"The Pagan a Kempis".

Certain authors who have rejected Christianity are accustomed to make a great deal of the imperial Stoic Marcus Aurelius Antoninus. His times, his writings and his career have been praised with enthusiasm by men like Gibbon, Arnold, Renan and Mill, and their present day disciples echo and prolong the eulogy. The accepted pose is to look back with longing on the age of the Antonines, to regret the passing of that "period in the history of the world during which the condition of the human race was most happy and prosperous," before the triumph of Christianity had bio ked the wheels of liberty and progress, put an end to freedom of thought and cast a pall of gloom over the joys of life.

They delight, too, in setting up such men as Socrates and Marcus Aurelius against the Church's saints. For this purpose "the last of the Romans" is perhaps the greater favorite. Socrates, for all his wisdom, looked indulgently upon the vile impurities of the Greeks, but the character of Marcus appears to be so upright and his morals so correct that Matthew Arnold calls him the "purest of men," on whose "truth sincere" "no shadow ever came." "Perhaps the most beautiful figure of history," and a man "morally and intellectually" never our times. St. Louis or Alfred the Great. Men who have no faith in the supernatural point proudly to this great pagan and "St. Christians" who are "in love with a moral code which brings with it no sanctions, a generation sick into death with skepticism, seek pleasure in an undogmatic philosophy of life like that taught in the "Meditations" of Marcus Aurelius, a book of reflections composed by the emperor for his guidance, it is believed, of his worthless son Commodus, Father Joy has done well, therefore, in choosing for a little "Study in Ideals" the writings and career of this great Stoic. The book is not out of place in the "Lona Series," for without depriving the emperor of merited renown, the writer shows that the man who stood so high above the pagans of his time was yet for true greatness of soul the inferior of the humblest Christian martyr that suffered death in his reign.

Marcus Aurelius was a very remarkable man; there can be no question of that. "Even in a palace" he led a virtuous life. As emperor of Rome he had this command the means of gratifying every unworthy ambition and evil desire the human heart can conceive. He was faithful, however, to his high moral ideals. Even the early Christians found the example of his goodness an incentive to sanctity. "If indomitable nature could do so much," they reasoned, "how ought not the regenerate flesh for their tepidity?" When Cardinal Barberini had translated the "Meditations," he dedicated the work to his own soul in order to make it redder than his purple at the sight of the virtues of this gentle. "Many a passage can be found among the imperial Stoic's words" "o himself" that might well be made the food of a Christian's prayer and reflection. For example: "Does some hybule of fame torment you? Then fix your gaze on swift oblivion, on the gulf of infinity this way and that, on the empty reality of glands and the indiscriminating fickleness of professed applique, on the narrow range within which you are circumscribed. The whole earth is but a point, your habitation but a tiny nook thereon; and on the earth how many are there who will praise you?" In another place: "When you wish to delight yourself, think of the virtues of those who live with you; for instance, the civility of one, the modesty of another, and the liberality of a third." "Do only things necessary, things which in a social being reason dictates and as it dictates. For this brings the cheer that comes of doing a few things and doing them well. Most of the things we say or do are not necessary; get rid of them, and you will gain time and tranquillity." Even if men persecute and insult you, "What has that to do," he asks, "with your understanding remaining pure, lucid, temperate, just?" It is as though a man stood beside some steady transparent fountain, shading it, and it ceased not to well forth draughts of pure water, nay, though he cast in mud and filth, it will speedily disperse them and wash them forth and take no stain. How then can you create a living fountain within? Imbue yourself in freedom every hour, with charity, simplicity and self respect."

