beneficial piece of legislation.

Indeed, since he took up his duties, the present Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) has shown quite remarkable initiative and energy, in addition to his determination in dealing earnestly with the true problem which affects the farm people.

The resolution now under discussion undoubtedly reflects his intentions and his fruitful action.

As a matter of fact, the bill under study comes under a very specific program of which three definite objects are now being materialized. The thing is, first, to promote the welfare of underdeveloped areas; second, to speed up industrialization of rural areas; and, third, to check underemployment and promote employment in agricultural areas.

During my brief remarks, I should like to express the hope that when implemented, this piece of legislation, will tend to eliminate the pockets of poverty which sometimes occur within prosperous areas.

I do not wish to make unfavourable comments about the pilot area set up and established in Mont-Joli. But the following procedure has often been followed in the past. A so-called underdeveloped area was looked after while small communities where people lived in dire poverty and destitution were being overlooked in areas alleged to be rich and prosperous.

I am thinking, for instance, of the riding of Lotbinière which is essentially rural and which I have the honour to represent. In certain parts, there are farms which are not only economic, but exceptionally prosperous and where the land is very fertile. But close by are communities and small villages, called settlements, which are deprived of the minimum well-being all people should enjoy.

As a result, here is the wish I should like to formulate during consideration of this bill: That we cope not only with these areas but also with the small localities scattered among the prosperous areas, localities to which absolutely no attention is paid because they are thought to be prosperous, considering they are situated within general prosperous areas.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to give the following warning. The electoral map which was hotly discussed in the house some time ago will soon be changed. The new boundaries will be in force at the next election which means that the farmer is in danger of losing his voice. Representatives of rural constituencies will gradually disappear with the new electoral map. I do not mean to question the necessity of the new boundaries which will affect every constituency in the country, but I observe one thing and, as a result, I am giving the necessary warning. It is that the farmer is in danger of losing his mouthpiece; his voice is in danger of being stilled precisely because the new electoral map will make urban constituencies out of the greatest majority of constituencies represented in parliament. Rural constituencies are condemned to elimination and, as a result, the voice of the farmer is in danger of being neglected and unheard.

That is why such legislation is so important, so that members, even though they represent largely urban ridings, will continue to be actively and efficiently concerned with the farmers.

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on Bill C-151 I should like to preface my remarks by stating that as a member representing a constituency which lies in the semi-arid area of east central Alberta I have watched the progress of the ARDA program since its inception in 1961. The new conception of ARDA which has come into effect since 1963 has been of interest to me and my constituents. We have looked upon this program as one which could mean much to us in the years ahead. Since 1963 it has been redirected from a war on underdeveloped resources to a war on poverty. However, as someone once said, this is not a war on poverty; it is an exercise in shadowboxing.

If under this new bill it is proposed to redirect aid provided through ARDA toward the government's war on poverty one must ask how it coincides with other government legislation. We have been told that a new agency will be set up under this new legislation to buy out small, uneconomic farm units and enlarge them into larger economic units which can be operated efficiently. I hope that in at least some cases the enlarged units will be sold back to individual farmers.

[Mr. Choquette.]

In essence the operation of such an agency will put the government into the business of purchasing real estate and operating farms. What effect will this have on the price of land, which is already skyrocketing to a point that cannot be justified on the basis of the potential value of production? What effect will this have on agriculture generally?

Members of political parties have been travelling across this country for years proclaiming that we must maintain the family farm; yet we find ourselves faced with a bill which would establish what might be termed state farms. It is very interesting to note in this regard that we in Canada have operated more efficiently and outproduced the Soviet Union; yet the Soviet Union has been operating a system of state farms. One could carry on comparing the advantages and disadvantages of the two systems of production and come to no other conclusion than the one I have drawn, that in spite of the problems we have in our system it is better and more efficient than the state farm system.

The proposed legislation is put forward under the guise of making war on poverty by aiding small uneconomic farm units. Let us consider that proposition for a moment. I do not deny that there are a number of small farms in Canada with low incomes but the proposed method of assistance is not the only way this situation can be changed. I should like to suggest a few alternatives.

In those areas of Canada where uneconomic farm units exist educational courses could be provided. A farmer who finds himself operating an uneconomic unit has two avenues open to him. He can acquire a better education through one means or another, through grants, if necessary, or by taking advantage of educational programs introduced by the federal and provincial governments in order that he may know how to produce more efficiently, or he can borrow money to enlarge his unit and intensify his production. As an example of what I have in mind, one does not need virgin land with heavy black soil to produce hogs, beef or poultry efficiently. The farmer can intensify his production without enlarging his farm unit to any great extent. I suggest these are methods which can be followed in our efforts to eradicate the poverty pockets existing in Canada.

This legislation introduces a new approach, one in which the government singles out areas in Canada and says that because areas

A, B and C contain a substantial number of low income groups something must be done about them. The government says, "We must move in with federal government funds", the taxpayers' money, "and take over the operations in these communities." I would much rather see ARDA move into undeveloped resource areas and develop the resources so the people in these areas could attain a standard of living comparable with that of the rest of Canada. In addition, greater use would be made of Canada's resources. Are we going to move into private members' hour, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes. Perhaps the hon. member would like to call it five o'clock.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fine debate yesterday and today on this subject, I would suggest that to provide continuity we continue until six o'clock or thereabouts to see what we can do with this legislation. In this way we will not break our train of thought.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the suggestion of my colleague but would add that there should be agreement that we will complete this bill before six o'clock.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, my notice of motion would be the first item dealt with in private members' hour but I certainly agree with the suggestion that has been made.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we are quite agreeable to suspending private members' hour today for this purpose.

Mr. Starr: I want to stress the one point I added as a rider, that we all agree to and co-operate in getting this legislation through before six o'clock; otherwise there would be no point in dispensing with private members' hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should like to be quite sure what the hon. member for Ontario is saying. Does he mean just second reading of the bill or does he include consideration of the bill in committee?

Mr. Starr: Consideration of the bill in committee and right through third reading.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I think it unfair to ask for this kind of decision. I would certainly agree that we continue the debate in the normal course and if it is not finished tonight it will obviously have to be concluded at some other time. But I think it would be very foolish to agree to concluding the discussion of this bill and giving it third reading when we are still at the second reading stage.

Mr. Starr: Then I must say that I think we would be encroaching upon private members' hour for no particular reason except to provide an extra hour's discussion of this bill that could be provided tomorrow. During the session we have 40 hours for the consideration of private members' business and we have been encroaching upon that period. Unless we do as I suggested I see no point in suspending private members' hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is there unanimous consent to adopt the suggestion made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Ricard: Objection always comes from the same corner.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, could not the proposition be separated into its two parts? Could we not see whether there is unanimous consent to waiving the hour for private members' business and then deal with the other matter at six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to dispense with private members' hour and continue with the debate on second reading of Bill No. C-151?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to continue my remarks. Before the interruption I was saying what this legislation will do and how it will redirect ARDA's thinking. In fact it is my belief that it will devour ARDA's thinking. In other words, when ARDA was first introduced it was my impression and the impression of all hon. members in the house that it would be used to develop Canada's undeveloped resources so that Canadians might be better able to provide for themselves. But since 1963 ARDA has moved toward this supposed war on poverty, and I believe the intent of Bill No. C-151 has consumed ARDA's thinking since 1963. If it is passed too readily and adopted unanimously I am afraid it will consume ARDA's thinking in the years ahead.

In this regard we must ask ourselves what is best for Canadians. Is it some assistance, some welfare measure, which will eradicate the poverty pockets in Canada, or is it some measure that will develop the undeveloped resources across this counry and allow Canadians to provide for themselves? It is my firm belief that Canadians want the opportunity to provide for themselves and do not want the government buying their land and saying: Go into the city; we will educate you there and then you can fend for yourselves. This might suit a lot of people but it is my belief that farmers are farmers for a number of specific reasons. One is that they love the freedom of farming. Second, they love the outdoor work. Neither of these desires can be met by city employment. If this legislation is passed and projected into the future it will take peoople off the farms and put them in city employment where they will lose the freedom they cherish and their desire to work outdoors away from the smog and fog of city life will not be met.

Therefore we must consider this legislation very carefully. I am in favour of making every effort to eradicate poverty pockets in Canada if it is the intention of the government to help the small farmer to farm in these poverty pockets. Twenty or thirty years ago the farmer was sustained to a large extent by his egg cheque, his poultry cheque, and in some parts of Canada by the pulpwood he could cut during the winter. In one province premiums of over $10 per hog are paid. These premiums are in effect a subsidy. As a farmer myself I am not against subsidies. In fact, I am as much for subsidies as the next fellow. But in effect a subsidy of $10 is paid to the farmer for every hog he raises. This payment is made in a province of Canada where in rural areas the farm income is perhaps the largest in the country.

Therefore I would ask, Mr. Speaker, how does this legislation correspond with other policies of the government? Recently the government announced a price of $4 a hundred for milk. Whom is this supposed to help sustain? The answer is, the small farmer. What will this program cost? It will cost something like $10 million a year. I am not opposed to it; I think it is a good idea. But on the one hand you are sustaining the small farmer and on the other you are trying to buy him out and force him off the land.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

We are told that a feed grain agency is to be set up in eastern Canada. This will allow the small farmer to buy grain at a price he can afford and will enable him to carry out his feeding or farming operation, whatever the case may be. With regard to the feed grain policy, in the province of Ontario, for example, something like 80 per cent of the production on agricultural land is produced by 30 per cent of the farmers, another 30 per cent of farmers produce 17 per cent and another 30 per cent the remaining 3 per cent. Taking that province as an example I say that the feed grain agency is not going to maintain or sustain the 30 per cent producing 80 per cent of the production. What the feed grain policy may do is to improve the assistance to the 30 per cent who are producing 3 per cent of the production. So I say to the minister that before he catapults the government of Canada into state farming and state agriculture he should review the over-all agricultural policies to see whether or not the intent of this legislation is carried out in other policies.

Who would be most affected by the feed grain policy, for example, or the freight assistance on feed grain coming from western Canada? The answer is, the large farmers. This may be good from the viewpoint of this legislation, but what I am trying to point out here is that there is no continuity in government legislation. On the one hand, in many cases we are sustaining the small farmer; on the other hand, we feel that we must buy him out and move the government into state farming. This is exactly what this piece of legislation does.

We are told that $50 million will be provided under agreements with the provinces. The agency is prepared to spend this $50 million in the next five years in buying up small farms. I suppose if I were 70 years old and had no dependants I would be the first one to approach the agency for it to buy my small farm. I suppose many farmers will greet this legislation with the view that if an agency is prepared to buy their land they are prepared to sell. But I would like to know how far this will catapult the government of Canada into state agriculture. In other words, the funny thing about legislation is that once it is on the statute books the money involved very rarely diminishes. We have $50 million for five years. From my experience in this house

I say that when the five years have passed by $100 million will be appropriated for the next five years and more land will be purchased.

As can be seen in the Canada Year Book, the percentage of land owned by farmers in Canada has increased from what it was in the 20's and 30's. In other words today most farmers are farming land they own; a far greater percentage are farming land they own than was the case in the 20's and 30's. Will that trend continue if we pass this legislation and endorse it wholeheartedly? As I said before, it is my experience in this house that once legislation is on the statute books the money involved rarely diminishes. We have $50 million appropriated today; five years from now it will be $100 million and later another $100 million. More money is appropriated because more pockets of poverty exist, and away we go. Maybe nobody really knows where it ends.

I hope that when this piece of legislation passes the minister responsible for ARDA will not let it take up all of his time or all the time and energy of the department. I hope he will continue the original intention of ARDA to find pockets or areas in Canada where vast resources remain undeveloped. The whole central part of Alberta might well be said to be rich in soil containing the most valuable resources in Canada. However, it is also very weak in the development of that soil because today it has a very sparse population per square mile. In other words, we have a vast potential which could be developed under ARDA, and many other areas in Canada could also be developed. Resources could be developed so that intensification of population could be achieved rather than go into areas where income is low and take the people off the farms and move them into cities. Let us take the low income people in the cities, many of whom desire to go back to farming, and develop the agricultural land throughout Canada. In many cases those in the low income group in the cities desire to go back into agriculture and they should be given an opportunity to do so.

It is a popular belief, inspired by many newspaper articles on agriculture, that the small farmer must go. Every professor in every university will say that the small farmer must go. In many cases the small farmer does not want to go; he wants to remain a small farmer because he likes farming. He does not want the burden of debt. He does not want financial worries; he only wants to remain on his farm and earn his living. In the Kootenays, in Acadia, in Quebec or in any other part of Canada we must give him the right to remain small if he so desires. We cannot suddenly say to him through government legislation: You are uneconomic and because your neighbour wants to sell you must sell; we will force you to take up another line of occupation and move elsewhere. We in this country who share his freedom must guard against the ever-expanding system of state farms which this legislation may well bring about.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I had expressed my intention to make a contribution to the debate on Bill C-151, which I strongly support, but so as not to delay its passage, I shall summarize my remarks in one or two minutes.

Yesterday, the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), who is responsible for rural development, mentioned the purposes of this new legislation in his very detailed statement. He said among other things, that three areas, one in Manitoba, one in eastern Quebec and one in New Brunswick, would benefit from this new legislation which, with ARDA, will step up the war against poverty in rural areas.

Mr. Speaker, I take the liberty of adding another area, that of western Quebec, it could adjust very well to this new legislation. I refer to the Rouge river valley, of which the department has had a study made by a company directly concerned with rural development. Its 2,000-page report covers that 2,500 square mile area which has a population of 25,000 and includes 31 municipalities.

Here, I also want to mention the Little Nation valley, the Lièvre valley and the Gatineau valley.

Another preliminary report in the hands of ARDA was prepared by the Canadian Welfare Council concerning poverty in rural areas and deals with three provincial counties, Papineau, Gatineau and Pontiac.

I would have liked to add further remarks in this regard for the regions I have just mentioned, but I think the Minister of Forestry could use the power conferred upon him by section 4 of Bill C-152 to make a study.

Therefore, I suggest to him, Mr. Speaker, that he make a study of the four western Quebec valleys I have mentioned, with a view to making available to them the advantages of ARDA or those of the new Bill C-152.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, there are a few points which need emphasizing in connection with this legislation. First of all, I want to know from the minister if in arranging these agreements with the provinces there is any thought of expropriating land. I want to know the answer to that question before I vote in favour of this legislation. I want it clearly understood that there is going to be no attempt to expropriate land owned by the so-called small operators. In so far as this program is concerned, it is true the small farms do present a problem. When I refer to "small farms" I am referring to farms comprising half a section of land or in some areas even a quarter section. There are no criteria that the Minister of Forestry (Mr Sauvé) can produce, or anyone else for that matter, to show that all these so-called small farms are uneconomic. The person operating such a farm may wish to live in the country and may have a supplementary income. In those instances the farm is operated to very good advantage.

One of the objectives of this measure might be to expropriate land in order to assemble a unit. Any such attempt would be going contrary to the interests of the small operator and against the wishes of those interested in agriculture. It would meet with serious objections from the farmers themselves and from all those who have a lot of confidence in the ARDA legislation. Like the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner), I feel that if we develop our resources under ARDA we will automatically begin to eliminate poverty. You cannot look at one without the other. If you take an area that has extensive resources and develop those resources, you are going to create greater employment for the farmers of that particular area. On the other hand, if you set out to operate your programs only in those areas where there is poverty you are going to be just sweeping in the corners in so far as solving the problems this act was designed to solve is concerned.

In other words, you must look at the resources first and rely upon a certain amount of internal migration. The outcome of this will be that the resources will be developed and employment will be supplied. I have a feeling that the minister, as a result of his surroundings and his understanding of these problems, has given too much emphasis to the question of poverty. We all want to eliminate poverty. I am certain it can be eliminated if the resources of our great dominion are developed. The first consideration, therefore, should be the development of resources. This should be the touchstone. It was the touchstone when ARDA was first implemented, and that should not be changed in order to give consideration to the question of poverty.

Poverty is an important problem, and by all means we want to eliminate it. However, this can only be done if we take the natural resources and combine them in terms of units which will support the population in the area concerned. The citizens with low incomes are now to be the touchstone of this particular measure, as I read it. I am wondering whether the minister, in addition to the answer I have requested about the expropriation of land, can give to the house the orientation he intends to adopt with regard to the agreements with the provinces.

Can the minister say that the steps which the provinces will take will be to develop resources rather than to eliminate pockets of poverty? As I have said, we want the pockets of poverty eliminated but we do want an approach that will develop the resources of our nation and not only the mineral resources but those that have to do with the farming industry.

While these resources should be developed, I want to say too that the Minister of Forestry, who is going to be the minister in charge of this program, should include Indian reserves in the program. I have some 6,000 or 8,000 Indians in my riding. I want a program started on these Indian reserves. These are places where the people have low incomes. They have their Indian reserve lands, and I am certain that any program that could be developed with the help of the federal government would be welcomed by them. Since they are natives of our dominion they should not be overlooked, but no mention is made of them in this legislation. In other words, here is another measure which seeks to correct poverty but does not mention Indian reserves. These reserves are the areas in which you will find the greatest poverty in this great dominion of ours.

I say again that I would not be in favour of this legislation unless it is the intention of the minister to direct some of his attention to the solution of the problem of poverty through the proper utilization of resources and the adoption of programs for these Indian reserves.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the comments I feel impelled to make in connection with this bill are not lengthy, let me assure you, but so far as agriculture is concerned I feel that the bill is an important one. It has a good many ramifications which I think will be of general benefit to people making a partial living on a small farm and who devote some other portion of their time to working in a nearby urban centre.

I think it is proper to pay some tribute to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) in relation to this whole idea and the previous legislation which set up ARDA. I also feel I can properly say that I think we are fortunate, inasmuch as we on this side of the house, do not seem to be able to take the duties of administration entirely upon our shoulders, in that the present minister will, I am sure, do a most creditable job both on his behalf and on behalf of the country.

I believe we must consider the social aspect of the maintenance of the small farm. It has always been my feeling that a special situation exists in relation to maintaining the farmer in a small community. He is the person who contributes to the upkeep of the local church and the local school. He is the person who, in general terms, is the foundation of the rural communities which I think are tremendously important to this country.

I realize that in this day and age there is a definite trend toward the larger farming unit. I appreciate this is due to the mechanization of farming which involves the purchase of very expensive machinery and can only be undertaken by a man in possession of a large acreage of land. As a consequence the trend is away from the small farm.

However, I maintain that this legislation can be used to encourage the small farmer to stay on the farm. We who represent rural communities know that all you need do to find many abandoned farms is to go across the country. These farms are abandoned in many cases owing to the fact that the farmer found it difficult to maintain his family.

I have heard it said that such land should be used to grow trees instead of crops. In my part of the country many of the abandoned farms are now sought after by large food processing plants such as those in my particular part of New Brunswick. This is because the soil in regions isolated from the general activities of everyday life is practically free from all disease. As a consequence such land is sought after by food processing plants. I find that in my part of New Brunswick this is becoming more and more the case. To my own knowledge these plants are moving away from the thickly settled areas in an attempt to obtain land which has a certain freedom from disease in order to produce crops for which freedom from disease is most important.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would submit to the minister that he should not take as gospel that every acre of cleared land in what might be called back settlements must of necessity be used for tree growing. The soil should be carefully examined and analysed. I do not pretend to be a practical farmer because I am not. But I do know that soil in certain places has characteristics which lend themselves to the growing of certain crops provided that first of all the land is examined by agriculturalists and a report issued.

If I were going to make a suggestion to the minister I would say that before any large scale change in land use is made in any particular community the soil should be carefully analysed to ascertain its suitability for growing various kinds of crops. I might favour tree growing because this happens to be my particular business. I am glad that the Minister of Forestry is in charge of this legislation inasmuch as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, because of circumstances, is unable to look after it. Speaking in broad, general terms I think it is a good thing to consider tree growing as an alternative to crops.

If I had time I could go into the whole history of the growing of Christmas trees, an activity which has been developed in parts of New Brunswick as well as parts of Nova Scotia. My hon. friend, the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart), knows that the growing of Christmas trees is becoming quite a business there.

I was a little disturbed at the speech made by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) because I am one of those—and I make no apologies for this—who is a sincere believer in the principle of individual initiative and the encouragement of people to look after themselves, in other words, private enterprise. I believe in private enterprise because it develops individuals. That is the way the talents given to us by the Almighty are developed to their greatest possible extent. Private enterprise gives people a chance to develop their talents so that they will not require the government to be paternal toward them to the extent that they do not need to worry.

In this connection I should like to quote the assurance, to some extent at least, of the minister in his speech yesterday, when he said as reported at page 4940 of Hansard:

> The fund will not serve as a disguised social welfare program nor as a program whose sole objective would be to give work to the unemployed.

In the next column these words appear:

> ARDA seeks always to achieve the best possible combination of public investment and participation by the local people. ARDA seeks the most efficient investment for basic improvement of the region's capacity to provide a sound base for the economy.

I do not think we can find too much fault with that statement, but I should like to inform the minister that he will achieve much greater satisfaction and results from the whole program if he will consider a slight amendment to the clause of the bill which deals with the setting up of the boards. It is proposed to set up boards consisting of ten members who will be drawn from various departments in Ottawa. I suggest to the minister that he consider as candidates for the boards representatives from municipalities in which projects are located.

If the minister is going to accomplish anything in the nature of improvements in order to eliminate poverty to some degree, I think it would be beneficial to use local people on these advisory boards. Their use would be of benefit to the provincial governments which do not come as close to the people as do the representatives of the municipalities. Therefore, if it were possible to make a slight amendment in order that the municipalities could be represented on the boards, I am sure that matters of local interest and local need would be brought to the attention of the boards to a much greater extent than if they were made up of those not familiar with local conditions or with the needs of the people in general.

I agree with the words of the hon. member for Acadia when he said that we must give the small farmer the right to remain small. I do not think we should consider that because an individual is doing something on a smaller basis than somebody else, he should be brushed aside as though he is not important. I think that combinations of smaller people are more important generally to the economy of the country than the large operators no matter what may be the particular sphere of economics in which they are engaged. In other words, I think it is better to have ten small farmers earning $3,000 each in a community than to have one large farmer earning $30,000. I think that the ten farmers earning $3,000 each are of more benefit to the community as a whole than one farmer with a gross income of $30,000.

Here I believe we get to the root of the problem. It has to do with the individual. We are here for the purpose of legislating for the benefit of individuals regardless of where they may be.

As the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) said, everybody seems to be in favour of this legislation. There is universal approval in the chamber, I think, because everyone sees here an attempt to deal with the problem and everyone wants the problem dealt with.

May I make some suggestions to the minister in the hope that they may be of some benefit to him as he proceeds with his duties in administering the act. I hope that the act when passed will have the effect of ameliorating the problems of poverty in low income communities. I am sure we all hope that this will result from the legislation before us at the present time.

Having expressed my views concerning the individual, I want to say that I believe it is better to give the individual an opportunity to do things for himself than to give the impression that you are going to do everything for him. Enabling the individual to better himself should be the aim, the object and the objective of the legislation.

Having made my point, I do not propose to take any more time of the house. I am sure we will all await with great interest the activities to be carried on under the act. We want to see it in operation. May I assure the minister that to the extent I may be able to be of assistance to him he may consider my services are at his disposal at all times.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the minister is in his seat at the present time. I am sorry that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) is not here. I should like to pay a special tribute to the minister and to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle for the gentlemanlike way in which they began this debate yesterday afternoon. That sort of thing is refreshing in this house and I am sure that all those on the back benches approve wholeheartedly. They set an example that other members have followed. I should like to congratulate all members who have spoken in the debate because it has been a very worth-while discussion.

Speaking of Renfrew county, I should like to say that we have a very active ARDA committee which is part of Renfrew county council. The committee has done excellent work to date, has been most active and at this time I should like to pay my tribute to its members.

The 1966 Renfrew county budget for ARDA projects provides for a gross expenditure of a little over $206,000, $26,000 of which will be county money. ARDA, over the years since its inception, has paid for several feasibility and engineering studies that have been made in the county on different projects.

Possibly there is a special case to be made out for the county. Hon. members will recall that in the days when timber was being cut for the British navy Renfrew county was one of the areas in Canada that saw its hills stripped of virgin pine. In many instances the areas affected have not survived that action. Today reforestation under the ARDA program plays a major part in Renfrew county. The county spends in the neighbourhood of $20,000 a year for reforestation in joint ARDA projects.

Another thing accomplished under ARDA has been the dredging of sections of the Muskrat river and the construction of a dam. The total project cost was approximately $113,000. At this time I will not go into other projects.

However, I should like to mention something else which involved much local initiative on the part of the people in various areas of Renfrew county, namely, the maple syrup project. One farmer had the idea that he should make a survey of the area for purposes of maple syrup production. He found that there were over one million maple trees in the area. ARDA has approved a considerable grant of money to the people interested for the development of this industry. These people are to be congratulated for their initiative.

I should like to emphasize strongly before I sit down that I feel ARDA should supply funds to promote education in poverty stricken rural areas. In many instances where there is rural poverty there are poor educational facilities. I am thinking not only of elementary education. At some time in the future I hope that funds may be provided through ARDA to local areas or counties with rural poverty in order to build agricultural schools to give basic agricultural training to the young people in those areas, thereby helping to train them to be community leaders. This would also give them ideas for building up their areas and would prepare them to take the initiative in bringing about improvements locally. I do not think there need be any conflict with provincial jurisdiction over education. We often hear the saying: Whoever pays the piper calls the tune. This money could be given to the provinces with the single proviso that it be used for educational purposes. There would be no interference with provincial jurisdiction in any way.

I should like to leave this thought with the house because I feel that one of the ways to eradicate local poverty in Canada is by helping people to help themselves. This could certainly be done if better educational facilities were provided in some areas.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments on this bill. A bill as wide in its application as the one we are now considering certainly deserves full and constructive debate.

The minister has said that 500,000 families or two million Canadians are living in rural poverty. I should like to point out that this has only been the case lately since the advent of the Liberal government and the high cost of living which has accompanied their term of office. The minister also mentioned the low standard of living of rural people. I do not think he has expressed the position altogether fairly and I must reply by saying that the standard of living of rural people is generally better in a rural setting than the abject and deplorable poverty of many thousands of our people who live in other than rural areas.

The broad, general principles of this bill constitute a step in the right direction and we interpret them as a concerted effort on the part of the government and parliament to rescue our rural areas and a wide section of the agricultural industry from despair and oblivion.

I pointed out to the house on March 31 the need for care when enacting legislation of this kind, the need to preserve the private enterprise capability of our farmers. I wish it to be noted that I advised the government not to go into the real estate business through buying smaller lots and farms, improving and developing them into economic units and then selling them back to the farmers. After a considerable period spent by people in such a socialistic government-sponsored upheaval, as I have just indicated, I ask the question: Which farmers would be the purchasers?

One can readily visualize the course of events. A certain area would be inspected by an advance corps of committees and inspectors. Some small holders would be willing to sell to the government. Others, rightfully, would be adamant in not wishing to sell. The government would then have the painful and embarrassing experience of having to resort to expropriation. Many decisions would go to arbitration or to court, a process which would vastly increase the cost of the land to the government.

Once a governmental economic unit had been so expensively thrown together further expenses would follow including the fencing of the unit, the erection of suitable buildings, the tearing down of unsuitable buildings where necessary, the provision of suitable water supplies for livestock and human consumption, the installation of hydro where provision is not already made, and the setting up of the power facilities needed for modern farming. All these things involve considerable expense.

Money would be needed for the improvement and building of roads in many cases where township councils could not extend existing roads in the absence of guarantees. All these subtotals, Mr. Speaker, make up the grand total representing the price the government would have to ask of the first prospective purchaser. I say again, as I said on March 31: Give the farmers the credit and the benefits of the Canadian Farm Loan Act and let them do their own developing. Let them create their own economic units. Let them improve their own solvency. Almost without exception, anything any government has ever done in the line of construction and development has cost far more than the same work done by private enterprise.

Let farmers do their own developing and carry out their own improvements with the help of specific grants made available for certain required improvements. They could collect these grants after the improvement had been inspected and the cost authorized for payment.

I have here a clipping from the Napanee Beaver of May 4, 1966, reporting a meeting of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture held in Toronto. The heading is: "Rural Redevelopment Must Start With People, Federation Told". It reads in part as follows:

> Fieldman Rae Cunningham and "AG Rept" Garnet Mills, who were present at the monthly meeting on Tuesday, April 26, in the County Memorial Building at Napanee reviewed recent conferences held in Toronto and Guelph and stated that the conclusion reached is that rural redevelopment must start with people who are willing to participate in a self-help program of retraining to meet the needs of a changing world.

May I call it six o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the business of the house tomorrow will be the same order of business as we have been considering today. We will continue with item No. 5 on the order paper, Bill No. C-151, followed by second reading of Bill C-146, an act to amend the Northwest Territories Act. Then we would take second reading of Bill C-147, an act to amend the Yukon Act, followed by the estimates of the Departments of Forestry, Labour, Post Office and Industry, not necessarily in that order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In order to keep the record straight, may I ask whether I am expressing the will of the house if I say that the private members' hour suspended this day is to be taken on some other day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GORDON—STATEMENT RESPECTING ACQUISITION OF MERCANTILE BANK SHARES

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege in connection with a statement released yesterday afternoon by Mr. Robert P. McFadden, president of the Mercantile Bank of Canada, following a meeting of the directors of the bank. The statement begins as follows:

We believe it improper to engage in debate with the former finance minister over who said what at a meeting over three years ago. Suffice it to say we voluntarily made the full details of the transaction known to Mr. Gordon at the time and our understanding of what transpired at the meeting with him is not in accord with his.

The transaction referred to was the acquisition of the shares of the Mercantile Bank of Canada by the First National City Bank of New York. The comment refers to what Mr. James Stillman Rockefeller, at the time president and now chairman of the First National City Bank, and Mr. McFadden, then an officer of that bank, told me at a meeting in my office on July 18, 1963, when I was minister of finance.

Mr. R. B. Bryce, deputy minister of finance, and Mr. Clayton Elderkin, inspector general of banks, were present with me during the meeting and Mr. Elderkin prepared a full report on what took place immediately afterward. The report was reviewed and concurred in by Mr. Bryce. This report leaves no doubt whatever as to what transpired despite Mr. McFadden's protestations to the contrary. I expect both Mr. Bryce and Mr. Elderkin will be called upon to confirm it when the Bank Act is up for revision.

While the statement that Mr. McFadden released yesterday is carefully worded and may sound plausible on a cursory reading, the fact of the matter is that he is questioning the accuracy of what I said in the house on June 14, 1965 in the course of my duties as minister of finance, which may be found at pages 2371 to 2373 of Hansard, and which I referred to on pages 94 and 95 of my recent book.

In my statement to the house, which was a long one, I referred to my conversation with Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. McFadden in some detail. It is on the record and I shall not repeat it except to say that I assumed the purpose of Mr. Rockefeller's visit was to ascertain, before any commitment was undertaken, whether the Canadian government of the day would be favourable to his bank acquiring control of the Mercantile Bank.

I informed Mr. Rockefeller that this would not be looked upon with favour by the Canadian government for the reasons which are set out in Hansard.

Mr. McFadden, the president of the Mercantile Bank, has now seen fit to question the accuracy of the statement which I made to the house on June 14, 1965. In doing so he has cast a reflection upon my integrity both as a member of this house and as a former member of the government.

I can only presume that this had been done deliberately. If it were to go unchallenged it might not only reflect on my veracity and therefore on my personal integrity, but it might mislead members of the house and members of the public at a time when decisions respecting the future position of the Mercantile Bank of Canada will be under consideration. I presume they are under consideration at the present time by the Minister of Finance and members of the cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Hon. Maurice Lamontagne—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the hon. member is allowed to put his motion a decision should be taken by the Chair as to whether there is a prima facie case of privilege in the statement. If there is no objection I might take the matter under advisement. If there is a prima facie case of privilege then the hon. member might be allowed to make the motion. I might say, perhaps, that I have some serious doubts at the moment about whether there is a prima facie case of privilege.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the question of privilege, when Your Honour is considering the matter would you consider the fact that the member for Davenport has referred to a public document prepared by the inspector general of banks. I suggest and submit that the rules of the house would require that this document should be laid on the table of the house, and I would ask Your Honour to take that matter into consideration at the same time.

TABLING OF REPORT ON PATENT LICENSING OF DRUG MANUFACTURERS

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with leave of the house I should like to table copies, in English and in French, of the report of the special committee which was established to look into matters involved in the patent licensing of drug manufacturers. This committee, which was established on June 14, 1965, consisted of Dr. Irwin Hilliard, Dr. Charles Gowdey and Dr. Roger Gaudry.

In general the various recommendations of the committee which are not directly within existing regulations are being considered, and to the extent necessary are being implemented by appropriate arrangements with the commissioner of patents, as well as by changes in our drug regulations.

Arrangements have been discussed with the commissioner of patents to ensure close cooperation between the food and drug directorate and his office. The directorate will provide the necessary report to the commissioner relating to the competency of the applicant to manufacture a particular drug, and while the decision with respect to the issuance of a compulsory licence is entirely within the discretion of the commissioner, I consider that the arrangements which have been discussed will effectively take into account the views of the committee.

The recommendation of the committee with respect to the furnishing of samples and informational material to the food and drug directorate and the inspection of premises, are matters which can be taken care of under the authority of our existing regulations. Hon. members can be assured that careful attention will be given to the supervision of matters which are involved in this portion of the recommendations.

We have also under consideration an amendment to the definition of a new drug, which is designed to give effect to the purpose of the fifth recommendation which is contained in the report. It is felt that the existing regulations which require suitable conditions of manufacture for a drug are sufficiently broad to cover the purposes of recommendation No. 6.

The question of adequate direction for use, including information to the professions, is a matter that has been under consideration for some time and appropriate steps are being taken to amend the regulations as would be necessary to give effect to this part of the report.

As regards notification, I expect that the necessary regulations in this regard will be in force within a very short space of time. Consideration is being given to strengthening the regulations with respect to the testing of drugs imported into Canada. The present regulations require that the container of a drug in dosage form bear a lot number. My officers are looking into the practicability of the individual capsule or tablet carrying a distinctive mark.

In concluding my remarks I would like on behalf of my colleague the Secretary of State, who established the committee, and myself, to pay particular tribute to it for its willingness to undertake this work at short notice and for the quality of the report which it provided.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-181, respecting employment in the public service of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Pearson: I wonder if I could ask the Minister of National Revenue, with agreement of the house, to explain this bill. He will be piloting it through the house because I may not be here for one or two days next week.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): This is the second of three measures which are necessitated by the movement toward collective bargaining in the civil service of Canada. Under this particular measure the Civil Service Act is to be replaced by a new statute to be known as the public service employment act. This measure will not only retain the merit system of appointment and promotion and the type of job security long enjoyed by civil servants, but will extend them to thousands of additional government employees. The Civil Service Commission is to become the public service commission and, within a wider jurisdiction, it is to be concerned exclusively with the staffing functions.

The proposed public service employment act, which states that appointments to the public service are to be based on selection according to merit, would apply not only to civil servants, as currently defined, but also to some 30,000 prevailing rate employees, ships' officers and crews. The extension to these employees of the merit system of appointment and promotion, and of the type of job security now enjoyed by civil servants, will, I think, be welcomed by all those who value and respect the non-political traditions of the public service.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Will that bill also allow—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot put a question at this time.

[English]

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, is Your Honour indicating that no questions may be asked at this time?

Mr. Speaker: That is what I was suggesting to the hon. member.

Mr. Fulton: Then may I say that before we give leave to introduce this bill there is a matter of order which should be raised.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. gentleman raising a point of order?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The point of order I raise is this. How can such matter come forward by way of the introduction of a bill rather than by way of resolution? I think we should have some explanation from the government side as to that.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the question whether this bill and the following bill required resolutions was taken up with the law officers of the crown. The government was informed that these two bills did not require resolutions.

Mr. Fulton: Then on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that this is not the time to precipitate a debate, but for myself and I am sure for many of my colleagues I should like to say that we would consent to the introduction of the bill reserving, however, our rights at a later stage to raise a point of order whether in fact the bill may be proceeded with without the prior introduction of a resolution.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I also want to rise on a point of order and mention that we reserve the right to question the procedure used at this time, if the purpose of the bill is to allow the Liberal organizers recently appointed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to negotiate—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I might mention on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Kamloops that I am informed that when the present Civil Service Act was introduced in 1960 and 1961, it was not preceded by a resolution. The same procedure is being followed in this particular instance.

Is it the pleasure of the house that the right hon. gentleman shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Mr. Fulton: Subject to the reservation I have stated.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There can be no such reservation. The hon. member may, if he wishes, make a point later on, but it is my understanding that the right hon. gentleman has leave to introduce the said bill now.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Introduction of Bills

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FUNCTIONS OF TREASURY BOARD

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-182, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this is the third of the bills necessarily arising out of the proposal for collective bargaining in the civil service. This particular bill proposes that Treasury Board be empowered to act for the governor in council on all matters relating to financial management, personnel management, general administrative policy, the organization of the public service and the control of establishments. In the personnel field the board would be responsible, among other things, for the determination of rates of pay, hours of work, leave and other conditions of employment; for the classification of positions and employees; for the establishment of standards of discipline; and for the promotion of safe and suitable working conditions.

The purpose of these provisions is to assign to Treasury Board the role envisaged for it by the Glassco commission and to provide it with the authority it will require to act as the principal agent of the employer in the proposed system of collective bargaining.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESTRICTING PRIVILEGES TO CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-183, to amend the Canada Elections Act (qualifications of voters and electors).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide that only Canadian citizens shall in future be qualified as electors or as candidates at federal elections. Such privileges, enjoyed by British subjects and certain others who have not acquired Canadian citizenship, are not shared by all immigrants. The proposed amendment would end this discrimination, encourage the acquisition of citizenship, and reflect the maturity of a nation approaching its centenary.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—POSSIBILITY OF RECOGNITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the remarks he made in New York last night, as quoted today in the press, can the Prime Minister tell the members of the house whether it is the intention of Canada to extend official recognition to the People's Republic of China in the immediate future? Second, is it the intention of the government of Canada to support the recognition of the delegation from Peking, China, for the Chinese seat in the United Nations at the next general assembly of the United Nations.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add anything to what has been said previously on this matter by spokesmen for the government. It is a matter that is under consideration, of course. As to what may happen at the next assembly of the United Nations, that is a hypothetical question.

Our attitude toward the communist Chinese government, as a government, on any UN resolution dealing with this matter, would have to consider the nature of the resolution and the circumstances.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask whether the Prime Minister's remarks, in his estimation, indicate that Canada is closer to this point than it was heretofore?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think I have just reaffirmed what I and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have been saying on this matter now for some time.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I commend the Prime Minister for the statement he made in New York, that the United Nations could no longer shelve the problem of membership for mainland China. I ask the Prime Minister, does he not think it would give substance to his declaration if he made a statement fairly soon to the effect that the Canadian government is prepared to recognize mainland China and to support her admission to the United Nations? Does the Prime Minister not think this would allow the government to avoid any accusations that the Prime Minister's statement of yesterday was merely empty rhetoric?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that is of course a conditional question which it is difficult for me to answer. The circumstances regarding the admission of the mainland government of China to the United Nations depend not exclusively on the attitude of other members of the United Nations but on the attitude of that government itself to conditions which it might lay down for membership in the United Nations.

Mr. Douglas: Could I ask the Prime Minister whether there is any obstacle in the way of extending diplomatic recognition to communist China, as has already been done by a great many countries including the United Kingdom and France, where the attitude of mainland China with respect to Formosa is not involved.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that the question is argumentative, and it seems to me we are entering into a debate on the subject. I do not think this particular question should be allowed.

Mr. Douglas: May I rephrase my question and ask the Prime Minister whether there are any obstacles standing in the way of Canadian recognition of mainland China.

Mr. Pearson: There is the difficulty which might occur if the government of mainland China were to insist that any diplomatic recognition of the regime should include areas such as Formosa where its writ does not now run.

Mr. Nesbitt: Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the climate among Canada's friends, unlike the Ottawa climate in another sense, is so improved that recognition of the People's Republic of China may come at a date earlier than might have been expected a short while ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question again is argumentative.

[Later:]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs consonant with an earlier question directed to the Prime Minister. Has the hon. gentleman or the government reconsidered the extension of diplomatic recognition to the Chinese government on the island of Formosa?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the experienced whip, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, will have carefully noted that the question was adequately responded to by the Prime Minister.

NATIONAL CENSUS

QUEBEC INQUIRY INTO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the future minister of manpower?

Was the minister consulted by his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), with regard to the appointment of the commissioners for the census to be held in June?

Mr. Speaker: Since it is not urgent, this question cannot be accepted.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Since the question was not accepted, the hon. member may not put a supplementary question.

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the question was not accepted for lack of immediate urgency, but it was not ruled out of order—

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, it was.

Mr. Grégoire: —and I feel that, in the circumstances, a supplementary question is in order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. My interpretation of the standing orders is not the same as that of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire).

[Later:]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, I shall direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Would the Prime Minister ask his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to table in the house a list of all those who have suggested names for the 1966 national census?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is out of order for the same reason as the one asked a minute ago by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette).

If the hon. member believes this matter to be very urgent, he can discuss it at ten o'clock.

Mr. Grégoire: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, may I put my question to his parliamentary secretary, the distinguished member for Quebec South?

Have the persons selected to take the 1966 census passed an examination to ascertain if they are qualified for the job, and when was this examination held?

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Having listened to questions since the beginning of the afternoon, I wonder why the question of the member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) is not in order; why is it not urgent since the census will start in the near future?

In my opinion this question should be accepted.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member asked if an examination had been held. I think this question is not urgent and if the hon. member who put the question believes it is, he can ask to debate it later under the adjournment motion. As a matter of fact, he gave notice of his intention to do so.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, my notice is already before the clerk.

[Later:]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture?

In a questionnaire candidates for the position of national census commissioners have to fill out, there is a question that puzzles everyone, namely: how many pounds of fat are there in one hundredweight of milk?

It might be advisable for the minister to tell us so that all Canada might know.

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—STOPPAGE OF WORK BY LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the statement by the executive of the international longshoremens union that they have lost control of their striking members, and bearing in mind the critical national and international situation which has developed, can the minister inform us what he is doing in an effort to bring this wildcat strike in Montreal back under control?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): As far as ministerial responsibility is concerned, that would be an intrusion on my part into the functions of my colleague the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Thompson: May I, then, ask the Minister of Labour what action the government is taking in this critical situation?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I agree that this is a very serious matter. The night before last I appointed an able and experienced jurist to be chairman of a conciliation board. The board is now in session dealing with this problem as a matter of urgency.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Is the Minister of Transport considering offering the services of a mediator from the department in an effort to find a solution to this serious situation?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think I should usurp the functions so very well performed by the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Valade: May I address the same question to the Minister of Labour?

Mr. Nicholson: It is not customary to have a mediator function once a board of conciliation has been established and is actually dealing with the problem. Senior officials of my department are on hand and are available to give advice if it is required.

FAILURE TO APPOINT CHAIRMAN FOR C.N.R. CONCILIATION BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): My question is addressed to the Minister of Labour. In view of the announcement by the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers yesterday that a strike vote is being taken among their members on the Canadian National Railways in protest against delays in the appointment of a chairman for a conciliation board, can the minister advise what action he has taken to deal with this dispute?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I am glad this question was put, because it gives me the opportunity to correct an erroneous statement which appeared in this morning's paper to the effect that the minister has neglected this matter for two months.

The facts are that it was on March 30 the union sent in its nomination. The company submitted its nomination on April 1. The parties were immediately advised by the minister, as required by the act, that they should get together and try to agree on a chairman. On April 19 I was advised they had not been able to agree. On the following day I announced the appointment of Mr. Justice Munroe to the chairmanship of the other two conciliation boards, and the hope was expressed that this particular union and the railways might be able to agree on his appointment in this case also. It was only, relatively, a short time ago that I was advised that this hope would not materialize.

Since then we have been actively exploring the possibilities because this is a very important matter. For the last ten days we have been trying to find another chairman, but bearing in mind the number of conciliation boards and other inquiries which are sitting at the present time hon. members will appreciate that it is not easy to get an experienced chairman to deal with a matter as complicated and as serious as this one.

We now have one experienced man in mind and I feel he could do the job well, if he will accept. He has promised to advise me tomorrow, if possible, or in any event not later than Monday, whether he will be able to take it on.

FLOODS

YUKON— INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question for the minister of northern affairs; it concerns the hon. member for the Northwest Territories as well. Can the minister inform the house what assistance is forthcoming from the government with respect to flood conditions in the Yukon?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): We have had a report on flood conditions in the city of Dawson. This is a condition which is not unusual at this time of the year, though I would think the damage is somewhat greater than the average for the last number of years. I understand some damage was done to private homes, to the water system and to the sewage system.

We have asked two men to go in and make an assessment. Commissioner Cameron has asked for some assistance. We are glad to report that the water is now receding because apparently the ice jam down river from Dawson is breaking up.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED INCREASE IN ANTICIPATED COST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Before doing so, if you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, I want to admit that I misled the house yesterday—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: —for the first time in nearly 21 years. With reference to the office of the former prime minister being wired, the Minister of Public Works said, as reported in Hansard at page 5008:

> —to check proceedings that went on here. He admitted it himself and had the wiring removed when the matter was raised in the House of Commons by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Later on I rose and said:

> I wish to explain to the house that this complaint was made by Senator Argue.

That is not correct. As is made clear in Hansard for July 19, 1958 at page 2447, I raised the point and as a result the prime minister of the day had the situation corrected. I am not at present a senator, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: Behave yourself and you might be.

Mr. Herridge: In view of press reports that there will be an overexpenditure of some $200 million on the Columbia treaty projects before they are completed, would the minister inform the house whether any reports from the federal representative on the federal-British Columbia liaison committee, or from the federal representative on the joint engineering board, indicate that the projects will cost considerably more than the government of British Columbia has received from the United States under the terms of the Columbia treaty?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is of a very general nature and I think it might be placed on the order paper.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TALKS BETWEEN SOLICITOR GENERAL AND BRITISH HOME SECRETARY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. Yesterday the Solicitor General indicated that when he was recently in the United Kingdom he had a conversation with the British Home Secretary. Did he discuss with him the plan that is reported under consideration in Britain to fingerprint all adult Britons as a method of combating crime and, if so, has he formulated any idea to discuss this matter here in Canada?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have to advise the hon. member that this was not one of the very many interesting subjects we discussed. Discussions related chiefly to the correctional system, the police college and the various duties of the Home Secretary as distinct from those of the Attorney General in this field.

FINANCE

APPARENT CONFLICT IN STATEMENTS RESPECTING BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. The Canadian Economic Council, in a report that was published yesterday, states that the crucial point in the Canadian economy is not the balance of payments but its integration to world economy. At the same time Mr. Graham Towers says that the Canadian government "when shaping its future national policies should, in my estimation, put more emphasis than in the past on the balance of payments". Could the Minister of Finance, for the information of the House, state the position of the government between those two apparently conflicting theories?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The question asked by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) is argumentative and therefore out of order.

[Mr. Herridge.]

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF WORD "MOUNTED" FROM TITLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General, and I apologize for doing so in view of his cold and the difficulties he has with his voice. In view of the fact that drastic reductions are reported taking place in equestrian training and the use of horses by the R.C.M.P., is there any thought in the mind of the Solicitor General to drop the word "Mounted" from the name Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I shall help the Solicitor General in his plight by suggesting that the question be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I come from Macleod riding and I rise on a point of privilege. I gave the Solicitor General notice of this question, and I think he is ready to answer it.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate this, but even if the minister is prepared to answer he will still be able to do so in writing if the question is placed on the order paper.

Mr. Kindt: Would it be all right to put it on the ten o'clock show, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Pickersgill: The musical ride.

PUBLIC SERVICE

JOHN KROEKER—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF PENSION RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. I have now been waiting almost a week for the minister to come back to the house, so I think I ought to address it to the Prime Minister. Has the government taken any action in connection with the grievance I raised a week ago Tuesday, concerning the pension rights of Mr. John Kroeker?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State, who has been away on centennial and other business, will be back later this afternoon and I shall take up the matter with her as soon as she returns.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED ADVICE BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICERS TO U.K. EMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration of which I have given him notice. According to the Victoria Daily Colonist of last Tuesday three recent immigrants from the United Kingdom stated that Canadian immigration officers in the U.K. advised them against settling in British Columbia but recommended, amongst other places, Winnipeg, Calgary and Toronto. Can the minister assure the house that this is not being done?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if it was done or not. I can try to check, but the hon. member can be sure that if it was indicated that British Columbia was not a good province to settle in, I can assure all immigrants that it is a very nice province and there are a lot of opportunities in it. If the hon. member wants me to check further I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. Chatterton: As a supplementary question, can the minister assure us that his immigration officers will convey the same information to prospective immigrants?

Mr. Marchand: Pardon me, I did not hear the question.

Mr. Chatterton: Will the minister assure us that the Canadian immigration officers in the U.K. and elsewhere abroad will advise prospective immigrants of the great opportunities in British Columbia?

Mr. Marchand: Yes, I hope they will do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the future minister of manpower who has just said there are many opportunities in British Columbia. Does the minister feel it is due to the Social Credit government in that province?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ASSOCIATION OF MINISTER'S ASSISTANT WITH DISPUTE MEDIATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask is he aware that Mr. Neville, the executive assistant to the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), is apparently associated with Mr. Keate in the latter's work regarding the C.B.C. dispute? If so, by whose authority is the executive assistant so acting, and what role is he supposed to play?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall have to look into that and I shall be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): As a supplementary question, will the Prime Minister request that the president of the C.B.C. offer his apologies to Miss Beryl Fox for any affront to her professional reputation that may have been occasioned by recent investigations of the R.C.M.P., which indicated that there was no foundation for the original Telegram story which prompted the investigations?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I fail to see the urgency of the matter raised by the hon. member, and cannot accept the question.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF FEMALE PRISONERS FROM KINGSTON PENITENTIARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that a few days ago the Minister of Justice, acting on his behalf, told the house that on the Solicitor General's return from the United Kingdom he would answer my repeated questions relative to the transfer of women narcotic addicts from Kingston to Matsqui against their desire, can we have any information on the matter now? This transfer is to take place within a very short time unless there has been a change in a policy decision.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, a decision has been taken, regarding those inmates whose term is due to expire this year, not to return them to Matsqui. A decision regarding the other inmates has not been arrived at yet.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

PROSPOSED BANK ACT PROVISION RESPECTING MERCANTILE BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and arises out of a report which appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail, and out of the point of privilege raised earlier this afternoon by the hon. member for Davenport. The report in the Globe and Mail referred to the fact that the Mercantile Bank of Canada hopes to be welcomed in Canada without what it calls legislative restrictions on its growth. As the hon. member for Davenport reminded us, the Bank Act revisions that were proposed included a provision which would limit the further growth of the Mercantile Bank.

My question, Mr. Speaker, is this. Has the minister since he assumed his position, been subjected to new pressures or representations to eliminate this provision that was to be included in the new Bank Act?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have received representations from the Mercantile Bank on this subject and, as might well be expected, I have received representations on many other subjects from many people who dislike the provisions of legislation proposed by the present government and existing legislation.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the urgency of this matter, can the minister indicate how soon we may expect the Bank Act legislation, in order that we may have some clarification?

Mr. Sharp: As I said in reply to a similar question yesterday, the cabinet is just completing its consideration of this legislation and I hope it will be placed on the order paper soon.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister yielded to the pressures he mentioned to eliminate this section from the Bank Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Sharp: I think I should answer this question, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Pennell.]

Mr. Sharp: There is an imputation in this question that I yield to pressure from anyone. I yield to pressure from no one, and neither does this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grafftey: Does that include Jean Lesage?

Mr. Sharp: It even includes you.

WATER RESOURCES

INQUIRY AS TO POLLUTION BY HOUSEHOLD DETERGENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Is the minister investigating the recently published announcement regarding the menace of certain household detergents alleged to be seriously polluting public waters of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this question might be placed on the order paper.

FISHERIES

BAY OF FUNDY—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST NOVA SCOTIA FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries, and I gave him notice. In view of the minister's recent meeting with provincial officials at the herring conference at Fredericton and with provincial officials at the fisheries council at Halifax, is the minister now prepared to take action on the seiner closure along the New Brunswick shore of the Bay of Fundy which is discriminatory to Nova Scotia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this question should also be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Nowlan: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Fisheries was asked this question on January 18, 1966. This closure was supposed to have been temporary, but it has been in effect for two and a half years. The Halifax Herald of May 10 reports that on his arrival at Halifax the minister said he thought it would be advisable to take no action until he had an opportunity to discuss this matter with the provincial ministers concerned. Has he discussed it with the provincial ministers, and is he now prepared to take action?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this matter with the ministers of fisheries for New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. I informed the hon. member yesterday that a further meeting was to take place yesterday or this morning with senior officials of the federal and provincial governments concerned.

Mr. Nowlan: When can we expect some announcement or, preferably, some action in this regard?

Mr. Robichaud: An announcement will be made after that meeting has taken place and a report has been received.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDOCHINA—PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF NEUTRAL BELT

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement made two days ago by Lord Avon, formerly known as Sir Anthony Eden, that a neutral belt be established through the three countries that formerly made up French Indochina—Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos—will he inform the house whether this proposal is being considered by the Canadian government?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before replying to this question let me say that the Prime Minister has just suggested that since it is not likely he will be asked a question to give him the opportunity to refer to the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale, I should make note of the fact that that hon. gentleman has a new seat in this house, which would indicate that he apparently has been appointed by the leader of his party as deputy whip.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's political ideologies, he is such a popular member of this house that this should be noted as a matter that brings great satisfaction to all of us.

In answer to the question regarding Lord Avon's proposal, something like this was suggested by him in 1954. It is a proposal that deserves very careful attention in our efforts to bring hostilities in Viet Nam to an end.

[Later:]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask whether I might have the privilege of concluding the question period with a friendly question to the Prime Minister. In view of a certain answer given to me by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, does the Prime Minister not feel this indicates that possibly he has shared a seat with that hon. gentleman for too long?

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO PAY INCREASES FOR SHIPS' OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Treasury Board, of which I gave him notice. In view of the fact that requests for pay increases for masters and officers employed in vessels operating on the west coast and in the Northwest Territories by various government departments have been under consideration for over a year, may I ask the minister whether the Department of Labour has conducted a survey into these requests and submitted recommendations to the Treasury Board? If so, what is the reason for the delay in taking action on these recommendations?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice. I am informed that the survey conducted by the Department of Labour as a basis for review of the rates of pay applying on the west coast to these employees has been completed, that the results have been sent to the various operating departments concerned, and that the submissions to the Treasury Board from these departments are now coming in and should all be received within the next couple of weeks.

I can assure the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that these submissions will be dealt with expeditiously by the Treasury Board. With respect to the employees in the Northwest Territories, I am informed that the Department of Labour is now completing its survey.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that this matter has been held in abeyance for over a year, I wonder whether the minister might urge the departments to make their submissions to the Treasury Board at the earliest possible date?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, these submissions are coming in now and we expect to receive them all within a very short period of time. The Treasury Board will not hold them up.

[Later:]

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria (B.C.)): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. Will the minister, when he is discussing this matter of increases with his colleagues, bear in mind, please, that unless these increases are given in the near future they will involve payment of the new rates of income tax, which would be very undesirable?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

VACANCY IN SECRETARIAT OF RESOURCE MINISTERS COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. In view of the importance of informational services in planning for the forthcoming conference on pollution, could the minister inform the house whether a successor for Mr. Walter Gray has been found on the secretariat of the resource ministers council?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I do not have that information, Mr. Speaker. I will inquire.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO FORTHCOMING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. On April 19, as reported at page 3990 of Hansard, I asked the Prime Minister whether he could give the house at an early date a list of the 15 items of important government legislation to which he had referred during the Easter recess. He said that the list was probably 21, but he has not yet given it to the house. I wonder whether he could do that at an early date.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will try to do that at an early date. One or two of the items have now been passed.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether this list will include any action with respect to the Old Age Security Act?

Mr. Pearson: That is a matter of government policy, Mr. Speaker. It will certainly include some very important bills dealing with social security.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RADIOACTIVE FALL-OUT FROM CHINESE BOMB TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Fraser Valley with respect to the health hazard in connection with the Chinese nuclear tests. I should like to reply that radioactive fall-out from the Chinese nuclear test has not yet been detected in Canada although it is likely to be observed within a few days. It is expected, however, that the amount will be much smaller than the amounts deposited from previous testing programs.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration when he may be able to satisfy the anticipation of the house by permitting us to see the white paper on immigration which has been long awaited?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): As soon as possible, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STEPS TO MAINTAIN STRENGTH OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. With withdrawals from the armed services exceeding recruitments by 6,000 per year, will the Minister of National Defence inform the house what steps he has taken to maintain our armed services at full strength?

Hon Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would request my hon. friend's assistance in encouraging more young people to join the armed forces.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence in the hope of getting a somewhat less flippant answer from him. Would the minister inform us what steps he is taking to increase the number of people in the armed services and to improve the morale of the service, which is steadily deteriorating?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. gentleman has given me this additional opportunity to reply to his question. First of all I should like to deny the allegation contained in his previous question. I would be glad to get the figures for him. The Associate Minister has just given me figures which show that for the first three months of the year—

Mr. Churchill: They are on Hansard.

Mr. Hellyer: —there were 2,398 releases and 2,546 recruits, which certainly is a much more optimistic set of figures than that used by my hon. friend.

Mr. Nielsen: Then Hansard is wrong.

Mr. Hellyer: I think my hon. friend should find some comfort in those figures. He can also be assured that we are taking every possible step to reduce the anomalies which exist as between the three services, and to improve the pay and allowances and other conditions for the men and women in the armed forces to the extent required to make sure that we will be able to retain the required numbers to perform the missions that are assigned to them in our various alliances, etc.

Mr. Eric Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are we to take as accurate the figures given by the minister today or those which were given in a written reply to a question and tabled in the house within the last week or two?

Mr. Hellyer: I should like to take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Churchill: You had better check your figures.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister and refers to the Donald report on coal. May I say to him, in view of the fact that we are unable to secure information on this subject—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member put the question.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes, I shall be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker, but I was enlightening the Prime Minister, who is probably not aware that we have not been able to get information from the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys or the cabinet representative from Nova Scotia, and the Minister of Finance who handles this matter will not yield to pressure. Would the right hon. gentleman devote a little time to this subject and inquire, on behalf of the 6,500 miners involved, how soon we may receive some information on the Donald report?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows that this matter is being very urgently and carefully considered.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): But it has been for a long time, sir.

FIRES

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

Is the minister holding an inquiry concerning the fires in Montreal harbour?

If so, does the minister have any new information to give the house?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, did I understand the hon. gentleman to say the airport or the harbour?

Mr. Caouette: The harbour.

Mr. Pickersgill: The investigation is going on very actively. So far as the first fire is concerned, the report is that there is no evidence whatever of arson. I do not think the investigation into the second fire is sufficiently complete for me to give any report at the moment.

Rural Development

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

PROVISION FOR ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT OF SPECIAL AREAS

The house resumed, from Wednesday, May 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sauvé for the second reading of Bill No. C-151, to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, last night at adjournment I had been speaking on matters pertaining to Bill No. C-151, which is now before us again. I had reminded the government of their unassumed and unadmitted responsibility for the current high cost of living which is a heavy burden particularly upon the older people and the poor people of our country, both rural and urban. I had also reminded the government to stay out of the real estate business and to forget their foolish election promise to buy up farms, create economic units and then sell them back to the farmers. I trust I made my point in this regard.

I had reminded the government of the support from farm organizations and the local press throughout Ontario that my argument is earning, particularly in my own area of Prince Edward-Lennox where the people still believe in private enterprise and the integrity and efforts of the individual. I reminded the government of the meeting of the Lennox and Addington Federation of Agriculture on April 26 at Napanee when that assembly was unanimous in declaring that rural development must start with the people.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that this meeting was also concerned about the retraining of rural people. I trust that this too is part of the intent and purpose of this bill, although retraining is not mentioned in any of its clauses. But I do note the cautionary attitude in clause 8, subclause 2, where the headlong rush into rural socialism is slightly checked in lines 5, 6 and 7 in that it provides that the advisory board shall recommend that the minister not enter into certain agreements regarding any program if in the opinion of the board the program can be carried out in another way without federal assistance.

Where federal assistance is needed and where the $50 million provided by the bill could well be spent—in fact, it would cost many times $50 million—is in the development of all our watersheds for the conservation of clean water and in the reforestation of adaptable forest land in a productive manner to ensure continuance of the annual production of timber and wood products. This would involve a long term growth period before the realization of any profits.

Also, attention is needed in the areas of the watersheds I have mentioned where there is soil suitable for agriculture but requiring the clearing and restoration of old fields which formerly did produce something. Grants must be available toward the use of heavy machinery for clearing the jungles of scrub brush that have sprung up since many of these places were last occupied and cultivated. There should also be provision for tile drainage of these fields where this type of water control and drainage is necessary.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but in doing so I would only be repeating my remarks of last March. I have studied the briefs of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers Union. Both strongly press for the stabilization of the agricultural industry through the preservation of productive family farming, but one significant qualification with regard to both briefs is that neither one of these great farm groups is pressing the government to buy farms, enlarge them into economic units at public expense and then sell these units back to the farmers. The farmers of Canada are too smart for that. The farmers of Canada will do their own developing of their own economic units and make their own real estate deals between themselves, between the farmer who is retiring and wants to get out of the business and his neighbour who wants to expand and strengthen his activities.

There is need also for thorough surveys of many areas and counties of Canada and, particularly in Ontario, surveys pertaining to the fiscal and sociological qualifications and aspects of the different regions.

Here, Mr. Speaker, is a timely resolution which I have received from Mr. G. M. Mills, agricultural representative for the county of Lennox and Addington and secretary of the ARDA committee for that county. I have sent a copy of this resolution to the minister who has very courteously acknowledged it. The resolution reads as follows:

The following motion was moved by Carl Clayton and seconded by Percy VanVlack that the Lennox and Addington ARDA committee suggests that a sociological survey of the county of Lennox and Addington, as outlined in the attached letter, be conducted and respectfully request the ARDA branch of the Ontario Department of Agriculture to engage the staff as required to conduct such a survey in the summer of 1966 and that the survey be expanded to collect other information as may appear advisable, such as existing potential tourist development.

This motion was carried unanimously. I trust that the Lennox and Addington ARDA committee will obtain the desired services and co-operation from the provincial and federal bodies.

I have advised the minister on this matter and I thank him for the response I have received and for his written assurance that most of the objectives of the Lennox and Addington resolution will be adequately provided for by the survey under and application of the Canada land inventory program.

Many of us in this chamber, Mr. Speaker, have one thing in common. I point out that many hon. members are of rural origin and status. If it were not for the rural areas and the fact that originally a pastoral and agricultural civilization pioneered this country, our great cities and highly organized urban areas would not exist, and they could not continue to exist and grow today without the assistance of a vigorous agricultural industry.

We hear a lot about the family farm and we think a lot of the family farm. For many of us it is the dearest of our realities; for many of us it is the dearest of our memories. I am one of that number. I was born on an Algoma farm near Rydal Bank, Ontario, which is 10 miles north of Bruce Mines. My Scottish grandfather and grandmother made a fair living for a big family. My grandfather augmented that living with forest ranging in the summer. No one can make a living any more on that farm and the place is idle and deserted.

I also remember a farm in Kaladar township where my family lived. Kaladar township is only 100 miles west of Ottawa in the northern part of Lennox and Addington county. In the second decade of this century that farm, with its 250 acres of rough land, about 50 of which were tillable, produced a living for our family and no less than three hired men. Beef and dairy cattle were produced. Two large marshes that were on the property were cut each year to supplement winter feed. Lumbering and wood cutting were carried on, potatoes were a good cash crop and acres of turnips were grown each year on the sandy loam soil. However, what arable soil there was, as I said, was a sandy loam but it was kept productive by the steady annual application of large quantities of livestock manure.

Today that farm is deserted and unproductive. It fills me with nostalgic and wistful memories whenever I pass this place on Number 41 highway three miles north of Kaladar. True, the present owner has a tenant living in the house but the wind whistles through the rough, weathered vertical siding of the now long-empty barn that my father helped to build in the year 1911.

This barn has a stone foundation, is of ample dimensions and stabled 60 head of cattle. I would say it stored at least 60 tons of hay. I have heard hon. members say that such areas which cannot now maintain production should never have been cleared for agriculture. I grant that this is probably true. In that particular area at one time some of the finest pine timber in the country grew, as has been mentioned by the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hopkins) who represents a similar area. Man's personal greed, which resulted in a lack of conservation policies in the early days, and the cross-cut saw have been the undoing of this area. I might say that in 1920 my family moved to Napanee, a more productive part of the country, and settled in Richmond township.

Some of the examples I have mentioned, for which I can personally vouch, as well as many others across the country will provide the areas in which this measure must work and work according to the principles of ARDA. As we approach Canada's second century I predict that if ARDA makes a proper start the men sitting here 100 years from now will still be using ARDA and its fundamental principles to improve and rehabilitate the forgotten and neglected corners of Canada.

Let us go back momentarily to the term "economic unit", about which we hear so much. I should like to quote the Rural Co-Operator's definition of an economic farm unit. This article appeared in the Rural Co-Operator for Tuesday, April 26, 1966, under the heading, "There's A Future On Such a Farm".

What is the future of the 150 to 200 acre dairy farm? From time to time some economists predict the demise of this type of operation within 10 to 20 years. They urge the creation of enormous enterprises such as the big corporation farm. Largeness is equated with efficiency.

You can put a big question mark after that statement, Mr. Speaker. There is a great deal of doubt now that largeness is equated with efficiency. I continue to quote:

However, over the past two or three years a number of intensive studies have been completed on what constitutes the efficient farming unit. Michigan research workers concluded that the ideal size of the family farming unit ranged between just below 200 acres and up to 300 acres.

Farms above this range run into problems such as under use of equipment and shortages of hired help. And with really large units, there was the very real problem of finding workers who would take a personal interest in livestock operations.

This article bears out my warning to the government as to the variation in the requirements for economic units in the various areas across the country. In addition, this statement is borne out by the fact that rural people and bona fide farmers are the best judges of the application of the term "economic unit" as it may apply to future operations.

There is another cautionary note to be injected here which I take from that very extensive preliminary report on rural poverty in four selected areas of our country. This report was prepared by the Canadian Welfare Council and I should like to congratulate its compilers and editors upon the valuable information they have provided. As a result of interviews with dozens of families living in varying degrees of economic circumstances in the four selected areas of Canada, it is to be noted that almost without exception the head of the family said that despite the existing disadvantages he did not wish to leave his farm. I again warn the government not to create a situation in which rural people are uprooted and forced into an urban environment for which they are ill-suited and unadaptable. In short, there are certain types of people who would rather live on the land than anywhere else despite their economic problems. This is their right, their liberty and, moreover, a good philosophy of life.

This statement applies especially to parents who do not want to move at middle age. Let us agree to use the $50 million to help them stay there, to help them produce something tangible where very little was produced before. Let us help them to help themselves.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in rising to say something in this debate I want to say that, unlike most of the members who have participated in the discussion, I do not represent a rural area. However, I do represent a constituency in which I have met a large number of people who have moved from rural areas in Manitoba, particularly from the Interlake area of which the minister spoke the other day. Before I became a federal member I represented a provincial constituency in which there were a large number of Indian and Metis people who came to the city of Winnipeg from the reserves on which they had lived with their families for generations. I am in favour of improving the living conditions of people who have traditionally lived in the rural areas of this country. One could no more oppose this bill than one could get up in this house and say he was opposed to motherhood.

At the same time I am not at all convinced from what I have heard or what I have read that there is anything in this bill which will do much except move the people who now live in the rural slums of Canada into the urban slums of Canada. There is not much advantage to a person moving from one slum to another. I am not convinced they will live much better in the urban slums of Winnipeg, Toronto or Montreal than they have in the rural slums. This is a tremendous problem with which this bill proposes to deal. In introducing the measure on May 10, the minister gave some very interesting figures. He pointed out that in this country there are over 95,000 families living on farms which could be classified as low income farms. This meant that they had gross sales of less than $2,500 a year. He spoke of the Interlake area of Manitoba in which there are almost 3,500 farms and in which one-third of the farms sell annually between $1,200 and $2,500 worth of products. The remaining 40 per cent sell less than $1,200 worth of products annually.

I have been in that area and I know the conditions under which the people live. I can remember canvassing in the Selkirk constituency and being in a town in which the people were living in tarpaper shacks. Indeed, the wallpaper consisted of old copies of the Winnipeg Free Press. I cannot think of a better use for copies of the Winnipeg Free Press than that very practical use but it is not very esthetic wallpaper, to put it mildly. Nobody in this house is going to object to this bill under which it is proposed to spend $50 million. However, when one looks at the rural problem, when one realizes that as careful an observer as Mr. Merrill Menzies, who worked very closely with the minister of agriculture in the former government, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), and I think is still doing some work for this government, says that in order to put in a program that will have any hope of success we will probably need to think in terms of spending not $50 million but $1,500 million, then one can see we are really only beginning to nibble at the edges of the problem.

I am wondering what the minister proposes to do under this bill which could not have been done under earlier legislation such as P.F.R.A. I am not being critical; I think these things need to be done. But what the minister is proposing to do under this bill is to improve the physical—the minister shakes his head. If I am wrong I hope that some time he will explain why. The minister is proposing to improve the physical use of the land. He proposes to buy out farmers who are living on holdings which are too small for them, to consolidate farm holdings and help the farmers plant trees which will later be used for pulp and paper.

That is all very well, Mr. Speaker, but there is nothing in the bill, and I could find nothing in what the minister said in introducing the bill or anything he said earlier, which would indicate to me that the minister has come up with a plan to rehabilitate the human beings who are affected by rural poverty and who will be moved under the legislation now proposed. It seems obvious to me that the important thing is to do something not about the existing physical conditions but about the human beings who are involved.

We are still talking, Mr. Speaker, about test areas. This question was raised by the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer) when he spoke a few days ago. How long must we go on testing? How long must we go on trying before we decide that the program is workable and can be implemented to the benefit of all concerned?

I am informed that some of the surveys of projects commenced several years ago, now completed but not yet published, indicate that the people who were moved as a result of these earlier projects are no better off now than they were before. I would be interested to hear the minister tell the house, either during this debate or on discussion of his estimates, of actual cases where the program has rehabilitated groups of farmers who have been relocated. If that information is available I think it should be given to the members of the house and the public as a whole.

It seems to me that this legislation is not broad enough to provide for a comprehensive program of rehabilitation of the sort required. If I am wrong I should like to hear from the minister where such a program is spelled out in this bill or in anything which he said.

During the conference on poverty which was called by the government some months ago a paper was presented by the special planning secretariat entitled "Profile Of Poverty In Canada" This paper was referred to by my colleague, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), during the Budget debate. In discussing what should be done about poverty the paper made a number of practical suggestions. It suggested that we would have to deal with the question of education, with the question of housing and with the question of health; yet none of these matters are dealt with in this bill.

It may be that the minister will answer that these questions will be dealt with in the manpower program of the government or in the proposal for a health insurance program. But I would submit that this whole program will fall apart and will be unsuccessful unless the basic factors I have just mentioned are dealt with, and they are not dealt with at the present time.

I want to summarize very briefly what the "Profile of Poverty" report to the conference on poverty suggested. With regard to education it stated:

> A 1960 survey showed that about half of the unemployed had not finished primary school. Over 90 per cent had not completed high school. Among people who had not completed primary school, the unemployment rate was six times greater than it was among high school graduates.

A little farther on there is this paragraph:

> The child of poor parents is greatly handicapped in taking advantage of the educational system. It assumes of him values and experience that he often does not have. Poor housing (which means lack of facilities for study), ill health, poor social and home environment, distance to school, lack of proper nourishment and clothing, ignorance of opportunities, as well as psychological factors and the attractiveness of early earnings—all these are reasons why poor children tend to drop out of school earlier and therefore why a culture of poverty tends to be perpetuated.

That statement was reinforced by the minister the other day when he gave the percentage of rural population of school age or over, but not attending school, whose highest grade attended was grade 8 or less. It appears, according to the figures put on the record by the minister, that in every province in Canada more than 50 per cent of the rural population—in Quebec it was 77 per cent and in Newfoundland 72 per cent—have not attended school beyond the level of grade eight. Under these circumstances, what the minister proposes to do here is bound to fail regardless of how aggressively he proceeds with the program. The "Profile of Poverty in Canada" paper, dealing with the question of health, had this to say:

> Low income groups receive less health care than higher income groups, although they suffer from more illnesses in general and their illnesses tend to be more severe.
> Assistance in meeting health needs has so far been of benefit more to the elderly than to other people. That is, the gap in treatment between poor children and rich children is greater than the gap between the aged poor and the aged affluent.

These people are concentrated to a large extent in the areas with which the bill proposes to deal, but they can look forward to very little as a result of the proposal of the minister.

With regard to housing the report had this to say:

> In 1961 Canadian housing provided one-third more rooms than the number of people. But in 60,000 homes there were only half as many rooms as people.
> Crowding as measured by persons per room is closely linked to income levels. Among families earning $6,000 and over in 1961, only 18 per cent lived in dwellings providing less than a room per person. Among families earning less than $3,000, this proportion was 35 per cent.

It is no secret that the majority of the people living in rural areas, particularly the kind of areas this bill is supposed to assist, are people who live in homes not equipped with running water or indoor plumbing, and have only the barest minimum living conditions which could be considered at all adequate. There is nothing in this bill to indicate that the government proposes to make a major drive toward improving the housing conditions of those who live in the rural and undeveloped areas of this country.

In the pamphlet entitled "Poverty In Canada" by Mr. M. W. Menzies, to which I referred earlier, mention is made of what the problem is and what needs to be done. I want to summarize this very briefly. It seems to me that Mr. Menzies has indicated both the problem and the solution. The minister seems to have paid attention to the problem. I do not think, however, from anything the minister has said that it can be shown that he has thought of the solutions pointed out by Mr. Menzies and other serious thinkers to the problem of rehabilitating the rural poor. Nothing that the minister has said would indicate that he is thinking along these lines.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

I quote briefly from page 6 of the pamphlet by Mr. Menzies:

> Approximately 50 per cent of the farmers in the study area, if provided with suitable alternative employment and the training required for it, could leave the agricultural industry to the benefit of themselves and to the net gain of the remaining farm community and the national economy.

I am sure the minister would agree with that, as would every other hon. member of this house. However, unless we do a great deal in the way of education not only for those who are now in schools but for those who did not attend school or who did not attain more than a grade 8 education—in the case of Indians this would apply to those who do not have more than a grade 4 education—and are moving into the cities of Canada, the proposals which the minister and the government have made will come to naught. We must inaugurate an aggressive program of adult education.

I know the difficulties. I know that education is a provincial responsibility. However, unless the federal government takes the lead in working out a co-operative program of education with the provinces, the problem which this bill seeks to solve and the problem of manpower, the solution of which required the appointment of a new minister with a galaxie of civil servants backing him up, will fail to be solved. Although the level of education has improved in my own and in other provinces it is still so low that a crash education program is required at this time. Nothing that I have heard from the Minister of Forestry or from any other minister indicates that the government is trying to solve the problems I have just outlined.

Mr. Menzies also says on page 7:

> Relatively few farmers in any of the study areas who owned less than 100 improved acres had achieved an economic farm operation.

I suppose the minister will say that is precisely what this program is designed to do, to consolidate land holding so that farmers will have more than 100 acres. If that is intended I suppose that the program may be successful. However, I am very concerned about those who will be forced off the land and probably move into cities such as Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, Regina or Calgary and who will, for the reasons I have already indicated, not be sufficiently equipped by way of education or experience, or because of their whole way of life previously, to make a go of it in the city. It seems to me that we must develop a program to help people who move from the rural areas to the city, as they are doing.

Mr. Menzies points out that almost half of the cash receipts of farmers with farm incomes of less than $2,500 came from off-farm earnings and from such social payments as family allowances, old age pensions, welfare payments and the like. When it comes to the Indians, I submit that the proportion of income derived in that way would be not half but three-quarters or more. Here again, I submit that we must devise programs in order to help those people to become self-sustaining, and to help them come off the welfare rolls. In that way they would no longer be a charge on the state, a charge on the community, but instead would become self-sufficient, independent and be able to manage for themselves as do most people in Canada.

I said at the beginning, Mr. Speaker, that I am not an expert. It is not my intention to oppose or vote against the bill. It seems to me that behind this bill, as behind the proposal for the Company of Young Canadians, we have a slogan picked up by the Prime Minister and by other ministers from President Johnson of the United States who used the famous phrase "the war on poverty." The war on poverty in this country is probably the most important war we can fight and should be fighting.

The Prime Minister picked up this slogan about two and a half years ago. Canada was going to have its own war on poverty. I do not want to be critical of the Company of Young Canadians. It may very well be a good program. However, one would have thought when the Prime Minister first announced the war on poverty some two and a half years ago that there would have been activity in the field within days or weeks. Yet two and a half years have gone by and still the program is in the planning stage. It is the same, I submit, with this program which is a new version of ARDA. It is the same with the other war on poverty programs so far announced by the government.

What we have had so far is a fantastic deluge of words. If every word uttered by the Prime Minister, other cabinet ministers and other members of the Liberal party who have spoken about the war on poverty in the last two and a half years were worth $1, we should have more than enough money to solve the problems of poverty in this country. I hope that we have had enough words from the government side and that we will see some action. I hope that as the result of the wonderfully enthusiastic speeches made by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Forestry and other ministers we shall begin to solve the problem of the poor in Canada instead of merely talking about it. We must admit with a good deal of shame in this year of affluence, 1966, that the poor still comprise more than a quarter of the people of Canada. That is not good enough.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the speeches which have been made on this ARDA matter. I must say that, even though the speeches were not of equal value, I have learned something useful about the proposed legislation from all of them. This applies more specifically to the statement made by the hon. minister at the beginning of the debate.

Some of the things the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has just said are quite accurate, and I agree with him on some of them. For instance, there is a pressing need to foster education in Canada, within the limits, naturally, of the constitution. However, I did find the tone of his speech rather pessimistic, and feel that this legislation, although it is far from perfect or adequate, will still be of great use to the country.

I should like to point out, in answer to an objection raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, when he said that the government seems to have been fumbling around in the last two years or two and a half years and that it talks a lot about proposed legislation but does not accomplish very much, that as an independent I do not have a political party to protect or destroy. To my mind—and I bring up a matter I have already mentioned two or three times in the house—if we could but have a truce for a few months and postpone our petty personal and political wrangling, say till after the summer recess, in order to pass the series of bills we have been promised in the last year or two, and if there were to be less filibustering from some parties in the house, it would be possible to have a greater number of laws beneficial to the Canadian people generally. This is intended to be constructive criticism on my part.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, I think we have had a constructive debate up to now and it should be carried on in that spirit. The way in which the minister introduced his bill has probably a great deal to do with the constructive aspect of the debate. He was not so narrow-minded as to claim all the credit for himself or his party, but gave due credit to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) who introduced this legislation when he was minister of agriculture. In short, he explained his bill in a way which contributed to maintain the serenity of the house.

Mr. Speaker, I would not want to give the impression that I am just saying this to make a speech; I simply want to point out to the house that this tone should be more generally adopted when we are considering a piece of legislation.

I have been very much interested in this bill from the beginning and, even if I do not represent an essentially rural constituency, I have studied the bill because I was one of the founders of the Central Quebec Mayors Conference which is interested in the economy of the region known as the Mauricie.

I have also studied the bill because I am a former member of the executive of the Canadian Federation of Mayors which contributed to the creation of an organization known as the Canadian Council for Urban and Rural Renewal which is particularly interested in area planning.

Even if all the possibilities of the bill are not as familiar to me as they are to the experts, I would like nevertheless to submit two cases to the minister, two cases in point or pilot cases, as it were, which I think would perhaps also help other areas to better understand the possibilities of the bill.

My own constituency is semi-rural and semi-urban. In the rural part, including the municipalities of Saint-Étienne-des-Grés, Saint-Barnabé, Pointe-du-Lac, Saint-Thomas-de-Caxton, and a part of Yamachiche, there are extremely poor farms.

A century or a century and a half ago people settled there because it was a good lumber area and they prospered. However, in the past 30 or 40 years, the farms have become quite marginal, but they could easily be improved and thousands of acres could thus be redeveloped, near cities, into very profitable truck farms. This would keep on the farm thousands of farmers and sons of farmers now going to the city and taking up the jobs of city people.

After a brief study, we thought of a solution, and I wonder if ARDA could not help implement this solution in order to redevelop all those farms.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Here is the solution. The Union of Municipalities and Mayors of the province of Quebec, in co-operation with the Central Quebec Mayors Conference, thought at one point that the domestic garbage disposal system, producing compost, could be useful. The provincial government participated in this study by sending a delegation to Europe to see how this system could be used to make a sort of compost which would be very advantageously used to improve marginal farms when fertilizer is also added. In any case, that is the opinion of farm experts.

In my area, if I may be allowed to mention it, Trois-Rivières, Trois-Rivières-Ouest, Pointe-du-Lac, there are several small municipalities where garbage serves no useful purpose. It is sent to the incinerator for burning, whereas each day tons of domestic garbage could be treated with the bacteriological process and turned into compost which could be used as a fertilizer.

It is a project that would probably cost $750,000 to serve not only the whole territory of Trois-Rivières itself but also a large area of the province of Quebec.

That project was studied quite a bit. I am wondering if it would not be possible to carry it out with the help of the municipalities? The government of the province of Quebec which studied the problem seems ready to do its share through its Department of Agriculture and its Department of Commerce and Industry. Moreover, I am wondering if it would not be possible to have a more detailed study made by technicians to submit that project to the province. I am telling this to the minister to find out if it might not come under the scope of the ARDA program. In my opinion, it would help solve an acute rural problem in the riding which interests me personally.

But my preoccupations go outside the riding of Trois-Rivières, Mr. Speaker, and here is why. I am a director of what is called the tourist board of the St. Maurice region, which is made up of some 85 municipalities in central Quebec and sponsored by some 80 mayors who are themselves members of the Mayors' Conference of central Quebec which merged, a year or two ago, with the tourist organization which covers the region served by the Lake St. John-Roberval highway.

I think that from the municipality called Les Piles, a little further North of Grand'Mère, which is now part of the St. Maurice riding but which, after redistribution, will be in the riding of Champlain—and I am grateful to my colleague for the riding of Champlain (Mr. Matte) for saying a word about it the other day in his speech—that area is now almost unproductive from an agricultural point of view. As a matter of fact, it is too hilly, too rocky. But it is wonderful country for tourists. It has a very good road which follows the St. Maurice river in a colourful setting; I would say it is even more colourful than what can be seen north of Montreal, and it reminds one of the Matapedia valley.

Some of the land there is unsuitable for farming because it is too rough and the farms are unproductive because the region is too mountainous. These people go to work in the towns or in the bush.

This territory is almost 70 miles long. Mr. Speaker, I should like to repeat, with your permission, what I said earlier about the hon. member for Champlain, who was absent at the time. I would like to thank him again for his intervention the other day concerning this area which will soon be part of the riding of Champlain.

Sheep and goat breeding could be promoted, since the region is mountainous; this is also a branch of farming, but I am less familiar with it and I shall not pursue the subject.

But there could be a further development of the tourist industry, which is already promising and for which private industry and municipalities have made great sacrifice. It could be expanded considerably, since the trans-Canada highway will go through La Tuque, Grand-Mère and Shawinigan. And, all the local people of those territories could stay on their land and would not be forced to go to cities to take up the jobs of city people, or to go to work in the bush. This would kill two birds with one stone. It would open up jobs for unemployed city people, and these country people could live in their territories. Private enterprise has been able to do something. Municipalities took an interest in it. If it were possible to get some assistance from ARDA to complete what has been done by the public bodies up to now, it would mean the development of a potentially rich economic area in central Quebec.

Studies were carried out, but they were summary studies. In 1961, the Quebec government let us have technicians on loan through the Department of Commerce and Industry. They loaned us economists. They prepared a survey of the potential of the area, which was incorporated in an interesting volume which I will be pleased to forward to the minister in a couple of days and which can be used as a working basis for more extensive studies.

The time has come to give a definite stimulus to all these things for which the mayors, the members of parliament, the tourist commissioners and the Quebec department of commerce and industry paved the way.

Preliminary studies are costly. The services of experts in all kinds of disciplines are required. I think ARDA can support the cost of such preliminary studies. But you will understand that there are two objections: The time needed by the province to approve the projects and the time needed by the federal government to give confirmation will delay the projects quite a bit. Municipalities are sometimes reluctant to embark upon such a project, before knowing what it may represent.

The minister can clarify the situation concerning the problems which I raise and which are similar to those raised here during the discussions. Will ARDA participate only in cases under the jurisdiction of the municipality or under that of the farmers co-operative? Or will ARDA participate in certain cases where private interest could also be involved? Those are questions to which I have no answer, and which could help solve our problem.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this ARDA program is outstanding. We talk of fighting against poverty. There is a concrete way of doing it. Readers of Time magazine will see what tribulations are being experienced in the United States in their war against poverty. They will see that Canada is directing its efforts much more realistically and that, in so doing, it will escape the trials and bitter criticism experienced by the Americans.

I congratulate the hon. minister and his colleagues who have created this body.

Before resuming my seat, in accord with the member for Champlain, I should like to urge the minister to meet the Central Quebec Mayors' Conference and the St. Maurice Tourist Commission which deal with the problems I have just mentioned. He will be asked questions. He will find people there who are willing to co-operate in the implementation of measures intended to make poverty and misery vanish from our midst.

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, the house is now studying Bill

C-151, an act to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas. As for special areas, I think there are several of them in Canada. There is scope for specializing a little everywhere. But I fail to understand this, Mr. Speaker, that in the 20th century, in 1966, in a world of progress and development, in which political and scientific economics has developed in every field, we should be waging a war on poverty.

We should not have to speak of poverty in 1966, in a century of progress and science: but the system or industry throws the Canadian people in such poverty and destitution as has not been known anywhere in the world.

Possibilities are numerous in Canada. The physical possibilities are tremendous, but the financial possibilities are not there. The financial possibilities do not reflect the physical realities in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, before going further, I should like to see, to get a picture of what ARDA should do. The minister has spoken about it. He has outlined ARDA. I would like to tell the house what responsibilities the ARDA program should consider.

Mr. Speaker, there was, there is still much room for improvement, especially in agriculture, since ARDA is intended to help agriculture; this does not mean that it should help only agriculture and not the other fields. Already, $125 million have been voted, and spent, I believe, without giving anything much to agriculture; indeed, without improving anything very much in other sectors of the Canadian and Quebec economy.

So, we are asked to approve another amount of $50 million. I feel that $50 million is but a drop in the bucket. What are we going to do with $50 million to restore the economy of a country with 20 million people? Mr. Speaker, it would take two billion dollars just to start on an economically feasible basis with a plan such as that one. We talk of $50 million, when there are physical possibilities for two billion dollars. But we lack the financial resources to finance the developments or improvements everyone would like to see springing up.

Mr. Speaker, here again there has been a lack of research from a technical standpoint on agricultural methods, farm land possibilities, farm management and marketing. This has been lacking and it still is. This is where ARDA should spend its money if we really want to help agriculture to come out of its stagnation.

A bigger slice of the ARDA budget should therefore be devoted to research and experimentation and to further the knowledge of those whose task it is to improve agricultural science and techniques.

There should be a greater number of true specialists for most types of farming.

ARDA should see to it that farming techniques are rationally put into use according to rural resources available and their development, whether it is the human potential or physical resources, or any means the farmer has to produce.

A farmer may be relatively efficient on his farm and even successful to some extent without making full use of the resources available to him; either his resources are limited or they are fully used or, still, poorly used.

I understand that the objective of ARDA is, of course, to get maximum production from existing resources; this is the objective.

One look at official statistics, Mr. Speaker, will suffice to ascertain the seriousness of the stagnation in the field of agriculture at the present time.

We are told that this amount is needed to take agriculture and the Canadian economy out of their present stagnation.

The gap between the cost of services and technical equipment, on the one hand, and the prices of farm products paid to farmers, on the other hand, is increasing. Prices in general have remained unchanged since 1949 while cost of goods and services has steadily increased.

The net margin of profit, per production unit, has therefore decreased. It is not surprising, therefore, that the purchasing power of farm products as compared to the price of farm equipment has decreased by close to 28 per cent during the 1949-1963 period.

It is to be noted that the cost of living has increased considerably on the farm—by about 75 per cent—during the same period. Furthermore, the producer's share of the consumer dollar has been decreasing all the time. In 1950, the Canadian farmer was getting 50 cents out of the consumer's dollar, but in 1960 he was only getting 40 cents and in 1964, 35 cents.

The actual net farm income has decreased considerably since 1949, taking into account the fact that the number of farms has also decreased, and this shows the tragic situation of Quebec agriculture.

There have only been a few good years for our farmers during that period. For instance, during the period 1951-1955, the national average net farm income was $237 million, but in the past few years, it has remained between $185 and $200 million. We had the opposite situation in the larger cities where, since 1949, the purchasing power of the other classes of society has increased by at least 51 to 52 per cent.

According to statistics, in 1963 the average weekly salary of industrial workers in Montreal was $82.43, while the average net income of the farmer for the same year was $2,100, that is $40 per week. This income covered his work and that of his family and paid off his debts.

This does not mean that our farming is inefficient; on the contrary, agricultural production has practically doubled over the last 15 years or so, in spite of a noticeable labour reduction of almost 50 per cent. We should therefore recognize that others have profited from the efforts of the farmers to increase their production and their efficiency; product quality standards, processing and distribution standards have been raised; only one factor has been forgotten, consumer prices. It is not abnormal that the farmer, who is first in production, should become the last one considered with regard to remuneration? When considering the farmer in an industrial context, one is constantly faced with paradoxes.

Indeed, he is ostentatiously called a contractor, when his income puts him in the same class as the most disfavoured workers.

This small income is further reduced by the property tax, which in 1963 represented about 9 per cent of the gross income. To this could be added the tax on building materials, representing an additional disbursement of at least 17 per cent: 11 per cent for the federal government and 6 per cent for the provincial government.

This is the situation in which our farmers find themselves. If we are really to help agriculture, to fight poverty, we must eliminate this precious 11 per cent tax which is ruining the farmers and destroying his spirit of enterprise.

High finance controls all our institutions, both agricultural and commercial, as well as transportation.

The ARDA program will socialize our countryside.

Farm credit, that is to say farmers in debt, is the very cause of the destruction of the farming community.

Grants to institutions are paralysing resistance.

Taxes are ruining us; they are one of the factors which have paralysed our farmers through spoliation and mortgages on their property.

School taxes in the country have become an intolerable burden to farmers with a small annual income of $1,500 to $2,000 for the whole family. They have to pay $400 to $500 a year in school taxes, not to mention municipal taxes and the interest on their farm loans. They have nothing left to live on for themselves and their families; that is why they abandon their farms and go to the cities.

All sorts of other ways are tried to live in the city. I will tell you frankly, Mr. Speaker, that many of the farmers are unhappy in the city because they are made to live out in the country; they would like to live on farms, but they do not have the means to go back or to make a living there.

Farmers once had large families, made a good living from their farms, and the father could even help his sons to settle on a neighbouring farm; his daughters were also helped. The opposite is true today.

With modern progress, life in the country has become impossible. It is easy to understand why.

The ministers and the economists longwindedly try to prove that farming is not, or is no longer profitable and that only the state can afford to farm.

I should like to ask these ministers and economists how it is that in some countries. carrots can be grown on rocks. Rocks are being cultivated. Such rocks are being planted and become profitable. In Canada, we have the most productive farms anywhere in the world and they are abandoned.

How is it that farms are no longer profitable or, if so, only to the few?

A farmer requesting a farm loan is told: "Your farm is not economic, give it up and go to the city." The farm is sold to the second neighbour. How is it that it is not economic for one but it is for the other?

This is the situation which prevails now in the province of Quebec. I do not know much about the other provinces but I imagine the situation is about the same.

Our producers are the victims of all kinds of regulations which compel them to equip themselves beyond their means, to give milk control to a group of friends in the government or to financial backers of elections.

It is true that the Farm Credit Act has temporarily alleviated the lot of the farmers, but it is or was credit to repay. If our economists and our governments had opened their eyes and their ears, they would not have prepared the way so well for socialists and communists, against whom they are trying to fight.

What is needed is interest-free credit to finance the producers, farmers and others; it is interest-free loans from the Bank of Canada or credit offices. Interest-free loans are free money for development. It is not with interest-ridden money, borrowed money or debt money that the economy can be improved.

If only our federal and provincial governments had listened to the voice of the Créditistes and created credit, they would have helped the farmers more than with their miserable farm credit or the ARDA program. It is a sleeping pill and when the poor sleeper awakens, he finds out that he has been stripped for everything he had; interest on his loan and taxes have left him nothing. That is why he has to leave his farm. Taxes have increased in proportion to the improvement of the farm or industry. Your farm is valued at $6,000 and you mortgage it for $4,000, but the municipal assessors are kind enough to assess your property at $13,000 and the taxes get higher and higher. Several people know that story because it happened to them.

What drove the farmers away from the rural areas? The present system. And as a remedy, socialism is forced upon us by laws which will impoverish the community even more and will leave the citizens poorer and poorer and stripped of their heritage.

What we need is not credit with interest; mortgages in a stifling financial system or grants to the socialists of the ARDA program are not what will save us; it is the liberating social credit with interest-free loans for producers and free money for consumers.

That is what would save us, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

They are creating socialism which will take over because individuals cannot live on their own under the present system. The state is socialization, control.

Mr. Speaker, with an upside-down and unhealthy financial system such as the one we have, socialism is inevitable, people are starving.

Take the school boards for instance. They no longer can meet their obligations in the rural areas and in the cities; they are no longer able to balance their budget; therefore, they ask for grants; the grants are never unconditional and the conditions are control by inspectors, strait-jackets.

Communism sets in. Loss of freedom ensues. Public debt increases, taxes become general and, soon, citizens receive only the stubs of their cheques. That is where the present system is leading us, because our leaders refuse to assume their responsibilities to put some order in the financial system and socialize credit instead of socializing goods and individuals. Those are our responsibilities.

As the country develops, our debts progress and increase: personal debts, federal debts, provincial debts, school debts, hospital debts, university debts—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order please.

Mr. Latulippe: Church debts—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I regret to interrupt the hon. member; I am afraid he is digressing into the economic field, most interestingly, no doubt, but his remarks should be restricted to the bill now before the house concerning agricultural problems.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I should most respectfully like to call your attention to a very significant point in the debate.

Under Bill C-151, $50 million will be earmarked for ARDA programs. Now, to implement ARDA programs, the minister knows that some parishes will have to be eliminated and others formed, that some farms will disappear to increase the number of farms—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but if he has heard the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe), he will surely admit that the latter mentioned the national debt, credit facilities for farmers or for ordinary citizens.

I simply wish to ask him to restrict his remarks to the bill under consideration.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, could you enlighten me on one point. Are the $50 million we are asked to vote not specifically earmarked to grant in certain cases, credit, to help agriculture and to re-establish people on the farms?

To my mind, the member for Compton-Frontenac is within the purpose of Bill C-151, which is an extensive bill since it involves the whole field of agriculture.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I thank the hon. member for Villeneuve for his remarks and I ask the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac to proceed with his own.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your remarks and I shall certainly follow your suggestion.

Since the bill deals with money, one must refer to money matters. In that case, the discussion turns to administration; when one speaks about administration, one must refer to taxes, debts and the present situation. That is why I mentioned the present indebtedness and imbalance in various fields. It is impossible to survive, to progress and to operate with money as is being done, while turning everything over to the administration. I know that out of the $50 million for ARDA, three quarters will go for administration costs and approximately one quarter for the development of the ARDA program. That is why I say $2 billion would be needed instead of $50 million. What can be done with $50 million? It is ridiculous to vote $50 million in order to teach how to fight poverty and to strengthen the economy of a country.

I know that progress is made according to one's resources not according to opportunities. There are many opportunities, but they refuse to issue the money possible to develop those opportunities in Canada. That is why I want to try and make some people understand that no economic progress is possible if our financial system is not adjusted to our economy.

When an area is developed, it is merely a physical and material development; if no financial development takes place, the results are not worthwhile.

Finance is needed to operate. If we can produce goods in Canada, we can also produce finance. If we do not do so, it is because we refuse to accept our responsibilities. There, Mr. Speaker, is the crux of the problem.

Now, taxes make taxes, and taxes make more debts. What do the financiers give in sweat for the millions they lend the government and individuals? Not a single drop. They only supply drops of ink. That sums up the question of finance; it is nothing else. Finance is a matter of accounting: accounting means balancing. Accounting must be adapted to facts and reality, as well as to the physical possibilities Canada holds. That is where we stand, Mr. Speaker.

Now, before bringing my remarks to a close, I should like to refer to the answer the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Berger) gave me yesterday in reply to my question. He said it was always the same story, a question of finance, it was this or that. If it is not a matter of finance, what is it? Why $50 million, Mr. Speaker, if it is not a question of finance? Why give out money, then levy taxes? All this concerns finance.

But I say taxes rob the people. Those who lend money and credit dominate through their power and have reduced the government or governments to mere servants of private interests. That is the point we have reached: we have become mere servants of private interests. Yet, we are able to govern. We should be at the controls; others should not come from St. James Street in Montreal, or Bay Street in Toronto. Orders should come from Parliament, from the Minister of Finance. He is in charge, he holds the controls; in short, he holds everything; he could, if he wanted to, with the approval of the Canadian people and the members of Parliament, organize, even tomorrow morning, a viable economy in Canada, an economy of prosperity in affluence.

We know how to produce. There is no difficulty in that respect. If you want production, it is yours for the asking. If you need a pig, Mr. Minister, you will have one. There is no need of a plan for this and a plan for that, or any other gimmick. The people want to know. And we are the ones who know nothing about finance. We do not know what to do with finance. When someone puts the matter before us, we find that funny. It is funny for the moment, but it will not always be funny; let us keep that in mind.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, before closing the debate on second reading, let me thank the 29 members who, since Tuesday, have made very interesting comments on the bill itself, on the ARDA program or on the situation in rural areas.

As you can well understand, I followed with great attention everything that was said.

I could easily answer every question put to me but I believe it might perhaps be preferable if I confined myself to five or six basic points raised by several members.

Much was said about the fact that, in my introductory remarks, I mentioned only three special development areas.

In fact, I wanted to give only three examples of the kind of comprehensive development program we could have. There are a great many other areas in each of the provinces of Canada, and discussions are now under way with the provinces in connection with the establishment of special development areas.

