PURITY - QUALITY - ECONOMY

With the increased cost of labor and materials due to war conditions, it is not reasonable to suppose that a really first class baking powder can be made and sold at the old prices. Rather than sacrifice the quality of

MAGIC BAKING POWDER

we found it necessary to make slight increases in price during the war period. Even though Magic Baking Powder may cost a few cents more than the ordinary kinds it is still by far the most economical baking powder on the market to-day when purity, strength and leavening qualities are taken into consideration.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE KISS OF JUDAS.

"Let me be the first to congratulate you, my dear Edgar," he said, holding out his hand.

Lord Edgar, pale, too, but with a glow of happiness in his eyes, turned to Lela.

"No," he said, "my first word must belong to her—my wife, and he took her in his arms and kissed her.

Then he took Clifford's hand and shook it.

"Thank you—thank you, Clifford! Lela, my wife, thanks you, too, do you not?"

Lela held out her hand and looked at him, but she said nothing, not even when he bent over her hand.

"May I claim a cousin's privilege, Lady Fane?" he said.

She started and stared at him. Lady Fane! What did he mean? Then it broke upon her that he meant herself—that she was Lady Fane; and before she could say "yea or nay," he kissed her hand.

It was a Judas kiss—a kiss that should have withered the lips that gave it; but it only gave him courage.

His eyes gleamed triumphantly, his voice grew loud.

"Browne," he said, "I never heard you read the service in better style."

Nagle raised his head and looked at him—a strange glance.

"Never," he repeated. "I think your voice has improved. By the way, I must use my poor influence with my cousin on your behalf, Edgar!"

"Well," said Lord Edgar, turning his head—the still held Lela's hand—"what is it?"

"I was going to say a word for my friend Browne," said Clifford Revel, smiling so that his short, even teeth gleamed under his mustache. "You have, or will have, several livings within your gift. I hope you won't forget my friend here. You are married now, and will some day be Marquis of Farintosh. Don't forget the clergyman who helped to make you the happiest man on earth!"

It was a wild speech, but excusable, Lord Edgar thought, under the circumstances.

"I am very much indebted to Mr. Browne," he said, looking at Nagle's pale, cadaverous face—"very much; and I hope I may some day have the opportunity of proving the sincerity of my gratitude."

As he spoke Nagle raised his eyes and looked at him, and at the moment Lord Edgar was seized with a strange idea that he had seen him before.

"At what university were you, Mr. Browne?" he asked.

"At Oxford, with me!" said Clifford Revel, with a wild laugh. "Weren't you, Browne?" he said, lightly.

"Wonderful clever man, Browne—passed with honors, while I was plucked. Now mind, Edgar, the first living that comes into your hands, you give to my friend here."

Lord Edgar nodded.

"I promise that!" he said.

Then, for the first time, Nagle spoke. He raised his head and looked from one to the other.

"Thank you, my lord!" he said.

"What a wonderful actor he is!" thought Clifford Revel. "No bishop could have looked more clerical, or read the service more devoutly."

Lord Edgar entered. He had put on a new dress-coat—that is, a left-off one of Lord Edgar's.

"Luncheon is served, my lady!" he said.

Lela looked around to see where "my lady" might be, then blushed a rosy red and clung to Lord Edgar's arm. She was "my lady" now!

"Mr. Browne, will you join us?" said Lord Edgar, for Nagle had taken up his black kid gloves.

"Thank you, my lord!" he said.

"But I have a pressing engagement."

"Oh, come, Browne!" said Clifford Revel, remonstrating. "Whoever heard of a clergyman deserting his post before the wedding breakfast!"

Nagle looked at him steadily.

"I have a pressing engagement which I can not break," he said.

"At least you will drink a glass of wine?" said Lord Edgar, genially.

Lord Edgar went and fetched a decanter and glass, and as he went Nagle said:

"I have not seen the license, my lord; will you show it to me, please!"

"Certainly!" said Lord Edgar, and he drew the license from his pocket and handed it to him.

He took it and glanced at it, and Clifford Revel exultingly thought that, indeed, his tool was a good actor!

"It is usual for the clergyman to retain this," said Nagle.

"All right!" said Lord Edgar. "It is of no use to me now," and he laughed buoyantly.

Nagle put the document in his pocket-book and then went to the writing-table, and, taking a sheet of paper, wrote something on it. Then he approached Lela and handed the sheet of note-paper to her.

"This, my lady," he said, bending his dark eyes upon her and speaking in a voice quite different to that which he had used hitherto, "is your marriage certificate; keep it and preserve it. You may never need it, but still—keep it."

Lela took the sheet of paper and murmured her thanks, and Clifford Revel, looking on with a smile, was delighted at the way in which his tool was playing his part.

"And now I must say 'Farewell!'" said Nagle, quietly. "I am sorry that I cannot remain, but I have a pressing engagement. Good-bye, my lord!"

"Good-bye!" said Lord Edgar, taking his hand. "I am very much obliged to you, and am very sorry that you can not stay!"

"Thanks."

Then he held out his hand to Lela.

"Good-bye, Lady Fane!" She put her hand in his. It was burning hot, but it did not affect her as Clifford Revel's had done. "Good-bye, Lady Fane! I wish you every happiness! You are young to occupy so exalted a station as that which has fallen to your lot, but I think you will do your duty. It may happen in your ladyship's experience to encounter trouble—who is free from it—but you will always remember that you have a husband to support and aid you. Good-bye, and every blessing attend you!"

Lela bowed her head. There were tears in her eyes, called there by the grave, solemn voice.

"Good-bye, and thank you for your good wishes!" she murmured.

Then Lord Edgar drew her arm within his and led her into the next room.

Clifford Revel lingered behind and followed Nagle into the lobby.

Then he closed the door of the room behind him and contemplated his tool with suppressed amusement.

"Nagle, you have been as good as a play!" he exclaimed, in a low voice—"as good as a play! My dear fellow, you ought to have gone on the stage, you ought indeed! I never knew anything done better! You read the service like a bishop! Like a bishop!"

Nagle stood and looked at him with grave face and knitted brows.

"And your farewell was excellent! I admire your taste in declining to remain for the luncheon. And your farewell good wishes! Upon my word, Nagle, you have earned your money!"

"You think so?" said Nagle, looking calmly at the flushed face of his employer. "You think so, Clifford Revel?"

"Yes! I am quite satisfied. Quite. It was splendid! Any one would have been deceived, leave alone my poor fool of a cousin and a simple girl! But, by Jove, it was a near shave. I thought she was going to back out of it at the last moment. It was only your clerical appearance that deceived her. It was a wonderful get-up. You'll pass as a clergyman anywhere!"

"You think so?" said Nagle, with the same grave air.

"Yes, anywhere! Nagle, I am delighted with you. And to prove it I'll add a five-pound note to your bargain. Look here, here are two hundred and fifty, and here is a five-pound note added," he said, in a whisper, as he took a roll of notes from his pocket and looked them over.

Nagle took them, and without counting them crushed them together in his hand.

"I am glad you are pleased," he said, quietly.

"Pleased! I am delighted! I scarcely thought the affair would go off so well. Really, Nagle, if you have any sense of humor—which I am inclined to doubt—you must enjoy the situation! To think that she so thoroughly believes that she is my Lady Fane, the future Marchioness of Farintosh, whereas you and I know that she is nothing of the sort, but simply Miss Temple! It is enough to make one laugh!

"Or weep," said Nagle.

"Weep!" echoed Clifford Revel, with a laugh. "Not I! I enjoy it! It is at the least, an elaborate joke! You have the notes! Good-bye! If you take my advice you will put the herring pond between you and this day's work."

"You advise that I should seek safety in flight?" said Nagle, quietly.

"I do. It is my sincere advice. You know what this morning's work means for you if ever it should be brought into court? Ten years at least, my dear Nagle."

"Well, perhaps you are right," said Nagle. "I'll think it over."

"Clifford! Clifford!" called Lord Edgar.