Indeed so frequent in the "Meditations" are passages like the foregoing that the admirers of Marcus Aurelius call him "the Pagan a Kempis" and do comparisons between the mystic and the moralist, in which the latter of course, does not suffer. Though the two authors have many maxims in common, the similarity, as Father Joy observes, is merely verbal. "The same words do not express the same spiritual attitude in the two writers." The outlook of the one is wholly natural while the thoughts of the other are transfused by his glowing Catholic faith. The Stoic bids his soul retire into proud solitude; the Christian leads his into humble communion with God. Aurelius has much of the self sufficiency and arrogance of his school. Like all the pagans, he has no conception of humility. He cannot say with a Kempis: "We are all frail; but do thou think on one more frail than thyself," but finds strength, rather, in considering the private vices of those who offend him and in reflecting on his own virtues. Such a grim reality as suffering he tries to brush away by cold reason. He would comfort a sorrowing heart with a syllogism. But our poor human nature, as a Kempis knows full well, needs something higher than itself to cling to, and requires strength from a source that is divine. So he offers both as a model and a comforter. Our Blessed Lord Himself, whereas the duty of blindly obeying changeable laws is the highest and most consoling motive Aurelius can suggest for living an upright life. "A sentiment of sorrow and a deep, disheartenment," says Dr. Dollinger "cast as it were a black veil of mourning over the whole of his system of contemplation, and almost every one of his reflections," and even Arnold admits that no one can rise from the reading of the "Meditations" without a sense of constraint and melancholy, without feeling that the burden laid upon man is well nigh greater than he can bear." Moreover, it is not Marcus Aurelius Antoninus to himself, an overrated book? Because an interesting emperor wrote it, and he the solitary "saint," as many think, of paganism, modern unbelievers have never ceased to praise the beauty and profundity of his thoughts. But are they deeper and fairer than those of his master, Epictetus, and not to mention the "Imitation of Christ," with his book bear comparison with St. Augustine's "Confessions," or even with Sir Thomas Browne's "Religio Medici"?

Though Marcus Aurelius recommends "retiring from life," if virtue becomes too hard to practice, he himself bravely waited for "the retreat to sound," doing his duty to the very last. He was a polytheist and a pantheist, but not an atheist; a slave to the popular superstitions of his time, but his morals were better than his religion. A persecutor of the Christians, he gave the Church such martyrs as Polycarp, Justin Felicity, Socrates and Bandina, but it was a mistaken patriotism, apparently, that made him commensurate such cruelties. "War was to him," says Dr. Rindahl, "a heful hunting of Sarumians," yet "duy made him a great captain, and he stayed the barbarian till Western civilization was Christian, and safe." But Marcus Aurelius, he is remembered, was by no means a typical Roman of the second century, for Stoic philosophers as he is said to have been very rare. Moreover Rome still carried "its own moral corruption into all lands and its avarice poured back their own into a vast reservoir." We must go to Dollinger rather than to Gibbon for a true picture of the period. Slavery, the avoidance of marriage, the exposition of new born infants, the practice, even by such "good emperors" as Trajan Antoninus Pius, of barbarous Greek vices; the prevalence of public immoralities which imperial decrees tried in vain to put down; the horrors of the amphitheatre; the abominations of the temples—all these were quite or nearly as characteristic of Roman life in the time of Marcus Aurelius as in preceding reigns. The ideals and practices of the imperial Stoics were far higher, we may be sure, than those of the men he governed. To-day "the humblest Christian," says Father Joy, "has as his birthright truths which were the fruit of years of training and much struggle in the noble pagan soul; and he has much more," while to realize how far a Christian saint transcends in beauty of character a "saint" of paganism we have but to compare with the life and writings of Marcus Aurelius Antoninus those of St. Francis of Sales.—Walter Dwight, S. J. in America.

One of the most brilliant features of the mission congress in Boston was the reception given in the ballroom of the Copley Plaza hotel to the visiting dignitaries, men and women delegates, and other guests, under the auspices of the League of Catholic Women. Cardinal O'Connell received the guests, assisted by the members of the League. Two delegates from an Indian mission in Dakota, Chief Agile Hawk and Chief William, of Flood, were present, resplendent in their native dress. The address of the evening was given by James J. Walsh, M. D., L. L. D., of New York, who gave several lectures in St. Paul some weeks ago. Dr. Walsh after describing the Christian spirit that led the early explorers of Portugal and Spain to their great discoveries, said in part: "Here in America our annals of the early days are full of noble examples of this missionary spirit. What the Jews did for the savages at the North their brother Jesuits and the Franciscans and other orders did for the milder Indians of the South. Wherever the missionary has had his opportunity it has been a happy thing for the savage. Wherever missionary influence was lacking they have learned the vices of civilization before learning to practice its virtues and the result was destruction.