I am thinking, for instance, of the census districts Nos. 14 and 15, in Alberta, northern Saskatchewan as well as Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, and New Brunswick. I did not want to talk at length of all areas in which we are now making development plans, in conjunction with the provinces, because it seemed to me it would lengthen this debate much too much.

I gave only three examples to give an indication of how we see the job.

I think it is very important, first of all, to emphasize the method used, the procedure followed. It is the provincial government which designates, with the federal government, through, the administration of ARDA, a special development area, under Part VI of the ARDA agreement.

Once an area is designated and once the method of financing preliminary studies is estabished, a comprehensive area development program is prepared.

Why do we propose to aim at certain areas of Canada, excluding others? Simply because we, in the provincial and federal governments, thought that a very special effort is needed where low-income families are concentrated in rural areas.

And the program we are proposing under Bill C-151 is meant to enable the federal government to make a special financial effort in those areas.

Remember that there is the federal-provincial agreement on the economic rehabilitation of rural areas which covers all the rural areas in Canada and does not exclude anything; that this agreement was signed by all the provinces at the beginning of 1965 and that the federal government undertook to allocate to it $125 million in the next five years; the provinces will probably allocate a similar amount to it.

But, in addition to that program, and in any case that is provided for in the agreement I have just mentioned, in Part VI, paragraph 37, there is something about the creation of a special fund and Bill C-151 which we are considering today concerns that fund.

Nothing is excluded in the sense that under the general ARDA program there can be programs for land redevelopment, rehabilitation and consolidation of farms, drainage, water conservation.

But, under Bill C-151 and Part VI of the agreement, the federal government and the provinces can agree to make a special effort in some areas.

Therefore, the procedure is practically the same as for the other parts of the ARDA agrement, except that a considerable financial effort is believed to be needed in certain areas.

[English]

Many members have mentioned that the $50 million provided by this fund will not be enough. I completely agree with them. However, it seems necessary to start with a fund and the proposal is that as soon as the sum of $50 million has been committed we will then come back to parliament to secure more funds. We could have asked for $100 million or $150 million but we felt that the initial amount of $50 million would give us an opportunity to see how the provinces would decide to co-operate with the federal government in the implementation of special rural development plans. These plans will apply particularly to human resources. Under the general ARDA agreement we cover the physical resources, but we are conscious that in some low income areas of this country there are problems of education, housing and health. The speakers this afternoon and in the last few days have insisted upon the necessity of better plans for education and housing conditions, with which we all agree.

We will soon be releasing some of the special agreements which we are now discussing with the provinces and they will show a special effort on the part of the federal government in co-operation with the provinces to get at the heart of the problems. I cannot give more details this afternoon because we have not yet finalized these programs. However, when this announcement is released to the public, members of parliament will see that we are making a special effort under this rural development program which will affect the well-being of individuals and not concentrate so much on the physical resources of the various regions.

In no case under Bill No. C-151 or the old agreements under ARDA is there any compulsory method to buy land nobody is forced to sell his land. In any event, it is always the provinces who take the initiative of proposing farm programs to the federal government for consideration. There is no threat of compulsion. Nobody is being asked to sell unless he wants to sell for one reason or another. There is no question of expropriation; there is no program for the establishment of state farms and so on.

In clause 7 of the bill there is mention of an advisory council. It is to be a council composed of high civil servants in Ottawa to review the programs which will be drafted by the ARDA administration in co-operation with the provinces. It is an administrative body only. There is already in existence under the general ARDA statute, in accordance with the provision of clause 7, a Canadian Council for Rural Development which supervises developments under ARDA agreements made in accordance with either Bill No. C-152 or Bill No. C-151. On this council there are representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the National Farmers Union, the Canadian Welfare Council, the Canadian Forestry Association, and the like. We have popular representation on this council which will allow the ARDA administration to have contact with people in rural areas or people who are mostly concerned with rural development.

We do not intend to increase the staff of ARDA to implement the terms of Bill No. C-151 because most of the work is done by the provinces. We have to draft special agreements to implement Bill No. C-151. The ARDA staff is very small, perhaps 25 or 30 people. We have not increased the staff for about a year and a half. We are doing our work easily because most of the research that has to be done is done at the provincial level or by special groups. When the projects are submitted to us they are sent to the various departments of government who then accept them or make comments on the proposals that come from the provinces.

There are many other remarks I could make at this point, Mr. Speaker, but I think I have probably given a sufficient explanation, now and when I introduced the bill, to allow hon. members to discuss it in committee. I will be ready to answer specific questions if I can.

Mr. Winkler: There is a relevant question which I feel might not arise during the course of the discussion in committee. Would the minister accept it now?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes.

Mr. Winkler: Under the terms of this bill or under the terms of any other legislation within the jurisdiction of the minister but referring specifically to this bill, is it possible for a development area, regardless of whether it be rural or a small village, to have funds allocated for the construction of a plant for small, secondary industry?

Mr. Sauvé: This is possible under part VI of the federal-provincial rural development agreement. It must be in a designated rural development area under the ARDA agreement, not under the Department of Industry's program. This is possible, and we have done this in some provinces.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, in order to clear up the question asked by my colleague, I should like to ask the minister whether a compost type industry like the one I mentioned earlier could be included in that category?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, the undertaking mentioned earlier by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières would be some kind of an experimental project. If the Quebec provincial government wishes to propose such a project, I believe we might be able to make a contribution under the ARDA agreements. But the matter would have to be fully looked into. I think we could contribute under the agreements if the Quebec government wanted to propose such an experimental project.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Before the bill goes to committee, will the minister give assurance that the bill before us applies to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories in the same manner and to the same extent as it does to the provinces?

Mr. Sauvé: I cannot give this assurance, Mr. Speaker, because Bill No. C-152 says that the federal-provincial rural development agreement has to be an agreement between the federal government and a province. When we had our federal-provincial conference in November, 1964, the ten provinces and Canada were represented but not the Yukon or the Northwest Territories. We have not signed any agreement with either of the two administrative territories, so I do not believe it is possible to apply these agreements to either the Yukon or the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Nielsen: In other words, this 40 per cent of Canada, the Yukon and Northwest Territories, is excluded from the provisions of this bill?

Mr. Sauvé: This would be my interpretation at the moment. However, I am quite ready to have the position reviewed by the officials of the Department of Justice to ascertain if we can entertain projects from the Yukon or Northwest Territories.

Mr. Nielsen: Briefly, I am going to register a violent objection to this—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has concluded the debate. The hon. member for Yukon had the right to ask questions but I suggest he cannot register a violent objection at the moment. He will have an opportunity to do this when we are in committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I want to complete the remarks I was making before the Speaker left the chair. I suggest that the minister might consult the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to ascertain whether amendments can be included in the Yukon and Northwest Territories Acts so that the two territories would be able to participate in this legislation. These two acts are coming up after this piece of legislation is completed. I will have more to say then on this problem.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps I should bring to the attention of the members of the committee Standing Order 59(2) which reads as follows:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

May I proceed now to deal with Standing Order 78, one of the new Standing Orders which I should like to bring to the attention of the committee. Heretofore our procedure in committee has been to take clause 1 first, on which a general discussion of the bill was held. Under the new Standing Order 78 the procedure is as follows:

> In proceedings of committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and if the first clause contains only a short title it is also postponed; then every other clause is considered by the committee in its proper order; the first clause (if it contains only a short title), the preamble and title are to be last considered.

Under this Standing Order the discussion in committee will begin with clause 2. It is my interpretation of Standing Order 59 that only comments in connection with clause 2 would be in order.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I noticed the hon. member for Yukon did not rise to develop his thoughts further, though I think he may have had the opportunity to do so because clause 2 deals with the definition of (a) advisory board or board, (b) fund and (c) minister, all of which have certain functions to perform as set out in subsequent clauses of the bill. However, that is beside the point. I merely say in passing that I think the hon. member would be quite in order in talking about the advisory board because the definition of advisory board or board is the advisory board established by subsection (1) of section 7. This cross-reference makes it possible to deal with the functions of the advisory board. So I think the hon. member could pursue the point if he desired to do so, but perhaps the opportunity will arise later.

The Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member for Skeena would not object if I interrupted him at this time. My purpose in reading Standing Order 78 was not to indicate that the hon. member was out of order but that I hoped that in committee stage at this time we would be able to observe the procedure laid down in that Standing Order.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I do not know how to approach what I want to say with the delicacy necessary to get the point across to the minister. I think he is to be congratulated for the motivation which may have been in his mind in developing certain phrases to be found in the bill, but I think they might be reconsidered. For example, the bill contains within it a sort of male-female sexual relationship in view of certain constructions which can be placed upon marital situations in effect meaning that the husband has the money but the wife has the control and spending of it.

I raise this point only because I know of the tendency that exists to contract names of organizations and groups to initials. This is done here. According to the interpretation clause, fund means the fund for rural economic development. If we contract that to the initials of each word it becomes "FRED". There may be nothing wrong with that but when we look at the title it is to be the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act, which can be contracted to "FREDA".

I raise this point only because we can with impunity talk about ARDA, which is an accepted phrase, but I can imagine the concern and the blushing which might occur if the minister were to talk about the activities of "FREDA" and things which were possible pursuant to or under "FREDA". There are innumerable comments which could arise from this situation, all of which might be used in a way to lampoon the act and to ridicule its purposes and objectives, purely because of the tendency to contract names into abbreviated form.

Mr. Rapp: My wife would object to that.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member says his wife would object to it. Perhaps objection might be made to such an association being compared with an inanimate statute of Canada. This is an example of what could occur. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister to consider renaming the act so that we do not run into the possibility of use being made of the contracted form of Fund for Rural Economic Development Act, which might detract from the whole concept of the legislation itself.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, like the ARDA legislation we have referred to the bill as FRED, so I guess that in time everyone will call it FRED.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I want to relate my brief remarks to the reference in the bill to the advisory board and how it is to be constituted. I realize that the minister could have spent a great deal more time elaborating on all the questions put to him in speeches made today and yesterday, but I have one specific question on which I should like him to comment.

In considering the question of advisory boards and so on, how much thought was given to the feasibility or desirability of including on the various boards which will function under the scope of the legislation representatives of the people who are actually living in the special or designated areas? According to the minister's explanation, I understand that the particular board referred to in this legislation is to be constituted exclusively of senior officials of the department who are civil servants. Surely at some echelon of the programming which is to be done under the legislation formal provision should be made for including representation of the people who are actually involved in the special area programs.

It is a fact that in similar programs in the United States there is a legislative requirement that the people who are directly affected shall be entitled to representation on the different planning boards. Would the minister make some comment on this specific point?

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I am wondering whether we are not getting out of order in our present discussion on the bill. Clause 2, which is now under consideration, deals simply with interpretation. The advisory board itself is open for discussion under clause 7. I am wondering whether we should wait until we reach clause 7 to discuss the advisory board rather than on clause 2, the interpretation clause. I do not want to interrupt the hon. member or to deny him the opportunity of making his remarks but I think they would be more appropriately made on clause 7.

Mr. Schreyer: In replying to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, if in fact there is one before us, may I say I had concluded my remarks. I think the advice of the hon. member for Provencher is correct. For my part I would as soon wait until we reach clause 7 before expecting the minister to respond, but cross-reference is involved here and my remarks could be made on this clause.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps there was sufficient scope under clause 2 for the hon. member for Springfield to say what he has said. However, if it is agreeable to him and to the minister perhaps the minister will reply when we reach clause 7, clause 8, or clause 9, or if he prefers he may reply now.

Mr. Sauvé: I can either reply now or wait for clause 7.

Mr. Schreyer: Let us wait.

Mr. Sauvé: The hon. member wants me to wait until clause 7.

Clause agreed to.

• (5:30 p.m.)

On clause 3—FRED established.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak on this clause dealing with the fund for rural economic development. I submit that on the point raised by the hon. member for Yukon the minister seemed to be not too clear whether the bill could be applied to the Yukon or the Northwest Territories. I think it was mentioned by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle when the bill was up for second reading, that ARDA and this legislation are subservient to the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers.

It is true that the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers is made up of members of the ten provincial governments and the federal government. However, the provincial governments are in no way subservient to the federal government in the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers but are equal partners. My understanding is that the federal government simply acts on behalf of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories in matters having to do with resources. If I am incorrect in that assumption I should like to be corrected. That was my understanding. For that reason I suggest that perhaps this bill does apply to the Northwest Territories and to the Yukon. Would the minister care to comment on that point?

Mr. Sauvé: The hon. member for Yukon said he probably would raise this problem when the bills under the name of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources are discussed. He wished to discuss the question whether the Yukon and the Northwest Territories can be considered as provinces for the purposes of certain programs under the fund for rural economic development. Under this bill and under ARDA it is clearly mentioned that the federal government deals with provinces. ARDA comes under this bill. Clauses 4(1)(a) and 4(1)(b) of this bill limit programs to the provinces.

Mr. Barnett: I have to admit I was not in the house when the hon. member for Yukon raised this question. What has puzzled me about the answer just given by the minister, who has pointed out that specific reference is made to provinces, is that he omitted saying, "provinces and/or territories." Were he able to say that, it would in my submission clear the way for him to negotiate with his colleague, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and with the territorial governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Sauvé: In principle we do not need legislation for two departments of the federal government in order to cope with certain problems in the Yukon or in the Northwest Territories. There will of course be discussion between the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Yukon and Northwest Territories which are interested in the implementation of the principles of this bill. It is not impossible under this legislation for the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to provide for special programs which could apply either to the Northwest Territories or to the Yukon.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, if the minister is so wildly enthusiastic about the suggestion which has been raised, I suggest that hon. members would probably give unanimous consent to the committee reverting to clause 2 so that the minister could add as paragraph (d) an amendment to the effect that "province includes the Yukon and the Northwest Territories." That would be a simple way of dealing with the problem. I am sure the committee would consent to that.

Mr. Sauvé: I am not going to do this because I think it involves an extension of the word "province" to include something far beyond what it is intended to undertake under Bill C-151. I do not think that I can accept that kind of amendment. It would raise difficult constitutional problems.

Mr. Baldwin: I was merely trying to be helpful.

Mr. Orange: I appreciate the comments which have come from the other side of the house. May I say that I agree with some of the points which have been raised. I should like to remind the Minister of Forestry that there are already certain federal acts in which the territories are conceded to be provinces for the purposes of those acts. I refer to the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act.

I should like to remind the minister, in speaking of the territories and their inclusion in this act, that many parts of Canada which are in need of further social and economic development are in much less need than the territories. I should also like to remind the minister that if any agreement is made it will not be made with the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or with his department but with the territorial governments through their commissioners and councils. In pointing out these things to the minister I do so with the hope that he might consider extending the provisions of Bill C-151 to include both territories.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Agreements for comprehensive rural development programs authorized.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): May I ask the minister if under the agreement with the province of Manitoba the Interlake area is the only area designated under this program as of now?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes. This is a special designation under part VI of the federal-provincial rural development agreement. Covered in the Interlake region are the Indians of that area. they were covered in the discussions in the establishment of the agreement.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Has the province of Manitoba indicated that there may be other areas which it wishes to bring into this program?

Mr. Sauvé: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Chairman. A province proceeds first with one rural development area. It sees how that develops and, if it is successful, other areas are proposed. Difficulties stem from problems of staff, funds and so on. To my knowledge, in the province of Manitoba only the Interlake region has been proposed to come under part VI and under the fund for rural economic redevelopment.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell us whether in the case of an agreement entered into with a province to develop a certain area, according to clause 4, the said province agrees to provide an amount equal to that provided by the federal government. Is that the term of the agreement?

Mr. Sauvé: No, Mr. Chairman, we sign a special agreement for what we call in English a special rural development area, to allow the federal government to contribute more than 50 per cent, if necessary.

According to the general agreement of ARDA, we cannot contribute more than 50 per cent. And one of the reasons why we create this fund of $50 million which, I hope is only a beginning, is that we will be able to enter into agreements with the provinces to contribute 100 per cent in some cases, and 90 per cent or 50 per cent in others.

We always sign a special agreement with the province in the case of a special rural development area. We provide for the method of financing for certain projects, the method of application by special organizations, provincial and federal departments.

[English]

Mr. Jorgenson: Under this section the minister, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Lisgar, stated that Manitoba would enter into an agreement with respect to the Interlake area. I wonder if I understood him correctly. When the bill was being debated on Tuesday he said, as found on page 4940 of Hansard:

> Provinces in the process of developing plans for application of the fund include Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

We understand that Manitoba also is developing plans now under this legislation.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I would be in agreement with the idea of establishing special area projects rather than attempting to apply this legislation to all the areas which need assistance. I say this because of the unhappy experience we are having with the area development program under the Department of Industry. I do not wish to become involved in a discussion of this subject. I merely say that although beneficial to certain areas this program is working to the detriment of other areas because it has become more difficult for them to establish new industries and do the job which community development corporations would like to do. Under a program of special projects it is possible to study these projects and to make changes in them in the light of experience. This seems a better way to proceed in the attempt to resolve the problem of poverty in many of our rural areas.

The Minister has indicated he will be coming back to the house for additional funds after the $50 millions has been spent. This will give us an opportunity to take a long look at the results achieved.

Mr. Sauvé: In reply to the hon. member I should like to point out that in my earlier remarks I mentioned three special areas, Interlake, northern New Brunswick and eastern Quebec. At the end I mentioned other provinces. Interlake and Manitoba are included.

Mr. Schreyer: I believe we are on clause 4. At this stage I should like to put another question to the minister on a point which I believe is causing some confusion. I take it that at the same time as the rural development program in the Interlake region, for example, is being entered into there will be other projects carried out in the province. So we shall see all these being carried out under the auspices of the special fund while others are being carried out at the same time under the auspices of the original ARDA fund.

I took the time to read through Hansard of the provincial legislature of Manitoba and I find that some confusion arises as to the eligibility of certain recreational projects carried out under ARDA. If the minister considers this to be relevant to the discussion of the present bill I would appreciate some comment on this point. Is he having any difficulties with the provinces?

Mr. Sauvé: In Manitoba, apart from Interlake, more than 50 special projects have been carried on. In fact, of the total amount devoted to ARDA by the federal and provincial governments less than 10 per cent has been devoted to Interlake so far. We have many other projects under way. Even while the Interlake rural development program is being devised, progress is being made with some special projects in the region. There has been much discussion in connection with parks but this matter is covered by another part of the agreement which renders projects possible under an alternative land use program.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to ask the Minister a few questions particularly in respect of paragraph (b) of clause 4(1) which says that the Minister may enter into an agreement to provide for—> —the payment to the province of contributions in respect of the cost of a comprehensive rural development program in a special rural development area undertaken by the government of the province or any agency thereof.

My question arises out of my interest in the development program announced not long ago by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in his capacity as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. That program is to involve the expenditure of some $112 million in the next five years on what I understand to be a related kind of activity. This brings us to the question just asked by the hon. member for Springfield about co-ordination. When this act is in force, could there be the necessary degree of co-ordination between the projects it envisages and those to be carried out under the program announced by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs?

With regard to the phrasing of subclause 3 I would ask: Can this be a two-way street? Can the minister of northern affairs expect assistance from the Minister of Forestry should he see the possibility of stretching the $112 million a bit farther? I admit that such a sum appears to be a lot of money but, of course, it has to be spread over areas occupied by Indians across the whole of Canada, as well as over a period of five years, so it really is not as large as it sounds.

The Chairman: Order. As the business of the house includes royal assent, shall I report progress and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

• (5:50 p.m.)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), grain—Prince Rupert, B.C.—increase in elevator capacity; the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), National Census—appointment of commissioners in the province of Quebec; the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt), Royal Canadian Mounted Police—possible removal of word "Mounted" from title.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions for papers, private bills and public bills.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

The house resumed, from Thursday, February 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bell (Carleton):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all reports, briefs or other documents or communications received by the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General or the Department of Justice from the Law Society of Upper Canada relating to Mr. Justice Leo Landreville; all replies made to any such reports, briefs or other documents or communications; all letters or other communications addressed by the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General or any officer of the Department of Justice, since the 1st day of January 1964 to Mr. Justice Leo Landreville; all replies made by Mr. Justice Leo Landreville or by any solicitor or agent on his behalf, to any such letters or other communications.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, is the minister going to make any further statement?

Mr. H. E. Stafford (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) has a motion on the order paper that an order of the house do issue for a copy of all reports, briefs or other documents or communications regarding this matter. I wish to say that the matter is now before Mr. Justice Rand who is acting as a commissioner under the Inquiries Act and has this matter under consideration.

Neither the hon. member for Carleton nor anyone else speaking on behalf of this motion has shown that such a brief has any legal significance. The Law Society Act, Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1906, sets out very clearly the powers of that society, particularly in sections 44 to 48. They are to the effect that in any hearing of this kind witnesses shall be subpoenaed and evidence shall be taken. In section 4 the members of the Law Society of Upper Canada are set out, and justices of the Supreme Court of Ontario are not included. Section 3 of the Law Society Act states that judges of the Supreme Court are visitors to the society.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, in my submission the brief made by the Law Society of Upper Canada cannot be held significant as such and can only be dealt with as a recommendation and nothing more. Such a brief could only be based on hearsay, as we understand it. There is no evidence before us that witnesses were properly called or that Mr. Justice Landreville was afforded the opportunity of giving evidence on his own behalf.

I have just been down to the library and looked up the citation of a case regarding a former member of the Law Society of Upper Canada, namely, Samuel Max Mehr. This case is reported in 1955 Supreme Court Reports, at page 344. The appellant was a member of the law society and was disbarred by the disciplinary committee for conduct unbecoming a barrister and solicitor. This case was tried by Mr. Justice McRuer. It was appealed to the Supreme Court of Ontario and then to the Supreme Court of Canada. It was clearly pointed out in the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada that the plaintiff must have an opportunity of calling witnesses and defending himself.

Disciplinary powers possessed and exercised by the Law Society of Upper Canada formerly belonged to the courts alone. At the present time the law society has only the powers given to it by the statute I have just mentioned, the Law Society Act. Its powers are very carefully set out in those sections to which I referred.

At the most, any such brief sent to the minister of justice is only a recommendation by the Law Society of Upper Canada. It has no legal status. Its only effect in this house would be to damage the reputation of the judge. The course of action taken in this matter by the Law Society of Upper Canada is most unfortunate. Such a report, I submit, should not have been sent to the Minister of Justice, (Mr. Cardin), and for these reasons I ask hon. members to vote against the motion.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Is it the theory of the hon. gentleman that only those documents which can be found to be objectively true should be produced in this house? Is there to be some test by the executive of the validity of a document before it is subject to production in parliament?

Mr. Stafford: No, I did not say that. But I do say that in this particular case there is nothing of any significance that makes this brief of such importance—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): How does the hon. gentleman know? He has not seen it.

Mr. Stafford: —or of no more importance than any other piece of correspondence sent to a minister. The brief itself has no legal status, and I would think that the hon. member for Carleton could at least wait until Mr. Justice Rand has made his decision and submitted his report.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this motion both in my capacity as a member of parliament and as a member of the Law Society of Upper Canada. I would say, first, that this is not something which the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) has stumbled upon by accident. He knows very well all the rights, obligations and duties of the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada because he was himself a bencher, and perhaps is even now; I do not know.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am only concerned with our rights and privileges as members of parliament and the right to receive documents which are in the possession of a minister.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That may well be the case; but the hon. member knows very well the proper functions and duties of benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That has no significance.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member says that has no significance. I would suggest that the hon. member knows very well—and this is an opinion very strongly held by members of the profession across the province—that it was most irregular for the benchers, as they did, to assume the responsibility of attacking a particular judge.

The hon. member knows very well from his experience as a bencher that the law society was itself censured by the Supreme Court of Canada approximately a dozen years ago for its conduct of discipline committee proceeding and following a course of conduct which failed to give a fair opportunity to be heard, which failed to accord the principles of natural justice, to another member of the law society. As I say, Mr. Speaker, they were censured in this respect with regard to the procedure of the discipline committee.

What has occurred here is that a group of the benchers—and it is my understanding that it was by no means a unanimous decision—decided to pass judgment upon the conduct of a particular judge and, having incorporated their conclusions upon his conduct in a report, sent that report to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin), at the same time announcing publicly, without making the report public, that they had censured the judge.

I would suggest that this was most extraordinary conduct on the part of the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada. We do not know—and perhaps the hon. member can enlighten the house in his five-minute rebuttal —to what extent Mr. Justice Landreville was given notice of the intended course of action of the benchers. We do not know the extent of the evidence, so-called, which the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada received on this particular question before passing judgment. We do not know whether Mr. Justice Landreville was represented at the hearing before the benchers so that the charges against him could be fully examined and arguments could be made on his behalf to the assembled body of the benchers before they arrived at their conclusion.

I suggest that what has occurred here in regard to the conduct of a judge is something that the Supreme Court of Canada said a dozen years ago the law society could not do in respect of an ordinary member of the society. The Supreme Court of Canada said that the law society could not act prejudicially in respect of one of its own members without observing all the requirements of natural justice. The hon. member knows as well as I that statements very prejudicial to the judge are included in this report.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have no idea.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am suggesting to him that the interests of justice, the interests of fairness to the judge, the interests of fairness to the bench generally, could only be prejudiced by making public allegations which at this point have not been founded upon any fair, appropriate and judicial trying of the facts before arriving at a decision.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): By all means.

Mr. Churchill: Would he make that statement in reference to the publication of similar reports which are founded only on allegation without any proof of their authenticity?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am talking about the action of the benchers of my own law society.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is not the issue.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member will have an opportunity to speak for five minutes in rebuttal. Perhaps he would allow me the opportunity of speaking at this time.

Mr. Starr: You will not answer the question because you are putting forward a bad argument.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I cannot think of any member of the house who has less to add to this debate than the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr).

Mr. Starr: You are getting nasty now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The duties and obligations of the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada are well defined by statute, and it is quite clear that it is not within their proper purview to pass comment on the actions of a particular judge. It has also been determined that it is not proper for them to pass comment on the public or private conduct of an individual member of the society unless they have followed appropriate, quasi-judicial procedures as determined by the Supreme Court of Canada some dozen years ago.

Therefore I say it would be most prejudicial to the judge and most prejudicial to justice if a document such as this, founded upon no element of a proper, judicial trying of fact, was made public at this time. I give the hon. member credit for the fact that when he first introduced the motion no inquiry was under way. But since he introduced his motion the matter has been put before a judicial inquiry. In this way the matter can be tried with due opportunity for witnesses to be heard in the proper fashion, with the opportunity for those involved in this matter to be represented by counsel who are in a position to intervene on their behalf.

I would suggest that because Mr. Justice Rand is now considering the question and because Mr. Justice Rand is no doubt considering the document in respect of which we are now carrying on this debate, it would be appropriate for the hon. member as a former bencher, as a member of the Law Society of Upper Canada and as a member of this house, to withdraw the motion and acknowledge that the initial purpose—of course, I cannot ascribe motives to the hon. member —behind his making the motion has now been met by holding an inquiry under the Inquiries Act by a distinguished former member of the Supreme Court of Canada. I hope the hon. member will withdraw the motion and that it will not be necessary for the house to divide on it.

If the hon. member will not withdraw his motion I would say to hon. members that it would be a most serious mistake if an attack of this kind on a judge were made public. This, as we know, has been a relatively novel situation, and happily so, with respect to the judiciary of Canada. I think it would be a most grievous mistake if we were to create a precedent in this house by way of a vote requiring that documents of this kind, and other documents of this nature which may from time to time be received by the government with respect to individual judges, should be produced in the house.

We have in the house a well-defined set of rules stating that there should be no reflection in debate, question or other proceedings of the house on the conduct or character of a judge. The proper course of action, as the hon. member knows, is by way of a substantive motion, not a motion for the production of papers but a substantive motion relating to the conduct of the judge. I think this is an important and salutory rule and I hope it will be adhered to by the house. Therefore I hope that hon. members, after full consideration of this question, will decide to reject the hon. member's motion and vote against it.

• (6:20 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no other speakers on this motion, pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 47 the minister has the right to speak for five minutes and the mover of the motion then has the right to speak for another five minutes.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anything useful I can add to what I stated on February 3 last. I felt and I still feel that the proper procedure to be carried out in this respect was the setting up of a judicial inquiry and that it would not serve anybody's purpose or advantage to have the documents tabled which are requested by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell). I feel that the procedure which has been taken was not only in the interests of the house but also in the interests of safeguarding the judiciary from being subject to debate in the house except on a substantive motion. I would hope, Mr. Speaker, since Mr. Justice Rand has not yet brought in his report and since he is seized of the problem, that the hon. member for Carleton might consider withdrawing his motion.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, tonight we have heard some of the most extraordinary expressions of opinion I have ever heard in the House of Commons. Apparently the test whether or not this house is entitled to documents is the truth or falsity of those documents. I say to you, sir, that this house is entitled to documents which are in the possession of the ministry and the question of their truth or falsity or what value they may have is of no significance whatever.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) has sought to make the test whether the Law Society of Upper Canada has conducted itself properly. I care not at all. The Law Society of Upper Canada is a body which has presented a document to the Minister of Justice and it has presented that document without any privilege or confidence or secrecy attached to it. When that is done by any person or by any organization I say it is subject to production in this house, and when any hon. member argues that it is not he is doing a grave disservice to the whole cause of parliamentary government.

When debate on this motion was adjourned on February 17, I was filled with enthusiasm for its early resumption so that I might meet the sophistries and non sequiturs uttered in opposition to it. Nearly three months have elapsed since that time and the royal commission headed by Hon. Ivan C. Rand has now held its hearings and concluded them. The documents sought by this motion are public and have been argued about in public by counsel for the parties before the commission. Yet parliament is to be denied what has been argued about before a royal commission. Mr. John Robinette, counsel for Mr. Justice Landreville has argued very vehemently on the basis of these documents. The commissioner is meditating upon his report which we expect momentarily. The presentation of the evidence before the commission, including the arguments which have been expressed, makes ludicrous the suggestion that this house is to be denied that which has been produced before the public.

There are still some principles at stake in this matter. There is some importance in mentioning the timing of this motion. It was sent to the house officials for inclusion on the order paper prior to the announcement of the royal commission by the Minister of Justice. My submission is that this house cannot and must not be deprived of its right to papers, admittedly public documents, admittedly not secret or confidential, admittedly under no cloak of privilege which has ever been asserted in the history of parliament, and deprived of them solely by the executive act of the government in appointing a royal commission. I say to you that no minister of justice and no government should be permitted to wrap a cloak of secrecy around public matters just because a royal commission has been appointed.

If a precedent is set in this case we have established for all time a convenient vehicle whereby a hard-pressed government may escape its accountability to this chamber. All it needs to do is to appoint a royal commission and then hide behind the judicial cloak. This was the very argument presented by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) who made the most dangerous speech in this debate. His sophistry was soon exposed when later in another matter he protested with utter inconsistency about his own right to discuss a matter before another royal commission being abridged. I mention this only to say that I want it on the record for anyone who reads this debate in the future that the hon. member for Greenwood has enunciated principles and theories which attack the very root of the sovereignty of parliament.

The principal argument, Mr. Speaker, has been that the release of these documents would prejudice a fair hearing for Mr. Justice Landreville. That hearing is now over; these documents are now public. Mr. Justice Landreville's counsel, Mr. Robinette, has dealt in detail publicly with these documents and has attacked the Law Society of Upper Canada in bitter terms, the very law society over which he formerly presided. How can there now be any prejudice to Mr. Justice Landreville or to a fair hearing for him? Mr. Justice Rand knows all about these documents. Only the House of Commons, the highest court of all, is to be deprived by the arbitrary action of the Minister of Justice of seeing these documents.

Mr. Brewin: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have only five minutes.

Mr. Brewin: But you are casting aspersions.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): All last autumn, the Minister of Justice and the law society played footsie-footsie with this issue; they adopted an "after you, my dear Alphonse" attitude. The minister invited the law society to release the documents. When he did so, did the minister worry about possible prejudice to Mr. Justice Landreville? Oh no, not at all. He saw no harm if the law society released the documents. When he publicly announced that he had asked Mr. Justice Landreville to resign, was he concerned about a fair hearing?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired. Under the terms of Standing Order 47 it is now the duty of the Chair to put the question.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, might the hon. member have unanimous consent for additional time to continue?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Carleton to continue?

Mr. Howard: After ten o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask again if there is unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: No.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion (Mr. Bell Carleton) negatived.

NORRIS COMMISSION

The house resumed from Thursday, March 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Orlikow:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of all the working papers prepared for the Norris commission by the chartered accountants hired by the commission and deposited by Mr. Justice Norris with the Department of Labour.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, over the years, and especially since the establishment of the maritime trustees which arose out of the report of Mr. Justice Norris, a number of statements have been made from within the privileged walls of parliament which have carried with them the implication that there was a great deal of wrongdoing yet to be uncovered, that there were in fact criminal actions which had taken place which Mr. Justice Norris had not uncovered, and that because of those criminal actions certain members and officers of one of the unions under trusteeship should be arraigned in court and accordingly charged with certain contraventions of the Criminal Code.

I think that approval of the motion before the house asking for the working papers prepared for the royal commission under Mr. Justice Norris by chartered accountants would help clear the air in so far as the innuendo behind the statements to which I have referred is concerned. It is very easy for a member of parliament who may have some particular gripe about some element of society, or who may have a particular dislike for a certain group, organization or person, to take advantage of his privileged position in parliament to make untrue and slanderous statements about whatever organization, group or individual he wishes to smear.

I submit that this has been the case with respect to the Seafarers International Union. On the face of it, if it is correct that criminal activities have been engaged in by officers or members of that organization, then the responsibility falls on the law enforcement officers of the Crown to lay charges. To date, so far as I know, no charges have been laid against any of the officers of the Seafarers International Union in relation to criminal activities, with the exception of the action taken by the federal Department of Justice under a minister other than the present one relating to the march on Ottawa, and charges relating to contravention of the Canada Shipping Act, which is something unique in labour history.

However, that has nothing whatever to do with the misuse of funds, an allegation contained in one of the statements which was made. It has nothing whatever to do with the charge of theft, another allegation which has been made by certain people. It has nothing whatever to do with what we normally think of as criminal offences under the Criminal Code of Canada.

I submit that if the working papers prepared by the chartered accountants for Mr. Justice Norris and his commission were made public, we in this house would be able to see, first of all, whether there was any substance to the allegations or accusations that theft and other criminal activities have been engaged in; second, who were the people who might be responsible therefor and, third, why the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Department of Justice have so far taken no action in regard thereto.

I submit that the reason of the government for refusing to make public the working papers, which incidentally have been publicized in the newspapers, is merely to protect the position of the government which itself knows that there has been no wrongdoing. Because it has had the R.C.M.P.—

Mr. McIlraith: Order.

Mr. Howard: Order?

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member has no right to impute motives, as he well knows.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, any imputation of motives that I have to make is addressed to the government.

Mr. McIlraith: That does not make it any more in order.

Mr. Howard: If the minister feels that the hat fits, may I suggest that he pull it right down over his ears so that he will know exactly to whom I am directing my thoughts. The minister makes no comment in reply so I will say it again.

I suggest that the government is hiding behind the statement that these matters are confidential in order to protect its own position, knowing that there is no wrongdoing and that there has been no wrongdoing. It also knows that the R.C.M.P., which the government asked to investigate these matters, has come up with nothing. If it has, then why were charges not laid?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member that he has no right to impute motives to the government relating to a course of action it has taken.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) may state that I have no right to impute motives. That is his opinion. I exercise my right to impute motives to the government and I say that there are motives for doing this. This is not transgressing the rules. If the minister feels sensitive, I suggest he look a little more carefully at what some of his colleagues in the cabinet are doing or have been doing about this matter and what they are seeking to hide. If he did that perhaps he would not be so prone to jump and exhibit that eggshell sensitivity he and others have about this matter.

Be that as it may, I think the only fair thing parliament can do, having listened to the innuendo and accusation tossed around in regard to this matter, is to make public the working papers of the firm of chartered accountants who presumably went over these books with a fine-toothed comb. Knowing the way in which Mr. Justice Norris approached his work on the commission, they obviously acted with some relish in order to see what they could discover, not only because of Mr. Justice Norris but because of the terms of reference of his royal commission.

This, Mr. Speaker, is one way to clear the air. Let us see what the chartered accountants came up with. If they uncovered wrongdoing, let us see that it is dealt with properly. If they uncovered no wrongdoing, let the fact be made public so that the smear and slander will cease.

• (6:40 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): All those opposed will please say nay?

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Call in the members.

Mr. McIlraith: I believe the procedure is that no vote can be taken until eight o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): All those who object to the taking of the vote at this time will please rise.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): According to standing order 6(3), the taking of this vote is postponed until eight o'clock this day.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE PACIFIC COAST FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Auguste Choquette (for Mr. Basford) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-6, respecting The Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company.

Mr. Howard: Is this motion properly before the house? I notice that the sponsor of the bill is not in the house.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member for Lotbinière has moved the motion for the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard.

Mr. Howard: Will the hon. member for Lotbinière indicate whether or not he has been expressly requested to do this by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard?

Mr. Choquette: It is the normal understanding; I think my good friend should know that.

Mr. Howard: Surely the co-sponsor of the bill is going to explain what is involved in this particular bill.

Mr. Choquette: I will just wait and refute the objections you are going to raise.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I did not hear the comment. If the hon. member for Lotbinière, as a result of lack of knowledge of what is involved here, is declining to represent properly the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, that is, of course, something that is on his conscience and not on mine. The purpose of the bill, if I must substitute for the hon. member and explain what is involved here for the benefit of the house and the hon. member for Lotbinière, is to change the name of the company to a different name, both in English and in French, and also to change the capitalization of the company and increase the capital stock from the original $1 million to $2 million or an increase of 100 per cent. The change in the capitalization of the company is something with which we should be concerned. I think the house should be thankful for the remarks made the other day by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron), who outlined the concept that with the proliferation of insurance companies and the number of insurance companies who were requesting an increase in capital structure, we would find that the demands and pressures of these companies would extract from our economy moneys which we might otherwise be able to use to better advantage for the advancement of the economy of Canada. In this way these companies are really acting to the detriment of the hopes which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and ministers of finance who preceded him have expressed from time to time.

At one stage this company had a capitalization of $1 million divided into shares of $100 value each. They found that it was necessary to engage in a stock splitting process in 1920 whereby the stock was split on the basis of 20 for 1. In other words, for every share worth $100 the holder thereof came into possession of 20 shares at $5 each. This story has been repeated time and time again by companies such as this one which have come before parliament asking us to do this favour and give to them a preferred position in our economy. They have asked parliament to endorse an alteration in the capital structure to permit them to engage even more directly in exploiting the people of this nation by heavy sales pressure upon the people to take out insurance policies.

I do not want to get involved in the types of insurance policies which this company may have sold up until now or that it may sell in the future. However, with respect to this company, and I am only singling it out because it happens to be the one before us, there is something with which I think parliament should concern itself more seriously than has been the case in the past. I think it is appropriate and coincidental that the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, the sponsor of this bill, sponsored a public bill some weeks ago which contained a principle I believe should be incorporated in this bill.

The house will remember that when the hockey franchises were being bartered about the city of Vancouver was interested in entering a hockey club in the new international league and the franchise was given to some relatively unknown place in the United States. The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, feeling as keenly as he does about conspiracies in restraint of trade, introduced a bill in the House of Commons—I do not know its number offhand—which sought to bring within the purview of the Combines Investigation Act the National Hockey League, or whatever its proper name is, so that that body would be liable for prosecution for conspiracy in restraint of so-called trade under the Combines Investigation Act, although the league is engaged in a service. The Combines Investigation Act deals only with material goods and commodities and excludes services from its sanctions and prohibitions.

I wish that the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard would have been as assiduous in concerning himself with the conspiracies that probably take place between insurance companies in establishing uniform charges for the types of insurance they sell, uniform increases in rates, and in providing similar—and I use these words advisedly and loosely—levels of benefits. This is something with which parliament should be concerned. I think we must make a start in this direction by selecting Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company because it happens to be before us. When we get to the committee stage of the bill we must ask that there be included within the law relating to Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company a section which states that this company shall be bound by the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act just as if this company were dealing in a commodity and therefore liable to sanctions under that act.

I submit that there is no difference in the eyes of the purchaser of insurance in regard to a conspiracy between insurance companies to set a common level of rates, to establish common price increases and to establish a common level of benefits. The situation is the same as that of the E. B. Eddy Company which I understand has been convicted three times for criminal actions under the Combines Investigation Act. In one case the conviction had to do with matches, in another it had to do with pulpwood, and in the third case it had to do with a conspiracy to fix prices with respect to paper products.

It does not matter much to the individual how the conspiracy takes place. In the final analysis, companies have conspired together to milk the consumer of his hard-earned income. There has not been that theoretical element of competition which is supposed to exist in our economy.

Insurance companies, because of the type of business they carry on, are exempted from the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. They are permitted to engage with impunity in conspiratorial tactics, one with another. But a seller of wire fences such as the Steel Company of Canada is not permitted to conspire with other companies to fix prices without being liable to prosecution and, if found guilty, to a fine and so on. It seems to me that is monumentally unfair, especially when we have in the development of our economy a steadily increasing part of it engaged in providing services for people. The providing of insurance falls within the providing of services.

So far the government probably has not given very much thought to this matter. My predecessor in this constituency, the late Ted Applewhaite, raised the question whether banking institutions could be prosecuted for fixing interest rates and the like. He was advised that because they provided a service they were exempted from the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act.

I submit that here we have a similar situation. A company has come to parliament and has asked parliament to give it a licence to conspire. It has asked parliament to give it authority to fix prices in the field of insurance. Parliament week by week blandly agrees to permit these applications.

I submit it is about time that we sat down and seriously thought about the prospects of bringing companies such as the one now before us within the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. I have wondered about the prospect of getting the answers to certain questions with which I and my colleagues are concerned, and which as yet have not been dealt with, when this bill reaches the committee stage. I hope that the hon. member for Lotbinière, who did not take the opportunity to explain the purposes of the bill, will do so. Perhaps that could also be done by the sponsor of the bill, the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, who is not here now.

It might be better if we were to delay second reading of this bill until its sponsor is available to deal with some of the matters which I have raised and with some of the points other members may want to raise. May I call it seven o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hour allotted to private members' business having expired, the house will return to the consideration of the business interrupted at six o'clock.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

PROVISION FOR ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT OF SPECIAL AREAS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-151, to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): May I ask the Minister of Forestry a question respecting clause 4?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. When the house rose at six o'clock clause 4 of the said bill was being considered.

Mr. Barnett: Before the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie asks his question, might I ask the minister whether he has considered the question I had raised just before we rose for a trip to the other place?

Mr. Sauvé: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni raised the problem of what programs could be initiated by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources for Indians and how these could be supported by the ARDA fund, the fund for rural economic development or for other ARDA programs. May I say that in the bill now before us clause 7 mentions an advisory board. Assistant or deputy ministers may review the various projects submitted by the provincial governments after an agreement has been drafted by the ARDA administration of the Department of Forestry.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Under this special rural development program which embodies all the details of our rural development projects, if there are projects for Indians they could be financed either by the department of northern affairs from its budget or from the fund for rural economic development, or from other parts of the ARDA agreement. Co-ordination will be at the federal level. It would be done by the advisory board.

Under the new ARDA agreement, paragraph 11, the ARDA program now applies to Indians. Under the first agreement we could not apply this program to Indians, but now it is possible.

Mr. Barnett: Is it the minister's understanding that one of the ten senior officials referred to in clause 7 will likely be somebody in the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Northern Affairs?

Mr. Sauvé: That is my understanding.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Can the minister tell the committee whether any understanding or accord has been reached between the province of Quebec and his department on the application of this measure to Indian reserves located in Quebec?

Mr. Sauvé: The province of Quebec has so far established an eastern Quebec development board region. The development plan is supposed to be ready at the end of June. If they are interested, they will make a proposal to us for the drafting of a special rural development agreement. In the Gaspé region, the Indians are included.

As I said in answer to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, Indians are covered or may be covered under article 11 of the new ARDA agreement, if provinces so wish.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Has Quebec indicated any such desire?

Mr. Sauvé: So far there is no proposal which could be covered under Bill C-151, but under the general ARDA agreement there has been some discussion and I think one of these proposals have been accepted for certain regions in Quebec where there are Indians.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Comprehensive rural development program and special rural development area defined.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex East): I should like to have it clearly stated in this legislation that Indian reserves are covered by the bill. I have noted the minister's comments to the effect that in certain ARDA agreements signed between the federal government and the provinces Indian reserves have been included. Very well, if Indian reserves can be included, no harm will be done by spelling this out in the legislation. I therefore wish to move:

That clause 5 (b) be amended by inserting the words "or Indian reserve" after the word "area" in line 39 of page two thereof.

Mr. Sauvé: I do not think it is necessary for this amendment to be moved. I say this because in the present bill we are talking about areas, not about people. Rather, we are talking about people living in certain rural areas where there is a concentration of low income families. I do not think it is necessary to make a distinction between the Indian and the non-Indian population of such areas. I have already mentioned that in the Interlake special rural development programs the Indian population is covered.

An hon. Member: Not everywhere.

Mr. Sauvé: No, but they are covered in the Interlake region. There are other areas where sections of the Indian population would come within the scope of this program. As I said, the ARDA agreement has been modified so that a province may apply the program to Indian lands and Indian people.

I feel that by accepting this amendment we would, in a way, be appearing to make Indians a different group of people. In fact we are trying to consider the population of a rural area without making any such distinction. I think the amendment would add nothing. The hon. member can rest assured that among the problems we have in mind in certain rural areas are precisely those of certain areas where there are many Indian reserves—Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Alberta—

[Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie).]

Mr. Nielsen: And the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

Mr. Sauvé: I do not think this amendment is the answer. We are trying to define an area rather than a group of people.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): I thank the minister for his comments and explanation. In supporting the amendment may I point out that paragraph (b) seeks to define a rural development area and it says:

A special rural development area is a predominantly rural area—

My amendment seeks to add the words "or Indian reserve".

—that is designated in an agreement between the province and the minister—

• (7:10 p.m.)

And so on. I am thinking of the Indian reserve in my own constituency of Middlesex West. It is a special area within its own right and there could be no possibility of considering the area surrounding the Caradoc reserve as a depressed area because it is composed of some of the finest land in the whole of Canada. The area itself is clearly defined. It is the Indian reserve, and because it is a special area, owned by the band under the Crown, it must be dealt with in a special way. I do not see how it could be included in the larger area for the purposes of this bill.

Therefore I think there is good reason to include the words "or Indian reserve," and then if the Ontario government sees fit to do so, it can include this reserve in any over-all program it may have for the province. But it would not fit into any program for the surrounding area.

The Indian reserve needs drainage. The agriculture of that area needs organizing. The Indians themselves do not have the funds to drain the land. But if it could be brought under this bill as a special area coming under the auspices of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, then the federal and provincial governments could both contribute so that the brush and weeds might be cleared off the land, thus making it a source of pride not only to the Indians themselves but to the whole area. Including the words "or Indian reserve" would clear up any confusion or misunderstanding.

Mr. Sauvé: I think that by adding the words "or Indian reserve" you would be restricting the meaning of "a predominantly rural area." Evidently the Indian reserve is a rural area and we do not want to make any distinction. Evidently it is within a predominantly rural area. The programs which the hon. member has just mentioned are covered by other parts of the federal-provincial rural development agreement. They come under Part II, covering land usage, Part III rehabilitation, and Part V rural development areas. I do not think the hon. member would render any service to the Indians or to the reserves by putting them in a special class. They are already covered by the general agreement, which I feel is much better than trying to be specific.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): On April 19 the minister issued a news release outlining the agreement which had been reached with the province of Ontario, stating that $1½ million was to be spent in the 11 eastern counties in a five-year drainage program. Is it possible under Bill C-151 to extend this sort of help to the Caradoc reserve in Middlesex county?

Mr. Sauvé: It is possible under the general federal-provincial rural agreement, paragraph 11 of which says:

> The province may apply ARDA programs to Indian lands and Indian people. In the event that Indians are involved in a program the federal government will negotiate special cost-sharing arrangements to the extent that Indians are involved.

Then there is part II covering land use and farm adjustment, Part III rehabilitation, and Part VIII soil and water conservation. All of these various programs that come under the general agreement would cover the specific case the hon. member has mentioned.

Mr. Nielsen: But it does not cover all Indians.

Mr. Sauvé: Well, you have the problem of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories which I have mentioned already, but the Indians in Ontario would be covered.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, because of the amendment before us, the only way I can bring myself in order is to say I am speaking for an area where the last Indian died ten years ago. I agree with the minister. I quite understand the hon. member's good intention: He wants to make certain that the Indians in his constituency are covered. But by accepting this amendment we would actually restrict the agreement. I rather like the idea of dealing with areas, rather than people as such, under the agreement.

I am rising to focus attention on a particular area which has some particular problems. Clause 5 reads:

> For the purposes of this act,
> (a) a comprehensive rural development program is a program, consisting of several development projects, that is designed to promote the social and economic development of a special rural development area and to increase income and employment opportunities and raise living standards in the area, and that makes provision for participation by residents of the area in the carrying out of the program;

I cannot for a moment suggest that I represent a constituency which is economically depressed. I represent a very prosperous riding, which is prosperous because of the hard work, industry and intelligence of the inhabitants, but it has a certain problem.

At present the projects under the Columbia river treaty are being built under the direction of the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority, and many people are beginning to realize one of the major problems involved. The B.C. Hydro and Power Authority offers a property holder, be he a farmer, businessman or what have you, a set price for his property.

This set price does not include detailed items of the value of buildings, land, etc. It is a lump sum—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Herridge: I shall put myself in order immediately, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: I must inform members of the committee that we have not disposed of the amendment with reference to Indian reserves. Perhaps the hon. member for Kootenay West would reserve his remarks until later on when we return to clause 5 as such.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Is the amendment pertaining to clause 5?

The Deputy Chairman: To paragraph (b) of clause 5.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member who proposed the amendment wishes to persist in it. I have the impression he has been assured by what has been said, so that the amendment is not necessary to accomplish the very good purposes he has in mind.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Certainly, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay the work of the committee, and with the assurance of the minister—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Positive and unequivocal.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): —positive and unequivocal, as my colleague says, which I see the minister is assenting to by the motions of his head, I am quite prepared to withdraw the amendment on that understanding.

• (7:20 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give its unanimous consent to the hon. member for Middlesex West to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Thomas, Middlesex West) withdrawn.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we all appreciate the minister's explanation which resulted in the amendment's being withdrawn, allowing the hon. member for Kootenay West to continue his remarks.

The situation I refer to is rather unusual. It has created a very difficult problem for a good number of people, to such an extent that various members of all parties from the Arrow lakes region have joined together in support of the committee which presented its views to the minister in British Columbia and the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority. These members represent all the parties in this house, with the exception of the Creditistes, and that party does not exist out there.

The problem which has been created is of a general nature, and everyone who is in the know realizes that the expenditures necessary are far in excess of the money received by the government of British Columbia to build the dams I mentioned. The tendency is to be conservative in making compensation for properties involved. This compensation is far less than the replacement value of the lands lost. These people are not given enough money to clear an equivalent area because the tendency has been to restrict the amount of compensation to the actual cost of purchasing land. Consequently the amount of money spent for new works, replacement of fish and wildlife areas is limited.

At the very least there is a difficult problem in communities in the Arrow lakes region, and I refer particularly to the development of new communities. Certain individuals have accepted insufficient amounts of money, as compensation for the loss of ranches or other properties, to clear similar acreage under present cost conditions. Evaluations have been very low as compared to this clearing cost.

The B.C. Hydro and Power Authority has put up as much as $900 per acre for clearing replacement land in the Arrow lakes, Arrow river and Duncan lake areas. In spite of that fact, the suggestion has been made that the cost of clearing agricultural land which has been taken over is in the neighbourhood of $30 per acre. This is a most unusual circumstance.

Mr. Nielsen: It is a most unusual statistic.

Mr. Herridge: It is a most unusual statistic, but it is one quoted by the hon. member for Kootenay West, and you know his reputation.

In any event, there are certain small communities and districts which will have to face difficult problems. I bring this fact to the attention of the minister because there is a certain overlapping. Theoretically and sentimentally the people involved must look to the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority and the government of British Columbia for a solution, but I know very well there will be many unsolved problems.

Under these circumstances I hope the minister and his officials will discuss the situation with the government of British Columbia in an attempt to see whether, under certain circumstances, new communities can be established in new areas with assistance in clearing the land for farming and ranching. I trust the minister will comment in this regard because the problem has to be faced by quite a number of people who have spent many years of their lives developing the properties they have lost or will lose.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, certainly the officials of the department will meet with the officials of the government of British Columbia to examine the situation to see whether anything can be done under this act. In view of the definitions and the aims of this measure, perhaps the province of British Columbia can arrive at some special agreement whereby assistance can be provided through the ARDA administration.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, section 5, (a), states:

> For the purposes of this Act, a comprehensive rural development program is a program, consisting of several development projects—

Perhaps the minister should give some region as an example, so as to see whether, say, a tourist industry could be established. Is this provided for by the program, for example, in a region such as mine? If the province suggests to the minister or to the federal government an agricultural area with a considerable mineral potential where iron mines could be operated, will this law provide for help under those circumstances?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that would be quite possible if the area has been designated as the bill requires and if the concerns to be developed are to income and employment and raise the standard of living in the area.

Indeed, in some regions, such as in the Lower St. Lawrence area and in Gaspé, if the provincial government follows the recommendations of the eastern Quebec development board, a program will comprise several projects concerning the tourist trade, agriculture, small businesses, forests, fisheries and probably mines. It is a comprehensive area development program. It can also cover fields such as housing and education.

[English]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I was pleased to hear the reply to the hon. member for Kootenay West because it indicated that the minister is prepared to give sympathetic consideration to the problems referred to by that hon. member. I should like to say a few words in support of the arguments advanced by him.

Undoubtedly the Minister of Forestry is aware, in a general way at least, that the development of the history of the Columbia river project for damming the Arrow lakes is the direct cause of the problems outlined by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I realize of course that the minister was not a member of the house during that period of history, and that the early stages of the treaty date back to the time of his predecessor.

Because of the participation of the federal authority in the agreement, and because of the international implications of the agreement, there is in my view directly or indirectly a moral if not a legal obligation on the part of the federal authority to give some consideration to the results of the implementation of this Columbia river treaty.

Coming from the province of British Columbia, and having had discussions with the hon. member for Kootenay West, I have some general knowledge of the approach adopted by the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority in this connection. In my view that attitude is a rather striking contrast to the position taken by the federal authority in relation to the people who were being displaced as a result of the St. Lawrence seaway development. Compensation in that regard was considered only adequate when it provided for the cost of relocation of whole communities.

For the reasons I have advanced I think there is real justification for the federal authority's being more than willing to enter into an agreement with provincial authorities under this act. I should add that I have heard the premier of the province of British Columbia complain rather vociferously that the federal government is always trying to draw funds from the province of British Columbia. I have made no bones about my own views in this regard. Some of the complaints he has voiced are unrealistic and unreasonable and completely inconsistent with any concept of a united Canada.

However, I think in this situation there is an opportunity under this bill for the province to look at the possibility of utilizing a proposal being developed by the government and parliament of Canada to do something which apparently through its agency, the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority, it has not been willing to do to the present at least.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I wish to raise a matter under clause 5 that I think is of importance to the whole nation. I am surprised that there is no restraining clause in the bill, or no clause governing the amount that may be spent in each province. There should be a clause governing the per capita amount that may be spent in the provinces and territories, because we have two territories as well. I ask the minister this question: Does he not wish to have any safeguards limiting the amount that any province can absorb of the $50 million we are voting under this legislation? I would warn the minister that benefits could act discriminatorily, unfairly and in a one-sided manner and we should guard against this happening.

I am thinking of last year's farm machinery syndicates bill, as a result of which the residents of one western province obtained the lion's share of the money lent. We do not want a repetition of this situation as a result of this bill. We want ARDA to go into action across the whole of Canada in a fair and equitable way. We want all the provinces and territories to benefit, and not a few or just one province. There should be control in regard to the per capita expenditure in a province, and there should be control exercised with regard to money federally expended in the provinces and territories. In this way the federal expenditure would be spread as fairly as possible across the whole dominion.

As one form of control I would suggest a per capita limit on federal expenditure in each of these, shall I say depressed areas, where federal money is to be expended. This control could also take the form of gauging the amount that should be spent equitably in the provinces and territories. I should like to hear the minister's comments in this regard.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, this problem was discussed thoroughly at the federal-provincial conference held in Montreal at the end of November, 1964. The proposals now before the house were discussed with the provinces, and it was agreed by them that there should be no allotment and no per capita limitation, on the basis that the general ARDA agreement contained certain restrictions with regard to how much money we could spend in each province or on each kind of project. As this was a special, federal effort to try to improve standards of living and employment conditions in certain areas of Canada in which there was a concentration of low income families, it was felt there should be no restriction at all, inasmuch as the fund could be replenished when all the $50 million had been committed.

The provinces unanimously accepted the point of view that it was the federal government's responsibility to really make an effort where it was needed. Three provinces—or, rather, two so far—are preparing projects that will be financed under Bill No. C-151. One of those provinces is Manitoba, for the Interlake region, and the other is New Brunswick. Everybody at the conference agreed that this was a fair principle if we were trying to eradicate poverty where it seemed to be concentrating. As the provinces thought this was an acceptable arrangement, I felt it was good for the whole of Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: You mentioned only two provinces.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, there is some inconsistency on the part of this government. It is not all embodied in this bill, of course.

Mr. Churchill: It is too short a bill.

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

Mr. Starr: I refer to the allotment of $50 million under this bill to deal with certain depressed areas. Under the bill there is no per capita allotment to the provinces. We had this arrangement under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act; yet when this government came into office they immediately changed the system and operated it on a per capita basis. If there is to be any consistency on the part of policies of the government, this measure should be put into effect in the same way as they changed the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

Mr. Nielsen: Which is the third province that has an agreement in this respect?

Mr. Sauvé: The only thing I know is that when we discussed this matter with the provinces they were agreeable to the system we have established. With regard to the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, I do not know all the details of what happened with the provinces, but I know that in this case the provinces accepted this principle. Therefore as the federal minister I was satisfied to propose the same thing to this house.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, the minister mentioned Manitoba and New Brunswick as provinces which have plans under way. He said there were three provinces. Which is the other province?

Mr. Sauvé: In my introductory remarks I mentioned three provinces which have special areas for rural development. I also said there were areas in other provinces. More than three provinces are involved in this respect. I mentioned Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, and there is also Newfoundland. I mentioned three areas with regard to which there had been a request for a development program, with respect to which studies are being carried out, but we do not yet have the results. One is the interlake region of Manitoba, the second is eastern Quebec and third in northern New Brunswick.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, on the point that was just now before the committee, I think the view expressed by the minister in stating the position taken at the federal-provincial conference is, of course, the sound one in relation to this particular piece of legislation. The object of this legislation is to tackle the problems of rural people, and I hope we will not put artificial fences around a program of this kind. However, that is not what I wanted to ask about at this time.

Earlier the hon. member for Villeneuve asked how far the minister and those working with him in connection with the expenditure of this fund could go in dealing with tourist development. The minister mentioned a moment ago that in the province of Nova Scotia a plan is being shaped up under the general ARDA agreement, and my constituency falls within the area to be covered by that plan. Under the general ARDA agreement a study is being made of the recreational and tourist possibilities of the entire county of Guysborough. What I want to know is, what is going to happen when this study is completed? I am convinced as to what the result of the study is going to be—it is going to conclude that this county has magnificent tourist potentialities. But where do we go from there? How far can the minister go in recommending programs for the development of these potentialities?

I am glad to see the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources here tonight, because it may very well be that if the Minister of Forestry cannot go all the way that the study indicates under this particular piece of legislation, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources may have to activate himself and bring before this house new legislation to supplement the National Parks Act. I am wondering how far the Minister of Forestry conceives of this particular fund as meeting the development of park areas and recreational areas, somewhere in between the great national parks, on the one hand, and the comparatively small parks which are being developed under federal provincial co-operation under the existing ARDA regulations on the other.

Mr. Sauvé: If the proposal comes under section 6 of the ARDA agreement for a special rural development area, we can entertain practically all sorts of projects as long as they create employment and economic development. If it does not come under the special rural development area, then it comes under either Part V of the rural development area or Part III, rural rehabilitation, or Part II, land use and farm adjustment, and then you have specific projects. We have approved many projects of that nature since the innovation of ARDA in 1962.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, there is one point on which I believe I know the answer, but I should like to have it in the minister's own clear words. This act again and again uses the word "rural". Am I correct in saying that the word "rural" will include seacoast areas where, of course, we have people living in precisely the same conditions as we would find in depressed agricultural areas in eastern Quebec, or in the Interlake area of Manitoba?

Mr. Sauvé: The answer is yes, that this is one of the purposes of the amendment we brought into legislation under Bill C-152.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I must say that the explanation of the minister, as far as I am concerned, is very inadequate on the point I raised about the equitable spreading of this money across the country. The words of the minister were that the province had accepted this principle. What principle have they accepted? The sky-is-the-limit method of expenditure has very little principle attached to it. What I am suggesting to the minister is a per capita plan which would have some principle associated with it. I caution the minister that $50 million does not go very far. The physical geography of this country is such that this whole amount could be spent on two or three small localities. It is not good administration and it is not fair in any way; it is not fair morally or politically.

Mr. Sauvé: I will give you three examples. In the Interlake region there are 62,000 people, in northern New Brunswick there are 125,000 and in eastern Quebec there are about 325,000. We do not know yet what the program will be in the interlake area which will be submitted by the government of Manitoba. It may be a program which will involve the reorganization of certain farm land, and the relocation of a number of fishermen. There are 3,000 fishermen and there are possibilities for probably a few hundred. There will probably be road development, erection of school buildings, development of tourist areas, and so on. Then the province of Manitoba will propose to the federal ARDA administration a certain program and will probably say, "We are ready to pay so much of the cost". Then out of the $50 million, 80 per cent of the cost will be for one project, 75 per cent for another, and 50 per cent for the third. This will be the result of negotiations.

The principle which was accepted by the provinces was that, inasmuch as some of them were ready to go into the regional development concept and inasmuch as they have already a great number of low income families in certain classified areas, it was justifiable for the government to place a special input on the money to help those regions improve their situation. This was not a good thing for Canada as a whole. It was expected then, as it is now confirmed, that the federal government would be able to add to the fund. We now have $50 million. When this amount is committed—it will be spent over a number of years—then we can designate an additional amount of money. This is part of the war on poverty. The provinces have accepted this principle as being equitable. There are certain areas of the country which more than others require assistance from the federal government. The provinces were satisfied with this arrangement.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Can the minister assure the house that the per capita amount, for example, expended in the Interlake region in Manitoba would be originally on a par with the per capita amount spent in those regions of Quebec or in New Brunswick?

Mr. Sauvé: It is hard for me to say yes or no because we do not know yet what will be the final proposals of the government and the province of Manitoba. When we draft this agreement for this region it may be on a per capita basis or the province may ask for a contribution of $5 million for 60,000 people. The province of Quebec may ask for five times that amount or $25 million, it all depends on what type of programs there will be. We have not yet established any principle with respect to an amount. We are not ready to accept a per capita basis because this will depend on the experience and results of the negotiations between the provinces and the federal government. We might arrive at this formula but it has not been devised and nobody has suggested that there should be such a formula.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, is it true that these moneys are not going to be spent when there is no poverty? I believe there are no poor in Manitoba, so there is no question of a program under this legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Sauvé: I think the hon. member for Villeneuve is not aware of what is going on in the interlake region, where 65,000 people are suffering great hardship. Living conditions of some Indians and half-breeds there are such as would not be tolerated anywhere else in Canada.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

• (7:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Schreyer: I do not like the idea of advertising the extent of the poverty in the province of Manitoba. However, for the information of the hon. member for Villeneuve, I may say that the problem exists, particularly in certain areas. According to the statistics compiled by the province, the extent of the poverty in the Interlake region is rather high. A program is therefore being carried out in that part of the province, and will be welcomed I assume by almost everyone living there.

I rise at this time, Mr. Chairman, to say to the minister that while we really do not expect him to have any specific information as to how many development projects will be entered into in the Interlake region, while we do not expect him to have detailed information, I think we have a right to expect from him some approximation of the magnitude of the spending program in the Interlake region. A comprehensive rural development program may consist of 10 or 25 special projects, and I would not expect the minister to be able to tell us what some of these projects will cost because perhaps they are not even formulated as yet. It seems to me, however, the minister must have a good idea of the total cost of the program—the total cost of each of the three comprehensive rural development programs that are being undertaken under this legislation.

Mr. Sauvé: The one we have in northern New Brunswick which covers about 125,000 people will cost in the neighbourhood of $30 million. What the share of the federal government and the provincial government will be is being discussed now. However, this gives one an example of the magnitude of the programs.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Can the minister tell us if he envisages any co-operation between ARDA under his department, and ARDA under the Department of Industry, always taking into consideration the part the province would have in the two programs?

Mr. Sauvé: This is already happening. We have an advisory board. Actually, there have been some projects carried out under ARDA but financed by ARDA.

Mr. Forbes: I should like to direct one question to the minister. We have three designated areas in Manitoba. Would these same areas be eligible for assistance under the ARDA program?

Mr. Sauvé: Were they designated under the ADA program or the ARDA program? I believe there is only one designated area under the ARDA program so far, and that is the Interlake region.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Establishment of advisory board.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a brief question on clause 7 with respect to the advisory board. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle raised this point during his excellent presentation at the second reading stage. Can the minister inform the house if there is any liaison between the advisory board and the resource ministers council through its permanent secretariat? I think it is most important, if we are going to have co-ordination of any comprehensive plans for resource development, that we not only have intergovernmental co-operation, that is co-operation between governments, but also intragovernmental co-operation. There are so many various departments at the federal level in the field of resource development, and the function of the resource ministers council was to achieve some overall co-ordination. Is there consultation?

Mr. Sauvé: As the hon. member knows, the secretariat has no administrative authority. What happens is that the secretariat is informed of the projects and programs that are carried out under ARDA. The ARDA program is reviewed annually by the committee of ministers. We submit to them everything we do. They have an annual report on what we are doing, and it is always on the agenda of the resource ministers conference. In this way some co-ordination can be maintained.

Mr. Schreyer: I believe that under clause 7 the minister was going to make some response to my question as to whether or not it was the practice that the people actually affected in these designated areas be given representation on these boards. If I might just clarify, Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that in the special rural development areas there is an area development board to be established. I understand that the area development board will be comprised primarily of individuals from the government. I ask the minister if it will be a requirement or a practice under this legislation to have residents of the area itself as representatives on these boards?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, in answer to that question I will refer to paragraph 33 of the federal-provincial rural development agreement, part VI. I quote:

> A comprehensive rural development program involves the following:
> 2. The involvement of local people through the establishment of rural development committees or similar bodies.

It is a condition that in the implementation of this Bill No. C-151, there should be committees at the local level.

Mr. Stewart: Before the clause carries, I should like to ask the minister if the Atlantic Development Board will be represented on the advisory board?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 8 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): When shall the bill be read a third time, now?

Mr. Starr: By leave, now.

Mr. Sauvé moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

NORRIS COMMISSION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being eight o'clock, it is my duty pursuant to section 3 of standing order 6 to suspend the proceedings now under way so that the house may revert to private members business for the taking of the vote which was postponed earlier this evening.

The question is as follows:

> That an order of the house do issue for copies of all the working papers prepared for the Norris commission by the chartered accountants hired by the commission and deposited by Mr. Justice Norris with the Department of Labour.

• (8:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I believe that this is the first time this rule may have been called into play. May I indicate that although we in this group during the supper hour asked for a recorded vote, we are willing that no such recorded vote be now taken. We should simply like to protect our position which we think obtains under the rules, that under that circumstance a vote could now be taken, if we so desired, even though five members were not here at the present moment. We do have more than five members here, but we are willing, if the house gives unanimous consent, simply to resolve this issue on a voice vote and not have the members called in by the bell.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Does the house give unanimous consent to have this issue resolved by a voice vote, rather than calling the members in and having a standing vote taken?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Orlikow) negatived, on division.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ELECTED MEMBERS, INDEMNITY, ETC.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-146, to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Nielsen: Surely, Mr. Speaker, the minister would like to make a statement on second reading.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will take a great deal of time in recounting again to the members of the house the very favourable economic conditions which are beginning to show themselves in the Northwest Territories, indeed in the entire north. However, I should like to put once more on record that this extremely vast area—I am now talking of the Northwest Territories alone—which comprises about 33 per cent of the land mass of Canada is beginning to demonstrate itself as an area of tremendous wealth. I am unhappy that more members of the House of Commons, indeed that all members of the House of Commons, have not had the opportunity of seeing the area, and in the year ahead I propose to endeavour to see that a representative group of members of the house do make this visit.

[Mr. Knowles.]

It is an extremely difficult, strange, challenging, yet beautiful area of Canada, particularly if you go there at the right time of the year. When I saw it first I came to the conclusion that if it had resources they lay underground, not on top. A great deal of the area has no vegetation of any kind on top of the rock or ice. However, we are now finding, probably in common with the Arctic area of the Soviet Union, that we have tremendous resources under the ground, resources of oil, gas, and minerals of various kinds. The challenge, of course, is that of distance and difficulty of communication, coupled with the fact that during seven months of the year adverse weather conditions and darkness contribute to a situation where most citizens would prefer to dwell in another part of Canada.

These are the drawbacks to this area, but we are now beginning to find that some of the deposits of metal being discovered are of such wealth that these difficulties can be overcome. This, however, inevitably leads to a spotty development. We have within the area settlements where the white man is there only because of the responsibilities he has to the indigenous people in matters of health. He is in other places only because of the responsibility we have in matters of defence with our allies. He is also to be found in the high Arctic islands, sometimes only to declare that they are part of Canada, that our sovereignty must be maintained.

The difficulty of communication between these points makes government within the territory very onerous indeed. We have substantially a western development along the Mackenzie which is growing very fast, particularly as a result of the extension of the Pine Point railway to Hay River. On the eastern side deliveries are made mostly out of Montreal by the high Arctic sea route. We are beginning to see that new methods of transport will be available in the future, largely by air. Indeed, we are finding that some of the goods taken in there now can be taken in competitively by larger aircraft, when costs are compared with river traffic and freight out of Montreal.

This places a very great burden upon the council of the Northwest Territories. So far it has resided, with a very small staff, substantially in Ottawa under a commissioner living in Ottawa. When I first went to the north I said that I would do my utmost to see that we get government in the territories as rapidly as we possibly can. At the moment we have a beautiful little town called Fort Smith, which some of the people in the north now call the capital. It is about a mile and a half to two miles north of the Alberta border. Spring comes a little earlier there than in most parts of the Northwest Territories. Up until the present time there was no access at all to Fort Smith, except by air or by water down the Slave river. We are now building a highway to Pine Point, the famous mineral area, which highway incidentally will be completed this year.

The government which preceded the present one decided to build the railway on the west side of Alberta, and I am rather of the opinion that what has happened since has confirmed the wisdom of building it on that side. However, in view of the wealth of the area, particularly in tar sands, metals and that sort of thing, as well as in forest reserves, it would not surprise me if in the years immediately ahead another railway is built on the east side of Alberta going up toward Pine Point, and probably intersecting the Pine Point railway.

To return to the difficulties of the council, for a good many years pressures have been exerted by the relatively small number of people who live in the territories to improve and increase the amount of authority they need to run their own affairs. I think it is a very good sign that this demand is made, and it would be depressing if that drive were not present. That is one of the characteristics of the old Northwest Territories from which developed the provinces we have in Canada today. There is a ferment in the area at the present time, and it is a very healthy ferment. As a result of that, on May 11 last year I announced in the house that we were setting up a commission of inquiry to look into the future of government in the Northwest Territories.

That commission was comprised of Dean A. W. R. Carrothers, professor and dean of law at the University of Western Ontario, who was the chairman of the commission, Mr. John H. Parker, Mayor of Yellowknife, and Jean Beetz, professor of constitutional law, at the University of Montreal.

We found that we had appointed a remarkably competent group of men. They have been through the territories twice—in some places three times—and they have elected to go in the dead of winter, to see what it was like living in those communities in that season. They proceeded up there in February of this year.

I want to remind the house of the terms of reference we gave that commission. We asked them to pay special attention, first to the views of residents of the Northwest Territories, and to the views of other Canadians with northern experience. Second, we asked them to pay attention to the nature of the federal responsibility for the territories, and third, to look into the question of the consideration of the political development of the territories contingent on the size, nature and distribution of population, and its ability to pay a significant share of the costs involved having regard to the present and prospective level of social and economic development. Next, we asked them to study existing forms of government as defined by the Northwest Territories Act and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources Act, and to pay attention to previous proposals affecting constitutional structure.

I am certain, Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind that this commission of inquiry is going to bring in its report to us by September, and probably earlier, by August, it may surprise some hon. members that we are at this time introducing any amendments whatsoever to the Northwest Territories Act. We feel that we must, in one or two respects, move on in a manner that will not affect the full report which we expect to get. It should indicate where we can move next with respect to government, in that particular territory.

For a long time there had been repeated complaints in the house that some of those who lived in the Northwest Territories were denied the right to elect members to their territorial council. Indeed, this was so. Many of those persons had no opportunity to vote, principally because they lived in little, widely scattered settlements, and the territorial council, and indeed the government, thought it inconceivable to be able to provide them with ballots. It was that simple. I refer to areas such as the upper Arctic, the eastern Arctic and the Keewatin district which could not send representatives to the territorial council.

We think, and indeed the territorial council thinks that this should be changed. We have made a commitment that changes would be made, that there will be three additional seats. This will result in increasing the numbers of the territorial council from 9 to 12. It will also have the result of giving, for the first time, the elected members of the territorial council a majority, as compared with those who are appointed.

Formerly we appointed five members, and we shall continue to appoint five from outside, under the amended act—

Mr. Nielsen: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Laing: Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the minister explain to hon. members why the government feels it necessary to appoint any members, rather than having them all elected?

Mr. Laing: Yes, I should be very happy to explain. This is a personal opinion. The more we can attract the attention of southern Canadians to the resources and the possibilities of the Northwest Territories, the better for all of us, and indeed, the better for the territories especially. Over the years we have appointed individuals knowledgeable about the north. Some of them were old hands from the north, and some of them had been engaged in defence, as my hon. friend knows.

They were appointed to be the representatives of southern Canada and, indeed, to give their knowledge of northern Canada to southern Canadians. I think that if we continue to make appointments of commissioners or councillors from southern Canada of the calibre that we have in the past, it would be all to the good of Canadians living in southern Canada, and to the good of the residents of the territories.

We have thought that those who toil are entitled to adequate remuneration. The members of the council have been drawing $2,000 per year. We think that opportunities to serve on council should now be given to every resident in the north competent to serve. We are therefore bringing in this amendment, increasing the emolument to $5,000 per year for elected members, of which $1,000 shall not be considered for taxing purposes. In addition to that, there are a number of other amendments where greater power is given to the commission and to the council, by the setting up of a territorial fund. I think hon. members of the house will realize that the territorial fund of the Northwest Territories is part of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. In the setting up of the fund, greater power is given to council to govern there.

Apart from total enfranchisement these are not greatly significant amendments, Mr. Speaker, but they are amendments which we feel at this time, when we are so imminently to receive a report as to what should be the government of the Northwest Territories, we are forced to make. They are the minimum amendments that I would make. To go beyond what we are suggesting in these amendments, or to prejudge the report we expect in August, or to anticipate it in any way, would be very wrong indeed, and would be an affront to the commission of inquiry we set up.

I want to remind the house now, that with respect to the territories of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories—and I speak predominantly of the Northwest Territories—today the taxpayer of southern Canada is sending in about $74 million per year. We are taking out of these two territories a total of $14 million per year.

These territories are deficit areas today. We are just at the point now where we are seeing the possibilities of enormous wealth being exploited there. Mr. Speaker, when you scrape off 20 feet or 30 feet of overburden and take out ore worth $150 a ton, you have a very rich mine. There are a great number of properties that are becoming apparent, which have considerable wealth, and which are sufficiently high in value to justify the admittedly higher costs of transportation and of living in the area.

We are concerned to day with the people who live there. We are putting in a splendid educational system. Eighty five per cent of the children attend school and they attend school 80 to 85 per cent of the time, which is very good for that climate.

I want to remind the house again that the preponderant indigenous population is not generically inferior to any other people in any way. When their young children go to school and they are afforded opportunities equal to those elsewhere, they are every bit as good as anybody else. An increasing number of the indigenous peoples are working in mines, running the railways and performing a variety of tasks which need to be performed, and which were performed previously by white people. As quickly as possible we must raise the numbers of indigenous employees in the territories. That is the only way in which we can construct an economy for those people.

Anyone who says that we must not invest in these people is helping to perpetuate a condition where we should forever have to send in money to sustain the territories. This is a suggestion which is intolerable to the people who live there, and intolerable to the people of southern Canada.

I think I shall say no more at this time, Mr. Speaker. If there are questions which hon. members wish to ask about the amendment, perhaps I could answer them as we proceed from section to section.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I like the minister's words, but I do not like the methods by which this bill seeks to achieve the laudable objectives which, he has explained, are the intention of the government.

When I speak of material objectives in the north I cannot help but contrast political philosophies. And when I speak of progress in our governmental institutions in the north I assure you, Mr. Speaker, and all hon. members, that I do so entirely without partisanship. I am sure the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) will join me in the sympathies I am about to express in this regard.

The government's objective of eventual self-government throughout the north is a laudable one. I will leave the Yukon apart for the moment, because we are discussing the Northwest Territories. But I suggest to the minister and to the government that the objective to which I have referred, however laudable, cannot be achieved by perpetuating a system of appointing members to a body which is supposed to be an elected body, representative of the people of the north.

This is not a continuation of the democratic evolution which has gone on in the Northwest Territories as a matter of history. It is a perpetuation of a colonial system of government. The situation which exists today and which existed under the previous government, whereby the majority of the members of the council were appointed by the governor in council that is, by the government of the federal power of the day, is an intolerable one. It is wrong.

Mr. Laing: We are correcting it.

Mr. Nielsen: It is wrong, whichever government does it. The minister says he and his friends are correcting the situation. But what this house is being asked to do is to alter a situation where there are five appointed members and four elected members in order to create a new one in which there will be a council composed of seven elected members and five appointed members.

As an argument for the continuance of the practice of appointing members, the minister has told us it is a good idea to expose men of commercial, industrial and academic interests to the north by having them serve on the Northwest Territories council, a body which meets half the time in Ottawa and half the time in the Northwest Territories. This is somehow supposed to be justification for appointing people from southern Canada. There is one exception—one which in itself is not consistent with the explanation the minister gave. I speak of Mr. Abraham Ogpik, an Eskimo, who is from the north.

The principle of appointing people to the council so that they may acquire some knowledge during their brief service and be in a position to disseminate it in southern Canada is, in my view, not a sound one. I say this regardless of which government may be in power, because I am dealing with the political development of the north. Then there is the argument that these people may help to provide the elected representative body of the Northwest Territories with some kind of expertise which is not otherwise available. This also is a wrong principle upon which to proceed. The minister knows as well as I do that this house, through its committees system, the provincial legislatures through their committees systems and, indeed, the Yukon legislative council through its system, can at any time call upon experts to assist them in developing thoughts, ideas and laws. There is, I submit, not one single reason or democratic excuse for perpetuating a colonialistic system of appointing members who are supposed to represent the people of the Northwest Territories when, in fact, those crown appointees, with one exception, come from everywhere else but the north.

Is that particular appointment proper? I do not know. I hope to have the pleasure of meeting the Eskimo member of the council some day and discussing the problems of the north with him. But is it right, under a democratic system such as ours, for any resident of the north to be appointed to a council rather than run for election as does every other representative of the people in any democratic institution? There is every reason to expect that should an Eskimo or an Indian run for election to the territorial council, he would have a chance of success. What is the excuse for this colonialistic idea of appointing people to be so-called representatives on what is supposed to be a democratic institution? This, sir, is simply paying lip service to the idea of democracy. Either we are creating a legislative council composed of elected representatives of the people—and this means precisely what the phrase indicates—or we are not. There is no point in attempting to hide the fact that the institution as it now exists is unrepresentative by introducing so-called expertise when making appointments. This simply will not sit.

I do not accuse or charge any member of this house with an intentional lack of appreciation of what goes on in the north. But the north is a long way from here and its history and its people and its land are largely unknown to the members of this house, simply because they have not been there, because they have not read enough, because they do not know their geography. But one thing is sure: There is not a member in this House of Commons who believes that in any institution which is supposed to be representative and democratic there is a place for people who are appointed rather than elected. It is either an elected representative body or it is not. It boils down to that.

The people of the north want more say in their own affairs, as the minister himself agrees. They will not get it through this process of appointing members to a legislative council. They will get it only when they can express their wishes through their elected representatives in a truly democratic institution. This will not come about by continuing the colonial idea of appointing people to what is supposed to be an elected representative body. That is wrong.

The minister has said—and I speak only with respect to the principle of the bill—that a reasonable indemnity must be set for the members who are being asked to serve on this council. With this I agree. But in the same breath that he says we want to move gradually toward giving the people in the north more responsibility, more say in their own affairs, he is asking this House of Commons, which is a federal elected body, to set the indemnities of another elected body. Surely hon. members can see how wrong that is. It is like asking this house to set the indemnities for the legislature of the province of Quebec, or the legislature of Alberta, or the legislature of P.E.I.

If there are people capable of serving on the council—and the minister knows and has said that there are—then surely they are responsible enough to set their own indemnities. Or are we to treat these representatives who sit on this council like babies? Are we in this house to watch over their every move and say, "You can have only so many dollars and no more?" If they are responsible enough to set their own indemnities, but they set them too high, they will have to answer to their own electors.

The minister is one of many who hold the view—and I do not hold it against them for doing so, because it is simply another point of view—that he who pays the piper must call the tune, that there can be no real autonomy, or progress toward autonomy until such time as people in the north can pay their way. That, sir, was not the case when the province of Manitoba was carved out of the Northwest Territories in 1879. There were fewer white citizens in that province in that day than there are in the Yukon and Northwest Territories today.

Per capita, there are greater subsidies being paid to some of the other provinces than there are to the north. There is no price tag on democracy. If, sir, you admit that there are responsible people in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon—and the minister knows and says there are—then surely they can be entrusted with the expenditure of funds which they derive from taxing themselves and their own resources, and with the expenditure of federal grants and subsidies, in the same way as any provincial legislature.

I am not suggesting for a moment that this house or this country move in the immediate direction of autonomy, or of self-government tomorrow in the north. That would be irresponsible; but I am suggesting that there should be a planned and phased blueprint now for moving in this direction. It is a misconception of democratic progress in that direction to suggest that we must, forever and a day, watch over every action of the members of the legislative council of the Northwest Territories because they cannot be trusted to spend, not only their own moneys but those that come from and have been approved by this house. That is not the case. The best example that can be cited is the schoolboard in Yellowknife which has been functioning for many years, largely spending federal funds.

The minister has said something about the need to move in the direction of more autonomy. I am not going to discuss specific provisions of the bill, nor am I going to say to the minister that he was intentionally paying lip service to that aim, because I know he is a dedicated individual when it comes to moving in the directions which he feels within himself are most beneficial to northern progress—moving in a direction which he feels will result in the north playing its full part and making the contribution that he, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange), and I, know it can make to the over-all national economic fabric of the country—just as the west did when it was growing. But I say to the minister that he is moving backward when he takes away from the legislative power of the council the right to introduce money bills, and that is what he is doing under clause 19 of this bill.

Clause 19 of the existing Northwest Territories Act gives the council the right to introduce money measures, and naturally so. This should be the case and because the council itself imposes taxes on the people who live there it should have the right to pass laws disposing of the revenue derived from those taxes. I say that this should be so, notwithstanding the extend of the contribution made by the federal government. Yet this bill takes that right away. I draw this provision to the attention of hon. members and I know that the hon. member for Northwest Territories has sympathy with what I say.

That is precisely what the minister and the government are doing under clause 19 of the bill. It is transferring the right of the council itself to introduce money measures to the commissioner in council. In other words, if this bill passes, no member of the council will henceforth have the right to introduce a measure which affects in any way howsoever the consolidated revenue fund to be set up by this bill.

The only power that will be left to the legislative council will be the power to withhold passing supply. Members of the council will have every right to tax themselves but will have no right to spend any of the money. Surely, sir, this cannot be construed as moving in the direction of giving them more to say in their own affairs, or moving in the direction of autonomy, or of self-government. It is a retrograde step.

Why is this provision there? I shall suggest a reason, and would hope I am wrong. I believe it is there because the balance of power is shifting. Instead of there being five appointed members and four elected members, under this bill it becomes seven elected members and five appointed. Therefore the bill is saying that we cannot entrust to the responsibility of the majority—that is, the elected members—the power to introduce money measures. That is the result of this bill. I hope I am wrong on this motivation.

Mr. Laing: Your batting average for wrong is high.

Mr. Nielsen: Does the minister suggest for a moment that what I have been saying this evening is wrong?

Mr. Laing: Of course it is wrong.

Mr. Nielsen: I would like the minister to point out where I am wrong.

Mr. Laing: They have more power now.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister says they have more power now. I cannot conceive that he really believes that. The power that the legislative council has now, before passage of this bill, is exactly the same with respect to the introduction of fiscal measures as that of any provincial legislature. The minister cannot gainsay me on that. What this bill will do is take that power away from the legislative council and place it in the hands of the commissioner in council.

The minister knows that the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories is appointed by the government of the day, by the governor in council. Therefore there will not be any money measure introduced into the Northwest Territories council unless it has the prior approval of the Commissioner, an appointee of the federal government. That statement is not wrong, it is precisely accurate.

If what I have suggested is wrong, Mr. Speaker, let the minister now say so. I suggest the principle is wrong in this regard, and for that reason this bill will not move the Territories progressively toward the time when they will have self-government. I suggest this is a step backwards and will take from the elected representatives of the people the rights they should enjoy. In fact, what the Commissioner and the council will be doing, and really it is the Commissioner, because a money matter cannot get to council unless it has passed him, is taxing without representation. We all know what happened in Boston many years ago as a result of the perpetuation of that idea. I am not suggesting that the same result will occur in the Northwest Territories, but the people there feel just as deeply about the situation as we do in the Yukon.

We are not suggesting to the government or the minister that we should be given self-government; we are not suggesting that we should have autonomy; but we do say, for heavens sake, let us do away with this colonialism approach to government in the north and give us more say in our affairs—not all at once, but gradually. The principle in this bill is not a principle that should be followed in an attempt to do that.

As far as the Carrothers commission is concerned, for all the good intentions behind the establishment of it, for all the good principles and concepts involved indeed for all the good work that that commission is likely to do, is it following a reasonable principle? We are being asked to establish a committee to determine in effect whether or not democratic procedures should exist in the north. I can understand the reasoning behind economic study, but I cannot understand the reasoning behind a study to determine whether or not there should be a fully elected body of people to represent the north. Such a principle is a wrong principle. I cast no slurs on the commission in making that observation, but we are being asked to proceed on the basis of a wrong principle.

Any suggestion that we should determine whether or not there should be democratic procedure and machinery in the north, to determine whether or not it is a good or a bad idea to give the people at the local level more say in their own affairs, is a wrong principle. I sugegst it is a ruse—an unintentional ruse, perhaps, but none the less a ruse. We must either accept the principle that it is desirable to create and maintain democratic institutions, or that it is not. This bill does not do that, and does not even move in that direction.

I do not intend to introduce any amendment at the resolution stage, nor does my party. We intend to leave this duty to the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, the minister and the government which he supports. We do implore the government and that hon. member to direct their attention to the real desires and requirements of those people they are supposed to be representing.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am one of those so-called southern Canadians who admittedly has not set foot in the Northwest Territories and consequently does not know about personal experiences and situations there from first hand knowledge. I do not know of conditions or concepts there, but as has always been the case in this house, I am one who feels that he votes reluctantly on matters concerning the Northwest Territories.

For the most part, being an outsider and not knowing about conditions and concepts, I think it is presumptuous for us to run full tilt into legislation which affects such a large group of people who are, and in fact have been for many years, living in a communal state. These people are governed by laws made mainly without their consent and without their knowledge. It may be harsh to refer to this area as one which exists in a communal state, but that is the fact. Practically every phase of life in the Northwest Territories falls within the jurisdiction of a group here in Ottawa, many thousands of miles removed from the scene. They have an absentee type of government.

We are being asked to deal with fundamental questions of civil and property rights, freedoms and liberties and a whole range of social and educational matters. These things in any other province of Canada are matters of concern and jurisdiction of local governments. Over the years the only freedoms and rights that have been extended to the people of the Territories have been those extended by this government in Ottawa. Almost inevitably their rights and freedoms have been determined by outsiders.

I may be an outsider or a southern Canadian by the standards of the people who live in northern Canada, but I believe I understand the basic rights and freedoms of people to the point that I can appreciate what should and should not be done. From the point of view of making laws, it is wrong for a governing body to extend to certain groups of people the freedoms and rights that the governing body deems correct. That is the reverse of a true democratic process.

These people should determine their own freedoms and rights, because these things should not be given by the grace of others. That has not been the case so far as the Northwest Territories is concerned. The bill before us represents an extremely minor, timid and gentle step toward a recognition of the fundamental rights of those people who should run their own affairs. Up to now they have been the subject of extreme paternalism without progress. These people are much like the children of a parent who refuses to accept the fact that they have grown up, a parent who continues to exert parental discipline after his children have become adults.

Any lesson that can be learned from history in this regard should have been learned as a result of our experience with our Indian populations. Our conduct toward these people up until recent times has reflected a paternalism of the worst sort, and an attitude that the native people knew nothing while the people in Ottawa knew everything. We should, by the experiences we have had in our dealings with native Indian people, be learning that paternalism is not the answer, that paternalism only serves the ego of him who governs, and does not, except in an extremely limited way, serve the interests of the people who are governed.

The essence of our democratic structure is self-government. This is fundamental to the social, economic and political well-being and progress of any people. I do not think the expected report of Professor Carrothers will run counter to our basic concept of freedoms in this nation, and if it does it should be discarded. I know Professor Carrothers and have sat on a couple of boards with him in dealing with other matters, and as an individual I have come to appreciate and like him. I am sure that his report will underline and substantiate what we all know about the fundamental rights and freedoms of people, namely that these things are their business. Therefore I do not think that we should wait too expectantly for the report of Professor Carrothers except perhaps in so far as details are concerned.

The basics and fundamentals of our rights and freedoms are part of our development; they are part of our constitutional structure; they are part of our respect one person for another. These things cannot be pushed to one side by the report of any commission, and I do not think that in this instance they will be. Our objective must be self-government, as Lincoln put it, of, by and for the people—the people, here, being those in the Northwest Territories.

Under our constitution, almost 100 years old now, we developed the principle of different levels of government, one being federal and the other provincial; one equal with the other in so far as their exclusive right over jurisdiction was concerned. Out of this we have developed an admiration and respect for the rights of provinces to legislate in the fields exclusively set aside to them by the constitution. The provinces respect the exclusive jurisdictions carved out in the British North America Act and allocated to the federal parliament. Where there has been a desire to alter those exclusive jurisdictions or come to agreement about them, it has been done by mutual consent and an amendment to the constitution to alter the original provisions. This parliament did that not too long ago with respect to survivors' benefits. We did it some years ago with respect to unemployment insurance.

I submit that this division of jurisdiction and responsibility for political and economic rights and freedoms of people is ingrained so much as part of our constitutional and governmental structure that herein lies the answer to what should occur within the territories. A number of people in the territories who have looked at this matter seriously—I may be in error in coming to this conclusion—think that even though provincial status is their objective, perhaps to achieve it today or overnight would be premature and injurious in the long run. I understand that this view is taken because of the relatively small population, the vast distances between places and communities, the limited financial base of the area, part of which stems from the limited population and part from the heretofore failure to explore, develop and exploit the natural resources of the area.

If it is the considered opinion of all who know the situation intimately, particularly the people in the area affected, that the status of a province now would be premature and injurious, I suggest that the federal government should take the lead, without waiting for the report of Dean Carrothers, in the promotion of, let us call it a territorial-dominion constitutional conference. I believe that if representatives of the federal government and the territories were to sit down and go over the jurisdictional questions involved we might be able to delineate within our constitution an intermediate step between the situation that prevails now and the status of a province, an intermediate step which would provide self-government to the territories to the fullest possible degree and the removal or elimination of federal government involvement, at least in so far as political freedoms are concerned.

I think that such an amendment to the British North America Act could be accomplished without much difficulty. I toss these out as thoughts of my own and not as any firm proposition as to what should be the division of constitutional jurisdiction. But it would seem to me that one of the areas of exclusive jurisdiction in so far as the territories are concerned would be with regard to elections of council, elections of municipal governments and bodies contained therein, the determination of the right to vote and qualifications in this respect, within the bounds that there should not be any restrictions based upon race, colour or creed, which is an understood provision in the Canada Elections Act. This area of political freedom and the right of people to choose their own representatives should, I think, be one for the exclusive determination of the territories themselves.

The machinery of elections and the like should be theirs, and not that of the federal government; because one of the bases of democracy is political freedom and the right of people to elect their own representatives to boards, agencies and governments which are going to legislate over them. There is another area that I think is pretty fundamental to the full development of the territories—again, this is only my own thought—and this is the basic question of the effective control of education, which is now a superimposed matter. I believe this might be a proper area for the exclusive jurisdiction of the territories to legislate curricula and the like, in so far as education is concerned, because, first, education is the basis of understanding and, second, because the jurisdictional right of education is enshrined within the purview of the provincial governments at the present time, and is likely to remain there. When the territories get to the stage of becoming a province this will be one of their prime responsibilities, in any event.

There is an interesting part here about the degree to which education should be developed, perhaps to an extent which we in Ottawa cannot comprehend or to an extent perhaps that the government cannot comprehend. One of the statements in the reference paper for the advisory commission on the development of government in the Northwest Territories states that language plays a key role in creating opportunities to realize potential. This refers to people in the territories. It also states that in the 1961 census it was revealed that out of a total Indian and Eskimo population of 13,233, only slightly more than 5,000, or a little more than one-third of the native Indian and Eskimo population of the territories, had a good working knowledge of English. Conversely, almost two-thirds of the population did not have a good working knowledge of English. I submit that in this educational matter there must be the right of people in the Northwest Territories to determine the form which their education is going to take in order that people may be conversant one with the other. This may involve extensive courses, not exclusively of the English language or the French language, but extensive courses in the ability to understand the language the Aleutian people use, the Eskimos, and others, in order that the development of a basis for understanding and communication can come about as quickly as possible. I submit this is one of the several reasons why education might be one of the fundamental questions carved out for the exclusive jurisdiction of any territorial government.

Other matters such as health and welfare which are the basis of a full, happy and healthful life, are subjects which have for some years been neglected in the territories. For instance, the disease of tuberculosis is higher than anywhere else in Canada; infant mortality is higher; life expectancy is lower. The older people in the territories have more difficulty in finding employment and maintaining body and soul.

I believe these are matters which the government in the territories could probably administer to a far better extent than could an absentee landlord or an absentee government in Ottawa. I believe the matter of industry, employment and development of industry should rest in the hands of the territorial government, because this is the basis for social security. The statistics with respect to income in the territories, as indicated in the government document to which I referred earlier, are absolutely shocking by any standards. While we cannot feel emotionally about statistics, if we think in terms of these as related to people, we will come to some understanding of the difficulties confronting the people in the territories. The per capita personal cash income by ethnic groups in the Northwest Territories in 1963 with respect to Indians was a little more than $500 per year, in comparison to less than $500 per year for Eskimos. This document gives another designation which I do not like to an ethnic group. I will refrain from using the word because I think it should not be used in a publication of this sort. However, the document has a designation of "white".

The non-Indian and non-Eskimo population in the territories has a per capita personal cash income of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $3,000, compared with approximately $500 for the people who are native to the area. This is a shocking statistical state of affairs and is brought about partly by the blind paternalism on this and former governments.

I am one of those who believe that even though Dean Carrothers will submit his report shortly, that in so far as preparing the basis of constitutional self-government in the territories is concerned, we have no right to wait except for possibly the mechanics of doing it. Let me repeat this, that I am as sure as I am standing here that Professor Carrothers is not going to bring in a report which will undermine our fundamental concept of our desire for self-government. If he does, then that report should be discarded at once because this is running completely counter to everything which is ingrained in us about political freedoms. To wait for the Carrothers report is merely an extension of the old game of delay and procrastination. We have been delaying, as I said earlier, procrastinating and engaging in paternalism with respect to our native people for more than 100 years, if we go back beyond confederation.

It is just within the last year or two that we are beginning to get a glimmer of understanding of the problems in the territories. We are beginning to understand the damage which has been done to our native Indian population and the damage which it is doing to our concept of democracy itself. We should learn by our errors of the past and discontinue the concept of paternalism with which the Indians of the territories are concerned. I believe steps should be taken immediately to arrange for a federal territorial conference to see if we cannot move quickly toward the question of self-government for the people of that area, based upon mutual desire on their part, and mutual respect and desire on our part to provide it. On this basis I would be happy to vote for an amendment to the necessary statute law in the House of Commons relating to the rights and freedoms of these people in the territories. As it is, I am reluctant to do so because I believe it is wrong for the government body persistently to make decisions about what freedom should be extended to that group which is being governed.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): I should like to open my remarks by complimenting the minister upon his introductory statement, particularly his reference to resource development in the Northwest Territories. I should like also to express my appreciation of the former ministers of northern affairs some of whom are still in the house and some of whom have left us. Each of these men, in his own way, has put aside political partisanship to give direction to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources in order that northern Canada would grow in a way that those of us who live there would like to see it grow. I was more than happy with the remarks of the minister when he said he was hopeful that hon. members of this house might have an opportunity to visit the north. He suggested that there was a right time of the year to do this. I suggest the best time would be in the months of January and February, when one sees the north as it really is.

Many of our northern people were excited when the minister predicted that possibly there would be a further extension of the railroad into southern Mackenzie. Transportation is our key for development. I know he was making a prediction in this connection, but those of us who live there are looking forward to this day.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Regardless of our positions in the house, I think both of us, in our own way, have a deep interest in the affairs of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I have the affection for the hon. member for Yukon because in 1961, as a result of his presentation in this house, the franchise was extended to the people of the eastern and central Arctic. It was in this area that on November 8 we obtained our majority. I am confident that tonight, as the member for the Northwest Territories, I speak on behalf of the people of that area who welcome the basic principle contained in this bill, that is the extension of the territorial franchise to the people who live there. This will give persons in the central and eastern Arctic an opportunity of expressing their views on territorial matters.

