CHAPTER XXV.

MORE CRUEL THAN DEATH.

Dallas Bain was shocked into momentary silence by the revelation just made to him.

He had not thought of connecting Ray Dering with the attempted murder of Sherwood until this explanation made it clear to his mind.

And it did not give him a very pleasant feeling to know how narrowly he had escaped death at the hands of an impetuous lover driven mad by jealousy.

Had this been their first meeting he must have shrunk from Dering in horror and repulsion.

But weeks of intimate companionship had shown him the real worth of the young man's nature, marred only by the jealous passion that had driven him to crime. He knew that he was capable of noble things, understood also that he was the victim of an undying remorse. His revenge had recoiled upon himself, and the torments of remorse were coiled in his heart to sting him to death.

All this rushed over the mind of Dallas as he gazed at the pale, handsome face and the somber, dark eyes, where the fires of remorse and regret smoldered under the heavy lashes.

"You despise me!" exclaimed Ray Dering hoarsely. "Who can blame you? I, for one, do not. I am even glad I told you, for it made me restless, your kindness, when I knew I did not deserve it. I have sinned so deeply against you that your goodness has heaped coals of fire upon my head. I can only give you my miserable secrets, suspected by no one on earth before, except Annette, and thank you before we part."

He scarcely expected anything but reproach and desertion, and covered before the thought, for he had grown to love Dallas Bain, and coveted his good opinion; but the manliness within him would not permit him to claim it unworthily, so he bowed his

CHAPTER XXVI.

EXPIATION.

The scene shifts from the quiet country under the low-hung October skies to New York, in the following March, when the crisp snow covered the ground, sparkling like jewels under the pallid electric lights.

"WANTED—A refined, educated, companionable gentleman as a companion for an invalid. Liberal salary to a suitable person. Apply at No. 15 Fifth Avenue."

A gentleman who read that want in an evening paper became so excited over it that he cancelled an engagement for the opera to present himself that same evening at the FIFTH AVENUE mansion of the invalid.

The sleek servant who opened the door to him looked supercilious when he heard his errand.

"Really, you should have waited till the morning," he said, trying to hide an Irish brogue under an English accent. "Mrs. Sherwood is going out to the opera, and me master does not see strangers."

Mrs. Sherwood at that moment was in the library, bidding her husband good evening before she went out.

What a contrast there was between them—the man crouching there in his low-wheeled chair, wasted and worn with illness and a tortured mind, a helpless paralytic, and the beautiful bride in the bloom of youth and health, gowned in white silk and lace, her golden hair an aureole about her graceful head, the fire of diamonds gracing her round white throat, pale roses breathing out perfume against her breast.

"Gods! How beautiful you are, my Daisie!" breathed the man, with a gesture of despair. "How I envy the men who will dance with you at the ball to-night!"

She fluttered into a chair beside him, putting her hand on his arm caressingly, as she cried:

"Then I will not go to the ball to-night. I will come home from the opera."

"You forget your guest, who has set her heart on this grand function," he replied, half longing to take her at her word.

"Why, Lottie will be glad to chaperon Annette, and bring her home after the ball," cried Daisie.

"But I know what Lottie would say—that I am a selfish wretch, and don't want my wife to go out and enjoy herself. Others will say the same. And it is true, I know. I am jealous, and selfish, and wretched and miserable—oh, more miserable than words can tell!" wailed.

"Let me stay with you to-night, Royall, and charm away this gray mood. Indeed, I'm not anxious about the opera. And you used to be happier, didn't you, when I stayed by you more, and didn't go into society so much?"

"Yes, yes; but Lottie said it was a shame, that the confinement was breaking you down, and you were so pale as a lily and as patient as an angel. No, no—I must not be selfish. You must not neglect your social duties, as Lottie says."

"Ah, there is the bell! She has come!" exclaimed Daisie, starting up, for she and her friend were to be Mrs. Fleming's guests at an opera party that night.

"Tell Lottie to come in and show me her new gown," Royall said, dreading to be left to his loneliness.

Daisie swept out into the hall, where her obsequious maid was waiting to throw the white opera cloak over her shoulders, and thus she interrupted the colloquy between Patrick and the caller, catching enough of the conversation to understand its import.

head and waited sadly enough for the end.

But into the mind of Dallas surged a great wave of pity.

Impulsively he held out his hand. "I forgive you, my friend," he said cordially.

"You call me your friend—you offer me your hand, Dallas Bain—after what I have told you! Good heavens! I did not dream there was any man so noble!" cried Ray Dering, choking with emotion as he received the offered handclasp, adding: "I swear to you that this shall make a new man of me. I will deserve this confidence by some great deed that will condone the hateful past."

Dallas Bain answered quietly: "Your first step must be to control your jealous, fiery temper. He that is ruler over his own spirit is greater than a king."

"Ah, Dallas, I am cured of all that madness, believe me. My spirit is crushed within me, and my remorse for the evil I have wrought is almost greater than I can bear. Think of my poor little love, Annette, unjustly accused and wounded, I could not blame her, but must agree that she is right. Then, too, that poor fellow wounded unto death by my hand. Yet he never did me any harm. What if he dies? I shall be a wretched murderer!"

"He will not die," answered Dallas Bain.

"Not die! Thank the good God who has spared me that remorse! Then you have heard from Gail Beach?"

"Not directly, but through the newspapers. Of course, a man as rich as Royall Sherwood must get due attention from the press."

"And I thank God again that he is going to get well."

"Not well, Ray."

"But you said so only a minute ago, didn't you?" anxiously.

"I said he would not die."

"But what did you mean, then?"

"This: That poor Royall Sherwood is doomed to such a fate that even I, whom he has supplanted in Daisie's heart; even I, whom he has robbed of the dearest treasure on earth, can afford to pity him. He will be a hopeless cripple for life. The shot in his back affected the spinal column, so that from his waist down he is hopelessly paralyzed—a lifelong wreck."

"My God! And this was my fiendish work!" The man's face sank on the window sill, his strong frame shook with remorseful sobs that did not shame his young manhood.

Dallas did not know how to offer any comfort in the face of this remorse. The whole affair was, to him, very terrible.

He pitied Royall Sherwood with the greatness of a noble nature, forgiving all his own wrongs because of the other's affliction.

For it seemed to him that the young man's affliction was more cruel than death.

To have all the best gifts of life at command—youth, health, wealth, love—and to be struck down like this at one fell blow into worse than nothingness, to be looking into heaven, yet always lying outside the beautiful gates. Ah, what refinement of cruelty, what living torture!

Of her—his lost love, his bonny Daisie—lured from him by a hideous cheat, kept away by her pity and her sense of duty, a pitiful sacrifice to a cruel plot, he scarce dared think. That way lay madness.

So he did not know how to offer comfort to the broken man before him, crushed by remorse for his hideous sin.

"What must I do to atone?" groaned Ray. "Shall I go to him, confess my crime, and offer him my services through life, to make up for his loss?"

"My poor fellow, I do not think you can make it up to him. It is too great, and he will not need you. He is so rich he will not lack loving service. No, you must be to bear your cross in patience and to lead such a life hereafter that the blackness of past sins shall be blotted out in a refulgent light."

"I swear I will—God helping me! And you believe in me?"

"Yes, and will try to help you to lead a new life. I am going to cross the sea next week. Will you come with me as my guest? I did not tell you I was English-born before—did I?—though I have spent much time in America, for my mother is a native of

I will deserve this confidence by some great deed that will condone the hateful past."