"There are any number of illustrations which show us that the missionary spirit still lives in the modern time. Men do not hesitate at the danger of death, nor does the awfulness of insupportable diseases deter them. "It is not the striking adventure and danger of the missionary life that are hardest," but long years of real hardship under the most trying circumstances lived on. It is that makes the missionary a living martyr, constitutes his highest merit and makes the story of his life an inspiration for those who live in the midst of luxury and get fed as much to complain of and life so arid. "People in our time sometimes complain that the money spent on missions could be put to much better use at home. Nothing could well be so specious as this argument. As a matter of fact, there is more than twenty times as much money spent on chewing gum, soft drinks and candy as there is on foreign missions. There is considerable money spent on these trifles than all the expenditure of every kind of religion put together. "When it is recalled what an inspiration to lift oneself up above the trivialities of life there is in the story of missionary effort and the examples of missionary lives, it is worth many times more than the price it costs if for no other purpose than its wonderful ethical educational influence. When the other side of it is considered, its significance for the supernatural in life, there is no value that can possibly be placed on it. "The spirit of initiative to do for others that is the fruit of such examples is one of the most precious educational influences in the world. Those who are close to missionary effort become of their personal interest and help in it cannot but live their own lives, deeper and higher because of it, and that is the only way to get more out of life and to make life really worth the living."

The boys and girls of today are reading a great deal more than the boys and girls of twenty years ago. What are they reading? The bespoken copiers of the book-stores tell us at a glance. Most of it is utterly useless. Much of it is injurious. Much of it is an occasion of sin. Parents must be awake. They cannot take it for granted that what their young people are reading is all right. Men have a direct and heavy responsibility as to the stuff they buy and carry home, not only on their own account, but on account of their wives and children.—Oskate.

PIMPLES

Are an "EYE SORE."

Pimples are caused by the blood being out of order. Those little festering sores appear on the forehead, on the nose, on the chin and other parts of the body, and although they are not a dangerous trouble they are very unsightly to both you and your friends. There is only one way to get rid of them, and that is to purify the blood. Burdock Blood Bitters is without a doubt the best remedy on the market for this purpose. "Wm. F. Lombard, Jr., Hamilton, Ont., writes:—'About six months ago my little son's face was literally covered with pimples. I tried every preparation I was told of by my friends, but to no avail. Soon I thought I could not have them fixed up, and would have to wait, and let him grow out of them, but thanks to Burdock Blood Bitters they are all gone, and I gladly recommend it to anyone.' Burdock Blood Bitters is manufactured solely by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Watch Your Liver. If It Is Lazy, Slow or Torpid Stir It Up By The Use of Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills.

A lazy, slow or torpid liver is a terrible affliction, as it holds back the bile, which is required to move the bowels, and lets it into the blood instead, thus causing Constipation, Catarrh of the Stomach, Sick Headache, Languor, Pain under the right Shoulder, etc.

Mrs. Wesley Estabrooks, Midgie Station, N.B., writes:—For several years I had been troubled with pains in the liver. I have had medicine from several doctors, but was only relieved for a time by them. I then tried Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills, and I have had no trouble with my liver since. I can honestly recommend them to every person who has liver trouble."

Commission of Inquiry.

The high cost of living is a question engaging a great amount of attention just now. It is a live question all round, not confined to any particular country or locality. So serious has this matter become that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the opportunist, always waiting for something to turn up, has seized upon it as a shibboleth for vote catching. But in the attitude he has assumed towards this question, he is most illogical; but that is not remarkable. Was he ever anything else? He blames the tariff for the high cost of living. If that were the trouble he should have applied the remedy when he had the power to do so. It is his own tariff and during his fifteen years of office he did not lower it. Had he power to-morrow he would not act differently. The people have had enough of this deception and hypocrisy. More over the strongest refutation of the free-food cry comes from the United States, Laurier's favorite country. The reduction of tariff under the Wilson administration has raised, instead of lowered, the cost of living.