This bill will give to the Eskimo people and the people whom, with deference to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), we in the north call the people from the outside, a chance to participate in the territorial government, a chance to express their views on those matters which are territorial in nature. At the present time the council of the Northwest Territories consists of nine members, together with a Commissioner. The Commissioner is appointed and sits with the council during its deliberations. We have heard during the earlier discussions that five of these members are appointed by the government of Canada. One member is the deputy commissioner who acts in every respect in the absence of the Commissioner.

It is only in recent years, Mr. Speaker, that there have been elected representatives on the Northwest Territories council. The first elected representative sat in 1952. In 1954 the number of elected representatives on the council was increased from one to four. This is how we know the council today. The proposal before us now is to add three additional elected representatives from the constituencies comprising the central Arctic, Keewatin and Franklin. It may be argued that this will give the elected representatives a majority on the council and thus greater control over their own affairs.

During the course of the evening we have heard discussion regarding the appointed members of the Northwest Territories council. Putting other considerations aside for one moment, I think I should mention the contribution which has been made to northern Canada by persons who have been appointed to the territorial council by the various governments of Canada. I could refer to our present Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury), who at one time was an appointed member of council. I could refer to the publisher of the Ottawa Journal. These people have served on the council at their own expense. They were not paid an honorarium, but were paid their expenses. They have served, at times at great inconvenience to themselves, and on all occasions have exhibited a deep and abiding concern for the people and the resources of the north. I think I would be wrong if I did not mention the contribution the appointed members have made to the growth of the Northwest Territories.

The north is changing, and changing rapidly, with the increase in communications systems and the tremendous resource development which has taken place. As a result of the government's development program, the northern residents have been offered the same opportunity for education, health, welfare and economic development that their cousins in southern Canada have. There is a genuine desire in the north on the part of the people to have a greater expression in the management of their own affairs. The northern people want and demand more political autonomy. They want to have greater participation in their own government, more say in the determination of local territorial policy. To this end, I believe the advisory commission on government in the north, better known as the Carrothers commission which during the past year has asked northerners their views on the type of government they believe they could have, will be presenting its report. I was a little concerned this evening when I heard some reference to the fact the Carrothers commission may not adequately represent the views of the people of the north when that report is presented to the government.

I have a great deal of faith in the ability and integrity of the people who were appointed to this commission. I believe, as a result of watching from a distance, the kind of interest and concern that they have shown in the Northwest Territories, the members of this commission will present to the government the consolidated views of the people of the Northwest Territories. It may be that as a result of their deliberations amongst themselves, they will not properly present those views. However, I have confidence in the people of the north to express themselves if and when the Carrothers Commission does not do an adequate job. It is for this reason, so far as the Northwest Territories Act is concerned, I think we must look to the amendments before us as housekeeping amendments. The only exception is the proposal to extend the territorial franchise to the eastern Arctic.

It is because this measure is intended to give the only group of people in North America who do not have the right of self-government, a vote in an election, provincial, federal or state, that I would hope the members of this house would accept the bill with the greatest possible dispatch. I say this because the life of the present Northwest Territories council expires in March, 1967. Between now and that time, there will be a minimum of two council sessions. I hope that as a result of these amendments by-elections will be held at the earliest possible date, thus permitting representatives from the eastern Arctic to sit on the council for the balance of the present sessions, and thereafter in perpetuity. As soon as assent is given to the bill the commissioner of the Northwest Territoriel will be empowered to call by-elections in time for the newly-elected members to join their colleagues for the coming session of the council this summer.

There are two sections of the bill which cause me some concern and which I believe have been referred to previously by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). However, I should like to state my own feelings in this regard.

The first matter of concern to me relates to the principle involved in section 12 of the act, which will increase the present indemnities paid to the elected members of the Northwest Territories council from $2,000 per year to $5,000. This also includes a $1,000 tax exemption. Incidentally, this section also provides for the first time an indemnity to appointed members of the council at the rate of $3,500 per annum.

There is no doubt in my mind that it is essential that the indemnities now paid to the elected representatives be increased. This will give the elected members the opportunity to spend more time with their constituents. Those of us who know southern Canada find it hard to realize the time, distance and expense involved, even with a small constituency in the north, for an elected member from the Northwest Territories to travel to his constituency to meet the people he represents. If the Northwest Territories council is truly to express the views of the people of the north and to take over increased responsibility in the management of their own affairs, I think that in this section there is an opportunity for the government of Canada to give the council greater authority by allowing it to establish its own indemnities. As the hon. member for Yukon mentioned a moment ago, if the people of the north are not satisfied with the rates of pay which the councillors establish for themselves, they will express themselves properly at the ballot box at the next election.

A second area of even greater concern to me is the proposed amendment to section 19A of the act, which in effect states that only the Commissioner may introduce money bills in the council. As I said earlier, the Commissioner is an appointed person; he is appointed by the governor in council and, in effect, is a civil servant. The principle being proposed in this amendment is consistent with the responsibilities of the executive in both the federal and provincial governments throughout Canada. However, I suggest that the situation of the Northwest Territories is somewhat different.

As the executive arm of government is represented by the commissioner, it is possible that the situation might arise—though I do not anticipate it—where members of the council who are anxious to see a particular matter brought into legislation—primarily a money matter—would not be able to do so because the Commissioner took an adamant position. In theory the Commissioner can refuse to introduce the necessary measures to the council which meet with the wishes of the elected representatives.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the amendment to section 19A provides for the establishment of a Northwest Territories consolidated revenue fund. Up to the present time those revenues which are solely territorial in nature have been kept in the consolidated revenue fund of Canada and are only released to the Commissioner and the council through the written authority of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Commissioner and the council will have control over revenues which are territorial in nature.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Orange: When I have concluded. On the one hand, we see what appears to be a backward step by giving the Commissioner exclusive control over the introduction of money bills in the council; on the other hand, the Commissioner and the council have more direct control over their own financial resources.

I have been told that, in the first instance, this section was not previously included in the Northwest Territories Act because of an oversight. I accept this explanation up to a point. I should like to think that the minister will look into this contentious section once again and determine, in the light of the recommendations of the Carrothers commission, what means might be developed whereby councillors will have a greater say in the introduction of money bills in the council.

The situation in the Yukon territory is somewhat different. In the Yukon territory there is a financial advisory committee who meet with the commissioner, and comes to Ottawa from time to time to meet with the minister to determine the budget of the Yukon territory. Possibly this is the answer, or part of the answer, to the problem which I think the territorial council in the Northwest Territories is facing.

Those of us who call northern Canada home acknowledge the contribution to the development of our area made by successive governments of Canada. We have seen the growth of our educational system which, in the space of a decade, has increased enrolment in schools from 15 to 20 per cent to 85 per cent at the present time; and within a few years this enrolment should reach the maximum of 100 per cent. We are proud of the fact that a student can enter primary grades and continue his education through lower school, high school and college at no great financial sacrifice to his parents. Through our education program it is possible for our youngsters whose parents still live in the traditional way to receive a complete education and to take their place in Canadian society.

The education program of the north is a good program, but like all good programs it has its limitations. Northerners are concerned sometimes by the direction the program may be taking. We wonder whether the program itself is training people to meet the responsibilities of a developing northern economy. I should like to think that within a very short time the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, through the officials of his department, might consider, our resources lying, as the minister himself said, not on top of the ground but beneath the ground and whether our education program should be designed to train our young people to participate in the mining and oil industries. I hope that the minister might consider the establishment of a school of mines in the north which would not only train our young people to take their place in the northern economy, but to take their place particularly within the mining industry.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments which are before the house in my opinion, and I suggest in the opinion of many people, can only be considered as housekeeping amendments. Perhaps there are one or two contentious issues here. However, in the interest of expediting the enactment of legislation which will permit the granting of the franchise to the only residents of Canada who do not have it at the present time, I hope that this bill can pass the house very quickly.

[Mr. Orange.]

I also hope that members such as the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), who expressed a very great interest in the north and the desire to visit northern Canada, will have the opportunity of presenting their views to the Carrothers commission. I commend the hon. member for his interest in northern Canada, and I hope that this interest will permeate throughout the entire house so that Canadians generally will become involved and concerned with northern Canada, which in the opinion of many of us is the place where Canada will make its true mark in the world.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. member permit a question, after his very excellent speech. I may have misheard him, but I do not think so. Does he not agree, under the act as it exists now, that the Commisisoner in council has the absolute authority to legislate with respect to fiscal matters, but that in the proposed change he may not so legislate except when the appointee of the government of Canada introduces a money matter to council?

Mr. Orange: No.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member will not agree with that.

Mr. Orange: No.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): It is always refreshing, Mr. Speaker, to hear the representatives for the vast area north of the sixtieth parallel in debate in this house. As the previous speaker has just indicated, regardless of party they bring a refreshing atmosphere, a refreshing candor to the house, which is a style that is peculiar to northern representatives. I would agree with the present member for the Northwest Territories that that has been demonstrated here over the years. Mr. Hardie, when he was a member, radiated that particular essence of the northerner. He was succeeded by his wife for a short period, who carried out the work of her husband. More recently we have had that genuine northerner, Mr. Rhéaume, in the house. I call him genuine, without prejudice. He grew up in northern Manitoba. Even though I myself am a Manitoban, when I say that in many respects Manitoba has pioneered northern development, I think I shall be understood by hon. members to be speaking without prejudice. Mr. Rhéaume had the advantage of an excellent preparatory background, for his service to the north. Also speaking tonight have been the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), and the present hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange).

I enter this debate, Mr. Speaker, for two reasons. This happens to be an historic day in northern development. Ninety six years ago today, Mr. Speaker, the great leap forward in northern development took place when the province of Manitoba became the first province to be formed out of the huge western territory that was known generally as the Northwest Territories. Great celebrations are taking place in Manitoba today to mark that occasion. There are observances in every school. You may be sure that the young people of Manitoba will be made completely aware of the fact that development in Canada, ever since the earliest days, has been in constant progression outward into the Northwest Territories.

I speak also, Mr. Speaker, as a former minister of the crown responsible for northern development. I agree with my successor, the present Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, that there have been recent developments in the Northwest Territories, as well as in the Yukon territory, that are greater than could have been anticipated when the new outward thrust got under way in this country, some ten years ago.

It is a rather sad commentary on our record as a pioneering nation to recall that following the establishment of the province of Manitoba in 1870, there was no further development towards provincial status for the Northwest Territories until 1905. In that year the province of Saskatchewan and Alberta joined confederation, with complete autonomy. Looking back at the history of that period, we find that the famous debate on the autonomy bill took some four years, before finally being approved by the house in 1905. I do not think the present bill is going to be before the house for that long period of time.

Actually, as the hon. member for the Northwest Territories was intimated, this is a housekeeping bill and it does very little to advance the march toward autonomy and provincial status that has been the subject of discussion, both within the territories and outside, to an increasing extent during the past few years.

I am afraid that the rate of political development has not kept pace with the rate of economic development that was referred to by the minister. He referred to the Pine Point railway project which, of course, is exhibit A so far as the territories are concerned. This parliament approved of that measure, not necessarily with unanimity, as I recall, only five years ago. The colleagues of the present Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources looked at the economic potential of the Pine Point railway development with what might be called a jaundiced eye.

That railway is the great communications link which has made possible the remarkable economic development in the lower Great Slave lake area during the past two years. Communications are basic to economic development. It is for this reason that the government to which I belonged proposed, as a major plank in its northern development program, filling in the gaps in our communications system as quickly as possible.

It is only six or seven years ago that the present Prime Minister referred to this upsurge in communications and to this enthusiasm for communications as a case of jumping from igloo to igloo. That attitude no longer prevails. The government has accepted the philosophy and the enthusiasm of the former Conservative administration for northern development.

It is unfortunate that the political development has not kept pace with the recent economic development. A few years ago it was contemplated that by 1962, both the Yukon territory and the Northwest Territories would be taking substantial and joint steps in the direction of greater autonomy. In fact it was hoped that the political evolution would bring both these areas close to provincial status by 1967.

I will not review the history. Other speakers have mentioned it tonight—the extension of the franchise, the desire to give greater autonomy in the legislative sense in these territories, the desire to remove the seat of government from Ottawa to the territories, as far as that part of the north is concerned. These were all a part of the grand strategy.

The hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) has himself referred to the vociferous demand from northerners themselves for increasing control of their own affairs, and it is unfortunate we were not able to proceed to a greater extent toward the realization of these objectives. Unhappily there has been hesitation during the past few years.

We had some bills before this house, in 1964 I think it was, which contemplated political progress in the territories. At that time the government hoped to proceed to a division of the territories into two separate political entities. It is significant that the government and parliament did not proceed at that time because those bills were referred to the Standing Committee on Northern Affairs and National Resources, and as a result of the discussion it was discovered that the sentiments of the government and of parliament were out of tune with the desires of the representatives of the territories. I found that our discussions in the parliamentary committee were most enlightening. We were able to meet face to face with the actual spokesmen from the north, most of them showing the same colourful characteristics as are demonstrated by northern spokesmen in this chamber. It is significant that while the Northwest Territories council itself had recommended this particular solution to the problem of political development in the north, the spokesmen from the north disputed the recommendations of the council. This of course arose from the fact that the dominating influence on the council at that time lay with the appointed representatives rather than with the elected representatives.

Mr. Orange: Does the hon. gentleman not recall the vote on the part of the elected members regarding the splitting of the territories at the council session in Cape Dorset in 1962, when a decision was made on this matter?

Mr. Dinsdale: That is exactly what I am saying. The recommendation came out of the Northwest Territories council and, as I thought I was intimating, it was only when that recommendation was brought before a parliamentary committee, and we heard from the spokesmen of the north, that we found the recommendations of the Northwest Territories council to be inconsonant with those of the spokesmen of the people of the north. I thought I was making that point.

Mr. Orange: One question. My recollection is that spokesmen for the north, on the recommendation of the sitting member for the Northwest Territories, put forward their views, and that if the sitting had been continued there would have been other spokesmen from the north expressing different views. I am not arguing now the merits of the case for the division of the territories.

Mr. Dinsdale: Nor am I. I am making the point that the council at that time seemed to be not altogether representative of the genuine feelings of the north and I am suggesting that this would be because the elected representatives were not the predominant influence on the council.

It is for this reason that I heartily endorse the sentiments of my hon. friend from the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who has suggested that the time has come to make the Northwest Territories council entirely elective. I think the time is past due. The north has moved forward much more quickly than anyone—

Mr. Orange: You had the chance.

Mr. Dinsdale: The hon. member for the Northwest Territories says I had the chance. Well, we were moving in this direction in 1963 but for the past three years there has been no progress in this regard. I must say I have not had the chance for the past three years—almost four years.

I must observe that this non-partisan atmosphere has certainly degenerated recently. I am not defending anything here. I repeat: We have difficulty in this House of Commons in getting the pulse of the north and, in case the hon. member for the Northwest Territories still misunderstands, my point is that the progress of economic development there has been much greater than could have been anticipated and, unfortunately, it has left us behind in our political development.

I can quote the hon. member directly in this regard. He himself says that this is nothing but a housekeeping bill which does nothing to respond to the great desire of northerners for more autonomy and a greater degree of self government. A commission has been appointed to look into the question of autonomy and self-government in the north. My hon. friend from Yukon has already dealt with the subject. The commission is to report in September and nothing will happen in terms of granting greater self-government until this government takes action. It is therefore not making a direct contribution toward the solution of the problem we have all recognized here tonight.

I am making these preliminary remarks because I feel it would be in the best interests of political development in the north if this bill could be brought before the parliamentary committee, which is meeting at the present time. The experience which was ours in dealing with the bill on the division of the territories is a salutary one in this regard. As a result of meeting face to face with the spokesmen of the territories the government changed its mind completely on the matter.

The hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) has indicated that it is imperative that we proceed to give the territorial vote to the people in the eastern Arctic. They were given the federal vote in 1962 when we were in power, and we intended to give them the territorial vote as quickly as possible. I agree that it is imperative that they be given the territorial vote. An anomaly has existed for the past three or four years which should have been rectified before this.

I also agree that the indemnity situation should have been resolved. If discussion in the parliamentary committee will hold up progress in this regard, then I say by all means let us proceed. However, I hope this is not going to be an excuse for not giving a better response to the obvious demand for greater autonomy. When the Carrothers commission report is presented in September, I suggest that it be immediately referred to the standing Committee on Northern Affairs and National Resources so that we may draft the legislation that is urgently required.

I hope we can still make the target date of 1967 for the great step forward in progression toward more autonomy in the northwest. Vigorous action and leadership will be required on the part of the government, but judging from this discussion tonight everyone has the same aim. Personally, however, I feel that referring this bill to the committee could provide a framework within which the matter could be handled more expeditiously, because I fear a long period of delay after the Carrothers commission report is received. My recommendation is that the committee on northern affairs be given a chance to hear from the spokesmen for the north, and I would endorse the suggestion that has come from several sources that we ourselves set foot in the north. Further, I would agree the colder the better, because that is what gives the spokesmen from the Northwest Territories and the Yukon that peculiar, refreshing flavour in this house, with more of which we could all do.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 1—Council.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock as there will be further discussion on this.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: Tomorrow?

Mr. McIlraith: Tomorrow we propose continuing with the two bills standing in the name of the Minister of Northern Affairs, the bill concerning the Northwest Territories through committee stage, and third reading if it is agreeable to the house, and the bill to amend the Yukon Act through second reading and committee stage. We shall then take the Forestry estimates, the Labour estimates, the Post Office estimates, and after that the estimates of the Department of Industry.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL CENSUS—QUEBEC—INQUIRY INTO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONERS

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, this is a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) or his parliamentary secretary, because demagogic and unfounded accusations—I repeat demagogic and unfounded—were made against the government by an hon. member of this house and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that tonight's rebuttal of the allegations made by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) will receive the same coverage in the press as the accusing member got.

What is the complaint about? That people of Liberal allegiance were given the responsibility of the next national census, to begin next June 1. I do not know of any officially accepted definition of patronage but, without being a professional linguist or a lexicologist, I think, from experience of our electoral ways, that there is patronage when competence makes way to partisanship or political allegiances. If a government is lucky enough to get both the competence and the necessary ability to do the work, then I think there is no patronage.

• (10:00 p.m.)

However, I wish to make it clear that I am not as competent as the hon. member for Lapointe, whose absence I regret, to define patronage, because I think that as the close friend of Joseph D. Begin, he has more experience in that field.

However, if such an attack from the hon. member for Lapointe is valid, Mr. Speaker, it would be necessary to criticize the whole of our judicial institutions whose members often are former active members of this or that political party.

Then, each time a government appoints a judge, it would be necessary to talk of patronage because, quite by chance, the judge appointed to a superior court, even to the Supreme Court of Canada, is of such a political allegiance. It would be necessary to ask the government to explain its stand; it would even be necessary to ask the judge to resign because he seriously engaged in politics. That is stupid, illogical, to quote the very words the hon. member for Lapointe used when he deplored a situation in the house, namely that scandal mongering was always popular. He was the first to raise a scandal and he was the first a while ago to deplore that the House of Commons has reached such a point that nothing is discussed here but scandals.

Mr. Speaker, one often sees the straw in one's neighbour's eye but fails to see the beam in one's own. I say that there was no patronage in the appointment of the commissioners because all those who were appointed—the parliamentary secretary will answer me—passed examinations.

They took the required examinations. They took the tests provided for at the time. If the officials accepted them as being sufficiently competent and sufficiently qualified to fill the post of commissioner, there is no patronage.

There were even cases of people who had been recommended and who were turned down because, according to the tests, they did not have the necessary qualifications. That happened in my own riding and I would like, incidentally, to pay a special tribute to the census takers which have been appointed; they are people of extraordinary devotion and competence, of unusual ability in the riding of Lotbinière and I am convinced, they will do a wonderful job, truly efficient and worthy of the position they hold.

[Mr. Choquette.]

Under such circumstances, Mr. Speaker, there is no patronage. Finally, I would like to make an appeal for a stop to efforts aimed at discrediting politicians needlessly. Every time a member makes a suggestion, it becomes subject to suspicion, Mr. Speaker; because a politician suggests a name, it is naturally suspect.

There is always something suspicious about it, always something crooked about it, always something dishonest about it. That is how the prestige of politicians is destroyed, how the prestige of parliament is destroyed.

Because a member of parliament makes a suggestion, it does not mean that the idea is necessarily and fundamentally wrong. In the mind of the member for Lapointe, because ministers have made suggestions for the appointment of census commissioners, we must be wary of those suggestions.

This is the best way to discredit politicians. As for me, Mr. Speaker, I must say that, at times, I feel that if we persist in this,—I hate to use the word "patronage" because in this case we are not dealing with patronage—instead of political patronage we are heading for bureaucratic patronage. Often this type of patronage, and union patronage is far more suspect than that practised by the members who, at times, are entitled to show some gratitude toward people who have fought the good fight, provided that gratitude is not at variance with the fulfilment of one's duty, provided it is not at variance with the competence required in the performance of one's duties.

I therefore ask the parliamentary secretary, although I have almost answered the question myself: have the commissioners appointed to take the census scheduled to start on June 1 next passed any tests? Are there among them people who did not get the position because they failed the test? And finally, did the minister intervene personally to secure appointments for unqualified persons, when the director of the D.B.S. had made such and such recommendation?

Yet, Mr. Speaker, under section of the act pertaining to the D.B.S., the minister has full jurisdiction to make all the appointments he wants. The minister has absolute jurisdiction, under the act, to appoint whomever he wants.

I do not see how there can be any question of patronage. I suggest once again that the false charges made by the former friend of Joseph D. Bégin are demagogic and unfounded.

[English]

Mr. Webb: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member whether he will permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that—

Mr. Webb: I just want to ask the hon. member about the questions to be debated—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I must remind the hon. member that at this time an hon. member is allowed to present his question and the minister or his representative is allowed to reply; therefore no question can be put.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the ardour of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) always reminds me of a definition of General de Gaulle who said that politics is a great quarrel. I hope this quarrel will be kept on a high plane.

The appointment of the commissioners and the procedure for such appointment is laid down in section 5, subsection 1 of the Statistics Act which provides that it is the minister's duty to appoint the commissioners. This is how they are selected: suggestions are made in each district and names are submitted to officials of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The Bureau has a competent staff; there are specialists, examiners who examine every candidate and when a report is made to the minister that a candidate has successfully passed the examination, the appointment is then made by the minister.

I should like to emphasize that such appointments are made in accordance with the Act and according to the candidate's competence.

On the other hand, if the procedure provided by the Act were different, I am quite confident that all members are convinced that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) would have adhered to the procedure provided by the law, as he has done in the present circumstances.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF WORD "MOUNTED" FROM TITLE

Mr. Lawrence Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, the hour is late and I shall be very brief, but I do wish to take advantage of the time of the house to establish the origin of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I want to talk especially about the word "mounted" in that name, and point out to the house that Macleod, the constituency which I represent, has the distinction of being the place in Alberta in which the Northwest Mounted Police force was established. I wish to place on the record the history and development of the force and register strong objection to any change in its name, regardless of the fact that since that time the horse is being replaced by the motorcar.

The Northwest Mounted Police force was established in 1874. Shortly after that date it was placed under the direction of Commissioner Colonel Macleod. In 1904 the word "Royal" was added by His Majesty King Edward VII and the force became known as the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. The function of the Northwest Mounted Police when they set up headquarters at Fort Macleod, Alberta, and built a fort there—this was in the early days, 1874—was to clean up the illicit whisky trade being conducted among the Indians. The Blackfoot treaty was established in 1877. In addition to cleaning up the illicit whisky trade, the force wanted to catch the horse thieves in the area. The town of Fort Macleod, the constituency I represent, was named after Colonel Macleod. John Herron was elected its first representative in 1908.

For many, many years the Royal Northwest Mounted Police wore the scarlet uniform. That uniform was respected, and is respected today, in all parts of Canada. I wish to pay tribute to this force and say it is one of the best organized police forces in the world. Its symbol of authority was the scarlet uniform.

• (10:10 p.m.)

At Fort Macleod today they have erected a museum to which the government of Canada has contributed $25,000. I would like to see this government give consideration to having a detachment of Royal Northwest Mounted Police stationed at Fort Macleod during the tourist season to lend to the occasion a sense of colour and dignity.

I am told that at Waterton Lake it is optional with the R.C.M.P. whether they wear the scarlet uniform or not. I share the opinion with people of my constituency, and others who visit Waterton Lake, that we would like to see the scarlet uniform not optional but compulsory. The tourists who come there immediately want to know, "Where can I see someone in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with a scarlet uniform?" We see them dressed in this fashion in the national capital in the summertime. Why can they not do the same at Fort Macleod and at Waterton Lake? So I pass this suggestion on to the government because the people in my constituency are asking for it and it would not cost anything. This would lend dignity and prestige to the force.

In 1919 the Dominion of Canada took the name "Northwest" out of the name and substituted the word "Canadian", making it the Royal Canadian Mounted Police which is now the name of the force today. Let me say that regardless of what may happen to the use of horses, the removal of the word "mounted" would be very much opposed in the riding of Macleod. I am sure people throughout Canada would be opposed to any move on the part of the government or anyone else to remove that word "mounted" from the name Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

So I wanted to avail myself of this opportunity to speak on behalf of my people, the constituents of Fort Macleod, who have a pride in that name and who in turn are, above all, anxious to see that the word "mounted" remains in the title of the name we now have for the force once known as the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

Let me say in closing that there are plenty of ways that you can explain the word "mounted". They may be mounted on a motorcycle, they may be mounted on some other kind of vehicle. So there is no particular need for any change to be made in the name "Royal Canadian Mounted Police". I want to stress that point, simply because it was in my riding at Fort Macleod where all of this had its origin, and I wish to bring it to the attention of the Solicitor General.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I hope the hon. member will allow me to congratulate him both upon the spirit and the letter of his remarks. I can assure him that no consideration is being given to changing the name of this great enforcement agency.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.17 p.m.

FINANCE

TABLING OF STATEMENT RESPECTING ACQUISITION OF MERCANTILE BANK SHARES

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) asked that the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon) table a document to which the hon. member had made reference in rising on a point of privilege. I should like to table that document for the hon. member who unavoidably is absent.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR FIGURES ON RECRUITMENTS AND RELEASES FROM ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence a question which I am sure he is expecting. Will the minister give the house accurate information with regard to withdrawals and recruitments for the armed services? We were given a written answer on May 9 showing that withdrawals from the armed services for the first three months of this year exceeded recruitments by 1,525. Yesterday the minister gave us figures indicating that recruitments were greater than releases from the armed forces. Could we now have an accurate statement from him with regard to this problem?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Since this question is of a statistical nature I suggest it be put on the order paper.

Mr. Churchill: Oh, Mr. Speaker, the question was on the order paper and was answered on May 9, as is recorded in Hansard. The question was:

> What have been the total enlistments at the commissioned and non-commissioned levels during the months of January, February and March, 1966, by each branch of our armed services?

The second question was:

> By month, what have been the number of discharges and/or resignations at each level since January 1, 1966, by each branch of the armed services?

Those were the questions and we have the answers. I suggest that yesterday the Minister of National Defence, through ignorance, misled the House of Commons and the matter should be straightened out right away.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a problem of semantics, in respect to the question of withdrawals, between voluntary releases and total releases. The question answered the other day in Hansard referred to releases. To the best of my knowledge the figures I gave yesterday—and I will take the question as notice and give my hon. friend a more definitive answer on Monday—referred to voluntary releases.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. This is an attempt by the minister to evade a very important issue in this country. He used the word "releases" yesterday and did not preface it with the word "voluntary" or anything of that nature. I suggest, sir, that this is showing complete disregard for the rights and privileges of this house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no question of privilege here. This is a dispute over the interpretation of facts and figures between the Minister of National Defence and the hon. gentleman who placed the question. Certainly I do not think this is the time to resolve the difficulty.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister took a question of mine as notice yesterday. Is he prepared to answer today?

Mr. Hellyer: Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. I wonder whether the minister is aware of the effect that his attitude, displayed yesterday and today, is having on the morale of the members of the Canadian armed forces.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is not acceptable.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON WORK OF MEDIATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that it will be two weeks on Sunday since the Prime Minister asked Mr. Stuart Keate to consult with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation management and producers, does the Prime Minister yet have a report from Mr. Keate on the results of his efforts? If not, will he make an inquiry and give us a statement on Monday?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I asked Mr. Keate how he was getting along the other day, and he said he was getting along very well and hoped to be able to finish his work very shortly.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. member for York South asked the Prime Minister about the attendance of the executive assistant to the Secretary of State at these talks. Can the Prime Minister reply to that question today?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. When Mr. Keate was good enough to take on this assignment he indicated to me that he might need assistance of a general and administrative character from somebody with knowledge of broadcasting and its relationship to government, who could do some research work and help him in his communications. For that purpose the Secretary of State agreed to make available to Mr. Keate her executive assistant, and he has been helping Mr. Keate in that capacity.

TRADE

HIDES AND SKINS—COPPER—OPERATION OF EXPORT CONTROLS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in view of the importance attached to controls on calf hides and skins. Has he anything further to add to the explanation he gave to the house in an answer on April 27?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was kind enough to give me notice of his question. I might say that since I replied to a similar question in the house on April 27 there has been no material change in the situation affecting hides and skins. No permits have been issued for re-export to any destination of United States origin hides and skins since the requirement for permits was imposed on March 24. Owing to the very heavy and unprecedented volume of movements to area list countries, further processing of permits has been suspended temporarily. To assist in keeping the situation under review it is intended to invite representatives from industry and the trades concerned to form an industry advisory committee.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the house whether any applications for permits for the export of copper products have been received? If so, what has been the disposition of those by the government?

Mr. Winters: At the moment, I do not have knowledge of the number since the regulation went into effect. One application has been received within the last few days. That application was a request for permission to ship a small amount of concentrate from a mine in New Brunswick. That concentrate, containing some copper, is high in zinc content, also in lead. It is a concentrate that is difficult to process. It is regarded as a dirty concentrate, not acceptable to smelters in Canada on a normal basis. We have granted a permit to export that small amount of concentrate.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—STOPPAGE OF WORK BY LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether he has done anything about the longshoremen's strike on the St. Lawrence? Is he aware that a lot of shipping, loading grain for export, is tied up? Has any action at all been taken by the government about this matter?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had answered that question very fully yesterday.

Mr. Clancy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he is going to have the seaway cleared before the shipping season really starts.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): So far as I know, the seaway is clear. In some respects perhaps it is too clear at the moment.

[Later:]

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): My question, which is addressed to the Minister of Transport, is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Yorkton. Can the minister inform the house whether this strike, and the tying up of grain ships which has followed, will interfere with the movement of grain across Canada and result in the loss of grain sales?

Mr. Pickersgill: It certainly will not—at least I hope it will not—affect any shipments out of the west coast, or eventual shipments from Hudson Bay where we are now trying to fill the elevators, or shipments out of the eastern ports. And I pray that by Monday it will not be affecting St. Lawrence ports, either.

[Later:]

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the regrettable tie up of shipping on the St. Lawrence affecting the movement of grain, will the Prime Minister and the government give further consideration to the construction of more terminal facilities on the west coast, at Prince Rupert and Vancouver?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is of a general nature and I suggest it cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Kindt: It is right to the point, Mr. Speaker.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): My question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister yet in a position to advise the house whether it is the intention of the government to re-establish the roads to resources program?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I cannot add anything to what has already been stated about this matter by my colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister, then, whether the subject at the present time is being studied by the cabinet.

Mr. Pearson: Very much so, Mr. Speaker.

BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Since the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts is sitting regularly and will hear very important witnesses again next week, could the hon. lady tell the house whether she will be in a position to table her white paper on broadcasting in the near future?

[English]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I told the committee on broadcasting when it began its deliberations, I anticipate that this matter will be before the house before the end of June.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CONTROL OF DRUG LSD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I do not know whether I should direct this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare or to the Minister of Justice. Whichever minister feels he has jurisdiction over what I am about to raise could perhaps deal with it.

My question is based upon an article which appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail relating to what is believed to be the first arrest resulting in a charge of a person selling the hallucinating drug lysergic acid diethylamide, known as LSD, which it is illegal to possess in Canada. This arrest was made in Vancouver.

I wonder if the minister would indicate what steps are being taken to detect the possession of this drug, to prevent its further dissemination and to prevent trafficking in it.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): This is a rather involved question, Mr. Speaker. With the permission of the house I should like to make a statement on this question, now or early next week.

An hon. Member: Now.

Mr. Howard: The minister, I take it, is asking for permission to revert to motions. We might do that, I submit, because of the importance of this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister seeking permission to revert to motions?

Mr. MacEachen: In reply to the question asked by the hon. member, I should like to make the statement on Monday.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE OF $25 A MONTH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): My question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of recent information regarding pension plans, both private and public, I wonder whether the minister would not use his good offices to influence the government to increase old age security payments by $25 a month.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REVIEW OF REPORT ON JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, last week I addressed a question to the Minister of Justice. The question dealt with juvenile delinquency, and the minister reminded me that that subject comes within the portfolio of the Solicitor General.

The question appears at page 4725 of Hansard. I bring it to the attention of the Solicitor General. It simply asks what progress is being made by his department in studying the report on juvenile delinquency tabled in this house two months ago, and inquires what consideration is being given to forwarding the very helpful recommendations contained in that report to the departments of justice and legal affairs.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Within the office of the Solicitor General a study is being conducted at this time; but it is apparent from paragraphs 65-67 of the report that certain constitutional questions present themselves, and for this reason an interdepartmental committee composed of members from the Departments of Health and Welfare, Justice, Finance and the Solicitor General has now been brought into being.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT FUNDS BE MADE AVAILABLE THROUGH CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour in his capacity as the minister who answers for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation? In view of the worsening crisis in the housing industry in Canada caused by the lack of mortgage money—for example, in the Toronto area—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he cannot accompany his question by statements and I believe this is what he is trying to do, now. He should address his question directly to the minister.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I was just about to do so. In view of what I have indicated in my preface, is the minister prepared to reconsider his position and take responsibility for making sure that sufficient mortgage funds are available to keep the building industry operating?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): No change is contemplated, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): In view of the indifferent attitude exhibited by the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): —can I ask the Prime Minister whether he will take up this serious matter and do something about it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, but in his absence I shall address it to the house leader of the Conservative party—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Choquette: I would like to put my question to the hon. Minister of Justice. The question is very serious, Mr. Speaker.

Does the minister intend, in view of the unseemly remarks made by a member of this house concerning the Supreme Court, to insist that the Leader of the Opposition make apologies?

FINANCE

EFFECT OF GUIDE LINES ON U.S. SUBSIDIARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce concerning the guide lines he sent Canadian subsidiaries of foreign or American firms?

Would the minister tell the house what type of replies and reactions he has obtained so far?

Mr. Speaker: I believe this question is out of order.

[English]

EXPO '67

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING PARTICIPATION BY COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Bearing in mind the statement made by the Prime Minister in New York the other day with regard to the eventual recognition of red China, can the hon. gentleman inform the house whether there has been any discussion between officers of Expo and officials of red China about having that country put up a trade pavilion at the fair?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR RENEWED EFFORTS TO END WAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the serious news which has been coming out of Viet Nam during the last couple of days, would the Prime Minister consider making another serious effort to persuade the President of the United States to take steps to bring the war in Viet Nam to a close before it escalates into a major conflict?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that important discussions are taking place continually on this matter and the Canadian government is making every effort, through its membership on the international control commission and in other ways, to bring about an improvement of what is a very serious and dangerous situation.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question may I ask the Prime Minister whether there have been any discussions in recent weeks between himself and the head of the United States government with respect to this matter?

Mr. Pearson: Not recently, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: Then I urge that there be such a discussion.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PREPARATION FOR ANNIVERSARY OF VIMY RIDGE BATTLE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Its urgency may not be apparent at the moment, but in view of the lengthy preparation required perhaps you will consider it urgent. In any case the minister may take it as notice.

Is the minister, in co-operation with the Department of National Defence, making any preparations for a ceremony next year, being centennial year, to observe the 50th anniversary of the battle of Vimy Ridge, that ceremony to take place at the monument at Vimy Ridge in France?

Mr. Speaker: I am in agreement with the hon. member who posed the question that the urgency is not readily apparent, and the minister might want to take it as notice.

Mr. Churchill: It will take a year for this government to make preparations.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly inform the house that preparations are being made. There was a question, because of the timing of veterans week in Canada, as to the actual date of the ceremony, but certainly it is intended to proceed next year in Europe with a commemoration of that battle.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RECONCILIATION OF COMPANY AND CANADA PENSION PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the difficulties in existence at the present time among members of the I.L.A. and the C.B. of R.T. unions and the C.N.R. with reference to the combining of the C.N.R. pension plan and the Canada Pension Plan, would the minister consider having someone from his department meet with the parties concerned to help solve the problem? I regret I have not been able to give the minister notice of this question. Maybe he will wish to take it as notice.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think that would be advisable, Mr. Speaker.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ELECTED MEMBERS, INDEMNITY, ETC.

The house resumed, from Thursday, May 12, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-146, to amend the Northwest Territories Act—Mr. Laing—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

[Mr. Churchill.]

On clause 1—Council.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I thought under our new rules clause 2 should be considered first?

The Deputy Chairman: Not in this case.

Mr. Nielsen: Then I shall speak to clause 1. This clause deals with the composition of the council and provides that the existing council of nine be increased to 12 members, seven of whom will be elected and five appointed by the government, as opposed to the existing situation where only four members of the council are elected and five are appointed by the government.

Yesterday I elaborated on the undemocratic principle involved in the appointment of members to what is purported to be a body representative of the people of the Northwest Territories. The only reason advanced by the minister for the appointment of members to a legislative body was to introduce some sort of expertise to it, the implication being that that was not available from the population in the Northwest Territories.

I suggest that principle cannot be accepted. As the hon. member for the Northwest Territories knows full well, whenever a territorial legislative council desires to have that kind of expert advice it can be called by having witnesses appear before the council. He himself on occasion has appeared as an expert witness before the legislative council of the Yukon, and indeed gave that council some very sound advice with respect to matters pertaining to hospital insurance. There is no reason why the same kind of procedure cannot be adopted in the Northwest Territories.

The excuse that these experts must be appointed to the council in order for it to function properly is an extremely shallow one and I would urge the minister, before taking that action, to reconsider the principle embodied in this clause. I suggest to him that the clause should read the same as section 9 in the Yukon Act, which sets forth:

> There shall be a council of the Yukon Territory, which shall be composed of five members elected to represent the electoral districts to be named and described by the commissioner in council.

That would have the effect of eliminating appointed members and making the council of the Northwest Territories a wholly elected council with truly elected representatives of the people of the Northwest Territories, without any injection of the government's views through appointed members. There is no justification whatsoever for the appointment of members to what we are pleased to give lip service in calling this a democratically founded institution, namely, the legislative council of the Northwest Territories. I urge the minister to move such an amendment himself on behalf of the government, and if he is not prepared to do so then I shall.

• (11:40 a.m.)

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, those are also the views which we in this party have expressed from time to time about the appointment of people to legislative and governing bodies. It would seem to me that the reason the council at its recent meeting endorsed the proposal now before us was that at that meeting the elected members were in the minority. In speaking with one of the hon. gentleman of the council afterward I got the impression that the elected members of the council felt that at that time they could not get through a motion to entirely eliminate the appointed members from the council. They thought in this situation half a loaf was better than none at all, and that this would put the elected members in the majority on the council so that at some subsequent meeting of council they could take under advisement more fully the question of having the council wholly and entirely elected. It seems to me that this is reasonable thinking.

Incidentally, I noticed that last night when I asked why the government felt it necessary to have appointed members, the minister in reply said he was giving his own personal view in respect of why appointed members were necessary, and he did not explain what was the view of the government with regard to this matter. I submit the only reason the government desires to appoint people to the council is that this government is putting up a fair amount of money for the operation of the territories and they want to have at least some say in the manner in which that money will be spent.

I submit that the way to do this is not by appointing agents who sit on an elected body, but rather to have that body wholly elected unto itself and, although I do not know the machinery, as the hon. member for the Yukon said if it is desirous to have the advice of technicians and experts in respect of matters such as the expenditure of money and the question of whether some particular projects are more valuable than some other particular projects, the way to do this is by listening to advice given to the council from outside and not by listening to advice given to the council by people who are there and who have an opportunity to vote on the advice they are giving.

I do not know whether at this time we should go through the process of trying to amend the clause which is before us, but as I am an outsider—as I classified myself last night—in respect of this matter it would be very presumptuous for me to suggest it, even though in conscience and in essence I think it is the correct thing to do. This is something which should be left to those who have an intimate involvement in this area, if it is something they desire. I do not wish to put the hon. member for the Northwest Territories on the spot, but I think he is the only person who can move this amendment.

Mr. Knowles: He has a pretty big spot.

Mr. Howard: Yes, he has a pretty large territory to represent. I should like to suggest that the minister or one of his colleagues might take the initiative in this regard and indicate that the government feel as we do about this; that is, that when we are talking about democratic government elected by, of, and for the people, we should spell that out in clear terms so that all the members on the council are elected by the people who are going to be governed by the members on that council.

Eventually, whether it be following the expected Carrothers report, or some time in between now and then, or some years from now—since we know the tendency of the government to delay and procrastinate on these things—some time there is going to be an elected council or elected government, if we want to mention another name, in the territories. It seems to me we should take the bit in our mouth now and recognize the essence of democracy by saying that so far as the territorial council is concerned it should be wholly elected. We should not wait for some time in the future when the pressures catch up to us and we might do things out of an increased demand by people rather than do them now in a spirit of common sense and leadership.

This is the type of leadership which I think the government should be giving in this matter; that is, to recognize that the system of hand picking agents to sit in with deliberative legislative bodies belongs to the period before the turn of the century, and certainly does not belong in this day and age. I urge the minister to stand up and say he agrees with this, and that one of his colleagues is going to move just such an amendment. If he does, there will not be any lack of unanimity in respect of the idea once it comes to a vote.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt in my mind that the proposal made by the hon. member for the Yukon and supported by the hon. member for Skeena should be adopted. I have had a close and intimate relationship with the Northwest Territories for almost a third of a century. My constituency borders the area. I live in a community which serves as a gateway to the north, and I know many hundreds of people who live there. I think I am in a position to say unequivocally that these people now are ready for complete self-government.

I have some suggestions to make to the minister which he might take into consideration in assessing the virtues of this recommendation. I would call to his attention the situation that existed prior to the establishment of the two provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. At that time there was a Northwest Territories Act and a Northwest Territories council, before these two provinces were carved out of the territories which were governed under the Northwest Territories Act.

I did some research in this connection some time ago, when the other bill was before the house and before it had been submitted to the committee. I came across what I thought was a very interesting arrangement. At that time I think there was an elective council of some 22 or 24 members representing various constituencies in the Northwest Territories. The total legislative power resided in the hands of the elective council, but sitting with the council, without any right to vote and only in an advisory capacity, were officials who formed the basis of what would be, in a totally elective system such as we have in the House of Commons and in the provincial governments, a cabinet. I think there was an attorney general. There was a commissioner for public works; there was a commissioner in charge of administration in connection with financial matters. I think there was a territorial secretary and possibly one or two others. I am not able to indicate to the minister whether these officials were appointed by the territorial council. I believe they were appointed by the territorial council, but possibly the minister might be able to check me on this.

So far as voting rights were concerned, however, these resided exclusively, as I understand it, within the elected members of the territorial council. Sitting in council with them from time to time would be the members whom you might say constituted an appointed cabinet. In this respect I think probably it would parallel the circumstances which prevail in the United States. I cannot say I agree with it, but it was an arrangement which probably will indicate the feeling.

In this area in the Northwest Territories I can see no reason that the people who live there could not be appointed. I suggest that if they were appointed it should be by the territorial council in conjunction with a commissioner. The officials who would serve in these capacities would from time to time sit in with the council to guide and advise them. but the final decision as far as voting is concerned would rest with the territorial council itself.

Some concern was expressed with regard to the passage of ordinances dealing with the expenditure of money. I suppose the same arrangement exists there as in the House of Commons and probably in the provincial legislatures. In our House of Commons, only if there has been a recommendation from His Excellency conveyed to the house by a member of the Privy Council is the house able to deal with the expenditure of money for a specific purpose.

I assume this is a safeguard which will always be available in the territories, so there can be no anxiety that the territorial council would spend money far beyond amounts it could raise in the territory and would thereby commit the federal government to expenditures beyond which the federal government did not wish to go at any particular moment. I think there is a necessity for some safeguard there, but that safeguard exists; it could be carried on as it is embedded in our own constitution.

I think at this time, in view of the forthcoming observance of our centennial, we should give to the Northwest Territories the right of complete self-government, and I suggest that with qualifications of this kind the minister would be under no handicap. In addition, I think the council would have the benefit of the advice of those people who might be appointed in this way, with the certain provision that they would not be voting members. I would ask the minister to consider this suggestion.

Mr. Orange: Mr. Chairman, in the arguments advanced regarding the principle of a fully elected council—I think all of us in this house are in complete agreement. There are two points, however, that I think should be brought out at this time with regard to changing the section as it now stands. The first is that the council of the Northwest Territories has a legislative life which expires on March 31 next year. Second, the Carrothers commission is studying the form of government in the Northwest Territories and will be presenting their recommendations to the government of Canada some time this fall. I suggest that for these two reasons any change now would be premature.

With reference to earlier statements that the council has been intimidated by its appointed members in making recommendations and agreeing to the concept contained within this bill, I am afraid I must take objection to these statements. In my experience with the Northwest Territories council, which goes back to 1955, I have yet to see a situation where the elected members of council were voting in opposition to the appointed members. Whenever there has been division, the division has been between a group of elected and appointed members in opposition to a group of elected and appointed members.

These are the two points I wish to make, Mr. Chairman. First, that the council still has 10 months of its life remaining; and second, that the Carrothers commission will be presenting their views and the views of the people of the Northwest Territories on the form of government for the area. Therefore, as was said last night, the amendments before us are housekeeping only to extend the franchise to those people in the eastern Arctic who do not now have it. I believe we will possibly be looking at major revisions of the Northwest Territories Act next year or this fall, which I am hopeful will incorporate the principles enumerated by various hon. members who spoke earlier.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, last evening at the second reading stage I expressed my support for the amendment that has been proposed by the hon. member for Yukon. General disappointment was expressed last night by all who spoke at the second reading stage, and the hon. member for Northwest Territories has used the expression again, because the legislation before us is merely a housekeeping bill and does not change in any respect the form of government for the Northwest Territories. I think in the proposal made by the hon. member for Yukon we have an opportunity of adding at least a morsel of substance to a bill that is otherwise housekeeping, or we might even call it window dressing.

The hon. member for Northwest Territories has indicated that an amendment of this kind to the bill before us might be premature. I should like to suggest, as I said last night, that the time is long past due when the Northwest Territories council should be an entirely elected body. I remember that when I first assumed responsibility for the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources I was amazed to find that all the appointed representatives were senior civil servants. In other words the method of appointing members to the council smacked entirely of the old colonial concept that the administration in the Northwest Territories should be kept in the hands of the civil servants. As I recall, the representatives at that time were the deputy minister of national defence, the commissioner of the R.C.M.P., the head of the Indian affairs branch, and similar appointments of that kind, so that it was an entirely non-representative group from that standpoint.

There has been a gradual movement since that time, which is a fairly recent period of Canadian history, in the direction of completely representative government and emancipation from the close control and dominance of Ottawa. These appointments were made for the purpose the minister has indicated, to supply some expertise to the deliberations of the Northwest Territories council through the appointed members. I am sure we all agree, in the light of what has already been said during this debate, that we no longer need to depend on expertise supplied by appointees from without the territory. There has been such a marked leap forward in the economic development of the north—and this applies to the western Arctic as well as the eastern Arctic—that we can get all the skills with reference to public affairs, all the knowledge in governmental affairs, from our own people in the area north of the 60th parallel.

I would say, too, that this applies to the indigenous people in the north. We have seen the appointment of Mr. Ogpik, who represents the Eskimo people, and from my contact with the representatives of the Indian people in the Northwest Territories I know there are many from that group who could serve well in representing their people on the Northwest Territories council.

• (12:00 noon)

We are now going to include in the council for the first time the eastern Arctic which up until the present time has been unrepresented in the governmental affairs of the Northwest Territories. I am reminded, Mr. Chairman, that we might even have the opportunity, were all members on the council elected, to have the first woman representative on the council of the Northwest Territories. Recently one of the most illustrious members of our Canadian Eskimos has returned to her native community on Baffin Island. I refer, of course, to Mary Panegooshoo who with her husband has now settled at Grise Fiord. I am sure that if she were named as a candidate in the elections to follow the acceptance of this recommendation she might well become the first woman member of the Northwest Territories Council.

I do not believe that we need to say anything further. We all recognize the need for self-government and autonomy in the north and I trust that the minister will accept the recommendation of the hon. member for Yukon that we now seize the opportunity to move one step farther toward this goal in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, it always amazes me how members sitting on the goverment side somehow manage to let the word "however" creep into their speeches.

Mr. Nielsen: And "but" too.

Mr. Howard: With due respect, that is what we have heard from the member for the Northwest Territories. I do not want to get involved in arguments with him about the correctness or otherwise of approaching matters such as this. I accept fully his declaration that he agrees with the principles we have been advancing in parliament for some years. It seemed to me that he almost committed the minister to introduce another bill to amend the Northwest Territories Act this fall and I would be interested to know whether the minister intends to come back this fall with another amendment dealing with this question of self-government. If the minister will make that declaration it will place the matter before us in an entirely different light. Presumably all that will be involved in this respect is a by-election for the election of additional members to the council for a certain period of office. Perhaps such members may not even have an opportunity to sit on the council because it may not meet in the period of time during which they may be members.

If it is the intention of the government to proceed this fall to introduce a self-government measure in parliament, then this puts us in an entirely different position. I would appreciate it if the minister would clear this up for us. I will pose a direct question to the minister. Is it the intention of the government to deal with this matter this fall?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Nielsen: No. The minister has a question to answer. Surely he can do that.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, we have had a considerable amount of discussion on this section. I do not know that all of it has been to the point and probably what I am about to say will not be wholly relevant either. This section is an indication of the purpose of the bill. We were told last year and the year before by the then member of parliament for the Northwest Territories that the most grievous injustice of all was the fact that here was a section of the Northwest Territories where the residents in the area had no opportunity to elect members to the council.

Overhanging this entire bill is the fact that within a matter of two or three months at the most we expect the report from the Carrothers Commission with reference to what in their view we should do about the government of the Northwest Territories. I would very much hesitate to introduce an amendment at this time which might anticipate that report. Where I to have introduced such an amendment, I am quite certain that members on the other side of the house would have immediately got up and attacked me because I had introduced such an amendment.

We are now taking care of what has been a manifestation of injustice in the areas of the high Arctic, the east Arctic and Keewatin. We made a commitment to the council last year, and they have passed enabling legislation within their own council to fill these three positions at the earliest date possible. There was no criticism from the former member for the Northwest Territories in regard to appointing members to the council from southern Canada. Indeed, I have heard him compliment those who were appointed by the government because of the benefit they brought to northern Canada by reason of their previous knowledge and the fact that they knew southern Canadians who had influence in southern Canada.

These members of the council are able to tell the story of the north which so few Canadians who reside in sourthern Canada have an opportunity to tell accurately and, indeed, to induce the investment of money from the southern part of Canada in our north. I would think that for some years to come, though I will be guided by the Carrothers report, it would be extremely beneficial to those residing in northern Canada to have the benefit of that link; I am quite certain there is such a benefit.

My predecessor in office has joined with the hon. member from the Yukon in supporting the suggestion that all of the members should be elected. Let me ask my predecessor in this post whether this ever occurred to him while he was in office.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, it was part of the grand strategy for autonomy of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Laing: Well, I have heard a great deal about grand strategy and vision.

Mr. Dinsdale: By 1967.

Mr. Laing: And in this position I am trying to do something.

Mr. Dinsdale: It could have been done in 1963.

Mr. Laing: Because not only of the protestations with regard to electing members to the council from within the territory but because the denial of the franchise was sticking out like a sore thumb I thought, notwithstanding the impending Carrothers report, that we should take care of this matter now and that is why this amendment is before us. For the first time it will give an opportunity to the elected members of the Northwest Territories council to have a majority of the members on that council.

You may call me out of order now, Mr. Chairman, but I believe I cannot introduce the subject better than on this particular section. I had intended last evening, had I summed up before the committee stage, to tell hon. members that we are concerned and saddened too by the fact that it has been intimated to us by the commissioner of the Northwest Territories that he intends to leave the service some time in 1966. I am referring to Mr. Ben Sivertz who is commissioner of the Northwest Territories at this time. I want to say that I have not met any person whose sense of humanitarianism as applied to people is greater than that of Mr. Ben Sivertz. This quality of understanding and compassion, if you like, has been tremendously beneficial because of the nature of his task in the territories and the people with whom he has to deal.

I have asked him if I may have the continuing benefit of his advice after we receive the Carrothers report. I am glad to tell the house he has consented to make himself available to advise us when that report is received. I am going to suggest that in the light of the impending Carrothers report it would be insulting, I think, were we to go beyond the necessitous points taken care of in this bill. I am going to suggest that I feel we have done very well indeed in seeing to it that all of those residents in the Northwest Territories have the franchise. We are taking a very important step in making the majority of the council elected members from the Northwest Territories.

Again I say I wish more members of parliament knew exactly the problems we are up against in these areas. When members are elected from these areas of the high Arctic, the eastern Arctic and Keewatin, it is going to be extremely difficult at times to bring them together for a council meeting. The sheer physical disabilities of getting a plane in to pick them up are sometimes insurmountable. We have a population in these three new constituencies of about one person per 160 square miles. There are small settlements to which access is difficult at many times of the year.

In so far as these areas are concerned, I am reminded of what Lloyd George once said about Russia. "It is quite easy to get into that country but very difficult to get out of it." This applies to the Northwest Territories at certain times of the year. You can get in there but you may be held up by the weather for some days after you get there. We are doing the best we can under difficult circumstances. I think if you were to ask the elected members of the Northwest Territories Council today what they think of the appointed members from southern Canada they would tell you, do not drop them but continue that policy. We are going to be guided in these matters by the report of the Carrothers commission.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister has made a valid point, Mr. Chairman, when he refers to asking the elected members of the council what they think about continuing the procedure whereby members are appointed to the Northwest Territories Council. This suggestion was made by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. He suggested that the matter could be referred to a committee of the house and members of the council could be called. This suggestion was not accepted by the government, but we did not make an issue of that. We thought it would be a useful thing to do. The fact of the matter is that unless the minister can stand up and tell us that all four members of the elected council, representing as they do the views of Mackenzie but not Keewatin or Franklin, have informed him they want to continue this system, then I do not believe we can consider the hypothetical supposition the minister puts before us this afternoon.

The minister and the member for the Northwest Territories make two points with regard to the purported reasons for not amending this section of the bill. The member representing this constituency knows that there are well over a million and a quarter square miles for which there are seven elected members. These men are going to be asked to represent this vast territory. I do not believe the council should be composed of 12 members; I believe the number should be between 15 and 21 in order to have adequate representation. The situation that we and the people of the Northwest Territories are being asked to accept is to have seven elected members represent over a million and a quarter square miles. The five appointed members represent no one. They are appointed to the council but represent no electoral district. Under the legislation as it stands now or as it may be amended now, they still represent no electoral district. It would be compounding an undemocratic procedure if this were so.

We are left with a situation, therefore, in which seven elected members represent over a million and a quarter square miles. I am going to use a phrase that many in this house will understand. If I cannot appeal to their knowledge of the north, let me appeal to their own emotions in regard to their own jurisdictions. I refer to the phrase, "maître chez nous". This is the direction in which we in the north wish to bend our efforts. How can we have more say in our own affairs if we are going to have the government of Canada as some sort of "big daddy" legislature tell us who are going to sit as our representatives. The people who live there want to elect their own representatives and run their own affairs.

The fiscal controls are intact. The commissioner is an appointee of the government and has the power of veto over every measure that comes before council. If the council were wholly elected and did act irresponsibly, which I strongly suggest neither the minister nor the member for Northwest Territories believes would happen, the commissioner always has the power of veto. What earthly excuse, therefore, can remain?

The hon. member for Northwest Territories says that the life of the council expires in March of next year. This is true. However, does this prevent us from amending this section now to make provision for a wholly elected council? I do not believe so. You may either hold by-elections between now and the expiration of the life of the council or this provision for extra seats will be available in March of 1967. The argument is no more valid with respect to a wholly elected representative body than it would be for accepting the amendment in its present form. This amendment provides for three additional elected representatives who either have to take office as the result of by-elections before March, 1967, or when the election is called next year. This argument, therefore, has no substance.

The other argument that both the hon. member and the minister advanced was that we should await the report of the Carrothers commission. Before I deal with that, let me point out that I am sure the hon. member for Northwest Territories did not intend to leave the impression on members of this house that anyone on this side was suggesting the appointed members in the past have intimidated the elected members. No one has made that statement. No one has left that implication, least of all myself. They have served a useful purpose and made useful contributions not only in their capacity as appointed members of council but in the respective areas in which they have served in the public service, commercial or industrial life of the country.

However, this does not justify continuing the procedure of appointing members to what is supposed to be a representative democratic institution, a legislative body representing the people. How can it be representative of the people if the people have no say in who is going to represent them in the making of the laws? What right has anyone from outside of the Northwest Territories to vote on the imposition of taxes of a territorial nature on the people who live there? What logical reason, quite apart from democratic principles, is there for saying that appointed members from elsewhere in Canada should have the right to impose taxes on people in a jurisdiction in which those members do not even live? It would be like appointing members to the Quebec or British Columbia legislatures from some other area of Canada and giving them the right to impose taxes upon the residents of those provinces. It is not only undemocratic but an invidious, colonial, archaic hangover. I am sure that the minister agrees with these principles.

• (12:20 p.m.)

A word now about the Carrothers commission. Again I emphasize that the men serving on that commission, able men doing a job to which I am sure they are sincerely and wholly dedicated, will undoubtedly provide a report which will prove extremely useful not only to members of the House of Commons but also to those in the Northwest Territories who have the responsibility for planning for their own future. But the argument that we must wait for the commission to report before considering any amendment to the Northwest Territories Act does not hold water, because if the reasons advanced by the minister are valid why are we increasing the council to 12 members? The Carrothers commission may come back and recommend that there be only 10. What then? The Carrothers commission may come back and say that there will not be five members appointed but three. What then?

So if the minister wishes to use the Carrothers commission as an argument, then I suggest it follows logically that he must not touch the section at all or increase the council at all or disturb the proportion of representation on the council. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to hon. members that his argument does not hold water.

The minister did not answer the hon. member for Skeena who asked whether it was the intention of the government to introduce, as the hon. member for Northwest Territories intimated was the case, major revisions to the Northwest Territories Act this fall or next year. As the hon. member for Skeena said, this would put a different light on the matter if that were the intention of the government, but I very much doubt that it is. However, the minister should clarify that point.

I too wish to add words of praise for the contribution that Commissioner Sivertz made with respect not only to the Northwest Territories but during his long service in the department of northern affairs. I enthusiastically endorse the genuine compliments which have been paid Commissioner Sivertz who is retiring from the civil service in the near future. I am very gratified, as I am sure all members are, that his services will remain available to the government.

Because of the fact, Mr. Chairman, that the arguments advanced by the other side do not, in my submission, follow logically, and because they are not in keeping with the fundamental rights and freedoms which must exist in any free society purporting to embrace democratic principles, we in this party cannot accept the amendment proposed by the bill. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River, that:

> Clause 1 of Bill C-146 be amended by deleting all of the words following the word "Territories" in the first line of section "8 (1)" thereof and by adding in substitution therefor immediately following the word "Territories" aforesaid the following:
> "which shall be composed of 12 members elected to represent such electoral districts in the Territories as are named and described by the Commissioner in Council".

That wording, for the information of members of the committee, is exactly the same word for word as section 9 of the Yukon Act which makes provision for a wholly elected council such as we have had in the Yukon for many years. I submit it is time that the Northwest Territories should have the same privilege so that the people can elect their own representatives, make their own laws, impose their own taxes, indeed, look after their own affairs as they are entitled to do, with the fiscal restrictions which are inherent in local and federal legislation.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, apart from the reference the minister made to Mr. Sivertz, which I submit was really not germane to the question I asked him, the minister proceeded to subject us to nothing more than an unctuous lecture on how members of parliament should act and on whether we were in order or not in order. He refused to answer my question, basing his reasoning upon the arguments advanced by the former member for Northwest Territories, Mr. Rhéaume.

It becomes a little silly when the minister, groping for reasons to support his case, has to revert to what some previous government did or did not do. Each time the government has to resort to the process of pointing an accusatory finger, as the minister did to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, and ask, "What did you do, why didn't you do this?" it indicates to me the poverty of reason and intelligence that exists in government. Surely the minister can come up with more sensible answers than the ones he has advanced which were based upon the old political difference between the Liberals and the Tories, something which, I suppose, is occasionally a nice exercise but which really has relatively little place when we come to deal seriously with the development of statute law relating to the fundamental rights and freedoms of human beings in the Northwest Territories.

I think the amendment presented by the hon. member for Yukon—I am merely commenting on it in passing—is really subject to the same sort of attack that the hon. member for Yukon made against the provision of clause 1. Part of his argument by way of question was: What would the government do if the Carrothers commission recommended a number of members on the council other than the number proposed? What would the government do if the commission recommended that there be a certain number of appointed members other than the number proposed? I submit that the same sort of argument, if one wants to advance it, can be directed toward the amendment.

I do not think that we in this parliament should approach matters of this sort on the basis of what one thinks about the other's politics, or on the basis of what some previous government did or did not do. We are not legislating here for the past. We are not considering laws which have impinged upon the fundamental rights and freedoms of people in the past. We are concerning ourselves with what is going to happen in the future, and I submit this is the only basis upon which we should reason in considering the bill and the amendment now before us. On that basis and on that basis alone, Mr. Chairman, having a desire to establish self-government, something which everyone has agreed is absolutely necessary and to which no one in this parliament has objected, with this as our basic guidepost there is no alternative but to support the amendment now before us.

Let me say again what I said last night but in other words. If Professor Carrothers makes a report containing a principle envisaging a governing body which runs contrary to our desires, our knowledge and our understanding of democracy, which runs against the grain of self-government, then that principle or proposal should be rejected. However, I do not think Professor Carrothers will do that. We are not concerned about the technical aspects or mechanics of the report, whether Professor Carrothers will recommend 10, 12, 21, 13 or any other number of elected members. We should only concern ourselves with the principle issue of self-government. It is upon that basis that we approach the whole process of legislating for a group of people who have lived for years in a communal state almost approaching that which exists in Siberia.

The idea is to get the job done. At least there is a proposal before us enabling us to take some steps to deal with the matter of self-government for the people in the area. I for one would much rather take large, bold, imaginative steps than the innocent, timid ones proposed in the bill.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I rise to endorse what the minister has said with respect to Commissioner Sivertz. I was sorry to hear that the commissioner is ending his active service with the government of Canada. I agree that he has made an outstanding contribution to the north during his term of office.

I believe the reason for his success stems from his background. Mr. Sivertz is an Icelander. For generations the Icelandic people have been identified with development in northern areas generally. I believe his warmhearted acceptance by the residents of the Northwest Territories arises from the fact that he has been able to communicate with them. He has been regarded as one of their own kind. It seems to me that this fact alone should have persuaded the minister to accept the recommendation of the hon. member for Yukon and seize the opportunity to put forward in the government's name the amendment that has now been submitted by the hon. member for Yukon.

I am sorry that the minister did not accept the suggestion made to him. As a result it is very difficult to get the sense of the house on this important matter. I feel that the sense of the house is that the Northwest Territories are ripe for this move forward in the direction of representative self-government.

May I say one more thing, Mr. Chairman. Reference has been made to the activities of the Carrothers commission. I have been interested in reading press reports concerning the work of the commission. They have indicated that the members of the commission in their travels throughout the Northwest Territories have not been receiving representations so much with respect to the structure of government in the north but rather complaints from individual citizens who feel that they have not been adequately represented in the legislative council of the territorial government. Indeed, it seemed to me that the commission members had assumed the role of travelling ombudsmen. This fact alone I think should persuade the government that the time has come to recognize this strong demand, a demand that has increased very much in recent years, for genuine, democratic, representative government.

We shall vote on the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Yukon. I trust that all members of the house who are concerned with advancing the principle of democratic government will be persuaded to vote in favour of the amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, may I make some brief comments before the committee expresses its view on this issue. I listened with interest to the hon. member for Skeena posing a question to the minister. If the minister had felt able to rise and say definitely and unequivocally that within a specified period of time legislation providing completely and without any equivocation for absolute self-government would be introduced and that the council would be composed entirely of elected members, I would have been inclined to accept that.

I think the minister has conceived a genuine affection for the north. Anybody who has had anything to do with this extraordinary and unique country has felt its pull and tug. I know that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the hon. member for Calgary North, all of whom at some time have held the portfolio respecting the territories, have felt this pull and tug. I think that this fact brings a degree of non-partisanship and objectivity to this debate. This is what the hon. member for Yukon said and I am sure it is in the mind of the hon. member for Northwest Territories just as it is in my own mind.

Because the minister could not say what I hoped he would say, I am apprehensive about the delay which may take place. In our experience some of the minister's colleagues, who possibly do not have the same objectivity in this and in other matters, have caused delays to take place. Our experience has been that the period between the creative gestation, when a rather weak and watery gleam appears in the eye of one of his colleagues, and the faltering legislation that appears on the floor of the house is very long indeed. The period of gestation might be three, four or even five years.

Mr. Nielsen: It is the old story.

Mr. Baldwin: For this reason I cannot accept as valid the explanation that this matter should await the report of the Carrothers commission.

I should say also, as I think has been said by the hon. members for Yukon and Skeena, that the principle of representative self-government is so firmly and permanently embedded in our philosophical beliefs about government that we cannot question it. As I see it, a vote at this time against the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Yukon will constitute in effect an expression of opinion by the person casting that vote that he does not feel there should be the right of self-government. In effect it would be a vote against the kind of government we have in this country and which I hope we will continue to have for many years.

I do not know the terms of reference of the Carrothers commission. I admit to being in default there. However, I cannot conceive of their being any set of circumstances which would persuade me, and I hope most members of this house, to accept a report containing a provision, recommendation or suggestion that there should not be completely representative self-government. Any such recommendation ought to be divorced from the terms of reference and from the view which the government will adopt.

• (12:40 p.m.)

I cannot accept not having the report as a valid reason for not proceeding at this time and I am therefore impelled to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Yukon. I ask all hon. members to bear in mind in their consideration of this question the principle of completely democratic self-government. A vote against this amendment is a vote against this principle.

Mr. Laing: Before we proceed to the vote I should like to correct certain statements which have been made. I want to tell the committee that the council of the Northwest Territories, including the four elected members, passed a resolution asking specifically for what is provided in the clause we are considering.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Laing: It was unanimous. All members, whether elected or appointed, specifically voted in this way. This weighed with us, as did the representations which have been made for a number of years. Statements have been made in the florid language of the hon. member for Yukon who has a tremendous capacity for adjectival alliteration. He talked about terrible colonialistic conditions, as he described them. We found out last night that there is no such word as "colonialistic". It is "colonial".

The hon. member for Skeena, who admits he has never been in the territories—

Mr. Howard: I did not "admit" it. I stated it.

Mr. Laing: —and who was at some pains to tell us he had reservations about speaking on a subject with which he was not familiar, has spoken a great deal since.

Mr. Howard: If the minister wishes to quote me, let him be truthful and do it properly instead of misquoting me to suit his own purpose.

Mr. Laing: I think I am doing so 100 per cent—

Mr. Howard: You are not. You are distorting it.

Mr. Laing: —in accord with what the hon. member said last night.

Mr. Howard: You are not.

Mr. Laing: I want to tell him and other members of the committee that there is a tremendous amount of self-government in the area today. And there is freedom, if you describe freedom in terms of the old relationship of "the King and your uncle". There is probably more freedom in that part of Canada than in any other. I was astonished to see some of the regulations which exist as a result of representations made by the Eskimo people. When I first went to Frobisher I was astonished to find that if anyone required a bottle of Scotch whiskey he had to put in his order on a certain date and did not acquire the whiskey until a month later. They have improved things since. They first got delivery down to four days, I believe, and I understand that now the delay is no more than 48 hours. But people still have to wait 48 hours for delivery after putting in an order. You know, Mr. Chairman, they may have something there. They are probably wiser than we are.

At any rate, there is this kind of domestic, civic regulation reflecting civic administration all over the Northwest Territories. Far from this general claim that we are making rigid rules and regulations in Ottawa and imposing them on the people of the territories, I believe that in many instances the opposite is true.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I admit that my own attitude so far as this bill is concerned has been largely one of willingness to sit, listen and learn, and I am sure it is one which is shared by many members of the committee. The minister has spoken about the endorsation by the territorial council of the proposal in the bill. I wonder whether the council, while it was considering the proposition set out in clause 5 in connection with the proposed new section 19 which the minister himself described as housekeeping, considered the other major change in principle affecting the nature of the government of the territories. Comment was made earlier about the desirability of having expert advice from certain people appointed by the federal government and it occurs to me that given some modification of the proposed new section 19A the present appointed members of the council could in effect be associated with the commissioner as advisors.

The hon. member for Peace River, dealing with the constitutional implications, referred to the relationship of the United States cabinet to the president of that country. These thoughts have been passing through my mind during the course of this discussion and I would ask the minister whether or not the territorial council considered the modification of the new section 19A embodied in clause 5 of the bill when they took their present position with respect to the proposal contained in clause 1.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Nielsen: No. I am not letting the minister's remarks pass without comment. When I opened this debate yesterday and again today I said that the matters involved here, being matters of far reaching principle, should be discussed in the complete absence of any partisanship.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: I have been doing that. Members opposite laugh. Let them find one place in Hansard where I have injected anything other than a plea for the creation of representative and democratic institutions in the north without any reference to politics at all. I am not speaking as a member of the Conservative party now. I am speaking as a northerner.

An hon. Member: Partisan.

Mr. Nielsen: Partisan in the sense that I am a northerner, yes. How can we in the north feel we are Canadians if we are not given the same kind of rights as Canadians everywhere else are given? That is the plea that I am making for the people of the north today, and it will not do any good to call "question" impetuously and impassionedly because by doing so you are placing the fundamental rights and freedoms guaranteed by democratic institutional government at the lowest possible level. Surely it is important enough for all members of the committee to approach this matter without humour, in all seriousness and without partisanship because politics are not involved here.

There is not one of us on either side of this chamber who will deny the validity of the principle that it is desirable to have representative institutions representing the rights of the people and that only that kind of institution should impose taxes on people. But that is not what we have in this bill. That is what the northern people want, notwithstanding what the minister may feel. His own party member, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, will tell him that the people of the Northwest Territories want to be represented by a wholly elected representative body.

It does the minister no good to meet this kind of plea with pugnaciousness. The fundamental principle here is one which does not involve partisan politics. A vote against the principle of a wholly elected council is a vote against representative government. Members may shake their heads in exasperation, but that is a fact.

I ask the hon. member for Lotbinière, who seems to disagree with that statement, how he would feel if the province of Quebec had in its legislature appointed members from Alberta and Ontario having the power to tax him and other residents in that province? Is that the kind of principle that we recognize? I suggest it is not and I suggest there can be no answer to the argument.

The minister has stood in his place and accused members on this side of making non-factual statements. The statement I have made just now is a factual statement. Surely it must touch the hearts of all members who sit in this chamber. There can be no justification for someone outside a jurisdiction being appointed to a council and having the power to tax people within that jurisdiction.

Mr. Laing: I am quite certain, in the context of the argument which the hon. member is placing before us now, that he would want the committee to know accurately the extent to which moneys are voted by parliament for that particular area of Canada. We all have a responsibility to the taxpayers of Canada in reference to the amount of money spent there, which is about 85 per cent of the total expenditures in the territory.

Mr. Nielsen: I agree with that. I did not know the exact statistic. As the minister knows, I have written him a letter with respect to this kind of statistic in respect of the Yukon. It is helpful to have the figure but that does not alter the principle. Hon. members are just as responsible for seeing to it that federal grants, subsidies and contributions to all provinces and territories are properly spent.

I choose my words carefully because I do not want to inflame political passion, but we may find that on a per capita basis contributions to certain other areas of Canada are higher. However, that does not alter the fact that it is wrong in principle to have other than elected representatives of the people taxing the people. The fact of the matter is that the council has the power to impose taxes on the residents of the territory. If that be so, surely it should only be the elected representatives of the people, sitting on that council, who should exercise that power. It is wrong in principle to have outsiders appointed to the council given that power. That is the strongest argument I can think of against this situation, quite apart from all the other arguments in support of principles that have made this institution what it is and provincial institutions what they are.

Amendment (Mr. Nielsen) negatived: Yeas, 23; nays, 31.

Mr. Nielsen: There is one more point I would like to make on this clause. The existing Northwest Territories Act requires that the seat of the government of the territories shall be that prescribed by the governor in council from time to time. In other words, the council is empowered to sit only when the federal government wants it to sit and where the federal government wants it to sit. It has been the habit to hold one of the meetings of the council in Ottawa each year and one of the meetings in the Northwest Territories. This situation is unacceptable.

It may interest members of the committee to know that the Northwest Territories Council is the only legislative body in the world that sits outside its own jurisdiction to make laws affecting people inside its jurisdiction, It is like the legislature of any of the provinces going to the Northwest Territories to hold a sitting and make laws to affect its own citizens.

I am not going to introduce an amendment with respect to this situation but I would suggest to the minister that it can easily be cured by the addition of a subclause reading, "the seat of government of the territories shall be that prescribed by the Commissioner in Council and may, from time to time, be changed by it."

By such an amendment we would be placing the power in the hands of the representatives of the people, inasmuch as there are to be seven elected members, to determine where their government shall meet. There again is a principle with which I am sure the hon. member for the Northwest Territories agrees and which I hope he will support.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Nielsen: Will the minister, Mr. Chairman, give the committee the benefit of his observations with regard to the representations I have made on behalf of the people of the north regarding the site of government?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Nielsen: I am waiting, Mr. Chairman, for a reply from the minister.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I am quite certain the hon. member has introduced a matter which is not covered in any of the amendments which we have proposed in the bill. As I said yesterday, I believe there is at present a lovely little village, Fort Smith, which is called the capital of the Northwest Territories. I am told that representations have been made to the Carrothers commission in respect of a permanent capital. I am not certain this is so, but I have been told such representations have been made and that there may be some observations made by the commission in respect of those views. If not, it will be the responsibility of the council, I assume, to be confirmed by us, to decide on a permanent capital.

It is well known that the commissioner of the Northwest Territories Council has a very small staff here. I have made the statement in the Northwest Territories and make it here that the next commissioner of the Northwest Territories Council is going to become a resident of the Northwest Territories at the earliest possible moment and that an increasing proportion of staff, now under the direction of the Department of Northern Affairs, northern administration branch, will be transferred to the oversight of the commissioner and the council in the Northwest Territories. In other words, I have said I want more government on the ground as rapidly as possible. This will be our policy but we must use some discretion in this regard.

There are many tasks involved in the affairs of the north which now and for the foreseeable future can be conducted far more economically in Ottawa than in some of the extreme areas of the northern Arctic Islands. I am sure my hon. friend is aware that to put up a house which probably costs $15,000 here in Ottawa would cost $38,000 or $40,000 on Ellesmere Island or at Resolute.

I am giving some indication of the problems with which we are confronted. We are engaged in a tremendous number of enterprises. As the hon. member probably knows, we deliver oil to the residents of the Northwest Territories and are pricing it at from 18 cents a gallon to 58 cents a gallon. We must bear in mind the cost of operation and do these things as effectively as we can from here, at the same time giving conviction to the people there that they have their government adjacent and available to them when they want to make representations to it.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Sessional indemnity for members.

Mr. Nielsen: This clause, Mr. Chairman, is the one which deals with the indemnity and expenses of the members of the Northwest Territories Council, both elected and appointed. My submission simply is that either the members of the Northwest Territories

Council are responsible persons or they are not. If the minister agrees with me that they are responsible persons, then surely they should be sufficiently responsible to have the authority to set the amount of their own indemnity and expenses. As I mentioned in my remarks yesterday, they have their electors to answer to if they abuse that responsibility. So far as the appointed members are concerned, they have the minister to answer to. There is always the inherent fiscal control.

It would be out of order for me to move an amendment but the one I would move if I could and keep within the rules would have the effect of deleting this section entirely. This would have no effect other than to place in the hands of the commissioner and council the power to set their own indemnity and expenses, because by clause 4 of the bill the commissioner and council are given the power to make expenditures of money for territorial purposes.

By the deletion of clause 3 of the bill the effect would be that the commissioner and council would have the power that this parliament is now providing with regard to the setting of indemnities. I take that position. We will get to the wording of clause 4 of the bill in a moment but it has a bearing on clause 3. As the minister well knows, the relevant provision in the Yukon Act is somewhat as follows: The expenditure of territorial funds and such portion of any moneys appropriated for the territory as the commissioner is authorized to spend by and with the advice of council. If that were the wording used in clause 4 and if clause 3 were deleted, the effect would be to place in the hands of the elected representatives of the people and the commissioner the power to set their own indemnity, a situation which I suggest to the members of the committee is the only acceptable one in keeping with the powers and responsibilities of any representative institution.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Money.

Mr. Nielsen: With regard to clause 4, sir, I draw the attention of members of the committee to the companion clause in the legislation governing the power of the commissioner and council to make expenditures of money for territorial purposes in the Yukon Act. I find there that the wording I have put on the record is the desirable legislative power which should be given to the commissioner and council of the Northwest Territories.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Northwest Territories consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Nielsen: I asked the hon. member for the Northwest Territories a question after he finished his remarks the other day, Mr. Chairman. I asked him whether he would agree with me that the legislation as it stands now gives to the commissioner and council the power to introduce a money bill and that by adopting the amendments proposed by clause 5 of this bill that right would be taken away. The hon. member for the Northwest Territories did not agree with that proposition. For his benefit and for the benefit of members of the committee let me point out the existing provisions of the Northwest Territories Act in section 19. Section 19 (3), which hon. members will find in the explanatory notes of the bill reads as follows:

> The Commissioner in Council may make ordinances providing for the expenditure of money for territorial purposes—

• (1:10 p.m.)

It goes on to cover other matters which are not relevant to this argument. It is clear, therefore, that under existing legislation the Commissioner in Council has the power to introduce money bills. What are we doing by the amendment? I would ask hon. members to read the new section 19A in clause 5 which is to be found on page 3 of the bill. It states:

> It shall not be lawful for the Council to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue of the Territories, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the Council by message of the Commissioner in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

I think the hon. member for the Northwest Territories must now agree with the proposition I put to him yesterday. The hon. member shakes his head, indicating that he does not. Nothing could be clearer. The existing legislation allows the Commissioner in Council to introduce money bills. The hon. member must agree with that. The new section 19A in clause 5 of the bill before us would take away that right. Nothing could be clearer. In other words, we move from a situation where the legislative body in the Northwest Territories now has the power to introduce money bills affecting their own affairs, to a situation where we are taking that power away and giving it to the Commissioner, who is an appointee of the government and who must accept from time to time the instructions of the minister or the governor in council. So in the long run, if the minister or the governor in council does not want any particular money bill placed before the Northwest Territories Council it does not go before that council, and there is no right in the seven elected representatives of the people of the territories to alter that situation.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? Could he tell us how this differs in any respect whatsoever from the severance of the executive power and the legislative power in the legislative assembly of any province?

Mr. Nielsen: This is precisely the principle involved here and the one involved in the Yukon Act which we will be considering in a moment. You have, if I may be permitted to use a colourful adjective, the invidious situation existing in both territories where the executive and the legislative functions are separated. There is no control exercised by the elected representatives of the people over the executive. Therein lies the difference between every provincial legislature and this one. The minister, as a member of the executive of this government, is responsible to the elected representatives of the people in this house. In the Northwest Territories and Yukon there is no responsibility by the executive to the representatives of the people. There is the difference; it is as simple as that.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. member would permit me to make this observation. This provision is included because they are not a province but we are hopefully moving toward that relationship. This is one of those interim situations along the road, if you like to call it such, toward coming to a position where I would hope some day they would have the same kind of government that we have in the provinces of Canada. But the difficulty is the small population in widely scattered areas and the necessity of having in the central government here an immense fund of money to make possible the laying of the groundwork out of which we hope to realize, for them and for us too, their participation as a province some day.

Mr. Nielsen: I agree with the minister's laudable objective but I cannot agree with his arguments in support of denying these rather fundamental principles of democracy to the people who live there. As I said yesterday, there can be no price-tag on democracy. There was just as small a population in 1869—indeed, it was smaller by several thousand—in the province of Manitoba when that province was carved out of the then Northwest Territories. That province, at the time it was created a province, was subsidized by federal funds probably as heavily as are the Northwest Territories today.

I implore the minister to accept that this is not an argument for saying to the people in the north: You are not responsible enough to spend not only your own money raised by taxing yourselves but our money which we contribute to the development, rightfully so, of the north.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. member would permit me to ask one more question and then I have to leave the chamber for a short while. Would he suggest that in the last three years we have made such great progress that these great, democratic, revolutionary changes can now be made whereas they were out of the question three and a half years ago? We have not developed that fast, though I keep claiming we are doing very well there. We are getting a considerable amount of new investment. I ask the hon. member, why was this not done three and a half years ago? I think we are increasing the tempo of development in the right direction, but I believe the hon. member would be the first to agree that all these changes and transitions cannot be made overnight.

Mr. Nielsen: I would be the first to agree with that, by all means. I feel a compulsion to answer the minister in the same vein as he has posed his question, but I have resolved that I am not going to become partisan over this business of the future political development of these two territories. Therefore I will not answer his question, but only for that reason. I could do so. Progress has been made and I am sure it will continue to be made. I am not advocating self-government overnight but I am advocating that we must embark now upon a blueprint, commencing with our centennial year, which will achieve that self-government within the foreseeable future.

It is a retrograde step to adopt this kind of amendment. If the minister sincerely believed in the principle of developing political institutions in the Northwest Territories he would not move from the position which now exists, whereby power is given to the legislative body in the Yukon to introduce money bills, to a lower level and take that power away, because that is what the bill does. If there is any sincere belief at all that there is to be a gradual, step by step transference of legislative and executive powers to the legislatures in the north, you cannot start by taking away those powers. It is simply inconsistent to do so.

If I could, sir, I would move an amendment which would have the effect of deleting the new section 19A in clause 5 of the bill. I do not believe I would be within the rules in doing so. I will, however, bow to your ruling in the matter, sir.

• (1:20 p.m.)

If it were deleted we would be left with the situation as it now stands in the Northwest Territories Act with the power remaining in the commissioner and council to introduce money bills.

There is one last point I want to make in support of my argument. The commissioner and council in the Northwest Territories have the power now to impose taxes on residents within the boundaries of the Northwest Territories and they have the concomitant power to introduce legislation which would have the effect of an expenditure of moneys by the government in respect of the taxes so raised. By adopting this amendment you are leaving the power in the hands of the commissioner and council to impose taxes, but you are taking away from the commissioner and council the power to spend the revenue that they raise by taxes.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might be bold enough to interpose myself for a moment or two as a non-partisan mediator between the arguments advanced on the one hand by the hon. member for Yukon and by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources on the other. As the house knows, I supported the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Yukon which, had it been carried, would have made the council a completely elected body so far as its members other than the commissioner were concerned. I suggested that if it carried it might be possible to have the present appointed members act as advisors to the commissioner. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I did so in part at least with the proposals contained in clause 5 in mind.

One of the things which strikes me is that the result of the proposals contained in clause 1 and clause 5 is in effect to create a separation between the executive and the legislative parts of the council or at least to move in the direction of such a separation as we understand it in this assembly. I have had some experience as a member of a municipal council. It is my understanding that such councils combine both the executive and the legislative functions in one body and have the authority both to initiate and legislate in respect of money matters.

I am sure that all of us in this house will agree that it is desirable that the executive of the territorial council should as soon as feasible be responsible to the legislative body in the same way as the executive is in this parliament. However, if one accepts the figures given by the minister as to the proportion of federal funds, in the consolidated fund of the territory, I believe that for the time being at least there is some validity to the proposition that through the responsibility of the commissioner to the executive some responsibility should fall upon the members of this house generally who are responsible for levying the taxes upon citizens in other parts of Canada which provide that proportion of the funds. In other words, it does seem to me that in this practical situation and for the time being at least it is in accordance with the principles of democracy that the 85 per cent of the funds provided by the rest of the people of Canada should in some measure be controlled by us who are responsible to the rest of the people of Canada.

I believe it was clear from the remarks of the member for Yukon—I would be disappointed in him if he had not done so—that he was pleading a strong and vigorous case for the early inauguration of complete autonomy. I think this was certainly part of his responsibility as the spokesman in this house for that area of the country. I am not suggesting that the arguments he has advanced are improper. On the other hand, in spite of our lack of knowledge and our ignorance of the area represented by him and the member for Northwest Territories, I think members from other parts of the country have some responsibility to attempt to weigh the various pros and cons of the particular proposals before us at this time.

As I read the provisions of clause 5, while it is perfectly true, as the member for Yukon suggests, that the power to initiate proposals involving the raising of funds or the spending of funds lies in the hands of the appointed commissioner, even though it does not go as far as the member for Yukon and I would have liked, there is the same power of veto on the part of the elected members of the council provided for in clause 1—

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Mr. Barnett: —over proposals for the raising or spending of funds. In other words, we have no power to initiate proposals in respect of spending estimates but we do have the power if we so wish to disapprove of the proposals which the executive places before us. To this extent at least it seems to me it is a desirable step forward toward separating the executive and the legislative functions of the council of the Northwest Territories, having regard to the constitutional position in the legislatures of the provinces and the parliament of Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: Surely this is a backward step.

Mr. Barnett: I hear the member for Yukon saying that this is a backward step. As I said earlier, I am relating my remarks to my experience in serving on a municipal council where the legislative and the executive functions are combined. As I understand the current situation, this is the position which exists now in that the majority have been appointed members and in effect have been an executive rather than a legislative body.

• (1:30 p.m.)

I feel that we all agree on our understanding of parliamentary institutions, and we are moving in the right direction if we take this step of separation of executive and legislative functions so that there is at least some parallel between the initiating power of the executive and the legislative power to veto. I am quite sure that the minister, the government of Canada and certainly this parliament, to whom the executive is responsible, would be disposed to take a serious look at a situation where the elected legislative council of the Northwest Territories rejected out of hand either the taxing or spending proposals put forward by the commissioner. I am certain that most of us in this house would be inclined to take a look at such a situation. As elected representatives ourselves we might have something to say as to the course of action we thought the commissioner, under direction from the minister and the governor in council, should take in that event.

I suggest that indirectly the legislative council in which the elected representatives have a majority is in a position to take action if they are dissatisfied with the proposals put forward by the commissioner, even though he is appointed, to a greater degree than they have been in the past.

Mr. Dinsdale: I should like to speak for a moment, Mr. Chairman, on the question propounded by the minister. While he was actually putting it to the hon. member for Yukon, this member has, as he has stated, been put in a position where he is serving the general interests of the north during his participation in this discussion. This means he has taken a high level, non-partisan approach. I must say too, from my association with the hon. member for Yukon when I was minister, that he was just as forceful in his non-partisan presentations in those days as he has been in his non-partisan presentations during this important discussion.

The point made by the minister was, why did the former administration not proceed to greater autonomy in the Northwest Territories when it had the responsibility? I can only reply in that regard, as I did earlier today, that we did have a long term plan for the future of self-government in the north. Included in that long term plan, and it was not very long term at that, was a provision for increasing autonomy until the time would be reached when we would be able to proceed to grant provincial rights to both the Yukon and Northwest Territories. The particular target date that was in mind by the former administration was the year 1967. We have focused on the year 1967 for the past several years as the occasion when major breakthroughs could be made with respect to many important functions and activities in this country.

Since we would be celebrating our one hundredth birthday in 1967 it would be particularly important, as you may well realize, for a Conservative administration to mark that occasion with a continuation of the policies of the first Conservative administration under Sir John A. Macdonald which made this nation possible. I am not revealing any secrets with regard to cabinet policy because the then prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, on several occasions in public statements referred to 1967 as the occasion when it was hoped both the northern territories would have moved a considerable distance in the direction of provincial autonomy.

The minister has made the argument on several occasions that the north is a deficit area of Canada requiring subsidization by the central government. I remind him, and I am now speaking as a Manitoban, that when Manitoba became a province in 1870 and Winnipeg was declared the capital of that province the total population of the city of Winnipeg was 215 souls. Today, less than 100 years later, Winnipeg has an urban population of some 500,000 people. The philosophy the minister has been expressing today that the Northwest Territories is a deficit area is almost on all fours with the philosophy that was enunciated by the Liberal party back in those early days when we emerged as a confederated nation.

For instance, when the construction of a transcontinental railway was mooted there was opposition because they said that a railway through this trackless wilderness would not even pay for its own axle grease. We have moved far beyond those negative concepts in this day and age in Canadian development. The minister was equivocating on this point. He almost apologized for making enthusiastic statements recently about the great economic potential of the Northwest Territories largely based on another Conservative program, the construction of the Pine Point Railway, which was opposed by the Liberal party in the same terms, that it was a railway that would not pay for itself. We know now what this one example has meant in terms of the economic upsurge in Pine Point. We are going to have a community there in the next three years with a population of 7,000 or 8,000 people.

As I said last night, I think this is an eloquent demonstration of the fact that the critical point of the movement of the Northwest Territories from a position of a deficit economy is not too far removed into the future. The minister has quoted statistics, and I am quoting them from memory, to the effect that the total income from minerals in the Northwest Territories last year was something like $15 million. This year it is $72 million, and projected into 1968 it will be about $115 million. We are moving ahead much more rapidly than we could ever have expected, even in the visionary days of the Conservative northern development program. We are moving ahead much more rapidly in concrete, tangible terms.

Unfortunately we are not setting the same pace in our movement toward greater provincial autonomy. There is agitation coming from the northerners themselves. You are getting a population upsurge in the north which is bringing with it, in addition to the pioneering spirit that has always been part of these people who move north of the 60th parallel, a group of people who are equipped with managerial and administrative skills that are second to none. The people who will be working on the development at Pine Point, for example, are men of considerable managerial and administrative background. They are not going to be happy remaining in a semi-colonial position wtih reference to their own government.

I do not want to prolong the discussion but I heartily endorse what was stated by the hon. member for Yukon. We are taking in this particular clause a retrograde step rather than a step forward. As we have indicated, we cannot move the amendment that the government through the minister might move and which would at least keep the financial situation of the Northwest Territories in the same position it was previous to the introduction of this amendment.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, had the fiscal argument not run off the tracks I would not be rising again, but I must answer a misconception which seems to be held by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. With great respect to his argument, one cannot endorse its validity. Certainly the Northwest Territories is a deficit area. But so is every other province in the country with the exception of the province from which the hon. member for Comox-Alberni comes, British Columbia, and also Ontario.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, may I rise to correct what I consider to be a misapprehension in the mind of the hon member for Yukon. According to statistics tabled in this house during the last session of parliament there was only one non-deficit area, on the basis of federal calculations, and that was the province of Ontario.

Mr. Nielsen: Then that makes my argument all the stronger, and I thank the hon. member for correcting me in this regard. Accepting that, is it any justification for saying that the federal government have the right, for instance, to appoint members to the legislatures of all other provinces except Ontario simply because they are deficit areas? Does that give any validity to the principle that because all these other provinces except Ontario are deficit areas we must not allow those provinces to legislate on money matters until such time as the federal government has approved, through the Lieutenant Governors, money legislation? That is what is suggested both in the argument of the minister and the argument of the member for Comox-Alberni.

There can be no price tag or restriction, fiscal or otherwise, on the right of the people who are supposed to be represented by a representative legislative body. Either the principle is a valid one or it is not.

What the legislation in effect does is to take away a power that is already there. It compounds an abortion of the principle of representative government. It compounds an error in the thinking of the government and, unfortunately, if the hon. member for Comox-Alberni sticks with his argument in this regard, it compounds the error in his thinking.

I say that because if you are going to accept, on the basis of the fiscal argument that the federal government spends more money in the Northwest Territories than it gets out of it, the principle that (a) the members of the legislative body must be appointed and (b), that they are not going to have the power to spend money which they derive from imposing taxes on themselves, as well as by other means such as federal grants, until such time as the appointee of the federal government introduces such legislation, then you have to impose the same kind of restriction on every provincial legislature in Canada with the exception of Ontario. That is what it would lead to logically.

Sir, argue as one might one cannot abrogate the fact that these amendments, including this which is one of the most important ones, are taking away from the elected representatives of the people the right to spend money derived by way of revenue from taxes which they impose upon themselves. That is what we would be doing if we accepted this amendment.

Mr. Schreyer: Would the hon. member permit a question at this point? According to the hon. member's argument, which I find very persuasive, it would follow that the Yukon and Northwest Territories were as eligible for self-government 5, 10 or 15 years ago as they are today. I would ask the hon. member if he would argue that point as well.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I have said from the outset of my participation in this debate, and I am going to continue in this course of conduct, that I am not going to be drawn into a partisan discussion, though I am not suggesting that this is the hon. member's intention. I speak as a northerner and I believe—I am sure this belief is held by all members of the committee—deeply and sincerely in the principles of representative government in a democratic institution. I am one who believes that it is wrong to allow the people who comprise an elected body to tax themselves and yet deny them the power to spend the money they raise thereby. That is really the only principle involved here.

I think they are more ready now than they were 10 or 15 years ago to take the necessary steps toward eventual autonomy. And I do not advocate autonomy overnight because it does take time to acquire the skills and experience which go hand in hand with efficient government. In my submission, though this is a personal view, you cannot expect to create a brand new autonomous legislature and to deal with the far reaching implications involved if these people are clothed with the authority to deal, for instance, with the resource of the Yukon River which has the potential to produce twice the hydroelectric output of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Until such time, Mr. Chairman, as that experience and skill are acquired, then we have to move in staged steps toward autonomy.

The point I am making with respect to this amendment is that if we adopt it we are not moving ahead but are moving backward. There is already provision in the existing legislation giving the Commissioner in Council the power to legislate with respect to the expenditure of funds. But this amendment takes that power away and makes it unlawful—they do not use the word "power" in the amendment—for the representatives of the people to legislate with regard to money matters until such time as the appointee of the government brings in that kind of legislation. That is what is wrong with this amendment. It is undemocratic. It is not representative. It hearkens back to the days of George III when people were taxed without representation. That is what is happening here. There is a complete lack of appreciation and a misconception of every fundamental principle of the democratic institution and way of life.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I do not particularly desire to launch into a debate with the hon. member for Yukon which might well endure for the rest of the afternoon. I still feel that my argument has validity and that he cannot have it both ways. He cannot have it that the council of the territories, in its basic conception, should be an executive body rather than a legislative one but still argue to have it become a legislative body.

I listened to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris speaking, not only as a former minister of the department but as a Manitoban, about the early history of his province and its population when it became a province. He talked of the Conservative policy of expansion in the early days of our country's existence and referred to the railway.

Coming from British Columbia, my own approach is slightly different from his inasmuch as the province of British Columbia came into being in a manner different from that of the province of Manitoba. We were a Crown colony under the situation which he described as dating back to the days of George III. The colonial government, or in effect the executive, had the authority of taxation without being subject to the normal exercise of the veto power of a legislative assembly.

As I recall the population of British Columbia at the time of confederation with the rest of Canada in 1871 was something like 10,000 persons. I believe the figures were adjusted to permit more members than would normally have been allowed to come to parliament. What I should like the hon. member for Yukon to consider is that under that regime when British Columbia was a colony, although the Crown exercised a veto power the province nevertheless was required to depend entirely upon the taxes which could be raised from the few people then in the province.

Although I do not decry the vision of people like Sir John A. Macdonald in bringing confederation into being, I suggest and I hope that the Conservative concept of expansion was very different from that which will be followed in the expansion of the Canadian north today. The Conservatives were content to use the federal authority as an instrument for getting a railway started. They then proceeded to throw the baby out with the bath water. In other words, they gave to a private corporation the responsibility for carrying through the will of parliament, the result being that the returns from that development to a very great extent, went to the private developers rather than toward the real growth that could have taken place in Canada.

There has been some discussion in the house about deficit financing. Here is where my basic philosophy differs from that of the hon. member for Yukon. I hope that there will be a co-ordinated, planned and increasing expansion of the northern area with the resources of the nation thrown behind that concept. I would further say that so far as I am concerned the returns from that investment, to which the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources made reference, should accrue primarily to the benefit and future well-being of the Northwest Territories. In other words, I would say that the taxpayers of the rest of Canada will benefit indirectly if the north grows. Certainly nothing more than a return of the initial investment made by the taxpayers generally in this period of deficit financing should be returned directly to the rest of Canada. If by some chance the returns from the north move into a surplus position before the people of that area have the full rights and responsibilities of provincial government as we understand them in other parts of the country, I hope that any such surplus will be put into a trust fund for the people of the Northwest Territories and will be made available to them for their future use in their own development. I hope that will be done when they achieve, as I am sure we all hope they will, full provincial status within confederation.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I think this is another of those quiet debates, which is most edifying for the new members of this house.

I take part in the debate in a friendly spirit, as an eastern Canadian ready to cooperate with northern Canadians to promote a greater prosperity in the country.

It is not every day that I admire the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen)—I like him less when he acts the great uncompromising judge—but I believe his arguments yesterday and today concerning the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are enlightening and instructive.

I must say I share his views on almost all points as well as those of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), whose comments were most constructive.

Mr. Chairman, as I believe the minister told us some time ago, when we were discussing a similar bill while studying the results of survey carried out by the Carrothers Commission in September, it is time that the house decide what are its objectives.

I think that when we finish studying the results of the Carrothers survey, we should consider giving the Northwest Territories and the Yukon the self-government they request and to which they are entitled according to the democratic principle of philosophy in the world. They want to have their own government instead of "taxation without representation".

We know that those territories are not inhabited only by illiterate Eskimos. We know that Canadians who are ready to assume their responsibilities live there also. For instance, I can well imagine the hon. member for Yukon as premier of the province of Yukon and the hon. member for the Northwest Territories as premier of a province which would not be called the Northwest Territories but something else.

Mr. Chairman, could we not set the house a goal? Could not the house agree to the holding next fall or winter of a referendum in those territories to find out what the inhabitants want and if they are willing to see the territories become provinces and assume the responsibilities that such a step entails?

Since there is no doubt that the answer would be positive and affirmative, we might set as our second goal to give Canada an anniversary present in 1967 by adding to it two new provinces: the Yukon and the Northwest.

I certainly do not feel qualified to set up the limits of those new provinces, but I think that, in general, we would be doing something constructive if we supported the objective mentioned a little earlier by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, namely to give self-government to these territories in 1967.