Dallas Bain answered quietly: "Your first step must be to control your jealous, fiery temper. He that is ruler over his own spirit is greater than a king."

"Ah, Dallas, I am cured of all that madness, believe me. My spirit is crushed within me, and my remorse for the evil I have wrought is almost greater than I can bear. Think of my poor little love, Annette, unjustly accused and wounded, I could not blame her, but must agree that she is right. Then, too, that poor fellow wounded unto death by my hand. Yet he never did me any harm. What if he dies? I shall be a wretched murderer!"

"He will not die," answered Dallas Bain.

"Not die! Thank the good God who has spared me that remorse! Then you have heard from Gail Beach?"

"Not directly, but through the newspapers. Of course, a man as rich as Royall Sherwood must get due attention from the press."

"And I thank God again that he is going to get well."

"Not well, Ray."

"But you said so only a minute ago, didn't you?" anxiously.

"I said he would not die."

"But what did you mean, then?"

"This: That poor Royall Sherwood is doomed to such a fate that even I, whom he has supplanted in Daisie's heart; even I, whom he has robbed of the dearest treasure on earth, can afford to pity him. He will be a hopeless cripple for life. The shot in his back affected the spinal column, so that from his waist down he is hopelessly paralyzed—a lifelong wreck."

"My God! And this was my fiendish work!" The man's face sank on the window sill, his strong frame shook with remorseful sobs that did not shame his young manhood.

Dallas did not know how to offer any comfort in the face of this remorse. The whole affair was, to him, very terrible.

He pitied Royall Sherwood with the greatness of a noble nature, forgiving all his own wrongs because of the other's affliction.

For it seemed to him that the young man's affliction was more cruel than death.

To have all the best gifts of life at command—youth, health, wealth, love—and to be struck down like this at one fell blow into worse than nothingness, to be looking into heaven, yet always lying outside the beautiful gates. Ah, what refinement of cruelty, what living torture!

Of her—his lost love, his bonny Daisie—lured from him by a hideous cheat, kept away by her pity and her sense of duty, a pitiful sacrifice to a cruel plot, he scarce dared think. That way lay madness.

So he did not know how to offer comfort to the broken man before him, crushed by remorse for his hideous sin.

"What must I do to atone?" groaned Ray. "Shall I go to him, confess my crime, and offer him my services through life, to make up for his loss?"

"My poor fellow, I do not think you can make it up to him. It is too great, and he will not need you. He is so rich he will not lack loving service. No, you must be to bear your cross in patience and to lead such a life hereafter that the blackness of past sins shall be blotted out in a refulgent light."

"I swear I will—God helping me! And you believe in me?"

"Yes, and will try to help you to lead a new life. I am going to cross the sea next week. Will you come with me as my guest? I did not tell you I was English-born before—did I?—though I have spent much time in America, for my mother is a native of

And into the mind of Dallas surged a great wave of pity.

Impulsively he held out his hand. "I forgive you, my friend," he said cordially.

"You call me your friend—you offer me your hand, Dallas Bain—after what I have told you! Good heavens! I did not dream there was any man so noble!" cried Ray Dering, choking with emotion as he received the offered handclasp, adding: "I swear to you that this shall make a new man of me. I will deserve this confidence by some great deed that will condone the hateful past."

Dallas Bain answered quietly: "Your first step must be to control your jealous, fiery temper. He that is ruler over his own spirit is greater than a king."

Sugar Control Case.

COURT DIRECTS THAT MANDAMUS SHALL ISSUE.

L. E. Hickman Co., Ltd. vs. Hon. H. J. Brownrigg, Minister of Finance and Customs. Judgment for Plaintiff.

The above case opened before the Chief Justice in the Supreme Court in chambers yesterday at 11 o'clock. Mr. Carter, who appeared for the defendant, offered two preliminary objections both of which were not upheld after Mr. Morine, K.C., had answered Mr. Carter's argument. The argument on the main issue was then proceeded with by Council for defendant who contended that the board of Food Control had the power to issue regulations under the Food Control Act and if not under that act then under the War Measures Act which provided that the war is not officially over until a proclamation to that effect is issued by the Governor in Council. Mr. Morine contended that the F.C.B. had no such power under either Act cited, and delivered a very able and exhaustive argument which lasted until nearly 1 o'clock. Mr. Carter then replied to Mr. Morine after which adjournment was taken till 3 o'clock in the afternoon. On resuming, judgment was delivered by the Chief Justice ordering that a peremptory mandamus do issue directed to the Minister of Customs to perform the duty imposed upon him by the Customs Act, with costs of application. The full judgment of the Chief Justice follows:—

THE JUDGMENT.

In the matter of an application of L. E. Hickman & Co., Ltd. for a writ of Mandamus to issue directed to the Minister of Customs to grant a warrant for the unloading of goods belonging to the applicant.

The applicant asks for an order for a peremptory mandamus to issue to the Minister as Collector of Customs for the unloading further into this colony of two hundred barrels of sugar brought to the port of St. John's by the s.s. Rosalind on the 12th day of September inst., and now in a customs warehouse at the said port.

It is unquestionably the duty of the court to grant this writ to an applicant whenever he is without other remedy and he can establish a right to the writ by showing a statutory duty to the exercise of which he is entitled. The affidavit in support of the application made by Mr. Pratt, a director of the company, sets forth that the requirements of the Customs Act have been fully complied with and that the company is entitled to a warrant to unload as provided by the Act.

An affidavit filed by the Minister of Customs shows that his objection to issuing the warrant is based upon the fact that this sugar was imported without a permit from the Food Control Board in contravention of the regulations, approved by the Governor in Council, published in the Royal Gazette on the 27th of July, 1920. That publication declares that "Upon the recommendations of the Food Control Board, and under the provisions of the Food Control Act, 1917, and the War Measures Act, 1914-1916, His Excellency the Governor in Council has been pleased to approve the following regulations regarding the sale of sugar."

Section 9 of these regulations, the only section referred to at bar, is as follows: "No sugar shall be imported into Newfoundland unless a permit to do so shall have been obtained before from the Food Control Board."

In order to determine the validity of the regulation, it is necessary to consider first the provisions of the Food Control Act, 1917. The evils which the Legislature aimed to prevent when it enacted that statute were "secrecy, monopolization, hoarding or injurious speculation" in food stuffs and the means which it adopted for the accomplishment of this end was the creation of a Food Control Board. It empowers this Board to make such regulations as it may find necessary or desirable for effecting the purposes set forth in Section-2 of the Act. The powers and duties of the Board are prescribed in that section. They are (A) to make enquiry and investigation, (B) to ascertain the requirements of the people of Newfoundland and to facilitate their transportation—and to prevent causes interfering with such supply, distribution and transportation. There is also a power to cooperate for any of these purposes with departments or officers of Canada or of Great Britain or of allied countries vested with like power. It is obvious that any regulations which are made under that Act must come within the terms of this Section in order to be valid or effective. They must have as their object the production in or importation into the Colony of necessities, or the equitable distribution here of these products or imports, or the prevention of interference with supply and distribution.

Only in so far as regulations aim to effect these objects or subserve these purposes can they have force and validity. Nothing is to be found in the statute, either express or implied, to authorize a regulation that no sugar is to be imported into Newfoundland unless a permit to do so shall have been obtained beforehand from the Food Control Board. The Act provided for a Food Control Board which would assist in securing imports of necessary food stuffs. It did not constitute or authorize the constitution of a Board with power to refuse to permit such imports. This regulation is therefore clearly ultra vires, the Food Control Act.