All the same this is a most serious question and some thing should be done regarding it. The first step towards solving the difficulty is to ascertain the cause and then consider the best remedy. That is the way the Borden Government are grappling with the matter. They have not started the investigation by making a lot of talk about it; but have appointed a commission to look into every phase of the matter. This commission is not composed of political heeled; but of tried and experienced Government officials, who have proved their ability to deal with such a problem. Mr. John Mc Dougall, Commissioner of Customs, who heads the board, is one of the most highly valued officials in the government service. He has been for years in the employ of the department and has devoted his life to a careful study of all matters pertaining to it. Mr. C. C. James, of the Agricultural Department, was formerly Deputy Minister of Agriculture in the Province of Ontario, and was so successful in the position that he was chosen to act for the Dominion Government in arranging the agricultural grants to the different provinces. Mr. James has made a special study of the facts in regard to the depopulation of rural Canada and the hearing that factor has on the cost of living. He advocates that Canada should grow more food, a doctrine he has preached from lecture platforms and through the press. Mr. Coats is editor of the Labor Gazette and for years has made a study of the cost of living. In 1910 he prepared and published an exhaustive report on wholesale prices in Canada. Three years before the change of government the statistician of the Labor Department worked out a plan for a comprehensive investigation into all phases of the cost of living which had been increasing since 1897. By his plan it was intended for a commission to go into details regarding the matter of wages, costs and prices and it would have taken in the subject of the enquiry both from the standpoint of the producer and consumer. This was laid before Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, then the Minister of Labor, but aside from a partial investigation into wholesale prices, that gentleman refused to have anything to do with it. When Hon. T. W. Crothers came into the department, after the change of government, he was quick to take advantage of the plan and has had a vast mass of information secured which will be available as a ground upon which the present commission can work.

From all this it will be seen that while the Liberal Leader has been mouthing about the country regarding the necessity of grappling with this important question, the department of the administration which naturally would deal with such a subject, has been quietly gathering information upon this work. There are two outstanding features in the announcement from Ottawa that the cost of living will be investigated. One is that the Government, through the sensible medium of expert evidence and advice, will find out what is necessary and may then be depended upon to apply the remedy. The other is that the work is to be done by men qualified in every way to grapple with their task. Things were done differently under the Liberal rule. A commission of enquiry in those days was generally regarded as fat pickings for favored partisans. The present Government, however, believe in getting value for money expended and in this case the public may rest assured that when the commission completes its investigation and makes its report, that document will completely diagnose the disease and prescribe the remedy.

It requires but little consideration these days to convince the average man that when it comes to the process of making the pocketbook "look thin," Mr. High Cost of Living has much to learn from that other eminent economist Mr. Santa Claus.

Secretary Houston Washington issued an order on Monday continuing the quarantine temporarily put on potatoes from the British Isles, Canada and Europe. The action was modified, however, by a second order providing that quarantine could be raised in case of countries or districts which can show their potatoes are free from potato wart or powdery scab, the disease complained of. In case of certain provinces of Canada and certain countries and districts in Europe the officials believe absolute prohibition can be raised in time to allow the movement of this year's crop under restrictions similar to those in the case of nursery stock.

Never has so many British immigrants left Canada just before the holidays to spend Xmas and the winter at home as those going this year. The immigration department is glad to see them go. "The more the better," said an official of the department at Ottawa. "Every man of them is a voluntary immigration agent from Canada. They will all be back in the spring and will bring thousands of good settlers with them. They are all pretty well satisfied with Canada because they have all made and saved some money here. If they had not made a little pile they would not be starting on an ocean voyage. The experience of the department is that the best immigration agent is a well satisfied immigrant, who has succeeded in Canada. "Today we are casting our bread on the waters. For every shipload of Britishers who go eastward now two or three shiploads will come back next spring. I say the more who leave Canada the better for Canada."

Reports from money order departments in connection with the post offices in the large cities indicate that the "stranger within our gates" remembered those in the old land more bountifully this year. Such statements do not coincide with the reports of financial depression and hard times.

Those plain and humble patriots who formerly composed the Laurier government sat down to a sumptuous and costly banquet in the Ritz Carleton Hotel in Montreal and after dining and wining on the best in the land proceeded to solemnly discuss "the high cost of living." It is to laugh.

Newspapers supporting the Wilson Administration in the United States are pointing to Secretary of State Bryan as a "big gun." This leads the Boston Transcript to remark that he looks more like the man, who put "blunder" in "blunderbus."

The delegates of the twelve nations, including Canada represented at the London international conference on safety at sea were received by King George at Buckingham Palace last Friday afternoon. Each of them was introduced and presented separately in the throne room by Sydney Buxton, President of the Board of Trade. His Majesty extended to them a most cordial greeting and emphasized his personal interest as a sailor in the success of the conference.