Once again, Mr. Chairman, I am making those remarks as an eastern Canadian who wants to contribute to the development of Canada by extending a hand to the Canadians in the north.

I will add a personal remark. It is possible that I suddenly developed a sentimental attachment, since I am now a shareholder in the symbolic company which the hon. member for Yukon is busy promoting. I thank him very much for sending me a very impressive certificate a few days ago. I repeat what I said a little earlier. As a lawyer presenting a case such as the one he has been presenting since yesterday, I think we should take our hats off to him and extend to him the cooperation that a Canadian of good will can give another Canadian of good will.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I just want to draw the attention of the committee to the facility with which the clauses of the bill have been passed during the minister's absence.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

YUKON ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INDEMNITIES, TRAVELLING EXPENSES, ETC.

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Laing for the second reading of Bill No. C-147, to amend the Yukon Act.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Surely the minister has a statement he wishes to make on second reading?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must advise the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not realize that. I went over the proceedings which have taken place so far in connection with the bill before us. The resolution stage is reported at page 2844 of Hansard. The second reading stage is reported at page 3338 of Hansard. There was a debate. Since then the minister has, I know, received representations from the Yukon legislative council either directly or through the commissioner asking in effect that the members of the council be heard on this bill.

I think it is essential that members of the house should appreciate the difference which exists between the system of government in the Northwest Territories and that which exists in the Yukon Territory. The Yukon has had a wholly elected council for many years. The council has seven members. It has no executive power, merely power to act in concert with the commissioner in the passage of legislation. It has no power to introduce money bills. In effect it is a rubberstamp. That is the term which its members use in referring to themselves.

The Yukon has a history of some 68 years of political development. Indeed, the Yukon Territory was made a separate territory before the creation of the western provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and when searching for a name by which to call the government-appointed representative in the Yukon the term "commissioner" was evolved because there could not be two governors, one sitting in Regina and one in the Yukon Territory.

The Yukon has been represented in this house since the turn of the century and because of varying economic conditions the size of the legislative council has fluctuated from time to time. I do not think the minister would for a moment gainsay the proposition that the Yukon Territory is breaking through not only in the economic field, which at the moment does not concern me, but also in the field of the creation of fully democratic ways of life.

The minister put his finger on the nub of the issue when he was speaking on the bill to amend the Northwest Territories Act, namely, that complete separation exists between the executive and the legislative arms of government. The executive arm of government in the Yukon is in effect an appointee of the federal government of the day. In effect the commissioner, who is the appointee of the minister through the governor in council, administers the Yukon Territory from time to time on instructions of the minister himself. Any legislation that is passed is created by the federal administration, is laid before the council and it is simply asked to rubberstamp it. Nothing can emanate from the council affecting expenditures of money. Notwithstanding the fact that we have been taxing ourselves for decades we have not yet the power by positive legislation to spend a single penny of that money. There is this vast difference in the historic development of the territories. Consequently there is bound to be that same kind of gap existing between the extent of the demand for reform in the Yukon and the extent of that demand in the Northwest Territories.

As the minister well knows, there is a growing and insistent demand in the Yukon for positive and immediate reforms. Unlike the Northwest Territories, the members of the Yukon Legislative Council have thought a good deal about the nature of the reforms that can be brought about in order to achieve a greater degree of executive control.

I might embark at this moment to lay the groundwork for the proposals I will be making by pointing out a few of the more important distinctions between the administration in the Yukon and that in the Northwest Territories. When discussing the preceding bill the minister mentioned the example of liquor in the Northwest Territories. That in effect is the only field in which positive local control—the minister shakes his head in the negative—exists in the hands of the people there. They, for instance, have no control, as we do, over company's legislation. In effect, in the Yukon Territory the legislative power is exactly the same as that which exists in any provincial legislature, with three very important exceptions.

The first of these exceptions is that the council of the Yukon has no power to introduce money bills, and that is the most important. Second, it has no power to legislate with respect to natural resources and, third, it has no power to legislate with respect to the administration of justice. These three areas are omitted from section 16 of the Yukon Act which sets forth the division of powers between the federal and territorial authority legislatively, as does the B.N.A. Act in sections 91 and 92.

The question of the continued separation of the executive from the legislative function has to be faced. For many years, unlike the Northwest Territories, the administration in the Yukon as distinct from the council —because the council has no executive authority—has had the autonomous power to deal with all matters affecting education in the territory, has had the same kind of power with respect to the construction and maintenance of the territorial road system, has the same kind of power with respect to taxation for territorial purposes of the residents of the territory, and has assumed partial administrative authority in the fields of forestry, game and fishery. It also has partial authority in labour matters and in the control exercised over the professions of law, medicine and engineering.

But the members of the council and the people of the territory generally have reached the stage where they require that there be transferred from the federal jurisdiction partial, not whole, executive control. They feel that if they are going to be responsible for the administration of education they should have the legislative power to do so and not be told what to do by Ottawa through the commissioner.

They feel that if they are going to have the administrative responsibility in territorial public works they should have the power to control that area of jurisdiction in a fiscal way through their legislative body. As the minister knows, the northwest highway system, under half of which lies in the Yukon, is to be transferred from the federal Department of Public Works to the territorial government in 1967. This involves the transfer of many hundreds of employees to a territorial civil service that has existed for many years, as contrasted with the situation in the Northwest Territories, and yet though being asked to assume the jurisdiction for the administration of this huge undertaking there is no concomitant power to legislate in respect thereof. So, sir, the administration of the Yukon rests with the commissioner appointed by an order in council of the executive here in Ottawa. The Commissioner in Council has the powers I have outlined.

This House of Commons has the power—and I simply make this point in passing, not anticipating any argument to the contrary—to create provinces out of the existing Northwest Territories. I have said before, sir, and I say again in this house what I have said outside it, that the political problem of the growth from colony to province is analagous to the same problem confronting the nation as a whole with which we have been struggling for 150 years.

There are many who believe we have solved the problem on a national scale but we certainly have not done so with respect to the remaining territories of Canada. What are we in the Yukon, through the elected representatives of our people, asking for? We can look at the emerging nations of the world. We have seen the Congo obtain self-government. We have seen the problem in Rhodesia, which we condemn because of the political basis on which it rests; yet we deny in our own country the very things that we condemn in others.

Here are the elected representatives of the people of the Yukon asking for more say in their own affairs. They are not asking for the complete say. They are not asking for complete autonomy. Yet the government's attitude is: You cannot do this. But the government condemns that kind of approach on an international basis.

• (2:20 p.m.)

The case I make with respect to the Yukon is a much stronger one than that which has been presented with respect to the Northwest

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Territories. It is stronger because of the fact that the Yukon has existed for almost 70 years as a separate entity. During those years it has gained a tremendous fund of experience and skill in the legislative function. It has gained a good deal of skill and experience with regard to the administrative requirements concerning the assumption of legislative control. Its economy is on the upsurge and is increasing each year; great things are in store. In addition, the wholly elected members of that council have made the specific request of the minister that, as the elected representatives of the Yukon representing the people of that territory, they be heard by the standing committee on northern affairs and national resources before this bill passes. Is that request going to be denied? Are we going to say that the Yukon territorial council can exist at the pleasure of the government of the day but we are not going to listen to anything they have to say, we do not want to hear them. I feel sure that is what we in effect are doing if we turn down their request.

So that there may be no doubt concerning the feelings of the people themselves who live in the Yukon on this question, as expressed by the members of the council elected by those people to represent them, I am going to place on the record a resolution which was passed last Friday, May 6. I commend it to the attention of hon. members. The wording of that resolution is as follows:

Resolved that the commissioner be requested to forward to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources for his earliest consideration the accompanying resolution of this council:

Resolved that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources refer Bill C-146, an act to amend the Yukon Act, to the standing committee on northern affairs and national resources in the House of Commons to enable the council of the Yukon Territory to present the case for the amendments inherent in or consequential to or otherwise necessary to realize the philosophy implicit in the following changes now requested of the minister:

May I ask hon. members to remember that these are the wholly elected representatives of the people of the Yukon speaking.

(a) The council of the Yukon Territory to be known as the Yukon legislative assembly;

(b) The number of members of the Yukon legislative assembly to be increased to 15 and the term of the assembly to be increased to four years;

(c) The advisory committee on finance to be replaced by an executive committee of not less than five members with full executive powers in the following classes of subjects:—

(i) Education, health and welfare

(ii) Territorial resources including land

(iii) Public works
(iv) Justice and corrections
(v) Revenue and finance
(vi) Forestry
(vii) Fishery
(viii) All residual executive and administrative functions including industry and labour controlled or performed by the federal government.

and the legislative assembly to have exclusive legislative jurisdiction to make ordinances for the government of the territory in relation to the above classes of subjects in addition to the legislative powers existing under section 16 of the Yukon Act.

This, as I have explained before, is parallel to sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act.

(d) The number of members of the Yukon legislative assembly to be increased from 15 to 21 or such greater number as the Yukon legislative assembly may determine at the expiration of twelve years from the implementation of amendments to the Yukon Act implicit in this resolution when all necessary legislative and other changes are to be effected to constitute the province of Yukon with the same legislative and executive powers as those which exist in the provinces of Canada.

(e) The members to be given all necessary authority analogous to that in provincial legislative assemblies to establish their indemnities and allowances and to have all the requisite powers to establish or participate in a pension plan or group health plan;

(f) Section 24 of the Yukon Act to be repealed;

Section 24 is word for word the same as section 19A in clause 5 of the bill to amend the Northwest Territories Act which we first passed and which makes it unlawful for a member of council to introduce a money matter.

(g) The status of the Yukon legislative assembly to be enlarged so that it shall have full capacity to attend all interprovincial and federal-provincial conferences and to participate in resulting discussions and agreements;

(h) The Land Titles Act—

Which is now a federal statute.

—to be repealed in respect of the Yukon Territory and replaced by a land titles ordinance;

(i) All Crown land to be held in the name of the Crown in right of the territory.

I ask members of the committee whether that sounds like a resolution prepared by people who have neither the capacity, the ability nor the responsibility to look after their own affairs. It is not implicit in that resolution that the council is asking for self-government and autonomy immediately. What they as the representatives of the people of the Yukon are proposing is that we embark on a blueprint for the future, a blueprint which they have targeted 12 years hence and which will result in the Yukon becoming the eleventh province of this country.

The council is asking for an increasing measure of executive control. It is implicit that the elected legislators of the people are asking for some measure of control over the executive, which in effect comprises the treasury benches of this house, the Department of Northern Affairs and the minister. They want more than the mere negative control which they exercise now over supply. They could do the same as did the legislative council in the territory of Assiniboia before it became the province of Manitoba. When that territory was fighting for provincial status under the leadership of Frederick Haultain they refused supply for six months which caused the whole of the civil service to go out and cut wood to make a living.

They do not want to be negative in that fashion. This session they have refused to pass the justice estimates because they disagree with certain policies of the administration with regard thereto. They want partial, positive control of the executive function. That is not too much to ask. Almost all of these classes of subject matter over which they are requesting executive control are now administered in the territory. Therefore it is a very short step to provide legislative control over executive action in these fields. The administrative force already is there.

These direct representations have been made to the minister and through him to the government and this House of Commons. This is the only way available to the people of the territory to make known their views. Therefore—and even if it was not required of me I would say this—I endorse 100 per cent the representations they are asking us to take cognizance of. I therefore move, in keeping with the wishes of the wholly elected legislative body in the Yukon representing the people there:

That Bill C-147 be not now read a second time but that the said bill be referred to the standing committee of this house on northern affairs and national resources.

I have taken the trouble to have the motion prepared in both official languages, which I am sure would be appreciated by the legislative council of the Yukon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. May I ask the indulgence of the house for the Chair to take this matter under advisement?

A decision on the amendment will be given later after consideration.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for moving back and forth in the chamber but I was anticipating, as a result of a call from the minister, that the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) would try to catch Your Honour's eye. I do not intend to speak at any great length on the bill before us. First of all, I should like to say that I entirely support the contentions of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) in this regard, notwithstanding the fact the hon. member and I may have some differences of opinion regarding a certain Klondike festival. As a member from the city of Edmonton and the province of Alberta, I understand the particular problem which the hon. member for Yukon has been underlining with great eloquence in respect of the administration of the Yukon and the aspirations of the people there regarding their right to administer their own affairs.

Without repeating what the hon. member has said, I believe there are a number of points that we should certainly consider. I do not intend to be personally offensive to the minister or any of the people charged with the administration of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, but—perhaps the minister will correct me if I am wrong—I believe I was in the area of the Northwest Territories long before the minister and perhaps even before the hon. member for Northwest Territories was there. Even in those pre-war years there was the feeling that Ottawa was so far away, so paternal, that if there was a wrong way to do a thing Ottawa would find it.

An hon. Member: Why was there that feeling?

Mr. Lambert: I do not know. I am not being offensive to anyone, but that was the attitude at that time. I have since discovered that the same attitude exists among the people of the Northwest Territories who come down to Edmonton, as they do, and I have certainly found this attitude among the people of the Yukon when I have been up there. It has also been conveyed to me when people from the Yukon have visited Edmonton.

The people in these territories are not at all happy with long-range administration. We in Alberta are particularly conscious of this when it comes to the question of national parks. I will not say any more on that subject. The minister knows that I and the majority of the people of Alberta differ with him and his officials with regard to parks policy. This is because of the long-range paternalism of this government which, frankly, may seem to be nice and tidy for those in the inner core but for those on the fringe who are the subject matter of the decisions it is both irksome and reprehensible.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret).]

As the hon. member for Yukon indicated, this is not a cry for autonomy. This is a reasoned approach. Surely to goodness there is a great case in this day and age for as much freedom of action as it is possible to give. It is not like the old days when the only contact with the Yukon was through going by rail to Vancouver, then by boat up to Skagway and in from there. There was no immediate contact in those days. Now one can reach these territories as quickly as a fast airplane can get there. Communication by electronic means is even quicker. There are a number of things as to the details of this bill that I personally wish to question, but I would reiterate the plea of the hon. member for Yukon that this matter should be referred to the committee.

If this were done, appropriate representations could be made and in particular the members of the council and people they represent could be heard in regard to this measure. Some people may say: We will put these amendments in and see how they work; then we may deign to amend the law. In reply to such a suggestion I would say that the minister has opened up the act at this time. He has introduced a number of amendments that have been standing by for a long time merely because it was not desirable to open up the act. I know enough about administration in this regard to realize that there is always reluctance to open up any act and there must be a most compelling reason before this is done. Therefore, let us not say we will open up the act again in the very near future to take care of anything which may have been missed or something that is not working in this connection. That would be merely living in a fool's paradise. Let us put this question before the committee, in order that they may hear representations. If this is the desire of the council and people of the Yukon, what on earth is the great hurry in pushing this bill through without it being considered by the committee? With those words, Mr. Speaker, I support the spirit of the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The Chair is now ready to give a decision on whether the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Yukon is receivable. As we are debating second reading of this bill may I refer hon. members to standing order 77 which reads as follows:

Every public bill shall be read twice in the house before committal or amendment.

Therefore, as we are on second reading and have a motion before us I believe that this amendment is not receivable.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect, on the basis of your ruling it would then appear that no bill can be amended on second reading or prior to second reading. With the greatest respect, that certainly is not the tradition of this house.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): May I add, Mr. Speaker, with great respect, that there are a great many bills, before standing committees of this house which have been improperly referred if your ruling is correct.

Mr. Nielsen: May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there are precedents in the proceedings of this house for taking precisely the course which we are taking now and it is evidently within the rules to make a motion in the words which have been submitted to Your Honour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I also refer the hon. members to paragraph 6 of citation 202 of Beauchesne, fourth edition, which reads:

It is not an amendment to a motion to move that the question go to a committee.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not the whole citation though, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, it is.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. The amendment reads:

That Bill C-147 be not now read a second time but that the said bill be referred to the standing committee of this house on northern affairs and national resources.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I know that in a co-operative way many things can be accomplished in this house satisfactory to all members concerned. I wish that the government, particularly the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, would consider the suggestion which has been made in the amendment. I realize that possibly this could have been done if there had been prior consultation with the minister.

I had an experience recently where the Minister of Labour agreed with me that a bill in his name be referred to a standing committee because ample opportunity is given there to those who wish to make representations and probably a greater degree of flexibility in discussion is allowed. While this process is in effect I believe this house can engage itself in some other way and thereby proceed with the business of this house before us which has to be considered. I believe a great deal of the time of this house would be saved if such a concession were made by the government in this case.

I would appeal to the government. Even though Your Honour has ruled this amendment out of order and there is some dispute as to the ruling, nevertheless if the government felt at this point that they would be agreeable to sending this bill to the committee for representations I am sure this would be welcomed by those who have a direct interest. I am sure that the members of the Yukon council would be glad to have afforded to them an opportunity to present their case in respect of the bill. After all, this bill does represent something very vital to them because it will affect their very interests, their functions and their financial position.

Surely under those circumstances and in all fairness they should be given an opportunity to present their case and put forward their own ideas and recommendations on this bill. It would also give an opportunity to the government to state their position more clearly and effectively and there would be a greater opportunity to do so in a standing committee than in committee of the whole house. Therefore I would ask the government to consider its position. If the suggestion is agreed to we can go on with other business we have before us which has to be considered.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I am not quite clear with regard to the precise stage we are at. I am not clear whether the amendment has been ruled out of order or not. If it has not, I would want to reserve my right to argue that it is out of order and give authorities in support of that position. Has the amendment been ruled out of order?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. May I inform the Minister of Public Works that the amendment has been ruled out of order.

Mr. Lambert: But for the reason you gave?

Mr. McIlraith: I was going to suggest, if it meets the wishes of hon. members, that I be allowed to move the adjournment of the debate at this stage. I am not prepared at the moment to agree that the bill, after second reading, go to committee. I am not prepared at the moment to say whether or not the government is agreeable to it being referred to a committee. If it were agreeable, I would move the adjournment of the debate and we can then immediately proceed with the forestry estimates.

Mr. Lambert: It is not debatable.

Mr. McIlraith: That is why I did not formally put the motion for the adjournment of the debate before finding out if there is any consensus against it.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): It is not often, Mr. Speaker, that I take part in these discussions on procedural matters. At this particular juncture of our discussion I think the issue is so important that I should like to make some suggestions and comments. I recall that in so far as the proposed amendments to the Northwest Territories Act were concerned we were faced with a similar situation. We made suggestions to the then house leader, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, that we thought it would be in the best interests of the business procedures of this house if the bill which sought to divide the Northwest Territories could be referred to the standing committee. In this way it would have been possible for hon. members to hear representations directly from the northerners affected. This procedure was adopted then and before the bill was read the second time it was referred to the standing committee. The results were rather significant inasmuch as we discovered that the contents of the bill were not necessarily in the best interests of the people of the Northwest Territories.

With reference to the present bill, No. C-147, I presume that the reason the amendment was ruled out of order was a certain weakness in the terminology. If that is the case, then perhaps we might get around that difficulty by submitting another amendment that would deal with the terminological difficulties. The reason I am most concerned is the disappointment that was felt, I think on all sides of the house, with reference to our handling of Bill No. C-146. It was our feeling that this bill should be referred to a standing committee. A decision has been made, and that has not been possible.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if I could ask the hon. gentleman a question? When he says that has not been possible, may I remind him I just asserted that we wanted to consider whether or not that was possible. I was raising that point when I made way for the hon. member because I thought he was going to express an opinion upon whether or not that should be done. I said I would have the adjournment of the debate moved at that time so that we could consider whether or not to refer it to a committee. I just have not had an opportunity yet to consider whether it should or should not be referred to a committee.

Mr. Dinsdale: As I understand it, the leader of the house was going to put forward a motion that this debate be now adjourned.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: We seem to be in a bit of difficulty here because, as I understand it, the Speaker has indicated that the proposed amendment is out of order. Perhaps we can get around this—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The Minister of Public Works, on behalf of the government, has expressed a wish that the house should adjourn—

Mr. McIlraith: The debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): —that the debate should be adjourned. Such a wish should be expressed in the form of a motion which could then be considered by the house. The hon. member wishes to move a new amendment, and I think we should clarify our position.

Mr. Robichaud: I move that this debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris has the floor and is speaking on the second reading of this bill. I submit that the Minister of Fisheries is not in order in attempting to keep the hon. member for Brandon-Souris from moving an amendment.

In order to get around the difficulty I suggest that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris move his motion and after he sits down the adjournment of the debate might then be moved if that is still the wish of the government. In this way the government will have both the question of referral to a committee and the motion itself to consider.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The house leader has taken a reasonable attitude in this regard. If I may be allowed, I should like to put the motion before the house. It will resolve the difficulty with which we are confronted. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr):

That Bill No. C-147 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the said bill be referred to the standing committee of this house on Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

1. Departmental administration, $1,121,200.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, surely the Minister of Forestry is prepared to give us an accounting of his stewardship of this department in glowing terms and give us an opportunity to hear from him personally what his plans are for the future, what policies he has introduced during his term of office and about the expenditures before us for 1966-67.

[Translation]

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, we finished last night a most interesting discussion on some points of the Department of Forestry policy on rural development.

On opening the debate on the estimates of the Department of Forestry for the year 1966-67, I shall restrict my remarks to the department, its operation, its development program and some of its achievements.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The department, as we know, was created in 1960 by combining together some services of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Slowly, these two services were co-ordinated and finally joined together. So much so that, during 1964, we were in a position to present a plan for the complete reorganization of the department, both on a regional and a national basis, that is we have tried to regroup the services of the Department of Forestry on a regional basis and we have established a certain number of national institutes in Ottawa and Sault Ste. Marie.

The reorganization was successfully carried out and all regions are now operating normally and the various institutes of the Department of Forestry are proceeding with their operations.

We are on the point of announcing for each of the areas, an advisory committee which will include representatives of the provincial departments of forestry, representatives of industry, universities and forestry organizations in each of the seven regions established by the Department of Forestry.

Up to now, we can say that we have maintained existing services. But last year, we have suggested, subject to cabinet approval a six-year development plan for departmental services. We expect shortly the final approval of the authorities for these development projects which mainly involve a 100 per cent increase in forestry researchers, especially in applied research, and a sizeable increase in department facilities, both in the Ottawa and the Sault Ste. Marie areas. We hope, within six years, to double the personnel and the material facilities of the department.

This has become a necessity because forest industries in Canada have grown extensively in the last few years. Provincial governments are asking us increasingly to undertake forest research projects called applied research; industry is asking us to concentrate our efforts increasingly on the elimination of certain types of forest diseases. Because of all this, we must increase the services of the department.

As you are aware, the jurisdiction of the Department of Forestry is very limited under the B.N.A. Act. Forest management comes under provincial authority only. Throughout the years, however, provincial authorities have agreed that the federal government should undertake research work in the fied of forestry. Through the Department of Forestry, the federal government limits its research in the field of forestry to basic and applied research.

The department has an excellent reputation in Canada and throughout the world. Scientists in the western world as well as the eastern world follow its work in basic and applied research. We are constantly in contact with forestry departments and universities everywhere in the world. Scientists from various countries work on their own projects in our laboratories and some of our public servants do the same in foreign countries. We stand very high in international circles. This is due especially to the research work which was undertaken by the Department of Agriculture and which is still continuing. In June, the Sixth International Forestry Convention will be held in Madrid, where more than 20 of our researchers will present papers; this forestry convention is sponsored by the F.A.O.

[English]

There are in certain parts of Canada difficult problems to solve in the forest industry. One of the most urgent which affects both the forests in British Columbia and in Newfoundland is the balsam woolly aphid. So far, while research has been conducted in Canada and the United States into the problem, we have been unable to find a solution to it. There has been a special crash program started this year in British Columbia and we hope to be able to find some solution to eradicate this disease, which seems to attack trees in a way which makes it impossible for the forest industry to cut the wood and use it.

We also have in many parts of Canada specific diseases which the federal government is combating. We have special programs in New Brunswick and in the province of Quebec. Generally speaking, these diseases have not increased and we have been able to stop the spread of certain tree diseases. But they always remain a danger and much of our effort in the department is devoted to the prevention of disease or the sickness of trees.

In the department there is probably the largest concentration of Ph.D's and masters of science in any department of the government of Canada. These people are doing wonderful research and I would want to seize this occasion to praise their work. Many members of this house have come in contact with our researchers in their own provinces, and they know the quality of the work being done in our department.

I mentioned earlier that we have a large expansion program which will shortly be under way. We will announce the program soon so that the universities can prepare to train the scientific personnel who will be required by the department over the next six to seven years. Generally speaking we have had no trouble with recruiting enough scientists to assume the responsibilities required in various laboratories across the country. The turnover in the department is not very large; it is quite normal and we are fortunate in having so many devoted servants across the country.

The reorganization of the department has gone well. There have been a few problems here and there over the location of the headquarters of the branches, but so far nothing too serious. We are proceeding with a special forest inventory and land capability survey in Labrador and Newfoundland. We are also proceeding under the other program with the Canada land inventory which covers all provinces in Canada. We have a shared-cost agreement with the provinces which has been in existence for the last five years. About $8 million of our budget is devoted to this item in the estimates. We do not know what will be the future in this field; much depends on the results of the federal-provincial conference on fiscal arrangements this coming fall.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the few remarks I wanted to make on the presentation of my estimates. When the estimates for last year were discussed in February and March I sought the occasion to make some remarks relating to the work of the department. It is a small department in relation to many others. As we have been discussing in the last three days the ARDA program I would like to emphasize this particular aspect as far as our work in the department is concerned.

The Department of Forestry is also responsible for the feed grain assistance program. A bill will shortly be introduced in the house—it is already on the order paper—which will propose the creation of a feed grain assistance act. A similar act was to be introduced by the previous government. It was on the order paper on February 6, 1963, which was the day after the Tuesday the government was defeated in the house. Therefore I hope hon. members on both sides will support this bill which the house will have before it for discussion in the near furture.

The department also administers the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act which deals with some local problems in the maritimes. We have proposed to the provinces an agreement, signed by the three maritime provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, whereby by 1970 the maritime marshland rehabilitation will disappear and the provinces will assume the responsibilities covered by the program.

Generally speaking, Mr. Chairman, the department has had a good year. We expect to begin our expansion this year and by 1972 we should have doubled our personnel and facilities. I expect hon. members of the house will have some comment to make on the administration of the department, and I will be grateful for any suggestions for improving its work. These are my introductory remarks, Mr. Chairman.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the minister hopes the discussion on his estimates will be as brief as his own introduction. There are, however, a few items I wish to discuss with him. I am sure that before the main estimates are completed we shall have answers to these questions.

With respect to item 1 of these estimates, I am sure the minister will agree with me that the setting up of this department by the former government was a reasonably expeditious act which has brought excellent results to the economy of Canada. The department actually was set up following extended hearings before the mines, forests and waters committee respecting the forestry branch, as it was then, of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. It became quite obvious during the course of those hearings, at which I attended, that forestry, which provided one of the main exports of this country, and which was merely one section of a department of government, actually deserved more serious attention than it was then getting.

It appeared quite obvious that the main shortcoming was in the question of research and co-ordination of provincial effort. As a result, the department was set up under the ministry of the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, who now sits near me in the house.

As the minister has pointed out, research is the main aspect of that government department's work. I should like the minister to reply to questions concerning research centres. With regard to that subject I should like to ask him two questions. First, are there plans to expand research laboratories throughout Canada, under this department? Second, is use being made, to its fullest extent, of provincial facilities? We have heard the minister say that the provinces are beginning to rely on the federal department's research laboratories for much of their own technical research information. As I said, I should like to know whether this is being expanded as a strictly federal aspect of things in all parts of the country, and whether use is being made of existing provincial facilities.

The minister mentioned a couple of examples of disease. He did not mention one that is possibly much more serious to the public at large, and I refer to the Dutch elm disease. This disease has been taking a terrific toll of trees in most of the eastern provinces. While the disease has largely affected ornamental trees, it has moved into the forestry industry, and I know that great concern is being felt about its effects. I should like to ask the minister, if he would, to tell us what success has been achieved in combating this disease, and whether research is continuing to find some answer to this very serious problem.

On the question of exports, would the minister bring us up to date on plywood matters? We have had problems in Canada with respect to plywood, both as to its importation from other countries at very, very low prices, making it difficult for local producers to compete, and also as to its export into the United States market, where we have also had difficulty. I should like the minister to report to the committee on this particular subject. That is something which is very important to those of us who live in parts of the country where plywood is produced.

I turn for a moment to the question of feed grain assistance, which the minister mentioned. If the terms of the bill the minister is introducing are the same as the ones the former government introduced, I think he will find ready support for it. However, rumour has it that certain changes are being made in the approach to this problem. If so, I think he may find some opposition to certain sections of the bill. The minister mentioned it in passing; I do so, likewise.

We do not intend to delay the passage of the first item of the estimates. That item has served a very useful purpose in the economy of this country. We can see the results in the balance of payment figures. On a great many of our industries we lose money. However, the forest products industry maintains a favourable balance, and we are all looking forward to its being one of the continuing assets of the future, forestry being a renewable resource. If proper care is taken of our forests, we shall be able to continue with our exports.

I hope the minister can answer some of the questions asked. There will be other questions as we proceed to other items. However, those are all the general remarks I wish to make.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry to have been unavoidably absent from the chamber when the minister introduced his estimates. When I heard they were before the house I promptly left my constituents and came down. I want to compliment him, as he is a minister with ideas. While we do not always agree with his application of ideas, he does put forward something that we can at least consider. I think he puts forward some progressive measures. I also wish to express my appreciation of the work done by the staff of the forestry branch, both in the forest products laboratory and in the field. I have known many of them for a good number of years.

I am wondering if there is any difficulty in this department's obtaining the staff it requires to undertake the necessary research, both in the laboratory and in field operations. If there are any staff shortages at the present time, could the minister explain to the house the reason why those shortages prevail? I also want to know what co-operation exists between federal and provincial governments, the universities, and industry with respect to the planning of research, and what these persons who are particularly interested in development and research consider to be the most important aspects of research to be undertaken at any given time. I should like the minister to point out one or two examples of research being carried on in particular fields that will be easily recognized by the greater number of people engaged in and interested in the development of the forestry industry.

I should like to know what is being done with respect to diseases and pests, and on what basis research into those subjects is planned. Also I want to know what is being done with respect to fire prevention, and with respect to land inventory and forest inventory that the minister mentioned. I should like him to give us some idea of the type of agreement reached between the federal government and the provinces for carrying out any one of these projects, particularly those connected with forest inventory and land inventory.

I would also be interested to know the extent of the co-operation which exists between the provincial governments and the department, as well as between the Department of Forestry and the Department of Industry, especially with regard to research aspects of this work. Let the minister also tell us what arrangements he has for co-operation with organized labour particularly in the field of conservation and the promotion of a proper regard for our natural resources.

I wish now to direct the minister's attention to one aspect of policy which in the opinion of several of us has not received sufficient attention from his department. It may seem strange, coming from a pragmatic socialist, but I have in mind particularly the private ownership of forests by individuals or by small companies. I was recently at a meeting where this matter was the subject of considerable discussion. It was generally agreed that a clear definition of policy was needed from both federal and provincial governments on the management of private woodlands.

We think this type of development is coextensive with the development of the economic family farm and that it should be encouraged by both levels of government. While the discussion to which I referred was taking place a good many persons expressed the opinion that there had been a notable absence of any expression of interest in this phase of resource development on the part of the federal and provincial departments directly concerned. I should like to hear the minister's views on this question.

This brings me to the subject of the literature published by the department, expecially by the forest products laboratory. I wonder whether this literature is reaching as wide a segment of our population as it should. I have followed this work for 20 years. It is excellent work and I believe it is necessary that it should be undertaken. I have a great deal of respect for the staff which is undertaking this. I knew Colonel Jenkins personally. He settled in the Shuswap lake area about the same time as we did in the Kootenays. He has always been interested in this problem. I am not sure that this literature is reaching as many people as it should. I presume industry is getting it, particularly the smaller companies and corporations. But why not make it available to chambers of commerce, trade unions and similar bodies to give them some idea of what is being done?

I found the Department of Agriculture was putting out an excellent publication indicating the protection which is being afforded to the consumer by the work of the department.

But distribution of this literature is extremely limited at the present time and I suggest that the publications distribution of the Department of Forestry should be reviewed to make sure we are making the best possible use of the staff's talent.

I have one other suggestion to make before I resume my seat. This subject has become something of a hobby of mine, Mr. Chairman. I made a most moving appeal to the Minister of Industry in this connection and although it moved him temporarily, he is not moving forward at all on my suggestion. This has been in my mind for three or four years. It arose by my meeting a group of students from overseas who had come to this country and were given a tour in order for them to gain an understanding of the development of industry, natural resources and other aspects of our social and economic life. I found they were returning without any final conclusion to this tour which was, naturally, very informative.

Then again I have met a large number of young people who are not particularly desirous of pursuing an academic career, though they are well able to make a contribution in the natural resource field. They do not wish to become doctors of philosophy or masters of science, but they are quite capable of attending a technical or vocational training school. I think it would be a good idea if we could set up a Canadian college of conservation to fill the need which exists here. I am not suggesting anything which would involve a large expenditure. If I had the building of it—and I would build one myself if I could afford it—I would choose a suitable location near a pleasant lake, surrounded by woodland. The staff would not number more than half a dozen. The faculty would be recruited from the universities and departments on loan; persons interested in soil and soil conservation would come to give a course of lectures for a week or two. Water resources, wildlife and similar subjects would be dealt with in the same way. Those foreign students and those Canadians who would like to undertake work of this kind with a view to employment in the civil service or with private companies would, after a year, say, at the end of this training, be given a diploma in conservation —something to indicate that they had absorbed the philosophy of conservation and had undertaken to apply that philosophy in the context of practical affairs in Canada and elsewhere.

When the minister replies I hope he will tell us what he thinks of this idea. I find I have a good deal of support for it among very important Canadians. I repeat, I am not suggesting anything which would involve very large expenditure. The college would have accommodation for not more than 50 people, maybe living in log cabins and accommodation of that sort. I believe a foundation of this kind would provide an opportunity which would be welcomed by overseas students as well as by a large number of young Canadians who are willing to serve in the natural resource field.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee for only a few moments, but as one who one way or another has spent 28 years in the forest industry, naturally the activities of the Department of Forestry are of great interest to me. The forest industry, and forestry resources are of great interest to Canadians generally because they produce a great share of the actual wealth which we possess. In the province of British Columbia it is often stated that over 60 per cent of B.C. revenue dollars are wood dollars. Because of that we are interested in what is happening in the forest industry, and what affects our industry also affects other areas of the country which depend to a great degree on the lumber and timber industries.

I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to one of the great men of our times for his work in connection with forestry matters. I speak of Hon. Ray Williston, Minister of Lands, Forests and Water Resources in the province of B.C. Ray Williston is a man of great ability, a man of boundless energy, a man who applies himself with a diligence that is seldom found in any individual human being. He has worked very diligently in B.C. to get a sustained yield program in operation.

Bringing a sustained yield program into being is a painful process and many people are hurt during the development of such a program, but Mr. Williston has handled the B.C. program in a way unparalleled in Canadian history. He has introduced the program throughout almost the total area of B.C. as painlessly as it is possible to do so.

One of the bright spots in his career was his introduction of what is known as the pulp harvesting area. The principle of the pulp harvesting area has allowed a great expansion to take place in the pulp and paper industry in B.C. without taking anything away from the production of lumber, and this was one of the great feats of the provincial minister.

I would like to know from the Minister of Forestry how closely he and his department are working with the B.C. Research Council. Some years ago at the B.C. Research Council headquarters in Vancouver I saw some samples of pressed cedar wood. All through the northern and central areas of B.C. there are very large stands of what is known as decadent cedar. I understand from the B.C. Research Council that this type of cedar has its own binding quality. No resins or glues are needed in order to make a pressed board out of the pulp which is manufactured from the cedar tree. It is also my understanding that the rot in the decadent cedar does not reduce its binding qualities, and that a certain amount of rot in the tree is beneficial in the process of producing a pressed board.

With the advent of large amounts of electric power produced by hydro development I can foresee a most outstanding and productive industry in the central interior of B.C. resulting from the use of what is now a drug on the market, namely decadent cedar. As I say, there are huge cubic volume quantities of this wood in the province, sufficient to launch a very large industry.

The samples I saw at the Research Council headquarters were some of the most beautiful pieces of pressed wood I have ever seen. The colour varied from a very dark to a very light, according to the intensity of heat applied in the process. I would like to know what the minister and his department are doing in co-operation with the efforts of the B.C. Research Council in this field.

The forests of Canada could provide a wonderful opportunity for the employment of thousands of people who may lose their jobs, due to automation and technological advance. With the production of more electric power from natural gas and other resources, much arduous hand labour will disappear. This will mean that we shall have to find places where more people can be gainfully occupied, and I do not know a better place than out in the great forests of our country, cleaning them up, getting rid of decadent and diseased trees, clearing windfalls, opening up access roads for the prevention of forest fires, and damming small rivulets so that pumping stations can be set up in case of fire, with great volumes of water readily available to quell the flames.

[Mr. Leboe.]

According to a press release the Department of Forestry has reported that it has acquired the services of one Mr. Benson from the province of B.C., to undertake a total land survey of Canada. I notice that Mr. Benson was connected with the B.C. provincial wildlife branch, and I would judge him to be highly qualified for the task that lies before him. I certainly wish him well. He has one of the most important tasks that could be undertaken, because I do not think anyone can overemphasize the importance of the timber, lumber pulp and paper industries in Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish the minister well in his work. He will find us ready to co-operate with him at any time. I personally am greatly interested in his department because, as I said, of my 28 years close association with the lumber and timber industry.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, contrary to some interventions in this house in the past three months, mine will be short and concise but I want to go one better on the last words of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) when he congratulated the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) for his excellent work and particularly when he described him as a man with ideas.

Having witnessed the work and the behaviour of the various ministers in this house over the past three months, Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly in agreement with the member for Kootenay West when he recognized that the excellent work of the member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine and his gifts should mark him, as a government discovery, for a more important and more responsible portfolio than forestry.

French Canadians have often been charged with lacking the qualifications to handle important departments. The important and capital federal departments are notably finance and trade and commerce and, this year, we had three French Canadian members from Quebec who were in a position of fill these posts competently, namely the present Minister of Forestry, the forthcoming minister of manpower (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin). In spite of the high competence and qualifications of these three French Canadians, the present government has them restricted to truncated departments. Part of the Department of Agriculture and part of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources were taken to form the Department of Forestry and the responsibility for it was given to a highly competent man who could be Minister of Finance and who could possibly settle the ideological conflict between the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and his predecessor, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon).

We have the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Marchand) who is shortly to be minister of manpower, a department made up in part of the Department of Labour. Here is another highly qualified member and, as a French Canadian, I am proud to proclaim it in this house.

Another member, the one for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) is also most qualified.

In spite of this contribution from the province of Quebec which Frnech Canadians have made to the federal administration, the present government is content to appoint these valuable men to mainly administrative duties instead of opening to them the important portfolios such as finance, trade and commerce and industry.

These are the opening remarks I am making very sincerely and dynamically, because if the present conflict between English and French Canada is to be settled, let us stop the pretty speeches and appoint French Canadians to important posts.

Now, about the Department of Forestry—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I just want to point out to the hon. member for Sherbrooke that the house listened of course with great interest to the remarks he made about French representation within the various federal departments, but I think it is my duty to remind him that we are now considering the estimates of the Department of Forestry and nothing else but the estimates of the Department of Forestry.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your kind words and especially for allowing me to express my opinion as a prelude to the few questions I wanted to put to the minister. In short, I would suggest that the representative for Îles-de-la-Madeleine be taken out of the forest and appointed to an important department, because he has all the necessary qualifications, just like the two other members I have mentioned.

I will only put two questions to the Minister of Forestry, because I have to catch a train in a few minutes. I listened carefully to his short speech and I know he can answer those questions. He said that his department conducted a lot of scientific research in the field of forestry. I should like to know whether there are provincial scientific research services in the Canadian provinces? Are there such services in the ten Canadian provinces? Does the Department of Forestry of the province of Quebec have a scientific research service? What I am trying to find out is whether there is any co-ordination in the field of scientific research in forestry, in order precisely to obtain better results?

My second question is this: are those provincial scientific research services keeping in touch and working with the Department of Forestry in this field?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) has any reforestation problem in his constituency but, after his laudatory remarks about the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), I am sure he does not have to worry about it.

Like the hon. member who spoke before me, I am very pleased with the success obtained in the house by the Minister of Forestry, and I think a large part of the minister's success is due to the fact that he is in an interesting position. He heads a department created by the former Conservative government. He is responsible for the administration of ARDA and will introduce the bill concerning feed grain. Finally, he has the responsibility of carrying on the work so ably started under the former Conservative government.

No doubt that influenced greatly the results obtained so far. I hope he will not change, because he has a very human and open way of dealing with problems and he undoubtedly enjoys the co-operation and good will of all those he works with.

The forest is one of our main industries. It is, so to speak, the basic industry which, for many years, complemented farming. That proves the importance of paying a lot of attention to the forests, to protect our forests which are a great source of income.

All necessary precautions should be taken to protect them as much as possible. In his speech, the minister mentioned that his department's jurisdiction was very limited and that it just had to deal with the various provincial departments.

I know that there is always room for discussion and an exchange of views there, but I know that with his well-known tact and patience he will succeed in getting good results from efforts made to co-operate with the provinces, so that this industry, this natural resource, will be protected as much as possible. I know that his work will meet with success.

I will probably not have the opportunity next week to discuss his bill on feed grain when it is introduced in the house. I would therefore like to say now that this legislation is necessary, that the farmers have been hoping for it for many years. Our farmers are less dependent on unscrupulous dealers now than they were in previous years.

• (3:50 p.m.)

It is still very likely that the cost of feed in winter will work out against the farmers. That is why the farmers welcome the steps being taken and I am sure that the minister who made a complete study of that matter will give that legislation all the consideration it deserves.

The farmers often have to get rid of their cattle because of the high cost of feed and grain to fatten it.

It is a well-known fact that the former minister of agriculture, the present member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), had included in his program that particular matter of bringing the price of feed grain down, so that the farmers could go in for cattle breeding. We have to import our meat from western Canada and it seems to me that there would be here a very interesting market for the eastern farmers, as far as cattle breeding is concerned, if they could get feed grain at a better price.

I am sure that our farmers will consider those openings with satisfaction and I ask the minister to give that matter his full attention.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, as the estimates for the Department of Forestry are before the house, I should like to take this opportunity to make a few remarks. Yet, before coming to the heart of the matter that interests me, I wish to point out to the house that I do not fully agree with what the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) said about what the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) is worth.

I agree with him that he is a good minister, a competent man; but as far as giving him a more important department is concerned, I feel we need good ministers everywhere.

I do not approve of trying to increase the prestige of other ministers at the expense of the Minister of Forestry.

[Mr. Ricard.]

I feel, even though the minister himself, at the beginning of the debate, seemed to apologize for the relatively lesser importance of his department, that the department is most important and that we should give it all our attention.

What worries me most with regard to the Department of Forestry is forest fire protection. I know the minister and his officials watch very closely everything that is related to forest protection.

On the other hand, I wonder if enough is being done in this field. Our country is a great exporter of forest products. We must see to it that we do not become an importer in the near future.

Forest products are used for three main purposes, the most important of which are paper-making and construction.

Two curses threaten our forests with depletion: forest diseases and forest fires. A while ago, the minister told us that, in this connection, research was intensive and that the results were rewarding.

Still, I doubt that we are doing enough to prevent forest fires.

I urge the minister to increase the means to protect our forests against fires, for instance, by educating the people who go out into the bush, by giving foresters the tools and instruments required to prevent forest fires that are caused in many ways.

That is my chief concern and that is what I wanted to bring to the attention of the minister this afternoon.

[English]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I think I am correct in saying that the present Minister of Forestry is the third minister to hold this portfolio.

Mr. Sauvé: The fourth.

Mr. Barnett: I am told he is the fourth. I was going to say that perhaps the fact that the present minister is from the province of Quebec, and my impression was that his immediate predecessor was from the province of British Columbia, and I believe I am correct in saying that the original holder of the portfolio was from the province of New Brunswick—

Mr. Sauvé: The member for Charlevoix held the portfolio for just a few weeks before the election in 1963.

Mr. Barnett: In any event, my point in making reference to the geographic area from which ministers holding this portfolio have come in the short time the department has been in existence, since 1960, is that it could perhaps be considered symbolic of the fact that the forest industry and the forests of Canada are a very important natural resource that extends from one side of Canada to the other.

I suppose that in discussing the estimates of the minister one could launch into an exposition of the importance to our entire economy of the forest products industry, its value in regard to exports, and in this connection to our external trade balance, and that sort of thing. However, I believe these facts are fairly widely appreciated in the house and indeed by the Canadian people, and that little purpose would be served by venturing into this area in any major way in the discussion of these estimates today. Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I should like to suggest to the committee and the minister that the work of this department and what it is doing is perhaps much less well known and understood by the Canadian people, in part I think because it is a new department and in part because of the rather specific jurisdictional field of the forests and the forest industry.

I am aware of the fact that when the department was established it was not created out of whole cloth, but it was in part at least a consolidation of some existing efforts of the federal administration in Ottawa. If I am correct, I believe the research elements of the present Department of Forestry were carried on through the Minister of Agriculture in the days before the department was established.

As one examines these estimates he becomes aware of the fact that they are limited, as I understand it, to two basic fields, one the conduct of research programs and the other a program of assistance under agreements with the provinces in the forestry work, which is constitutionally considered to be a provincial responsibility.

I must say, Mr. Chairman, that coming from the province of British Columbia where this industry is the major one in our economy, I find myself much tempted to launch into a field of discussion which perhaps more properly could take place on the floor of the provincial legislature and where the whole question of the management, the development, the harvesting, marketing and manufacturing of our forest products very properly is a subject for extensive debate.

I had intended, Mr. Chairman, to avoid yielding to that temptation entirely in view of the constitutional jurisdictional division, until I listened to the remarks made a little earlier by the member for Cariboo. As I listened to him, it seemed to me that he could more properly have been making his remarks on the floor of the legislature of British Columbia, in view of his laudatory description of the work being done by the minister of forestry of British Columbia, Hon. Ray Williston. Since he has opened up this question, I would like to make some comment, Mr. Chairman, and I would make my comment in these terms, that while most of us from British Columbia recognize that Mr. Williston is a member of a provincial administration with considerable abilities and energy, nevertheless he does follow a policy in the management of our forest industry in respect of which there are some very grave differences of opinion. I would suggest from my point of view that Mr. Williston is simply perpetuating a basic error in his approach to the management of the forests of British Columbia which was originally committed by the coalition government formed by the Liberals and Conservatives of that day. I would suggest that the perpetuation of this basic error in policy is one which has worked both to the short run and the long run detriment of the interests of the people in British Columbia in their forest heritage.

Mr. Patterson: We do not look at it in that way.

Mr. Barnett: As the hon. member says, some of them do not look at it in that way. I may say in reply to the interjection by the member for Fraser Valley that, unfortunately for him a large part of the forests which were once in his constituency were long ago logged off by the old cut-out and get-out method. So perhaps he has not had as much opportunity in observing at first hand what is going on in respect of the management of our forests as I do over in my own constituency of Comox-Alberni.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to dwell for a moment or two on the approach we are taking to the consideration of these estimates. I believe the minister will recall that the other day the member for Timiskaming raised the point that the estimates of the Department of Agriculture have been referred to a standing committee of the house for consideration, and pointed out to the minister that very closely associated with agricultural matters were considerations revolving around ARDA, and the section of the estimates in his department that come under the heading of rural development.

As far as I am concerned, I am happy that today the discussion has confined itself so far to a discussion of the estimates of the Minister of Forestry, and has not gone into the whole area of the ARDA program. Perhaps we can expect this to a certain extent because of the discussion within the last few days on a bill. However, I felt at the time that there was some merit in the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Timiskaming. While I realize that it is difficult to draw hard and fast lines between the various departmental activities, I would like to supplement that proposition by a suggestion of mine. I know the standing committee which has been set up is known as the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development, but as a member of the standing committee on fisheries, to which the current estimates of that department have been referred, I would like to suggest that in many ways there is a very close overlapping between the considerations involved in the estimates of the Department of Fisheries and those of the Department of Forestry. I say that, having in mind particularly the kind of operation which is being conducted by the federal Department of Forestry where the whole question of the research program into the control of forest pests is involved.

Also involved is the question of assisting the provinces in opening up forest access for the purpose of fire control and forest inventory, and the basic considerations of land use. Indeed I may say, Mr. Chairman, that only at the last sitting of the committee on fisheries, when we were dealing with the estimates of the fisheries research board, some of us in the committee were asking questions of our research scientists who were present before the committee about the correlation between the research programs of the Department of Forestry and those of the Department of Fisheries.

Therefore I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the minister give serious consideration to having his estimates relating specifically to forestry referred to a standing committee, where those estimates can be examined in a way similar to those of the Department of Fisheries. In making this suggestion I go back to the first point I raised, and that is that I believe there is too little understanding on the part of the members of the house and of the people generally of the value of the programs which the federal Department of Forestry are conducting.

I freely admit that I have only a very hazy knowledge of the programs myself. However, from my experience as a member of the fisheries committee I do feel that in this field, as indeed in other fields, where the activities of qualified scientists are involved, there is a special value in the members of the house who are interested having the opportunity of sitting across the table from those who are conducting the programs, and to hear from them some explanation of their activities and the replies they give to questions which may be in our minds.

I hope, therefore, when the program for the consideration of estimates is being organized for the next fiscal year the minister and the government house leader will keep in mind the idea that this segment of the estimates should go to the standing committee on forestry. I would be almost inclined to say we should have a standing committee on fisheries and forests, because of the overlapping areas of activity which, in my view, is involved. I believe this suggestion would fit in very well with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Timiskaming, that members who are particularly interested in the agricultural field should have an opportunity of examining the rural development estimates in conjunction with the consideration of agriculture.

I recognize that there is an association between forestry and rural development. At the moment, I am not arguing that it is illogical that the Minister of Forestry should have the rural development administration under his jurisdiction. In spite of my temptation to pursue further the question of how the forests of British Columbia should be managed, which was raised by the hon. member for Cariboo, I will restrain myself and perhaps find an opportunity in some other form for discussing that question with him. I shall await the other items of the estimates, when perhaps we can ask questions about the operation of the research program and the nature of the program covered by the agreements with the provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the Minister of Forestry a question which is not related to his departmental estimates. I just want to ask the minister whether he has any plans for Lotbinière county, particularly at St. Sylvestre, in the upper part of the county, close to the Beauce, whether such plans are likely to be implemented soon.

I shall add in conclusion, just like the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), that I do not quite agree with the views of the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard). On the contrary, I think the Minister of Forestry is doing a wonderful job in his department. Besides, as he is the one responsible for the main offensive against poverty, I believe we need a man of his great talent to assume such responsibilities.

Besides, I would add that I am rather sceptical—here, I probably disagree with the minister—but I am sceptical about those who build up arguments concerning the hierarchy of ministers within the cabinet.

I believe that, by the very fact you are a member of the federal cabinet, you are called upon to play a major role, whether you are in Finance, Forestry, or a Minister without Portfolio; I believe that any member of the cabinet is an influential man, capable of playing a major role in the administration of this country.

Therefore, the minister has my good wishes for a long career in the Department of Forestry and I hope that all his projects can be implemented on a short-term basis.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: I know the minister would like the first vote to be passed, but I wonder if he would answer the several questions that were raised?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes. In my introductory remarks I mentioned that over the next six years we expect to double the material facilities of the department and to double the staff. This is an indication that we are trying to cope with the problem of research which is required by the extension of the forest industry of this country. We are in close relationship with the provinces. There are two provinces in which forest research is conducted on a provincial basis, namely British Columbia and Ontario. The province of Quebec has indicated its intention of creating a research service, but so far it is only in the planning stage.

We have very close relationships with all the provincial departments of forestry, but especially with the departments of forestry in British Columbia and Ontario. In fact, in Ontario our research facilities in the Toronto metropolitan area were in a building owned by the provincial Department of Lands and Forests. One of the reasons, not the main reason, we had to locate at Sault Ste. Marie was that the Department of Lands and Forests of Ontario required the building we were occupying on their ground at Maple.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka mentioned the Dutch elm disease. I did not review all the research we were doing in the department, but there are a number of our people who are working on this very serious disease. So far, no effective and cheap method of fighting the disease has been found. There has been a report in newspapers recently that there is a special technique of infusion in the soil by which one could get rid of the disease or cure the trees which were infected. This method has been known by the department, and in fact has been tried. It has not been as successful as reported in the newspapers, and it is a costly method of fighting the disease.

The hon. member also discussed the problem of importing plywood in relation to the United States market. This problem does not fall within the jurisdiction of the Department of Forestry, since imports and exports are the direct concern of the Department of Trade and Commerce. The hon. member might want to refer to the problem when the estimates of that department are before the committee.

The hon. member for Lotbinière asked me if we have any plans for the radar station at St. Sylvestre in his riding. The Deputy Minister of the Department of Forestry went to St. Sylvestre with the hon. member for Lotbinière.

• (4:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, we hoped at that time to take over some buildings to open a research centre for the prevention of forest fires. Unfortunately, these projects did not materialize, because there were not enough of us to occupy all the buildings on the radar base. Other federal or provincial departments would have had to move into other buildings. We were ready to take over two or three, but we could not take the responsibility of administrating the whole base. I think the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation has sold the buildings, so that we will not be able to operate there, as we had thought at one time.

[English]

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni mentioned the possibility of referring the estimates of the department to a standing committee of this house at the next session. This is a very good suggestion. It might have been possible to make this arrangement this session if there had been time, but I understand that the committees already have a heavy agenda and because of certain procedures in this house it was felt we could not refer the estimates to a committee this year. This might be possible next year, and they could be referred either to the committee on fisheries or the committee on agriculture, forests and rural development. I would welcome the opportunity to explain in detail, with the assistance of members of the department, every item of the estimates.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) mentioned that one of our main problems in Canada is the prevention of forest fires.

From the administrative point of view, the problem is rather difficult. Indeed, only provincial governments have jurisdiction over forest administration. There have often been discussions between officials of the Department of Forestry and those of the departments of lands and forests of the various provinces. But we have to confine ourselves to research for the prevention of forest fires.

On November 29, 1965, we issued a press release which showed that, for the year ending October 31, 1965, losses due to forest fires were the lowest in 37 years. This considerable improvement of the situation should not be attributed to the Minister of Forestry. I say no such thing; nevertheless, the number of forest fires last year was considerably lower.

In fact, we have created in Ottawa an institute for research on the means of fighting forest fires. We do not have power of coercion over lumber companies. We know what must be done to eliminate risks in the bush, but we do not have the authority to demand anything of lumber companies, to force them to clean up the forests after timber operations or to take other steps to fight forest fires efficiently. All this comes strictly under provincial jurisdiction.

The member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) asked me whether there are provincial research services in forestry. There are some in British Columbia and Ontario, and the province of Quebec intends to set one up. These provincial services work in close co-operation with the federal research services in forestry.

[English]

The hon. member for Cariboo mentioned that he had been connected with the forest industry for 26 years. He also referred to the work being done in British Columbia by the Minister of Lands, Forests and Water Resources of that province. I know the minister, Mr. Williston, and saw him recently. I have had meetings with all ministers of lands and forests across Canada. In fact, I make it a point to pay a visit to each of the ten ministers of lands and forest and ministers of agriculture who are responsible for the ARDA program. Once a year I visit each of them in their own capitals, meet their officials and discuss with them the relationship between the federal Department of Forestry and the provincial departments of lands and forests, which in each of the 10 provinces is excellent. We have been fortunate in that the work which we do is essential to the departments of lands and forests in each of the provinces; and we do have to work in co-ordination with them. We have relations, especially in the province of British Columbia, with the British Columbia Research Council and the B.C. forest industries council of the province.

Just recently, as a result of an agreement between the British Columbia forest industry, the provincial department of lands and forests and the federal Department of Forestry, we were able to sign a special agreement to conduct research on the woolly aphid problem which I mentioned earlier. This year we are committing $150,000 to research, and this is just the beginning. This was made possible owing to the close co-operation between the Department of Lands, Forests and Water Resources in British Columbia, the forest industry, the B.C. Research Council and the federal Department of Forestry. As soon as the minister and Mr. Hoffmeister, president of the B.C. forest industries council came to Ottawa to discuss the problem, we were able to agree at once on the importance of dealing with this disease and undertook to establish a research program which might well have a beneficial effect.

In fact, two weeks ago I was in Victoria in the laboratory at one of these beautiful new buildings to witness the research being done by our people. I found the subject completely fascinating. The woolly aphid is a very small insect. You can find 3,000 of them in an area of one square inch, so you can imagine the damage which can be done to trees and how easily they can become infected. This problem is affecting parts of the forests on Vancouver Island and also, surprisingly, forests along the west coast of Newfoundland in the region of Corner Brook, where we have established a laboratory which devotes much of its research to the problem of combating the woolly aphid.

The hon. member for Kootenay West discussed the problem of personnel. I mentioned in my introductory remarks before the hon. member came into the house that we have been able to recruit most of the personnel needed. The problem is not so much one of recruitment of personnel as of research facilities. We need to expand our buildings. We now have a large program underway, part of which has been approved—the remainder will be approved in a few months—as a result of which we will be able to double our physical facilities in the Department of Forestry in the next six years, increasing by 100 per cent the technical staff and research staff presently employed by the department.

In each of the seven regions of Canada in which we have established headquarters we are about to announce the creation of a consultative advisory committee which will consist of representatives from the provincial departments of lands and forests, forest industries and associations, and universities. Their function will be to advise our forest laboratory in a particular region on the fundamental and applied research which should be conducted. In a few weeks I hope to announce the first of these advisory committees for British Columbia.

Recently I spent a week in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba discussing the problem with people from the provincial governments and universities who are familiar with the industry. We are now about to announce names.

The Canada land inventory is proceeding well. All the provinces have signed the agreement. This is a project which over the next five years will cost about $20 million. It is research with a very high scientific and technical content and is proceeding well. There are some problems to solve, such as the interpretation of aerial photography and transcription of all information for purposes of easy consultation.

In Manitoba we recently signed a research agreement to put on a computer or similar machine all the information we have, so that in a matter of seconds any province could receive answers to any question relating to land inventory.

The problem of the private woodland operator is a problem that comes under the jurisdiction of provincial authorities. It is rather difficult for the Department of Forestry to intervene in this field, except through research. We are by definition committed to research. The hon. member knows that the department is very sympathetic to the problems of the private tree farmer, and that we are doing everything we can; but what we are doing is very limited. I cannot add anything to raise the hopes of the hon. member.

Much of our literature is distributed throughout Canada and throughout the world. One of the problems is to know which groups are interested in it. The hon. member mentioned trade unions. I think he is correct. We should send this literature, for instance, to the International Woodworkers of America and others in this field.

As for the Canadian College of Conservation, I am afraid that under the British North America Act this would come under education. There might be some possibility of doing something in the research field, and receiving a number of foreign students, outlining to them in two or three days the problems of conservation, and telling them about the situation in Canada. We have institutions in most parts of the country which could receive some of these foreign students.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that I have answered all the questions put to me by various hon. members this afternoon. I shall be ready to answer specific questions on each of the items on the estimates of the department.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item agreed to.

3. Construction of extension to research laboratory in Pointe Claire, Quebec, for use by the Pulp and Paper Research Institute of Canada, $750,000.

Mr. Herridge: Would the minister mind informing the house of the relationship between his department and the research institute, with respect to the types of research done, and with respect to the sharing of costs?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes. The Canadian Pulp and Paper Association of Canada pays for the annual costs of research in this institute. The federal government has undertaken to pay for the cost of building the research facilities there. This is an old arrangement between McGill University, the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

We have now finalized this agreement. It was agreed long ago to build research facilities for the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association. That organization has the sole responsibility for the research carried on there for the pulp and paper industry. The Department of Forestry is not engaged in this field of activity.

There is consultation between the people who are doing the research for the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association—I think it is either in Pointe Claire, or around there, in Montreal—and our people in the Department of Forestry. There is no overlapping in the work carried on by the department and by the research institute.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni knows that this research institute is preoccupied with pollution. He has received, through my intercession, information as to exactly what they are doing in the field of pollution. They hope to be able to find an economic way of dealing with acids and other polluting material, in order to stop the pollution of our rivers and lakes.

Mr. Herridge: Is that air pollution as well, may I ask?

Mr. Sauvé: I could not tell you. I know that they deal with water pollution. Perhaps the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, who is interested in this, could answer. He has been in touch with the laboratory people.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, as the minister has pointed out, I did raise some question about this grant on the estimates of the last year which were dealt with not too long ago. I want to use this opportunity of thanking the minister for doing what he told me then he would do, which was to make more detailed information available than had been available in the committee with respect to the activities of this particular institute, and with particular reference to the field of research into pollution control.

I should also like to say that I appreciate the very detailed report which came to me, through the minister's action, from the president of this institute, outlining exactly the work that was being done in the field of water pollution control and, to a certain extent, in air pollution control. That work is being undertaken because, in the production of pulp and paper, the industry is an important factor contributing to the pollution of our clean air and clean water.

I had wanted an opportunity of speaking on this subject even before the hon. member for Kootenay West rose to ask his question.

Item agreed to.

10. Freight assistance on western feed grains including assistance in respect of grain storage costs in accordance with the terms and conditions prescribed by the governor in council, $19,200,000.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, under item 10 it is shown that freight assistance is going to be decreased by $1,800,000 for the coming year. Would the minister explain the reason for this reduction? Is it on account of less feed grain being moved? What is the reason?

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: We have been negotiating with the Canadian National Railways a program whereby feed grain can be carried by rail the year round from the lakehead to various points in the maritimes at a cost equivalent to that of water transportation. This accounts for the difference between the amount provided last year and the new amount this year. It will mean a saving for the government, but not a reduction in the quantity of grain transported from the lakehead.

Item agreed to.

Forestry—

15. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants as detailed in the estimates, $12,620,000.

Mr. Chatterton: I notice on page 167 an increase in the amount provided for regional research and services. The minister has just been out in British Columbia. Can he tell us whether it is proposed to extend the facilities of the research laboratories in Victoria?

Mr. Sauvé: The reason for the increase is that following the opening of the laboratories last February the number of personnel has increased, with a corresponding increase in the amount needed for salaries for 1966-67 compared with 1965-66.

The other reason for the increase is that we are engaged in a special program to deal with the woolly aphid problem which we are conducting in conjunction with the provincial Department of Lands, Forests and Water Resources, and the British Columbia Research Council.

Mr. Chatterton: Is there no proposal to enlarge the facilities at the research laboratory in Victoria?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, there is such a proposal, but this year we shall not build, though we have a sum of money set aside for architects and engineers. There is no project for physical expansion in Victoria this year.

Mr. Chatterton: Is that because of the tight money situation?

Mr. Sauvé: No; this is what the program calls for.

Mr. Herridge: Can the minister explain why the vote last year for publication of reports and other materials amounted to $8,900 while this year it is only $2,500?

Mr. Sauvé: Can the hon. member give the page number?

Mr. Herridge: Page 166.

Mr. Sauvé: When we organized the department on a national basis a certain number of regional facilities were left on a regional basis, and it is these to which the item refers. This explains why this particular vote is less than it was last year.

Mr. Barnett: I noted the remarks made by the minister about insect infestation on Vancouver Island, and that there had been a similar outbreak on the west coast of Newfoundland. Is this the infestation which has recently attacked the balsam fir? There was an item in the most recent bulletin published by the Council of Resource Ministers saying a ban had been placed on the shipment of balsam fir lumber from British Columbia as well as upon the export of live trees. Is the research program to which the minister referred related to this question?

After receiving that bulletin I wrote to the Minister of Lands, Forests and Waters of British Columbia to ask for some details. I was puzzled by a reference in the bulletin to 250 billion feet of balsam fir being threatened by this infestation. I did not think we had so much balsam fir in British Columbia. Was the research program designed to lift this ban on the use of our balsam fir?

Mr. Sauvé: I do not think the program was designed in order to lift any restriction. It was originated in an effort to find a way of eliminating the balsam woolly aphid.

I knew that in certain regions of Vancouver island some restrictions had been imposed, but I was not aware the problem had reached the dimensions indicated by the hon. member. Are the figures correct? That figure of 250 billion seems to be extraordinarily large.

Mr. Barnett: I myself was puzzled by that reference. I wondered if it was a misprint.

Mr. Sauvé: Did the figure come from my department?

Mr. Barnett: No; it was in a bulletin published by the secretariat of the Council of Resource Ministers in Montreal. It was a brief item and did not go into detail. I wrote to the appropriate minister in British Columbia asking him to send me more details particularly with reference to the volume of timber involved and the imposition of the embargo. Is the program to which the minister referred intended to deal with this particular infestation?

Mr. Sauvé: This is a program to deal with the balsam woolly aphid. I read the bulletin to which the hon. member referred but I do not recall the figure he mentioned. I am afraid I cannot give the hon. member a precise answer. I shall have to find out whether there is any relation between what is contained in that announcement and the balsam woolly aphid. I read the bulletin program we are carrying out—a program limited to some parts of Vancouver island where this woolly aphid is presenting a serious problem.

Mr. Barnett: On another subject, could the minister give us a few more details about the item which can be found at page 164—grants in aid of forestry research, in an amount of $90,000? Does this involve a program of grants toward the assistance of research at universities or similar institutes? Where is this research being done?

Mr. Sauvé: This money is being spent on what we call extramural research—research in universities, research by individuals, and so on. This is for work done outside the various laboratories of the department. There are four forestry schools in Canada. The faculty of forestry, British Columbia, which is under the direction of Mr. Joseph Gardner, a past director of the research laboratory of the Department of Forestry in Vancouver, is receiving a grant under this item.

Mr. Barnett: May I suggest that when he is considering grants of this kind in the future the minister should use his good offices in connection with a situation which has concerned me for years—the apparent inadequacy of our arrangements to provide foresters and forest engineers with a broad basic education in related fields of science, so that they may have some appreciation of the results and side effects of forestry activities?

My interest in this situation dates back to the first forest spraying program on Vancouver island in the course of which serious damage was done to fish life. I found to my horror that the forestry engineer in charge of this program had less knowledge of the effect of his proposals upon surrounding aspects of nature than I, as a layman, had picked up in this field in the course of my duties as a member of the House of Commons.

I hope that the minister, in discussions relating to the arrangements for future research grants, will use his good offices to ensure that our education of forestry people is such that they understand this basic relationship in multiple resource use.

Mr. Sauvé: I could give the hon. member a list of all research projects which are done outside the department. It is very technical and scientific, and to save the time of the committee I could send him a copy this coming week.

Mr. Barnett: That kind of list could be more usefully considered in the standing committee, as I suggested in my earlier remarks. There is another intriguing item of $5,400 as Canada's share of the cost of developing a multilingual forestry terminology. Is this Latin or Esperanto? I assume it is an international project.

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, and it has to do with the other official language of our country, French. It is a project to produce a lexicon which would give the equivalent French terms. The work is being done by a professor at the University of Grenoble in France.

Mr. Barnett: Then it is really a bilingual program, not a multilingual one?

Mr. Sauvé: This is the part of the program in which Canada is interested. It is part of a larger program which has been launched under the auspices of UNESCO. Our contribution of $5,400 relates to the French part.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

23. Contributions to the provinces in the amounts and subject to the terms specified in the details of estimates, $8,660,000.

Mr. Herridge: I am rather interested in this vote because it covers agreements between the federal and provincial governments. I remember some years ago there was an agreement covering the forest inventory in the district in which I live, but the man in charge was more interested in the matron of the local hospital than in the inventory being undertaken. What check is made by the minister's department to make certain that these agreements are properly carried out, and can he say what is being done with respect to research into forest fire protection? Are water bombers being tried and what other methods are in use?

Mr. Sauvé: Each project which is approved by a province has to be approved by the federal department of forestry under one of five headings. All the details of a project are given to the federal administration and then there is a check on the expenditure of the money.

As for a water bomber, the Department of Industry has agreed to finance up to $5 million the project of Canadair to build a new water bomber, of which the province of Quebec has already agreed to buy about 20. The government of France is also interested in this water bomber, which could be used for other purposes. In some of the provinces it could replace the Canso, some of which are possibilities of such a water bomber, its still at the planning stage. The Department of Forestry was consulted about the technical possibilities of such a water bomber, its upkeep, cost and so on. I understand Canadair is in process of coming out with one experimental water bomber, and this type of aircraft will be sold in Canada to Quebec, and in Europe to France.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Is the minister able to provide us with any information respecting continuation or renewal of the program carried on in Nova Scotia dealing with forest stand improvement?

Mr. Sauvé: So far this year we have not received any request from the provincial Department of Lands and Forests for this program to be carried out in the summer of 1966. Usually we wait until there is a request from the province, but to my knowledge up to the present there has been no request.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Up to the present time?

Mr. Sauvé: To my knowledge up to the present time. There might have been some correspondence between the provincial department and officers of my department that has not reached my desk, and if there is anything contrary to what I have said I shall inform the hon. member.

Mr. Barnett: Is there any bulletin or document which gives details of the various items covered by agreements with the provinces, and indicates the amounts being spent in each of the provinces?

Mr. Sauvé: This can be found in the annual report of the Department of Forestry, which gives in detail what has been done in each province.

Mr. Barnett: The annual report usually refers to the program that has ended, rather than the program that is ahead. Is there any substantial variation in the program for the current year? I notice the expenditure is the same, but I wonder has there been any change in emphasis?

Mr. Sauvé: I cannot say because we have to wait for requests from the provinces. There are five different subjects covered by these agreements and the provinces have a choice. They might spend all the money under one heading or under all five headings. We do not know in advance. I could not give the projects for 1966-67 until the year is ended and that is why I referred the hon. member to the annual report. I could only specify the requests received so far.

Mr. Barnett: Could the minister provide the details when all the requests have been received, and table them in the house?

Mr. Sauvé: I think so.

Item agreed to.

Rural Development—

30. Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act program and Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act program—construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment including authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amount of the share of the province of New Brunswick of the cost of the Petitcodiac river dam project, $848,900.

Mr. Knowles: Does this mean that item 25 is being referred to the committee on agriculture?

Mr. Sauvé: No, we are not referring any items of the forestry estimates to the committee this year, as I told the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, but we might be doing so next year.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I admit that it was in the midst of some confusion, but last Tuesday the question was asked by the hon. member for Timiskaming and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, as to whether items relating to ARDA could be referred to the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development. The minister did not agree that this would be done, but said that it would be considered.

Mr. Sauvé: We had a debate for three days on the ARDA program in respect of Bill No. C-151. I believe the opinion of the house would be that we had a serious investigation of the ARDA program in this house for three days and that it might not be necessary for these estimates to be referred to the committee.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the main estimates of the Department of Forestry.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, could we have unanimous agreement of the house to carry on with the estimates? Two of the ministers are here at present, the Postmaster General and the Minister of Labour. These ministers are ready to carry on with their estimates. I think this procedure would do much to expedite the business of the house.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, a number of our members would like to speak on the estimates of the Department of Labour. They took it for granted that these estimates would not be taken up today.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—APPOINTMENT OF CONCILIATION BOARD

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, may I revert to motions?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the minister to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Railway Conciliation Board Appointed

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped it would be possible to make this announcement in the course of presentation of the estimates of the Department of Labour. I was not able to make the announcement earlier, but since it refers to a matter which has been raised in this house several times within the last week and since it has been released to the press, I think it is proper that it be made to the house at this time.

I wish to announce that Hon. J. C. A. Cameron, Q.C., of Ottawa has been appointed chairman of the board of conciliation established to deal with a dispute involving 22,000 non-operating railway employees of the Canadian National Railways and certain jointly operated railways: Northern Alberta Railways Company, Toronto Terminals Railway Company, and the Shawinigan Falls Terminal Railway Company.

Hon. Mr Cameron, who was a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada for many years, has had wide experience as an arbitration and conciliation board chairman. During the critical war years he served as chairman of the National War Labour Board. I believe we are very fortunate in obtaining a man of his experience and calibre for this important and complex task.

The other members of the conciliation board are Mr. A. G. Cooper, Q.C., of Halifax, nominee of the railway companies, and Mr. E. P. O'Neal, of Vancouver, nominee of the union.

The dispute involves non-operating railway employees, represented by the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers. Conciliation boards also have been appointed to deal with 55,000 other non-operating railway employees and 28,000 non-operating railway shopcraft employees.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, members of the house will welcome the appointment of a jurist as distinguished as is Hon. Mr. Cameron to undertake this very important task. I am sure members on all sides of the house certainly wish him well in what is an imperative national duty.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the announcement the minister has made. We wish these three boards well as they cope with their task.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

NATIONAL CAPITAL ACT

AMENDMENT TO PERMIT APPOINTMENT OF GREEN BELT ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-12, to amend the National Capital Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill to amend the National Capital Act to establish a green belt advisory committee is, I believe, non-controversial; certainly it is non-partisan. Hon. members on all sides of the house share the imperative urge to advance the cause of national capital planning. Is it too much, then, to hope that this afternoon the government supporters would not feel it necessary or desirable to talk out this bill, but rather would permit it to come to a vote in the hope that the house might adopt it.

I see the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin) is in the chamber. I know of his interest in national capital planning and perhaps I might enlist his help in this matter. It is my sincere belief the adoption of this bill would accrue to the general advantage of the whole national capital region. Assuredly the bill is not a matter of mere local interest; it has a basic national significance.

Every Canadian has a prime stake in and a responsibility for the future of Ottawa and of the national capital region, as a symbol of a united nation. I believe members of all parties in this house agree that it is of paramount importance that Ottawa should be given the atmosphere, the individuality and the dignity of a national capital which is becoming of a dynamic nation. The standards of city planning and of city development should represent the most advanced thinking available. This parliament should be ready to provide the funds necessary for these proper national purposes.

Now, sir, only 230 days remain before Canada enters her centennial year. In 1967 Ottawa will be the Mecca for many more Canadian, commonwealth and foreign visitors than at any other period in her history. In my view a crash program of national capital planning is needed urgently in these next seven months, if Ottawa is to be readied for the centennial. There must be a much more active and vigorous partnership among the Department of Public Works, the National Capital Commission, the civic administrations of Ottawa and the surrounding townships and villages, and the government of Ontario. Only in this way can Ottawa achieve the status of a great and unique city developed by enlightened planning which reflects the vigorous and dynamic culture of Canada in her centennial year.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Foresight, determination and haste—and I emphasize haste—are now needed to enhance the quality and character of the city. Sir, Ottawa is not a fully planned capital in the sense of Washington, Canberra or Brasilia. But the influence of the National Capital Commission and its predecessors has been profound. This parliament should assure even greater support of municipal and other services as a matter of urgent, national priority.

This bill deals only with one aspect of the problem, but it is an important one. It would make mandatory the appointment of a green belt advisory committee responsible for the administration and development of the green belt as a unique and imaginative concept in national capital planning.

Hon. members from other parts of Canada may not be fully familiar with the green belt and the tremendous investment which the people of Canada now have in this area. The original concept of a green belt surrounding the national capital and defining and controlling its physical limits stems from the report of Mr. Jacques Gréber. He defined his proposal in his famous report as follows:

> In the centre, the urban region is delimited by a perimeter, intended to prohibit tentacular and linear extensions of constructions abutting upon highways. To that effect an area, zoned as a green belt, frames this perimeter and is subjected to regulations to protect the area comprised within the green belt against undesirable development. Outside of the extreme limit of this green belt, the territory will retain its rural character, with the exception of limited and controlled minor and appropriate developments.

No action of an effective nature was taken until June 18, 1958, when the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, as prime minister, announced the decision of the government to acquire ownership of the green belt by purchase or expropriation so as to, in his words, "ensure that the development of the capital area over the long term future will be in accordance with the national importance and significance of this city." The words of the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert at page 1381 of Hansard of June 18, 1958, are worth repeating:

> I should like to emphasize that this is a long-term project undertaken in the national interest. It is not a short-term one nor one that has been undertaken at the request of the local municipalities. Experience has shown that unless effectual control is exercised, cities tend to sprawl out into suburbs, resulting in what is called ribbon development, in a manner that is quite contrary to and inconsistent with the long-term planning that is necessary and essential if the capital of Canada is to be preserved and developed so that it will be a capital city of which this generation and succeeding generations can and will be proud.
> By investing a reasonable sum now to acquire title to the lands on the boundaries of the city the people of Canada, through parliament, can be assured of that control which is necessary before further developments take place which may indeed result in action being taken too late. During the early years after the land is acquired the rents received for it may not be as much as the interest on the funds borrowed to purchase the lands in question, but the government is confident that over the long-term period the investment will be found to be worth while financially, as well as being necessary to achieve the important purpose which we and the people of Canada as a whole, I believe, have in mind and desire.

The result of this decision communicated to the house in those words on June 18, 1958, has meant that the people of Canada are now the owners of a green belt surrounding the national capital consisting of 41,390 acres, for which to date $34,241,578 of public money has been advanced or loaned and for which, according to estimate, an additional $5 million will be needed to complete the program. This is a total public investment by way of loans or advances of almost $40 million.

Many of the methods of the National Capital Commission in expropriating and acquiring the green belt were an anathema to some of my constituents; but these decisions have been taken and there is no use crying over spilled milk. This does not necessarily mean that we have reached the end, however, of green belt expropriations. According to that very distinguished journalist, Mr. Richard Jackson, the government is planning to extend the green belt to an area of 900 square miles. Whether this be true or not, I have learned never to discount the informed predictions of Mr. Jackson. But whether at its present or an expanded acreage, what concerns me and what this bill is all about is the management of this $40 million asset belonging to the Canadian people, an asset bound to increase in value as the years go on.

Any area of 41,000 acres requires knowledgeable, competent management by expert persons and, quite frankly, this is what the National Capital Commission has lacked. I have the highest respect for the commission itself, its chairman, its general manager and staff with one exception—a man who should be confined to outer darkness because he has done more to set back the cause of national capital planning and frustrate the good will essential thereto than is conceivable or could be described. But apart from that, the commission is simply not capable of efficient, effective management of the green belt in accordance with the mandate from this parliament. This bill would give them the necessary advice and assistance.

To what purposes would the proposed green belt advisory committee work? So that hon. members may appreciate the basic purposes and functions of the green belt, perhaps I may paraphrase some of the descriptive material which appears in the report of the joint Senate and House of Commons committee of 1956 on the national capital, a committee of which my hon. friend from Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) was a member.

The green belt is intended to control the physical limits of the metropolitan area and thus limit the ultimate population of Ottawa. The control of population is designed as a technique of providing for the economic development of municipal and other services within the metropolitan area. The green belt is intended to maintain sites which in the future can be used by federal buildings and institutions requiring large areas. It will provide future park areas to serve the future metropolitan population which lives on both sides of the green belt. Outside the green belt the population would live in satellite communities, and these are already developing in such communities as Kanata and Glencairn.

The protection of the physical outer limit of the national capital limits federal participation and involvement in the area. If the central core were permitted to expand indefinitely as a metropolitan area, the national capital might some day be spread over most of eastern Ontario. In that case there would and could be no limit to the involvement and financial responsibility of the federal government to the national capital.

In the same report to which I have been referring and which I have been attempting to paraphrase, permissible uses for green belt properties were outlined as being housing and agricultural uses on lands of more than 5½ acres; hospitals, religious institutions, educational institutions and public buildings on lands of more than 10 acres; churches, libraries and museums on lands of more than 3 acres; commercial and/or industrial undertakings on lands of more than 10 acres; and farms of at least 20 acres. These early, indeed original statements of permissible uses have been, I believe, refined considerably, but regrettably there has never been an up to date statement of governmental or commission policy in respect of this matter. This is one of the reasons why I would like to see a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, as I have advocated on a number of occasions at this session of parliament.

I would invite, sir, the interested hon. members of this house, and indeed members of the public, to examine the returns which were produced in the house on April 20, 1966 to questions 792 and 793 posed by me, which returns give more information about the existing plans for development of the green belt for recreational, governmental, reforestation and conservation purposes. I believe that lack of expert advice has led to many erroneous decisions, decisions such as the reforestation of one of the finest farms in the whole Ottawa area, the Harold K. Nesbitt farm. This is a farm which is completely tile drained and highly productive as a dairy farm, and has one of the best orchards ever developed in eastern Ontario. No farm less susceptible to reforestation could be found anywhere in Canada and at this very moment I believe the commission is considering tearing out the thousands of trees planted in 1965, and restoring the land to the agricultural purposes for which, particularly with expensive tile draining, it is eminently suited. One of the things which this bill is designed to do is to prevent these mistakes from being permitted to recur.

I believe, sir, that without expert advice for the National Capital Commission, the green belt could become a weed belt—a "tatty acres", a ramshackledown—or a publicly owned Tobacco Road. It is to avoid these undesirable developments that this bill proposes the establishment of a green belt advisory committee of not fewer than five, nor more than 12 persons, of whom a majority shall be persons experienced in farm or forestry management with a special knowledge of local conditions and circumstances in the national capital region.

Under the existing legislation, sir, the National Capital Commission could have appointed such a committee of their own initiative and without additional parliamentary authority. All this bill does is to make mandatory that which is now permissive.

What has interested, indeed fascinated, me is that since this bill was introduced the National Capital Commission has established, on February 28, 1966, what is called the agricultural advisory committee to the property division of the National Capital Commission. If this bill has hastened the establishment of this committee, it has already served a useful purpose. This committee consists of three public servants, Dr. Grant Carman, a dedicated, articulate and very able member of the council of the township of Nepean who is the director of information of the Department of Agriculture; Dr. Peter C. Stobbe, of the Soil Research Institute of the Department of Agriculture, and Mr. R. C. Hodges, of ARDA in the Department of Forestry. The objectives and functions of this committee are described in the appointing document as follows:

1.2—The purpose of the committee is to afford the property division of the National Capital Commission professional and technical aid and advice with respect to matters of terms of development of the agricultural and forestry portions of the lands owned by the commission.

Further purposes are:

1.5—The Agricultural Advisory Committee shall consider, investigate and report on matters relating to the use and development of land for Agricultural and Forestry purposes in which the Commission may be interested, as requested by the Property Division. Such matters will include:

(i) The rental, maintenance and rehabilitation of Agricultural properties of the Commission.

(ii) Use of Agricultural lands with specific reference to land capabilities and classification.

(iii) The maintenance of lands, fences, buildings and drains.

(iv) Matters of good farming practices, leasing methods and terms.

(v) Economic feasibility of Agricultural projects and practices.

Now, sir, much as I welcome this advance and great as my respect is for this committee, and its chairman, Dr. Carman, the establishment of it is only a sop, an attempt to meet the purposes of this bill now under discussion in the house and to do it inadequately.

In my belief it is imperative that members of the public, experienced and knowledgeable citizens of the area, in addition to civil servants, should be involved in this work of planning and managing the green belt. This is what this bill would do. Already at this session, on a number of occasions, I have requested the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) to agree to the appointment of a joint special committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to study the national capital problems. I am at a loss to understand the reluctance of the members of the government to accept the repeated suggestions which have been made to them. This afternoon I renew the request to both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works to appoint such a joint special committee. I believe that great good could be achieved by a parliamentary review of all the problems of the National Capital Commission in this area. That review should take place at the earliest possible date and would include the problems which I have endeavoured to present to the house this afternoon.

I would commend this bill to the house as a contribution to the national capital planning and would hope that it will neither be talked out nor opposed on political grounds.

Mr. Paul Tardif (Russell): Mr. Speaker, I was very much impressed by the enthusiasm of my good friend, the member for Carleton. I am going to limit my remarks as much as possible to a few concentrated ones so that he will not be able to accuse me of talking this bill out. As a matter of fact, I thought he was in the process of doing that himself when he talked about everything except what the bill contains. I was impressed by his historical and statistical notes. The explanatory note to the bill states this:

[Translation]

Pursuant to subsection (3)—

[English]

—which is the subsection the hon. member seeks to amend—

[Translation]

—of section 9 of the National Capital Act, the Commission may appoint a National Capital Planning Committee and such other committees as it considers necessary or desirable for the administration of the Act.

The purpose of this bill is to direct that the Commission shall amongst those committees appoint a Green Belt Advisory Committee.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[English]

The commission has the right to appoint any type of committee which, in its judgment, is necessary or can make a contribution to the national capital. The hon. member for Carleton suggested he was deeply interested in making an attractive capital. I think everybody in Ottawa who has administrative responsibility in any sphere, civic, provincial or federal, has exactly the same interest and has had that interest for a good many years. This is not entirely new. If the National Capital Commission has the right at this time to appoint the committees that are necessary in order for it to function, then there is no need for this bill.

However, Mr. Speaker, although I am going to vote in favour of the bill—and I am going to tell the hon. member why I am going to vote in favour of it—I want to tell him that I feel this bill may make an unnecessary change in the act as it now stands. My hon. friend has said he has the highest respect for every member of the commission, with the exception of one black sheep who belongs to that large family which administers the national capital. I do not know to whom he is referring. However, if there is only one in this flock, then I think that is a rather good average. It would be better if we did not have any, but I do not know whether that is possible.

The hon. member wants an additional committee of from five to 12 members. He has said there is a great deal of confusion about the national capital and, because of this confusion, because of the lack of experienced people, because these people do not know the problems of the green belt, we should have a committee of from five to 12 people. He must realize, as we all do, that the more committees you have and the larger those committees are, the less work is done.

What surprises me is that when the hon. member was a minister he did not make the recommendation to set up this committee. He said he was not successful when he suggested the establishment of this committee to the present government. However, he does not speak of his lack of success when he was sitting on the treasury benches. I do not know why he did not mention it. Most of the members of the National Capital Commission were appointed by his government, and they were appointed on his recommendation. As a matter of fact, most of them are still members of the commission. I do not suggest this is the reason they are not capable of looking after the problems of the green belt, and I am sure that is not what the hon. member meant, either.

I shall vote for this bill in any event, but I am a little afraid that if it passes it might add to the confusion that already exists by reason of the number of committees we have today. Actually, if the purpose of the measure is to protect the people in the green belt who are going to be expropriated, then the hon. member is closing the barn door after the horse has been stolen.

[Mr. Tardif.]

In so far as the Ontario side is concerned, most of the expropriation has already taken place. There are no expropriations that have to be made on the Quebec side, through negotiation. If the purpose is to protect people who are going to be expropriated, there are very few of them left. When I was in opposition, many of these people came to me as well as to the former member for Carleton requesting representations to enable them to get a square deal. In many cases they did not get a fair deal. I am sure that the present staff of the National Capital Commission can gather the data to make sure that the lands for the green belt are the best plans for the city of Ottawa. In the first place, they have at their disposal a great number of experts who can provide information to the National Capital Commission. They do not have to be members of a committee. I am sure the members of the National Capital Commission staff will accept the additional burden, will probably be willing to sacrifice some of their time, to do the kind of job we expect them to do.

So far as I know there are only a few parcels of land that remain to be expropriated under the present plans of the National Capital Commission for the development of the green belt. This afternoon the hon. member has referred to the fact the commission has plans for recreational areas, small factories and many other things that are going to be located in the green belt eventually. If these plans already exist, and if we need advisers to change those plans somewhat, I am sure we can do that without having a committee.

However, I am going to vote for the bill if it comes to a vote. I am going to vote for it for this reason: Even if there are only a few people to be expropriated, or if there are people who have been expropriated who are dissatisfied with the treatment they received from the people who valued their property when it was expropriated by the National Capital Commission, then I would vote for this measure so that they could make representations to this committee. I know a great number of people who belong to the Home Owners Association in the green belt who have made representations on many occasions to me, to the former member for Carleton and everybody in the National Capital Commission but without great success. If the passage of this measure will give these people another opportunity to state their grievances, then I am in favour of it. I pray they will be more successful than the people who appeared in front of the National Capital Commission when the large part of the expropriation was being done in 1958, 1959, 1960 and 1961.

Mr. J.-T. Richard (Ottawa East): I rise at this time to say only a few words about Bill No. C-12, an act to amend the National Capital Act. I might say that I would have preferred to have an opportunity to talk about our national capital plan in general. As the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) said a few moments ago, we should discuss some crash program to do some of the work which should be done between now and July 1 next year.

However, this bill relates particularly to the green belt. As the hon. member for Carleton and the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Tardif) have indicated, there is a provision in the National Capital Act which enables the commission to appoint such committees as it considers necessary or desirable for the administration of the act. No doubt one can assume that if the commission felt it necessary, they would have such a commission established for the green belt. I am surprised, I must say, that the commission has waited this long to appoint what is termed an agricultural advisory committee and which, I assume, would do in part the work this green belt committee would do. I am sure this action must have been taken because of this bill which the hon. member put on the order paper.

My only objection at this time, and it is not an objection to the bill, is that these committees, like this green belt committee, do not have any power. I go back to my perennial statement on this subject of the national capital. We have never properly delimited our plans for our capital. We talk about a national capital, but nobody seems to know who has any power to do anything about it. I feel this is the first thing that should be done, once and for all, namely that the two authorities should settle this problem immediately. I refer to the federal government and the provincial government. They should act in co-operation with the municipalities concerned. There are always these plans being made which involve provincial agencies, but provincial representatives never take part in the planning. It is the province that has the power over the land as well as over the municipalities.

We had a very good illustration of this only a few days ago in court here in Ottawa on an expropriation case. The appellant in this case before the Supreme Court of Canada was claiming his lands had been wrongly expropriated by the National Capital Commission which, he alleged, did not have the power of expropriation. The Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Pennell) claimed that Canada could even expropriate provincial lands. The only objector to this theory was some interloper from Quebec, who was not really interested because these lands were in Ontario. There was no one from Toronto present, so we do not know the viewpoint of the province of Ontario on this subject. The matter is left somewhat hazy. We do not know at this time, as I say, what are the thoughts of the government at Toronto toward this national capital plan.

I am in favour, Mr. Speaker, of this type of committee, but I should like to have the National Capital Commission come forward with the kind of plan required and be given the power to do the things it is doing. The things it is doing are not wrong, but everyone is suspicious of them because they are not set out in black and white. Everyone is afraid to have them approved by proper negotiation or through a proper decision of the court.

I do not think that this matter should go to the courts. I think that the province of Ontario, together with the government of Canada, should once and for all sit down and decide whether they want a national capital of a certain kind and a National Capital Commission with certain powers.

I am a native of the city of Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, and we natives are all very proud. Like all citizens of Canada, we are anxious to co-operate. But let no one think that it has been an easy thing for those who are taxpayers in this area to co-operate in a plan which is so hard to put through; when we are subjected to increased taxation because we are partners in a plan which entails considerable expense. Nevertheless we are willing to go ahead if we know where we are going; and if this kind of committee can help, I for one am all for it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate my colleague for Carleton (Mr. Bell) on his vigorous, spirited and colourful speech, as always. As I know him quite well, I hope that he will be just as spirited and colourful to uphold bilingualism within the N.C.C.

Mr. Speaker, I was surprised at the introduction of Bill C-12, for the simple reason that I thought this action was taken much too late. It is, as it were, an overdue delivery, and we know what kind of child this can produce. This bill should have been submitted to the house around 1958, when the present sponsor represented within the government an element which would surely have given a lot more value to the bill at that time. And I think that if the N.C.C. had today the power to appoint a Green Belt Advisory Committee, it should not have to force that committee to sit, because this should have been done several years ago. The N.C.C. should, of course, have appointed such an advisory committee and also consulted with the mayors of the various municipalities or, at least, with municipal councils, that is elected people, and, I repeat, before today, because the national capital area covers between 1,800 and 2,000 square miles. It is impossible to do today, through consultations carried on by an advisory committee, what was done yesterday.

As I say, at the very beginning, the National Capital Commission, then known as the Federal District Commission, may not have had extraordinary powers, but nevertheless it had advisory powers which it failed to use. Perhaps the mayors of the neighbouring municipalities, attracted by the free aspect of the development of certain parks or certain parts of their territories, were a bit taken in by this golden opportunity which was held out in bright prospects to them. And even today, if the objective of an advisory committee is to be achieved practically, if the National Capital Commission is to be forced under the provisions of the bill, to appoint a Green Belt Advisory Committee, I suggest there would be an overlapping of provincial and federal authority. I do not think that we can have the same view of the problems submitted with regard to the acquisition of lands and with regard to everything contained in subsection (3b) of section 9. Quebec and Ontario municipalities will not see eye to eye, and there may be confusion and misunderstanding around the conference table, which I think will result in bringing to a standstill the projects for the development of the federal capital. When I refer to the federal capital, this includes the national capital area. And how could we determine the role that could be played today by such a committee, since some municipalities both on the Quebec and Ontario sides have difficulty agreeing with each other.

To this effect, I quote a newspaper report of May 13, 1964—

[English]

What prompts persons both inside and outside of the Commons to raise this question periodically are instances of dissension at Ottawa's city hall, the lack of co-ordination between this city and its neighbours on transportation and hospital services, and the lack of progress on road repair programs.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

If dissension prevails within municipalities, is it possible, do you think, to appoint an advisory committee on which representatives of various regional governments could sit in order to discuss a common problem? If we want to survive, we shall have to draw up extensive plans for the future.

Planning is as essential in the social and urban fields as in any other. I have here an editorial by Mr. Gérard Bernier which appeared in Le Droit of December 16, 1964, in which he states:

For several years, the federal government, through the N.C.C., has performed a fine job of town planning in the area. Both on the Ontario and on the Quebec sides, what a lot of extensive and tremendous achievements.

However, we find an anomaly which should be corrected as soon as possible. The municipalities concerned, on both sides of the Ottawa river, are not represented within the N.C.C. by a representative of their government at the municipal level. It is normal that the mayors of Ottawa and Hull should be official members of the N.C.C. and have the privilege of being represented within this body by an appointed delegate if they are unable to attend a meeting.

When I had the pleasure and the honour of being mayor of the municipality of Lucerne—it may not be the most populous, but it certainly is the most beautiful municipality in the district—I said on January 5, 1965: we are on the road to progress and I hope the population will keep on co-operating. At that time, we were counting on the co-operation of the N.C.C.

We had informed the N.C.C. that if it wanted to give us a square deal, we would provide all the required opportunities, and I am pleased to say that even though a few hitches occurred, we have always tried to carry out a program likely to please both parties.

At the very beginning, about 15 years ago, when there was no possibility of getting along with the N.C.C., our municipalities could have tried at least to take a more practical approach to the matter, as distinct from an abstract and intellectual approach, so as not to leave it to the N.C.C. to plan all our territories.

I will be told, I know, that at the time, we could not do such a thing, that the matter was perhaps too ticklish to be discussed, because then the prime concern of the municipalities was this: the matter of money, of grants given to municipalities, and there were also some extremely important matters, such as that of expropriations. These often concerned regions where so-called shacks were bought at prices which their owners could never have received otherwise.

I think these factors were the reason why the municipalities never tried to stop the growing encroachment of the N.C.C. in the field of planning. I do not think much can be accomplished in practice with this committee, which would be another worthless one among the many committees of the N.C.C.

I remember a brief already submitted suggesting that such a committee should be established—I shall speak of it in a moment —but it was never approved, for even if it could have been set up, there were too many committees and some overlapping. The idea was therefore discarded. When a federal district comprising part of the territory of the province of Quebec and part of Ontario is planned, an agreement should perhaps be reached and the decision should be made by the federal government together with the provinces. It should be unanimous, and in my opinion the various representatives of the regional governments should meet to discuss the project with the N.C.C. This should not be a consultation but an intermunicipal and interprovincial committee which will make suggestions to the federal government so that the latter can, in a reasonable and sensible atmosphere free from partisanship, create a federal district in Canada, always according to the criterions which I mentioned in a speech I made in the house last month.

I do not see very well the role which the advisory committee would have to play, because I am convinced that certain areas on the Ontario side will never accept that the Quebec side should receive its share of federal buildings, they will never accept that the development of the immense territory on the side of the national capital should serve to other purpose than driveways, roads and parks.

They will never accept that, since the people in Ontario can come to the Quebec side during the week-end to get some rest after their work.

In this federal district, a vast system of schools would also have to be built on the Ontario side as well as the Quebec side for the benefit of those who want to prepare for a career in the civil service.

Do you believe that we can achieve that with an advisory committee? I submit that we will run around in circles and that this advisory committee will never work, because if I can judge from the advisory committees which I have seen at work, despite meeting after meeting, nothing is ever achieved.

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

CONCURRENCE IN SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I have just been advised by the chairman of the broadcasting committee that he is ill. Therefore I ask leave of the house to present in his name the motion for concurrence in the seventh report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have leave to make the said motion on behalf of the chairman of the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Basford moved that the seventh report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, presented to the house on Friday, May 13, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for this procedure; I heard about this illness only 60 seconds ago.

• (2:40 p.m.)

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Restigouche-Madawaska) moved:

That the first report of the standing committee on external affairs, presented to the house on Thursday, May 5, 1966, be now concurred in.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, for the reasons set out previously, we object to concurrence in this report that the 13-member quorum be cut to 10. Out of a total of 25 we believe that the house should be able to find 13 members who will make it their duty and pleasure to attend the sittings of the committee on external affairs.

If there are not 13 who are ready to attend those sittings out of the 25 designated on that committee, I believe those who are not interested in being on the committee should be replaced.

I know the reduction of the quorum has been accepted for other committees, but in my opinion, it is time to find another solution to allow this committee to perform its work, instead of reducing its quorum.

We have already made suggestions. We see that the government did not deem it advisable to take note thereof and to make the necessary changes. Therefore, I would like to move an amendment to the motion presented by the chairman of the committee on external affairs.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the report be referred back to the committee with a view to amending the proposal and to suggesting that a substitute be appointed for each of the members of this committee.

This is a simple proposal, Mr. Speaker. There would still be 25 members on the committee, but each member would be assisted by a substitute. If a member of the committee cannot attend the sittings of the said committee, either because he is prevented from doing so or because he is not interested, then there will be a substitute to replace him, and this will make it easier to get the required quorum of 13.

I should like to move this amendment to the effect that the report be returned to the committee on external affairs so that the latter may suggest to the house the proposal just submitted, namely the appointment of a substitute for every committee member. The substitute would not automatically be a member of the committee, but would replace ipso facto by right the committee member absent for some reason or other.

In my opinion that is a reasonable proposal. I fail to see how the government or a member of the house could object to the appointment of a substitute, so that the quorum may be maintained at 13 and the work carried out effectively.

Mr. Speaker: I make certain reservations as to the admissibility of this amendment and I would gladly hear the comments some hon. members would care to make in this connection.

Control of Drug LSD

[English]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if you would consider taking the matter under consideration until another day, so we would not necessarily take up the time of the house in discussing the matter at this moment.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: If any hon. member is ready to comment immediately on whether this amendment is out of order or not, I shall give a ruling now.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, we are willing to accept what the hon. leader of the opposition has suggested, that is, that your ruling be postponed for a day to give you time to take the matter into consideration; we will probably find a solution to the problem of the quorum of the various committees.

