

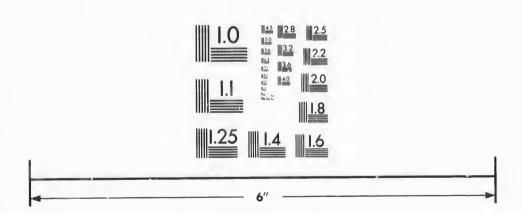

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503

STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY

Ca

CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series. CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

C) 1987

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

ors d'une resturrati	tait possible, ces ts:/ lémentaires:	pages n'ont hecked below/ n indiqué ci-de		26X	ure image p	30X ors d'une rest. Irati nais, lorsque cela é las été filmées. Additional comment Commentaires supp em is filmed at the cument est filmé au	tait possible, ces ts:/ lémentaires; reduction ratio c i taux de réductio	pages n'ont hecked below/ n indiqué ci-de	essous.		ure image p ors d'une rest. Irati nais, lorsque cela é las été filmées. Additional comment Commentaires supp	tait possible, ces ts:/ lémentaires:	pages n'ont		obtenir ia mellie	ure image p	ossible.
ors d'une rest, urati nais, lorsque cela é pas été filmées.	tait possible, ces			obtenir ia meme	ure image p	ossible.
ors d'une resturrati				obtenir la mellie	ure image p	ossible.
Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming/ It is peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restaires pages pages n'ont mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont		نــا	slips, tissues, etc., I ave been refilmed to ensure the best possible image/ Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un fecillet d'errata, une pelur etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.			pelure long interior margin are liure serrée peu	n/ it causer de l'omb	ore ou de la		Seule édition dis	sponible	scured by	errata
		ır	V			ion
			/	Showthrough/ Transparence
coloured maps/ cartes géographique	es en couleur Cover title missing/ e titre de couvertur			\checkmark				98
overs damaged/ ouverture endomm	nagée		\Box cloured covers/ ouverture de coule	ur riginal copy available for filming. Features of this opy which may be bibliographically unique, hich may alter any of the images in the production, or which may significantly change e usual method of filming, are checked below.			de c poin une mod	qu'il lul a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifie une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.
	I copy available for which may be biblio may alter any of the function, or which made in the coloured covers/ ouverture de coule overs damaged/ ouverture endommovers restored and ouverture restaurs over title missing/ e titre de couverture oloured maps/ artes géographique oloured ink (i.e. ot note de couleur (i.e. oloured plates and lanches et/ou illustrong interior marginare liure serrée peu istorsion le long de lank leaves added	which may be bibliographically unique may alter any of the images in the action, or which may significantly could be all method of filming, are checked to cloured covers/ouverture de couleur overs damaged/ouverture endommagée overs restored and/or laminated/ouverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée over title missing/e titre de couverture manque oloured maps/artes géographiques en couleur oloured ink (i.e. other than blue or lancre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue oloured plates and/or illustrations/lanches et/ou illustrations en couleur ound with other material/elié avec d'autres documents ight binding may cause shaouws or long interior margin/a re liure serrée peut causer de l'ombistorsion le long de la marge intérier lank leaves added during restoration.	I copy available for filming. Features of this which may be bibliographically unique, may alter any of the images in the action, or which may significantly change hal method of filming, are checked below. Cloured covers/ ouverture de couleur overs damaged/ ouverture endommagée overs restored and/or laminated/ ouvertura restaurée et/ou pelliculée over title missing/ e titre de couverture manque coloured maps/ artes géographiques en couleur oloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black)/ incre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire) coloured plates and/or illustrations/ lanches et/ou illustrations en couleur ound with other material/ elié avec d'autres documents ight binding may cause shaouws or distortion long interior margin/ arelliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la istorsion le long de la marge intérieure	copy available for filming. Features of this which may be bibliographically unique, may alter any of the images in the politication, or which may significantly change une all method of filming, are checked below. cloured covers/	l copy available for filming. Features of this which may be bibliographically unique, may alter any of the images in the action, or which may significantly change at method of filming, are checked below. cloured covers/ ouverture de couleur overs damaged/ ouverture endommagée overs restored and/or laminated/ ouverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée over title missing/ e titre de couverture manque oloured maps/ artes géographiques en couleur oloured pages détachée: oloured maps/ artes géographiques en couleur oloured pages détachée: oloured maps/ artes géographiques en couleur oloured pages détachée: oloured pages détachée: pages detached. Pages détachée: Showthrough/ Transparence oloured pates and/or illustrations/ lanches et/ou illustrations en couleur oloured pages détachée: Oloured pages détachée: Oloured pages détachée: Pages détachée: Showthrough/ Transparence oloured pates and/or illustrations/ lanches et/ou illustrations en couleur oloured pates and/or illustrations/ lanches et/ou illustrations or distortion long interior margin/ are liure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la istorsion le long de la marge intérieure lank leaves added during restoration may	copy available for filming. Features of this which may be bibliographically unique. May alter any of the images in the auction, or which may significantly change half method of filming, are checked below. Coloured covers/	copy available for filming. Features of this which may be bibliographically unique. Which may be bibliographically unique. Which may alter any of the images in the action, or which may significantly change half method of filming, are checked below. cloured covers/

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

Library of Parliament and the National Library of Canada.

ils

ut

ine age ata

elure.

difier

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the lest page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the beck cover whon epproprists. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The lest recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol → (meening "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ▼ (mesning "END"), whichever epplies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., mey be filmed et different reduction retios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'examplaire filmé fut raproduit grâce à la générosité de:

La Bibliothèque du Parlement et la Bibliothèque nationale du Canada.