Steamers arriving at Sydney, Australia, within the last few days bring terrible details of the recent volcanic eruptions on the Island of Ambrim, in the New Hebrides group, in which 500 natives lost their lives. Witnesses of the disturbance describe it as having been so sudden and violent that they expected to see the whole western side of the island disappear. With a terrible roar, which was followed by a rapid succession of artillery-like detonations, all the craters of the volcano entered into full activity, spouting flames and lava and throwing out huge boulders. Great streams of lava soon were floating down the slopes, cutting off the villagers from escape. In one instance two torrents of the molten mass joined and made an island of one section of the village. Here fifty or sixty persons perished. The scenes at night were awe-inspiring. Flames shot into the air to a height of a thousand feet, illuminating the whole scene of destruction. The bay after the eruption was filled with dead fish and large numbers of dead turtles. The water in the river was hot. The British hospital buildings were wiped out of existence, but previous to their destruction the doctors pluckily removed all the patients to a launch and escaped with them.

Fire in a Dockyard.

A fire at Portsmouth England involving damage variously estimated at from $1,250,000 to $2,500,000, devastated the famous dockyard Saturday night, and resulted in the loss of two lives and the destruction of the century old semaphore tower, which in the pre-telegraph days was the great signalling station between the fleet and the Admiralty.

TWO MEN PERISHED.
 An examination of the ruins Monday disclosed the fact that two of the three signalmen who had remained in the tower to summon help when the fire broke out, were burned to death. The third managed to make his escape through the smoke and flames to an adjoining roof and there fell unconscious. He was subsequently rescued.

ORIGIN IS UNKNOWN.
 Nothing is known as to how the fire originated. When it was first observed from the deck of the new battle cruiser Queen Mary, it had already obtained a good hold on the inflammable material in the loft and sail house. All the fighting apparatus in the dockyard was rapidly brought into action and the efforts of the men were devoted to preventing the fire from reaching the main store at the end of the building, which was filled with thirty thousand tons of heavy oil. After many hours of most strenuous work the fire was got under control. It had then reached within eight feet of these tanks. The flames were finally extinguished about three o'clock on Sunday morning.

MANY RELICS BURNED.
 The huge wooden semaphore structure surrounding the rigging house was a blazing beacon within half an hour after the outbreak and collapsed on the roof of the main tower and building, converting the whole into a fiery mass. Fire parties were sent to the dockyard from all the warships in the harbor, and the battle cruiser Queen Mary, on which burning brands were falling, was towed out of the danger zone. Many valuable models of old warships, records relating to Nelson and earlier periods, and naval relics, were destroyed.

The Culture Of Black And Silver Foxes.

A timely publication, THE CULTURE OF BLACK AND SILVER FOXES, has recently been issued by the ROD AND GUN PRESS, Woodstock, Ont. This book is a series of articles written by Dr. L. V. Craft, who in addition to being a successful breeder of foxes in captivity, is a specialist in veterinary science and his attitude in these articles is that of a real sportsman. To those breeders of foxes and animal who have no knowledge of veterinary science—and comparatively few of those who are engaged in this new industry have—Dr. Craft's book will be of inestimable value. The book comprises chapters on Heredity, Origin, Breeding, Mating and Gestation, Pups and Dew, Food and Feeding, Hygiene and Care, etc. It is well illustrated, neatly bound in paper cover, and can be produced from W. J. Taylor, Limited Publishers, Woodstock, Ont. for the remarkable low price of sixty cents. Oct. 27, 1913.—21.

Submission.

O Heart of Jesus! Sea of Love profound! O Queen of Mercy! since it please Thee, (And Thou in love hast made it known to me) To thus my soul imprison, and build 'round My nights and days a sombre wall, uncrowned By vine or leaf! I ask not to be free, Nor have I any wish, dear Lord, to see Or move amid the roses that abound In wild profusion near the narrow cell In which Thy providence will I shall dwell, In blind submission to Thy wise decree I bow my head and bend a willing knee; My one desire, that Thou, my Keeper be 'Till Time has merged into eternity Margaret A. Snider, In the Western Catholic.

An Old Woman's Rosary.

I bless myself and I kiss the Cross, And the holy creed I tell; And the Paters and Aves trip off my tongue, For it's me that knows them well. For it's many a day these same old beads I told in the same old way; I got them my First Communion morn, And that's sixty years this May. 'Twas the joyful mysteries then I liked (And I said them joyfully), When our Lord was only a Child Himself At His Blessed Mother's knee. O how but it's many and many a year I've turned from the joyful deeds; And I cry on the sorrowful mysteries With tears as big as my beads, For my beautiful boy with a fever went, And "himself" next morning died; Do you wonder I think of the mysteries That end with the Crucified? For it's them as I'm telling each blessed bead, A kneeling beads say bed; We two women, God's Mother and me, Have many a talk of our dead. But what am I crying about at all? Sure, all of us have to die; I have my sins, and she had none, 'Twas she had reason to cry. And that's why I'm liking the beads that tell Her pains and her darling Son's; It's plenty of time I'll be having in Heaven, To think of the glorious ones. —Rev. Hugh B. Blount.