It is argued that the fact that the Governor in Council in approving the regulations recommended by the Food Control Board declared that these regulations were approved under the provisions of the Food Control Act and the War Measures Act 1914-1916 clothes the Board with powers additional to those derivable from the Food Control Act. It is not, however, apparent that the War Measures Act has any relation to this subject. Subsequent to the enactment of the War Measures Act and its amendment the Legislature specially dealt with the question of Food Control. The regulations in question purport to be recommendations of the Board created by and for the purposes of the Food Control Act, 1917, and are primarily intended for carrying out the provisions of that Act. The former statute which granted extraordinary powers to the Governor in Council for War purposes in 1916 became operative or applicable by reason of War or by reason of the shortage of stocks or increase of price which (to quote the words of the Act) "had resulted, shall result or shall or may be expected to result during the continuance of the War from the fact that a state of War has existed or does now exist" or "by reason of any other cause which may be attributed directly or indirectly to the fact of the past and present existence of War and the possible continuation thereof." As it is admitted that the applicant has done everything required by the Customs Act to entitle it to a permit for the unloading of sugar now held in the Customs' Warehouse, and as the Minister has failed to establish that the regulations upon which his refusal to grant a permit is based, is authorized by statute, I have to order that a peremptory mandamus be issued to the applicant to issue directed to the Minister for the performance of the duty imposed upon him by the Customs Act.

W. H. JOHNSON, of Portland, Ore., who says no one could have done him any greater kindness than the friend who advised him to try Tanlac—Gains fifteen pounds.

"About a year ago I began suffering from lack of appetite and stomach trouble and since that time—that is, until Tanlac set me right—I have felt so poorly that I could hardly do my work. My food seemed to do me little good, if any, as my digestion was bad, and I lost both weight and strength continually.

"After every meal there was a dull, nagging pain in the pit of my stomach that kept me feeling miserable for hours.

"The gas from my sour, undigested food would bloat me up terribly and my nerves were so upset that I would be awake half the night unable to sleep. I was constantly having blinding dizzy spells and could not bend over and straighten up quickly but what everything seemed as dark as night to me.

"I was telling a friend one day how bad I felt and he advised me to try Tanlac, and I just want to say he couldn't have done me a greater kindness."

"I have picked up all of fifteen pounds in weight, my appetite is fine, and although I am eating just anything I want my stomach never gives me a particle of trouble. My sleep is sound and restful and my strength and energy have been so renewed that my work is no longer a burden to me."

Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors; by Reg. Sullivan, Pouch Cove; Sound Island Store, Sound Island; Dennis Flynn, Avondale; J. J. O'Brien, Cape St. Mary's; W. Smith, Baine Harbor; W. A. Burdock, Belleoram; John Morey, Permeuse; Mrs. Jos. Quinn, Renewa.—adv.

That Bump — Three-Point Cantilever Springs in Overland 4 Take Out its Jar

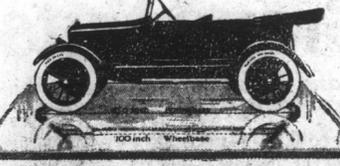

THE exclusive Three-Point Cantilever Springs of the new Overland 4 Motor Car mark the greatest riding improvement since the introduction of pneumatic tyres.

These springs, diagonally attached at the extreme ends of a 130-inch (3.3m) Springbase, give Overland 4 with 100-inch (2.54m) wheelbase the steadiness and smoothness of riding which long wheelbase and heavy weight give the large car.

They smooth out road roughness. They take up the jolts and rebounds.

Overland 4's light weight makes it surprisingly economical of fuel and oil.

In completeness and quality of equipment this greater-comfort car ranks with higher-priced cars.

Men Who Died Laughing.

Like Charles II., many men have died with a jest on their lips, but there are not many cases in history of people actually dying from laughing too heartily at a joke.

This, however, was the sad fate of Marton of Arragon, who reigned from 1394 to 1410. He had a favourite jester called Borra, who, it is said, had immense influence with the King.

One day the King was suffering from indigestion, brought on by too greedily devouring a goose. As he lay groaning in bed, Borra came skipping into the royal apartment, and the King inquired of him whence he came.

"Out of the next vineyard," answered the jester, "where I saw a young deer hanging by his tail from a tree, as if someone had so punished him for stealing figs." Whereupon the King laughed so heartily that he died from the combined onslaught of goose and jest. It seems a poor end—to succumb to a jest like that, and it is obvious that what raised a laugh in Spain in the fifteenth century would not produce even a glimmer of a smile here in the twentieth.

A better joke was made by another fool named Jean, who made merry in the court of Charles the Simple, King of France. This fellow was exceedingly trying to Charlie's nerves, and gave his master a great shock by rushing into his room one morning, exclaiming: "Oh, sire, such news! four thousand men have risen in the city."

"What!" exclaimed the startled ruler, "with what purpose have they risen?"

"Well," said Jean, "probably with the intention of lying down again."

Jean's influence was so great that the King once remarked that he thought they had better change places. Jean looked very angry at this proposal, and Charles thereupon asked him if he were not content with the idea.

"Oh, content enough," said he, "but I should be exceedingly ashamed of having such a fool."

OF KILLING DRIVER OF MOTOR CAR AND ROBBING HIM OF £1,300.

Belfast, September 7.—The sensational killing of William McDowell on September 3, when he was driving a motor car which, according to current accounts, was held up by armed raiders who robbed the car of £1,300, comprising a factory payroll, had a surprising sequel to-day in the arrest of William McConville, cashier of a linen thread corporation's factory, who was a passenger with McDowell at the time of the latter's death.

McConville had vividly described the killing of McDowell and his own maltreatment by two armed men, who, he said, had stolen the money intended for the company's workmen.

HOW WE REMEMBER OUR FRIENDS.

What a vital part in one's memory a mental picture of people their mannerisms do play!

One may forget features and lineaments and still remember some trick of expression, some individual gesture.

I was sitting in a tea room with a friend the other day when she said suddenly, "Look over there. I think that's Mary M. at that table."

"How can it be?" I said. "The last time we heard from Mary M. she was abroad and not expected to be home for months. It's just a resemblance that you see."

"No," she persisted, "I know it's Mary by the way she turned her head and spoke to the waitress. There might be people who look like her, but I feel perfectly sure that there is no one in the world who holds her head at just that angle. I'm going over there to see."

She went and of course it was Mary M. ("Of course," because I shouldn't be told this tale if it hadn't been.)

Don't you think when we have reason to call a friend to mind it is more apt to be these little tricks of expression, these little mannerisms that we see in our mind's eye than just features and coloring?

For instance, I have another friend who has a charming little way of opening her eyes very wide when anything interests her. That is the trademark of individuality which stamps her image in my mind.

A Laugh That Ends in a Crow.

Another woman I know has a funny little laugh ending in something rather like a crow. I love to amuse her for the sake of hearing that laugh.

I had a letter from her the other day when I saw the handwriting, instead of seeing her in my mind's eye as one sometimes does, I seemed to hear that funny little laugh.

Of course mannerisms are not always attractive. Sometimes people unconsciously have ugly mannerisms,

Walk West and Weigh More.

ONE'S WEIGHT IS AFFECTED BY DIRECTION.

When one is walking due east one weighs less than when standing still; when walking due west one weighs more than when standing still.