"There, he wants me!" said Clifford Revel, with a smile. "Good-bye! Take my advice! You are a rich man with capital. Make yourself scarce."

"Thanks," said Nagle, calmly. "If I might offer you advice—"

"I don't want it!" said Clifford Revel, smilingly.

"Just so. But if you did I should say, don't be too certain. I throw my advice in for the extra five pounds, and again I say, don't be too certain!"

CHAPTER XXVIII.

AN EXTRAORDINARY WEDDING.

IT WAS an extraordinary wedding! Lela scarcely realized that she was married; it seemed like a dream to her; the beautiful rooms, the table laden with costly plate and choice glass; Lovel, black-garbed and noiseless; the landlady's niece, in her pink ribbons, all seemed unsubstantial and unreal. The words so solemnly spoken by the man who had read the service rang in her ears like the voice in a dream. It was only when she looked up into the handsome face of Lord Edgar—"made like a god's with happiness"—that she could grasp the truth, the fact that she was married, that he was her husband, and that Lela Temple had been transformed into the Viscountess Fane! She was still rather pale, but never lovelier—certainly never lovelier in Lord Edgar's eyes, and as he bent over her, whispering some short, sweet words, his lips touched her hair.

"My wife!" he murmured, and the red blood stained her face for a moment as she looked up at him.

At this moment Clifford Revel, having parted from Nagle, entered the room and stood in the door-way, looking down at them with a sardonic smile, which changed swiftly into a genial one, as Lord Edgar turned and smiled at him.

"Breakfast is served, my lady," said Lovel in his most subdued voice, and Lela looked up at him with a little bewilderment in her eyes. Certainly not yet had she realized that she was "my lady."

Lord Edgar drew her arm within his, and led her into the next room, and Clifford Revel followed.

It was an exquisite little breakfast. Lord Edgar had given Fortnum & Mason carte-blanche, merely stipulating that there should be some hot things, and Lela saw dishes that she had never seen before and of which she was quite ignorant.

She was placed at Lord Edgar's side and Clifford Revel took the bottom of the table. His face was flushed, his keen eyes sparkled. He was an admirable actor, and the whole morning's work had simply been as a pleasant comedy—or tragedy, in which he played a part with the deepest zest and enjoyment.

New Relief For Constipation,

"LES FRUITS"

Physicians agree that with the modern habits of living, constipation is likely to be always with us. They also agree that the constant use of any drug for the relief of constipation is exceedingly unwise—unwise for two reasons. First, a drug constantly used loses its effect and requires a constantly increased dose. Second, because the constant use of any drug is bad anyway.

So the cry is constantly going up from the constipated, "What can we do?" It will be interesting to a great many to know that an answer has been found in the re-discovery of a method which was used with great success by our Forefathers, and in Arabia far back in the twelfth century. The food is called "Les Fruits" because it is composed entirely of figs, dates, prunes, raisins and the leaves of each with the substitution of the Alexandra leaf for the raisin leaf. The taste is pleasant, if not to say delicious, and the effect is exceedingly satisfactory. Try it and be convinced.

Dickinson Memorial.

Just as a stone dropped into the surface of a placid lake sends wavelets in circling eddies to the furthest margin, so all hearts throughout the Colony throbbled in sympathy when the death of our local Edith Cavell was announced a few months ago. Just as the pulses of sympathy are being still "at home," as the Brussels martyr is laid to rest in her home—earth—so the movement now initiated here to fifty commemorate Nurse Dickinson must find acceptance on all hands. Yesterday a committee visited the eligible sites in St. John's in order to select that most suitable for a monument to her memory. It is certain that funds must flow unsolicited from rich and poor, old and young, who in city and hamlet are in accord that such a memorial be erected. It is well that the reasons for that accord be borne in mind. Edith Dickinson responded to the call of duty when she volunteered to become the wounded in Europe. She studied in particular the subject of clinical dietetics, and devoted her services in that direction until the war was almost at an end. She then returned to St. John's, on furlough, but her heart prompted her to volunteer as a nurse at the General Institute while the epidemic of Spanish flu was at its height. She fully understood the dreadful risk she was incurring. And there, until stricken by the contagion, she labored—as the medical staff alone can fully testify—while the wards appeared a very hell of suffering. While fevered patients became delirious, and in their delirium, raved and died; while it appeared to those who labored to save that the epidemic was likely to spread far and wide there this softly nurtured lady, and several other volunteer nurses of like upbringing, stayed at the post of duty utterly forgetting their own safety. Those outside knew little but that casket after casket was brought forth. She and her sisters sympathy remained at their post of self-imposed duty. And there Edith Dickinson died within tragically few hours after she was infected. Few of us realize that almost all those who nursed there caught the disease; some of them in severe form, she with its most fatal features. Strongly minded that house of death and died within 24 hours. Medical men have been heard to say that of all their experiences that one was the most fearful. But not one of those volunteer nurses faltered. The great majority of patients were from our outports. Can there be any doubt that from all parts of the Colony, contributions—many of them small—spontaneously flow, to testify to the universal feeling, and erect a testimonial which will long remain to incite all who read to emulate Edith Dickinson's heroism.

The House adjourned at 5.30 until this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

MILLEY'S.

British Orators.

Political observers say that the long-winded orator will get scant attention in this new House of Commons, and that the fifteen-minute speech-maker will be the man who will get the closest hearing. If this is so it is at least rather curious that this change should come at a time when the House has lost the compact speaker in its annals. No one could say so much in so short a time and so clearly as Mr. Asquith; his speeches were models of luminous compression. It has been remarked of Mr. Lloyd George that as he has ascended the slippery pole he has become less and less compact. He is apt to repeat himself in order to gain emphasis, and does not always attain his end. Mr. Bonar Law is not long-winded, but his speeches are sometimes untidy. On the other side, it has always been the besetting sin of the Labor leaders to talk too long, and often to use too long words. So that in this case it seems likely that private members will have to educate their leaders.

FILING IT UP.

An Englishman, for his first time visiting Ireland, was out driving one day with Pat, when he remarked to him:

"I say, Pat, what a lot of hills you have in Ireland."

"Shure we have, str," said Pat. "We had so much land here in Ireland that we had to put it in heaps."

Constipation, FRUITS

Physicians agree that the modern habits of life, constipation is likely to be always with us. We also agree that the use of any drug for the relief of constipation is exceedingly unwise for two reasons. First, a drug constantly requires a constantly increasing dose because the constant use of it goes up from the "do" to "do more." It will be interesting to know that an ancient re-discovery of a drug with great success brought it far back in the history is called "Les Fruits" consisting of figs, dates, figs, and each with the dried leaf for the raisin, if not to say deliciously satisfactory.

Hr. Grace Notes.

The work on the Handley-Page machine is being rushed to completion, and great interest is being taken in the work by our people who delight to visit the place each evening and note the progress made. We are looking forward to the success of this our airship.

Mrs. Beveridge, nee Nurse Francis Cron, is in town on a visit to the delight of all our citizens, who are her friends every one. No need to wish her a pleasant holiday, her genial disposition, both past and present is a guarantee of this.

Miss McKay, of McKay's Grocery, who had been at St. John's for a few days purchasing goods, returned by last night's train.

It is said that work will shortly commence on another aviation site near the old race course here. Lots of room, and there are still other excellent sites here should any be needed.

Codfish, salmon, and herring are now on sale each morning. We have not heard if any lobsters being taken in this neighborhood yet, but the price being so good is certainly a temptation to try the venture.

The Returned Soldiers Association are anxious to do something for one of their number who owing to his serious wounds in action is unfit for manual labor—Pte. Wm. Hunt. Pte. Hunt has purchased a horse and carriage and will take up driving. The soldiers ask the public to contribute a little to the fund to help pay for the above. The manager of the Bank here, Mr. Dixon, has kindly consented to receive and acknowledge any amounts.