To The Infant Jesus.

O King of Heaven from starry throne descending, Thou takest refuge in that wretched cave; O God of bliss! I see Thee cold and trembling, What pain it cost Thee fallen man to save! Thou, of a thousand worlds the great Creator, Dost now the pain of cold and want ender; Thy poverty but makes Thee more endearing, For well I know 'tis love has made Thee poor. I see Thee leave Thy Heavenly Father's bosom, But whether has Thy love transported Thee? Upon a little straw I see Thee lying; Why suffer thus? 'Tis all for love of me. But if it is Thy will for me to suffer, And by these sufferings my heart to move, Wherefore, my Jesus, do I see Thee weeping? 'Tis not for pain Thou weepst, but for love; Thou weepst thus to see me so ungrateful; My sins have pierced Thee to the very core; I once despised Thy love, but now I love Thee, I love Thee, I love Thee, then, Jesus, weep no more. Thou sleepest, Lord, but Thy heart ever watches, No slumber can a heart so loving take; But tell me, darling Babe, of what Thou thinkest, 'Tis not for me, 'of dying for thy sake.' Is it for me that Thou dost think of dying! What, then, O Jesus can I love but Thee? Mary, my hope! If I love Him too little, — Be not indignant, — love Him thou for me. —St. Alphonsus Liguori.

Itching Skin

Distress by day and night— That's the complaint of those who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with Eczema or Salt Rheum—and outward applications do not cure. They can't. The source of the trouble is in the blood—make that pure and this scaling, burning, itching skin disease will disappear. —I was taken with an itching on my arms which proved very disagreeable. I concluded it was salt rheum and bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. In two days after I began taking it I felt better and it was not long before I was cured. Have never had any skin disease since." Mrs. Ida E. Wray, Cove Point, Md.

Hood's Sarsaparilla cures the blood of all impurities and cures all eruptions.

Christmas Night.

At last Thou art come, little Saviour! And Thine angels fill midnight with song; Thou art come to us, gentle Creator! Whom Thy creatures have sighted for so long. Thou art come to Thy beautiful Mother; She hath looked on Thy marvelous face; Thou art come to us, Maker of Mary! And she was Thy channel of grace. Thou hast brought with Thee plentiful pardon, And our souls overflow with delight; Our hearts are half broken, dear Jesus! With the joy of this wonderful night. We have waited so long for Thee, Saviour! Art Thou come to us, dearest! at last? Oh bless Thee, dear Joy of Thy Mother! This is worth all the wearisome past! Thou art come, Thou art come, Child of Mary! Yet we hardly believe Thou art come;— It seems such a wonder to have Thee, New Brother! with us in our home. Thou wilt stay with us now evermore; We will play with Thee, beautiful Brother! On Eternity's jubilant shore. Father Faber.

SHORT STORY

"The Personal Equation."

(Continued from last week.) Consider for a moment, Mr. Shea, all the good you can do. Those boys need capable encouragement and direction at the hands of a man whom they look up to and respect and who furthermore knows and understands their needs better than any one else, better than they themselves. I am trying for all I'm worth to keep those boys straight, to stimulate the right sort of ambition in them, to prevent them from running wild and banging around alone. I can't do the work alone single handed. Will you help me out? The President was distinctly uncomfortable. He fidgeted and his face retained its flush. "I'll have Joggins or one of the foremen take your club in hand, Father Cleary—good thing, I see, and we ought to push it along. And," he continued feebly, "I'll look in myself once a month or so and see how things are going. Now, what do you say to that?" The question was like a cry for mercy, but Father Cleary smiled a little sternly and shook his head. "I must tell you, in your own words, Mr. Shea, that we have no room for small change." The President's head fell forward, "Still, Father Cleary, I think I'm doing a good deal. The men I would send—" "Would not be you, Mr. Shea, didn't ask for your man. Charity, as I understand it, means personal, individual interest and sympathy." The President slapped his knee. It was a sound slap, too, and Father Cleary started. "You win, you win! Organization or no organization, you certainly land the big things—big things as I see them, anyway. When do you want me to start?" "You are very kind, Mr. Shea," said the priest quietly, "but everything is not quite settled yet. There is another matter—" "Well, that beats me!" the President exclaimed, absolutely quivering with excitement. "Is that all that's there anything else you can ask?" "There is," Father Cleary asserted him, his face set and his hands grasping the worn hat very tightly.