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites evec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la retteté de l'exempleire filmé, et en conformité evec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit per la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit per le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivents apparaîtra sur la dernière image de cheque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole → signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ▼ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cilché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenent le nombre d'images nécesszire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

1	2	3
---	---	---

1 2 3

1	2	3
4	5	6

SPEECH

74

DELIVERED BY THE

HON. ROBERT BALDWIN,

AT A

PUBLIC DINNER

GIVEN TO HIM RY

THE REFORM ELECTORS OF THE EAST RIDING OF HALTON,

ON WEDNESDAY, NOV. 11, 1846.

SPEECH.

Mr. Baldwin begged to assure them that he felt deeply gratified by the honor they had done bins. lie could not look at the list of those who had benored him with the juvitation on the present occharlou, without feeling the pleasing assurance that he had among those by whom he had that evening the happiness of being surrounded, many attached personal triends. (Cheers.) But he assured them that he was not vain enough to attribute the warm manner in which his health had been received to considerations merely personal to himself. On the contrary, no one was more seneible that they had at once a deeper and a lottier They were directed to the plorious cause with which his name happened to be identified, and to which he telt it no vaulty to say that he had had the happiness of performing some withful services. (Great cheering.) Gravifying as was such an honor under any circumstances, he selt it particularly so, as coming from those who had made the first great popular demonstration in support of that great State Document, the Text-book of British Colonial Rights, Lord Durnam's Re-PORT (cheers); and it was still more gratilying to his feelings, as conveying to him, as he understood it to do, not only their confidence in his unshaken attachment to their common principles, but their approbation of the course which, as a public man, he had icit it his duly to pursue for the advancemen-and, he could confidently add, the ultimate triumph of those great principles. (Cheers.)

That was not a time, nor that an assembly, in which these great principles required enlish a tencher to expound or an advoca'e to defend them. They were deeply engraves on the hearts of all who heard him, and formed the basis of their political faith. It was well, however, ou occasious like the present, to bear in mand, not so much tor their own sake as for that of others, that those principles. as they regard our civil and political rights, are none other than the principles of the giorious constitution of our Parent State, and as they allect our religious interests, those only of the everlasting Gospel of Peace. (Cheers.) That such principles must in the unture of things be ultimately triumphant, required ueither a prophet's inspiration to foresee nor a prophet's are to foretell; and it had been the strong conviction of this, coupled with the consciousness that in his advoeacy of these great principles he had uniformly pursued a direct, uncompromising, but at the same ture an essentially moderate course, that had ever sustained him amidst the trials and turmoils of the positical struggle. He had said that his course had been essentially a moderate one, and he repeated it. He had frequently challenged his opponents to put their tiuger on a single act of his political life that deserved any other designation, and he would repeat that challenge at all times and under ad circumstances. It was true there were some who seemed to conceive moderation to conever in an undefined something, which might be negatively described as what was not thought by eitner of the two great parties into which the country is divided, but of which it was utterly impossible to obtain any postate definition, either from its professors or any one elec. In fact, this kind of moderation seemed to him to have no principle at all-(cheers)-and certainly all claim to be considered moderate in that sense of the word, he must wholly disclaim. (Renewed cheers.) if a firm, undeviating adherence to the great principles of the constitution-the assertion that these principles, which had been won by the blood of our alcestors, had not been so won for the mere rocks, and fields, and mountains of the Parent State, but for the people who inhabited them, and that the rights that had been achieved at such sacrifices belonged by inheritance to us as unalienably as to our fellow subjects in the United King. dom--if the fighting the great battle of those rights for his native country with those weapons only which were furnished from the armory of the constitution-if such principles and such a mode of combating for them entitled a man to the meed of moderation, then emphatically he claimed such for himself. (Great cheering.) He icht therefore, while looking upon the past and pointing to the future, a moral cerminiy of ultimate success. But they must remember, that whether they were themselves to reap the fruits of their past struggles, or leave the glory of the final accomplishment of the triumph to their children, must depend up-on themselves. The present time was every way propitious of success, we there we looked to the prospects arising out of the progress of political parties and political principles in the Parent State, to the gradual dispersion of those clouds of prejudice by which our opponents have so frequently contrived to envelope us, or to the condition to which our opponents themselves have been reduced by the three years' possession of power which they have enjoyed. (Cheers.)