The difference is only a few hundredths of an ounce, so that one would need very delicate scales to measure it. A loaded car weighing a hundred tons, when standing still, loses about forty pounds when moving towards the east at twenty-five miles an hour, and gains about forty pounds when moving towards the west at a similar speed.

When your body is standing still on the earth it is the object of two forces, the first of which, your own weight, is directed vertically, and tends to keep you pressed to the ground; the second is the centrifugal force caused by the rotation of the earth on its axle. This is directed at a tangent to the circumference of the earth.

The earth turns from west to east, so if your weight suddenly became nothing, thus leaving no force holding you to the ground, you would fly off the earth in an eastward direction. You would go on at a speed of about a thousand miles an hour until you were lost in space or came into collision with the moon or another planet or some star, or until you recovered your weight and were drawn by gravitation back to the earth, on

TO THE DENTIST.

DR. WILSON

To the dentist I am wending at the early hour of day, when the rising sun is lending glory to the stacks of hay; for a session elevating all arrangements have been made, and the painless dentist's waiting, with his crowbar and his spade. Oh, my ringbones long have smarted, and my spavins hurt my calves; for such things, in days departed, I used liniments and salves; but my teeth are at the bottom of such miseries as these, and the same old teeth, dod rot 'em, make existence seem a cheese. Once I had a temper cheerful, and my home was full of peace, and you heard no wailings fearful from my wife or aunt or niece; but for months I've been as nasty as a bear with festered dome, and I said things blanky-blasty when I had to write a poem. Oh, a shadow o'er me hovered, and it changed my wine to gall, and the doctor has discovered that my teeth produced it all. Of all utes the pentest is the one that spoils our gle, so I'm going to the dentist, and the dentist waits for me. In his apron new and stainless he is waiting at his door, he is standing, tall and painless, and his smile is five by four; he is singing like a linnet, waiting there to cut his ice, and he'll charge a bone a minute, but the goods are worth the price.

Household Notes.

Meat should not be kept directly on ice.

Add a little vanilla to the chocolate cake.

Freshen black ribbons by rinsing them in clear coffee.

Use coffee to flavor fudge made without chocolate.

A pinch of mace gives a piquant savor to creamed oysters.

Empty lard cans are splendid for packing eggs in waterglass.

Ceylon tea is best with cream, and orange pekoe with lemon.

Use a shoe horn when putting tight rubbers on a child's feet.

Left-over coffee may be used in spice cakes instead of sour milk.

Woolens are best dried when flat, and should be shaped when wet.

If you are planning a kitchen, see that it is not a thoroughfare.

To mend rugs that have worn ends, sew skirt belting on the ends.

Cook potatoes in an iron pot and they will have a much better flavor.

Never use hot water when washing either leather or fabric gloves.

Three or four tin cans put on the stove fire will keep hot a long time.

Apples are delicious cooked in the pickling syrup of sweet pickled pears.

Time and trouble is saved by putting snaps on your sofa-cushion covers.

Cold coffee used in boiled icing instead of water gives it a delightful mocha flavor.

Grease your preserving pans with an unsalted grease. The fruit will not stick.

Chopped raisins mixed with maple syrup are delicious with graham crackers.

Oatmeal macaroons are made with sponge cake batter, thickened with rolled oats.

Green muskmelons can be cut into thin slices, dipped in batter, and fried like eggplant.

It is a good plan to use tough pieces of meat in a highly seasoned, well-cooked casserole.

Lukewarm water is best for washing vegetables. Crisp them, if necessary, afterwards.

To poach eggs successfully, put a teaspoonful of vinegar in the water and keep the pan covered.

One-half teaspoonful of vinegar added to the cold water when mixing piecrust will make it flaky.

Gelatine jelly may be cut into fancy shapes with cookie-cutters, and used to garnish ice cream.

Add one-fourth teaspoonful of ground clove to one pint of cream sauce for creamed carrots.

The Rotten Features.

In pursuance of our promise, yesterday, to review some of the obnoxious features of the new Fish Regulations, we begin with Section 1, clause B. This is an attempt to kill out any young business man or firm that may be endeavoring to start out in the fish business and to become an exporter of fish. He must give a bond of $1,000 and forfeit it if he fails to export 1,000 quintals of fish. We should have no Barrs or Hickmans to-day if such restrictions had been made in past times. This is plainly an attempt to kill out the small man who, if let alone, may become a fish exporter in the same way that Messrs. Hickman, Barr and Sir John Crosbie all rose up in our time. Sub-Section 3 says that an application for a license to export may be refused one who is not a British subject domiciled in Newfoundland, or a foreign-controlled corporation. This is as much as to say "we don't want any foreign capital and we are going to do our best to keep it out."

This is a palpable attempt to get back to the monopolistic days of the old Commercial Rooms, when half a dozen merchants had it all their own way. We all know what a close combine meant in those days before Crosbie, Hickman and Barr came into the fish business, broke the combine and started paying prices that kept up the price of fish. The clause referred to seeks to strangle competition and keep out outside capital. The Minister of Fisheries is going to sell codfish in Portugal at one per cent commission, and in Italy at 2 per cent. Why is this discrimination? It looks very suspicious. Is it because the fish in Italy is going to be sold through Mr. Geo. Hawes & Co., Ltd.? It is very suggestive of the big six, and rumor still persists in saying that Mr.

Coaker himself is one of the big six. Mr. Ragnoli is a great friend of Mr. Hawes, Mr. Hawes is very close to Mr. Barr, and Mr. Ragnoli is head of the Consorzio. This 2 per cent brokerage on fish sold by Hawes is something that the public will expect the Minister of Fisheries to explain. It has to come out of the fishermen, and lessen the price that they get for their fish that goes to Italy.

Mr. Coaker recommends that cargoes to Portugal be not more than 5,000 quintals. In this he has taken the hint of Sir John Crosbie, in his recent interview in the Daily News. The new regulations say further on that no claim for damages in Portugal can be settled except through the Commissioner of the Government of Newfoundland. This is most unfair to the shipper, who may be at the mercy of his greatest enemy, and through either malice or ignorance, may say that the damages may be five shillings a quintal when an impartial arbitrator could effect a settlement at two shillings. It will be noticed that Spain is left open as a safety valve. The influence of the big six is very much in evidence here. We all know that some of them have large stores in Spain, and it is quite evident that in this case they have been able to put it all over Mr. Coaker.

He is now in good company, and is one of the big exporting merchants. He always has been preaching to the fishermen that the merchants have ever been plotting to keep down the price here in order to make big profits in the foreign markets. He is now one of themselves, therefore having the most power he is doing most to keep down the local price of fish. We would here like to ask Mr. Coaker and the other fish buyers, whether they intend to refund to the fishermen from whom they took fish before the new regulations came into force, the difference between $4 West India and $9 Small Brazil fish and Madeira? It looks to us that the fishermen who sold early in August, must have lost at least $4 a quintal under Mr. Coaker's "cruel cull," as one planter termed it. It is up to them now to refund or to make the Government pay for their blunder, the same as in the case of the sugar blunder.

Is This Correct?

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is hereby asked if it be true that a city fish exporter, a ground floor member of the Board, is about to load a cargo of fish in a way that will avoid all the restrictions of the Fish Regulations, by moving up to a Canadian-Labrador port? There is a rumor around the city to this effect, and if it be true, a disgraceful and dishonest state of affairs is revealed, especially when the perpetrator is one who has shown so much zeal to inflict the strict letter of the law upon all others in the fish business.

New York Fish Trade.