Mr. Speaker: Unless I am given a better reason for postponing my decision, I am ready to give a ruling now. It seems quite obvious to me that the amendment of the hon. member for Lapointe is out of order because, in my opinion, it covers more than the terms of reference of the committee in question.

That being the case, I do not believe the amendment can be accepted.

Is the house ready for the question?

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Mr. Grégoire: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

STATEMENT ON CONTROL OF DRUG LSD

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in view of the increasing publicity being given to the drug lysergic acid diethylamide, commonly called LSD, I thought it might be appropriate to present a short statement to the house outlining the consideration which is being given to this problem.

The drug in question comes within the category of hallucinogenic drugs which are being used on an investigational basis in psychiatry. In 1963 the sale and distribution of this drug was prohibited except for small quantities provided by the manufacturer of the drug to institutions approved by the minister for clinical investigation and research.

I would also like to say that there is only one manufacturer of this drug in Canada, and there has been no suggestion that any of the supplies of this drug which have appeared in the illicit underworld market are connected in any way with this company.

It appears that LSD is being smuggled into Canada for illegal sale. In prohibiting the sale of the drug except under the conditions I have mentioned, there was not at that time any thought that the drug would lend itself to illicit trafficking. Developments, however, in recent months have unfortunately shown a growing interest in the drug by persons not under medical care.

The hallucinogenic effects of this drug have received wide publicity, giving the impression that such effects are intensely pleasurable and not in any way harmful to the individual. This is not so. Indeed, this is a highly potent drug, and cases of psychotic breakdown have been reported following its use.

I can assure hon. members that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who are concerned with this problem, are doing their best to eliminate illicit supplies and we have under consideration, in consultation with that force, special measures which will permit more effective control of LSD than is possible under existing legislation.

While I have indicated to members something of our concern over the illicit use of this drug, I would not wish to give any impression that such use is general in Canada, but there is some evidence that it is increasing. It is being used by individuals who choose to experiment with the drug for its special effects without full knowledge of the dangers which could result.

Mr. Speaker, I wished to make this brief statement to the house to indicate that the problem is one which we are actively considering with a view to adopting such measures as will be necessary to deal not only with the illicit traffic in this drug but its illegal possession.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to commend the minister for making a statement upon this drug at this time. I recall that some years ago, when I had the privilege and honour of heading the department of which he is now minister, this drug was brought to our attention as being highly dangerous and leaving dangerous effects.

• (2:50 p.m.)

The hallucinations it causes were of some attraction to certain people, but I thought we had it under control. I realize that in recent years illicit traffic has developed. The minister has mentioned that the R.C.M.P. are endeavouring to prohibit the smuggling of LSD into Canada, and I think the control of its production under one manufacturer does give complete control through all legal channels.

I appreciate that the minister is faced with a problem, but on hearing his statement I am happy to realize that his department is on top of the matter and is using all its energies to control the situation.

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, the minister's statement on LSD covers the fact that this is a problem, but so far as I can see does not outline specifically what can be done to solve what could be a rather serious difficulty.

What we are interested in are the methods to be used in controlling it. Food and drug regulations cover this to a certain extent by powers given to the minister in regard to its distribution and manufacture. The drug has a tremendous potential for medical research and should not be curbed in this respect. However, the real danger of this drug lies not in the control of its lawful manufacture and importation but the ease with which it can be made by amateurs and made available to younger people for the production of kicks. It is ignorance of this kind in younger people that produces the actual danger.

Therefore I feel the secret of control is in the education of all Canadians as to its uses, values and dangers, more particularly its dangers. Let us not wait until it is too late to do something, but let us do something now in a preventive way before we have to face a dire catastrophe.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

PROVISION FOR ALLOWANCES TO PERSONS BEING TRAINED

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting allowances to persons being trained under technical and vocational training programs, and to authorize the entering into agreements with the provinces in connection therewith; and to provide further for certain changes incidental thereto in connection with the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to.

Y.W.C.A. RESOLUTION RESPECTING RECREATION SPACE

Question No. 167—Mr. McCleave:

1. Has the government, or any department thereof, or the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, received Resolution 17, passed at the 22nd national convention of the Y.W.C.A. of Canada, concerning the need for adequate recreation space in many public housing developments?

2. If so, is consideration being given to the resolution and has any policy been formulated to implement the resolution?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. No.

2. See 1 above. However, in the development of multiple unit projects arrangements are made, where possible, for the provision of open areas with recreation facilities for the use of children. Public housing projects should not be expected to bear the costs of providing community recreational facilities. Such projects should be integrated with the neighbourhood and share municipal recreational and park facilities.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS

Question No. 824—Mr. Forrestall:

1. In each of the years 1960 to 1965, what were the number of accidents, province by province, involving trains, both freight and passenger, on (a) all C.P.R. lines (b) all C.N.R. lines?

2. What loss of life was incurred in each of these accidents?

3. What is the dollar cost for repairs to both trains and roadbeds resulting from these accidents and to other public and private property?

4. What was the cause of each accident?

Questions

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advise as follows:

1. Statistics regarding accidents reportable to the Board in accordance with section 288 of the Railway Act (except statistics regarding highway crossing accidents) are not maintained on a provincial basis. However, there is a statement included in the annual report of the board which shows the number of accidents, the number of persons killed and injured on the Canadian National Railways, Canadian Pacific Railway Company and miscellaneous railways. These accidents are divided into different categories showing the number of accidents which occurred under various causes. These statistics are given in the board's annual report as follows: Annual report for 1960, Statement No. 3, Page 63; Annual report for 1961, Statement No. 3, Page 73; Annual report for 1962, Statement No 3, Page 73; Annual report for 1963, Statement No. 3, Page 73; Annual report for 1964, Statement No. 2, Page 71.

As stated above, statistics regarding highway crossing accidents are maintained on a provincial basis. This information is included in the annual reports of the board as follows: Annual report for 1960, Statements 4 and 5, Page 65; Annual report for 1961, Statements 4 and 5, Page 75; Annual report for 1962, Statements 4 and 5, Page 75; Annual report for 1963, Statements 4 and 5, Page 75; Annual report for 1964, Statements 3 and 4, Page 74.

3. This information is not available in the board's records.

PERSONS SERVING COMMUTED DEATH SENTENCES

Question No. 954—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Referring to the table and supplementary table appearing as Appendix "D" to the white paper on capital punishment dated June 14, 1965, of the persons sentenced to death since 1920 whose sentence was commuted, how many, tabulated according to year of conviction as shown on said tables (a) are still imprisoned and have been continuously imprisoned since commutation (b) were released from imprisonment but returned thereto for breach of parole or other reason, and are now imprisoned (c) are now free from imprisonment (d) died in prison?

[Mr. Forrestall.]

2. Of the persons referred to in part 1(c), what term of years was served before release from imprisonment, this information being assembled so far as may be practical into a table showing the number of convicted persons released after particular periods of imprisonment?

3. Since the coming into force of chapter 44 of the statutes of 1960-61 have any persons convicted of (a) non-capital murder (b) capital murder, whose sentences were commuted, been released from imprisonment and, if so, how many in each category and what was the term of imprisonment served by each releasee in each category?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. (a) The following is a list tabulated according to year of conviction of those inmates who were convicted of murder, and whose sentences were commuted to life imprisonment and who are still imprisoned, and have been continuously imprisoned since their sentences were commuted: 1922, 1; 1924, 4; 1931, 1; 1932, 1; 1933, 1; 1934, 1; 1936, 1; 1938, 1; 1940, 1; 1946, 2; 1950, 3; 1951, 1; 1952, 1; 1953, 5; 1954, 1; 1955, 5; 1956, 2; 1957, 4; 1958, 10; 1959, 11; 1960, 5; 1961, 11; 1962, 3; 1963, 10; 1964, 8; 1965, 7; Total 101.

1. (b) The following is a list tabulated as to year of conviction of men who were convicted of murder and whose sentences were commuted to life imprisonment, who were released on parole, and whose paroles were revoked, and they were returned to prison. The list shows the year of conviction, the time served when parole was granted, the year in which each was paroled and the year in which each parole was revoked.

Year sentenced	Time served years	Year paroled	Year revoked
1920	10	1930	1932
1940	17	1957	1958
1943	12	1955	1959
1946	16	1962	1964

The first of these men who was convicted in 1920, and revoked in 1932, was reparoled in 1949, and his parole was revoked again in 1962.

The second man was convicted in 1940, and he was revoked in 1958; he was reparoled in 1960 and his parole was revoked a second time in 1962.

Therefore, the answer to question 1(b) is that four men, as mentioned above, were released from imprisonment and were returned thereto, and are now in prison. Besides this, five inmates who had been released on parole had their paroles revoked and were subsequently reparoled.

1. (c) The following is a list of the persons convicted of murder whose sentences were commuted to life imprisonment, who have been paroled, and are now free from imprisonment, tabulated according to the year of conviction:

Year sentenced	Now free	Year sentenced	Now free

1. (d) The following list shows the number of men who were sentenced to death, and whose sentences were commuted to life imprisonment, who died in prison, tabulated as to year of conviction: 1920, 1; 1921, 1; 1922, 1; 1923, 1; 1926, 1; 1927, 1; 1932, 1; 1938, 1; 1944, 2; 1946, 1; 1956, 1; 1958, 1; 1960, 1; 1962, 1; Total 15.

Questions

CANADIAN BORN CHINESE VISITING U.S.

Question No. 1,135—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

Has the government received complaints or information concerning discrimination against natural-born Canadian citizens of Oriental extraction attempting to enter the United States as visitors and, if so, has the government considered any steps to facilitate the entry of such citizens?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs as follows: The government is aware of one incident which occurred in early December 1965 at a United States port of entry on the Canadian border where a natural born Canadian citizen of Chinese extraction, seeking entry into the U.S. as a visitor, was reported to have met discriminatory treatment. At our request an investigation of this incident was conducted and revealed that in this instance a misunderstanding appears to have arisen with respect to the procedure followed by a customs officer acting on behalf of an immigration officer.

The government took this opportunity to discuss the relevant U.S immigration regulations with the United States authorities and obtained from them confirmation that under present US immigration laws the norms for admissibility of non-immigrants are applied equally to all Canadians regardless of their racial origin

2. For each of the abovementioned number of items, (a) how much did the government spend for manufacturing or buying these items (b) were they manufactured in Canada or abroad?

Emergency Supply Planning Branch

1. None. However, the following list of new and reconditioned clothing stores, some of which were purchased over 20 years ago, were declared surplus by DND and it was proposed to ask Crown Assets Disposal Corporation to dispose of them. After inspection of the items it was decided that they could be valuable for use by the Emergency Welfare Services of the Department of National Health and Welfare in case of national emergencies.

Consequently, it was arranged that the goods be transferred to ESPB but to remain stored in DND Warehouses throughout the country and the Department of Defence Production to pay warehouse charges. A percentage of the clothing stores has already been transferred and arrangements for responsibility for the balance are being made.

An effective working arrangement has been completed between DND, DDP, and the Emergency Welfare Services of the Department of National Health and Welfare, whereby regional Emergency Welfare Services representatives may call for the provision of such clothing stocks to meet a local disaster situation where such material is required and not quickly obtainable from other sources. *WINTER WORKS PROGRAM, 1966-67

Question No. 1,399—Mr. Irvine:

Has the government received a petition from the council of the corporation of the city of London asking for an advance announcement of a winter works program for the 1966-67 season, to be established early, in connection with centennial year projects and, if so, what action will the government take regarding this matter?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes.

The answer to the second part is as follows. The operation of the municipal winter works incentive program is always considered on a year to year basis. An announcement concerning a 1966-67 program will be made as soon as possible.

3. What were the qualifications considered necessary for members of the provisional advisory council?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. Yes.

2. Other persons were approached and found themselves unable to accept. It would be a breach of confidence to make public either their names or the reasons which prevented them from accepting the invitation.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—STOPPAGE OF WORK BY LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in connection with the longshoremen's strike on the St. Lawrence and the calamitous potentialities of that strike. Has the minister received a suggestion that he should intervene personally; what has he done in that connection, and what are the hopes for a settlement before the results reach the point where they can only be detrimental not only to the export trade in general but to wheat deliveries in particular?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the minister has received more than one suggestion that he might intervene. I might say that I, as minister, was very disturbed to learn on Friday that one of the parties to the conciliation proceedings which opened on Thursday had withdrawn from the negotiating table on the ground, which they put forward, that the strike was a wildcat strike and therefore illegal.

Personally, after discussion with my officers and some of my colleagues, I feel this is a most unfortunate development. The chairman of the conciliation board let it be known that the board would sit again today at 2.30 p.m. or shortly thereafter. I am still awaiting a report as to what I hope might have happened this afternoon, at 2.30. The minister is quite prepared to take his part in the negotiations if he feels that is necessary or desirable. I am hopeful that reason will prevail at today's meeting, in view of telegrams from representatives not only of the federation but of the unions concerned, and that they will get down to brass tacks later today.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I assume that the one party to which the minister has referred is the shipowners or employers. Has he communicated with them, and does he have any assurance that when Mr. Justice Prevost meets this afternoon as conciliator they will be present? What pressure or suggestion has been exerted by the minister or his officials on the employers or shipowners to get them to view this as a national matter rather than one which only affects them?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, at the risk of giving a prolonged answer perhaps I might read a copy of the telegram I sent to the shipowners on Friday evening. It was sent to the president of the shipping federation, and reads as follows:

It would appear that by the time I had an opportunity to consider your telegram today you had already advised the board of conciliation that you could not proceed with its hearings until the longshoremen obeyed the law and returned to work. I regret very much that the position of your federation may have the effect of preventing the critical negotiations before the board that are essential to a settlement of the dispute. Would urge that you facilitate arrangements for the conciliation board to meet over Saturday and Sunday, which are non-working days, without prejudice to your position on Monday. It is in the national interest as well as that of the members of your shipping federation that every effort be made to settle this dispute at the earliest time.

I am still waiting to find out what reaction there may have been when the conciliation board resumes this afternoon.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would the minister put on record the telegram he received and to which he made reference?

Mr. Nicholson: I will be very glad to table the telegrams, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is that suggestion agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance under whose jurisdiction the operations of the Canadian wheat board fall. Has he made representations to the Minister of Labour on behalf of the farmers of Canada, urging him to do everything possible to settle this dispute so that Canadian grain can reach its destination before the end of the crop year?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure the Minister of Labour is as sensitive to the needs of the western farmers as any member of this house.

[Later:]

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A few moments ago I stated that I hoped the conciliation board which is working on the problems involved in the waterfront strike in Montreal would be sitting at about 2.30 this afternoon. I have just been advised that the meeting will be held at 4.30 because the learned jurist, who was good enough to accept this responsible appointment on short notice, had a commitment in the courts at 2.30 which had to be dealt with at that time. He has been working on this problem and was prepared to work over the week end. In any event, the conciliation board will reconvene at about 4.30 rather than at about 2.30 this afternoon.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PROTESTS RESPECTING ACTIONS IN B.C. LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary or related question I should like to direct to the Minister of Labour. Has he received any protests from the longshoremen on the west coast, who are on strike, in respect of the actions of the R.C.M.P.; and will the minister tell us what role is being played by the R.C.M.P. in this dispute?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure, however, whether the minister received the messages to which the hon. member for Ontario has referred in his capacity as Minister of Labour or as the member of parliament for a Vancouver riding.

As most members of this house know, although a great many people in Canada do not, except in the major cities, in western Canada police work is done by the R.C.M.P., but the police work in the large municipality of Burnaby, which has a population of something over 100,000, is done under contract by the R.C.M.P., so that in effect the force is the local police force in that community. When disturbances arose it was only to be expected that the authorities would turn to that force for law enforcement and that is what has happened in British Columbia.

I was pleased to learn this morning that the attorney general of British Columbia has taken a special interest in the efforts to reach a settlement of this dispute in Burnaby. It has been a most unfortunate one resulting in far too much violence. In any event, the R.C.M.P. has been doing its duty as the local police force rather than as a national one. I thank the hon. member for his question because it has given me an opportunity to explain this to the people of Canada.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN PROFESSIONAL AND AMATEUR LEAGUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as an old sporting man I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the national interest in professional and amateur hockey, has the minister any information to give the house in respect of the proposed study of the relationship between professional and amateur leagues, which is reported as being undertaken by a committee of the fitness council?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt very much whether this question is of an urgent nature, and with respect I suggest the hon. member might place it on the order paper.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in relation to the subject of fitness and sport, and draw the attention of hon. members of this house to the fact that the University of British Columbia rugby team, which is presently touring eastern Canada, is at this time in the gallery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUEBEC—R.O.T.P. SERVICE BY STUDENT PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Associate Minister of National Defence. It concerns the refusal of the Canadian armed forces to grant an exemption of one year to the president of the "Union Générale des Etudiants du Québec", which would have postponed for one year his enlistment in the Royal Canadian Air Force under the R.O.T.P. program.

Can the Associate Minister of National Defence advise the house whether he is aware of this refusal and whether it is his intention to make personal representations so that the armed forces grant this one-year exemption to allow the president to complete his mandate?

Mr. Speaker: Here again, I have doubts concerning the urgency or the general importance of the point raised by the hon. member in his question. It seems to me he could place it on the order paper and, if he prefers, raise it upon the adjournment motion.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question of urgency, the president of U.G.E.Q. has resigned because he was not granted this exemption and, as his resignation is now being considered by the association, the members of the "Union Générale des Étudiants du Québec" would like an answer as soon as possible so as to know whether or not they should accept this resignation. That is why the matter is urgent.

Mr. Speaker: It may be urgent but it is hardly a matter of national importance. The hon. minister might communicate with the hon. member and give him his answer; the hon. member could then communicate with those concerned.

CORRECTION OF FIGURES OF RECRUITMENTS AND RELEASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, May 12 the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) asked a question concerning withdrawals from the armed forces in relation to recruitments. In reply I gave some figures which had been handed to me but which related to voluntary releases only, and the figures I gave for voluntary releases were for 1965 rather than 1966. In giving the figures I omitted reference to the fact that they represented voluntary releases only.

I can assure the house that the omission was inadvertent. However, I want to apologize to the hon. member and to the house for presenting the figures in this fashion, and for the obvious discrepancy with the figures given in answer to a written question on May 9.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Associate Minister of National Defence. I wonder whether he would participate with the Minister of National Defence in advising the house that he also made a mistake on May 12, when according to page 5041 of Hansard the Minister of National Defence said:

> The Associate Minister has just given me figures which show that for the first three months of the year—

We have now had it disclosed that the figures were for 1965, and that the figures were wrong.

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the figures were wrong. The figures for 1966 were 1,600 instead of 2,400, so that actually the situation is not as bad as my hon. friend would paint it. I made a mistake in handing the figures to the minister because they were computed in a different way, so if I did mislead the hon. gentleman I would apologize; but I want to remind him that the figures are 1,606 compared to 2,300 and something.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INVITATION TO COMMONWEALTH AIRMEN TRAINED IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour in his capacity as one of the vice chairman of the centennial committee. Would the minister take up with the centennial committee the possibility of inviting to our centennial celebrations those airmen of the commonwealth who trained in Canada under the commonwealth training plan during the war? In support of my request I put forward the fact that on my recent trip down under, the New Zealand and Australian air force veterans asked if this invitation would be forthcoming.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. gentleman's remarks will be considered, but I doubt if this question can be asked at this time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL GALLERY

REPORTED INTENTION TO PURCHASE $6 MILLION PICTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Can the minister tell us about the $6 million picture that her department is reported to be purchasing for the National Gallery?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): There was no such report at all. The report, as I understand it, was that I said I should like to have such a picture purchased as a standard of excellence at which all Canadians might aim for their artistic lives. It was made very clear that this was my view. It has never been discussed with my colleagues, most notably the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance. I was very happy to mention it in order to try to obtain the reaction of those present, which was very enthusiastic. I also wanted—

Mr. Starr: How about raising old age pensions?

Miss LaMarsh: —to obtain the reaction of the rest of the country. I know my hon. friend who is now speaking, the former minister of labour, while he was in office informed Canadians that that government did not have any interest in the National Gallery. However, we are interested in it.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether any discussions have taken place with regard to the Hirschorn art collection which this gentleman brought together as a result of the wealth he earned in Canada. Has there been any suggestion that this art collection should be made available to Canada rather than transported out of Canada to the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The subject to which the right hon. Leader of the Opposition refers is not within my immediate knowledge, and I do not know to what extent it could be urgent. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman might indicate in what way it is, so I might allow the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I cannot imagine anything more urgent than the report that within three or four days this is going to take place. I do not know of any other opportunity of referring to the matter. We may lose this art collection, unless of course it is impossible for Canada to secure it in any way.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have had no discussions with Mr. Hirschorn on this matter. I understand from what I have read that these pictures are not at the moment in Canada but are in the United States, although I know he has had pictures in Canada. I am sure we would welcome any donation to the National Gallery which might save us $6 million, if Mr. Hirschorn would find it possible to have some of his pictures donated. In fairness to him, in view of what the right hon. gentleman has said, I think it should be noted that Mr. Hirschorn made a good deal of his money in the United States, as well as some of it in Canada.

Mr. Starr: Tell him to leave half the pictures, then.

Miss LaMarsh: I might also give some information to the right hon. gentleman in this connection. I checked on this matter this morning, and I am informed that in 1958 the then directors of the gallery, Dr. Jarvis and Dr. Hubbard, did have some conversations with Mr. Hirschorn with respect to his collection, which I understand has always been in the United States although it has been on loan to us and we did have a Durer Sketch at one time. The indication then was that the owner of these art works intended to build himself a gallery in New York similar to the Guggenheim gallery to house his own very massive collection.

There has been no indication since 1958 that he has changed his mind. In fact we are informed that the agreement between the President of the United States and this gentleman will involve an investment of several million dollars by the United States government for the construction of a new museum expressly for that purpose.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): May I ask a supplementary question arising out of the answer of the Secretary of State. I wonder if this is one of the situations in which the Minister of Finance would be disposed to yield to pressure?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): This is a hypothetical question.

FISHERIES

LAKE ERIE—REQUEST FOR STABILIZATION OF PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. With the Lake Erie fishing industry still in a rather chaotic condition as a result of the extremely low prices paid for fish, has the minister given consideration to stabilizing the price through the federal stabilization board? If so, when may we expect an announcement on the decision made?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Representations have been made by the industry, and the officials of the fisheries prices support board are now completing an investigation. They are expected to report to the board very shortly.

B.C. SALMON—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries, and I ask it now inasmuch as tomorrow in Seattle, Washington, another meeting will open relating to problems of joint concern to Canada and the United States. I ask the minister whether any proposal has been made to the United States that Canada will desist from salmon net fishing operations on Juan de Fuca strait if the United States will cease and desist from net fishing British Columbia bound salmon through Alaska waters.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): The position being taken by Canada is well known. It will be the same position that was taken in Ottawa in February and at the previous meeting which was held in Washington last fall.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if the minister would mind answering the question I put to him, namely, did Canada offer to cease net salmon fishing in Juan de Fuca strait in return for the United States ceasing fishing home bound British Columbia salmon in Alaskan waters?

Mr. Robichaud: The details of the position taken by Canada will be known at the meeting that will open tomorrow in Seattle. I have nothing to add to what was reported following the meeting held in Ottawa early in February.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON WORK OF MEDIATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister supplementary to the question I asked him on Friday morning. At that time I asked if he would have consultations with Mr. Keate and get a report on the results of his efforts in connection with the dispute between management and producers of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. In view of the fact that Mr. Keate has gone back to Vancouver, and in view of what we read in the press, I wonder if the Prime Minister could now make a statement to the house on what Mr. Keate has reported to him.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): He has only reported to me he has gone back to British Columbia so he can write his report in calm and peace. He is working on it there and expects, I understand, to have it in my hands next week.

REFUSAL OF PREMIER TO APPEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. Secretary of State?

Does the hon. minister know why the premier of the province of Quebec should have refused to participate in the broadcasts "Sel de la semaine" and "Rencontres" which are organized, prepared and produced by the public affairs section of the C.B.C.?

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATON THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Will the minister inform the house whether it is his intention to present any legislation concerning veterans affairs at this session, particularly with regard to the deletion of the 365 day section of the War Veterans Allowance Act?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I indicated earlier in answer to a question of this kind that I am waiting for the report of the Wood committee before I decide on what legislation can be introduced. Until I have that before me to decide what bearing it may have on other legislation, it is difficult to reach a conclusion.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. McIntosh: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I inform the minister that the War Veterans Allowance Act is not under—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot inform the minister of anything.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF YUKON ACT AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I direct a question to the government house leader and ask him if, since last Friday, he has had an opportunity of discussing with his colleagues the question of referring Bill No. C-147, to amend the Yukon Act, to the standing committee on northern affairs and national resources.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No, not yet, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY AS TO FORTHCOMING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he is yet in a position to give the house the list of legislation that he promised last Thursday he would give at an early date. I refer to the list of important items of business that the government plans for this session.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to do that today. I have been discussing the matter with some of my colleagues this morning, and as a result of that discussion it will be possible in a day or two to discuss with the house leaders of the other parties the possibility of a planned program from now until say midsummer.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—OBSERVANCE OF BILL OF RIGHTS BY PROVINCIAL AUTHORITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. There is some urgency about it. I have been asked this question by employees working on the Columbia river treaty projects who want to know where they stand.

[Mr. Teillet.]

In view of the agreements between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia with respect to the Columbia river treaty and protocol, would the minister inform the house if under these agreements there is any obligation, expressed or implied, on the part of the government of British Columbia that the B.C. power and hydro authority will be required to observe the provisions of the Canadian Bill of Rights in its dealings with its employees and all other persons?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now asking for a legal interpretation or opinion, and for this reason the question cannot be accepted.

COLUMBIA RIVER—AMOUNT PAID BY U.S. AND EXPENDITURES BY B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I answer the hon. member for Kootenay West. He has been very good today and has not had many answers.

Recently the hon. member for Kootenay West asked me for a comparison between United States payments—he referred to them as contributions, but they are in fact payments—to the cost of Columbia river projects in Canada and the amounts being spent by British Columbia on those projects. This information was confidential. However, always eager to please the hon member for Kootenay West, I have obtained authorization from the government of British Columbia to make these figures available to the public now. I am told that as of March 31 this year the Columbia river treaty fund, including interest earned, stood at $295,917,782. Expenditures on treaty projects by British Columbia at the same date, including interest charged, stood at $97,914,505.

Mr. Herridge: That shows where we are going.

STATEMENT ON NATIONAL GRID STUDY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, may I give some information to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in answer to a question he raised on May 10 having to do with the national power grid.

The interim report by T. Ingledow and Associates Limited has been distributed to the members of the federal-provincial working committee on long distance transmission, and is being studied by that committee in conjunction with the consultants. They had a meeting here last week, for example. When this review is completed the consultants will present their final report on the stage II assessment and the committee will then be in a position to submit recommendations to the appropriate ministers of the governments concerned. Pending receipt of the technical advice of our committee, there is nothing to report other than this progress.

The second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, has to do with discussions between myself and the Ontario government regarding the inter-connection between Sudbury, Ontario and Manitoba. No such discussions have taken place, Mr. Speaker. The provinces, however, have provided their normal development proposals for use in the federal-provincial long distance transmission study, and Ontario's plans have been made a part of that study.

TRADE

TORONTO—IMPORTS OF FOREIGN GASOLINE AT DISTRESS PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I gave him only very brief notice of the question, so he may not have the answer ready at the moment.

Can the minister state what action will be taken in response to the urgent protest made by the Ontario retail gasoline and automotive service association on behalf of the service station industry, to the effect that the government's national oil policy was being disrupted by recent imports into Toronto harbour of three million gallons of foreign gasoline at distress prices?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, a protest has just been received by the National Energy Board a few minutes ago and they are presently investigating the matter. If the situation should be as the hon. member defines it, then it will be for the Department of National Revenue to take the necessary steps. But again, the matter is being investigated.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

VACANCY IN SECRETARIAT OF RESOURCE MINISTERS COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, while the house is very quiet this afternoon may I answer another question which was asked by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, who inquired whether Mr. Walter Gray, formerly public relations and information officer for the Canadian council of resource ministers, had been replaced. I have now received information to the effect that he has not yet been replaced, but I am told that Mr. Edgar Sarton is presently carrying out these duties until a replacement is found for Mr. Gray.

I have other replies, Mr. Speaker, but I will give them tomorrow.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEW CANCER TREATMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister advise whether he is now able to report on his investigation into the work of Doctors Mirkovich on an anti-cancer hormone made by the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, a similar question was asked the other day by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I promised at that time that I would make a statement in reply. I will now do so in reply to the question put to me by the hon. member for Queens.

Dr. Mirkovich was in touch with the Department of National Health and Welfare early this year and also some weeks ago asking that clinical tests be conducted of this alleged cure by the Department of National Health and Welfare. The Department of National Health and Walfare does not have the clinical facilities to test any such drug, although the department does support the National Cancer Institute and provincial activities in the field of clinical testing.

With respect to the appropriate rules that must be followed under the Food and Drug Act, I should state that in order for this drug to be approved as a new drug certain preclinical testing has to be conducted, and the composition of the drug made known to the officers of the department. Dr. Mirkovich has been made aware of these regulations and has been given a full explanation of the requirements to be met before distributing a new preparation for clinical trials. The purpose and intent of these new drug regulations are to ensure that clinical investigators have a background of knowledge about the new drug before administering it to patients. In this way the clinician is able to make a sound judgment as to the validity of the use of the drug in humans.

The regulations provide assurance to both the clinical investigator and the patient that the necessary tests have been carried out prior to the administration of the drug to the patient.

I should say in summary, this being an important question and we all being concerned about a solution to the disease of cancer, that the department has attempted to be helpful but is not in a position to carry out the clinical testing which is requested by Dr. Mirkovich. I am hopeful that these important clinical tests can be undertaken under the auspices of agencies which have facilities to make such tests.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—POSSIBILITY OF RECOGNITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister be in a position to report on any discussions he has had with Ambassador Arthur Goldberg; and has there been any agreement arrived at with the United States respecting the recognition of communist China, in accordance with the interpretation placed by objective reporters on the address delivered in the United States last week by the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, discussions have been going on with Ambassador Goldberg under the auspices, on our side, of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I expect to participate in those discussions later this afternoon, so perhaps the right hon. gentleman would wait until tomorrow for any statement in regard thereto.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having in mind today's news from Viet Nam, I wonder whether the minister could give the house his opinion as to the confused situation there today.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have just received notice of my hon. friend's intention to ask this question. I am sure he will appreciate that it would not be possible to relate the efforts of this country and the efforts of the members of the international control commission to the events reported in South Viet Nam this morning. I may say, however, that the Canadian proposal continues to be one that is foremost in our minds. I took advantage of the presence of United States Ambassador Goldberg to discuss certain aspects of the matter this morning. This proposal, together with other Canadian efforts, will be related to the situation in Viet Nam in an effort to contribute to the possibility of a negotiated settlement in that situaion.

RHODESIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CURRENT TALKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister inform the house whether he has had any recent word from the British government about the negotiations that are going on between certain officials from Rhodesia and officials of the British government with regard to settling the dispute between those two countries?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has been informed of the exploratory talks taking place in London. These are not in the nature of negotiations but constitute an effort to try to determine whether there is a basis for negotiation between the government of Great Britain and the illegal regime headed by Mr. Smith.

We have had a report on the latest meeting of the sanctions committee. The position taken by the British government, which has been supported by the Canadian government, for the use of moderation in this situation at the present time, is one that seems to have been accepted by the majority of the countries of the Commonwealth represented at that meeting.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SECOND PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys in his capacity as the minister who reports to the house for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Can the minister advise the house as to the present status of the second heavy water plant in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): My understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that Canadian General Electric still has to make its decision as to the location of the site.

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, since the minister of Mines and Technical Surveys seems to be in such a genial mood and has brought along his music and glad spirits, would he be so kind as to tell hon. members from Cape Breton Island whether he has heard anything further with respect to the Donald report on coal matters?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I say with great sincerity that the people of Cape Breton Island are my main interest at the moment. The hon. member should not think, because I am not yet in a position to announce policies for Cape Breton, that we are not at work on those matters.

An hon. Member: Where is the report?

Mr. Pepin: We are presently devoting a great deal of attention trying to devise ways and means by which the situation in Cape Breton may be improved.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: I wonder who is training the minister to answer like that.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DINNER RECESS DURING DISCUSSION OF SUPPLY MOTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as house leader. In view of the fact that the order of business for today and tomorrow is under a time limit, would he ascertain whether the house might give unanimous consent to our taking the traditional supper recess today and tomorrow between 6 and 8 p.m.?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad to agree to such a proposition so far as this side of the house is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With regard to the proposition submitted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, is it an order of the house that the house shall not sit between 6 p.m. and 8 p.m. today and tomorrow?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

FINANCE—TIGHT MONEY POLICY—NEGATIVE APPROACH TO PROBLEMS

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, for the past several months producers in this country have been finding it increasingly difficult to obtain the credit they need to carry out the normal expansion of plant, machinery and inventory which the increase in demand for their products requires. Plans for expansion have had to be curtailed or cancelled, with a consequent loss of production and prosperity. This is the identical situation, Mr. Speaker, in which the country found itself in late 1956 and early 1957 and which was the subject of the famous hidden report presented to the government by its economist, Dr. O. J. Firestone, early in 1957. In that report Dr. Firestone warned the government that if it did not withdraw and reverse its tight money policy, making credit easier to obtain than it had been for the preceding several months, a recession would follow. As we know, the government of the day planned to call an election in April and disregarded the warning of Dr. Firestone.

Mr. Sharp: Could I ask the hon. member for clarification of what he has just said?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order in the chamber.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. member a question, for clarification?

Mr. Hees: Certainly.

Mr. Sharp: Could he identify the report written by Dr. Firestone to which he refers? I am not familiar with it, I believe.

Mr. Hees: I am surprised to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) say that because I know that he was very familiar with this report when he was deputy minister of the Department of Trade and Commerce. I refer to the report made for the previous government early in 1957. It came into our hands after we had formed the government in June of that year.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hees: If the hon. member will look back he will become familiar with the report to which I refer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Northumberland has the floor.

Mr. Sharp: I just wanted to be clear what report was being referred to, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister may rise on a point or order, on a question of privilege, or in order to ask a question with the permission of the hon. member who has the floor. The hon. member for Northumberland has not indicated that he wants to allow the minister to put a question at the present time.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I was quite willing to yield the floor to the Minister of Finance and answer his question. I believe I have answered his question and now I intend to continue my remarks. As I was saying before I was interrupted by the Minister of Finance, when the Conservative government took over late in June, 1957, a recession was well launched, as Dr. Firestone had said it would be if the government of that day did not reverse its tight money policy and make far easier credit available to the producers of the country. It took us three years of hard work to bring the country out of the recession into which it had fallen due to the policies of the previous government to which I have just referred.

On January 21 last Dr. Firestone again warned the government that if their present tight money policy was not withdrawn and reasonable credit made available, a downturn in business could be expected. Once again the government has refused to heed this warning.

Tight money is this government's method of combating inflation. As we all know, inflationary pressures are caused when too much money is chasing too few goods. These pressures can be reduced either by the negative method of decreasing the amount of money available with which to buy the goods or the positive method of increasing the volume of goods available for sale. As we learned in the budget this year, the government has chosen the negative method of combating this problem by reducing the amount of money available to the Canadian people rather than doing those things which must be done so that our economy may proceed at a normal expansion rate.

The budget made it very clear that the government intends to restrict the money supply in three ways: through the tight money policy which they imposed several months ago, the increase in income taxes, and the special refundable tax of 5 per cent. We can well ask ourselves, why is the government limiting in this way the ability of industry to expand production and by this expansion relieve the inflationary pressure and increase prosperity?

It has become obvious that it is because there are not enough skilled workers in the country today to carry out expanded production. We might, again, ask ourselves why this should be so. It has been clear that unemployment has been decreasing steadily during the past five years and skilled workers have been in increasingly short supply during that period. Each year it has been more and more obvious that the program to train additional skilled workers is inadequate to meet the growing demand.

What has been sorely needed is an immigration policy with sufficiently attractive inducements to attract the required number of skilled workers from other industrial countries. The absence of such a program has allowed an increasingly difficult situation to become steadily worse. It seems to me that it is simply incredible that in a young and growing country such as Canada the government should be forcing industry to slow down on normal expansion programs. I think it is obvious to any thinking Canadian that it should, instead, be introducing policies to increase industry's capacity to produce and thereby keep pace with the growing demand for goods both at home and in the export market.

As a result of the government's negative and shortsighted policy we are losing sales which should be ours and which may be difficult or impossible to regain later. If this country is to meet foreign competition both at home and in the export markets we must make our prices increasingly competitive. Lower costs, as we know, are made possible by the economies of scale and those economies are made possible by increased production, not the reduced production which this government is forcing on industry today.

I think all hon. members would agree that one of the strongest inflationary pressures results from low productivity which forces up costs and thereby selling prices. During the five year period between 1960 and 1964 inclusive, productivity in Canada increased at an average annual rate of 2.9 per cent per year. But last year Canadians generally were alarmed to learn that productivity increased by only 2 per cent, or two-thirds of the average annual rate of increase for the previous five years. This is one of the principal reasons why the wholesale price index in Canada increased last year by 3.2 per cent over 1964 and was 50 per cent higher than the increase in the United States during the same 12 month period.

I think it is obvious that we need financial incentives to induce increased productivity so that our wholesale price index will rise at a reasonable rather than an excessive rate as it is doing today. I find it difficult to understand why, in the face of the drop in productivity that took place during the past year, the government did not introduce and has not yet introduced incentives to increase productivity and thereby make our products more competitive at home and abroad.

Another reason why incentives to encourage greater productivity should have been introduced by this government is that high prices are slowing down the annual rate of increase of our export trade. The industrial trade crusade which was introduced by the Conservative government at the end of 1960 produced, during the first year of operations in 1961, a 10 per cent increase in exports over the previous year and our first positive commodity trade balance in nine years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: Since that time our exports have increased at a higher rate each year and our sales abroad in 1964 were 19 per cent greater than in 1963. However, last year our exports increased by only 4.6 per cent over 1964, or one-quarter of the rate of increase during the previous year. Higher prices of Canadian goods made them less competitive abroad and our sales drive slowed down accordingly. It is obvious that incentives to increase productivity are urgently needed to make possible a satisfactory yearly increase in our export trade.

I think it has now become obvious that in order to keep our economy healthy four definite things are needed. First, a greatly accelerated and expanded program to train the skilled workers which this country needs to carry out its normal industrial expansion. Second, an immigration policy which will attract the skilled workers that our training program is unable to provide. Third, incentives to promote increased productivity and thereby enable Canadian industry to compete successfully in the home and export markets.

Fourth, I urge that the government's tight money policy be replaced by a policy which will provide industrial loans at reasonable rates of interest so that Canadian industry can expand to keep pace with world demand and enable the country to reach its full economic potential.

I should like to deal now for a few moments with the acute shortage of mortgage money which is causing a serious slowdown in the building of houses, particularly those for people with modest incomes. One of the main difficulties is that the federal government has not been able to keep insurance and trust companies interested in lending on a low interest, long term mortgage basis, particularly in the case of individual homes. This was partly due to the government increasing the interest rate. When the rate rose above 6 per cent the banks, of course, were eliminated from N.H.A. financing.

This condition has been aggravated by the steady increase in the amount of maximum loans under the act to $18,000 which, of course, absorbed the available supply of funds into fewer units and brought many purchasers who in reality did not need N.H.A. financing into the N.H.A. mortgage market. This maximum ceiling, in my opinion, also had a tendency to encourage builders and lenders away from modest housing into middle-class development because of the profit motive for the builder and the apparent ability to repay the security for the lenders.

Added to this, of course, was the tremendous impact of large, multiple family, high-rise apartment complexes amounting to about 90 per cent in cities. Because of the size, cost of land and the luxury built into these complexes, they soon outstripped single family dwelling starts by 10 per cent and upwards. Apart from draining off badly needed mortgage money, the effect was and is to encourage lenders to put all their eggs in one basket, lessening accounting, processing, inspection costs and so on.

But the sad part of this is that because of the tremendous demand for mortgage money for the foregoing reasons, the small town, village or rural area finds it impossible to obtain funds at all. This then leads to the potential home owner seeking, but by no means always securing, mortgage funds through the participating members of the Mortgage Insurance Company of Canada, the M.I.C.C. This is expensive, in fact is often prohibitive, and excludes village or rural financing. Rates are 7¾ per cent on amounts up to 87½ per cent of the M.I.C.C. valuation on a first and second mortgage, and when 2 per cent mortgage insurance plus application fee and legal fees are added this becomes difficult, if not impossible, for the local wage earner to consider.

As a result of the foregoing I recommend the following to the government:

First, that mortgages under the National Housing Act be redirected to the average home rather than the middle or executive type home, which is the case today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: Second, that insurance companies, which seek insurance business all across Canada, be required to invest mortgage funds in towns and rural areas as a duty.

Third, that interest rates be reduced to 6 per cent, thus allowing banks to participate under the act.

Fourth, that the government set aside each year sufficient funds to meet the estimated requirements for the year under the act, which would be a marked increase over the amount it is making available today, so that builders may plan for a full year's operation and not be restricted in their operations as they are at the present time.

Everyone in this house knows of the restrictions that have been placed upon builders trying to carry out their normal operations. I do not need to go into that in detail. We are all familiar with it in our own constituencies. It remains clear and obvious that the government should greatly increase the amount of money available for this purpose so that the normal building of homes for Canadians who desire to become home owners can go on as desired.

I believe that if the government will adopt these changes the achievement of our very worth-while objective of making Canada a country of home owners will be greatly accelerated. I think we all agree there is no finer move we as legislators can make than enabling as many families as possible to own their own homes, particularly those homes which families with modest incomes need and desire.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: Nothing builds up a family better than keeping its members together in their own home. Children who are brought up in such homes grow up far better citizens than those whose family interests are not concentrated in the home to such a great extent. I believe we would all agree that anything we can do to make this worth-while objective a reality is something we should lend our efforts to in every way we can.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge the government to withdraw the tight money policy which it has imposed on the country, and thereby enable our businessmen, our farmers, our builders and our other producers to carry out their normal plans for expanding their production. If it refuses to do so it will follow the pattern it set in the latter half of 1956 and the early months of 1957 and a business downturn will definitely follow just as it did at that time.

If the government does take this advice and makes it possible for our producers to obtain the credit they need to expand production and thereby lower costs and become more competitive, the prosperity which was made possible by the constructive policies of the Conservative government at the beginning of this decade will continue for the benefit of all Canadians.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert):

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"The policies of the government in imposing tight money and denying builders and prospective home-owners needed mortgage funds, constitute a negative approach to the problems facing our economy and are seriously impeding the development of the nation."

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I must say it was a little difficult, as the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) was speaking, to know on exactly what spot he was going to land. His speech was extremely general. His amendment, of course, is quite specific.

I have an idea that the proposals that are made to deal with the ills in our society tend to be somewhat simplistic and perhaps they are largely matters of semantics. Ever since I came to the House of Commons I have heard opposition members—and this applies to both major parties—attacking governments of the day for tight money policies, and I have always had great difficulty in getting this defined for me.

I look at the reports of the Bank of Canada and of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and I see that the total money supply continues to rise. It may rise at varying rates but it is a fairly steady rise. I see interest rates go up but it appears sometimes that they do not have very much effect on total money supply. I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that our troubles are more deepseated. We have had, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has been telling us—in fact, he told us this with great fervour during his budget speech—the longest uninterrupted period of economic expansion in our history.

At the same time, however, we must face the fact that in spite of that and because of that—and this is very serious—we still have very large pockets of poverty in our country; we still have a stubborn level of unemployment.

An hon. Member: A stubborn government.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Yes, and a stubborn government which we are not able to do much with. I remember that when the Conservative government was in office there was the same stubborn note of unemployment with which that government was unable to deal. When we are committed to this method of organization our society really is not able to deal with the problem of unemployment. When these parties tell us the whole trouble is tight money, then I suspect they are merely trying to beg the question. I have long suspected that their preoccupation with economic expansion and economic growth is to some extent at least an escape mechanism to avoid the problem of maximum distribution in our society. Neither Liberal nor Conservative governments has been very successful in dealing with that.

I notice that the Conservative party apparently is now prepared to depart so far from its traditional point in support of free enterprise as to insist that insurance companies shall be required to invest their funds where the government of the day decides they are needed. I am all in favour of that, of course, but I would go further and abolish the insurance companies. In this day and age I think it is a piece of nonsense that we allow private racketeers to enter into the business of collecting the savings of the Canadian people and investing them where they will. At every session including the present, we have a whole string of applications from those who want to get in on this nice little gold mine.

I wonder how long sensible people will permit this. I wonder whether the time has not come when we have to evolve a different method of pooling the savings of the Canadian people and investing them in the development of our country. I am hoping that before this session is over the present Minister of Finance will present to us the legislation to deal with the Canada Development Corporation which his predecessor brought before us during his term of office.

I would hope that the Canada Development Corporation as now envisaged by the present government perhaps will be an improvement on the suggestions made to us during the tenure of office of the last minister. At that time it appeared to me it was to be largely a private investment pool a mutual investment pool, if you like, in which again those who have would get a little richer, leaving those who have not in the same position. I would hope the Canada Development Corporation would be devoted to pooling the savings of the Canadian people as much as possible and investing them under public auspices in various sectors of our economy. Only in this way, I think, are we going to assure that we get the sort of thing the hon. member for Northumberland was speaking about, such as an adequate housing program and other things which he did not mention such as an adequate school system in Canada including an adequate university system throughout the country, and an adequate medicare program. Only by having at our disposal a very large part of the savings of the Canadian people can we achieve these things. Only in this way will we be able to deal with the rural conditions mentioned by the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauve) the other day.

The rural rehabilitation program will involve very large public expenditures. I am hoping those public expenditures will take the form of public investment to create a viable economic area for the people now living in the depressed rural areas of the country. My hon. friend from Northumberland suggests that the principle sin of this government—I do not know how he selects one sin over another—is that it has denied builders and prospective home owners the needed mortgage funds. I suppose when one stretches this a bit one can say it is the responsibility of the government, but I think the responsibility goes further than that.

I am very much disturbed to see in my own province of British Columbia that the investment in our major extraction industry is taking place without any regard whatever for a balanced economy and without any regard whatever for the development of the social capital which should accompany such investments. I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that one of our problems with regard to funds for housing stems from the fact that neither this government nor its Conservative predecessor nor the Liberal predecessor of that Conservative government has seen fit to take the necessary action to divert to the public treasury a very much larger proportion of the funds which now go into the treasuries of these enormous private corporations engaged in particular, as I was saying, in the extraction industries in western Canada and in parts of central and eastern Canada too.

This, of course, is the point at which we in this party part company with our friends in the Liberal and Conservative parties. We do not feel that the economy of this country should be operated primarily for the benefit of a number of fortunate people who own and control the productive enterprises of this nation. We feel very strongly that they should be servants of the Canadian people and that the people of Canada should have some say with regard to where the returns from our productive enterprises are to be channelled. They should not be channelled merely, as my hon. friend from Northumberland suggested, where the savings of the individual Canadian insurance policyholder are going to be channelled but rather where the real wealth is.

Our enormous internally generated savings are now in the hands of large corporations, and when they are in the hands of foreign corporations they are largely responsible for creating the condition that our present Minister of Finance and his predecessor both have deplored, the expanding foreign ownership of Canadian industry. To my mind this is the point at which there has to be a diversion from private to public hands if we are to deal with the problem of adequate housing and these other problems in various areas of the country.

To my mind it is fantastic that we should have existing at the same time in Canada a shortage of skilled workers and some—I do not have the exact figure—300,000-odd unemployed. Obviously no real attempt has been made to grapple with the problem of supplying our economic machine with skilled hands and at the same time coping with the problem of unemployment. I agree with the hon. member for Northumberland that there is, at least in some parts of the country, an acute shortage of money for housing projects, and I certainly agree with him that a great deal of those funds should be funnelled into middle and low income housing. I am not quite sure that he is on sound ground in his idea that we should encourage individual home ownership. I like the idea myself; I own my own home and I would not want to do anything else. I wonder, however, in this day and age and with the growth of the large metropolis, whether this is going to be feasible much longer and whether the people of Canada might be well advised to take a page from the book of the people of Europe and the practice which has been followed there for many decades whereby people live and expect to live during their whole lives in apartments. There is no reason that our apartments should not have all the amenities required for a family. We have perhaps fallen behind on that score in Canada.

• (4:10 p.m.)

All too many apartment owners put up signs, "no children wanted". I see no reason, however, why dwelling units cannot be designed to cater to the needs of young families through adequate playgrounds, recreational areas and facilities within and without the buildings. Certainly they must be built on the understanding that they are to meet a need rather than to provide profit for speculators, building and real estate owners.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I feel that one could hardly fail to support the amendment of the official opposition though I should have liked it better had it been couched in somewhat broader terms as a criticism not so much of the government's policy regarding housing or mortgage money or the alleged tight money policy, because I am rather doubtful that such strictures could actually be sustained, but rather as a criticism of the government's policy which allows certain groups in our society to control where the bulk of our wealth goes. We may very well have to make a drastic revision in our outlook as to the purpose of our society, but I feel that nothing less than what I have suggested will really solve these problems.

The government has a prefectly good answer for its alleged tight money policy, and it relates to the balance of payments situation. The balance of payments position is always referred to as a reason for coping with inflationary pressures within our own society. However, there are many economists, and perhaps even the bulk of at least Canadian economists, who feel we are tying our hands by maintaining a fixed exchange rate and that if we were prepared to go back to a floating exchange rate our balance of payments problem would solve itself and the question of tight or loose money, if that is the opposite term, would disappear. I am not an economist but I have discussed this matter with many and have found that there is a fairly unanimous opinion among Canadian economists that this might be the solution to our problems of alleged tight money, balance of payments and the necessity of having to put the brakes on our expanding economy to protect our own unit of currency.

Those are the points which I think this amendment should have included rather than the narrow point, important though it is, that money should be made available for adequate housing. I am not sure it is at all possible to ensure that money will be available for housing without taking much more drastic steps than the official opposition apparently is prepared to advocate or the government is prepared to undertake.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question before he resumes his seat. I am in sympathy with this suggestion that some funds should be diverted to low rental public housing, but when he proposed that certain measures be taken in respect of certain extractive companies, was he proposing a fairly widespread program of nationalization in this country? I should like to understand his position in this regard.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am very pleased to answer that question. As the hon. member for Rosedale is well aware, our constitution would place any suggestion such as he has made in respect of these extractive industries within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures which have control over property and civil rights.

For the benefit of the hon. member, let me say that I have advocated very strongly in my party and in my own province that the provincial authorities should take precisely that step. What I was proposing here is something that the federal government could undertake, that is, to take a much larger slice from the net returns of these operations than we are now taking and to take a much closer look at depreciation and depletion allowances and the various other ways by which the net returns of these industries are funnelled into private hands. I would not want for a moment to overlook the opportunity of telling the hon. member that I quite agree with his suggestion that these large extractive industries perhaps should come under public ownership within the provinces.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that I was not making that suggestion but merely directing a question to the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) who has moved, today, an amendment which affords us the opportunity to discuss one of the most important problems in Canada at the present time, that is an economic problem, in short, a problem involving the economy of the country: the restrictions on credit, home construction, etc.

Mr. Speaker, there is much to say about credit, because with credit a country can develop but, without credit, not only does it not develop, but it falls back and goes into a slump.

As an illustration, I should like to mention the period, say, from 1933 to 1937 when credit restrictions brought about unfortunate results in every area.

It will be recalled, for instance, that due to credit restrictions in force at the time, the construction of the St. Lawrence development, more particularly at Beauharnois, for the production of electric power, was halted for lack of credit.

It will also be recalled that, at the time, pulp and paper companies had to lay off several workers and close their plants for lack of credit.

In the Saguenay-Lake St. John district, the Price Brothers Company, or at least members of the Price family had to let their shares go because the banks had cut their credit. Such pulp and paper companies were forced to sell and the bank directors succeeded in grabbing them because the banks were in control of credit and private companies were deprived of credit and could thus be bought for peanuts.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The same thing happened in the field of electricity, paper and even coal. As a matter of fact, it must be remembered that in 1934, when those credit restrictions were imposed, Senator Webster succeeded in taking over the coal trust in Canada.

In the field of electricity, the Holts and Gordons succeeded by restricting credit to private companies in getting control over the latter; as bank directors they had unlimited credit and succeeded in getting control over most of the big companies which existed then.

Today, in 1966, there is a lot of talk about credit restrictions, inside as well as outside the house.

Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to make a distinction between credit for public purposes and credit for particular or private purposes.

Credit for public purposes is credit issued to help public works or public administration. It is put at the disposal of the federal or provincial governments, municipalities or school boards. Such credit is for public purposes. It can be used to make good the deficits of public administrations. Then, it is still credit issued for public purposes. It can be issued for works by various governments. For instance, in the case of the federal government, it can be used for the dredging of a river or a waterway. A provincial government can use it for the building of bridges and roads. It can also be used for the construction of post offices; then such credit is issued for public purposes.

In the case of a municipality, it can be issued for the building of sewer systems, streets, water systems. Again, such credit is issued for public purposes.

In the case of school boards, it can be spent to build schools; again, such credit is issued for public purposes.

If, as I was saying a little earlier, the federal government, a provincial government, a municipality or a school board shows a deficit at the end of the year and must borrow to make it good, there will be credit issued for a public purpose. That is what is called credit for public purposes.

We will see later the situation with regard to credit issued for private or particular purposes. At the outset, I would like to talk about credit issued for public purposes. First, and it is the first principle which I would like to mention today, it is that all credit issued for public purposes should be free of debt and interest-free, because it is meant to serve the public interest, the general interest.

It must not be issued in the form of debt but debt-free. Why? Because of the source of the credit so issued. If it is a public source, lending to public bodies, then no interest should be charged because its purpose is not profit but the interest and the welfare of the country. Therefore, there is no reason why loans from this source should bear interest or entail a debt.

However, if this public credit comes from private sources, public interests or private companies, then this does not make sense because it is not incumbent on private enterprise to finance public enterprise. It does not behove individuals to finance the government; it is not incumbent on private companies to finance a public concern such as the federal government, a provincial government, a municipality or a school board.

This is why credit must originate from a public source, that is a government body, and that government body now exists: it is the Bank of Canada. Today this government body, this public body, in short, this public source of credit exists not to make gains but to help other public bodies in Canada. That is why the Bank of Canada should finance, without interest, all public credit issued for public purposes, for public undertakings. Then, such credit originating from a public source, the Bank of Canada, being issued interest and debt free, must be used for public purposes only; such credit must expand and develop according to the needs of the whole country.

Such credit must not be limited in any way but must be issued in adequate amounts and must expand adequately, to meet the needs of the whole country, of the federal government as well as of provincial governments, municipalities or school boards.

Well, Mr. Speaker, Canada's needs today in the public field are tremendous. Take highways, for instance. Our country is as large as the United States. There are people who live on the Atlantic coast and others who live on the Pacific coast. Between both coasts, there is more space in Canada than in the United States. The distance from one coast of Canada to the other is greater than in the United States. But, we have people living on both coasts and we need an adequate highway system between the two coasts of Canada. We need roads like other countries. Although our population is smaller, it lives in the four corners of the country and, by that very fact, it needs highway development. It goes to say that in that field, the need is very great. It has not yet been met, far from it.

To fulfil this need in the field of highways, funds must be extended and developed according to our needs. That requires public funds from a public organization, that is to say the Bank of Canada. I spoke about highways. That could apply to construction of post offices, shipping, veterans, the Departments of Labour, Industry, Trade and Commerce and so on. In the public sector, the needs are tremendous.

Mr. Speaker, I say that the government has a responsibility to see to it that public funds originating in the Bank of Canada are always available, in sufficient quantity, to meet all public needs Canada may have. When credit is restricted in the public sector, bad effects are felt.

• (4:30 p.m.)

For instance, the hon. Minister of Finance announced that this year some projects would not be carried out for lack of funds. That being the case, we must realize that the people of Canada will be affected, because some of their needs will go unanswered, the work will not be done. Those men will be unemployed, some fields such as construction will feel it, and thereby the country will suffer from credit restrictions.

With credit restrictions, we will head for the type of depression we knew from 1929 to 1939.

Public credit must correspond to the needs, the development of a country; it must be created free from debt and interest, and must serve for the benefit of the country.

Today, credit is restricted. Some projects have been stopped. In Quebec, some projects are needed. In the field of highways, bridges, hospitals, schools, universities, projects will not be carried out because public funds are not available.

When, for example, in Quebec, sick people have to wait for two or three weeks, even six weeks, before they are admitted to the hospital, because there are not enough beds, we can conclude that the government is not fulfilling its duty. It should make available to the provincial governments the credit required for the construction of hospitals in Quebec and in the other provinces that need them.

Credit is not available, to meet all the needs; on the other hand, such credit as is available does not come from public sources, such as the Bank of Canada, but from private sources, from credit that burdens public bodies with debt.

Let us go on. We know Quebec is sinking into debt at an unimaginable rate. For six years now, the Quebec government has been borrowing, and borrowing to the extent where it can be foreseen that, within the next ten or twelve years, a major part of taxes and levies will be used to pay the interest on the debt, as is now the case with the federal government.

The federal government pays $1,200 million in interest on the national debt. In the province of Quebec, the government is piling up a debt that can never he repaid. It borrows every year and, through its deficits, it is piling up a debt on which interest will have to be paid. The young people of today will have to pay the interest on that debt. And all that, to make up for an administrative deficit.

I suggest that there should be in Canada a public organization which would provide the required funds for public development and adiminstration. Because such an organization is non-existent and because the government is failing in its duty, the provinces are running into debt at present.

Not only provincial governments are running into debt, but also municipalities which are compelled to issue bonds. Those municipalities are financed by private sources in the same manner as private individuals finance the federal government.

Let us consider the situation of municipalities. Some of them have to spend 25, 30 and 40 per cent of their budget simply to pay interest on their debt. A great number of Quebec municipalities must spend up to 40 per cent of their budget for the sole purpose of paying the interests on their debts. School boards are also in debt. The provincial government claims it provides the funds, but when a $100,000 grant is paid for the construction of a school and $10,000 are paid over a ten-year period, then the school board has to borrow $100,000, pay from 5 to 6 per cent interest, and the $10,000 yearly grant over a ten-year period is barely enough to pay the interest. There is something left to pay off a small part of the debt, but not too much.

In the field of education which comes under exclusive provincial jurisdiction, I admit, where costs are ever increasing nowadays, a public organization should be set up to finance the administration. What is being done at present? Taxes are increased. In the province of Quebec especially, taxes have increased at a quicker rate than in any other field. What has been increasing most in Quebec in the last six years, have been taxes, and especially school taxes. I am not against progress in the educational field, but I say there should be a public organization to finance public administration and development, at every level, eduational, municipal, federal or provincial.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe that with regard to public credit facilities, the federal government should implement three principles.

First, the Bank of Canada should be given the power and the privilege to become a public credit organization to finance public administration and development in Canada. Second, the funds issued by the Bank of Canada, a public organization should be debt free and not have to be financed out of interests or taxes.

I also claim, Mr. Speaker, that the Bank of Canada should issue all public funds required to enable the country to develop normally, to progress into modern times and to meet the needs of the population.

Now for private funds. By then, private funds would serve exclusively to develop private companies or to help individuals. Banks, insurance companies, finance companies such as we have today would no longer be required to invest their savings in the public area. Sufficient funds and credit would remain to leave them in a position to develop the private sector.

For instance, insurance companies would no longer be required to invest in Canada savings bonds because it would be the responsibility of the Bank of Canada. But insurance companies could lend for home building.

Mortgage loans will be available to Canadians the day the savings of the Canadian people are no longer used to finance the provinces or the country, the day when private savings are used to finance the needs of the citizens rather than the requirements of public bodies.

Let public credit sources be established such as the Bank of Canada and let all private savings and investments serve private development, trade, industry, and private housing.

Mr. Speaker, it is public knowledge that enormous and pressing needs exist for the development of private industry and especially in the area of mortgage loans for private housing.

Mr. Speaker, we only need to go into the large cities and even the small villages, Montreal, Jonquière, Chicoutimi, Trois-Rivières, to realize that there are families living in slums, in old, unsanitary houses where it is not proper, not logical nor decent and human to raise families in 1966. There is a widespread need for home construction, but for that purpose, credit should be made available to the individuals, for lending to individuals.

But today, everything is topsy-turvy. Private savings are financing governments and governments are forced to finance individual expenditures. Thrifty individuals, Canadian citizens are asked to invest their savings in Canadian bonds and then, the government is asked to set up special funds to make mortgage loans to individuals.

If we only had a government organization to finance public works, well, there would be enough savings in the private area to finance private expenditure in home, industrial, private construction, etc. But things are upside down. Individuals are asked to finance the government and the government is asked to finance the individual.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The governments issue savings bonds and give them to individuals so that they may finance the government. Then, as it holds all the savings, the government is forced to establish a public fund and put it in the hands of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which makes individual loans. This is a ridiculous system. Why not rather have a public organization financing public governments and let private institutions, such as insurance companies, investment companies, loan companies, banks, chartered banks and credit unions finance private development?

Having gathered the money from all private savings and investments, however, the government says at a given moment, like today: Only so much will be given over to private investment.

Thus the government restricts credit for private investments. But it forgets one thing: that all the present credits of the federal government come from the private sector. After looting all private savings and investments, the federal government, at a given moment, as in the last few months, decides to cut off private loans for housing.

It is time to deal with this situation, for there is a great need in the field of housing. In fact, the amendment now before us specifically mentions housing.

Not so long ago, it may be remembered, a committee was established in Montreal and even the priests on the island of Montreal protested against the unbearable situation of the inhabitants of eastern Montreal, where there are slums and dirty districts which should not exist in 1966.

I think the government should take action. First, as I said earlier, it should stop taking the money of the people for its administration or for public works. The government should leave the people their savings and investments and create its own source of public credit for its administrative expenses and public works.

There is no need to worry, Mr. Speaker; I can assure you that if the people are left their savings and investments, they will be able to provide the money for housing construction. No longer having to finance the government, the chartered banks will be able to finance housing.

The insurance companies, no longer having to finance the deficits of the federal and provincial governments, will be able to lend money for housing construction and development. The credit unions and mutual funds, no longer having to assist the federal and provincial governments, the municipalities and school boards, will then be able to help housing development and give the necessary mortgage loans.

Tight Money Policy

The housing situation is serious in Canadian cities. It is inconceivable that our government cannot handle the situation. A good part of our people need decent housing, but they do not have the necessary funds to build them, for the federal government took away all their money.

We have the building materials, the land is there to build houses, there is plenty of wood, nails, plaster, bricks, stone, paint, piping, electric wires. Everything is there. There are unemployed people who would be very pleased to work; there are masons, plumbers, carpenters, bricklayers, electricians who are unemployed and who would be very glad to work on housebuilding.

Because the necessary credit is lacking, people continue to live in slums, our unemployed do not get work and the country remains in a state of stagnation, simply because there is no credit. It is a greater scandal than anything seen in the last hundred years: with plenty of products, an overcapacity of production, our families still live in slums, because they lack credit, because money is controlled by a handful of international capitalists who tighten up money to better keep the people in misery and, in this way, to better control them.

The present federal government and all those that preceded it have always been the slaves and servants of this handful of capitalists who keep the people in poverty instead of serving their interests and helping them out of misery. We now live in a century of affluence, in a country bursting with wealth, that can give all Canadian citizens the required homes, food and clothing and everything they may desire.

But there is a lack of money because a handful of financiers control credit and impose tight money for their own benefit.

The government should stop being the slave and servant of big finance. Let it become the servant of the people who elected it. Let it pass legislation in the people's interest and then we will be able to achieve something great in Canada. Let our production, our natural resources serve the people. Let us use our building materials to give homes to those of our citizens who need them. Let us achieve what everyone is hoping for and let those Canadian citizens who need it benefit from natural resources and production. Let us give everyone the security they dream of and need.

Tight Money Policy

● (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, on the side of the independents, we are not hampered by this constant consideration of having to protect the political party which we represent, because we do not belong to any. Instead, we try to throw some light on the various matters considered here.

I therefore listened with great attention to the speeches made by the hon. members for Northumberland (Mr. Hees), Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). Quite objectively, I must say that even if the three of them do not share the same economic philosophy, they said a lot of things which are quite true. They raised several matters which worry public opinion.

As pointed out by the hon. member for Northumberland, there is no doubt that credit restriction paralyses the economy to a certain extent and worry the Canadian citizens considerably. There is no doubt also that some other measures which resulted from the last budget create some very serious difficulties which are finally translated in privations for the poor and increased unemployment. The restriction on money available for mortgages on low-priced housing will create an extremely hard situation in many areas.

Is a vote of censure against the government warranted on that score? Of course, I am still wondering. I am not ready yet to decide whether or not the government deserves to be blamed since, in fact, it has been in office, for a few months only. But the fact remains that the government must search its conscience on all that.

On the other hand, the hon. member for Winnipeg North advocates, that is his party advocates, of course, the mobilization of national resources to distribute them later judiciously among those who have priority needs in the country. There is something to be said for that.

As for the hon. member for Lapointe, he told us about the organization of credit. He has a theory which his colleagues and himself have been advocating for some time but which has been rejected by the government in no uncertain terms, possibly too much so. I am wondering if, instead of making fun of that theory put forward by our friends in the Social Credit, we should not make a serious, conscientious and objective study thereof. Even if we cannot go as far as they want, it might be possible to reach a happy medium to remedy those deficiencies and things which are unfortunate for everyone, in all the parties here and in all the classes of society.

This is obvious, Mr. Speaker, when we are told, for instance, that construction must be restricted for lack of money, and when we find too many people still live in slums, when full employment cannot be guaranteed and we must tell industries to slow down their expansion program, for a lack of money, when we deplore the fact that we lack technicians who could enable our economy to develop at the rate it could develop for lack of money, not only to build and equip institutions, but also to enable our young people to take those courses up to 18, 20, 22 and sometimes 24 years of age—and fathers of large families, who, like myself, have six or seven children completing their studies, know that this a problem. Although they profit by what we are agreed to call free education, they must nevertheless dress those adults, feed them, get them everything they need and specially when we consider, for instance, the case of citizens who need medical care and drugs and who cannot afford them, and to whom these cannot be given for a lack of money. The old age pension, which people are asking for cannot be given because it would require some $800 million. It cannot be given for lack of money.

In our advanced age, it is possible and probable, even unavoidable that we experience a cycle of good times and bad times. I say this quite objectively, without necessarily putting the blame on the government. I, too, believe that we have reached some kind of crossroads in the organization of our economy, and we will have to decide shortly whether the economy must be organized by the governments on the basis of the common weal or on the basis of a single privileged class.

I point out, Mr. Speaker, that we are perhaps afraid of novelty, of labels, and I must admit, that myself, up to fairly recently, I was afraid of certain words, such as socialization, socialism and even Social Credit. At a certain time, I was worried about this. I would not say readily that we should now decide overnight, all of a sudden, that the country should adopt a socialist or the Social Credit philosophy. Besides, there is some and even much contradiction between the two. But I wonder whether we should not take the time to ask ourselves if those words or labels do not correspond to quite plain truths which cannot be disregarded, to ills that we shall certainly not cure by hiding our head in the sand like an ostrich.

I think that the government is aware of this to some extent, because for the last few years, it has been fond of so-called social measures. But they are being implemented too fearfully and faintheartedly perhaps, because the government might be a little too afraid to upset our long-standing financial theories, to give rise to conflict with other countries with which we have financial relations.

I am seriously wondering whether the government would not be well advised to look into the theory advocated by our friends of the New Democratic Party, taking into account, of course, certain priorities. There should be no question, for instance, of nationalizing all Canadian industries, but rather of making possible perhaps a certain competition between state and private intervention and in fields where private enterprise is unable to meet the essential requirements of every member in all segments of the great Canadian family.

Mention was made a while ago of that type of insurance organization that drains money from the Canadian economy and then distributes it, not always equitably, and not always in the public interest.

I will give you an example. Restrictions have been put on the construction of small homes for the small wage-earner, because there is no money for him. In the meantime, in large Canadian cities, huge "people boxes" so-called "apartment blocks" are going up which are not half rented, sometimes not a third rented; they do not necessarily correspond to a need but, in some cases, help to evacuate buildings that are not always fit dwellings. Hundreds of millions of dollars are thus secured which could otherwise be channelled toward a priority need, dwellings for the small wage-earner with a family. The government could perhaps step into that sector of the nation's economy, take control of it, and certain other spheres, and straighten things out.

I revert to something I said a while ago. I am of those who shied away from some words for a while; I saw in them consequences of a local nature perhaps. I may have feared that nationalization in certain fields might lead to political influence which in some cases might have degenerated into persecution of political foes, into unwarranted pressures in fields where the government should not interfere. This led me to be very reticent about the idea of nationalization in certain fields. But, I must say, due to circumstances, Canadian public opinion has evolved in this respect. Moreover, such abuse as was known in the past, repetition of which might have been feared, can no longer occur in view of the general mentality.

I was impressed especially to see that one of the spokesmen of our Quebec clergy which, for a long time, had the reputation of being somewhat conservative—in the economic sense, not the political one—is today in the van of this theory, and accepts even readily that consideration be given to this trend toward socialization which will ensure a better distribution of the nation's resources to provide more efficiently for the essential needs of all our citizens.

Even if those ideas come from an opposition party, even though they are advocated with a certain tartness of speech and sometimes accompanied by votes of censure which are not very kind and not always justified, I believe the Liberal party, which is in office, should be a party which has an ideology like the N.D.P. whose members are Liberals in a hurry, and should quicken the step because the needs of the Canadian people are perhaps more pressing than ever and people are less prepared to be patient than they were in the past. In the face of this explosion in nearly all fields, the people call for these basic things to which they are entitled—lodging, food, medical care, education, their place in the sun—and reject this idea of a privileged class, which, because of an established and long-standing system, lives in luxury while others have to deprive themselves.

Therefore, I repeat that I do not know yet if I shall vote for the non-confidence motion. I should like to hear additional speakers put forward arguments for or against the motion, and I hope they will do so in the same constructive spirit shown by those who took part in the discussion up to now. However, I should like to suggest, as dispassionately as I can, that social legislation should be emphasized and stepped up—there are a few measures on the program—so as to provide all Canadians with basic medical care, necessary medicines, pensions for older people geared to the cost of living, funds necessary to young Canadians to acquire a proper education, in short what a family man needs to decently raise his family. Our government should be bold enough to consider measures it never envisaged before. The government should place less dependence on the advice of its financiers who believe in an economic gospel which, in my opinion, is outmoded, but pay more attention to those who realize today that the common good must prevail.

The Social Credit members are right sometimes when they say that anything which is physically possible should be made financially possible, especially when we see in our country millions of dollars idle or improperly distributed or distributed to the wrong people, in areas where people have already more than their essential needs, while in other areas, they have to do without the necessities of life.

• (5:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my full support for the amendment moved by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) and in particular as it pertains to the existing tight money policy. I was very pleased to listen to the hon. member who has an appreciation of the problems that exist in the Atlantic provinces and who, when he was a member of the former Conservative administration, always showed a keen awareness of Atlantic area problems and of the best methods to combat them.

During the years 1957 to 1963 the Atlantic provinces were the beneficiaries of a new federal government philosophy. The Conservative government was willing to experiment with new types of legislation which might well be the answer to the problems we have had since the formation of the nation in 1867. For instance, we saw the passage of the legislation providing for Atlantic provinces adjustment grants. We saw the passage of the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act and of the Atlantic Development Board Act. These and many more measures were examples of a new federal philosophy applied to the Atlantic provinces because of the unique circumstances in that area of Canada.

Prior to 1957 we in the Atlantic provinces experienced an approach by the federal government not dissimilar to the approach being taken today, and the present approach frightens me, Mr. Speaker, because I hate to think that the federal government is once again getting into the rut in which it appeared to be during the 22 years from 1935 to 1957. Those were terribly hard times for the people of the Atlantic provinces. There was a high unemployment rate and few opportunities. Indeed, they were such difficult times that they led the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon) to produce a book containing a recommendation that one-way tickets be provided to transport people from our area into more prosperous areas in the other six provinces.

In the election campaigns of 1957 and 1958 the people of the Atlantic provinces indicated in a very definitive way that this was not the kind of philosophy they desired from the federal government, and they assisted materially in disposing of the former government. In 1963 there was chaos in Ottawa, and I believe the people of the Atlantic provinces adopted the attitude that six or seven years in the wilderness might have taught the Liberal party a lesson and that it might adopt a different philosophy toward them. But in 1965 the people of the Atlantic provinces again indicated in no uncertain terms that they did not like the kind of attitude the Liberal government was adopting and once again gave their support to the Progressive Conservative party.

If ever there was an indication that the Liberal party is falling back into the old rut it was best exemplified by this year's budget. I should like to quote from an analysis of current economic conditions and trends published in April by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, which certainly could not be considered an arm of the Progressive Conservative party, the Liberal party nor any other party. It is an independent body which has the best interests of the Atlantic provinces at heart and endeavours to point out, quite effectively I think, ways and means improving the economy of the Atlantic provinces. I quote from its analysis:

> There are a number of indications that pressures on the Atlantic economy are nowhere near as great as in other areas of Canada.
> For example, the regional unemployment rate in the Atlantic provinces averaged 7.5 per cent in 1965. This was more than twice the rate of 3.6 per cent for the other six provinces, and even higher than the national rate of 7 per cent during the 1960-61 recession years when the national economy was operating at 91 per cent of capacity. Last year the ratio of national output to the economy's potential was 97 per cent.
> This situation must be looked at in a different light than that existing in Ontario and the prairie provinces where unemployment rates averaged only 2.6 per cent last year. Within this region the unemployment rate ranged from 5.4 per cent in Nova Scotia to 11.3 per cent in Newfoundland. Although regional unemployment has a large seasonal element it never really got below 4 per cent last year.
> While the employment picture has brightened considerably since the beginning of the current expansion in 1961—

I should like to draw hon. member's attention to that phrase, "the beginning of the current expansion in 1961"—not on April 8, 1963 as some hon. members on the other side would like us to believe.

—the improvement has not matched that in the rest of Canada.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Farther on the report states:

The number of claims filed for benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act declined 4 per cent in the Atlantic provinces, 17 per cent nationally, between December 1964 and December 1965.

There is no indication from that statement that there is any boom in the Atlantic area. With reference to the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) the report goes on to say:

It would appear that little real consideration was given in the federal Budget to regional economic differences.

This is the problem which we face in the Atlantic provinces and the problem which this government is unwilling to face up to. Tight money is strangling the economy of the Atlantic provinces. It strangled it in 1955-56. I well remember the present member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming), who was then premier of New Brunswick, talking about the damage the government of that day was doing to his province and to its economic prospects. He referred to it as the castor oil treatment. He said that the Atlantic provinces were being given the same dose of castor oil that the government considered the rest of Canada needed, just as a mother who had ten children would give all of them castor oil because one of them needed it. We are getting the same castor oil treatment today that we received then and it has the same result in slowing down our progress. This is the great danger, the frightening thing the government is doing at the present time.

I do not wish to leave the impression that we are not progressing in the Atlantic provinces today; we are. I do not wish to leave the impression that this government has done absolutely nothing to assist, because that is not correct. What I am saying is that it is not doing enough and is not adopting the right philosophy to continue us on the road to the prosperity we all are working so hard to achieve. Also, I am saying that our people have a right to expect the same kind of opportunities in our area of Canada that people in any other area of Canada have a right to expect. We do not ask for any more; nor do we expect to receive any less than anyone else in Canada expects to receive.

If the government continues to apply this tight money policy in a blanket way across the nation, great damage will be done to the economic prospects of our area of Canada. I think the report of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council points this out in very realistic terms when it says:

The local effect of possible reductions in business investment spending is also a question mark. Should national and international firms regard projects in this region as being marginal in relation to those undertaken in other parts of the nation, the region's future economic growth could suffer heavily.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the great industrial firms of this nation and the great international firms who are doing business in Canada have priorities and today they can secure only so much capital. They have to make a decision in respect of where they are going to spend that money. The great problem we face is that they are going to decide not to go forward now with their proper expansion in our area by reason of the difficulties in securing funds on a national level because of tight money.

The Economic Council of Canada, established by this government, has recognized the problems associated with the Atlantic area. They have said that the present government while slowing down the boom, could use its fiscal policy if it desired to do so to see that economic expansion continues in the Atlantic provinces where it is needed. The Atlantic Economic Council report put it in these terms:

Since fiscal policy, compared to monetary policy, is more capable of application on a regional basis, it seems unfortunate that the federal authorities did not give more attention to the potentialities of the Budget for attaining the economic and social objectives of the less prosperous areas of Canada at a time when the national economy is indeed booming.

It was a most unfortunate thing. There was no indication whatsoever by the Minister of Finance that he was going to treat the Atlantic provinces differently from the most prosperous area of Ontario or British Columbia or Alberta. We are all in the same package. The one policy applies, whether or not it should apply. This is the old Liberal philosophy, the philosophy which the present Minister of Finance no doubt had a good deal to do with developing and maintaining when he was the deputy minister of trade and commerce prior to 1957.

Tight Money Policy

The sad part of the situation, Mr. Speaker, is that things in the Atlantic provinces today are different from what they were in 1957. There is a good deal more hope in the minds of the people today and a good deal more aggressiveness is being shown by them in what they are endeavouring to do. I hold in my hand the Nova Scotia Newsletter issued in December, 1965, by the Department of Trade and Industry. The headline is "Boom Year 1965". At one point it says that there has been a 26.6 per cent increase in capital investment in Nova Scotia.

> New capital investment reached $337,000,000, an increase of 26.6 per cent over 1964.
> Manufacturing shipments showed a 6.5 per cent increase for a total value of $535,000,000.
> Employment increased and the average weekly wage and/or salary rose to $73.76, an increase of 4.3 per cent.

In other words, we see that we are moving ahead in Nova Scotia, but we also recognize the fact that we are not moving ahead as fast as the more prosperous areas of Canada. Indeed, we must move ahead even faster in order to make up for the years when we fell behind so badly.

It is a crying shame that when the budget speech was delivered the only thing we could look to was a postponement of the New Brunswick-Prince Edward Island causeway. There was nothing of a positive nature to recognize our special problems. There was only a negative step which certainly will damage or economic prospects this summer.

The government and the Minister of Finance found it very difficult to convince the people of the Atlantic provinces that there was anything in the budget which would be of assistance to them. Soon after the budget was delivered a headline appeared in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of March 31, 1966, reading "N.S. Could Gain $27 million In Equalization Payments", with the subheading "Formula Under Study". This is a copyright story written by Eric Dennis and it refers to government sources in the Department of Finance without naming any specific individual.

The story outlines what might be made available to Nova Scotia in 1967 but makes no reference to anything contained in the Budget for the people of Nova Scotia in 1966. I hope that we may look forward to obtaining something in 1966 but apparently the people can only benefit if they ride along a little longer with the Liberal party. We are sick of pie in the sky promises and hopeful proposals that far too often never materialize. We are looking for concrete proposals which can be implemented immediately to assist us in our efforts to progress, but these proposals are not forthcoming.

[Mr. Coates.]

Having regard to the Liberal philosophy in relation to manpower mobility, so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned this means, as suggested by the hon. member for Davenport, a one-way ticket out of the area. These tickets can either be purchased on a time payment plan or perhaps obtained free in some manner from the government. One thing that is certain is that the people who live in the Atlantic provinces live there because they want to. They recognize that in order to live there they must be satisfied with lower wages and a lower standard of living, and to do so they are willing to make those sacrifices. Any program designed to provide the so-called one-way ticket out of the area is one that will not be adopted quickly by the people there as long as there is any hope for survival. I suggest there is still that hope.

I placed a question on the order paper in an effort to obtain some information about the success of the manpower mobility program. All I have been able to discover is that the government spends more money advertising the program than it does by the way of grants and loans. Surely that is an indication of the success of this program. The greatest interest in the manpower mobility program has been taken in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec where the people, like those of the Atlantic provinces, have a close feeling and affinity for their birthplaces. These people want to remain but they want to do so with the opportunity to make a living. The provincial governments in the Atlantic provinces are willing to do everything possible to provide employment opportunities in these provinces but in order to do so they must have the understanding and co-operation of the federal government. They are not obtaining that understanding or co-operation.

In 1955-56, when the last tight money policy was implemented, we encountered a recession. This was a direct result of the government tinkering with the fiscal and monetary policy of the nation. Let us hope that the boom we are enjoying today will not change to a recession. We in the Atlantic provinces are the last to feel the effects of prosperity but the first to suffer the results of a recession.

Many difficult problems must be faced by the governments in our provinces. The United States government is closing down an air base in Newfoundland. An iron mine is also to be closed in that area. These are difficult problems with difficult results which must be faced by that province. Such problems demand the greatest attention on the part of provincial governments and can only be solved through close co-operation on the part of the federal government.

In the province of Nova Scotia the government is continually faced with a problem relating to coal. At the present time there is a difficulty associated with the steel complex in Nova Scotia. The loss of this industry would do irreparable damage to the economy of that province. These problems cannot be tackled by the provincial or federal governments alone but demand the kind of co-operation that has not existed to any degree in recent years.

The same sort of difficulty exists in the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Stability in the agricultural industry there can only be maintained if certain legislation is brought forward and passed by this house. The government has been slow and hesitant to move forward in this direction. We are not receiving the kind of attention we need in order to progress to that degree we feel we have a right to expect. The tight money policy being applied by this government on a national basis is doing tremondous damage every day it exists in its present form.

This government does not recognize the special problems existing in the Atlantic provinces and until it does much of the progress made by provincial governments through progressive legislation will be undone. I can only say that we must hope for a change in philosophy or we cannot be certain of the outcome for our people. I hope the Minister of Finance will reconsider his tight money policy as it applies to the Atlantic provinces. I hope he will take the advice of the Economic Council of Canada. I hope he will take the advice of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. However, I am indeed fearful that he will not take advice from anybody but will continue the philosophy he adopted when he was a bureaucrat in the last Liberal administration and which he now perpetuates as Minister of Finance.

Tight Money Policy

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to participate in the debate on the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) which I submit is a very general motion dealing with the tight money policy as it concerns housing and urban development in this country. I have been one who has been most interested in this field for quite a number of years both before and since coming to this house. I suggest to hon. members that we all know that priorities have their place in the field of housing and urban development. I submit, as a result of condensing a great deal of experience into the short period of six or seven years, that the housing dollar has to be spread where it is most needed.

As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) stated in his budget address, during these times of tightening up a little on the finances of the country it is natural that one of the fields to be affected is the field of housing generally. It has been the private mortgage field that has been affected most because the private lender has been withdrawing from the field in order to put pressure on the government to bring about an increase in the interest rate on N.H.A. mortgages. The minister in charge of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation knows that I have been opposed to any increase in interest rates on N.H.A. mortgages. In fact, I was opposed to the increase from 6¼ per cent to 6¾ per cent. I suggest that we cannot forget we are experiencing today a dry run so far as mortgage loans from private lenders are concerned because they want to pressure the government into increasing the rate of interest. This cannot be denied, and I feel these people will not deny it.

However, I should like to review briefly the amendments introduced in June, 1964, to the National Housing Act. I doubt that anyone can challenge the fact that in no field has this government shouldered its responsibilities in a more determined fashion than it has in the field of housing. Since these amendments were passed the average Canadian family has been able to build or rent accommodation suited to the needs of that family and their finances. The sweeping changes that were made to the housing legislation also spelled out new hope for those who need to find decent housing for their families, and here I am speaking particularly of the low income groups and the elderly citizens of this country.

Tight Money Policy

During the past three years we have been experiencing a boom in apartment building and house building generally. I suggest the major reason for this dramatic improvement over the past three years has been the completely new and fresh approach taken by the government toward some of the most vexing housing problems that have faced our country. In June, 1964, this house passed a major piece of legislation updating the National Housing Act to meet the modern needs and conditions of our cities. A variety of measures were introduced aimed at placing adequate housing within the reach of all Canadians. These amendments took the form of additional assistance for housing and urban renewal in Canada.

I might summarize the amendments in the field of assistance for housing and urban renewal in Canada in this way: Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was authorized to join the provinces and municipalities in redeveloping and rehabilitating urban renewal areas in accordance with official plans. Before these amendments were introduced federal assistance was largely restricted to those areas with a housing content before or after clearance only. This restriction was removed. Federal assistance was then made available to provinces and municipalities that prepared urban renewal schemes which entailed all the necessary economic, social and technical research and planning required for the renewal area whether it was industrial, commercial or housing before or after. The federal government paid half the cost of preparing such schemes and half the cost of implementing them. The implementation of the scheme consisted of the acquisition of land, clearance of land where necessary and also, for the first time, the provision of municipal services and works other than buildings. Then, Mr. Speaker, grants were also made available to the provinces or to the municipalities covering 66⅔ per cent of the provincial or municipal share of the cost of implementing such urban renewal schemes.

I touch on these facts very briefly because of my experience as an alderman in the city of Hamilton and as a member of parliament. Hamilton has pioneered in the field of urban renewal. I suggest that city could not have done a great deal of the work which it is now undertaking without these amendments. I go further than suggesting; I say emphatically that they could not have done this work. It is the cores of the cities across our country that require redevelopment today, and this work was not possible before the amendments of 1964. It is for this reason I have reviewed this legislation in the light of the amendment put forward today.

There is no drying up of government funds for urban renewal projects across the country. Provinces and municipalities need only make application and come up with a proper plan. Today the government still has a great deal of the funds provided by the house in the amendments of 1965, at which time $300 million was allotted for this work. Some of this money is still available for this type of work. Let us not be fooled by a general amendment to the effect that today urban renewal in our cities cannot continue or cannot commence because of the tight money policy. This is not a fact. These moneys have been approved by parliament and they are still there. There has been no indication from the government that this fund, allocated for this purpose, has dried up. I know personally, as a matter of fact, that it has not.

The amendments of 1964 also provided for assistance for public housing. At that time the legislation governing federal-provincial public housing was amended to permit the construction of hostel or dormitory accommodation, including the purchase of existing housing, for rental to low income individuals. This was new and very important legislation. Again, I refer to the city of Hamilton's north end redevelopment project where the municipal and provincial governments have acquired a number of properties, rehabilitated them and rented them to families with low incomes. This was not possible before the 1964 amendments but I suggest it is possible today. There has been no drying up of funds for this kind of purchase of existing homes for public housing purposes to rehabilitate low income families in this country.

Further, as an alternative way of producing public housing C.M.H.C. was authorized by the legislation to make 90 per cent loans to provinces, to municipalities or to an agency of the provinces or municipalities, for the provision of public housing accommodation, either existing or new, for low-income individuals or families, and to make contributions, it must be noted, Mr. Speaker, of up to 50 per cent of operating losses on such accommodation. These funds are still available; there has been no drying up of government funds for low-income housing purposes.

For example, in the province of Ontario the Ontario Housing Corporation held the groundbreaking ceremonies for a senior citizens home in the city of Hamilton last week. This home is to provide housing for the elderly citizens of the city of Hamilton as well as citizens across the country. The federal government made a 90 per cent loan at low interest rates. These moneys have not dried up, so let us not be fooled into thinking that any tight money policy to control the economy is affecting funds which are made available to help our elderly citizens and low income families. That is not the case.

There is also in the 1964 amendments provision for a program of land acquisition and servicing for public housing purposes in advance of the development of the projects themselves. This new legislation provided loans, again from the federal government, of up to 90 per cent for this purpose. That is why I say that nowhere has this government shouldered its social responsibilities with more determination than in the field of housing, particularly public housing which is geared to low income families and our elderly citizens.

Again, in the legislative amendments of 1964, Mr. Speaker, assistance was made available for non-profit corporation housing. What did this mean? Organizations like the Lions Club, the Kiwanis, to which I belong and which has constructed an elderly citizens home under this legislation in the city of Hamilton, were able in servicing their communities, if they wished to, to construct low-income housing or apartments for elderly citizens with substantial loans from the federal government through C.M.H.C.

To do this a new section was added to provide for 90 per cent loans to non-profit companies, such as service organizations, for housing projects, either used or new, for low-income persons or families who are not eligible for public housing but are still unable to find suitable accommodation at rents which they can afford to pay. Therefore C.M.H.C. was able to make loans to such companies to finance projects comprising not only self-contained student units but hostels, dormitories or any other combination of accommodation. Again, Mr. Speaker, funds are still available to these non-profit organizations for building this type of accommodation. There has been no drying up of these funds.

What about the case of loans to owners of existing houses in urban renewal areas? For the first time, under the amendments to the urban renewal legislation provision was made for C.M.H.C. to grant mortgages to owners of existing houses in urban renewal areas. I for one wish to see this legislation extended, I hope very shortly, to all existing houses. These loans are available to owners who apply and there has been no drying up of these funds. The funds are still available. You need only go to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation if you wish to apply for such a loan and C.M.H.C. will take your application.

One of the most important facets of the National Housing Act has to do with university housing for single students and for married students with families. This sort of construction is occurring more and more on the campuses of the country. Again I speak of my own experience with McMaster University in the city of Hamilton where residences are being built for single and married students.

How was this vast growth possible? Under the amendments of 1964 C.M.H.C. may grant loans to universities, colleges, co-operative associations and charitable corporations to assist in the construction or acquisition and conversion of accommodation for university students and their families. This accommodation may include the provision of self-contained units as well as hostels and dormitories. For this purpose the maximum amount authorized to be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund was increased to $150 million from $100 million. Provision was also made in this legislation to increase the maximum charge on the consolidated revenue fund for direct lending by C.M.H.C. to $2.5 billion from $2 billion.

What else did this legislation do, Mr. Speaker? It increased loan ratios for N.H.A. insured loans, making it possible for more families to purchase homes with a lower down payment.

I touch on these points briefly to bring to the attention of members of the house and the Canadian public that when a general motion such as this is moved in this house—in fact, I think the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) spoke for only six or seven minutes—which alleges there is a tight money policy in effect, and then arguments are made which leave the impression that there is in existence a tight money policy, the people must be made aware of all facets of the economy of the country. It is incumbent upon the provinces, the municipalities and the people to take advantage of the amendments passed in 1964 relating to public housing and urban development programs, and it is important that they are made aware of the fact that the funds provided under these amendments have not dried up but are still available.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, this house in 1965 approved an amendment which increased the funds provided by the legislation in 1964 by an amount of $300 million in order to carry out the purpose and intent of those amendments. So again I reiterate that there is no shortage of money for urban renewal; there is no shortage of money for public housing; there is no shortage of money for university housing accommodation; and there is no shortage of money to house the elderly citizens of this country. All one need do is to apply for assistance, and the co-operation which I know has been extended by C.M.H.C. to the provincial governments and the municipalities will be similarly extended to all applicants.

There is also no shortage of money for federal-provincial projects with respect to rental housing related to income, the so-called geared to-income housing. The federal government has such funds available and there is no drying up of funds for this purpose.

If I go on at length, Mr. Speaker, about housing and urban development legislation passed in 1964 it is because I want to dispel any suggestions which may have been put forward by hon. members opposite to the effect that there is a general drying up of funds to assist a very important sector of our economy, namely funds for housing for our low-income groups—the geared-to-income housing for low-income families and the elderly citizens of the country.

I for one have been greatly interested in the question of urban renewal, and I feel that our provinces and cities have to move to institute a crash program across the country. I have just returned from a 10-day tour across the country as a member of the transportation committee of this house, which has been holding hearings relating to the C.P.R. passenger service. While in the western cities we made ourselves aware of certain problems presently existing.

I, with my interest in housing and urban development, have noted that in cities such as Vancouver and Calgary, and even in smaller cities such as Brandon, Moose Jaw, Medicine Hat and Winnipeg, urban renewal schemes have been undertaken or are in progress. It would be sad if the impression were left from anything said in this house that funds available for such projects had in fact been dried up by the federal government. That is not the case. I suggest that if a province or a municipality falls down with respect to urban renewal or public housing, for which there is a great need approaching emergency proportions, then it is the fault of such province or municipality. It is a local problem.

I have said in the house before and I now reiterate that the federal government should set up a department of housing and urban affairs to help, together with the provinces and the municipalites, in the solution of the urban problem. I do not ask the government to encroach on other jurisdictions. We must take a broad outlook at the real problem concerning housing and urban renewal. I am sure that if the provinces and municipalities can co-operate under the present legislation there is no reason why they could not co-operate with the present government if a department of housing and urban affairs were set up. We need co-ordination in that respect.

Although housing and urban renewal are the particular prerogatives of the provinces and municipalities, I must nevertheless commend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), who is responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and for the administration of the National Housing Act, for his action in going across the country when these amendments were passed in 1964 and holding in conjunction with the provinces what were termed "symposiums". These were held not only with the provinces and municipalities but with public service organizations, service clubs and other people across this country and had to do with the legislation which had been passed in 1947. In effect he said to all those attending: Do it and we will help you; the funds are there, so kindly make an application; should you fall down on this job, then you have only yourselves to blame.

I say again that my main purpose in rising to take part in this debate is to dispel the impression left by the generalized amendment now before us with respect to the work which has been done in the fields of urban renewal and public housing, particularly as they affect low income groups and elderly citizens. I want to dispel the impression left by some members opposite who wish to portray across this country that the government has dried up the source of funds to do this important work. That is not the case.

It ill behooves any of us in this house to try to create this impression throughout the country. Public housing is an important field. A lot of work has been done in this field. When I heard the hon. member speak of the tight money policy, and here I am relating my remarks to housing and urban renewal, I at once thought of the niggardly increase from $25 million to $50 million made by the former government in the years from 1957 to 1963 with respect to urban renewal and public housing.

I think hon. members opposite should be the last to talk about a tight money policy as it affects housing and urban development across this country. During the period from 1957 to 1963 the only amendment to the National Housing Act for urban renewal purposes was an increase in the statutory limitation from $25 million to $50 million. If that was not tight money or a retrograde step in urban renewal in this country, I do not know what was.

The bill before the house in 1965 sought to amend the National Housing Act further to increase to $300 million the funds available for purposes of urban renewal and for the purposes of public housing that accompany urban renewal. Passage of the bill by the house assured that Canadian urban renewal projects would boom, as they have done. This program involving housing for our low-income groups—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Macaluso: —was introduced to make sure that there would be no restriction through lack of funds in carrying out those worth-while objectives.

I feel very strongly about urban development in this country. In my view we have fallen behind a great deal. I do not say that the government should take all the credit for the improvements brought about by the 1964 amendments but I do feel that credit ought to go where it is deserved. I believe that credit should be given to the government for bringing in a crash program, for bringing forward the amendments of 1964 and for providing the funds to implement the amendments.

More has to be done in the fields of public housing and urban renewal. More can be done. The provinces, the municipalities and the federal government have been working together and must continue to work together closely.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, may I again say that my purpose in rising to speak on this particular question is to refute the impression being sought to be conveyed that a tight money policy affects housing and urban renewal development in this country. The money is there. All the provinces and the municipalities have to do is ask for it.

Mr. Hales: May I call it six o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTION TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before an hon. member calls it six o'clock, I should bring to the attention of the house that the following subject is to be considered this evening pursuant to provisional standing order 39A: The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), Power—Columbia River—reported increase in anticipated cost.

Pursuant to special order made earlier this day I do now leave the chair, it being six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

FINANCE—TIGHT MONEY POLICY—NEGATIVE APPROACH TO PROBLEMS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Hees.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks on the supply motion now before the house, and particularly the amendment moved which embodies the very important economic matter of loans for house building in Canada. Before I proceed further I should like to draw to the attention of my hon. friend from Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) to the fact that he seemed to stray from the amendment, and in order to put the record straight I think it would be as well to read the amendment that is before us. It is as follows:

> The policies of the government in imposing tight money and denying builders and prospective homeowners needed mortgage funds, constitute a negative approach to the problems facing our economy and are seriously impeding the development of the nation.

There is nothing in this motion that deals with loans for the building of residences for universities.

Mr. Macaluso: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would draw to the attention of my hon. friend that if I had strayed from the subject matter of the motion the Chair would have drawn this to my attention.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is not a point of order at all.

Mr. Hales: I doubt whether that is a point of order. However, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the hon. member discussed at great length the amount of money available for the building of residences on university campuses. We do not argue this point. We are talking about direct mortgage loans available to individuals. As a matter of fact, amendments to the National Housing Act permitting universities to build residences were introduced by the Conservative government in, I think, 1961. This legislation provided for an interest rate of 5 per cent, over a period of 50 years, and I am happy to say that practically every university in Canada has made good use of this program.

When talking about money being lent in order to build university residences, and the tight money policy of this government, I should like to point out that if the government were to examine some of the residences being built on university campuses, I am sure they would realize that these residences could be built for less money, be less luxurious, and then more money would be available for the building of homes.

Direct mortgage loans being reduced by 15 per cent is, when compared with the figures of 1965, a very, very serious situation in this country. If my hon. friend from Hamilton West does not realize just how serious this matter is, I would suggest that he sit down with the builders in his community, as I did a few Saturdays ago, and he would realize the problems they face. The builders certainly brought to my attention how serious the problem is. The men in the home building industry are very, very concerned. Small builders are being put out of business. I refer to the man who builds five to ten homes a year.

The big builder seems to be getting enough mortgage money, but I am concerned about the small builders who face a very, very serious problem. I cannot understand why the minister cut by 15 per cent the money available, the same time as approved lenders were curtailing their loans. Here we have the two lending bodies drawing in the available money all at once. Why did not the minister wait to make his 15 per cent curtailment of funds until after the conventional lenders reduced the amount of money available? But here the two things happened at the same time, creating a drastic and serious situation as far as home building in Canada is concerned.

I do not think there is a member in this house who has not had representations made to him by builders in his community as to the serious problem created by the shortage of mortgage money. The president of the National House Builders Association had this to say in a telegram sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson):

• (8:10 p.m.)

> Reports received today from member associations indicate further disruption and curtailment of employment due to lack of mortgage funds. Examples Winnipeg quote lay-offs by quality builders 120 shop labour. Other typical lay-offs 30, 35 and 15 respectively. Lakehead quote six builders report reductions in carpenter and labour force from 322 total to 57. Victoria quote 75 carpenters unemployed as compared to 14 this time last year. Calgary quote most home builders laid off approximately 10 per cent trades. About 75 per cent will have to be laid off in approximately 1½ months. Ottawa quote Ottawa builders alarmed over prospects for next three month period. Montreal quote curtailment in excess of 70 per cent. Hamilton survey of eight builder firms indicate average lay-offs of 38 men per firm.—

Mr. Winkler: Would the hon. member permit a question? Did he say this was in Hamilton?