It was true that with the rise or fall of political parties in the Parent State, we had neither constimally nor otherwise any direct political conmeans identifying such parties with those which happen to have assumed corresponding designations in this country. The boundaries of party combinations are necessarily fixed by causes peculiar to the political condition of the country in which they exist; and to attribute to the Tories of the United Kingdom, as a body, the principles which governed their Colouial namesakes, would he felt be in the highest degree illiberal and unjust. The latter had drawn their principles from theories long exploded there, and which, in the present enlightened age, could find a resting place only under the shadow of the old Colonial system-a system under the benumbing influences of which we had so loug languished, but which he felt assured had now happily passed away forever. (Cheers.) As an example of the necessity of guarding against attributing principles upon no better grounds than that of similarity in party designations, he would refer to the opinions expressed by Sir R. Pezl and Lord Stanley in the debate in the Imperial House of Commons on the disruption of the late Provincial Administratiou. He, for his part, was ready to accept the views of those statesmen as he understood them, apart of course from those misappreheusions and misconceptions into which, by some strange fatality, it appeared to be the lot of all English state offairs of a solum was ready to see those distinguis lifentical with h between them a Russell, the the contended for hy the very occasio which he referre conviction that difference between tainty thut, had men to whom h late Governor C no such difficul country into the could ever have vlewing our in light, he vet co circumstance fi Councils should over by the stat had given the It of Lord Durhar partment direct the great state Colonies were valuable State larly when we the distinguished relative, and by course had been great general p timate grounds that, in such hi sacred, ar well which these ri regard to the

But while raged Ly the inded as conne the Parent Sta was, after all, must in the 1 parties and the therefore more deration and around them fe more reason to tisfaction and did not re'er their opponen party as their in the way of tiou. It was racter and con on the remove sound princip foundation up the future.

It was a re the history, to that every te had suffered, had passed, to wider the prestantial street support of the (Cheers.) mistake, wo toral defeat all Ruglish statesmen to fall when discussing the effairs of a colony. He said that, for his part, ha was ready to accept the principles enunciated by those distinguished statesmen, as substantially identical with his own. He saw no difference between them and those put forth by Lord John Russell, the then leader of the opposition, or those contended for by himself and his late colleagues on the very oceasion which gave rise to the dehate to which he referred (cheers). And so deep was his conviction that there was in truth no practical difference between them, that he felt a moral eertainty that, had any one of the really great statesmen to whom he referred been in the place of the late Governor General on the occasion alluded to, no such difficulty as that which had thrown this country into the turmoil and excitement of 1843-4 could ever have had existence. (Cheers.) But viewing our interest in English polities in this light, he yet could not help looking upon it as a elreumstance full of promise, that the Imperial Councils should at the present time be presided over by the statesman who, as Colonial Secretary, had given the Imperial imprimatur to the doctrines of Lord Durham's Report, and the Colonial Department directed by one so nearly connected with the great statesman to whom England and her Colonies were both so much indebted for that invaluable State document (cheers); more particularly when we see the latter nobleman assisted by the distinguished chief secretary of his deceased relative, and by another gentleman whose political course had been marked by adherence to the same great general principles. These surely were legitimate grounds for congratulation, and auch as might justly entitle us to rejoice in the assurance that, in such hands, our rights would ever be held asered, at well from a love for the principles upon which these rights are founded, as from a pious regard to the sacred memory of the departed.

But while we might well feel cneouraged by the circumstances to which he had alluded as connected with the progress of events in the Parent State, it must never be forgotten that it was, after all, upon their own energies that they must in the main depend. It was the state of parties and the position of affairs nearer home that therefore more immediately called for their consideration and attention. And when they looked around them for that purpose, they would find still more reason to look forward to the future with satiefaction and confidence-and in saying this, he did not refer to the dissensions in the camp of their opponents, which, to any other than such a party as theirs, might prove a formidable difficulty in the way of the present Provincial Administratiou. It was to one of an entirely different character and complexion-one which, as it is based on the removal of misconception and the spread o' sound principles, is a far better as it is a far firmer foundation upon which to rest our anticipations for