Nobody will suffer more than the fishermen themselves if the New York fish trade is cut out by the arbitrary conditions laid down by Mr. Coaker, in the fish regulations. It should not matter to the fishermen who buys the fish, provided they get the highest price, and the buying that has been going on in this country for New York firms by agents and exporters has, during the past ten years or so, been one of the main factors in putting up the price of fish. The competition that made these high prices possible, is evidently what it is intended to kill. It may be in the interest of the merchant, but it certainly is not in the interest of the fishermen. The New York fish dealer who has been accustomed to buy in Newfoundland, and who has in the past found such a welcome factor in helping to relieve our local market of surplus catches, is now asked to subscribe to impossible conditions in bonds, sureties and forfeitures before he will be allowed to buy fish in Newfoundland. It is practically saying to our fishermen, "Here is a buyer who wants to give you 20 cents or 50 cents a quintal more for your fish than we, the combine, are going to give, and we are going to shut him out by the regulations." It is the greatest blow to free trade that was ever given in Newfoundland, and we should not be surprised to see trade retaliations.

Tourist and Fly Fishing Traffic for 1921.

The Railway Commission, before preparing for an advertising campaign to develop this important trade for the coming year, have instructed Mr. Pittman, General Passenger Agent, to make a careful canvass, and report upon the present Hotels and Boarding House accommodation at the many various points in the Dominion, in order to ascertain the present accommodation, and also to find out if any additions or new Hotels are likely to be put up. When the particulars come in, a full report is made on the situation, the Railway Commission will decide their policy of advertising in connection for the coming year, 1921.

Confirmation at Pouch Cove.

On Sunday, Sept. 12th, His Grace the Archbishop, accompanied by Monsignor McDermott, V.G., and Rev. Fr. Rawlins, paid an official visit to Pouch Cove. The object of the visit was to administer Confirmation to the children of the Parish and to bless the new church which is now rapidly nearing completion and sufficiently advanced to be used for Divine Service. At the ceremonial of the Blessing in accordance with the rubrics of the ritual had been carried out, the Sacrament of Confirmation was administered to 120 candidates. The Archbishop addressed the people at some length. In the course of his remarks he congratulated the Pastor, Rev. Father Piggy, and the people for the rapid progress that had been made in the construction of the church, which he attributed to the untiring zeal of the Pastor and the generous assistance and co-operation of the people. He hoped that their beautiful new church would prove a source of blessing to the people—a sacred centre from which would radiate blessings on themselves, their homes and their undertakings. Looking out as it did over the ocean where they pursued their daily toil he prayed that it might prove a source of protection to them against the perils and dangers of their hazardous avocation. In conclusion the Archbishop addressed a brief exhortation to the children expressing the hope that the graces they had received would shield them against the dangers and temptations that lay before them and help them to grow up as good citizens of their country and worthy members of their church. The ceremonies of the day were concluded by Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament given by His Grace the Archbishop.

A great many Men's English Tweed Suits, warm, strong and durable, the price of which was fixed by the British Government, were sold in St. John's during June by BISHOP, SONS & CO., LTD. They have been fortunate in getting delivery of the balance of these suits, and commencing today are offering to the first 250 men who apply Fifty Dollar value Suits at Thirty-three Dollars. Outport orders should contain Twenty-six Cents extra for postage. Judging from the rush on these Suits in June this quantity should last about Ten Days, and it would be advisable for anyone interested to act at once.

Hickman are not yet permitted to take delivery of their sugar. The judgement of the Chief Justice not being executed as there are four days allowed in which an appeal from his decision may be made. An appeal to the full Bench is now being made by the Minister of Customs.

Police Court.

A young man, charged with the sale of a bottle of Cognac, pleaded guilty. The evidence showed that the defendant went on board a French steamer, where he bought a bottle of liquor for five dollars given him by the Crown, and then he was arrested for being drunk. No sale being proven the case was dismissed.

A dispute between tenants who lived in the same house was settled after some discussion. The women in the case made a little scene in the court room, by one charging the other with telling lies. The defendant was fined $2 and his wife, who was the cause of most of the disturbance, again made a scene, telling the court that the fine would not be paid, not that she would not pay, but her man would serve out his time in jail. She had to be removed from the court by the guard.

Owing to many civil cases awaiting trial, the broad Court did not come up for hearing during the forenoon.

Sometime during Sunday night and Monday morning, vandals broke sixteen panes of glass in the Gower St. Methodist Church and also destroyed flowers growing in the yard. About the same time the sign of a medical man of Duckworth Street was wrenched from its fastenings and thrown in a vacant plot.

Five Things Happen

When you brush teeth in this way

All statements approved by authorities

Dental science has produced a new teeth-cleaning method. Millions of people have already adopted it. Leading dentists everywhere advise it. In effective ways it combats the film on teeth. And it deals with this tooth wrecker as was never done before.

The fight on film

Modern dentistry finds that most tooth troubles are caused by film. The film at first is viscous. You can feel it now. But it clings to teeth, enters crevices and stays.

It is the film-coat that discolors, not the teeth. Film is the basis of tartar. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acids. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Millions of germs breed in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea. Very few people have escaped these film-caused troubles.

A multiple attack

New new ways have been found to fight film. Careful tests have proved them. High dental authorities approve them.

They are all combined in a dentifrice called Pepsodent. It meets every modern requirement. And this new tooth paste is fast coming into world-wide use.

You'll know in a week

Some results of Pepsodent appear rapidly. Within one week the good effects will be amazing to you. One ingredient is pepsin. One multiplies the starch digestant in the saliva, to digest starch deposits that cling. One multiplies the alkalinity of the saliva to neutralize mouth acids. Two factors directly attack the films. One of them keeps the teeth so highly polished that film cannot easily cling. In all these ways it brings and maintains whiter, safer teeth.

Send the coupon for a 10-Day Tube. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the viscous film. See how the teeth whiten as the film-coat disappears.

Compare the results with your old methods. Then let those evident results tell you what is best. Cut out the coupon now.

The New-Day Dentifrice

A scientific film combatant which, after 5 years' tests, is now advised by leading dentists everywhere and supplied by all druggists in large tubes.

Who Invented Figures?

The history of figures as we use them to-day carries us back to the days when the Moors invaded Spain twelve hundred years ago. It was at first believed that the Arabs invented the figures which superseded the Roman numerals, and they are always known as Arabic figures, but it has since been discovered that the Hindus, who centuries before had reached a high state of culture, and showed exceeding inventive genius, were the real originators of the idea.

The Mohammedan Saracens, or Moors, took possession of Spain, and early in the period of eight hundred years during which they remained in power adopted the use of figures similar to those of our time.

The original figures were formed of straight lines, but the Hindus fixed the value of the symbols according to the number of angles contained in their formation. The figure one had one angle, and number nine had nine, while the cipher was a circle and therefore had nought.

To-Day's Messages.

CARPENTIER IN NEW YORK.
NEW YORK, Sept. 13. Georges Carpentier, French boxer, arrived here to-day on the steamer La Lorraine. He and Jack Dempsey, Carpentier's opponent, had been stung by adverse criticism in American newspapers, and that he eagerly awaited an opportunity to show what he could do in the ring.

S.S. METAGAMA IN MONTREAL.
MONTREAL, Sept. 13. After being firmly embedded in a clay bank of the St. Lawrence River near Contre-Coeur, below Montreal, for nearly forty hours, the steamer Metagama was released to-night under pressure from united efforts of wrecker Lord Strathcona, assisted by graving yard. She was able to proceed to Montreal under her own steam, and within three hours was berthed at Vickers dock, where she will be overhauled for repairs.