Mr. Hales: Yes.

Mr. Winkler: Would the hon. member mind repeating that for the benefit of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso)?

Mr. Hales: I think he should realize the situation in Hamilton. The telegram sets out the situation in the building trade today. In light of this, let us review the actions of this government, which asserts that it instituted the war on poverty. Granted, its actions were copied from the Americans; but here we have the government doing the very thing which will bring about poverty by curtailing building funds.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Hales: I have the figures before me for the month of April in my own locality. The Guelph N.E.S. office listed 22 males unemployed in the construction industry, at the very time of year when these people should be busy at their trade. But they are unemployed because of lack of mortgage funds.

I am told that only one out of every five applications for direct mortgages is being granted at present. That is how serious the situation is. I am told that the rich can get mortgage funds but that it is very difficult for the average working man to get a loan. It is true that loans are available for apartment houses. Other loans are available for large, luxurious office buildings; but is that what we need the most in Canada today? I say that we want money to build homes for individuals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hales: I am told that the large-scale builders can get loans, but the small builder, the man who builds five or ten houses a year is not able to get loans, and this is very serious for him. I am also told that large-scale builders who have reached the saturation point in their own areas are now moving into my own area to build houses, and that this is creating a real problem for the small builder.

I would recommend to the government that first and foremost it should not curtail by 15 per cent direct mortgage loans as compared with last year. They should provide the same amount of money as was available last year, especially at this season of the year. It should not postpone its decision on this until next winter or next fall. Now is the time when builders need and want mortgage money, and if the government wishes to impose this 15 per cent reduction it should postpone its enforcement until later on in the year. Let's get building—now.

There are many areas in Canada in which abnormal expansion and development are taking place. These areas need homes more than other areas. In this connection I think of my own community of Guelph, which is a university town, expanding at a great rate, bursting at the seams every place one looks. Yet additional loans are not being made available in this area. It receives the same amount of loans as other areas which are not expanding so quickly. I urge that more loans be made available, not necessarily residences for the university, but for university professors and others who wish to build their own homes in various parts of the city. There are many areas of Canada in the same position. There are areas in which great mining development is taking place, such as those areas in Saskatchewan where potash is being mined. There are many such areas as I have mentioned.

I am not so sure that money is so tight, because one member of the government the Secretary of State wants to spend $6 million to buy a painting for the National Art Gallery. That $6 million would build 300 $20,000 homes or 600 $10,000 homes. How tight can money be when people on the government front benches can talk in terms like that? If money is scarce maybe it is time we began operating on a priority basis. I think No. 1 on the list of priorities would be to put a roof over a man's head and give him a place in which to live. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, if this situation is not corrected, before long people are going to be living in tents. That is how bad it is becoming in some areas of the country.

If we are going to give some thought to a priority basis perhaps we should consider how easy it is at present to get loans to buy cars, appliances, and for travel at a time when money is being curtailed for loans to allow a man to build a home for his wife and family.

I am concerned about the married man with small children who may be earning $85 to $100 a week. Where is this fellow going to live? He cannot get into an apartment house because in many cases they do not accept young families. He cannot rent a house because there is a shortage of such accommodation. This is a mighty serious situation today and it applies in many areas across the country. At present I think those who desire to build, and need a loan, have to be in the $6,000 a year bracket, receiving about $120 per week income, in order to get a loan for a house costing approximately $18,000. It is a serious situation and needs every ounce of thought and research that we can give it.

I would like to see the minister responsible for the National Housing Act give greater thought to research on building construction and supplies because I am sure there must be some cheaper way in which we can build. I am not seeking loans for speculator builders, but I am speaking for those people who really need a home, who have made an application, who have qualified and yet are told they cannot get a loan because there is a 15 per cent cutback in the amount available.

So, Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying what I said at the beginning. I am happy to have had this opportunity to make these few remarks with respect to the curtailment of loans for building and with respect to the tight money policy which the Liberal government is imposing on the people of Canada. I am also happy to give my wholehearted support to the amendment before the house.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Macaluso: Would the hon. member allow a question? I am sure he would like to answer one. Would he give us his opinion as to why the private sources of mortgage funds, such as the insurance companies and some of the trust companies, have dried up their own particular source of investment money in the house building trade? I ask this question to obtain what information he has.

Mr. Hales: You are asking me for an opinion. First of all, it is because of the tight money policy of the government. Second, they are putting this money into apartment houses and office buildings where they have a nice tidy arrangement of one building rather, than a group of homes on which they have mortgages. This is the reason the approved lenders are interested more in this type of building than they are in homes.

Mr. Macaluso: It is because they are trying to force the interest rate up higher than it is now.

Mr. Winkler: Why do you not confer at home?

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the members of my party support the amendment which has been put forward by the opposition. The reason we do so is that it lays an emphasis on the real problem which is causing concern among many Canadians today, that is, the lack of housing. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) made a very spirited defence on behalf of the government, but his main emphasis was with regard to amendments to the National Housing Act which were passed in 1964 and which concerned urban renewal and low cost housing, and housing for the elderly. These are very important matters, but as the previous speaker said, the main problem at the moment is getting direct loans for housing.

We feel the problem is not so much one of tight money, but rather that the government lacks a clear-cut policy with regard to housing today. For a moment I think I should dwell on a few of the remarks made by the hon. member for Hamilton West. He made quite an issue out of the fact that there is $300 million available which has not been picked up by the municipalities and provinces with regard to the projects he set forth.

Mr. Macaluso: Which has yet to be picked up.

Mr. Gilbert: He asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) to cause to be set up a separate department for urban affairs and housing. When last week the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) presented a resolution in respect of the re-organization of the departments, a real opportunity presented itself to bring forth this new department to act as a liaison between the federal department and the provinces and municipalities on some of these problems. It seems rather odd that there would be $300 million available and that the provinces and municipalities would not make full use of it. We want them to make full use of it.

Perhaps I might mention an example in the city of Toronto and the riding I represent concerning the housing situation in Canada. The three levels of government have started an urban renewal project in my riding. It is amazing how much time it has taken to develop. One of the main reasons for the delay was the lack of consultation between the authorities in the interests of those who were being expropriated. One of the main problems these people are facing is that of compensation. The federal government took the easy position that it is only the banker, that it puts up the money and plays no part in awarding compensation.

The people feel that three elements should be embodied in compensation. Not only must there be consideration of the fair market value, but also a relocation expense should be allowed. Then there is the compulsory taking aspect. At one time there was a 10 per cent allowance for this, but now it is not allowed. Judging from the experience we have had in Broadview, no wonder people are not jumping into some of these urban renewal projects. They are being offered prices which are at least 25 per cent below what they would have to pay for comparable homes in another area.

It is very disappointing when we see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) bringing forth his budget in which he asks for a reduction of 10 per cent in government building, and only a small reduction with regard to private capital in housing. The statement of the minister on May 3 with reference to the 15 per cent reduction in connection with direct loans for the year 1966 is very disturbing. When one looks at the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation report for the year 1965 he finds there were 166,565 housing starts compared to 165,658 for 1964, an increase of .5 per cent compared to 11.5 per cent in 1964 and 14.2 per cent in 1963.

It is obvious that the trend is downward, and this should not be. When you add the 15 per cent reduction this year, it becomes a very disturbing picture. As a new member I looked upon the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) as a man of concern and compassion. I happened to read an article concerning a speech he made in Toronto in December 1964, when he said:

> For all the talk about what we intend to do, for all our efforts, nearly 100,000 Canadian families live every waking moment of their lives under housing conditions that are really appalling—a disgrace to the communities in which they reside. The same 100,000 families cannot find other accommodation on the open market at rents they can afford to pay, and 20 per cent of all our occupied dwellings have very primitive bathing and toilet facilities. This, I suggest, is real poverty.
> And quite apart from the despair and degradation of blight and decay, these neglected areas impose an unnecessary drain on the civic economy. Municipal services and other facilities cost more to provide, while assessments must decline. The extra overhead is subsidized by the taxpayers of the entire municipality—assessments must be increased in good areas to offset diminishing tax revenues in the run-down neighbourhoods.

This is a statement made by the minister in 1964. You get the picture for 1965 of a .5 per cent increase, and now he is asking for a 15 per cent decrease from the 1965 picture. Not only that, but the cost of houses financed under the act increased in 1965 as it has in each year since 1961 because of the increase in the price of materials and wages, and the high cost of land. In 1965 the average cost of an N.H.A house was $17,402 as compared to $16,478 in 1964, an increase of $924.

The president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in his report indicated that the average income of a borrower under an N.H.A. loan was $6,655; the average age was 35 years and the borrower had two children. How many Canadians earn $6,655 per year and can qualify for a loan under the provisions of this legislation? I suggest that these provisions are too restrictive.

The ceiling on N.H.A. mortgages was increased from $15,600 to $18,000 last year. That is an increase of $2,400. The interest rate is now 6¾ per cent, having increased in the past years from 5 per cent. The interest rate on conventional loans now stands at 7¾ per cent, or 1 per cent higher.

The president of C.M.H.C. indicated that 65 per cent of all new houses were being financed by conventional loans from insurance and trust companies, whereas 35 per cent are financed through N.H.A. loans. It seems to me that this situation should be reversed, and that 65 per cent should be financed under N.H.A. and 35 per cent by conventional loans.

When one realizes that an individual who has a mortgage of $18,000 at an interest rate of 6¾ per cent would have to pay $1,200 per year in interest or, as the last speaker mentioned, if a worker earns $100 per week it represents three months' work per year, he must also realize that housing costs are too high. In most cases housing mortgages run for a period of from 20 to 30 years. A man now 40 years of age who wants to buy a home will be 60, 65 or 70 before he has paid for it, and will have paid twice the original cost of his house as a result of the high rates of interest.

The lack of a housing program on the part of the government gives little or no opportunity for elderly people to purchase houses. People who have reached the twilight years of their life are being forced to live in rooms at high rents. The government should take the initiative to make sure that these senior citizens are taken care of in their latter years.

It is obvious that the average income in Canada today is so low that the majority of citizens cannot meet the N.H.A. requirements, which are far in excess of those imposed by conventional lending institutions. In order to meet these N.H.A. requirements a potential borrower would have to earn in the neighbourhood of $130 a week. For these reasons the people who benefit most are those with incomes in the higher brackets.

Professor Murray once said about housing in Canada that our policy leads to socialism for the rich and private income for the poor. He also indicated in his study that by the year 1981 we will require one million new homes. And also by that time we will require another million new homes for people whose incomes are between $3,000 and $4,800 per year. We have not even scratched the surface of housing needs in Canada. Last year there were 166,000 new housing starts. One million of the new homes which will be built will perhaps be purchased by individuals with better than average income, but there will be a similar number required for those individuals who cannot afford present day prices.

The hon. member for Hamilton West dealt with the question of universities being given large grants to assist in their expansion in respect of buildings and other facilities. I hope he has drawn to the attention of the minister the fact that there are many secondary non-degree granting institutes such as Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, and others across the country, which do not qualify under the N.H.A. scheme. I received a letter from one of the governors, who set forth the proposed re-building program of his institute. At this time they have 4,000 students and expect within a period of ten years to have some 10,000 students. One can appreciate the number of residences that will be required to house those students, probably many of whom will come from Hamilton.

In a statement made by the minister on May 3, in which he set forth the reasons for the 15 per cent reduction in housing starts for 1966, he made this statement as reported at page 4617 of Hansard of that date:

> I might say it is my own personal view that, since merchant builders are building with the hope of profit, they should intensify, they must intensify if they need help, their search for other sources of mortgage moneys.

He is apparently asking the builders to find other mortgage money in order to build homes for Canadians. I bluntly ask, where does he think this money will be found? The last member who spoke said that insurance and trust companies were now drying up their available funds because they have found a more attractive field at an interest rate of 8 per cent. They are making these funds available to apartment and other large dwelling owners, and completely ignoring the plight of many Canadians who need and wish to build private homes. I think the minister would be doing a great service to Canada if he indicated to these builders where they can obtain money without having to qualify under the many strict provisions.

I cannot underline too seriously the necessity for the establishment of a department of urban affairs and housing to take care of some of these problems that arise in regard to the needs of Canadians for housing, and to act as a consultative body in co-ordination with provincial and municipal authorities. If we pay attention to what was said by the learned professor to whom I have referred regarding the number of houses which will be needed in the future, we must realize how urgent it is to establish a department of urban affairs and housing. The Minister of Labour may be occupied with the many other problems he has in relation to other departments for which he is responsible, but he or someone else in the government must give proper consideration to this urgent problem.

The second point to which I wish to make particular reference is that regarding N.H.A. interest rates. At the present time the interest rate on conventional loans is between $7\frac{3}{4}$ and 8 per cent, and $6\frac{3}{4}$ in relation to N.H.A. We should like to see this interest rate fixed by the government.

The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) stated this afternoon that he would like to see the interest rate on housing mortgages set at 6 per cent. We should like to see it set at something between 5 per cent and 6 per cent, and hope that active steps will be taken to fix a pattern of interest on housing across Canada. The fact that 65 per cent of mortgage moneys for housing comes from insurance and trust companies, while only 35 per cent comes from the government, would indicate that a definite government policy in regard to housing must be formulated and implemented.

This afternoon the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) suggested that we should use some of the moneys being contributed by Canadian people, through the Canadian Development Corporation, for a nation-wide housing program in order to take a great deal of the weight of responsibility off the shoulders of conventional lending institutions.

If there were a war, I am sure that Canadians would not hesitate to contribute to such a worthy cause as housing. Housing has become an urgent problem and the government must take immediate steps to solve it. We must take immediate steps also not only with regard to new homes but also with regard to older homes. In the riding of Broadview, which I represent many of these folk who are being ousted because of the urban renewal project are people who range in age between 55 and 60. They do not want to go to the suburbs but want to buy city homes and are faced with 8 per cent mortgages. There is a duty on the government, especially with regard to people who are being replaced because of urban renewal projects, to give them interest rates no greater than 6¾ per cent. This is something that should be done, and done immediately.

As the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) said, the way housing is financed in Toronto today is that you get a valuation of 87 per cent on the house and you have to pay a very high interest rate of 8 per cent. You also have to pay a 2 per cent insurance fee, plus an application fee and a legal fee. Is it any wonder that Canadians are unable to buy homes these days?

One final word, Mr. Speaker, and it is with regard to home improvement loans. The best defence that we can take with regard to blighted areas is to have homes in good repair. Under the National Housing Act loans were given to people for repairs. According to the report of the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, from 1961 to 1965 there has been a steady decline in home improvement loans. People should be encouraged to take these loans for home repairs because, as I said, the best defence we have against an area becoming blighted is to have homes in good repair. I could not help but agree with the hon. member for Northumberland, the former member for Broadview who certainly took a very active interest in constituency problems, when he said that Canadians deserve good homes. This gives them a sense of pride and achievement. These are the things we shoud work for, strive for, to make this a better Canada.

Tight Money Policy

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Although it is very tempting, Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of entering into a controversy, even to the slightest degree, with my good friend the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) who was a little more belligerent tonight than he usually is, or even to discuss the preamble of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) when introducing his amendment. I thought the young Conservatives were rather harsh with the former minister over the week end, particularly when one said to him, "This is the Pepsi generation, George, and you had better believe it". I suppose the hon. member for Northumberland, in referring back to incidents in 1956 and 1957 was only keeping pace with the type of attitude or atmosphere that has existed far too long in this particular house. I can be this sanctimonious about members referring to the past because I have not been here long enough to dig into the past and refer to each particular member, and some of the problems of a generation ago.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) who is responsible for the administration of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, intends to speak before the debate is terminated tomorrow evening. I would prefer to leave it to him to refute some of the very thoughtful arguments which have been placed before us today, not only by the hon. member for Wellington South but also by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert). Looking through some of the clippings this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I find that statistics, for what they are worth, are reassuring to those members who are afraid that, as a result of the curtailment of money, there will not be as many housing starts this year as last year. I thought the hon. member for Broadview was rather pessimistic, so I should like to refer him to an editorial that appeared in the Globe and Mail on April 29. I quote:

> In the first place, although builders and members of parliament seem convinced that there will be a decrease in the number of houses built this year, the first quarter, in fact, shows an increase. Starts on single detached dwellings were up 18.9 per cent during the first three months of 1966 over 1965, and up 23.8 per cent in March over March of last year; and, as Mr. Nicholson pointed out, last year was the record year for house building.

I refer specifically to single dwelling homes, but I was interested in the remarks of the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Mr. H. W. Hignett when he addressed the National House Builders Association and suggested that by 1970, 70 per cent of adult Canadians will be either in their twenties or older than 65, the ages of apartment dwellers. He left that association with the thought that perhaps the time had come for builders and the government to put the emphasis on a different style of home. Obviously by 1970 the plight of our senior citizens will be even more acute than it is today.

I think the recent report of the Senate committee on aging, which I believe is a rather historic document and one which will be to the everlasting credit of the Senators who worked on it, stresses the plight of the senior citizens of this country. Mr. Jean Lupien, vice president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation said to the same House Builders Association that they had become too dependant on government agencies for the flow of funds and that they were not meeting the real needs of Canadians for housing. Mr. Lupien is an expert in the field, and I am not. He says this:

> You are trying to impose the wish for a house on people who cannot afford it. You put the houses away out where they create transportation costs for the buyers and you add to municipal problems.

I can only speak with some knowledge of my own community, Mr. Speaker. In a country as large as Canada, I realize that problems in the field of housing vary tremendously from area to area. I come from a province which should hang its head in shame, the province of Quebec, in so far as its approach to housing is concerned In this House of Commons, I represent the city of Verdun, a constituency of 90,000 people which has yet to build or stimulate the building or create the incentive for the co-operative building of even the first home of any description for senior citizens. I think it is a shame and it underlines one of the main problems which we have in a country made up of 11 different governments.

In my community since 1962 I have been prodding the mayor and city council to take advantage of the terms offered by Central Mortgage, to no avail. In 1964, thanks to members in all parts of the house, I am sure, section 16A of the National Housing Act was amended to provide money by way of loans up to 90 per cent of the purchase price of apartments, dwellings and homes for senior citizens and to those families of low income.

When that was done, once more I prodded my community to take advantage of this legislation, and I mention this because I am sure there are thousands of communities of which the same can be said. The 90,000 people of my constituency are concentrated in an area I could walk around in half an hour. They live in homes four or five storeys high, no less than three. The people live in rooms on $75 a month, in loneliness, in pathetic conditions, paying more than they can afford for a dingy room on the third floor.

Why is this so, Mr. Speaker? It is not because the federal government has not put the funds at the disposal of the provinces or the municipalities. It is not because Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has not been willing to place at the disposal of interested parties their assistance and experience. It is because there has not been sufficient pressure placed on municipalities at the civic level to take advantage of the legislation waiting here in Ottawa.

I can talk, of course, only of conditions in my own riding and I have no right to pass judgment on other ridings. I cannot cry at all for the fellow down the street who is having a hard time deciding whether to buy an $18,000 home or a $22,000 home. I cannot get too excited about him. I am concerned about the senior citizen who cannot find a flat for $40 a month and has to leave his or her spouse and move in with the children. These are the people I am concerned about, and I am concerned because I know that money to assist them is lying idle in Ottawa because through indifference, callousness or through ignorance of the fact that it is available, communities refuse to take advantage of it.

Some hon. members may ask, why not do something about it in your community? Well, Mr. Speaker, I did do something. About six or eight months ago, tired of the procrastination of the city council, I wrote every organization in the city of Verdun—service clubs, the Lions club, Kiwanis, the Richelieu club and senior citizens organizations. Finally I organized representatives from 30 of these bodies into a committee on housing. We then marched upon city hall a month before the civic elections and presented a brief requesting that the city of Verdun set up a housing committee consisting of eight people, four representing the city and four representing the citizens, in order that we might eventually stir the community or the municipality into action and request relief from the federal government under section 16A of the National Housing Act. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that in this venture we were successful. Our brief has been read, council has acted upon it and the committee has been set up. Central Mortgage and Housing has been contacted.

The procedure, Mr. Speaker, is rather laborious because this civic housing committee must now contact provincial authorities to make sure that it does not become involved in one of these federal-provincial disputes, but eventually a request for housing for senior citizens in my community will come to Ottawa to be, I hope, approved, provided certain norms are met.

I am not interested in giving this government or the previous government credit; credit is not important. But when we talk about housing for senior citizens, when we talk about slum clearance or when we talk about urban redevelopment, I think Canadians must realize that the responsibility for the implementation of much of the legislation in connection therewith falls upon their shoulders, as well as on the shoulders of the hon. member for Verdun, or the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales), or the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), or any other fine gentleman in this house.

I know, Mr. Speaker, there are certain communities, such as those like the city of Hamilton, certain sections of Toronto and probably some out west, which have taken advantage of the assistance offered by Central Mortgage to help our senior citizens. But hundreds and thousands of Canadians, according to the Senate report on aging, are living in conditions that are a shame to Canada, with our tremendous standard of living. This state of affairs is not brought about by a government unwilling to do anything to correct it: The fault lies in the red tape which exists between federal, provincial and civic authorities, which prevents our walking into a community and saying that we should knock down 25 blocks square and build some decent housing for the citizens. This type of initiative must come from the civic level.

Many of the provinces have already realized that this should be the approach, and at least four or five of them have supplemented the assistance offered in worthy cases. The province of Quebec is probably the most backward of all provinces in this regard, but there are indications that in the very near future that province will be setting up an association or department similar to that existing in Ontario and in other provinces.

However, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether private builders, who have had the best of both worlds for so many years now, with housing shortages and ample funds from private industry, private enterprise, other private sources and from the government, have really done their part in the matter of funds. Looking around some of the communities close to Verdun and some of the housing projects which have been constructed, it does not take very much vision to foresee the slums of the future. It seems to me that a review of housing in general is needed. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) has been the ideal man to look after Central Mortgage. I do not know who chases whom, but it came under his jurisdiction when he was postmaster general, and it is again under his jurisdiction now that he is Minister of Labour.

The minister pointed out the other day that we were cutting back funds by 15 per cent, not over the average of the last five years, but 15 per cent of a record year. I do not think in all fairness that the government should be chastised for adopting such a policy. The members who have spoken so far have spoken well, but their comments have been made really in a different light. The hon. member for Broadview, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) and the hon. member for Wellington South have pointed to a social illness, namely the lack of housing in general, which I do not think is tied in too much with interest rates. I think this question is tied in with the logical profit-making attitude of private industry. I believe it is time for the government to give more directives and more incentives to build the type of housing I envisage, the type of housing which the president of Central Mortgage and also the vice president politely pointed out is so badly needed now, and will be even more badly needed by 1970.

• (9:00 p.m.)

In certain communities such as mine, the people cannot afford the luxury of a nice home in the country with a lot 50 × 50, a garden, and all the rest of it. That sort of thing might be the dream of the young executive who can afford it. It cannot be the dream of our senior citizens in the community in which I live.

This is why I am pleased that the government, in its policy of restraint respecting tight money, has been very careful not to curtail the moneys available for these types of enterprises which have to do with senior citizens.

I am saddened that the municipalities across this country, either through lack of communication, indifference, or callousness, have not faced up to the responsibilities they have toward the citizens of their communities. These responsibilities should not rest on the shoulders of the federal government alone. They must be met through co-operation between the civic, provincial and federal levels of government.

I thought when the federal government made changes in the National Housing Act, granting up to 90 per cent coverage on loans on projects dedicated to providing housing for senior citizens, and also those with low incomes, that there would have been generated the biggest building boom in the housing history of Canada. That has not happened. Frankly, why it has not happened has puzzled people who are close to the problems of senior citizens. It has puzzled those who are active in the field of social welfare—such as volunteer workers, or the members of the Victorian Order of Nurses—who day in and day out see the dilapidated conditions under which senior citizens live, many of them paying $50 or $60 a month for a room on the island of Montreal because no other type of housing is available. That sort of thing is a sin; it is a shame. The responsibility is not entirely that of the federal government. It falls simply on the shoulders of the citizens of those communities, who are responsible for citizens less fortunate than they are.

Those are the people who refuse to march on city council demanding housing for senior citizens. They do not send resolutions to the provincial government asking it to get in touch with the federal government and ask for money— money which is waiting for them and which, as I understand, although I have no statistics in front of me, has never been used to its fullest extent. There has never been pressure on the government to expand these types of funds because they have never come anywhere near to being completely used by communities for the purposes I speak of.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

I know what I have done in my community. I know what we shall be doing for our senior citizens in our community. But I do not think it is my duty as a federal member of parliament to have to generate interest on the civic level about the things I speak of. I believe that the role of the members of this house is to provide the plan, the money and the know-how. People all across Canada should take a look at their own communities, at their own church group, at their own social groups, and perhaps ask themselves; "I wonder what conditions that old gentleman who has just passed us lives under? Does he live in a room? Why is there no housing in our community? Why are there not homes for senior citizens around here?

I might add, Mr. Speaker, it is not because money is not available; it is not because the know-how is not there; it is not because the builders are not there. It is because in this big country in which we live, where you have federal, provincial and civic administrations all working very delicately together, all afraid to step on each other's toes, we have to start with requests on the civic level, going up the ladder to the provincial government, and then to the federal government.

I resist the temptation to answer some of the very pointed, and at times logical questions that were raised in this debate. I will leave that pleasant chore for the minister tomorrow evening.

Mr. More: You might do it more capably than he can. Let us hear you.

Mr. Mackasey: Thank you, but I have a very high regard for my minister. I frankly think he will answer, as he should, more adequately than ever I could.

I am here speaking as a representative of a community that I think has let its people down badly. As I look at the statistics on my desk I have the very uncomfortable feeling that my community is of the type that are in the majority; that, unfortunately, it is not the exception, but the rule.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity of saying a few words on this supply motion. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? The answer is simple. I want to talk about certain specific policies and situations designed and created by this government.

The three legs of the stool that have brought about the present situation are, first, the supply of money. Second, the demand for loan money, and third, out of the interplay between these two, the interest rate.

This government's policy has been one-sided, having to do with the supply of money. First of all you have the statement by the Minister of Finance about paying 5 per cent on taxes taken, with the promise that this would be paid back later. That is a policy to dry up the supply of lendable funds. There is no doubt about it. Then there are other policies, such as those implemented by the Minister of Labour who is responsible for central mortgage and housing, which are responsible for raising the mortgage rate of National Housing Act mortgages from 6¼ per cent to 6¾ per cent.

Anyone who has watched the result of this action—and I have seen its results in my area—knows that for many people it is hard to find lendable funds. In many cases they have been unable to find them. Many people have deferred their plans to build because of raised interest rates, which have cut the demand for lendable funds. People who do not believe that are like the ostrich which puts its head in the sand.

I notice that the Minister of Fisheries shakes his head. I would ask him, how many fishermen would go fishing, and would buy boats, and so on, if the interest rate on the things they had to buy went up, up and up? They would not engage in fishing because they would not be able to figure where they could come out with a profit. After all, they are all economic men; that is, they are out to make a profit. If they feel that they cannot make money, they will not be induced to work. Similarly, rising interest rates mean a lower demand for lendable funds. Those funds have been curtailed. All that stems from what this government has done. In other words, money for housing has been deliberately dried up.

There are other things to be considered. Take bank loans as an example. Banks are not interested at the present time in making small bank loans because of the shortage of funds. They can make much larger loans, however, at the 6 per cent rate. So when the small businessman comes along and wants a loan; they way, "No, we just have not got the money". The banker cannot tell the businessman exactly why he is not making the loan to him.

The banker will tell him that his security is not good, his chances of making a profit are not good, or something of that sort. In 1962 this government had an election platform which included a policy and program to help small business. Let me read exactly what they said they would do to help small business. They said they would ensure a square deal for small business; they said that Liberal policies were for more plentiful credit, lower taxes and expanding business; they said that economic measures would be designed to broaden opportunities for the various enterprises of our smaller manufacturers, retailers and service businesses.

Has this government forgotten its promise of 1962, or has it changed its mind? This was their platform in 1962. Now they are doing just the opposite. I was amazed by the statement of the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey). He said he had prodded different local people to bring into effect certain policies for housing, old age pensions, and so on. He said he had prodded and prodded them and still had not been able to get them to act. Did the hon. member ever consider that there was a more serious fault than people in local communities suffering from inertia? Unless you implement over-all policies, which this government has never done, you will not get the proper reaction from local people. I will refer to this election campaign propaganda a little later on.

I draw attention to this three-legged stool; the supply of money on one side, the demand for loans on another, and the interplay of both creating a higher interest rate. In the result the interest rate goes up. What you are doing in these circumstances is closing off those people who want loans to purchase consumer goods, thereby preventing putting this money back into the process of production and producing goods for export. You head off inflation but the economy suffers; there is no question about that.

This government has restricted the supply of money. As a result our people are crying out for consumer goods and there are not enough consumer goods to go around. That is the interrelationship effect on our economy of increasing the interest rate. I suspect that the government has raised the interest rate on Central Mortgage and Housing loans from 6¼ per cent to 6¾ per cent because they intend to amend the Bank Act to raise the 6 per cent interest on bank loans. I am waiting for them to do this, and I have both barrels cocked if they do.

The raising of the 6 per cent interest rate on bank loans will not solve the present economic ills of this country, because we have in our economy certain rigidities; we have a monopolistic economy wherein competition is not the same between different groups. I can prove my point by simply saying that you may have perfect competition, for example, between one large number of producers. To illustrate my point I would refer to our farmers who produce wheat; one farmer does not realize that his neighbour, also producing wheat, is in competition with him. In other words, there is perfect competition between these farmers. This is a term that economists use and it applies to two farmers, for instance, each of whom does not know that the other is a competitor.

This is a vastly different situation to that applying to the eight chartered banks we have in this country. I may go into one bank and borrow money from them, but have dealings with another bank. I may talk to one bank manager and indicate that I paid so much interest in another bank. I do not know whether banks circulate this information among themselves, but they find out these things—there are many ways in which this can be done—and there is an interchange of views. At various dinners, for example, they get together, or while at their clubs, and find out what the other is charging as interest on loans, and that sort of thing; then they make reports periodically.

Therefore you have a degree of monopolistic competition in the banking industry of this country. I would point out to the house that what will work among farmers will not work among banks. If you start raising the interest rate beyond 6 per cent, you will generate with regard to the banks of this country the demand for reform. There may be pressure upon parliament to bring in a new measure to take over the supply of lendable money. An element in the west will be saying that the Bank of Canada should take over the lending function of our chartered banks. I am not one of those who advocates this being done, but this will be suggested; make no mistake about that. The Bank of Canada, as everyone knows, is the fountain-head for funds, with the exception of deposits. It stimulates deposits by lending money to the chartered banks, and they in turn extend credit to around twelve times the funds they have borrowed. When those funds are re-deposited in the banks, they lend them again at the expanded rate, and so the cycle continues. This is how the banks receive their lendable funds.

If the ceiling on the interest rate is removed and banks are allowed to charge more than 6 per cent, we will be breaking faith with an undertaking given to the people of this country a good many years ago, that the interest rate would be 6 per cent. This will be evidence of the fact that this government has not the capacity or know-how to control our economy without raising the interest rate and placing a heavier burden upon the man who wishes to own a house. He will be paying a much higher rate of interest on his mortgage money and, being a small borrower, will not be able to borrow more money. I hope the government will bear these facts in mind and think twice before they embark upon a policy such as the raising of the interest rate on bank loans.

Let us spend a few moments considering the effect of this tight money policy. There is no doubt that it is a tight money policy. The government is restricting the supply of money, by one means or another, by government measures and edicts, and that is curtailing the expansion of the economy. There is now a greater demand for the money that is available, and so interest rates rise. It is like a dog chasing its tail. Everybody wants more money and pays higher interest rates. The only check is when interest rates climb so high that nobody can afford to borrow because they will not make a profit. Consequently they do without. That is not what we want in our economy.

Look at the cost-of-living index. Everything is costing more, whether for production or consumption. The housewife knows what she has to pay when she goes to the store. There has never been such a rapid rise in the cost of living as there has been since this government took office. The D.B.S. statistics clearly illustrate this.

The value of the dollar has depreciated in relation to purchasing power. The old age pension of $75 a month is now worth about only $70 in terms of purchasing power. My hon. friend from Verdun was shedding crocodile tears for the old people, but he did not tell us that the rising cost of living is taking the bread out of their mouths and cutting their standard of living from under them. There are thousands of others, retired civil servants and people on fixed incomes, who are terribly hurt by the rise in the cost of living.

Rising costs are also affecting those who manufacture goods for export. I have talked to many of them in my part of the country and they tell me they are being priced out of foreign markets. Markets which they enjoyed for years are diminishing, simply because of high costs.

It is not so long ago since we concluded the Columbia river deal. Today I was amazed to hear the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin), who represents the constituency of Drummond-Arthabaska, in answer to a question put by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), saying that the funds which have been received from the United States to build Columbia river dams had accumulated certain interest. Those of us who studied the treaty had this figured out. The minister also said that a portion of these funds had been spent, but he did not tell us whether the money which was received from the United States to build these dams will now be sufficient in view of inflation, the rise in the cost of consumer goods and all the other things that make up the costs of production.

He simply told us that interest had accumulated. I did not rise in my place to criticize him because I did not ask the question, but I can assure the hon. member for Kootenay West that if he looks at the minister's answer in Hansard he will find it was no answer at all to his question.

Mr. Herridge: I intend to say that at ten o'clock.

Mr. Kindt: I am glad to get a rise out of the hon. member for Kootenay West and I think we will all enjoy staying at ten o'clock to hear what he has to say.

I would now like to go into other aspects of what the government has not done.

Mr. Robichaud: Before the hon. member changes subjects, would he answer a question.

Mr. Kindt: If I have got sufficient time to complete my remarks I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. Robichaud: Would the hon. member explain why the mortgage interest rate on N.H.A. joint insured loans was increased from 6 per cent to 6¾ per cent from 1959 to 1960, and under what conditions?

Mr. Kindt: I do not have the past figures on C.M.H.C. loans, and in order to answer the question fully it would be necessary to cover all the adjoining factors. I was here at the time, but the two situations are not comparable. Furthermore, more money was put into housing at that time than is the case at present. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) thinks he has a point and he is trying to save what he could call the good name and good policies of his government. I do not want to get sidetracked on an across-the-floor question, but there were different factors then as compared with now. The former government never embarked upon a policy of introducing tight money, not to the extent that the present government is doing. The two situations are completely non-comparable.

Coming back to the Liberal program as outlined in the general election of 1962, I should like to go into the field of community development and housing, because different members have spoken on this particular subject. I should like to place on the record what the Liberal party had in mind in 1962, and then we will see how much of that they have carried out. They said they would set up, if a Liberal government were elected, a municipal loan fund which, working with the provinces, would provide money for needed municipal services. They said:

> We need better streets and roads to reduce traffic congestion, less pollution, more parks. A great backlog of needed projects is held up for lack of municipal financing. The fund will make loans for sound municipal improvements which provincial governments approve but for which capital is unobtainable on reasonable terms from existing Canadian sources.

Noble thoughts; but how much has been done. The hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) was lamenting the fact that nothing had been done in his community. This is what they said they would do when they were fighting an election. Let me read the next one. They said they would clear slums and renew blighted areas of our cities and towns. This is how they explained what they would do. They said:

> Federal grants for urban renewal projects will be extended in scope and increased in amount. This is essential to civic progress in many areas.

How much of this was ever done? May I say, very little. Here is the next promise to the people. They were going to increase the low rental homes. Here is what they said they were going to do:

> New homes for rent are the positive side of slum clearance. A new Liberal government will join with the provinces and municipalities in a major campaign. It will give special attention to the housing needs of old-age pensioners.

What did my hon. friend from Verdun say? He said that nothing had been built for old age pensioners. Here they fought an election and put out bait to try to get the old age pensioners to vote for them. Do you think they will ever vote for them again? This is what they said in 1962. Have they forgotten what they said in 1962; have they changed their minds? Different speakers on the government side already have said in this evening's debate that nothing had been done in respect of low rental housing; that is, that there has been no program to bring that into being, nor has there been a program of homes for the aged.

I like to put this on the record, because these things are coming back to haunt this government. They should be put on the record because the members of the government have forgotten about them. They said that if they were elected in 1962, they would extend national housing legislation to provide N.H.A. insured mortgages for the purchase of existing homes as well as for building new homes. They said that this broadening, under proper safeguards, would enable more Canadians to become home owners. What are they doing now? They are raising the interest rates from 6¼ per cent to 6¾ per cent. This is just the opposite to what they said they were going to do.

Here is another one, and in this case they even are trying to get the farmer's vote. They said they would improve rural housing:

> A new Liberal government will bring to national housing policy the flexibility in planning, standards and finance necessary to meet the varied needs of different areas.

They said they are going to help the farmers with their homes. How much have they done? There are a lot of poor farm homes in my area and I have not seen any benefits there. It is just another gimmick. I have here a document of several pages. I could read many extracts setting forth different policies of this government, but one is as futile as the other. This is the 1962 platform of the Liberal party. I am not trying to pull the wool over your eyes; I am trying to take wool off your eyes, and off the eyes of the public so that they will see exactly what this government has been doing in respect of carrying out its pledges which it made to the people.

Now, in concluding my remarks, I should like to say that what is needed is the creation of a condition in the economy so that jobs will be available and so that everyone can earn a little money in order to purchase consumer goods. At the same time there should be an adequate supply of goods so that prices can be kept in check and so that there will be a proper balance between supply and demand for mortgage funds, and supply and demand in respect of the goods which are available.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to ask the house to reject the amendment proposed by the official opposition, I feel I must start by pointing out that, contrary to what seems to have been suggested by members of the official opposition until now, looking at when they had the opportunity to alleviate the problems of which they speak, their record certainly does not justify their asking for the support of this house or this country for the amendment they have put forward. I presume they have put it forward under the guise of a suggestion that they have a greater capability to deal with the problems of housing which still remain in this country than has the government.

It is interesting to note that in 1962 housing starts totalled only 130,095; in 1963 they jumped to 148,624, and from there, in 1964, they jumped to 165,658. Finally we find that in 1965 there were 166,565 housing starts. In other words, in less than four years there has been an increase of 22 per cent.

Mr. Chatterton: May I ask a question of the hon. member.

Mr. Gray: I would be happy to answer questions when I have completed my remarks. It is not my habit to make an extended speech. If time does permit, I would be happy to answer questions for my hon. friend or for any of my colleagues in this house.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this dramatic improvement did not come about merely by chance. My colleague the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso)—the distinguished chairman of the transport committee—I thought outlined most effectively the measures which have been put into effect by this government to stimulate the building of homes generally and to stimulate activity throughout this country in an effort to deal with the problem of supplying proper housing for the older people and people on low incomes. He also outlined our efforts in the field of urban renewal.

I think the measures of the type to which he referred, including the provision for 90 per cent financing of low rental public housing, increased federal funds for urban renewal and, contrary to what was suggested by the hon. member who just spoke, making N.H.A. loans available for older homes, provided they are located in urban renewal areas, have all had a lot to do with the very important increase in housing starts since this government took office. There has been a dramatic increase in the supply of funds available through the federal government for urban renewal and low rental housing. This, as well as many other measures, has contributed to this improvement.

If I refer to a particular example of one community in this country of ours I think it will help illustrate what I am trying to say about this difference which has come about since this government has had an opportunity to bring in measures to increase the amount of housing available for Canadians. In my own community of Windsor in 1962 there were only 495 units started. In 1963 this number increased to 728; in 1964 to 1,125 and in 1965 to some 1,800. It is interesting to note that in 1965 for the first time housing starts reached a total greater than the 1,700 which occurred in 1954. In other words, when our hon. friends in the official opposition were in office and had charge of the housing policy of this country, just taking the period from 1959 to 1963, in the Windsor area the annual total averaged between 500 and 700 units as compared with the prospective 2,000 starts for 1966. There are some 695 publicly owned low rental units either under construction now or to be started within the next several weeks. I think some of the measures of this government to which I referred have had a very important effect in bringing about this improvement in the Windsor area.

Reference has been made by various speakers to the effect of the present government's policy on the housing picture for the current year. It seems to me that it should be emphasized that this government has made it clear that it does not intend to reduce the number of direct loans to be made available to the home building industry this year. Last year some 31,500 direct loans were made available for the construction and purchase of homes. The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) has stressed in this house that the government program for this year will not reduce that number below that level.

It should be remembered that of the 166,000 starts in 1965 the majority were financed by private lenders. If the prospect in this country at this time indicates that this record level of starts may be reduced by 15 per cent this coming year the blame for this decrease must fall upon private lenders who are not carrying out a definite social responsibility of providing loans at the same level.

I do not agree with those hon. members who have suggested that the Minister of Labour has announced that this government has decreed a 15 per cent cutback in housing starts in Canada for 1966. I read the minister's statement and as far as I can see he merely conveyed to this house the latest information available in relation to projections for housing starts in the current year. I hope that the final result of construction programs financed through either direct loans from C.M.H.C. or through private lenders will not be less than the record number of starts in 1965. At the same time I cannot help but note that there are areas in this country, including the Windsor area, which at the present time still have a serious housing shortage. The efforts of this government since it took office have helped to begin to fill the gaps which exist in housebuilding in areas such as Windsor where a serious need still exists.

The very important and significant increase in employment in the Windsor area since 1963 has created an additional pressure on the limited supply of housing available at the beginning of this period of improvement in economic conditions. I suggest this improvement in the economy of this area is a direct result of some of the economic programs implemented by this government, including the designated area measure and the automotive pact.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gray: At this time I should like to call upon the minister and this government to develop and put into effect as quickly as possible policies and programs which will give special attention to the needs of areas such as Windsor in order that these housing needs will not remain unfilled in the immediate future. I am sure the minister will do everything possible to encourage private lenders to become more actively engaged in the housing field. If his efforts, by way of what I might call morale suasion, are not successful in bringing to their minds a sense of responsibility the government will have to give active consideration to a greater direct involvement in the mortgage financing field.

At the present time the government should take steps to give special attention through its program of direct lending to such areas as Windsor. Special attention should be given to the creation of quotas greater than those which might otherwise be available in those areas which have a special need for housing. I must stress that this need would have been much worse at this time had it not been for the efforts of this government under the leadership provided by the hon. Minister of Labour. This government in making efforts through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and through co-operation with municipal and provincial governments to find an answer to these needs.

The time has also come when we must encourage private industry to take a more active part in providing housing for their employees.

This is not merely a matter of responsibility on the part of those industries to the communities in which they find themselves. Surely, in areas such as Windsor it is also in the direct interests of the industries in question to make certain that they are able to keep the skilled working force they have, to attract additional workers to fill the jobs that are being created in large part because of the success of the economic policies of this government. I think that the minister, both directly and through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, should encourage the major industrial firms in communities like Windsor, either to do something themselves in the field of housing for their employees or to combine together to form non-profit corporations which, with the assistance of Central Mortgage in planning and perhaps in financing if necessary, would help fill the demand for housing in areas such as the one from which I come.

Another point I should like to make at this time, Mr. Speaker, is that I feel the income scale now being imposed by the Ontario Housing Corporation on new public housing projects, which are being constructed in areas such as Windsor, has a definite need of revision. I feel that a study of this scale will indicate that the penalty rent level comes in to play too quickly and fails to take into account the realities of the wages that people who work in our factories actually earn today, as well as the costs they have to meet out of those wages. I recognize that the principle is that people above a certain income level are to be discouraged through the application of the rental scale from staying in those units. They are thus being encouraged to go into the private housing market. At the present time, however, in many areas of this country, there is a shortage of private housing for these people. It either does not exist or if it exists at all, is at a rental which is difficult for factory workers or other people in that type of job to meet. I think that equity and the needs of the people in the lower income ranges demands a revision of this income scale on the part of those concerned.

I have not hesitated to speak in a way which might be taken by some to contain a note of criticism of those responsible for our housing policy, perhaps not criticism so much as calling for further action in certain directions. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I want to stress again my feeling that, in spite of this call for further action I can at the same time ask this house to reject this amendment offered by the official opposition. I say this because of the record of achievement of the present government, which I feel justifies all hon. members in this house in having a feeling of confidence that this government is capable of continuing to meet the needs that still exist for better housing for our citizens in every part of this country. Because of this confidence on my part, because of the evidence on which this confidence is based, I feel that the amendment offered is not well founded when it, in effect, criticizes the government for bringing about difficulties in the availability of funds.

I reiterate that we have reached the point where there must be a development and a putting into effect of policies under which special consideration is given to areas which still have a serious need of housing. At the same time I feel that the achievements to which I have referred are such that this house is obliged to vote against this amendment, to continue to support this government so it can continue to move ahead to deal with the housing problems that still remain in a way in which I am sure they are able to do, based on the clear record of their period in office.

Mr. Chatterton: Would the hon. member permit a question? He cited the number of housing starts during the early 60's; will he now quote the number for 1955, 1956 and 1957 resulting from the previous tight money policy of that government?

Mr. Gray: I believe I have the statistics here.

An hon. Member: We would be much more interested in the future than the past.

Mr. Gray: Yes, that is the trouble with the official opposition; they are living in the past rather than the future. I will answer the hon. member's question. I just want to make sure I have the right line here in the Canadian Housing Statistics: 1956, 95,615; 1957, 87,995; 1958, 107,839; 1959, 108,059; 1960, 90,113—goodness gracious, what happened in 1960? Do you want me to continue?

Mr. Hales: Will the hon. member permit another question? Can he advise how many of these direct mortgage loans are made to the United States citizens living and working in Windsor?

Mr. Gray: No, I am not able to do that because I do not believe the statistics are computed on that basis. If these people have come to make their homes in Windsor, they have affiliated themselves with our community, are paying taxes municipally, provincially and federally, and I think therefore that the question is irrelevant.

Mr. Keays: May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

POWER—COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED INCREASE IN ANTICIPATED COST

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on May 12 I asked the minister the following question:

> In view of press reports that there will be an over-expenditure of some $200 million on the Columbia treaty projects before they are completed, would the minister inform the house whether any reports from the federal representative on the federal-British Columbia liaison committee, or from the federal representative on the joint engineering board, indicate that the projects will cost considerably more than the government of British Columbia has received from the United States under the terms of the Columbia treaty?

My question is based on newpaper reports and other information I have obtained from British Columbia sources with respect to two things: first, faulty engineering studies and, second, the anticipated cost of other Columbia treaty projects with respect to faulty engineering studies, I wish to quote from the Nelson Daily News for February 24, 1966:

> Vancouver sources reported Wednedsay that the construction schedule at the dam has been hard hit by inaccuracies in engineering data supplied to the dam builders. Core drillings reportedly showing solid bed rock proved false when the underlying structures were found to be weakened by dirt seams and cracks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was rather surprised to read this report in view of the fact that the engineers of the federal water resources branch appeared before the standing committee on external affairs when it was giving consideration to the Columbia river treaty and protocol in April, 1964 and stated they had every confidence in the engineering studies undertaken by the water resources branch, their counterparts in British Columbia, and the various engineering consulting firms.

• (10:00 p.m.)

I just want to quote briefly from the Revelstoke Review. Mr. Strachan, when addressing a public meeting, had this to say:

> When the Columbia treaty was signed the government claimed $273 million paid for downstream benefits would be invested and with accumulated interest would total $501 million in 1973. Mr. Strachan said this was supposed to pay the cost of three dams and one half the cost of generators at Mica Creek.
> "Because of this we went ahead with High Arrow, which will flood good farm land and probably wreck some fine sport fishing," he said. "Now we find that this will not provide enough money, and that the people will have to find the balance."

Many people in British Columbia are concerned about this information, which appeared in several newspapers in the province.

In the first instance, I was surprised to find, in view of the project cost estimates submitted by the water resources branch, to be found at page 185 of No. 3, Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, Standing Committee on External Affairs, as submitted by the water resources branch, that these preliminary cost estimates used in making evaluations were made by the water resources branch and its engineering consultants.

I was also surprised, Mr. Speaker, in view of the evidence given by Mr. G. M. MacNabb of the water resources branch, to be found at page 248 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence given before the Standing Committee on External Affairs on Friday, April 10, 1964, in which he said:

> At the end of the construction period you will see that we have a surplus of $53 million in 1973, after paying all construction costs over that period.

I was also surprised in view of the evidence given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs before the standing committee on external affairs, during the course of which he was asked this question:

> Mr. Davis: The compensation for the sale of this service in monetary terms is more than enough to build the projects?
> Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh yes, there would be a surplus of $53,000,000.
>
> Mr. Davis: Some of this will go for generating on-site power.
> Mr. Martin (Essex East): That surplus will provide for about one half of the cost involved in establishing the generating machinery.

I was also surprised, Mr. Speaker, in view of the evidence given by Hon. Ray Williston, which appears at page 317 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, Tuesday, April 14, 1964. I will not quote it at length because I see my time is running out, but he recognizes, as does everybody else, that the most critical aspect of this problem occurs around the Arrow lakes. During the course of his evidence he said:

> I think our estimates are well within any costs which might occur.

I am informed that Hon. Robert Bonner, Attorney General of British Columbia, has told the press that the increased cost of the Columbia river project is caused by the 11 per cent sales tax. I would appreciate the minister informing us, when he takes the opportunity to reply, whether this tax has been responsible for the increase in the cost of building the Columbia river projects.

I was very pleased to hear the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys inform us today that as far as figures are concerned the Columbia river fund to date, with interest earned, totals $295,917,782, and that the expenditure to date has totalled $97,914,505. These figures do not tell the whole story, however, Mr. Speaker. They do not include the commitments which have been made to date, of which I have fairly good knowledge, with respect to contracts let at the present time. We must have the commitments made to date—that is, as at March 31—if we are to draw any accurate conclusions.

In my opinion the people of Canada and the people of British Columbia in particular are entitled to the facts with respect to the costs and commitments entered into in the development of the Columbia river treaty projects, and I look forward to hearing further from the minister with respect to my question, which is of interest to a great many people.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I had to rise to my feet before I had the opportunity to join in the applause. I must confess, not only as a member of parliament from a British Columbia riding but as one who has had an interest in public utilities and particularly in the development of my own province for many years, that the question put by the hon. member for Kootenay West is very timely.

We all know something about the most important developments which have been taking place of late in all parts of Canada, and more particularly in British Columbia. With the Columbia river and Peace river hydroelectric projects both going on at the same time, with the major expansion in the pulp and paper industry, that is taking place in the province, where we have plants either being put into operation, under construction or on the drawing board valued at approximately $600 million, some problems have arisen.

My mind has been more or less continuously on housing for the last four or five hours. I am going to visit Prince Rupert, in British Columbia, on Monday next, for the sole purpose of getting a first hand report on housing conditions in that part of Canada, brought about by the tremendous expansion to which I have just referred. It is enevitable because of the demand for construction workers in the area, because of the increases of wages, because of shortages of skilled labour and of materials used in dam construction, that costs should go up. That is why I say that the question put by the hon. member for Kootenay West is such a timely one.

The only assurance I can give him is that I will make sure that my colleague, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys gets in touch with the government of our province, British Columbia, to see to it that the figures we are entitled to, for which the hon. member asks, are made available as quickly as possible. I think we should have the figures. I think we are entitled to them under our agreement. As is well known, the government of British Columbia has agreed to accept responsibility for the implementation of the obligations that the federal government assumed under the treaty and under the protocol that was subsequently negotiated with the United States.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.10 p.m.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—IMPLEMENTATION IN FORM AND AT DATE ORIGINALLY PLANNED

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the house will undoubtedly recall that last July at the federal-provincial conference the Prime Minister stated that the federal government would be prepared to make contributions to provinces with respect to medical care programs if such programs met four principles established by the federal government. The hope was expressed at that time that a commencement date of July 1, 1967 would be found to be practicable.

Subsequently, at a meeting of ministers of health held early this year in Ottawa, it was announced in the final communiqué that several provinces had accepted the federal medical care proposals and had indicated their readiness to commence programs by July 1, 1967. Certain provinces, however, were unprepared to make definite commitments at that time. Nevertheless it was made clear that the objective of the federal government was to commence to make contributions on a nation-wide basis by the target date.

During recent weeks there have been further indications of readiness to proceed on the part of other provinces, through statements made in provincial legislatures. Questions have been raised in this house as to whether the federal government would proceed as from the target date regardless of the number of provinces committed to participate.

In order to make the position of the federal government quite clear in this regard, and to enable the provinces to plan in an orderly way in advance of the commencement date, I should like to state that the federal government proposes to proceed with the medical care program in the form, and from the date, originally planned. It is proposed to introduce the necessary legislation to enable the federal government to make contributions to any province having a program in operation on July 1, 1967 which meets the four established principles, irrespective of the number of provincial governments having such programs in operation at that time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a word to express a very warm welcome for the statement the Minister of National Health and Welfare has just made to the house. The statement is so welcome that I shall not make any comment about how long we have been waiting for it.

We approve of the four conditions which the government laid down when it got into business in this field, namely the coverage of most kinds of medical care, universality as far as people are concerned, all plans to be government operated, and each plan to be fully portable. The one weakness in the government's position until a few weeks or a few months ago was that the government seemed to be waiting for all or most of the provinces to indicate their willingness to come in. The announcement today that the government is prepared to bring forward this legislation and let it come into effect in any of those provinces which are prepared to co-operate constitutes a signal and important statement.

We believe that if the government will bring this legislation before parliament at an early date it will find this house ready to co-operate in order to get the measure through so that we can at last take this important step in social legislation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PRIVILEGE

MR. GORDON—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Before calling orders of the day perhaps I may be allowed to refer briefly to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon) last week, at which time I told him I would study his statement and determine whether what he had raised constituted a bona fide question of privilege. My understanding is that his statement was based on a disagreement as to what actually was said by the then minister of finance at a meeting which took place some time ago.

To my mind the fact that someone outside the house places a different interpretation than does the hon. member on what was actually said at the relevant time by the hon. member in his then capacity as minister of finance does not constitute an infringement of the rights and privileges of the hon. gentleman as a member of the house. I must rule, therefore, that there is no prima facie case of privilege.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—STOPPAGE OF WORK BY LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the collapse yesterday of the talks in the Montreal dock strike, and because of the great importance of the situation, would the minister advise the house as to his plans to bring about a settlement of the dispute? Will he now take action to sit down with the parties concerned in order to bring about a settlement and, if so, will he hold such meetings in Montreal or here in Ottawa?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the government has been considering this matter very carefully since the unfortunate development late yesterday afternoon. It is our decision to appoint a bilingual mediator, one with broad experience in this field. I am not in a position to announce the name of the mediator, but I hope to be able to do so within a matter of hours.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish the minister had gone so far as to say whether this mediator would have the power and authority to determine the course that would be followed. If the mediator does not have that power, then the national crisis facing us will not be settled. Has the government given consideration to the appointment of an administrator so the serious situation that has been created will be met instead of dawdling with it?

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Nicholson: With all due respect, I take exception to the suggestion that this matter is being dawdled with. The government appointed a conciliation board at the request of the parties, and the conciliation board's functions have been terminated by the action of one of the parties, not by the government. The usual course provided by law has been followed. As a result of yesterday's action what was an illegal strike yesterday and today may become a legal strike within a matter of days. Until that situation arises the only course that is open to the government is to have the minister, or another person with perhaps better qualifications than a minister, such as the mediator we have in mind, deal with the situation.

Mr. Starr: Whether the strike is legal or illegal, nevertheless it presents a very serious situation so far as our shipping is concerned. Instead of delaying in the appointment of a mediator, will the minister call these parties to Ottawa and have them sit down, as has been the custom in the past, to bring about a quick solution to this serious situation?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, consideration has been given to inviting the parties to come to Ottawa. There has been discussion on this with some representatives of both interests. Our feeling is that more progress will be made—and this is indicated by telegrams and other messages that have come to me from both sides—by the appointment of a mediator. That, it is felt, is the proper course to follow under the circumstances. We want to get a good mediator as quickly as possible and I think we have such a person in mind.

[Later:]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour?

In order to anticipate such disputes and in accordance with the suggestion made by the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, would the government not consider allowing workers or longshoremen to have their say within the National Harbours Board, so that they might express their views?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is not exactly supplementary to the previous one, since it deals with general policy. I do not think it is in order at this time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF FEMALE PRISONERS FROM KINGSTON PENITENTIARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General, of which I gave notice this morning and to which I understand he is prepared to give an answer. Last week the minister stated that a major policy decision was being considered almost immediately relative to the transfer of narcotic addicts from the women's penitentiary at Kingston to Matsqui in British Columbia. I am informed that this decision now has been reached. I should like to ask whether the minister would inform us of the decision, because this is a most urgent and important matter.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's active interest in the field of corrections. I am pleased to advise him that a decision now has been taken not to transfer the present inmates to Matsqui unless they so wish.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC—SUMMER WORK FOR STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration I would put my question to the Minister of Labour.

In view of the numerous applications for employment received from students who are now in holidays, is the minister or his department taking any action to enable students to get jobs during their holidays?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as acting minister I will take notice of the question and see to it that the suggestion is passed on to my colleague as soon as possible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

REPORTED HIRING OF U.S. SURVEY COMPANY BY COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Is the minister aware that the bilingualism and biculturalism commission has hired a United States survey company from Detroit to carry out a survey for the commission in the Windsor area?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that this question is not so urgent.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, with all deference I suggest it is very important.

Mr. Speaker: It may be very important, but I suggest to the hon. member that it should not be asked at this time. It could be placed on the order paper. If in the opinion of the hon. member there is a degree of urgency it might be discussed on the adjournment debate.

[Later:]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, because of the serious situation that exists in the field to which I have reference, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is aware of what is going on in the Windsor area with regard to the B and B Commission.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no one who is more aware of what goes on in Windsor than I.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—POSSIBILITY OF RECOGNITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Yesterday in reply to a question asked by the Leader of the Opposition concerning the possibility of Canada recognizing red China, the right hon. Prime Minister said he would be in a position to make a statement in this regard today after certain discussions. I am wondering whether the Prime Minister might now be in a position to make that statement.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think I said I would be in a better position today to make a statement about the discussion which my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I had with the United States ambassador to the United Nations. One of the subjects we discussed yesterday was the situation regarding China's membership in the United Nations and what may be expected to happen in this regard at the forthcoming meeting of the assembly, in so far as we were in a position to estimate what would happen. We also discussed the Rhodesian question which I understand is coming before the security council today, and other matters which might appear on the agenda of the assembly in September.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the visit of the United Kingdom ambassador, Lord Carradon, together with the expected visit of Mrs. White, Britain's Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, indicates that an early decision is to be made on the question of the recognition of communist China.

Would the Prime Minister say whether the views he expressed in his speech the other day were not generally interpreted as being indicative that communist China is to be recognized? Would the Prime Minister also assure the house that before any step such as this is taken, the membership of this house will have an opportunity to discuss it? Will he also assure us that the present republic of China on Formosa shall not be sacrificed in any way?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman has drawn more specific conclusions from my speech than I think are warranted. In so far as the visit of British officials which he mentioned is concerned, the purpose of that visit is not to arrive at any conclusion or definitive result in regard to policy respecting communist China. That may, and I am sure it will, be one of the subjects discussed, but it is not the purpose of the visit. Perhaps I will be in a position to make a report on that discussion after it takes place.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the Prime Minister indicate whether the government is giving consideration to recognition, because that was the interpretation given to the speech made in the United States by everyone able to read?

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are giving consideration to this matter, as I am sure the right hon. gentleman did when he was prime minister. I am sure his government gave continual consideration to this important matter. I can only repeat what I have already said. No decision has been made, and there has been no change in government policy on this matter.

I must point out, as indeed I did point out in my statement, that there is one very great difficulty in regard to the admission of communist China to the United Nations, in that there may be a determination on the part of the government in Peking to insist on recognition that it rules over Formosa as well as continental China. Such a determination would present a very real difficulty for representatives in the United Nations.

[Later:]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister arising out of my own reflections on some answers he has been giving in the last few days on the question of the recognition of China, to which reference was made in his recent speech. I would ask the Prime Minister to clarify whether the implications of his recent speech go beyond those in the statement made by a former prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent, a number of years ago in Tokyo, when he said that sooner or later we would have to recognize the kind of government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a question but an argument.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

STEPS TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the important statement he just made relating to medical care, I should like to ask whether the government has formulated specific plans in order to avoid the serious and critical shortage of doctors and medical manpower which will occur.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grafftey: Without being too specific, will the minister indicate to the house what are those plans?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We propose to introduce legislation as early as possible during the session to establish a health resources fund, the object of which will be to provide additional facilities for the training of medical personnel.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is consideration being given to an increase in grants for hospital construction?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, consideration was given to this question and an announcement was made last January that we were extending this particular program for an additional two years.

Mr. Winkler: I have another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I asked the minister whether consideration was being given to an increase, in view of the fact that this program will create a very acute problem in the hospital field.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

AUTHORSHIP OF LETTER CRITICIZING BROADCASTING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in order to promote the spirit of fair play and good will among members of all parties, I wish to draw the Prime Minister's attention to a letter which appeared in the May 14 issue of the Ottawa Citizen criticizing the conduct of the chairman and members of the parliamentary committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, signed by one John P. Matheson.

In view of the fact that some members, and other persons in Ottawa, are of the opinion that this letter was written by the Prime Minister's parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson), would he mind explaining this obvious case of mistaken identity?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my hon. friend for giving me notice of this question. I assure him that my parliamentary secretary wrote no such letter nor had anything to do with the writing of the letter which is, indeed, signed by John P. Matheson, not John R. Matheson.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF FEMALE DEPUTY COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General arising out of a brief which, according to press reports, was received by the government today from the Elizabeth Fry Society of Kingston. Will the minister give consideration to the appointment of a female deputy commissioner within the penitentiary system?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that this is not a very urgent question. It might be placed on the order paper.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of his reply to my question yesterday and my understanding of the terms of reference to the Wood committee, that it is to deal only with the Pension Act and not with the War Veterans' Allowance Act, will he now assure this house that some amendments to the War Veterans' Allowance Act will be placed before us at this session?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I answered in reply to this question yesterday, I am awaiting that report not because it has to do with the War Veterans' Allowance Act but because it is not impossible to imagine that the results of the inquiry might influence our thinking with respect to other parts of the veterans charter. This is why I answered in the manner I did yesterday. At the moment there is no intention in that regard, but I did not want to put it that categorically because this report might well influence our judgment as to other acts affecting the veterans charter.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister advise of the government's plans in respect of the Canada Assistance Plan, considering that the April 1 target has now been missed?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is proposed to proceed with the Canada Assistance Plan. The resolution is now on the order paper, and it is expected that the plan will be made retroactive to April 1 this year.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL DELIVERY QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Have the government and the Canadian Wheat Board set any figure as to what they hope will be the final quota farmers will be able to deliver before the end of the crop year on July 31? If they have, will the minister try to bring about a working arrangement between the elevators and the railways so that most of this grain can be moved before the last two weeks of July, which has happened in the last two or three years?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to discuss this matter with the Canadian Wheat Board who have, of course, the authority to fix quotas in an effort to promote equity amongst farmers. I know the wheat board are very anxious to achieve as high and as equal a rate as possible. I will discuss the matter with them and see if I can give a report to the house.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—REPORT OF INQUIRY RESPECTING MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport, in view of the fact that it has been several weeks since he informed the house that he had received a copy of the Thompson report, whether he can tell the house when the report will be tabled.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken in his assertion that I ever informed the house that I had received a copy of the Thompson report. I said the Privy Council office had received the report and it was being translated and printed. I hope it will be available very soon indeed.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can I take the minister's reply to mean that the story circulating in Winnipeg, that the report will not be published before the Manitoba election, is not true?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative and cannot be received.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is speculative.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—EXPLOSION OF NUCLEAR BOMB

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the People's Republic of China has just exploded what is described as the dirtiest of all nuclear bombs, is the government of Canada planning to express any strong protest through its various channels of communication to the government of the People's Republic of China?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the way in which to express such a protest is to renew, as we did yesterday, our plea to China that it should join those powers who have committed themselves not to carry out nuclear tests in the pact signed in Moscow in August, 1963.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I did not hear everything the Secretary of State for External Affairs said. Do I understand from his reply that yesterday some communication was sent to the People's Republic of China exhorting that government to participate in the nuclear bomb pact?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No communication was sent to the Chinese people's republic because at the moment Canada does not recognize that regime. But I did express the strong view that the time had come when China should join the majority of the nations of the world and adhere to the Moscow nuclear test ban.

Mr. Nesbitt: A further supplementary question. Was this view of the minister and the government—and it is a very appropriate view—communicated directly or indirectly in some way to the people's republic, other than the minister's statement?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Mr. Starr: It was communicated by mental telepathy.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION ON ELECTRONIC LISTENING DEVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might direct a question to the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice. In view of published reports indicating a substantial increase in the use of wire-tapping and other such electronic listening devices, has the minister or his government reached any decision on a national law dealing with this important and disturbing subject? If so, can we look forward at this session to a law on wire-tapping and other such listening devices?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of the hon. member's question has been studied. It is still under consideration, but no decision has as yet been taken on the matter.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the government consider reintroducing Bill No. C-103 which was before the house in 1964, sponsored by the now Solicitor General?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the government consider studying private members' Bill No. C-33 on today's order paper, dealing with the same subject?

THE SENATE

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF MORE NATIVE INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the difficulties which have apparently faced our native Indian people in having those of their own race elected to this house, would the Prime Minister follow the commendable lead set by the Leader of the Opposition when he was prime minister and consider appointing more people of Indian heritage to the other place so that in time we will have at least one member from each province?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is of a very general nature and cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Simpson: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question. As far as its urgency is concerned, I might point out that as the house is faced with a vote on a supply motion this evening, this may be the last time the Prime Minister will have a chance to consider it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is out of order.

SUGGESTED ACTION LEADING TO ABOLITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. One forward step has been announced today; perhaps we could have another. In view of the fact that Premier Lesage's promise to abolish the upper house in his province is based on a course of action taken by this government, will the government consider taking the same course of action with regard to our Senate, so we can abolish it too?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could abolish the Senate at ten o'clock tonight.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that most of my hon. friends to the left would be very glad to be in the Senate if they had the opportunity.

Mr. Monteith: We have certainly had proof of that.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—PETITION RESPECTING CHANGE IN PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he has yet ascertained from the United Kingdom government the course of action to be followed in connection with the ex parte application of the Lesage government for an amendment to the constitution to remove the upper chamber in the province of Quebec.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I can say in reply to that question that my inquiries have indicated that there is no likelihood of action being taken on this matter in the United Kingdom parliament in the immediate future.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Do they recognize the unconstitutionality of it?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MANITOBA—APPEAL OF DECISION RESPECTING HUNTING RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, on May 10 the hon. member for Churchill asked me a question, and in so doing drew to my attention the fact that a judgment of the court of appeal of the province of Manitoba had had the effect of applying the Migratory Birds Convention Act to Indians living in that province.

I want to tell the hon. member that I have found there were two cases to which the act applied the first being the Daniels case. Mr. Daniels has now told us that he would like to appeal, and we have undertaken to finance an appeal against the decision to the Supreme Court of Canada.

TRADE

TORONTO—IMPORTS OF FOREIGN GASOLINE AT DISTRESS PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Greenwood asked what action would be taken in response to the protest made by the representatives of service station operators in Ontario regarding a recent importation of gasoline into Toronto.

The letter of protest to which the hon. member referred had not reached me at the time of his question. I was aware of the shipment, however, and my officials and I have been in touch with the company concerned for some time with a view to ensuring conformity of the company with the national oil policy. I expect to have further discussions with the company in the immediate future to determine whether any special action is required. I do not think I need assure the house that the government stands firmly by the national oil policy.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which can be accepted by the Minister of Labour, the minister of northern affairs or the Minister of National Health and Welfare. May I ask one of these gentlemen whether the government has taken any appropriate action to alleviate the situation which is developing at Fortress Louisburg.

Mr. Speaker: This question seems to be of a very general nature. It is very difficult for the Chair to determine how urgent it is because it is couched in very general terms.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, it appears to be in general terms but I am sure the Minister of Labour or the minister of northern affairs, to whom I have spoken about the situation outside the house, or the Minister of National Health and Welfare, with whom I have attempted to get in touch but have spoken to his executive assistant on the matter, should have an answer to the question.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, May 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Hees.

FINANCE—TIGHT MONEY POLICY—NEGATIVE APPROACH TO PROBLEMS

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, we are now witnessing a novel situation where the official opposition has brought in an amendment to a supply motion—and the three members on the government side who have so far spoken in the debate have all admitted that there were problems in housing in Canada. I hope tonight these gentlemen will vote for the amendment, they having realized that there is a problem which must be cured in the immediate future.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Northumberland deals with the tight money policy of the government, how it is affecting the economy of the country and housing in particular. The amendment relates to the existence of this tight money policy and the economic ills which have brought it about. The tight money policy of today has been caused by the financial blunder of the budget brought down by the Ministêr of Finance.

No one speaks today of an inflation psychosis. It is real, and it is with us. As I have said, the financial blunder of the budget is the cause of this inflation. It has been brought about through the indecision of the government in monetary matters and in not using effectively the monetary machinery and techniques available to the government to check the continual decline in the value of the dollar which, if left unchecked, could lead us to the brink of bankruptcy.

I said on a previous occasion that the approach of the Minister of Finance to inflationary problems in this nation today has been negative. It has completely ignored the increase in productivity; has discouraged the expansion of production in this country; has withheld certain projects which could contribute to an expanded production; and has allowed the reduction of our productive capacities across the country. This was the negative approach taken by the government. I believe, Mr. Speaker, everyone will admit that the only possible solution to this inflationary pressure in Canada is to increase productivity.

A growing economy needs a growing supply of money, thus assuring a fairly steady growth curve. A full economy requires the full employment of our human and material resources. This is not the approach taken by those who sit on the treasury benches. They believe in a tight money policy similar to that of 1956, which opened the door to recession and retarded economic growth. Shortage of funds is not the responsibility of the banks, the insurance companies or other lending institutions. Shortage of money is the outcome of the policies of the government of the day.

If the government is sincerely in favour of tight money to fight inflation, then why does it not explain its policy to the people? It hates to face up to or discuss the problem, hiding behind the blame which is placed on the banks and the other financial institutions of this country. This is unfair to the banks and is creating a superficial inflation additional to an already existing and real one.

It is well known that tight money comes about when the Bank of Canada decreases the cash reserves of the banks or holds them constant, when growing demands exist from bank customers for more loans. The end result is that money and credit grows scarcer and inevitably dearer. The long delay in the revision of the Bank Act is the largest single contributor to the fact that today there exists in this country a tight money policy.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Since 1963 we have been speaking about bringing in revisions to the Bank Act. That, to date, has not been done, with the end result that today banks, and other lending institutions do not care over much to place their money in the mortgage field. Those institutions possibly are carrying larger cash reserves than are necessary. I believe the financial institutions want to know what will happen to them after the Bank Act is revised. Passage of this measure will greatly relieve the money supply situation. Only then will people be able to get money for house building and for urban development.

I therefore urge the government to pass this legislation as soon as possible, thereby allowing banks and lending institutions to know the conditions under which they will operate for the next ten years.

The tight money policy is affecting those who today need housing. It is also affecting the small businessmen of our country. They are the ones caught in the squeeze. In most cases they deal with consumers and if the consumers, pressed by inflation and additional living costs, cannot make ends meet, cannot look after their own material welfare, how can they pay their bills? As a result the businessman is caught in the financial squeeze, and because of the tight money policy cannot borrow more money from the lending institutions. As a result he cannot expand, and in some cases has to retrench his position because he is not paid for his products.

I am convinced that by increasing national productivity; by making more goods available and making inventories reasonably sufficient to meet daily requirements is one way of meeting inflationary pressures. However, that is not the only way to cure inflation.

I strongly urge the government to take another look at its fiscal policies, with a view to possibly changing them in order to relieve the country of the inflationary danger which now faces it. An economy to keep growing requires full employment of human and material resources. We are neglecting those whose fate it is the hardest to solve; those now living in pockets of high unemployment and poor productivity.

We must also realize that to combat inflation and the causes of tight money the government should retrench with respect to federal expenditures. I agree with this move which the government has tentatively made. However, I think it should have gone further and retrenched in expenditures on projects which by their nature are unproductive. It should have concentrated on projects in areas of high unemployment, which could have been a contributing factor to increased national productivity. That indirectly would have raised the standards of living of those who still aspire to reach the average national income.

Insurance companies and large lending institutions are in an unsecure position. They have a greater proportion of liquid assets on hand than is necessary. This is because they are awaiting the amendment to the Bank Act.

Yesterday we heard many hon. members speaking about the needs for additional housing in this country. I do not think it would be unrealistic to state that in 1966 we need not 160,000, not 170,000 dwellings, but 190,000 dwellings. Statistics will show that people now coming into the labour force, that estimated 1 million people for whom we shall have to find jobs in the near future, all aspire to having a home. It is regrettable to note that we shall build fewer homes this year than we did last year, when we ought to be building 5 per cent to 10 per cent more. Two billion dollars will be needed for mortgage financing in 1966. I hope this money will be made available, either by direct government lending or by informing lending institutions of how they will be affected by the new Bank Act, thereby possibly bringing about a release of money for the home building industry.

I am not sure whether the government is delaying construction during the summer months in order to allow more building to take place during the winter months when unemployment is higher. I would, however, utter a word of caution. In certain areas of Canada it is practically impossible to build a home in the winter as cheaply as in the summer. Many of those who were promised the $500 bonus for building during the winter months to date cannot obtain their money; not because they have not completed their houses inside; not because the houses are uninhabited, but in five cases that I personally know of because houses could not be completed owing to the rigours of the winter. I hope the minister realizes that finishing bricks, mortar and other exterior parts of houses is difficult when those building the houses face temperatures of 10, 15 or even 20 degrees below zero.

Possibly I should not neglect at this time to thank the Minister of Labour for having opened an office in the lower St. Lawrence region. That will permit prospective home builders to obtain advice and to meet at first hand the employees of the office, thereby facilitating ways and means by which funds can be obtained. I hope that opening the office does not mean that no more money is available for the lower St. Lawrence; I trust there will be funds left over for those in that region who wish to borrow.

• (3:30 p.m.)

One of the dangers of curtailing the housing program is the possible loss of our skilled labour force. The president of the National Housebuilders' Association, Mr. Gelinas, is accusing the government of having pushed house prices beyond the means of many Canadians. He also states that last year the federal government asked the industry to gear itself in readiness to double production. Obviously such planning needs an assurance that mortgage money will be available. Mr. Gelinas is reported in the Globe and Mail of April 7 as saying:

> Today the government, in its concern about inflation, has taken a deliberate course to restrict mortgage funds available under the National Housing Act. Our members have already experienced the apparent new policy which has even removed Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation from its normal role as a lender of last resort.

In some areas it appears that the corporation has declined to approve loans for presold houses to home-owner applicants. Mr. Gelinas comments:

> It is our contention that this policy is not halting inflationary trends, but rather is contributing to inflation.

When a man with the authority and experience of Mr. Gelinas speaks on this subject everyone must recognize that there is a danger attached to the restriction of the housing program. I believe that the tight money policy, if unchanged, will lead to economic disaster in those areas of Canada where there is at present a depression or where unemployment figures are high. People living in such areas never seem to reach a fair goal. When times are good across the country we bring in a tight money policy. We say there are inflationary pressures in the economy and proceed to carry out measures of retrenchment.

On the other hand, during a period of recession we tend to bring in policies beneficial to areas which have shared most in the good times and the other people to whom I have referred are left to suffer their fate. I sincerely urge the government to take a second look at those of its policies which have helped to create inflation and to introduce others designed to remove inflation as quickly as possible. They should not allow their present policies to prolong the inflationary pressures now present in our economy and which must be eradicated if we are to bring a fair degree of prosperity to our citizens.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (St. Ann): Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat surprised when I read the motion of censure moved by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) to see that the government is blamed for restricting loans made by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

People seem to think that the C.M.H.C. is a lending company which must loan money to the contractors who want to expand their industry.

Such is not my opinion because the C.M.H.C. exists only to stimulate the private sector of the building industry. I would like to quote from a booklet published by the C.M.H.C. about some of the responsibilities of that corporation which is not, in my opinion, a lending company:

As a result, the corporation is concerned with all the aspects of housing, of the expansion and development of cities. In addition to looking after mortgage loans, the corporation is concerned with research on housing, city planning and urban renewal, with the creation and expansion of the mortgage market, with the improvement of house plans and building as well as with the construction of houses to meet the needs of some particular groups, such as old people, low-income families and university students.

That is the framework within which I will discuss this afternoon the motion of censure before the house.

People seem shocked because the government is limiting borrowing sources. In a statement made last May 3, the responsible minister said:

—the government is taking, and will continue to take every step necessary to ensure a program of direct mortgage loans by Central Mortgage and Housing at the same level as that of last year when, including the fall program, loans for approximately 31,500 houses were approved—

There is no restriction. The government is undertaking today to continue the same expansion program in the housing field as last year.

The government does not refuse to guarantee loans. It is up to private industry to find lending companies which will enable it to continue its work.

Personally, since I represent a riding in the city of Montreal, I will limit my remarks to urban renewal in connection with the construction of one-family dwellings.

In Montreal now the problem is as follows: a part of the population is leaving to settle in the suburbs. The same thing is happening in most of the large cities, and that is why there are houses to rent. They are vacant because it is impossible to offer the citizens modern and sanitary housing such as they can get in the suburbs.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I have friends of my own who bought houses in the suburbs and, within a year, they were obliged to come back to live in the city of Montreal for the school boards of certain suburbs could not provide the facilities available in the metropolis. Some families must therefore come back to the big city of Montreal, where they have all the required facilities.

I do want to discuss urban renewal, because I live with this problem in the city of Montreal. I have referred to this problem on many occasions in this house, and, in my capacity as a member for 16 years of the Montreal municipal council, I shall continue to advocate urban renewal.

I am very pleased that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act was amended in 1964, precisely to facilitate these renewal developments.

The problem faced by our municipalities in the province of Quebec is that the provincial government did not always take a hard look at this problem. In all other provinces, the authorities have set up a municipal board, to provide the various municipalities with the facilities to consider the renewal problem. That is what we lacked in the province of Quebec.

The city of Montreal succeeded, in the past, in developing the housing centre known as "Les habitations Jeanne-Mance". The only outlay by the provincial government was a $1 million grant, and had it not been for the good will of the municipal administration at the time, which concentrated its work toward the improvement of the centre, "Les habitations Jeanne-Mance" would not exist today.

Since then, we have had two large sections expropriated for renewal in Montreal, that is the C.B.C. section and Victoriatown, which were torn down for improvement; but no other area was restored since the construction of "Les habitations Jeanne-Mance" in Montreal.

Even if the situation requires it, no other project is being developed at this time. But a 263-acre project called 'La Petite Bourgogne" will shortly be started, in my constituency. This 263-acre area is going to be a most difficult problem for the city of Montreal, because the province of Quebec organized the General Housing Corporation only a year ago. That body is still surveying the problems and cannot, at this time, assist in any way the municipalities which would call on its services. I hope that the government will shortly take the necessary steps to help it show what it is worth.

The evil of slums is not simply an almost latent sore but a grave illness affecting a large part of the social body of which we are all limbs. Those who have had to live in those slum areas know what it means. Unfortunately, members who live in areas where construction is largely of the detached unit type are not aware of the problems involved in renewal. It would surely be proper if every member were informed of this problem. Before lending money for the construction of single family units, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should—and will—contribute to further promotion of the renewal plan. I understand that the C.M.H.C. can do nothing unless the provincial government helps the municipalities in these areas.

The first responsibility for a building lies of necessity with the owner who must protect his building against wear and tear, make it pleasant and clean and modernize it. The tenant also has some responsibilities: he must co-operate with the owner in the maintenance of the building, or that part of the building he is using, and pay a rental appropriate to the quality of the premises.

Studies of certain housing projects in Montreal have shown that tenants do not apply to their housing the share their income would justify. Thus, the 220 tenants living in the district commonly known as Victoriatown, in Montreal, were devoting an average of 10.8 per cent of their income to lodging while, according to the C.M.H.C. scale of rents, they should have paid twice that amount, and that without considering the cost of services. Those living in the district now occupied by "Les habitations Jeanne Mance" and the C.B.C. were in a quite identical situation.

Moreover, too often the municipal land tax, far from promoting urban redevelopment, brings about a gradual deterioration of buildings; a window made more attractive, a lawn improved, a balcony or a flight of steps repaired, are all improvements increasing the land assessment of the building and, hence, the municipal taxes.

No wonder that the owner does not repair his building which falls to pieces; consequently, the municipality's main source of income dries up instead of increasing.

The role of enterprises, institutions and public bodies must not be merely that of owners or tenants, as I outlined, but also constitute an incentive for governments and small owners, so as to promote conservation, restoration and redevelopment of properties.

If the primary responsibility for urban renewal falls on the taxpayers, the initiative must be taken by the municipality whose responsibility it is to develop a program of urban renewal.

In the field of loans for the purchase of houses, federal legislation led to significant accomplishments in the province of Quebec, but in the fields of public housing, renovation and renewal, we did not get our share.

I am not trying to blame the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. If the province of Quebec did not get its share of the amounts at the disposal of the corporation, I ascribe this to the fact that it did not have, within its administration, any commission to maintain contacts between the provincial government and municipalities and the central government. This is being settled. Unfortunately, it has taken too much time; the government of Quebec thought that other problems were more urgent. I have always said that urban renovation in the city of Montreal, just like in other areas of the province of Quebec, is a matter of urgency and must come about. I hope that the Lesage government, which will be re-elected on June 5—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Loiselle: —will concentrate on this problem. I am certain that everything I said is true; the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) knows that very well but he does not want to admit it.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Two years ago last January the Montreal city council passed a motion of mine to facilitate urban renewal by private enterprise. We know that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act now provides for payment by the said corporation of up to 50 per cent of expropriation costs upon demolition of a sector. At that time, I had suggested that the city of Montreal should order some sectors torn down, after carrying out a study, with the consent of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and that, upon completion of land expropriation, this land should be resold to private concerns which would then build houses according to municipal standards and regulations, in order to give the sector a better appearance.

The fact is the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act does not now provide for the cost of renewal by private enterprise and, as a result, all fields are affected.

I have mentioned the city of Montreal, because it is my city. If it decided to expropriate certain sectors, with the agreement of the corporation, and if it could sell the land to private concerns, then the profits derived from such sales could be shared between the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the city of Montreal under a previously signed agreement. The Central Mortgage Act does not yet provide for assistance for installation of water-mains and sewage systems, for street repaving, and tree planting, etc. The act provides benefits which it is incumbent upon us to use. Unfortunately, the province of Quebec did not have in the past any opportunity to take advantage of those benefits. The city of Montreal does what it can, and in fact it adopted a building code about one year ago. By applying this code, we can prevent houses from deteriorating too fast. In some areas, we have 15- or 20-year old buildings that could be called modern slums. The building code the city council adopted will force property owners to restore and keep these buildings in good repair, so that they will not become slums which we would have to expropriate and demolish after a few years. If that building code is adequately enforced, it should accomplish a great deal.

I hope the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation will study that building code; it will then know what is expected. To prevent thousands of wage-earners from going into debt and tying up their future earnings in order to solve their housing problem, the federal government asked parliament to pass certain amendments to the C.M.H.C. Act during the 1964 session.

In order to remedy this situation, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act provides for credit and subsidies for the construction of low-cost dwellings. There is also an agreement between the federal and provincial governments on the construction of housing and rental units, where existing, dwellings are restored to house families in the lower income bracket.

But, as you know, when there is expropriation after agreement with the C.M.H.C., the city has to find housing for the small wage-earners. Now, the C.M.H.C. amendment of 1964 stipulated that municipalities or the provincial government could purchase certain existing buildings, renovate them and help the small wage-earners to move into them.

Renovating does not mean merely demolishing and building anew. There are two aspects to the problem: the first is the renovation of unsanitary dwellings; the other is the assistance required by families in the low income bracket.

In this regard, the Montreal city council expects to set up a three-fold system. I have already spoken of the Petite Bourgogne center that the city of Montreal is undertaking this spring and which will cover an area of 263 acres. The city of Montreal, in its eagerness to stimulate urban renewal, has found a formula which is unique in North America, I believe.

First, there is a grant for renewal. I spoke of that amendment in the last speech I made during the last parliament and I want to repeat it. This grant for renewal will help the owner who wants to repair his house according to the standards of the city of Montreal, the latter will be entitled to a certain amount according to the cost of repairs. That will help the owner who does not have the means to restore his dwelling and make it adequate.

Second, a grant for demolition and building. When we speak of housing, it is not only a matter of demolishing, as I said a while ago, for the purpose of rebuilding. In some cases, we must not raze everything to the ground. We can repair, renovate, demolish and rebuild when that must be done. In certain cases where the city would force an owner to tear down his building because it is not adequate or because it is substandard, the owner, if he accepts to rebuild on the same site according to the standards and regulations of the city of Montreal, will be given a grant of so many dollars by the city.

Those are advantages that, I believe, the General Housing Corporation of Quebec will make its own. I would like to see the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation include amendments concerning renovation.

Third, the city of Montreal will provide rent grants. This may seem extraordinary at first, but it is quite simple. If, by renovating, the city or a government forces a landlord to demolish and rebuild, it is logical to think that this landlord will not be able to rent the rebuilt or renovated premises for the same price as the old ones which rented for perhaps $30 or $40 a month. A modern, rebuilt apartment cannot be rented under the same conditions. That is why the city of Montreal decided to subsidize rents by giving landlords an additional amount of money fixed by the Rental Office according to the means of the head of each family, his salary, his dependents and the rent he is able to pay.

This is another amendment which would be helpful to all municipal governments wishing to make renovations. I know that all municipal administrations will not find it easy to put this amendment into practice, but I believe it can easily be done with a provincial agreement between all levels of government and the C.M.H.C.

As I said earlier, Montreal now has the "La Petite Bourgogne" project. Many other districts in the city of Montreal should be renovated, but they cannot be without the help of Quebec or the central government.

The problem of urban renewal is not confined to the metropolis. A report published some time ago showed the acuteness of the housing problem in Trois-Rivières; a few months earlier, Quebec and, recently, Westmount found it necessary to undertake some renovation.

In considering the great cost of urban renewal, one should also bear in mind that cost is of no consequence when the health of almost half the population, the development of family life and the freedom of community life are involved.

Now, I spoke of renovation. There must certainly be other ways to remedy the situation, for it must be improved. Suggestions are not always accepted by higher authorities, but they must be made, so that the authorities may see what can be done.

[Mr. Loiselle.]

Three suggestions were made in the magazine Commerce published last year. One was that the province of Quebec withdraw from the joint program offered by the national act and pass its own housing act.

It surely has deficiencies, but it also contains many provisions from which the Quebec government might take inspiration. I am not quite sure whether the Quebec government should draw up its own legislation and withdraw from this joint program. It is urgent, however, that it should take prompt action in order to help our municipalities to carry out renewal projects.

But I feel the third suggestion was the best of all. Municipalities should be left to transact business themselves with the C.M.H.C., just as other provincial governments, but part of the cost charged to municipalities should be paid, because their applications would have been approved by the C.M.H.C. This is how the "habitations Jeanne-Mance" in Montreal were built. The government of the day gave full authority to the city of Montreal to transact with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and that is how the only low-rental housing project in the province of Quebec came about. I trust that others will follow in the not too distant future, that other municipalities in the province of Quebec will be able to benefit from the Central Mortgage and Housing Act. But I would also like to see the C.M.H.C. help private enterprise, because in the field of urban renewal, it must be recognized that urban housing cannot be fully made up of low-rental dwellings; modern houses must also be built for citizens who can afford them. But private enterprise and our municipal governments must be allowed to submit such plans to the citizens of Canada. I trust that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in addition to what it is already giving, will be able in the near future to make amendments so as to promote renewal.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I consider it a great privilege to take part in a debate of this nature on a most interesting and important subject. Because of the very word "money" and its implications and the fact that it contributes to the well-being of so many people, I feel this is a most fascinating subject. It seems to me that at this time a repetition and careful analysis of the amendment itself might be useful. The amendment states:

> The policies of the government in imposing tight money and denying builders and prospective homeowners needed mortgage funds, constitute a negative approach to the problems facing our economy and are seriously impeding the development of the nation.

That is a serious indictment, and the fact that no one speaking from the government side has attempted to explain or deny that tight money exists or has explained the reseasons for its existence is indicative of the government's failure. It is not my intention to stress the problems of housing. It is rather my intention to emphasize the general desirability of not applying uniform methods to combat the present existing situation. Uniform methods cannot be successfully applied throughout the length and breadth of this country because there is too much diversity of income, diversity of climate, diversity of general economic activity and diversity in many other ways. It is impossible for any government to adopt a uniform policy to deal with a situation which we all agree exists in this country and in the United States. I refer, of course, to the danger of inflation.

The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) deserves credit for bringing this matter to the attention of the members of this house by way of his amendment. The events leading up to the present situation should be carefully examined with a view to understanding the actions of the government in dealing with the whole question of inflation or the danger of inflation.

In my view the government has permitted inflationary pressures to build up. Last year the money supply available in this country increased very rapidly. The government is now attempting to correct that situation but it is late in doing so. I am not one of those who suggest it is too late; I just say it is late. It has been the attitude of many speakers supporting the government that the attention of the house and the country generally should be directed to the fact that we have been enjoying a boom period. Certainly that is a correct statement, and it is a source of great satisfaction to each and every one of us that we are still enjoying a boom period.

It seems to me that the existence of a boom should bring about a need for the government to take appropriate action, but that is exactly what this government has not done. This government should have succeeded in balancing the budget during this boom period.

Tight Money Policy

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Flemming: There is no reason why I should not.

Mr. Nicholson: Does the hon. gentleman not agree that with a budget of some $8 billion the government has virtually balanced it by coming within $43 million of the budget estimate? The hon. gentleman has had experience in this field, so I ask him for his view.

Mr. Flemming: I should like to say that I am actually talking about the situation in 1964 and 1965. The minister was busy with one of his colleagues at the outset of my remarks and perhaps did not hear me say that I intended to deal with events leading up to the present situation.

I am sure hon. members would agree that it is necessary at times to indulge in deficit financing, and I would be the first person to acknowledge the truth of that under certain circumstances. I do not believe that is the case in times of booming economies. In this year of our Lord, 1966, we are faced with a situation which demands drastic action. I do not suggest it is too late to take action at this time and I am not one who is particularly pessimistic about the outcome, but the government must recognize certain basic fundamentals if it is going to deal with the situation. One fundamental that must be recognized by the government is that it cannot deal with every section of this country in the same way.

Last year we experienced a reduction in income tax and an enlargement and extension of the supply of money. However, production did not grow to the same extent as the gross national product. We should have learned from this fact that it is necessary to maintain productivity at about or more than the same level as the gross national product. Surely that is a reasonable statement. But that was not the case last year.

How does one maintain this level? That is a very good question, Mr. Speaker, and I propose to answer it to the extent I am able. I have referred to boom times and the question of deficit financing. In booming times we should balance the budget and indulge in that kind of cyclical financing which brings about a surplus in good times to provide for the proverbial rainy day. It is my observation that this sort of doctrine is not popular in this day and age. Everyone wants men and women in public life to get up and advocate more and more spending. In my opinion the government should have followed a different course in attempting to balance the budget.

We heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) say in the house a few days ago that there was to be a great upsurge in capital investment this year. This we were glad to hear. But we find there has been no great curtailment in public spending. The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays) mentioned this in the course of his remarks. It seems to me to be a matter of ordinary common sense that in a period when private enterprise is willing to increase its investment by the almost astronomical figure of 13 or 14 per cent over last year the government should of necessity curtail some of its expenditures, particularly along certain lines. What are those certain lines? I submit, Mr. Speaker, that in the important matter of credit certain steps must be taken. I happen to be one of those who went through the depression of the 1930's and I submit that looking back on those days one realizes that certain situations could have been pretty well cured had a supply of credit been available to business.

Therefore I submit that a sufficient supply of credit is one important way to meet difficult situations. In this day and age when inflation is at least considered I believe credit should be available for certain things. One is the expansion of business. My hon. friend from Northumberland in the course of his remarks said that business should be encouraged to expand. I do not think that every business should be encouraged to expand in times like these when the government—and I give them full marks in this respect—is attempting to deal with a difficult situation. Since I do not believe that every business should expand I think it is proper for me to name those that I think should expand. In this category I place first those businesses which are producing goods for export, because we have a balance of payments problem. I think we should also encourage those industries producing goods which we are importing at the present time. In my opinion these two things go pretty well together.

I think there should also be some selectivity of regions. We in the Atlantic provinces happen to be in one region of Canada where incomes are below the national average. I do not overemphasize this but it is the situation in our part of the country and it is one that Canada as a whole has to deal with. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit for the consideration of the government, and especially for the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) who is in his seat, that some way should be decided upon whereby the government, faced with the special situation which exists in the Atlantic provinces, will not deal with this situation in the same way as it deals with a region of Canada where there is tremendous overactivity.

I cannot give the house any great words of wisdom in this connection, but I would refer to the so-called castor oil treatment, as it was called, and for the information of the minister I would say that I knew something about the castor oil treatment statement. In 1956 I was in a position of some public responsibility and it came to my attention that people in New Brunswick with raw materials at their disposal, with plant and personnel available and with markets for their finished products, were unable to go ahead because of the tight money policy of the then Liberal government. I was informed that the amount of money in circulation had been reduced substantially by the action of the Bank of Canada. I was told that the reason for this was inflation in the central provinces of Canada. I said, "Perhaps there is inflation in the central provinces of Canada but there is no inflation down here in the Atlantic provinces, so this sort of thing will not do."

At that time I said it would be just as ridiculous to have a uniform policy of credit availability for all ten provinces of Canada regardless of general economic conditions as it would be for a mother of ten children to give them all castor oil regardless of their individual needs. I believe the same principle applies today. Therefore I ask the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, to take this message to his colleagues in an attempt to exert moral suasion over them in order that a special program may be made available for the people of the Atlantic provinces, one of which is the minister's native province.

In this respect we find history repeating itself. Ten years later we have another Liberal government applying the same treatment to a simiar situation. So I say there should be a more liberal—with a small "l"—policy applied to the Atlantic provinces than is applied to the provinces of central and western Canada. In this connection I should like to read from the last Newsletter issued by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council in which they speak about the question of a special situation. It seems to me this bears repeating and placing on Hansard. The article was published in March, 1966, and says:

> The general conclusion appears to be that in the Atlantic provinces, where the problem is greatest, the program has been less successful than in the rest of Canada during its initial period.

They are talking about the designated area program, but their words apply in general terms to the whole economic situation. The article goes on to say:

> It is designed to meet the general Canadian problem of low income and high unemployment in small areas in an environment of high income and employment. Since the problem in the Atlantic provinces is quite different, there would appear to be no reason to anticipate that this situation will change significantly.

Then they go on to say:

> In a country as large and diverse as Canada it is quite unrealistic to adhere to a rigid formula devised on broad national considerations which fail to recognize regional differences. The concern should not be with the application of a formula but with the social and economic development of a nation. There should be no great obstacles to the introduction of sufficient flexibility to permit the designation of the whole Atlantic region in the interest of its development and of Canada's.

I am not particularly arguing the latter point at the moment; I am making the point that there is this difference and I believe it should be treated as a situation different from that which exists in other parts of Canada to which these remedial measures, in so far as the danger of inflation is concerned, are being applied. I should also like to read from this document marked Exhibit B what was said at the first conference of the Atlantic provinces:

> Through its monetary and fiscal policies the federal government has wide powers to control the level of economic activity in the country as a whole. In the last decade, however, there have been many occasions when policies which were sound for the national economy were not suitable for the economic situation in this region. For example, a policy of high interest rates may be called for to check inflation when the economy, considered as a whole, is fully employed. But the effect of high interest rates on the Atlantic region, when resources are not fully employed, may be most adverse.

That is the message I should like to give through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Labour, and I am sure he will give it every consideration. I return to the question of selectivity of industry. Under this heading I ask the same question which I asked before and have already answered, namely, what type of industry should be encouraged? The answer is industry which exports and industry which provides goods we now import. We should also pay some attention to the development of natural resources, something in which we in Canada have a natural advantage.

I am connected with a business which exports practically its whole production and always has. I also know similar types of businesses which do this. There are many other businesses of like nature which could expand but they cannot do so without credit. So again this is my basic reason for bringing to the attention of the house the fact that it is not only difficult but is not a good thing to have a fixed, rigid principle in these matters.

I am one who believes in long term loans, and by "long term" I mean 10, 12 or 15 years. There are many businesses which could expand and purchase more machinery. We must acknowledge the fact that today we are living in an age of automation. Machinery is expensive and cannot always be manufactured in Canada. Even the tooling expense is very great. If only ten machines of a certain type are made and a great tooling expense is involved, the cost becomes prohibitive. So these machines sometimes have to be brought in from the United States or some other country.

The point I am making is that to increase productivity we should buy more machinery. If people are able to borrow money over a 10, 12 or 15 year period and make repayments which are constant so they know exactly the cost per month of that machinery and equipment, then it seems to me that this is a policy which should be encouraged by the government or by any government with responsibilities to its people.

It has been said that it is incredible that industry should slow down at a time of good demand for our products in world markets. Would anyone disagree with that proposition? That is what the hon. member for Northumberland said yesterday and I am sure no one would disagree. It is incredible that industry should slow down.

The hon. member also said that sales are being lost because our prices are not competitive. I do not propose to embark upon a dissertation on the question why our products are not competitive. In many respects I think they are competitive. I think our exports are deserving, and I am sure that the minister, with his great experience in business, realizes that generally speaking we are quite competitive. So far as our steelworkers are concerned, I think they are second to none.

I think that very often production or productivity and expansion of industry are curtailed—this is particularly so at the present time—due to the fact that people are unable to get credit and spread their repayments over a period of time. Do not the figures showing the reduction in exports prove my point? If I go back to 1965, our exports increased by a very small percentage, certainly not nearly as much as they should have increased had other methods been adopted.

It has been said that the present existing, strong inflationary pressure is caused by a shortage of goods. This brings me to the question of how we deal with inflation. Do we apply a negative policy of restricting credit or a positive policy of producing more goods? I think these are the questions which the government must answer, and they have chosen to answer them in the negative. The government have chosen to say that it is better to curtail credit. By the policy they are apparently supporting they have chosen to say it is better to reduce the amount of money available for goods than to make money available for production of more goods. That is where the matter stands at the present time, Mr. Speaker.

It has been said that we need financial incentive to increase productivity. I am one of those who believe in this doctrine. I believe that financial incentive to increase productivity is one of the ways in which industry in general and the people connected with industry can stimulate production. This goes right down to the worker himself. People with financial incentive and a production bonus are those whose business today is going full blast; they are the people working overtime. This involves reward for effort made and interest taken, and I submit that the government have the means available to do something along this line.