"I told you that the name of the club is the Catholic Boys' Club. It is under Catholic auspices and it is designed to tend toward Catholic ideals."

"Well?" The President's frown was ominous. "Well, Mr. Shea, I believe that a man's religious convictions—or his absence of convictions—are, strictly speaking, a man's own business. You, I have reason to know, are no practical Catholic, have not been, indeed, since I came to Brunsford. Ordinarily, that might be no concern of mine. But now that you have expressed your willingness to assume charge of the Catholic Boys' Club, the situation changes. The man who is to direct that club will have a powerful influence over the young men belonging to it. He must be a practicing Catholic."

"Then that lets me out," called the President. "I have no religious convictions and no religious affiliation; and I don't want to have any. The priest took a step forward and laid a gentle hand on the other man's arm."

"Give me credit, if you please, for some understanding—and for sympathetic understanding, too, I think I know what your case is. You were reared a Catholic, and so were your father and grandfather before you. You were a clean boy, and you're a clean man—as most men go. But you grew indifferent to all things that didn't have a big dollar sign before them. You threw out of your life every interest that didn't in some way or other contribute to your business success. You told yourself you had no time for Church and the Sacraments—and well you slipped through not using your eyes. But our Saviour restored sight to the blind centuries ago in Palestine, and He does it in America today. He never fails to hearken to the cry, 'Lord, that I may see.'"

The President rubbed his hands rapidly across his eyes. Then he flung out his arms beseechingly. "But, my God, man, do you realize what a sacrifice all that would mean?" As Father Cleary answered, his face seemed transfigured: "I told you that charity means love, and that love means sacrifice." He bowed slightly and crossed to the door.

"All I want you to do is to think it over. God will meet you halfway. I'll be in next Tuesday to hear what you have to say. Now, my last words to you are: Don't be a piker."

When Mr. Shea looked up he was alone. Fifteen minutes later George Manning Shea was snapping brusquely to the young lady with the notebook: "Take this 'Single & Sears, Jobbers, Philadelphia, Gentlemen: In accordance with agreement entered into on the 11th of last month meeting inform you that quality of wire netting furnished by Grant & Co., of your city, has not been up to specifications. Will you kindly look into matter without delay? I am willing to pay market price on all supplies—but—oh, yes—market price on all supplies; but—N, N, N, N, I won't be a piker!—Er? Oh, dang it! Don't take that!"

Christmas Thoughts.

How full, how busy are these days preceding Christmas. There is so much to be done, so much time and consideration to be given to the selection of appropriate gifts for the friends whom we always remember at this great time of gift giving. And is there not just a little danger in the midst of all the excitement of preparation that we may not think as often as we might of just what sort of gift we are preparing for our best and truest friend whose Christmas gift to us is none other than Himself? What a pity we should permit petty annoyances and superficial worries to eliminate from our minds all thought of that sweetest love story the world has ever known, the tale old yet ever new, of the gift that Heaven bestowed on us that first sweet Christmas night when Christ the Saviour was ushered into our mortal world. Let us then not think mainly of the material side and so little of the spiritual significance of the beautiful feast of feasts, but keep uppermost in our minds during these Advent days what Christmas really is. He asks for our hearts. That is the only gift He desires. Will we not strive to make them worthy of Him and not slight our best friends on Christmas Day?—Tiddings.

Couldn't Do Housework HEART WAS SO BAB.

Mrs. Thomas Melville, Saltcoats, Sask., writes:—"I thought it my duty to write and tell you how much your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. My heart was so bad I could not sleep, eat, nor walk about the house. I could not do my housework at all, what my husband could not do had to go and find me. I had two small children depending on me besides three men to cook for, and it worried me to not be able to do anything. My husband had taken some of your pills, some years ago, and insisted on me trying them, so I started, and before I had taken them two weeks I was considerably better, and before I had taken two boxes I was doing my own work again. Anyone suffering from heart or nerve trouble of any kind should just give your pills a trial. If anyone cares to write to me I will gladly give them all the information I know concerning your wonderful medicine. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont."