MILITARY AGREEMENT ACCEPTED.

PARIS, Sept. 13. Badon de Ceilfer, D'Hostroy, Belgian Ambassador to France, to-day informed the Foreign Minister of the acceptance by Belgium of France, Belgian military agreement, which is to become effective immediately.

CLOSE OF THE CONFERENCE.

AUX LES BAINS, France, Sept. 13. At the close of the Conference on International questions to-day, Premiers Millerand, of France, and Giolitti, of Italy, sent the following telegram to Premier Lloyd George, of Great Britain: "M. Giolitti and Millerand met together at Aux les Bains, do not wish to separate without addressing in common to His Excellency Premier Lloyd George, their very cordial and friendly greeting. The Italian and French Prime Ministers have once again had occasion to recognize the full accord of their general views and the primordial necessity of the close entente of Great Britain and France, in order to ensure settlement of European problems, and the resumption of peace and normal relations between the peoples."

THE MACSWEENEY CASE.

LONDON, Sept. 13. Assurance that there is no element of bluffing in the respective attitudes of the British Government and the Irish Nationalists, relative to the MacSweeney case, were obtained from a source of high authority, by the Associated Press to-day. "If Sinn Feiners think we are bidding our time, and will capitulate when MacSweeney's condition requires, we shall not be mistaken." This characterizes the British official view as expressed by the correspondent. "There can be no doubt or question about our desire or intention of having Lord Mayor MacSweeney recede from the tragic stand he has taken," declared an official at London headquarters of the Irish Nationalist organization. "If he is not released voluntarily by the Government, he will most certainly go down in history as the first hunger striker to perish in an English prison."

IN LOVING MEMORY

of Michael J. O'Brien, died Sept. 14, 1919. "The tie that earth has broken And severed one year ago, Fond memories of you darling Will eternal peace bestow; He suffered much, he murmured not, We watched him day by day, Until at last with broken hearts We saw him pass away. Softly at night the stars are shining On a lonely, silent grave, Where thou lie my dearest Michael, Whom we loved but could not save; But your chair stands alone and empty to the state, are a menace. It is the duty of the people to protect the state in this respect. It is the right of every child to claim an education.—Com.

In the home you loved so well, And how much we miss you darling, Only God alone can tell. He died in life's fair summer, God knoweth what is best; May the Sacred Heart of Jesus Grant his soul eternal rest.—Mother.

SAVE THE BABIES!

During these hot days when infants are suffering and dying from Summer Diarrhoea, it might be interesting to quote from a report read by Dr. Alan Brown, Child Specialist of Toronto, who says:—

"In severe cases of Diarrhoea which do not respond to the elimination of carbohydrate in the usual milk mixtures, PROTEIN MILK is indicated, as in practically all cases of intoxication and infectious diarrhoea, and many cases of dyspepsia in breast-fed infants."

The process of making LIQUID PROTEIN MILK is a long and difficult one. After four years of careful experimentation a PROTEIN MILK has been manufactured in powder form,—conforming exactly to the analysis of the Liquid preparation.

Upon presentation of a prescription from your doctor it can be obtained at any of the three Child Welfare Milk Stations where it is sold at cost of importation.

Pick and Cue.

At one time a collier had working in the pits near Sheffield, Claude Falkner, who recently played against Willie Smith for the billiards championship, is a remarkable example of the natural born player. Within a dozen years the former pit boy has become one of the greatest performers on the green cloth in the country.
His youthful appearance led to an amusing situation in one billiards saloon.
"What do you want, my lad?" said the marker, noticing the cue-case Falkner was carrying. "My name's Falkner," was the quiet reply.
"Brought your father's one, I suppose?" "No, my own," and to the marker's amazement, "my lad," proceeded to complete hundred breaks.
"Well, I be blowed," ejaculated the marker. "I thought he hadn't left school yet."

Tests for 'Phone Girls.
MACHINE TO MEASURE "AWARENESS."
A suggestion that telephone operators should undergo psycho-technical tests, with a view to improving the telephone service, is made by Mr. E. S. Hodgson, of Coventry, who writes that a number of telephone operators in Berlin have been tested in this way recently.
The faculty of attention or "awareness" was tested on an instrument designed for that purpose, which enabled the authorities to weed out girls unsuited for this work.
"Although we made no tests of that kind, our operators have to pass through a number of trials," an official of the Telephone Service told a Daily Mail reporter. "Operators are medically examined and are tested by an expert staff of women. The tests include speaking, hearing, and general education. After passing the tests the operators attend a school for a month. One cannot become an operator in a few weeks or months. We do not get the best work from an operator until she has been two years at the work."

Bishop Spencer College and Spencer Lodge!

The Directors of the Church of England College desire to announce that they have been able to make very satisfactory arrangements for the management of Bishop Spencer College and Spencer Lodge during the coming year.

It is with the greatest regret that the Board has received the resignation of Miss E. G. Stirling, who, after conducting Bishop Spencer College for many years with the greatest success and bringing it to the highest point of efficiency in its history, has, acting under medical advice, decided to retire.

The Board has, however, been fortunate in obtaining the services as Headmistress of Miss A. M. Richards, who is expected to arrive from England by an early steamer. Miss Richards was educated at St. Leonard's College, St. Hilda's College, Oxford, and at the University of London, where she obtained the degree of B.A. She has also received training at the Cambridge Training College, and holds the Cambridge Teachers' Diploma. She has had extensive teaching experience in England and has taught for a short time in Constantinople, besides serving in the Q. M. A. C. in France during part of the war period. The Directors expect, from personal and other recommendations, that she will be found a most capable Headmistress for Bishop Spencer College.

Spencer Lodge, the College Boarding House for girls, will be in charge of Miss Sargent, who has just arrived from England. Miss Sargent has had extensive experience of administrative work in schools in England at Bournemouth, Ascot, Malvern, and elsewhere, and during the war was employed in organizing work for the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. The Board feel that under her management Spencer Lodge will be so conducted as to give the utmost satisfaction to parents of boarders.

Two Great Flags.

How many flags does the average person recognize? Though the World War familiarized us with flags of some of the Allies and the Central Powers, the average person's repertoire of flags are important, not only as patriotic and artistic emblems, but many times they are symbolical of national history. declares a writer to the National Geographic Society. For example, the two foreign flags which we perhaps know best of all, those of Great Britain and France, have a rich historical significance, described in the following extracts from "Flags of the World," by Bryon McCandless and Gilbert Grosvenor:

"The national flag of the British Empire, the Union Jack, combines the crosses of St. George, St. Andrew and St. Patrick. When the union of the two crowns of England and Scotland took place upon the accession of James VI. of Scotland to the English throne as James I., the cross of St. Andrew, the patron saint of Scotland, and that of St. George, the patron saint of England, were combined, and all ships were ordered to fly at the maintop the new flag, while at the foretop the English were still to fly the red cross of St. George and the Scots the white cross of St. Andrew.

"This was the first Union Jack, as it is generally termed, though, strictly speaking, the name of the flag is 'great union,' being a jack only when flown from the jackstaff of a ship of war. James I. always signed his name 'Jacques,' and it is believed in many quarters that the jack and the jackstaff of the navy derived their names from that fact. Others contend that 'jack' was used as early as the close of the sixteenth century, Lord Howard's ships in their attack upon the Spanish armada, in 1588, are described as carrying a 'jack' on the jackstaff, their jack being a small edition of the red cross of St. George.