A large number of the male portion of our citizens attended at the court this morning to hear the result of a case against a resident of Riverhead who was charged with disorderly conduct on the street. The young man when arrested was hit in the temple by the chief of police here with a stick, and an ugly cut was inflicted. The humane portion of our community are of opinion that other means should be used to arrest a man than resorting to such brute force, and we are of the same opinion. Let us not see any more of this inhumane work.

Mounted Police on Streets.

Many people were agreeably surprised this morning to see two of the Police force mounted on splendid black horses, going up Water Street. They were Head Constable Noseworthy and Sergeant Savage, both members of the old mounted Police force. They rode the horses like veterans, and as they passed up Water Street were the cynosure of all eyes. Many memories of the oldtime mounted Police were revived, and on all sides was expressed the hopes that this was a sign that presaged the re-establishment of the Cavalry force upon enquiry at Headquarters, however we were informed that they were mounted merely for temporary purposes, and to be used in case of emergency, in breaking any crowds that may congregate upon the landing of the soldiers coming by the Corsican.

State Ownership.

Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir.—The Newfoundland Industrial Workers' Association, since its advent amongst us, has been an advocate of public ownership of public utilities. To the unthinking the idea may appear altogether too utopian for serious consideration, but to the earnest, thoughtful man who peers a little into the future by the light of current events, public ownership appears to be an assured fact before many years shall have elapsed. The few seeds of public education along these lines sown by the N.I.W.A. are already bearing fruit, is evidenced by the remarks of some of our legislators in the House of Assembly this week. Mr. Geo. Grimes, in speaking of the Nfld. Railway, advocated Government ownership of the line, the business matters connected therewith to be administered by a non-political commission nominated by the Board of Trade and the railroad employees. Mr. Downey, in speaking of the ownership of the northern and western boatloads. It is to be hoped that some others of our law-makers will also begin thinking along the same lines. State ownership of public utilities need not necessarily be accompanied with the abuses which many people fear would creep in were such a policy to be adopted. Already we have Government ownership of a telegraph service and the system works well, then why not also state ownership of all our internal and coastwise public carrying facilities. Hoping, Mr. Editor, that these few words will set some abler pens than mine busy on this subject, and thanking you for space. Yours very truly, N. I. W. A. MEMBER. May 30, 1919.

WAS SHE TOO SCRUPULOUS?

RUTH CAMERON

Here is an interesting little tale I heard about one of the many parades that have been inspiring the country in these times that thrill men's souls.

A week or two before the parade a friend of mine accepted an invitation from some friends to go to town with them in their car on parade day. They did not have any seats but hoped by going early to establish themselves in some good place.

She Refused Four Tempting Invitations.

A day or two afterwards she had an invitation from another friend who had the good fortune to have an extra seat on a grand stand. Of course, that was a great temptation but, having accepted the other, she refused. And between that time and the time of the parade she had four such invitations and refused them all because she would not go back on her first friends.

As it turned out they managed to establish themselves at one of the most interesting points on the steps of a Church where they not only had an excellent view but were sheltered from the wind that made many of the inhabitants of the grandstand miserable. From her description she seems to have enjoyed the parade rather more than most of the people who had reserved seats. Perhaps that was partly because she had the happy sense of having done the square thing instead of going back on her friends.

Just Hearing About It Refreshed Me.

Anyhow, just hearing about it refreshed me. Perhaps it meant more to me than it otherwise would because, as the chairman of a social committee, I've had rather a depressing experience lately with the sort of person who regards the fact that a promise inconveniences him or that he has found some more interesting way to use his time as an automatic excuse from that promise.

For instance, I planned an entertainment with the promised help of three people. One failed me because she did not have time to prepare her part of the program and another went on a motor trip.

The motorist did not even bother to apprise me of her departure, just told me about it, casually, when she returned. The other did express her regrets in a hastily written note but not until the day before the entertainment.

People Are Glad to Excuse You When Justified.

Of course, when an unusual opportunity for pleasure comes along, those with whom one is associated in a previous engagement of pleasure or of service would be often only too glad to excuse one, knowing how they would feel in a similar case. But surely one owes at least a request for such a release and an expression of regret.

Perhaps the woman who stood to see the parade did more for her friends than they would have done for her. Someone who heard the tale suggested that. Perhaps they would have been glad to release her under the circumstances. Perhaps she was foolish. I don't know about that. But this I know. That realizing there are people who err on the side of being too scrupulous makes the world somehow seem a brighter place.

Crazed by Wealth.

Huge Rise of Gold Mine Shares Turns Man's Brain.

San Francisco, Cal., May 25.—Peter Barth, a newspaper vendor, 54 years of age, was adjudged incompetent by Judge Van Nostrand, and A. W. Finn, Jr. was appointed guardian of his person and estate. Several years ago Barth purchased 20,000 shares of Gold Reef mining stock in the Tonopah district at 1 cent per share. When the present excitement began the value of the stock rose from nothing to 80 cents per share over night and Barth, who had sold into the stock during all the ups, sold it at a profit of $24,000. The sudden increase in wealth turned his head, and he is now a patient at the St. Mary's Hospital.

FAITH.
It's raining bitter tears to-day,
But soon the clouds will pass away
And out of skies serenely blue
The sun will shine on me and you,
Oh heart that now with care is sad
Be brave and wait the mornings glad.
Behind the clouds of black and gray
That reth low, the sunbeams stay,
And son they shall come dancing out
To scatter smiles of joy about:
Oh heart that now with fear doth beat
Be brave and wait the mornings sweet.

Beyond the gloom now beauty stays,
Beyond the grief are happy days,
Behind the heavy hours of care
Await the joys that we shall share,
And as the sun shall follow rain
So peace shall find our hearts again,
Oh dark the dole and sharp the dread,
And swiftly fall the tears we shed,
Yet out of skies serenely blue
The sun shall shine on me and you,
And we shall tread, when care is o'er,
The happy, laughing ways once more.

MOTORING.

WALT MASCO

I leave the city's noise behind, its stone and brick built sectors, forsake a while the beastly grind, and all the bill collectors. I climb on high the verdant hills, the azure heavens o'er me, forgetting halffs and their bills and all the things that bore me. It is a pleasant thing to go away from toil and knitting; my car is working like a joy, its cylinders all hitting. Oh, Scott may sing of Loch-nivar, whose charger was a hummer; but give to me the modern car, and long, long days of summer. I chug along by wood and glade and by the babbling waters, salute the farmer with his spade, and gossip with his daughters. At intervals my car I stop, some quaint old sign board reading; and now and then a rural cop would run me in for speeding. I loaf along, eight miles an hour, the motor working nifty, and then, to show I have the power, I shove her up to fifty. Through dale and dell, on dune and down, I throw the dust behind me; and tired collectors scour the town with bills and cannot find me. I look around in silent glee upon the landscape's splendour, until I run against a tree and bust a wheel and fender. Then I go limping back to town, my kind of luck berating; and find the halffs all camped down in stern and watchful waiting.

Household Notes.

The rusted coat hanger may be covered with ruffia.

It is better to cook carrots whole and then skin them.

Grape fruit is excellent used instead of lemon with tea.

Always choose a bright, sunny day for blanket washing.

It is said that fish can be scaled by rubbing off with a grater.

Carrots and peas are an excellent dish when mixed together.

When the fireless cooker is not in use, the lid should be kept up.

Fireless cookers save at least one-third of the fuel ordinarily used.

The young, tender leaves of the dandelion are very good in a salad.

Strong ammonia water is said to be excellent for removing iodine stains.

To clean white enameled wood-work, use clear turpentine and a soft cloth.

Old nightdresses make excellent covers for dresses hanging in the closet.

The ground in which roses are planted should be fertile and well drained.

Potatoes are fattening, therefore, they are sometimes good diet for thin persons.

Pure alcohol is more desirable than gasoline for cleaning white kid articles.

Before peeling fruit, always pour boiling water over it and let it stand until cool.

Corn meal pancakes are excellent if one must have griddle cakes in the springtime.