It was a remarkable fact, that looking back at the history, of our past struggles it would be found that every temporary defeat, which as a party we had suffered, had after its immediate consequences had passed, tended materially to spread wider and wider the principles which we hold, and add substantial strength to us as a party devoted to the support of these principles and the successful conduct of the Government of the country upon them. (Cheers.) And the same, if he did not greatly mistake, would prove to be the result of the electroal defeat of 1844. (Reserved Cheers.) To go no farther back then the struggle of 1886-they all recollested the loud and selemn denunciations which proceeded from the vice-regal throne against them and their principles in that eventful year. By the highest authority in the country our principles wero declared to be republican-and our objects revolutionary—and the name and office of the Representative of Majesty prostituted to the vile purposes of political detraction and party triumph. (Cheers,) And yet three years had not clapsed before Lord Durham's Report had given the high sanction of one of the proudest of the proud aristocracy of the Parent State to the very doctrines which had been thus denounced. (Cheers.) Ay, and hundreds, nay thousands who had been led satray by the boid and confident assertions which had been the great staple upon which our opponents had traded in 1836, saw the error into which they had been led, and became the warm and consistent supporters of the cause which they had a year or two before lent the aid of all their energies to overthrow. (Cheers.) He had said the consistent supporters of that great cause, because at the very time they were fighting against us they were in fact in principle with us. They really loved Poitish principles and British practice, and it was, It against such that they wished to raise their voices. But they had been told from a quarter to which they looked with respect, and from the station which he accupied tu which they were entitled to look with respect. that such were our principles and such our objects Many of them had but recently arrived amongst us from the parent state desiring to obtain a home for themselves and their children after them, surrouuded by all the blessings of British Institutions. consecrated by so many hallowed reollections of their native country. And thus their very devotion to their principles was craftily made a means of delinding them into the support of the bixterest opponents of those very principles. (Cheers.) Was he not right then in calling their discusangling themselves from the political connection which they had formed at the moment of miaconception and alaim as a consistent course ?-To him it appeared that it would be at once unjust and ungenerous to designate it by any other epithet. (Cheers.) He need not draw the parallel between the contest of 1836, and its results in the point of view to which he had referred, and that of 1844; this similarity he felt convinced was already too strongly stamped on the mind of all to require illustration. And he would ask was it possible but that time and observation had been gradually and surely developing similar results from the denunciations and misconceptions of '44? He felt assured that they were. (Cheers.). And not only so, but though defeated as a party in the clectoral contest, the very principles for which that contest had been braved, had to be taken up and publicly acted upon by the very men who had stolen into power by the denunciation of it. (Cheers.) It was true we could not draw aside the veil by which the internal working of the chinery of government was conducted. But f m the glimpse with which they had been favored of what had taken place under the present Administration with respect to the Adjutant and Assistaut Adjutant Generalship of Militia, he would boldly ask whether any man could doubt that the constitutional obligation of consultation with his Responsible Advisers was felt in all its stringency by the present Representative of the Sovereign? (Cheers.) Certainly to the full, as much so as was ever done by his predecessor. And he would add, felt in a manner too, which he (Mr. Baldwin) should think was, to say the very least of it, not ciple coni, he But printhese od of mere farent in saalien-

King.

those

SHOUR

of the mode meed d such thereing to ceessy were strugshment and upry way olitical

i State,
f prejuquently inion to ecu repower

to the political constical conby any lesignaof purty ses peuntry in Tories rinciples s, would d uniust. theories esent enly uuder a system we had so ured had rs.) As against inds than

he would

Pezl and

al House

e Provin-

was ready

as he une misap-

hich, by the lot of quite so agreeable to the feelings as could be desired. (Cheers and great laughter.) And certainly not so consistent with the position which It was a part of the duty of the Ministers, as far as possible, to preserve for the Representative of her Majesty as the course contended for by hlm and his late colleagues was calculated to insure. (Cheers.) He meant by the remarks that he had just made to condema at present neither the Head of the Government, the Provincial Ministry, nor any one connected with the transaction referred to; when the proper time came, he should not shrink from dealing with it in a spirit of justice to all parties concerned. But, well he knew that, had a similat occurrence taken place under a Reform Administration, they might have looked in valn to be treated with similar candour and mo-Well he knew that had such deration. (Cheers.) Well he know that had such occurred when he (Mr. Baldwin) and his intecolleagues were in office, the vocabulary of our language would not have furnished our opponents with language strong enough to give vent to their bursting indignation. (Cheers and laughter.) O, how eloquently they would have discoursed of the Prerogative of the Crown and the domineering and dictatorial insolence of the Ministers. (Renewed laughter.) But again, the defeat to which he had alluded had been attended with another advantage; it had afforded us an opportutunity of being again seen in the position of an opposition. And though placed there under circumstances, and by menns which might well excuso no small degree of feeling on their part, their oppo-nents themselves had found no ground upon which to assail them for the manner in which they had conducted that opposition. (Cheers.) He begged pardon, they had on one occasion ventured to impute to them the adoption of an unjustifiable course ln our opposition to a measure on which they had staked their political ex-They had in 1845 attributed the opposition to the University Bill to motives of faction. But a twelvemonth had scarce clapsed when by almost universal consent it was admitted that the measure in question would have satisfied none of the different parties which were calling for legislation upon the subject, and was rejected in the very house which has been sustaining the present ministry in power, by a majority of 20. And so passed their charge of factious opposition on that point. [Cheers.] While in the conduct of the business of the House, as well as in carrying some of their measures through it, they had been forced to acknowledge the assistance which they had received from the opposition [cheers], often in fact sustaining them, when we felt they were right, even against their own supporters, newed cheers.] It cannot be but that the course which they had thus pursued while in opposition, had gone far to disabuse those who had been so unjustly prejudiced against them; and indeed he had reason to know that it had wrung expressions of approbation from some of the highest quarters among the ranks of their opponents [cheers.] That such also had been the effect among a large circle of those who, like the mistaken of 1836, had been misled into distrust of us in 1844, he had the best reason to believe from what he learned of the state of feeling in all parts of the Province. [Cheers.] Indeed, to doubt it would be paying but a noor compliment either to the judgment or the candour of the parties to whom he referred. The distrust. too, of that highly respectable and influential portion of the community, the mercantile body, was, he had reason to believe, rapidly disappearing.-[Cheers.] They were too intelligent not to see the groundlessness of their former doubts, and too honest not to give effect to their convictions by unling upon the basis of common sympathies and common principles. [Cheers.] Their former jeulousy may have been in part created by the too common but most mistaken mode of speaking of the agricultural and commercial interests of the country as two antagonists, neither of which could be promoted but at the expense of the other. he was sure he need not remind those who had watched ids [Mr. Baldwin's] political course with any care, that such had never been the language held by him on this important subject; but that, on the contrary, though the last certainly to undervalue the importance of the agricultural interests, ite had ever held the true doctrine to be this -that here, as veril as elsewhere, all the great interests of the country were mutually dependent upon each other, and that it was not by the depression of any that the others could be promoted, [cheers]—a truth which he was certain would be heartily responded to by the intelligent farmers by whom he was surrounded. [Cheers.] He said [Cheers.] He said then, unhesitatingly, that from the gradual dispersion of the mists of prejudice, and the more thospital the more than the more thospital the more than the more thospital the more than rough and extensive acquaintance which had been acquired of their principles themselves, as well as their mode of promoting and main aining them, they since the last election were gaining and continued daily to gain the most valuable accessions of strength [Cheers.]