"That St. George's cross was placed over St. Andrew's was distressing to the Scots, who made it the subject of an appeal to the King. But even a king cannot solve all the problems of heraldry. That art has no way of making two devices on a flag of equal value. If they be put side by side the position next the staff is more honorable than the one remote from it, just as the upper portion of a flag is more honorable than lower. After the death of Charles I., the union of Scotland and England was dissolved and the ships of Parliament reverted to the use of the simple cross of St. George, while those of Scotland took up the cross of St. Andrew again. When Cromwell became protector he restored the union flag, imposing the Irish harp upon its center.

"After the Restoration, Charles II. removed the harp, and so the original union flag was revived and continued in that form until 1801, when, upon legislative union of Great Britain and Ireland, the cross of St. Patrick was incorporated. To combine these crosses without losing the characteristic features of each was not easy. Each had to be distinct and at the same time retain a border which would denote its original ground. To place the red cross of St. Patrick on the white cross of St. Andrew would have obliterated the latter, and vice versa. Therefore it was decided to make the white border more on one side of the red than the other. This breaks the continuity of the direction of the arms of St. Patrick's cross, but permits the Irish and Scottish crosses to be distinguished from one another.

"The familiar and inspiring tricolor of France dates from the year that gave the United States its Constitution—1789. The best authorities are doubtful as to the story of its origin, but there are three principal theories as to the derivation of its combination of colors. The first of these, and the most authentic, is that after the taking of the Bastille, when Lafayette had been appointed by acclamation commander-in-chief of the National Guard, he devised for the Guard a new cockade made of the white of the royal family and the colors of Paris, time out of mind, which were and continue to be red and blue. From this cockade, most historians believe, came the French national flag.

"Another version links the tricolor with the three historic flags of France—the blue of the Chape de Martin, the red of the oriflamme, and the white of the Bourbons. It will be recalled that the Chape de Martin was supposed to be the original cloak which St. Martin divided with a beggar at Amiens, which act was followed by a vision of Christ making known to the angels his deed of charity. The chape was in the keeping of the monks of Mar-moutier, and Clovis carried it when he conquered Alaric, while Charlemagne bore it at Narbonne.

"When the kings of France transferred the seat of Government to Paris, the local saint, St. Denis, was held in high honor, and gradually the plain scarlet banner, known as the oriflamme, and kept in the abbey church, supplanted the blue of St. Martin as the national colors. The oriflamme appeared for the last time at the battle of Agincourt, in 1415. The Hugenot party in France adopted the white flag, and when Henry II. came to the throne he made it the royal ensign. His successor, Henry IV., the first king of the Bourbons, adopted it as the national flag.

"The third account of the tricolor's origin is that it is copied from the shield of the Orleans family, as it appeared after Philippe Egalite knocked off the fleur de lis. During the first and second empires, the tricolor became the imperial standard, but in the center of the white stripe was placed the eagle, while all three stripes were richly powdered with the golden bees of the Napoleon family.—New York Times.

Tschaikovsky And The Marriage That Failed.

At twenty-seven, Peter Tschaikovsky, composed of the "1812" Overture, "Chanson Triste," and much popular music, whom the Germans called a Russian and the Russians a German, wrote to his sister, "I am weary of life, and marriage holds no attraction for me—I am too lazy to woo, too lazy to support a family, too lazy to endure the responsibility of a wife and children."

all his unattractiveness, we find him engaged as a youth in two love-affairs. But in spite of all his avowed aversion to woman and wedlock, which we suspect was half affected, he was not to escape a great passion; and his hour of fate came with the arrival, in 1868, at the Moscow Opera of Desree Artot, a Belgian singer, who is described as "a queen of grace and a queen of dramatic and lyric song." That she was thirty-five (five years his senior) mattered nothing. At the sound of her beautiful voice and a glance from her dark eyes he was undone. "He tried to keep away," we are told; "they met by accident; she reproached him; he promised to call; then his inveterate timidity palsied him, till his friend Anton Rubinstein, the famous pianist, had to drag him to her rooms." And, thus caught finally and helplessly in Desree's toils, he succumbed—a happy victim. But though he became engaged to her, he soon found the course of his love far from smooth. He insisted that she should give up her career for his. She and her mother stoutly objected to such a selfish stipulation.

A Cold Parting.
But, though Tschaikovsky was willing to yield, the rift had come within the lute, and in January, 1869, Desree left Moscow and her too exacting lover, "parting coldly from him." And a few weeks later news came to him that she had become engaged to a handsome Spanish baritone in her troupe, Padillary Ramos, whom she married in the following September. Thus Tschaikovsky found the cup of intense surprise as much as to his happiness dashed from his lips, to his grief. But, though his lady had played him false, it was long before he could expel her from his heart.

The Mad Marriage.
When, a year later, he heard that she was returning to Moscow to sing, he wrote to a friend, "She is coming here and I cannot avoid meeting her. The woman has cost me many a bitter hour, and yet I feel myself drawn towards her with such inexplicable sympathy that I await her coming with feverish impatience." At the first performance, his friend Kashkin says, "he was terribly excited, and kept his opera-glasses fastened on her always, though he was almost blinded by the tears that streamed down his cheeks." And nearly twenty years later—in 1888—when he met her again in Berlin, he wrote in his diary, "The personality of this singer is as irresistibly bewitching as ever."

An Impossible Spouse.
It was in 1876, when overwork had wrecked his nerves and he was bordering on insanity, that Tschaikovsky wrote to her brother, "I have resolved to marry, with whomsoever it may be—the resolve is beyond recall"; and in July of the following year Kashkin was amazed to find that he had carried his resolve into effect—an event of which he gave the following explanation to his friend and patroness, Frau von Meck:—"One day I received a letter from a girl I had known for some time. I learned from it that she loved me. The letter was couched in such warm, frank terms that I decided to see her. At our meeting I assured her that, in return for her love, I could give her nothing but sympathy and gratitude. But later I reproached myself for the carelessness of my action." Then, realizing that his refusal to marry her "would make her unhappy and possibly drive her to a tragic fate," he called again on her, frankly described to her all his faults of temper and character and his financial condition, and asked her again if she wished to be his wife. "Naturally," he continues, "her answer was 'yes.' The fearful agonies which I have experienced since that night are not to be expressed in words."

Within a month Tschaikovsky was running away from his impossible spouse and was writing to Frau von Meck: "I leave in an hour. A few days more of this and I swear I should have gone mad." After ten days' absence he screwed up courage to return to her; but within a week he was driven to an attempt at suicide—"standing up to his chin in ice-cold water, afraid to drown himself and yet hoping to catch a fatal pneumonia." Again he ran away—this time to St. Petersburg, where, on arrival, he "went into hysterics and was unconscious for forty-eight hours." And this time he lacked courage to face his purgatory again. He abandoned his wife for ever, and sought refuge and oblivion in foreign travel.

But if his experiment in matrimony had proved so tragic a failure, he found consolation in the last day of his troubled life, in 1893, in the loyal and affectionate friendship of his wealthy patroness, Frau von Meck. John O' London's Weekly.

After School Begins.

Why did vacation go so fast?
I think that it should be
Ten times as long as it has been—
But six from nine leaves three.

The days are far too warm for school
Too warm, and fair, and fine;
It is so hard to study now!
But five plus four is nine.

This morning when I came to school,
Two squirrels called to me;
They were at play upon a wall—
But eight less five is three.