It has been said that the gross national product was nearly double the increase in exports last year. It has also been said that mortgage money should be provided for the average home, not for the expensive luxury home, not for the apartment house, but for the average home. I am sure we all recognize that what really builds a country are the citizens of the country who own their own homes. These citizens immediately acquire an interest in their homes and they have a stake in their country. They take great pride and care in their homes because they are theirs.

[Mr. Flemming.]

I have no reason to believe that our home-building policy will change. However, I submit to the minister for his consideration that if the choice lies between a big office building or apartment house and 25 or 30 small houses he should decide in favour of the small houses.

Another factor to bear in mind is that homes are very important to the expansion of industry. Expansion of industry calls for increased personnel possessed of technical knowledge and skills. The first thing these people look for in a given locality are homes to live in. I know certain areas where such homes are not available. These people require housing and schools for their children and if they are not available they will decide to go elsewhere.

It has been said—the hon. member for Northumberland made this point too—that insurance companies should invest in small towns in rural areas. I believe that is true, but the experience we have had in trying to persuade large companies to invest in this way has not been encouraging. I submit that especially in the Atlantic provinces such investment should be made.

It has also been said that the government should earmark funds for the particular purpose of providing loans. In this connection I am certain that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) would tell us that the Industrial Development Bank is available for this purpose. The Industrial Development Bank is available for the purpose, but unfortunately I do not think the Industrial Development Bank is carrying out the function for which it was established. The function for which it was established was to make term loans and provide loans ordinary banks were not able to furnish under their charters. I believe that is the reason for having the Industrial Development Bank. However, today we find that the Industrial Development Bank is not easy to deal with. In fact, it has become a money making machine. Let me say that I am one who believes in profits. Profits make a business go. Profits make good times not bad times. I believe, however, that the Industrial Development Bank should be a little more lenient in its approach than are the chartered banks because it is allowed to be more lenient by the terms of reference that set it up.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I think it might be interesting if I were to read what has been said about the Industrial Development Bank and what it should be doing. I will do so, Mr. Speaker. I read from the Newsletter of March, 1966:

> The bank, when considering an application for a loan, must be satisfied that the proposed project is reasonable and sound, the management efficient, and the plan capable of carrying the additional financial burden.

No one will quarrel with that. I continue:

> The money obtained through the bank may be used to purchase land and buildings, alter or enlarge existing buildings, construct new buildings, or to purchase machinery and equipment.

I think that is true. Unfortunately, it does not work out in practice. I am wondering how much the present tight money policy has to do with the attitude of the people who are administering the affairs of the Industrial Development Bank. The deputy minister of trade and commerce is, I believe a member of the board. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce were here I would ask him to carry a message to his deputy who is a director. Instead, I ask the Minister of Labour to carry my message to the director. It is: Is it not possible to be more lenient especially toward the Atlantic provinces which need the financing?

I continue reading:

> The Bank does not provide funds to finance inventories or receivables, but it may in a few carefully considered circumstances—

That does not make any difference because it is a function of the chartered banks, as the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) knows.

> —extend a loan to assist working capital requirements. In instances where a business may benefit from a change of ownership, the bank may consider a loan to help finance this necessary transfer.

We hear a lot of talk about United States ownership of our businesses. I am not scared of that. If somebody comes along, invests his money in Canada and is willing to comply with our laws, then he has made a contribution to the general well-being of this country. I am not a bit alarmed about that sort of thing. As a matter of fact, I know of many businesses which would not be in existence today had it not been for the financing they were able to secure in the United States.

I do not for a moment go along with those gentlemen who express fear because some people outside this country have a stake in businesses inside this country. Such people are subject to Canadian laws just as citizens of this country are. Where could we get the money to develop the country, because we have an undeveloped country, if it were not from the United States of America? I have seen figures as to the amount which would be required to purchase the interest now held by people in the United States. They are astronomical and so large that I could hardly quote them. It is beyond our ability to have that much money.

I now return to my subject, from which I digressed. The Newsletter continues:

> Although the purposes for which the Bank may allow funds are numerous, primarily IDB is interested in the groundwork financing of a "soundly conceived new business".

I submit that a soundly conceived new business is not very much different from the expansion of an existing business. Both are going to employ more Canadians. Both are going to export and assist in helping with the general balance of payments problem.

In connection with loans I would submit that the Atlantic provinces are fertile ground for loans. As I understand it, 35 applications for loans connected with projects in the Atlantic provinces have been received, compared with 68 from the rest of Canada. On page 2 of the Newsletter there is the following:

> This means that there has been about one application to every 12,600 members of the labour force in designated areas in the Atlantic provinces and one to every 8,500 in designated areas in the rest of Canada. These applications represent an investment of $35 million in the Atlantic provinces and of $101.25 million in the rest of Canada.

It should be the reverse. I do not wish to weary the house by reiterating all those things I have tried to point out to the best of my ability. I only want to summarize briefly what I have tried to say. I think the government is making a grave mistake if it tries to have a fixed and uniform credit policy applying to all parts of our great country. Conditions across the country from place to place are so very different that this would be an impractical policy.

I return now to the question before the house, our regret that the government has imposed a tight money policy. I should be interested in hearing the minister's explanation for the imposition of tight money. I should also be interested in knowing what he wishes to do with respect to mortgage funds for home owners.

I have been quite disappointed in some of the speeches which have been made in the last two days. But I repeat that this is one debate at least for which we should not apologize. Nothing could be more important than the discussion of the availability of money in Canada at the present time. Getting the views of all hon. members on this question is of vital importance to the nation and of interest to the government.

Therefore I say to the government that it will not be successful by having a uniformly inflexible fiscal policy for this country. I feel it should introduce some degree of flexibility with respect to credit, and when I say that I have the Atlantic provinces in mind. I also believe that businesses in general should not all be treated in the same way, that there should be diversity of enterprise, that perhaps one business ought to be encouraged at the moment and another perhaps not encouraged to the same extent.

This is the sort of message I have tried to get across. These are the sorts of things which I think deserve the consideration of the government. I appeal to the government to take some notice of the representations which have been made.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we have before us a very serious amendment concerning the credit restrictions imposed on home builders and home buyers.

During the 1965 election campaign, I warned the people in Quebec and Canadians in general, against the credit restrictions that the government would impose on us once the campaign was over.

Since November 8, 1965, we have seen credit restrictions being imposed in the United States, urging American investors to stop or decrease their investments. In the past few months, the Minister of Finance has been telling us that the various branches of his department have to submit to credit restrictions for a certain time in many fields, and more especially in the home building field.

There is a strong tendency to slow down home building through measures as drastic and extravagant as those advocated by the government at present.

Between 1964 and 1965, there was a marked improvement in the construction field. However, this improvement has failed to meet the constant demand for housing units in our country.

Even though the demand was greater than the financial situation allowed at the time, now in 1966, a slowdown is called for in the construction field.

Mr. Speaker, I entirely disagree with the member for St. Ann (Mr. Loiselle) who said that the C.M.H.C. has not imposed any credit restriction nor reduced the opportunities for building.

Now I think I am appealing to people who know a little more than the hon. member for St. Ann about housing construction in Canada, especially in the Ottawa-Hull area.

I have here a copy of a letter sent on April 26, 1966, to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and to the leaders of the various political parties in the house by Mr. John Hilson, president of the Building and Construction Trades Council of Hull-Ottawa and District. Here is what Mr. Hilson wrote to the Prime Minister of Canada on behalf of local builders:

[English]

Dear Sir:

Faced with the most serious unemployment in the construction trades that Ottawa has experienced for many years, I am appealing to you on behalf of the Ottawa Building Trades Council to take whatever steps are possible to substitute a program of planning for employment in place of the present situation in which we are facing planned unemployment.

At the end of March we appealed to the government to reverse its cut-back on its construction program for the Ottawa area. At that time the government had announced a cut-back of one-third of its estimates for construction in the current year for this area. The cut-back for the Ottawa area was one and a half times the total cut-back for the rest of Ontario.

We were greatly concerned at that time by the fact that of a work force of approximately 8,000 persons in the construction industry in the Ottawa area, some 1,700 were out of work representing an unemployment rate of over 20 per cent. With regard to the prospect of a seasonal improvement, we were very much discouraged by the fact that building permits issued had dropped from $25,000,000 for the first quarter of last year to $10,500,000 for the first quarter of this year.

A letter from Hon. G. J. McIlraith made light of our concern and predicted a "general pick-up in the spring". Instead of a pick-up there has been a steady worsening in the employment situation as projects have been completed and no new projects are available to provide further employment for the workers laid off.

The Hon. G. J. McIlraith referred to the excellent employment situation that existed during the past winter and it would appear that his optimism is based on past events rather than assessment of what is happening now and what can be expected in the future.

One of our affiliated unions which handles 90 per cent of the total structural steel erection for this area reports over 30 per cent of its members are unable to obtain employment in the Ottawa area. If the steel is not going up now, there will be further worsening of the employment opportunities for other trades in the immediate future. Other construction unions report high and worsening unemployment. Figures on unemployment among our affiliates run as high as 40 per cent, with workers leaving the area because of the poor prospects.

The letter continues:

Since we made our previous protest, the predicted spring pick-up has failed to materialize and the construction industry is faced with further difficulties as a result of tight money. While we do have occasional conflicts of interest with our employers in the construction industry, we naturally share with them concern as to the future of our industry in this area. We sympathize with them in the difficulties and bankruptcies which are inevitable unless some positive action is taken.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that those people have the experience necessary to call the government's attention to the harmful effects which result from the application of a restrictive monetary policy.

I am wondering at this stage how it is that a government such as ours, a Minister of Finance such as ours, can find the financial means needed to make interest-free loans to foreign countries and, at the same time, with the utmost seriousness, impose credit restrictions on our own people, on those who are ready and willing to develop our country and their respective provinces.

In addition to that letter from The Building and Construction Trades Council, I have here a letter from the provincial Association of Building Contractors of Quebec, from the town of Mount Royal, to the effect that the president of that association supports the Henry report on housing.

Mr. Fernand Boissé, of Sherbrooke, president of that association says:

The report prepared by Mr. Robert Henry, editor in chief of Bâtiment, for the Association of Building Contractors of Montreal, includes all the problems which the housing industry must face in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the president of that association of building contractors must certainly know as much about that matter as the hon. member for St. Ann who tells us that there is no restriction.

We know that in all our ridings the C.M.H.C. is subject to restrictions ordered by the government, which hamper the building of houses.

Are they trying to prevent the construction of houses because people are well accommodated in our cities or urban areas? Are they not rather preventing the construction of such houses because there is a shortage of funds, in other words, a shortage of credit?

And when there is a shortage of credit, Mr. Speaker, one never hears a minister blame that monetary policy.

I heard the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming) former premier of New Brunswick, tell us: If we cannot borrow from the United States, what will we do? The United States are there to supply us with the funds needed to keep up our construction or development.

Mr. Speaker, the ministers, the government, even each federal member should consider this very important question: How is it that the United States are able to loan money to every country in the world and, at the same time, not borrow from any of them? No one is asking himself that question. Where is the money that the United States can supply to the whole world coming from? Loans to Viet Nam, loans to Russia, loans to Canada, loans to any country in the world. And the United States never borrow a nickel or penny from any country whatsoever. Who is making the credit of the United States?

Does credit grow on trees in the United States more than in Canada?

I stress that point, Mr. Speaker. When we have here, in Canada, the necessary brains, good will, materials and physical possibilities to build houses so as to lodge our people adequately, why do we have, to ask the United States permission to build housing units or develop our natural resources?

Why do we not put our financial system in order, instead of always suggesting to the people to tighten their belt, and putting our builders on the brink of bankruptcy with tight money policies? Why do we always have to ask permission from the United States? Who makes credit in the United States? Where do they get the credit or the money they need to lend billions of dollars to Canada?

Were the United States concerned about knowing whether there was not enough money to develop Ungava, in Quebec? Were the United States short of credit to buy the oil production of Alberta and the western provinces? No indeed. The United States monetary problem is settled on the spot. Why? Because the magnates, those in control, live there, and they are the ones who give orders to countries like ours.

And people talk about parliament's supreme authority, Canada's sovereignty, Canada's independence.

In the field of housing, Mr. Speaker, do we need the United States' permission to build small houses? Do we need the United States' permission to clear away the slums in the city of Montreal, for instance? And we know how many slums there are, not only in the city of Montreal, but in every city. We see slums in all cities, all towns and villages, in the country all over Canada. Are we short of materials, as I said a moment ago, to replace these slums by sound houses? No. We have everything except credit. And because we do not have credit, the building of houses is restricted. That is why this tight money policy is inadmissible.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I consider well-advised the amendment moved yesterday by the opposition to the effect that the policies of the government, in imposing tight money and denying builders and prospective home owners needed mortgage funds, constitute a negative approach to the problems facing our economy and are seriously impeding the development of the nation. It is admitted that these tight money policies seriously impede the development of our country.

I go on quoting the letter of the Quebec province Association of Building Contractors.

Mr. Boissé says:

It will be recalled that during the recent construction strike in Montreal, a brief had been prepared and released to the press as well as to the highest provincial and federal authorities. The brief, entitled "Survey of the residential industry and the causes threatening its immediate disappearance" contains a full statement, based on statistics, of the causes of deterioration of an industry essential to the public: housing.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Fernand Boissé, who has long been striving to secure for the housing industry the right to negotiate labour agreements with the unions, adds: The day is past when the builders kept mum, leaving the industry at the mercy of the government's lack of interest. Everyone, the ministers first of all, must now realize once and for all that the housing industry is not an economic endeavour like the others and that vague slum clearance projects will not solve the No. 1 problem of Quebec families: to own their homes and to be adequately housed at reasonable prices. Slum clearance is not enough, says Mr. Boissé, but new ones must be prevented from developing. Only through direct association between private industry—that is the builders—and the General Housing Corporation can the government adequately solve problems that are not only administrative, but also technical and human problems.

The Henry Report, adds Mr. Boissé, perfectly represents the position of our industry: On the brink. It also indicates that the builders are not alone on the brink: any threat to the housing industry involves the people's right to own their homes and to be adequately housed.

Mr. Fernand Boissé adds: "We have asked again and again that a builders union be authorized under which would permit to select of builders, clean up the market, progress and serve the public better. The provincial government has only to append its signature. But it is essential for the public. Our request is sensible: electricians, plumbers, real estate operators all have unions. Why is the builder, who hires such plumbers and electricians and has the responsibility for those houses and apartments, why should he not be entitled to a union?

This is obviously under provincial jurisdiction.

Home builders and the public, adds Mr. Boissé, will no longer be satisfied with promises, still less with silence.

The provincial Association of Building Contractors of Quebec comprises nine local associations covering the whole province, namely Montreal, Quebec, Sherbrooke, Hull, Bois-Francs, Saguenay, Lake St. John, Joliette, Drummondville, Thetford Mines and almost all residential housing.

Here is a testimonial to the fact that credit restrictions are unacceptable in a country where everything remains to be done, in a country where tens of thousands of homes are lacking to house our people properly. And contractors from the Ottawa area, Mineault Desnoyers Construction, write to us along the same lines:

Mr. Desnoyers says:

The home building industry in the Hull area is deeply hurt by the credit restrictions of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the lending companies.

A member of the government has just said that C.M.H.C. does not impose any restrictions. It is obvious that the housing construction industry is now in utter chaos. In his letter, Mr. Desnoyers continues:

The majority of the housing projects in the area are financed by C.M.H.C. Because of the small number of loan companies that grant direct loans in our region, the C.M.H.C. remains the main source of mortgage loans.

When the buyer of a house asks the C.M.H.C. to finance him, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) tells him to go to private enterprise, insurance companies, those that lend money outside C.M.H.C. Why then was it created? Why was it instituted? To serve the people or to annoy them?

Yesterday, my colleague for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) said, and rightly so, that the present government drains individual and company earnings into the purchase of government bonds, and the government endeavours to finance individuals and private companies. It is not up to the government to do that. Its duty is to see that the public in general is treated fairly and reasonably. C.M.H.C. was created precisely to facilitate the removal of slums in Canada and the building of dwellings to house our Canadian families. And Mr. Desnoyers pursues:

> These measures put us, the builders, in a desperate situation where huge amounts have already been committed through the purchase of land or other agreements.
> This causes losses and considerable increase in the cost of operations. The housing construction market will be flooded with requests for mortgage loans and applicants will be refused the required funds. We maintain that the present restrictions are inflationary and that they benefit profiteers who give conventional loans at usurious and prohibitive rates of interest.
> To conclude, we protest energetically against that policy which we consider to be discriminatory to one particular industry which gives employment to thousands of workers.

In this case, Hull is concerned in particular, but we know the problem exists everywhere.

In my own area, I have asked time and time again the C.M.H.C. to open an office in Rouyn-Noranda. Those two cities have a total population of 35,000 inhabitants. It is an area inhabited by more than 150,000 people and the C.M.H.C. does not give us any answer. The government does not take a stand.

According to reports made on television, Abitibi would be an underdeveloped area where there are slums. There are no more than in the city of Montreal. But the problem is not solved. We need the help of the C.M.H.C. We do not want the corporation to own those houses, but we want it to help private enterprise make possible adequate and low cost housing, for our Canadian families.

And Mr. Desnoyers says in his letter:

> In closing, we strongly protest against this policy we think unfair for a particular sector of industry that provides employment for thousands of workers. In view of those facts, we demand that measures be taken immediately to free the direct loan market and that private companies be forced to put up the required funds for loans guaranteed by C.M.H.C. We support any other measure that will contribute to rectify this systematic freezing of funds to the detriment of our industry and our people. Remedial action is needed immediately and any delay can only make the situation increasingly serious.
> Desnoyers Construction Ltée.
> And it is signed: Charles Desnoyers, President.

I cautioned the Canadian people against credit restrictions in November 1965. Now, those people did not believe in credit restrictions. As a matter of fact, the government loudly stated that credit would never be restricted. They even said then, as Jean Lesage now claims, that I was a witch-hunter. The sorcerers and the witches are in the government now, and it is true that we are going to hunt away as much as we can, because we cannot admit credit restrictions in a country where everything remains to be done, where everything has to be built.

We have a Canadian people that is capable, determined to develop what has to be developed in this country and credit restrictions laid down by the federal government are going to slow down the progress of business in Canada.

The government should be the first to object to that restrictive policy which is preposterous. And yet the same government is so open-handed with the funds it gives to foreigners. Was there any discussion at all on the grant of $1,625,000 to Jamaica for the construction of a sewer system, for the construction of a bridge, for the construction of a highway in the region? That 60-year loan to Jamaica was interest-free.

The government quite readily makes interest-free loans to foreigners, but it makes interest-bearing loans through C.M.H.C. to house Canadians. Then the government says it is impossible to do otherwise and that, in these times, we must tighten our belts and accept sacrifice. Have the Canadian people not made enough sacrifices in the past to serve the magnates of finance and the Canadian and American bankers who control the economic blood of the nation? Open-handedness or liberalities for foreigners; restrictions for Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to repeat that I see no objection to our assisting underdeveloped countries such as Jamaica, Tobago or Commonwealth countries located in the Caribbean. I agree that we should help them, but let us at least help our own citizens. How can we help others, if we are not able to help our own people?

All slums are not done away with. What happens now, with the restrictions on credit? We create poverty. The government gives the restrictions its blessing and, instead of fighting poverty, it now fights the poor.

It is nobody's secret that when we go through lower Montreal, we can meet people earning less than $2,400 per annum, workers who live in slums, and I would even say, in dog houses. Mr. Speaker, we allow people to live in such houses. Canadian mothers, fathers and children presently live in dreadful conditions in the very city of Montreal, the metropolis of Canada, the second French-speaking city in the world. Slum areas still exist, not only in Montreal but in Toronto.

I was in Brockville yesterday and I saw slums there. They are everywhere, in spite of our having the means and the power to make them disappear and provide adequate housing for our people; but credit restrictions are allowed, ostensibly to fight inflation while actually the contrary is true.

Credit restrictions will raise interest rates. When interest rates rise of course houses cost more. The government runs true to form after levying the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. On the one hand, the government generously grants a $500 bonus for winter-built houses then it turns around and slaps a sales tax on building materials which raises by $1,000 the cost of a $13,000 to $14,000 house.

The government thinks it is generous to the Canadian people. Why always crush those who are building up the country? Are we here to crush the Canadian people or to serve them? We are here to serve the people; let us then serve them instead of kotowing to the big financial interests. Then perhaps we will have found an acceptable solution.

The other day, I heard the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Berger) repeat his charges whereby we, the créditistes, are always concerned with one and the same thing: money. What about the government? It is always concerned with the same thing. What is credit restriction? Instead of issuing money when the economy is buoyant, when Canadian production can reach a new high the money is restricted to punish the Canadian people. Well, the Canadian people, the population of the province of Quebec, will not put up very long with this policy of restriction.

Mr. Speaker, we have had our fill of these far-fetched solutions which always mean that finance must be protected and that the Canadian people must foot the bill. I think that the classes of Canadian society have suffered enough in the past from this belt-tightening policy, which allows poverty to exist in the midst of plenty.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by saying that what Canada needs at present is a policy of credit expansion according to our possibilities. And I repeat now that the point is not at all to issue money or credit without any consideration, but to develop the country, build houses and develop our natural resources according to our physical possibilities and our capacity.

In a few days, we will consider the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. The minister knows the facts because he is aware of our great possibilities, not only in the province of Quebec but all over Canada.

We should consider these physical possibilities and adjust our financial system accordingly. I am convinced that we would then serve the best interests of the Canadian nation as a whole.

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I must confess that when I listened yesterday to the remarks of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) which preceded his amendment I felt somewhat like the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) in that I found great difficulty in deciding just where the hon. member was heading. His remarks were interesting, but I wondered about their direction.

Yesterday there happened to be an observer in the house—not a member I might add—who supplied the answer to my question about the hon. member's remarks. This morning he was thoughtful enough to draw my attention to an address that was prepared and delivered by the hon. member for Northumberland in Lindsay, Ontario, on May 13 to the Ontario Municipal Association. I myself address municipal organizations on occasion because I find they provide a good forum for political speeches. Rather, it was because of the fact that the hon. member's speech was a political speech delivered to a political association that I found myself in the same difficulty as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, because the unconnected political speech preceded the motion.

If you compare that speech with the speech delivered by the hon. member in the house yesterday, you will find that the last five and a half pages are much the same as the last four columns of the hon. member's remarks as they appear in Hansard for yesterday. There was one difference. The hon. member was speaking in generalities. He spoke about tight money in generalities, he spoke about immigration, high-rise apartments, luxury suites and other things in generalities, but he never did mention any facts or figures to support these general statements.

The hon. member did make some statements about immigration. In that lies the one difference. He said employment had been increasing steadily for the past five years in Canada and that we should have opened the doors to more immigrants. I agree entirely that we need more immigrants and that we should open our doors and welcome them. I am proud to say that I played some part in doing just that, opening and holding open the doors. The figures on immigration for the last nine years will reflect what I have said.

In the year 1958, the first full year in which the official opposition was in power, the total number of immigrants admitted to Canada was 124,851. In 1959 that number dropped to 106,928. In 1960 it dropped still further to 104,111. In 1961 the figure dropped to 71,689. In 1962 the figure was slightly higher but still only 74,586. In 1963, the first year in which this government took office and we were in office for only two-thirds of that year, immigration jumped from 74,000 in 1962 to 93,151 in 1963, to 112,606 in 1964 and to 146,758 in the year in which I happened to be the minister. That is more than double what it was for the last two years when the hon. member for Northumberland was a member of the former government.

I am happy to say that the indications are that as a result of the change in immigration policy which has taken place over the last two years there will be a still higher figure, with an additional 20,000 to 30,000 immigrants coming into Canada in 1966, many of them with skills and others with strong backs and aptitudes which will make them desirable citizens of this country.

I said I found it difficult to follow the remarks of the hon. member, but I also felt that his remarks on immigration should not go unchallenged. In the light of the remarks not only of the proposer of the motion but in light of the tenor of the remarks of other speakers during the course of the last day and a half, it might be appropriate and perhaps helpful at this time if I spoke briefly about some of the facets of our housing situation.

Most of the speakers have been prone to ignore and forget the real facts of this troublesome period in our housing history. It is my sincere hope that a frank expression of a few thoughts on a matter of such national economic and social significance may assist us to have a better over-all view of the picture. It is, of course, no secret that all of us in this house have been the recipients of, I would say, a massive aggregate number of telegrams, letters and other communications from organizations and individuals. The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) has just read two or three of them. We have received this correspondence during recent weeks. The main purpose of all this correspondence is to ensure that the cabinet and other members of parliament are fully cognizant of the difficulties being encountered in obtaining adequate mortgage financing for the year 1966 in respect of residential construction.

It is quite likely that this correspondence accounts largely for the motion we are now debating. But another purpose of the correspondence is undoubtedly to prod the government into finding a solution for this problem, trying to put it on the shoulders of the government. I am very sorry that the hon. member for Northumberland and the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming) are not here because they have both come forward as friends of free enterprise. In fact, we heard the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton bragging about it this afternoon. There is no reason why he should apologize for being a great believer in free enterprise; I happen to be one myself. But I ask hon. members to keep in mind constantly that what has happened has been brought about by the free action of the private lending institutions in this country and is a direct result of the great prosperity, the boom in which we now find ourselves.

On this point I should like to make two or three very brief comments. I am prompted to do so by some of the remarks the hon. member for Villeneuve made just a few moments ago. He referred to letters that had been sent and had been unanswered. I should like to assure the house that I have probably received more letters on the subject of housing than any other member of the house, and there is not a single letter on housing that has come into my office up to 48 hours ago that has not been answered and answered promptly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: The suggestion that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or the government are trying to refrain from or are afraid of answering questions is just not in accordance with the facts, and my files show it. In this connection, it might be well if I read a letter to which I sent to the president of the National House Builders Association, Mr. Gelinas, whose name has been mentioned more than once in the debate this afternoon. Mr. Gelinas is a friend of mine. I thanked him for his telegram of May 9 and went on to say:

> In my recent statement in the House of Commons I stated that the government would continue to take every step necessary to ensure a program of direct mortgage loans by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at the same level as that of last year when, including the fall program, loans for approximately 31,500 units were approved. I would hope that this announcement will assure the builders that there will be no contraction in the corporation's direct lending program this year.
> The corporation will again make loans available for the autumn and winter building period, and expects to begin accepting applications for this aspect of the program in August.

I will have something to say on the significance of that date later. My letter continues:

> The assurance that funds will be available to the same extent as last year will also enable the corporation to meet the most urgent needs arising in the early summer, particularly in the resource development areas and certain other areas where the rapid expansion of industry has caused special problems.

Here again I would pause to draw this to the attention of the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton and others who spoke on this subject and commented on the need and importance of making provision in these special areas. The letter continues:

> I know you are aware that the direct lending program of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation cannot meet all of the demands arising from a buoyant market, and builders may not be able to obtain all the direct loans they desire. Nevertheless the corporation will do everything possible to meet the most urgent housing needs with the funds available.

The government has recognized for the past several months that Canada was approaching a period of restricted mortgage financing for new house construction. Indeed, as far back as the summer of 1965 we were aware of what might happen, as was everybody else who knew the facts, including the members of the National House Builders Association. Bulletins were sent out by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation drawing their attention to the situation, drawing their attention to what might normally happen in the last three months of last year and the first three or six months of this year. I would point out in this connection that while the housing figures are rather interesting there has not been the catastrophic state of affairs that some people would have you believe and as many of the messages which have been sent to members of this house would indicate.

In 1958 we had a good year in housebuilding; 146,686 houses were completed. But by 1961 that number had dropped to 115,608. In 1962 it was slightly higher, 126,682. In 1963 it was 128,191, and in 1964 the figure had jumped to roughly 151,000 houses, a record year. The year 1965 was another record year, 153,037 houses having been completed. Hon. members were led to believe that we were going to fall woefully short of what was done last year and I immediately rose to challenge that, because a simple statement of the facts will show how false it is.

In the biggest year we ever had in housing in this country we completed 153,037 homes. That was last year. In January of this year, due to the accent that had been placed on winter home building and to the switch in financial arrangements, we had 120,000 houses actually under construction, and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation provided in the first month of this year funds for another 15,000 houses. This makes a total of 135,000 already as against 153,000 in the best year we ever had.

In addition, realizing that because of the play of economics and of supply and demand the private, traditional lenders were making funds available for the building of office buildings and for industry and that for other people interested in mortgage money these funds were not being made available, the government announced, so that housebuilders could plan intelligently, that we would make funds available for direct lending for another 16,500 houses. So you have a total of 151,500 houses in 1965 without any more money from the private lenders, and do hon. members think for one moment that with the principles enunciated in the budget there is not in the next few weeks going to be some additional private money made available for housebuilding?

I mentioned in my remarks on the budget that firms which are building pulp and paper mills and other great industrial plants in the country realize that substantial savings will be made due to the fact that no sales tax will be payable on machinery and equipment in 1968 and that a substantial reduction will be made in 1967. I am glad the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton has returned to the house because I want to say that I agree with his remarks that we should not in this day and age curtail investment in industries which are expanding to take care not only of our export needs but our essential needs at home, but particularly our needs in the export field. The hon. member stressed the desirability of balancing our payments with other nations. I agree with him.

I should like to point out, however, to the hon. gentleman that he, having served with distinction as Canada's first minister of forestry, will be very conscious of the fact that in 1963 a survey was made of world requirements for forest products. We know that by 1975 there will be an increased demand over 1963 of approximately 50 per cent. We also know—figures are available in the library and in the Department of Forestry to show this—that this great pent-up demand will not manifest itself at the present time but will appear in about 1973 and 1974. Therefore, why should we build industrial plants now which can be built in 1968, 1969 and 1970 in good time to take care of this demand? It is really a question of priorities. As soon as this is realized by industry and the financial people I am sure we will find there is more money available for housing and other developments in the country.

Another interesting suggestion made by the hon. member for Northumberland, whose motion we are now considering, is this. He said—and this was a most extraordinary statement coming from the lips of a man who sat on the treasury benches for several years—that attention should be given to changing the interest rate. I should like to quote his words as reported at page 5175 of yesterday's Hansard:

> One of the main difficulties is that the federal government has not been able to keep insurance and trust companies interested in lending on a low interest . . . basis—

I am omitting a few words.

> This was partly due to the government increasing the interest rate. When the rate rose above 6 per cent the banks, of course, were eliminated from N.H.A. financing.

A law student or any person with any knowledge of the Bank Act, Mr. Speaker, knows that banks cannot lend money on mortgages for housing purposes regardless of the interest rate. Perhaps this situation should be corrected and in time it may be, but you cannot get money from banks at 6 per cent interest simply by directing a change in the interest rate or by reducing it to 6 per cent because banks are barred entry into the field of first or second mortgages on real estate or anything of that nature.

It might also be well to recall that mortgage money was in plentiful supply in the first half of 1965, as it was during all of 1964. This resulted in the unusually high activity in house-building to which I have referred. In 1964 it was high; in 1965 housebuilding was up 8.3 per cent over 1964. However, after July 1, 1965, funds from traditional lenders became increasingly scarce; yet in spite of that we had a record housebuilding year. It was in this atmosphere, an atmosphere which I say had already cast its shadow in July, 1965, that the government undertook on January 7 of this year, and undertook only after very exhaustive examination, to increase the national housing maximum rate from 6¼ to 6¾ per cent.

As a direct result of this, Mr. Speaker, I am sure not ten members of the house realize that national mortgage lending by approved lenders during the first two and a half months of this year was higher than it was in the same months in 1965 and 1964. I have already indicated that we will come to within about 10 or 15 per cent of last year's record level, perhaps even closer to that level.

However, having said that I believe in the free enterprise system, and many of those who have taken part in this debate having said the same thing, I am sure we will all agree that we cannot legitimately criticize approved lenders, whether they be life insurance companies, trust companies or any other lending institution, for lending their money to sources from which they get the best rate of return. That is only normal business and it is something which is governed by the law of supply and demand.

It is now apparent that the increase in long-term bond interest rates has offset the stimulus given loans for housing purposes in the first two and a half months of this year. I am sure that when the effect of the budget becomes apparent the pendulum will begin to swing in the opposite direction. I am not sufficient of a prophet, nor have I a crystal ball, to say how far the swing will go but it seems inevitable that a swing will begin in this direction.

While I have said more than once that the federal government would make available for direct lending no less amount of money that it made available last year to ensure the construction of another 31,500 units during the calendar year 1966, or possibly I should say housing starts during the latter part of the year, I think we must recognize that for an indefinite period the conventional lenders are going to make an election which it is open to them to make in a country such as ours, namely, whether to invest in office buildings, apartment blocks, private homes or in industry, as they see fit.

I think that the reason for the decreased participation in lending for housing purposes on the part of conventional lenders during the last two or three months is understandable to anyone who really believes in the free enterprise system. Particularly in a burgeoning economy we cannot always spread our bread with butter on both sides. In other words, we must always consider priorities. Where one demand is more urgent than another, that is the one to which we are most likely to respond.

What I say now may not apply to all of my hon. friends in the house. We are not all businessmen. Some of them have different political beliefs and ideologies from mine, and, of course, I respect them. But those of us who have had a business background, and I think that all reasonably well informed members of the house, should not lose sight of the fact that when financial institutions lend money it is their job, as the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton pointed out, to make a reasonable profit for themselves. If these institutions can get an extra half of 1 per cent or three quarters of 1 per cent out of one sound investment as against another, then that is their privilege; and when that happens no one should criticize.

When you have houses being built within a small margin of the number built during the record year you can hardly expect the government, if it believes in the free enterprise system, to bail out housebuilders or anyone else at a time when for the first time in 13 years they are beginning to feel a little pressure during the spring and summer months of the year. Instead of coming to the government for help I suggest that they do a little soul searching or a little fiend searching, that they go to the financial institutions in their own ridings, of which there are many in this country, including insurance companies, mortgage companies and others and try their luck there.

Instead of directing their appeals to the 264 hon. members of this house, why should not the builders, the National Housebuilders Association, the chambers of commerce, the labour organizations and the agricultural and other organizations direct them to the private lending institutions, pointing out to them that it is good business not to switch completely from one line of investment at this particular time but to put money into mortgages. A little effort like that, I am inclined to think, would bring about results.

The government, in its policy announced regarding the provision of direct lending in the same amount as last year, is dealing with a situation that cannot be ignored. As has been stated more than once by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and by others, the keynote of the budget is moderation. We want to extend, to spread out our prosperity.

Reference was made by the hon. member for Villeneuve to shortages of houses in the Ottawa-Hull area. I respectfully submit to each and every hon. member that you can see some vacant houses and vacant apartments in this area every day of the week. In fact, Ottawa is overbuilt as regards houses. There is greater need for housing in communities such as Prince George, Gold River and Vancouver island than here. There is a greater need for houses around the borders of the city of London and in southwestern Ontario where the automotive complex is situated, than in some of the larger urban areas of this country. All the government is saying is: "Let us spread it out".

There is no doubt that when the billion dollar expansion programs we are now engaged in are completed there will be plenty of housing. However, there may be some inconvenience to some people during the next year or so.

I would ask hon. members to bear in mind what has happened in other countries which have become industrialized. We have become more heavily industrialized in Canada in the last 23 years than in the preceding 100 years. When one looks at countries such as Sweden, Germany, France and Russia, which have been putting emphasis on and stressing the importance of new production facilities of the kind that the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton mentioned today, it will be seen that they all emphasize completing the plants that are going to create jobs and then building houses as quickly as possible thereafter. That is what we are trying to do at this time.

I think our housing policy today reflects that thinking. In the budget, Mr. Speaker, there was no element of panic, no lack of confidence, no suggestion of a diminishing faith in this country. Our examination of the facts has led us to quite a different conclusion which is that we are in every way sound and strong and a great nation. However, there is a limited amount of skilled labour available; there are limited amounts of certain building materials; there is a limited amount of money in the hands of private lenders.

May I just quote some figures. When we built a record number of 153,000-odd houses last year in this country, how many do hon. members think were actually financed by the government? The figure is 31,500 with direct loans, similar to this year's announced figure, and roughly another 24,000 by way of guaranteed loans. But 100,000 houses in Canada were built with moneys provided without government money or guarantees of any kind, with moneys provided by the conventional lenders of this country.

Is anyone sufficiently childish to suggest, because for the first time there is pressure during the spring and summer months of the year to build more houses at once, that the government should step in? The builders quite naturally would like to keep building at the same level they have achieved during the last three years. They would like to continue doing that each year. To enable them to do that the private lending institutions would have to lend, as they did last year, $1,500 million.Were the government to step into the field, in addition to the approximately $450 million it has made available, it would have to provide another $1,500 million. Frankly, that would not make sense to me. Nor would that sort of thing make sense in the other countries to which I have referred which are placing primary importance on the need for industrialization, particularly where they have raw materials that can be converted to secondary and tertiary products, and placing lesser importance on other things.

I would not want anyone to create the slightest impression that housing is not considered by the government to be of the utmost importance. It has a high level of priority. It is because it has such a high level of priority that the government has taken the actions it has. I submit that in recent years we have clearly demonstrated our attitude. One only needs to look at the record of the last three years or so to see that.

In addition to the types of housing I have referred to, the 150,000-odd houses that were built last year and the 140,000 or possibly the 150,000 that we expect will be built this year, other types of housing are very important. In these fields there has been and is no curtailment. Instead, there has been every encouragement by the government.

Only this afternoon while sitting in the house I signed submissions that should bring into being hundreds of units of public housing in the province of Ontario alone. In 1965, 4,000 housing units were authorized compared with only 600 in 1964. It is true that most of this activity was in the province of Ontario, and I must give them credit for doing so much. What was done was done with public money, 90 per cent of which was supplied by the federal government through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

I also want to make it perfectly clear that in addition to the funds for the direct financing of 31,500 loans and in addition to the guarantees there will be no diminution in funds for public housing. As a result we not only have public housing being built in Ontario on this very encouraging scale but also in other parts of Canada. Apart from the greatly expanded volume of public housing, an extensive program of low-rental housing for the elderly and for families with restricted incomes is now also being carried out —there is no restriction in that field—with N.H.A. assistance to private and publicly sponsored limited-dividend and non-profit corporations. Loans of this type amounted to more than $14 million in 1965, with a substantially higher amount being indicated for 1966. These projects will increase the number of housing units that will be made available to people with low incomes, to senior citizens and to others in this country.

We cannot have everything at once, Mr. Speaker. At this point in our national development it is not likely that we can have everything at once. The important thing in the field of housing is to do the right thing so that we take care of what one might term the important or urgent needs.

Admittedly in the field of housing there still exists a buoyant demand. We would not want it otherwise. We shall have an opportunity to take care of any demand that we have not supplied this year during next year or the year after next. Having said this, however, I would be derelict if I were to suggest there were no immediate or serious housing problems in Canada. I see in the house today members from constituencies to which these remarks apply. I refer for instance to housing in southwestern Ontario, to places in Labrador and Quebec, to parts of Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan and many sections of British Columbia following the huge industrial development there.

There are other needs in the housing field, for example, housing for Indians. Only a few weeks ago my colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) announced a housing program of vital significance to every decent-minded person in this country. I happen to know something about it because I participated in some of this work. I visited 20 of the Indian communities last summer. I saw the housing conditions in which they live. I noted the absence of electrification, which is an almost indispensable part of housing today. The northerly parts of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia are regions where normally the days are short and the nights are long. An Indian child may get home from school at 4.30. How can he read a book if his home is not properly lit?

This is a type of housing that I happen to consider as being of great importance, more important in my opinion than some of the high-rise luxury apartments referred to by the hon. member who moved the motion we are considering. The government is not ignoring this need; in fact, $112 million is being put into this kind of housing and improvements.

All things taken into consideration, the government has no apologies to make about the adequacy of the moneys it is making available for housing. If time permitted I should like to deal with some of the points which have been raised by hon. members, but I believe the time allotted to me has almost expired. I agree with the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton that no uniform inflexible money policy is advisable. I hope hon. members will have gathered from what I have already said that we are not following an inflexible policy. Even in our present program priorities are being adhered to and applied in the case of low income citizens, Indians and others with special needs.

Perhaps I might conclude this statement by reiterating an observation I made in this house on April 27 when I referred to the housing situation and said:

> The situation is serious, but I am happy to say, as a result of studies I personally have made in conjunction with senior officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, that while it is more serious in a few areas than in most others, it is not as serious as one would be led to believe by the telegrams and messages coming to members of this house.

I trust hon. members will agree with that comment after the short analysis I have been able to give this afternoon. We are being subjected to pressure by people who have certain interests. They are not to be blamed for trying to foster their interests. But we must be strong enough to resist this pressure and go along in accordance with priorities which we believe are in the best interests of this country.

The government and its advisers keep a close watch on the housing situation and other factors where credit is involved, and because of this and because of the facts I have stated in the house this afternoon I urge all members to vote against the motion put forward by the hon. member for Northumberland.

Mr. Hales: Would the minister permit a question? He has given us some reasons why private lenders have moved out of the market recently. Does he not think another reason might be that they are waiting for the government to announce its policy as far as the Bank Act is concerned?

Mr. Nicholson: I hardly think that would be a fair assumption because, as I have said already, the banks are not in this field now. If the banks were to come in it could only be as a result of an amendment to the Bank Act. I cannot say whether there is to be any such amendment. There is no doubt about it, however, the conventional lenders to which I referred are institutions other than banks. They should be encouraged by those organizations I have indicated, boards of trade and so on, to get out and do their part in the present situation. They have found housebuilders to be good risks in the past and I hope they will be persuaded that it is sensible to continue this policy in the future.

Mr. Starr: I have another question for the minister. In view of the fact that private lenders are out of the market in the home-building field, does the minister not feel there is an obligation on the part of the government to see that those people who wish to have their own homes are not deprived of an opportunity to do so? Does he not feel the government is under an obligation to step into this field and fill the gap?

Mr. Nicholson: I am glad the hon. gentleman asked that question. If hon. members will analyse the figures I quoted they will see that last year we built 153,000 houses. Of these, 100,000 were financed by traditional lenders. There were 120,000 houses under construction in January of this year, so the conventional lenders have not abandoned this field. They have made substantial loans already, but they made them earlier because of the winter housing program and it is reasonable to suppose they will be active again later this year. May I call it six o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should bring to the attention of the house that the following questions are to be considered this evening pursuant to provisional standing order 39A: The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), Grain—Prince Rupert, B.C.—increase in elevator capacity; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), The Senate—suggested action leading to abolition.

Pursuant to special order I do now leave the chair, it being six o'clock.

Mr. More: On a point of order, did I not understand that the minister's time had expired?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Maybe the time for raising a point of order is not now but I would point out that the minister has unlimited time.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

FINANCE—TIGHT MONEY POLICY—NEGATIVE APPROACH TO PROBLEMS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Hees.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wants to raise a point of order.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My point of order relates to the fact that there may have been some slight misunderstanding, but at any rate there are two or three hon. members who yet wish to speak, and I wonder if the house would give consent to postponing the taking of the vote until nine o'clock so that two or three short speeches might be made.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I gather from the reactions of hon. members that there would not be unanimous agreement to the proposal advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to say that I think the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) might well have caught your eye first, and I want to place on record the courtesy he has extended me in allowing me to make my few remarks. No doubt, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) is occupied with other duties, but I want to put on record the situation in my own constituency regarding housing. The last report available for the month of April indicates that single unit housing starts in Regina totalled 47 as compared with 104 last year. The situation in regard to mortgage money is such that although a local survey indicated an absolute minimum need of 1,200 housing units this year, it is not expected that more than 800 will actually be constructed.

This is a critical situation and I want to place it before the minister. I do not think he intended to indicate in his remarks that the people who have made representations to hon. members of this house have made false representations. Perhaps they have overemphasized part of the situation, but I think the figures I have quoted indicate that there is a serious situation in the industry.

I am one who believes that government intervention in the private sector should be limited when the private sector is able to look after itself, but when pressures on the private sector are such that there are needs it cannot fill, then I believe government intervention is warranted.

Although there was a high level in housing construction last year, in fact a record level as the minister said, the pressures for more housing in certain categories, over and above subsidized housing and housing for the aged, are greater now than they were last year. Therefore a cutback in the program at this time does not lend itself to achieving the aims of what government policy should be.

It is to be regretted that the government has taken the position it has at this time. The situation I have pointed out in Regina is similar to the pressures and needs found in the northern area, in the city of Saskatoon and its adjacent areas. Industrial development, particularly potash mining, in that area is creating a greater need for housing units.

The suggestion that contractors should turn to other lenders for funds is rather facetious because we know funds have dried up. At the present time there are just not sufficient funds available, and what funds are available are being lent at such high interest rates that they do not provide the moderate type of housing that is required, for instance, houses in the $13,000 to $16,000 category. One of the mistakes the government made in its policy was to raise to $18,000 the maximum value of a house under N.H.A. legislation. The minister suggests that sufficient money will be provided to equal the 31,000 housing starts made last year, but I suggest that more money will be needed. Because of the higher price of houses the government's policy will be affected.

We have a so-called war on poverty, but the results of the government's policy will be to put pressure on people who are outside the range of that war. I do not think this is good. I do not want to take up a lot of time, Mr. Speaker, since there are only a few minutes left before the taking of the vote. I have put the situation in Regina on record. The minister has had representations on it. I know the people concerned feel the situation is so critical that they are going to make representations to the minister through other sources, and these representations will reach him in a different manner. I am quite willing to let him judge what they are, as I am not going to tell him now.

Another matter I want to bring to hon. members' attention has to do with the fairness of governmental decisions, and in this I am not critical of the minister because I do not think the final decision has yet been made. I have no quarrel with the extension made in connection with homes in flooded areas of Manitoba, where work had to stop due to floods. But the fact that a strike took place in Regina and continued beyond the deadline that houses had to be completed was just as devastating as the floods. In Regina at present there are some 25 units that are affected, and unless the government decides that the strike was responsible, payment in respect of these houses will not be made. I believe the government should extend the period for completion of the houses, now that the strike is over. That is only reasonable and fair.

There was absolutely nothing that could be done to complete these homes while the strike was in progress. We all recognize that labour has a right to strike in order to satisfy its own demands, and in a case like this the government should give recognition to the situation. I believe representations have been made to the government about these houses and I ask the minister to give sympathetic consideration to those representations so that the situation may be corrected.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I was very glad to yield the floor to the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. More), and I sort of wished he would talk the clock out because in five minutes there is very little comprehensive analysis that one can make of the minister's speech. However, that will keep until his estimates are before the house, at which time we can go into it more fully.

If there is anything evident from the minister's speech this afternoon, it is what we have been saying for many months in this house, namely that there is no housing policy here in Ottawa, no national, comprehensive housing policy at all. It is sort of like a yo-yo policy: It goes up and down. It is like a tap one turns on: When he wants to increase employment and help expansion, he throws a lot of mortgage money on the market and hopes something good will come of it.

The minister took a lot of time this afternoon to heap mountains of self-congratulatory praise upon himself, and pointed out what a wonderful job the government was doing because it was going to fall only 15 per cent below the housing target. I suggest that some time between now and the time when his estimates come before the house, the minister take a pretty serious look at the National Housing Act because N.H.A. should more accurately be called the national hoaxing act.

When it was brought into effect, I believe in 1945, it was a genuine workingman's act. Houses were selling for $6,000 at that time. Mortgages were issued for $4,800 and carried for $30 a month. Today the houses built under it are selling for $23,000, with average mortgages of $18,000 against them, hopelessly beyond the reach of the ordinary person in this country. The statistics indicate that the minimum salary to qualify for N.H.A. housing at present is $6,500 a year.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, the latest statistics show there are 7,637,000 Canadians whose income is less than the minimum necessary to qualify under the National Housing Act. What kind of housing act is that? I would have liked very much to go into the minister's analysis of the mortgage shortage and point out the basic inconsistencies in his position. He urged on us the virtues of the private enterprise system and ignored the fact that the artificial pegging of the interest rate by this government has created this situation. It is all very well to tell the builders to go and talk to the mortgage companies and tell them they should be good citizens and lend them the money under the N.H.A., and at the same time tell them they are in a free enterprise economy where the insurance companies cannot be blamed for putting their money where they realize the maximum return on it. But there is inconsistency in the whole approach the minister is taking. We should sit down in this house and take a look at the housing picture in Canada; perhaps we can do it when we have the minister's estimates before us. It is a national disgrace that from coast to coast there is no national program or development.

Our senior citizens are living under disgraceful conditions. Every member in this house has made a speech about the deplorable way we treat our senior citizens. Our great cities are rotting at the core. If I had time, I could go into the small potatoes of what has resulted from the 1964 act. I am not blaming the minister for this. He is new to the business and he is fighting the provincial and municipal governments. We can work in Ottawa for the next ten years and never really have a national housing policy, unless we do two or three things. We must have a full time minister. This is no criticism of the Minister of Labour, but he cannot do two jobs and sell a massive housing program like that. Second, we must have a new department of urban development where we could have a minister who would be able to devote his whole time and energy in an effort to co-ordinate the provinces and the municipalities in this scheme. We need some sort of conscience so that we can establish a common goal in respect of housing. I wish the minister had had a royal commission on urbanization, because then we would have had some sort of blueprint as to where we would like to take Canada. As it is, we have nothing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being 8.15 p.m., pursuant to section 4 (d) of standing order 56, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith the question on any amendment before the house.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Hees) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) and I were paired.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—HALIFAX DOCKYARD—FAILURE TO EFFECT WAGE PARITY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in the opportunity provided following the vote for members to raise particular grievances, I wonder whether I might indulge the house for a few minutes to turn to what is developing into one of the most serious labour situations in our country. I refer, Mr. Speaker, to two situations; the first concerns defence employees at H.M.C. Dockyard and its related facilities in Halifax, and the second concerns employees at H.M.C.S. Shearwater, where there are now what are commonly known as Canadian force bases.

• (8:50 p.m.)

I do not propose to detain the house in tracing the history of the formula on which the prevailing wage rate concept is based. That goes back to the late 1920's and the early 1930's. However, as other hon. members from Halifax have indicated, in the mid 1960's the basing formula for wage rates established in the 1930's is somewhat out of date.

It appears, Mr. Speaker, that legislation affecting collective bargaining will be brought before the house in the months that lie ahead. Perhaps in that legislation will be found the answers to many of the problems that I raise. However, the essence of the grievance that I raise tonight is that I do not think the government has a clear understanding of the urgency that faces not only our part of the country, but the entire nation in this regard. The employees of H.M.C. Dockyard in Halifax are adamant in their position. They strongly feel that they are entitled to a new basing formula recognizing the principle of equal pay for equal work.

I am not one of those, Mr. Speaker, who would cry danger where no danger exists. I do suggest that unless the government pays immediate attention to the problems at the dockyard, problems that affect on an over-all basis in Halifax approximately 5,000 men, those men are going to walk off their jobs. If that were to happen we shall find that our navy, army and air force based in the Nova Scotia area will be unable to function, and their operations will come to a grinding halt. Anybody who in the past has said that we do not have effective armed forces will be vindicated in that statement by the end of June or early July unless immediate attention is paid to what these men feel are legitimate demands.

Of immediate concern for the Halifax dock workers are such matters as wage parity with their west coast equals. There are substantial differences in pay schedules between workers in the Department of National Defence dockyards on the west coast at Esquimalt and those at Halifax.

As we struggle in the Atlantic area to close the economic gap existing between ourselves and the rest of Canada, the federal authority must play its full role in helping us to achieve our goal. We cannot talk about equality of opportunity, and equal sharing in our national prosperity unless we are all prepared to do something actively and positively toward that goal. Otherwise we are paying lip service to that concept.

The concept of wage parity—to use a well worn but familiar phrase—is not new. That concept was the concern not only of this government, but of its predecessor. The government in 1961, led by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) decided, in the case of the Department of National Defence employees in the Halifax area, that the formula governing their wages should be changed from the traditional formula governing prevailing rates. That government, as an alternative vehicle, chose a formula based on the average schedules of pay in the seven most highly paid dockyards on the Atlantic coast, including the St. Lawrence river yards. This was tantamount to a recognition by a federal authority of a national basis upon which to calculate the pay of prevailing rates for hourly paid employees.

However, when this new formula I speak of was adopted, it was generally agreed that what had been done was only an interim step. That step was designed to enable the government to arrive at a truly national formula of pay based on the averages paid in shipyards from coast to coast and on both coasts. As I say, that was an interim step. However, the government of that day had recognized the worthiness of the plea by the dockyard workers with respect to equal pay for equal work. Subsequent events have not brought about the full extension of this previous program. They have not brought about a national basis for wage rates of dockyard employees.

These employees of the federal authority remain the only group of employees who do not enjoy national parity with respect to wages. I do not know of any other branch of service, be it the armed forces, the civil service, or any other establishment, where that condition prevails. All employees of the government except these dockyard workers, to whom our country must turn and upon whom we must keep our instruments of defence viable and actionable, enjoy national wage parity.

It is 1966 now, Mr. Speaker. It has been five years since an interim step was taken by the federal authority. Nothing further has been done. We have had lots of promises. Everybody agrees that the basing formula must be looked at with a view to changing it. So far however, nothing has been done.

Last autumn the Trades and Labour Council at H.M.C. Dockyard in Halifax presented to the government a brief in which it outlined a five year program to achieve wage parity for dockyard workers from coast to coast. This program was an orderly, well thought out and responsible map of action on their part. It showed that the program could not be carried out without consideration being taken of the effect that it would have on community businesses, doing the same repairing and overhauling as H.M.C. Dockyard, in the Halifax area. The members of the Trades and Labour Council were well aware that wages paid at the dockyard affect wages paid in similar areas of concern in the private sector of business.

May I say for the record that the formula the council proposed—it presented it to the government last fall—would have provided an opportunity for review by both the government and local interests of matter pertaining to wage parity respecting various trades within the dockyard. In no way did this brief recommend anything of an insurmountable nature. Indeed, the program set out called for the achievement of wage parity in this matter: in the first year, there would be paid 25 per cent of the difference in the schedules of wages between the west coast and east coast; in the second year, 33 per cent of the remaining difference would be paid; in the third year 50 per cent; in the fourth year, 70 per cent, and in the fifth year 100 per cent of the remaining difference would be paid.

To say the government simply shelved the proposal and hid behind the excuse of waiting until the collective bargaining bill became an act might be oversimplification; it might, in one sense be not entirely correct. But this does not in any way lessen the seriousness of this presentation by the employees at the dockyard and the other national defence facilities in the Dartmouth-Halifax area.

The failure of the government to act on this question of wages has brought about a situation among these highly skilled technicians—instrument makers, machinists, boilermakers—which might have been avoided. These are people skilled at trades which are vital to keeping our navy at sea and, in these days of integration, to keeping our army on wheels and our air force mobile.

In the last 12 years, in order to get a highly trained group of men into the dockyard, an apprenticeship training scheme has put 244 young men through a full course of instruction. Of these 244 people, 121 have gone elsewhere in the country to find employment simply because they found they could get more money outside the dockyard. Not all these people have left the Halifax area. They can get more money with a dozen different national companies which have established businesses in our area. This is an indication of what is happening as a result of the inability of the government to act.

I do not suggest the government must completely satisfy these men at the dockyard. They are reasonable men. They are labour men. They know there is give and take. But remember, it has cost the taxpayers of Canada more than $18,000 to train each of the apprentices I mentioned and it goes without saying that the men at the dockyard would much prefer to have had that money in their pockets than to see it go into the United States, or the west coast, or Ontario or anywhere in the private sector.

A dockyard in the eyes of many people is simply an excellent training ground for machinists, boilermakers and skilled men of all kinds. This is not why the dockyard was established. Bearing in mind the urgent necessity for wage adjustments at the dockyard before the implementation of legislation affecting collective bargaining I would ask the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) and those on the treasury benches seriously to consider a thorough review of the question of wage parity at the dockyard. I suggest the government give serious consideration to the brief submitted to them last year. These men want an answer. They do not want to be put off. They want an answer with regard to wage parity.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

If the government would do this and supply the trades and labour council at the dockyard, as well as the motor transport section at Canadian Force Base Shearwater with a reasonable answer, a major step might be taken to avert what could be a most serious situation. These men have now gathered about them substantial outside support within the trades and labour council including many unions with national and international affiliations.

Each day these people are getting, union by union, more and more substantial support and confirmed intention of support through letters and other documents. I am not standing here to make a noise or to create any alarm which does not exist. I have followed the situation at the dockyard as far as it concerns this question of wages for some ten years, in spite of the fact that I am a very junior member for Halifax, and I suggest to the government that the position has never been as serious as it is at this moment.

There is a second matter on which I wish to speak. I will deal with it briefly before resuming my seat. My purpose is to outline the difficulties being experienced by the motor transport section at Canadian Force Base Shearwater. Here again the government is well aware of the difficulties faced by its employees. Not only is there disparity over the whole field of equal pay for equal work, but we also have within the region men doing exactly the same job as their counterparts two and a half miles away while being paid substantially less.

Although the personnel at Shearwater find themselves in an identical environment, faced with similar tax rates, tax structure, merchandise costs, rental costs and construction costs as their counterparts at Dockyard in the naval armament depot, the naval magazine and other supporting facilities at the army centre, they receive an across-the-board 20 cents an hour less for their labour.

We live in an age when in our thought processes we must not overlook the dignity, value and worth of the individual. Unless we do this we are not ordained for any reasonable, Christian or otherwise, future.

I should like for a few moments to quote from certain sections of the brief prepared by the motor transport section of H.M.C.S. Shearwater on this matter. I should like first of all to put it on the record, and second, to establish in the minds of all hon. members the urgency for over-all consideration of the national defence employees and their plight, and the additional plight being faced by a certain group within the general complex in the Halifax area.

I quote from the brief as follows:

> We would like to bring to your attention the discrimination of some of the employees in the Halifax-Dartmouth area. We are speaking of the personnel of M.T. section (H.M.C.S. Shearwater).

I notice they have not yet learned to call it the Canadian forces base.

> We would like to point out the different rates of pay in this area of personnel who have the same employer (Department of National Defence). On checking with the rate scale in this area, we find the rates are as follows:

H.M.C. Dockyard		H.M.C.S. Shearwater
Driver	$2.05	Driver	$1.85

These are hourly rates in the integrated motor pool, and if these men walk out, anybody who drives a government vehicle is not going to be able to go to work in the morning. In this one category the difference is 75 cents an hour. A heavy equipment driver at Dockyard gets $2.25 an hour, and at H.M.C.S. Shearwater $2.05, 20 cents an hour less for this whole schedule of employees. Naval magazine rates are the same as Dockyard. The naval armament rates are the same as Dockyard, and also the Shannon Park rates. But Shearwater is a naval establishment. We fly airplanes from there. Although it is a naval establishment it has been classified as something less than a ship's service centre, and so the employees get 20 cents an hour less.

I would now like to give a few figures from outside the area with respect to drivers. E.M.I. Cossor pays $2.25 an hour, Imperial Oil $462 per month for a 40 hour week, which works out as $2.89 per hour, Volvo $2.05, Fairey Aviation starts at $2, and Texaco starts new men at $2 an hour.

With reference to the question of disparity of wages there is one other little group to which I should like to refer, namely employees of the marine agency of the Department of Transport in my area. They find themselves in exactly the same boat as the hourly paid employees of the Department of National Defence.

Why is it in 1966, when the government pays great lip service to the principle of equal opportunity, saying that everybody must share in the national prosperity, that these people do not obtain equality? With full awareness of what is going on at Dockyard and the impact that this will have on our economic structure in the private sector, I simply ask the government, is it fair, is it right and is it just to continue in 1966 to avail itself of a principle and policy evolved in the late 1920's and early 1930's?

It was an effective and responsible principle through the 1930's, 1940's and perhaps through the early 1950's, but if the government wishes to say we are enjoying unprecedented prosperity, let us recognize that fact by giving consideration to the prevailing rate men at Dockyard. If the government does not give them the consideration that they deserve then, as I said at the outset of my remarks, we are going to have totally immobile Canadian forces in the Halifax area on July 1.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I ask the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) if the remarks which he is about to make concern the same grievance as voiced by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Forrestall)?

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Winch: I am very glad that the junior hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Forrestall) has raised this particular matter this evening. I certainly do not think he should apologize—

Mr. Forrestall: If I might interrupt for just a moment, it is incumbent upon me to refer to myself as the very junior member for Halifax, but it is not incumbent upon the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch).

Mr. Winch: Well, Mr. Speaker, I most certainly will refer to the hon. member as the hon. member for Halifax, but you know I am a good listener and when he referred to the junior member, the very, very junior member, I thought I was being very, very nice when I said the junior member, and not the very, very junior member.

Mr. Forrestall: Thank you very much.

Mr. Winch: However, Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that the junior member for Halifax has raised this particular matter at this time. As I started to say, he most certainly should not and need not apologize if he appears to be making a loud noise on this particular grievance. A loud noise and emphatic statement are required on this grievance because it is just as serious as he pointed out. It is serious not only at the dockyard at Halifax but also at the dockyard at Esquimalt in B.C., where the identical situation pertains.

Year after year in this parliament the identical problem that the hon. member has spoken of has been raised, not only when the present government was in office but when the Conservative government was in office, and the only answer we received was that the matter was under consideration, and was being studied, and that something was going to be done. I know we raised this issue twice in the preceding session and that was the answer we got.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I want to add my voice to that of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Forrestall) to say that the employees at the dockyard of Esquimalt feel exactly the same way as the employees at the dockyard at Halifax. They no longer are going to be satisfied with an answer to the effect that something is going to be done or that the matter is under consideration. It also is my information that if something is not done inside of 30 days, action will be taken by the men themselves and it will be an action which will be very detrimental to the maintenance and operation of our armed forces. I never have been able to understand the thinking of the government or the departments as indicated by the way they handle their wage rate policies in the dockyards of this nation. As a matter of fact their policy seems to vary from department to department, and indeed within a department itself.

In the dockyards we have a black situation. Let us take the case of the electrician. In the dockyards at Esquimalt and Halifax there are two types of electricians employed; you have the inside wire men who do the construction and maintenance work, and you have the inside wire men who do the ship work. An inside wire man who works on a ship is paid at a lower rate than an inside wire man who does the construction and maintenance work on the dockyard itself.

However, under what was supposed to have been the policy, the payment should be on the basis of what is termed the prevailing rate, and the prevailing rate is the trade union rate in that locality outside the dockyard. What happens at Halifax and Esquimalt? Here we have maintenance electricians on the land and the ship electricians on the ship; the ship electricians receive the ordinary or normal rates, but in respect of the electricians in the dockyard, the Department of National Defence maintains that since they are in the dockyard they are in the same position as the inside wire men on the ship. These maintenance men never put a foot on board ship, so they cannot do any work on board ship, and yet they are cheated. They are classified at the same prevailing rate of the shipyard instead of being paid according to the policy which states that it shall be the prevailing rate of an inside wire man on construction and maintenance. That has been going on for years; they have been complaining for years, and still no action is taken.

There is another matter in respect of the dockyards at Halifax and Esquimalt which I did not hear mentioned by the hon. member for Halifax, but it is a most intriguing and important one. At the dockyard there are many occasions when additional skilled men are required. They are brought in as extra men, as temporary but skilled men. They are brought in at the prevailing rate, the trade union rate, and are paid the full trade union rate. What happens to the permanent men who are on the job on the dockyard all the time? Because they know what has to be done and know how the job should be done, they supervise the work of these temporary men who are brought in. So you have the situation where the man who was brought in on a temporary basis is being paid at a far higher rate than the dockyard man who is supervising his work.

What kind of policy is it where you have the skilled man on the job receiving a lower rate of pay than the man he is supervising? That is the policy which has been pursued for years and which is being pursued right now at the dockyards of Halifax and Esquimalt. I marvel at the patience of those thousands of employees who have put up with it for this length of time. It is no wonder they are dissatisfied; it is no wonder they have reached the limit of their patience and have reached the point where they are not going to stand for any more promises or talk. They want action or they will take action.

I have no hesitation, Mr. Speaker, in saying, from information I have received from Halifax and Esquimalt, that I believe the government and the Department of National Defence right now is sitting on a powder keg and the fuse is about to be lit. You have only about 30 days and if there is no action, the government has only itself to blame.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May I ask the hon. member for Halifax whether he wishes to speak on the same grievance.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): The same grievance, Mr. Speaker.

I support my colleague from Halifax (Mr. Forrestall) and my colleague for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) and should like to say that what they have indicated to this house, in my opinion, is pretty accurate forecast of what will happen. I think the government is sitting on a burning powder keg in connection with its prevailing rate policy in respect of the dockyards at Esquimalt and Halifax. I do not believe there is a great amount of time in which to solve the problem. Action is needed now.

I am happy to see that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) and the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) are in the chamber to hear these contributions. I would suggest they take to their government and more particularly to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson), as the minister in charge of Treasury Board, the points of view which have been expressed by the previous speakers, as well as mine. These are matters which should be dealt with quickly.

I speak particularly of the 2,400 men classified as prevailing rate employees who work in H.M.C. Dockyard. Before I go over some points in addition to those raised by my colleague, I should like to commend him for his hard work in dealing with this problem. It is not a pleasant problem to deal with. We are members of the opposition, and I suppose we could take the attitude of shrugging our shoulders and moving away from a very bad situation; but we do represent the Halifax area and we do feel we have a responsibility, if we as members of parliament are going to play any useful role at all in seeing that this situation is solved and that somehow the aspirations of these 2,400 men are met in some satisfactory way.

When my colleague and I return to our constituencies week end after week end it is not pleasant for us to see the frustrations of these men who are trying to achieve some more reasonable wage formula. So we continue to work with them. We work as a conciliatory force, and not as a force egging or urging them on. We act as a conciliatory force with the Department of National Defence in an effort to bring forth justice and order. Nobody wishes to be a member of parliament for an area where a severe strike could break out.

No one would be proud to be a member under such circumstances, and anyone who would allow a strike or walkout to develop without an endeavour to head it off would be doing a disservice to his constituency and, since we have elements of national defence which are involved, a disservice to the whole country. My colleague has played the more active role in our dealings with this problem, but both of us have been dealing with it.

I think the points of view he has expressed here in a moderate and reasoned fashion, yet none the less with chilling overtones of what could happen if the problem is not dealt with, is an indication of his sense of responsibility, the extent of his study and his willingness to spend long hours researching into prevailing rate formulas, and factors that have to be considered by the department.

It may be suggested that collective bargaining for government employees is just around the corner and that this will provide an answer to the problems. The department or the minister may suggest that we should wait until collective bargaining is established, but I suggest that will take place too late and will only come into effect after the end of June. It will be too slow in coming and too late to deal with this particular problem. What is needed is a policy and that policy is needed now.

The Minister of National Defence, the Associate Minister and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) must realize that a policy regarding wages for non-civil servants who are classified as prevailing rate employees must be spelled out in positive terms. If there is to be collective bargaining at some future time the collective bargainers on the government side must have some policy spelled out, so they will know what to do when they sit down with the employees. The department should consider quickly a wages policy for dockyard employees so as to give at least some indication as a guideline to be applied, if not now, then when a collective bargaining team is appointed. The simple fact that collective bargaining is just around the corner is not in my opinion a sufficient answer to the situation.

My colleague has pointed out some of the factors which bedevil the Halifax situation, factors such as costs and lower wages for dockyard employees which drive skilled workers from the area. This is something about which all Nova Scotians, maritimers and, indeed, Canadians should be vitally concerned, because these are factors which become incentives to individuals to go elsewhere, and factors of economics which cause waste and high costs in training apprentices. The cost figure in respect of training apprentices given earlier this year in answer to a question asked by my colleague was $17,000 to $18,000 per apprentice. That is taxpayers' money that is being spent. Yet many of these apprentices are going elsewhere where they can make a better living for themselves and provide more appropriately for their families. These are points that must be considered when one deals with the seriousness of the situation.

What about the formula itself? These men are classified as prevailing rate employees. In using a prevailing rate formula one looks around for comparable industries and sets wage patterns in a particular area as a result of those comparable industries. Even this procedure has its farcical aspects. As my colleague pointed out, there is a vast difference in wages paid to prevailing rate employees at the Canadian forces base at Shearwater as compared to those employed at H.M.C. Dockyard; yet men employed at both leave their places of employment to go home to adjoining houses. H.M.C. Dockyard and the base at Shearwater are very close, so there must not be a prevailing rate in existence there because of the startling wage rate differentials that exist.

A prevailing rate formula I suggest is not inappropriate for either H.M.C. Dockyard at Halifax or the station at Esquimalt. Indeed, some recognition of this fact was given by the former government in 1961 when it departed from the formula then in existence, which equated the dockyard workers with the workers at the Halifax shipyards, right next door on the Halifax waterfront, and instead adopted a formula based on an average of seven east coast yards. This represented a significant breakthrough which was achieved by the Diefenbaker government and gave heart to many maritimers, because it showed at least a glimmering of some aspect of a national wages policy, rather than a policy narrowly anchored within specific areas. This was a march in the right direction, and I suggest it is a march that should go further.

[Mr. McCleave.]

How should a wages formula be determined? I suggest that the day has long passed when dockyard workers in this country should be tied in with shipyard workers. Without denigrating the shipyard workers of this country in any way, I suggest that dockyard workers are part of today's modern sophisticated type of defence industry which relies on electronics and which is far removed from the shipyard-dockyard comparison which existed 20 years ago, near the end of the second world war.

Because of the growing sophistication in the defence industry, the dockyard industry should be treated as part of it, and if a prevailing rate formula is to be adopted, the Department of National Defence should look to other defence industries in an area to determine wage rates for dockyard workers and not look exclusively to neighbouring shipyard industries.

It must be admitted that ship construction and repair yards in Canada are not enjoying in general the economic growth which this country is enjoying. I think this is the case principally because, as a maritime nation, we are a high cost nation in competition with other countries of the world and have not fared as well as others in our shipyard industry growth.

Finally, in deciding how this formula should be considered, it is a legitimate request on the part of dockyard workers on the east coast that the government should look at wages paid to dockyard workers on the west coast as some kind of a guide as to what are proper wages. Of all industries that are comparable, surely the dockyard industry is one that falls at the top level.

In short, sir, I suggest that a national policy is needed to deal with problems raised regarding the wages paid at Esquimalt and Halifax to dockyard workers. There are legitimate grievances which are now festering in both these areas, and if these grievances are allowed to continue to fester they will erupt and break out, as forecast by the hon. members for Halifax (Mr. Forrestall) and Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). I suggest the answer is for the department to come quickly to grips with the problem in order to devise a formula which will fit the situation which exists in the mid-1960's, rather than carrying on a philosophy which was developed at some time in the mid-1920's.

It might have been somewhat easier for my colleague and myself, from the Halifax area, simply to let the government and the department struggle with this problem. We could have shrugged our shoulders and said, "No, we are in opposition; there is really nothing we can do to help. We cannot advance a point of view for you because no one will listen." I do not think that is a responsible attitude to take and certainly, as a member of parliament for this area, which has grievous labour problems, I do not want to take that attitude. My colleague and I are offering all the assistance we can to the government in connection with what we regard as a very difficult problem. I repeat my colleague's request and add to it my own in beseeching the government to come seriously and quickly to grips with what is a very serious problem.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May I ask the hon. member whether he wishes to speak along the same line as the three other members?

Mr. Mongrain: It is a related grievance which is not quite similar to those just raised by the previous speakers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May I ask the house whether we may hear another grievance?

[English]

Mr. Churchill: We should hear from the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux).

[Translation]

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): I wish to point out very briefly that we are aware of the problems raised by three previous speakers and that we are now looking into them, in co-operation with the Treasury Board, the Department of Labour and the Civil Service Commission.

I know that the members who raised this matter indicated that a solution to this very difficult problem is urgently needed. I shall not give a detailed account of the various phases we went through to end up with such serious difficulties. Hon. members know as well as I do how this situation started and developed.

A review of classifications is now being made by the Civil Service Commission. That is what is imposing limitations to some extent on any possible action at the administrative level of the Department of National Defence. Even though we are concerned with this problem and its urgency, we are restricted to a certain extent because of this reclassification undertaken by the Civil Service Commission.

Personally, every time I have had the privilege and pleasure of talking with representatives particularly from the Halifax areas, we have been able to approach the problem and exchange useful views in order to settle, temporarily at least, the most urgent matters pending the complete plan that is to be submitted by the Civil Service Commission.

As far as the two members for Halifax (Mr. Forrestall and Mr. McCleave) are concerned, I undertake, as requested by the senior member, for instance, to take up with to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) the question of whether things could not be activated. We all know that the Civil Service Commission is trying to achieve what they call occupational categories and thus set a basis for collective agreements in the various contracts that have to be renegotiated.

The date set by the Civil Service Commission is October 1, 1966. According to the hon. members, that is much to late. I am inclined to agree. There is one fact we must bear in mind: we are faced with a massive reclassification. It should be recalled that when the members of the national defence staff in particular are considering these trades —we have reduced the number as much as possible; but we still have 110—in each case they have to examine a difficult problem by itself. Speaking for myself, I have never encountered such a difficult and frustrating experience as trying to consider simultaneously 110 different problems, none of which may be considered in the abstract but each of which, as the hon. member for Halifax pointed out, involves an employee, a human being with his pride, who is entitled to some regard and to receive a decent salary for the work he is doing.

I am sure, as far as our department is concerned, that we are doing everything possible to study all these problems in the right perspective with a view to finding a fair solution. I promise the hon. members, specially the member for Halifax, and without forgetting the member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton), that I shall do everything in my power so that this salary revision is completed and we can find a solution which might not only be a rule for the present but also the key for continuity in that labour classification, where social justice would remunerate equitably the employees of national defence and the other employees in the same area.

The minister has assured me that we will do everything in our power to give satisfaction to those people who have waited so long. The Civil Service Commission and the people in charge of labour relations are working on this problem which concerns us, in an endeavour to find a satisfactory solution.

LABOUR RELATIONS—QUEBEC—STOPPAGE OF WORK BY LONGSHOREMEN

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, my grievance tonight deals with a situation which probably concerns the whole house, because it relates to the present strike on the St. Lawrence and the great lakes.

The regional industry of Trois-Rivières, which I represent, is affected, and this holds true more particularly for the 500 or 600 employees directly involved; further, I do not refer to the effects from the national point of view. I believe that up to now the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) has done everything that was humanly and logically possible, by appointing the arbitration board which invited the two parties to sit Friday. I was scandalized and amazed that the management representatives refused to attend and negotiate.

I noted, like all members, that those people were invited Saturday and that the judge was asked whether he was ready to sit, because it was an urgent matter. We were hoping until Saturday afternoon, from 2.30 to 4.30 p.m., but the management representatives refused to take part in the negotiations.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we have reached a point where we should ask the minister to take strong action and, if he lacks the powers necessary to force the management representatives to the negotiation table, I think he should ask the house for the emergency powers he needs. I have no doubt that the whole house would be pleased to give them to him, because Canada's economy as a whole is affected.

I would not want to give the impression that I have mentioned these facts for demagogic purposes; rather it is because I recall that, in 1961, when we had trouble caused by the S.I.U., when violence flared up, the employers applied to the courts for an injunction—I was mayor of the municipality and I took the necessary action to force the employees on the waterfront to comply with the terms of the injunction. We took strong action and forced them to comply with the law.

Then it was the employees' turn. There should not be a double standard, especially in the present case. Because of the consequences on the economy of our country, it is even more important.

I submit, and this is the suggestion I want to make on behalf of my area, knowing that there will be repercussions—I would like to ask the Minister of Labour to avail himself as soon as possible of all the authority he can dispose of to force the management representatives to negotiate. If he does not have the necessary authority, he only has to ask the house to give it to him. Afterwards, if they did not want to comply, the minister could take steps in order that navigation and transshipment of freight could continue normally.

I believe that the labour representatives, even if I do not have the authority to speak in their name, would understand, after this gesture of good will and this proof of energetic authority on the part of the minister, that it is in their interest to resume work during negotiations, because they can expect that the matter will not drag out unduly as it has dragged on since last September.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—UNFAIR ADVANTAGES ENJOYED BY DESIGNATED AREAS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I have a grievance different from the subjects discussed this evening. I might run five minutes past the hour in completing my grievance, so may I have your permission to do so?

I rise at this time to protest the policy now being pursued by the government in connection with naming designated areas and rewarding industry that locates and settles in these designated areas at the expense of the whole country. This policy, which is one of sheer favouritism, gives all the advantages of attracting industry to these designated areas.

I think it is also timely that I protest against this policy tonight, because at this very minute the executive and members of the Prince Edward Chamber of Commerce are meeting in Picton, Ontario, to wrestle with the problem of our failure to attract new industry. The same problem exists in Lennox as well, which has people, problems and industrial circumstances similar to those of Prince Edward.

The policies of the government are seriously impeding the economies of these two great counties. Prince Edward county has already lost a good prospective industry. The persons acting for the industry said that they could not consider locating in Prince Edward, even with all its many advantages and good qualifications, because the federal government grants were so substantial that they could not afford to pass them up.

We have in my riding, Mr. Speaker, all the responsibilities to keep our economy buoyant and rolling that are faced by the people in designated areas. We have children to educate, bills to pay, taxes to pay, taxes which are used by this government to the advantage of the designated areas and to our disadvantage. We try to promote industry but to no avail, as we cannot compete in the situation brought about by the discriminatory policies of this government. Even our students, Mr. Speaker, cannot get summer jobs because of the lack of industrial growth in the county. They go elsewhere for employment—yes, for permanent employment

I have here an article which appeared in the Picton Gazette of May 6, and I should like to quote parts of it:

> Already one industry has turned down the Prince Edward area in favour of the heavy federal government assistance available in a designated area. The recommended resolution calls for Prince Edward to either be designated for industry grants or given assistance so the county can compete with designated areas.

The latter is preferable.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that industrial and economic progress can be maintained and nurtured in this country without a preferential government policy of the kind presently existing. This practice and policy of the government is creating much unrest in the nation. It is turning city against city, municipality against municipality. Who knows—as time goes by we may find that some of these federally subsidized industries have located in the wrong place and the wrong area, and may in the long run have done better to settle in the very area or areas which were turned down at the beginning. Such an area is Prince Edward-Lennox, which is splendidly located approximately half way between the two greatest metropolitan markets in Canada—I refer to Toronto and Montreal with first class rail and deep water transportation facilities, a good, vigorous, intelligent and basically capable labour pool; with living conditions and environment and recreational conditions second to none. With these characteristics these counties can offer prospective industry the best of advantages. Existing industry now prospering in our counties is proof of this. But we cannot compete at this time with the present policies of the government, which are so partial to our neighbouring designated areas.

The Prince Edward Chamber of Commerce is working harder than ever before on industrial promotion, as is the Napanee Chamber of Commerce. But Prince Edward is getting no new industry; neither is Napanee. Both Picton and Napanee assist and encourage their existing industries all they can. The pace of present-day standards of taxation, of competition, of living, and of population growth demand that we multiply our enterprises, that we produce more in our own areas in keeping with all the circumstances pertaining to our ambitious and vigorous Canadian economy.

Prince Edward-Lennox, the Ontario home of the Loyalists and older than Canada itself, is one of the cradles of Canadian civilization. The area developed on an agricultural economy which still flourishes, despite some disadvantages. But now in 1966, Mr. Speaker, agriculture, although it can feed us, cannot keep and provide employment for us all.

That is why I call upon this government either to do away with this law delineating these designated areas, or to bend these binding restrictions on our area and make an arrangement whereby we can compete with our neighbours toward a more prosperous Canada.

Motion (Mr. Sharp) agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

Mr. McIlraith: There is still one left open, the estimates of the Solicitor General.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Proceedings reported.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if the house would revert to motions for the purpose of making changes in a committee, and for the purpose of hearing an announcement by the hon. Minister of Labour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR IN LONGSHOREMEN DISPUTE

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all hon. members of the house and all Canadians will welcome the announcement that His Honour Judge Rene Lippe, who performed such outstanding service for Canada in the fall of 1963 at the time of the water front trouble in Montreal, and who has since continued to render outstanding service to Canada as a member, and latterly, as chairman of the Maritime Board of Trustees, has agreed to accept the responsibility of mediator in the new Montreal dock trouble.

The Prime Minister and I have been talking to Judge Lippe this evening. He is returning to Montreal tonight. The first meeting of the parties with him in his capacity as mediator will take place in his office in Montreal at 2.30 tomorrow afternoon.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we propose to bring forward for consideration item No. 52 on today's order paper, the resolution dealing with the provisions for term 29 of the agreement with Newfoundland; then, item 60 on today's order paper, the resolution preceding the bill respecting allowances to persons being trained under technical and vocational training programs; then the estimates of the Post Office Department, Department of Industry and the Department of Defence Production. We will continue any unfinished part of that program on Thursday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the Chair correct in its understanding that there has been agreement to have no proceedings on the adjournment motion this evening?

Mr. Knowles: I did not understand that. I believe that one of the questions that had been announced was to be postponed, but that was far as it went.

Mr. McIlraith: That was my understanding.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

THE SENATE—SUGGESTED ACTION LEADING TO ABOLITION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the orders of the day this afternoon I addressed a question to the Prime Minister with reference to a new way in which the Senate might be abolished. My question was based on a news report of the intention on the part of Premier Lesage to abolish the upper house in the province of Quebec. It was on the basis of the manner in which Premier Lesage proposed to take this step that I put my question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker thought that it was an improper question for the orders of the day and so I suggested that we could perhaps abolish the Senate at ten o'clock tonight.

I hope the applause is recorded in Hansard.

I think I should quote a couple of sentences attributed to Mr. Lesage in yesterday's edition of the Montreal Gazette. It is an excellent statement of the proposition that an upper, non-elected house should be abolished. These are the words from yesterday's Gazette:

> Mr. Lesage said abolition is necessary to transform and democratize parliamentary procedure and put government in the hands of the people. In the future the decisions of the representative of the people must be final; they cannot be in the hands of those who are appointed.

I agree thoroughly with the sentiments expressed by Mr. Lesage, and though all members of parliament do not yet realize it—they will in due course— I believe the day has come when the affairs of our democracy should be in the hands of those who are elected by and are responsible to the people of Canada.

I raise this question, however, because I think Premier Lesage has made statements which make it necessary for this government to come forward with some comment. As hon. members are aware, in the last session of the previous parliament we were informed that the government of Quebec had asked the government of Canada to endorse a petition from the lower house of Quebec to Her Majesty the Queen for an amendment of the constitution in a manner which would curb the powers of the Quebec upper house.

I for one fully agree with Premier Lesage's aim to curb those powers or to do away with the upper house altogether. But the way in which this proposition was placed before us last session did raise some questions as to the manner in which we should amend our constitution.

Mr. Lesage has gone one step further. He has told the electors of Quebec that he now proposes to abolish the upper house in that province. He says that if his government is returned to power and if Westminster agrees to amend the British North America Act as he has requested, Quebec will then be in a position in which measures passed by the lower house cannot be vetoed by the upper house for more than a year.

So, says Mr. Lesage, the government of which he is Premier will cause to be passed a measure in the lower house abolishing the upper house. Then, if the upper house refuses to agree, a year later the lower house will pass the measure again and, ipso facto, the upper house goes.

If this is being done in Quebec on the basis of action taken by this government in Ottawa in sending the matter on to Westminster, it would suggest a course which might be taken to get rid of the upper house in the parliament of Canada. I suggest it follows. If it can be done there, in that way, in Quebec, it could be done in the same way here. We could pass a resolution in the lower house of parliament asking that the powers of the upper house be curbed so that it cannot veto a measure from this house for more than one year. Then we could ask the government, without going to the upper house for approval, to send that resolution to Westminster.

We would thus be asking Westminster to amend our constitution. Then a year or so later, the power of the other house having been curbed, we could pass a bill in this house abolishing the other place, and a year later that would be the end of the Senate.

I want to say categorically that as a lifelong abolitionist so far as the Senate is concerned, I would not do it that way. I think it is a devious way to deal with the matter, and I would do it more directly; but this is the position that the government has helped to create. The government supported the proposition of sending a resolution from one house in Quebec to Westminster, even though the other house did not approve it.

Now we have Mr. Lesage putting everybody in a difficult position, and most of all putting Westminster in a difficult position. The tradition at Westminster is to approve without question requests for amending our constitution, and their hope is that we will not send them requests of this kind many more times. But when Westminster is told in very plain language that this present amendment of the constitution is going to be used for a purpose that was not stated when the amendment was sought, it will put the British government and the British parliament in a rather awkward position.

This was one of the reasons I asked this question this afternoon, namely that the government should be making a statement on this matter. Either the government should admit that it has helped to work out a simple formula for abolishing an upper house—and if it works for Quebec it should work for this parliament—or it should take another look at what it has gone along with in sending, by executive action, approval of Mr. Lesage's request for an amendment to the B.N.A. Act, even though we in this parliament had no chance to vote for it.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that there is a bit of a mixture in the things I am talking about. I take my stand with Premier Lesage, that democracies should be run by members who are elected. There is no place for appointed upper houses, either in Quebec or here, and some day we shall be rid of them; but I do think we have to look at the niceties of constitutional procedure, and I would be interested in knowing what the comment of the government is on this very interesting development.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard from a member of this house who has served long and in an illustrious manner, and who has spoken many times on the form and function of parliament. But I would remind hon. members, before we talk in terms of destroying a constituent part of parliament, that there was much reason and logic to the creation of this particular institution, the Senate, by the founding fathers.

This evening I spent some time reading the address given by the then Attorney General, John A. Macdonald, on February 6, 1865, in the parliamentary debates on the subject of the confederation of the British North American provinces. One cannot read this lengthy address by this constitutional authority of the day without appreciating that many of the problems facing the colonies of those days still continue to exist in Canada.

Actually, though my experience in this house is very limited in comparison with that of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I remember vividly the year 1961 when on two occasions, in the case of class and kind legislation and in the Coyne affair, many Canadians were grateful for the existence of the other place. Sir, economic life today is governed by a mixture of private decisions taken in the corporate sector of the economy and of public decisions taken by governments, with the latter constantly assuming greater importance.

I do not think there is any argument that in the post-war years there has been a profound change in distribution of income and in economic organization, and this is to the good. But to do this soundly and well there have to be certain constitutional safeguards. It is a fact that government action brings more and more aspects of life and affairs within its orbit. Perhaps one can even say that the citizen is progressively stripped of effective influence on certain directions of government. Perhaps it is the Senate in certain particulars which becomes the great safeguard of the liberties of the public. I think of some of the persons presently holding seats in the other place whose wisdom, judgment and experience in matters of civil liberties and in matters of welfare and economic change are significant and important to the future growth and well-being of this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. gentleman has expired.

Mr. Knowles: The Senate is saved by the bell.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RIGHT OF ACCUSED TO COUNSEL

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-184, to amend the Criminal Code (right to counsel).

• (2:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, one of the sponsors of the Bill of Rights, Hon. Noel Dorion, expressed recently a few reservations with regard to the effectiveness of that bill in practice. The purpose of this bill is to remedy a situation. Too many police officers violate the Bill of Rights every day; too many police officers treat prisoners like dirt.

Consequently, the object of this bill is to make it a criminal offence for a police officer or any law officer to refuse a prisoner the right to call his lawyer.

AID TO FRENCH SPEAKING COUNTRIES

Question No. 1,095—Mr. Laprise:

1. Since 1960, what sum did the government award each year to assist African and Asiatic French speaking countries and how much was spent each year?

2. With reference to help to such countries, did the province of Quebec make any special requests and if so, what were they?

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Under procedures worked out with recipient governments Canada allocates annually to each eligible country or region a portion of the aid funds voted by parliament. As soon as arrangements are worked out for the effective utilization of these allocations, funds are committed to specific projects which have been requested by developing countries. Expenditures occur only when all arrangements have been completed for the execution of the project; the funds are voted on a non-lapsing basis in order to overcome any problems occasioned by the time lag between commitment and disbursement. The annual allocations, commitments and expenditures to French-speaking countries are as follows:

(Million $)

Fiscal Year	Allocations	Commitments	Expenditures
1961-62	.619	.392	.392
1962-63	1.900	1.851	1.851

1964-65	4.678	3.921	1.921
1965-66	8.988	6.364	4.062

In addition $2.194 million has recently been committed to the Nam Ngum Hydro-Electric project as part of the Mekong River Development The French speaking States of Asia will be the principal beneficiaries.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

1. Is the government planning to organize group trips to Expo '67 from across Canada?

2. If so, how many groups will be making these trips and what transportation facilities will be used?

3. Is the government encouraging private organizations such as service clubs to make group trips to Expo '67?

Return tabled.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, starred question No. 998, standing in my name, has been on the order paper since March 7. It is a simple request for information, and I wonder when I can expect an answer to it from the Secretary of State.

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, my question No. 980 also has been on the order paper since March 7. Considerable interest has developed around this question, and I am wondering what is the difficulty in obtaining an answer.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in looking at these questions I can see no reason that either of them should not be answered. I will give an undertaking that they will be answered one week from today, or else.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, at the same time, I would like to ask the Secretary of State to take into consideration question No. 1,158 which has been on the order paper for two months and to which an answer could be readily given.

The Secretary of State might also agree to the same thing with regard to that question as to the previous one. It is question No. 1,158.

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, question No. 1,158 requests a considerable amount of information and it would seem that it might take some length of time to answer it.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, on this same point of delay in answering questions, I should like the Secretary of State to look at question No. 1,402 which has been on the order paper for a considerable period. In view of what the Russian wheat sales mean to the economy of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —and in view of the fact that the question merely requires a yes or no answer, I am sure the government should be able to give an answer without delay.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, while we are on this subject, I do not wish to rush anything but I asked for production of papers last session—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for papers Nos. 120 and 127 are acceptable to the government subject to the reservations concerning confidential requests and the authorization of the province of Ontario.

I ask that other notices of motions be allowed to stand.

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE—LAW SOCIETY STATEMENT

Motion No. 21—Mr. Cowan:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the statement prepared by the Benchers of the Upper Canada Law Society respecting Mr. Justice Leo Landreville of the Ontario Supreme Court.

Motions for Papers

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think within the past two weeks the subject matter of this motion has been decided on by the house. I would respectfully submit that the motion is not now receivable by the house.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

FATHER MOSS SCHOOL, SIOUX NARROWS, ONT.

Motion No. 120—Mr. Reid:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the correspondence between the federal government and the government of the province of Ontario, and between individuals and organizations in the district of Kenora, and elsewhere, concerning the Father Moss school at Sioux Narrows, Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the house that notice of motion No. 120 be agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF "LA GRANDE HERMINE"

Motion No. 124—Mr. Keays:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any communications exchanged between the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, or the minister or any official thereof, and the centennial commission or the authorities of Expo '67 or any other person with reference to the construction of "La Grande Hermine".

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, this notice of motion asks for the production of certain papers exchanged between my department and the centennial commission or the authorities of Expo '67. I am informed that in accordance with parliamentary usage these are privileged and confidential papers and therefore should not be tabled. There is, however, some correspondence which we could table, and if the hon. gentleman would accept my assurance that as far as we can go the correspondence will be tabled, we will accept it on that basis.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I accept the suggestion of the minister, and I trust that all the information which I seek will be made available.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations specified by the hon. member, is it agreed that this motion is acceptable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Cowan.]

1972 WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

Motion No. 127—Mr. Dinsdale:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any communications between the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Canadian Wildlife Federation, the Canadian Audubon Society, the National and Provincial Parks Association, or any other group or individuals, concerning the staging of the 1972 winter Olympics in Banff national park.

Motion agreed to.

SEAFARERS INTERNATIONAL UNION

Motion No. 128—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any communication exchanged between the maritime trustees, or other organizations and other persons, and the Minister of Labour or any official of the Department of Labour, with respect to the seafarers' international union.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, reference is made in this notice of motion to communications exchanged between the maritime trustees or other organizations and other persons and the Minister of Labour or officials of the Department of Labour. I have had occasion to look into this matter at some length in connection with this notice of motion and two others which have appeared on the order paper this session, and I have come to the conclusion that communications between the maritime trustees and the Minister of Labour or the department are confidential because they relate largely to work done by the trustees in their positions of trust. They also involve communications in which legal opinions were requested.

Any arguments that could be advanced in favour of or against the production of these communications were advanced in connection with motion No. 9, which was disposed of by a vote last week. I presume that technically the hon. member may be entitled to communications between other organizations.

[Editor's note: At this point a loud explosion was heard in the chamber.]

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that technically some of the communications between other organizations, the Minister of Labour and the department may be producible, but I assure the hon. gentleman that they would be of no great interest, because I doubt if these are the documents that I am sure he has in mind. In view of those facts and the previous two hour and 40 minute debate which took place on this subject matter on another analogous motion, perhaps the hon. member would consider withdrawing the motion.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in view of the unique reply of the minister as compared to what he has said on other occasions, perhaps this motion could stand until I consider his suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this motion should stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion stands.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT TO OTTAWA BY SOUTH VIET NAM DEPUTY PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will inform the house as to the purpose of the intended visit of the deputy prime minister of South Viet Nam to Ottawa and—

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might rise on a question of privilege to indicate that a page boy has just come in with a request that all the doctors in the house now go outside, as their services are needed immediately.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): They have gone.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the Prime Minister say whether this visit has anything to do with negotiations regarding the situation in Viet Nam, or will he indicate the reason for this visit?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has suggested that I might deal with this question. Mr. Bui Diem had intended to come here as a member of the South Vietnamese delegation to the world veterans conference held in Canada recently. Something happened with regard to his arrangements and he could not come to the conference. He has indicated that he would like to come next week, and I have told him I would be very glad to see him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is there any particular subject to be discussed or is this just a visit on the part of this gentleman, without any political connotations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I hope that when he does come we will have an opportunity to exchange views, but what precisely he has in mind I am not aware.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare on the statement he made yesterday with respect to the commencing date of July 1, 1967, for a medicare program. I believe this statement reflects great credit on the minister and his colleagues, and I am sure it will be a source of great encouragement to all people in Canada who have been anxious to see a medicare program undertaken.

Can the minister give the house any clear idea as to when the legislation for this program will be introduced? Will it be this session, and if so will it be this summer or this fall? Has the minister any clear idea of the approximate date when it will be submitted to the house?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am hoping and planning to have the legislation brought before the house certainly before any summer recess.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With reference to the minister's statement yesterday regarding medical training and medical research, which would be provided for under the health resources fund, I would ask the minister whether provision for this fund will be included in the medicare legislation, or will separate legislation be introduced for this purpose?

Mr. MacEachen: It is expected and planned to have a separate piece of legislation covering the health resources fund, and I hope it will be possible for the house to deal with the three major social security measures at about the same time, namely the Canada Assistance Plan, medicare and the health resources fund.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It has been a little difficult to hear in the chamber and my question may have been covered. If so, I apologize; but in case it has not, may I ask the minister, with respect to his statement of yesterday, what further discussions are arranged or intended with the provinces with a view to obtaining their consent or expression of opinion with regard to the implementation of the medicare program by July 1, 1967.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, no further formal discussions are planned at the present time. At the last conference of ministers held in January, four provinces gave a clear indication, as I recollect, of their intention to be ready on July 1, 1967. Since then several provinces, through statements made in provincial legislatures, have indicated their intention to proceed by that date. As I recollect, only two or three provinces at present have not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the minister, but there are so many conversations in the house that it is very difficult for the Chair, and I am sure for hon. members, to follow either the questions or the replies which are being made. I ask the co-operation of hon. members to concentrate on the question period.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think much of the conversation—

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may complete my reply.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —would be cleared up if the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the minister had not completed his reply.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I just complete my reply to the hon. gentleman by saying that there remain several provinces which have not given any indication, to my knowledge, either in the legislature or elsewhere, as to their intentions. But I hope the advance notice given yesterday will enable all provinces to be in a better position to plan their future course of action.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Has the government of Quebec or its representative stated at that meeting in January on the health insurance scheme the position of the province, at the time, and has the Quebec government since then communicated a different attitude on this matter?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: At the general meeting the representative of the province of Quebec, the minister of health, expressed a favourable view on this matter. I understand that any final communication to the federal government was pending a study to be made at the session of the Quebec legislature.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister mentioned the beginning of the summer recess. Does he mean that he expects this house and the other house will have considered and dealt with the government proposals, including any possible public hearings, by that time?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, with respect to these social security measures I hope the house will be able to deal with them before the summer recess.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I was going to ask, Mr. Speaker, if the proposed legislation will provide that Alberta or any other province which does not desire to enter this scheme will be able to opt out of it without any financial loss.

Mr. MacEachen: There will be no provision in the legislation for that contingency, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the questions which are being asked now are of an argumentative nature and are not in order at this time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DEATH OF MAN IN BOMB EXPLOSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the reason for the conversation in the chamber is the current report that someone has just passed away within the precincts of the House of Commons. I suggest to the Prime Minister, and I do so in the desire the house should not be carrying on under these circumstances, that it might be worth considering that this house should adjourn.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It appears that there was a bomb explosion in the washroom at this end of the third floor and that a man has been killed, under circumstances which are not yet quite clear. There has been a good deal of damage done to the washroom and a certain amount of confusion is natural. Perhaps my right hon. friend's suggestion should be adopted and the house could adjourn until four o'clock, when the situation will be cleared up and we can resume.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the house suspend its sittings until four o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At 3.05 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 4 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The house will now resume the business interrupted at 3.05 p.m.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): It may be early to ask for a report, but I wonder if the Solicitor General could report upon or comment about the events which happened just prior to the adjournment?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I have no statement to make at this time, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the R.C.M.P. and the Ottawa city police are co-operating in this.

PUBLIC WORKS

PERFORMING ARTS CENTRE OTTAWA—PROCEDURE IN CALLING TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to direct my question to the hon. Secretary of State. I wish to direct it now to the Minister of Public Works because he is at hand. Can the minister explain why the lowest bid with respect to the centre for the performing arts was some $23 million more than the original cost agreed to by the government when the project was originally conceived?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me, from the way the question is asked, that the hon. member is asking for an expression of opinion. The question cannot be accepted in that form.

Mr. Thompson: As a supplementary question, and rephrasing the question I previously asked, may I ask the minister why the bid opened today was nearly $32 million, as compared with the original $9 million?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That kind of question cannot be accepted. It may be that the minister wishes to make a statement for the benefit of the house; but certainly, a question such as this cannot be accepted.

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question. May I ask the minister if this is a fact?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not a fact. The premise on which the hon. member has put the questions he has been attempting to ask is not right. The figure of the low bid is correct. The bids are being checked through now.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works.

Is it true that only a few designated contractors could submit tenders and that public tenders were not called in connection with the construction of the building?

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: There was a call from a selected list of contractors, 31 of which were indicated as capable under what is known in the construction industry as prequalification, which list was worked out by the Canadian Construction Association in conjunction with the federal authorities. All these contractors who were thought to be of a size, with the necessary organization to do that scale of job, were invited to qualify. From my recollection, and I am answering this question without notice having been given there were some 31 contractors originally asked if they were interested and capable of qualifying. When it came down to the time when the bids were finally called there were some five or six bids put in.