Vinegar and salt make an excellent old-fashioned mixture for cleaning brasses.

Time is saved by having a glass measuring cup in both the flour bin and sugar bin.

A new vegetable, known as the washeen, is said to be a very nutritious and agreeable food.

Cause for Thankfulness.

A certain old Connemara farmer, waking up in the night, saw an apparition at the foot of the bed. Reaching for his gun, he promptly performed the ghost with a bullet. To his surprise, the following morning he discovered that it was his own shirt of which he had made a target. He was relating the experience to a friend, who asked him: "What did you do when you discovered what it was?" "Oh," replied the farmer, "I just knelt down and thanked God that I hadn't been inside it!"

A Fair Demand.

The Western portion of the District of St. Barbe is too important a section of this dominion to be ignored in its just demands for an improved steamship service. In the great North West Reform movement which was organized some months ago, all classes of people on the North West Coast are associated together for the sole purpose of insisting upon their inalienable rights in the matter of public services and utilities. For years they have been deprived of an adequate steam service, and have borne the many inconveniences and losses resulting from the same patiently, and for the past four years, cheerfully, because of war conditions. But patience has ceased to be a virtue, and threatened with a continuance of a "hopelessly inadequate and utterly intolerable" steam boat to serve the many and varied commercial interests of this populous portion of Newfoundland, they have uttered a strong protest, a manly protest and one which must be accepted by those in authority. There is no reason why the request of the North West Reform Movement Committee should not be granted. It is a perfectly reasonable one and from every view point the stand which they have taken is thoroughly defensible and is not inspired by any desire other than that of benefit to the population. There is no individual personal gain sought. The greatest good to the greatest number is plainly the sole object and purpose of their demand. They want a suitable steamer placed on the Humbermouth-Battle Harbor route. A steamer large enough to carry the freights offering each trip and to comfortably accommodate the numerous passengers who are constantly going up and down the coast, not on pleasure bent, but in the pursuit of their regular avocations and callings. The traffic on the route named both in passengers and freight is enormous, and unless something is done at once to conserve the trade interests involved, St. John's merchants will see, as the Telegram has already pointed out, the vast trade of the North West Coast slipping away from them and going to Halifax. There will be, it is understood, two steamers from Nova Scotia plying from Halifax and Sydney to Newfoundland, particularly to the North West ports, going to Port Saunders and perhaps continuing on to Flower's Cove. These steamers have both adequate freight and passenger accommodation, and unless the Newfoundland service is improved, and increased, these Canadian boats will secure and hold the valuable traffic which, because of inability or neglect, or both, is being gradually lost to our own freighters.

We state in this column again that the present steamship service on the North West Coast, subsidized by the Government of Newfoundland for the carriage of mails, freight and passengers is unable to cope with the demands made upon it. The ship itself is ridiculously small and the placing of it on that service is a gratuitous insult to those who are compelled to voyage from place to place. There is really no passenger accommodation on the vessel and when the expression "herded together like sheep" is used it conveys exactly the conditions existing, and these conditions must not be allowed to continue.

If the Government is wise it will take note of the fair demand made it and make provision for a change in the service, the continuance of which is objected to by a people who know exactly what they want, and knowing, are determined to have it.

Saturday the Half Holiday.

A number of business men held a meeting yesterday afternoon at the Board of Trade Rooms, at which it was decided to form an Association to be known as the Newfoundland Trade Association, of which Mr. R. G. Rendell was appointed President and Mr. D. M. Baird, Secretary.

The question of the weekly half-holiday was considered and the general opinion was that from the manufacturers' and wholesalers' standpoint, as well as that of those firms engaged in the handling of fishery products, the present arrangement of Wednesday was unsuitable.

It was decided that as the Governor-in-Council had already proclaimed certain dates as holidays, it would be inadvisable to ask to have these altered, but the members of the Association agreed that they would close each week on Saturday at 12.30 p.m. (except those weeks in which there was a whole holiday) from June 14th until September 6th.

Notice of those firms which purpose adopting the Saturday half-holiday will be given through the press within the next few days.

Danish Captain Tells Story of Rescue.

German Submarine Losses -- Canadian Revolution Feared.

CAPT. DUHN'S STORY.
HORSBENS, Denmark, May 29. The Danish steamer Mary, which rescued Harry G. Hovey and Lieut. Commander Mackenzie Grive in mid-Atlantic, on May 19th when they were compelled to descend during their attempt to fly from Newfoundland to Ireland, arrived here early to-day. Capt. Duhn and his mates told of the rescue of the aviators. Second mate Hovey had the watch, with seaman Schwartz at the helm, when at six o'clock on the morning of May 19, they sighted the airplane, which came down into the sea, off the bow of the ship. Hovey and Schwartz immediately prepared to launch a boat, and with first mate Schwartz, seaman Fred Johnson and Christian Larsen, the ship's carpenter, they set out for the airplane. The crew of the Mary had considerable difficulty in launching a boat, and Captain Duhn said he doubted whether it would have been possible to do so had the airplane appeared an hour later than it did. Hawker and Grive were greatly exhausted after the rescue, the captain said, so much so, that they declined to obtain strength. Capt. Duhn declared that the aviators naturally were upset because the Mary had no wireless and they were unable to inform their relatives that they were safe. The captain said that Hawker also was somewhat disappointed, because he was unable to learn the reason why he had failed. "When I came on the bridge," Capt. Duhn said, "the machine had already alighted on the water. The aviators told us that before coming down they had dropped rockets, but we did not see them. The work of saving the aviators was pretty difficult, because it was blowing very hard. Hawker and Grive were in water up to their waists, but their watertight suits kept them dry." Asked whether the crew of the lifeboat was in serious danger when effecting the rescue, the captain replied, "I will not say serious danger, but as I said it was a rather difficult task, but they succeeded in reaching the aviators. All the aviators wanted to do was to sleep. They told us that from the very start, they realized everything was not quite in order, but that they had comforted themselves with the hope that, later, they would get the right efforts from their motor. The defect, however, became more and more apparent and the speed of the motor steadily lessened."

COLORS RETURNED.
LONDON, May 30. (Reuter's Ottawa Agency.)—The colors of the 122nd Canadian Battalion, placed in St. George's Chapel at Windsor in 1917, were to-day handed over to Col. Mackenzie Grant, commanding the regiment, by the Dean of Westminster. An escort of one hundred members of the Coldstream Guards attended on Col. Grant, who in a place of permanent security, the Dean of Westminster in handing back the colors, said he did so with the hope that the glory the regiment had had in the path of duty during the last years in France might be the beginning of a great history, which would associate these colors with splendid traditions which would be woven into the whole life of Canada.

It is then proposed to distribute all the assets of the International Mercantile Marine among the stockholders.

Both Ships to Blame.
THE IMO AND MOUNT BLANC BOTH BOTH RESPONSIBLE FOR EXPLOSION IN HALLIFAX HARBOR.

An Ottawa despatch says: "Both the Imo and Mont Blanc are held responsible for the explosion in Halifax Harbor that caused great disaster and loss of life. This is the decision of the Supreme Court which heard the appeal of the Campaignia General Trans-Atlantic re the Imo. Kingston held that the Imo was solely to blame, but other members of the court, Anglin, Brodeur and Mignault, are of the opinion that the appeal should be allowed holding both ships liable. Damages will be assessed accordingly in the Exchequer Court."

This reverses the decision made by Mr. Justice Drysdale in the Spring of 1918, placing the blame upon the Mont Blanc. The original action was brought against the owners of the Imo by the owners of the Mont Blanc for two million dollars. The owners of the Imo brought a counter-claim for a similar amount. The court dismissed the claim of the plaintiffs and found in favor of the counter-claim, awarding the owners of the Imo two million dollars and costs. McInnes, Jenks, Fulton and Kenny represented the Mont Blanc, while Maclean, Duggan, Paton and Balston represented the Norwegian vessel.

More Unbecoming Scenes at House.