And in an orchard that I passed,
The ground was covered o'er
With apples that have fallen off—
But two times two is four.

And every stalk of goldenrod,
As though it were alive
Just smiled and beckoned me to stay—
But five from ten leaves five.

And as I had to hurry here
For fear that I'd be late,
And lose, perhaps, my whole recess—
How much are six and eight?

The Heart of Man.

How Harvey Discovered The Circulation of the Blood.

HARRY ROBERTS, in John of London's Weekly.

William Harvey, like most of the men who have revolutionized human thought, was born and bred in comfortable surroundings. His father, indeed, was successful almost to the point of a land-magnate. The son of a land-magnate, he passed in due course through two universities and became a member of Anatomy to the College of Physicians and physician and personal friend of Charles I. He was born in 1578, and it was thirty-eight years later that he first gave utterance to his doctrine of the circulation of the blood, exactly one week before Shakespeare died at Stratford. It was not until twelve years later, however, after he had studied the problem in presented itself in living animals, that he presented his views by hundreds of observations and experiments, that made his results public.

Crack-brained! After this publication, he reported that he felt mightily in his practice, "many people thought him crack-brained," and a rival wrote: "I know several practitioners in this town that did not have given three-pence for a man's life (i.e., prescriptions), but a man can hardly tell by his bills that he did him out." Like all the rest of us great and small, Harvey, all his erudition, sometimes made mistakes. And in 1635 he was hailed as the Barber Surgeon's Company "ill practise".

tell us were involved. "We are too much in the habit of worshipping names to the neglect of things," he said. "Before such titles as Spirit and Calidum Innatum we stand agape." Mesopotamia was evidently not the first of the blessed words.

Some indication of Harvey's attitude is shown by a pencil note of his against a passage paying undue homage to rank, in the British Museum copy of Galen's works: "Wooden legs" is Harvey's sneer.

What then is the exact nature of the discovery with which Harvey's name is now universally connected? As most readers now know the heart of man is a muscular organ composed of four chambers known respectively as the right and left auricles and the right and left ventricles. Proceeding from the right ventricle are great tubes which branch and re-branch, ending in the tissues of the lung. From the left ventricle proceeds another great tube, the aorta, the branches of which are distributed over the entire body. All these tubes are known as arteries. Continuous with the right auricle are other great tubes or veins, which also branch and re-branch throughout the body, and connected with the left auricle are other veins again whose branches end like those of the pulmonary artery, in the tissues of the lung.

A Five Hundred Year Halt.

Between the left auricle and the left ventricle is an aperture, and between the right auricle and the right ventricle is also an aperture. Between the right and left sides of the heart there is no direct communication.

This brief summary is necessary in order to make plain what was the problem that confronted Harvey, and what was the doctrine which he announced. It is impossible now to learn what views of the functions of the heart and of the circulation of the blood were held in the ancient civilization of Egypt. But we do know the views held by the ancient Greeks.

About three hundred years before the Christian era, a Greek anatomist—Erasistratus—discovered the valves at the entrance of the great vessels at their junction with the heart. He perceived that these valves tended to limit the flow of blood to one direction only.

But his discovery only carried him a short way, for he held, what was then the general view among anatomists, that the arteries contain air and the veins blood; the idea being that air is collected from the lungs and distributed over the body by arteries, bad air passing back to the lungs through them, a to-and-fro movement being thus established. No considerable advance in fathoming what now seems this simple problem was made for five hundred years. Then arose a very great and skilful experimental anatomist, Galen, who established the fact that, during life, the arteries are full, not of air, but of blood; and, further, that the left side of the heart, as well as the arteries, contains bright red and, as he called it, "pneumatized" blood; whilst the right side of the heart and the veins contain dark, or venous, blood.

Another Columbus.

Over thirteen hundred years passed before any further contribution of consequence was made to the theory of the circulation of the blood. Then Realduo Columbus, a professor at Padua, established the fact of the pulmonary circulation. He showed that venous blood passes from the right ventricle through the pulmonary arteries to the lungs, where it is aerated and returned, through the pulmonary arteries, to the lungs, where it is aerated and returned, through the pulmonary veins, to the left side of the heart.

It was left to Harvey, a few years later, to establish the further truth, that the aerated blood, received into the left side of the heart through the pulmonary veins, is distributed over the body through the aorta and its numerous arterial branches, being again collected in the small branches of veins, which unite and re-unite, ultimately joining into the great veins that lead to the right side of the heart, whence the blood is again pumped to the lungs and the circle thus completed.

A Frog Discovery.

The connection between the finest branches of the arteries and the smallest branches of the veins Harvey assumed, but was never able to demonstrate. Seven years after his death, however, an Italian naturalist—Malpighi—showed, in the foot of a living frog, by means of a magnifying glass, the actual junction of the tiny arteries and veins by fine capillary tubes.

The significance of Harvey's discovery, simple as it seems, is enormous. Modern physiology and medical practice are largely based on it. But, though it is his name almost alone with which this discovery is popularly associated, we must not, if we would be just, forget, any more than did Harvey himself, the debt which we owe to those equally earnest searchers after truth who preceded Champion Snake-Swallowers.

After a lapse of five years, the annual convention of the snake-eaters of Northern Africa has lately been held. Seventeen of the most renowned reptile consumers from various parts of Tunis and Algeria took part.

An extraordinary feature of the convention was that most of the snake-eaters served in the French Army during the war many of them wearing the medals they won in France.

More than four hundred small snakes of various sizes were carefully measured and distributed to the competitors. A score-keeper watched each man, and the spectators cheered the "eaters" at the top of their voices.

The "eating" consisted of forcing a snake into the mouth as quickly as possible, but no hunching or rolling up of the reptiles was allowed. The snake had to be forced in head first, and as soon as the tail had disappeared, which it usually did with extraordinary rapidity, the competitor quickly snatched it out of his mouth and inserted another.

The man who finished his twenty-four snakes first was adjudged the winner, and was presented with a prize consisting of a round ball studded with brass nails and hung with brass chains, to which were attached silver and gold coins.

Is Shaving Dangerous?

Shaving, apparently, is the latest habit to threaten the existence of man.

The habit is attacked on health grounds by Dr. Arthur MacDonald of Washington, who declares that it is responsible for all sorts of evils—neuralgia and face troubles—and that such a habit tends to lessen the chances of life.

The right persons to see on such a delicate subject are the physician and the barber. But the doctor was rather sceptical.

"Of course, skin troubles are often the result of unclean shaving," said he, "but as long as one shaves with his own razor there is no danger whatever.

"As for the danger of neuralgia, it may possibly apply to a few particularly delicate persons, but surely we can afford to have our faces clean-shaven after so many generations of clean-shaven ancestors.

"Use and habit are the basis of these things. All through the winter Scotchmen and Tiroleans expose their knees. Dutch women their arms up to the shoulders, and Swiss peasant women their necks in a sort of round décolleté.

"Why should the practice of exposing the face skin be more harmful than that?"

But a West-end barber was most enthusiastic over the suggestion that lives should be saved by beard-growing.

"It would be a blessing to us," he said. "The great majority of men now shave themselves and just drop in for an occasional hair-cut. But a beard has to be tended regularly to look smart. Our few bearded customers spend at the barber's shop twice as much time as the clean-shaven ones."

He did not, however, think London's smart young men would be at all keen on growing anything but a diminutive moustache.

"Girls won't have it, you know," he explained.

And as long as girls won't have it Dr. MacDonald will have little support!