n

7

8 h gı

19 ri

th

1 be th

to cl

al

U

Si

C.

di

pi

31

37

80

86 vi

b

V

[

lu

si g ne

ac

n

e fl-

T

V

d de

8(

[

86 ti

h

A

n

ċi

But he had sold that their cause had been further strengthened by the very position to which the possession of power had reduced their opponents, and he believed that all who heard him, nay, nil of every party and of every shade of politics in the country, would be ready to admit that it was Impossible for a ministry to have done more for their political opponents than the present had done, if proving themselves wholly inadequate to the high and important positions which they occupied could have such effect. [Cheers.] The remarks he had just made had no reference to the personnl talents of the different members of the Government or any of them. He passed by all that had been said or might be said on that score, and would add that for the talents of the present Premier, the learned Attorney General for Upper Canada, no one entertained a higher respect than himself. But thlents alone, though important, were far from being the sole requisite of an Administration, either upon the English principles of government, or those of any other popularly constituted Government in the world; nay, he suspected that even in Despotisms, something more was deemed desirablc, if not necessary, to make a useful minister. But upon British principles, an Administration, to be efficient for good, to be capable of performing the high duties with which they are entrusted by the Sovereign, must carry with them the confidence of the country, or at least of a large mass of it.—[Cheers.] That was the very basis of the whole system. [Cheers.] What then, he would ask, [Cheers.] That ... [Cheers.] Cheers.] was the class of public opinions that the present ministry represented? What was the portion of the community of this great Province which professed to have, he would not say the necessary confidence in them, but any confidence at all?-[Cheers.] If they looked to the public press, they would findit almost unanimously condemning them Indeed, it had not been long since the imputation of being their supporter had been indignantly repudiated by some of the long list of Tory denouncers which had been ingeniously collected by one of the Reform journals. [Cheers.] First, as to the Reformers, he need not ask whether the ministry possessed their confidence. [Great Laughter.]

neir convictions by ion sympathles and Their former n.] created by the too node of speaking of ial interests of the ther of which could of the other. alnd those who had political course with been the language subject; but that, ast certainly to unagricultural Intee doctrine to be this ere, all the great lnmutually dependent was not by the decould be promoted, as certain would be telligent farmers by Cheers.] He said the gradual disperand the more thonce which had been mselves, as well as maln aining them, ere gaining and ccavaluable accessions use had been further sition to which the ed their opponents, o heard him, nay, ail ade of politics in the lult that It was imdone more for their present had done, if adequate to the high nich they occupied ers.] The remarks ence to the personal s of the Government by all that had been core, and would add resent Premler, the Upper Canada, no otthan himself. But nt, were far from bedministration, either of government, or constituted Governuspected that even in was deemed desirase a useful minister. an Administration, to able of performing the are entrusted by the nem the confidence of large mass of it .ry basis of the whole then, he would ask, ons that the present it was the portion of Province which proot say the necessary confidence at all?the public press, they sly condemning them since the imputation been indignantly relist of Tory denounusly collected by one eers.] First, as to the whether the ministry [Great Laughter.]