Parliament Drifting Into Degradation--Bolshevism Rampant Last Night--Honorable Members Exchange Doubtful Compliments.

Beginning with light skirmishing yesterday afternoon, the proceedings in the House of Assembly rapidly resolved themselves into a general engagement, into which honorable members precipitated themselves without any regard for the decency which are looked upon as being part and parcel of Parliamentary procedure. Yesterday's exhibition was opened by the Honourable member for Twillingate, during the discussion on a Bill authorizing a contract for a Telephone Service, but the real performance was staged when the Bill went into Committee. Those who were present are fully cognizant of the attitude adopted by the member for Twillingate, which was that of a rampant Bolshevik, and an idea of his dictatorial qualities, had he been the leader of the Government, was gathered from his blocking tactics as exhibited yesterday.

An attempt to outrage and degrade the dignity of Parliament was made by packing the galleries, after tea, with a strong body of Coaker sympathizers, who were invited to be present for no other purpose but that of applauding the Worthy President, obstructing the proceedings, and interrupting the speakers on the Government side. The Honourable member for Twillingate, however, was not in attendance, preferring to remain away, and the Opposition was represented only by Messrs. Halfyard and Grimes. Considerable uproar was made by their sympathizers in the galleries, but it eventually "pettered out," and the remainder of the session was quiet.

Such scenes as have been enacted in the House during the present week have been repudiated and condemned by all right thinking people. The debates of the celebrated "Lime Kiln Club" were not in the same class at all, and short of doing each other bodily violence, honorable members blackguarded and abused each other to their hearts' content, but to the utter disgust and contempt of the respectable auditors. It is to be hoped that there will not be any recurrence of such disgraceful and ungentlemanly exhibitions, all of which may be charged to the member for Twillingate.

PROCEEDINGS.

The House resumed its sitting at the usual hour. The Minister of Justice introduced a bill having relation to Industrial and Provident Societies, similar to the Act in force in England, which enables Companies, stores, etc., to register under this new provision after the manner of other companies under the Companies' Act. The bill was read a first time, and will be explained fully at its second reading to-day. The Hon. Colonial Secretary introduced a bill to amend the War Pensions Act, 1917. This bill increases the pensions paid to soldiers and brings them up to the level of the Canadians. The Hon. Minister of Justice moved the House into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions authorizing the Government to enter into a contract for a new telephone service. The Government is asking powers similar to those asked for with respect to the Coastal Contract, whereby they can enter into a contract with the Aviation Telephone Company or some other company, after further enquiry out of session. The resolutions limit the conditions under which the contract is to be made. Mr. Coaker registered his protest against the Government being granted such powers. The House would meet again next January, and that was ample time to pass the contract. This was not a properly constituted thousand as in the city at present, there should be 3,000. The President of the Western Union Telegraph Co., when visiting here a year or two ago said he was ashamed of the service.

On the bill being sent to second reading, a division was challenged, and the bill was read on a vote of 11 to 4. It subsequently went through all the stages.

The House then went into Committee on the Statute Law Amendment Act. The first section provides that a person taking the position of Chief Clerk of the Supreme Court must be a barrister of ten years' standing, or a King's Counsel.

Section 2 reads as follows: "Section forty-nine of the Election Act, 1913, is hereby amended by striking out therefrom the words 'and the length of the period of residence within the Colony shall be a period of two years next preceding such election,' and substituting therefor the words 'and residence within the Colony for two years or more at some one consecutive period, and an actual domicile therein at the time of nomination.'"

Section 5 allows the Newfoundland Franchise Corporation an extension of time in which to start operations on the West Coast, under their contract of 1915. These were the contentious clauses, and Mr. Coaker uttered loud protests against provision being made to enable Sir Wm. Lloyd to accept a bribe, as he termed it, from the Government. He condemned Sir William for not taking his seat as leader of the Opposition, and went all over again the events which led up to, and have occurred since the formation of the present Government. He threatened that the Legislative Council as to what was going to happen after they passed the bill, and foamed about what would be thought of the Governor should he assent to the bill if it were passed. The people would handle both the Upper Chamber and the Governor if it was attempted to pass this bill against their protests. He raged about the way in which Sir Michael Cashin formed his Ministry, and said that if the Union-Liberal members had stood firm to him, even after Sir William Lloyd had been found faithless, Sir Michael would not have been able to form a Ministry, but the Government would have to call on the Governor to form a Government, and Mr. Coaker, in turn would have advised the calling of Sir Robert Bond, who would now have been the Premier of the Colony. This statement was so amusing that it brought down the House.

Mr. Morine began his reply by ridiculing Mr. Coaker's threats; it was the old game again. A leopard could not change its spots. He then explained to the House the present law debarring a person from being a candidate who had not resided in Newfoundland for a period of two years immediately preceding the election, and stated that it was an old and absurd law enacted in 1872, and it was about time it were changed. If, said Mr. Morine, Sir Edgar Bowring came back here to-morrow, or Lord Morris, they would not be eligible to seek election on account of this absurd law. The British House of Commons and the Canadian House of Commons had no such provision. A man could reside in any part of the British Empire and be elected to either of those bodies. Any man the people wanted should be eligible for re-election; the votes of the people cast in his favor should be his supreme qualification. He had been a resident of this Colony 36 years, 25 of which he was a member for Bonavista Bay, and now because he was away for a few months and returned he was not eligible as a candidate. Could anything be more absurd. He then dealt with Mr. Coaker's objection and said it was nothing more nor less than a desire on the part of that gentleman to keep him out of Bonavista Bay, because he was too cowardly to meet him on the platform there. Two or three weeks ago, Mr. Coaker was very willing to break the law and let him be returned for Bonavista unopposed, but now because he had joined a new Government and was Minister of Justice, the law had to be adhered to to the letter. Could anything be more inconsistent. Well, he wished to say to Mr. Coaker that he was going to Bonavista, and all he wanted was a fair field and fair play. He wanted no favors from him. He was going to make the Bonavista Bay electors free once more, by releasing them from the bonds of slavery that had been welded around them by the autocratic President of the F.P.U. Mr. Coaker then told Mr. Morine that the matter of his seeking election in Bonavista Bay could have been arranged by Mr. Morine simply asking Mr. Coaker to favorably consider the proposition, and he would have consented without altering the Act. Mr. Morine resented this, and looking across the floor he said: "Ask you, you contemptible coward. Ask you, you autocrat, you dictator. It would have been all right if I had asked you. Well, I am going to Bonavista Bay without asking you, and the people there will know all about W. F. Coaker when I am through with you." Mr. Morine stopped here, as the House was rising for recess, and Mr. Coaker took occasion to say that when he was agreeable for Mr. Morine to go to Bonavista a few weeks ago he did not know it was nothing to his credit to say so.