I can get precise information on that whole subject. If hon. members wish to formulate their questions and give me notice, I would be very glad to give any information I could on the subject.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the minister a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the bids, were they sealed, and were they publicly opened?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I realize that my question may have been answered before the sitting was suspended but in the confusion it was difficult to hear what was being said.

My question is with respect to the medicare and health resources fund legislation. Did the minister say that it was the government's intention simply to get that legislation before the house before a summer break, or is it the government's hope that we shall get it passed before we break for a summer recess?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): We hope to get it passed.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say by what date he plans to have these items of legislation on the order paper?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have had previous experience with the hon. gentleman with respect to deadlines. I do not intend to fall into that same trap today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: I do hope to proceed as quickly as possible with the matter, and certainly within some weeks.

Mr. Starr: You will probably filibuster it.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, that was before an hour had seven days.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC—SUMMER WORK FOR STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration? I would like him to pay a little attention to it. Besides, I asked the Minister of Labour the same question yesterday.

In view of the numerous applications which we are getting from students looking for summer work, has the minister issued any directives to the officials of the employment offices to work actively in order to find jobs for students during the holidays?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no special directives have been issued this year. The employment offices look after finding jobs for students because they are asked to.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Now, as far as the government here is concerned, the Civil Service Commission looks after that, and that is all the information I can give the hon. member.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister?

In view of the fact that foreign labour will come over to help pick the fruit crop in southwestern Ontario and that we are getting applications from students to do that kind of work, would the minister be in a position to tell us if his department will take steps to help our students work at picking the fruit crop.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member states that students are ready to help pick the fruit and vegetable crop, I would like him to assure me that he is making more than a general statement.

Mr. Caouette: Then, if I send the minister the letters I am getting, I am sure he will take care of them.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING PRODUCTION OF PROTOTYPE SAFETY CAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): My question is directed to the Minister of Industry. I should like to ask him whether officials from the state of New York are meeting with officials of the National Research Council in order to arrange for co-operation with Canada in the building and production of a prototype safety car.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that this question be placed upon the order paper.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR TEXTBOOKS IN FRENCH LANGUAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Transport a question dealing with a letter I have just received from the vice president of the C.N.R. about the signalling courses.

Could the Minister of Transport tell us if it is true that there is no French translation of the manual used by the C.N.R. to give the signalling courses?

Will the minister take the necessary action so that bilingualism will be respected within that crown corporation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I ask that this question be discussed at ten o'clock.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER—DESTINATION OF SHIPMENT DESTROYED IN MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. It stems from a report published recently in the newspaper La Terre de Chez Nous.

Could the minister tell us to whom the 6 million pounds of butter stored in the Montreal shed which was burned down recently were being sent?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest, if I may, that the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Caouette: Ten o'clock.

NEWFOUNDLAND

PROVISION FOR ADDITIONAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE UNDER TERM 29

The house resumed from Monday, May 9, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Pearson—Mr. Tucker in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to give effect to term 29 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada and to pay to the province, out of the consolidated revenue fund, in the fiscal year commencing on the 1st day of April, 1967 and in each and every fiscal year thereafter, an annual amount, by way of additional financial assistance as contemplated by term 29, of eight million dollars.

Mr. Flemming: Mr. Chairman, by the terms of the resolution we are presently considering we are asked to give our approval to the introduction of a measure giving effect to term 29 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada and, in accordance with those terms, to pay to that province the sum of $8 million each year by way of additional assistance out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

I favour the resolution and I shall vote for it. It will be the statutory implementation of a portion of the understanding by which Newfoundland became the tenth province of Canada. Coming as I do from one of the Atlantic provinces and in view of the fact that the province of Newfoundland is one of the others, I have no hesitation in saying that I have a special personal interest in any statute designed to benefit any province in that group.

Having a special interest, I can say to the house that I remember well the feeling of satisfaction which we in New Brunswick had when the Terms of Union with Newfoundland were arrived at in the year 1949, even though we constituted the opposition party in the New Brunswick legislature. It was our feeling at that time—and subsequent events have proved we were right—that the entry of Newfoundland into Canada was going to be of special benefit to the provinces on the Atlantic seaboard, which up to that time had been known as the maritime provinces and which, with the entry of Newfoundland into the confederation, became known more properly as the Atlantic provinces.

After 1952, when we were favoured with a greater degree of responsibility in New Brunswick than previously, we frequently became associated on an official, personal and, I believe, friendly basis with Premier Smallwood of Newfoundland and members of his cabinet. Our relationship was on a most cordial basis and we found ourselves willing and anxious to work together with Premier Smallwood as well as with the other premiers of the Atlantic provinces.

I learned from Premier Smallwood at first hand the importance he attached to term 29 and it is of more than passing interest that the commission which was appointed as a result of term 29 was headed by the chief justice of New Brunswick, Hon. J. B. McNair. I am not sure when the commission was appointed, but I do not believe they had reported or, at least, that any action had been taken on their report, prior to the change in government here in Ottawa which took place in 1957. The Minister of Transport has quoted the recommendation of the royal commission in his speech recorded in Hansard on page 4917, and it reads as follows:

Accordingly we recommend additional financial assistance as follows:

(d) for the fiscal year beginning April 1, 1960, $8 million less the transitional grant of $350,000,

(e) thereafter $8 million per annum

Since the Minister of Transport has quoted term 29, I do not propose to weary the house by quoting it again, but I think it should be mentioned that this royal commission was set up for the purpose of determining what had been the result of Newfoundland's becoming a province of Canada, to review the financial position of the province of Newfoundland and to recommend the form and scale of additional financial assistance which would enable it to continue public services at the levels and standards reached subsequent to the date of union, without resorting to taxation more burdensome, having regard to capacity to pay, than that obtaining generally in the region comprising the maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. I believe the grants under this award have been paid to Newfoundland since the date mentioned, April 1, 1960.

I could recite the many times the government of New Brunswick came to Ottawa between the years 1952 and 1957 with a request for special financial assistance in the form of special adjustment grants. I see no reason for doing so at the moment. It was a source of great satisfaction to all of us, and this certainly includes the premier of Newfoundland, when the government of Canada led by my right hon. leader, after it assumed office in 1957, decided to make available to the Atlantic provinces the sum of $25 million per year beginning in the year 1958, I believe, and passed the necessary statute authorizing payment of same.

I am sure it is of some interest to the house to know how such an amount was divided among the four Atlantic provinces. We were told at that time that our financial advisers in each province should get together and agree on an acceptable distribution. They met in Halifax and spent several days discussing the matter. I naturally received frequent reports of their deliberations and the points raised by representatives of all the provinces. Out of those discussions came a recommendation to their respective governments that the $25 million per year special adjustment grants be made to the Atlantic provinces on the basis of $7,500,000 each to Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and $2,500,000 to the province of Prince Edward Island.

This is the basis on which the amounts were finally awarded and this arrangement continued for a period of four years. In the year 1962, the special adjustments grants were increased by the government of that day by $10 million, and the increased amount has, of course, been continued by the present government. It is of interest to know that the total amount since that date has been $35 million per year divided on the basis of $10,500,000 each to Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and $3,500,000 to Prince Edward Island. It was always my opinion, and I have expressed it publicly, that the action of the province of Nova Scotia in agreeing to this percentage division was extremely generous in view of their larger population. I still think this is true, and I repeat those words today.

[Mr. Flemming.]

The premier of Newfoundland was very conscious and appreciative of the special adjustment grants passed by the Conservative government in 1957. He said so to me on many occasions. I also was very pleased with them. I still am, and I expect to continue to be. So, we find the request of the government of Newfoundland that legislation be passed by which the terms of union shall be met. It is transmitted to this house in the name of the Prime Minister, and obviously it is the wish of the government to comply with it.

It has been said in this debate previously that we are quite prepared to pass the resolution, and then the bill will be before us in all its detail. Our party is prepared to agree to what in this particular matter the province of Newfoundland considers to be in its own best interest. It is on this basis that these remarks are made.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the resolution we have before us provides for the payment of an annual grant of $8 million as financial assistance to the province of Newfoundland. We have no objection to helping provinces who need assistance. But while a decision is being made on the amount to be awarded to Newfoundland, the federal government should remedy an abnormal situation which exists in that province: It is that, with the assistance of the Privy Council in London, Newfoundland has succeeded in stealing part of the territory of Quebec, namely Labrador.

Mr. Chairman, if we are to shower gifts upon Newfoundland, the Canadian government should begin by seeing to it that something belonging to Quebec is returned to Quebec. I see that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) is smiling, but I believe if he were to look into the manner in which this decision has been rendered and interpreted, he would realize that it is highly irregular and involves serious inequities.

Mr. Chairman, the province of Quebec has previously laid claim to such part of the territory as belongs to it and which does not belong to Newfoundland. The federal government should take the measures required to correct the situation and return what belongs to Quebec.

It is not my intention to say more. Before voting $8 million to Newfoundland, I ask the government to return Labrador to Quebec. We do not oppose aid to Newfoundland.

The Deputy Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I should have done so earlier. The hon. member is not speaking on the subject matter of the resolution and I would ask him to confine his remarks to the subject of the resolution.

Mr. Grégoire: With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, I am giving the reasons why I am objecting to this. When we are called on to cast a vote, we are entitled to give our reasons why we vote as we do. If we object to a gift of $8 million being made to Newfoundland, it is not for objection's sake, it is because we object to taking from the taxes of the people of Quebec an $8 million gift to turn over to a province that has stolen a part of our territory. On this point, I am perfectly in order. I shall record my total opposition to such an $8 million gift as long as the province of Newfoundland shall withhold this territory.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member for St. John's East rising on a point of order?

Mr. O'Keefe: Yes, Mr. Chairman. My point of order is that it is scarcely parliamentary for an hon. member to suggest the word stolen in connection with the award made by the Privy Council, at that time the highest court in Canada and in the British Empire.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: The reason put forward is that the province of Quebec has been deprived of part of its territory, with the complicity of the Privy Council in London.

The Deputy Chairman: I ask the member for Lapointe to confine his remarks to the contents of the resolution before us. I ask him to do his utmost to relate his remarks to the resolution and not to another problem which may exist at the present time but which does not concern the resolution before the committee.

Mr. Grégoire: I will simply specify the reason why I object to it. Let the province of Newfoundland come back on the right track and restore to others what it took from them and we will not object to the request for $8 million.

As long as Newfoundland keeps a territory which does not belong to it, I will object to charity being made to those who stole part of the territory, of the wealth belonging to the province of Quebec. That may not suit everyone. Then let us read again the award made and the way it was interpreted, and at that time, the province of Quebec—

[English]

Mr. O'Keefe: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest that bringing Labrador back to Canada was one of the many gifts Newfoundland brought to Canada, not Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it was not given back to the province of Quebec even though the latter was entitled thereto and we object—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grégoire: I am pleased to note that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin) agrees with me. As will be reported in Hansard, he said "hear, hear". I would like him to express his opinion on this matter.

Mr. Pepin: He put forth the same argument three times. We had understood.

Mr. Grégoire: Do you accept?

Mr. Pepin: No, we had understood.

Mr. Grégoire: Is the minister afraid to speak his mind? He is afraid to do so because he knows that our present demands—

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I must rise on a question of privilege.

I abide by judicial decisions; I feel the only way to challenge a judicial decision is before a court of justice.

Mr. Gauthier: Are there any courts of justice in Canada? They are courts of injustice.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I conclude my remarks, by saying that we object to granting $8 million out of Quebec taxes to those who stole part of our territory.

[English]

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful to the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton for the statement which he made outlining the situation as he sees it, with Newfoundland as part of the Atlantic provinces and their vital connection with Canada. I also appreciate his own experience in these things because I do not have first hand knowledge of how these things came to pass. But there is one thing which concerns me, and that is the perpetuity aspect of this legislation.

As I interpret it, the decision we are being asked to make is to last forever, somewhat like as long as the sun shines, the rain falls and the grass grows. If the decision was recommended in the first instance by the royal commission, then why was it that when the original legislation was passed, I think in 1961, it had a limited term of five years, now necessitating further consideration of it?

Mr. Pickersgill: If I might be permitted to answer that question, Mr. Chairman. There was a controversy about that question, in the house at that time, and those of us who now occupy the treasury benches took very strong exception to the course that was taken at that time because we maintained that the McNair award was part of the terms of union, was part of confederation itself, just as every Albertan maintains that the transfer of resources, in 1930, from federal to provincial jurisdiction was part of confederation so far as Alberta is concerned.

That is precisely the reason we take the view that this should be permanent and why I welcome so warmly the words of the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton today. I had hoped that, in this house now, everyone would agree that this award was a part of the terms of union, a part of confederation, and that we all could agree unitedly to give recognition to what every Newfoundlander and I hope most other Canadians, would feel was part of the constitution of Canada. That is the reason I am very grateful to the hon. gentleman, who said at the beginning of his remarks that he had nothing to do with these earlier transactions, for giving me the opportunity to make this explanation.

Mr. Thompson: May I make one further statement, Mr. Chairman, relating to the answer. I have read these recommendations of the royal commission, and although I am only an observer I do not gather that their recommendations were to go on in perpetuity. The reference to natural resources I think is quite another thing, because that did not include Alberta alone but rather related to every province including Newfoundland; at least it has come to be recognized as such by all the provinces, including Newfoundland.

It seems to me, however, that the value of the dollar depreciates and $8 million may not be adequate in the future because $8 million today is not equivalent to $8 million in 1949. Furthermore, there may come a day when, with the tremendous resources which exist in Newfoundland, that province may be the most wealthy province in Canada. It seems to me that an indefinite period or perhaps 10, 15 or 20 years would be more in line with what I interpret to be the recommendation of the royal commission. To one who is not personally familiar with the matter and who was not present at the time of union or at the time when the recommendation of the royal commission resulted in the legislation which set this for a five year period, it seems strange that this thing should go on, just as the treaties signed with the Indians, for years and years and forever.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a few words in appreciation of what has been said. Without entering into any controversial matter, I think I should like to say there was one word used by the hon. member for Lapointe which I do not think should be left on the record without a correction. This is not suggested as aid or as a payment because of need; this is a statutory subsidy, just like the statutory subsidies which were in the original act of confederation and those which were revised in 1906. I say this to meet the point of the hon. member for Red Deer, because I think all of us who represent Newfoundland would have wished that the royal commission report might have suggested escalation, but it did not. All those constitutional subsidies are in dollars and their value has fallen; but that is just one of the facts of the constitution. I should not like anyone to think this is charity when in fact it is justice according to the constitution.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I have a few words to say on this, but I intend to be as brief as I can. To begin with, I should like to say that I approve wholeheartedly of the resolution as far as it goes, as does everyone in this party. A great obligation rests equally on both parties in respect of Newfoundland's joining confederation, because agreement was arrived at by Canada on the one hand and an independent colony on the other. This agreement is part of the terms under which they decided to join Canada. Of course there is a moral obligation which rests on the federal government to make certain there is the same equality of opportunity to Canadians everywhere in Canada.

In that context Newfoundlanders are now Canadians and are deserving not only of the letter of the terms of the agreement by which they joined confederation, but also the spirit of the agreement as well.

I believe it should be remembered that Newfoundland at the time it joined confederation in many respects was in an unfavourable position compared to the standards to which other Canadians had been accustomed for many years. Newfoundland was lacking in what we might call—to use that terrible word—infrastructure; it lacked colleges, schools, roads, harbour facilities, and many other things which had been built up in Canada ever since 1867. There was a good deal of catching up to be done. For a number of years after the original confederation there was a portfolio in the government called the secretary of state for the provinces. When Newfoundland joined confederation I regret that that portfolio was not revived for a few years. I believe we should have had a secretary of state for Newfoundland to integrate and bring up to date all of the things which had to be done with regard to Newfoundland, so that it could have all the privileges and standards which existed in the rest of Canada.

I do not wish to leave the impression that this is a one-way bargain. I think that in the rest of Canada it is not fully recognized that not only was the entry of Newfoundland into confederation a good thing for Newfoundland, but also an excellent thing for Canada. I do not think this has been appreciated sufficiently in the rest of Canada. Newfoundland provides a market for a great range of manufactured goods. These goods are exported from the older part of Canada to Newfoundland. On the other hand, nearly everything Newfoundland produces and sells, such as fish—

Mr. Pickersgill: And newsprint.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): —newsprint, pulp and paper products, and minerals, it has to export to foreign countries. Newfoundland contributes a great deal to our balance of payments situation. The obligation of course is a moral one, and I am delighted to see any steps taken which will make it as permanent as possible. As has already been pointed out; however, any legislation we pass in this house, theoretically at least, could be repealed by some future parliament; we cannot bind future parliaments.

It is the principle of the moral obligation which we must recognize as being permanent so long as Canada exists as a nation and so long as Newfoundland exists as a province of that nation. There is a danger, however, I think when we try to make the obligation permanent in a legal sense. I believe there is a danger that we may detract from the spirit of the agreement. In 1957 the royal commission recommended that for the first year $6.4 million be paid. The next amount was $6.95 million, then $7.3 million, then $7.65 million, and finally from the fiscal year 1961-62 and thereafter $8 million a year.

I do not believe we should think that the commission was able to look into the future and come up with a magic figure. I think the problem facing the royal commission was that they could make a reasonable assessment for the first few years, but after that they could not say what the appropriate amount should be.

They picked the arbitrary figure of $8 million. I think this implies that there should be a review of this matter. As has already been pointed out the value of $8 million in terms of the economic situation in 1957 was much greater than now. In view of the fact that this is a permanent type of agreement any amount fixed at any time will have a different value when compared to different economic situations which normally occur. This is true when the value of the dollar increases or decreases.

For these reasons I sincerely recommend to the Minister of Transport that he and the government give consideration to the suggestion that the spirit of the recommendation made in 1957 be followed by raising the amount from $8 million to $10 million in order that the real value intended can be given to this program at this time. I am sure if the minister will move such an amendment hon. members on this side of the house will support it.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I return to my original suggestion. I do not disagree with the remarks of the hon. member who has just taken his seat, but would it not be better to have a periodic review made of the amount to be paid, because even though $10 million may now be of the same value as $8 million was in 1957, it will be of more or less value in 1975? I cannot understand why this agreement was not made in a more effective way when the legislation was first passed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, much as I would like to accept the seductive suggestions put forward by the hon. members for Queens and Red Deer, it would be impossible to do so because this would require a message from the crown. We should remember that we are trying to carry out the Terms of Union which, in my view, are related to statutory subsidies. As a representative of a Newfoundland riding I should be delighted if we could get some special acceleration for that province, not given to Prince Edward Island; but if I were a Prince Edward Islander I would have some doubt about its fairness.

There might have been a lot to be said, perhaps, for having acceleration provisions included in the constitution, but such provisions were not included in 1867 or in 1948. That result has been effected through tax sharing and equalization payments, rather than in the constitution. In my thinking this is a fair way of dealing with this kind of problem.

At the risk of seeming to suggest that less should be given Newfoundland than hon. gentlemen opposite have suggested, I am going to say that I believe that Newfoundlanders are asking only for justice. I believe they are asking for a strict adherence to the constitutional agreement of 1948 rather than for favours. They believe, being part of Canada, that the constitution must be adhered to and, in addition, as the hon. member for Queens put it so well, that they should be given an opportunity, like all other Canadians, to share in the advantages of living in this wonderful country. I believe that all Newfoundlanders, with few exceptions, are proud to belong to this country.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pickersgill (for the Prime Minister) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-185, to give effect to term 29 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Thompson.]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since the bill is practically in the same terms as the resolution I am wondering whether there might be a disposition in the house to give it second reading at this time.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, normally I would respond to the blandishments of the minister, but some of us would like to give further consideration to that clause having to do with the fact that the bill cannot be amended except under certain conditions. Because of that constitutional point, I think we should have an opportunity of seeing the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the bill contains nothing of that sort, but I think the hon. member's request is reasonable.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

PROVISION FOR ALLOWANCES TO PERSONS BEING TRAINED

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting allowances to persons being trained under technical and vocational training programs, and to authorize the entering into agreements with the provinces in connection therewith; and to provide further for certain changes incidental thereto in connection with the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, it is a great honour for me to bring before the house this resolution preceding a bill to increase training allowances for unemployed workers and certain other classes of workers.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that our modern industrial society is very pleased with the improvements in industrial production techniques, which result in a greatly increased productivity and in the enrichment of society as a whole.

However, we must keep in mind that in this process of improving production techniques, some people are affected; this means that workers who have been trained for an industry or techniques which are now obsolete, find themselves, sometimes at an early age, without jobs and facing an indefinite unemployment.

[English]

The resolution introduces a measure which concerns the crucial problem of the retraining and further training of our labour force. As the Economic Council of Canada has pointed out, there is a need for a major effort to improve the skills of existing members of the labour force, and one of the reasons why existing training programs have not been used to a greater extent is the inadequacy of present training allowances. The measure with which this resolution is concerned is intended, among other things, to assist provincial governments to remedy this defect.

I think it is impossible to overemphasize the importance of training in today's rapidly changing world. Many of us know from our own experience and that of an increasing number of others that our skills and knowledge can quickly become out of date. New situations and new needs almost constantly test our ability to adapt and adjust in the dynamic working world of today.

Many people have enough basic education and broad skills to be able to meet these challenges, but a distressing proportion of adults in this country do not, and so become unemployed or are threatened with the loss of their job. There is another important aspect to this urgent problem. The Economic Council of Canada has documented very fully the training gap which exists in Canada as compared to the United States, and has shown its influence on income levels in the two countries. This training gap must be narrowed if we are to achieve our own goals of economic and social development and if the qualifications of those now in the labour force are to catch up with the needs of tomorrow's employment.

We will not solve these problems unless the community as a whole takes a new attitude toward the importance of training. We all have to recognize that rapid change and growth must lead us to regard training as a normal and productive part of people's working lives. When we all recognize this, we will have gone a long way toward overcoming the inhibitions of those who have the least self-confidence and the greatest need for training. We must therefore raise the status of training. There are many factors that influence status, but certainly pay is one of the most important. That basic fact is recognized in the measure proposed in this resolution. In effect it equates training with work rather than with unemployment and welfare.

The essential purpose of the proposal is to break the connection between training and unemployment. Up to now, unemployed workers who went into training courses have continued to receive unemployment insurance benefits during training. These benefits are deducted from the training allowances otherwise provided, so that the allowances are in effect merely a supplement.

Thus people up to now have had to use up their unemployment insurance protection while in training. On occasion, if they cannot obtain a job immediately after completing their course, they find themselves with no benefit at all or with their protection greatly reduced. They may find themselves worse off than if they had not taken training but had stayed inactive for a time and then got a job. I believe this is wrong. It treats training as equivalent to unemployment rather than to work. It penalizes a person for taking training, whereas we should offer him an incentive. It lowers, instead of raising, the whole status of training.

The measure proposed in this resolution breaks the dependence of training on unemployment insurance. It provides that any unemployed worker who enters a training course covered by a federal-provincial agreement will be entitled to a training allowance and will retain intact his unemployment insurance benefit and contribution rights. When he leaves such a training course, he will have exactly the same amount of unemployment insurance protection as when he entered, even if the training course is as long as two years in duration.

Hitherto the incomes of people in training have come partly from unemployment insurance, if they were entitled to such benefits, and partly from training allowances. The benefits are financed from the federal unemployment insurance fund. The allowances are paid by provincial governments but the federal government reimburses 90 per cent of the expenditure.

Obviously this financial system has to be changed when the connection between training and unemployment insurance is severed. The proposed measure will in effect substitute for unemployment insurance a basic training allowance for which the federal government will reimburse the provinces 100 per cent. The amount of this proposed basic allowance will be $35 a week. In effect, since training courses are normally 35 hours a week, it is a minimum rate of a dollar an hour for training. It replaces unemployment insurance for trainees. It will be available to people in training courses if they have previously been unemployed or if they are referred to training courses when they have previously been self-employed in primary industries such as farming, fishing or logging. In addition, the federal government will continue to reimburse the provinces for 90 per cent of training allowances in excess of the basic $35 a week.

The amount of these additional allowances is a matter for each province to decide in accordance with its own needs, wage levels and priorities. The rules governing the supplementary allowances will therefore be determined in the agreements negotiated with each province. We propose to fix a maximum supplementary allowance of $55 a week, which with the basic $35 would mean a total allowance of $90 a week.

At the federal-provincial conference at which we discussed this matter last January, there was general agreement among provincial ministers as to the desirability of increasing the level of allowances. We anticipate that the maximum total allowance of $90 a week will be paid to trainees with a number of dependants living in the relatively high-wage areas of the country. Lower scales will be provided where wage levels are lower, and there will probably also be variations according to whether the trainee lives at home or has to be away in order to attend his training course.

In negotiating the agreements with us, each province will be able to decide whether its needs are best met by a uniform scale of allowances for the province or, as may be the case in the larger provinces particularly, by regional variations in the scales. We will be willing to support any reasonable system providing variations according to family circumstances and living costs, provided the total allowance is never less than the basic $35 and that the supplement in which we share does not exceed a maximum of a further $55 a week. This flexibility means that it will be possible for the total allowances everywhere to accord to training the importance it deserves without, however, being distorted in relation to wage levels in different areas.

As was made public at the time, we discussed the outline of these proposals with provincial ministers last January, and my officials have had further discussions with their officers over recent weeks. All provinces are in sympathy with this measure.

I would like to summarize, then, what this measure is intended to do. It will make possible substantially increased training allowances for unemployed workers and for self-employed people who are under-employed in the primary industries. It will provide a basic training allowance of $35 a week for everybody in this category, the cost of which the federal government will bear completely. It will provide additional allowances as deemed appropriate by the provinces, of which the federal government will pay 90 per cent to an agreed maximum amount. It will preserve the unemployment insurance rights of workers during the training period. It will thus break the identification of training with unemployment. It will recognize the status that training ought to have in our contemporary industrial world.

In short, I feel that this proposal will be a significant help in giving training the importance it ought to have, in response to the needs of modern technology and the requirements of a modern economy. Most important of all, it will give individual workers the encouragement and the practical opportunity of upgrading their basic knowledge, of replacing obsolete skills, and of strengthening existing qualifications. Higher incomes and better working careers will be the result for the individual, while greater economic and social growth will be the result for the nation.

We have many other tasks to accomplish, but this measure will carry us forward to an important degree toward our goal of developing and fully utilizing the great human resources of our country.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It is my duty to interrupt these proceedings so that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: The house will now proceed with the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion and public bills.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The first notice of motion on the order paper, Mr. Speaker, is in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) and both she and the parliamentary secretary who would respond to it would like it to stand over. I wonder if the house would consent that this be done and that this motion be treated as though it had not been called?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT CONCERNING POSSESSION OF MOTOR VEHICLE MASTER KEY SETS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of an early amendment to the Criminal Code of Canada making it an offence, punishable by fine or imprisonment or both, to in Canada manufacture or distribute or be in possession of motor vehicle master key sets, or import the same into Canada, save by the manufacturer or the assembler of the said motor vehicles or by such person or persons duly authorized by the said manufacturer or assembler.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of my motion this afternoon is not exactly world shattering. I suggest, however, that the impact on the population of Canada of what I am trying to get at could be very great. We all know that every year thousands of motor vehicles are stolen from the streets, from garages, some to reappear but many to disappear forever. The loss to private individuals, corporations and the insurance companies with whom the owners of these motor vehicles have theft insurance mounts into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, perhaps millions every year.

What I am trying to do is to prevent at least a portion of this loss as a result of what is now being introduced into Canada, to which the general public has access, so that we can cut down on these occurrences. I am not holding any brief at all for the motorist who is foolish enough to leave his car parked on the street or in an unlocked garage with the keys in the ignition. He is inviting trouble. Nor is what I am going to suggest going to guard against the man who is going to break into a vehicle and either use a steel wire or some other form of contact with the ignition to get the car going. What I am getting at is something that has come to the attention of Chambers of Commerce, the Association of Chiefs of Police of Canada and to the All Canada Insurance Federation as a result of advertising which has appeared in eastern Canada.

Actually, these advertisements were brought to the attention of my correspondent by the Better Business Bureau of Edmonton. I am referring to advertisements which have appeared in the cheaper type of pulp magazines and publications. I have a photostat copy of an advertisement which appeared in a United States publication, but in actual fact the Canadian operation is merely that of a distributorship. In any event, this advertisement reads as follows:

Attention: Auto dealers, police agencies, locksmiths, banks and finance companies, wreckers and body shops, hardware and parts companies, collection agencies, parking garages, towing garages, etc. Need master keys?

Keys to fit all Fords, Lincolns, Mercuries, $3.

Keys to fit all Ramblers and Americans, $2.

Keys to fit all Chevies, Pontiacs, Oldsmobiles, Cadillacs and Buicks, $3.

Keys to fit all Plymouths, Chryslers, DeSotos, Dodges, $3.

There is an address given in Florida. The advertisement in the Canadian publication is headed up as follows:

Master key sets.

A priceless addition to the tools used in the automobile business. In the next year if you lose one sale over lost or misplaced keys, they will have paid for themselves many times over.

This is the first Canadian supplier selling key sets, hence no duty to pay or customs brokerage.

Three keys to open all Ford Motor Company products, $5.

The price has gone up in Canada.

Three keys to open all Ramblers and Americans, $4.

Three keys to open all Chrysler Motor Company products, $5.

Six keys to open all General Motors Company products, $5.

Keys will operate ignition on most cars and trucks now in existence.

Special, if you buy all four sets pay only $15.

Ontario residents please add 3 per cent sales tax.

• (5:10 p.m.)

These sets are available, through an outlet which I will not name, in Oshawa, Ontario. At the bottom of the advertisement are these words: "We do not sell to individuals". However, Mr. Speaker, the employees of All Canada Insurance Federation had no difficulty in obtaining key sets, as individuals, from this source. Other persons have also obtained key sets.

I now wish to read from an article appearing in the Vancouver Province of January 5, 1966. It says:

A one-man operation in eastern Canada which offers a legalized, if unwitting, aid to car thieves, has no parallel in Vancouver as far as police are aware.

But detectives here said Tuesday they are certainly interested in the business in Oshawa, Ont., that offers a set of master keys to unlock and start all North American-made cars for $15.

The report further says:

"We had a flood of literature here on the west coast about a similar sort of operation based on Florida," said a spokesman for Vancouver city police stolen auto squad.

"Since then we have been in touch with police in Florida and have quietly investigated the matter".

My reason in bringing this resolution forward has to do with the inquiry made by the Association of Police Chiefs in Canada of the postal authorities of Canada as to whether there is any way of stopping the distribution of these key sets. The association feared that the investment of $15 needed to buy these key sets would yield handsome dividends to even a minor car theft ring.

We all know that those who wish to steal a car have to do a number of things to it before they steal it. Time is taken by a person endeavouring to get in a car, in tinkering with it. During that time he may be discovered. But if one is in possession of a master key set, and if he can go up to any Chevrolet, Pontiac or Chrysler or, in fact, any automobile made in North America, and just open the door and drive off, the chances of apprehension are exceedingly small. In addition, when the automobile later has to be disposed of there are no signs that the law has been broken; there are no signs of unlawful entry through the breaking of a small vent window, or of damage to the rubber alongside those windows.

My motion seeks to make the possession, manufacture or distribution of these key sets an offence under the Criminal Code. I have not mentioned what section shall be amended. I simply ask the government to consider the advisability of amending the code. In parenthesis, might I suggest that the sections of the code to be amended might be those dealing with the theft of motor vehicles, or those dealing with such offences as having in possession a motor vehicle without consent of the lawful owner.

What I am getting at is that it should be illegal and punishable both by fine and/or imprisonment to manufacture, distribute, or actually be in possession of a motor vehicle master key set, or to import the same into Canada, save by the manufacturer or the assembler of the said motor vehicle, or by such person or persons duly authorized by the said manufacturer or assembler to have those keys.

[Mr. Lambert.]

In any town or city of Canada police authorities ought to be in possession of a master key set to be used with respect to motor vehicles. For instance if a motorist is unfortunate enough to lose his keys, he might refer to the principal garage, or to the principal agency or police authority in the community and, after properly identifying himself to the representative of the garage, agency, or police authority, have his motor vehicle opened without the necessity of breaking the lock. After that he could either have a new key made, or have a new lock with keys furnished to him.

This sort of thing is permissible under the resolution. The persons helping the motorist would be those who are duly authorized to be in possession of key sets by the manufacturer or assembler. I do not want to make it more inconvenient for motorists to obtain lawfully duplicate keys to the locks of their cars, after they have lost the original keys. Nor do I want motorists to be put to the additional expense of having to break locks.

I am sure, having regard to the representations of the Better Business Bureaux, they would agree with the aims of the resolution. Certainly the All Canada Insurance Federation would agree with the aims of the resolution. I have correspondence from that body addressed to representatives of the insurance branch of the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, to this effect.

I have sought the opinion of the postal authorities with respect to these keys. Those authorities acknowledged that they had been approached by the Association of Police Chiefs, when the chiefs had their annual convention last year. The postal authorities informed the police chiefs that there was nothing illegal about the manufacture or distribution of key sets by individuals. Therefore the postal authorities could do nothing about controlling the distribution. On the other hand, if it were an offense under the Criminal Code to manufacture, distribute or import such key sets, or such master key sets, except where those actions were authorized by the manufacturer, assembler, or other persons authorized by such manufacturer or assembler, the postal authorities could stop the distribution.

It was pointed out that the key sets were advertised as being available on a C.O.D. basis. Therefore those sending the key sets were utilizing the mails for the transmission and distribution of such master key sets. I do not wish to belabour the point, Mr. Speaker.

While the subject matter I have spoken about for the last 15 minutes is not the most important subject matter in the ambit of government business, yet it is one of those matters with which we should concern ourselves. Suppression of these key sets will assist us in the maintenance of law and order. This resolution will not eliminate car thefts, but it will make it more difficult or, at least, it will not make it any easier, to steal cars if we can ban the indiscriminate sales of such master key sets.

I have no idea how many key sets have been sold. I have not had any indication from the police whether people they have apprehended in car thefts have been found in possession of such master key sets. That is immaterial. What we must do is stop dissemination of these sets from the very beginning. There is a legal use for such master key sets. Certainly, there is a much wider illegal use. It is against that illegal use that this resolution is aimed. I ask all hon. members in this house to support the resolution.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): The resolution reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of an early amendment to the Criminal Code of Canada making it an offense, punishable by fine or imprisonment or both, to in Canada manufacture or distribute or be in possession of motor vehicle master key sets, or import the same into Canada, save by the manufacturer or the assembler of the said motor vehicles or by such person or persons duly authorized by the said manufacturer or assembler.

• (5:20 p.m.)

On reading this resolution one could immediately come to the conclusion that the question is one capable of a simple remedy by merely amending the Criminal Code—that merely by amending the code the problem would be solved. Like all proposals of a remedial nature this sounds plausible until you come up against the difficulty of enforcing the law without undue hardship to a lot of other people.

I appreciate the intention of the hon. member who moved this motion; I am sure he is to be commended. But I wonder whether the resolution in its present form is really the answer. Nevertheless I congratulate the hon. member for bringing this matter to the attention of parliament. It may have a salutary effect in the country when people hear about it. However, it seems to me that, as is the case when we consider the enforcement of automobile safety, this is a problem capable of no easy solution.

I should like to point out that when 7 million cars are on the highways of Canada there are bound to be duplicate keys available to fit cars shipped to different parts of the country. Manufacturers do provide duplicate keys for automobiles. Moreover, there is no difficulty whatever in having such keys made by any locksmith or at any garage. To my knowledge automobile manufacturers do not produce motor vehicle master key sets. What they do manufacture are the keys that go with the car, and duplicates of the same. As a matter of fact, manufacturers make cars with locks which are exactly the same on a great number of vehicles shipped to different parts of Canada.

How likely is it that the prohibition of master keys by law would reduce the number of car thefts? The great majority of drivers today are careful. They are properly trained and capable of looking after their own vehicles. But some accidents do happen. Again, when one considers the number of vehicles on the road—7 millions on the highways of Canada—he can only expect that a great number of duplicate keys would be available to provide service for car owners.

It is true, as the hon. member pointed out, that many cars are stolen every year. But I would remind him that it is not necessary to have a key in order to steal a car. As a matter of record, the largest number of thefts of vehicles is accomplished without the aid of keys. You do not need a key in order to steal a car. All you need do is to pull out some of the ignition wires and join them together.

Duplicate keys are made available for the benefit of the automobile owner who happens to lose one. I dare say that there are many members of this house who at one time or another have lost a car key and found it necessary to go to a garage or to a locksmith to have a new one made. All that is required is a knowledge of the number stamped on each key. I honestly believe that before we embark on the introduction of an amendment to the Criminal Code to make it an offence to be in possession of a duplicate key or a master key, call it what you will, we should consider the difficulties which would be imposed on automobile owners should they happen to lose their own keys. I suggest that before we do anything rash we should give this question further consideration.

It is all very well to seek to bring in amendments to the Criminal Code covering various offences. But we should also be mindful of the way in which such amendments might conflict with the best interests of the majority of the people affected. As I say, I commend the mover of this motion, but as one who knows something about the automobile business—and I have been in this business for a great number of years—I cannot support the motion in its present form.

I am all for the protection of car owners, of course. I should like to see every thief who tries to steal a car put behind bars. I have seen a number of them and I have no brief for them at all. At the same time, let us be practical. I repeat, I admire the hon. member's regard for the welfare of automobile owners. Every time I hear someone speak on behalf of automobile owners my heart goes out to him, because for many years I made my living selling automobiles, and I still have a little interest in that business. Therefore I can say that, though I appreciate the intent of the motion, and commend the mover of it, nevertheless I would not be fair to myself, knowing something about the business, if I were to say that I support the motion in its present form.

I hope the hon. member will have an opportunity to give this matter more serious consideration. If he does, in all probability he will come up with something which would be more in line with the reality of the situation with regard to the theft of automobiles. The best thing we can do at present is discuss the motion, and perhaps at a future date, following greater study of the case, we will be able to support it.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to rise this afternoon in support of the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), although I must admit that when first looking at the formidable preamble to the motion, it did not appear very interesting. Since I had some work to do in my office I was on my way out of the chamber, but I did catch some of the hon. member's remarks and they raised some very intriguing questions.

He has an excellent point when he indicates that some protection should be afforded the car owning public from this sort of advertising and the easy availability of keys of this type. I think the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai), when he pointed out the difficulties that would be encountered by car owners, may have been overstating the case because we do have legislation at present whereby if you are caught in somebody's house at one o'clock in the morning, with a jimmy in your hand, and you say you are there to look for termites, you wind up in the hoosegow. Therefore I think a great deal depends on where one is found with these instruments, and at what time he is caught.

Our laws are fairly reasonable, in the sense that it would be simple enough to determine whether these keys are in proper or improper hands. Naturally the hon. member for Fort William has a concern, because of his connection with the automobile business. I too have some concern, having latterly been in the laundromat business. The spectre of laundromat keys being easily obtained by every citizen in this country does not arouse any particular enthusiasm in my breast.

I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West at the conclusion of his statement, and I felt he was rather deprecating the importance of the issue he brought before us today because, just as the atom bomb indicated war was no longer safe with that type of weapon at the disposal of armies, the same thing applies when keys of this type are easily available. There does not seem to be much point in any of us bothering to lock our cars any more. The only solution may be to have a massive return to honesty.

However, I am quite serious in my support of the motion when I hear that such advertisements are permitted to be published in Canada, and that nobody takes a look at the implications of this type of advertising, the kind of thing it can lead to and the kind of encouragement it provides for those who already have sufficient inducement to break the law. For that reason it would be most valuable to pass this motion tonight, amending the Criminal Code to indicate that we do not approve of this type of material being made available to everyone although, as the motion points out, those who have a legitimate purpose for the possession of such keys would still be free to have them. I certainly commend this motion to all hon. members.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to say a few words on this resolution moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

When I saw this motion on the order paper I was amazed to find how easy it was to obtain means of trespassing on other people's property. Before reading this notice of motion, I did not know that master keys were available to anyone who wanted them.

I congratulate the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for putting this resolution before the house. I hope hon. members will accept the suggestion that this resolution be referred to a committee for consideration or actually passed in order to amend the Criminal Code to do away with this state of affairs. I do not believe it will solve all problems. There are many other ways to steal a car or rob somebody.

I own a car and I do not like to see anyone getting into it as easily as that. I also own a home, and I am pretty sure nobody here or elsewhere in Canada would want anyone to obtain keys and enter any house.

Mr. Speaker, I feel the motion moved by the member for Edmonton West should be considered and passed so as to correct a situation which unfortunately exists in Canada.

[English]

Mr. R. K. Andras (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with other hon. members in commending the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for presenting this motion to amend the Criminal Code. As he explained, it is designed to prevent entry into locked vehicles and the theft of cars and trucks. On the surface such an amendment to the Criminal Code could be considered as a step toward making the committing of such crimes more difficult.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The question which arises in my mind, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai), concerns the practical application of such an amendment and the enforcement of this addition to the Criminal Code. Also I think perhaps one point has been lost sight of and that is the original purpose for the designing, manufacturing and supplying of master key sets. Most certainly it never was set up to make it easy for car theft criminals to practise their nefarious occupation. This item was brought forward for a very practical use by those engaged in the manufacture, sale, repair, and servicing of cars and trucks.

In his amendment the hon. member has suggested that in addition to the manufacturer or assembler of motor vehicles being authorized to be in possession of master key sets, the authorization also would include—and it is a bit vague—such person or persons duly authorized by the said manufacturer or assembler. By coincidence I too have had some several years experience both at the manufacturing and retail end of the automobile business. I, perhaps, can give you some indication of the practical and quite legitimate use of master key sets by the people who are engaged in this type of business.

Most certainly it would be logical to extend permission and authorization for possession to such people as the authorized dealers throughout the country, of which there are several thousand. It would also be most logical to extend permission and authorization for possession of master key sets to all the service and repair garages throughout the country; it would be most logical to extend this type of authorization to service stations. You could add to that police officers and agencies engaged in the rental or leasing of vehicles, or those engaged in the legitimate sales occupation involved in the merchandising of used vehicles. These occupations all involve legitimate and practical application of master key sets.

Let me give you an example of what happens when one is engaged in a business which carries a stock of a wide diversity of makes, models, and years of cars and trucks. We have a tough climate in various parts of this country, where the weather gets very cold. In the business where such a stock is carried, each vehicle has to be started and operated every day to keep it in goood condition. This means that someone has to carry the keys to each individual vehicle in the process of going through a stock of 60, 70, or in some cases 100 or 150 cars in the course of a morning.

You can imagine the number of keys this person would have to carry with him were he not authorized to have master key sets. Of course this extends to all the other legitimate users such as authorized dealers, service stations, and all those engaged in the repair of automobiles and trucks. I do not think anyone would deny it would be legitimate to authorize these people to have key sets, and by the time you had added up the number of people who legally should be in possession of them, you would have literally thousands and thousands of agents and individuals throughout this country.

As the hon. member for Fort William pointed out, duplicate keys can be cut in several places in practically every town, village and city. They can be duplicated on machines which are quite inexpensive to obtain. I submit that the determined vehicle thief can find ways to steal vehicles without keys. He does not need door keys or ignition keys if he is determined to steal vehicles. Naturally any legislation which makes it more difficult to obtain master key sets also would inhibit such criminals to some degree; but nevertheless I think—and this is where the problem lies in the amendment—the law would be most difficult to enforce and it certainly would not be long before contraband duplicate master key sets could be obtained by anyone who seriously desired to obtain them.

For this reason, although the intent is most commendable, I really cannot see any benefit in this amendment in respect of preventing vehicle thefts by organized groups of professional criminals. Most certainly such people would have little or no difficulty in obtaining master key sets. Again, at first glance it would seem that it would make it much more difficult for the type of person who probably could be described as a casual, impulsive thief, and the danger of thefts by this type of person might be diminished. But how many vehicle thefts result from the use of master key sets; how many of these master key sets are or ever will be in the possession of the type of person who might be a casual thief? I submit that such determined types as those who now possess such keys still would find it possible, indeed quite easy, to obtain them.

I am all for any practical and enforceable law which will prevent crime. However, I am always a little concerned about the addition to existing laws or laws which are not practical and which perhaps are very difficult to enforce. I sincerely feel that this suggested amendment falls into that category. I believe it probably has a great deal more psychological than practical effect. Unfortunately, I feel I should bring to your attention also the tremendous inconvenience this would cause to those persons who are engaged in the manufacture, sale, repair and servicing of vehicles, who legitimately require these master key sets. In this connection I think I would have to describe it as being about ten pounds of prevention to provide half an ounce of cure.

Again I commend the hon. member for Edmonton West for the intent in his amendment, but in its present form I would find it difficult to support this motion.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question. In his criticism of the motion he indicated that it would be rather difficult to prove that the possession of these keys was with the intent to commit a theft and that it is difficult to indicate how many cars would be stolen by the use of this type of master key set. Does the hon. member not realize that the Criminal Code contains provisions which prohibit the carrying of burglary tools. We do not know how many burglaries are going to be committed by the use of these tools, yet we still make it an offence to have burglary tools in one's possession.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Andras: I appreciate the comment of the hon. member for Edmonton West, but I think he has somewhat misconstrued my argument. I am saying simply that there are many legitimate agencies which should be authorized to have possession of master key sets, such as the authorized manufacturers, their dealers, the independent garages, repair garages, and so on, because their operation is so diversified that it is necessary to reduce the number of keys which they have to carry on any given occasion, which arises quite often. I extend that by saying that by the time one completed authorizing all the people who are entitled to possess such keys there would be thousands of keys issued throughout this country. I do not deny the implication that the effect of this motion would make the possession of keys by unauthorized persons an illegal act, but I simply say that it would be impractical to administer and enforce.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): I have listened with a great deal of interest to this debate, Mr. Speaker, and I have been impressed by the suggestions of the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman) who preceded me in the debate. However, if this proposal were carried to an extreme I am sure it would result in the elimination of the use of the automobile. I must come to the conclusion that the intent of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), a westerner, is to render the automobile obsolete and restore horses to their proper place. I come to this conclusion since horses are synonymous with the west. This motion has obviously been devised on behalf of westerners in order to continue the role of horses.

An hon. Member: There could be worse ambitions.

Mr. Mackasey: I agree that the notice of motion moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West—

Mr. Barnett: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Mackasey: I am afraid time is too limited.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member relate his remarks as well to the restoration of the musical ride?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. The hon. member has not given his permission.

Mr. Mackasey: I will agree and give permission, allowing the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): First the hon. member disagrees and then he agrees. I recognize the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to change my mind.

Mr. Barnett: I thought I had asked the question. I wondered whether the hon. member would relate his remarks to the restoration of the R.C.M.P. musical ride.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, perhaps that is the reason behind the motion, because when the R.C.M.P. loses its horses the automobile will take over completely and we may not see horses in Canada again.

I agree with the spirit of the motion, but I believe the hon. member is too skilled a lawyer to intend to introduce an amendment to the Criminal Code which could not be practical in application. I think basically that there is a flaw in the motion, as pointed out by the previous speaker, in that it is practically impossible to apply.

There are times when we all deplore the easy manner in which young people can steal automobiles. Every day we read statistics about this subject which point out that the greatest cause for automobile theft can be related to a habit common to most of us; that is, leaving our cars unlocked, even though we are only away for five or ten minutes. I am as guilty as anyone in this regard and have often locked my keys in my car. In order to get into the car I have imitated things I have seen on television and used a common clothes hanger, inserted through the side window, to open the door.

There is another difficulty which arises in respect of the issuing of master keys to authorized persons, and I have in mind service station operators and garage mechanics. These persons may leave their jobs and take these master keys with them. Under those circumstances, whose responsibility would it be to see that these keys were turned in? What would happen when an authorized person lost a master key and requested a new one? What would become of the key that was lost, or how would it be used by an individual who might find it lying on the street?

I think that by passing this motion we would add another cumbersome provision to the Criminal Code which would in a short time become superfluous, as many of the provisions are now. I believe the hon. member has accomplished his purpose in moving this motion by drawing attention to this flagrant type of advertisement that one reads in various periodicals.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock and put an end to the hon. member's agony.

Mr. Mackasey: I believe that by advertising for sale sets of master keys to automobiles, young people are encouraged to use their imagination and end up getting into trouble, simply because they have been taught an easy way of gaining access to automobiles to be used for joy rides.

An hon. Member: Let us call it six o'clock.

Mr. Mackasey: I am sure the hon. member for Edmonton West does not regret that I am still speaking, although it is six o'clock, because he has accomplished what he set out to do. That is, he has pointed out the flagrant misuse of newspaper advertising by some people, through offering for sale master keys, and in this way placing an additional temptation before youngsters who may be inclined to steal cars for joy rides.

Mr. Starr: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mackasey: I appreciate the applause of the hon. member for Ontario, and I am sure he is a little wiser for having listened so attentively.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the business of the house for tomorrow is as follows: on the assumption that the bill relating to the implementation of term 29 of the agreement with Newfoundland will not take much time, we will proceed with it first, to be followed by a continuation of the debate on the resolution preceding the bill respecting allowances to persons being trained under technical and vocational training programs. If that is completed we will then proceed with a consideration of the estimates of the Post Office Department and the Department of Defence Production, and then the estimates of the Department of Industry.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 19, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER RESPECTING SECURITY PRECAUTIONS

Mr. Speaker: Following yesterday's disturbing occurrence many hon. members have raised with me the question of security in the parliament buildings. I believe that generally speaking the security precautions enforced in this building over the years have been entirely adequate.

As hon. members know, it is not easy to reconcile the enforcement of strict security regulations with the degree of freedom of access to the building and the galleries that the Canadian people have come to expect when visiting parliament. We must strive to achieve a reasonable balance between these two requirements of security on the one hand and public interest in the affairs of parliament on the other hand.

I will not suggest that the arrangements currently in force are perfect. It is quite possible that improvements could be achieved in some way without undue inconvenience to the visiting public. With this in mind the whole subject of security will be reviewed forthwith, and suggestions proferred by hon. members or by anyone interested in the matter will receive every possible consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

May I also pay a tribute to the sergeant-at-arms and the members of the security staff of the house. Too often we take for granted the devotion to duty of those employees. Yesterday, under extremely distressing and difficult circumstances, those employees proved their good judgment, their self-control and efficiency to an extent which honours them and justifies the confidence we place in them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD—ARTICLE IN OTTAWA "JOURNAL" OF MAY 18

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects me and undoubtedly affects others as well. My question of privilege relates to an article in the Ottawa Journal of yesterday, May 18, written by Peter Jackson. The lead sentence may receive some modicum of support, because it starts by saying "Shame on you, Frank Howard!"

I might say that my question of privilege does not have to do with that first sentence. It has to do with the tenor of the article which quotes part of an editorial in the Omineca Herald, which is a weekly newspaper in my home town and constituency of Terrace and Skeena. The article relates to the Ottawa city streets, curbs, gutters and so on, and draws a comparison between the condition of the streets in my home town of Terrace as enumerated in this editorial, and the condition of the streets here in Ottawa. It says in effect, shame on me and undoubtedly on others who have similar conditions in their home towns and who have raised the matter of the deplorable condition of Ottawa streets.

I should like to say to the writer of the article, and any others, that they have grossly misunderstood and misinterpreted the whole concept of what we are trying to get at. I can assure hon. members that if they desire to move the capital of Canada to the community of Terrace, we will be overjoyed and you will have the most delightful street system in Canada there.

Mr. Speaker: There is no prima facie case of privilege. The one thing the hon. member might have complained of—the words "Shame on you, Frank Howard"—was not complained of by the hon. member, so I rule there is no question of privilege.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Second report of standing committee on justice and legal affairs—Mr. Cameron (High Park).

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR CANADA

TABLING OF REPORT ON WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am tabling copies in English and French of the report of the commission of inquiry as to the future of the Air Canada overhaul base at Winnipeg international airport and related matters.

AGRICULTURE, FORESTRY AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South) moved that the first report of the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development, presented to the house on Tuesday, May 17, be concurred in.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): For the same reasons previously mentioned, we still object to reduction of any quorum and ask that the motion be agreed to on division.

[English]

Motion agreed to on division.

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South) moved that the second report of the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development, presented to the house on Tuesday, May 17, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX

APPLICATION OF REBATE PROVISION TO POWER CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, asking him whether he is aware of the recent statement of Premier Lesage that construction of the Churchill Falls, Labrador, power complex will be undertaken shortly by Brinco and that the resulting power will be taken by Hydro Quebec. Can he also inform the house whether resolution No. 49, now standing on the order paper in his name, which provides for a 95 per cent income tax rebate, is being introduced in relation to this power complex?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the policy which this legislation will implement had been decided upon long before there was any discussion about Brinco and the Churchill Falls project.

Mr. Starr: I have a supplementary question. Will the provisions of the bill, and the power embodied therein, be applicable to this type of power complex that is being undertaken?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is in order for me to answer a question of this kind. In any event, this legislation would apply to all provinces on the same basis, and if it applies to Brinco and the project referred to it will apply because of the fact that it is located in Newfoundland, and for no other reason.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PAYMENT FOR WORK ON VICTORIA DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, but in his absence perhaps I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the fact that the British Columbia maritime employers association has applied to the courts to compel members of the longshoremen's union to work on May 23, which is Victoria day, at rates of pay which the employees claim are incompatible with the Canada Labour Code? Can the minister say whether he will order an inquiry into this matter under section 35 part V of the Canada Labour Code, with a view to ensuring full compliance with that code?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if this matter has not already been drawn to the minister's attention I will be happy to see that it is in the near future.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question. Is the parliamentary secretary aware that the longshoremen's union requested such an inquiry on September 1 last?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of a lot that goes on in the Department of Labour, but I am sorry to say that I do not know of this particular case.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC—ASSISTANCE TO GOLD MINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys?

As a result of communications and representations to provincial mining authorities, does he have a statement to make in the house in connection with gold mines of northwestern Quebec?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, which I had no time to do because you recognized the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson).

Are negotiations still underway with the provincial authorities of Quebec with regard to gold mines in the area of Val d'Or-Malarctic and Rouyn-Noranda?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have drawn the attention of the provincial authorities to this problem and it is not for me to take decisions on behalf of the Quebec provincial authorities.

Mr. Caouette: No, but you can nevertheless prod them a little.

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, and while our thoughts are directed to security, might I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether any decision has been arrived at as to when the commission on national security will be set up, which the Prime Minister has mentioned a number of times as being imminent?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last week, I think it was, the Prime Minister was asked this question and said he would be making a reply some time later. I am not aware exactly when he proposes to reply, but I will call this question to his attention.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO PUBLICATION OF TAXATION COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. As it is reported in the press that the report of the Carter commission on taxation will be in the hands of the minister within a month, could the minister advise the house when he expects to make the report public?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I would expect to table it as soon as I receive it. I can see no reason now why it should not be made public at that time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEGOTIATION WITH FRENCH GOVERNMENT RESPECTING MYSTÈRE AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. There is a report that the Canadian government has been in negotiation or discussion with the French government with regard to the acquisition of a version of the Mystère aircraft. Can the minister advise the house whether, in the light of continuing requirements for a major aircraft, this is so?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): There have been discussions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert: I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Defence. At what stage are discussions with the French government, and with regard to what version of the aircraft were those discussions held?

Mr. Hellyer: The discussions are now being carried on by my colleague the Minister of Defence Production. I cannot give my hon. friend the exact stage, Mr. Speaker, and unfortunately my colleague is not here at the moment.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF CROP INSURANCE ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence possibly the parliamentary secretary could give us the information. Can the house be advised when the amendments to the Crop Insurance Act, which were promised in the Speech from the Throne, will be brought forward for consideration?

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Middlesex West for bringing this important matter to the attention of the house. It provides an opportunity to say that the Minister of Agriculture and the government are giving very thoughtful consideration to all the needs of the provinces in the preparation of a bill which we hope will be presented to parliament in the very near future.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—REPORT OF INQUIRY RESPECTING MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport in connection with the Thompson report which he has just tabled. Will the minister advise the house whether that report recommends the retention in Winnipeg of the overhaul and maintenance base of Air Canada?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the officials in my office to send the hon. gentleman a copy of the report, which is a document of 175 pages without appendices, and I think it would be terribly presumptuous on my part to attempt to summarize it.

Mr. Starr: Particularly if you haven't read it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I remind the minister that there are 14 members from Manitoba.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have also asked for a copy to be sent to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. R. K. Andras (Port Arthur): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Transport. In view of some reports reaching me as to mounting speculation on this matter, could the Minister of Transport confirm that Air Canada will be establishing an air cargo terminal at the Winnipeg international airport?

[Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West).]

Mr. Pickersgill: The answer to that question, sir, is yes. It was announced yesterday by Air Canada and the premier of Manitoba that, entirely at the expense of Air Canada, a great new air cargo terminal is to be established in Winnipeg to come into operation next year, serving all the air lines that wish to avail themselves of it.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister tell the house how many employees there will be in this air cargo terminal as compared to the number of people currently employed?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is argumentative.

[Later:]

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Now that the minister has tabled the Thompson report, would he tell the house when the decision on the future of the Winnipeg overhaul base can be expected?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think it would profit all of us if we read the Thompson report first.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DISMISSAL OF PRODUCER OF COLUMBIA RIVER FILM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the minister who will be acting for the Secretary of State today. In view of the fact that Mr. Tom Conochie, producer of the very interesting Columbia river television film for the C.B.C., has been informed that he will no longer be producer of this film, and in view of the fact that residents of British Columbia consider this a magnificent film and some say that Mr. Tom Conochie can show the Ottawa bunch a thing or two about how to film a river story—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member kindly pose his question?

Mr. Herridge: My question, Mr. Speaker, is would the minister investigate the circumstances surrounding this further unfortunate incident in the life of producers employed by the C.B.C.?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that Newfoundland and Labrador are this year having a come home year, when many thousands of Newfoundlanders and their descendants will be visiting our province, will the Postmaster General consider the preparation of a stamp commemorating this important event?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The urgency of the matter is not readily apparent. Perhaps the hon. member might like to put the question on the order paper.

Mr. Tucker: I think the Postmaster General is prepared to answer the question. We have only a few months left.

WATER RESOURCES

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF ANTI-POLLUTION POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I should like to preface my question by noting that the minister is scheduled to make a major address at the meeting of the Conservation Council of Ontario in Toronto next week. May I ask the minister if he intends to make any statement in the house concerning water resources and pollution prior to that time?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I am delighted to bring to the attention of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka the fact that my estimates have been referred to a committee of the house. If he cares to look at the report of that committee he will find at least five or seven pages on that subject.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROTESTS RESPECTING BOMB TEST BY CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Have any protests been made by the usual anti-nuclear groups since the recent detonation of an atomic bomb by communist China?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have had no such representations as yet.

TRADE

RUSSIA—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATION OF NEW AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is either for the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I shall address it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he tell us if the trade agreement with the Soviet union, which was ratified on May 12, 1965 and is now, I believe, being renegotiated, is being renegotiated on the same most favoured nation basis as the previous trade agreement? Does the existing agreement remain in force even though it has expired?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, until the agreement has been negotiated I do not think it would be correct for me to disclose the progress of the negotiations. They are under way.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Could the minister tell us whether the trade agreement which has been in effect will remain in effect until the new agreement is signed?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

STEPS TO CONSERVE ARCTIC WILDLIFE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of northern affairs. Considering the urgent warnings in this morning's Globe and Mail, is the northern affairs department contemplating steps to prevent extinction by unrestricted hunting of Arctic wildlife, particularly polar bears?

Mr. Speaker: The question should be placed on the order paper.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Could the minister advise the house what progress he is making in the preparation of legislation to bring all the stock exchanges in Canada under one set of rules designed to provide the maximum protection to the Canadian investor?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, plans are now being formulated for a meeting to discuss the security regulations or similar regulations of this kind in order to try to achieve greater uniformity among the provinces. The federal government has expressed its willingness to take the initiative here, and to take whatever action it feels would be necessary in the federal field.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask the minister whether the government is considering putting into legislative form any of the proposals which are made in the book of which the author is the hon. member for Davenport?

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, a great many of the matters mentioned in the book written by the hon. member for Davenport are now matters of law which have been introduced by this government. The hon. member has also put in his book a number of matters which are part of government policy. Undoubtedly they will be implemented.

FISHERIES

B.C. SALMON—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and ask whether he is in a position to give the house a progress or any other kind of report about the meetings which are currently taking place in Seattle, Washington, between Canada and the United States over certain salmon fishery problems on the west coast.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the meeting in Seattle is continuing today. We have been in daily touch with the Canadian representatives at the conference. I understand that Canada has proposed certain changes in the existing surf lines and that counter proposals have also been made by the U.S.A. representative, proposals which were not acceptable to the Canadian delegates. As I say, the meeting is under way, so I would prefer to wait for the return to Ottawa of the Canadian representatives before giving a final report to the house.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question. Could the minister tell the house whether any of the proposals or counter proposals have have been made public?

Mr. Robichaud: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED VISIT BY KING OF SAUDI ARABIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the events which have taken place in the Middle East in the last few weeks, and in view of the pending visit of King Faisal of Saudi Arabia to Washington, has the government asked or is it intending to ask King Faisal to visit Canada at the same time?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There have been no arrangements made for such a visit, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

RECOGNITION OF PROFESSIONAL QUALIFICATIONS OF EUROPEANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I ask the minister whether his attention has been drawn to charges which are made in this morning's Globe and Mail that university trained professional men and women from Europe are working in Canada as dishwashers, labourers and technicians because professional associations will not accept their credentials?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is not urgent and should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED USE OF DRUG IN SCENE FOR "THIS HOUR HAS SEVEN DAYS"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Secretary of State this question. Have the Toronto police and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police completed their investigation into allegations that drugs or pornographic films were involved in the C.B.C. documentary on youth; and is the Secretary of State in a position to clear the reputation of the producer of the film, Douglas Leiterman, and the director, Miss Beryl Fox, in that regard?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

UNITED NATIONS

PROPOSED JURISDICTION OVER HIGH SEAS AND OUTER SPACE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to ask the minister whether the government has under consideration the proposal made by the United Nations Association in the United States that the United Nations take over ownership of the high seas and outer space, and use these resources as a source of independent—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member will agree that this question might very well await a reply on the order paper.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to give notice for ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs having to do with committee organization. In view of the pending reorganization of certain government departments, would the minister indicate whether eventually the committee structure of the house will correspond with his newly reorganized department, particularly with regard to the subject of Indian affairs?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this is a matter of rather general import, and I suggest to the hon. member that the question cannot be asked at this time.

NEWFOUNDLAND

PROVISION FOR ADDITIONAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE UNDER TERM 29

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for Mr. Pearson) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-185, to give effect to term 29 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we cannot simply accept term 29 just like that.

Yesterday, my colleague for the riding of Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) clearly and rightly established that agreeing to grant the province of Newfoundland $8 million a year would not disturb us too much if the federal government or parliament were to recognize, first of all, that part of the province of Quebec was ceded to the province of Newfoundland by a decision of the Privy Council in 1927.

At that time, in 1927, outright discrimination was practised and here, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the attention of the members from Newfoundland. We, from the province of Quebec, must remain absolutely opposed to the annual $8 million grant to the province of Newfoundland as long as Labrador, which, geographically speaking, belongs to the province of Quebec, is not returned to that province as an integral part of its territory. Mr. Speaker, we cannot tolerate such discrimination, and when we request a vote for a period—

[English]

Mr. O'Keefe: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. O'Keefe: Yes. I am suggesting that the hon. member for Villeneuve is alleging there has been discrimination by the highest court in the British empire, the Privy Council. I am also raising a question of privilege because yesterday afternoon the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) on three different occasions accused the province of Newfoundland of stealing Labrador. Surely that should not be allowed in the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question of privilege and point of order raised by the minister who represents a Newfoundland riding, the province of Newfoundland was not alone in stealing Labrador because the Privy Council stole it at the same time from the province of Quebec.

That is why there is still discussion and disagreement not only in the province of Quebec but in others about Labrador because, normally and geographically speaking, that part of the country belongs to the province of Quebec and is part of it; the hon. member is perfectly aware of that.

Besides, such was the case before the province of Newfoundland was founded, when Labrador was part of the province of Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman is still speaking on the point of order, or whether he is ignoring it and carrying on with his speech. I say this because I should like to speak on the point of order.

Mr. Caouette: Go on.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would point out that this bill is exclusively concerned with one thing, namely the completion of the terms of union of 1948 which were adopted by the parliament of Canada in 1949. The subject the hon. gentleman is now seeking to debate is totally and completely irrelevant to the bill and has no connection with the bill or its subject matter.

I might also point out that whatever the hon. gentleman may think of the judgment of the Privy Council in 1927, both houses of the parliament of Canada adopted the measure embodying the terms of union and approved an address asking the parliament at Westminster to approve it. And in that address the province of Newfoundland was defined as it is now according to the laws of Canada.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member is seeking to introduce into this debate something which is out of order because it is totally irrelevant to the subject before the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I think that the remarks made by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) are fully in order since he was beginning to discuss the matter of Labrador, while at the same time explaining the reasons why he is against the bill.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that each time members of the house are asked to vote, they are by this very fact allowed beforehand to explain why they will vote in such and such a way. That is precisely what the hon. member for Villeneuve is doing and that is why I submit that he is complying with the rules.

Second, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) has just explained that by accepting the decision of the Privy Council and approving the entry of Newfoundland into confederation in 1949, the House of Commons became the accomplice not only of the Privy Council but of those who stole Labrador from the province of Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have listened to the arguments submitted on this point of order. They are very interesting. I am in full agreement with the argument advanced by the Minister of Transport. If there is to be order in this house there has to be relevance of debate. This is a prime rule of procedure in the House of Commons; there has to be strict relevance to the matter at hand. I know this rule has not always been observed to the extent it should be, but in this particular instance there is no question in my mind but that the matter of the Labrador boundaries is not pertinent to the subject matter of this bill.

[Translation]

I took the remarks of the hon. member for Villeneuve as leading up to the speech he was going to make. That is why I let him proceed. I think he will admit readily that he must keep to the provisions of Bill C-185 now that he has reached the main part of his speech.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will abide by your ruling. I was discussing clause 2 of Bill C-185, and trying, as you say, to explain my opposition to the renewal of term 29 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada. I understand why the Minister of Transport is objecting to my statements or remarks, but I remind him that in 1927, when a judgment was rendered by the Privy Council in London about Labrador, we had then a Liberal government in Ottawa and in Quebec. Well, not only the Privy Council and Newfoundland, but also the Canadian Liberal party contributed to deprive the province of Quebec of Labrador.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. Like the Speaker of the house, I must remind the member for Villeneuve that he is now referring to a problem existing between the province of Quebec and Newfoundland, while the subject matter before the house concerns term 29 of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada adopted in 1949.

I would ask the member for Villeneuve to confine his remarks to the legislation before the house.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I thank you once again for calling me to order.

When the agreement was signed in 1949, I was a member of the house. When Newfoundland joined the other Canadian provinces, I was here and the Prime Minister of Canada was the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent; it was not unanimously, but by a majority vote that Newfoundland was accepted within confederation.

Term 29 stipulated that Canada agreed to pay the sum of $8 million each year as from 1949. Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to call your attention to a very definite point relating to clause 2 of Bill C-185.

The province of Quebec contributes its share of the $8 million paid each year to Newfoundland. I think the Minister of Transport will admit the cogency of my assertion to the effect that we contribute our share, we, in the province of Quebec, of the $8 million paid each year to the province of Newfoundland.

We, in the province of Quebec, contribute our share of the $8 million paid each year to the province of Newfoundland. Well, we are against paying anything as long as our property, Labrador, is not duly restored to the province of Quebec.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Villeneuve, but it seems that he is bent on speaking about the delimitation between the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland, which is not the subject of the bill before us. The bill simply concerns ratification and confirmation of the agreement reached between the federal government and the province of Newfoundland. The hon. member for Villeneuve should confine his remarks to that subject matter.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to be enlightened on one point. May I give the reasons why I am opposed to paying the $8 million we are now being asked to pass, or to continuing to pay Newfoundland? Do I have the right and privilege, as a member of the House of Commons, to give the reasons why I object to Bill C-185, and more specifically to term 29 of the bill?

Mr. Speaker, could you enlighten me on that point. Do I have the right to say why I am opposed to that bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Villeneuve for wanting to put questions to the Chair. We must deal merely with the question before the house. Reference must not be made to the present problem between Quebec and Newfoundland which was settled by a ruling of the Privy Council. The member for Villeneuve may make remarks about the amount of money the federal government is paying Newfoundland this year. That is the only question before the house at the present time.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, on the question raised by Your Honour, I should like to point out with all due respect to the Chair that it behoves any member to put forward the reasons why he supports or objects to a bill. I share this opinion. However, while indicating the reasons for which the member is opposed to such a bill, he must not go into every detail of a dispute. He may set forth his reasons and discuss them sensibly, but in my opinion the member would be well advised to restrain himself and not to state the whole issue.

At present, a member cannot be restricted too much, otherwise the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) would be totally silenced and that would be a disaster for him, but perhaps a relief for the house.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Edmonton West for his interjection. I do not claim to be in a position, at the present time, to discuss the Labrador issue, but I use that argument to air my view on the continued payment of $8 million to Newfoundland in order to enable this province to remain part of Canada.

I understand the objection of the Minister of Transport. He comes from Newfoundland and when he defends that province, it is evident that it is only for a political purpose, to try to exert some influence in his province. I understand that. But we, from the province of Quebec, have more important reasons.

Allow me to point out, Mr. Speaker, that we are not in favour of the withdrawal of Newfoundland from confederation. No, we want Newfoundland to continue to exist within confederation. But one of the reasons for Newfoundland's persistence within confederation is precisely that term 29 of Bill No. C-185 under which Canada pays $8 million per annum to that province.

Did Quebec get $8 million per annum when Labrador was stolen, Mr. Speaker? And we are going to keep on paying $8 million to those who dispossessed us of Labrador which was our property?

Mr. Laflamme: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Caouette: Certainly.

Mr. Laflamme: In view of the fact that the hon. member said a while ago that he was in the house in 1949 when the act providing for the union of Newfoundland to Canada was passed, can he tell us whether he made those points and whether he voted for or against this act?

Mr. Caouette: At that time, Mr. Speaker, we voted against the annual gift of $8 million.

Mr. Laflamme: Against the act?

Mr. Caouette: Everyone was satisfied with the Terms of the Union of Newfoundland with Canada. But we did discuss the act and even tried to amend some of its provisions when it was before the house. At that time, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme) was not here, but I was. So if the hon. member will be kind enough to look over Hansard for 1949, he will understand the discussion that took place on the annexation of Newfoundland to Canada. There were even some members who opposed the annexation of that province because they considered that Newfoundland would cost Canada too much for what we would get in return.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that Newfoundland is costing more to Canada or brings in to Canada more that it is costing but I do say this: Newfoundland demands that we pay her $8 million a year. No other province asks that. But to be a part of Canada and to benefit from important services of ministers such as those of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), Newfoundland cannot foot the bill for its own administration without assistance from the other provinces.

That is not the point, Mr. Speaker. We are discussing term 29 of Bill C-185. We have no objection, as I said a moment ago, to Newfoundland being part of Canada, but as far as the representation from Quebec is concerned, and I appeal to the member for Quebec-Montmorency, as long as Newfoundland—

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Would he say whether he took part in any of the votes in this house in 1949 when Newfoundland became a part of Canada?

Mr. Caouette: No. There was an election prior to Newfoundland becoming part of Canada and I was defeated in my own constituency.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is wrong again. Newfoundland was united with Canada on April 1, 1949. The debates took place well before that. The hon. gentleman was a member of the house. I have been scrutinizing the division lists but so far as I can see he was not present to vote on one side or the other.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what I was saying earlier. When the discussion took place at the time and when the union was effected, I was not here, but members of our party were, and the annexation was passed on division and not unanimously. The minister knows this. Let him find out, and let us keep from any inaccurate statement or information without knowing what is involved.

At that time, the minister was not in the house; he was a government official. They were the ones who organized the annexation and the government was using every means to induce Newfoundland to join Canada.

This brings me to say that we object to voting $8 million to Newfoundland and we shall object until the territory belonging by rights to the province of Quebec, namely Labrador, is given back to our province.

• (3:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in respect of what was said a few moments ago and also in respect of some of the remarks made yesterday. I should like to refer particularly to the very helpful speeches made by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming) and the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) in which they both showed a very keen appreciation of the problems faced by Newfoundland and the Atlantic provinces generally. Their approach was both intelligent and sympathetic.

I should like to say that we in the provinces sometimes feel, with disappointment but not bitterness that the rest of Canada does not always recognize to what extent the Atlantic provinces contribute to the economy of Canada. In the Atlantic provinces we export nearly everything we produce. The produce of the sea, the land, the forests, and the mines is nearly all exported to foreign markets. Tremendous quantities of goods are exported from the four Atlantic provinces and these goods are changed into the money of other countries which finds its way into the general economy of Canada since in the Atlantic provinces we buy nearly everything we use from the rest of Canada.

The tremendous amount of money which is funnelled into the Canadian economy through the Atlantic provinces makes a very great contribution indeed to the balanced economy of Canada. I think members from all over Canada, from the west, from central Canada, from the farm producing areas or the industrial areas, should realize that the Atlantic region, which at one time was the principal part of Canada but was surpassed over the years by other areas, nevertheless makes a real contribution to the economy of the country. The Atlantic provinces are on their way back; they are not worn-out provinces by any means. These provinces are now going through a renaissance, and any money spent by the Canadian government in developing the Atlantic provinces is an investment from which you will receive very real returns.

In respect of the statements made by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) I submit, in a spirit of helpfulness, that what they really are discussing is redistribution. What they want to do is to make further changes in the boundaries of my district. I should like to place on the record this statement. They are not going to do it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this matter having been the subject of debate today, may I say just a very few words. I should like to affirm the position I took when we were dealing with this legislation at the resolution stage. We support this measure. We think it is little enough that Newfoundland is asking, but we also feel that the good name of Canada is at stake. From reading the provisions of term 29 and from such studies as I have given to this matter it does seem to me that Canada would not be doing the right thing if it did not continue this provision for a statutory grant on a permanent basis. I hope, therefore, that the House of Commons will approve this measure.

I also wish to say that I think the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), unwittingly or otherwise misled some of us by something he said at the resolution stage. I have read again what he said and I realize it is capable of having two meanings. Apparently I took the one which he did not intend to give, but it was there in the words he used. The meaning I took from what the hon. minister said, as recorded at page 4912 of Hansard for May 9 and developed a bit later, was that this measure once passed by parliament could not be amended except by the consent of the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland. For that reason I asked to see the bill before it received second reading.

When I read the bill today I saw that the Minister of Transport had misled me, and perhaps some others, because what the bill provides is that the payments shall continue in effect from now on unless otherwise provided by any agreement in that behalf hereafter entered into between the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland. I take it that any agreement the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland might make hereafter would have to come before parliament. In other words, what I believe the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) and I were asking for at the resolution stage, namely, that parliament's control over parliamentary legislation be maintained, is protected by the terms of this bill. Therefore the query which I raised at the resolution stage has been satisfied. As I already have said, the measure is one that this parliament should pass and we support the bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, just a few words to mention also that I am against the motion for second reading of this bill, not because I object in any way to helping poor provinces, but rather because I am convinced that the vast majority of the citizens of Quebec also object to their taxes being partly paid to Newfoundland, as long as Labrador is not recognized as being part of the province of Quebec, as it should be. That is the reason why I am against the motion for second reading of this bill.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if I might say a word—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May I remind hon. members that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say one word in reply to my hon. friends from Villeneuve and Lapointe. I should like to remind them that there would not be any Quebec had it not been for the Newfoundland soldiers who came there and raised the siege of Quebec, thus saving Quebec to become a part of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, in this connection, I would say that Canada would have fallen into the hands of the United States, had it not been for French Canadians who, in 1812, under the orders of Commander De Salaberry, turned back the American army; in fact Canada itself would not exist, but would simply be another American state.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think we all agree that Canada would not exist if we were not all here and the country was not all here, and I hope it is going to remain that way.

I must say that I find it hard to take very seriously the arguments of the hon. member for Villeneuve because he was here as a member of parliament in 1949 when Newfoundland became a part of Canada. There were three recorded votes that I have looked at in the Journals of the House of Commons for that period and I find that the hon. gentleman was not present to vote on any one of those three occasions.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) knows the rules well enough to understand that he cannot make comments about a vote. That is what he is now doing, although he has been a member of this house for a long time. He should know the rules.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. One cannot comment on a vote taken at this session, but this was in the parliament of 1949. I am not commenting on it; I am merely recording the fact, and I do not intend to say anything further in respect of it. I would not have raised the matter at all had it not been for the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) suggested I may have misled the house. I wish to apologize if I—

Mr. Knowles: You had better apologize to the member for Winnipeg South Centre. It was the member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[Mr. Carter.]

Mr. Churchill: I would not have accused you on such flimsy grounds.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: I seem to be misleading the house now in my references to north and south. I certainly had no intention of misleading the house. I do not think this bill offends in any way the doctrine of parliament sovereignty. It is my view, and I believe it will be the view of the people of Newfoundland, that if this house decides by an overwhelming voice that this is a good bill this will be all the safeguard they will need from their fellow Canadians.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, since I am apparently prevented from making the speech I intended to make because the minister spoke without any warning, I should like now to speak on a point of order and direct a question to the minister. I am sure his answer will satisfy my question. Is it the government's intention to undertake a periodic review of the amount of money set out in the legislation, perhaps every second year, because of inflationary and other factors, rather than having the amount continue on an indefinite basis?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could answer that question when we are considering the bill in committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Could you call for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): All those in favour of the said motion please say yea. And all those opposed please say nay. In my opinion the yeas have it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rinfret: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 2—Annual payment to Newfoundland by way of additional financial assistance.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I believe the minister was going to answer a question that was asked by the hon. member for Halifax and I have a similar question with regard to the effect of clause 2. What effect does clause 2 have over and above any powers that were contained in clause 3 of the other act which is being repealed? I would specifically ask what significance, if any, has the inclusion of the words "on behalf of the government of Canada"? I noticed that this expression did not appear in the corresponding paragraph.

Second, I suppose the purpose of passing this bill is to include these words:

—until otherwise provided by any agreement in that behalf hereafter entered into between the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland—

That is the only addition I see; otherwise the bill is redundant, at least in my judgment.

I also want the assurance of the minister that the existence of this bill with its provision of the amount of $8 million will not in any way prejudice the position of Newfoundland with regard to negotiations or federal-provincial conferences dealing with grants of a general nature, such as equalization grants to equalize the level of services in the various provinces of Canada, and that it will never be said on behalf of the government of Canada that in the case of Newfoundland equalization is already provided in this legislation.

Regardless of whether or not under this bill negotiations may be entered into, any negotiations with the province of Newfoundland in connection with the equalization of grants must not be prejudiced by this legislation when the amount specified has depreciated in value so that it does not meet the purpose contemplated in term 29.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman has put several questions. The hon. member for Halifax also put a question which is closely related, I think, to some of the matters raised by the hon. member for Queens.

The position taken by the federal government and the position, if I understand it correctly, of the government of Newfoundland is that the McNair award under term 29 should be assimilated to the constitutional subsidies provided to other provinces in the original act of confederation, as amended from time to time, and to the subsidies provided in the terms of union with the other provinces which subsequently came into confederation. The award should not be confused with tax-sharing or equalization.

It is true that the monetary award of $8 million was incorporated as part of the tax-sharing legislation of the previous government, and from the monetary standpoint this bill will make no difference. What it does is to make provision of this kind permanent unless at some time the parliament of Canada decides to repeal this act. In other words, it puts the matter in a different position.

It is true, as the hon. member for Carleton suggested, that we might have proposed an address to the British parliament and asked them to incorporate this provision in the British North America Act. If the government of Newfoundland had felt very strongly about it, then perhaps that would have been a course which might have commended itself to the whole of parliament. That was done, of course, with the original terms of union and it was done with the terms of union of most of the other provinces.

However, the government of Newfoundland indicated that they would accept the good faith of the parliament of Canada. They agreed that, if it was done in this way, no parliament would ever change it unless there was agreement between the then government of Newfoundland and the government of Canada that it should be changed. I think it is fair to say that they have taken the view which the present federal government takes and which the leader of the government took when he was on the other side of the house and has taken consistently, namely, that this should be done as part of the terms of union and done on the same kind of basis as the other parts of the terms of union, as completion of the constitutional subsidy of Newfoundland.

In many ways, Mr. Chairman, this course is very comparable to something with which the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton is very familiar, namely, the awards of the White commission which were made in the thirties and which were not incorporated as an amendment to the British North America Act but were made a statute of this parliament. Those sums have been paid to the three maritime provinces annually ever since.

I am sure that any proposition that these subsidies be taken away unilaterally by this parliament would be defeated by this parliament. I am sure the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton would agree with that view. Therefore it is felt by us, and after the vote we have just had I am more reassured, that this act will adequately complete confederation.

If the McNair commission had seen fit to recommend that this amount be revised from time to time according to some formula to take account of changing factors, then, since most Newfoundlanders would feel that it would probably be revised upwards or not at all, they would have been very happy. There was not too much satisfaction expressed in Newfoundland when the award was first made. But the McNair commission did not recommend that course; they recommended a fixed sum.

I think it is fair to say that the present course will be regarded in Newfoundland as just and, beyond that, that the people of Newfoundland and the government of Newfoundland will be prepared to accept the same principles as apply to other provinces in the fields of equalization and tax-sharing. No doubt they will fight this as hard as the governments of the other provinces fought, and no one knows better than the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton how hard they can fight. They expect to get treated just as well as any other Canadian with regard to tax-sharing and equalization. But they do not want the two matters confused. This amount they regard as their constitutional right.

Tax-sharing is part of the arrangement which ever since 1947 we have habitually revised every five years and with regard to which the Minister of Finance and the provincial governments are even now in the process of negotiating revision. I do not think there is any danger, once the bill has passed and become part of the law of Canada, of the two matters being confused at all.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

PROVISION FOR ALLOWANCES TO PERSONS BEING TRAINED

The house resumed, from Wednesday, May 18, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Marchand—Mr. Rinfret in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting allowances to persons being trained under technical and vocational training programs, and to authorize the entering into agreements with the provinces in connection therewith; and to provide further for certain changes incidental thereto in connection with the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

• (4:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Chairman, we were very interested by the explanatory remarks of the future minister of manpower (Mr. Marchand) on the resolution regarding vocational technical training and compensation for persons who will take those improvement courses. We are pleased to offer our full cooperation for the realization or achievement of the objective sought. Of course, we can make more accurate comments and more cogent criticisms when we see the detailed text of the bill.

Besides, the future minister knows that the technical and vocational training program now applying to persons affected by unemployment, as well as the technical school construction assistance program, were initiated under our party's administration. The fact that it is proposed today to review the scope and application of this program proves definitely the merits of our initiative.

It seems logical to us that these programs should be adjusted to the needs of the times, as it would seem logical also to adjust the income of old people and pensioners to present standards of living.

We hope that this new program will direct people toward new trades adjusted to the needs of new industries, rather than toward the usual trades or jobs, as was too often the case in recent years, such as body workers, cooks, barbers and so on. We think also that special attention should be given to the development of industrial structures, to supervisory and even administration duties. Special assistance in this regard would be most appreciated by small and medium-sized enterprises which, as the future minister knows from experience, still remain the backbone of our semi-urban and semi-rural economy.

But we rejoice especially over the fact that an opportunity will be given us, at last, to consider, after five months of session, one of the first pieces of legislation that may have positive results on our national economy. The program indicated in the Speech from the Throne included 23 or 24 points.

[English]

Actually, Mr. Chairman, what has this house done until now? Practically nothing, and certainly through no fault of the opposition. We are still waiting for the introduction of promised legislation concerning university grants and scholarships, a health resources fund, medicare, banking, a national dairy commission, feed grain marketing, the Railway Act, the Canada Development Corporation, securities, the Bankruptcy Act, and insurance for full time farm workers. We hope the introduction of this bill may be the start of something good.

Mind you, we find it strange that the suggested compensation should be fixed at $1 an hour, or $35 for a week of 35 hours, when at this very moment the government is seeking to enact Bill No. C-2 establishing a minimum of $1.25 an hour for a 40-hour week. Perhaps the Minister of Labour will wish to say a word on this point. We are also anxious to know what size of family will qualify for the maximum $90 a week allowance.

These are points on which we shall be commenting at greater length when the details of the bill are before us. In conclusion may I repeat that we welcome this initiative and hope that our past experience will be of assistance in guiding this measure to successful final enactment for the betterment of our human resources.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, as we take part in this debate it is important, to recognize the significance of what the minister is proposing. It was a significance which goes beyond the bare announcement made by the hon. gentleman. We are encouraged to believe there is a new understanding of manpower, as evidenced by the reconstruction of the department and the appointment of the present minister. It is most heartening to read a statement by the hon. gentleman recently expressing his belief that this problem cannot be solved unless the community as a whole takes a new attitude toward the importance of training and comes to regard training as a normal and productive part of people's lives, as something that should be equated with work rather than with unemployment and welfare.

This represents a great departure from the practice in the past and I am sure there is not a member in the house who will not applaud this new approach. I should like to join with the hon. member who has just resumed his seat in the suggestion that we adhere to this principle and see that the equating of work with training is carried to its logical conclusion by making $1.25 the minimum basis of payment. If we are to honour the minister's statement with the full force of the law I think we should seriously consider making the initial payment greater than $35.00 so that it will be more in line with the labour code now on the statute books. The minister might wish to make some adjustments with regard to the other levels. But he has postulated an important principle and perhaps he needs to take action to ensure that this principle is fully understood and that we have a total commitment to it.

I should like to quote now from a publication entitled "Technical and Vocational Education in Canada". The following is an extract from the speech by Mr. W. R. Cranston, chairman of the Ontario Economic Council, illustrating what I call the new attitude toward manpower:

> The days of the big "gold rushes" in terms of available and exploitable human and material resources in this country may well be coming to an end. We must now, to hold our place in this world, examine our manpower and natural assets in much greater detail and provide an economic and educational climate in which their contribution to our national and international growth can and will be more readily maximized.

While I am on this subject I should like to compliment the Department of Citizenship and Immigration together with the director and editor of this magazine. I think this is a most worthy effort and it contains excellent information on the whole subject of manpower.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

It is fairly obvious that the provisions contemplated in this resolution are overdue. From personal experience, as well as from the experience of others who are familiar with this subject, I believe that the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act should not be used as a means of paying those who are engaged in training.

First of all, as I think the minister pointed out, the man who took a course of training for a considerable period of time was often placed at a serious disadvantage. If he became unemployed at what I might perhaps call the wrong time of the year, his right to insurance payments was forfeited and as a result he was penalized because of his effort to train. The recognition that unemployment insurance should not be related to training is laudable. The one has nothing to do with the other. A man's insurance rights should remain open to him in case he has need to call on them. But for the efforts of some very dedicated people who were working on program five I think the program would have been even more disastrous than events have proved.

I point out these things to indicate the great need that has existed for the kind of measures the minister has introduced. In my riding we went into program five at a very early date. One of the aldermen on council, Mrs. Donaldson, took a keen interest and she was ably assisted by Mr. Rice who headed up the program and had an excellent staff. They are really dedicated people. They have to be. They are not only trying to make program five work but they have to be social workers as well because part of the payment is made under the Unemployment Insurance Act and part is made by the province.

Sometimes one cheque or the other would not come through. Frequently there was no relationship between the two, and the amounts were small enough without people being deprived of the payments at the time they needed them. There were other problems besides money in trying to keep people at school, but money was an important problem. Living on a day to day basis without funds to fall back on meant that the only way they could stay in school was to receive their payments at the proper time.

Whenever there was a technical hitch, a departmental error or conflict between the two agencies, this made the whole problem more difficult. In fact, some of the teachers had to dig into their own pockets and advance loans to pupils in order to keep them at school. Should we expect our teachers to be performing this function? Obviously the government now feels that this is not the function of the teachers.

We have a program which is quite good but it is important to recognize that we have dedicated people in the teaching profession who have kept an inadequate program going for a long time and deserve our commendation.

I would also like to point out the difficulty with regard to the excellent program in the city of Kitchener at Waterloo Collegiate. The program is headed by Mr. Charles Rushton and I am pleased to see that the government has recognized the abilities of this man by promoting him to a higher position. An article in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record of last February deals with a $100 gift by the local I.O.D.E. chapter to program five but to Mr. Rushton in particular so that he would have some kind of kitty to help people in training stay at school. Among the problems he had to cope with were a deserted mother who needed funds to buy baby food, streetcar tickets for 20 people for ten days, aiding three women from northern Ontario to get suitable accommodation, aiding a Cape Croker Indian boy who needed clothing and accommodation, and issuing cafeteria tickets to numerous people ensuring them of at least one hot meal a day.

The record indicates that less than half of the people who enter program five complete the course. It is difficult to know just how many of them drop out because of lack of funds but there is every indication that a fair number of them are in that position.

I submit that no country needs education, and inducements toward that end, more than Canada. We are a small country with a limited population but we have a huge area of land. We cannot do some of the things that other nations with massive populations can accomplish. The implication of all this is that if we are to have any future at all it is as a nation of quality, and to achieve quality we have to place great emphasis on training, retraining and the education of our people.

We need a highly trained and skilled work force. It has often been said that this country was founded by a group of French and English people who were proud husbanders and tillers of the soil. That was true at a time when 70 to 80 per cent of the population was engaged in agriculture of a self-employment nature. People in agriculture, whether rich or not, at least have pride. In fact they have great pride, and proud husbandry is not a bad description to give that type of work.

But with the increase in factories and industrialization which has taken place, many people have had to leave the farms and come into cities. Frequently they have been poorly equipped for the new challenges facing them. For many it meant a loss of respect and a sense of dignity, the kind of dignity that comes from knowing one's occupation is important and that one can rely on one's hands to perform the tasks set for them. A lot of this has been lost as a result of the shift from a rural to an urban population, and there is a great need for education if for no other reason than to restore a sense of pride in our work force. When a work force is trained and has skills it also has a sense of pride. This is important to the nation and I hope the improvements to this program will help in that respect.

I would ask the minister to give serious consideration to the way that the money is allocated to the various provinces. Admittedly the federal grants of 90 per cent and 75 per cent on capital construction are fairly substantial. They are fine for those provinces that retain the work forces they train, but it is not a good proposition for many provinces that are merely training their people for migration to other provinces. This is a problem which the minister should consider to see if he can devise a formula based on immigration or emigration province-wise. He should recognize the national implications and see to it that those provinces which are training their workers, only to see them move to other parts of Canada, are provided with some compensation.

It is frequently the poorer provinces which find themselves in this position. It is unfair to say to a province that here is a training program which is going to increase the abilities of its people when frequently it also means it increases the mobility of its trained people so that they can move to greener pastures. It is unfair to ask the poorer provinces to carry this burden. This is a national problem. Because the provinces which benefit are already the richest I think some compensation should be paid to those provinces which suffer an exodus of people who have received skilled training.

Vocational and Technical Training

I should like to quote from the third annual report of the Manitoba Economic Consultative Board:

> One must ask whether a province or a region which is a chronic exporter of human resources can support the appropriate investment in human capital if significant amounts of this capital are transferred to other regions.

Then it puts forward this argument:

> ...greater federal financing of these manpower development programs particularly in the field of education so that the cost of the investment may be borne by the larger economy which receives the benefit—

I am not certain whether I can go into some aspects of manpower policy which are not related specifically to the measures that the minister has introduced. Because the minister has introduced two measures which I think are very good and very worth while, I should like to refer to other things going on in his department which have far less to commend them. I speak particularly of the mobility program. I am watching the Chair very carefully but I think I have sufficient time left to deal with this point. I think the minister should consider very seriously the present mobility program because I do not believe it makes any sense. It defies any kind of rationalization. I can see the basis. It is a question of whether or not you have been unemployed for a long time or, as the minister enlarged on it the other day, whether you are in a declining area, in which case the provisions are applied to that area. Generally speaking, however, from a manpower point of view why should we have to wait until unemployment becomes chronic before we move people out of that area? If a manpower policy is to be effective, I think that in some cases we should anticipate the unemployment and if, after we assess the situation, it looks as though the possibilities are dim in that area we might as well get started then and forget this business of designating grants or loans.

As an indication of how unsuccessful this program has been, one has only to look at the figures in respect of those who have taken advantage of the loan program to see how badly it has actually operated A mobility program should be based entirely on grants rather than loans. If the minister is concerned that there are people who will take advantage of the situation, such as people who might move for frivolous reasons and perhaps should not be helped, I would agree that the government should not help people who move simply because they feel they would like to go somewhere else. Perhaps we are not prepared to accept such actions in view of the many other large priorities we now have. However, surely those who administer the program are or should be in a position to know whether the request is frivolous or based on real need.

Many people have to move because there are no job opportunities or job opportunities are inadequate or the wage scale is less than desirable. I do not believe it is right to ask these people to make repayments from their first pay when they have all the costs of relocation and the adjustments they have to make in respect of a new environment and the problem of finding accommodation. One almost has to be a charity case before the government is prepared to do anything.

In view of the minister's enlightened speech in respect of retraining grants he should again examine the mobility program closely. The minister has not said very much about publicity and the extent to which he is going to publicize the new grant system. I think it is incumbent upon him to make sure—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Does I regret that it is my duty to advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him now has expired.

Mr. Saltsman: May I have the indulgence of the house for a moment?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member to proceed with his remarks?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I certainly have no objection if it is only for a moment. This debate, however, is limited and there are only four hours and some minutes left. If the hon. member wishes to carry on for a moment I would like to see him carry on, but I hope he will bear in mind that other members who have asked for additional time have in some instances carried on for an unreasonable period.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): I understand it is agreed that the hon. member shall have leave to speak for a few more minutes.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As an indication of my gratitude to hon. members who have permitted me to continue, I promise I will be no longer than two minutes. In concluding my remarks on manpower I should like to say that I think the minister should take upon himself the responsibility of ensuring that those factors which are necessary to guarantee an effective manpower policy in this country are considered within the cabinet, and he should speak very strongly there in this regard. This matter has been brought to his attention before. It is not going to do much good to have a mobility program or any other kind of program if we do not know the kind of country we want to have. If we are going to become a second-rate country of assemblers, what is the use of training our people, because we would only be training them for export.

The minister should bear in mind that one of the reasons it is possible for us today to have this kind of dialogue and concern about manpower in Canada is the high level of employment. He should see that his voice is heard in respect of a full employment policy as the only way of making sure that a manpower policy is implemented. I could say very much more but we will have opportunities on other occasions. Again I thank hon. members for their indulgence.

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to add a few words to the remarks of the previous speakers concerning this significant resolution submitted to the consideration of the house.

I take it that this resolution concerns mainly allowances to persons who have accepted to follow training courses, and also changes concerning the terms of administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act pertaining especially to rates of allowances.

This is an important aspect of the resolution as it may be a factor determining the decision, in the mind of persons who would often be prepared but are unable, because of a lack of money, to follow a training course, according to their aspirations.

I sincerely hope that this legislation will be clearly drafted, so that the terms for application of the rules derived therefrom will be easily understood by all concerned. There is a great deal of legislation—in fact I think there is too much—most of which is drafted in vague terms, with references to a series of paragraphs, and this often creates confusion. It is too often taken for granted that the average citizen cannot be ignorant of the law. Even those with legal training and politicians who make the law must often consult the legislation and the revised statutes, which are not complete anyway, since numerous acts are amended each year.

I believe it is in order to insist on this special aspect of the resolution, since certain changes incidental to this program must also be provided in connection with the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Nobody will be surprised if I add that the Unemployment Insurance Act, passed more than 20 years ago, is still not perfectly understood by all contributors, employers, employees and a large percentage of officials. The reason is that the drafting of many clauses is so complicated that it allows various interpretations in the minds of certain officials who are not sufficiently aware of working conditions, and who may influence the worker accepting a job or leaving his place of employment.

The official concerned often makes prejudicial decisions because he is usually inclined to accept the employer's account of the facts instead of trying to clarify the situation by taking also into account the employee's explanations.

True social legislation bearing the name of unemployment insurance must protect the unemployed at least as much as the fund. Unfortunately, the opposite is often true and the fund is better protected than the unemployed.

I wished to point out that fact since the resolution deals with allowances which, in some cases, will adjust benefits paid to the unemployed who are ready to take courses.

Many were having difficulties last winter with regard to this, for example because of delay in checking the files, which determines eligibility for allowances, or in the payment of adjustment allowances; as a result, some of the unemployed had to borrow money to continue their courses and others received a ridiculous allowance adjustment.

I have a cheque here for 40 cents, which is not even enough to buy a light meal. Others, living near the school, received a regular weekly allowance of $10 to $12, as compared to those living some miles away and even in neighbouring parishes who received the same or a smaller amount, while a great many received nothing at all. An unemployed married man with dependant children cannot pay his transportation to school with his benefits; he must use the latter to provide for his family, which is normal. Several had to abandon their studies for lack of money. That is why we are happy to see that the resolution means to deal with this situation.

Automation has clearly forced the young and the not so young, who would once have made up the bulk of apprentices in trades needing manual dexterity, to abandon some trades in order to learn other skills.

Today, the employers are more and more anxious to hire workers having diversified knowledge and which are able to apply their knowledge to the large fields of production, marketing, financial administration, personnel organization, etc.

The proposed resolution seems to take into account a great many factors which must be taken into account, among others, those I have listed earlier, and I expect to have the opportunity to deal again with them when the bill is introduced.

But I must congratulate the government and the minister for their approach in presenting this resolution.

I know several associations—I am a member of a few of them—like the association of woodworkers, the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, which have labour agreements with thousands of woodworkers in Canada, especially in Ontario and Quebec, as well as other associations in the province, like the U.C.C., which demand forestry school. The problem has become urgent following the mechanization of production in forestry.

It is unavoidable that workers who are unfamiliar with the handling of all that modern equipment must take a course to enable them to become more easily adjusted and draw the salary paid to a man qualified to handle or to operate, if your prefer, the machinery which is now contributing to increase forest operations. In short, production must be increased in that field.

Once again, I wish to thank the minister for having given special attention to the problems and training of labour in the development of these courses. I especially hope, as I said in the beginning, that the legislation will be drafted so that the administrators will not have to deal with the schedules of allowances and that when complaints are lodged, we shall not be told that under established schedules, such and such a payment cannot be made.

I would greatly appreciate it if the new legislation were clearly and explicitly defined, so that everyone would easily understand the terms of its application.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I think we should all generally hail this measure as a step in the right direction, particularly that part relating to amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. There are many people who are not covered by unemployment insurance. I think particularly of farm labourers and hospital employees who could easily be covered and should be entitled to coverage.