Then, could much more be said as respect- stand pledged to the very measure in ed the Tories thenselves? Passing by their mode of dealing with the Adjutant Generalship and the late Solicitor General of Upper Canada, there were the University and Clergy Reserve questions. These, to go no farther, had sufficiently shown what little presensions the Ministry had to represent Tory opinions upon these great questions. But it wasperfectly prepostorous to talk of their doing so-the Taries themselves did not pretend it. True, they always rallied to the rescue to keep them in office, but it was for no love they bear them, but as all knew, and indeed as they themselves avow, from a fenr of the advent to power of the dreaded Reformers. [Cheers and laughter.] Then as to the moderates, or at least those who claimed in he such par excellence. They all recollected that the University Bill, or at leas, a Vaiversity Bill, yes, a liberal Ucine, say B'll, was by them made the rest topic of promise during the last struggie. Sir Charles Moton lie and liberal measures, and above all, Sir Charles Metcalfo and y libera! University Bill, was dromined in our ears from one end of the profines to the other. Well, the clap-trap ary had its offer and the electoral nictory was achieved in a great measure by means of it. And how have those who rallied to the cry been treated?-Sold ! regularly [Cheers and laughter.] It deserved no better name, and he felt convinced that a large body of those who had been captivated by it, were equally convinced of the truth of what he said. [Cheers.] Then, had the changes that had taken place in the Administration since the elections given those parties any greater reason to be satisfied with the manner they had been treated in the general administration of affairs? Had not every new shuffle of the Ministerial cards tended directly to a diminution of their influence and the increase of that of ultra Toryism, which, be it remembered, these very gentlemen had been formerly, nay, during the very contest itself, as loud in denouncing, ay, he really believed more the Reformers themselves? [Cheers.] Two Inspectors General are selected from the ranks of those most liostile to the very measure that the moderates had ever professed to have most at heart, And when a new Solicitor Gen. is wanted, notwithstanding there being within the circle of Ministerial supporters professional talent, which one would suppose might easily have been commanded, and which ty in regard to it? It is true they sent a question, the anothe of Manutertal preference descraded upon one as avowedly and consistently opposed to it as was perhaps to be found within the range of the profession. Such were the sources of satisfaction from which those who had supported the present Ministry on the grounds of what they called moderation were left to draw their consolation. [Cheers and laughter.] They surely then could not but see how much more they had in common, with the opposition than with the Ministry which they had lent their aid to create, and which could not smud a day but for their support. . He thought he had said anough to demonstrate that the Ministry were, at all events, not entirled to the confidence of the Moderates, and he believed they did not possess it. In what quarter then were they to look for those who supported the present Ministry, as representing their opinions, or endeavoring tagive effect to their views? No where! [Cheers.] Such then was the pushion to which this great Province was reduced, that it had a Ministry possessing the real confidence of no one, abused in far less measured terms by those who voted for them than by the opposition itself, and which, but for the fear of that opposition, could scarcely command half a dozen votes beyond the magic circle of office, and none beyond that of direct Ministerial influence. [Cheers.] He asked, was that a creditable state of things for any party concerned in maintaining it? Was it not, on the contrary, one in which it was obvious that the great interests of the country must be sacrificed, and from which, therefore, all must ultimately suffer? [Clieers.] And at what time is it that this position of things comes upon us, and how have these Ministers dealt or attempted to deal with the great questions which have agitated the public mind,"and in which the public interests are so deeply concerned? In consequence of a great change in the policy of the parent state the country has been placed in an entirely new position as regards her Agricultural, Commercial, and Manufacturing interests. Have the present Ministry, either by the strength which they command, the confidence they inspire, or the manner in which they have met this great change, shown themselves in any way equal to the crisis? Have they in this, any more than in any other, met the reasonable expectations of any portion of the communi-despatch to England, which sooms to have have approved neither on the and side of the Atlantic nor the other. And they have had some tinkering with the Customs; but they had ventured upon no broad developenient of views again this important subject such as the country was entitled to expect from those into whose hands had been committed her political descinies. [Cheers.] With respect to the great change in which he had referred, it had come upon us by an action of our own. It had proceeded from a quarter over which we had no control. All discussion, therefore, as to the expediency or inexpediency of adopting it as respected us was precluded, as, at least, unnecessary. But liaving been thus imposed upon us by the irresistable current of events and the progress of Imperial Logislation, it was evident to him it must be carried out to its legitimate consequences. [Cheers.] We must not shut our eyes to those consequences, but with a manly self-reliance look our condition boldly in the face, and meet the exignacies of the position in which we are placed. Above all we must not allow any sickly attempt to favor what might be supposed to he the shipping or any other particular interest to be successful at the expense of the great body of the people of the country. [Cheers.] With respect to some of those interests, Great Britain had in the most sulenin manner expressed her readiness to acquiesce in this course of action on our part-conferring upon us the power of legislating upon the subject to an extent never before conceded to any of her Culonies. And with respect to the shipping question, he far his part doubted not that she would be found ready to deal with it in a spirit of equal fairness. [Cheers.] He did not overlook the political considerations to which Lord John Russell had referred, with respect to this important branch of the subject, and he [Mr. B.] would be the last man in the Province in the least degree to undervalue them. [Cheers.] But he doubted much whether, when an enlarged and accurate view came to be taken of the question in all its bearings, it would be found that the considerations alluded to really entered, to any extent that could be appreciated, into the questiun. But what he should feel bound to contend for was, that the farmers of the country were not, on the one hand, to be deprived of the advantage of differential duties in their favor in the Markets of Great Britain; and on the