Continuing after tea, Mr. Morine recapitulated some of his arguments, particularly those having reference to the change in the Election Law. He pointed out that even the soldiers who had gone abroad to fight for their country would have been debarred from becoming members of the House if they so desired, if the House had not made special provision for them a few weeks ago. Mr. Coaker claimed that when he arranged some weeks ago for Mr. Morine to go to Bonavista as an independent candidate he didn't know of the law, but that was untrue, because he was reminded of it at a party meeting when the question of amending the Election Act was up for discussion. But why did he object to the clause now? Because he (Mr. Morine) had become Minister of Justice and could look after the welfare of his constituents? It was because that feared his presence in the district against him, and coward that he was he wanted to keep him out. Mr. Morine pointed out the anomaly of the law in relation to his own case, by showing that while he could come back to the country and take his place in the House and become Minister of Justice, he was not allowed to go back for re-election in November next. He referred to the absence of Messrs. Winsor and Abbott, and suggested they had remained away rather than participate in such a silly debate. He deplored the cowardly and contemptible attack on Sir William Lloyd, a gentleman who if he was thought able enough to be made Prime Minister and Minister of Justice, was surely good enough to be made Registrar of the Supreme Court. No one with any sense of honor would be guilty of such a despicable attack. Only a day or two ago the same gentleman was declaring Sir Wm. Lloyd to be the soul of honor, and the coat was worn by him in such a dirty party that he foisted his own leader. But such changes were characteristic of the leader of the Opposition. He was ready to praise or blame in the same breath—it all depended whether his interests were being served or not. For years he had carried on a campaign of calumny and abuse of the Prime Minister, Sir Michael Cashin, Mr. Crosbie and others; but when through a despicable bargain he was able to get into the so-called National Government there was a change in him, and he and his associates were allowed to go to the front. He went away to Catalina and left the Government of the Colony in their hands. He was only a foul-mouthed defamer, as variable as the winds. He told us this afternoon, said Mr. Morine, that he was ready to send for Sir Robert Bond. But only a few months ago he was defaming that gentleman as a traitor to the Union. Why, Sir Robert Bond would not touch him or his party with a forty-foot pole. Everybody now knows that, and Sir Robert Bond would read immediately preceding the election, and stated that it was an old and absurd law enacted in 1872, and it was about time it were changed. If, said Mr. Morine, Sir Edgar Bowring came back here to-morrow, or Lord Morris, they would not be eligible to seek election on account of this absurd law. The British House of Commons and the Canadian House of Commons had no such provision. A man could reside in any part of the British Empire and be elected to either of those bodies. Mr. Morine pointed out the anomaly of the law in relation to his own case, by showing that while he could come back to the country and take his place in the House and become Minister of Justice, he was not allowed to go back for re-election in November next. He referred to the absence of Messrs. Winsor and Abbott, and suggested they had remained away rather than participate in such a silly debate. He deplored the cowardly and contemptible attack on Sir William Lloyd, a gentleman who if he was thought able enough to be made Prime Minister and Minister of Justice, was surely good enough to be made Registrar of the Supreme Court. No one with any sense of honor would be guilty of such a despicable attack. Only a day or two ago the same gentleman was declaring Sir Wm. Lloyd to be the soul of honor, and the coat was worn by him in such a dirty party that he foisted his own leader. But such changes were characteristic of the leader of the Opposition. He was ready to praise or blame in the same breath—it all depended whether his interests were being served or not. For years he had carried on a campaign of calumny and abuse of the Prime Minister, Sir Michael Cashin, Mr. Crosbie and others; but when through a despicable bargain he was able to get into the so-called National Government there was a change in him, and he and his associates were allowed to go to the front. He went away to Catalina and left the Government of the Colony in their hands. He was only a foul-mouthed defamer, as variable as the winds. He told us this afternoon, said Mr. Morine, that he was ready to send for Sir Robert Bond. But only a few months ago he was defaming that gentleman as a traitor to the Union. Why, Sir Robert Bond would not touch him or his party with a forty-foot pole. Everybody now knows that, and Sir Robert Bond would read immediately preceding the election, and stated that it was an old and absurd law enacted in 1872, and it was about time it were changed. If, said Mr. Morine, Sir Edgar Bowring came back here to-morrow, or Lord Morris, they would not be eligible to seek election on account of this absurd law. The British House of Commons and the Canadian House of Commons had no such provision. A man could reside in any part of the British Empire and be elected to either of those bodies. Any man the people wanted should be eligible for re-election; the votes of the people cast in his favor should be his supreme qualification. He had been a resident of this Colony 36 years, 25 of which he was a member for Bonavista Bay, and now because he was away for a few months and returned he was not eligible as a candidate. Could anything be more absurd. He then dealt with Mr. Coaker's objection and said it was nothing more nor less than a desire on the part of that gentleman to keep him out of Bonavista Bay, because he was too cowardly to meet him on the platform there. Two or three weeks ago, Mr. Coaker was very willing to break the law and let him be returned for Bonavista unopposed, but now because he had joined a new Government and was Minister of Justice, the law had to be adhered to to the letter. Could anything be more inconsistent. Well, he wished to say to Mr. Coaker that he was going to Bonavista, and all he wanted was a fair field and fair play. He wanted no favors from him. He was going

Yank Sailor Writes.

Mr. J. R. Smallwood, of the Telegram reportorial staff, has received the following letter from Mr. Balcon S. Bond, the Chief Radiographic Officer of the U. S. S. Prairie, which it will be remembered, was stationed at Trepassey Harbor during the time the American Navy's Transatlantic flight was being made ready. Mr. Bond, although a young man, is one of the most expert wireless operators in the Navy, and has a staff of other experts under him. The letter, in part, reads: "Your papers (the Evening Telegram) were received with great delight, and I must express my own, and also the staff's appreciation of their contents. The Telegram is as good as any paper in the little old city of New York. Nine-tenths of the Prairie's crew were sorry to leave Trepassey, for the people there had given us some good times. Fishermen would take us in parties from our ship and show us around the district. In fact, I cannot begin to tell you of some of the good times we had in dear old Trepassey and I am sure that the village will never be forgotten. Many homes gave us suppers for the small amount of fifty cents, and it was some supper. About four good fresh eggs, a large piece of ham, as many cups of coffee or tea as you could drink, and good old home-made bread and butter. If you were to call for a supper like that in New York, I am sure it would cost you two and a half dollars easily. When the Prairie was passing out of Trepassey many people were seen on the beach, waving, and many fishermen (Mr. Bond writes it "fishmen") blew three fog horn blasts. In return the Prairie gave three long blows of her whistle. Upon approaching the end of the harbor (the reach, or entrance is meant here) the light house gave three whistles, which were also returned by us. I sure wish we were coming to St. John's, but our hopes are gone, as we are now enroute for Newport, R. I. Wishing you and your paper all the success possible, I am your sailor friend."

At the Majestic.

To-night's show at the Majestic will be the picture, "Life or Honor," a gripping drama presented in a novel way. The question concerns a man's life or a woman's honor. What is to be done? If the one is to be saved the other is bound to be besmirched. In both cases the parties involved are absolutely innocent. Yet incidents are so clear, beyond dispute and to all appearances so conclusive are the facts in the case, that a life is to be sold out—if the one person who rectify things will not come forth. Yet if he does not do so, it positively means the sure death of a woman's honor. What is to be done? See at the Majestic to-night.

Then came the moment for which everybody had awaited with liveliest interest. Count Rantzu, for some reason which was not explained, failed to follow the example of M. Clemenceau in standing up to make his remarks, and began a long speech, translated phrase by phrase into French and English by two officials of the German delegation. The line he took was that it was the former rulers of Germany who were responsible for the German share of the war, but that all Europe shared that responsibility; that the Germans were willing to redress the wrong they had done to Belgium and to Northern France, and were willing also to collaborate with the Allies in creating out of the wreckage of the war a new world, based upon President Wilson's Fourteen Points, which should give to the working classes of the world health and prosperity. Count Rantzu's language was vigorous and his manner of speech was that of, if not a victor, at any rate a man who came to the Conference to treat on terms of absolute equality. It made the very deepest impression upon all who heard it—an impression which was perhaps well reflected in the surprised smile which never left M. Clemenceau's face. Rantzau Says All Europe Was to Blame for War.

Then came the moment for which everybody had awaited with liveliest interest. Count Rantzau, for some reason which was not explained, failed to follow the example of M. Clemenceau in standing up to make his remarks and began a long speech, translated phrase by phrase into French and English by two officials of the German delegation. The line he took was that it was the former rulers of Germany who were responsible for the German share of the war, but that all Europe shared that responsibility; that the Germans were willing to redress the wrong they had done to Belgium and to Northern France, and were willing also to collaborate with the Allies in creating out of the ruins of the war a new world, based upon President Wilson's Fourteen Points, which should give to the working classes of the world health and prosperity. Count Rantzau's language was vigorous and his manner of speech was that of, if not a victor, at any rate a man who came to the Conference to treat on terms of absolute equality. It made the very deepest impression upon all who heard it—an impression which was perhaps well reflected in the surprised smile which never left M. Clemenceau's face. During that speech Mr. Wilson was busy taking notes, and Mr. Lloyd George toyed in characteristic manner with the black ribbon of the sash. We know, he said at the outset, that the power of the German arms is broken. We know the power of the hatred which we encounter here, and we have heard the passionate demand that the victors shall make us pay as the vanquished, and shall punish those who are worthy of being punished. It is demanded of us that we shall confess ourselves to be the only ones guilty of the war. Such a confession in my mouth would be a lie. We are far from declining any responsibility for this great world-war having come to pass, and for its having been made in the way in which it was made. In the last 50 years the Imperialism of all the European States has chronically poisoned the international situation. The policy of retaliation and the policy of expansion, and the disregard of the rights of peoples to determine their own destiny have contributed to the illness of Europe, which reached its crisis in the world-war. The Russian mobilization took from the statement the possibility of healing, and gave the decision into the hands of the military powers. Public opinion in all the countries of our adversaries is re-echoing with the crimes which Germany is said to have committed in the war. Here, also, we are ready to confess the wrong that may have been done. We have not come here to belittle the responsibility of the men who have waged the war politically and economically, and to deny any crimes which may have been committed against the rights of peo-

The Crown of Smyrna.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." The world has read these words in the Greek original or in innumerable translations for almost two thousand years, but except in a limited, perhaps in a local way it has never understood the marvelous imagery with which the Eastern writer impressed his meaning upon his audience. The author of the letters to the Seven Churches was writing his letters in the days when the cities in which these churches were placed palpitated with the full tide of life, and writing to Smyrna he seized upon the great natural characteristic of the city to impress his meaning upon his readers.

As the sailor approached the ancient city from the sea, he saw the white houses clambering up the great hill in the background, and as they neared the summit becoming fewer and fewer amidst the gardens and the cypress groves until the famous crown was bound, in a circlet of walls and battlements, round the brow of the hill. Every trader who came into Smyrna, in the little coasting vessels or the greater galleys, every merchant who rode into it with the caravans through the pass which entered the valley where the great Anatolian trade route finally reached the sea, knew the crown of Smyrna, and carried the story of its glories over the seas with him or back along the Hermus Valley into the hinterland. Centuries before the writer on Patmos had used his famous metaphor, Apollonius of Tyana, renowned among the mystics of Asia, had bidden the people of Smyrna "to wear a crown of men rather than a crown of porticoes, and pictures, and gold beyond the standard of mankind." Only an occasional scholar heeds the words of Apollonius to-day. But every man coming up the gulf to-day, and seeing for the first time Mount Pagos, crowned with its ruined castles and clustering houses, recalls the words of the writer of Revelation, and is carried back in memory through the story of the great Greek city which was founded as a Hellenic colony a thousand years before the Christian era.

Not so Black as Painted.

The Microbe is Useful Sometimes.
 Bacteria or germs are really plants. Derived from the Greek word meaning a little rod, the name "bacteria" is given to a group of living things which constitute the lowest type of animal life.

Bacteria are divided into various groups according to their shapes. Some are minute balls and are called cocci. It would take 25,000 of these cocci to measure an inch, and 300,000,000,000 would only weigh an ounce!
 Rod-shaped bacteria are called bacilli; 50,000 of these placed side by side would measure but an inch. A third group consists of curved or spiral rods, and its members are called spirilla.

The Rabbit Outcasted.

There is also a group of animals of excessively simple structure to which the name protozoa is applied. The hundreds of thousands of non-combatants who have perished since Nov. 11 by reason of the blockade were killed with cold deliberation after our adversaries had conquered and victory had been assured to them. Think of that when you speak of guilt and punishment. The measure of guilt of all those who have taken part can only be stated by impartial inquiry before a neutral commission, before which all the principal persons of the tragedy are allowed to speak and to which all the archives are open. We have demanded such an inquiry, and we repeat this demand again at this Conference, where we stand facing our adversaries alone and without our allies. We are not quite without protection. You yourselves have brought us an ally, namely, the right which is guaranteed by the Treaty by the principles of the Peace. The principles of President Wilson have thus become binding for both parties to the war—you as well as for us also for our former allies. The conscience of the world is behind it. There is no nation which might violate it without punishment. You will find us ready to examine upon this basis the preliminary peace which you have proposed.

The Friendly Microbe.

Microbes can be both friendly and antagonistic. Those which cause disease are called pathogenic. Amongst the diseases connected with bacteria, diphtheria is caused by a bacillus, pneumonia by a coccus, and cholera by a spirillum.
 Alcoholic drinks are made with the help of an organism called yeast, which is also used in baking. The manufacture of butter and cheese also calls for the use of various bacteria, whilst during the war a benevolent bacillus was busily engaged in making acetone to be devoted to the manufacture of cordite and aeroplane dope.
 Plenty of salt and pepper shakers add greatly to the family's comfort at the dinner table.

This was the city to which the writer to the Seven Churches sent his letter, the city which Apollonius declared was the most beautiful under the sun, the city the splendor of whose buildings was described by Julius Aristides, the city of the Golden Street which, circling the hill, connected the Temple of Zeus, on the west, with that of Cybele, on the east. Here the primitive church established the second of the churches of Asia to which the letters in Revelation were written, and here after almost three thousand years the blue and white stripes of the flag of Greece have been hoisted as the mandatory of the League of Nations, as the Aeolian Greeks, ten centuries before the Christian era, probably raised their standard after the manner of the owl of Athens or bull of Bœotia.

When the writer on Patmos wrote his letter, Smyrna, of course, had ceased to be a Hellenic colony. Rome had stretched out its mighty arm and established a conventus there. Still, in spite of the materiality of the Jews and the speculativeness of the Greeks, of whom Paul was one day to write, "For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom, but I might be poor in the things of this world, but it was rich in spirituality. As a result the heavy hand of the persecuting Caesar struck at it, with the result that, in the year 155, its famous bishop, Polycarp, was martyred. Gradually, however, as the grasp of Rome relaxed, the fortunes of Smyrna faded. The Eastern emperors in Constantinople were unable to extend to it the protection of the old Caesars in Rome. Turkish raiders and Turkish soldiers began to descend upon it for plunder, so that when the Knights Hospitallers seized it, in the Fourteenth Century, it was already falling into ruin. What was left of it was wiped out as completely by the Mongol tide of conquest as the earlier city had been blotted out by the Lydians. When the soldiers of Timur had stormed the citadel, the massacre was so complete that for a

A Vagabond Princess.

A Tragic Story of a Girl Who Loved Pleasure

(Pearson's Weekly.)

When, one August day in 1814, Caroline, Princess of Wales, shook the dust of England off her feet, she carried no regrets with her. She was glad beyond words to escape from her husband, the Regent, who had so magnanimously persecuted and ill-treated her, and for whom the only feeling was one of loathing.

She was still young and beautiful; and if her charms were scorned by the "First Gentleman in Europe," they would, she knew, have no lack of admirers in the sunny south to which she was turning her steps.

It was in this spirit that the vagrant Princess made her way first to Switzerland, where we find her shocking the English residents by her indiscretions.

At Geneva, Madame de Corsal tells us, she hobnobbed with the commonest people, flung herself with abandon into the dances of the bourgeois, which she attended alone and uninvited, and seemed radiantly happy with the arm of the local butcher or baker round her waist.

Much Preferred a Gay Life.

From Switzerland she wandered to Italy with her retinue of ladies-in-waiting, chamberlains, pages and courtiers, everywhere received as a Queen, and everywhere flinging aside her Royal dignity, to slip away to some resort of pleasure.

We catch a glimpse of her in the studio of Giuseppe Bossi, the artist, whom she drove to distraction by her chatter, and her singing and dancing with two other ladies whom she found there—until, as Bossi says, "the house seemed possessed by the devil, and it was utterly impossible for me to work."