in he practical appearation on their interests was equivalent to such duties, for the mere advancement of the squarate interests of any other class of the community either in the Parent State or the Colony itself. [Great Cheering.] Before leaving this sulface, however, he must strongly deprecate any ullo attempt to delade the people of this country into a belief that any action of theirs could procure a retrogrado movement on the part of the Imperial Gavernment, or stop the forward progress of the mighty movement that had commenced. The word had gone farth, in different parts of Europe it bail already met with an echo, which, though as yet feeble, sufficiently indicated the certainty of its onward course. Let no one then persuade us to waste our time or exhaust our energies, in any attempt of the kind to which he referred; but let us learn to dopendrapan ourselves. Let us shake aff the imbecility of childhood and stand erect like men, and he felt assured that Canada would be found fully equal to the emergency. [Cheers.] - But he had strayed from the point to which he had been directing their attention,-the manner in which the ministry had met, or rather the manner in which they had not met the great questions now before the public. He must trespass a few moments to recur again to the University and Clergy Reserve questions. Surely these were questions of Provincial importance, if any questions deserved to be so styled. Nav, with regard to the furmer, the minister himself, when hringing forward the bill in 1845, had warned his friends and threatened his opponents with the most solenin announcements of the deep importance of the question, and the danger, if left undisposed of, that it might kindle a flame which should hurn from one end of the Province to the other, with the most inextinguishable fury and the most devastating effects on the peace and tranquillity of the Province at large. [Cheering.] And yet, after having got over the first session-displacing one of his colleagues because he could not support it, and at the same time retaining the services of another public servant, high, or who ought to have been high in the confidence of the Administration, though he stood in a position very similar-supplying the place of the displaced member of his Cabinet with a gentleman avowedly opposed to the principles of his own measure,he then comes down to the second session with this great measure, upon the other, be saddled with such duties, or what success of which so much depended, as an ספים קיונים " Sunnie!

Then as he would on that q' province mument vested in not ? [crie Mr. Bald and that, i of public was well majority (upposed t and cries yet, this t u ministr dence of important aguited a l [Cheers Atty. Ga that there ed official on the c Sherwaoi Cameron Gen. Ta anector (Mr. Sec. and last un the o Pupineau he prest Phalanx disturber with the [Renewe anestions called o upon w liave no derstand uppn pu mind ha might, I liappenformed the posit Carliolio question that nos was not vincial o Upon tl fixed, a sacred a vants t them. in ministra open question! [Cheers, and cries of ir interests

or the mere interests of

inity either

lony itself.

enving this rougly de-

de the prof that any retrugrado

s Imperial

rd prugress

haif cuin-

orth, in dif-

ilready inet

yet feeble,

inty of its then per-xhaust our e kind to earn to deake off the tand erect

at Canada

the emer-

ad strayed

ul been dinanner in rather tho

nt met the unblic. He

ecur again

Reserve

questions

questions

vith tegard

self, when

1845, had

red his op-

announcs.

the ques-

isposed of,

ich should nce to the

hable fury

its on the rovince at

after hav-

displacing

could not retaining

vant, high,

in the con-

hough he supplying her of his edly oppo-

neasure, -

cond ses-

upon the

drd, as an

" Shante! Shains!" Then us to the Clargy Reserve question, he would ask, had the public no spinion on that question? did the people of the province deem it a matter of little or no innment whether these reserves were vested in the ecclesiastical corporation or not? [cries of they did! they did!] -he [Mr. Baldwin] well knew that they thil, and that, no one acquainted with the state of public opinion in Upper Canada but was well aware that a large, an immense majority of the people of the commy were apposed to any such investment [cheecs, and cries of they are I they are !], and yet, this too, was left up open question by a ministry claiming to passess the confi-Upon this vitally dence of the country. important question, the administration presented a beautiful equilibrium of upinion. [Cheers and laughter] There was Mr. Any. Gen. Draper on the one side, and that there might be no jenlousy as respectml official rank, Mr. Any. Gen. Smith on the other [langhter], Mr. Sol. Gen. Sherwood, since replaced by Mr. Sol. Gen. Cameron, on the one side, and Mr. Sol. Gen. Taschereau on the other, Mr. Inapector Gen. Cayley on the one side, and Mr. Sec. Daly on the other [[laughter], and lastly, Mr. Commissioner Rabinson on the one side, and Mr. Commissioner Pupineau on the other. Mr. Viger having, he presumed, retired that the Ministerial Phalanx in the Commons might not be. disturbed by an odd number to interfere with the exactness of its equilibration. [Renewed laughter.] These two great questions had been thus made what were called open questions, that is, questions upon which the ministry, as a ministry, have no opinion- Now he could well un derstand how, as questions were growing uppn public attention and before the public mind had become fixed upon them, it might happen-nay, would necessarily happen-that a government could not be formed without having such questions in the position alluded to. The Slave Trade, Catholic Emancipation, and other great questions, had for a long time occupied that position in the parent state. But such was not the position of the two great provincial questions to which he had alluded. Upon them public opinion had long been fixed, and it was trilling with their most sacred obligations to the public, whose serthem in the manner that the present ad- for the contest. [Repeated cheers.]