It was at Milan that General Pino introduced to Caroline a new courier, a man who was destined to play a very baleful part in her life. "He is," said Baron Ompteda, "a sort of Apollo, of a superb and commanding appearance, more than six feet high. His physical beauty attracts all eyes. This man is called Pergami, and he has entered the Princess's service."

It was, indeed, an evil fate that brought this "superb Apollo," of the crafty brain and conscienceless ambition into the life of the Princess, at the high tide of her revolt against the world and its conventions. For it was not long before he had so ingratiated himself in her favour that his familiarity shocked even her retinue.

Before she had reached Tuscany the "courier" had blossomed into her equerry, and in this more privileged and exalted role was always at her side. So marked in fact was her favoritism that her retinue, one after another, deserted her; each vacancy, as it occurred, being filled by Pergami's relatives, until Caroline was soon surrounded by members of the ex-courier's family.

English People Shunned Her.

From Naples she wandered to Genoa, Milan and Venice, received regularly everywhere by the Italians; and each day added to the Princess's infatuation and the ex-courier's supremacy.

For a time she now made her home in the Villa del Garrovo, in the lonely isolation of the Italian lakes, with Pergami as her "beloved companion." Then, when her husband's spies made her retreat no longer comfortable or safe, she set out again with him on a journey to Sicily, Tunis and Athens, through Palestine and Turkey.

Ocean is Literally Teeming With Food.

What We Know About Denizens of the Deep Said to be Startlingly Limited.

Washington, D.C., May 25.—Now that the seas are open to the pursuits of peace, and the world is sorely in need of food, many problems of ocean geography are likely to be solved in the course of the quest for deep-sea rations.

"The ocean literally teems with food," says a bulletin issued by the National Geographical Society. "The man who declared that humanity is a race of herring catchers might have over-stated the case, but that the sea abounds in food fishes and fishes fit for food is well known. As soon as we begin to study the subject of ocean fisheries, however, we come up short against the fact that what we really know about the inhabitants of the sea is startlingly limited.

Whale are Lure for Herring.

"Many fishermen of the North Sea believe that whale bring the herring in toward shallow water—a conclusion they reached from the observation that schools of herring are frequently found in the vicinity of spouting whales. In 1906 there was a failure of the herring fisheries, and the fishermen blamed the situation on the Norwegian whaling vessels operating in that region.

"Likewise, it is still a moot question whether or not modern fishing methods tend to deplete the supply and whether artificial propagation of sea fishes is a sufficient counter measure. A few years ago a British commission measured the intensity of fishing operations in the North Sea. "Trailing bottles were set adrift, and it was found that more than half of them were recaptured. In certain localities they were captured at a rate that indicated 90 per cent retaken each season.

"Marked fish yielded largely similar results and the conclusion was that a foodfish of adult size had at least three to one odds against its getting through the year uncaught.

How Ocean Fish Multiply.

"And yet there is so little race suicide in the ocean that even such intensive fishing probably has no effect upon the available adult supply. For instance, the female turbot lays 8,500,000 eggs a year, and the cod has 4,500,000 to her credit. The female flounder lays 1,400,000, the sole 570,000 the haddock 450,000, and the plaice 300,000. The poor herring must be content with a meager 31,000.

"Much remains to be learned about the migration habits of the world's food fishes. The problem of life in the ocean is one full of interest and pregnant with valuable lessons for mankind. Even at the bottom of the deepest trench in the abyssal region of the sea's bottom, where no ray of the sun ever penetrated, where Stygian night is perpetual, where freezing temperatures never cease, and were inconceivable pressure prevail, the miracle of life still goes on."

ELCAR

The largest, sturdiest and most beautiful car in its price-class THE ECONOMY CAR

It is graceful in design and beautiful in finish—smart and stylish in every detail. Nothing lacking for beauty, comfort, performance or endurance. Drive all day and you won't be cramped or tired. In fuel economy this car is almost without an equal—18 to 22 miles to the gallon of gasoline are the rule rather than the exception. The steering is the easiest; the control the simplest. Easy riding whether fully or partially loaded; remarkable in this respect. Abundant power for hard pulls—fine driving qualities at all speeds—and all the speed you want.

Reliable quality is a certainty in the ELCAR. Its builders learned to put in quality years ago when building cars selling up to and above $3000. It is a quality car at a popular price—good and large enough to fulfill any motor car requirement. Don't think of choosing until you have seen the ELCAR.

The Last Post.

By Lieut.-Commander Julian Toulson, R.N. (Killed in command of Submarine E-4.)

A dull sea breaks on the drab rocks' base, A chill wind sobs with a broken breeze, Amidst barren ridges—the last of peace Where a man would wish to lie down with Death. Desolation reigns, the pale sun grows paler, The gulls scream caustically overhead But the waves and breezes sigh for the sailor We mourn as dead.

A boat pulls in to the beach forsaken; The seamen gather along the shore, With one in their midst whom Death has taken. Who never will sail with his ship-mates more. His country's flag is draped proudly over him; He takes his last voyage across the tide. To join the myriad souls that before him Have fought and died.

The drear procession moves off, slow sighing From side to side, with roll of the sea. At the grave we hark to the chaplain's praying, Till the smoke of the final volleys floats free. The Last Post blares from the bugle's throat, Its voice rises walling up to the sky, Till the echoing sounds of the last sad note Must faint and die.

The clouds are low'ring, the east wind sighing, As if in pity for man's brief life— So short the time 'twixt his birth and dying. So dark the riddle of pain and strife. But see, through the cloud, as a bright sword shining, A shaft of sunlight piercing the sky. To bid us cease from our sad repining For man who die.

For Death is Life and living is dying— Yes, he who his heart's blood giveth, By giving his life, is truly living. For his King's is not in the dark grave lying. But in triumph for ever loves and lives. Not dead the sailor! His soul upright Shall reign with the stars in immortal skies. Set free at last from the narrow prison Of life that dies.

The Third Act.

The first act in the great drama of Peace was the draft Constitution of the League of Nations; the second comprised the settlement of terms to be imposed on Germany; the third opened with the summoning of the German delegates to Versailles—to assent or to take the consequences of refusal. The hours are tense. President Ebert, Herr Scheidemann and Count Brockdorf Rantzau have declared that a dictated peace will be a peace of violence, and that Germany will risk all rather than be a party to any such humiliation. She abates her pretensions when she understands that the Allies mean business. She proposed to send representatives to Versailles to receive the Treaty, and take it to Weimar for consideration. The Allies' answer was instant and unmistakable: she must send with plenary powers. Her acquiescence was equally prompt. Wisely, no doubt, the actual terms decided upon by the Peace Conference were kept secret till they could be communicated to the German delegates. The necessity was made clear by Mr. Lloyd George in his great speech—great, notwithstanding certain things which perhaps were better left unsaid, however keenly felt. The Press, of course, objected to secrecy. It wanted to know. Valuable "copy" was being withheld. Rumour has sought to supply the deficiency. True to its ancient role, it has "stuffed the ears of men with false report."

So far as they have been outlined by intelligent anticipation, the terms are severe but just. They include payments in reparation amounting to £11,000,000,000; the surrender of the Saar coal fields to France for a long enough period to enable her to get her own coal fields going again, and compensate her for the damage done to them; the occupation of the left bank of the Rhine, the destruction of the Rhine fortifications, and the limitation of the German army and navy to numbers which will suffice for defence. Will Germany sign? The question is the almost daily heading in papers of all shades of opinion—those which think that the utmost pennig should be exacted, as well as those which would almost be satisfied if Germany were let off with a caution, on undertaking to become a loyal and peaceful member of the League of Nations. "I would sooner have a good Peace than a good Press," said Mr. Lloyd George. Good Peace or bad Peace the Council of Four have got through the first part of their colossal and delicate task regarding Germany without the differences or the delays of which we have heard much. It is unfortunate that Italy has taken up an attitude with regard to Fiume which is irreconcilable with the claims of the Jugoslavians. Other problems still unsettled are Turkey, Russia, and Eastern Europe generally.—United Empire Magazine.