The had thus directed their attention to the history of the just, while dwelling open the events of the present, and pointing to the prospects of the fiture, and, had, bu trusted, convinced them that those prospieces were, this far, ne fulr, as under any circumstances could have been expected. But before concluding, he must remind them that shelr prospects may all he blasted if they, the pumple, remained inactive, or over confident, or if they suffered those miserable divisions as to the choice of candidates which had cost them five constituenries at the last election, and would lead to their certain defeat if suffered to prevail nt the ensuing one. Union is strength, was a truth of which their opponcuts always showed themselves fully sensible, and never failed to act open-a particular in which their conduct was warthy of the most careful imitation .-[Cheece.] It mainered not to them who the candidate of their pacty was, all rullied in his support, and the consequence frequently was, that they carried constituencies in which the Reformers had an undoubted majority of the voters. If they, the Refermers, were desirous of sustaining their reputation-if they were decirous of proving that they were deserving of the name of a great party, their divisions onnst be put un end to. [Cheers.] He, for his part, was willing to do his duty, and sustain the battle so long as there remained a reasonable prospect of doing so with advantage to the public interest, and credit to themselves-[cheers] But this could not be done by a disunited, disjoint. ed body, in which the great interests of the whole were sacrificed to local or individual jealousies, and if such were permitted to sprend their ban ful influences, his friends had no right to spect him to continue the political contest. Now was the time to avoid these difficulties by early fixing on the candidates to be run for the different counties and ridings. It was true there was no particular reason to look for an immediate dissolution, but affairs were exactly in that position; and the ministry held diffice by exactly that precarious tenure, that while an election might not take place till the expiration of the term for which the present parliament was elected. on the other hand it might be on them be fire they were aware of it; and at all events it was their duty to themselves, and to the great principles which they had so long and vants they were, in any ministry to treat so successfully a lyncated, to be prepared (ministration had done. [Great cheering.] advice then was to them, and to all the

Reform constituencies in the pravince to ne would say further-for it was not a ency with the principle by insuring the of being considered supporters. [Cheers.] ever that candidate may be-and the second, the sending, if possible, a man who can be thoroughly relied on as a stannel supporter of our principles. [Lond cheers.] The former it is in the power of every constituency in which the reformers have the majarity to accomplish, if they will be but united -As to the latter, no man can dive into unother's breast and be so sere of what hes there, as to be certain that he may not be deceived in him. It may be, therefore, that in some cases the gentleman who may be the Reform candidate, may unt in the estimation of all our friends be the fittest man, either as respects thients, tried principles, or framess of purpose, Nevertheless, it is equally the duty of all friends to the cause, to austain him to the atmost of their ability, and with all their influence. [Loud cheering.] If by their enidness in acting, the opposite candidate succeeded, they must remember that they are as much responsible to the great body of the party, and have practically done as much injury to the cause, as if they had actually voted for the other side .--[Choers.] If the candidate of the party be returned, the constituency can at all events and under all circumstances be claimed as going for the principle, even though it should prove that they had been mistaken in their man, and that he turn raitor to the cause. But if by lukewarmness, or division, the election is lost, the parliamentary vote is lost equally as in the former case; and the other party have the right to claim for all practical purposes, he constituency itself as going with them n principle in any general estimation as to the sentiments of the country at large. We would repeat therefore, that it was a Youy which every man owed to the princibles which he professed, to the great body of his political friends throughout the priiwho were engaged in the same Itruggle, and to that country whose best by the triumph of those principles, to saferifice every private and personal consideration on the altar of the public good, and to unite heart and hand in support of the address themselves carnestly to the impor- time nor an occasion to deal otherwise than tant only of fixing upon the candidates, with she most perfect candour-that those In doing so, they should remember who were backward in recognizing and that there were two pulms always to be acting upon this necessary principle were considered, two objects always to be ob- not entitled to be considered true friends tained—the first was to carry the consilin- to the cause of which they were desirous ance as of the candidate of the party, who- He had said that this was not a time for trifling. Their frie ids of Lower Canada, who had stood so mably by them in the hone of their political adversity, expected, and had a right to expect, that ut least they should exhibit manimity amongst themselves; and he would assure them that if the next elections were lost through want of union, the consequences would be both humiliating and disastrons. They all remembered the boast of what lad been called the old Compact Party, that they alom were capable of conducting the govornment of the country. They, the Reformers, had fought the good fight of the constitution, and had the proud boast of having established their great principle so fur, that even their opporents he power have to profess to conduct the government in accordance with it, and to admit that it can now be conducted on no other. [Cheers.] Think, then, what would be the shame which would mantle every face, if, after having achieved this great victory, they, the Reformers of Canada, should, by their internal dissensions, prove themselves incapable of gling effect to their own principles, by taking upon them the administration of the government, if circumstances should arise under which they should be called to do to. And yet every man who withholds any part of his energics in the coming contest, however specious the preteace under which he may shelter, or however skilful the fallacy by which he may deceive himself, will, by so doing, be aiding in this work of self-degradation-be maintaining his opponents in power and place, and verifying their proud hoast, that they, and none but they, are capable of administering the government of his country. He put it to them, then, as a body-to each of them individually-to every man in the country to whom the great principles which they were met that night to sustain were dear-whether they would lend themselves to the verification of this Interests he believed would be promoted proud boast of their opponents? [Cries of No! No!! No!!!] Then let thom remember that there was but one way of avoiding it, and that was by sacrificing every other consideration to the one great scandidate of the party. [Chocis.] And principle that " Union is Strengen."

